House of Commons Debates

THIRD SESSION—ELEVENTH PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, March 23, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 145) for the relief of Paulina Verena Meyer.—Mr. Rankin.

Bill (No. 151) to incorporate The Canadian Surety Company.—Mr. McCraney.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

EMPLOYMENT OF LATE MR. HECTOR FABRE.

*Mr. MONK:

1. On what date was the late Hector Fabre named commissioner of Canada in France?
2. What salary was paid to him during his occupancy of the office?
3. How many years did he act as commissioner for the Dominion government?
4. Is it the intention of the government to make some provision for the widow of the late Commissioner Fabre?
5. Will an item to this effect be placed in this year's estimates?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Fabre was appointed to his office in France about 1882.

2. At the time of his death he was paid in salary and other expenses by the Dominion government $6,500 a year, and I believe that he also received $2,000 from the Quebec government.

3. He acted from about 1882 until September, 1910.

4 and 5. It is the intention to give to Madame Fabre his widow the best treatment under the law.

CUSTOMS ENTRY STEAMSHIP 'WANDA.'

*Mr. SHARPE (Ontario):

1. Was the ship 'Wanda' offered for entry at Brockville or at any other Canadian port before the 18th day of August, 1909?
2. Was there any notice, verbal or written, from any Canadian customs port relative to the ship 'Wanda' prior to the 18th day of August, 1909? If so, what was the effect of such notice?
3. Was the Minister of Customs consulted or interviewed by Mr. Calvert, ex-Liberal whip, or any member of the government or any officials, about the appraisement of the ship 'Wanda' or the passing of the entry thereof, before or after the receipt of Mr. Calvert's letter suggesting the valuation of the said ship should be only $1,000 or so?

Mr. PATERSON:

1. The Department of Customs is not aware of any offer of entry for duty of the steamer 'Wanda,' except the entry upon which duty was paid at Brockville, September 9, 1909.
2. There was no notice from any customs port to the Department of Customs prior to August 18, 1909, relative to the entry for duty of the steamer 'Wanda.'
3. No.

PARCEL POST RATES.

Mr. ARMSTRONG:

Does the government intend to make a reduction in parcel post rates, or establish a new parcel post system? If so, what is the nature and extent of same?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The matter is now engaging the attention of the Post Office Department.

POSTMASTERS' SALARIES, ETC.

Mr. ARMSTRONG:

1. Is it the intention of the Postmaster General to grant any or all of the following requests? If not, why not:—

1. An increase in salary to meet sharp advance in cost of living. Present schedule provides less remuneration per 1,000 pieces handled than did that of 12 to 15 years ago.
2. An increase in the rent allowance, and the placing of it on the straight percentage basis.
3. Necessary supplies, such as twine, ink, pens, pencils, &c., to be furnished by the department.
4. That postmasters be given greater protection in the purchase of good equipment for offices.
5. That offices be classified, and a system of promotion, optional for a time, be established, with a view to promoting greater efficiency and permanency.
6. Better newspaper labelling, with a view to greater despatch and accuracy.

7. Full recognition of the association by the government, that postmasters may establish a system of relief, and make suggestions from time to time.

8. That a copy of the Postmaster Generals' Report be sent to each accounting office.

9. That where safes are advisable, they be furnished by the department.

10. Throwing the civil service insurance open to postmasters.

11. A more adequate night allowance.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I met this morning a large deputation of the Association of Canadian Postmasters and members of the House of Commons and the various subjects mentioned in this question were discussed. I have decided to submit the case to the officials of the department and will report later on.

EUCHARISTIC CONGRESS.

Mr. BEST:

1. Did the federal government tender a reception to Cardinal Vannutelli in Montreal during his attendance at the Eucharistic Congress in September last?

2. If so, under whose supervision or orders, acting for the government, was it carried out?

3. What members of the federal government attended?

4. How many invitations were issued?

5. What government officials besides the cabinet ministers attended?

6. Did such government officials, including the Speaker of the House of Commons, attend clothed in their official robes of office?

7. How much did it cost the country, under whose authority and out of what item of the Supply Bill or estimates was it pad?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The federal government did not tender a reception to Cardinal Vannutelli during his attendance at the Eucharistic Congress in September last.

THE DECLARATION OF LONDON.

Mr. LENNOX:

1. Has the government received a copy of the Declaration of London from the imperial authorities, and of documents and papers connected with it, and will the government lay the copy and documents and papers upon the table of the House?

2. Has the government taken the provisions of this declaration into consideration?

3. Has the government made any representations in reference to this declaration to the Imperial government? If so, will the government bring down a copy of these representations?

4. If not, does the government propose to make any representations in reference to this matter to the Imperial government?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER:

1. The government has received the Declaration of London and the documents and papers connected with it. The whole correspondence is now laid upon the table of the House, and consists of:

Mr. ARMSTRONG.

1. A blue-book entitled Correspondence and Documents respecting the International Naval Conference, held in London, December, 1908—February, 1909.

2. A white-book entitled Correspondence respecting the Declaration of London.

To make the matter still more complete and intelligible, another document is also laid upon the table of the House, entitled Final Act of the Second Peace Conference held at the Hague in 1907, and conventions and declaration annexed thereto.

2. Yes, the provisions of the Declaration of London have been taken into consideration.

3. The government has made no representations in reference to this declaration to the Imperial government.

4. As the whole subject of the Declaration of London deals exclusively with questions of International law, the government of Canada not being a sovereign power did not think itself justified to make official representations on such matters, but the question may be discussed informally with the Imperial government at the next Imperial conference.

CANADA—WEST INDIES STEAMSHIP SERVICE.

Mr. FOSTER:

1. What contracts are at present in force for steamship services between Canada and the West Indies, and what are the subsidies paid thereunder?

2. What amount has been paid in steamship subsidies for services between Canada and the West Indies from 1896 to 1910, inclusive?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER:

1. Canada — Mexico, calling at West Indian ports. Elder Dempster & Co. Subsidy $50,000 per annum.

Canada—Cuba. William Thomson & Co. Subsidy $25,000 per annum.

St. John, Halifax, West Indies, and Georgetown, British Guiana. Pickford & Black. Subsidy $65,700 per annum.

2. From fiscal year ended June 30, 1896 to fiscal year ended March 31, 1910, inclusive—$1,409.526.22.

PAYMENT OF STEEL BOUNTIES.

*Mr. SHARPE (Ontario):

1. Before the government commenced to pay bounties to the steel and iron industries, was a valuation of the physical assets of the companies secured?

2. How many government inspectors are employed to check the products on which bounties are paid?

3. What are their names, and the salary paid to each?

4. Has the attention of the government been called to the alleged fact that these companies in receipt of bounties, or some of them, have at any time refused to sell their products to consumers in Canada? If so, what are the particulars?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER:

1. No.
2. At present there are only two.
3. Fred. Muggah. $1,400 per annum.
Jas. MacNeill. $1,000 per annum.
4. No. The government has no such information.

CROP STATISTICS, MANITOBA.

Mr. STAPLES:

1. What is the policy or method through which the government obtains the crop statistics in the province of Manitoba?
2. Who are the persons who give the information or report for the constituency of Macdonald, and what are their respective post office addresses?
3. What is the extent of the territory each person reports for?
4. Do they receive any remuneration, if so, how much?

Mr. FISHER:

1. Chiefly from farmers in the various localities of the Province.
2.

VICTORIA MEMORIAL MUSEUM BUILDING.

Mr. SEXSMITH:

1. Is it true as reported in one of the Ottawa papers, that the large crack that appeared some time ago in one of the walls of the new Victoria Museum has developed?
2. Is it true that such defect is pulling the floor on the fourth story some inches from the wall?
3. What is the cost to date of that structure?
4. Has the building been assumed by the government yet, and who is the contractor?
5. Is the contractor the same one who did the work and constructed the Laurier tower that fell down some years ago?
6. What action does the government purpose to take in respect to this matter?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

1, 2, and 6. Mr. Ewart, the Chief Architect, informs me that the tower of the building has settled somewhat, causing a crack in the wall, and there is a slight separation between the wall and the floor. He says that these defects are easily remedied and unless there are further developments, no action need be taken.
3. $1,200,998.01.
4. (a) No. (b) Mr. Geo. Goodwin.
5. Yes.

STATE ASSISTANCE FOR AGRICULTURE.

NOTICE OF MOTION.

Mr. A. GILBERT (Drummond and Arthabaska). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I would like to give notice that next week, when the House will go into Committee of Supply, I will propose the following amendment:

In the opinion of this House, at least one tenth of the annual national revenue should be affected to the betterment and advancement of the Canadian agriculture, with, amongst others, the following objects:

(a) By a more effective diffusion of agricultural knowledge through our farming population;

(b) By the effective drainage of considerable tracts of lands that are not actually sufficiently drained and the cultivation of which would be rendered doubly productive by works carried on with state assistance;

(c) By the establishment of and the granting of subsidy to agricultural co-operative societies; a grant to cold storage warehouses built by such societies, according to the law; the publication and free distribution of an agricultural periodical to the members of such societies.

METHOD OF BRINGING DOWN RETURNS.

Mr. BLAIN. Every few days we hear members inquiring for returns which have not been brought down in obedience to orders of the House. Frequently it is found that these returns have been laid on the table, and the member moving the motion knows nothing about it. Why should not the department send a notice to the member who moved the motion so that he would be at once informed when the return was laid on the table?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) will agree with me that it is the business of a member of the House to look over the returns and to look at the Votes and Proceedings every day.

Mr. BLAIN. If returns were brought down in a reasonable length of time I would agree with my right hon. friend, but my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, the other day, read a long list of returns some of which had been standing for many weeks and some for months. I do not think that the right hon. gentleman would say that a member should watch from day to day for returns, which have been delayed for months after the order of the House has been passed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think my hon. friend agrees with me that every member watches the Votes and Proceedings every day.

Mr. LENNOX. Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed——

Mr. SPEAKER. I am afraid I could not allow a discussion at this stage. We will be going into Supply in a few minutes.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

RECIPROCAL TRADE RELATIONS WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the government when it is intended to resume the discussion on the reciprocity agreement. A short time ago a motion was made in this House to stay the discussion for reasons that were given, and we were told that it could not be, that we were in honour bound to continue that discussion. Shortly after it was shelved, and I would like to know if it has been shelved for good or if it is intended to take it up again?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend is aware that as we are approaching the end of the fiscal year the first duty of parliament is to vote the Supplies.

Mr. MONK. I think my right hon. friend has not answered my question.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think I have. The first duty of parliament is to vote Supplies, and then we will attend to the reciprocity agreement, and other matters before the House.

SUPPLY—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. LENNOX. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to refer again to the matter of the returns. It seems to me that the government should be disposed to facilitate the efforts of the various members of parliament to discharge their duties as fully as possible, and I may say that in common with very many other members I have felt very great inconvenience resulting from the fact that we do not know without very considerable search from time to time whether returns ordered have been brought down or not. The right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said a moment ago that it was the duty, I think, or the custom, I do not know which, of members of parliament to daily read the Votes and Proceedings.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I said the duty.

Mr. LENNOX. I have not been discharging my duty in that regard.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. And many others also.

Mr. LENNOX. And in that particular I am standing upon the same ground as very many industrious members of this House. It is impossible for us daily to read the Votes and Proceedings, and if we did read the Votes and Proceedings I do not know that they would give us the information that we desire. When an order is made the matter goes off the Votes and Proceedings and there is no record of when the return is brought down in the Votes and Proceedings.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes there is.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not recall that there is.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. But in any event, it would be a very light duty and one involving very little work for some of the officials of the government to notify the member when a return is made. I know there are more industrious members than I am, but there are some who are not as industrious as I am, and I may say distinctly that the difficult duty of having from day to day to look at these Votes and Proceedings for the purpose of ascertaining whether a belated return has been given to the House or not should not and need not be put upon the members of the House. Almost every day we are asking about returns. I was about to bring this matter before the House yesterday, but on looking over 'Hansard,' I found that my leader had, the day before, in my absence, made an extensive inquiry with regard to belated returns. I would urge upon the leader of the government, seeing that he has been smiling in a very pleasant way at my discussion, to reconsider what he said a few minutes ago, or to consider it further and to adopt the suggestion that we be notified as to the time at which returns are brought down. I know that in doing so he will be accommodating a great number of members on both sidees of the House, of course more on the opposition side because we move for a greater number of returns than do members on the government side. This will tend to facilitate the work of the House, it will be a great assistance to those who are discharging a very important duty, and it will prevent us from having to take up time in making inquiries about returns.

Mr. BLAIN. We had a case in point only yesterday. My hon. friend from West Hastings (Mr. Porter) asked for a certain return that had been ordered by the House. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) at once spoke up and said that it had been laid on the table several days ago. Surely, it would not be very much trouble for a department, when it had a return ready to be laid upon the table, to notify the member who had made the motion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is done to-day; the minister who brings the return asks for leave to lay on the table the return to the order of the House of such and such a date, containing such and such information and moved for by Mr. So and So. Then it is recorded in the Votes and Proceedings. But, it is not worth while to take up time in the discussion of a difference of this kind. If it is more convenient the government will be only too glad to oblige members of the House.

TREATMENT OF COLOURED PEOPLE.

Mr. O. J. WILCOX (North Essex). Mr. Speaker, for the reason that on three different occasions during this session the question of the colour line being drawn in a department of the government has been brought up in this House, I desire to ask my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) a question or two. As a result of the matter being considered, I have received a communication from one of my coloured constituents asking what all this talk is about, and if it is true that my hon. friend is drawing the colour line in his department. I desire to say that I would be very much opposed to the government pursuing such a course. My hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Daniel) brought before the House the fact that one George Simpson, of Toronto, who had passed a very difficult examination for a position in the Naval Department, whose character was most creditable, of whom the president of the Young Men's Christian Association, according to the Ottawa 'Free Press,' had spoken of as a most admirable young man, was not given the position to which his examination had entitled him, but was transferred to the Department of Agriculture. I have also been informed by my hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. Reid) that some time ago a young coloured man applied for a position in the Census Department. He was also transferred to the Department of Agriculture. I know of my own certain knowledge that last session the Rev. Mr. Hackett, who I was informed was a bishop of the Episcopal Methodist Church for the province of Ontario, who has sixteen different churches under his charge, was ruthlessly and indiscriminately ejected from the corridors of this House. That would lead me to the conclusion that the colour line was being drawn. To give the history of the coloured people would be a rather difficult task. Facts and dates are the language in which any race of people write their history, and for the reason that the facts and dates relating to the coloured people have not been preserved, I regret to say, as well as they should have been, we have not before us their complete history. But, we have the history of the coloured people for the past 47 years since they were emancipated, and it is no exaggeration to say that no race in the world has made greater moral and intellectual progress since then. The United States government have acknowledged the value of the coloured people in the army, and Brigadier General J. C. Gilmore, referring to their services in the Spanish-American war, writes:

> The expedition thus formed was placed under command of Major General Shafter. Notwithstanding the limited time to equip and organize an expedition of this character, there was never displayed a nobler spirit of patriotism and fortitude on the part of officers and men going forth to maintain the honour of this country. After encountering the vicissitudes of an ocean voyage, they were obliged to disembark on a foreign shore and immediately engage in an aggressive campaign. Under drenching storms, intense and prostrating heat, within a fever afflicted district, with little comfort or rest, either by day or night, they pursued their purpose of finding and conquering the enemy. Many of them, trained in the severe experience of the great war, and in frequent campaigns on the western plains, officers and men alike exhibited a great skill, fortitude, and tenacity' with result which have added a new chapter of glory to their country's history.

Medals of honour and certificates of merit were granted to coloured soldiers for distinguished services in the Cuban campaign, as follows:

> Dennis Bell, Fitz Lee, Wm. H. Tompkins, Geo. H. Wanton, James Bates, Scott Crosby, Edward Davis, J. Elliott, Benjamine Fasit, O. Gaither, G. W. Goff, J. Graham, Abram Hagen, H. T. Herbert, Adam Houston, J. Jackson, Elisha Jackson, Peter Jackson, C. W. Jefferson, P. McCoun, Loney Moore, Oscar Oden, Wm. Payne, G. W. Pumphrey, James Satchell, L. Smith, Wm. Thornton, J. Walker, John T. Williams, R. Williams.

It seems to me that no better evidence can be given of the devotion of a citizen to the nation he belongs, than that he is willing to live and die for the flag he serves under. The paragraph referred to as to the exclusion of the coloured people was a Canadian press despatch, and appeared in Liberal and Conservative newspapers alike. I quote from the Winnipeg 'Tribune' of March 22:

With regard to Canada, popular sentiment, which already has compelled the dominion government to place the virtually prohibitive tax of $500 a head upon every Chinese entering the country, and which has shown itself so hostile to Indian and Japanese labour in the western provinces, now is manifesting a pronounced disposition to exact from the government at Ottawa stringent legislation barring the American negro from the Dominion.

I desire to ask the minister if the statements in this article are true? I quote from the 'Hansard' of yesterday, part of the discussion which took place on this question:

Mr. FOSTER. The presumption does not go so far as to say he is undersirable.

Mr. OLIVER. No. but there are many cases where the admission or exclusion of an immigrant depends on a strict or a lax interpretation of the law, so that if the immigrant is of what we would call the desirable class it may be that the restrictive provisions of the law are administered laxly, and if he is of the presumably less desirable class then they are administered more restrictedly. Beyond that there are no instructions to the immigration officers, but they are expected to act according to the instructions they have.

Now, I am unable to understand much from this language of the Minister of the Interior. His description of the enforcement of the regulation of his department reminds me of the peroration to a speech delivered by Mr. Delmas, a great United States criminal lawyer who, in explaining the fact that two and two are four, did it in this way:

'If beneath the unit two we place its fellow, and thereupon perform the operation known to mathematicians as addition we will speedily arrive at the result called by well informed and reputable mathematicians as four.'

I have to say that in my judgment the Minister of the Interior can put Mr. Delmas in the shade. I ask the minister if it is true, that Mr. Simpson was transferred to the cattle farm from the position he was entitled to in the naval service. I ask him also if it is true that a young coloured man who was entitled to a position in the Census Department did not get it. I ask him for what reason Bishop Hackett was removed from the corridors of the House of Commons last session. I ask him also if there is any sentiment in this country that he knows of in favour of placing a head tax of $500 on coloured people coming to this country, the same as he does with regard to the Chinese. I may tell the Minister of the Interior that from my knowledge and experience of the coloured people, if it is his intention to place any such tax on them because of their colour, I will be diametrically opposed to it.

Mr. McCOIG (West Kent). Mr. Speaker, I represent the county adjoining that represented by my hon. friend (Mr. Wilcox), and in my section of the country there are a good many coloured farmers who are amongst the most industrious and successful citizens of the Dominion. I feel safe in saying, on the assurance of a letter I have received from the Minister of the Interior, that it is not the intention of the government to place a tax upon coloured people coming from the United States into Canada. I took the matter up with the Minister of the Interior some days ago, and he gave me a letter assuring me that so long as these coloured people were entitled to enter under the law, they would be admitted as freely as any other people who came to our country. I am glad to know that the government has taken that stand, because I would regret deeply if this government of which I am so proud and which I am so glad to support should in any way discriminate against coloured people, especially when we have amongst us men of that race who are doing their share to build up this Dominion. I hope the government will continue along the lines they have set out on, and allow the coloured people to come in so long as they are prepared to perform the duties of citizenship which are expected from every man in Canada.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior.) I was unable to gather from the remarks of my hon. friend from Essex (Mr. Wilcox) just what information he wanted?

Mr. HUGHES. He asked a series of questions.

Mr. OLIVER. Would he mind repeating them so that I may be able to answer them?

Mr. WILCOX. I asked my hon. friend if it were true that one George Simpson, who had passed the Civil Service examination for a position in the Naval Department was transferred to the Department of Agriculture by reason of his colour. I also asked if it was true that a month or two ago a young man who had passed an examination for a position in the Census Department, and was also transferred to the Department of Agriculture because of his colour. I also asked for what reason Bishop Hackett was removed from the corridors of the House of Commons last session. I also asked if my hon. friend knew of any sentiment in Canada in favour of placing a tax of $500 a head on coloured people entering Canada, and if he intended to do it. I also stated that I was decidedly opposed to such a course if the question of colour was the reason for such a tax.

Mr. OLIVER. In regard to most of the questions of my hon. friend, I am not able to give an answer, because the matters referred to are not under my control or jurisdiction, nor am I in any way responsible for them. In regard to whether there is any sentiment in Canada in favour of placing a $500 head tax upon negroes coming into the country, so far as my information goes there is a very strong sentiment on the part of a great many people in this country against the admission of negroes; but as to the intention of the government, I can only refer my hon. friend to the remarks I made last night. In the administration of the Immigration Department we have certain restrictive and exclusive provisions, and if his friends come under any of these provisions they cannot come into Canada, while if they do not come under any of these provisions, they can come into Canada.

Mr. DANIEL. In the course of his remarks last night, the hon. Minister of the Interior said:

> I wish to have the matter thoroughly understood—in the administration of the exclusion provisions of the law, there is taken into account the question of whether the proposed immigrant is ordinarily considered desirable or ordinarily considered undesirable. The immigrant ordinarily considered desirable is the man who wishes to go on the land, and if he does not want to go on the land the presumption towards him is not so favourable.

I would like to call the minister's attention to the fact that these 165 negroes from Oklahoma who were stopped at the boundary were immigrants who intended to go on the land and settle as a farming community; so that, according to the minister's own statement, they belong to the desirable class. Under these circumstances it would seem plain to the ordinary observer that they were excluded because they were not of the right colour. If that was not the case, I think it is due to the House and the country that the minister give the reasons why they were excluded.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know where my hon. friend got his information, because my information is that they were not stopped at the boundary, and that they were not excluded.

Mr. DANIEL. That statement was made in the despatch which was read last night by my hon. friend from North Essex.

Mr. OLIVER. If it was in the despatch, so far as my information goes, it was not correct, because I have no information that the people were stopped at the boundary, or that they were excluded. My information is that some members of the party were excluded, but the larger number of them, having complied with the conditions laid down in the Immigration Law and in the regulations, were admitted.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the minister give us what information he has?

Mr. OLIVER. I have given the House all the information I have on the subject. I may say that I was not keeping myself particularly in touch with this special band of immigrants. There are many thousands of immigrants coming into the country just now, and I did not feel that it was incumbent upon me to follow the movements of this particular party. I have always understood that any one who complied with the regulations would be admitted, and any one who did not comply with the regulations would be excluded. That was all the information I had on the matter, and it is quite incidental that I am able to give the House the information that I have received.

Mr. DANIEL. On the 2nd of March I brought up a similar case, and the minister, in his reply to me at that time, undertook to examine into the occurrence and give the information later. It was a case where a party of negroes from the United States who wanted to go to western Canada, were stopped at the boundary, although they were of the desirable class, people who wanted to go on the land. So far the minister has not given me any information as to why they were turned back.

Mr. OLIVER. I did make inquiry and received a report, which I have not placed before the House, but which I will take an early opportunity of doing. The report which I have received is practically that the story was made out of whole cloth. It is true, an individual, a coloured man, came to the boundary, and he was excluded for reasons that would have excluded any other man, whether coloured or not. That was the fact on which the story in the newspapers was based.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. member for North Essex asked the Minister of the Interior a question which applies to my department. As I understood it, he asked whether an individual had passed the Civil Service examination for the census, and had been refused because he was coloured. There is absolutely no foundation for any such statement. He also asked whether somebody had been transferred from the Marine and Fisheries Department to the Experimental Farm. A gentleman with African blood in him was sent by the Civil Service Commission to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. He was not found suitable for the work there, and the Civil Service Commissioners sent him to the Experimental Farm. He has been working there ever since, he is a thoroughly good official, and nobody objects to his being there.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask if the Department of Marine and Fisheries gave him a trial or was he just sent to my hon. friend's department.

Mr. FISHER. I have no information on that point.

Mr. BLAIN. The House is entitled to the information because that is the charge which is made by the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Wilcox). His charge was that this man had applied to the Department of Marine and Fisheries for employment, and I think he said that he was on trial in that department and passed an examination, but was afterwards sent to the Agriculture Department on account of his colour.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). According to the statement of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), there seems to be a good deal of scope in respect of such matters, and everything depends upon whether the regulations are administered strictly or with some laxity. It would be very unfortunate if any impression got abroad that any person, coming as an immigrant, was to be excluded simply because of his colour. There are a great many people of that race in different parts of Canada. They are good, honest, law abiding citizens and a credit to the communities in which they live. Some of their settlements have existed in this country for 150 years and others—I am speaking more particularly of my own province of Nova Scotia—for about 100 years. There are many communities of these excellent citizens in Nova Scotia, and it would be most unfortunate if the impression got abroad that these regulations were to be construed so as to exclude any immigrant by reason of his colour. My hon. friend from North Essex (Mr. Wilcox), asked several questions, and the Minister of the Interior says that some of them do not concern his department. If that be the case, the minister in charge of the particular department concerned ought to answer. The questions were not addressed to the Minister of the Interior alone but to the government as a whole; and the admonition which my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, gave us a little while ago as to the duty of ordinary members of parliament to be in their seats and know what is going on, applies, I should say, with quite equal force to ministers of the Crown, especially in matters affecting their own departments. So that if there be any other minister concerned in this question, we should have his answer before this matter is allowed to pass.

RECIPROCITY—RESOLUTIONS OF ASSOCIATIONS RE

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, there are certain communications which I have received, which I wish to read to the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that objection was taken the other day on both sides to the reading of petitions, telegrams and other documents relating to reciprocity on the motion to go into Supply. Does the correspondence to which the hon. gentleman refers relate to reciprocity?

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I submit that communications of the utmost importance to my constituents, having been sent to me for presentation to the House and being of the same nature as a large number of other communications presented to the House by ministers and others, it would be an injustice to me and a straining of the rules of parliament to rule that these particular citizens should not be heard when so many others have been heard to the same effect. I submit that I am within the rules in offering these communications on going into Supply, and I am justified in doing so by the precedents already set.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). If these communications relate to matters which are not already in the possession of the House, I quite agree with my hon. friend, but if he desires to bring to the notice of the House resolutions touching the question of reciprocity, he is not in order in doing so on the motion to go into Supply, as that question has been referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster), My object is to read certain communications which I have been requested by my constituents to read to the House.

Mr. FIELDING. I am quite willing to wait until the hon. gentleman declares to what these communications refer, but I presume they refer to the matter of reciprocity as he pleads to be heard on the ground that some other hon. gentlemen have been permitted to read documents coming in the same category. While I took no exception whatever to the presentation of such papers from time to time, I quite agree with my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster), in the point he raised, that the introduction of such matters in this way is unwise and out of order. I hope my hon. friend will not seek to obtain a decision of the House to the contrary because I am satisfied that the point made by my hon. friend from North Toronto was made in the interests of debate, and it would be a pity to introduce these matters other than in their proper place, which is in the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BURRELL. Whether on the motion to go into Ways and Means or into Supply, I cannot recall which, the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), got up and read, not resolutions or other communications, but newspaper editorials. I think, therefore, that the point made by my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Taylor), is well taken, namely, that the House, having established a precedent by receiving other communications on this motion, he should be allowed to read those which he received from his constituents.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am of course in the hands of the House. I thought at first it was my duty to allow these communications and documents to be read on the motion to go into Supply because considerable latitude is always allowed on this motion; but inasmuch as objection has been taken to this on both sides, I am entirely in the hands of the House. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), raised the point that this was an iregular proceeding and ought not to be allowed, in which he was supported by the right hon. the Prime Minister, and I, therefore concluded that such was the opinion of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Although I did take that position and still stand by it I do not see why Mr. Speaker should put the responsibility on me. The responsibility is on Mr. Speaker, and the House is in his hands, rather than he in the hands of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. According to the authorities the Speaker can appeal to the House on certain occasions. My first impression was to allow the reading of these matters on the motion to go into Supply, and I was prepared to continue in that course, but objection has been taken on both sides. As the right hon. the Prime Minister is now here, I would refer the point to him. The point is that the hon. member for New Westminster wishes to read certain communications from his constituents regarding reciprocity, and objection having been taken, I sought the advice of the House as to whether this should be allowed or whether it should be deferred until the House is in Committee on Ways and Means to which the reciprocity resolutions have been referred.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This matter of reciprocity having been referred to the Ways and Means Committee, it would be out of order to bring it up except in that committee.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not quite so sure of that, although I speak with deference to the view the Prime Minister has expressed. We certainly had rather a bad example from the treasury benches when the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) read a long editorial with regard to this subject from some newspaper in British Columbia. Either the hon. minister was out of order or not. in doing that. If he was in order, my hon. friend who now proposes to address the House is certainly equally in order. The difficulty arises at once that, after a certain practice has prevailed up to a certain period, there is more or less difficulty in cutting it off at a given point.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I may be wrong, but my recollection is that the example set by the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) was after we were in Committee of Ways and Means, or on going into Committee of Ways and Means, and, therefore, it was not out of order. But, even if we were then out of order, the consequence being what some foresaw and what is brought to the attention of the House by my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) I think it would be better to change our course, and adhere more strictly to the rules.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does the Prime Minister think that there is a distinction between going into Committee of Ways and Means and going into Committee of Supply?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think that when a subject matter has been referred to committee, whether of Supply or of Ways and Means, it should be left to that committee. The subject matter of reciprocity has been referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and I am sure that my hon. friend from Halifax will agree with me that, under such circumstances, the Committee of Ways and Means is in possession of it, and it would be out of order to refer it to another committee.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The Prime Minister refused to tell us when he will next go on with the question of reciprocity, the result of this decision will be to preclude members of this House from making reference to newspaper utterances or even petitions from our constitutents, and so will absolutely block the discussion on the question of reciprocity.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The House can only proceed with one matter at a time. Reciprocity is one matter, but there are others, and one that it is proper to deal with, even before reciprocity, is the voting of Supply.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). With the permission of the House, and as the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was not in his place when I spoke before, and you have referred the matter to him, I would like to say a word in explanation. I did not state what communications I proposed to present to the House, but I do state now that they are communications that, to my mind, have a direct bearing on the question of Supply inasmuch as we have been told this afternoon that we shall be required to vote Supply before another very important subject is taken up. To my mind, that strengthens the position which I took at the outset, that, on the motion for Supply, I have the right to present to the House, before the Speaker leaves the chair, any communication which may seem to be a reason why we should not proceed to vote Supply until we first hear these reasons. And I submit that, if the ruling suggested applies to this motion to go into Supply, it will apply equally to a motion to go into Ways and Means, and we shall have no opportunity to present these communications until the Speaker has left the Chair and the House is actually in Committee of Ways and Means. It seems to me that is quite clear —that the two motions are identical so far as the reading of communications is concerned; and, if so, none of us will have an opportunity of presenting messages of our constituents, until, in the ordinary course, the time comes when each in his time has an opportunity to speak in Committee of Ways and Means which may not be for a month or more, and may be at a time altogether too late for communications we seek to present to have any effect. I think I have the right, and I respectfully ask the ruling of the Chair on the point.

Mr. SPEAKER. Objection having been taken, I have to sustain the objection, on the ground that the matter has been referred to the Committee of Ways and Means of the House, and we are now on a motion to go into Supply. The authorities say that, when a matter is referred to a committee, it cannot be discussed in the House.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I believe I am entitled to hear quoted the rule referred to.

Mr. BLAIN. I would ask the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) what the members on this side of the House are to do with the large number of communications that are being received every mail entering protest against the reciprocity proposal. If we cannot present them, and cannot direct the right hon. gentleman's attention to them, what are we to do with them?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Keep them.

Mr. SPEAKER. Bourinot at page 585 says:

> Members may discuss various questions on the motion for the Speaker to leave the chair, without moving amendments thereto—a great latitude being always allowed on such occasions; but they may not refer specifically to any vote which has passed, or is about to be discussed in committee, nor to any resolution of the Committee of Ways and Means.

This matter, having been referred to Committee of Ways and Means, the rule applies.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). There is a rule of the House required, I believe, Mr. Speaker. I would like to know the language of the rule of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The custom of parliament governs when there is no specific rule.

Mr. BURRELL. May I ask for an explanation of that particular point? As you quoted Bourinot, Mr. Speaker, I understood it was a question of discussion of a subject, whereas, I understand, my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor, New Westminster), does not wish to discuss the subject but simply puts before the House a message of his constituents.

Mr. SPEAKER. It was argued the other day that messages, &c., read here were arguments for or against the question referred to Committee of Ways and Means. And my decision is that the question cannot be discussed on a motion to go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The first minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) a few moments ago, in answer to my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain), who put a very modest request with regard to petitions made for or against this matter of reciprocity from the constituents of members in every part of Canada, and what was to be done with them, said, 'Keep them.' Do I understand the first minister to give that advice to members on his own side, as well as to members on this side, as to communications from our people who are vitally interested in this matter of reciprocity, and who ask us to lay their views, whether for or against the proposal, before the House. Is the only answer we can give in the words of the first minister, 'Keep them?' I think, Sir, that must be a mere parody of parliamentary usage and procedure. Surely, the first minister must revise this advice to us, and I would ask him to revise it now.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If the constituents of my hon. friend have remonstrances to the House they can be offered by way of petition, and petitions will be received by the House every day. Petitions, by a new rule, are sent to the Clerk, or they may be brought to the attention of the House. There are rules governing the order of business, and these rules must be observed. Many members of this House are delayed in reaching matters in which they are interested. On the Order Paper, there are dozens of notices of motion and Bills which, under the rules of the House, cannot be reached at all this session. That is unfortunate; but our business must be taken in its proper order. The question of reciprocity having been referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, it must be taken up by that committee. There may be delays, but it is part of the system, and my hon. friend must possess his soul in patience until the business is reached in regular course.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me quote the rule which throws some light on this subject. Rule 25 provides:

The ordinary daily routine of business in the House shall be as follows: Presenting petitions,——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. That gives every man the right to present a petition from his constituency and that right cannot be denied him. What we got into the other day was not the mere presenting of petitions out of their places but the discussion which was carried on by means of resolutions and petitions and reading from the newspapers. That is what I objected to. But the matter of a constituent coming before this House through his member is a matter of right that cannot be taken from him and is affirmed by the rule that every one who has a petition to present gets an opportunity once every day to present that petition. But the presenting of the petition and the discussion of the question are different things.

Mr. LENNOX. He has the right to read it, has he not?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT, ATTEMPT TO RESTRAIN BOARD.

Mr. M. Y. McLEAN (South Huron). I observe a despatch in the 'Ottawa Citizen' this morning from Montreal to the effect that certain solicitors in that city have taken proceedings against the Board of Investigation under the Combines Investigation Act. It is claimed by the company that the appointment of the board is without jurisdiction, illegal, and that their appointment should be declared ultra vires and null and void. This is a matter of very great importance and I would ask if it has been brought to the attention of the government and what action the government propose to take in the matter.

Mr. KING. I received this morning from Mr. Justice Laurendeau, of Montreal, a communication in which he states that as chairman of the board of investigation appointed to inquire into the United Shoe Machinery Company and others alleged to be in a combine, he has been served with a petition for a writ of prohibition and asks what the board should do in the premises. The government have instructed counsel to appear to oppose the granting of this writ of prohibition in order that the proceedings contemplated by the Combines Investigation Act may be continued under that measure.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS, &c.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I beg to ask why the return of correspondence with regard to the Markey lease has not been brought down. All that correspondence is on file and it would not take a clerk three minutes to gather it up and put it on the table of the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Minister of Marine is not in his seat, but I shall call his attention to it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the First Minister use his influence to have it brought down?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I shall always be happy to accommodate my hon. friend when he is so reasonable as he is at present.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would also ask why the hydrographic survey of Fort Churchill and the Nelson river which were completed last summer have not been laid on the table of the House. There is no reason why at least the Fort Churchill survey should not be brought down.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I agree that there is no reason why all the surveys should not be brought down. If the reports are completed they will be brought down.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

SUPPLY.

Department of Agriculture contingencies, further amount required, $6,000.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). Most of this is required because we have had a large number of clerks on the sick list during this year and have had to employ temporary assistants to get through the work. When clerks who are paid out of the civil government are on the sick list and their pay is stopped, while the money is saved to the government, we are not able to use that money for the payment of temporary clerks, who have to be paid out of contingencies.

Mr. STAPLES. Did the minister say the pay was stopped when clerks were on sick-leave?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. I have adopted a practice of allowing two months' sick-leave with pay during the year, but the question became so serious that I did not see my way clear to give more than two months' sick-leave in the year.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). How many temporaries were put on?

Mr. FISHER. Twenty-eight, I think.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Were there not more put on than the number of persons who were absent on sick leave?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, some more; we had other work.

Mr. SPROULE. How much have you paid, or will you have paid, for temporary clerks by the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. FISHER. $4,590, at the rate of $500 per year.

Mr. SPROULE. Those who were employed as temporary clerks were paid at the rate of $500 in proportion to the length of time they had been working?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Arts, Agriculture and Statistics—health of animals—further amount required, $50,000.

Mr. FISHER. There was $250,000 in the main estimates, but we found, in consequence of various rather extraordinary expenses, that that was not sufficient to cover the work of the year.

Mr. SPROULE. This will make $300,000?

Mr. FISHER. Yes: the year before the expenditure was $325,000. We expected that we were going to be able to get off with $250,000, but we will get off with less than we spent last year.

Mr. SPROULE. What was the heavy work that necessitated this exceptional expenditure?

Mr. FISHER. There was a very serious outbreak of rabies in western Ontario which required a very heavy expenditure, and the employment of extra officers.

Mr. SPROULE. How much was spent on that?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think I can give that exactly because our officers were doing that and other work as well, but at the same time the work necessitated extra officers. It would be very difficult to divide the work. There was also very much more expensive dipping of sheep in consequence of the fact that we agreed that all export sheep to the United States should be dipped under the supervision of our officers. We are also required to see that empty stock cars coming back from the United States and passing certain points are cleansed and disinfected under official supervision.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought that was always done.

Mr. FISHER. Not to the same extent. The railways were required to do it and we had one or two of our inspectors going about spotting to see whether it was done or not. Under this new arrangement we make this inspection much more efficient and thorough.

Mr. SPROULE. We were always told that it was very efficient, but now the minister tells us that this extra cost means that it is done much more efficiently. Heretofore, it must have been done in such a perfunctory way that it was no safeguard to the country notwithstanding the fact that the country was led to believe that it was a safeguard, and that it would be carried out in a proper way. I would like to ask the minister if he could give us any additional information regarding these parties who were employed in connection with the rabies outbreak. Were they regular officers or were there others employed, and if so, what instructions were they acting under and how were they paid?

Mr. FISHER. I could not say positively whether we took on any extra officers or not, but the work involved very considerable extra expense in travel and inspection on the part of permanent officers. We put on that work officers who usually were not travelling because although it was exceptional work we did not wish to put on extra officers. Travelling expenses, therefore, had to be met to a greater degree than is usual in the employment of these officers. We also used the Dominion Police in a good many cases and we had to pay for their services and expenses.

Mr. SPROULE. All these officers are employed all the year around, are they not?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Well then, that does not mean that they must be paid for doing more work, because they are idle a great deal of the time.

Mr. FISHER. No, they are not idle, but this work being of a temporary character, instead of adding to the permanent officers, we turned to our officers ordinarily engaged in other things. We did not neglect those other things, but we did postpone some things so as to secure efficient work for this branch.

Mr. SPROULE. But all the officers of this branch are not engaged all the year round. During a great deal of their time they are without work.

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. SPROULE. There is nothing for them to do.

Mr. FISHER. Our permanent officers are busy all the year around.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister may say so, but it is not the experience of those who know them.

Mr. FISHER. Well, I would like to have it reported if they are not.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not see how of necessity they could be employed constantly. The ordinary veterinary surgeons throughout the country are open to be called here or there to make tuberculin tests, or, in the event of outbreaks, to go and look into them, but those things only happen occasionally. There is no steady work for those people.

Mr. FISHER. We try only to have enough to make pretty steady work for them.

Mr. SPROULE. I am afraid there are a great many of them who are not very steadily employed.

Mr. FISHER. I think that if my hon. friend looked into the matter he would find that they are pretty steadily employed.

Mr. SPROULE. Rabies were pretty prevalent in the western country where I belong, but I never heard of a single case of any employee of this department being engaged in connection with the outbreak. It would be interesting to know just what they did. There were certain notices published in the papers stating what should be done with persons who had been bitten, and with animals affected, but I do not know of any veterinary surgeon being employed in connection with that work. There were mad dogs in that part of the country and a great many cases of bites, but I never heard of a veterinary being employed.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend may not have heard of it, but at the same time whenever a report came in or any suggestion of rabies was received an officer was sent to investigate. If there was any breaking of the law or of the regulations there was a prosecution. In many cases dogs were killed and specimens sent in to be tested in the laboratory to determine whether or not it was a case of rabies. Our officers had to carry on the cases against people who were charged with violating the regulations. There were a great many domestic animals sick and many reports received about cases which did not turn out to be correct. A great many cases were reported which turned out not to be correct, but the officers had to investigate, and they had to travel and spend their time.

Mr. SPROULE. Their time was paid for in their annual salaries.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, but the travelling and other expenses amount to a considerable sum.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there a report in each individual case?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose a case of rabies is reported what action is taken to protect the people? If we know how much was spent on these services we would be able to tell approximately whether the money was properly spent or not. These reports must be available somewhere.

Mr. FISHER. If my hon. friend desires it I can compile a statement of the number of cases reported to the department.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to get the information about individual cases so that we may know the localities in which rabies existed.

Mr. FISHER. I will bring down the file of the reports. I may say that out of this $50,000 about $25,000 was paid in extra compensation for the slaughter of animals which we did not have to pay last year.

Mr. SPROULE. In the case of what diseases is compensation paid?

Mr. FISHER. Glanders, hog cholera and dourine. Most of the compensation was for glanders. Fortunately we have that disease pretty well under control in eastern Canada, but there is still a considerable amount of it in the west.

Mr. SPROULE. No compensation is paid for bovine tuberculosis?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the government were considering whether they might not wisely extend compensation in respect of that disease.

Mr. FISHER. Part of this appropriation is for the expenses of a joint commission to investigate the subject of bovine tuberculosis. There is an International Veterinary Association for Canada and the United States and Mexico, and at a meeting held some thirteen months ago it was decided to appoint a commission to thoroughly investigate and make a report on the matter. Dr. Rutherford veterinary inspector general of Canada was made chairman of that commission, and we appointed Senator Edwards, and Mr. Torrance, Veterinary Surgeon, of Winnipeg, and two or three others to be members of that commission, along with representatives of the United States. That commission has held meetings in San Francisco, St. Louis, Buffalo, Washington and Toronto, and it has prepared a report which is ready for presentation. I have been very carefully considering with the veterinary director general what we can do to carry out the valuable recommendations made in that report to prevent the spread of the disease.

Mr. SPROULE. Does that commission meet more than once a year?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, there were three meetings held in one year.

Mr. SPROULE. When was the last sitting of the committee?

Mr. FISHER. Quite recently. Speaking from memory, I think that was the fifth meeting.

Mr. SPROULE. That committee has made a report to the Department of Agriculture. Has that department, which the minister says has been carefully considering this subject, reached any conclusion yet as to what should be done, and, if so, what is it?

Mr. FISHER. I am not yet in a position to make any announcement. I will lay the report on the table in a few days, and I think my hon. friend will see that there are some recommendations in it which will require very careful consideration before we can undertake to carry them out. I would like to carry them out, but I fear that some of them are not feasible or practicable in the present condition of affairs in Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. We have been discussing this question for the last 12 or 14 years, and from time to time the minister has told us that he has been considering it. During that time all these inquiries have taken place, and a report has been presented to the Minister of Agriculture. How long does it take him to carefully consider the report and determine what should be done? I do not see why it should take so much time. It seems to me that the subject is worthy of better consideration. This is considered one of the preventable diseases, and it is too important a matter to be dealt with in this slipshod way. Some people think it is a great injustice for the department to order animals to be slaughtered without any compensation to their owners, whereas animals slaughtered for hog cholera must be paid for.

Mr. FISHER. We have never ordered the slaughter of any animals for this disease.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the law not provide that animals affected with infectious or contagious diseases must be slaughtered?

Mr. FISHER. The law provides that a list of the diseases for which animals must be slaughtered shall be made. Tuberculosis is not one of them.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the minister making any provision for the greater protection of live stock in Canada under the reciprocity arrangement, which I presume will come into force before the next session of parliament?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. BLAIN. Why not?

Mr. FISHER. Because I think that our provision at the present time is ample. The question of reciprocity does not enter into the question of the health of animals in Canada. We have certain rules and regulations for the protection of animals which we enforce whether a hundred or a thousand animals come in.

Mr. BLAIN. According to my hon. friend's remarks on the reciprocity agreement, we are to export our hay, and therefore the cattle will be fed in other countries.

Mr. FISHER. I did not make that statement.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend made the statement that it was a splendid arrangement because the farmers of Quebec would have an excellent market for their hay, and if the hay goes out of the country it will be fed out of the country. Keeping that in view, and keeping in view the fact that we are to have a greater exchange of animals with the United States, I ask the hon. minister, whom I have always understood to claim that the health of animals was better in Canada than in the United States, if we are to have a larger number of animals coming into Canada from the United States than before, what protection is he going to give the Canadian farmers against those animals bringing disease into Canada that have hitherto been unheard of here? Has my hon. friend considered this? I am speaking from a farmers' standpoint, as I represent an agricultural constituency, and my farmers are interested. I want to know whether my hon. friend is taking some precautions in regard to the health of the large number of hogs, cattle, sheep, horses and other products that will come in from the United States under that agreement? My hon. friend has not taken very good care of the farmers in the agreement, because everybody is to have protection except them. What provision is my hon. friend making for looking after the health of these animals, or has he overlooked that part of the agreement altogether?

Mr. FISHER. I do not propose to be drawn into a discussion on the reciprocity question, and will therefore merely say that our present quarantine regulations are sufficient to protect animals in Canada. Should any outbreak of disease occur in other countries, we may have to make special provision to meet it, and shall do so, as we did a few years ago, when the outbreak of foot and mouth disease occurred in the United States. We then took exceptional precautions; and notwithstanding that disease prevailed all along our southern border, no contagion came across.

Mr. BLAIN. There is protection now, and therefore they could not get through.

Mr. FISHER. The question of duty or no duty does not affect our quarantine arrangements in the slightest degree. My hon. friend wants to know if I am going to make any special provision to meet the large increase of trade.

Mr. BLAIN. If there is to be such an increase.

Mr. FISHER. I say that the increase in trade will make no difference in the regulations. Should any outbreak of disease occur or any special danger arise, we shall take the necessary precautions. If the health of animals in Canada is good, as I understood my hon. friend to admit, that is largely due to the efficiency of our quarantine arrangements which prevent the entry of disease from foreign countries. Our machinery is quite able to do that work. Should extraordinary circumstances arise, we shall have to spend more money; but until they do, I am not going to ask parliament to vote any more.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to know what the regulations are with regard to the importation of animals, cattle, horses, sheep, swine and poultry?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot give in detail all that information. I may say, however, that cattle from across the line, which come in for immediate slaughter, are allowed entry without hindrance.

Mr. FISHER. Cattle for immediate slaughter.

Mr. SPROULE. What does the hon. minister mean by immediate slaughter?

Mr. FISHER. When fat animals are brought in to be slaughtered at their destination.

Mr. SPROULE. In a given number of days?

Mr. FISHER. I do not know that there is an exact number of days stated, but they are to be slaughtered at their destination.

Mr. FOSTER. Within what distance of the border?

Mr. FISHER. Without transhipment. When they reach their destination they have to be immediately slaughtered. Cows for dairy purposes and animals for breeding purposes have to be accompanied by a certificate that a tuberculine test was made within one month or possibly two months before shipment. Hogs have to be detained at the frontier for supervision during 30 days, so as to check hog cholera if there should be any. Every horse that comes across the line has to be subjected to the mallen test for glanders.

Mr. SPROULE. Under the reciprocity regulations, animals may come in any time, how then can you detain them 30 days? Would that be carrying out the understanding?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, it is thoroughly understood that quarantine matters are entirely above treaty obligations. The life of human beings and animals have to be dealt with regardless of tariff questions or anything of that kind.

Mr. PORTER. That is not made a part of the agreement.

Mr. FISHER. It is a general understanding among all nations, and the United States authorities thoroughly understand that. It is not in the agreement because it is a matter of course.

Mr. SPROULE. Then there is something radically wrong with a friend of the minister's who said not very long ago in my hearing, one of the great advantages of this reciprocity arrangement was that under it our butchers can get in supplies from across the line inside of two or three days. If hogs, however, are detained for 30 days they can not do that.

Mr. FISHER. I am not responsible for that statement. The statement I have just made is perfectly correct.

Mr. SEXSMITH. In the reciprocity arrangement it is provided that no regulation shall be made or maintained to unreasonably hamper a free exchange of products. I would understand that to mean that the quarantine of 30 days on hogs would be removed.

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. SEXSMITH. And that representations from either side would receive due attention and any just cause of complaint removed. If we are to have reciprocity in hogs under this agreement, the minister is taking that away by his quarantine regulations.

Mr. FISHER. The agreement does not in any way modify the quarantine arrangements; but if, for the purpose of blocking trade, we were to vexatiously and improperly enforce quarantine arrangements, that would come under that clause. But the quarantine arrangements for the protection of the health of animals cannot in any way be influenced by this tariff arrangement.

Mr. LALOR. Have the United States quarantine arrangements against Canada such as we have against the United States?

Mr. FISHER. The United States quarantine arrangements are not the same as ours. I could not say offhand just what they are in regard to hogs. But Canada has very little hog cholera, whereas, unfortunately the northern tier of states of the United States has a great deal of it. We have been absolutely obliged to keep up quarantine to prevent the introduction of hog cholera into Canada.

Mr. SEXSMITH. With a guarantee that the hogs are all right, they can come in—

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Not with the certificate of a veterinary?

Mr. FISHER. That makes no difference in the case of hogs.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will the minister tell us whether he urges upon the farmers in general the advisability of shipping hay and grain instead of feeding on the farm?

Mr. FISHER. That would be a question of circumstances.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will the minister claim that it is generally understood to be a wise policy?

Mr. FISHER. It may or may not be, according to circumstances.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is it not the fact that the minister went to Kingston some years ago and delivered a lecture in the course of which he made a statement showing the different values taken from the soil from different products of the farm, and strongly opposed the shipping of hay or grain off the farm?

Mr. FISHER. Quite possibly I did, under the circumstances that surround Kingston.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. We must try to refresh the hon. gentleman's memory for this is an important matter, and the minister has made an important statement.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have to call the hon. member's (Mr. Armstrong's) attention to the fact that we are now discussing an item for the health of animals. If he proposes to apply what he is saying to that, it will be in order, but a general discussion of agricultural problems will not be in order.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. This, I understand, is a vote of $50,000 for the animal industry.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. No, the health of animals.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Food would naturally come in on that.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If it is applied in that way—

Mr. ARMSTRONG. This is the application I wish to make, and it is an important application. Some weeks ago, the Minister of Agriculture made a statement in this House to the effect that the farmers of certain sections of our country would receive wonderful advantage from the shipments of hay and grain—

Mr. MILLER. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) is discussing not the food the animals eat, which is the only food that can affect their health, but the food that they do not eat. Therefore, his arguments do not apply.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Does the hon. gentleman say they do not eat hay or grain?

Mr. MILLER. Not the hay or grain that is exported.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That is a very clever statement on the part of the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller). I wrote to Dr. Wm. Saunders, Director of the Experimental Farm in Ottawa, asking him about the fertility taken from the soil by certain crops, and received the following reply:

Ottawa, Ont., March 9, 1911.

J. E. Armstrong, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—On receipt of your letter of the 6th inst., in reference to the fertility taken from the soil by certain grain crops, &c., I referred the matter to the chemist, Mr. Shutt, who has prepared the attached memorandum.

I inclose herewith Bulletins Nos. 31 and 40 of our series, which are referred to in Mr. Shutt's memorandum.

Yours very truly,
WM. SAUNDERS,
Director.

March 9, 1911.

Memorandum for Mr. J. E. Armstrong, M.P., re Soil Fertility.

1. The approximate amounts of plant food taken out of the soil by the more common farm crops and lost to the farm when the produce is sold, are given in tabular form on page 6 of Bulletin No. 40, a copy of which accompanies this memorandum. It should be noted that the pounds of nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash there given are those contained in and would be removed by ten crops. It should further be borne in mind that these amounts are to be regarded as approximately only (there being many factors that might very considerably affect them). The figures, however, I believe represent fair averages and are more or less comparative for the crops cited when grown under similar conditions.

2. When the crops are fed on the farm and reasonable care is taken of the manure—that is, a sufficiency of litter is used to absorb the urine and there is no excessive fermentation or leaching before the manure is put on the soil, we may conclude that from 75 per cent to 90 per cent of the plant food in those crops might be returned to the soil. In ordinary farm practice, however, very considerable losses in plant food are sustained between the production of the manure and its application to the land.

3. Dairy cattle in milk make a greater demand on their food, or put otherwise, extract larger amounts of the elements of fertility from it, than do fattening stock. Thus, in fattening steers and sheep, from 90 per cent to 95 per cent of the nitrogen of their food may be recovered in their manure, but in the manure (solid or liquid) of milking cattle there would not probably be more than 75 per cent. The differences between say, 75 per cent and 90 per cent, of course, appears in the milk. If butter only is sold, the loss to the farmer in the elements of plant food is practically negligible.

Young and growing stock utilize more of the elements of fertility in their food than do mature and fattened stock. Thus, in the manure (solid or liquid) from calves there may be present from 30 per cent to 50 per cent only of the nitrogen of their food.

FRANK T. SHUTT,
Dominion chemist.

P.S.—A copy of our bulletin on Barnyard Manure is also sent as it contains information bearing on the factors that affect the composition of manures, the return of plant food to the soil and other closely related subjects.

Great injury to the fertility of our lands occurs from a system of farming which consists merely in the growing and selling of hay and grain, and still further losses of plant food of very considerable magnitude follow the careless management of such manure as is produced.

Now, in this buletin, No. 40, at page 6, I find the following statement.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not find that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) is applying his argument in any way to the health of animals. It will be necessary to do so if he wishes to speak on the item before the Chair.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I was referring to the food given to the animals, which would naturally pertain to their health, and, at the same time, to the advisability or otherwise of taking away from the farm such crops as hay and grain—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The argument I found the hon. gentleman was delivering was with regard to the latter portion. I was quite willing to hear him if the argument is to be turned in some way, with reasonable haste, to the argument before the Chair. But it appeared to be rather a prolonged argument with regard to the effect on land of certain crops rather than on the health of animals.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have no intention of making a long statement. These figures are here, and if you will accept them as read—

Mr. FISHER. Hear, hear.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would be very glad to have them placed on 'Hansard,' because they are very important and of deep interest to the farming industry.

Mr. FISHER. Hear, hear.

Mr. ARMSTRONG: (reading)—

SOIL EXHAUSTION BY GROWING CROPS.

The extent or rate of soil exhaustion from cropping is indicated by the particulars in the following table, which gives the approximate amounts of the essential elements of fertility removed in ten years from an acre of land by ordinary farm crops, where the yields mentioned are obtained:

PLANT FOOD REMOVED BY CROPS IN TEN YEARS.

Yearly Yield per Acre.	Nitrogen.	Phosphoric Acid.	Potash.
	Lbs	Lbs	Lbs
Timothy hay, two tons per acre	600	400	900
Oats, 50 bushels per acre of grain, with 2,200 lbs. of straw	460	164	356
Spring wheat, 25 bushels of grain per acre, with 2,200 lbs. of straw	422	233	395
Barley, 35 bushels per acre of grain, with 2,000 lbs. of straw	325	164	270
Indian corn, grown for fodder to the late milk or glazing stage, 15 tons per acre	660	330	1,170
Turnips, roots only (the tops being left on the land to plough under), 15 tons per acre	540	300	1,140
Mangels, roots only, 15 tons per acre	570	270	1,149
Carrots, roots only, 15 tons per acre	600	270	780
Sugar beets, roots only, 15 tons per acre	630	240	1,110
Potatoes, tubers only, 200 bush. per acre	408	192	684
Apples (trees in full bearing), fruit, leaves and wood	650	156	900

The figures are followed by this statement:

We thus see that reduced yields must inevitably follow successive cropping (unless plant food is from time to time returned); for the amounts given in the above table represent for the most part withdrawals from that limited store of immediately available plant food to which we have already drawn attention. If, during the ten years referred to, the land has had regular dressings of barnyard manure, say, once in five years, of about 20 tons to the acre, there would by this means be restored to the soil about 400 pounds of nitrogen, 200 pounds of phosphoric acid, and 360 pounds of potash, with the further advantage of a large addition of humus. With a suitable rotation of crops this return would do much towards making up the losses mentioned.

The crop producing power of soils is also lessened under such circumstances as we have referred to, by the wasting of their organic matter.

In Bulletin 31 on pages 10 and 11 I find:

The mineral constituents come originally, as already stated, from the rocks that form the base of the soil. They are being constantly removed for croppings. Thus, a four years' rotation of wheat, barley, potatoes and hay will remove per acre approximately, in addition to nitrogen, 222 pounds of potash and 80 pounds of phosphoric acid, and a rotation of wheat, oats, mangels and hay, 342 pounds of potash and 83 pounds of phosphoric acid.

I am anxious to press on the minister the importance of our people feeding the products of their farms to animals on the farms instead of exporting them from the country. It has been the policy of the department for a great many years, and the minister's own officials use the strongest kind of language in condemnation of not feeding these products on the farms. I hope the minister will put himself right in regard to a statement he made some time ago.

Mr. BURRELL. The minister said that cattle for breeding and dairy purposes had always to be accompanied by a health certificate. Did he mean to imply there was no other test?

Mr. FISHER. Not if they are accompanied by a certificate of tuberculin test signed by an official of the federal government at Washington. We exchange lists of these officials with the American authorities and mutually accept such certificates.

Mr. BURRELL. I understood that horses were subject to the Mallein test, although accompanied by a health certificate.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, because the horse may easily contract the disease after the test is given. Tuberculosis is different and the tuberculin test cannot be made unless you are sure that the animal has not been injected with tuberculin for two or three months.

Mr. BURRELL. Is the Mallein test exactly similar with that in the United States? I understood their test was more severe and satisfactory than ours.

Mr. FISHER. Ours is the regular Mallein test, we do not consider the American test satisfactory.

Mr. SPROULE. What regulations are there for sheep and poultry?

Mr. FISHER. For sheep a certificate is required that there is no disease in the district from which they come. There is no regulation as regards poultry.

Mr. SPROULE. How are cars disinfected when coming into Canada?

Mr. FISHER. They are cleansed and disinfected every time they cross the boundary. If there are animals in them they are carried through to destination and then the cars are cleansed and disinfected. When animals are unloaded for feeding in railway yards these yards are disinfected in the same way as the cars.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the method of disinfection?

Mr. FISHER. The cars and yards are washed with a regular disinfecting preparation and are also whitewashed with lime whitewash. Sometimes where there is an air-tight building formaldehyde is evaporated.

Mr. SPROULE. The whole value of any system of disinfection depends on the manner in which the work is carried out. If we were told exactly how it is done and what disinfectants are used, I as a medical man could bring my knowledge to bear on it and decide whether it was of real value. I hear them talking about spraying whitewash on the yards and cars and throwing formaldehyde on them. To tell a medical man that you can disinfect by throwing formaldehyde in that way is to tell him something that is repugnant to his knowledge and idea of what should be done. He would not attach much value to it. It would be an easy matter for disease to be communicated from animals which had been in this yard previous to others occupying it unless it were well done. My object is to ascertain just how it is done so as to bring my own judgment to bear as to whether it is effective or otherwise. If we are spending money for it, it ought to be useful in so far as it is possible for human ingenuity to make it so.

Mr. FISHER. I agree with my hon. friend. It is done in the best way it possibly can be done, and I think the fact that there has been no epidemic in the country for a good many years is pretty fair proof that it is done effectively. The cars are first of all scraped clean of manure, they are then washed with a scrubbing broom dipped in a disinfecting fluid, then whitewashed, with lime whitewash which in itself is supposed to act as a destructive force upon the spores of disease. The yards are treated just in the same way. My officers inform me that this treatment is effective. It is possible that occasionally germs of disease may exist, but I think that this is only the case in very rare instances. This disinfection is done in the way in which it is done in all the animal quarantine stations that I know of in the world. I know it is done in the largest in England, and in the United States quarantine stations. It is done by our officers as efficiently as we can have it done.

Mr. SPROULE. I have been told that it has not always been done in that way although I am not going to vouch for the information or to say whether it is correct or otherwise. I have been told that the manure is shovelled out of the car, and that then the car is whitewashed, not that the car is washed first and then whitewashed. If only that is done it is not sufficient. If the other were well done it would, in my judgment, be valuable and most likely effect what is desired.

Mr. FISHER. We have several inspectors, and they are trying their best to have it carried out properly. If at any time we find remissness it will be pretty short shrift for the man who allowed it. I cannot pretend to say that either I or the veterinary general has seen it done in every case. We have to trust to our inspectors, but I think that we have a good corps of inspectors, and that the work is efficiently done. I will be very glad if my hon. friend will give an instance where there is a doubt of its efficiency, and I will see that it is investigated.

Mr. SPROULE. What check is kept on these quarantine officers whose duty it is to do this work? Is there any inspection or report with regard to them?

Mr. FISHER. We have different grades, one grade above the other; we have certain men who are in charge of others they are one grade higher and then others who are in a still higher grade. We have three or four travelling inspectors who go around all the time and whose business it is to watch the other officers. All inspections require close supervision, and we try to make them efficient. One of the most difficult things in administration is to insure thorough efficiency in a second grade of inspectors, but we do the best we can and to-day we have a system which, I think, secures that result.

Mr. SEXSMITH. How many inspectors have you permanently employed?

Mr. FISHER. Twelve.

Mr. SEXSMITH. At what salary?

Mr. FISHER. One at $2,100, one at $2,000, one at $1,700, three at $1,500, 12 at $1,400, 16 at $1,300. Then, there is a whole lot at $900, and $700 and two temporary employees at $100.

Mr. BLAIN. As I understand it, an American cattle buyer can purchase cattle in Chicago, send them through Canada in bond to Montreal, and then export them to Europe. May I ask the minister whether the ordinary inspection applies to such cattle?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, when they leave the port of Montreal.

Mr. BLAIN. But I mean as they enter Canada.

Mr. FISHER. They are subject to our regulations. As long as they are kept in bond we do not inspect them in the same way as if they were to be let loose in Canada. We do not allow any animal, American or any other kind, to leave Montreal without inspection and a certificate of health, because it would be injurious to the credit of Canada if an unhealthy animal were allowed to reach Europe.

Mr. BLAIN. According to that cattle coming from Chicago, entering Canada at Windsor and going on down to Montreal, pass over the line without any inspection at all?

Mr. FISHER. They are shut up in the bonded cars.

Mr. BLAIN. They pass into Canada without any inspection whatever?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, in bond.

Mr. BLAIN. They go down to Montreal, and there is no inspection until the time arrives when they are to be exported, and then I understand that my hon. friend applies his inspection to them? Is there not some regulation of the department to take charge of those cattle or are they allowed to pass through without inspection?

Mr. FISHER. They are in bond, and they will not be released.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there no regulation at all?

Mr. FISHER. They are in the hands of the customs officers, and they are in sealed cars. They are allowed to be taken out at certain specified places for feeding and watering if they are long enough in the cars to require it, and that is done under the supervision of my officers who see that they do not come into contact with any other animals. As long as they are in the hands of the Department of Customs we do not deal with them.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there an officer where the cattle are taken out to be fed who inspects them?

Mr. FISHER. Not inspects them, but simply sees that they do not come into contact with any other animal or are removed from the yards. They are in bond. They will not be allowed loose in Canada, and the yards where they are fed are part of the bonded transit through Canada. We do not undertake to inspect them.

Mr. BLAIN. Then, as a matter of fact, the American buying cattle in Chicago is in a better position than the Canadian who brings his cattle in from Chicago?

Mr. FISHER. Not a bit.

Mr. BLAIN. As I understand it, the farmer from Canada going to Chicago to bring cattle into Canada would require to have them inspected at the boundary line?

Mr. FISHER. If they are going to stay in Canada.

Mr. BLAIN. What difference would it make with regard to spreading disease whether they were in bond or not in bond?

Mr. FISHER. They do not come into contact with other Canadian animals.

Mr. BLAIN. They can bring the disease in here without any interference on the part of the department. Am I right when I say that these animals cross the line without inspection?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. And if they are diseased they travel along the railway line in Canada, they are taken out at different points to be fed and watered, they remain a week in Montreal before shipment and it is only when they are shipped that they are inspected by the officers of the Minister of Agriculture. I do not think the minister should plume himself for taking precaution because there is no precaution in that.

Mr. FISHER. These animals are passing through Canada in bond and they cannot come into contact with any Canadian animals in any way. The yards where they are fed and watered are disinfected before other animals go into them, and in Montreal in 99 cases out of 100 they are put on the ship the day they arrive. We inspect them at Montreal because, being cleared from Montreal, they are entered as animals from Montreal when they arrive on the other side, and if there should be disease among them it would be credited to Canada. During their transit through Canada they are in bond and according to a fiction of the customs law they are not in the country at all. The spread of disease can only occur by contagion and precautions are taken against that. The best proof that there is no danger is that a considerable number of these animals have passed through Canada and for many years back there has been no case of disease attributable to the passage of these animals through the country.

Mr. BLAIN. With all due respect to the minister's superior knowledge, in my opinion these animals should be inspected when they enter Canada. Why are they not inspected at one of these feeding points for instance?

Mr. FISHER. That is a matter of convenience.

Mr. BLAIN. Would it not be better?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think there is any danger as it is.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister cannot credit his department with taking precautions because no precautions are taken, and the only defence of the minister is that up to the present time there has been no disease.

Mr. SPROULE. If a carload of cattle is shipped from Chicago to Winnipeg would they come under any regulations provided they were taken to Winnipeg to be slaughtered.

Mr. FISHER. If they went straight to Winnipeg for immediate slaughter they would come right in.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister said that sheep must be accompanied by a certificate from a competent veterinary surgeon. Suppose a car of sheep were taken from Chicago to Toronto or Winnipeg, would the certificate be from the stock yards at Chicago or from the farming country where the sheep were raised?

Mr. FISHER. The certificate they would get in Chicago would be acceptable.

Mr. SPROULE. Where pure bred animals are sent to the United States for breeding purposes under what regulations would they enter the United States, and are the United States regulations the same in that respect as ours?

Mr. FISHER. The regulations are the same on both sides of the line.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought there was some restriction in the United States with regard to registration?

Mr. FISHER. My answer was only in respect to the regulations with regard to quarantine, and they are the same. So far as pedigrees are concerned, the regulations are practically the same but the United States have made what I cannot help but call a vexatious and discriminating regulation which says that the thoroughbred animal in order to get free entry must be imported into the United States by a United States citizen. Our regulation does not require that. Some people in Canada have asked us to pass a similar regulation to that of the United States, some do not want it and so far we have not done so.

Mr. SPROULE. An American buying an animal in Canada will pay a higher price for it if it is registered in the United States than he would if it is not registered there, whereas a Canadian buying an animal in the United States to bring to Canada can do so without any restriction that would reduce its value by its not being registered here.

Mr. FISHER. That is true. The United States imposes the regulations that the importer of the animal must be a United States citizen in order to get it in free. The Canadian is subject to this disability, which gives the American a little advantage over him. Even though the animal is registered in the United States, a Canadian cannot take it in free, but an American citizen can. But a Canadian can have a Canadian animal registered in the United States.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems that the American has an advantage over the Canadian which enables him to force down the price here, while we cannot do the same in the United States.

Mr. BLAIN. How many animals have been rejected at Montreal or any other Canadian port during the past fiscal year, I refer to animals in transit in bond?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say at the moment. I do not think there is any considerable number. I can have that information when we are on the main item.

Mr. BLAIN. At page 115 of the minister's report for last year, referring to animals in transit, I read:

> The transit of such animals shall be subject to such regulations as the minister shall from time to time prescribe.

What are those regulations?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot tell off-hand. I will get that also for my hon. friend.

Mr. DANIEL. Are these bonded cars always disinfected, not simply those carrying diseased animals, but those carrying animals which are not diseased?

Mr. FISHER. They are all disinfected, whether there are diseased animals in them or not.

Mr. PORTER. What becomes of the condemned animals at the port of inspection?

Mr. FISHER. The owner can dispose of them. I think they are killed there.

Mr. CAMPBELL. With regard to the discrimination practised by the United States authorities against our cattle imported into that country, many pure bred cattle particularly shorthorns, which are registered in the United States and are rought into Canada, are not considered worthy of registration in the Dominion. They are recognized by Canadian breeders as merely grade cattle. Are these animals allowed to come into Canada free of duty?

Mr. FISHER. No. The Customs Department is given a list of organizations whose certificate will be accepted for free entry, and no association is recognized in that way unless its certificate is accepted for registration in the Dominion records.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What I want to bring to the minister's attention is this: Numbers of cattle are brought from the United States that are registered in the official herd-books of that country. Are the pedigrees of those cattle submitted to the Dominion authorities before the cattle are permitted to enter?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. I find on page 115 of the hon. minister's report that the importation of branded or ranch horses, mules and asses, other than those which are gentle and broken to harness and saddle, is prohibited. Under the proposed agreement these will come in absolutely free.

Mr. FISHER. They are prohibited because of the impossibility to test them with mallein, and we do not allow any horse to come in from the United States without the mallein test.

Mr. BLAIN. How will it be in the future?

Mr. FISHER. Any animals that are prohibited now because we cannot subject them to the mallein test will be prohibited in the future under our quarantine regulations.

Mr. BLAIN. But under the pact they are to be admitted absolutely free. Will the hon. gentleman's regulations hold good against that pact.

Mr. FISHER. I think so.

Mr. BLAIN. Therefore, no matter what the agreement says, these horses will not be permitted to come into Canada. I am very glad to hear that.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What is the mallein test for?

Mr. FISHER. To see whether the horse is afflicted with glanders.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Why cannot branded or unbroken horses be tested? I will guarantee to test 50 per day for the minister.

Mr. FISHER. Will the hon. gentleman come in and work for us?

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the salary is good enough.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I would suggest that during recess the minister should consult the Department of Justice and ascertain whether the statement he makes is correct or not. Under the proposed agreement these animals are to be allowed in free, but the minister says their entry may be prohibited under his quarantine regulations.

Mr. FISHER. I would be very glad to consult the Department of Justice, but I am afraid I could hardly do it between now and eight o'clock.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Are we to understand that, under this quarantine regulation, branded or ranch horses are not to be permitted into Canada.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. member for Leeds says I have to get the opinion of the Department of Justice on that point, but in my judgment the proposed agreement cannot interfere with quarantine regulations.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Are we to understand that quarantine regulations may be put into force which will render the reciprocal arrangement impracticable.

Mr. FISHER. Quarantine regulations are just as useful and as capable of being enforced under the proposed agreement as at present. Of course I shall have to get the opinion of the Department of Justice on any particular point that may come up, and will be careful to do so; but I have always understood that matters of public health and quarantine are not affected by any trade agreement.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Then the regulations could be so worded as to practically include those cattle.

Mr. FISHER. That would be an unfair and unreasonable action. I would not undertake to use the quarantine for that purpose.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Under the pact it is agreed that no regulation shall be made or maintained which unreasonably hampers a more liberal exchange of commodities. That refers to the free interchange of horses.

Mr. FISHER. I think my hon. friend will see that that refers to customs regulations, not to quarantine regulations. It has particular reference to an old complaint we had against the United States when former arrangements were made and customs duties imposed by which, while the contents of cans were allowed in free, the cans themselves were charged duty.

Mr. MILLER. Is not the British embargo a similar case? Great Britain does not impose duties on live cattle entering that country, but under the embargo, live cattle are prevented from entering.

Mr. BLAIN. They have no agreement to let them in free.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. LENNOX. At six o'clock we were discussing the question of quarantine, and the effect upon our quarantine system of the proposed reciprocity agreement. The hon. member for Grey instanced the fact that the British government were able to enforce the embargo against our cattle notwithstanding the fact that it is a free trade country, and I think as a rule where countries are on equal terms, that either could enforce its quarantine regulations. But in this case we are making a specific bargain with the United States after we have put into force regulations in reference to quarantine, and a strong argument may be advanced that the subsequent bargain, by implication, overrides our regulations. I am not much impressed with that view of the matter although there is no reservation in the reciprocity agreement. I waive that point, but I feel it is all important that we are entering into an arrangement which may conflict with this vital matter of our quarantine regulations, and that possibly we may have difficulty owing to the American interpretation of the agreement. My experience is that in cases of contract where there is no court to which the parties can resort, the result of a dispute is that the stronger must and does prevail. I am addressing myself to the question of protecting our cattle by these quarantine regulations, and am endeavouring to warn the minister as he is the guardian of all the hogs, cattle and poultry of Canada, that he should be on the alert, that there is great danger of the Americans so using their influence over us, by force of numbers, that the reputation of our meat products will be seriously imperilled. The Americans might be quite prepared to admit that our regulations are valid and within our rights, but they may argue that this is not a fair exercise of that right, and that under colour of quarantine regulations we are excluding their cattle from our markets. While I have great respect for the American people as individuals, the history of our transactions with them in the past is not such as to make me feel that we can safely leave to the United States the interpretation of our action in reference to quarantine, they will say we are not acting honestly, and they will endeavour to hold the club over us. While I do not think I can frighten the Minister of Agriculture, I guarantee that they will frighten him when the time comes and we will be the sufferers, that they will impose their interpretation of our right to enforce quarantine regulations, and that the minister will be compelled to allow their live stock to enter Canada imperilling the safety of our flocks and herds. I ask the minister to act on behalf of the farmers for once and to come to the rescue of the reputation of our live stock. I know he has sufficient influence in the cabinet, acting on behalf of the farmers, to melt the stony hearts of the First Minister and the Minister of Finance although they seem to be obdurate on this reciprocity question, and I appeal to him to protect the interests of the farmers in this matter.

Mr. FISHER. I assure my hon. friend I will not be deaf to his appeal. I appreciate his efforts and I will try to deserve them.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Did the minister during the recess inquire as to whether this agreement would have the effect alleged?

Mr. BLAIN. When are we to receive information as to the opinion of the Justice Department?

Mr. FISHER. I will discuss it with my colleague certainly, and get his views as soon as I can. I hope that when another item of mine comes up I will be able to tell my hon. friend what the views of the Minister of Justice are.

Mr. BLAIN. My understanding is that my hon. friend would have the compact agreed to by his government, including himself and, after it has been agreed to, when he has a little time on his hands, he is going to submit it to the Justice Department. I would have supposed that a minister who is looking after the interests of the farmers would have submitted this question to the Justice Department before they consented to the contract or made the agreement. The charge that I make with respect to this matter is that my hon. friend has forgotten the farmers' interests altogether, both with respect to the care of the health of our animals and on general principles. My hon. friend remembers very well the applause that the government heaped upon him from within, not from without, because he was a practical farmer.

Mr. MILLER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend says 'hear, hear;' I am delighted to have his support.

Mr. MILLER. My hon. friend has my support in saying that the Minister of Agriculture is a practical, a very successful and a thoroughly up-to-date farmer. I would like to ask the hon. member for Peel whether, if my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture obtained a legal opinion from my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, he would be satisfied with that opinion?

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend has entirely misunderstood me. I was pointing out the applause that was coming from the government and my hon. friend's side of the House because the Minister of Agriculture was an up-to-date farmer. I was not suggesting that I was believing in that applause.

Mr. MILLER. Oh, I misunderstood you, then; I thought you were.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend was mistaken about that. What I would like to know is whether my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture has not forgotten the interests of the farmer with respect to this matter.

Mr. FISHER. Oh, no.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand that, according to the regulations here, before cattle are put on board cars, the cars must be disinfected. I would like to ask the minister whether cars into which American cattle are placed for the purpose of being carried into Canada in bond to our seaports are disinfected, and whether the American regulations are sufficient to protect our cattle from the diseases that may be brought into Canada in this way?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, I am informed that the United States authorities inspect the cattle before they start for Canada in bond for export to Europe.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend has quite misunderstood my question. According to the regulations in Canada, there must be an inspection of the cars and they must be disinfected before the cattle are allowed to go on board. It is very important to know if similar precautions are taken by our neighbours in sending cattle into Canada in bond to be exported to the old country. My information is that they are not inspected.

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that there is an order in the United States to the effect that cars coming across the boundary line must be inspected and disinfected before they come over.

Mr. BLAIN. My point is whether the cars on which cattle are loaded on the United States side of the line are inspected and disinfected as they have to be in Canada.

Mr. FISHER. The regulations in the United States provide that railway cars used in the transport of animals subject to these regulations must be thoroughly cleaned and disinfected before such animals are placed therein, and that all litter from previous shipments must be removed, and the cars whitewashed with lime and carbolic acid. Canadian animals will not be allowed into the United States and animals from the United States will not be taken into Canada if this is not done.

Quarantine—salaries and contingencies of organized districts and public health in other districts—further amount required, $25,000.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the explanation of this?

Mr. FISHER. This is in regard to human quarantine, and it is to cover the amount which is required for the rest of this year. A good deal of this expenditure is at Grosse Isle. We had to keep the quarantine station at Grosse Isle open longer than usual in consequence of having had disease there very late in the season. After the ships cease running, we usually close the station, but a few people are left in the hospital or in quarantine and we have to keep the station open. We have also to make some expenditures with regard to the establishment of a quarantine station at Prince Rupert, B.C. We have had to spend $10,000 for a launch and the equipment for her and the requirements for the proper housing and keeping of her at the station. Then there were a number of small items at Grosse Isle. We had to get new ovens for the bakery and we were obliged, in consequence of a case of cholera there, to pay professors Adami and Vallee for bacteriological investigations. We have also installed telephone communication between different parts of the station.

Mr. BLAIN. How much did the launch cost?

Mr. FISHER. The launch, her accessories and delivery at Prince Rupert, cost about $10,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Where was she purchased?

Mr. FISHER. At Victoria, and she had to be sent up to Prince Rupert.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Did Mr. Kelly supply it?

Mr. FISHER. I do not remember from whom we purchased the launch, but it was not from Mr. Kelly.

Mr. TALBOT. May I ask the minister if any representations have been made to his department as to the buildings at Grosse Isle in case of sickness or disease holding up passengers on the late boats in the fall of the year? I was told that while they were suitable enough during the summer they were not habitable in the fall.

Mr. FISHER. The statement of my hon. friend is partially true. We have been rather unfortunate for a couple of years back to have persons detained in quarantine late in the season at Grosse Isle, and while we endeavoured to keep the buildings as warm as possible, I found it necessary to ask the Minister of Public Works to provide an estimate for the erection of new buildings.

Mr. BLAIN. Was there a special vote taken for this launch?

Mr. FISHER. It was paid for out of our regular vote for the maintenance of the quarantine station. We appointed a doctor at Prince Rupert and to enable him to get to the ships we had to provide him with a launch. That is one of the reasons why the regular vote is short for other services.

Mr. BLAIN. Did the minister explain last year when the vote was taken that part of it was for this launch?

Mr. FISHER. No. It is just as much a part of the work for which the vote was taken as the purchase of medicine or the appointing of an additional member to the staff if that were necessary. The vote was for maintenance and equipment of the station and the launch was required towards that end.

Mr. BLAIN. Under that idea the minister could appropriate the money voted for almost anything connected with the quarantine station?

Mr. FISHER. That is what the money is voted for.

Mr. BLAIN. It seems to me that it is straining the matter to purchase a launch out of a general vote without explaining it to the committee.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). What is the total vote for the quarantine service?

Mr. FISHER. For the current fiscal year $130,000 is voted and we find it necessary to ask for $25,000 more. Last year the total expenditure was $138,000.

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). Some time ago when we were considering supplementary estimates, under the vote for exhibitions I asked the Minister of Agriculture a question about the Winnipeg World's Fair, and he stated he would like to see the First Minister before answering. The right hon. gentleman is now in his place.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The question put by my hon. friend is as to whether or not the government has come to any conclusion on this subject?

Mr. HAGGART. (Winnipeg). Yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have to inform my hon. friend that the government has not come to any affirmative conclusion upon this matter.

Mr. STAPLES. When the right hon. gentleman returned to Winnipeg from the west, a special delegation—I do not know whether it was political or non-political —had a long interview with the Prime Minister, and would the right hon. gentleman have any objection to tell the House what he told that delegation with respect to this necessary appropriation for the World's fair. I believe the Prime Minister asked the province of Manitoba to put up two and a half million dollars on the understanding that if they succeeded he would supplement that with an equal amount. I believe that the delegation that waited on the Prime Minister have made provision for their share of the contribution, and surely the Prime Minister is prepared to carry out his promise.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have a very distinct recollection that I met my hon. friend (Mr. Staples) in the west, but I do not remember that we ever talked over this matter. At the interview I had with regard to the exhibition I do not remember that I saw the hon. gentleman, and the information he has on the subject must be from hearsay. I have had so many interviews upon that subject that I do not know to which he refers, but I have no distinct recollection or vague recollection or any recollection at all that I committed myself or the government to the plan proposed.

Mr. STAPLES. I base my statement on a newspaper report which I am satisfied I could produce.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Possibly.

Mr. STAPLES. It gives a full report of what took place at the interview in question.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no doubt my hon. friend could get a report of this interview, but I shall be obliged to dispute any report which goes to show that I made a promise to the effect referred to by my hon. friend.

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). Would it be asking too much if I asked the Prime Minister when we may expect the government to come to a conclusion on that question?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is not too much to ask, but it is another thing to answer. I may say that personally I am very favourable to the idea of having an exhibition, but whether that exhibition should take place in 1914 as was suggested to me is a question that requires consideration. I do not know when my hon. friend may be able to have an exhibition, but I hope he may have it some time in the not too distant future.

Mr. SPROULE. It is important that the government should come to some conclusion a long time in advance so as to give a fair and full opportunity to the western people to make the necessary provision for such a large undertaking. The only reason why the minister might be reluctant to come to a decision is that he might not be there at the proper time to carry it out. That may be a good reason, and if so, we shall have to wait until the decision is made by some one who will be there.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am afraid I cannot allow this discussion to continue. There is no item before the Chair. It was only by courtesy that the hon. member for Winnipeg was allowed to bring the matter up.

Railways and canals, chargeable to capital —to increase railway accommodation at Campbellton, N.B., Governor General's warrant, $75,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. As a matter of fact, when the station buildings at Campbellton were burned in the fire which destroyed the town, the Governor General's warrant was issued for $250,000. We did not wait a moment to even advertise for tenders; we put our own staff at work. The result will be that we shall spend on new yards, roundhouses, and station, about $327.000. The loss at Campbellton, amounting to $76,000, we have provided for out of the revenue of this year. There is a little error in this item, and we shall have to ask for a supplementary vote later, as the total estimated cost will be $327,880.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I notice by the papers of to-day that another fire has taken place, this time at Truro. Has the minister the details?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have not the details yet. I think the loss is exaggerated in the newspapers. Our freight shed at Truro has been destroyed. It was not very valuable. We have a vote to build a new one. What the extent of the loss of freight is I do not know.

Railways and canals—collection of revenue —Intercolonial railway, further amount required, $250,000.

Mr. GRAHAM We took a vote of $9,000,000 for this year, thinking that would be sufficient; but we have been much more prosperous than we expected. Instead of earning $9,217,000, we expect to earn $10,000,000, and consequently, as on all railways, the cost of operation has been correspondingly increased.

Mr. PRICE I have reason to complain of the freight-car service of the Intercolonial. My company has several mills on the Intercolonial line, and we have had a great deal of trouble for a long time in getting cars. I would like to know from the hon. Minister of Railways why it is that the freight car service is so bad.

Mr. GRAHAM. We labour under a difficulty on the Intercolonial that the larger railways do not. When the pulpwood season begins, our cars go to the United States. At the present time we have many cars across the line which we are trying to get back. The United States railway companies pay us 25 cents or 35 cents a day for each of these cars. We have several chasers after them now. The larger railways can keep even, because they bring back as many American cars as they have on the other side. Few American cars come to us. There has been a much larger traffic this year than we anticipated. While our usual renewal equipment amounts to $300,000, I am asking this year to make it $400,000 and possibly a little more. We hope next year to be in a better position to supply the car shortage than we are this year.

Mr. PRICE. I am afraid that this is the old story that we have been hearing for several years. This is not the only year in which there has been a shortage of freight cars. The same thing has gone on for many years, and there has been a great deal of complaint about it. The Minister of Railways has a particularly charming way of telling us what will be done in the future, but that will not put us off. What I want to know is, why can we not get a better service of cars? I understand what he says about cars carrying pulpwood being diverted to the United States, but why are they not brought back? If we do business with the Canadian Pacific railway or the Grand Trunk railway, or any other line that does business on a business basis, we can get cars. But the Intercolonial is not being managed on a proper basis. When I say that I do not say it in a political sense. It was badly run under the Conservatives, and it is badly run under the Liberals. What we want is a proper business management of that railway. I will illustrate the matter by a reference to our own business. We have to keep up a lot of lighters and tugs which we would do away with if we could get the Intercolonial Railway to do the business. I am not talking of a few thousand dollars of business which the railway has lost in this way. Why is this matter not looked into? I cannot see why, under proper business management, we cannot get better served with cars. At times when we put in a demand for cars, say at Rimouski, and say we want four a day, one day we may get two and the next day eight, then two days will elapse without our getting any, and then we may get three. The result is that not only are we left without cars on certain days and have too few or too many on other days, but we have to keep men on in case we should get the number of cars we require. That makes business more costly and makes it almost impossible to run the business properly. The minister should see that the Intercolonial railway is run in such a way as to give the greatest convenience and help to business people.

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not agree with my hon. friend when he says the Intercolonial railway is not run in a business way. Of course he has the right to his own opinion, but my experience is that it is run as a business proposition just as much as the Grand Trunk railway or the Canadian Pacific railway. I leave it to my hon. friend himself. The Intercolonial railway is handicapped in this way. It has not an international traffic as have the Canadian Pacific railway and the Grand Trunk railway, but stops at Montreal. These other companies have as many cars on the American lines as the American companies have on theirs. Very few American cars, however come on the Intercolonial railway as we are not an international road. When the Grand Trunk railway and the Canadian Pacific railway take a car over their line, they keep it to themselves; whereas we have a greater percentage of cars across the line which it is impossible to get back when we require them. They are kept by the American railways and these railways pay a certain amount per day as long as they chose to keep them.

Mr. LENNOX. How much does a freight car cost?

Mr. GRAHAM. A freight car costs about $1,100.

Mr. LENNOX. You get 25 cents a day for its use.

Mr. GRAHAM. There is an arrangement between all the companies by which they pay so much per day. I think it is 25 cents.

Mr. PRICE. Why not raise the rate to 50 cents?

Mr. GRAHAM. We used to have a rate of 50 cents, but the railway companies, through their interchange bureau, reduced the price.

Mr. PRICE. You had better change it.

Mr. GRAHAM. We cannot. All the railways charge the same rate. All these other railways retain as many foreign cars for their own use as they send out of their own over other lines, but the Intercolonial railway is not so situated as to be able to do that. The American cars seldom come to us although ours go to them, so that in this respect we are handicapped. We are, however, making efforts to overcome that difficulty and are buying additional rolling stock this year. If my hon. friend will give specific cases, I shall try to remedy the grievances complained of, for I am just as anxious as he can possibly be that the best facilities should be afforded people to do business with us.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I think there is a good deal in what my hon. friend from Quebec (Mr. Price) says. I had considerable confidence in the Minister of Railways' ability to work out a new system, but only yesterday or the day before he received a letter which makes me doubt whether he has really been doing all he could in the interests of the Intercolonial railway. He has the original letter in his department, but I have here a copy which I propose to read, and I would like him to tell me whether he thinks, on reading that letter, that he has been doing his duty:

Red Pine P. O.
Gloucester Co., N.B.

Dear Sir,—I feel it my deauty to write to you For such a specification for ties. I dond think you are as bright as you might bee. You must think these people down hear are fools, where would you fine any timber that is clear of nots worme holes and chekks that is going to be worked into ties at 23c. a peace. Our union wont and that settles this part of the country. You dident say in your specification whether we should hawl them ties in a spring waggon or not and you dident say wheather we should have sent a full size photograf or a tintipe, please state in your next specification. You needent tell us to see the member, what he noes about ties dont ammount to shucks. Tell us what color you want them painted and what cind of trimmings you want on the stack. How much rent do we have to pay per month until you settle up, do you want the corners of them ties champerd and gilted or not. I would supose they would haf to be maid on a bright suny day, and if they get any dirt onto them would ivory soap be fit to wash them of, if not please state in your next. Meby it would be a good plan to have a shedd put over them ties.

We are all prety wel, hoping this will find you and the member likewise.

Yours truly,
THE SECRETARY,
Gloucester Farmers Union.
New Brunswick.

Answer soon.
Mister Graham,
Minister I.C.R. railway and ceterry.
8 oct. 1909.

Mr. BLAIN. Who is meant by the sitting member in that letter? Is that the member representing the county?

Mr. REID (Grenville). Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. The Minister of Railways should have some recollection of an important letter of that kind.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It seems to be an advertisement for Ivory soap.

Mr. BLAIN. If it is, the minister had better refer it to my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark). Would he also explain what the sitting member for the county has to do with the Intercolonial in respect of the purchase of ties.

Mr. GRAHAM. It would be difficult to explain something that has no existence.

Mr. PRICE. I would like to read a copy of a letter which I have received with regard to the service on the Intercolonial railway. It is written to Mr. Rippey, superintendent of the car service at Moncton, N.B.:

Quebec, March 9-21, 1911.

Dear Sir,—We have written you previously to this regarding our service here, and we wish particularly to draw your attention to the fact that we have at the present moment contracts for 800 to 1,000 tons which have to be shipped between now and the 30th of March. You will understand that we are shipping pulp to United States points, and at the moment there is a scarcity of ground wood pulp.

Immediately the thaw begins there will be lots of water and lots of ground wood pulp in the States, and unless we can ship by the above-mentioned date, these contracts will be absolutely and irrevocably cancelled, and we will lose the business and you also will lose the hauling. We would, therefore, ask you to immediately rush us in, some how or another, enough cars to ship this 800 to 1,000 tons. Most of this pulp is going to Berlin, N.H., and we understand that the Grand Trunk railway will supply cars to this point.

We have to-day written the Grand Trunk railway about it in the hope that they will do their utmost to get cars to us for this shipment. This car service is frightfully important to us, as you will understand, and we would be much obliged if you would give it your immediate attention.

Yours truly,
PRICE-PORRITT,
Pulp and Paper Company.

There is a case in point.

Mr. GRAHAM. If my hon. friend (Mr Price) will let me have a copy of that, I will have it looked into immediately.

Mr. PRICE. With pleasure. During the winter months, the price of pulp generally goes up because the mills in the United States are not able to grind, but as soon as the water rises in the spring, the United States mills begin to grind, and the price goes down. So, it is a great object for shippers in Canada to get their pulp sold and away before the high waters come. But the mills situated on the Intercolonial railway cannot get cars to ship out pulp, so, instead of netting $15, $17 or $18 a ton, we shall have to ship at a time when we net about $12 a ton. That is a hard case. I think the minister ought to consider the matter, and that, in a special case like this, cars should be furnished.

Mr. HENDERSON. I confess, I was a good deal surprised at the statement of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) that the Intercolonial railway constantly had about 4,000 cars in the United States. It does seem as if some system could be devised by which these cars could be got back more regularly. The hon. member from Quebec (Mr. Price) has complained that the Intercolonial railway is not being run on business principles. I do not know exactly to what he refers, or what suggestion he would make to enable the Minister of Railways to get back these cars; but I do know that other railways make strong efforts, when cars are wanted, to get those cars for their customers. On one occasion, I went to a director of the Canadian Pacific railway complaining about the want of cars and urging him to get a supply. He gave me a letter to the superintendent telling him to get this man whatever cars he wanted—to beg, borrow or steal them. I do not think he begged them or that he stole them, but I think he borrowed them—perhaps without leave. But immediately we got an abundant supply of cars. I would suggest to the minister that he adopt such a plan. I believe that other railways in Canada are using his cars. I notice where I live, west of Toronto, Intercolonial railway cars are sometimes on the track. What kind of freight can they be carrying?

Mr. REID (Grenville). When?

Mr. HENDERSON. No, but I cannot imagine what kind of freight they are carrying from the Intercolonial railway to that point; certainly not pulp.

Mr. GRAHAM. Fish.

Mr. HENDERSON. As I say, it seems to me that other roads in Canada are using Intercolonial railway cars, and that it is not necessary to go to the United States to secure cars. But, if a strong effort was made, surely some system could be devised by which these cars would be got back more promptly, and patrons of the Intercolonial railway not compelled to lose business for the lack of cars. This certainly goes far to explain why the Intercolonial railway has not been the success we hoped it would be. I think the minister would be justified in taking an estimate to double his supply of cars, unless he can devise a plan to get back his cars from other roads.

Mr. McLEAN (Huron). I think I am safe in saying that the grievance complained of by the hon. member for Quebec (Mr. Price) and the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), is not confined to the Intercolonial railway. I cannot speak as to the Canadian Pacific railway, but I know that on our branch of the Grand Trunk railway at certain seasons it is absolutely impossible to get cars for love or money. Sometimes you get one a day when five or six are wanted, other days three or four, and so on. I fancy this is a grievance common to all railways during the season when the freight offering is heaviest.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I understood the Minister of Railways to say that a freight car similar to those used in hauling pulp costs over $1,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. They cost about $1,100 each, if I recollect aright.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. And the minister allows them to wander all over the country at 25 cents a day, or something less than $100 a year? Is that the maximum price he can charge? The reason I ask is, that in the business in which I am engaged, the Grand Trunk railway or the Michigan Central railway will charge us up $1 a day for cars that are held for more than a certain length of time.

Mr. GRAHAM. Demurrage.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If the other roads using Intercolonial railway cars can be charged a maximum rate, it would seem to be wise for the Intercolonial railway to fix the rate at a figure that would yield at least reasonable interest on the money. The life of a car is comparatively short, and, at 25 cents a day, it might be advantageous for any road to take cars and keep them for any length of time instead of building cars of their own.

Mr. GRAHAM. If the Intercolonial railway had the making of the price, that could be done. But all the railways agree on a certain rate which they charge one another. If the cars of other railways come on the Intercolonial railway, we can keep them at the same price. But you could not run a railway for twenty-four hours without entering into this arrangement, because your cars would not be taken on any other line. I think the price is too small, but it is the price paid and charged by the other roads, and we have to accept it. As I pointed out to a railway man the other day, they can keep our cars at loss to us, and a gain to themselves. We have men out now trying to find our cars and rush them back.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Do I understand that when a car is billed to a certain point, the railway that receives it can make use of it for the carriage of goods all over its lines?

Mr. GRAHAM. Take, for instance, an Intercolonial car going to Chicago. Of course, they are not going to haul that car back empty. They will take it to one place and keep it, perhaps, a week, to another place and keep it for a few days, and so on, when they ought to bring it back more promptly.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I understand that the system is, that if an Intercolonial railway car is billed, say to London with a load of goods, routed by the Grand Trunk or Canadian Pacific railways, as soon as it is unloaded it must be returned to the Intercolonial railway. But they have the right to load it with goods going, let us say, to Kingston or other point east of London, and at Kingston it may be loaded for some other point further east, but I understand that it must not travel west, but must travel continuously only on the way back to the owners. The same applies to American cars. We unload them every day at our place, but we cannot use them to ship goods to any point east; they have to go back to the bridge, but they can carry freight for points between Gananoque and the bridge. We sometimes need cars to send goods eastward, and there are American cars there, but the Grand Trunk railway people tell us that these cars are not allowed to be sent to Brockville or other points east.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend has the essence of the arrangement. They load from Gananoque west to Kingston. It will stand there a day or two before being loaded and then perhaps they load it and send it to Napanee and it may be kept a month for what should be a three or four days' straight run.

Mr. PRICE. A few weeks ago cars on the Intercolonial railway from Quebec down were ordered to be sent to Sydney, and we could hardly get any cars on points below Quebec. Is there any reason why Sydney should get the advantage over other points? Is there any reason why Sydney people should be able to ship when other people cannot?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am not sure whether the Sydney people have an arrangement to get so many cars each day or not. They are steady shippers and may have such an arrangement but I do not think they have any special contract and are not more entitled to receive cars than my hon. friend.

Mr. PRICE. Could the minister give some assurance that if other people would give daily shipments, taking so many cars per day, the government would contract to supply those cars? If that could be done there are several other shippers who would be glad to enter into contracts of that kind.

Mr. GRAHAM. If my hon. friend will write me a note I will take the matter up with the traffic department and have them enter into correspondence with him.

Mr. BLAIN. The fact that 4,000 Intercolonial cars are allowed to go out of the country at 25 cents a day is a fair subject for criticism, particularly as the hon. member for Quebec-West has stated that in many cases in his own large business he has applied for cars and has not been able to get them. Would the minister state what proportion 4,000 is to the number of cars on the line and the average earnings of each car and what amounts my hon. friend has paid for the use of cars from other lines?

Mr. GRAHAM. I shall get that information.

Mr. JAMESON. I would like some information with regard to the arrangements for reserving Pullman berths on the Intercolonial at Montreal. I have heard that the arrangements there have not been satisfactory and an experience of mine would seem to confirm this. On December 15, I wrote from here to Montreal asking for a reservation for the 18th but at Montreal on the 18th I was informed that there was no reservation, that no letter had been received, and that there was no berth available. After some argument during which I stated that I was a member of parliament and would bring the matter up in the House I was told to go on the car and provision would be made and in fact I secured a lower berth. I afterwards received a letter from the agent stating that my letter was not received until the 19th. I cannot imagine that a letter would take four days to get to Montreal. It would look as if the system was a bad one and needed revision.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is the first complaint I have ever heard. We have all had similar experiences on other railways and as to getting a berth after going on the car that has been my experience three times out of four between here and Toronto; some one who had reserved a berth would not turn up. The reserving of berths has been more abused by the people than by the railways and I am afraid that members of parliament have not been the least guilty as they would reserve berths on the chance that they might travel. The railways agreed among themselves that if they did not receive the money with the reservation, the reservation would be cancelled at 5 o'clock. My hon. friend's whole complaint is that the man in charge at Montreal told him an untruth in a letter.

Mr. JAMESON. I did not make that charge at all.

Mr. GRAHAM. The man said the letter did not arrive until the 19th and my hon. friend says he cannot believe that is true. If the man's statement was correct the whole complaint of my hon. friend falls. I have had a letter take four days going from the House of Commons to Brockville. If my hon. friend has any further complaint and will let me have it I shall investigate it.

Mr. JAMESON. I am not making a complaint of my own, but I think if the travelling public have any rights on the Intercolonial railway the minister should not treat this matter so flippantly. The position of the matter is that application was made to the Intercolonial railway for a reservation. I was informed that the application had to be transferred to the Grand Trunk office, and that the delay occurred or was liable to occur in that way. It may be that the letter did not reach there until the 19th, although it was written and mailed on the 15th. But, that is not the cause of complaint; the cause of complaint is simply this, that there appears to be a certain amount of red tape which causes delay in the receipt of applications and which, of course, results in inconvenience to the people who make application ahead. It is all very well for the minister to say that railways are not obliged to reserve berths, but so long as that system is in vogue we might as well recognize it as the condition. If the Intercolonial railway does not reserve berths that is the end of it, nobody is hurt and everybody should know it. But, when we know there is a practice of that sort it does not seem to me that it is right to have any delay in the securing of these berths. I was informed that it was not an infrequent thing to have difficulty of that sort. I know as well as the minister does that frequently a man will get on a train without knowing that he is going to get a berth, and get one afterwards, but I have never had the experience of going to an office, applying for a berth, being told that there was absolutely none and that it was not worth my while to get on the train and then being afterwards told that if I got on the train I would be provided for. I would like the minister to see if there is any hitch in the arrangements down there and let me know at a later date.

Mr. HENDERSON. I must confess that my experience of the post office of the House of Commons is a little different from that of the Minister of Railways and Canals. I rather think that the minister is hardly fair to the officers of the House of Commons post office. I have always found them very obliging and very prompt. Even if a letter was handed in at the very last minute, perhaps almost at the close of the mail, in fact, after the mail has been made up, they have been obliging enough to send a special messenger down in order to see that it would go. My experience of the House of Commons post office has been very satisfactory with regard to the sending out of letters. I think the minister is labouring under some mistake.

Mr. GRAHAM. Very probably.

Civil Government—Department of Customs —Contingencies—Clerical and other assistance —Further amount required, $1,500.

Mr. PATERSON. This additional amount is required to meet the salaries of the extra clerks who have been engaged during the past year.

Mr. BLAIN. Is that all the explanation?

Mr. PATERSON. That is all the explanation except you want me to give the names of the officers who have been employed. We found we had to have some extra help. There is a provision in the Civil Service Act by which, on asking the commissioners, we can get some extra help put on.

Mr. BLAIN. Had they passed the Civil Service examination?

Mr. PATERSON. We have nothing to do with that. We simply tell the commissioners that we want an extra officer, they designate him, and their designation of him puts him on without any action on our part at all. If, within six months, his services are found not to be acceptable to the deputy, he is relieved of the office, and immediately the commissioners are asked to give us a new officer.

Customs—Salaries and contingent expenses of the several ports in the Dominion—Further amount required, $25,000.

Mr. PATERSON. This takes in all the ports in the Dominion. We had hoped that we had estimated for enough last year, but we found that so great has been the increase of business that we have had in some cases to open new ports and in other cases to engage additional help. We will require this $25,000 to enable us to square up at the end of the current year.

Civil Government—Department of Public Works—Contingencies—Further amount required, $1,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total expenditure under this head up to the 30th January, 1911, was $12,321.66. It is estimated there will be a further expenditure of $2,700 for February and to the end of this month. Then there have been some extra clerks and draughtsmen at an expenditure of $1,478.34, making a total assumed expenditure to the 31st March of $16,500. The appropriation was only $15,500, so we require the additional $1,000 to cover the balance.

Public Works—Chargeable to capital—Public buildings—Ottawa Dominion Archives building—Further amount required, $2,341.68.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to settle a claim which the contractor, Mr. McGillivray, had in connection with the Dominion Archives building. The total claim was $6,140.64. It was referred to the architects and also discussed with the contractor's solicitor, and after a great deal of consideration the architects allowed $2,341.68, and this is to pay that amount.

Mr. DANIEL. Is this outside of the contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was claimed to be additional work or extra work and the total claim was $6,140.64.

Mr. CROCKET. What does that make the total cost of the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The building cost $116,861.67, and this would be in addition to that amount. It would make it altogether $119,203.35.

Mr. DANIEL. How long is it since the building has been finished?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It must have been finished for over a year.

Mr. DANIEL. Why has this claim come in so late?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The claim was made in January, 1907, but it has been in dispute, and finally the contractor who claimed $6.140 reluctantly consented to accept $2,341 in settlement.

Mr. LENNOX. Who was the contractor?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. McGillivray.

Mr. LENNOX. A reliable man, I presume?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am told a very reliable man.

Mr. BLAIN. Was there a suit?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Splendid work is being done by the archives department, and I understand the building will soon be insufficient. Has the minister considered an extension of the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I recognize that the building is pretty well occupied and no doubt we will have to consider the matter of extending it later on, but we have not done so yet.

Port Arthur and Fort William harbour and river improvements, additional dredging, $267,422.27.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was an appropriation last session of $900,000 for dredging, and building a breakwater, and revetment wall along the Mission river. $380,000 was allotted for the work at Fort William, but this was found to be insufficient and the dredging was stopped until the matter could be considered by council. There were most urgent representations made by the people of Fort William and by the Grand Trunk Pacific that the work should be carried on as rapidly as possible. In consideration of the national importance of the work the government recommended to His Excellency to pass an order in council allowing an extension, and work was done to the amount of $257,422 for which we are now asking.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). The people of Fort William say that they might as well dump the elevators into the lake if reciprocity goes through.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Oh, that is a mistake. Fort William is enthusiastic for reciprocity and looks forward to an enormous increase of traffic from the west through that port.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. And Port Arthur as well?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. What ground has the minister for that statement?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I heard it recently from one of the most reliable citizens of Port Arthur whom I met in Ottawa, and from another whom I met in Toronto.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). The board of trade does not say so.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You cannot always rely upon what a board of trade may resolve.

Mr. BLAIN. Were these gentlemen interested in the dredging?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at all, they were just interested in the prosperity of both cities.

Mr. DANIEL. Was this money owing to the contractor?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. Why was it not provided for last session?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We thought the vote taken last session would pay for all the work that could fairly be done during the year, but the contractors put on an additional large dredge and they got along more rapidly than we anticipated. I think they had 7 dredges on the work last season.

Mr. DANIEL. What are they paid per cubic yard?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think it is eleven cents but I will make sure of that before we come to the main estimates.

Mr. CROCKET. To what depth is dredging being done?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Dredging is being done to a depth of 25 feet.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Who are the contractors?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Great Lakes dredging company.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Last session I called the attention of the minister to a report that the scows carrying the material from the dredges were counted as being filled when they were only partially filled. Did the minister investigate that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It does not follow that because a barge goes away partly filled it is returned as filled. The instructions to the resident engineers which are repeated to the inspectors, are, that they must be careful to estimate as accurately as possible the quantity contained in the barges. My hon. friend will see from the return that some of these barges are returned as carrying away less than their capacity. We have placed the work of dredging more especially under the care of Mr. Dufresne, assistant chief engineer, who has been a long time in the department, and in whom we have the greatest possible confidence.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The statement was made that many of these barges carried away only a few yards of material dumped in the bottom, and that the men who had charge of checking the quantities were receiving very small wages and might be influenced. I now understand from the minister that he has made no investigation whatever.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Was not my hon. friend to give me some details?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. No.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then it would be impossible for me to investigate as to the past, but I have taken precautions as to the future. I do not think my hon. friend gave any evidence that barges which went away not fully loaded were returned as such.

Mr. CROCKET. The minister could have made inquiry from his inspectors.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the inspectors were guilty they would not be likely to confess it. We have taken every possible precaution when scow measurement is allowed for. We have compelled the inspectors to be constantly on the work and to make a solemn declaration that they have been. We require the engineers to give them complete instructions as to the mode of measurement, and the resident engineer or his assistant are pretty constantly about the work, too.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What salary do you pay the inspectors?

Mr. PUGSLEY. At Port Arthur and Fort William we pay $4 per day. That is considerably more than we pay in the east. West of the Great Lakes we have to pay higher wages.

Mr. CROCKET. Did the minister not call the attention of the resident engineer to the statement made by the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong)?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not recollect doing so, but when we come to the main estimates, I will get that information. My hon. friend will remember that it was only a rumour, on hearsay. He did not give the name.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It was a rumour, but I got it from a reliable source.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understood the minister to say that the Great Lakes Dredging Company had been more expeditious with their work than he had anticipated, and consequently the money ran short. Is the committee to understand that the minister is under any obligation to keep this company supplied with work, even though they increase the number of their dredges? Is there any understanding with the company that they are to have unlimited employment?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. We are under no obligation to give additional work to the dredging company, but the company early in the season placed upon the work a very powerful suction dredge, for the purpose of removing the material by hydraulic action and depositing it behind the proposed revetment wall. That was for the purpose of filling in and making ground which would be used in connection with the Grand Trunk Pacific terminals. That was very necessary work. Of course, it would be of no advantage to the public to have that material taken out into the lake; it is better to be used there. That dredge, added to the others which the company had already, did a great deal of work, and got ahead more rapidly than we had anticipated. In September, I think, we gave orders to the resident engineer to stop the company dredging, because the appropriation was exhausted. At once the people of Fort William, and especially those connected with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, Mr. Chamberlin, the general manager, and Mr. Hays, the president, communicated with me, representing that it was all important that this work should go ahead. They complained that vessels going to the elevator would be obliged still to go to the Kaministiquia river by a roundabout course. These representations so impressed me, that, in the public interest, as well as in justice to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, as they are paying out millions of dollars in the creation of one of the most magnificent systems of terminals in the world, instead of stopping the work and having these dredges stand idle during a part of the working season, I presented the whole case to council, and authority was given to me to have the work continued to the end of the season, the contractors agreeing to wait until parliament made the necessary appropriation for the purpose.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is the company paid first for taking out the material, and then for depositing it behind the revetment wall? Would there be two payments, or only one?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Only one.

Mr. CROCKET. Before the contract was let, was there an estimate from the resident engineer of the total quantities of dredging that would be required?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. What was the estimate?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not that here, but it ran into several millions. I will have it when we are asking for the amount in the main estimates.

Mr. CROCKET. This contract has been running for several years?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. Is it the intention to continue it during the coming season?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. There is a great deal of work still to be done there. A certain area to be dredged is shown on the plan. It includes a turning basin several acres in extent, a channel to the elevators of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, and widening and deepening the Mission river. When the work is done there will be 18 miles of water frontage at Fort William, with a depth ultimately of 25 feet of water; there will be a channel leading from the Mission river to the elevators of the Grand Trunk Pacific, capable of taking in the largest lake steamers, and there will be a turning basin covering an area of some 30 acres. The Grand Trunk elevator is designed, when the different units are completed, to have a capacity of 30,000,000 bushels. It will be one of the finest elevators to be found anywhere.

Mr. DANIEL. How late in the season is dredging kept up there?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Till about the first of December.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How many firms are doing the dredging work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Only one at Fort William.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Have they a running contract for the whole thirty acres?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. And their contract covers that stated area?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. For years to come?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The quantity is shown, and when they get done with that quantity, their contract will be completed.

Mr. BLAIN. How many dredges do the government own now?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Between 30 and 40.

Mr. BLAIN. Are they building more every year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We are building two this year.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the dredging done by government-owned dredges, or by contract the cheaper to the country?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It depends a good deal on circumstances.

Mr. BLAIN. What are the circumstances?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Suppose the government dredge is at work and it meets with an accident, the machinery breaks down, entailing a good deal of expenditure on repairs, that is charged up to operating during the season. In some cases some contractors do the work at a low price as compared with the price charged by other contractors. It is a matter of comparison. If my hon. friend will take the return of the government dredging in the report, he will find that it costs considerably more in some cases to remove spoil than in others. It is pretty difficult to tell which is the cheaper system, but the department believes that it is cheaper to do the work by government dredges, than by contract.

Mr. BLAIN. What do the employees do in the winter season?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We dispense with their services with the exception of one or two who work about overhauling the plant.

Mr. STAPLES. I am pleased to learn that the Minister of Public Works believes in completing a piece of work which he has begun, because ever since I came to the House and ever since the minister has been in his place, I have been calling his attention to a piece of work undertaken on Lake Manitoba just when the election of 1904 was on. The government jumped in with a great rush and expended some $15,000 on that work; but once the election was over and they did not get their candidate returned they ceased having any more work done there, and the undertaking remained in an unfinished condition. $15,000 of the people's money have therefore been put into a wharf which is now of no value because it is not completed and cannot be used. The people of that district asked the department to complete the work in order that the large expenditure made would not be utterly wasted, but so far there has been no appropriation in any of the estimates. I called the minister's attention to this last year and he promised to look into it but so far he has done nothing. Last year he was up in Manitoba and I would like to know whether he then looked into that matter and whether he intends to make any appropriation to complete this work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. When I was up in Manitoba I had a good many representations made to me as to the necessity of certain public works, but I had none made by anybody with respect to this particular work to which my hon. friend refers. Nobody suggested that it was necessary to do any more there. On the contrary the officials of my department informed me that the work is completed so far as is necessary in the public interest. My hon. friend would not ask me to uselessly spend the public money because it had been originally contemplated that certain additional work should be done. Except when my hon. friend spoke of it in parliament, I have had no request from anybody to have the work done.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Of what public interest is the work as it stands?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is a wharf and a landing and some dredging and it gives the public reasonable accommodation. That is the information I have. Would the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Staples) tell me what good purposes would be served by doing this additional work.

Mr. STAPLES. The people of that particular locality cannot get to that piece of work until more dredging is done. If they could get to it, they would ship not only fish but wood and agricultural produce from that point. If the minister will look into his department, he will find a petition there asking that the work be completed, so that when he says that there was no request made for its completion he is not stating the facts.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I said during the past year.

Mr. STAPLES. Let me tell the minister that the people in that part of the constituency of Macdonald have faith in my ability to present the facts, and I have presented them every year since the hon. gentleman has been Minister of Public Works. What more does the hon. gentleman want? Does he want a petition from some Liberal organization? If that is what he wants I might be able to secure it for him, but I do not think he should depend entirely upon any Liberal organization such as existed when this work began for reliable facts as to what is necessary to be done. There are $15,000 of the public money absolutely of no use unless this work be completed.

Mr. BLAIN. I would have expected that the hon. minister, when touring in Manitoba, would have taken some interest in this public work and have called on my hon. friend from Macdonald, or requested him to look over the work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He did not invite me out.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Staples) has been doing his whole duty in this House. Whenever this matter of dredging was before the committee he made plain his request. The minister now states that his department reports that the work is completed. I prefer to take the statement of my hon. friend who represents the county, and I am very much surprised that the minister should have, when out in the west, allowed this public work to go absolutely unnoticed. Might I ask him what kind of a request it is he requires? He does not say that the work is either necessary or unnecessary, but his sole excuse is that he has not been asked to do anything. Surely that is not a reasonable excuse. For myself, I think it is only fair that, when a request of this kind is made year after year on the floor of the House, the minister should see to it that this work is looked into to learn whether it is in the interest of the public, so that he could say frankly and fairly to the committee whether this further expenditure that is proposed would be in the public interest or not. If the officers have reported on it, I suppose they have said either that the further expenditure is required or that the work is completed in a way to serve the district for whose benefit it is undertaken.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does not my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) see that he is taking a little different course from that he has hitherto taken in this House? On some occasions when I have been obliged reluctantly to say that I have done a particular work on the recommendation of a certain member of the House, my hon. friend and other hon. members on that side have attacked me, and said that I should take the opinion, not of a member of the House, but of the officials of my department. In this case, I have had the matter looked into, and the officials of my department, who are responsible for the information they give, state that it is not necessary in the public interest to extend the work any further. Under these circumstances, much as I respect my hon. friend (Mr. Staples), much as I would like to meet his views—and he is always so kind that it would be a pleasure to meet his views—yet, I would not be justified in making this further expenditure.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the minister say that I, as a member of the committee, ever said it was not a proper policy to listen to the requests of members of parliament?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understood the hon. member to say——

Mr. BLAIN. No.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I thought I recollected my hon. friend criticising my action in taking the advice of a member of this House—

Mr. BLAIN. No.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Particularly if he was a friend of the government.

Mr. STAPLES. I do not propose, on this occasion, as on former occasions, to be shunted off by the Minister of Public Works getting up and throwing a little taffy across at me. I am serious in this matter, and the people I represent are serious; and I should appreciate it very much if the minister would be a little more serious than he appears to be in discussing this work. I do not know what is contained in the report of the engineers of which he speaks, but I state as I know them to exist. Until a certain amount of money is spent there, the $15,000 already spent is absolutely of no use to the public. When the minister says that this is in the interest of the public, I am satisfied that he is not correctly advised. I hope that before the session closes, when further supplementary estimates come down, there will be an appropriation to complete this work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the hon. gentleman will be good enough to call on the deputy minister, that gentleman will be glad to show him the report. When on a previous occasion, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Staples) criticised me for not having made this additional expenditure, the report of his remarks was sent to the resident engineer, who then looked into the matter, and reported that in his judgment it would not be in the public interest to expend the money asked for.

Mr. STAPLES. Then, I am to understand that the $15,000 spent there has been a waste of money?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I did not say that, but that it is not necessary to spend more.

Mr. STAPLES. If that piece of work is not utilized for any purpose so to speak, the money must be wasted.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is always interesting to listen to the Minister of Public Works on a question such as this of which he has practically no official knowledge—for, if he had knowledge of it, he would not make the statement he has made. He tells us that his engineer in charge reports to him that no further expenditure is necessary because the work fulfils the object the original expenditure was made for. When I tell you that this wharf—which is within a few miles of the southern edge of my constituency—is unapproachable by a boat carrying any freight, and unapproachable by land, I do not see how the minister can say that the work is meeting the public requirements.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What would the hon. member (Mr. Campbell) suggest in the way of a connection between the wharf and the land?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would suggest that some dredging be done in the first place, so that boats can get up to the wharf, and I would suggest that the wharf be continued on to hard and dry land. If these two things were done the wharf could be utilized. At present, the case is exactly as stated by the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Staples)—$15,000 of the peoples' money has been absolutely thrown away unless a few thousand more is spent to perfect the work. When perfected, as my hon. friend has stated, the wharf would be utilized for shipping fish, grain and cordwood. It would be a work worthy of the greatest consideration by the minister, but, as it now stands, it is a monument either to folly or to what might be called political crassness.

Mr. HENDERSON. I presume that this matter is disposed of. I wish to draw the attention of the minister to another subject, not involving $15,000 but of somewhat the same character as that brought to the minister's notice by the hon. member for Macdonald. The hon. minister will remember that about five or six weeks ago I sent him a communication from William Sargent, of Bronte, in the county of Halton, drawing attention to the fact that the wharf at Bronte was sadly in need of repairs. Mr. Sargent is the chief shipper at that wharf, and has been obliged himself to do some replanking in order to make the wharf safe for him to go upon. The letter also draws attention to the fact that some dredging is necessary to enable a vessel, even of light draught, to get into the harbour. Since the present government came into power, they have expended about $33,000 in the construction of that wharf and in dredging the harbour. But, unless some slight expenditure is made now, that property will be of no value. I do not think it will cost very much to do some replanking and a slight amount of dredging. The vessel which this man uses will bring in about 500 tons of coal. He found it necessary to allow the vessel to lie outside until partly unloaded, which was very inconvenient. I am sure that the minister, for all that it would cost, is willing to meet the case. I do not know what the expense would be, but I think if the hon. minister would refer the matter to the resident engineer at Toronto, he would quickly give an estimate of the amount, and I do not think the minister would hesitate to do what was necessary in repairs and dredging at this harbour.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will make inquiry as to a report from the resident engineer. If the hon. member (Mr. Henderson), will be good enough to call my attention to it when the main estimates are going through I will give him the answer.

Mr. HENDERSON. Do I understand the minister to say that, after he received my letter, he——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Sent it to the chief engineer.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then, he may have the engineer's report. If I am in the House when the main estimates come up, I will draw his attention to it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And if the hon. member (Mr. Henderson), should not be here I will ask the deputy minister to inform him what the engineer's report is.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I did not catch the answer of the minister to the few remarks I made with regard to that wharf. I would like to know from the minister, assuming the matter to be as I have stated, whether he would perfect the work so that it can be used.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The most I can say is that I will ask the deputy minister to look into the matter again for further consideration, of course, always keeping in mind the report already sent by the resident engineer.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the report of the resident engineer is looked at, I think it will be found that what the member for Macdonald and I say is borne out. If that is the case, can we depend on having the work completed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Let me ask my hon. friend this: Was not there some understanding, when this work was laid out, that the Canadian Northern were going to build a spur or branch down to the proposed wharf?

Mr. STAPLES. The Canadian Northern have always been prepared to extend their spur to this wharf as soon as the government shows any sign of completing the work. But a railway would go wrong, in my opinion—and, I think, in the opinion of any man of business—to build a line to a work of this kind before the work was completed. I have been told by the people there that the Canadian Northern has always advised the municipality that they were prepared to do their part of the work provided the government would do theirs.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The deputy minister informs me that the Canadian Northern have never made any such communication to my department.

Mr. STAPLES. I do not remember the wording of the petition to which I referred, but I think it stated that the Canadian Northern had advised the municipality that they were prepared to build to the wharf, provided the wharf was completed. If my memory serves me well, the minister promised me last year that he would send his engineer there and make a resurvey of the wharf. Did he send his engineer there during the summer according to promise?

Mr. PUGSLEY. What I think I stated was, that I would have the resident engineer made acquainted with the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Staples), and that the resident engineer would be asked for a further report. That was done—the 'Hansard' report of my hon. friend's report were sent to the resident engineer, Mr. Dufresne, and Mr. Dufresne took the matter up again and made a report that he did not think it would be in the public interest to make this further expenditure.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. mimister will remember an application made in reference to a work at Big Bay Point, sometimes called Peninsula Park on Kempenfeldt bay or Lake Simcoe. Mr. Claxton a worthy gentleman, though belonging to the political party of the Minister of Public Works, has written the minister on many occasions. It is a place where a wharf is very much needed. I think the minister has made some investigation and I would remind him of this work and ask him to see if it is possible to have the work gone on with this seaon. I am led to believe that the minister entertained the proposition favourably. There is a large summer travel there, it is a beautiful place, and this wharf would accommodate not only many summer visitors, but also a large and thriving agricultural district. The work would not be expensive as there is deep water quite near the shore.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will ask the deputy to see if the report has been made.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I would again call the attention of the hon. minister to the unsatisfactory condition of the wharf at Petawawa, I have pointed out to him on several occasions that it was impossible for the steamer to land there safely during low water. Last summer the district engineer, Mr. Corriveau, and I looked over the ground, but I have had no intimation as to whether the department intends making any improvements there. It would appear to be a matter of either dredging the river, because a sand bar runs out at one end of the dock, or extending the dock out 50 or 75 feet so that the boat could use the north channel. The Slide and Boom Company sort their logs where the dock is situated and they have to haul in their boom to allow the boats to pass which causes loss of time to the boom company, as well as inconvenience to the navigation company.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The engineer made an examination I presume in consequence of the representations made of the last session. I shall ask the deputy to see if Mr. Corriveau has made a report and shall then give the matter my best consideration.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The minister will recollect that previous to the election in 1908, he had a dredge working at Swan Creek, a few miles north of the wharf I spoke of. Work ceased two days after the election and as far as I know has not been resumed. Is there any reason why that work was left undone?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot call the matter to mind, but I will have it looked into.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Can the minister offer any reason for the cessation of that work and will it be gone on with until completed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot remember that it has been brought to my personal notice, but I will look into it and see when it was undertaken, and why it was stopped.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Last year I called attention to the dredging at the mouth of Mossy river at the mouth of Lake Winnipegosis. The work was done in a very poor way. The minister informed me he was sending his engineer there and that he realized the requirements of the people, that the mouth of the creek had to be kept open to facilitate navigation into Lake Winnipegosis. I do not know of any work being done there since.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will have the information looked up and when we come to the dredging vote for Manitoba it will be my duty to give the information.

Mr. CAMPBELL. At the mouth of Pine creek, 35 miles from the mouth of Mossy river, sand is deposited in the lake in time of storm to such an extent that the mouth of the creek is almost blocked. The Hudson Bay post and the Pine Creek mission transact all their freighting business by boat, and if the dredge from Lake Winnipegosis was sent out for a week twice a year it would facilitate freighting, both for the Hudson Bay Company and the people resident there and the Indian school.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I remember receiving a petition from the Indian mission and some merchants asking that dredging at Pine creek be done. I had it referred in the ordinary way to the resident engineer, but I have not seen the report yet.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The minister will remember a cut made by his department in the Assiniboine river near Rat Portage, in the year 1908, on which work ceased the day after the election. Is that work completed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think that work was completed. Everything that was contemplated was done and I have understood the work is likely to be very successful.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The minister will also remember that last summer at the request of certain petitioners through myself, he had the matter of another cut in the river further down looked into by an engineer. He will remember my stating that his engineer made inquiries quite as earnestly about the political complexion of those to be served as about the real usefulness of the work and, that on getting an adverse report in that regard he recommended that no work of this character be done. I gave the name to the minister at the time and he promised to look into it. Would the minister say what his report is?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not remember as to that, but my hon. friend, having called attention to it, I will see if there is any communication on the subject. Certainly, I would like to know the name of the engineer.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I gave the name.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Was he a civil engineer, and was he connected with the department?

Mr. MEIGHEN. I understand he was quite civil to the gentlemen he encountered there. His name was Mr. Stevens: I do not know what his professional qualifications are, but they seemed to be very largely political.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is a Mr. Stevens in the office at Winnipeg.

Mr. SPROULE. Could the minister tell me how many dredges were employed on the work at Port Arthur during this last summer, and how many thousand yards they took out?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There were seven different dredges in the fleet of the Great Lakes Dredging Company. I do not know if I can give my hon. friend the quantity taken out by each dredge, but I will get that. Would it make any difference if I gave it to him when my main estimates come up? Of course, it is in the Auditor General's Report, but I shall put it in a succinct form for him.

Mr. SPROULE. It would not be in the Auditor General's Report for the present year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. I will get it for the hon. gentleman for this year as far as the returns show it.

Mr. MEIGHEN.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to get that because I have a few observations regarding this matter. It has reference to a subject that I discussed at some length last year. If I remember correctly the amount of money voted for dredging at Port Arthur last year was over-expended by—was it $400,000 or $600,000?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not just remember the amount, but it was considerable.

Mr. SPROULE. It was nearly $2 for every dollar that was voted. Parliament has an object in voting money. Its object is to vote sufficient for the needs of each particular work, and yet not to vote too much. The minister is supposed to have sufficient data to justify his recommending to council that an appropriation of a given amount be voted for a particular work, and it is supposed to be sufficient to carry on the work during the year. That was done in this case, but the expenditure on the work was $400,000 or $600,000 more than was voted. That is a very pernicious, a very unsafe and a very improper system. The minister could not justify it upon the ground of urgent need. It was not on the ground that parliament was reluctant to give him the amount of money which he asked for to be expended upon that work because parliament did not refuse it, and in so far as I am aware, no one would have objected if the minister had asked for twice the amount to be expended that year. There was something wrong about the government, or the government's officials, or otherwise they would have ascertained more closely than they did just how much they needed. But we have this example of a very improper and dangerous practice of the government spending nearly twice as much as parliament voted. Parliament did not vote the money, but the government spent it all the same. When the discussion took place I said what I repeat now, that parliament would not have been at all reluctant to have voted twice the amount of money so long as the minister would give us an assurance that it was needed. Port Arthur is an important place, there is a great deal of work to be done and if the minister had said twice as much money was needed it would have been voted. But that is not the bad feature of it. The pernicious feature of it is, to my mind, the right which the minister takes to over-expend so much at the present time under a similar resolution. Last year there was $900,000 or nearly $1,000,000 voted. That is a pretty good sum, and my hon. friend might have kept within the mark, but he comes and asks now for $267,000 to provide for the over-expenditure of that amount.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is very much less.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, that is about the same plea that the girl put up that it was a very little one.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is not a bad plea.

Mr. SPROULE. But the sin is always the same and the principle involved is exactly the same. The principle is that the minister takes it upon himself to expend money which has never been voted by parliament, and which, therefore, he has no authority to spend. If it was any sudden or urgent case, such as a bridge being swept away or anything of that sort, he could resort to a Governor General's warrant and there would be no complaint. I am not saying that the money was improperly or unwisely spent, but I say the principle is a bad one of over-expending what parliament has not granted. This is the finishing up of the present year. We have no information about how much each of these dredges has earned. If all the dredges were employed here they must have earned a pretty large sum if they have earned nearly a million and a quarter of dollars in one summer.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The seven dredges are only at Fort William. There are dredges at Port Arthur as well, and then there are the breakwater and the revetment wall to be included.

Mr. SPROULE. This is $267,000 for additional dredging.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, but the $900,000 was for dredging at both harbours, and there were the breakwaters and revetment walls in both places.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, I am doing an injustice to the minister in assuming that this was all spent on dredging. But the principle is practically the same. He requires so much money for his works up there, and it ought to be his duty to have his engineer give him a correct estimate about how much is needed for the year, submit that to council, get the approval of council, bring down his estimates, give parliament his reasons why it is needed, and parliament would grant it as it did last year. If this were done I think it would be a very exceptional circumstance which would justify the over-expenditure of the amount that he has over-expended this year, or that he over-expended last year. Now I should advise him, if I may be permitted to give him advice, to try and bring to bear upon the operations which he has under consideration some business intelligence and present to the House a reasonable estimate of what is needed. The House is not reluctant to grant it, and then, when the vote is made he should keep the expenditure within the vote because if he does not do that there is something lax about it, something wanting in the judgment of his engineers, and something bad in himself. This transaction is one that should not be indulged in too frequently. It may be justified occasionally, but the minister seems to indulge in it every year. I think it is about time the House gave him to understand that it will not consent to this kind of business in future to any great extent.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would like to get an explanation from the minister as to why, in granting this contract covering the number of acres that he refers to and extending to a depth of 25 feet, one firm was given the whole work. It seems to be an enormous undertaking.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, tenders were called for all the work. I think new tenders were called for after I became minister for a depth of 25 feet. I think the original tender was for a depth of 22 feet.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is it to be deepened 25 feet over the whole 30 acres?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, eventually. Some of the work was first let at 22 feet, but it was decided to make it a uniform depth of 25 feet.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How many years will the work extend over?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It depends a good deal on the extent of the development there. There will be 18 miles of harbour frontage on the Mission and Kaministiquia rivers. Things are moving very rapidly at Fort William and Port Arthur, and we will have to meet the exigencies of the situation by going just as rapidly as the business demands. I should think it would take three or four years to fully complete the work.

Mr. ARMSTRONG The minister has explained that there is a profit in dredging with government dredges, and I think a year ago the member for Welland (Mr. German) affirmed that view. Would it not have been wise in undertaking such a large work to secure government dredges?

Mr. PUGSLEY. On the contrary, the member for Welland thought the work could be done more cheaply by contract than by government dredges.

Mr. BLAIN. Then the minister differs from the member for Welland on that point?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If we have government dredges we can keep better control of the work than we can over contract dredges. Unless we can take the measurements in situ and let the contracts for the work in situ there will always be a possibility that perhaps the government is not getting full value for its money. We have to depend so much upon the honesty and the judgment of the inspectors that while I think on the whole the country is being honestly served, yet we cannot always be sure of that. If the work is done by government dredges we know that we get what we pay for because there is no inducement to anybody to pretend that more is being done than is actually done. Upon the whole I am in favour of enlarging the government dredging fleet, and I would like to see the time at no distant date when practically all dredging would be done by government dredges. My hon. frend from Welland takes a strong view the other way.

Mr. BLAIN. What was paid to this firm last year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $383,425.

Mr. BLAIN. Who are the members of that firm?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think Mr. Whelan is connected with it, and I think Mr. Gorman, and I heard the name of Mr. O'Brien mentioned, but I do not know personally who the officers of the company are.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that Con O'Gorman?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, he is a very prominent and reliable contractor.

Mr. SPROULE. That is the Bowman-Whelan firm?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know whether Mr. Bowman is connected with it or not.

Mr. SPROULE. How much out of the $1,167 for dredging was spent at Fort Willian and Port Arthur?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The work was going on at Fort William and at Port Arthur where Mr. Phin is the contractor, and there were other large works going on which I cannot specify in detail to-night. I shall do so when we are considering the main estimates.

Mr. SPROULE. The trouble is that these promises are conveniently forgotten or neglected, or perhaps the member is not present when the main estimates come up. I am not unreasonable enough to suppose that the minister would have this information at hand now, but I would like to know later on how much is expended on dredging and how much on the different other works.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will get it in detail.

Mr. SPROULE. It was stated last year that this work was urgent because the Grand Trunk Pacific wanted to build an elevator and ship wheat. How much wheat did they ship last season?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot exactly say, but I think they shipped several million bushels.

Mr. PORTER. Recently very strong representations have been made and a deputation waited on the minister in reference to the necessity of deepening and enlarging the Welland canal, and as an auxiliary scheme to that strong representations were made as to the deepening of the route by way of the Murray canal and the Bay of Quinte. Belleville is the principal shipping point on the Bay of Quinte and the shipping facilities there are altogether inadequate for the trade at present carried on. I understand that representations have been made to the minister that the docking facilities at Belleville are altogether insufficient, that there are one or two shoals, not of any considerable extent, in the Bay of Quinte which if removed would afford a depth of from 14 to 16 feet throughout the bay, except the Murray canal where the depth is eight or nine feet. Has the minister yet determined what action will be taken on these representations? Owing to the establishment of a number of large and very important industries, particularly the Lehigh cement works, which is one of the largest in Canada, these industries are very much hampered in carrying on their business effectively by reason of not being able to load boats to more than half their capacity. It has also been represented to me by the superintendent of one of the steamboat companies that the passenger and freight boats going up and down the lakes would very much prefer, if it were possible, to go through the Bay of Quinte, touching at some of the ports there, than to go down the lake—for two reasons: First, that route is much safer, and secondly, they would touch a number of important points, where they would gather both freight and passenger traffic. We are led to believe that the traffic would increase and that a larger number of boats would come there if such accommodation were afforded. I have been told that representations to this effect have been made to the minister, and I would be glad if he would inform me what is to be done in the matter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I intend in a day or two to take up, with the officials of my department, the subject of dredging in the province of Ontario, and to lay out the work for the coming season, and this matter is one that will have consideration. There is a great deal of dredging to be done to give the various harbours a depth of 14 feet. No one can be impressed more than I am with the importance of giving that depth wherever we can do so, but it is going to cost a large amount of money. We have lately made great improvement at points along this line of transportation, including Niggar Island and Telegraph Point.

Mr. PORTER. Those works are not completed, I believe?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They will be completed this season. I had the pleasure of going through the Bay of Quinte and through the Murray canal, and was impressed with the advantage of that well-sheltered route.

Mr. PORTER. Have the representations which I have outlined been made to the department, by the Board of Trade, acting in conjunction with the city council of Belleville?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, and a report has been made by the resident engineer.

Mr. BLAIN. When the minister is laying out the programme for the coming season, I suppose he will keep in view Port Credit, where he has been doing some work during the past year. We are very glad to know that he is looking into that important port, and expending some money there; but I do not know whether the money was expended on the proper point or not. Some complaints have reached me that it was expended not so much in the interest of the public as in the interest of some private firms doing business there.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Port Credit is owned by a private company, is it not?

Mr. BLAIN. Yes, but I understood that the minister was expending some money there last year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say to my hon. friend that I was at Port Credit and looked into the situation. The old Port Credit harbour is owned by a private corporation. The depth of water is not very great, and we did some dredging to give an entrance to the place where the brick works of the company of which Mr. Haney is president are situated. I saw there a very large operation being carried on.

Mr. BLAIN. That was not in the harbour at all.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at the old Port Credit harbour. In return for the work we did there, Mr. Haney's dredge did dredging in the old Port Credit harbour, and he agrees to give to the public the free use of the new basin and which he has constructed. If my hon. friend looks into the work which we have done, I think he will see that it was very much in the public interest.

Mr. BLAIN. The work was done in the manner I have stated. My hon. friend has taken the dredge at Port Credit, and dredged out the lake in the interest of a private company, and has overlooked altogether the dredging in the harbour itself.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, no.

Mr. BLAIN. He has left the dredging of the harbour to the gentleman who owns the brickyard. Is that a usual policy of my hon. friend? I may say that when my hon. friend did the county the honour of paying it a visit, he did not think it worth his while to notify myself. I would have been glad to have come down and looked over the work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I went there on very short notice. I did not know until the morning of the day that I went there that I was going, and there was not opportunity of getting in touch with my hon. friend.

Mr. BLAIN. What information has the minister in respect to the work which was done in the harbour by the gentleman who owns the private brickyard?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The work has been done and reported upon.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like my hon. friend to lay on the table the report, because this is a new policy altogether—to use the public money in dredging out the lake in the interest of a private company, and to get the gentleman who owns the private company to do the dredging of the harbour in the interest of the public. I think we should have a complete report from my hon. friend as to how this work was brought about, and at whose solicitation. My hon. friend thought it well to spend public money which was not voted for the purpose of dredging out Lake Ontario in front of the brickyard there. I am sorry that my hon. friend, notwithstanding my earnest appeal in past years for the expenditure of some money there in the interest of the public, would think it a proper policy to spend the money in the interest of a private corporation. I am not very conversant with it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I rather thought my hon. friend was not.

Mr. BLAIN. I am quite sure I am as conversant with it as my hon. friend is. My hon. friend would not expect me to be conversant with a policy which nobody ever heard of. My requests were always that my hon. friend would spend some money in the Port Credit harbour in the interest of the public.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Which is owned by a private corporation.

Mr. BLAIN. Which is owned by a private corporation. My hon. friend should not allow that to interfere with the expending of money, because he states now that the gentleman who owns the brick works has expended some money in dredging at the privately-owned wharf. Why did not my hon. friend put the government dredge there, and do the work in such a way that there would be no complaint from the residents of the village? If my hon. friend wished, I think I could give some reasons to account to the committee why this was done, but perhaps I had better reserve these for some future time.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not a complaint has come to the department regarding the dredging at Port Credit. I went there myself and came to the conclusion that it would be in the public interest that there should be good wharf and dockage accommodation at that place. The company owning the brick works and the dock built a breakwater and agreed that the public would have at all times the use of that dock, so that it is open to the public just as much as any dock in any harbour. At old Port Credit, the dock is owned entirely by a private company. That was a most unfortunate policy, but the old government of Ontario, long before confederation, gave away many harbours to private companies.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend has purchased many of them back.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, and that is a good policy. I think that the government should own every important harbour on the Great Lakes and develop them in the public interest. Port Credit is a private harbour. It was thought that the government dredge could do the dredging at this new dock rather better than the dredge owned by the private company.

Mr. BLAIN. Why?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know exactly. It may have been owing to the depth of water, as some dredges can dredge better at a certain depth of water than others, or it may have been due to some difference in the material. The company put its dredge to work in the old harbour and did more work there than the government dredge did in the new. The facilities for transportation traffic at Port Credit have thereby been greatly increased, and my hon. friend, instead of finding fault, should give the department credit for the work done.

Mr. BLAIN. As I understand the minister's statement, there were two works done—one on Lake Ontario in front of the property owned by the brickyard company.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The owners of which built a breakwater which gives shelter and creates a good harbour.

Mr. BLAIN. And the same brick company has built another wharf there on private property, and my hon. friend has allowed the company's dredge to dredge out the lake in front of its own wharf which it constructed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, it is dredging the approach at the old Port Credit harbour in the harbour.

Mr. BLAIN. At whose request did my hon. friend take the public money and dredge out the approach in the interests of a private company.

Mr. BLAIN

Mr. PUGSLEY. We did not dredge it in the interests of a private company. Mr. M. J. Haney, who is the president of the brick manufacturing company at Port Credit, undertook the building of a new dock, excavated out of the dry land, so as to give a well sheltered harbour. He wanted to know if I would dredge the approach from the main channel of the lake into this new dock or basin which this company was creating. He informed me—and I saw the work that had been carried on—that in addition to the bricks which would be shipped by rail, large quantities would be shipped by water, and he proposed to build a breakwater which would give a sheltered harbour. I said I could not undertake the work unless the dock was made open to the public so that every vessel owner would have the same right to use it as the company.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there a contract to that effect?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, filed in the department. Then in exchange for our dredge doing the work there—and it was a better harbour than at old Port Credit—the company's dredge did work at old Port Credit harbour—a work of greater value than the government dredge did at the new harbour. We have not had a complaint on the part of any one. The expenditure is not great, only $1,700 altogether.

Mr. BLAIN. Both of the works must have been done, according to the minister's statement, alongside private owned property?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. BLAIN. I know something about it. The minister says that the government dredge dredged out Lake Ontario in front of private property.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, in front of a new dock which is to be a public dock.

Mr. BLAIN. The fact is that the money was expended immediately in front of property owned by the brickyard company.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I admit that.

Mr. BLAIN. Now the minister says that the company constructed a breakwater there?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. And the other dredging was done——

Mr. PUGSLEY. In old Port Credit harbour.

Mr. BLAIN. Alongside the brickyard.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I said that the other dredging was done in the old Port Credit harbour, and not near the brickyard at all.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand that the money expended by the brick company in building a breakwater was expended on property owned by the company that owns the harbour?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They built a breakwater, yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Did they build it on the property of the company?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Out in front of this new dock which was built by them, and has become a public dock.

Mr. BLAIN. Who owns the property on which the breakwater was constructed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Department of Marine and Fisheries I suppose. It is on the land covered with water.

Mr. BLAIN. There can be no doubt that the money expended by the government, and the money expended by the private corporation were all expended immediately in front of property owned by the brickyard company.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And which has become a public dock under the agreement.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister states that the money expended by the government was right in front of property owned by the brickyard company, and that the money expended in dredging by the private company was expended in front of its own property.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend (Mr. Blain) surely does not wish to misrepresent me.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would advise him to go down to Port Credit, it is in his own constituency, and he ought to pay a little attention to it; let him go there once in a while. What I told him was that near the brickyard, where the Grand Trunk railway has its tracks, the brickyard company has created a new dock and has excavated a basin upon the shore of Lake Ontario.

Mr. BLAIN. For what purpose?

Mr. PUGSLEY. To give accommodation to vessels carrying bricks—which are turned out in vast quantities to Toronto and other places where there may be a market.

Mr. BLAIN. In their own interests, not in the interest of the public.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Open to the public by agreement made with the department. Every vessel may go there and use that harbour, and use it free of charge. That I insisted upon. A breakwater has been built out, so that perfect shelter is afforded. I do not hesitate to say that the business which will be done there is five times the business which has been done in the old Port Credit harbour, or that will be done there in the next ten years, unless something happens to develop traffic. We did some dredging at the entrance to the new basin. Then, the companies' dredge, in exchange for that, was sent down to the old Port Credit harbour and dredged out that harbour.

Mr. BLAIN. In front of the work——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at all, in the old Port Credit harbour, where the hon. gentleman thinks the dredging ought to be done, the harbour owned by the Port Credit Harbour Company. As I have said, work of a greater value was done there than the dredging done by the government at the entrance of the new harbour.

Mr. BLAIN. Notwithstanding the suggestion of the minister that I had better go to Port Credit, I may tell him I know the circumstances.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Better tell them then.

Mr. BLAIN. I have done so. The minister knows the circumstances too—and the public knows them better than either of us. I stated that the hon. gentleman has taken the public money——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Where does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain), say the dredging has been done—take the dredging done by both dredges.

Mr. BLAIN. I say that the dredging done by the government and paid for out of the public treasury was done immediately in front of the property owned by the brick company. Does the hon. gentleman deny that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Where was the other dredging done?

Mr. BLAIN. Is not that true?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is exactly what I stated. But where was the other dredging done?

Mr. BLAIN. I will reach that if my hon. friend will possess his soul in patience. We have it established that the hon. gentleman took the public money, which was voted for dredging in the interests of the public, and expended it on work immediately in front of the brickyard works, to which no vessel except those owned by the brick company has any right of access or will be permitted to enter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That I entirely deny. Under the agreement—the hon. member is welcome to a copy—any vessel has the same right to go there as the vessels belonging to the brick company. And that is a public wharf.

Mr. BLAIN. What property?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The new basin.

Mr. BLAIN. I was directing attention to one point—that the minister took the public money and dredged, not the harbour of Port Credit, but Lake Ontario immediately in front of the property of the brick company. He does not deny it, but he says that the wharf there is open to the public. Does not the agreement that he has in the department apply to the other dredging?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. BLAIN. I shall be very much surprised if it does not?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Where was the other dredging done?

Mr. BLAIN. Immediately in front of the property owned by the same brick company.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the old Port Credit harbour.

Mr. BLAIN. No, the hon. minister knows very well that the brick company does not expend money in the old Port Credit harbour, but they would expend it on their own property, and they did. And I venture to state—and the minister will not contradict me— that the money expended, both that by the government and that by the brick company, was not expended in the privately-owned harbour at Port Credit.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The 'privately-owned harbour' of which the hon. member (Mr. Blain), speaks is the harbour to which he is so much attached, and in which he wanted dredging to be done, although it is privately owned. My information is that the dredging done by the brick company in exchange for the use of the government dredge was done in the harbour owned by the Port Credit Harbour Company, what we call the old Port Credit harbour. The other dredging that was done by the government dredge was in front of and to make a channel leading to the new basin which was created by the brick company and to which under the agreement with the Department of Public Works, all vessels have the same right to resort free of charge.

Mr. BLAIN. I shall not continue the discussion because my hon. friend is not clear on the point.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am as clear as can be.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. BLAIN. No. Who suggested to my hon. friend that the money should be expended immediately in front of the property owned by the brick company? There was no such suggestion in the House when the money was voted.

Mr. PUGSLEY. When I looked over Port Credit harbour and saw the very poor accommodation which even with a considerable amount of dredging would be given to vessels and saw this new basin which was being excavated so as to give splendid accommodation and perfect shelter for vessels, I thought it would be in the public interest to have that new harbour created there, with a fine breakwater in front of it. I was asked by the president of the company to dredge a channel leading from the lake towards this basin. I said I would not do that unless they would make that a public harbour so that all vessels would have the right to go there and use it free of charge. The company agreed to that. Then in addition to that their dredge went into the old Port Credit harbour owned by this Port Credit Company to which my hon. friend refers, and did dredge it to a greater value than the dredging that was done by the government dredge. If my hon. friend doubts me let him call at the department and the deputy will show him the return and the contract.

Mr. BLAIN. I am not doubting my hon. friend. At least the policy the minister has laid down so frequently in the House and does not adhere to it, that no money shall be expended out of the public treasury on a private owned property, is set aside by this unheard of agreement.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Did not my hon. friend ask me to do this dredging in this private harbour at Port Credit?

Mr. BLAIN. Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Owned by the Port Credit Company, and did I not do dredging there through the dredge that we exchanged with the Brick Manufacturing Company. Did I not do the dredging in the old Port Credit harbour?

Mr. BLAIN. I say not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I say we did.

Mr. BLAIN. I must not detain the committee, but I will ask my hon. friend to bring down the correspondence and agreements.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will be glad to do that on the main estimates.

Mr. BLAIN. Did my hon. friend ever make such an agreement with another private company since he has been minister?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think the agreement that we made with the company that has created this new harbour and the basin to which all vessels have a free right of access without paying any tolls is one I would like to make to-morrow with the Port Credit Company or any other company so they would give up their wharfs to the free use of vessels without payment of tolls.

Mr. BLAIN. What proposition has my hon. friend to make?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Port Credit Company have some dilapidated wharfs that they might very well turn over to the public and we would do dredging and make improvements and the public would have a right to go there with vessels without charge. I think one of the greatest drawbacks to these harbours on the Great Lakes is that they are owned by private companies who have allowed them to fall into decay so that the wharfs are of no value and yet they hold on to them as if they were valuable properties.

Mr. BLAIN. I agree with my hon. friend.

Mr. PORTER. Can the public approach the new harbour from the land?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Oh, yes, by highway and by railway track.

Mr. BLAIN. The track is private.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is owned by the Grand Trunk is it not?

Mr. BLAIN. No, it is private, it is hundreds of yards from the Grand Trunk through line.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is a highway running through the property.

Mr. BLAIN. A general highway runs past there, yes.

Mr. PORTER. The agreement covers the use of the dock by the public.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Victoria Harbour, Ontario, improvements, further amount required, $111,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to carry on work at the new harbour created at Victoria harbour. The Canadian Pacific Railway have built a magnificent elevator there they are building a magnificent railway track from Victoria harbour to Port Hope, with a grade of three-tenths of one per cent over which they expect to haul large trains and we are doing the dredging. The appropriation became exhausted in September. I submitted the matter to council as in the case of Port Arthur and Fort William and council consented on hearing the facts to allow them to go on with the additional work till the end of the season.

Mr. EDWARDS. Has the minister received a request from the council of the township of Wolfe Island asking for dredging to be done around the wharf lately purchased by that municipality which is to be free to the public?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not quite sure at this moment, but I think I recollect getting a letter. I am considering the question. I think that now the wharf is owned by the municipality there would not be the objection that existed when it was a private wharf.

Mr. EDWARDS. The minister raised that objection last session when I brought the matter up, but the township council have purchased this property and will require to spend a large sum to put it in condition. It would be a great advantage if vessels could come in close and unload coal on the island. It would mean a saving of 50 to 60 cents a ton to the islanders as well as to the council for use on their ferry boat. I have a letter from the reeve and council asking me to call this to the minister's attention and saying they have sent a similar letter to the department. I hope for a definite expression on that matter this session.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It will depend on the report of the chief engineer, if it can be done for a reasonable sum, I do not see why it should not be done.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). Has the contract been let for the proposed dam at the outlet of French river at the foot of Lake Nipissing?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). When is it proposed to commence building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think it is one year we have given the contractors to construct the dam. I presume they will get to work right away in the spring.

Mr. SPROULE. What was the amount voted last year for Victoria harbour?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $145,000.

Mr. SPROULE. This is another over-expenditure of $111,300.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Does not the minister think this is a rather bad principle? The only feature about these over-expenditures that seems to be at all defensible is the fact that they were submitted to council. But still I think the principle is unsound.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I went up there during the summer and I saw the great work which the Canadian Pacific railway is doing. They have built a magnificent elevator and they are building a wharf. They are really creating a splendid harbour on the eastern shore of the Georgian Bay to assist in the national transportation between the east and the west. Their officers showed me what a great drawback it would be if I stopped the work. I gave orders to stop it when the appropriation was exhausted. The Canadian Pacific railway officials communicated with me and particularly Mr. McNicoll, the general manager, showed me that if I stopped my work they would have to stop theirs. I asked myself: If this work has to be done might we not just as well allow it to be done this year as next year, and thus facilitate the great work that the Canadian Pacific railway are carrying on, a work that I am bound to say is of national interest. I submitted the facts to council, they approved and I allowed the company to proceed during the remainder of the dredging season. These are the facts, and I think my hon. friend would have done exactly the same as I did and as council did had he been in our places.

Mr. PORTER. Will the changing of the traffic from east to west to north and south not render the value of that expenditure a nullity?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The only difference is that the traffic goes the other way. We have two hundred and twenty millions going north and only one hundred millions going south. The development that is going to take place in the west—we see evidences of it in the thousands of Americans who are coming in and developing our western country—is going to so increase the traffic that the Canadian Pacific railway and Grand Trunk railway will not be able to handle it with the facilities they are even now providing, and they are looking forward to still greater improvements in the near future to meet this rapid development. They are not afraid of reciprocity—not a bit; they know that they are going to get all the traffic of the Canadian west and a large portion of the traffic of the American west, too.

Mr. PORTER. I think the minister is not a good prophet.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sure of it, and no man can think otherwise. Now, do not let us discuss reciprocity to-night; I want to get these estimates through.

Mr. WRIGHT. Has the minister any estimate as to what additional amount will be required to finish the work at Victoria harbour?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is being carefully made up for the information of the committee in connection with the main estimates. We think it will take $150,000 to finish up the dredging work which will be required. Of course, the harbour is now open to vessels. They had their big lake ships during the summer season, but in order to give perfect facilities it will take $150,000 more.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this a public wharf, or is it owned by the Canadian Pacific railway?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is privately owned by the Canadian Pacific railway.

Mr. SPROULE. And the public have no rights on this wharf at all?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It will really all be Canadian Pacific railway traffic. Theirs is the only line running out of the port. It will be used for shipping the grain of the west which will be brought to their elevator. Of course, I presume they will be glad to welcome lake vessels because they will bring grain to the Canadian Pacific railway and in that sense it will be public. I do not imagine they are going to charge any tolls on vessels coming there because they will be glad to secure the business.

Mr. SPROULE. If they do not it is all right, because the public will have the use of it, but if they do it is questionable wisdom.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If they do it will just handicap their transportation business. I do not think they will make any charge at all.

Mr. SPROULE. It is spending so much money to have a private enterprise. I feel very strongly about the principle of overexpending appropriations. It is not government by parliament; it is not government by the people's representatives. Their judgment is not asked on the expenditure of this country, their consent is not asked, but it is government by executive. In the history of Canada, or any country governed like a colonial dependency of the British Empire, when and where have we examples of the practice carried to the same extent which is indicated in the few items we are dealing with to-night?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Ever since confederation there has been as large if not a larger proportion of supplementaries than we have.

Mr. SPROULE. They have not always been over-expenditures, the same as these.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, every one is exactly the same.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think that in my experience there has ever been a time during the last 25 years that this House has been indulged in to the same extent as at the present.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). Did I understand the minister to say that the dam at the outlet of the French river would be completed in a year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The deputy minister thinks it will be completed in a year.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). There is a very serious state of affairs prevailing at that place. A year ago last summer that dam which had cost some $14,000 or $15,000, was blown out by the government, and since that time navigation on the lake has been very materially affected, and the industries around the lake have been in rather a bad way for want of water. It seems to me that this work should have been proceeded with before this. If the former dam was required, and it was required, I do not see why it should have been blown up. I am aware that people complain that some of the land around the lake was being flooded. I know that is the case, but the reason was because the dam had been improperly constructed, and did not provide for the overflow of water in the spring. I was under the impression when that dam was blown out and the $16,000 spent there thrown away, that the department would look after the matter in a business way and take immediate steps to reconstruct it. I did not urge the matter very earnestly upon the minister for the reason that I thought pressure was being brought from another quarter which, perhaps, would have more effect. Possibly I did not do my duty in that I neglected to urge more strenuously on the minister and the department the completion of this work at an earlier date than is contemplated. I have met the engineers of government there repeatedly both before the dam was blown out and since then, and thinking that the department was thoroughly posted as to the requirements of the different business interests around the lake I did not urge the matter as strongly as I should. I am painfully surprised to know that the work is to be so greatly delayed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think my hon. friend need accuse himself that he has not urged the matter on the attention of the department more forcibly because I do not think it would make any difference for the reason that we wanted to move carefully. I took the responsibility for having the old dam blown out because if it were not done a large portion of the town of North Bay would have been flooded, and a large portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway track washed away. I had to act quickly, and I gave orders to have it blown out by dynamite so as to prevent the destruction of valuable property. We have had to pay pretty heavy land damages, and before rebuilding the dam I thought the engineers should look into the matter with the utmost care so as to be sure that no such result would occur again. I have proceeded as rapidly as we reasonably could in view of the large amount of work the department has to attend to. We will get the dam built as rapidly as we can and I think I can assure the hon. gentleman that during the present year it will be completed, and I trust it will be found entirely satisfactory.

Mr. EDWARDS. There is a dam in the county of Frontenac that I wish the minister would blow up and I will not ask him to rebuild it because it costs the municipality from $400 to $700 a year to pay for the damage done by flood.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Some dams do more harm than one would think.

Mr. EDWARDS. Has any appropriation been made this year for dredging Kingston harbour. The interest I have in it is that the dredging of that part of the harbour down towards the old smelter site would facilitate the removal of the iron ore.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That matter is not only under consideration but under favourable consideration. I received a deputation a short time ago, and that is part of the work laid down in our programme.

Draping Dominion public buildings on occasion of death of His late Majesty, $27,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. When His late Majesty died we had to ask for a Governor General's warrant for $35,000 and we only expended $27,000.

Mr. PORTER. Upon what principle was that money expended in the various towns and cities?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We were guided somewhat by the population and the importance of the different cities and towns. I could give some illustrations.

Mr. PORTER. Give me Belleville.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Belleville $100, Berlin $100, Alexandra $50.

Mr. EDWARDS. How much for Kingston?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $391.10 for the different public buildings there.

Mr. PORTER. Through whom was the expenditure made in Belleville?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The usual course would be for the chief architect to give directions to the caretaker to expend in draping the building not more than $100.

Mr. PORTER. From the appearance of the Belleville building I should think it would not cost more than $20.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sorry to hear that.

Mr. PORTER. It was a disgraceful display. It was very freely remarked on in the city, that the decoration of that building was a disgrace, and I think I am justified in repeating what was said by those who ought to know, that it did not cost more than $25. I suppose some account will be furnished to the department of how the $100 was expended?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, there should be full particulars showing the materials and labour.

Mr. PORTER. I should like very much to see the items.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will have that obtained for my hon. friend.

Ottawa public buildings, heating, including salaries of engineers, firemen and watchmen, $17,700.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think I gave the full particulars when the same item in the estimates for next year was before the committee.

Mr. PORTER. Has this been occasioned by any increase in the number of engineers, firemen and watchmen?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, owing to additional buildings.

Mr. STANFIELD. Do your engineers and firemen have certificates?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The engineers do, where the buildings are heated by steam under high pressure—not the firemen.

Dominion buildings, salaries of engineers, firemen, caretakers, &c., $17,300.

Mr. RUSSELL. What wages do these people get at the present time?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot give that tonight, but I will make a note of it.

Mr. PORTER. Is there a regular scale on which those employed in that service are paid?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, there is a regular scale. The guiding principle is the floor area of the buildings which have to be taken care of.

Dominion cattle quarantine stations, renewals and repairs, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The amount voted in the main estimates was $5,000, and the Department of Agriculture require this additional amount.

Mr. PORTER. Where are these stations located?

Mr. PUGSLEY. At Bridgeburg, Gretna, Portal, Deloraine, Sarnia and other places.

Mr. PORTER. These are all new places except Sarnia.

Mr. EDWARDS. When were these new places established?

Mr. PORTER.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It would be during the year now just closing.

Mr. EDWARDS. What was the reason for establishing so many new quarantine stations? Was it in anticipation of the proposed unmentionable bargain between this country and the United States?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would not suppose that, because I do not imagine that the Minister of Agriculture ever dreamed we would get so good a bargain.

Mr. PORTER. Are these places to accommodate cattle brought into this country in bond?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The memorandum which has been supplied to me by the Department of Agriculture states that the vote is asked to supplement the grant of $5,000 made by parliament at its session of 1909-10 for the construction of corrals and dipping vats along the boundary line between Canada and the United States, and the maintenance of the quarantine stations generally throughout the Dominion in a proper state of efficiency during the year. The department had asked for $20,000 last session, but for some reason it was reduced to $5,000, and the department has asked to supplement it by this appropriation.

Mr. PORTER. I presume this is for the purpose of treating cattle coming in from the United States to prevent the spread of disease in this country?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I presume so.

Mr. PORTER. If that is the case, it does not exactly square with what the Minister of Agriculture told the committee this afternoon—that the cattle were not treated in that way until they reached the port of embarkation for the European market.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They may be coming in to Manitoba or Saskatchewan or Alberta to be used there and not for shipment.

Mr. PORTER. I suppose, from the answer given a few moments ago, that these were located in older parts?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Gretna and Portal are in Manitoba and Saskatchewan. Bridgeburg is in Welland county.

Mr. EDWARDS. If I understand the minister correctly, the first request for this amount was made a year ago, but by some mistake it was put down at $5,000 instead of at $20,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. By whom was the request made for this vote?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was made by Dr. Rutherford, who is the veterinary general of the Dominion.

Mr. EDWARDS. When?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The very day after the vote was reduced, he came and called attention to the fact that an error had been made in reducing it.

Mr. EDWARDS. My reason for wanting to know if the Minister of Agriculture had made the request is because I am under the impression that he said we would not require so many quarantine stations on this side of the line if the proposed arrangement came into effect, because the cattle would be all going the other way. They would be shipped south instead of coming into this country.

Mr. PORTER. Is this to cover expenditure already made?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Cribbins Point Wharf, Nova Scotia, $350.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is for the renewal of the superstructure and will finish up the work.

Mr. CROCKET. Has the Crown got a title to this property?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

L'Ardoise, beach protection work, $600.

Mr. PUGSLEY. At the last session there was a vote of $1,800 for the construction of beach protection works at this place. The appropriation had been expended, but the work was not entirely completed, and the chief engineer decided it was absolutely necessary that this additional expenditure should be incurred.

Mr. PORTER. Was this done by contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, by day labour.

Mr. CROCKET. Will this complete the expenditure?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Margaree Harbour, to complete repairs of breakwater, $1,850.

Mr. PUGSLEY. During last session we voted $2,300 to repair the breakwater, and this additional amount is required to make a good job.

Mr. CROCKET. Was there any expenditure before the present year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot tell as I have no memorandum of that.

Mr. PORTER. Where is this harbour?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In Inverness county.

Mr. CROCKET. What amount was voted last year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $2,300. The work consisted in the removal of the outer end of the breakwater, the construction of a new block and the repairing of the main breakwater. When the work was undertaken in the spring, it was found that further damage had been done in the winter and it was necessary to make some extensive repairs, entailing an additional expenditure of $750. This was authorized by order in council of 26th September, 1910. The resident engineer reported that unless this amount was expended the work already done would be liable to be carried away in the winter's storms. It was done by day work.

Mr. CROCKET. Was there an estimate made of the cost before the work was begun?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was estimated that $2,300 would do the whole thing.

Mr. CROCKET. A total of nearly $4,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, by reason of the work being damaged during a storm after the estimate was made.

Mr. CROCKET. When did the storm occur?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief engineer reports that the damage was done during last winter, and also, I understand, further damage in the spring. In fact, the district engineer reports that while the work was being proceeded with an accident occurred due to a series of severe storms and gales.

Upper Prospect, breakwater, $637.50.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a work called for by District Engineer Russell.

Mr. CROCKET. What was voted last year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Three thousand dollars.

Mr. CROCKET. Is this the end of it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, this finishes the work.

West Dublin Bay, additional dredging, $4,599.85.

Mr. CROCKET. Is that by contract or is it government dredging?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Contract.

Mr. CROCKET. At what price?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Three tenders were received. We let the contract at 45 cents per cubic yard. That is a lower price than the lowest tender, but we declined to give it at the lowest tender price, and got it at 45 cents a yard.

Mr. CROCKET. Why was the lowest tender refused?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We thought it was not low enough.

Mr. CROCKET. What was the lowest tender?

Mr. PUGSLEY. For class A $8, for class B $5, and for ordinary spoil 50 cents.

Mr. CROCKET. The department thought 50 cents excessive?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, for that particular work.

Mr. CROCKET. The minister has been paying more than that in New Brunswick.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It depends on where the work is being done.

Mr. CROCKET. Were new tenders called for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. CROCKET. How was it awarded at a price below the lowest tender?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was awarded to the lowest tenderer, but we told him we would not give it to him unless he would reduce his price five cents, and, after negotiation, he accepted it.

An hon. MEMBER. That is not another McAvity five cents?

Yarmouth improvements, additional dredging, $42,700.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Who is McAvity?

Mr. CROCKET. McAvity is the minister's partner in the ownership of the St. John 'Telegraph.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman is wise, but not quite so knowledgable as he thinks he is.

Mr. CROCKET. Is not the hon. minister asociated with Mr. McAvity and Mr. John E. Moore in the purchase of the St. John 'Telegraph.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will give the hon. gentleman information that is relevant. He pretends to know it all; it would be unwise for me to give him information that might disturb his thoughts.

Mr. CROCKET. I make the statement and the minister will not deny it, that he was associated with Mr. John E. Moore and Mr. George McAvity in the purchase of the St. John 'Telegraph,' which is known as 'the dredger's organ.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is a wonderfully good paper, a favourite paper among the people.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). What about Yarmouth?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Thank you, yes. The dredging work at Yarmouth is very important. Hon. members know how the business there is improving. Larger steamers have been or are to be, put upon the route. The appropriation made for Yarmouth was exhausted a considerable time before the close of the dredging season; and, being urged very strongly by the Board of Trade and the business men of Yarmouth——

Mr. DANIEL. I thought the minister did not take much stock in board of trade opinion.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was saying—being urged very strongly by the Board of Trade and the business men of Yarmouth as well as by the member for the county, to continue the dredging, I brought the matter before council, and we decided to go on.

Mr. CROCKET. At what price is the work done?

Mr. PUGSLEY. At 28 cents per cubic yard.

Mr. CROCKET. What amount was voted last year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Sixty thousand dollars.

Mr. CROCKET. Did it overrun the estimate?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No; I stopped it when the appropriation was exhausted.

Mr. CROCKET. Is that the practice of the department?

Mr. PUGSLEY. These are the orders I have given—peremptory orders.

Mr. CROCKET. How long was the work stopped before being resumed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. A fortnight or so.

Mr. CROCKET. Can the minister resume, after the appropriation is exhausted, without an order in council.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can, but I usually get an Order in Council, and did so in this case.

Mr. CROCKET. Who are the contractors?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Dominion Dredging Company.

Mr. CROCKET. Were tenders called for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. Specification as to the quantity of dredging to be done?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. And this overran the estimate to the extent——

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I explained that there is a large quantity of dredging to be done, and the work is allowed to extend over, I think, three years. The appropriation was only $60,000. The contractors said that it did not make any difference to the department when they did the work, if they were willing to wait for the money. I stopped them at first, but allowed them to go on. They have a certain amount to do, and when they get that done their contract will be ended. Formerly, under public tender, we paid 50 cents per cubic yard for dredging at Yarmouth. Under the new rule I have laid down, under which we endeavour, as far as possible, to specify the quantity of dredging, and instead of confining it to one season allow a reasonable time to do the work, we get it done for 28 cents per cubic yard.

Mr. CROCKET. Is this the end of it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, they go on next year.

Mr. DANIEL. Have the contractors ever used a suction dredge there?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not in Yarmouth.

Mr. DANIEL. I have visited Yarmouth, and I recognize that a good deal of dredging is required to afford proper accommodation for the traffic there. I should think that for much of the material that is to be dredged there, better, quicker and cheaper business could be done by a suction dredge than by the ordinary dipper dredge. Has the minister taken that into consideration?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I have not. There is no contractor having a suction dredge except one in the maritime provinces.

Mr. CROCKET. Where is it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. At the Miramichi river. The W. J. Poupore Company have the contract.

Telegraph lines, Okanagan Valley telegraph line, &c., $5,479.56.

Mr. DANIEL. What is the explanation of the increased cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The line proved to be 12 miles longer than the estimate, and the average cost was $140 a mile, largely due to the increased cost of poles.

Belleville drill hall, $325.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is an amount for interest which my department charged to the corporation of the Roman Catholic Bishop of the diocese, which he thought I should not charge. It was in connection with property owned by the government which was sold to the church. They made a strong point of the fact that for many years the hospital lot, property belonging to the church, had been used by the Militia Department without payment of rent, and on looking into all the facts I thought it right to remit the interest.

Mr. PORTER. It is a fact that this lot was used by the Militia Department for many years without charge.

Public Works—Collection of revenue—Telegraph lines—Saskatchewan and Alberta—Maintenance and repairs, $12,400.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There has been an extension of the telegraph line and there was not sufficient provision made for the maintenance. This is to cover maintenance charges.

Mr. DANIEL. Why is this put under the head of collection of revenue?

Mr. PUGSLEY. For the reason that we receive a revenue from the telegraph service, and we put the operating expenses on the opposite side of the account.

Mr. EDWARDS. Do you not receive any revenue from those other lines that you are building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We do and you will find in the main estimates that the charge for maintenance will be under the collection of revenue, but the cost of the actual construction of new lines is put under construction account.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding House adjourned at 12.23 a.m., Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, March 24, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

INSPECTION AND SALE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. LEWIS moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 154) to amend the Inspection and Sale Act. He said: Mr. Speaker, the Bill which I wish to introduce to the House deals with a grievance affecting the people of Canada and the commercial integrity of Canada in so far as our merchants are concerned. It is in reference to the Inspection and Sale Act, and is as follows:

His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

1. Section 321 of the Inspection and Sale Act, chapter 85 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

2. Any person who marks or causes to be marked a wrong name, or the name of any person or firm other than the one who actually packs the package, on any fruit package shall be guilty of an offence.

3. Section 325 of said Act is amended by striking out the words, 'for export,' in the first line thereof.

4. The said Act is amended by adding immediately after section 327 thereof the following:

327a. This Act shall apply to all fruit packed and offered for sale, either wholesale or retail, in Canada.

The Act on the statute-book, as far as it goes, is perfect, but the object of this Bill is to apply its provisions to the fruit that is sold to the people of Canada. The Act as it at present exists is applied principally to goods that are sold for export. I quote the following statement from the Minister of Agriculture of the province of Ontario:

'There is a tremendous market at present in the west,' said Mr. Duff, 'but we are up against the man who is dishonest, the man who puts little apples in the middle of the barrel. There is nothing that we should instil into the minds of our people more than to have common honesty towards their fellows. In the end it means thousands of dollars to us.'

While we protect the man who gets our fruit outside of this country, we do not protect our own people in the purchase of Canadian fruit. A gentleman in this city informed me that the other day he bought a barrel of apples. Upon opening it he found the top layers all right, but the inside was filled with inferior fruit. He reported it to the grocer, and the grocer said: I am very sorry, I will send for it, and send you another barrel in its place, the mark upon which indicates absolutely perfect fruit. He sent him another and it was found to be in just the same condition. The mark on the barrel had been forged, and this Bill is for the purpose of preventing that sort of thing.

Mr. SPROULE. I think, of course, that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lewis) ought to have the right to introduce his Bills, but I am afraid that they are all stillborn. At this stage of the season he cannot hope to get more than the benefit of an advertisement.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 153) to amend the Inspection and Sale Act, as regards the weights of a bushel and a bag of certain articles.—Mr. Fisher.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Indians, Quebec, medical attendance and medicines, $3,500.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). This vote is rendered necessary because of the unexpected prevalence of small-pox and chicken-pox among the Indians.

Mr. HENDERSON. Where was this outbreak?

Mr. OLIVER. This is for the province of Quebec, but I regret to say similar expenditures were necessary in other provinces. There were quite a number of cases of small-pox and chicken-pox in Bersimis and Seven Islands. It was reported to the department that there were 400 cases of small-pox and chicken-pox among the Indians along the north shore of the St. Lawrence. The disease commenced among the white people and spread to the Indians.

Mr. SPROULE. If the disease was chicken-pox it was comparatively harmless, but if it was small-pox of course every precaution should be taken to prevent its spread.

Mr. OLIVER. While chicken-pox is perhaps never serious among white people it has been found that it is sometimes dangerous among the Indians.

Mr. SPROULE. There is a great similarity between the symptoms of chicken-pox and small-pox, and it would not be wise to let even chicken-pox go without taking precautions.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend has stated the case correctly.

Indians, Nova Scotia, medicine and medical attendance, $5,000.

Mr. OLIVER. A small-pox epidemic broke out in several parts of the province of Nova Scotia, and special medical attendance had to be provided. In some cases the houses of the Indians had to be burnt and new ones erected, and in all cases the clothing was destroyed. There were cases in Kings county, Haliburton county, Antigonish and Cumberland counties. The cases were quarantined, and the Indians had to be supported during the quarantine. The Indians were all vaccinated. In New Brunswick small-pox broke out among the Indians in some districts and similar precautions were taken.

Indians, Northwest Territories—Rev. John Semmens, allowance for taking adhesions to Indian Treaty No. 5, 79 days at $5 per day, $395.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Semmens took the adhesions of the Indian in the neighbourhood of Fort Churchill and York Factory. These adhesions were necessary to bring under treaty the territory which it is proposed to add to Manitoba. The whole of that territory is now under treaty.

Mr. BRADBURY. Was this payment made to Mr. Semmens in addition to his regular salary?

Mr. OLIVER. This is a special allowance for this special duty. The duty of the inspector is to inspect the Indians who are under treaty, and instead of appointing a commissioner to take these adhesions and providing him with a salary and expenses we thought it better and more economical to employ Mr. Semmens and pay him an extra allowance of $5 per day.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. What is his salary?

Mr. OLIVER. $2,200.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. What becomes of his duties as inspector when he is performing this special duty?

Mr. OLIVER. He is of course not able when is he securing adhesions to the treaty at York Factory, to inspect the reserves in the north-eastern part of Manitoba; but we considered that it was economy to employ his services and allow him extra pay for that work, instead of employing another commissioner who would have to receive full salary for the time he would be employed.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. During the time that he was so occupied, does the minister consider that his duties as inspector were neglected in any way?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Then I do not see where the economy is, because if he was getting a salary of $2,000 a year as inspector, he could have done this work for nothing.

Mr. OLIVER. A large number of his inspections are performed on his way to York Factory and Churchill or on his way back, so that while he was not inspecting during the time he was taking the adhesions to the treaty, there was a minimum loss of time from his inspection duties, and the work was done at a minimum cost.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Was not his salary under this clause running concurrently with his salary as inspector?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Then I do not see where the economy comes in. If a man can perform these duties concurrently with his regular duties, either his regular duties do not give him enough to do or he should have performed these extra duties without extra remuneration.

Mr. OLIVER. That is a matter for the consideration of the House. The opinion of the department was that it was sound economy and better work to employ him in taking the adhesions, because he would have to travel a less distance and occupy less time away from his inspection duties than would have been occupied by another person; and besides, by reason of his long experience with the Indians, and their confidence in him, he was more likely to do good service for the department than a man who was a stranger to that line of business. We believe the public service gained more by the system we followed than it would have gained had we retained him in his inspection work exclusively, and engaged an outside commissioner to take the adhesions.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. As I understand, when a man is employed by the government in this department, and is paid such a salary as this man receives, the department is entitled to the whole of his time; so that if you are paying him anything extra, you are paying him something that he is not entitled to. I make this complaint, not particularly in this case, but because I observe all through the estimates that it is getting to be a rule in all the departments that a man who gets a good round salary for his services, is paid various little extras. It is a bad precedent. When a man is expected to give his whole time to the service, and is paid liberally, if he is asked to do some other work, there should be either a deduction made from his salary, or he should do the other work without extra pay.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Do these 79 days include the time that he was going to make the inspection? If he was inspecting during that time, he was not entitled to the $5 a day, because he was getting a salary besides that.

Mr. OLIVER. I admit that there is fair ground for the argument of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken, but in the judgment of the department the circumstances in this case were of such an exceptional character that the best interests of the government and the interests of actual economy were better conserved by the course we pursued. When you engage a man and pay him for the whole of his time, you do not possibly pay him for the whole of his talent. You engage him to do work under certain conditions which are suitable and favourable, and he engages on the understanding that he will perform those duties under those suitable and favourable conditions. You ask that man to do something else, under conditions which are neither suitable nor favourable, conditions which put him in danger of his life from day to day, conditions which are entirely distinct from those of the duties which he is properly called on to perform. It is true, we could say to a public servant, you must either do whatever duty we see fit to assign to you or leave the service; but I do not think it would be fair, or that it would tend to good work in the public service, to do so. We engage a man to do a certain work; if we require him to do different work, under different circumstances and conditions, and with different responsibilities, I think it fair and right and reasonable that we should give some consideration to those circumstances.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I do not see that the work done here is any different from the ordinary work of inspection of Indian reserves. I would agree that if you hired a man to work in an office, and wanted him to work outside at manual labour, there would be ground for my hon. friend's argument. But this is to all intents and purposes the same class of work.

Mr. OLIVER. There is a great difference between travelling by steamer on Lake Winnipeg to Norway House, which is the ultimate limit of the inspectorate over which Mr. Semmens presides, and taking a canoe from Norway House to Fort Churchill and York Factory, a distance of 300 or 400 miles through an absolutely untravelled country. When his Excellency, the Governor General made a trip last summer on this same route, under the most favourable conditions, the fact was heralded throughout the world as something extraordinary. Mr. Semmens goes over a great deal more ground under conditions not nearly as favourable, and my hon. friend says that it is entirely in his day's work. I do not think it is. When a man goes to negotiate an adhesion to a treaty, or for all practical purposes to make a treaty with Indians who have not hitherto been under a treaty, I submit that his duties and responsibilities are radically and entirely different and of a much higher class from those of ordinary inspection. It is only fair that that condition should be recognized, namely, the extraordinary difference in the means and mode of travel and the important difference in the duties of the two positions.

Mr. BRADBURY. I agree with the minister that there is some difference in the work; but when he says that the duties are more arduous or more dangerous, I must differ with him. In the territory Mr. Semmens inspects, he has to travel considerable distances in canoes just as he would if he were going to York Factory. A trip to York Factory is not so dangerous, it is simply a pleasure trip, thousands of men have gone down that river, and the trip from Norway House down the Nelson river along the chain of lakes is really a pleasure trip, especially in the case of a man, travelling as an inspector, and making the journey with a large staff in attendance —really travelling in state. I do not object to a man getting paid for his work, and Mr. Semmens is perhaps one of the likeliest officers to do it, but what I object to is that, in addition to his salary of $2,200 a year, he should be allowed extra for this work. The department has two inspectors, Mr Swinford and Mr. Semmens, who apparently are working over the same territory and within a short distance of each other. Each of them gets $2,200 per year, and I think that if you take them from their regular work and give them any other work, they should not draw any extra salary. An employee of the government, drawing a yearly salary, should give his whole time to the country, and I do not approve of this system of allowing government employees to get these additional perquisites. There are other men in Manitoba just as competent as Mr. Semmens to do this work, and it would not have cost more to employ any one of them. At the same time I am not criticising Mr. Semmens in the slightest degree, because I think he is an experienced man and especially adapted for this work, but he should not be paid a double salary.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In listening to what the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) has just said, I wondered if this was the same Rev. Mr. Semmens whom he criticised a night or two ago with regard to the St. Peter's reserve. To-day my hon. friend has painted him in glowing colours whereas, the other night he depicted him as a betrayer of the Indians. I cannot understand this blowing hot and cold.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This man Semmens is, to borrow a term from the Senate, a reformed preacher. He has given up his charge as a preacher of the gospel and has become a heeler, more or less, for the Liberal party in the west. I object to $400 extra being paid to him in addition to his regular salary, for he is paid a regular salary to give up all his time to Canada. This trip he made from Winnipeg to Selkirk was made during the time for which he was paid by Canada; and as my hon. friend from Selkirk has said, nine times out of ten, it is a pleasure trip. There is no defensible reason why we should be asked to pay him extra money for this pleasure trip. I would like the minister to inform me what territory, treaty number 5 covers

Mr. OLIVER. It embraces the northern part of Manitoba and the adjacent part of the district of Keewatin. This adhesion to the treaty is for the purpose of covering by the treaty all that part of what was formerly the district of Keewatin, and is now proposed to be included in Manitoba.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Does treaty number 5 extend from the northern boundary of Manitoba into the Northwest Territories? Does it go to Hudson Bay?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. The adhesion to treaty number 5 taken by Mr. Semmens covers the country on each side of the Nelson as far as Hudson Bay, and westward runs to the boundary of Saskatchewan and northward to the 60th parallel.

Mr. CAMPBELL. On this $400 trip of this reverend gentleman, how many adhesions were obtained to the treaty?

Mr. OLIVER. Two bands, those at York Factory and Fort Churchill, including about 300 Indians.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The minister stated the distance to be about 480 miles, so this would be about $1 for every mile. Does the minister not think that an abnormal price to ask the people of Canada to pay a man who is already paid for his services?

Mr. OLIVER. No; if I had thought so I would not ask the House to vote the amount. I think it is fair remuneration and consideration for the services rendered and the time occupied.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, does it not seem ridiculous to you that a man who is employed by the year as an officer of a department of this government, the whole of whose time is paid for by the people of Canada, should be paid $400 for a couple or three months' service given, not in his own time, but in the people's time? I absolutely object to this.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no way of overruling my hon. friend's objection, nor have I any way of persuading him differently from the way he takes. I can only reiterate what I have stated, that, in my judgment, while Mr. Semmens' time was engaged and paid for by the country, still he was not paid for such duties or responsibilities as were placed upon him in the negotiation of these adhesions. We thought it was in the interest of economy that we should employ Mr. Semmens and make him a comparatively small allowance for extra duty rather than to employ some other person who probably would not do the work so well, and whose employment would cost the country a great deal more. That is one side of the question. The other is that we do not think it would be fair to hire Mr. Semmens for $2,200 a year to act as inspector for a certain number of Indian agencies, and then demand entirely different duties and responsibilities at his hands, and under circumstances entirely different from those which he had reason to expect would surround the duties which he was paid to discharge.

Mr. BRADBURY. The objection I made in the beginning, I think, holds good. It was emphasized by my hon. friend from Dauphin (Mr. Campbell) who, probably, knows more about the Indians than I do. But I think it is wrong to have an official, to whom the country is paying a very large salary, and then give him this additional work, when that work might have been performed by somebody else. The hon. minister knows how many people we have connected with the branch of the Indian Department at Winnipeg. The inspectors there draw a total of about $9,000, and some do nothing more than walk down to the office and get their cheques—do not leave Winnipeg and have no office work. I do not think there is anything to justify the sending out of these men at an extra $5 a day to perform duties that the country has already paid for. As to my hon. friend's (Mr. Campbell's) reference to my criticism of Mr. Semmens the other night, I hold that my criticism was justified, but that does not mean that I am going to carry it through my life and persecute or follow up this man. I have stated that his knowledge was sufficient to enable him to perform the work in connection with this extra work, and, that being so, I think he should have performed it as part of the duties of the position he holds. But I have nothing to take back of my criticism of the other night. There were extenuating circumstances, perhaps which I stated on that occasion. But nothing that I said would show that he is unfit for the duty he is said to have performed in this case. My objection is that he should not be paid a double salary.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I think the minister's explanation is plausible, but it does not explain. I did not understand the minister to answer the question asked a moment ago: Was Mr. Semmens engaged for 79 days in getting these adhesions to the treaty, or does that 79 days include the time going and coming? I understood the minister to say that, on his way to where he received these adhesions and on the way back, he performed his regular duties as inspector of the department. Then, certainly, that needs explaining. If he was the best qualified man to get these adhesions, I have no objection to make, but I think it is a fair criticism to say that Mr. Semmens should not be paid extra for the time engaged in making inspections on his way to obtain these adhesions and on his way back.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Semmens' inspectorate extends to Norway House. There are several bands in the inspectorate between Selkirk and Norway House, and on his way between Selkirk and Norway House, either going or coming, he made the necessary inspections. The 79 days mentioned in the estimate was the time occupied from Norway House to Churchill and return to Norway House, and does not include the time he spent in going to Norway House.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. And no inspections were made after leaving Norway House?

Mr. OLIVER. No, there were none to make, but the territory had to be travelled over in order to reach York Factory and Churchill. We wish to pay him the allowance from the time he left Norway House until he returned to Norway House, that being the time when he was employed in securing these adhesions at York Factory and Churchill; and we consider, as I have said, that it was economical to employ him, starting from Norway House and returning to that point, rather than send another commissioner, paying him his whole time, starting him from Winnipeg or Selkirk and paying him both ways.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. How many persons accompanied this inspector?

Mr. OLIVER. Himself, a clerk, a physician, a cook, and five canoe men.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How many places after leaving Norway House did this reverend gentleman call to obtain these adhesions with regard to Treaty No. 5.

Mr. OLIVER. The only two places at which he took adhesions were York Factory and Fort Churchill. The adhesions necessary in the intervening territory had been taken during the previous year. It would be necessary that he should make his trip from Norway House to York Factory and Fort Churchill in order to meet the Indians there at the time set for the meeting.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Taking the minister's figures, 480 miles, and knowing the conditions in the country as I do, I think the minister should hardly ask us to believe that in making that trip, this party travelled only ten miles a day. He could easily travel 100 miles a day down the river and 40 miles a day up the river.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend knows enough about travel in the west to understand that you cannot measure distances in such a country as this by miles, but by days.

Mr. CAMPBELL That was travelling by ox-cart.

Mr. OLIVER. It is a matter of days, not of miles. I have not travelled over this route, but if he travelled down stream 480 miles he would have to travel up stream the same distance, and making portages in either direction occupies time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. About one-third of the time.

Mr. OLIVER. Whether Mr. Semmens was slow or fast, he might have started sooner than he required to do in order to be sure he would meet the Indians at the time set, owing to the uncertainty of travel in that country.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have never heard the minister more laboured in his effort to defend his department and justify a payment. While the amount is not large there is involved the principle that a man who receives a good salary should not be paid twice for the same time. I cannot conscientiously vote for this payment and if a motion was made to strike the item out of the estimates I would support it cordially.

Mr. OLIVER. I am at one with the hon. member in his principle that we should not pay a man two salaries for the same time, but I do not think we should require a man to do two kinds of work for the same salary. It is the same time, but it is not the same work, and we have no right to hire a man on the pay of a crossing sweeper and expect him to do the work of a railway superintendent. The principle I stand for is that the government has no right to impose upon its officials, and that when it asks men to do special work outside of the duties for which they are engaged it should give special consideration for those special duties.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Did I understand that our reverend friend went from Norway House down the river by Split lake to the mouth of the river at York Factory?

Mr. OLIVER. I have no information at hand, but I imagine that Mr. Semmens followed the ordinary boat route between Norway House and York Factory which, of course, is not the Nelson river, but the Hayes river, and then went by the waters of Hudson Bay from York Factory to Churchill. I do not know by what route he returned.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think this committee should be seized of the facts, because, while $400 is a great big sum if it is to be paid unjustly, the expenses are something that this committee ought to consider in conjunction with the amount that is being paid to the Rev. Mr. Semmens. If he took the trip down the Nelson river in the usual course it would cost very little, comparatively speaking, but if he went around by Beren's river, Island lake, God's lake, Cross lake and Split lake, and from there to York factory and Churchill, the expense would run up very high. I think the minister ought to give us all this information while we are considering the question of this gentleman's salary.

Mr. OLIVER. I can assure my hon. friend that Mr. Semmens did not go by way of Berens river, Island lake and God's lake. Mr. Semmens passed by way of Beren's river to Norway House. That part of his trip is not considered in this expenditure, but from Norway House he went direct to York Factory by way of Nelson river or Hayes river. I take it for granted that he went by way of Hayes river because that is the ordinary boat route, and is considered to be a better route than by way of the Nelson river. I assume that he went that way because it was his business to go from Norway House direct to York Factory, from York Factory direct to Churchill and come back to Norway House. I cannot say definitely whether he went by Hayes river or Nelson river. He could go either way. The result in time would be much the same, but it is generally considered that the Hayes river route is the better one. He did not go by the roundabout route that my hon. friend suggests.

Mr. CAMPBELL. My information is that he did actually take the route which I suggest, that he only touched at Norway House on his way back, that he went from Berens river to Island lake, then to God's lake, to Cross lake, to Split lake, thence to York Factory and naturally on to Churchill. The minister is asking us to pass a certain vote and he tells us the reason why he asks that. A statement which I make, on what I believe is good authority, the minister says is absolutely wrong. If the minister is absolutely wrong and I happen to be right, what reason has this committee to judge that the minister is right? I take the same stand as my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) does, that when a man is paid to work for 365 days in the year, or when he is paid a salary, not as a crossing sweeper as compared with other higher occupations referred to by the minister, he should not be paid for a greater length of time. This man Semmens is paid by the Indian Department for doing all the work that the department requires with regard to Indians. This is only part of his work, and why he should be paid for 444 days while employees in the buildings attached to this House working in the same service can only be paid for 365 days is something beyond my comprehension, and I therefore move that this item, No. 370, amounting to $395, be struck out.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Has the minister the information as to the cost of this expedition?

Mr. OLIVER. The total cost of the trip, including the work of inspection and treaty payment on the way, was $4,000. In regard to the route followed, I find I was in error, and that Mr. Semmens, on his way out, went by way of Berens river, Deer lake, Island lake, Oxford House, God's lake, Nelson House and Split lake——

Mr. CAMPBELL. Just as I said.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, that is correct—then further to York Factory and Churchill. The whole trip occupied 106 days, but we deduct from the 106 days 27 days which was the time occupied in the actual inspection work, and we charged for the additional 79 days which were occupied outside of the ordinary inspection work.

Item voted: Yeas 40, nays 30.

To provide an amount to pay Dr. J. D. Lafferty for special services and expenses rendered in visiting the Blood and Peigan Indian boarding schools, $174.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What is Dr. Lafferty's salary, and what are his duties?

Mr. OLIVER. His salary is $1,800. His duties are medical attendance on the Black Foot reserve, Stoney reserve, Sarcee reserve and Indian school at High river.

Mr. HERRON. I cannot understand why Dr. Lafferty who lives in Calgary quite a distance from the reserve should be employed. There must be competent physicians in the vicinity of the reserve, whose travelling expenses would be less than half and who would be nearer to the Indians in case of illness. What is the explanation?

Mr. OLIVER. There are two sides to this as to every question. The question is: Shall we pay a man of high standing in his profession a salary for giving a portion of his time or shall we pay a man of less high standing for giving the whole of his time. My own impression is that when it comes to medical advice the best is the cheapest, and the higher salary a man can command the better his services are. In my humble judgment it is more in the interest of the Indians that when medical advice is required by them they should have it from a man of the high standing of Dr. Lafferty rather than from a man of less high standing in the medical profession. Possibly the view of my hon. friend is the better one, but the other is the view I would take in the matter of personal concern, and it is a fair proposition that I should apply the same rule to the Indians.

Mr. ROCHE. Is Dr. Lafferty engaged in private practice in the city of Calgary?

Mr. OLIVER. Of course we could not secure the whole of Dr. Lafferty's services for $1,800 a year.

Mr. ROCHE. Is it not the fact that on the two reserves there is a medical man besides Dr. Lafferty? Does not Dr. O. C. Edwards get a salary of $1,850 a year for attending to these two reserves? Was Dr. Lafferty paid for attending the reserves during the absence of Dr. Edwards?

Mr. OLIVER. Dr. Edwards is in charge of these reserves but this expense was incurred in connection with a special investigation into tuberculosis upon the Indian reserves, and in the Indian schools, which was carried on by Dr. Bryce of the department at Ottawa and Dr. Lafferty. These two gentlemen are considered to be specially eminent in that branch of their profession and it was thought wise to engage them as a sort of commission to inquire into tuberculosis among the Indians. Their report is published and this vote is to pay Dr. Lafferty for the special work he did in that matter.

Mr. ROCHE. According to the Auditor General's Report Dr. Lafferty was allowed $166.60 for attending a tuberculosis convention at Hamilton. Is he the only physician in the employ of the government who attended that convention and whose expenses were paid by the government?

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed he was the only medical officer in connection with the Indian Department who was present at that convention and whose expenses were paid.

Immigration contingencies in Canadian, British and foreign agencies, and general immigration expenses, $50,000.

Mr. BRADBURY. What is this vote for?

Mr. OLIVER. The immigration movement is considerably larger during the current year than it was the previous year, and the expenditure we provided for has consequently been overrun. We estimated for British bonuses for the current year $70,000 and we expect we will need $20,000 more; for advertising in the United States we estimated $210,000, and we expect that $10,000 extra will be needed; for locating settlers in the west we estimated $65,000, and we believe we will want $10,000 more; for boundary inspection we estimated $60,000 and $10,000 more will be required.

Seed grain advances, further amount required, $220,000.

Mr. OLIVER. I regret very much to say that our anticipations in regard to the need of seed grain by homesteaders this year have been short of the mark. We knew that there was a crop shortage in some parts of the west last fall, and we made investigation during the winter, so that at the time the extra supplementary estimates were brought before the House about a month ago, we expected that our total requirements would be about $100,000. We asked for $50,000 then, and intended to ask for a further $50,000 in the estimates for next year; but as spring approached and people began to get near the need of grain, applications came in to such a degree that we were compelled to revise our estimates entirely. It is a great disappointment to the department that this is the case; but I feel confident that the House will be willing to face the conditions. We find that our total requirements, instead of being about $100,000, will run, according to our last estimates, to about $320 000. We have already been granted $50,000 and we are asking now for $220,000 and we shall have to ask parliament for another $50,000 in the supplementary estimates for the coming year. We require this amount of money now, very urgently, in order to pay for the grain, because the people are already preparing to go on to the land, and if we are to do any good, it is necessary that the grain should be furnished in good time.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Why should there be such a necessity? There were pretty good crops last year.

Mr. OLIVER. I am sorry to say that the crops were not so good all over the country. In one part of the western country the rain fall was very light, and homesteaders did not get seed out of their crop. We are asking for a vote that will supply these people with seed for their crop of 1911, and it is urgently necessary that they should get the seed without delay.

Mr. DANIEL. Is the cost of this seed grain paid back to the department?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. There are some cases in which it is not, but it is a perfectly businesslike transaction, and in the vast majority of cases the money is paid back in due course with interest. The area principally affected is south of the Canadian Pacific railway line and west of the Sault line, where the season was exceptionally dry last year. The outlook is favourable for a good season this year, and we believe it is in the interest of the country that the people should be given an opportunity to get seed enough for a fair crop this year.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That is in southern Alberta?

Mr. OLIVER. In south-western Alberta the crop was fairly satisfactory, but it is in south-eastern Alberta, adjoining the Saskatchewan line, and in south-western Saskatchewan where the rainfall last year was the lowest, and a large number of people went in there who did not get their land into such a condition as to stand the dry weather. The combination of a light rainfall and new settlement resulted in a very light crop last year.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Will the minister give the House some information as to the plan adopted for the distribution of this seed grain and the price of it per bushel?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to give my hon. friend the details at the moment as I would wish. Conditions have to be met as they arise. First, there is an inspection of the country by officers of the department to ascertain whether there is a general loss of crop. We do not propose to supply seed grain to every individual loser, but only where there is a general loss. Having ascertained that, we furnish forms of application at the post offices, the Mounted Police posts, the land offices and other official places in the territory affected. These applications, when received, are dealt with. Sufficient seed for 30 acres is the most that we allow to any individual; we think that will give him a fair start for another year. The grain is purchased and handled by our Immigration Branch in Winnipeg, of which Mr. Bruce Walker is the chief. The actual work is entirely under his direction. Through the medium of his staff, he deals with the applications, purchases the grain, and attends to its delivery. A lien is taken upon the homesteader's land for the value of the grain. At present a number of the officials of the Land Department are assisting the Immigration Department in the transaction of this work.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. A few years ago the government of Canada paid a large sum of money for seed grain because of a great failure of crop in the west. If in order, I would ask the minister to give a short explanation of the condition of that at present. How much has been paid back, and how much is still unpaid?

Mr. OLIVER. I am sorry I have not got the figures here, but some time ago in answer to a question, I did give the exact figures. Out of all the advances we have made in all these years, there is only something like $100,000 outstanding, which is a very small fraction of the total amount.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I quite agree that if only $100,000 is outstanding, that is a very satisfactory showing.

Canadian national parks, further amount required, $8,000.

Mr. DANIEL. How many national parks have we?

Mr. OLIVER. We are arranging that there shall be a Rocky Mountain park which will include what are now three parks. This relates especially to the purchase of buffalo. Some years ago arrangements were made to purchase the herd owned by a man named Pablo in Montana. We have now acquired nearly the whole of this herd. There is a small herd owned by Mrs. Conrad, of Montana, which we have acquired as well. We have purchased 30 head, of which 15 have been delivered and the other 15 are to be delivered in the spring.

Mr. DANIEL. How much does each herd cost delivered in the park?

Mr. OLIVER. We paid $250 per head for Mrs. Conrad's herd delivered on board the train. These buffaloes are crated so that they are transported under more favourable conditions than the herd we bought from Mr. Pablo which were put into the cars without any special arrangement. We paid $200 per head to Mr. Pablo and the cost of transportation, which made the cost about $250 per head.

Mr. DANIEL. How many buffalo all told, have you got?

Mr. OLIVER. About 950 head. We received our first shipment in June, 1907, 199; October, 1907, 211; July, 1909, 109; October, 1909, 28; June, 1910, 46; October, 1910, 28. There are still about 70 head to be delivered from the Pablo herd. We have already received 15 from Mrs. Conrad and expect 15 more in the spring. Then we shall have the only buffalo herd of any account on the continent.

Mr. DANIEL. Are they increasing by natural increase?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, but they have been at very considerable disadvantage so far on account of the very rough character of the trip, the rounding of them up, and shipping on the train. We located the first two shipments in a temporary park and had to reship them again, so that the main herd has only been in quiet condition on their present location for about a year and a half.

Mr. DANIEL. Did not some of them stampede?

Mr. OLIVER. No. I read in the paper that a prairie fire had burnt away part of the fence and that the buffalo had escaped and were lost on the prairie. That was exaggerated. There was a fire but it did not burn the fence and the buffalo did not escape.

Mr. HERRON. Do you propose to put any buffalo on any part of the reserve at Kootenay lakes? That would be a very suitable portion of country and the people are anxious to have them there.

Mr. OLIVER. We are not prepared to decide until we have secured all we expect to get from the United States. One of our objects is that they shall form an attraction in the different pleasure resorts we hope to establish from time to time. We have not yet taken up the question of establishing the Kootenay lakes park as a pleasure resort, but we hope to be able to do so before long, and no doubt will be able to add the attraction of a small band of buffalo. Of course it would be useless to establish a herd there before we are prepared to take very good care of them. That park is very close to the boundary, and I would not like to risk many of these animals there unless they were very carefully looked after.

Mr. HERRON. Does the last purchase that was made take in about the last of the herds that were in the United States?

Mr. OLIVER. There may be some small bands in other places, but we are informed that the buffalo we purchased were the only bands of any considerable size in the United States.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is the special purpose of gathering up these buffalo? Is it merely to add an attraction to the park?

Mr. OLIVER. Partly, it is a matter of sentiment; it is considered desirable to preserve from extinction this animal which was such a very remarkable feature of the continent. Partly, of course, it is to add an attraction to certain parts of the country. Partly, it is with a view to the possibly commercial production of the buffalo. There is no doubt that there are certain commercial advantages in this animal, and it may be possible that they can be turned to account. It seemed reasonable that, at any rate, this government should go to some expense and secure such a number of buffalo as would enable that experiment to be tried out to a finish. The buffalo robe, as my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) knows is very valuable.

Mr. HENDERSON. A rare bird.

Mr. OLIVER. Rare and very valuable. It has intrinsic values that probably no other fur has. It is a question whether it would not be profitable to rear buffalo for the sake of their products, just as cattle are reared. At any rate, we are in a position to try that experiment while carrying out these other ideas.

Mr. HERRON. At the time of the loading of the buffalo of the Pablo herd in Montana, it was stated, a number were running at large outside their location, and that the owner killed the ones that escaped. Is there any truth in that statement?

Mr. OLIVER. There is no doubt that great difficulties were experienced in corralling the buffalo and loading them. There were many stampedes and some losses, that is some of the buffalo were killed either accidentally or designedly. I did see it stated in the newspapers that it was the owner's intention to slaughter such of these animals as he found he would be unable to ship. That, however, does not affect the bargain made by the government with Mr. Pablo. We only pay for the buffalo actually delivered at the railroad station nearest to the park in Canada, at Wainwright, Banff or Elk Park, as the case may be. We pay him $200 per head, and cost and charges of transportation, but we only pay for those he hands over to us.

Mr. HERRON. I have had applications which, I think, I showed to the minister, from people in my locality who are anxious to buy a pair or more of young buffalo. I would recommend to the minister the following out of a policy of that kind. Where a farmer has a desire, as a matter of curiosity for wild animals, and you know he is going to take the very best care of them, it would be a good idea to encourage him by giving him, at a reasonable rate, a pair of buffalo calves to see how they would grow and increase.

Mr. OLIVER. So far as we have framed a policy in regard to the matter, that is part of our intention. But we do not think it wise to enter upon any policy until we have cleared up the transaction with the owner in the United States. As soon as we have done that, as we hope to do in the spring, we shall be prepared to deal with the buffalo on a settled line of policy, and will look to the utilization of the herd, and, if possible, a profit on the expenditure.

Mr. HERRON. I have something to say on the park reserves, but I understand that that is not the question that is before you now, Mr. Chairman.

Amount required for Banff water works and sewerage, including $9,741.63 payable to Breckenridge & Lund as extras in connection with unforeseen difficulties met in the carrying out of their contract for the construction of sewer works at Banff, Alberta.—Revote, $12,500.

Mr. DANIEL. Was this under contract?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. The contract was completed in 1909. A claim was made by the contractor for extra payment on account of difficulties encountered that had not been provided for under the specifications. The engineer reported favourably on the claim. We asked for the amount last year and it was covered by one of the estimates voted. But inasmuch as it had not been specifically voted, the Auditor General declined to pass it, and we are asking a direct revote of the amount.

Mr. DANIEL. You are asking for something more than the revote, for the claim is only something over $9,700.

Mr. OLIVER. The total amount was $12,500, but it included the $9,741.65 mentioned here.

To provide for the expenses of the Dominion Forestry Convention held at Quebec in January, 1911, $3,000.

Mr. DANIEL. Is this the whole amount?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). Is not this a new item? We have not had a vote of this kind before?

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend will remember that, when the forestry convention was held in Ottawa about four years ago, there was such an item.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). I understand this was to pay the expenses of people who went to the convention, not salaries. The Deputy Minister of Agriculture for Ontario delivered an address at that convention which has been printed in French and is being extensively distributed in the province of Quebec. I think it would be a good thing if that lecture, which has been distributed in French in the province of Quebec, were printed in English so that it might be distributed in Ontario. The lecturer is a very capable man who came from my town and his addresses are very much appreciated.

Mr. OLIVER. I shall take the matter up.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. This meeting was in connection with the Conservation Commission was it not?

Mr. OLIVER. No, this was a forestry convention held at Quebec just before the meeting of the Conservation Commission, It is a part of the same general movement, but relates only to forestry.

Militia and Defence, required to complete payment of a rifle range at Winnipeg, $72,482.19.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). This is to pay the difference between the amount received from the sale of a rifle range at Winnipeg and the amount paid for a larger range with ground sufficient for drill and camp purposes, outside of Winnipeg. We sold our 200 acres at Winnipeg for something over $600 an acre, and bought 1,120 acres further out on the line, but still on the street cars and quite convenient for our purpose for $175 an acre so that we have to pay a difference of $72,000.

Mr. DANIEL. What is the length of the range?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. 1,000 yards.

Mr. DANIEL. Will you put up permanent buildings like those at the Sussex camp?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The same kind of thing.

Mr. ROCHE. In connection with the selection of sites, which officer is sent out to make the selections in the west?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Colonel Steel in the first instance would go over the ground and select a place or places that would be suitable. Then we usually send a board of officers to select the sites and report.

Mr. ROCHE. I wish the minister would facilitate the selection of a site in my town as soon as possible because I understand the town is willing to donate a site and has options on a certain number of lots for a certain time.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will see that an officer is sent to select a site.

Militia and Defence, customs duties, further amount required, $100,000.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This is a vote which we take each year, for payment of duties on ordnance which is being delivered from England having been purchased through the War Office. It is really a cross entry and a formal vote.

Royal Military College, furnish amount required, $17,134.69.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This is required to meet the regular expenses of the college. Last year arrangements were made to accommodate 20 additional students bringing the average attendance up to 115. $10,000 of the 1909-10 expenses were taken out of the vote for the current year, so that there remains as the amount necessary on account of the extra 20 students $7,000.

Mr. DANIEL. That would be a permanent addition to the cost of the college?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, except that a certain amount of it comes back. The pupils pay in about $300 per year. We are asking for $135,000 in the main estimates this year.

Mr. MARSHALL. I would like to ask the minister if he has thought of putting up a drill hall in Aylmer, Ont? When his estimates were up last year he said that he would consider it. We have a part of the 25th battalion there. We have no place for them to meet, and they are getting scattered all over. They have mentioned that they would like to have some accommodation, even if it were only a small building.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. At what place?

Mr. MARSHALL. Aylmer, Ont. I do not know that you remember it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do remember it, but I would suggest to my hon. friend that when the main estimates come up, which I hope will be next week, I expect to be questioned upon matters of this kind, and I will be prepared I hope to give full information.

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). As all these different items apparently run into each other, perhaps the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence would welcome the opportunity of giving us an explanation as to military matters in Winnipeg. Fort Osborne adjoins the government grounds. There have been negotiations between the government here and the government of Manitoba with reference to acquiring the Fort Osborne grounds to give a sufficient site for the government buildings there. I see by the papers that another deputation is coming from Winnipeg to interview the government with reference to the acquisition of these grounds. The minister told us the other day that he had offered to take a million dollars, but the Manitoba government say that this figure is about four or five times the real value of the property. The minister told us also that they were quite well satisfied with the premises there now. I do not think he has a very accurate photograph of the property in his mind. It is rather a blot upon the city. There are a lot of old buildings, including a wooden drill shed built 25 or 30 years ago and totally inadequate for military purposes. I have no doubt that representations to the minister have been made with regard to it from time to time. Then, there is an old custom house, and they have some other buildings situated in other parts of the town. There has been a desire for better accommodation. I have been told that offers have been made to the government of grounds 30 acres in extent, inside the city boundary at a place called Happyland. They have the rifle range at St. Charles. I would like if the minister would give us in a few words the situation which exists at Winnipeg with regard to military matters.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I did not expect the matter to come up, but still I appreciate my hon. friend's motive, which is a good one, I know, and I will be very glad to tell him what I can offhand. In the valuation which we put upon this property we were quite sincere and had no desire whatever to place a valuation upon it which was unreasonable or which would in any way interfere with the praiseworthy object which the government of Manitoba have in view, namely, the increasing of their accommodation in the city of Winnipeg. As I said in the House in answer to my hon. friend a few days ago, we sent an officer to Winnipeg to inquire into the value of this and other properties which we own, including the rifle range to which I referred a moment ago. That officer reported that this property was worth $800,000, and adding to that the value of the buildings, we thought that in order to put ourselves in as good a position as we are to-day, that is to procure land elsewhere and to construct new buildings, it would cost more than $1,000,000, but we would be willing to accept that amount. As to our buildings, my hon. friend suggests that many of them are old. I dare say that is true, but I know that several are new. For instance, we have constructed a stores building and a house, or houses, in connection with it at an expense of $50,000 or $60,000, or more. We also altered the building in which the commandant of the station lives, at a very considerable expense. We have constructed other buildings there and with the exception perhaps of the drill shed, which is old and which must be rebuilt, I admit, in the near future, we are fairly comfortably situated, except that we do require more buildings than we have to-day. We are obliged to rent houses for the sergeants, although it would be better if we could have a building of our own. On the whole, we are getting along comfortably enough, and we had no intention of changing our position at the present at any rate. Now, with regard to the whole matter, I see by the papers that a deputation is coming here from Manitoba composed of representatives of the government to discuss this matter with this government. I am very glad indeed that it is, and I hope the result may be that the wrong impression which the government of Manitoba has received may be removed, and that some agreement advantageous to the government of Manitoba and fair to this government may be reached. I wish to say that in so far as I am concerned and, I am sure, the whole government is actuated by the same desire, I will do everything in my power to meet the government of Manitoba in this matter more than half-way.

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). I think I have a little better knowledge of the property and the values of property than the minister.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have none except what I get from other people.

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). Except what you get from your officers. I would like to know in what way the officer who was sent there arrived at a valuation of $800,000 for that property. It seems to me to be three times the actual value of the property.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We have no intention, no desire whatever to ask more for the property than it is actually worth. Of course, not forgetting that we have to find a home for the military depot somewhere else. We must always keep that in mind. We cannot agree to turn ourselves out of doors without knowing how we are going to get a new home.

Mr. STAPLES. From whom did the government first obtain the Fort Osborne property and what was the original cost?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The Hudson Bay Company for the purpose of promoting the establishment of a government and a military depot, gave the lands, and so long as we choose to remain there they are ours.

Mr. ROCHE. And there is no stipulation binding the government not to part with the lands?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not that I know of.

Mr. STAPLES. In a letter received from some of my constituents they complain that young men are not allowed to join the rifle associations until they are 21 years old.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The age is from 18 to 48.

Mr. STAPLES. They must have been wrongly informed.

Mr. JAMESON. Some days ago the minister stated that the return ordered by the House respecting the Bear River rifle range would be brought down immediately, but it has not yet been tabled.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My deputy tells me that the return is complete with the exception of some letters which are at Halifax and which have been telegraphed for.

Mr. JAMESON. How long would it take to get them?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It ought not take more than two or three days.

Mr. STAPLES. When a rifle club secures a range does the department pay any part of the purchase price; where a range is rented does the department pay the rent?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The regulations provide for one dollar per year for each member of a rifle association. Where there are regular military corps we construct the range ourselves and rifle associations have the right to use them free of all expense.

Conciliation and Labour Act—further amount, $8,000.

Mr. KING. Most of this amount is required for the cost of printing the special report on wholesale prices in Canada compiled by Mr. Coates, associate editor of the 'Labour Gazette,' which shows by means of statistical tables and charts the movement of prices in Canada of 230 articles for the last twenty years. The report has been circulated to members of the House and they know how valuable it is.

Mr. DANIEL. How many copies were printed?

Mr. KING. Seven thousand. We have reserved some of the copies as it is a report that is likely to be called for in years to come. It is one of the most comprehensive works that has been published by any department of the government.

Mr. LAKE. Has the work been distributed?

Mr. KING. Copies have been sent to every member of the House and a number of members have written for additional copies. If my hon. friend has not got one I shall send it to him.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). I do not see why this was not provided for in the main estimates.

Mr. KING. The report is larger than we had expected at the outset and it cost more than we anticipated. I commenced with an idea that it was best to take an inside estimate, but experience has taught me that it may be the better plan to make an estimate large enough at the outset so as not to have to come back for a supplementary.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). There are altogether too many supplementary estimates and more care should be taken in preparing the main estimates. The experience of the past should be a guide as to the cost.

Mr. KING. This is the first special report that has been published and we had no past experience to guide us.

Mail service between Canada and Cuba, $8,333.32.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The contractor for this service at first employed Norweigan steamers and the government compelled the contractor to use ships of British or Canadian register in the service. During the time negotiations were pending as to this, four trips were made and the vote lapsed meanwhile. This is to pay for the four trips.

Mr. DANIEL. This vote is for the use of the Norweigan vessels?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I suppose so.

Mr. DANIEL. I asked in the House the other day whether subsidies were paid to vessels flying the Norwegian or other foreign flags when British or Canadian vessels were available, and the reply was that they were not. This item would appear to show that the government had changed its mind in that respect.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No. In the case of one subsidy, a company started on the business, and two or three trips were made with Norwegian vessels; but we protested and compelled the company to substitute British vessels. We would not pay them until they complied with our terms. After they did so, we thought it well that they should be paid for the two or three trips that they had made with Norwegian ships.

Mr. DANIEL. That means that for the future Norwegian vessels will not be paid for?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Administration of Chinese Immigration Act, further amount required, $12,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is required in consequence of the great increase which has taken place in the immigration from China. As the members of the committee are aware, Chinese immigrants are subjected to a poll tax of $500 a head. Notwithstanding this, the immigration from China during the last year has almost doubled, 1,600 having come in. This necessarily increases the charges on the department, and it is to provide for these additional charges and also for the investigation into Chinese immigration, which is now going on, that this amount is asked for.

Trade commissioners and commercial agents, including expenses in connection with negotiation of treaties or the extension of commercial relations, further amount required, $7,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This additional amount is necessitated by reason of the transfer of several trade commissioners and the furnishing of new offices, and also by a considerable increase in the work of the various offices. At present the salaries paid amount to $48,254.54, and contingencies to $40,376.90, a total of $88,631.44. We have trade commissioners at Bristol, England; Belfast, Ireland; Auckland, New Zealand; Capetown, South Africa; Mexico, Berlin, Bermuda, Yokohama, Shanghai, Havana, Glasgow, Birmingham, Manchester, Leeds and Hull; Paris (France), Durban (South Africa), Holland, St. John's (Newfoundland), Sydney and Melbourne, Australia. In addition to these, we have commercial agents at several points, who are simply residents of their respective localities, and are paid a small salary for attending to our business.

Mr. DANIEL. Does this item include any expense in connection with the negotiation of the reciprocity agreement now before the House?

Mr. FIELDING. This is the form in which the vote has stood for some years. I think that in one or two instances such charges have been made against it. It covers expenses of trade commissioners, so that it is available for the other service if needed.

Salaries of chief inspectors, deputy inspectors and other employees, rents, day wages and other contingencies under the Inspection and Sale and Manitoba Grain Acts, further amount required, $25,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The amount voted in the main estimates for this service is $190,000, but it is found that this further amount is required. The service is increasing, and is almost self-supporting.

Mr. ROCHE. How much has been paid to the officers appointed by the government during the past year in connection with the terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot give this information to-day, but perhaps will be able to give it on the main estimates.

Removal of foreign and uncurrent coin from circulation, further amount required, $7,500.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). The House is aware that we have been engaged several years in exporting foreign silver, practically all American silver, and substituting for it Canadian currency. We exported a considerable amount in 1910, and did not think we would have to export much this year. However the amount has proved much larger than we expected, and we need this additional sum. We pay the bank for exporting this silver three-eighths of one per cent in addition to express charges. Of course as this foreign silver is removed, it is replaced by the silver of Canada, in the coining of which there is a considerable profit.

Mr. PERLEY. Is there any law in the United States forbidding the passing of Canadian currency there?

Mr. FIELDING. I think not, but custom, I regret to say, largely prevents the taking of our Canadian money except in the border towns where, for the convenience of trade, it is very generally accepted. It will also be taken in the large departmental stores of the principal cities; but for general purposes it is not accepted in the United States, not as a matter of law, but of custom.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. It is the same in the case of our bills.

Mr. FIELDING. In many cases our bills will not be taken, although there is sometimes a distinction drawn between our national bills and our bank bills. I know that in one instance when I tendered a Canadian bank bill it was refused, and when I remonstrated the party said: 'We will take your national notes, but we do not know anything about your banks.' There is no universal rule, but the big hotels and departmental stores in New York will take both our bank bills and our national bills. But in the ordinary avenues of trade, I think our notes, both bank and national, would be refused and certainly our silver.

Mr. PERLEY. I have been told that there is a law preventing the banks from accepting Canadian currency on deposit, and that is one reason why people on the other side of the line do not like to take it.

Mr. FIELDING. The point is new to me, but it is a very interesting point, and in view of what my hon. friend has said, it will be my duty to look it up.

Mr. PERLEY. It seems to me that when the hon. minister was talking over the reciprocity question in Washington, this is a subject which might have been taken up in one shape or another. He has told us about Canadian bank notes being refused, and all of us have had experiences of the same kind. I had a letter the other day from a friend of mine who was going through the States from Ontario to Vancouver, and they charged 2 per cent discount on a Canadian bank note which he tendered in payment of Pullman car accommodation going out of Chicago. That is an outrage especially on the part of a company like the Pullman which does such a large business in this country and receives so much consideration from us. Of course it is only reasonable that we should accept American currency and bills, and I would not like to see that stopped, but there ought to be some reciprocity in a matter of that kind. It is a personal every-day matter which affects us all; and certainly when our bills are refused, particularly by a company like the Pullman, that gives a shock to our national pride, and we should try to find some way of avoiding it. I think the minister might have taken up that question in discussing reciprocity.

Mr. FIELDING. We had a good many things to think of in Washington, and that particular one did not occupy our attention. I quite agree with my hon. friend that a company like the Pullman company, which does such a profitable business in Canada, ought not to refuse Canadian money at par. One can make allowance when a small business establishment does that, but in the case of a great corporation there can be no excuse. I shall take the matter up and am glad that my hon. friend drew my attention to it.

Mr. BARKER. I heard the other day that a Canadian travelling in the United States offered a $20 Bank of Montreal bill, and it was refused, but when he offered a $20 bill of the Dominion Bank it was accepted.

Mr. FIELDING. That shows the value of a name.

Mr. JAMESON. Have any steps been taken to export Newfoundland 20 cent pieces? In the maritime provinces we have a good many in circulation, and they are a source of great inconvenience, especially to a good housewife when she finds she is short in change because one of these 20 cent pieces had been given to her for a 25 cent piece. Some of our boards of trade some time ago passed strong resolutions with regard to this.

Mr. FIELDING. Undoubtedly this currency creates annoyance in the maritime provinces, but I did not think it large enough or broad enough to require us to take special steps to export the silver. There is a common impression that these pieces are Canadian and I have been often asked why we issue them. But on examination, the parties were astonished to find that they were not Canadian but Newfoundland. Several years ago I communicated with the government of Newfoundland to ascertain whether they might not find it convenient to cease the coining of these 20 cent pieces, but they assured me that it was a very great convenience to them and they were not prepared to act on our suggestion. If the thing became too great a trouble, we would have to consider the question of exporting the coin.

Mr. PERLEY. Are any Canadian 20 cent pieces still out?

Mr. FIELDING. Hardly any. None have been issued in my day at all.

Mr. JAMESON. I think the subject is of sufficient importance to warrant the minister dealing with it. I do not know whether he has ever seen the resolutions of the boards of trade, but at the time there was considerable discussion on the matter.

Mr. FIELDING. There is the barest possibility that our friends in Newfoundland do not quite like to be treated as foreigners in the matter of their coin.

Mr. JAMESON. I quite understand the delicacy of the position.

Mr. DANIEL. Has the minister any idea of the amount of foreign coin exported during the year?

Mr. FIELDING. During the year 1909-10 we exported of this American coin $918,000. In the year now closing, up to a very recent date, we exported $1,482,000. The people on the borders are passing backwards and forward all the time, and those from our side going over to the United States are pretty sure to bring back American silver with them. Consequently, there must be a certain amount current. It would seriously embarrass trade if we were to make any legal provision that this money should not pass in Canada, so, we think it better to arrange with the banks that, when they receive it they will not pay it out but will export it, and for this we pay them a small commission.

Mr. DANIEL. Does that apply to silver only or to gold also?

Mr. FIELDING. This applies to silver only; gold would be accepted without question.

Mr. HERRON. Is the percentage paid to the banks sufficiently large to induce them to encourage the importation of American silver into our country?

Mr. FIELDING. It is three-eighths of one per cent, besides we pay the express. I do not think any of the banks would do what my hon. friend (Mr. Herron) suggests.

Post Office Department—Contingencies—Clerical assistance—Further amount required $3,500.

Mr. LEMIEUX. This is owing to the fact that the Civil Service Commission has been unable to send us the number of people required to fill our permanent staff, and so it is necessary to employ temporary clerks. As hon. members are aware, under the Civil Service Act these temporary clerks can be employed for only four months—They are not employed 'temporarily' for the whole year. At the end of the four months which is the limit of their employment, we apply to the commission to find if there are enough qualified applicants for the department.

Mr. JAMESON. I desire to call the Postmaster General's attention to a communication I received from the Canadian Postmasters' Association.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, I met them yesterday.

Mr. JAMESON. I have also a number of letters from local postmasters containing synopsis of requests submitted by the association. I will not read these letters; as the minister says he has the petition of the postmasters', the requests are for increase of allowances in certain cases and for increase of salaries and rents in such cases as may be thought proper. The communications I have received are from Miss A. Potter, Saulnierville; A. F. Outhouse, Freeport; R. W. Ruggles, Westport; E. F. Comeau, Meteghan River; and Milton Outhouse, Tinerton. These letters are all in the same terms, and, as the minister says he is familiar with the subject matter, I will not refer to them further. But I hope they will receive his consideration, and that the result of that consideration will be favourable. Perhaps he is able to say now what answer he returned to those who waited upon him or whether he has arrived at a conclusion and whether the committee will be informed of it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. As I stated a moment ago, I received a large delegation of the Postmasters' Association, and some members of the House who accompanied that delegation. I listened very attentively to the various requests made. I may say that the question raised in the memorandum of the association have been before the department for a few weeks. We have had some pourparlers with members of the association, and the questions are now being sifted, so to speak, by the officers of the department. Speaking in broad terms, some of the requests are quite agreeable to the department. A number of the requests will probably be solved during the present session. Some others will require a little more consideration. And, finally, there are a few requests to which, as I stated yesterday, to the postmasters themselves, I am unalterably opposed. I may mention one. I am asked, for instance, to give every postmaster of the Dominion a copy of the Postmaster General's full report. I think the postmasters themselves understood that the request should not be granted. It is not necessary that all the 15,000 postmasters of the Dominion, many of them having very little work to do, should receive this bulky report. It would involve the department in very large expenditure. I informed the postmasters that the larger post offices and the principal post offce masters of the Dominion could always apply to the minister, the department or their members, and I certainly would be only too pleased to give the report where it is really needed. But every one will understand that it is impossible to send copies of this bulky report to the 15,000 postmasters of the Dominion.

Mr. KNOWLES. I think I am right in believing that the postmasters of the west receive no higher remuneration than those in other parts of Canada?

Mr. LEMIEUX. That is right.

Mr. KNOWLES. I called the attention of the Postmaster General and the committee to this matter four or five years ago. The rural postmasters in the west are subject to a great deal larger expense than are the rural postmasters in the east. The delivery of mail at their houses is a great deal more irregular, because of the physical conditions of the country, and especially because of the long distance travelled; and, for that reason, if for no other, the hours of duty are much longer than the hours of duty of the average country postmaster in the east. Their expenses for house accommodation are much larger; their living expenses are larger; their expenses for fuel are larger, for they must supply fuel to keep the post office premises in a reasonably comfortable condition for the patrons of the office. In fact, I am surprised that the department has not recognized this principle in the case of the postmasters, for it applies it in the case of those whom it employs by the month or the year. The department gives a higher rate of remuneration to its employees west of the Great Lakes than to those east of the Great Lakes; and I do not think that any person in the east will say that that is at all in the line of favouritism. I cannot see why the same principle should not be recognized with regard to country postmasters as with regard to permanent officials employed by the department. I would point out that as a rule the country postmasters in the west are among the pioneers of their district and also among the most worthy of the settlers of their localities. I should be pleased if the Postmaster General would take into his serious and favourable consideration the granting of better compensation, more reasonable compensation, to postmasters west of the Great Lakes. This is not asking for them any better treatment than is given to the others, for, even if they be granted a large compensation, say 30 per cent or 50 per cent of an increase they will not be any further ahead of the game than those east of the Great Lakes, assuming that their remuneration is continued on the present scale.

With regard to the Postmaster General's department—and I think my hon. friends opposite who are from the west will agree with me in this—it has been exceptionally generous and reasonable in dealing with the needs of the settlers in the west. I think my hon. friends of the Conservative party will agree with me that this department is kept free from political influence, so far as it is possible, has granted to the settlers in the west, the very best service, and has made an exceptional success under the Postmaster General in granting facilities to the newer settlements. I do think the request I have made is a reasonable one and that the remuneration of the western postmasters should be on a higher scale than that of the eastern postmasters.

Mr. PERLEY. Did the deputation the other day ask that that difference be made between the east and the west?

Mr. KNOWLES. I do not think so, but that would not influence my opinion at all.

Mr. HENDERSON. While the hon. gentleman was speaking, I thought it strange that the deputation had not mentioned this.

Mr. GOODEVE. I wish to endorse the statements made by the hon. member for Digby, as I have also had a very large number of similar petitions. To some of the petitioners I have written, stating that generally I endorsed the requests that have been made by the postmasters, and was therefore very much pleased with the answer of the Postmaster General that he would take this into consideration. I notice that the postmasters ask for an increase in rent allowance and that the officers be classified with a system of promotion. The increase in rent allowance would cover the point raised by the hon. member for Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles). Rentals in the west are admittedly higher than in the east, and therefore the request for an additional rental in the west would seem to be justified. The promotion principle undoubtedly seems the correct system for the management of the whole civil service, and it would be a great advantage to that service if it was generally understood that merit meant promotion.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have stated, yesterday and this afternoon, the policy of the department as regards the requests of the postmasters. I could not say now what particular items will be dealt with, as I would not like to give out something which has not yet been decided upon, but I expect to deal with these various questions raised by the postmasters this session. As a hint to my hon. friend, I may say that when I took office in 1906, I raised the minimum salaries of the rural postmasters from $12 to $26, with an increase in the rental allowance and in the light and fuel allowance, and a year or two afterwards I again raised the salaries to the present minimum of $35, with a further increase in the rent, fuel and light allowances. Therefore, whilst I cannot state what will be my final decision in the present instance, my hon. friend can draw his own conclusions. Although the postmasters in their memorandum did not request the 15 per cent extra allowance granted to our mail clerks, stampers and sorters in the west, I have received that request from members of the House and from individual postmasters on several occasions. This is one of the things being considered by the department at present.

Mr. PERLEY. I do not want it to be understood that I was objecting to the argument of my hon. friend from Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles). If the conditions in the west warrant larger salaries being paid postmasters, I, for one, would not object to it. I hope the minister will take into consideration the very moderate increase asked by the minimum postmasters. They seem to me to be the ones above all others to be entitled to a better allowance than they now receive. The quantity of mail matter is increasing all the time, they have more and more work to do, and the cost of living in this part of Canada has increased as much as in the west. I hope the minister will see his way to meet the moderate requests made.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CONSIDERED IN THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 120) respecting the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway Company.—Mr. Carvell.

Bill (No. 94) respecting the Western Central Railway Company.—Mr. Rankin.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 142) for the relief of Lorne Forbes Robertson.—Mr. Rankin.

Bill (No. 143) for the relief of Cecil Ernest Freeman.—Mr. Blain.

Bill (No. 144) for the relief of Ethel May Hornell.—Mr. McCraney.

Bill (No. 148) respecting the Manitoba Radial Railway Company.—Mr. Molloy.

Bill (No. 149) respecting the Hamilton, Waterloo and Guelph Railway Company.—Mr. Harris.

Bill (No. 145) for the relief of Pauline Verena Meyer.—Mr. Rankin.

Bill (No. 151) to incorporate the Canadian Surety Company.—Mr. McCraney.

The hour for private Bills having expired the House resumed in Committee of Supply.

Mr. FIELDING. With the view of taking up a matter which I understand is by consent, I move that the committee report progress and ask leave to sit again this day.

Motion agreed to and the committee rose.

CANADA MEDICAL ACT.

Mr. FIELDING. There is on the Public Bills and Orders, Order No. 33 for the House go into committee on Bill (No. 15) to amend the Canada Medical Act which is in the hands of the hon. member for Hants. I am informed that by something like a general understanding this Bill may be called this evening so as to accord the hon. member (Mr. Black), an opportunity of advancing it. If there be no objection I would move that Order 33 be now called.

Motion agreed to, and order called.

House in committee on Bill (No. 15) to amend the Canada Medical Act.

Mr. BLACK. The object of this Bill is to make a general and uniform registration of medical men throughout Canada. Under its provisions any regular graduate in medicine regularly qualified to practise in any of the provinces of the Dominion may, by passing an examination before a central council can be qualified in any province in Canada. The Bill provides for a central council for examinations all over Canada. By passing the examination of this council a medical man shall be entitled to practise in any part of Canada. The Bill also provides that any man who has been a qualified physician for ten years in any one province may have the privilege of practising in any province in Canada without examination, providing that no province objects to the ten years stipulation. This Bill cannot become law until qualifying legislation has been adopted by every province in Canada. Five of the nine provinces have already passed that legislation, and four remain yet to pass it; one is considering it now. After this Bill got its first reading it was referred to a special committee composed of 14 medical members of the House of Commons and one legal gentleman to keep us straight. The medical councils of all the provinces in Canada were represented before that committee. There was a perfect agreement on every clause of the Bill by every province of Canada except as to one minor clause which dealt with the central medical council to which the province of Saskatchewan made objection, but this difference after some correspondence has been settled. I am perfectly safe in saying that every medical council in every province in Canada has agreed to the principle, and to all the clauses in this Bill and that there is no opposition anywhere that I am aware of. The principle of the Bill has been long sought for by the medical men of Canada and very much interest has been manifested in it by the medical profession. I have letters from every province in Canada, from the United States, from Germany, from France, and from Newfoundland in regard to this Bill, and I think there will be uniform satisfaction among the medical profession in Canada at its passage. I think that is all it is necessary to say.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Post Office Department—contingencies—clerical assistance—further amount required, $3,500.

Mr. GOODEVE. I would like to ask the Postmaster General what has been done in regard to the petition from the people of Nelson, B.C., in regard to postal delivery, sent to him on December 12?

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend was good enough to give me the names of the officers. I cannot from memory say whether I have received the report from the inspector, or whether the request has been granted. I will let my hon. friend know to-morrow or on Monday. With regard to the question put to me with reference to the rural postmasters, I cannot at present speak openly as to the decision of the government; but I can say that during the present session I shall be in a position to tell the House exactly what I will do.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Has the minister anything to report in reference to the railway mail clerks?

Mr. LEMIEUX. We are just preparing the schedule. All these things will be included in one Bill.

Mr. STAPLES. I would like to ask the Postmaster General if he has any report from his inspector regarding the changing of a mail route in the Beaconsfield settlement in Manitoba from the town of Somerset. The people want it to go by way of Treherne. They have also asked for a rural mail delivery. I sent a petition to the minister some time ago. The minister replied that he had referred this to the inspector and would act upon his report. Has he had any report?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have a faint recollection of a petition being sent by the hon. gentleman. The reason I could not answer at once was that we were short of boxes. We are, however, now having them manufactured in Toronto, and they can be got very easily, so that all requests concerning mail delivery can be attended to. I shall look into the matter.

Mr. STAPLES. What is the policy of the government with regard to rural mail delivery? The district I speak of is one of the oldest in Manitoba, and I find that in newer districts, for instance, in the district of Swan River, there is rural mail delivery quite generally. I, therefore, suppose the minister will have no hesitation in granting that system to the old portion I have referred to?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The policy of the government has not changed. We have established rural mail delivery on the existing mail routes at the request of 50 per cent of the patrons. The boxes are sold at $3 to the patrons. I might say, however, that we are disposed in the future to be a little more liberal in the establishment of rural mail delivery. When the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) is here, I propose to make a general statement.

Mr. STAPLES. Has the hon. minister any objection to placing postal boxes at other stations or towns throughout the constituency I have the honour to represent? I have had recently a number of letters from different towns asking for this. The minister two years ago placed postal boxes in two or three towns in which I asked him to place them.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Will my hon. friend send me his request in writing and it will be favourably considered?

Mr. BEST. Did the hon. minister take any action on the request of the people in the town of Shelbourne, Dufferin county asking for rural mail delivery?

Mr. LEMIEUX. That petition is before the department. I do not know if it has yet been reported on by the inspector. I shall look into the matter.

Mr. BRADBURY. Has the request made by the town of Selkirk for a post office box in the centre of the town been granted? The population is 2,500, and the post office was built a little bit out of the way.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If my hon. friend will send me a written application I shall look into it.

Mr. BRADBURY. All we want is a place to drop letters into down town. I want to draw attention to another fact. I have a petition from the Federated Letter Carriers' Association, who have asked me to bring it before the House and the minister. They are asking to be placed in a better position so that they may enjoy the benefits of superannuation. I do not think there is any class of men in the Civil Service, or in connection with the postal service, who deserve more consideration; and I might add that they labour in the west under difficulties greater than are experienced in other provinces, their expenses being much higher and the distances much greater. Would the minister kindly give favourable consideration to their request?

Mr. LEMIEUX. If my hon. friend will send the petition to me, I will see what I can do in the matter.

Mr. JAMESON. I would like to inquire with regard to the forwarding of mails from Montreal to western Nova Scotia, whether they go by way of St. John and Digby for the western part of Nova Scotia, or by way of Moncton and Halifax and around through the Annapolis Valley by the Dominion Atlantic railway. I have here a clipping from the Digby 'Courier' of the 17th instant, dated Ottawa, March 14, 1911:

A. E. Wall, M.P.P.,
House of Assembly,
Halifax.

You will be glad to know that instructions have been given to carry out your wishes with reference to the forwarding of mails for points in the Annapolis valley by a Canadian Pacific railway train from Montreal and west to St. John and Digby on Saturdays instead of via Intercolonial railway to Halifax as heretofore, thus saving 24 hours.

F. W. BORDEN.

I do not know who the signer of this telegram may be, but the initials are those of the Minister of Militia.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am the man.

Mr. JAMESON. What I would like to ask is whether the mails have heretofore been forwarded in that way, or whether this is a new departure?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I received information from the Minister of Militia that this was a proper thing for that section of the maritime provinces, and I acceded to his request. I think my hon. friend will approve of that. Instructions have been given to that effect.

Mr. JAMESON. I just wish to point out in that connection that on February 18, 1910, I communicated with the Post Office Department, and made that request myself, and to this request I received the following reply:

Ottawa, February 22, 1910.

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 18th instant, in regard to delay to mails for western Nova Scotia when forwarded via the Intercolonial railway to Halifax as compared with the route via the Canadian Pacific railway to St. John and thence across the Bay to Digby, and in reply would say that this matter will be immediately inquired into.

Yours truly
R. M. COULTER,
Deputy Postmaster General.

C. Jameson, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ont.

On the 19th March, 1910, I received a further communication with respect to this matter in which he said that:

The mails whether forwarded by the Intercolonial or Canadian Pacific railway were forwarded through to St. John and made the same connection with the boat for Digby.

I afterwards learned from the gentleman who had brought this matter of delays in these mails, owing to their going via Halifax, to my attention that there had been no delay thereafter, and that, in consequence of my taking the matter up with the department, and of the department having acted along the line I have suggested, the delay which had theretofore existed was no longer occasioned. So, I was somewhat surprised when I saw this notification in the press that Mr. Wall and the Minister of Militia and Defence had been the means of bringing about this reform. I may point out that, as this correspondence proves, this reform has been in existence for a year, and there could have been no very special necessity for these congratulatory telegrams, because they were sent to the wrong person. If my hon. friend the Minister of Militia and Defence had desired to commend any person for activity in this respect he might have waved his hand or nodded his head at me across the floor of this House; and I think if he had done so he would have recognized the person who had been instrumental in bringing about this reform with which he is so pleased, and which I suggested and, of course, very heartily approve.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I can assure my hon. friend (Mr. Jameson) that there was no ill-will on the part of the Postmaster General in regard to this reform. The hon. gentleman, from his experience of life and political and public matters, will know that a reform always takes time before evolving into a reality. Last year, he chose to address himself to the Deputy Postmaster General. If he had come straight to me, perhaps it would have been more easy to obtain the reform. At all events I may say to my hon. friend that, during the year we had gathered the necessary information, so that when the Minister of Militia came with his request, matters were ripe and we could accomplish this reform which is so grateful to Nova Scotia and so much approved by my hon. friend.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia). I have no desire whatever to detract in any way from the work that my hon. friend from Digby (Mr. Jameson) is doing, or is trying to do, for western Nova Scotia. I did not know that he had written the letter to which he refers. He does not often hide his light under a bushel, but in this particular case it happened to be that way. My connection with the matter is this: I am interested to some extent, but not, perhaps, so much as the representative of the county of Digby, in the matter. My attention was called by the provincial member for Digby, Mr. Wall, to an undesirable condition of things existing in the western part of Nova Scotia with reference to the mails. I did not fully understand or apprehend what Mr. Wall meant, and I asked him to put the matter in writing. This he did, and sent his letter some time, I think, in early February, or perhaps in January. The moment I received this letter I forwarded it to my colleague the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux), and after a certain time, I received a letter from the Postmaster General to the effect that the idea mentioned in Mr. Wall's letter was being carried out. So, I sent a telegram to let Mr. Wall know. That is my connection with the matter as I have said, I had no desire to detract from anything my hon. friend (Mr. Jameson) has done.

Mr. JAMESON. The Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) has said that, if I had applied direct to him, instead of to his deputy the matter would have been expedited, and he would have attended to it. I did not read my letter of February 18, 1910, to the committee when I brought this matter up, because I did not think it necessary to go to that length. But I may say that the letter, a copy of which I have in my hand, was directed to the Postmaster General himself. I, of course, addressed him as head of the department. The reply came, in course of time, from his deputy. If the minister likes, I can read the letter I wrote. Perhaps it is as well that I should put it on 'Hansard,' and then the minister will have it at hand. The reason I make mention of this is that I am constantly meeting with things of this kind in my own county. The Minister of Militia and Defence says it is not customary to hide one's light under a bushel. Perhaps his suggestion is a good one, and as he is an experienced politician, it may be well for me to follow his example. I think that in this case I will embalm this letter in 'Hansard,' because it is an instructive document, and it is well it should be there:

Ottawa, 18th February, 1910.

Sir,—I desire to draw attention to the fact that mail matter for western Nova Scotia which is carried from Montreal by the Intercolonial railway to Halifax, takes over a day longer to reach its destination than if it were sent to St. John and thence across the bay to Digby.

I do not know where the delay occurs, but a letter mailed out by the Intercolonial railway leaving Montreal at noon will reach Digby a day and two or three hours later than one sent out the same evening by the Canadian Pacific railway which is forwarded from St. John to Digby across the Bay of Fundy by the daily packet steamer.

In view of this delay I shall be glad if either arrangements could be made to send all mail for the western part of the province of Nova Scotia via St. John and Digby, or that the present hitch between Moncton, Halifax and Digby be overcome.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
C. JAMESON.

The Honourable
The Postmaster General.

This I think will make the matter clear to the hon. minister.

Post office, outside mail service, further amount required $210,000.

Mr. MADDIN. I would call the attention of the Postmaster General to a petition from some of the electors and residents of a place called Birch Grove, in the south riding of Cape Breton. The petition is signed by some 60 persons now living there, and I do not know that I can better describe the locality than by reading a letter which accompanied the petition to the minister:

Birch Grove is a small village two miles west of the railway station at Morien. The Dominion Coal Company are opening up a coal mine here and at present employ thirty-six men and will in a short time be in a position to employ quite a number of miners.

They have now one mail a week. This mail is taken from the train of the Sydney and Louisburg Railway Company, at Port Morien, and is carried to the Village of Port Morien, a distance of about a mile along the coast. There the mail is sorted and distributed to different points and, after travelling 21 miles, it finally reaches Birch Grove. There were the very best reasons for that, and I am not finding fault with the course pursued except for the fact that now, under the changed conditions, a large settlement is springing up there. Judging from past experience in the opening up of mines by this same company, there will spring into existence this year a village of the size of Broughton, where the Postmaster General opened a post office two years ago; there is little doubt that next summer will see at least 150 to 200 men employed there. These men, with their families, will constitute a population of 500 or 600, and the petitioners here pray for a daily mail. This place is really only about three miles from the station, but owing to the route followed, the mail travels 21 miles before reaching Birch Grove. I hope the Postmaster General will see his way to grant this petition. I would also refer to a letter which I received in connection with the same mail route:

Mr, J. W. Maddin.

Dear Sir,—I write you respecting our mail service and hope you will intercede for us so we will have a more satisfactory service established at Homeville.

The mail leaves Port Morien once a week, goes to Homeville post office a distance of 5 miles thence to Round Island 3 miles, thence to Cochran's Lake 5 miles, thence to Birch Grove. Returns to Morien, lies in Port Morien post office 24 hours before departure. Now we would suggest a better way. Let the mail be made up in Sydney post office carried in the train to Homeville station, taken to Homeville post office sorted there and taken to the various post offices. Mail to be delivered twice a week. Round Island post office is only 2 miles from Mira post office and as they have a daily mail there it would be more convenient for them to have their mail go there. Cochran's Lake which is 1½ miles from Broughton post office most all the mail matter goes to Broughton. It could be taken in the Broughton contract. Birch Grove is a growing place, it will soon need a daily mail and that could be carried from Port Morien post office.

Now we would like to have the mail at Homeville 2 times per week as described.

Trusting this information will be satisfactory,

I remain, Yours truly,
WM. HOLMES.

Another gentleman at Homeville, writes asking that there be a by-weekly mail service, and I submit that as these people are near the coast, small farmers and fishermen living from 2 to 4 miles from the railway, at a point within 25 miles of the city of Sydney, in a well settled district they should surely have a better mail service. Would the Postmaster General also bear in mind that these people are living on a rugged coast where they have to work hard and long hours. The soil is not very good in that part of the county, the fishing is hazardous and not too remunerative. It adds greatly to the enjoyment of the lives of the people in a place of that kind to have a mail service more frequently than once a week. I urge it on the further ground that the growing families of these people are moving into industrial centres as industrial development goes on. As the Dominion Coal Company and the Dominion Iron and Steel Company expand their works there is a demand for labour, and young men are leaving the fishing and farming and going into the mining and industrial centres. In the event of sickness these people at home cannot get word by mail, they cannot send a letter and get a reply in less than two weeks. They are living within two or three miles, some of them within a few hundred yards, of the railway. Of course, they could go in on the train or they could hazard handing a letter to a conductor or a baggage-master, but with a stretch of country extending forty miles, such as there is from Sydney to Louisburg, it seems to me that they should have better facilities than they have at the present moment. I do appreciate the fact that the revenue from the postal service in this part of the county is not as great as it might be, but there are many post offices in Canada which are maintained at a loss and with a deficit. I had occasion to call the attention of the Postmaster General two years ago to this part of the country between Mira and Louisburg at which time I directed my remarks in this House especially to Bateston, Catalone, Main-a-dieu, Bauline, Little Lorraine and Big Lorraine. These places that I have mentioned lie between Mira bay and Louisburg. The places referred to in the correspondence and the petition which I have read to the committee lie on the Sydney side of Mira bay but they were all closely adjoining the Sydney and Louisburg railway. I think it would not be asking the Post Office Department to undertake too much, it would not be making an unusual request of the Postmaster General, to urge him to institute a mail service amongst these people, who, I venture to say, apart from those who are employed in the county represented by my hon. friend the member for North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie), the fishermen of the northern part of the county of Victoria and Inverness, are especially deserving of consideration. They are in an isolated position on account of their bad roads, and they have but one mail a week and notwithstanding the fact that the railway reaches within five or six miles as the crow flies they probably occupy the most remote settlement along the coast. Twenty years ago, or fifty years ago, when railway facilities were not as good as they are now, when the revenues of the Post Office Department were not as great as they are now, there may have been some justification for such a condition, but I submit that under present conditions these people should have some compensation. They are contributors to the revenue of the country by the indirect system of taxation by which we all contribute. Isolated as they are on that rocky coast and employed in their hazardous undertaking, there being only six months in the year in which they can travel and these being the six months in which they have to work early and late, I think it would add much to their comfort and peace of mind, it would make them better settlers, it would have a tendency to keep them at their farming and fishing employments, if they had a better mail service by which they could get their daily or weekly papers, including the Upper Canadian dailies, and by which they could have return communication with their relatives and friends ten or fifteen miles away. It would add much to the comfort and enjoyment of these people, isolated as they are from a postal point of view, and yet settlers living in the most thickly settled county in Nova Scotia. I commend the case of these people along the south coast of Cape Breton to the favourable consideration of the hon. Postmaster General, feeling quite assured that he will meet it in a fair and generous manner. I have this to say that in approaching the minister in connection with other matters I have found him inclined to do the equitable thing, and I think that if he makes inquiry into the conditions that exist along the south coast of Cape Breton in regard to mail facilities, he will come to the conclusion that a better service should be effected along the whole coast and especially that at Birch Grove, a place within two miles of a railway station, a daily mail should be inaugurated.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will ask my hon. friend (Mr. Maddin) to send me both the petition and the letters which he has read to the committee. He need not write about the petition or letters as his explanation would serve my purpose, and then I will take into serious consideration the request which he has just made to me.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I was calling the attention of the Postmaster General to an important statement made by the Minister of Railways yesterday. The statement is worthy of the consideration of the Postmaster General, and it is one which I think must have been exaggerated because I believe the officials in the Post Office of the House of Commons are most efficient. At page 6103 the Minister of Railways made the following statement:

> I have had a letter take four days going from the House of Commons to Brockville. I do not know whether the fault is slowness in getting out of the House of Commons but I never mail a letter in the House if it is urgent but put it in a letter box. If my hon. friend has any further complaint and will let me have it I shall investigate it.

These are the words of the Minister of Railways and Canals in answer to a statement made by the hon. member for Digby

(Mr. Jameson) who also complained of delays in the mail. I might also remind the minister that I have a number of complaints with reference to mail going out of this city, to Brockville, Kingston and nearby points, the delay being almost greater than that which occurred in sending mail to distant places. The minister can possibly give some explanation.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am very glad that my hon. friend brings this matter before the committee. As he is aware the post office in this building is not under my control; it is under the control of the Speaker and the Committee on Internal Economy. However, I myself have been a sufferer from the postal service of the House of Commons. I have found that letters mailed by me from my desk here and given to a messenger at eleven o'clock in the evening were delivered to me at one o'clock next day at my office on Wellington street. I could not stand for such a service as that and I sent for Mr. Mills not more than three days ago. I spoke to the Speaker of the House, and he was quite ready to remedy all grievances. I found the system to be in existence, that if the House should adjourn at ten or eleven o'clock the post office closed automatically also, and that the letters which were mailed afterwards or even at that exact moment were not delivered to the city post office.

Letters for Montreal and Toronto can be mailed at the city post office until a late hour, and be delivered early next morning, but the fault lies with the post office in the House of Commons. A few days ago, however, Mr. Mills, the postmaster of the House of Commons made an arrangement with Mr. Speaker by which two messengers are added to the staff, and in future letters posted by members for a certain period after the adjournment of the House will be taken to the city post office, and sent direct to the Toronto and Montreal trains. However, this discussion will be a warning to the post office authorities of the House who are not under my control, but under the Internal Economy Commission. Mr. Mills says that in future the mail service from the House of Commons will be on a more modern footing.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am glad there has been an improvement, and I may add that the post office officials of the House of Commons have been most obliging. Has the minister made any change so as to place the weekly papers on the same footing with regard to entry into the United States as the daily papers are? The proprietors of the weekly papers complain of the present regulations.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There has been no change. If the change asked for by the weekly newspaper editors a few years ago were made we would have to alter the convention between the United States and Canada. The following memorandum will, however, explain the present position of the matter:

The interchange of second class matter between Canada and the United States is effected at the rate and regulations herein stated.

Under the postal convention between Canada and the United States, legitimate daily newspapers published in either country and addressed to bona fide subscribers in the other may be mailed by the publisher in the post office at the place where they are published upon prepayment of postage in cash at the rate of one cent per pound or fraction thereof.

Newspapers and periodicals published less frequently than daily, when posted in either country for despatch to the other, are liable to postage at the rate of one cent for each four ounces or fraction thereof calculated on the weight of the package for each post office of destination, and when thus mailed direct, prepaid by stamp, the country of destination is under obligation to effect distribution of whatever may have been accepted by the country of origin.

United States legitimate newspapers and periodicals, other than dailies, which have been accepted by the post office department of Canada, may, under the mailing-in-Canada privilege upon payment of postage at the rate of one cent per pound, be posted by United States publishers at the following Canadian post offices, viz., St. John, N.B., Montreal, Que., Toronto, Ont., Winnipeg, Man., Calgary, Alta., and Vancouver, B.C. Copies to be so tendered for mailing must be despatched to Canada by express and be restricted to bona fide subscribers. Publications admitted under the mailing-in-Canada privilege must comply with the provisions of the postal law of Canada, that is, in their subject matter they must 'consist wholly or in great part of political or other news or of articles relating thereto, or to other current topics.'

Canadian newspapers and periodicals issued less frequently than daily may be posted in the United States upon prepayment of postage at the one cent per pound rate. United States regulations governing the mailing in that country of a newspaper or periodical published in another country expressly stipulate that copies of a publication so mailed, in order to be accepted at the one cent per pound rate of postage, must be posted by the publisher's authorized agent, and in accordance with this regulation it would be necessary that the Canadian publisher have an authorized agent in the place at which he desired that this publication should receive entry into the United States mails as second class matter. However, this regulation was modified to the extent that eleven United States post offices are exempted from requiring that the postage should be performed through a publisher's agent. The Canadian publisher may therefore assign his mailings by express direct to the postmasters of the following offices:—

Boston, Mass.; St. Albans, Vt.; Ogdensburg, N.Y.; Buffalo, N.Y.; Detroit, Mich.; Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.; St. Paul, Minn.; Grand Forks, N. Dak.; Helena, Mont.;

Spokane, Wash.; Seattle, Wash.; from which offices they will be distributed through the United States on prepayment of postage at the rate of one cent per pound, provided, of course, that application for second class privileges has been made by the publisher at the United States post office at which he desires to secure entry, and that such application has been accepted.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Has the Postmaster General taken any action in reference to the cheap and dangerous literature which has of late been coming into Canada from the old country as well as from the United States?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Anybody is at liberty to make complaint before a justice of the peace if the reading matter in these magazines is against the postal laws. I was much surprised to notice of late that some of the old country magazines which have taken advantage of the new postal system are not of a class we would expect to see published in the mother land. Many of them I am sorry to say are immoral. Last winter when it was my privilege to meet the right Hon. Mr. Samuel and Sir Mathew Nathan the permanent secretary of the post office in England I expressed my surprise to them, and stated that the Canadian authorities had received many complaints as to the character of the magazines sent to Canada. I was promised that the list of magazines authorized by the Post Office Department in England would be revised, and that a close inspection of such magazines would take place, so that in the future no more complaints would come from Canada on that score. As regards the British-Canadian magazine post, it is most gratifying that whereas four or five years ago, before the arrangement was made between the two departments by which the rate of postage on magazines and newspapers was materially reduced, we counted 50 or 60 bags and baskets of British magazines and newspapers which come through the British mails, we now count from 400 to 500 bags and baskets. I was the other day the recipient of a letter from Mr. R. Bickersteth, the Canadian agent of Dawson & Sons, of London, England, who, writing under date of January 3, says:

After three years' experience of the actual working of the 'Canadian Magazine Post,' I desire to approach you with a representation of the actual position, and some suggestions as to its development. I have myself paid three prolonged visits to the Dominion, and have opened up branches there under Canadian management, both at Toronto and at Montreal, with a view to exploiting this great reform that your department inaugurated, and have devoted my best ability to understanding the great difficulties that still in part handicap its progress.

You will, I think, be interested to hear that, while three years ago my companies were selling less than $10,000 worth of British papers in a year to Canada, our trade in these papers with the Dominion now exceeds $200,000 worth a year. At the time of my first visit, three years ago, I found that even the titles of our magazines were unknown. The admirably produced American magazine was 'pushed' from one end of the Dominion to the other, and held the market. Now, at least, our British magazines are beginning to profit by the opening, which for the first time the 'Canadian Magazine Post' has rendered practical to them. The reform, in short, which you set on foot, is beginning to be justified by results.

This shows that this arrangement has been quite fruitful, and I hope that the relations which exist between the mother country and Canada in this respect will result not only in an increase in numbers, but also in an improvement in the class of magazines and newspapers sent out to Canada. I told the Postmaster General in England that I was somewhat disappointed in the class of magazines which were sold in Canada, having obtained from the British Postmaster General the privilege of being listed, and he promised me faithfully that no immoral magazines would be given this privilege.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am sure that we are all glad to see the increase of the English literature coming into Canada; but a great deal of the literature still coming from Great Britain is of a kind not fit to be distributed in this country, and no effort is apparently being made to stop it. If the minister will look in yesterday's 'Globe,' he will find that protests against this literature are being made even by people in the old land. It is said that there is a campaign against demoralizing novels, very prominent men urging legislation on the subject. A very different kind of literature is distributed in the old land from what we have in Canada, and the minister cannot at too early a date see that this improper literature is prevented from coming into this country. Many of us have no doubt received a communication from the American monthly 'Review of Reviews,' in which it is stated on the corner:

Thanks to the Post Office Department at Ottawa, we have just secured the privilege of Canadian entry, the only American magazine which has received such entry, which means no extra postage on the 'Review of Reviews' into Canada.

If this is a fact, how is it that some of the most estimable magazines in the United States are not allowed to come in under the same privilege?

Mr. LEMIEUX. If my hon. friend will put his question on the Order Paper, I shall be able to give him the answer.

Mr. BLACK. If the American 'Review of Reviews' has not changed its tone with regard to the British nation, the fewer numbers of it that come to Canada the better.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. We had a discussion some weeks ago regarding the fraudulent use of the mails, and the right hon. the Prime Minister gave us to understand that the department was not in a position to prosecute, but that such matters come within the jurisdiction of the provincial governments. I need not call the attention of the Postmaster General to the position taken by the Post Office Department in the United States, and the number of prosecutions intended by the post office authorities there. Would the minister give us some idea of the number of people prosecuted during the past year for fraudulent use of the mails?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not know that any have been, but as soon as the attention of the department is called to a fraudulent use of the mails we set the machinery of the law in motion to put a stop to it. For my own part, in spite of many solicitations made to me by friends and foes, I have stopped many lottery and other schemes which were making use of the mails. It is the first duty of the Post Office Department to stop the fraudulent use of the mails, and in that respect we are all powerful; but as regards prosecutions, they belong to the provincial authorities. When complaint is made through a magistrate, it is the provincial crown attorney who deals with it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What action was taken with reference to one Samuel Gray, of Montreal. I understand that the Montreal newspapers attempted to show him up, but that some of the Ottawa officials took the position that there was no necessity to investigate.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Was he a broker?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not know, but I understand he was dealing in get rich quick schemes.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My attention was called to his operations in Montreal some time last year, and I referred the case to the Department of Justice. That department advised me that his operations were unlawful, and at once we took the necessary steps to stop his use of the mails. Gray was denounced to the Post Office Department by two of his typewriters.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. No prosecution?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not remember that any was taken. I think the man left the country.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. There are so many such cases occurring in different parts of the country that I think the department ought to take more definite action. I have here an article in the Montreal 'Herald' to the effect that one Mr. Barker advertises that he makes from 10 per cent to 32 per cent monthly, and every now and then similar advertisements appear in different papers, and you would naturally think that the inspectors would take notice of these. In the Montreal 'Herald' there is an article stating that another financial wizard has been discovered in that city who brings an easy fortune within the reach of his customers. He says he can make from 10 per cent to 60 per cent on the stock market every month. Has any action been taken with regard to that?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I dare say our postmaster at Montreal read that and took the necessary action. Of course these get rich quick operators generally make use of ways that are dark and tricks that are vain, and disappear in time, but I can assure my hon. friend that we have no intention of letting the public be exploited when we can prevent it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would ask the hon. minister whether he will not revise the statement which he made with reference to the post office clerks some days ago coming under the Civil Service Commission. A year ago he gave the House to understand that they would likely be brought under that commission and said he rather favoured that view, and I should like to know what his reasons are for not favouring it now.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Speaking personally I must say that I would rather favour the amending of the Civil Service Act in such a way as to include in the service the staffs of the larger offices, such as the Ottawa, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Quebec and Halifax post offices. I would prefer that the clerks in such offices should be submitted to the same examinations and the same rules and regulations as our own Civil Service clerks in Ottawa; but as I explained a short time ago, there is serious difficulty in getting for the Post Office Department here at Ottawa the number of clerks necessary to carry out the business of the department.

My hon. friend will remember that the first item of my estimates that was passed this evening was a vote for clerical assistance. This is called 'temporary clerical assistance.' The Civil Service Commission cannot give us quickly enough the number of officers required for the Post Office Department here at Ottawa, and we are obliged, under the law, of course, to accept temporary assistance; that is, we take clerks under the authority of the commission for four months, and during the four months we may be able to get from the commission the permanent clerks that are needed. But sometimes we have to wait for four months longer before making up the number of clerks we require. This will show the House how difficult it is to secure clerks under the Civil Service Commission for the work of the department here. How much more difficult it will be, unless the Act is amended, to provide the clerks for the larger post offices. This is a question that is quite worthy of being studied. I repeat, and I am not afraid to say it, I would rather see the larger post offices come under the control of the Civil Service Commission than remain as at present. But, under the present system our clerks in the city post offices are subject to examination. These examinations are not so severe as those under the Civil Service Commission, but besides passing a qualifying examination, these officers must pass promotion examinations after three months in order to get their increase. I realize every day that it would give the service much more prestige and give us, on the whole, a better service, if the Civil Service Commission had control also of the outside service. But, as I have explained to my hon. friend, it is quite a difficult task at present to get clerks for the department here at Ottawa, and it would be much more difficult to get them for the outside service. However, the question is being examined and studied, and I hope that, some day, later on, we may be able to bring the outside service, at least the larger offices, under the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am glad to hear the Postmaster General make that statement. I understood from a statement he made some weeks ago, that he had definitely decided not to take it into consideration.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think the hon. gentleman refers to our discussion on the railway mail clerks. I said that the railway mail service was so large and was increasing so rapidly that it was impossible to think of bringing it under the Civil Service Commission. There was some misapprehension on the part of the newspapers of what I said. It was suggested that I had decided to do away with examination of the railway mail clerks. I said nothing of the kind. I said that the present system would continue to exist, but I could not agree to bring the railway mail clerks under the Civil Service Commission, because the commission could not provide enough men for the service of the country.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. At the same time, he led us to believe that the examinations required by the railway mail clerks under the Civil Service Commission would be very high. But if he will examine the Act, I think he will find that it is not required of them that they should undertake an examination as for the higher grades.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is not necessary that the railway mail clerks should undergo the examination required by the Civil Service Commission. The examination they have to undergo is quite high, and that explains why they are obliged to take so many men on under the title of labourers in the railway mail service. The railway system of the country is expanding so much and the railway mail service is growing so rapidly that we cannot get the number of people needed as railway mail clerks to pass the examination. I never thought of abolishing the examination for railway mail clerks, but I want to make the examination such as will give us the proper class of people.

Mr. FRASER. When this vote was up some time ago, I asked the Postmaster General for some information with regard to offices that had been closed after having been in existence for forty or fifty years. He promised to get me the information.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What is the name of the post office?

Mr. FRASER. New Harmony.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will get the information for my hon. friend to-morrow.

Mr. FRASER. Another matter I referred to was the daily mail, concerning which he was awaiting a report from Bay Fortune, in Kings county.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The information is at the office. I will look into the case.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I understand that the minister has led hon. members to believe that he is going to institute a parcels post system this session. Will he be good enough to tell us about it?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have received within the last two or three months several representations on the proposed establishment of a parcels post, and I am at present engaged in finding a solution of the existing difficulty. I am not at liberty to say what I intend to do in the matter. If my hon. friend will wait until later in the session I may be able to be more communicative in my statement. At present, nothing is decided. The trouble is, I may say, that there is a prejudice in the rural sections of the country against a parcels post. The country merchants are opposed to the parcels post system. When I took office some years ago, I thought that the Post Office Department should really do the business of a parcels post, instead of leaving that altogether to the express company; but the moment I expressed the view that we should establish something like the perfect systems of parcels post that they have in England, France, Germany and Italy, I found that there was a strong prejudice against the system in the minds of the country merchants, who feared that such a system would work exclusively to the advantage of such establishments as Eatons, in Toronto and Winnipeg, and Morgan's and Carsley's, in Montreal. I was deluged with petitions some four or five years ago when I thought I should do some progressive work in that field of operation. I think we should carry on a campaign of education among country merchants to show that such a system would not be against their advantage and that they would be the first to benefit by it. We are studying the question now and later on I may have a statement to make.

Mr. PERLEY. Some time ago I brought to the notice of the minister a fraudulent use of the mail different from that referred to by my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong). Has he looked into that matter?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I understood that the Minister of Agriculture admitted that the document had been sent under his hand?

Mr. PERLEY. No.

Mr. LEMIEUX. At all events I ordered an investigation to be made, and I think I have a report. The inspector found that the document had been sent under the frank of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. PERLEY. I did not understand the Minister of Agriculture to say that. This envelope shows that it was not properly franked, the supposed frank was put on with pencil. My idea is that the frank with the initials of the Minister of Agriculture was put on by somebody totally unauthorized, and that a great deal of mail matter of the same description was franked in the same way. My impression is that the revenue of the post office is defrauded by some one in that way very often, particularly before an election. I simply want to have the minister look into the matter, and see whether my idea about it is correct.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I shall send the report to my hon. friend.

Mr. PERLEY. I would like the minister to promise that no matter shall be received at the Ottawa post office unless it is either stamped or franked in accordance with the regulations.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will see that the regulations are followed.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have a copy of a circular that has been franked out in large numbers, which I would be sorry to expose to the House. I certainly think the franking system should be more carefully looked into.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Was it sent lately?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Within the last few weeks.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If it is sent during the session by a member of the House, no objection can be taken to it. Mr. Perley's complaint is that this pamphlet was circulated during the recess.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It is understood that a member can advertise his own business or solicit subscriptions.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Oh, no. I thought it was political. If any circular of a business character or any advertisement is sent under the frank of a member of the House or of the government it is a grave offence against the Post Office Act.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. One of these is a circular soliciting subscriptions, and at the same time advertising material. I think the minister should to some extent investigate this, because he will find matter being franked through the mail that has on the envelope sufficient to condemn it without going any further. I read recently in the press that the Post Office Department in the United States were making an investigation into the carriage of second-class mail matter, and that the Post Office Department of Canada were able to furnish them with definite information apparently with regard to the carriage of second-class mail matter in Canada. I asked for information some time ago with reference to the carriage of second-class matter. Can the minister tell me anything in regard to that?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The question which came up in Washington on the last day of the session of Congress was in regard to the carriage of second-class mail matter in the United States. As my hon. friend is aware, he having paid a good deal of attention to post office matters in the United States, there has been a movement on foot for the last five or six years in the United States to put a stop to what was considered as a scandal. Originally in the United States the privilege of a cheap rate of postage was given to legitimate magazines and newspapers, but no clear definition was made of what was a newspaper or a magazine, so that a system grew up through which purely advertising sheets were dumped into the mails and carried by the railways and steamers for the carriage of which the United States government paid millions and millions of dollars. As year after year went on the account of the railways and steamers against the Post Office Department grew tremendously until it became a perfect scandal. A long investigation took place in the city of New York, ordered by the ex-President, Mr. Roosevelt, and continued under the administration of Mr. Taft. The new Postmaster General, Mr. Hitchcock, a young man, decided to take the bull by the horns and to increase the rate of postage on second-class matter. You are aware that Canada is a country which makes a low charge less for second-class matter. Newspapers in Canada pay only one quarter of a cent a lb. whilst in other countries in England for instance, they pay as much as four cents a lb. In the United States they have decided to charge a much higher rate than that which has been charged heretofore. They asked our advice, they asked us how we had succeeded in avoiding a deficit notwithstanding that we gave the newspapers such a low rate. We answered the United States postal department and the Postmaster General by saying that we succeeded by making a proper discrimination between a real newspaper and a purely advertising sheet. We were able thus to give the Post Office Department of the United States very valuable information and we were thanked by the Postmaster General for such information. I think that between department and department, even from the international point of view, we owe to each other such courtesies. We were able to furnish them information, and as a result of such the United States Post Office Department decided to increase the rate of postage on illegitimate newspapers and magazines. At the same time they instituted a commission in order to classify in future magazines and newspapers. The president of that commission is one of the judges of the supreme court of the United States and the ex-Governor of New York state—Mr. Hughes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the minister be good enough to lay on the table a copy of the information sent to the United States?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, with pleasure.

Mr. BLACK. I would like to ask the Postmaster General whether he intends to pay any salary to the letter carrier at Windsor, Nova Scotia.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I received a letter from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Black) the other day, and I found that, as regards the payment of a certain letter carrier who carries the mail to the post office from the three boxes in the city of Windsor. When Sir William Mulock was Postmaster General an arrangement was made with the mail carrier that he should make the collection of the mail from the boxes without expecting any indemnity. I understand that he was the caretaker of the public building, and as this was considered a favour for the town of Windsor the gentleman agreed to make that collection without receiving any compensation. But that was ten years ago.

Mr. BLACK. Thirteen years ago.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I understand that the population of Windsor has increased and that the mails have increased, and I have been impressed with representations made by the hon. gentleman. If my hon. friend comes to my office we may make an arrangement so as to compensate the mail carrier for the service which he renders to the department.

Post Office—outside service—miscellaneous—To compensate the following railway mail clerks for medical and other expenses and loss of personal effects: G. Paradis, $66; T. J. Duguay, $121; Chas. Audet, $27.25; D. O'Sullivan, $238.66; J. T. Keith, $162.09; A. K. Melick, $322; A. S. Belyea, $125; J. P. Hipwell, $85; W. W. P. Starratt, $42.37—$1,189.37.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Several of our railway mail clerks were injured during the year. this is the usual vote.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I do not know that this is the proper place, but I want to refer to two or three matters in my constituency connected with the Post Office Department. The first one is with regard to a post office south of Austin. A very largely signed petition for the opening of a post office south of Austin was presented to the minister considerably over a year ago. I understood the minister to say to me that the post office would be opened. I believe it is at a point very close to Agincourt.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Has it not been done?

Mr. MEIGHEN. I understood for some time that it had been opened, but not long ago I had a letter from one of the petitioners stating that it had not, that nothing had been done. I was very much surprised to get the letter.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What are the other cases?

Mr. MEIGHEN. There is another request for the altering of the mail route and providing for a more frequent service through a very large section of country north of Neepawa. Last 16th of December two delegates from there, Mr. Baker and Mr. Drayson, were in Ottawa on behalf of the residents of that district and called on the then acting Postmaster General and being referred by him to one of the deputies whose name I cannot recall, were assured that a very strong case had been made out and that by some alteration in the system by which the mail would be diverted from Franklin instead of Neepawa or vice versa, with little or no expense to the department they could get a more frequent mail service. These gentlemen were promised an early reply, but I had word from one of them very recently that nothing at all had been done. I wrote the department but still without success. I am quite aware that in the Post Office Department there would be a flood of applications of a similar kind, but the objects to be served are so great that it would seem to me that some expense would be quite warranted in meeting these demands with greater facility and more frequently. I must say that personally I have not had very great success in getting actual results from the Post Office Department particularly in this regard.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The number of letters to the department daily is something fabulous, and there is always some little red tape because in the routine of the department the matter first goes to the deputy, then to the secretary of the minister, then to the minister, then back again to the deputy, and sometimes to the inspector, all of which causes delay. However, during the session of the House I would invite hon. members to come directly to me either in the chamber or in my office in the building here, when I will give their request personal attention and expedite matters as much as possible.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I am glad to notice that the minister is giving a good deal of attention to rural mail delivery, and I commend him for it. I would remind him however, that there are a great many places even in some of the older settled parts of the country where we have still very poor mail accommodation. In some places there is a mail only three times a week and in others twice a week. What is the intention of the minister in regard to improving these mail services?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I must say that a weekly or a semi-weekly service is out of date at the present day, and my intention is to improve the service wherever it is possible. I consider each case on its merits and I try to make improvements especially in the older provinces.

Steamer 'Arctic,' $10,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. The amount voted in the estimates last year covered only one years service of the 'Arctic' but she was sent to the northern waters on what possibly may be a two years cruise, and this is to provision her for the extra year.

Mr. ROCHE. Is it the intention of the government to send another boat or boats to the Hudson Bay to make further inquiry prior to the completion of the Hudson Bay railroad? I understand that within the last year or two there has been a steamer engaged on that service.

Mr. BRODEUR. Last year the department of the naval service sent a party from the hydrographic survey to Fort Churchill and another to Nelson. The Fort Churchill party was able to almost complete the survey and the plans are being prepared and will be brought down. The Fort Nelson party was not able to complete its work and a new party will be sent out this year.

Special compensation for Major J. D. Moodie for his services as commander of the expedition to the northern waters in 1904-1905, $1,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. Commander Moodie of the Northwest Mounted Police in addition to his regular duties, rendered valuable service to the Department of Marine and Fisheries during his stay in the north and this is given him as a sort of honorarium. The same amount has been voted for a similar expedition by Mr. Lowe.

Mr. DANIEL. Did Major Moodie spend the winter up there?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, at Fullerton.

Mr. DANIEL. He was, I presume, in command of the Northwest Mounted Police post up there?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. This is in addition to his regular salary?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, an honorarium.

Life-boat stations and rewards for saving life $15,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. It has been found advisable to increase the number of our life-saving stations, and I am asking this sum for the purpose. Some $15,000 was expended last year.

Mr. DANIEL. At what places and in what ways has the expenditure been made?

Mr. BRODEUR. One of the places was at Little Wood island in the Bay of Fundy.

Mr. DANIEL. How much has been expended there altogether?

Mr. BRODEUR. $5,200.

Mr. DANIEL. What does that pay for besides the boat?

Mr. BRODEUR. Building the station and the slipway and training the crew.

Mr. DANIEL. I believe the new life-boat is an open boat with a gasoline motor. I think it cost about $2,600. When loaded, it will be so nearly level with the water that in anything of a sea I should think it would not be of much service as a life-boat. The waters of the Bay of Fundy, in that part of it, are practically the same as the open ocean, and it would appear to me that when the government were providing a new life-boat for that station, they should have provided one better adapted to the rough weather and rough water which it would be likely to meet. It occurred to me, and I think I mentioned it to Captain Thompson, that the best sort of life-boat for that locality would be something in the nature of a small schooner with a motor, something like the fishermen use, one that would stand a heavy sea and would carry a much larger number of persons than this small boat is calculated to do. If there were an accident in the winter to one of the large passenger steamers carrying immigrants, this little boat would be of very little service. I should imagine that when loaded she would not have more than 6 or 8 inches of free board at the lowest part. That a boat of a different kind would be more suitable is not only my opinion, but that of others who live in that vicinity and who know the character of the storms that are likely to occur there in the winter time.

Mr. BRODEUR. This boat is put there only temporarily. In view of the representations made to the department, as we had no other boat available at the time, it was thought advisable to send this boat there in the meantime. The department fully appreciates the interest which my hon. friend takes in the matter, and we are now designing plans for a bigger boat and one better adapted to the requirements of the station.

Mr. DANIEL. Does the minister know how much free board this boat has when she is loaded?

Mr. BRODEUR. 6 or 7 inches. She was tried by Commander Thompson, and she carried 22 men.

Lighthouse and coast service—amount required to pay pensions, $1,050.

Mr. BRODEUR. There are several pilots in the Quebec district to whom we are obliged to pay pensions. These pilots have particular privileges which had been granted to them by the Canadian parliament, and in order to get these privileges reduced, an agreement was made with them, one of the conditions of which was that the government would pay them a pension of $300 a year each. Five pilots were put on the pension list last year, and this is to provide for the payment of their pensions. The Quebec Corporation of Pilots was incorporated, I think, before confederation.

Compassionate allowance to Mrs. Elizabeth L. Kerr, wife of the late James Kerr, in his life time engineer at the Parry Sound depot, who was killed November 25, 1909, by an explosion of the gas generator, $4,100.

Mr. DANIEL. Is that the usual amount?

Mr. BRODEUR. No; it is paid because of an accident. By the negligence of one of the employees of the department, an explosion of gas occurred at Parry Sound and this man was killed. His wife was the head of a large family, and she asked the department for compensation, and after a great deal of negotiation it was decided to offer her this amount, subject to ratification by parliament.

Amount required to pay the services of Mr. M. Barret for lifting buoys at Amherstburg during the season of 1910-11, $400.

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. Barrett has been looking after the lifting of our buoys at Amherstburg. The services he rendered are certainly worth the amount we are paying him. We could not pay him out of the general vote because he is already in the employ of the government, and according to the Act has to be paid by a special vote.

Amount required to compensate Mr. Thomas Harling for his report on the facilities afforded by the principal ports in the far east for the handling of steamers and their cargoes, $500.

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. Harling is one of the important shippers of Montreal. He has given a great deal of attention to all questions connected with navigation.

Mr. DANIEL. Is he in the employ of the government?

Mr. BRODEUR. No; last year he made a trip around the world. Before he left, I gave him instructions to make a report on the different ports he would visit.

Mr. DANIEL. Is the report published?

Mr. BRODEUR. No; we have just received it. It is a very valuable report, containing lots of information hon. members will appreciate and it will be laid on the table and printed.

For the encouragement of better transportation and the conservation of fresh fish—further amount required, $20,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This amount is for the purpose of paying a part of the cost of the transportation of fresh fish from the maritime provinces to the interior of our country. Some years ago fish caught in the maritime provinces were shipped to the United States, and the fish consumed in Quebec and Ontario came from Gloucester and Boston. I thought that by paying a certain part of the transportation charges to Montreal, we would likely succeed in diverting that trade from the United States markets to our own. The arrangement we made with the railway companies is this: We get a car which is leaving Mulgrave and Halifax once a week, and we agree to guarantee the freight charges. We also made an arrangement with the express companies at St. John and Halifax by which we pay one-third of the express charges.

Mr. DANIEL. Are those refrigerated cars?

Mr. BRODEUR. It was in order to induce the express and railway companies to carry the fish on ice that we made this arrangement and the result has been absolutely satisfactory. In 1906 we imported from the United States into Montreal 2,000,000 pounds, and that importation has been reduced to 800,000 pounds, although the consumption of fish has increased very largely. Instead of importing from the United States, we now get our fish from the maritime provinces. Our cod, haddock, halibut and salmon come almost entirely from the maritime provinces into Montreal and the west. This policy has produced very good results, and I am asking for $20,000 for the purpose of paying the indebtedness incurred as the result of these arrangements.

Mr. JAMESON. There is a rumour in the press that we are about to lose the Minister of Marine and Fisheries from our midst, and that he is likely to be translated from the somewhat troubled waters of the Marine and Fisheries Department and the Department of Naval Affairs into the more serene atmosphere of the Supreme Court. I do not know what ground there may be for that rumour, but in case it should prove well founded, there are a few remarks I wish to make with regard to the fisheries generally which I would like to make in the presence of the minister himself because he has in the past taken very great interest in the work of his department.

He has referred to the assistance his department has given towards bringing fresh and smoke cured fish from the maritime provinces to Ontario and Quebec, and further west. I think that the assistance given meets with the commendation of every one who understands the situation. Before that aid was given there can be no doubt that Boston, Portland and Gloucester were practically supplying the upper Canadian market with fresh fish and light cured fish, and as the hon. minister has pointed out the importation into Canada from the United States has, since the inauguration of this policy, dropped from 2,000,000 to something like 800,000 pounds. That, of course, does not indicate in any way the growth of the trade in fish between the maritime provinces and upper Canada. The trade is growing and has developed wonderfully in the last two years. And I believe it is capable of still greater expansion, and that as the west develops and the people become more accustomed to the use of fish, the most profitable market we can find will be the Upper Canadian market. The hon. minister will know that what contributed to bringing about this satisfactory condition was the raising of the duty from one-half cent per pound to one cent per pound upon fish coming from the United States into Canada. This enabled our maritime province people to secure the trade of these provinces.

The minister may remember that last year I drew his attention to the matter of better fishery intelligence. The department last year asked for a vote of $500 for the purposes of that branch of the department's work, but this year I see the minister is going to ask $10,000. I think the increased vote is amply justified, and I hope the minister will go a little further than is indicated by the way in which the vote is framed; I hope he will not only give better intelligence with regard to the movements of fish, but will also couple with that a plan of notifying all the fishermen as far as possible of weather probabilities. Take the province of Nova Scotia —and I dare say the same conditions exist in New Brunswick—and you will find that the sea coast is very largely connected by telephone. Thus, the weather forecasts, telegraphed in the morning to Nova Scotia can be telephoned to almost every fishing station, or, at least, to a great number of them. In the case of the county of Digby which I may cite as an illustration, every morning the weather forecast is telephoned down to Digby Neck to the station on Briar island, at the extreme end of the Neck. All along that Neck are a large number of fishing villages, each one with its telephone connection. So, there will be no difficulty, and but very little expense, in the department taking off the weather intelligence every morning at the different stations and posting a bulletin. The same may be said of the mainland opposite. The information may, in many cases, deter men from going out and will thus enable them to escape a storm which would not be indicated by the appearance of the day at their ordinary time of sailing.

I see that the minister is going to have some instructions given to the fishermen in the way of leaflets issued from time to time dealing with different matters connected with the fisheries. And I understood that Mr. J. J. Cowie was to be appointed for that purpose. I do not know that I am correct in that or not, but that is the information that has come to me. Whether Mr. Cowie would be a suitable man for the position is a matter which may be open to some question. I believe he has been connected for some years with one branch of the fisheries, giving instructions with regard to curing. So far as I have been able to gather from the report he makes, the result has been, not quite encouraging. Whether that is due to the fact that Mr. Cowie, is, a native of the old country, and not familiar with our ways as a Canadian would be, or to other circumstances, I cannot say. But there is one thing sure and that is that in the report which Mr. Cowie made to the department a year ago referring to beam trawling, he expressed himself as in favour of beam trawling, or said that it had come to stay. I think the fishermen of the maritime provinces pretty generally are opposed to that, and I do not know that the position taken by him would strengthen his influence. I think perhaps it would not, and therefore that a more suitable man might be found for this proposed service.

The question of increased bounties is another one that I raised last year. The hon. minister knows that the payment of fishing bounties began under the Macdonald government in 1882. Last year it was paid on a basis of $1 per ton on vessels up to 80 tons, and the men received $7.50 each, while boats received $1 each and $4.25 per man. The payment of the bounty to the vessel, which is a substantial sum, has brought about a change with regard to the quality of the vessels which are used. The vessels used to-day are of a much better class than those used when bounties were first paid. But the payment of $1 to a boat is a very trivial matter. A change has come about within the last few years with regard to these fishing boats. Many of them are equipped with a gasoline engine. The man who has not a gasoline engine is at a great disadvantage as compared with his neighbour who has. The modern boat supplied with power is much more expensive than the old style of sailboat. The former cost from $25 to $150, while the modern boat costs from $150 to $500, and the cost of operation, of course, is quite an item. I am told that the yearly cost of running the ordinary power boat used in fishing is from $50 to $100 according to the number of days during which they fish. I do not notice that this year the minister has made provision in the estimates to increase the bounty to boat fishermen. But I think it would be well if some additional bounty could be paid. I know that in many instances it would be of great assistance to them. They think also that there is a discrepancy between what is paid to the vessel fishermen, and what is paid to them. I do not think vessel fishermen should be paid less, but I think that the boat fishermen should be placed upon the same basis, and an allowance made upon consideration of the more expensive boats the men are now obliged to use. Some people think that these power boats are used as a matter of luxury for the fisherman, but it is not so. The fishing to-day is carried on further offshore than it used to be ten or fifteen years ago, and the power-boat is almost a necessity. Also, there is more fresh fishing done than formerly—that is, fish are sold fresh, and the power-boat enables the fisherman to reach the market, so that he can dispose of his fish either on the same day or within a day or two of their being taken.

Another subject of importance is lobster hatching. I believe that lobster hatcheries have been of great benefit, if we can judge by the evidence taken by Commissioner Wakeham in 1909. I notice from the report of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that there are eight of these hatcheries in operation, two in Nova Scotia, two in New Brunswick, two in Prince Edward Island and two in Quebec. The last year the number of young lobsters hatched and planted was 558,000,000. The amount which the minister is asking in his main estimates this year for fish breeding is $322,000 and in all 34 hatcheries are in operation in Canada. None of these hatcheries are in the Bay of Fundy, a most important sheet of water from a fishing standpoint. There are some 5,500 fishermen engaged there from counties bordering on the bay, and the lobster fishery there is very important. I trust the minister will be able to establish one or two hatcheries on the bay. The evidence before the committee last session, and the year before was to the effect that hatcheries had been beneficial, and we know it is necessary to do something to keep up the lobster fishery, because without some assistance in that way every one is obliged to admit that the fishery cannot be sustained as a profitable business.

In the evidence taken by Commander Wakeham in 1909 reference was made to the operation by American fishermen of smacks to purchase lobsters, and take lobsters outside the three-mile limit. At page 352 of the minister's report I see reference to this. The report reads:

> The 'Curlew' was employed for the whole of the season in the Bay of Fundy. In August brought the captain of the 'Pride of the Port' United States fishing vessel before Inspector Robertson for having live lobsters on board in close season. Matter referred to the department. The departmental instructions regarding the case was the means of stopping several Canadian and American fishermen who were preparing to fish outside the 3-mile limit.

I do not know what steps were taken with regard to that, but it seems to me it would be a serious thing if lobster fishing were to be permitted to be carried on by the United States fishermen outside the three-mile limit during the close season. Lobsters are taken 5, 6 or 8 miles from the shore. For instance, at the lower end of Digby county, and near the county of Yarmouth, they fish on what is called the Trinity, 7 or 8 miles off the coast, and as the large lobsters are found out in the deep water, if the fishing of lobsters is carried on outside the three-mile limit in the close season by Americans, it will be a great disadvantage to our own fishermen. I presume it would not be possible for a Canadian to fish for lobsters outside the three-mile limit during the close season, but I would like to know whether or not it is possible for American fishermen to prosecute the lobster fishery outside the three-mile limit along our coasts during our close season. This would be a great hardship to our fishermen, it would tend to deplete the fishery, and I would like the minister to give some information in regard to it.

At page 354 of the report there is another reference to this:

It was also found that a number of men living on the Turkish islands were carrying on this illegal fishing and then selling the fish to the American smacks which stay outside the three-mile limit.

That is all that is said with regard to that particular feature, and so I do not know from the report whether or not any action was taken in that case.

I have here several resolutions from the Fishermens' Union of Nova Scotia which I understand have been transmitted to the department.

The first is with regard to appointing a committee of officials to meet the fishermen at the General Council of Fishermen's Union which is held in Halifax each year, at which delegates from the different stations discuss matters relating to the fisheries in their districts and take concerted action. The delegates thought it would be a great advantage to have officials of the department meet the delegates face to face and discuss matters which could not be so satisfactorily dealt with by correspondence with the department, some hundreds of miles away from the maritime provinces, which seems to be very remote from the fishermen. This would be appreciated by the fishermen and would establish a community of interests which would tend to improve the conditions and benefit both the fishermen and the fisheries.

Another resolution refers to the weight of a legal quintal of dried fish. The present law requires that the quintal shall contain 112 pounds and they ask that this should be changed to 100 pounds. I am informed that in some counties the standard quintal is 100 pounds, and that some dealers when arranging shipments for certain foreign countries repack them and make the quintals 100 pounds each. Possibly the minister or the department would be informed as to that. If a uniform standard could be secured, it would be a benefit to the fishermen, and would be a means of giving them a proper return for their fish. That would not give the advantage of the extra 12 pounds to the dealer who purchases and then repacks the fish.

There is another resolution with regard to the size of number one, sea-packed herring. They want a legal size fixed. The size which they suggest for sea-packed herring is 11 inches and upwards, measured from the nose to the fork of the tail. That is the way the resolution is worded. I shall be very glad to furnish copies of these resolutions to the department, although I understand that they already have them. The Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Mr. Desbarats, wrote to the grand secretary of the Fishermen's Union on April 6, 1910, acknowledging receipt of some of these resolutions to which I have alluded, and he stated that the question of the inspection of food fishes was under consideration. I trust that whatever action the department decides to take in the matter will be taken in view of the facts which the department have before them and in the interest of the fisheries.

Another resolution to which I wish to refer, and it is a very important one, because it deals with one of the essentials of the fishing business, namely, the question of bait. The fishermen want a legal measure for the buying and selling of bait fish, such as herring, squid, &c. As matters are at present they say there is no legal measure and that it is bought and sold by weight. As, of course, fishermen do not carry weighing machines in their boats, they think that they would get better satisfaction if they bought by measure instead of weight. The department, in dealing with this matter, stated that bait was largely sold by weight, which would seem to be the most satisfactory method to be adopted all round, both for the purchaser and seller, although they said the department was looking into the question. That letter was written on April 6, 1910, and so far as I understand from the latest information I have had, the department had not communicated further in regard to the matter. These matters, of course, may seem trifling to members of the committee, but I am sure that the minister himself, from his intimate knowledge of the complexities of the fishing business, gained by some years in the department, will understand that it means a great deal to the fishermen themselves, and that it is only by working out matters of detail to a satisfactory conclusion that the fishery can be prosecuted to the best advantage and with the greatest profit in them.

Another request which the fishermen made was contained in a lengthy resolution which I need not read, but the gist of which was that they asked that gasoline engines, used in their boats, be placed on the free list. That resolution was communicated, I see, from the copy of the letter which has been handed, to the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), and on March 31, 1910, the minister wrote to Mr. Bernard Cummings, grand secretary of the Fishermen's Union of Nova Scotia:

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 28th inst., containing certain resolutions passed by the convention of Fishermen's Union in Halifax, which will have all due consideration.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) W. S. FIELDING.

This is another very important matter to the fishermen. As I have said, they are very largely using these engines in their boats, and every person who can possibly afford to do so is adopting them. A number consider that the most satisfactory engine can be purchased from the American large number of these engines manufactured large number of these engine manufactured in Canada, and many fishermen use Canadian engines, but a great many prefer the American engine, and as the duty is very heavy they are anxious to be relieved of the burden.

Another subject to which I want to refer is with reference to the matter of reporting of fishing vessels at the custom house Under the system which has existed for some years it has been necessary for the fishermen, in order to comply with the law, to report at the customs house when their vessels come into port. That at times causes a great deal of loss of time. A great many vessels, more to-day than five years ago, and more next year than this year, are and will be engaged in the fresh fishing business. A vessel that is engaged in the fresh fish trade arrives at port perhaps at night and the men throw out the fish. There is always some person to take the fish. If a vessel arrives at night the fish are perhaps thrown out immediately, and the vessel may in a few hours be ready to sail again for the fishing grounds. But the regulation which requires that a vessel shall report at the customs house will entail hours of delay if the vessel arrives at night, because she will probably have to wait until the customs house opens next day. I must say that in some cases the customs house officers have been very obliging and some have been on hand night or day to take their reports. But the expediting of the movements of the vessels engaged in the fresh fish business is very important, and consequently the fishermen would like very much to be relieved of the necessity of reporting, and it was for that purpose that I introduced a Bill last session. It aimed at the issuing of licenses, operating on the same principle as the licenses which are issued by the United States to American fishing vessels. These licenses are issued to American fishing vessels annually, and for a year it is not, as I am informed, necessary for such vessels to report at the United States customs house. The same privilege would be very much appreciated by the Canadian fishermen, although there may be some difficulty with regard to it in respect to the question of the fishing bounty. It may be necessary that they should from time to time report at the customs house in order that a record may be made of the trips which they are making, and so that the department may be in a position to keep in touch with them in connection with the fishing bounty license. But, at all events, after this matter had been brought up by me last year, a memorandum was sent by the Commissioner of Customs which relaxed this regulation and made it possible for the fishermen to report less frequently without incurring any penalty. I will read the regulation:

> Canadian registered vessels, owned and fitted out of Canada, of ten tons and upwards up to eighty tons, holding a fishing bounty license and engaging in deep sea fishing, are required to report outwards and obtain clearance of the customs house at the beginning of the fishing season each year.
> The masters of such fishing vessels on subsequently returning to a Canadian port should report to a Canadian customs officer at least once a month, so that the customs officer may make a notation accordingly on the back of the fishing bounty license and sign same.
> Fishing vessels, after touching at a port outside of Canada, and also 'bankers' are required to report at a customs house on arrival at a Canadian port from sea.
> The master of every fishing vessel is required to make a full report inwards to the customs officer at the Canadian home port on returning from the fisheries for the season.

I do not know whether that memorandum from the Department of Customs is founded on a regulation framed under an order in council, but I presume it would be perfectly safe for the fishermen to act upon it. I understand it has been sent to Customs outposts and stations but I have no doubt there are a very large number of fishermen—in fact I am sure that up to very recently at least there were—who were not informed as to do it. In view of the fact that this relaxation has been made I think it would be well that a copy should be furnished to the skipper of each of the Canadian fishing vessels which are taking out bounty licenses, the names of which can be found in the report of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. It would be a good thing for them to know the regulations, to understand them fully, and to have a copy of them under their hand in order that they may live up to them. I am sure the relaxation will be appreciated and that it will very much facilitate the movement of vessels. At the same time I do think that the system I suggested in the first place, and of which this is the result as arranged by the department, might be the better one. I think the system of yearly license would be perfectly safe in the case of the Canadian fishermen. I made special inquiry in the United States with regard to the difficulty which might arise as respects the customs entries. I asked whether there were any frauds against the treasury of the United States by reason of the operation of their fishing vessels under license without having to report to the custom house, and the commissioner at Washington stated in reply that no complaints had been received in that respect, and he did not think that any frauds were committed on the customs or that any loss to the treasury resulted from smuggling by the fishing vessels. I am sure that Canadian fishermen are equally honourable and upright, and can be trusted equally with the American fishermen. However, there may be some difficulty with respect to the Canadian fishermen on account of the fishing bounty license, so that this relaxation may possibly work out all right. I should like the minister to have copies of this regulation forwarded to our Canadian fishing vessels in order that they may be informed as to it.

I have referred to the matter of providing instruction for our fishermen, and I may point out that there is at present in Scotland and Ireland a system of instruction. In Ireland the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction provides, for instance, practical demonstrations in the working of motors in fishing boats and also in the mending of nets. In Scotland they go even further and representative fishermen from important centres attend lectures and practical demonstrations which are given at some selected centre. There are also fishermen's libraries at many of the fishing stations. The establishment of fishermen's libraries and such practical instruction as I have referred to, as also with regard to the improvement of the pack and package, would be very beneficial in Canada. I think this could be worked out with very good results, and I trust the minister will be able to see his way clear to make some provision in that direction. Our fishermen are a very intelligent class and many of them are well educated. They sometimes have a good deal of leisure on their hands and would, I am sure, make excellent use of opportunities afforded them by the establishment of libraries. Information of that character would tend to develop in the fishermen a better spirit towards assisting the department in the working out of measures calculated to advance the interests of our fisheries.

Mr. SINCLAIR. As to the question of providing instruction for our fishermen I notice that there is a vote in the estimates to inaugurate work in that line, and as it marks the first start in that direction I must compliment the minister on his action. At the same time it is important that no false step should be made. I would not favour the idea of a lecturer starting out along the coast to deliver lectures to the fishermen, because I think some better and more practical method could be adopted to begin with. Bulletins might be sent out as to the market, various information of interest to the fishermen might be given and experiments might be made to ascertain whether we have been successful or not in our attempts at the propagation of lobsters. My hon. friend (Mr. Jameson), has drawn attention to the fact that many millions of lobsters spawn has been placed in the waters of Canada during the past year, and so far as I am aware none of the officers of the department know whether this spawn has lived or not. Experiments would be useful to show whether our efforts have been successful in that direction and whether the propagation of lobsters results in increased production for the market. I do not know how that could be done, but I think it is quite possible that when the spawn is put in the water experts might continue their examination as to whether it has lived through the season or not. I would especially draw the attention of the minister to the fact that we have in Nova Scotia a technical school, the principal of which is I am aware most anxious to do something for our fishing industry. It occurs to me that the minister might work through that school and that an agreement could be arrived at by which the technical college of Nova Scotia would be in charge of what instruction would be given to the fishermen along the coast, and also in working out such suggestions as my hon. friend has made as to the motor boats and nets. These are things that might well be dealt with by that technical college. I do not know now in what way assistance could be given but I think some such arrangement would be practical and would work out well. The royal commission dealing with technical education will report shortly, and it is hoped by a good many members of this House that not only in Nova Scotia but in other parts of Canada something will be done by this government to aid technical education, and that a certain portion of the expense of running technical colleges in the provinces of Canada will be borne by the federal government. That is of course a larger question, but in the meantime if any instruction is attempted in the direction indicated I believe it could better be done through the technical college than in any other way.

Mr. BRODEUR. The item under discussion is for the encouragement of better transportation and the conservation of fresh fish, and I am glad to find that it meets with the approval of my hon. friend from Digby (Mr. Jameson). He has referred to the information which we are going to collect in regard to the fisheries. We have instructed one of our officers, who is a very capable officer to look after this phase of the work. My hon. friend has referred to many other questions, but I do not know that it would be advisable for me to attempt to discuss them all at this moment. He stated that there was nothing in the estimates providing for an increased expenditure for bounties. That is true, because the amount expended in the way of bounties is expended in accordance with a statute passed many years ago, and a specific change in that statute would be necessary before we could put any amount in the estimates for that purpose. With regard to lobster hatcheries, I may say that we are taking steps to increase the number. We have not done so in the last two years, because the question of lobster hatcheries was being investigated by the Committee of Marine and Fisheries, which has made some recommendations on the subject. Immediately after their report was brought down, the department set to work to establish some hatcheries and also to provide for the establishment of lobster ponds. Then, we have introduced a resolution, upon which a Bill may be founded, providing for the sale of live lobsters during the close season. To-day nobody is permitted to sell lobsters in the close season, even if they have been caught in the open season. It was thought, however, in view of the extensive market which might be obtained in the United States, that any lobsters caught in the open season might be put in ponds and sold in the close season. Anything that the department can do to encourage this live lobster trade we will certainly do. We think this change will benefit the lobster fishermen, and it is expected that when the Bill is introduced, it will meet with the general approval of the members of this House.

Mr. JAMESON. Will the ponds be specially constructed for the purpose by the government?

Mr. BRODEUR. Not by the government, by private individuals. We will license them, and some of our officers will look after them in order to see that they are legally carried on. My hon. friend has also referred to the fishing for lobsters outside of the three-mile limit by American vessels, also to the fact that these vessels obtain shelter within the three-mile limit. This question of fishing for lobsters outside of the three-mile limit is, as my hon. friend knows, beyond our control. It might, however, be made the subject of negotiation or agreement between the countries interested. By virtue of the treaty of 1818, American fishermen have the right to come into our seaports for shelter, amongst other purposes. It is true that our own fishermen could not, during the close season, fish for lobsters outside of the three-mile limit, and then sell their catch within the three-mile limit or on Canadian territory. That would be contrary to the law. They will not be allowed under our regulations to sell or be in possession of lobsters within the three-mile limit or in Canadian territory. However, the matter to which my hon. friend has referred is engaging the most serious attention of the government, and it may be that some representations will be made through the ordinary channels to the American authorities on the subject.

Mr. JAMESON. Do I understand the minister to say that it would be permitted to Canadian vessels to clear for the fishing grounds, and prosecute lobster fishing in the close season, sell the catch in the United States, and then return to Canadian ports and clear again for the lobster fishing grounds?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not for my part see any serious objection to Canadian fishermen fishing outside the three-mile limit, provided they do not sell their catch in Canada. It may be contrary to the spirit of our regulations, but I do not see how it can be prevented. It is a matter over which we have no absolute control. My hon. friend referred to the Bill introduced last year concerning fishing vessels reporting and taking out licenses. All fishing vessels are obliged to take out licenses, and they are licensed if they have the fishing bounty. I am not aware that any fishing vessels do not take advantage of the bounty, as in all cases they have to take out a license.

Mr. JAMESON. Does the minister distinguish between the license necessary for a vessel to qualify for the bounty and the license required for the purpose of giving permission to American vessels to enter and leave a harbour without reporting to the customs?

Mr. BRODEUR. The licenses which our vessels have to take under the fishing bounty Act are almost equivalent to the license the American vessels have to take. What my hon. friend wants is that these fishing vessels should not be obliged to report to the customs at any time they come into port. My hon. friend has quoted some regulations or instructions to the customs authorities on the matter, and I remember that it was brought to the attention of the department last year. I think that the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Pickup) brought it especially to my attention, and my hon. friend also drew my attention to it; and as a result of those representations it was decided by the customs authorities to relax the regulations in that respect, and I am informed that the relaxation of those regulations has proved of great benefit to the fishermen.

My hon. friend has referred to the resolutions passed by the Fishermen's Union and specially to the fact that the department could be represented at the meetings of those unions. I do not see any objection to that. I would have been glad in the past to have had the opportunity of attending those meetings; and as the resolution read by my hon. friend may be considered as a sort of standing invitation, I think that the department, after considering the situation, will conclude to accept it, and be represented at those meetings in order to confer with the fishermen on matters of interest to both.

My hon. friend also mentioned the question of inspection which falls mostly under the control of the Department of Trade and Commerce. It might, however, be well that this question of inspection should be taken up by our department, and that we should take necessary steps to have a more rigid inspection made of the fish sold. That, I think, would prove to the benefit of the trade.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I notice that this item provides an amount of $20,000 for the purpose of assisting in the transportation west of fish from the maritime provinces while at the same time we are asked to pass a reciprocity treaty which has for its object the transportation of the same fish entirely to the United States. How does the hon. minister reconcile the two items? The object of the reciprocity agreement is to send our fish to the United States, and if that arrangement accomplishes its object, our fish will go there, yet at the same time he is incurring this expenditure in order to have our fish brought to our western provinces.

Mr. BRODEUR. No doubt reciprocity will increase the quantity of fish exported to the United States but at the same time the local market, in consequence of what we have done for the encouragement of the shipment of our fresh fish from the maritime provinces, will continue to increase.

To provide for the amount required to compensate Fishery Overseer Wm. Robichaud, of Inkerman, Gloucester county, for destruction of his property by fire, $2,400.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not hesitate to ask the committee to vote this sum. The facts are these. This man Robichaud was informed that illegal fishing was being carried on in his district, and instructed to put a stop to it. He immediately seized some nets. He put those nets in his barn, and they were stolen. That did not discourage him. He started again on a second errand and again succeeded in seizing some nets which were being used illegally. These nets he again put into his barn, and on that same evening the barn was destroyed by fire. It was found by some tracks in the snow that the fire was certainly the work of an incendiary. Some two or three men were arrested after investigation and committed for trial, but when the case came before the grand jury they were acquitted. Twelve of the jurymen were in favour of their acquittal and eleven against. However, there was no doubt that the building was destroyed through revenge on account of the seizing of these nets. I think, therefore, that the department should come to the assistance of this man, and compensate him for the loss he sustained. This will show that the arm of parliament is behind our fishery officials, and be an incentive to them to carry out their duty faithfully and at the same time will act as a deterrent to parties violating the law.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The hon. minister seems to assume that the parties who were accused of having committed this crime were really guilty although acquitted by the grand jury. He says that eleven of the jury were for conviction and twelve against. I do not know how it is in Nova Scotia but in Ontario we do not have that many on a grand jury.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is the report I have.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The objection I take is this. If it had been proved that the barn was burnt by these men, there might be some reason for giving this vote, but when the case came before the grand jury—and we know that only the evidence against the accused comes before that jury—and when upon that one-sided evidence these men were discharged, we have a right to assume that they were not guilty, and that the fire was not the work of an incendiary. To take any other position would be to presume that there was a complete miscarriage of justice.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not attach a great deal of importance to the fact that these men were not convicted. But there is one fact very clear that these buildings were destroyed because this man had fulfilled his duty. It was the work of an incendiary. The judge who instructed the jury charged very strongly against these men. I say it does not make any difference whether the real culprits were or were not before the court. We must presume that these men were innocent, they having been acquitted by the grand jury. But if we read the evidence as I have read it and learn the facts as I have learned them, it appears plain that the buildings were destroyed by a criminal hand. I think that under the circumstances it is the duty of parliament to compensate an officer for losses incurred in this way, as it will strengthen the hands of our officers in doing their duty.

Mr. PERLEY. Was there no insurance on the building?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, $1,500. The loss was $3.900. And we are asking for $2,400.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Was it a barn that was destroyed?

Mr. BRODEUR. A barn and residence.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The hon. minister says that the judge made some remarks about this case. But, as I understand, the case was dismissed by the grand jury and the case never reached the judge.

Mr. BRODEUR. But the hon. gentleman knows that before the matter is submitted to the grand jury the judge makes his address.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. But he has no evidence then.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, the evidence at the criminal investigation.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. But the judge does not make remarks as to a man's guilt or innocence, but simply says the charge is so and so, and that it is the duty of the grand jury to consider it. The grand jury hear only one side of the case before retiring. And after hearing only one side of the case the grand jury dismisses the case against these men. Now, we have to pay some respect to the law, and if we do so, we must presume these men were innocent, and, apparently no other person has been prosecuted. It does seem to me that for a loss, even a total loss, on a barn, $3,900 is a very large amount. The man had insured his place for $1,500, no doubt he had put on it all he could insure it for.

Mr. BRODEUR. There was a house as well as a barn and their contents. There was a crop in the barn which was worth a considerable sum. Of course, the claim will be investigated. As to the judge and the grand jury, the hon. member knows that the judge, in his presentment to the grand jury gives expression to views which may determine how each case should be considered, and his expression of views may be such as to indicate his opinion of the guilt of persons to be brought before him.

Mr. LENNOX. I cannot agree with the hon. minister. When a case goes before a grand jury, all the judge should do is to outline the nature of the offence—not anything about the evidence as to whether it is strong or otherwise—but simply point out that it is a certain class of case and indicate the law to be applied to it and what will be sufficient evidence to justify them in bringing in a true bill. I understand the minister to say that the judge commented on this case, and the minister's statement was that there was practically no doubt about the guilt of these parties. If the minister is correct in that, although the judge had no right to speak in that way, yet what is the result? In the face of the fact that the judge lays it down to the jury that there is strong evidence of guilt, the men are acquitted, and that, although only one side of the case has been heard. I do not see how, after a prosecution has been brought against men who were alleged to have been criminals and the grand jury declared that they were not criminals, we can come to the conclusion which the minister states that the barn must have been burned down by incendiaries. I do not want to go up against this man getting compensation if he ought to get it, but this seems to me to be opening a pretty wide door. I think there are cases much stronger than this, but I do not know that it is safe to argue the matter, because, as we go on, more and more items of loss seem to come to the recollection of the minister. It looks to me like an ordinary case in which the country would not be safe in taking the position of compensating the officer in the face of the verdict of the grand jury. The minister probably has the comments of the judge in his charge. If so, it would be interesting to read what the judge had to say.

Mr. BRODEUR. I will be glad to communicate it to the House. I do not know the exact words used, but they convey the impression that I have stated. The judge may have gone a little outside his duties in that respect, but the crime attracted a great deal of attention in the community, and that was probably the reason the judge took the opportunity of expressing his views as he did.

Mr. GOODEVE. I desire to call special attention to the last point made by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox). It seems to me that we establish a very dangerous precedent if, because a government employee has property destroyed by fire, and has not sufficient insurance, the government is held to the duty of compensating him for the loss. As I understand the minister his man carried $1,500 insurance, but is claiming a further amount of loss, and for that reason the government undertakes to pay him that difference between the insurance carried and the amount he claimed to be his loss. It is a large order for the government to undertake to recompense every employee in this way, and, therefore, it would be well before passing the item for the minister to secure further information for the House.

Mr. BARNARD. I would contrast the minister's very generous conduct in this matter with his conduct in the case of the Provincial Fishery Inspector, Mr. Babcock, who was engaged last summer in association with his own fisheries inspector on a commission to allot to the canners in the northern part of British Columbia the number of boats which they were to be allowed to fish in the Skeena river. Mr. Babcock had $50 deducted from his account for services, because he had worked five Sundays and included them in his account. A government tug was used in that work, and I would ask if the minister paid the wages of the crew and the supplies of coal, &c., used?

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend understands that we are not in a position to pay for Sunday work. The commission received no instructions from us to do work on Sundays, and if they did it, it was to suit their own convenience. My hon. friend is familiar with the Lord's Day Act, and all the officials of the government have to observe that law. The work could quite well have been done outside of Sundays, and it has always been the practice of the government not to allow payment to commissioners who worked on Sundays, and we could not pay Mr. Babcock an allowance which was not given to others.

Mr. BARNARD. If Mr. Babcock had not worked on Sundays, but had taken five days longer to do the work and had sent in his bill would the minister have paid him?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BARNARD. Did he pay his employees on his tug-boats for their work on Sundays?

Mr. BRODEUR. They are paid a monthly salary.

Mr. BARNARD. Does the minister think it fair to take advantage of the five days' work that these people have done on Sunday?

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend knows that we passed a law some years ago declaring that no man should work on Sunday, and if I presented to parliament an account for Sunday work I would undoubtedly be criticised by some members.

Mr. DANIEL. Is not the law that a man shall not be allowed to work seven days in the week?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is in some countries, in France, for instance; but our law is for the observance of the sabbath.

Mr. BARNARD. The government were careful in passing that Act not to take the onus of enforcing it, and my friend would find small sympathy in his province if he set up a defence of this kind.

Mr. BRODEUR. I should not be ruled by feelings which exist in my province or in any particular province. This is the law of Canada, and I have to observe it.

Mr. BARNARD. The matter is a very small one, but I think the action of the department is nothing less than actually contemptible.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. In connection with this the minister promised to give us further information. He said that he did not attach very much importance to the question of whether or not the parties who had been accused had been found guilty. I take the opposite view. I take the view that if there had been no trial, if nobody had been charged and nobody found not guilty there would have been a stronger case, but when you have laid a charge against some persons and are unable to support it and the charge was dismissed, it seems to lead to the conclusion that there was no incendiarism, and, therefore, you are in a weaker position than if there had not been a trial and dismissal. I would like to ask the minister if he has any affidavit from this man proving his actual loss?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, we have a statutory declaration.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Has the minister that declaration here?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, but there is a declaration before the department.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. As I understand it, when a man insures his property he insures it usually from two-thirds to three-quarters of its full value, and very often insures it up to its full value if he can. This man would have to make an affidavit to the insurance company stating the value of the property and giving a list of the articles burned. I think I could point to cases in my own riding where fishery inspectors suffered loss by having their boats stolen as a result of the animosity of some person that they were prosecuting under the law. They would have a stronger right than there is in this case because there had been no trial to prove that the persons who were suspected were not guilty. If we establish a precedent of this kind there is no end to the claims that the minister will have to pay, and for this reason I ask that the item stand over until we get further evidence of the loss.

Mr. BRODEUR. I will be very glad to bring down all the information.

Mr. LENNOX. It is after twelve o'clock now, it is as late as we usually sit, and there is certain information which we ought to have in reference to this matter. I would suggest that the committee rise. Does the minister understand that the insurance money was paid?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed that $1,200 has been paid.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The minister said $1,500.

Mr. LENNOX. He mentioned $1,500 before, so that it is either $1,200 or $1,500. I think it is a usual provision of the insurance policy that if a fire results from an incendiary cause we do not get insurance.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think so.

Mr. LENNOX. Well, at all events if it is found on examination that you have reason to dread incendiarism and you insure your buildings you cannot recover. This is established as a matter of law. I am inclined to think that there are some companies that do not insure against loss resulting from incendiary causes; I am not positive as to that. However, I think this is one of those cases which requires a great deal of investigation. The minister said some time ago that before payment was made he would ascertain definitely as to the extent of the loss. The time we ought to ascertain definitely is before we vote the money. That would be giving the committee a certain amount of control that it ought to have. Therefore, I would suggest that the committee rise now.

Mr. BRODEUR. I will be very glad to bring before the House all the evidence that we have in the department as to the claim.

Mr. GOODEVE. I understood the minister to say a moment ago that the insurance amounted to $1,500. He now says that the insurance company only paid $1,200. That is very remarkable in view of the statement of the minister that this man suffered a loss of $3,900, and I think, therefore, that it would be well to look into the matter.

Mr. BRODEUR. The insurance was on the barn and the house, but this fire occurred in the fall at a time when the crop, the cattle and the horses were in the barn. The amount which we asked the committee to vote will be to compensate this man not only for the loss of the barn, but also of the contents.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. If it was insured for $1,500 and the property was worth $3,900, why did the insurance company not pay him $1,500 instead of cutting him down to $1,200? It looks as if they came to the conclusion that the loss was not as great as $1,500, and they, therefore, cut him down to $1,200.

Mr. BRODEUR. The contents of the barn would be worth very much more than the barn itself, the crop being in it.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. My point is that if the property destroyed by fire was worth $3,900 and that same property was insured for $1,500, why did the company only pay $1,200?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know exactly the reason it was done, but there may be some reason for it. The insurance was only on the barn and the house, not on the contents. The crop was not insured, and there was absolutely nothing to compensate him as far as the insurance was concerned in case the crop was destroyed. The crop, the cattle and the horses were destroyed by fire; these were not insured, and that may explain the payment by the insurance company.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. That would make the contents worth $2,700.

Mr. BRODEUR. That may be. The contents of the barn after the crop is all in would be worth very much more than the barn itself.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Does the minister know whether the man was a regular farmer or merely a fishery inspector residing on the shore?

Mr. BRODEUR. He was a farmer at the same time.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I think we should have all these papers down.

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 12.17 a.m. Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, March 27, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AMENDMENTS.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 155) to amend the Canada Shipping Act. He said: The House will remember that a couple of years ago we passed legislation providing that all vessels, including government vessels, or His Majesty's vessels, should be registered in Canada; by His Majesty's vessels I mean ships belonging to the Canadian government. We took power to include all those ships. We were following in that respect, the rule that had been introduced in England a year or two before; it was found, however, that in England they do not include vessels belonging to the navy. We decided then to amend our legislation, and to bring it into the same shape as the imperial legislation. Therefore, power is sought by this Act to make it unnecessary for the vessels of the naval service, with the exception of those engaged in the hydro-graphic surveys and the fisheries protection service, to be registered.

We are also seeking an amendment concerning sick mariners. As the House is aware, sick mariners' dues have been administered under an Act passed many years ago, which has not been amended very frequently. Heretofore we have often paid the cost of the transportation of sick mariners, and have also contributed to their funeral expenses. We are not certain, however, that we have the power to do this under the Act; and I intend to propose an amendment making it clear that those expenses shall be paid out of sick mariners' fund. We provide also that the collectors of customs who are charged with the duty of collecting sick mariners' dues, shall be obliged to report more frequently than they are required to do by the existing legislation.

An important change is made concerning pilotage in the St. Lawrence. It has been found that owing to the numerous and important improvements which have been made in the St. Lawrence channel the rates for insurance have decreased considerably during the past years. We have taken all necessary steps to improve the aids to navigation. We have done something also with reference to pilotage. We have taken under the control of the department the pilotage jurisdiction which has been exercised by the Quebec Harbour Commissioners, and by the Montreal Harbour Commissioners. I may add, par parenthese, that since these changes have been made we have been in receipt of communications from the shipping interests lauding the work that has been performed by the department in this respect. It is found, however, that another improvement is necessary, and I am proposing by this Bill that pilotage in the St. Lawrence should be made compulsory. Heretofore there has been no rule requiring vessels to take pilots, but they have been simply obliged to pay pilotage dues; in other words, pilotage is not compulsory but the payment of pilotage dues is compulsory. Now, the shipping interests of the St. Lawrence are strongly in favour of the idea that not only should the payment of pilotage dues be compulsory, but that pilotage should also be compulsory.

This feature of the proposed legislation regarding pilotage in the St. Lawrence is the result of conferences which have taken place between the department and various shipping interests. There were represented at those conferences the Dominion Marine Association of Ontario which includes nearly all the companies navigating on the Great Lakes; there were represented also the shipping federation, the pilots, and some private companies. I may add that the provisions which are now being sought have been agreed to by these various interests. We are going to require that all vessels having a draught of 10 feet shall be obliged to take pilots in the St. Lawrence; if they do not take pilots, then they are required to be provided with masters and mates who have passed the necessary examinations to qualify them to run a vessel in the St. Lawrence channel. I may say, however, that with regard to sea-going vessels, it is provided that in all cases they shall be required to take a pilot. As regards vessels engaged in the coasting trade, I mean those which to-day are not obliged to pay pilotage dues, most of them are taking on pilots. In the St. Lawrence for example all the colliers coming from Cape Breton to Montreal are not obliged by law to pay pilotage dues, but they, however, take pilots. It is now proposed that all the sea-going vessels shall be obliged to take pilots, while vessels engaged in the coasting trade will either have to take pilots, or to be provided with masters and first mates who have passed the necessary examinations to show that they are qualified to run a vessel in the St. Lawrence.

The object of this legislation will be apparent to the House. It is to provide and assure the safety of the St. Lawrence route by all possible means. I think that when it is known that all vessels must take pilots, that no vessel can enter the St. Lawrence channel without being provided with a pilot, or with masters and mates who are compulsorily qualified to run a vessel, we shall see at once a disappearance of the discrimination which exists to-day in favour of the United States ports against Canadian ports. It is also proposed to include the St. John pilotage authority, and the Minas Basin pilotage authority, amongst those which are to-day allowed, under existing legislation, to force all vessels engaged in the coasting trade to take pilots. We also make a change in the provisions with regard to investigations into wrecks. The law now requires that in some cases investigations must take place within one month; it is found that this period is too short and our intention is to ask parliament to give the longer period of one year.

We find also difficulty in the administration of the department owing to the prohibition by the legislation of the holding of the positions of inspector of boilers and inspector of hulls by one person. We find it advisable in some cases when men are qualified for both positions that they should be held by only one person.

By an Act passed several years ago the wreck commissioner was granted the right to cancel the certificate not only of a captain or mate on the inland or minor waters, but for sea-going vessels, and even certificates given by the Board of Trade in England. The English legislation provides that in case a certificate has been cancelled by a wreck commissioner there is an appeal to the House of Lords or the Privy Council, I forget which. The imperial authorities drew my attention to this when I was in England a couple of years ago and since that time a despatch has been sent asking us to restore the old clause with regard to sea-going certificates. I am embodying such a provision in this legislation.

A Bill was reported by the Marine and Fisheries Committee two years ago dispensing with the inspection of boilers and hulls the vessels which have been certificated by English or foreign authorities. The same legislation exists in England and we are now proposing that the Governor General in Council may dispense with the inspection of boilers and hulls in these cases. I refer to such foreign bodies as the Board of Trade and Lloyds in England and the Bureau Veritas.

Mr. FOSTER. To what foreign countries does that apply?

Mr. BRODEUR. No name is specifically mentioned in the Bill. It simply gives to the Governor General in Council the right to declare that a certificate issued by some foreign authority would be accepted in Canada. For instance, the certificates of the Bureau Veritas are accepted in England and I think it would be only fair for us to do the same in Canada.

We are asking for power to regulate the use of channels in the St. Lawrence. We have what we call the St. Lawrence channel which is being deepened for the use of sea-going ships, but that channel is used also by smaller vessels which may at any time seriously obstruct the channel and imperil the safety of the St. Lawrence route. We take power to regulate the channels in which vessels may ply.

We also ask power to remedy what I consider a very serious situation. Our shipping legislation since 1867 has been passed sometimes with the approval of His Majesty in Council in England and sometimes it has not been done in that way. By the legislation of 1894 the Imperial authorities revised their statutes and passed a general shipping Act called the Imperial Shipping Act of 1894. By that legislation it is declared that the self-governing dominions may pass legislation provided that this legislation should be approved by His Majesty in Council and it may be contended that their legislation might affect the legislation passed in Canada prior to that. Thus we would be in a position that we had legislation on our statute-books which was considered absolutely illegal. However, the imperial authorities have found it advisable to legislate on the same matter, and it may be that our legislation may conflict in words, if not in principle, with the imperial legislation. I thought of putting a clause in this Bill for the purpose of avoiding any difficulty with regard to the legality of our legislation and of course that power which is sought will have to be submitted to His Majesty in Council as provided by the Imperial Act.

There are some minor amendments which are not of very great importance. I have given the most important features of the legislation now proposed.

Mr. LEWIS. Does the legislation in reference to sick seamen refer to mercantile seamen or only naval seamen?

Mr. BRODEUR. To mercantile seamen, the sick mariners' dues in the Shipping Act apply only to mercantile seamen.

Mr. LEWIS. Inland as well as foreign vessels?

Mr. BRODEUR. Inland and foreign.

Mr. LEWIS. In reference to the pilotage on the St. Lawrence, will those holding certificates on the inland waters who now trade from the upper lakes down below Quebec be entitled to receive certificates as pilots?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes. The Dominion Marine Association which was present at those conferences, agreed to the provision in the Bill now introduced that masters and mates of those vessels could pass under section 484 of the Merchants Shipping Act and get their certificates as pilots.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 137) for the relief of Maggie Florence Sadler.—Mr. Reid (Grenville).

UNITED STATES WARSHIPS ON THE GREAT LAKES.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask whether the attention of the government has been directed to the plans for naval manœuvres by United States war vessels on the Great Lakes. I have here a description of these plans found in the public press of the United States:

CHICAGO'S NAVAL STATION IS READY.

Plans for Big Manœuvres at Lake Bluff in June include Bombardment.

Called Best in the World.

Secretary Von L. Meyer Expects Thousands of Recruits at $3,000,000 Base.

Plans for the dedication of the new naval training station at Lake Bluff, Ill., three and one-half miles from North Chicago, have been completed by the War Department. The new station is to be opened between June 1 and June 10 with a celebration of naval manœuvres on the lake.

Nine war vessels, smaller craft of the navy, now being used at various places for the training of the naval militia, are to assemble in Lake Michigan off the Chicago coast for the manœuvres. They will participate in a celebration that will last during the greater part of the summer.

The new station, which has been constructed at a cost of approximately $3,000,000 will accommodate 2,000 men. Work on it was begun two years ago.

Bombardment Part of the Celebration.

The bombardment of Chicago by a hostile fleet will be part of the celebration. The fleet is to be composed of the nine regular vessels used by the naval militia for training purposes. These will be reinforced for the occasion by a cruiser from the regular navy.

Some morning in August the citizens of Chicago will see a fleet in battle formation manœuvring off the coast of North Chicago. A moment later and the battle of Chicago will be begun.

Whether the city will be stormed and taken and the forces on land forced to abandon their fortifications and retire is a matter that will be decided according to the rules governing military war games.

Plans for Manœuvres Complete.

Arrangements for the carrying out of the bombardment here have been virtually completed by the War Department.

What follows is the part to which I would like especially to draw the attention of the government:

It will be necessary to obtain permission from Canada before one of the armed vessels of the regular navy can be sent through the Great Lakes, but this matter, it is said, already has been discussed by the two governments.

The new naval training station which is fortified will be the objective point for the fleet to capture.

The fortifications have been pronounced perfect by the secretary of the navy, George Von L. Meyer, who inspected it last October, when he made a special trip to Chicago for that purpose.

Calls it Best in the World.

'This will be the finest naval training station in the world,' said the secretary.

'We expect the Chicago station to bring us thousands of recruits from the middle west and to prove one of the best investments the navy ever has made.'

The Chicago station represents an outlay of $3,250,000. Work was started in the fall of 1906. The formal opening of the new educational school was set for October 1. Several months ago it was evident that the work had not progressed far enough to permit this.

I would like to ask whether it is true that permission has been asked, as stated in this report, and whether it be correct that the convention of 1817 provides that on Lake Ontario each nation shall be entitled to keep one vessel, of 100 tons burden, armed with one 18-pound cannon, and on the upper lakes, two vessels, not exceeding like burden, and armed with like force, and on Lake Champlain, one such vessel armed with like force; and that all other armed vessels on these lakes shall be forthwith dismantled and no other vessels shall be built or armed on these lakes.

If we are to have the naval manœuvres described in the article I have read, we ought to have information from the government with regard to the course which it has taken in the matter, or proposes to take.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend has correctly stated the tenor of the convention of 1817. That convention, as is well known, limits the armed war vessels to be maintained on the Great Lakes to one on Lake Ontario and to one on the Upper Lakes. The United States obtained permission to pass through our canals some training ships, the condition being, I think, that they should not be armed. Whether or not the manœuvres mentioned come within the treaty or not is a question as to which I would not be prepared to offer any answer at the moment. The matter is engaging our attention and if necessary representations will be made to Washington.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The particular question to which I desired an answer was whether or not the passage of one of the regular cruisers of the United States through the Great Lakes for the purposes of these manœuvres has been discussed between the two governments.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The United States, if I remember rightly, made application to be allowed to pass a cruiser. My impression is that this application was not entertained. Another application has been made to take one of the training ships down and substitute another.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to call the attention of the right hon. the Prime Minister to the fact that an order on this matter which passed the House a year and a half ago, and which I have since asked for over and over again, has not yet been brought down. I do not think an order of the House should be treated in that way. I would like to know whether we may expect it down in a short time.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is true that an order of the House was passed long ago which my hon. friend mentions, but when we came to sift the order we found that it involved so much of what was secret matter, such as secret despatches, that it was most difficult to discriminate and bring down what really we would be justified in making public. It was my intention, I will say candidly to my hon. friend, to show to His Excellency the Governor General, confidentially the whole correspondence, and until then none of it can be brought down.

Mr. FOSTER. Do I understand that none of it can be brought down?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. None at present.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like also to ask whether the right hon. gentleman has not the additional information we require with regard to the secretariat.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think this is on my desk. I will look into it tomorrow.

UNITED STATES IMMIGRATION AGENT.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to call special attention to a cutting from the papers this morning. It has reference to a lady who was crossing from Canada to the United States to visit her relatives and was held up at Black Rock by an American agent. According to the statements made in the newspapers she was subjected to all kinds of questions which were not only impertinent but went much further and which were of a nature that I would not care to characterize by any adjective at this moment. Now we have over and over again brought to the attention of this House incidents of this kind in which bona fide Canadian passengers and travellers have been subjected to questions of this character and other annoyances at the border. On every occasion the government promised that the matter should be looked into, but I have never heard whether any results came from that inquiry or not. I shall send this clipping over to the right hon. gentleman and, I think he will agree with me that if the allegations in it are well founded, either Mr. Bryce or somebody else ought to see that the agent at fault is properly dealt with.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is quite true that, several times, offences of this kind—for they are really offences—have been brought to our attention; and we had, if I remember well, a sharp correspondence about the matter. I have not heard that since then anything of the kind had been repeated; but if there has been any recurrence, it is quite proper for us to make due representations at once.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. MEIGHEN. In the absence of the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Campbell) and at his request, I wish to direct the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to an order of the House calling for papers, documents and correspondence relating to a fishing lease granted to one Markey, and the assignment of it. This order was passed many months ago, and was spoken of on two occasions subsequently by the hon. member for Dauphin in my hearing. I believe the delay was accounted for by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) on the ground that there had been difficulty in procuring the return. Finally, the return—or what is alleged to be a return to this order—has been brought down. I am informed by the hon. member for Dauphin that it contains only a copy of the original lease, not, as he contends and as seems quite clear, fulfilling the order of the House. It would also appear strange that so long a time should be required for the clerks in the Department of Marine and Fisheries to copy one lease. The hon. member for Dauphin has asked me to bring this matter to the attention of the minister, and ask that the full order of the House be fully complied with.

Mr. BRODEUR. Some time ago an order of the House was passed for the lease and the correspondence and other documents relating to it. When the matter was again called attention to, I made inquiry about it and learned that the papers connected with the lease had been brought down. I showed the hon. member for Dauphin, the other day, a copy of the lease as it was amongst the papers brought down in 1909. But, even previous to that, the correspondence was laid on the table. Since that time, the matter has been transferred to the Department of Justice for adjudication, and the only correspondence not yet brought down is that between my department and the Department of Justice. If the hon. member wishes, that can be brought down also.

Mr. BURRELL. I desire to ask the Prime Minister when the House may expect the report of the proceedings of the large delegation of fruit-growers who waited on the government on February 10 last? That is about six weeks ago, and it appears only reasonable that we should have the report very shortly.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That must be in the hands of the printer. I will look into it.

LA BANQUE INTERNATIONALE DU CANADA.

House in committee on Bill (No. 123) to incorporate La Banque du Canada.—Mr. Bickerdike.

Mr. FIELDING. This Bill was considered in committee, but held for further consideration on account of the title. I think there were good reasons against the adoption of the title, so I asked that the Bill should be held over in the hope that the promoter would come to an understanding and agree to a title which would be free from objection. I am glad to say that the effect of the delay has been to reach what I trust will be a satisfactory arrangement. With the consent of the promoters, I move that instead of La Banque du Canada the title be La Banque Internationale du Canada.

Amendment agreed to, and read the third time and passed.

ONTARIO AND MINNESOTA POWER COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 109) respecting the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company, Limited.—Mr. Conmee.

On section 1,

Mr. BOYCE. There is a very important question to be considered in connection with this Bill, and the history of it, and the past legislation, both in the Dominion and Ontario legislature, might well be thought of before a step further is taken. This company was incorporated by letters patent of the province of Ontario, and when they first came to this parliament in 1905 they obtained an Act, chapter 139, the effect of which was to give, so far as this government could give, consent to the user of certain powers at or tributary to the town of Fort Frances. In 1906 the same company went to the Ontario legislature and by petition obtained, chapter 132, the preamble, of which reads in part:

Whereas chapter 139 of the statutes of Canada of 1905 was passed on the petition of the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company, Limited, and whereas certain provisions thereof as to the supply of power in Canada from the water-power on the Rainy river at or near the town of Fort Frances, are in the interest of the province of Ontario; and whereas notwithstanding the provisions in the said statute contained, it is contended that the company are not bound thereby, but are entitled to deal with the said water-power freed from the restrictions in respect thereof imposed by the said Act, &c.

There is no doubt that under this legislation, and under it alone, the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company entered into an agreement with the town of Fort Frances which agreement was confirmed and ratified by the Ontario Act, and that contractual relations have been created thereby between this company and the Ontario government, which contractual relations this legislation will interfere with. It is not altogether a matter of conflict of jurisdiction between the province and the Dominion, but if there were such conflict it was cleared up some years ago by my hon. friend (Mr. Conmee) who declared most expressly along the line which I have just mentioned. But it is a question of interference with contractual relations between the province and the company incorporated by that province, and with respect to the exercise of powers which are at any rate to some extent within the jurisdiction of the province. I say this section ought not to be passed, and that the whole question has been settled by legislation of past years in the Ontario legislature which had jurisdiction to deal with it and which assumed that jurisdiction and which the company submitted to by entering into a contract with the province. I submit it would make confusion of jurisdiction worse confounded to pass this legislation.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). What is the contract entered into with the Ontario government and in what respect does this interfere with it?

Mr. BOYCE. That contract was regulating and providing for the supply of power on the Canadian side, and providing that it should be available concurrently with that available on the American side.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. We had this matter very thoroughly discussed in the Private Bills Committee. My hon. friend (Mr. Conmee) who introduces this Bill, when he was a member of the Ontario legislature, had no doubt whatever that the matters covered by the Bill were entirely within the jurisdiction of the province. In 1904 this company entered into a contract with the provincial government which is fully set out in an agreement. Subsequently the company came to the Ontario government in 1905 and obtained what has been termed by the hon. member (Mr. Conmee) a surreptitious and clandestine agreement. The Whitney government which succeeded the Ross government, which entered into that arrangement, endeavoured so far as it could to rectify some evils of that agreement by the passage of chapter 132 of the Statutes of Ontario. It must not be lost sight of that the town of Fort Frances, believing that the Ontario government could administer its affairs with respect to the development of electricity more advantageously than they could themselves, conveyed certain lands to the province in order that the province might act as their trustee. I claim that the present government of Ontario has fully conserved all the interests of the town of Fort Frances, as it repealed the obnoxious provisions of the agreement of 1905, and by obtaining from the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company a further agreement which fully protects all the rights of the municipality. I have been unable to get any supporter of the present Bill to point out to me any provision lacking in the agreement between the province of Ontario and the company for the protection of the rights of Fort Frances. The agreement entered into on June 10 last between the power company and the provincial government is a very stringent agreement. It contains provisions which are not provided for in the present Act, namely, that for default of provisions of the agreement the company shall forfeit $50,000, and for every day they remain in default they shall pay a penalty of $100. Then they are under contractual obligation that the government will have the right to cut the wires. We say that is a contractual obligation between the company and the province, and we claim it is a provision which may be enforced notwithstanding where the jurisdiction is, because the company entered into the contract with their eyes open, whereas under the provisions of the present Bill the most that could be done is for the railway commission to cut the wires. It is provided in the Ontario Act that if the company do not carry out the agreement, not only can we prevent them exporting any electricity, but we can enforce the penalties they have agreed to pay in case of default. There is no such provision in the present Act; and so far as power is given to the Board of Railway Commissioners to cut into that contract, just so far will the province of Ontario and the town of Fort Frances lose by that agreement. We must take either one position or the other; either this Bill will give the Railway Commission power to cut into that contract, and to that extent impair the benefit of it and interfere with private rights, or it will not have that effect and be of no use whatever. If any hon. member can show that that contract entered into in June, 1910, between the company and the government of the province of Ontario, and ratified this year by an Act of parliament, does not fully protect the town of Fort Frances, we are willing to make another amendment, but so far no hon. member has pointed that out.

Mr. FOSTER. How was the company incorporated?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. By letters patent of the province of Ontario, in the year 1903, I think; and in 1904 they entered into an agreement with the Ontario government, and all the negotiations were carried on with that government until 1905. Subsequently they came to this parliament to get the right to export electricity under the Act passed by this parliament in that year to regulate the exportation of electricity; and unless this Act can be declared retroactive it may not be operated against this company. But we claim that as the company entered into a contract with the Ontario government subsequent to the passage of that Act, they are bound by its provisions, and they must be presumed to have known the state of the law when they entered into that contract. The provisions of the Ontario Act are much more stringent and beneficial to the people of Fort Frances than the provisions of the Federal Act of 1905. The government of Ontario, acting as trustees for the people of Ontario, and Fort Frances, are carrying out that trust to the fullest advantage of the town of Fort Frances by the agreement of June 10, 1909.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Boyce) read a part of the preamble of chapter 132 of the Ontario Statutes. But I submit that it is now not in the power of the Ontario legislature to limit the operation of a Federal Act. They practically propose to veto federal legislation, as they declare that the company may go on, without regard to the obligations imposed by the federal Act of 1905. I am not going to discuss that question further, but I think it would be reasonable for hon. members to assume that the Ontario government overstepped its authority in making that declaration. Then my hon. friend referred to the agreement entered into in 1904. There was an agreement entered into on the 17th of February, 1904, with which the town of Fort Frances was satisfied. On the 1st of February last I put the preamble of that agreement on 'Hansard,' where hon. gentlemen can find it. It declares that the Ontario government are entering into the agreement at the request and for the benefit of the town of Fort Frances. My hon. friend claims that the Ontario government is acting in the capacity of a trustee. If so, they are the most curious trustees I have ever known. They act contrary to the urgent request of their principals. They were acting in part as a trustee, especially with respect to certain lands which are described in schedule A of the Act of 1906. The reason for that was that the company got a second agreement, without the knowledge of Fort Frances, on misrepresentations, this Act so declares. My hon. friend did not read all the preamble. It goes on to say:

And whereas the lands described in schedule 'A' hereto, form a part of the water front of the town of Fort Frances, and were hitherto vested in the corporation thereof, and were by them conveyed to the Crown in the interest of the province of Ontario.

I do not agree with that declaration. They are vested in the Crown as a trustee in the interest of the town, as it was thought that they might be safer in the hands of the provincial authorities than in the hands of the council. The preamble goes on:

To enable the Crown to deal therewith as the needs of the vicinity might require in assisting the establishment and operation of such industries at the said town of Fort Frances, requiring the use of power as would be for the public benefit, and whereas by a certain agreement dated the 9th day of January, 1905.

That is the agreement which I claim was got without the knowledge of Fort Frances—

Made between His Majesty of the first part and Edward Wellington Backus, of the City of Minneapolis, lumberman, and those associated with him of the second part, acting on behalf of a company then to be incorporated.

—the company was not then incorporated —the preamble further states:

The Crown representing the province of Ontario agreed in certain events and subject to certain conditions to convey the said lands to the said parties of the second part, but no provision was made for the protection of the interests of the said town of Fort Frances in respect of the purposes for which the said town conveyed the lands to the Crown; and whereas it is claimed the said agreement was entered into without the consent of the corporation of the town of Fort Frances and without any notice to them although the same interferes most seriously with the rights of the said town; and whereas the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company, Limited, have been incorporated and have taken over the rights of the said parties of the second part to the said agreement; and whereas it is desirable to make certain provisions as to some of the matters contained in the said chapter 139 of the Statutes of Canada of 1905, and to restore the said lands to the Crown to be dealt with as hereinafter provided, and to employ in this Act certain provisions already agreed upon relating to the development of industries at the town of Fort Francis aforesaid; and whereas the said company is desirous of securing an extension of the time fixed by said agreement for the full and final completion of the works therein referred to.

I want to read section 1 to show that that agreement, although referred to here, was wiped out by subsequent legislation, and the first enacting clause says:

Notwithstanding the provisions to the contrary, if any, contained in the said agreement, dated January 9, 1905, made between His Majesty of the first part and the said Wellington Edward Backus and his associates with him of the second part, the company shall through the water-power now or hereafter existing on the Rainy river at or near the town of Fort Frances, in the district of Rainy River, including any increase thereof from time to time provide power and electrical energy on the Canadian side of the international boundary line, concurrently, &c.

I want to point out that this annuls the Act, or rather the difference between the two agreements, which was that the first provided as a security to Canadian interests that any profits they could make out of the Canadian half of the power must be made by its utilization in Canada and elsewhere, whereas the second agreement provided that 4,000 horse-power was to be kept permanently available in Canada and that a portion of the balance or the whole of the balance might under order of the Lieutenant Governor in Council be exempt.

Mr. BOYCE. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee), contend that the company obtained their rights and powers from this government under the legislation of 1905, or from the provincial government under their charter and contract, and the legislation of 1906?

Mr. CONMEE. I contend that any legal powers that company had or any powers it could exercise were obtained by the Act of this parliament of 1905, but that was not the Act they asked for. The hon. gentleman says they asked for chapter 139, but they did not ask for anything of the kind. They ask for Bill 86 which I placed on 'Hansard' on the first of February last, and if any hon. gentleman will read and does not consider that an imposition on Canadian interests had it became law, I will be very much surprised.

Mr. BOYCE. Then the federal legislation of 1905 was not in the opinion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee), the giving of consent by this government to the utilization of power.

Mr. CONMEE. The legislation of 1905 was an enabling Act which enabled this company to construct its works on that navigable and international stream, and as a protection to Canadian interests in regard to the use and price of power and the means by which power could be used on the Canadian side, it placed them under the Board of Railway Commissioners. The only reason we are here to-day is because of the confusion or doubt that has arisen in connection with the language of the Act not being as specific as it should be and because of the legislation passed by the province. These are works extending into a foreign country upon an international river and surely hon. gentlemen will not seriously argue that the provincial government could control such works.

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. gentleman contends that this company derived its enabling power from the federal legislation of 1905?

Mr. CONMEE. I say that all the powers they have are under that Act.

Mr. BOYCE. And that it obtained those powers from this government, because according to his contention this was the only government that could give these powers on an international and navigable stream. Have I stated correctly the position of my hon. friend (Mr. Conmee)?

Mr. CONMEE. I see what the hon. gentleman is going to say and I have answered it three or four times in the House already. There was a time before I had legal advice, some 25 or 30 years ago, before I inquired into the question, that I had no doubts but that the Ontario government had power because I built the power canal at Sault Ste. Marie under a provincial charter, but that company had afterwards to come to the federal parliament to get legislation so that their works might be legalized and their plans approved.

Mr. BOYCE. I am glad my hon. friend (Mr. Conmee), goes back 30 years to excuse him for making a different contention from that which he has presented to the House now. But I may tell you, Mr. Chairman, that after this Bill was passed in 1905 and after it had served its purpose, and in order that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee), might bolster up another argument in this House, he propounded in this House on the 30th of June, 1906, an argument diametrically opposed to that which he has now presented in support of his present contention.

Mr. CONMEE. There is always time to get light you know.

Mr. BOYCE. There is, but let me refer to the speech which the hon. gentleman made in this House on the 30th of June, 1906, at page 6697 of the 'Hansard' of that year, and I shall read from the revised edition so that there may be no mistake about it. This is what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee), said in reply to a speech of mine:

Now it is a fact that the water-power at the Sault has been dealt with by the International Water-powers Commission, and I understand they agree that 50,000 horse-power might be utilized on either side of the river. Then it is a question for the Ontario government, now, as it has always been in the past, to decide whether they would grant an application from the town of Sault Ste. Marie, or any other corporation, to take a portion of that 50,000 horse-power. For my purpose, and for the purpose of this discussion, it does not matter whether 50,000 is the unit or not. Whatever power is available for the Canadian side is a question entirely within the jurisdiction, as I understand it, first of the Ontario government as regards the use of the bed of the river for that purpose, and second, of this government as regards the use of the water, because it is an international stream, and I assume they would have to get the consent of this government to that effect.

A propos of the question, to ask which I interrupted my hon. friend he said that this was the initial legislation and from this legislation in this House this company got its power. Let us see what he says further on. I interrupted my hon. friend at page 6698 and he said:

Then if there be a water-power on Whitefish island—he states now that it is not covered or needed by this railway company.

Mr. CONMEE. Certainly not, My statement goes further, this government could not give a water-power, they have no power to do so. They do not control the land which is covered by the water either below or above the rapids. All they can do is to give their consent, as they did last year at Fort Frances, to the utilization of the power.

An absolutely opposite contention to that which my hon. friend made this afternoon.

Mr. CONMEE. I do not think there is any inconsistency.

Mr. BOYCE. Then I commend it to the committee to see whether they can square one assertion with the other. But, Sir, this is not the only menace. My hon. friend now as then has very ingeniously brought in a Bill in order to add certain other rights which is now before the parliament of Canada. We had last year an important canal Bill of the hon. gentleman affecting very seriously the water-power at Fort Frances?

Mr. CONMEE. I had no canal Bill last year or at any other time. That Bill was the Bill of a Company just as this Bill is the Bill of the corporation of Fort Frances.

Mr. BOYCE. I hope my hon. friend did not think I was personal. I meant that he as a member of the House was promoting a Bill. That Bill was defeated in the House because it was thought to be altogether too large a canal scheme for this House or the Railway Committee to entertain in a private Bill and the chairman of the Conservation Commission expressed himself as very strongly against that Bill. What have we to-day? We have a Bill introduced in the Senate which so far as it affects the locality and the water at Fort Frances interferes with the rights of the people of Fort Frances and of the Minnesota and Ontario Power Company, exactly the same condition of things as on a larger scale was sought to be promoted and secured by the legislation of last year. Here is a Bill of the Senate, an Act to incorporate the Western Canal Company. At least two of the incorporators in that Bill were incorporators of the Bill last year for the larger scheme. The object of that Bill I would commend to the consideration of this committee. Sections 8 and 9 of that Bill provide:

8. The company may—

(a) construct, maintain and operate a ship canal and navigable connecting channels from a point five miles east of Fort Frances on Rainy lake, by way of the Rainy river, to a point five miles west of the foot of the Long Sault rapids on the said river;

(b) construct, maintain and operate all channels, locks, dams, diversions, works and connections necessary for the efficient operation of a ship canal and for the maintenance of a navigable channel between the said points;

(c) construct, maintain and operate all locks, dams, reservoirs, channels and works necessary in connection with the supply and regulation of water in the said canal and channels;

(d) construct, maintain and operate any passage over, under or through the said canal and channels, or over, under or through any river, watercourse, water or land, when necessary for the purposes of the undertaking;

(e) construct, maintain and operate, use or lease or otherwise dispose of, terminals, wharfs, and harbour works;

(f) create hydraulic and electrical power from or by water brought into or contained in any canal, dam, lock or channel, and use the same for lighting and operating the canals, locks, gates, channels, shops, and other works of the company; and also, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council as to rates and conditions, use, sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of any hydraulic, electrical or other kind of power developed by or made available by or in connection with the canal system of the company, when and to the extent the same may not be required for the purposes of navigation or for the works of the company;

(g) build or acquire, and use or dispose of, steamers, tugs, boats, barges and other vessels, for the purpose of the said canal; and propel vessels of all kinds in and through the said canal by any kind of power or force; and, for such purposes, construct, erect, maintain and operate such structures, machinery, and appliances as are necessary to produce or operate the said force or power;

(h) manufacture and produce any commodity for affording traffic on the said canal and channels.

9. The company may open, cut, excavate and erect such ponds and basins for the laying up and turning of vessels, boats or craft using the said canal as it deems expedient; and at such portions thereof as it deems expedient; and may also build and erect dry docks and slips and all necessary machinery connected therewith for the operation of such dry docks and slips, and for building and repairing vessels, and may lease or hire the same on such terms as it deems expedient, or may operate them by its servants or agents.

My hon. friend's Bill for a canal——

Mr. CONMEE. My hon. friend must pardon me, he has repeated a wrong that he committed a moment ago after I had corrected him. He has no right to say my Bill. I have no more interest in the Bill than he has. My name may be on it, but I do not know it, I have never seen nor read the Bill. It was introduced in the Senate, and if it comes here with my name on it, it is in my riding, and so far as I think it is in the public interest I will advocate it.

Mr. BOYCE. My hon. friend is not usually so sensitive. I speak of the Bill he is promoting.

Mr. CONMEE. My hon. friend has persistently on former occasions, I presume unwittingly, misrepresented me in that way, and I wish it put a stop to.

Mr. BOYCE. The Senate Bill to which I have referred provides for the construction of a canal which would utilize the water above and below this power at Fort Frances, a canal which, for navigation purposes, subject to the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission, could take, so far as the rights of the Ontario government are concerned, if not all the water-power belonging to that government, as much as they saw fit for the purposes of navigation which would be a paramount power to the powers contained in the resolution before my hon. friend to which he has referred. Therein lies the very kernel of the danger of this legislation. This parliament has power to pass laws with regard to navigation and the Senate Bill to which I have referred is subtly drawn as a Bill to promote navigation, but it interferes with and to a certain extent is mentioned in the very clause now under consideration and the effect of it would be, combined with this Bill, to destroy, or at any rate very injuriously affect the interest of the parties involved.

My hon. friend says that the agreement to which I referred in opening was obtained by misrepresentation. If it was obtained by misrepresentation why was it not set aside? Why was not this misrepresentation set forth? Why was not the misrepresentation set forth in the legislation which confirmed it, and why was legislation allowed to be passed confirming it after due notice of the introduction of a private Bill? The fact of the matter is that this legislation if allowed to pass will most seriously interfere with provincial rights.

Not only are the provincial rights which my hon. friend on the 30th June, 1906, clearly conceded to Ontario with regard to this very same legislation interfered with but the right of the province of Ontario to enforce its own contracts. The contract in question, my hon. friend admitted himself, came exclusively under the jurisdiction of the province, so that upon his own admission the power of the provincial government to legislate and control the bed of an international navigable stream is absolute, and it is only as regards the navigation of that stream that this government could interfere. In conclusion, therefore, I would ask the right hon. gentleman to consider carefully the facts, and see whether there is not in this legislation an interference with the rights of the province to make its own contracts and enforce them. Under the agreement made with the Ontario government the company is liable to a penalty of $50,000 for a breach of the agreement and $100 per day as long as that breach continues, but we have this government stepping in and passing this Bill and injecting drastic conditions into that agreement.

I trust, therefore, the right hon. gentleman will give this question his earnest consideration, and if he does he cannot but come to the conclusion that this is legislation which should not be incorporated.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Judging by the arguments of the hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) he is quite ready to take one position on one occasion and turn a complete somersault the next, according as the occasion demands, so that I have not much hope of convincing him. But he has said that the Act passed by the Ontario government in 1906, and which I have before me, had the effect of cancelling the clandestine agreement of 1905. Well, one would have thought that he would have desired this to come to pass because he claims that agreement of 1905 was not approved of by the town of Fort Frances, and was of a clandestine nature. That agreement of 1905 was entered into by the late Ross government, and not by a Conservative administration, and it was for the purpose of amending an obnoxious provision of that agreement that the Act of 1906 was passed by the Ontario government.

Mr. CONMEE. Does the hon. gentleman represent me as saying that that Act annulled the agreement. I did not say anything of the kind. I pointed out the difference between the two agreements and showed that under sections 1 and 2 of the Act of 1906 that difference was eliminated in the second agreement.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I took the hon. gentleman's words down, and they were that section 1 of the Act of 1906 passed by the Ontario legislature wiped out the agreement of 1905, and he went on to read the section to prove that, but he did not read far enough. The Act of 1905 expressly says that the late Ross government, in making the agreement of 1905, made no provision for the protection of the interests of the town of Fort Frances in respect of the purposes for which the said town conveyed the land to the Crown. In other words, this Act says that no provision was made by the late Ross government of Ontario in the agreement of 1905 to protect the interests of the town of Fort Frances.

Mr. CONMEE. I never did believe, and do not now, that the second agreement is worth the paper on which it is written because it was made in such a way that it could be set aside by the courts at any time.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. What then was my hon. friend's object in reading sections 1 and 2 complaining that the Act wiped the agreement out. The Act of 1905 passed by this House, as my hon. friend knows, was a compromise accepted by him after a full fight in the Senate. The parties got together and that Act, he said himself on the floor of this House, was a compromise which was entirely satisfactory to him, and which fully protected the interests of the town of Fort Frances. Then I ask my hon. friend if that was the case then and if since that date the Ontario government has pased an Act which further provides that this company, upon any default whatever, shall forfeit $50,000 and $100 per day while the default continues, and if they do not carry out the provisions of the agreement the sheriff of the county may enter their works and bring distress upon their property—if that was satisfactory to him, without those provisions, how can he say he is not satisfied with the present conditions?

Take the first section of the Act of 1905, he is trying to amend this paragraph:

> Provided further that if upon application of the town of Fort Frances or the municipality of McIrving made under this Act it shall appear that the company has heretofore constructed any works, or does hereafter construct any works, that are not in accordance with the plans approved of by the Governor in Council previous to the construction of such works, the company shall, upon notice so to do by the Governor in Council or by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, change or re-arrange any such works in such a manner as will give full effect to the plans approved and to any directions, order or ruling made in respect thereto.

Boiled down that means that if the company have not constructed their works according to the plans approved of by the Governor in Council, they may be ordered to remove or amend them.

My hon. friend knows as well as I do that the two public Acts which have been on the statute-books for years provide that if any company erects works in any navigable river—and it is only because he claims that these works may interefere with navigation that he can come to this House and ask for legislation at all—and these works are not built in accordance with plans approved by the Governor in Council, or if they interfere in any way with navigation, the government may order them to be removed entirely, and, if not removed by the company, the government themselves may remove them. What more ample provision can he want than this?

Mr. CONMEE. I do not want to destroy the works, but to improve them.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The hon. gentleman made the contention in the Private Bills Committee that the government could order the removal of these works. The greater includes the less; and all the government would need to do would be to order that the works be made in accordance with certain plans on pain of their removal. What the hon. gentleman asked in the committee was a mere quibble. Will he rise in his place now and tell me of one single power which he acquires under this section which is not under the law now in force in the province? It is not fair to change the standing of a private company that has sold its bonds upon the strength of certain legislation; it is not fair to bother these people and endanger their vested rights by passing legislation of this kind. If the hon. gentleman can show anything in the amendment which is not in the public Acts to which I have referred, I will agree to the amendment.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. No, not carried. Now, let me point out another thing——

Mr. CONMEE. There is no use in taking up time. This was all threshed out in the Private Bills Committee. The hon. gentleman knows the argument as well as I do.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. There was no argument, and that is the reason I am asking the hon. gentleman again. Now, another thing: Suppose that, under the powers conferred by this Act, the Railway Commissioners, on application of the company, permitted the exportation of power to the United States, and suppose that under the contract with the Ontario government that government did not think there was sufficient justification to allow them to export power to the United States. Then, the answer of the Minnesota Power Company to the Ontario government in endeavouring to enforce the penalty under the private contract would be: We have power from the Railway Commissioners of the Dominion authorizing us to export power, and we don't care a tinker's fiddle for your private contract. To that extent, I say, this legislation, if it is worth anything in interfering with and cutting in on a private contract which was entered into by the Ontario government, as trustees for the town of Fort Frances.

Mr. CONMEE. Behind their back.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. No, but I will take the hon. gentleman's reasoning again. Even supposing this agreement which the Ontario government have entered into with the Minnesota Power Company was entered into behind the back of the town of Fort Frances. Will the hon. gentleman point to a single omission which should have been made for the benefit of the people of Fort Frances?

Mr. BLAIN. I think that after the very lucid explanation of my hon. friend from West Algoma (Mr. Boyce), and that of my hon. friend from North Grey (Mr. Middlebro), surely the committee is entitled to a statement from the leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). This matter concerns not merely the promotor of the Bill, but it is a very important question that should receive careful consideration on the part of the Prime Minister and his government. This is not a new question; it was up in the House before, and was the subject of careful consideration in the Private Bills Committee. And I think that after the discussion of this afternoon, we are entitled to a statement from the right hon. gentleman.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no objection since I have been invited to do so, to give my opinion on this Bill. I must say that my knowledge of it is not so full as I would like, but I have endeavoured to follow the discussion that has taken place this afternoon, and I think I have correctly apprehended it. As I understand the argument of hon. members on the other side, the point is that this Bill interferes with the rights of the province of Ontario, this assertion being based upon the fact that this company was originally incorporated by, and derived its power from, the province of Ontario. But it is evident that the company did not think that the rights which are given it by the province were sufficient for the purposes for which the company was created, for it came to this parliament to obtain further powers. The object of the legislation passed here can best be understood from the preamble, and first section of the Act of 1905, being chapter 139 of the statutes of that year:

Whereas the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company, Limited, has by its petition represented that it was incorporated by letters patent under the great seal of the province of Ontario, dated the thirteenth day of January, one thousand nine hundred and five, under 'The Ontario Companies' Act,' being chapter 191 of the Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1897; and whereas the said company has prayed that it be enacted as hereinafter set forth, and it is expedient to grant the prayer of the said petition: Therefore, His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

1. The company may construct, develop, acquire, own, use and operate the water-power now or hereafter existing on the Rainy river at or near the town of Fort Frances, in the district of Rainy River, in the province of Ontario, and construct, develop, operate and maintain works, canals, raceways, watercourses, dams, piers, booms, dykes, sluices, conduits and buildings, in connection with the said power, including any increase of the said power on Rainy River by storage or other works on waters tributary to Rainy lake which the company now has or may hereafter have power to construct: Provided that no work authorized by this section shall be commenced until the plans thereof have first been submitted to and approved of by the Governor in Council.

The powers granted are very simple. They amount to this—that the company is authorized to construct certain works which it deems essential to the carrying out of its purposes in the Rainy river. The only proviso for the protection of the public is that no works of the kind are to be built and put in operation until the plans have been approved by the Governor in Council. That is the full explanation of the Bill. As I understand it, there can be no doubt whatever that this parliament had full jurisdiction to authorize such work, and to put in a provision how such work should be constructed. That seems to be entirely clear. Therefore I do not understand how the question of jurisdiction can now be raised, nor how it can be affirmed that there is in this legislation an invasion of provincial rights. It is simply to give to this company the power which they wanted to carry on its operations, and as I understand it, the company cannot now do so under the legislation of the province of Ontario, but has to come to this parliament. But this parliament at the time did put in a proviso, that these powers sought to be obtained from the parliament of Canada could not be exercised, the works could not be put in operation, until the plans had been approved by the Governor in Council. Now what is the object of this Bill? It is simply to supplement the exercise of the power granted by parliament then, so far as regards the approval of the plans. Let me read the first section of the Bill:

Section 1 of chapter 139 of the statutes of 1905 is amended by adding thereto the following:—'Provided further that if upon application of the town of Fort Frances or the municipality of McIrving made under this Act it shall appear that the company has heretofore constructed any works, or does hereafter construct any works, that are not in accordance with the plans approved by the Governor in Council previous to the construction of such works, the company shall, upon notice so to do by the Governor in Council or by the Board of Railway Commissioners of Canada, change or rearrange any such works in such manner as will give full effect to the plans approved and to any directions, order or ruling made in respect thereto.

This is a natural sequence of the power which was given to the company by the statute of 1905. That statute provides that the works which the company sought power to erect shall first receive the sanction and approval of the Department of Public Works; and this Bill now only provides that if any of such works having been first authorized by the Department of Public Works, are not constructed by the company, or have not been constructed in conformity with the order of the Department of Public Works, then in such case the Governor in Council, or the Railway Board, shall have power to interfere and require them to be constructed in conformity to the order of the Department of Public Works. I think I have properly analysed the whole legislation sought for. I do not see how it can be contended by my hon. friends opposite that there is here any invasion of the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario. I ask, is not this proper legislation? Is it not solely to confirm what we have already sought to convey to this company? No one objects that these works should be erected only after the plans have been approved by the Department of Public Works. That is quite proper, that is the statute of 1905. Now what does the Bill of 1911 provide? It provides that if any works ordered by the Department of Public Works, or approved by it, have not been executed, or are not executed hereafter in conformity with that order, then the Railway Board, or the Governor in Council may be called upon to compel the company to conform to such order. Again I repeat that this legislation, if I understand it correctly, is quite in order, and is also very proper legislation. If I had any doubt on this matter, it would be removed by the reflection that this matter has been threshed out by the Committee on Private Bills, and found to be satisfactory, found not to be an invasion of anybody's rights.

Mr. BOYCE. I have pointed out that this is private legislation, and this parliament has put it under the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario as regards the proper distribution of power. In that respect this company has entered into a contract with the province of Ontario, with which contract this Bill is unquestionably an interference. Would my right hon. friend express himself on that point?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have looked at the Bill, and at the statute before it. The contract which my hon. friend says exists betwen the company and the province of Ontario is something of which I know nothing at the present time. But I presume this contract was before the committee which passed upon it, and which came to the conclusion that this Bill does not interfere with the jurisdiction of Ontario.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Most of the Prime Minister's remarks are directed to the question as to whether this government has the right to remove or order the amendment of certain works which are not made in accordance with the plans. But the Prime Minister has entirely overlooked the point that this company is governed by an Act of the Dominion of Canada, chapter 115, section 4, which section says:

No bridge, boom or dam shall be constructed so as to interfere with navigation, unless said work has been approved by the Governor in Council, nor unless said bridge, boom or dam is built and maintained in accordance with the plans approved by the Governor in Council.

Then there is another section which says that if they are not so constructed they may be removed or destroyed. There is an amendment to be found somewhere which says that even when they are not built in accordance with the plans, and the plans are approved by the Governor in Council, still they may be entirely removed. So that all the provisions of this section are fully covered by a public Act.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know. There seems to be a difference, and perhaps it is not an unwise difference. The section of the Bill I have just read. I think the general law stated a moment ago by my hon. friend provides that if the works which have been approved by the Department of Public Works are not in accordance with the order of that department, such works may be destroyed or removed. This Bill provides that instead of taking this extreme measure the company may be called upon to conform to the order. It would be perhaps an extreme remedy to destroy the works of the company; it may be that the works are beneficial, and that the changes which have been made are of a limited nature, and under such circumstances it may be wiser that the attention of the company should be called to this point, and that they should be made to conform absolutely to the order. There may be some difference, but I do not think the difference is an unwise one.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I have already pointed out that the power to order the total removal of the obstruction includes the power to ask the company to amend. But suppose you ask them to amend, and they do not amend, and they do not follow the directions contained in this Bill, what then are you going to do? You must order them to remove. You cannot take a man by the throat and say: You have to amend your works; but you can say to him, if you do not amend, we will remove the obstruction. My right hon. friend will see that the public provision fully covers the case.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not dispute the point of my hon. friend. It is possible that the provision may not be necessary, but the committee came to the conclusion that it might be passed; and if it is merely an extra precaution, nobody can suffer from it.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I think we have come down to the conclusion that so far as this section is concerned, it is wholly unnecessary, and for that reason I would ask what object the hon. member for Rainy River has in view in introducing legislation that has no effect. When the matter first came to my attention, the hon. member contended that the word 'power' did not include hydraulic power, and if that was so I was willing to vote for the Bill; but when the company admitted in the committee, and put into an agreement the statement, that the word 'power' did include hydraulic power, that was the end of all argument on that point, and I could see no reason for passing this Bill.

Mr. CONMEE. I gave my hon. friend good reasons for this particular amendment. The water-power canal at the town of Sault Ste. Marie was built exactly as this one was built, on a provincial charter. But the company learned that they were trespassing, and they came here to get their plans approved, but they could not get them approved, because the works were already constructed, and they had to get an Act of parliament to relieve the situation. My hon. friend saw the plans, and he saw that the power-house was placed across the steamboat channel on the Canadian side, so that the power could not be used hydraulically on the Canadian side.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I do not know what my hon. friend is referring to; but when he introduced the Bill, he said that it was only to interpret and make clear the provisions of the Act of 1905, and now it appears that he wants to get further powers. My hon. friend must take some consistent position. I want to know why he is doing this. I have never seen or spoken to anybody connected with the Minnesota Power Company. I am acting only in the interests of the town of Fort Frances and the province of Ontario. The company has signed an agreement with the Ontario government stating that the word 'power' includes hydraulic power, and we have a telegram from the Ontario government to that effect, so that there is no dobut about it.

Mr. BOYCE. I do not think my right hon. friend the Prime Minister grasps fully the question involved. I know what his views are on the question of provincial rights. I might refer to what he laid down last session on a Bill introduced by the hon. member for Rainy River. I am not referring to the right of the province to deal with this matter; but I want to point out that this very same company has made a contract with the government of Ontario covering the application and carrying out its agreement with regard to the delivery of power, and there are penalties imposed by that contract to compel this company to comply with its provisions. Why should the company, after submitting to the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario, come and ask this parliament to override a solemn contract between themselves and the province of Ontario? I cannot conceive for one moment that my right hon. friend would give his assent to such legislation. It is not simply an interference with provincial rights: it is more than that: it is direct interference with the right of contract within the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario. Before the contract was made was the time for the company to come to this parliament.

Mr. CONMEE. What contract is the hon. member talking about?

Mr. BOYCE. They chose to go from this government to the government of the province of Ontario, and to recite in that legislature the difficulties under which they laboured with regard to jurisdiction, and subsequently to enter into a solemn agreement with the province of Ontario, which by the legislature of Ontario, at its last session, has been approved and confirmed. My right hon. friend disposes of the whole matter by saying that that legislation must have been before the Private Bills Committee. That legislation was confirmed at the session of the legislature of Ontario which has just closed, and it is not yet printed in any statute-book. But it has received the Royal assent. Therefore the contractual rights of the province of Ontario are being disturbed by this parliament.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think I can answer to the satisfaction of my hon. friend. The object of this Bill is simply to provide that the works which shall be erected by this company shall not be erected until they have been approved by the Department of Public Works. This is not a new provision; it is in conformity with our general legislation, for the protection of the public at large, that no navigable stream shall be interfered with until the plans have received the sanction of the Minister of Public Works. This Bill is simply a continuation of the powers conferred on the company by the statute of 1905. The only argument made against it by my hon. friend from North Grey (Mr. Middlebro) is that this legislation is absolutely unnecessary because there is already provision in the law that if the works which have been approved by the Minister of Public Works are not strictly carried on according to the regulations of the department, they can be removed or destroyed. Whether the legislation is necessary or not, the first condition is that the work shall conform to certain rules and regulations laid down by the Minister of Public Works in the public interest. My hon. friend says that if you compel the company to execute its works according to the rules of the Department of Public Works you may possibly subject it to the penalty of $50,000, which is stipulated in the agreement with the government of Ontario. Does the hon. gentleman pretend that the first condition of all is not that the regulations laid down by the Minister of Public Works must be observed? Certainly the rules of the Department of Public Works must be observed no matter what the consequence is; even though the penalty be $50,000 for infringement. Surely the hon. gentleman does not pretend that the rule of the Minister of Public Works is not to be observed because the company might render itself liable to a penalty. In this case the public interest must prevail, and the public interest is protected by the regulations of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. BOYCE. I agree with the right hon. gentleman that as regards interference with navigation the works have got to be under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Public Works, and if the works are not approved of by the minister they can be altered or destroyed in a summary manner. My point is that apart from the navigation question altogether, the province of Ontario has certain rights, riparian or otherwise, with regard to the use and flow of water. Having contracted with reference to these rights, obtained a locus standi as a government, and brought it under the jurisdiction of the provincial commission. I say this government should hesitate before it passes legislation which interferes with the provisions of a private contract between the company and the Ontario government, and which has nothing to do with the jurisdiction of this parliament at all.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Has the Prime Minister read the contract between the Ontario government and the company?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have not.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. It seems to me that a great many other hon. gentlemen are in the same position, and do not understand what the effect of their vote will be.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The question of the relevancy of this contract to the present legislation must have been considered by the Private Bills Committee, and without having read the contract I submit that if its stipulations come in conflict with the public interest which is protected by this legislation, then the provisions of the contract cannot prevail against the public interest. We must first provide that the work shall be done according to the regulations laid down by the Minister of Public Works, and if unfortunately the contract interferes with that, I am sorry for the contractor, but the public interest must prevail.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I am not complaining so much that this clause does not accomplish anything as that it cuts in on the private contract.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). In what respect?

Section agreed to.

On section 2,

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Let us see about this clause. It seems to me there is something which requires explanation here. I am not familiar with the legislation, but I am somewhat familiar with the question, and I would like to call attention to this clause:

The company shall as herein provided supply not less than one-half the total power capable of development by the said water.

That is a very wide margin. I could understand if it said all the power actually developed, but to say 'capable of being developed' is introducing a serious objection to the Bill because we do not know where that would land us.

Mr. CONMEE. That provision is contained in both the agreements referred to, and it is necessary for the reason that with the exception of a point at the Long Sault rapids where a limited amount of power can be developed, this point is the only place on the Rainy river where water-power can be developed on the water shed of the river. It would be inconsistent with the public interest or with the private interest of the citizens of Fort Frances to give this or any other company control of that water-power without compelling them to develop the total power capable of being developed. That does not impose any hardship on the company. They were obliged to do that under the early contracts, whether or not these contracts have force or effect now. To assist them in doing that the contract provides that they can make storage at Cedar Falls and at another point. They have that right to-day, and nobody has disputed it so far as I know. The main expenditure is for their water-power at Fort Frances, and this does not impose any hardship on them. They have the monopoly of the whole water shed of the Rainy river, and it would be contrary to public policy to give it to them unless they did ultimately develop it to the fullest extent. So far as I know the company has no objection to that provision. Nobody is hurrying them to do more than they have done. What Fort Frances is fighting for and asking for is what they have a right to in their agreement, and what are the natural rights of Fort Frances are what the Act of this parliament of 1905 gave them, the right to get prices and conditions for the use of power fixed in advance so that they can secure industries.

Mr. SMYTH (Algoma). To what agreement have you reference?

Mr. CONMEE. The agreement of 1904 and the agreement of 1905. I pay no attention to the agreement that has been made within the last few days, made for the very purpose of forestalling this legislation and assisting this company——

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. My hon. friend said that this agreement was made to forestall this legislation.

Mr. CONMEE. In my opinion, yes.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Does he know it was made in June, 1910?

Mr. CONMEE. Yes, I know all about it; more than you do.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. For the purpose of forestalling this Act now?

Mr. CONMEE. Yes.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. How did they know you were going to bring in this Act?

Mr. CONMEE. They were told by the mayor of Fort Frances that if they did not get relief they would ask it here. What is your contract? You made a contract, confirmed it by legislation and what does it amount to? To nothing more than we have had for the last two or three years. Section 4 of the existing law of this parliament provides that there may be an application for power in use or to be supplied for use these words mean power for any purpose, and yet we could never get prices under that, we were met at the Railway Board by the contention that as a municipality we could not apply for power except for municipal purposes. A ratepayer was picked out to issue an injunction and Fort Frances very naturally and prudently withdrew from being entangled in such a suit.

That section says that they shall provide power concurrently on each side of the line. That was understood by everybody, and I am sure by this parliament to mean one-half the power of the stream, to mean that if they provided 3,000 or 4,000, or 10,000 horse-power on the American side they should provide an equal amount on the Canadian side. Does my hon. friend dispute that?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. No.

Mr. CONMEE. Mr. Backus and Mr. Osler contended before the committee that they never disputed that point. What they did contend and sought to get ratified by this government, by the minister in charge of the Export Act, was that they had the right to one-half the Canadian power without any license for export. They did not persuade the minister to agree. Mr. Osler denied that they ever contended for that interpretation; what they did say was that the words concurrent has no reference to American power, it has reference to the Canadian power only, that you cannot legislate with regard to American power. But this development is international, the dam goes from side to side of the stream, there is no Canadian part and no American part; it is one development and they claimed they were entitled to take one-half of the Canadian portion over to the American side, leaving us with one-quarter of the total power developed. I hold here the proceedings before the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. MABEE.—Is all the plant, the power-house, the generators, the machinery, and so on, on the Canadian side of the International boundary?

Mr. GLYN OSLER.—All of that in connection with the seven thousand horse-power ready for use, that is all applicable for use in Ontario, under the word 'use' in section 5. I did not enter into the question of the construction of that Act in my opening remarks. I took the view that you expressed, Mr. Chairman, that we are entitled to export, so far as that Act is concerned, one-half of the power without an order. These questions were raised before the Minister of Inland Revenue and it was probably for that reason that instead of dealing with the matter in the first instance and giving us at least one-half the power, the Inland Revenue Department required us to come to your board in the first place. As we required in any event more than half the power it was necessary for us to come to your board so that it did not seem to me there was any use in occupying the time of your board in discussing the question of our rights; not under the present application at all events. I would refer you to this agreement of the 20th of November, 1906.

That is the argument I assume that they made before the Minister of Inland Revenue. Now they did contend, there is the evidence of it, that Canada was only entitled to one-quarter of the total power of the stream. I say that this legislation is necessary to remove any doubts upon that point. Surely there is no man in this House who would submit that such a trick as that can be played on Canadian interests? Parliament never intended it, it is contrary to natural rights and I am surprised that any gentleman in this House would advocate the cause of this company having such evidence as that before him.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would call attention to the wording of the section. Actual development seems to be a very vague term which would lead to confusion in the administration of the Act.

The water-power on the Rainy river was developed by this American company. They supplied the capital, but in order to develop the power they had to obtain the consent of the Canadian side of the river. They obtained it from the Ontario legislature, and the Act of that legislature was afterwards confirmed by legislation in this parliament. That is to say that company was authorized to build works across the Rainy river at Fort Frances for the purpose of developing electrical energy. What the town of Fort Frances claimed from the first was that one-half of all the energy which might be developed should be reserved for Canadian enterprises. It was alleged last spring, when the company applied for a license, that it had developed 7,000 horse-power, and it made application to the government to be allowed to export the total amount. The Canadian government would not grant that application and would not allow the company to export to the American side more than one-half of the 7,000 horse-power which had been developed. The company represented that they had no application on the Canadian side for the use of any of that power, and consequently should be allowed to export the whole of it. Our answer was that that made no difference, that they would be allowed to use on the American side only one-half of the power they had developed, and that the other half should remain idle unless they themselves employed it on the Canadian side. And to this day they have the license to export only 3,500 horse-power. We allow them to export one-half of the power they have actually developed.

Mr. CONMEE. We can amend it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, I think it should be amended in this way by providing that the company shall supply the Canadian side with not less than one-half of the total power actually developed.

Mr. CONMEE. I would not like those words, for the reason that they do not go far enough. I would suggest that the words 'are capable of developing' be struck out, and these words be inserted 'the total power.'

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). In the committee where this matter was fully discussed, it was suggested by the representative of the company that its obligation to the Canadian side should be limited by the demand for power, and that some words should be inserted providing 'if there be a demand,' or something to that effect. But the people of Fort Frances suspect that the company does not desire to furnish them with one-half the power developed; and an instance is given of an application having been made for power by a gentleman of his having been told that the company had none to dispose of. I think the opinion there is that if the company be not required to supply one-half the power to the Canadian side, they might avoid doing so because they control the whole situation. As there were other applicants for this privilege, at the time it was granted this company, I think the company should be held strictly to its agreement and conditions. If it is not required to develop all the available power, that will be detrimental to the development of industries on the Canadian side because no other company can come in. This company has the monopoly, and for that reason should be compelled to develop all the power available.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As I understand the question, a certain amount of power has been developed now, some 7,000 horse-power. The company made application to be allowed to export the whole amount to the town of International Falls on the American side. We would not consent to that, and they are only exporting one-half. In this we confirmed the original intention of the town of Fort Frances that one-half the energy should be reserved for its industries. The company replied it has no demand for this energy at Fort Frances. We said you can develop a demand yourselves by building mills on the Canadian side, and my information is that the company is actually putting up a pulp mill on our side which will consume one-half of the energy now idle.

Mr. TURRIFF. If you strip this question of its legal technicalities, you find that this company, organized by Mr. Backus, undertook that one-half of the total energy which might be developed on the river should be used in Canada. Through the intervention, however, of the Ontario government and this government, that company has been able so far to drive a coach and team through all the laws governing it, and with this result, that Mr. Backus has paid no attention whatever to them and is not endeavouring in any shape or form to build up the town on the Canadian side of the line. He is using 16,000 horse-power on the American side and then gets authority to export one-half of what has been developed on the Canadian side. He says now that he has no demand for any power on the Canadian side. But he never will have any demand so long as the government allows him to export that power. His company can balk any demand that comes from this side. It can put things in such a shape that no other company can come in and secure the power at a price which will enable it to carry on a manufacturing business on this side of the line. What I claim is that this government should put an end to that export of power from Fort Frances to the town of International Falls. By allowing this export, we are building up American institutions at the sacrifice of our own. Just so soon as we do prohibit the export, this company will be able to find a demand on the Canadian side or will build mills on this side, the right hon. the Prime Minister has suggested. But so long as we allow the company to export this power, they will use it on the American side of the line. That was not the intention in giving it this charter. If that intention had been expressed, the company would never have got any charter from us. We have allowed the company to drift away from the original intention, but it ought to be brought back, and this legislation is for the purpose of putting into the hands of our Canadian authorities, the right to decide whether this electrical energy shall be exported or not. The remarks of my hon. friend from Essex (Mr. Clarke) are very much to the point. The company should be made to develop all the power available, because nobody else can. The power developed there to-day can be more than trebled by a proper system of storage; but if we do not compel the company to develop it, it will not and will prevent anybody else from doing it.

This parliament, which alone has the power, ought to give control into the hands of our Railway Commission so that this company may be dealt with by a strong hand and not be allowed to go on year after year defying the whole of the Dominion, driving right through Acts of parliament, and taking that power which should be used to build up Canadian industries alone and using it to build up towns on the other side of the line.

Mr. SIFTON. I am not able to follow the discussion as well as I would like to, but, having had something to do with this particular matter, it occurs to me that I ought to say a word or two upon the subject while it is before the committee. Some time last spring, I think, it was, the town of Fort Frances invoked the assistance of the Commission of Conservation in regard to this matter. I sent a letter to the Minister of Inland Revenue to ascertain when the subject of a license was to be considered. It appeared that the matter had not been brought before the government in such a way as to enable the government to fully understand all the facts of the case and I asked the Minister of Inland Revenue to withhold his recommendation for a license under the Act providing for the licensing of the export of electrical power until I should have an opportunity of looking into it. He did so. I read all the papers in connection with the case and, at the request of the town of Fort Frances, made a thorough and careful investigation of the whole case, examining every document and Act of parliament from the beginning to the end. The result was that I came to the conclusion that the company had got ahead of everybody it had had anything to do with in connection with the matter—it had got round the Ontario government, it had got round the federal government, it had got round the Railway Commission; it had got round everybody. And, apparently, this was because nobody was paying particular attention to it and watching its proceedings. It was not especially a case of finding fault with those who had been led into doing what has been done; it was a case in which nobody was specially charged with looking after the interests of the town of Fort Frances, and watching the different steps taken. You can understand how a corporation with a large capital and first class counsel always attending to its business could easily get round a municipal corporation with people looking after their interests only in a spasmodic way and giving to it much less attention than it would require in order to be thoroughly attended to. The result was that it appeared that the company had got everything it wanted here except this license from the federal government under the Act respecting the export of electrical power. They had got authority from the Ontario government, they had got authority from the Board of Railway Commissioners, and they finally, at the last minute, found they had to get from the federal government this additional license under the Act to which I have referred, and that is where the occasion arose for a fresh discussion of the whole subject. We made our representations to the government on behalf of the town of Fort Frances strongly opposing the issue of any license. Representatives of the company came down here and went to the government and urged that the license should be issued. Apparently, the government told them that representations had been made by our commission and they had better see us. They asked a hearing, and the executive committee of the commission heard counsel for the company, and heard my hon. friend (Mr. Conmee) on behalf of the town of Fort Frances. The matter was discussed for a whole afternoon, and I think that when we got through we understood the case pretty well. My conclusion was that no change should be made in the attitude of the commission, as to the issue of this license; and, after going into the whole case from start to finish my conclusion is that the town of Fort Frances needs the support of this parliament. I understand that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) takes the position that the Act should be passed for the protection of the town and of the public interests, and I am very much gratified that he does. I am satisfied that my hon. friends on the other side, if they look into the matter fully, will see that this is a case in which the town of Fort Frances deserves and requires the protection of parliament.

Mr. BARKER. I think we are of one mind in desiring to protect Fort Frances if it needs it. But the only point that has been brought out with perfect clearness is that raised by the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Apparently, according to the argument, this company or Mr. Backus, whichever it is, has been sharp enough to get the better of the people of the town. But it seems to me that this Bill, as it has been passed in the Committee of Private Bills, goes to the other extreme, and deals with the matter in a way in which parliament ought not to deal with it. The Prime Minister has pointed out that where the town was to have fifty per cent of the developed power, the Bill proposes to give them fifty per cent of the total power capacity, an entirely different thing. It might mean that, for a whole season, the town would get all the power developed, because the amount actually delivered through accident or some other cause, may not exceed fifty per cent of the actual capacity. That I understood to be the objection raised by the Prime Minister, and I think it is perfectly good. The only trouble is that the Bill has been so drawn as to get back at the company by doing something about as outrageous as that which the company is said to have done to the town.

Mr. CONMEE. I assure the hon. member (Mr. Barker) that the Bill as it stands on the statute-book, chapter 139, does not contain any provision that could be construed to give the town any such advantage as he speaks of. The town does not seek to get any such advantage. I rise to speak because of the remarks of the Prime Minister, and I crave the privilege of reading to the House the report of what occurred in the Private Bills Committee. I have here the stenographer's notes extended of the remarks made by the different speakers in the committee on Thursday last. Mr. Backus was speaking, and he was claiming that Fort Frances had gained since he started his works, and I asked: 'Do you think you had anything to do with that?' and his answer was: 'Pretty nearly entirely.' He then went on to speak of the time when he was making application for authority to export power, and he proceeded:

> Sir Wilfrid Laurier said. 'What can you do for the town of Fort Frances? You are under no obligation to do it——'

I must say, I do not think the Prime Minister ever said that, because Mr. Backus had admitted before Sir Wilfrid Laurier that he had agreed to build a flour mill, and he admitted, in answer to Mr. Fielding, who pointed out that the time was about up, and he ought to be at it if he was going to fulfill his contract, that perhaps he was a little behind and was going to get at it right off. However, he has done nothing yet. He admitted that he did not have the power concurrently on either side of the boundary as provided by chapter 139, but had 15,000 horse-power on the American side, and but only 7,000 on our side. Fort Frances has always contended that the Canadian interests should have the full half of the power, that is half the power the full flow of the stream. What the town contends is that any interpretation which would give the company the right to the half of the Canadian portion would be monstrous.

This gentleman goes on to say, speaking of what Sir Wilfrid had said to him:

But can't you do something for the town of Fort Frances? I said, 'Sir Wilfrid, what would you like to have us do that we have not done? We have not completed our first development on the Minnesota side yet. We have not started a wheel running yet. Perhaps we can do something for them during this next year.' He said, 'By another year I would like if you could construct a mill of at least fifty tons per day.' I said, 'Yes.' Sir Wilfrid said, 'I won't ask you to make a contract. I will take your word for it.' He afterwards visited Fort Frances and asked if I was going to keep my promise. In the last week of December we finished construction on the Minnesota side, and we took the same construction crew to the Canadian side. We have put in concrete floors. We have bought the draft tubes and they have been shipped. We have purchased fifteen grinders to be installed on that side, and that will grind 125 tons of pulp a day. All that is being built now. If there is any doubt it—I think it is necessary for me to prove nearly everything by affidavits, and I have one here which I will read:

It is short, and I will read it:

This is dated March 4.

We, the undersigned, Warren Curtis, junior, manager of maintenance and construction; and William T. Tamm, superintendent of construction, each in the employ and in charge of the works of the Minnesota and Ontario Power Company, located at International Falls, Minnesota, and of the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company, Limited, located at Fort Frances, Ont., do hereby solemnly swear in relation to the proposed mill on the Canadian side that the following is true to their best knowledge and belief:—First, that the building for the pulp-mill and the wood preparing room of same is now under roof; second, that during the last week of December, 1910, we started on the work of building said pulp-mill and other improvements on the Canadian side; third, that said work has been continuous and the number of men employed is increasing; fourth, that the work already done consists of putting in concrete floors for grinders, and preparing flumes to receive water-wheels, and it is proposed to push this work as rapidly as possible to complete the pulp-mill. Contracts for considerable machinery have been placed, and the water-wheels and draft tubes are already partially in transit. With the opening of the spring season, the work outside can be pushed with very much greater rapidity. Witness our hands and seals this fourth day of March, 1911, at International Falls, Minnesota. Signed, Warren Curtis, junior; W. H. Tamm.

Now I want to leave it to hon. gentlemen if they did not understand by Mr. Backus' statement, and by these affidavits, that a new pulp mill and a new building was started in December, that the roof is on it, that the concrete floors are being put in to-day, that actually a pulp mill is under construction on the Canadian side at Fort Frances? That is what all this conveys, and there is no reality in it. It is misrepresentation. It is said that the truth half told is sometimes very deceptive. Now what are they doing at Fort Frances? There are a few words in this affidavit that I think it is no credit to him to have induced men in his employ to use, an one sentence is, 'the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company located at Fort Frances.' There is no such company at Fort Frances, never had an office there, never did any business on the Canadian side. It was the Minnesota and Ontario Power Company that built the dam, a company incorporated in the State of Maine, which has no offices in Canada, is not registered in Canada, never paid out a dollar for labour or anything else on the Canadian side of Fort Frances. Then I object to the word 'pulp mill.' Now in the Private Bills Committee on Friday last, when the plans were on the wall, and when Backus was asked to point out the pulp-mill and put his hand on the power-house, and some member of the committee said, where is the power-house. Is this it? So he had to admit before that committee that he had no new building, he had no pulp-mill. That is not a pulp-mill. Besides under his contract I was talking about he should have done this work long ago. Under the Act of 1905 he should have had at least 15,000 horse-power developed in this power-house; he should have had a roof on the power-house and the hydraulic wheels installed there more than a year ago, and he should have the concrete floors in as well. He has not done that yet. That is all he is doing now, nothing more. Then let me point out that a pulp-mill is a different institution from that altogether. You have to have the pulp, after it is ground, washed and screened. The pulp-wood grinders are large grinding stones and when the pulp is ground it contains a certain amount of sediment from the stone that has to be washed off the pulp. It has to be run through screens to take out the slivers, and through rollers, a large amount of machinery. There is none of this in the power-house, and there is no room for it. Now he is proposing to perpetrate upon the community of Fort Frances a still greater wrong than he has yet perpetrated. He proposes to grind wood into a solution in that power-house, and then pump it across to his American mills to make it into pulp and into paper. If he did not intend to do that, he would be busy getting up his pulp-mill and his paper mill. Now he says he is building because he made a promise to Sir Wilfrid. I say he is not building. What he is doing he was bound to do anyway. He is attempting to make a further use of his power-house. He will say to the town of Fort Frances, I am not going to build you a flour-mill nor an oatmeal mill, I am building you a pulp-mill. We are using the power in Ontario, what more do you want? Now what does that amount to? That is not a use of power in Ontario, that is a diversion of power. He has got his power-house in the centre of the stream, 400 or 500 feet from the shore. The steamboat channel into the canal is between his power-house and the shore. Why was that done? It is apparent now. It was so that no Canadian concern can get hydraulic power, and without hydraulic power they cannot make ground-wood pulp. How are they going to take it across to the Canadian side? Mr. Backus said they could take it by a shaft either under the canal or overhead; but any one who knows anything about mechanics or the transmission of power knows that that is pure and simple humbug.

Mr. KNOWLES. I have attended the Private Bills Committee as faithfully as I could, but there is one point in connection with this legislation on which my mind is not yet clear. I refer to that part which the promoter says seeks to make more definite the wording of the previous Act with regard to the transference of power and electric energy from the Canadian side. I would like to have that point cleared up before I cast my vote in this committee. If it be true that in the former legislation certain words were used which, as the hon. member for Rainy River and Thunder Bay (Mr. Conmee), says, were not intended to be used, and did not express the intention of the legislation, are we right in rectifying that legislation? It appears that there was a doubt as to what was meant by those words. Are we to establish as a precedent in this House that when contentious parties have rights or claims under certain legislation, we are to interpret that legislation for them? I do not know where we shall stop if, every time there is a lawsuit in sight and it is said there is a rich man on one side and a poor man on the other side, and the poor man thinks he is down-trodden, the parliament of Canada must interpret his own statute. Are not the courts of the country the proper places for people who differ in the interpretation of statutes to go?

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

On section 2,

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would suggest as an amendement that in lines 21 and 22 the words: 'Capable of development by the flow of the said waters,' be struck out, and there be inserted in lieu thereof: 'Actually and from time to time developed.'

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. KNOWLES. At six o'clock I was endeavouring to state a difficulty which presented itself to my mind. What I endeavoured to place before the committee and particularly before the promoter of the Bill was the principle of the legislation which is involved in this Bill. One of the reasons why the hon. gentleman asks that this legislation should be accepted is that in the year 1905 this parliament passed an Act which in its words did not enact that which this House intended to enact. If I understand him aright, he desires that we shall believe that the legislation referring to the concurrent power upon the Canadian and American sides was framed in words which failed to give expression to the intention of parliament, and consequently during the years since then there has been more or less dispute as to what the legislation really meant. So far as that is concerned, I am of opinion at present that such a contention should more properly be placed before the courts for their interpretation. Are we to establish a precedent here, that every time there is a contention as to what may be the proper interpretation of an Act of parliament we shall be asked to remove any obscurity in it by further legislation? Might I illustrate this by referring to a grave and important question which has been before western Canada for many years. In the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway charter the legislation was framed in words by which it was intended that within twenty years after the company became owners of the land the exemption from taxation should commence to run. Later there came into the arena the question when that twenty years would commence to date from. I think everybody admitted that the intention of parliament when the Canadian Pacific Railway Act was passed was that the exemption from taxation should commence to run as soon as the company became the owners of the land. The company became the owners of the lands and had sold a great deal of them, but just because the patent had not been issued they contended, and eventually succeeded in their contention, before the Privy Council that the twenty years exemption from taxation did not commence to run until the patent was issued. In a great question like that why would it not be within the rightful duty of this parliament to pass legislation at a later date rectifying and interpreting and correcting that which had by mistake in legislation been enacted. I cannot see any difference between that case and this; if difference there be I should like to have it pointed out. In this very year of 1905 when this Act was passed there were Acts passed incorporating railway companies, steamship companies, and amongst others the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. If, every time a man has a grievance against the Grand Trunk Pacific railway and sets up a contention that such and such words should mean something else from what the company contended, and were enacted to mean something else, and he comes here and asks us to interpret our own legislation for him, are we going to do it? Would it be in accord with our policy? Would we not more regularly say to him as we said to Alberta and Saskatchewan in regard to the Canadian Pacific railway taxation exemption: Go to the courts, that is what they are for, they are to interpret legislation, if there be any contention, it is the judges of the land who are to decide what was meant. Every one who is any way familiar with the law knows thta there are text books after text books written upon the interpretation of statutes and why are we going to all of a sudden to take one particular private Act about which there has been some contention and say: We will interpret it, and by a more or less party vote and after a more or less inflammatory agitation, and more or less abuse of a stranger who came into this committee, decide that which the courts would ordinarily decide. I have been for years a member of the Private Bills Committee, and I do not think I ever saw a private Bill discussed with such animus as this. Mr. Backus came here, as far as we know he was a respectable citizen, and words were addressed to him which I think every one must regret. I am referring to that at this moment because my hon. friend from Thunder Bay (Mr. Conmee) stated that Mr. Backus forced certain deponents to make certain affidavits that were false. I do not know why the hon. member (Mr. Conmee) should use such language.

Mr. CONMEE. I rise to a point of order. I did not say they were forced. I said I did not think it was anything to his credit, or words of that kind, in relation to men in his employ.

Mr. KNOWLES. The word 'forced' I took down, and if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) did not use it I must have misunderstood him although he spoke at some length and very clearly, and it is my fault if I did not hear him because his voice was not low. I accept his assertion. I do say there has been animus in this matter, and I will illustrate that by referring to the assertion made in the Private Bills Committee that some gentleman had been discharged from Mr. Backus' employ because he was a Canadian. Well, one of the gentlemen who represented Fort Frances told me that that statement was absolutely untrue, and that such was not the reason why the gentleman in question left Mr. Backus' employment. I refer to this unnecessary and unfair treatment of their opponents as not indicative of the strength of the Fort Frances case. I am at a loss to understand why we should be called upon in this particular instance to pass an Act of this kind.

On section 3,

Mr. BOYCE. I confess that I do not understand the meaning of the words in this clause. What is meant by this company affording all practical facilities?

Mr. CONMEE. The object of this is quite apparent to one who understands the local conditions. The power-house is placed in the middle of the stream some 400 feet from the Canadian shore. Between the power-house and the shore is the steamship channel the entrance into the Canadian canal, the company is required to give to Canadian users of power, hydraulic power and electric power. It is not imposing any new condition on them to say that they shall give it in such a way that it can be used. For instance, if they said to the Canadian consumer: There is the power in the Canadian power-house, help yourself—how could he get it? This company must provide means and ways of delivering that power to the Canadian consumer, otherwise no hydraulic power could be used in Canada. I do not know if the language of this section goes far enough to compel that, but at all events it shows that there is to be practical and feasible means of using the power. I do not think anybody could object to that.

Mr. KNOWLES. Why does the hon. member not insert the words: 'prospective users of power'? As it reads, with simply the word 'users,' it might in future be taken to refer only to perhaps four or five men who were actual users of power, and thus others wishing to use power would be prevented from obtaining it.

Mr. CONMEE. I understand it includes that, but I would be glad to have the word 'prospective' inserted.

On the preamble,

Mr. BOYCE. Before the preamble carries, I desire to point out the very grave infraction and danger which is involved in this Bill. The Prime Minister has put on this Bill his seal of approval, he has a majority behind him sufficient to carry it, and I do not desire that the time of the committee shall be wasted in further consideration of the principles involved. There are two very grave questions involved, and on him and his goverment must rest responsibility for the infraction and invasion of those principles which this Bill perpetuates. This is not the only instance in which that has been done. I have pointed out that the very provisions of this Bill, the very remedies sought by it, are included in the jurisdiction of the Ontario government with respect to this company and are included and the remedy provided by the agreement of the company which has been referred to. Now that there is jurisdiction in the Ontario government is absolutely clear. There is no question that they have the riparian rights in an international or interprovincial boundary stream; saving as to the question of navigation they have a right to the bed of the stream, and the right to the bed of the stream gives them jurisdiction in all matters which are the subject of this Bill. Having assumed that jurisdiction and exercised the control of the works and operation of this company, having entered into contractual relations with them as regards the matters which are the subject of this legislation, we are going far towards invading provincial rights and interfering with contractual relations between this company and the provincial government, and we are also rendering more confusing the working out of the conflicting remedies which the dual legislation will cause than if the legislation had been left entirely within the control of the province of Ontario, where it properly belongs.

The province of Ontario has inaugurated a power policy. I do not say that this government has not jurisdiction over navigable streams, but it has a jurisdiction which is limited by the decision of the Privy Council in the fisheries case with which the right hon. gentleman is acquainted. It has jurisdiction over the regulation of navigation, but this is not a question of navigation. Therefore, the province of Ontario was, in the first place, well within its rights in propounding this power policy; secondly, it was well within its jurisdiction in bringing the company under that policy; and thirdly, in making a contract with that company, and in penalizing the company for default in carrying out the contract. But the legislation now proposed is an interference with that contract. It is importing new terms and conditions into it, and I submit that my right hon. friend should hesitate before taking the responsibility for this legislation. I do not expect him to agree with me; I do not consider myself fortunate enough to get his sympathy to that extent. But I submit that this is a question of conflict of jurisdiction with regard to power development such as comes more and more frequently every session before this House, and I would respectfully suggest that efforts be made as early as possible to arrange that disputes of this kind between this parliament and the provincial legislatures should be referred to the courts for decision or that some policy should be definitely agreed upon which will render it unnecessary to take up time in the discussion of such questions in this House.

Mr. BOYCE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I might observe that my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) is but a recent conquest to the doctrine of provincial rights for in days gone by, up to the advent of the Whitney administration, I do not think either he or the party to which he belongs, were favourable to that doctrine. As I am a believer myself in it and have been all my life, I may be allowed to say that I think I understand it at least as well as does my hon. friend. I do not see in what way this Bill will interfere at all with provincial rights. The power which were given by the Act of 1905 to this company were powers which could not have been given to it by the province of Ontario. True the bed of navigable streams belongs to the provinces, but the regulation of their water comes properly within the jurisdiction of this parliament. Any obstacle to the navigation of a navigable stream comes under our jurisdiction; and as this is a stream of that nature, I think that my learned friend's opposition to the Bill on the ground of a lack of jurisdiction cannot be maintained.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—PETIT ROCHER SPUR.

Mr. CROCKET:

1. What was the cost of the spur built from the Intercolomial railway to the public wharf at Petit Rocher, N.B., in the year 1908?
2. What revenue has been received yearly for traffic over this spur since its construction?

Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Cost of spur built from Intercolonial railway to public wharf at Petit Rocher in 1908, $15,000.
2. No separate account kept of revenue over this spur.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY FREIGHT RATES.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario):

1. What is the distance from Sydney to Montreal?
2. What is the freight rate on coal from Sydney to Montreal on the Intercolonial railway during winter and summer respectively?
3. What classification is coal given on the freight schedule on the Intercolonial railway?
4. What other articles are included in this classification?

Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Freight mileage, 977 miles.
2. $2.55 per gross ton.
3. 10th class carloads.
4. Lumber, cement, stone, sand, scrap iron, ore, lime, brick, hay and other commodities.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario):

1. What is the freight rate on pig iron, steel billets, steel wire rods and steel rails, from Sydney to Montreal on the Intercolonial railway during winter and summer, respectively?
2. How many tons, respectively, of coal, pig iron, steel billets, steel wire rods, and steel rails, were shipped from Sydney to Montreal during the last fiscal year via Intercolonial railway?
3. What was the cost per ton mile to carry each of the above?

Mr. GRAHAM:

1. $2.50 per gross ton, all the year.
2. Coal, nil; pig iron, 941 tons; steel billets, 13,013 tons; steel wire rods, 28,132 tons; steel rails, 54,698 tons.
3. Accounts do not show cost per ton mile for transportation of any particular commodity.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—MONCTON EXTENSIONS.

Mr. CROCKETT:

1. Has the government acquired any land at Moncton for the use of the Intercolonial railway from the Builders' Woodworking Company, Limited?
2. If so, what is the area and what price was paid therefor?

Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Yes, the government has acquired land at Moncton, for the use of the Intercolonial railway, from the Builders' Woodworking Company, Limited.
2. Area, fifty-five thousand five hundred square feet. Price paid, $14,400; this amount includes all damages past, present and future, and for the removal of all the machinery, plant and buildings.

ONTARIO FISHERIES SERVICE.

Mr. PORTER:

1. How many officers were there in the fisheries service for Ontario prior to 1910, what were their names, jurisdiction, territorially, salaries and duties?
2. How many patrol boats in the service for Ontario, where located, how many employed in each boat and their salaries?
3. Does anything, and if so what, come within the term maintenance of the service, as mentioned in the return made 17th of March, addition to salaries and fuel for boats?
4. What services do the officers of this service perform that is not performed by similar officers of local legislature?

Mr. BRODEUR. Three.

J. M. Hurley.—That portion of Ontario east of the western boundary line of the counties of Durham, Victoria and Haliburton, including Lake Skugog and the eastern boundary of Muskoka and Parry Sound districts.

O. B. Sheppard.—That part of the province of Ontario west of the eastern boundaries of the county of Ontario, and the districts of Muskoka and Parry Sound, along the Mattawa and Ottawa rivers, and northward along the northeastern boundary line of said province to James bay.

A. G. Duncan.—That portion of Ontario lying west and north of Lake Nipissing, the rivers Mattawa and Ottawa and the northeast boundary line of the province to James bay, embracing Nipissing, Algoma, Thunder Bay and Rainy River districts, Lake Superior and such portions of Lake Huron and Georgian bay as lie adjacent or opposite to the part of Ontario above described.

Salary, $1,200 per annum each.

The exercise of a general supervision over the fisheries in their districts.

2. One for Lake Superior. Two men in addition to the inspector, when the boat is in commission. They are paid the regular per diem wages prevailing. Last season, $2 per day.

3. Yes, travelling expenses of the officers when on official work, and provisions for the crews of the patrol boats.

4. They will require compliance with the provisions of the Federal Fishery Regulations, and so afford the fisheries of the province the protection contemplated thereby.

BOUNTIES ON IRON AND STEEL.

Mr. GILBERT:

What total amount has been paid by the government as bounties up to the present time to encourage the manufacture of iron and steel in Canada?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. $17,119,051.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

Correspondence, reports, orders in council, &c., relating to the purchase of expropriation of land at Moncton from the Builders Woodworking Company, Limited.—Mr. Crockett.

Return showing the mileage of railways owned, controlled or operated in the United States by the Grand Trunk, the Canadian Pacific and other Canadian railway companies.

2. Also the mileage of railways owned, controlled or operated by the United States railway corporations in Canada.—Mr. Rutan.

Correspondnce, contracts, assignments and other documents with regard to what is called the Percy Aylwin Irrigation Grant, granted to him under order in council under date 1st September, 1908.—Mr. Campbell.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Fisheries—Amount required to compensate Fishery Overseer Wm. Robichaud, of Inkerman, Gloucester County, for destruction of his property by fire, $2,400.

Mr. BRODEUR. I explained the other night the object of this vote. This fishery overseer's property was destroyed by fire under the following circumstances: He was advised by the department that poaching was being carried on in his district, and was instructed to see that it was stopped. He seized some nets that were being illegally used and brought them to his barn. The nets were soon stolen. A few days afterwards he made another seizure of nets and placed these also in his barn. The same evening the barn was set afire and Robichaud lost not only his barn with a season's crop that was stored in it, but also his house and shed. It was a very severe loss. Criminal action was taken against those suspected, and a long trial took place before a stipendiary magistrate, who, after hearing the evidence, declared that the men should be committed for trial. I have here the report of the case made by the agent of the department, showing that the inquiry was a very careful one. Under the circumstances we think we should stand by our officer, to show these criminals who tried to terrorize those who protect the public interest that the force of the law is behind our officers, and that they will be maintained in the performance of their duty. The amount has not been absolutely determined, but by the report of the officer of the department it is believed that it will be about $2,400.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). While on this item, I desire to inquire if it is true that the minister has appointed fishery officers throughout the province of Ontario over waters that are already fully taken care of by the Ontario government? In my own constituency, two or three have been appointed—Mr. M. J. Connolly, whom we all know, is appointed at Brockville, and a gentleman at Westport for the back lakes. The Ontario government has a man at Prescott and one at Gananoque, and these two are travelling these waters with a gasolene boat and protecting the fisheries properly. What object there can be in these new appointments of this government, except to give salaries to political hacks, I cannot understand. As to the vote before us, I have no objection to offer to it. If this officer has met with a misfortune under the circumstances explained by the minister, he should be compensated.

Mr. BRODEUR. On a former item, I gave an explanation of the point to which the hon. member (Mr. Taylor, Leeds) refers. Perhaps he will have no objection to waiting for a few minutes, when, I expect, we shall have an item bearing on this subject, and when I shall have my papers before me and can give him the information he desires.

To pay customs officers for services in connection with issuing of modus vivendi licenses —further amount required, $61.62.

Mr. HENDERSON. How many licenses are there under this modus vivendi?

Mr. BRODEUR. Last year, 126 were issued.

Unprovided items, 1909-10—To cover unprovided items, 1909-10, as per Auditor General's Report, page C-5, $101,169.01.

Mr. FELIDING. This is not an appropriation of money, but is in accordance with a memorandum which the Auditor General sends in at the close of the year to cover over-expenditure in various departments, sums necessary to enable him to square his accounts. This an annual vote.

Mr. BARKER. Have any of these items been questioned by the Auditor General?

Mr. FIELDING. No, there is no question regarding any of them.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand that this is to make good to the Auditor General for moneys that may have been paid in, for which there was no appropriation or the appropriation was overdrawn.

Mr. FIELDING. That is the fact in some cases. In most cases the amounts are small, and the Auditor General allowed them to pass depending upon the usual practice of geting this vote at the close of the year's affairs.

Mr. BARKER. The item has been passed by the Auditor General?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, it is inserted at his request.

Department of Justice—Exchequer Court of Canada, contingencies, $1,400.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. The system in the Exchequer Court is that at the trials of actions which are heard in that court there is always a shorthand writer present, and if parties desire afterwards to obtain copies of the evidence given, in that way they are able to do so. The cost of the work of the shorthand reporter is in the end paid by the parties. It forms part of the general cost of litigation falling upon the unsuccessful party. But in the first instance, the expense of providing the reporter, and his fee is paid by the registrar of the court. This amount, therefore, while it is in the shape of an actual disbursement by the registrar, will probably all of it ultimately be returned to him. But he has found that he will need about $1,400 more than the amount he had estimated and which had previously been voted.

Printing, binding and distributing Exchequer Court reports—further amount required, $600.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. This amount will be payable to the Printing Bureau. The necessity for it is because the reports have been a litle more voluminous than the registrar expected.

Mr. BARKER. Are these reports, which are supposed to issue to the legal profession, paid for by those who get them?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. They are paid for by somebody, they are not issued to the public free of expense, of course.

Mr. BARKER. I mean that ordinarily members of the legal profession pay for the reports of long cases, and does the money thus come back to the government?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. Any one who receives the reports, whether he is a lawyer or not, has to pay the regular price. The Law Society of Ontario takes a considerable number of copies in bulk, and distributes them to the members of the society.

Dominion police—To pay retiring gratuity to constable Samuel Shore, $1,501.25.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. This constable has reached an age where he was no longer able to continue his services on the Dominion Police Force. He has been on the force over 27 years. He has presented medical certificates, which are accompanied by a certificate of the Commissioner of Dominion Police, Colonel Sherwood, that he is not fit either physically or mentally to continue in the service. Accordingly he has been retired, and the practice in such cases has been to give to the constable so retiring an allowance or a gratuity calculated upon the footing of one month's pay for each year of service after the first ten, and half a month's pay for each subsequent year of service.

Mr. HENDERSON. Would that apply to all constables who are retired by the government?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. There is no general system. We have not a large force, and we do not often have men needing to retire from old age. So each case is dealt with by special vote.

Mr. HUGHES. I understand this officer acquired his disability through special work in the service.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. He is a man well on in years, and exposure has probably contributed to his feebleness.

Mr. BARKER. What system prevails in the department which would prevent one man getting an allowance through favouritism, and another man being refused? That has sometimes happened without any respect to efficiency.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. I cannot say that any system prevails. So far as I recollect, this is the only instance in which anything of this kind has taken place during the five years I have been minister. While I am ex-officio head of the Dominion Police Force, the whole management of the force is in the hands of Colonel Sherwood, the commissioner. I have not even the pleasure of an acquaintance with a single member of the force, and in such a matter as this I would act entirely upon the views of the commissioner. In this particular instance the recommendation for the item is based upon medical certificates, and the commissioner's recommendation that this should be done.

Mr. BLAIN. How many are there in the force?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. I think the number is 62 at the present time.

Mr. DANIEL. Are they all in Ottawa?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. No, we have recently sent four or five to Halifax to the naval building there, which it is desired should be under the guardianship of a detachment of the force; and a similar body has either been sent, or is about to be sent, to British Columbia on similar duty. Otherwise the whole force is in Ottawa.

Mr. HUGHES. I observe by the press of Saturday and to-day that a special officer of the Dominion Police has been detailed to prevent the horrible Tory party from running away with the Minister of Finance or waylaying him and robbing him of the secrets of the reciprocity deal. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice what are the facts with regard to this guarding of the Minister of Finance?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. I think my hon. friend has the authority of the newspapers for the statement.

Mr. HUGHES. Is there any authority of the minister for it?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. I have no knowledge of it except what I have seen in the newspapers.

Mr. BARKER. With regard to the minister's reply to my question as to the allowance to the retired policeman, while I have the utmost confidence in Col. Sherwood, he is not directly responsible to this House. I think the minister ought to be responsible for any item in these estimates that comes under his authority, and I do not think he should accept the dictum of any official as to what he should pay to individual members of the force. There might be to-morrow a man put in the place of Col. Sherwood in whom the members of this House might not have the same confidence that they have in that officer, and a policeman might, by mere subserviency to his chief officer, be favoured with a recommendation for an annual pension. It is of vital consequence to the efficiency of the corps that the minister should assume his full and proper responsibility and be able to tell the House that he himself approves the grant, and has reason to approve the grant the House is asked to make.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. I am sure that the committee will not have understood me as in any way disclaiming responsibility for the recommendation of this vote. I am responsible for it certainly; but at the same time I want all the members of the committee to understand that it was not a recommendation proceeding upon my personal knowledge as distinguished from the personal knowledge and opinion of the commissioner who, under me, has his responsibility for the force and for keeping it as it ought to be. If I saw this old gentleman, I do not suppose I would be able to know as much about the case as I know from the report and certificate of the commissioner. I might see that he was feeble and might think that he was not at present fit to discharge the duties of his position; but I should need the certificate of a medical man as to whether or not he was permanently disabled. That certificate is given, and it is backed up by the opinion of the commissioner, who has daily personal relations with the members of the force, and probably knows more fully than any other individual man what exactly is required from each member of it. Of course, this incapability for discharging his duties has been coming on gradually. Lighter duties have been put upon him until a time has been reached when there is really no work requiring to be done that is light enough for him to be able to do it, and when, as I am told, he has to be retired, and this is to make some small provision for him, as he may of course live for years. In the circumstances, I had no hesitation in accepting the recommendation of Col. Sherwood and in turn making my recommendation to my colleagues in Council that this item should be placed in the estimates as a special vote.

Mr. BARKER. There is, perhaps, no real difference between us. All I wanted to know was whether the minister had taken the precaution of inquiring and satisfying himself that the money was properly payable before recommending the payment. I do not think any of us thinks very much of the ordinary assertion of a minister that he is responsible. We all know that every minister is responsible for every dollar paid in his department. When a gratuity is recommended, I think the House and the country would like to be assured that the minister had assured himself that the recommendation was a just and proper one, and that he was not acting merely in a perfunctory way in ordering the money to be paid by the country.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. To answer the observations of my hon. friend categorically, I would have to say that I have not made personal investigation into the circumstances of this particular case; yet I have no hesitation in stating to the committee, and taking the responsibility of so doing, that I am satisfied that this is a case in which it is just and fair to make this payment. I say that from the knowledge I have acquired, not merely during the five years that I have been Minister of Justice, but during many years before that, of how accurate and reliable a man Col. Sherwood is; and when he made his recommendation in this case, knowing by experience that his recommendations were of a character which I could unhesitatingly accept, I did not think it necessary to go any further except to see that there was a medical certificate supporting the view that Col. Sherwood himself expressed.

Mr. BARKER. That brings us to the very point I was raising. The minister has no greater confidence in Col. Sherwood than I have, but I do not think the House would be expected to pass this vote if Col. Sherwood had asked us to do so. I am quite aware that the minister in charge of a department has to act upon the advice and opinions of his subordinates; but, after all, a minister is answerable to the public, and it is his duty to satisfy himself, not merely because he knows that Col. Sherwood is a respectable honest official, but because he has himself ascertained it, that the gratuity is properly payable.

To complete payment of expenses incurred in the North Atlantic Fisheries Arbitration, before the Hague, $100,000.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). How much did it cost altogether?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. This item it is hoped will complete the expenditure in connection with this arbitration. There has already been voted $200,000, of which a few thousand dollars is still unexpended. It is thought this vote will not only complete the whole payment, but may possibly leave some small surplus. While the total expenditure in connection with the arbitration is probably somewhat substantially less than $300,000, the whole of that amount does not fall upon Canada. At the time the United States agreed to the arbitration of these questions with the British government, an intimation was made by the British government to Canada and Newfoundland that the two colonial governments would be expected to bear the expense between themselves, and an arrangement was then entered into between this government and the government of Newfoundland that the expense would be shared equally between them. At that time, while I had had a little to do with the preliminary preparation of the case, I had no expectation that I should be in general charge of it. The difficulties were more of concern to Newfoundland than to Canada. At any rate the acute difficulties which had reached a stage that necessitated arbitration had grown up during the last few years between the United States and Newfoundland, rather than between the United States and Canada. Ever since the modus vivendi of 1888 between the United States and Canada few difficulties have arisen between us out of the North Atlantic coast fisheries. As the existing difficulties were, in that view of them much more between Newfoundland and the United States than between Canada and the United States I had expected, and I think my colleagues shared the expectation, that general charge of the arbitration would be taken by some one from Newfoundland. But as the work progressed, matters rather drifted than otherwise, first into our taking care of it, Canada engaging the counsel who had been agreed upon and the solicitors who were at work upon the preparation, and in the long run matters drifted into Canada advancing all the money and Newfoundland has not yet paid to Canada any portion of its one-half contribution. We have an arrangement in the shape of an interchange of letters with the First Minister of Newfoundland, and the understanding on his part is that as soon as matters are closed Newfoundland will settle accounts with us. Newfoundland, I assume, paid the expenses of Sir James Winter, who addressed the tribunal with special reference to the questions which particularly concerned Newfoundland. The First Minister of Newfoundland, as well as the Attorney General, were also present at the Hague and no doubt the Newfoundland government bore that expense. I should say further, not only because it affects the matter of dollars and cents, but because it is something that ought to be most gratefully acknowledged on our part, that, while it is true that at the beginning the British government intimated to Canada and to Newfoundland that we would be expected to bear the expense of this litigation, the British government has not adhered strictly, or at all nearly, to that position. They began by doing a great many things in the way of furnishing material; they then began doing the printing, and it has ended by the British government, without any thing at all being said about it, bearing the whole expense of printing the great mass of material which was used in connection with this arbitration. I avoided any very close inquiry as to the amount of that expense, but I know it necessarily must have been a very large sum indeed. I hesitate to make any guess at it, but I am satisfied it would bear a very considerable proportion even to the $300,000 which will be shared between Newfoundland and Canada. The behaviour of the imperial authorities in that connection, was generous, handsome, more than we asked for or could ask, and we can do nothing less than gratefully recognize and acknowledge the handsome way in which we have in that respect been treated by the British government. If any one is interested in the details I can give approximately or exactly the amounts which have been already disbursed to the five gentlemen who formed the board, to the counsel who were engaged in our behalf, and in regard to the various items of expenditure which have been made. The expenses of the tribunal, that is of the five arbitrators, and what I might call court costs: small fees amounting altogether to some $500, which were payable to the officials of the permanent court at the Hague, and the cost of printing the formal record of proceedings which was attended to by the officers of the permanent court at the Hague, were shared equally by the United States on the one part, and the British Empire on the other, and the British half share will fall upon Canada and Newfoundland equally.

Mr. BARKER. As between us and the United States I understand from what the minister says there was a distinct understanding. That ends that. As to the division between Newfoundland and ourselves my own feeling would be that we should deal with it in a generous, open spirit, without any niggardliness whatever.

The Senate, to pay the services of an additional messenger for the session, $530.

Mr. BEST. Some time ago I drew attention to letters of the Auditor General stating that some officials of the Senate were being paid more than they were entitled to receive under the Civil Service Act. Could the minister give us full information in accordance with the promise of the Prime Minister at that time?

Mr. FISHER. I could not give my hon. friend the whole details. I know that a question arose between the Auditor General and the Clerk of the Senate in regard to salaries properly due to certain officials of the Senate. The officers of the Senate who were responsible contended that by the law these officials were receiving what was due them by law. The last I heard of it the question had not been settled completely. There are some half dozen officials whose salaries are in dispute.

Mr. BEST. I do not want to find fault with the salaries received by any civil servant, it may be that in many cases they are not receiving enough. But I thought this was a grave charge and that if these men were getting more than the law said they should get it should be looked into.

The Senate, to pay one-half the services of an engrosser in preparing the joint address to His Excellency, $175.

Mr. TAYLOR. Does that not seem a very large price to pay for an engrosser?

Mr. FISHER. It does seem to be rather high, but it has to be in both languages. It was arranged for by the officers of the House and the Senate jointly.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I would certainly find fault with an expenditure of $175 for an address to His Excellency. We have a Printing Bureau and I think that in future we had better get these addresses printed and sent down to His Excellency. It would only be thrown in the waste-basket anyway.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend is mistaken, it is not printed, it is a carefully engrossed and illuminated address. I have not seen it myself, but I have no doubt it is a very artistic piece of work, by as good a man as could be found in the country. The whole parliament wanted to do honour to His Excellency and I am sure the officers of the House would see that it was done as beautifully as possible. An expert capable of doing that kind of work is an artist and ought to be paid very well, for men competent to do such work are very rare.

To pay one-half the cost of a casket in which to place the joint address, $81.25.

Mr. DANIEL. Was that a silver casket?

Mr. FISHER. I believe it was.

Mr. DANIEL. There does not appear to be any pall provided for this casket?

Mr. FISHER. No, I do not think there was a doctor concerned.

To provide for the promotion of deputy clerk of the Crown in Chancery, to second division, subdivision A, from September 1, 1908, $200.

Mr. BARKER. Why is there a special vote for this?

Mr. SPEAKER. This is due to the fact that the deputy clerk was inadvertently placed in 1908 in the second division of sub-division B instead of sub-division A.

Mr. HUGHES. What is his total salary?

Mr. SPEAKER. $2,100.

Sessional clerks, further amount required, $9,000.

Mr. HUGHES. How many are there and what are their duties?

Mr. BEST.

Mr. SPEAKER. One portion of the staff is directly under the charge of the Clerk of the House for the preparation of returns and the other portion is employed in the post office.

Mr. HUGHES. Do these include stenographers for the use of members?

Mr. SPEAKER. No, there are none.

Mr. DANIEL. How many sessional clerks are there and how are they employed?

Mr. SPEAKER. There are 32 and particulars will be found on page 41 of the main estimates. They include the Speaker's secretary, two chief clerks, 11 employed in the post office and 16 others, including the secretaries to the two chief whips and to the leader of the opposition.

Mr. DANIEL. Are these sessional clerks employed mostly down in the office where the typewriting is done?

Mr. SPEAKER. 11 are employed in the post office, 16 are employed down stairs and partly throughout the building, one in the Speaker's office, one in the office of leader of the opposition, and one each in the offices of the whips besides one or two in the committees.

Mr. DANIEL. Are any working in the rooms of private members?

Mr. SPEAKER. None to my knowledge. For the last two years a number of members on both sides have presented petitions to the Board of Internal Economy asking that members be given assistance of stenographers in their correspondence on a system similar to that which has been in existence in Toronto the last 10 years and has given perfect satisfaction. Hon. members find it very difficult to attend to their own correspondence on account of the time taken up by the committee and sittings of this House. In Toronto a number of girls are employed and paid by the government under the supervision of an experienced person, and these stenographers are employed by the members to do their correspondence. That question is now under the consideration of the Board of Internal Economy and it appears to meet with favour. The Board received a petition signed by many members on both sides.

Mr. HUGHES. Not by all.

Mr. SPEAKER. No, but by a good many.

Mr. DANIEL. The matter is under advisement?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes, but I hope something will be done next session.

Mr. BARKER. Is any portion of this vote to pay stenographers for work for members such as that Mr. Speaker has told us of?

Mr. SPEAKER. No, the system has not been organized yet. This is for sessional clerks.

Mr. BARKER. But I would like to understand distinctly whether members of the House have been allowed to utilize the services of these sessional clerks for their own purposes. There are a great many members who pay for assistance of this kind. If some members are able to command the services of government officials to do their work, it is unfair to those members who pay their way. I would like to know whether any of this vote is to pay for services given to members on either side of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am informed that there is not. The duties of the sessional clerks are specified, and they are under the control of the Clerk of the House. When the day's work of a sessional clerk is over, he may do the correspondence of a member, if he so desires but the stenographers' services are paid for by the members themselves. It is felt, however, that that is unsatisfactory, and the idea is to organize this stenographic bureau.

Mr. BARKER. I think that would be satisfactory to both sides, if it is distinctly understood on the assurance of Mr. Speaker that no person employed by the government is giving his services to any member of the House without being paid for it by that member.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is the rule—no officer of the House gives his services in connection with the correspondence of any private member.

Mr. BARKER. But what I want to know is whether any clerk employed and paid by the government gives, gratuitously or otherwise, his services to a member of the House?

Mr. SPEAKER. I can only answer so far as my knowledge, and the information given to me. The Clerk of the House tells me it would not be allowed. If any complaint is received, I would have to apply the rule.

Mr. DANIEL. It is not likely that any member would complain.

Mr. SPEAKER. I believe sincerely there is no ground for complaint on that score. But if we had a correspondence bureau similar to the one in Toronto, we could control the system, and we can not control the system that now exists.

Mr. HUGHES. As the government is looking to Washington for models in other things, they might take a note of the system there. In Washington, each member is furnished with a secretary for himself, which is better than for members to await their turn to have letters written by a small staff of clerks. I am sure that the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), who has had an extended sojourn in Washington, where he caused great interest and curiosity, must have noticed how this business is handled there, and will be able to give the government that information about it.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) had better take care or he will be accused of annexation sentiments.

Mr. HUGHES. I am not annexing nations or peoples; but I annex a good idea wherever I can find it.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) has annexation on the brain. He never speaks without mentioning it. I am getting sick of it. I rose to ask, Mr. Speaker, as to the duties of the men who are doing typewriting downstairs. When are we right, and when are we wrong, in asking them to do something for us? There is quite a staff of them there and they do very good work, but I do not want to ask them to do anything for me that I have not the right to ask for. I have never asked them to do anything in the way of correspondence, but I did ask them to copy a return.

Mr. SPEAKER. The staff downstairs is divided into French and English staffs, each with a chief. They are required to do the work of the House under instructions from the Clerk. The copying of a return, or any other work that properly belongs to the House of Commons, is done by these men. Any member wishing to have such work done can apply either to the chief of the sessional clerks or to the Clerk of the House. The clerk informs me that they do their work very satisfactorily.

Mr. DANIEL. Are these clerks employed to send out political matter for either side?

Mr. SPEAKER. No, that is not allowed.

Mr. DANIEL. Are they doing it?

Mr. SPEAKER. Not to my knowledge.

House of Commons—committees—further amount required, $13,000.

Mr. SPEAKER. This is a vote for the current year, the amount voted being inadequate. This additional vote is necessary because last session extending into the present fiscal year, and also because of the Lumsden investigation, the expenditure upon which was $11,103.17.

Mr. HENDERSON. What was the original vote?

Mr. SPEAKER. It was $7,000.

Mr. DANIEL. Does this additional vote include payment for witnesses and their expenses?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes, payment of witneses and translation of evidence.

Debates—further amount required, $15,000.

Mr. SPEAKER. The same explanation applies to this item. The money voted for the year expiring is not obtainable after the 31st of March, and the session will continue into April and May.

Postage, telegrams and telephones—further amount required, $500.

Mr. HENDERSON. How many telephones does the government own around these buildings?

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand there are about 50. Many of these have been installed for a long time, and others are put in as the need arises. Some of the members' rooms are supplied with telephones. As soon as the House closes they are removed for the summer. We hope to have a general switchboard installed comprising the whole House of Commons, so that when anybody wishes to call up any one in the House of Commons he will call the general number, and then the operator will switch on to any particular room.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understood Mr. Speaker to say that some of the members' rooms had telephones. Now I wish to notify Mr. Speaker that the room allotted to myself, along with my hon. friend from Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Hughes), and other members, has no telephone. If other members have telephones in their rooms, I think I am entitled to the same privilege. I see no reason why any other private member or group of members occupying a room together should have a telephone put in by the government, and paid for by the country, while I should be obliged to go and hunt up a telephone when I wish to send a message, instead of simply turning around and speaking from my desk. I would like to know what special privileges are given in that way.

Mr. SPEAKER. All the applications are handed over to the Sergeant-at-Arms, and are treated on the same basis. All who have applied have obtained their telephones.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is very kind of the hon. gentleman to tell us that. It is something we were never made aware of before, that we can have the telephone for the asking. I will expect that there will be a telephone put into my room immediately.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must make application in writing.

Mr. SPEAKER.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not think I should go to the trouble of sending in a written application if the Sergeant-at-Arms. who is present, will not take the trouble to accept my verbal request.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Sergeant-at-Arms says he will attend to it.

Mr. HUGHES. As one occupying that room with my hon. friend, I wish to be understood that I have a right to be consulted. I decidedly object to being made an auditor of telephone conversations.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not going to have my rights curtailed by the member for Victoria-Haliburton. He does not occupy the room very much anyway, and I do not know that I am going to be restricted in my privileges, even though it should be a little annoying to him.

Sessional messengers, doorkeepers, &c.—further amount required, $4,000.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Who appoints the messengers?

Mr. SPEAKER. The Speaker appoints the sessional messengers; permanent messengers are appointed by the House, on the recommendation of the Speaker.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Do the messengers have to undergo an examination?

Mr. SPEAKER. Unfortunately up to the present time they have not. But the Board of Internal Economy have been asked to make a change in that respect, and to fix an age limit at which they may enter the service and at which they may leave the service. We are now in the position of having on the staff three or four very old men, one of whom has been here since 1859, seven years before confederation. Another man has been here 27 years, and is now 85 years of age. When these men are turned out the country can do nothing for them. The Board of Internal Economy has been asked to apply for a gratuity of one session's salary to give them on retirement. But we keep them as long as possible.

Mr. HENDERSON. Who is this Board of Internal Economy?

Mr. SPEAKER. The Speaker, the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding), the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley), the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), and the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), who are appointed at the beginning of each session.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Do these messengers have to pass any examination? I have heard many complaints made that a number of messengers cannot speak English. You often ring for them, they come to your room, and you tell them what you want, and they shrug their shoulders and say, 'I don't understand.' Then you have to send for another more competent messenger who is able to speak French and English.

Mr. SPEAKER. No doubt every messenger should be required to speak both languages, and there may be one or two who do not understand English perfectly. On the other hand, I am told that there are several who do not understand French; so one balances the other. But all should be required to speak both languages.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not think anything of the kind.

Mr. HENDERSON. Many of them are French, and I understand cannot speak English. I know I have found several.

Mr. SPEAKER. I may say that when any English messenger has been appointed from Ontario or the maritime provinces I have never inquired whether he could speak French or not.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). The difficulty is that the French members nearly all understand English while the English members generally do not understand French.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not think it would be fair to select messengers only from among those who can speak the two languages. To impose that additional test would throw the work into the hands of a particular class, because as a matter of fact there are a great many more French who speak English than there are English who speak French.

Mr. HUGHES. It would be manifestly unfair to require every English-speaking messenger to speak French, as there are a great many more English-speaking members of the House than French. I am not objecting to French messengers being appointed. The matter might be settled by asking how many French messengers and how many English messengers there are now on the staff?

Mr. SPEAKER. Colonel Smith informs me that in his experience of many years here no English-speaking messenger has been required to speak French, but in almost every case a French messenger, when appointed, is informed that he must be able to speak English, otherwise he cannot properly perform his duties. As far as my experience goes, English-speaking messengers have always been replaced by English-speaking, and French by French, and generally each appointment has been taken from the district from which his predecessor came.

Mr. DANIEL. I understood, I think from the Speaker himself, that there was some rule with regard to a certain number of messengers being allowed to each province. I would like to ask if that is the case, and also on whose recommendation these messengers are appointed usually?

Mr. SPEAKER Colonel Smith tells me that there has been no system in vogue, but generally we have on the staff messengers coming from nearly every part of the country, and when a vacancy occurs from one province, the members generally see to it that it is filled by the appointment of another from the same province.

Mr. DANIEL. Is there any limit to the number?

Mr. SPEAKER. The present number is 47. These are not all messengers, however, Some act as door-keepers, some as book-keepers keeping the time of the other messengers. During the present session we have been greatly handicapped by illness in Ottawa. There have generally been four or five men away on sick leave, from typhoid fever or other cause. Though we have been short-handed, we have made no appointments in the last three months, and there were no additional messengers appointed last year.

Pages—further amount required, $1,750.

Mr. HENDERSON. I see that there are four additional pages.

Mr. SPEAKER. These were appointed in the session before last. They were made necessary by the construction of the new wing, with a large number of new rooms opened and numerous additional telephones introduced into the building. The number of pages was increased from 16 to 20.

Sessional charwomen—further amount required, $1,800.

Mr. THOBURN. I see that these charwomen get the large amount of 75 cents a day, while the pages get $1.75 a day? Are they supposed to work the whole day for 75 cents? There seems to be a great inequality in wages.

Mr. SPEAKER. I quite agree with the hon. member that the amount paid is very small. I think the Dominion could well afford to make it at least $1. The women do not work all day. They come very early in the morning, at 5 or 6 or 7 o'clock, and work till 8 or 9 o'clock. They are generally widows with children depending upon them, and when they finish their work here they can go and attend to their own household duties. They have to come here every morning during the session, sometimes wading through deep snow, and 75 cents a day is a very small amount and I would ask the Board of Internal Economy to make it at least $1.

Mr. DANIEL. Does Mr. Speaker provide them with some hot coffee when they come so early?

Mr. SPEAKER. The Speaker is not up early enough for that, but I will lay the suggestion before the Restaurant Committee.

Servants—further amount required, $425.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is a new kind of officer. I did not know that we had that designation.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Sergeant at Arms tells me that this designation has been in the estimates for the last 20 years. There are six. They include the attendants in the bath rooms and wash rooms and the men who take the coal and ice to the different rooms.

Electric light attendant—further amount required, $75.

Mr. SPEAKER. The main part of this man's salary is paid by the Public Works Department. This amount is paid to him for his special duties during the session.

Mr. HUGHES. How many families or persons reside in the parliament buildings?

Mr. SPEAKER. There was a return brought down a couple of weeks ago giving that information. Speaking from memory, I may say that in the House of Commons there are the Speaker and his family, the Deputy Speaker, the Sergeant at Arms, the steward of the restaurant and his family, the housekeeper and his family, and the assistant steward, who occupies one room. This year we paid our way with the restaurant and had a surplus, which is different from the experience of the past. I should have mentioned that the Deputy Speaker has rooms in the building as in the last parliament. A return was brought down which gives all the details and which the hon. gentleman could consult.

Mr. DANIEL. Who is downstairs?

Mr. SPEAKER. There is an assistant steward who replaces the steward, who is supposed to be here night and day, and these are the only two families downstairs so far as I know. Mr. Dubé has his quarters in the front of the building. I am sorry to say that after nearly 40 years of service Mr. Dubé is now in poor health, and is applying for superannuation. His successor will simply have an office there, and the remainder of the rooms will be given to the service of the House.

Printing, paper and binding—further amount required, $80,000.

Mr. HUGHES. Would Mr. Speaker give us an explanation of the change made this year in reference to the supply of stationery to the members? So far as I am personally concerned I do not want jack-knives and things of that kind, but I do believe that members of the House of Commons are entitled to a proper supply of stationery to transact the business connected with their position as members. I have no use for any peanut policy whether it is supported by the government or by members of the opposition, and I do not think the people would object to proper supplies of stationery being furnished to their members.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Board of Internal Economy passed a resolution last session that in future members are to be supplied during the session with all the stationery they may require, but the giving of a trunk of stationery to be carried home was thought to be an abuse and was stopped. The giving of the leather trunks to members at the opening of every parliament will continue. I may say that in addition to the stationery, a number of articles were put in these trunks which to some members were satisfactory and to some others were not. These articles consisted of work boxes, and chatelaine bags and things of that kind, and some members objected to them, and the board of internal economy decided to do away with that practice.

Mr. DANIEL. Has the same thing been done in the case of the senators? I understand they are supplied with a certain amount of money, and that they provide these things for themselves. Has the same policy of economy been extended to the senators?

Mr. SPEAKER. The Senate being an independent chamber, they distribute their funds as they think best. They continue the practice in the Senate. I understand it is taken out of the vote for contingencies. We have no control over them.

Mr. DANIEL. I see no reason why the same rule should not be extended to the Senate as to the House of Commons. The money is voted by this House, and it should be made clear that in future there will be no money for that purpose.

Mr. HUGHES. How much is saved annually by this policy?

Mr. SPEAKER. About $10,000.

Mr. HUGHES. That is about one-third of the amount that is wasted on every mile of the transcontinental railway. What was thrown away on the Quebec bridge and some other transactions of the government would continue supplying the members with decent stationery for the next thousand years.

Mr. SPEAKER. The clerk of the House informs me that during session the members can get all the stationery they require by filling out a requisition. It is the practice of giving a trunk at the beginning of each session that has been discontinued.

Mr. HUGHES. I have no apology to make about this. I say the Dominion of Canada is entitled to give to every member of this House all the stationery he needs during session and all the stationery he needs during the year in connection with his public duties. I am surprised at the board of Internal Economy getting down to such small matters, especially as they are the gentlemen who are so magnanimous about Quebec bridges, and national transcontinental railways and all that sort of thing.

Mr. EDWARDS. With regard to this practice of furnishing a small trunk of stationery I believe the government has done quite right in discontinuing it. We get all the stationery we require here to carry on our correspondence and transact the business of the country, and that is all we should have. If we cannot provide ourselves with stationery between sessions then I think we had better quit and go out of the business. But at the same time it is not fair that the senators should be treated differently from the members of this House. I take an opposite view from the hon. member from Victoria, and I think it is a piece of peanut politics on the part of members of this House to want a lot of stationery, and fancy note paper and knick-knacks that are of no practical use to us. It may be all very well for those gentlemen who carry on a fashionable correspondence, but for the practical every-day member of parliament it is absolutely useless to supply us with little leather bags and purses that are stuck in, and all that kind of thing.

Mr. FISHER. I am not a member of the internal economy committee, but I think that the fact that all these trumpery little articles, apart from real stationery were put into these trunks—

Mr. HUGHES. I am not advocating that. I referred only to the stationery.

Mr. FISHER. It was the fact that these trumpery little things were put into the trunks that led to an abuse and to criticism being somewhat freely bandied about in the country. I do not think there was any desire or idea of cutting the members off from any supplies they may require in their capacity as members.

Mr. HUGHES. The hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards), is entirely in error. I have never directly or indirectly asked for trunks or useless stationery, but what I asked for and do ask for and am going to have is proper stationery for my use as a member. If the hon. member wants to use these little peanut bags, &c., let him use them, I never use them. I spoke of stationery and I maintain that the members of this House are entitled to stationery.

Mr. EDWARDS. I was not making any objection to the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton getting his stationery. I was under the impression that he had been told as all of us have that stationery was available for him and for every other member.

Mr. HUGHES. No, it is not.

Mr. EDWARDS. I repeat that I think the Internal Economy were right in cutting off the little trunks of fancy paper and knick-knacks.

Mr. HENDERSON. In the interests of economy, I suppose the committee have cut off this supply of stationery. I am glad to know that at last the government has commenced to economize and I think the country will appreciate it. I endorse it, but I do insist that having stripped the members of the House of Commons of their stationery they will deal with the other chamber in the same way and strip them as well. I do not know any reason why the Committee on Internal Economy should be so economical that they will put the pruning knife into the little perquisite that was given to the House of Commons for, I suppose, the last 100 years. But I do say they should carry their economy one step further and deal alike with both Houses. We have to vote the money, the Senate cannot get five cents unless we give it to them, and if the item of Senate contingencies has not passed, I will be glad to move to strike it out.

Mr. HUGHES. Those of us who have been in the House for a number of years will remember the titled gentleman who was one of the leaders in this cheese paring policy of cutting down jack-knives. One gentleman used to go for this item in opposition and he was always the fellow who would get two or three extra jack-knives. The most despicable creatures you could find in the House were always the ones who talked thus. The men talking about it in the country were of the type of the leaders of the Grangers and Patrons of Industry. I do not mean the membership of those bodies but the leaders, men a good deal of the type of the leaders of the Grain Growers in the west who are coming down here, who are always finding fault and always the first to hunt for a government job, men like Joe Haycock and Jim McMullen in the House of Commons were the men who were up to this sort of game, men despised in every regard, men whose opposition I would a thousand times have rather than their support. I always courted the opposition of such men and I do to-day. I just give this little explanation in passing.

Salaries and allowances, outside post office service, $3,457,457.75.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Some four weeks ago this matter was fully discussed. I have agreed with my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) that we shall take an afternoon some time this session to discuss the rural mail delivery.

Mr. DANIEL. I would like to ask if any provision has been made for increased paymen to the railway mail clerks, and also post office clerks generally in the outside service?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Of course I cannot give a pledge on behalf of the government, but I have given the clerks to understand that I was in favour of an increase, and the question is now under consideration. It will include not only railway mail clerks, but clerks in the post offices.

Mr. DANIEL. That is not in the item under discussion?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, I would have to bring in a Bill, because I would have to amend the schedule of the Civil Service Act for the outside service.

Mail Service, $4,130,700.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The increase of $60,000 in the railway mail service is on account of new lines and increased frequency on existing routes, particularly in western Canada. $27,000 of the increase is due to the extension of the service over the Grand Trunk Pacific between Winnipeg and Edmonton from tri-weekly to daily. The increase in the mail service by steamboat is due to the increase in the cost between Vancouver and Naas Harbour and intervening points. The Canadian Pacific railway are the contractors. The increase of $175,000 in the land service is to provide for the extension of rural mail delivery, for new post offices, increasing the frequency in the existing service and in the prices asked for when old mail contracts have expired and public tenders are invited. I could give a very detailed statement regarding the extension of the rural mail delivery system, but I think the House will agree that I had better defer that statement until the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) is in the House. We have extended the service very considerably, especially in Ontario, where the people take advantage of the new system. We are now manufacturing the boxes in Toronto and going as fast as possible on the new routes.

Mr. BARKER. Do I understand that other hon. members will have the same freedom of discussion of this item as the hon. gentleman for East Lambton.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Certainly, every one will have the same privilege. I referred to him particularly because he usually takes the leading part in discussing these matters.

Mr. HUGHES. In other words he is the coming Postmaster General?

Mr. LEMIEUX.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I must say that although he is a very persistent critic, we understand each other and he criticises in a very gentlemanly way.

Mr. HUGHES. I might draw attention to the fact that some time ago I communicated with the hon. minister's department about a mail clerk on the Irondale and Bancroft railway from Kinmount Junction to Baptiste lake. I hope he will take a note of that now.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I shall do so and see about it in the morning.

Mr. BOYCE. I have called the attention of the Postmaster General to the fact that the postal communication between Sault Ste. Marie and Steelton has given rise to complaints which, I believe, are well founded.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have had the facts before me, and have given instructions to the inspector to take up the matter.

Mr. BOYCE. And he will take up the matter and deal with it?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Certainly.

Mr. GOODEVE. The Postmaster General said that when this item came up I should call his attention to various applications that I referred to him. One is for a postal clerk on Arrow lake. I thought they put the case strongly when they pointed out that in one case it took five days to carry the mail six miles.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I took up these various questions in a letter to the hon. gentleman, which, if he has not received, he will find in his mail this evening.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I desire an explanation with regard to the dismissal of the postmaster at Escott. I put a question on the paper with reference to the matter. This postmaster was in charge of the office for thirty or forty years, and he is now a man of 85 years of age. No complaint was made to him, to the inspector or any person else. On the contrary, his services were approved by the whole community. But, without further notice than a letter from the Postmaster General that his services would be dispensed with on March 1, his successor was appointed. I would like to have the correspondence and to have an explanation why this was done. In answer to the question I put in the House the Postmaster General said that one reason for dismissing him was that he was leaving the premises in which the post office had been carried on. He had a deputy, and this man built a store not more than ten feet away from the post office, and intended moving into it with his business and the post office. But to serve a political party friend of the Minister of Railways, this old gentleman, who had always attended the office and given everybody satisfaction, was turned out on the street and a younger man put in.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I find that during the present session, my hon. friend put a question on the paper which was answered by myself. The question and the answer are as follows:

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds):

1. Who is the present postmaster at Escott, in the county of Leeds, province of Ontario?
2. What was the date of his appointment?
3. Who was the postmaster at the said office up to the appointment of the present incumbent, and how long had he occupied the position?
4. Was the retiring postmaster dismissed, or for what reason was he discontinued?
5. Under whose representations, and at whose instance was he so retired?
6. Had any complaint as to incompetency to discharge the duties of the said office been made against the retiring postmaster or his assistant? If so, what was the nature of such complaint, and by whom was it made?
7. Is the government aware that the postmaster who has been retired is said to be an old man, a cripple, and a man who was in need of the income derived from the position he occupied?

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Mr. F. T. Hutchison.
2. January 27, 1911.
3. Mr. George Dowsley, since December 1, 1891.

4, 5 and 6. It having been brought to the attention of the department that the postmaster was not giving his personal attention to the duties of the office, inquiry was made in the matter, and the inspector reported that the postmaster had not attended to the duties of the office for a long period. He farmed the office out to several persons in succession, and it was learned that the person then in charge of the office was obliged to vacate the premises. As the present location of the office was considered to be wholly satisfactory and very convenient, and it would not be in the public interest to have it changed, and as the postmaster was unable to give any attention to the duties of the office, it was deemed advisable to place the office in charge of some one who would keep it in the same premises and give it his personal attention.

7. The department has recently been informed that this is the case.

If my hon. friend will move for the papers, I will bring down the report of the inspector, and, if any injustice has been done, I am ready to repair it.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I know that an injustice has been done. I am well acquainted with this postmaster. He attended his office once or twice every day, and he had his assistant or deputy sworn in who attended to the work of the office and did it faithfully and well. The only question was of removing from one building to another ten feet away.

Mr. LEMIEUX. This change was made in the routine of the department. I will get the papers and will discuss the matter with my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor, Leeds).

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). If we allow this item to go through, when we are discussing some other item of the Postmaster General's, may we deal with this matter?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Surely.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I had a communication from one of my constituents the other day asking me to see the Post Office Department with regard to rural mail delivery in a certain section of my riding. I wrote my friend and asked him to give me a description of the route, and in his reply he said there were several routes which might be utilized, and he suggested that I ask the Post Office Department if they would send the inspector to look over the ground and see which would be the best route to utilize.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If the hon. gentleman will make his application to the department and send it to me, or if, when he is passing the department, he will see Mr. Anderson, who is in charge of that service, the inspector will receive the necessary order.

Post office—outside service—miscellaneous, $762,500.

Mr. LEMIEUX. This item shows an increase of $115,000 over last year. This is due to the expansion of the service. The number of officers has increased remarkably during the last few years. I have had compiled a set of statistics showing the growth of the department, which I will not weary the House with reading, but which I will hand in to 'Hansard':

REDUCTION IN RATES.

During the last ten years the following reductions have been made:

In 1900, the rate on newspapers from publishers to subscribers was ½ cent per pound; in 1910, the rate was ¼ cent per pound.

Newspapers to Great Britain and to all other parts of the empire were in 1900 charged at the rate of 1 cent per 2 ounces, or 8 cents per pound. In 1910, the rate from publishers in Canada to subscribers in Great Britain and many parts of the empire is ¼ cent per pound.

The rate on drop letters in cities and towns where there were letter carriers was in 1900 2 cents per ounce. In 1910, the rates are 1 cent per ounce.

Mr. LEMIEUX.

In 1900, all letters from Canada to foreign countries were 5 cents per ½ ounce. To-day the rate is 5 cents for the first ounce, and 5 cents for each subsequent ounce, where a letter weighs over one ounce.

Parcels for Great Britain were charged 16 cents for the first pound and 12 cents for each subsequent pound. In 1910, the rate is 12 cents per pound all through. Similar reductions were made in the parcel rates to many other countries.

Archives, $30,000.

Mr. HUGHES. How many employees are there in the Archives?

Mr. FISHER. Twenty-eight altogether. They come under the Civil Service Act.

Patent record, $17,000.

Mr. FISHER. The same sum as last year. It is printed in the Printing Bureau.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is it of any use?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. People who are interested in patents know that these reports are very valuable.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). What is the amount derived from the Patent office?

Mr. FISHER. About $200,000. It has risen much in late years.

Statistical year-book, $6,000.

Mr. JAMESON. I have seen in the library books of a similar character from Australia and some of the other colonies, but I think they are got up in better form than this one.

Mr. FISHER. I think the books my hon. friend refers to have been descriptive of the country, containing articles more or less of an advertising character. But the Year-book of Canada, being a pretty bulky volume, we think it better to confine it exclusively to statistics.

Mr. HUGHES. Who is the officer immediately in charge of the Year-book?

Mr. FISHER. The chief statistician is the officer responsible, while Messrs. Wilkins & Skead have been the officers in charge since I have been in the department. This is not a report of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. HUGHES. The Year-book includes a great deal of material that is included in the report of the American Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. JAMESON. One difficulty in connection with this Year-book is that it is somewhat late in reaching the public, it is many months after the fiscal year has closed. If it could be got into the hands of the public at an earlier date, its utility would be greatly enhanced.

Mr. FISHER. It is impossible to issue it more rapidly, because it is compiled from blue-books of the different departments; we have to wait until they are out and then compile the tables from them. It is generally four or five months after the close of the fiscal year before the departmental reports can be completed. I have asked that the first proof sheets be sent to the department, so that the compilation of the Year-book may be hastened, and we have succeeed in getting it out earlier. The Year-book of the present year is now in the hands of the printer. Under the circumstances, we can hardly get it out in less than ten months.

Printing and distributing reports and bulletins of farms, $10,000.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I would like to ask the minister if the bulletin recently issued by his department with reference to cattle raising will be distributed to the farmers of a member's constituency upon his application? The publication issued by the department two or three years on sheep husbandry was a very useful publication, and I had quite a number of requests for it from my riding.

Mr. FISHER. This item refers only to Experimental Farm reports. The bulletin my hon. friend refers to is issued by the Live Stock Commissioner. If a member sends us a list of farmers supposed to be interested in the subject of a particular bulletin, it will be sent to them as long as there is a supply on hand. Some members have asked me to send them large numbers of bulletins for distribution themselves; but in view of the fact that we have a large list of farmers in almost every riding of the country, I have always asked them to send the list to us, so that we might compare it with our own list, and thus avoid duplication.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I have sent a list on several occasions to the Live Stock Commissioner, and in every case I have found that the book has been immediately sent.

Mr. FISHER. That is the rule. I may say that that particular bulletin is a rather expensive one for which we have received a good deal of commendation. We send it to every farmer interested in meat production, but we do not like to have it distributed among those who will not read or study it.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). The method I adopted with regard to the book on sheep husbandry was to write a letter to each farmer in my riding informing him that the department had issued a publication containing very valuable information, and when a farmer sent me his name, I immediately sent it to the department and the book was sent to him.

Mr. EDWARDS. What objection has the department to supplying a member with a number of these bulletins for distribution by himself?

Mr. FISHER. There are two objections. The first is that we have ourselves a list of over 200,000 names of farmers in Canada who receive our bulletins, and if my hon. friend were to get say a couple of hundred bulletins to send to his county, the chances are that half or three-fourths of those to whom he would send them would be on our list and perhaps would have already received them. Many of these bulletins are very expensive and of great value, and should not be duplicated or wasted. Another objection is that it has sometimes been the practice for members to get their voters' list and employ a clerk to address envelopes by the score or the hundred, sometimes by the thousand, to their constituents, and send to them all kinds of documents. These bulletins are too valuable to be sent to people who are not interested in them and would not pay any attention to them or perhaps take them out of the post office. But I can assure my hon. friend that if he sends us a list of people who are interested in agriculture, their names will be put on our list and bulletins will be sent to them.

Mr. EDWARDS. It is just because I recognized that some of these bulletins are more valuable than others and cost too much money to be sent out indiscriminately that I brought the matter up. The Minister of Agriculture cannot possibly know whether he is sending a particular bulletin to the right people or not, but the member knows, and when an important bulletin came out, one too expensive to distribute in large quantities, the minister might ask the member to check over the list he had. In that way, I think he would get better results than he does now. The minister no doubt desires to place them where they would do the most good, but I think the supply could be distributed to far greater advantage if the members were consulted.

Mr. FISHER. The farmers' list is divided into beef men, dairy men, poultry men, and so on, and if the hon. gentleman sent us the name of a sheep man the sheep bulletin would be sent to him for example.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I understand that every member of a farmers' institute and agricultural society is on your list.

Mr. FISHER. If they send in the names they will be put on the list. Some years ago we had a list of 75,000 and the list is now over 200,000.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Are the names divided according to constituencies?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Would the minister have any objection to showing a member the list for his constituency?

Mr. FISHER. No objection at all.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I wrote to some of my constituents and they answered they were receiving these bulletins.

Mr. FISHER. Their names were on the list.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Minister of Agriculture gave some reasons why these bulletins were not sent to the members to be distributed by them, but he forgot to state that one reason was that if they were sent to the member he might send them to his constituents with his compliments and thus interfere with the credit which the minister seeks to retain for himself.

Mr. FISHER. Not at all, I would have no objection to that.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I suggest that the mailing list should be submitted to members once a year or once in two years for revision. I think you will find a number of dead men on these lists.

Mr. FISHER. I am reorganizing the system, and the lists will be sent not only to the members once a year, but the post masters will be asked to report the names of those whose mail is not called for.

Mr. EDWARDS. Will the minister supply on request a copy of the list for his constituency to each member?

Mr. FISHER. Certainly.

Mr. EDWARDS. Will the hon. gentleman accept my verbal request for the Frontenac list now?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. I will not promise to supply every member of the House immediately because that would take some time, but I would be glad to see that my hon. friend (Mr. Edwards) gets a list.

Tracadie Lazaretto and Leprosy generally, $11,000.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Are the leper patients increasing?

Mr. FISHER. The number always remains about the same.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). It is time to adjourn now.

Mr. FISHER. I would like to have a few more items passed but my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) has done very well, and I move that the committee rise.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Fisher, House adjourned at 11.14 p.m.

DEPARTMENT OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 156) to amend the Department of Railways and Canals Act. He said: It is the wish of the department to legalize the establishment of certain funds in connection with the Intercolonial railway. We have during the past two or three years laid aside a certain amount for equipment renewal purposes and a certain amount for rail renewal purposes, and I wish to add a certain amount for fire protection purposes. We have been doing this with the consent of the Auditor General, and he and the Finance Department think it advisable for us to have legislation to enable us to do this, so that there will be no question as to its legality.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SEED CONTROL ACT.

House in committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Seed Control Act by providing,—

(a) That the Governor in Council may make regulations determining the species of farm weeds which shall be included within the meaning of the term 'noxious weeds';

(b) That no person shall sell, offer, expose or have in possession for sale, for the purpose of seeding, any seeds of cereals, flax, grasses, clovers, or forage plants, except timothy, alsike or red clover and alfalfa, unless they are free from any seeds of noxious weeds and unless the receptacle containing them is marked with the name and address of the seller, the name of the kind of seed, and the names of the noxious weeds, the seeds of which are present in the seed sold, offered, exposed or had in possession for sale;

(c) That every person who sells, offers, exposes or has in his possession for sale for seeding any seeds of timothy, alsike, red clover or alfalfa, or any mixture containing them in or from any receptacle, shall cause such receptacle to be marked with the designation of the grade of seed;

(d) That no person shall sell, offer, expose or have in possession for sale any seeds of timothy, alsike, red clover or alfalfa, in or from any receptacle unless marked with the designation of the grade of seeds and come within the requirements prescribed for each such designation;

(e) That no person shall sell, offer, expose or have in possession for sale, for the purpose of seeding, any of the said seeds if the seeds of noxious weeds or other useless or harmful plants are present in the greater proportion in the seeds sold, offered, exposed or had in possession for sale than the maximum number of such seeds that may be permitted of the grade designated therefor.—Mr Fisher.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would the minister explain the general effect of the resolution?

Mr. HENDERSON. And how it differs from existing law?

Mr. FISHER. The main differences are that by this section the Governor in Council is authorized to name the seeds which should be considered the seeds of noxious weeds. There is now a list named in the Act, but we have found occasionally that a weed appears in a part of the country, that is very noxious indeed, but which is not contained in that list. We want to have authority to add it under such circumstances after due warning. We also want to bring flaxseed under the section dealing with grain seeds. There is a large amount of flaxseed raised in Canada, and we desire to include it in the list. We provide for the grading of timothy, alsike, red clover, or alfalfa, seeds under different standards of quality. Under the present Act there was a standard for No. 1, and then another standard up to which all grass seeds have to go. Seed merchants put on their seed that it was up to the government standard, and the farmers were tempted by that into believing that this was a high standard fixed by the government to ensure very good seeds, whereas, as a matter of fact it was a standard fixed as a minimum below which no seed could be sold. We now wish to grade the seeds Extra No. 1, No. 1, No. 2, No. 3, &c.

The changes have been very carefully considered, we have investigated the conditions in the country both in regard to the growing and handling of seeds, and the requests which are embodied in this Bill have come from seed growers in the country in large numbers, and have also been endorsed and supported by the seed merchants. The Seed Commissioner has been in close touch with the seed growers and merchants, and I think I am safe in saying that the changes meet with the universal approbation of both these classes.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not think that the consideration of the legislation in Committee of the Whole House will be satisfactory. It would be much better to refer it to the Agricultural Committee, where every one interested in agriculture may submit such questions to the experts as he desires.

Mr. FISHER. Former Bills on this and similar subjects have been dealt with in Committee of the Whole House, and the result has been satisfactory. The method of conducting business in the committee is more informal and less conducive to the production of a thoroughly satisfactory Bill than a discussion in a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BEST. Under section 9 a penalty of $1 is provided for the first offence. This penalty is not sufficient to afford any protection to the farmer. It would pay the dishonest merchant to buy dirty seeds and to sell them to the farmer and pay the penalty in each case, as he would thus make an extra profit of $1 or $2 per bag. A bag of seed would seed ten acres, and if the farmer had such a plot infected with weeds it might cause him a loss of $100 or $200. Even a fine of $25 would not be a protection.

Mr. FISHER. That has been the penalty under the present Act, and we have never had to prosecute the same offender twice. Prosecutions are published broadcast, and the injury to the reputation of the offender is so great that he does not repeat the offence. If such a condition as my hon. friend fears had resulted I would have asked the House to increase the penalty.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I endorse the suggestion of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) that the Bill be referred to the Agricultural Committee. There, we would know what we were doing, but here we are asked to pass amendments without understanding them. It is a very important measure, and we seem to be legislating in the dark.

Mr. FISHER. We have before us now only the resolution. On this the Bill will be founded, and will be before the members of the House for some time before being dealt with, after which, it will have to go through its three stages in the usual way. To discuss a Bill like this in the Committee of Agriculture, I think, would lead to much informal discussion, and probably not result in giving us a Bill in as good form as would discussion in Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. HENDERSON. I made the suggestion in the interests of economizing time. When we have a Committee on Agriculture which can properly deal with this Bill, it does seem reasonable that we should not take up the time of the House with the discussion. This will probably take up a whole afternoon, and probably another afternoon when the measure is in the Committee of the Whole. The Committee on Agriculture could devote time to it and leave the House free to attend to other matters. Besides, as suggested by the hon. member for East Peterborough (Mr. Sexsmith), we could have practical men come before the committee and explain the different clauses of the Bill, and so have a more thorough discussion.

Mr. FISHER. I am sorry that my judgment does not agree with that of my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson). A committee like that on agriculture, where there is no formality, where one member can discuss one point and another member another point, and where there can be practically no ruling of the Chair to keep the discussion to the point immediately at issue, would not lead to a satisfactory or complete discussion of the Bill. I think the Bill may reasonably go through in a couple of afternoons in the House, and I think it can be done better than if the Bill were referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. BLAIN. I endorse the valuable suggestion of my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson). If the Committee of Agriculture is to be of service to the country, it should have something to do.

Mr. FISHER. It has plenty to do.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask the minister, then, what have we been doing? I am a member of that committee, and very regular in my attendance at its meetings. We listen to valuable reports from officers of the Experimental Farm or other branches of the Agricultural Department—all very good. But the committee is a body of listeners, in the main, and I believe we ought to be a committee of doers as well. The policy of this House is to refer important measures to a committee. Almost every day some minister tells us that a certain measure is one that should receive careful consideration, and therefore should be sent to a committee. Why not follow the same course with this Bill? It would not detract from the lofty position of my hon. friend, Mr. Fisher, in his department. I am sure he would not have that small matter in consideration.

Mr. FISHER. Not at all.

Mr. BLAIN. I accept the hon. gentleman's statement at once. But I am in earnest when I say that the suggestion of the hon. member for Halton is a good one. In the main, the Committee on Agriculture is composed of farmers. It is rather a reflection on the chairman of that committee to suggest that he could not keep order if this Bill were under discussion.

Mr. FISHER. I did not suggest that.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) said that rulings could not be given, and he suggested, as I understood him, that there would be confusion in the committee.

Mr. FISHER. I said the rulings had not the weight of rulings of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House. The members of the Committee on Agriculture are much more free to ask questions and to change from one subject to another, to debate one clause now and another again than in Committee of the Whole House. I think that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) has had experience enough to know that.

Mr. BLAIN. I have had experience, but I would come to the rescue of my hon. friend the chairman of the committee. I think he can keep order in the committee; he has shown himself capable of doing so.

Mr. FISHER. Quite so.

Mr. BLAIN. What objection is there, then, to sending this Bill to the committee?

Mr. FISHER. Not because I have any objection, but I think it would be the privilege of any member of the committee to do what he wanted to in the way I have suggested, and the chairman, perhaps would have no right to restrict him, whereas the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House has that right and that authority.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman's point is that members could be curbed in the House, but not in the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. FISHER. Exactly.

Mr. BLAIN. Is that the estimate the hon. gentleman has of the members of the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. FISHER. I have had some experience of them.

Mr. BLAIN. That is not a remark we would expect from a gentleman occupying the lofty position of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher). I have faith in the Committee on Agriculture—in the members on both sides. I think that committee would give an excellent criticism of this Bill. Farmers experienced in growing seeds comprise its membership. I have no doubt that, if the original Bill had been scanned by the Committee on Agriculture, it would have included the different seeds that the minister suggests should be named in the present Bill. It is because new weeds, not known to my hon. friend (Mr. Fisher) and his department at the time this Bill was passed, have since become a menace in one part of Canada or another that he comes forward with this Bill to include these seeds under the law.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman does not understand.

Mr. BLAIN. I have not read the Bill, but did I misunderstand the discussion?

Mr. FISHER. Apparently.

Mr. BLAIN. Then, what is the explanation?

Mr. FISHER. This Bill will give the Governor in Council authority to name those seeds that are to be regarded as noxious weed seeds. There is a list of such seeds in the present law, but new weeds may appear, and we wish to give the Governor in Council power to include these without special legislation.

Mr. BLAIN. But certain seeds were named in the original Bill?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. I thought I was right on the main point. I was pointing out that, no doubt, had the committee considered the original Bill, the seeds which the minister thinks of adding to the list would have been made known to the committee, and could have been included under the Bill.

I am in earnest about this. I think the suggestion of the hon. member for Halton will appeal to members on both sides. It will give an opportunity for discussion untrammelled by rules that are necessary here but are not necessary in the committee. I appeal to the sense of fairness of the Minister of Agriculture whether he should not revise his opinion in reference to a Bill of this kind, one of the most important that could come before the House for consideration. Foul seeds are spreading in every part of Canada, and are a source of great expense and annoyance to the agricultural community; therefore the best this House could contribute should be put into the discussion of this measure, and then it can be considered in the House after it has been discussed in committee. I think the suggestion of my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) is a valuable one and should be accepted by the minister.

Mr. FISHER. Contrary to my judgment I am willing to accept the suggestion of my hon. friend, and let it go to the Committee on Agriculture, where amendments may be proposed before the Bill itself is brought down to the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I agree with the suggestion of my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson). His idea is that if the Committee on Agriculture made certain amendments and those amendments were accepted by the government, then the Bill will come back with those amendments, when it might be necessary, as a technical matter, that a new resolution should be put through the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no idea that the Agricultural Committee would amend the Bill or amend the resolution, they would simply send down their recommendations to the House, and let the minister deal with them in the House.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I am pleased to see that the minister has changed his mind, and not allowed that reflection to be cast on the Agricultural Committee. I do not see why any difference should be made between that and other committees. I have attended a number of different committees, and although in some of them the conditions of a bear garden occasionally prevail, nothing of that kind has ever been seen in the Agricultural Committee. It is generally conducted on sensible lines, and with reasonably good order. I congratulate the chairman of the committee on the stand he has taken, and the order he has maintained in that committee all through.

Mr. STAPLES. It is an annual occurrence for the Minister of Agriculture to come down to this House towards the close of the session with some amendments to his Seed Grain Act. The first occasion I had to get on my feet in this House about seven years ago was in relation to a question similar to that which is before the House to-day. It was quite evident then, as it is to-day, that the Minister of Agriculture is on the wrong track, and this Bill does not meet existing requirements. The minister may go ahead and legislate all he pleases along this line, and noxious weeds will not by any means be exterminated, far from it. The Minister of Agriculture claims to be a practical farmer, and he should know that the seed that goes on to the farm should be absolutely pure and clean, and he may legislate as he pleases, and he will never accomplish that until he adopts a policy whereby the farmers of this country may be furnished with clean seed. The only way the minister can do that, in my opinion, is to establish clean seed farms throughout the Dominion of Canada. If he would do that, and supervise them properly, and see that every farmer who has occasion to buy seed can go there and get it, and be guaranteed that it is absolutely clean, then the whole difficulty will be remedied. It would not cost a very large sum of money, the system would be self-sustaining. Every farmer in this country is anxious to get clean seed, and every farmer would be pleased to go there and get seed, and the minister would have no difficulty in getting the real value of that seed; in fact there would be a premium on it, as there always is on clean seed. If the minister would adopt that policy, the farmers would get cleaner and better seed, and they would get what they call at the present time, seed that is bred. The minister knows that you can increase the yield a great deal per cent by getting properly bred seed. Until that is done, the minister may legislate as he pleases, and the country will go on losing millions of dollars through noxious weeds; particularly in the west the farmers are losing millions of dollars every year. Look at the returns from the various provinces, and you will see that there is no other way in which farmers are losing as much money as they are losing through noxious weeds. The minister may come down here, as he does, every session with new Bills, and make long speeches—of course we know that the minister is noted for short speeches—but the time of the House is taken up in amending this Seed Grain Act session after session; whereas if he would adopt the policy I suggest the farmers would get clean seed and the noxious weed pest would be exterminated. The minister may reply that he has his experimental farm already, and that my suggestion would cost a great deal of money. I have told him my system would be self-sustaining. He can get in every municipality a section of land, or two sections if necessary, and put on a good practical farmer who would see that the land was properly cultivated, and that the best seed possible was produced. Although a great amount of money is gathered from the people, and about eighty per cent of it comes from the farmers, the minister allows other departments to get their hands into the treasury and take out what they please, while he neglects those for whom he is supposed to be looking after. I have always claimed that the Minister of Agriculture has not got for the farmers what they are justly entitled to.

Mr. FISHER. I would like to point out to my hon. friend that two years ago—I have not the information for the last year—the farmers of the three prairie provinces needed about 10,000,000 bushels of wheat for seed.

Mr. STAPLES. The minister certainly does not suppose that 10,000,000 bushels of seed are purchased by the farmers. There are hundreds and thousands of farmers that raise clean seed themselves, and it is only occasionally that they have to go outside and buy seed. Not one-tenth part of that amount is purchased. That shows how much the Minister of Agriculture knows about what is required.

Mr. FISHER. I understood my hon. friend a minute ago to say that it was my duty, or that it would be advantageous for me, to produce all the seed for the farmers of this country.

Mr. STAPLES. You misunderstood me.

Mr. FISHER. I am very glad; I will not not say any more.

Mr. STAPLES. It is simply what is required to be produced and that is all that this resolution provides for. Two years ago I purchased some lawn grass seed with the government's guarantee that it was clean, I sent it out and had it sowed on my lawn and it was chuck full of Canadian thistle and sow thistle.

Resolutions reported and agreed to.

Mr. FISHER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 157) respecting the Inspection and Sale of Seeds.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first and second time.

Mr. FISHER moved that the Bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope, now the minister has been good enough to grant the very reasonable request made, that he will be careful to see that when this Bill goes before the Committee on Agriculture he has the best expert in his department there to advise the committee. I think it is very desirable.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES SINCE CONFEDERATION.

On the orders of the day being called:

Mr. GRAHAM. In the answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska (Mr. Gilbert) on the 13th February figures were given of a comprehensive nature which might lead to a misunderstanding. Presumably what the hon. member desired was a statement of the amount paid by the Dominion in cash as subsidies since confederation. The answer to this is that the amount charged by the Department of Railways and Canals against railways on account of subsidies paid by the Dominion since confederation was $146,932,180, up to 30th June last.

THREATENED COAL STRIKE IN ALBERTA AND BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. HERRON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. King) if his department is doing anything to conciliate the difficulties between the mine operators and workers in the very serious situation which exists in southern Alberta, and perhaps also in British Columbia. This is a case where an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. After these men have gone on strike we all know it is a very difficult matter to bring them together, and I would like to impress upon the minister the seriousness of this case and to express the hope that his department is doing something to obviate the difficulty.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Herron) has brought up this subject because I think it is well that the members of this House and the people of this country should appreciate the very serious and critical state of affairs in the Crowsnest Pass at the present time. As my hon. friend knows the operators and miners held a conference last week with the object of arriving at an agreement if possible to govern their work and conditions for the next two years. There was a reason to believe that the conference would result in effecting an agreement. On the other hand, it occurred to me, having regard to past experience, that there was a possibility of the conference not arriving at a satisfactory agreement; so, I at once sent out to British Columbia Mr. McNiven, one of the officers of the Labour Department, to be on hand with the view of conferring with each of the parties in the event of an agreement not being reached. I understand that on Friday night of last week the two parties broke up without reaching an agreement, and that on Wednesday night of this week a meeting is to be held in Fernie at which a report by the delegates to this conference is to be made to the miners.

It is a little difficult to know just what can be done in the interval by the government, or by any one. Mr. McNiven is there for the express purpose of informing the miners and the operators that the good offices of the government are available to each of them to any extent that may be possible if they can suggest any way in which the good offices of the government can be used. Their attention is also being drawn to the fact that by legislation passed in this House a little time ago it is unlawful for a strike or a lock-out to be declared until a board of investigation has been appointed under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act. Knowing the feeling of the parties in a situation of this kind and fearing that some of them might think there would be delay in the appointment of a board, I have instructed Mr. McNiven to say that if they will make application, because the government cannot act without an application from one side or the other, and if he looks it over and finds it conforms with the requirements of the Act, a board will be granted on the receipt of the application by wire, so that there will not be any necessity for delay. In fact, I think that I can undertake to say that, if the parties themselves will assist towards that end, we could appoint a board inside of twelve hours.

Any party who is responsible for inciting a strike in this situation will be assuming a grave responsibility, and I am glad for that reason that my hon. friend has brought up the question, because I think it is important that all parties concerned in this threatened trouble should realize just how serious may be the consequences if any action is precipitated which is not in accordance with the law. The Industrial Disputes Act provides that:

> It shall be unlawful for any employer to declare or cause a lock-out, or for any employee to go on strike, on account of any dispute prior to or during a reference of such dispute to a board of conciliation and investigation under the provisions of this Act.

Penalties for causing a lock-out in violation of the Act are fixed at from $100 to $1,000 for each day or part of a day that such lock-out exists. The penalty for going on strike contrary to the provisions of the Act in the case of an employee is from $10 up to $50 for each day or part of a day that such employee is on strike. Then, there is this penalty for inciting to lock-out or strike:

> Any person who incites, encourages or aids in any manner any employer to declare or continue a lock-out, or any employee to go or continue on strike contrary to the provisions of this Act, shall be guilty of an offence and liable to a fine of not less than fifty dollars nor more than one thousand dollars.

I hope that in this matter wise counsels and moderate action will prevail, and that the parties will see the wisdom of deferring any precipitate action until all the means which the law has provided have been exhausted. I would say to my hon. friends opposite that if they, or any one can suggest, in view of the situation as it is at the present time, anything which the government or the Department of Labour in particular can do further I would be very glad, indeed, to consider any proposals and if possible to give effect to them.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MR. LAKE.

Mr. LAKE (Qu'Appelle). Before the orders of the day are called I desire to rise to a question of privilege. At the meeting held in Montreal on Saturday last the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), is reported in the Montreal 'Herald' to have made use of the following words:

I have told you what Mr. Haultain says. What does Mr. Lake say:

I approve of the agreement, the agreement is in the interests of my people, it will be in the interests of the people of Canada. What is my complaint against it? I complain against it because it does not include a larger measure of manufactured articles.

The words attributed to me are placed in quotation marks. If that is a correct report of what was said by the minister I desire to say that it is absolutely untrue as to any words I used, and it is an absolute misrepresentation of my meaning. My statement is on 'Hansard' so that there can be no question as to what it was. I cannot believe that the minister read the 'Hansard' and I can only imagine that he got his information from other sources. I am aware that the Liberal press has misrepresented the attitude which I have taken in regard to this matter, but that is not unusual and I did not think it necessary to call attention to it. But when a minister of the Crown makes such a statement it is of course quite another matter and I must raise my protest against it.

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say positively just now whether the words read are the exact words I used, but I heard the hon. member's speech and I read the 'Hansard' afterwards and I certainly did understand the hon. member to give this House to understand that he approved of the agreement, that he believed the agreement was in the interests of his people and of Canada, and he complained that there was not along with the agreement anything to indicate a reduction of the duties on some manufactured articles. That was the impression that his words and the reading of his speech conveyed to me. I did not undertake to quote the exact words of the hon. gentleman because I had not the 'Hansard' with me but I did state what was my interpretation of his words. If I have misrepresented him and if my understanding was not the proper one I can only regret it and I shall accept any explanation of his words which he chooses to put forward.

Mr. LAKE. I have made my explanation to the House and I do not presume it is necessary for me to make it over again. If the Minister of Agriculture did take that understanding from the words I used I can only say that he has shown a singular lack of intelligence in regard to the matter.

RECIPROCITY—BRITISH AMBASSADOR

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). Before the orders of the day are called I wish to point out that according to the associated press despatch the British ambassador leads the press to believe that the members of the Canadian government who represented us at Washington were warned by the British ambassador that commercial union would bring about political union. I would like to ask whether the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), and the Minister of Customs were warned in that regard.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend will quote any statement that the British ambassador made on the subject I shall be exceedingly happy to take note of it. I do not think it would be fair in a matter of that sort, to pay attention to some rumours in the public press.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. We assist the associated press by a money grant to send despatches to this country and I would naturally expect that these despatches would be correct. This is in accordance with a statement said to have been made in the British House of Commons.

Mr. FIELDING. In giving assistance to the associated press it was distinctly understood that while we would aid in getting this news we incurred no responsibility whatever for the character of the news sent.

CHARLES D. SHELDON.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I ask the Minister of Justice whether any action has been taken by this government to assist in bringing back to Canada, Charles D. Sheldon the former wizard of finance in Montreal who has been arrested in Pittsburg?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. Nothing in reference to that matter has come to my knowledge except the item I have seen in the newspapers, and I do not suppose that in the ordinary course of public business it will come to the knowledge of the Department of Justice. Everything relating to the administration of justice in the province is by the British North America Act assigned to the authorities of the province.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Are we to understand that the Department of Justice is not to take any action in reference to the fraudulent use of the mails?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. I can only say that if this man is brought back to Canada, any information in the matter which is brought before me, so far as it falls within the province of the Department of Justice, will have the fullest consideration.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I may say that I am informed that the Attorney General of the province of Quebec has issued a warrant against Sheldon which will still have effect when he is brought back to Canada.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. And is it the intention of the Postmaster General to prosecute him for the fraudulent use of the mails?

Mr. LEMIEUX. We will see what the Attorney General of Quebec will do.

SUPPLY—THE BOUNDARIES OF MANITOBA.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Supply.

Mr. STAPLES. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister if he has any information, official or otherwise, from the government of Manitoba as regards the proposition made by this government for the extension of the boundaries of that province. When the Prime Minister was in the west last summer he stated in my constituency and in my hearing that if Mr. Roblin would only come down to Ottawa he and Mr. Roblin could settle the boundary question in ten minutes. The Prime Minister knows that Mr. Roblin took the first opportunity to come to Ottawa, that he conferred with the right hon. gentleman, that they discussed the question for much longer than 10 minutes and that the result was that instead of making a satisfactory proposition to Manitoba the right hon. gentleman made such a proposition that both the government and the opposition in the legislature absolutely refused to accept it. In fact, they have taken it, and justly so, as an insult. All that the province of Manitoba asks is equal treatment with other provinces and I would like to ask the Prime Minister now what he proposes doing towards that little province; whether he intends to make another proposition or whether the matter is to stand as it has stood for many years much to the dissatisfaction of the people of Manitoba.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Staples), that up to the present time I have received no information as to the answer of the province of Manitoba to the suggestion made on behalf of the government of Canada for the extension of the boundaries of the province. I know at the present time no more about the matter than the hon. gentleman has himself seen in the newspapers. I presume that before long we shall have the official answers of the province and we shall then be in a position to discuss it in this House, when we shall be very glad to have the views of my hon. friend. It is quite true that in his constituency and in his presence, I stated that if Mr. Roblin would come to Ottawa and discuss the question I had hopes that in ten minutes we would dispose of it. I am sorry to say that in making that statement I presumed too much on Mr. Roblin, although I believe that we can still convince him. I may say that Mr. Roblin at the present time is simply uniting together two things which are quite separate, namely, the extension of the boundary and what terms should be given to the province in lieu of lands, and, another readjustment of the subsidies paid generally to the province of Manitoba as well as to the other provinces of the confederation.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think the Prime Minister is doing justice to Mr. Roblin in this connection. The right hon. gentleman said in the west that he could settle the question with Mr. Roblin in ten minutes. Mr. Roblin came here twice at least without getting any suggestion or answer from the Prime Minister; and even after going back to Manitoba he waited for a month or perhaps two months before any offer was made. I am speaking of reports which are current in the public press; if I am not correct, the Prime Minister will contradict me. Therefore, in saying that he relied too much on Mr. Roblin's moderation, or something of that kind, the Prime Minister is hardly doing Mr. Roblin justice. As I understand the circumstances, the offer eventually presented by this government to the province of Manitoba was in writing, in the form of a telegram or a letter. It was the first offer that this government had made with respect to financial terms that could be reasonably treated as such. The result of that has been that the Liberals and the Conservatives in the legislature of Manitoba have united in saying that that offer is one that cannot possibly be accepted by the province. Therefore, I see no reason for the suggestion of the Prime Minister that Mr. Roblin has not acted in an eminently reasonable manner in this connection. As I understand the contention of the province of Manitoba, it claims to be put either in the position of the two provinces to the west or in the position of the provinces in the east. In the one case it would be entitled to a very much larger financial allowance than that which the government has offered; in the other case, it would be entitled to its public domain and to compensation for the public domain that has been disposed of by this government in the past. That is the situation, and looking at it with every desire to be reasonable, I cannot see that very much fault can be found with the claim of the province. I do not think it can be attacked logically.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not intend to enter into a discussion of the matter at this moment. I will simply say that in my judgment the two positions my hon. friend has suggested are not necessarily connected. The extension of the boundaries of the province and the adjustment of the subsidies are two things apart, and we will discuss them later on.

THE MARKETING OF CHEESE AND BUTTER.

Mr. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac). I desire to bring to the attention of the House, and more especially the Minister of Agriculture, a matter which I think should be legislated upon before the close of this session. Some weeks ago a deputation of five or six hundred dairymen waited on the government and asked for protection in the marketing of cheese similar to that granted to the grain growers of the west in the marketing of their wheat. I understand that the grain buyers are obliged to give guarantee bonds covering the amount of their purchases of wheat, thus protecting the farmers of the west against possible loss through the failure of any buyers who are financially irresponsible. Canada, I believe, exports more than three times as much cheese as all the other countries of the world put together, so that it is a very important industry to Canada as a whole. It is particularly important to eastern Ontario and western Quebec. In the past many failures have taken place owing to the buyers being financially irresponsible, resulting in serious loss to many farmers. I think that steps should be taken before the close of this session to provide against the possibility of similar losses during the coming season. If legislation of this kind were introduced, I believe it would receive the general support of members on both sides of this House, and be approved by the country. It could not be successfully introduced by a member on this side, because the government apparently are jealous of any legislation put through by members on this side of the House. It should be introduced by a member of the government. I wish to add a word with regard to numerous complaints that have been made as to the weighing of cheese in Montreal, and as to the quality specified by the buyer. Heavy losses have been sustained by the producers of cheese through buyers cutting the weight and claiming that the cheeses were inferior in quality, the price in consequence being placed very much below what it should be. Some years ago there was appointed by this government an official referee, whose duty it was to decide any disputes as to the weight of cheese, and I think that official should be reappointed. His services were dispensed with because it was urged that there was not enough for him to do; but the Chief Dairy Commissioner has stated that the very presence of the referee had a good effect in so far as the weighing of the cheese was concerned. I think that this government could easily provide work for an official referee and a staff of experts to look after the marketing of our cheese and butter. I think there should be certainly at Montreal and possibly at other places a government cold storage warehouse for the reception of cheese, butter and other perishable products, and that that warehouse should be free to the public. If we had there a staff of experts who would not only see the cheese or butter weighed, but would test it and stamp it with the government's certificate as to its quality it would have a very valuable effect and would stimulate the producers to produce only the very best quality and would put us on a more equal footing with some other countries which have adopted a similar plan. The fact of our cheese before export having been examined by competent men who would stamp on it its quality and guarantee its weight, would be an advantage to our cheese in foreign markets. The government would be remiss in its duty if it did not take steps to provide effectively against loss through the failures of buyers in Montreal who are practically irresponsible.

Mr. FISHER. Unfortunately owing to an engagement of long standing I was unable to be present when the deputation met the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but I have gone over their recommendations and discussed them with my colleagues, and some of my officers. I do not think that the deputation advised the plan suggested by my hon. friend of having a government cold-storage warehouse available to the trade. That would be a very large undertaking, and would interfere with private enterprise, perhaps in an objectionable way and I doubt the advisability of such a course. We could not require shippers to put their products in our cold-storage, and we would be entering into competition with private cold-storage. I doubt if we could arrange for a system of management of that cold-storage which would be satisfactory to the shippers. I recognize that in New Zealand they have a system of government inspection, grading and stamping of dairy goods, but that is done in a way which I do not think our dairy producers or the dairy trade would like to have here. It would mean that the goods would have to be delivered to the government warehouse, where they would have to be inspected, graded and stamped and then they would have to be wholly controlled by government officers until they were shipped out of the country. That is the case in New Zealand. I do not think our dairy trade would like that, they have certainly never asked for anything of the kind in Canada. If the government inspected and stamped these goods, and then allowed the shippers to have control of them, it might bring discredit on the stamping because the goods might be held in such a way that their quality might deteriorate and still they would go forward with the government stamp as having the government approval and grading. That would be a very risky thing for the credit of our dairy products.

There are obstacles in the way of doing what the deputation suggested. My hon. friend spoke of the weighing of butter and cheese at Montreal. Here I have to say most emphatically that the dairy sellers in the country have not done justice to themselves in utilizing the services of the official weigher of the city of Montreal for their own protection. Under the Act, boards of trade are authorized to appoint official weighers. The Montreal board has an official weigher. I have never yet heard a complaint of any certificate issued by the official weigher of the Board of Trade of Montreal. Mr. Cameron, the only official weigher of the Board of Trade of Montreal, has told me and written me himself that he is able and willing to weigh all shipments of dairy products to Montreal, but his services are very little availed of by the dairy shippers of Ontario and Quebec. The produce dealers of Montreal without any legal authority, under no legislative Act of either the local or Dominion parliament, have appointed a weigher of their own, a Mr. John McLeod. They have all the goods that are shipped to them weighed by Mr. John McLeod, and the certificate which they make use of, and on the authority of which they cut the prices of shipments made to them are of no more value in law than the weights marked by the makers at the cheese factory or butter factory before the cheese goes on, and yet our dairy shippers have allowed themselves to be imposed upon by certificates of that gentleman. Mr. John McLeod is the servant of the purchaser in Montreal. He is paid by the dealers there who purchase the dairy products. He is their officer and servant. The shipper of dairy products from outside Montreal who ships in there, and has his bill cut on the strength of a certificate of Mr. John McLeod, is being imposed upon; he has no reason at all to accept that certificate, and he can at any minute he likes, refuse to do so, and secure his money. Any who are doing that to-day are doing it with their eyes open, for, as long as six or seven years ago, I went into that matter with the butter and cheese branch of the board of trade. I made the statements I am now making, published them in a letter over my own name in the press, and had the subject explained at a number of the cheese boards and dairy boards in the country. I have said over and over again that, until some fair complaint was made against the legal weighers of these articles in Montreal, I could not take any steps in the matter. Mr. Cameron is the only legal weigher of these articles or any other articles that come into Montreal, and I have never yet heard a single complaint in regard to the certificates issued by Mr. Cameron. I believe his weighing is absolutely fair and right. But, if the people who send their goods to Montreal will not insist that the official weigher shall be employed, that is their fault.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will the shippers to Montreal be equally well paid for the goods weighed by the board of trade weigher as for the goods weighed by themselves?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say. That is a matter which must be left to them. Purchasers in Montreal have the right to pay what they please.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is not the minister aware that they practically force the shippers to ship direct to them and accept their weights?

Mr. FISHER. That is a matter of bargain between the buyer and the seller. If there were a dozen official weighers in Montreal, the same thing might as easily occur. If I were to appoint an official weigher to-morrow, he would have no more authority than Mr. Cameron has, and the purchaser of butter and cheese could refuse to have his weighing as well as Mr. Cameron's. I am sorry to say that, in many cases the sellers in the country allow themselves to be dictated to in their dealings with the buyers in the city. But they have the remedy in their own hands; they need only insist upon their rates. If there were a dispute and it were carried to the courts, the certificate of Mr. John Macleod would have no more authority than the marking on the box of cheese or tub of butter by the maker in the factory. It would be the testimony of a private individual and no more. The certificate of Mr. Cameron, on the contrary, is of official character.

Mr. EDWARDS. Does the minister mean by Mr. Macleod, the official referee appointed by the government?

Mr. FISHER. He never was an official referee, nor was he employed by the government in any way. I said he was an employee of the Butter and Cheese Association of Montreal. His certificate carries no more weight with the public than the certificate issued by a warehouseman.

Mr. EDWARDS. The certificate of the official referee would.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Cameron is there as official weigher of the Board of Trade of Montreal. But what is the use of having two sets of official weighers when there is already an official weigher appointed under the law by the authority of the board of trade, why appoint another man to do the same work? I cannot see any reason for it. The parliament of Canada passed an Act providing that the official weighers in the cities should be appointed by the boards of trade. That is one of the things that is handed over to the boards of trade.

Mr. EDWARDS. Why did the government appoint an official referee and subsequently dispense with his services?

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend (Mr. Edwards) should keep the two things separate. The official referee has not anything to do with weights. He was there to decide disputes as to quality——

Mr. EDWARDS. And weights.

Mr. FISHER. No, the hon. gentleman is mistaken. It was I who appointed the official referee and gave him his instructions, and those instructions were to see whether the butter or cheese was of the quality of 'finest,' as it is commonly called in the Canadian trade. The referee was appointed because of some complaints. And for the first year there were quite a number of references made to him and he dealt with them, I think, in a most satisfactory way. He was appointed, if I remember well, in 1901. He was a very efficient man, and his judgment was recognized. The position of official referee was held by Mr. A. W. Woodard until 1906 or 1907. Other gentlemen were appointed until 1910, when no referee was appointed. The reason for the non-appointment was that references to the referee had practically ceased and the referee was doing nothing most of the time. In 1910, I am informed, there were only three or four applications for the referee, and I confess that we did not consider it was in the public interest to keep a man at a high salary—because a man for such a position had to have a man of high qualifications and character—doing nothing all summer. Had he been useful, had he had work to do, we would have continued the appointment. There was no desire to save the money, if the money was doing any good, but, so far as we could see there was practically no need for an official referee in Montreal. I point out to my hon. friend that the referee had to do only with the question of quality. Weighing is under the control and management of the official weigher, and I do not think it would be wise to interfere with the authority of the appointee of the Board of Trade of Montreal.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there anything in the law which says that the weight of an article as given by the official weigher must be accepted as correct, in other words, that his evidence in a court of law would be given more credence than the evidence of a private individual who had weighed the same article?

Mr. FISHER. I think there is a clause in the Inspection and Sale Act which says that the certificate of an official weigher should be taken as prima facie evidence of the fact. Now, I will say a word or two about the licensing system which has been proposed. I appreciate the difficulties that have arisen, and I regret the losses that have occurred through the purchases of butter and cheese by regular buyers. I fear, however, that if we were to restrict in any way the number of people who might buy and sell butter and cheese as freely as they do other commodities, we would land ourselves in greater difficulties than we are in now. My hon. friend has cited the experience of the grain trade in the west. While I have not, I am not thoroughly familiar with the working of their system, I know licenses are issued, and I believe that these licenses carry with them some kind of guarantee which is supplied to the chief commissioner or some other official; the buyers of grain have to supply a guarantee. I want to point out that if we did that in the city of Montreal, we should probably have to do it elsewhere, and we would probably reduce considerably the competition in the purchase of dairy products. The number of men who deal in these things in the ordinary way is already rather small, and if we were to restrict to such as took out licenses and gave a guarantee, and the right to purchase butter and cheese from producers, I fear we would interfere with the competition in these articles and reduce the price to consumers. As a matter of fact to-day we do not know when butter and cheese are bought for export or for home consumption. I have known instances where a grocer goes out and buys large quantities in competition with the regular dealers, but he may do so only occasionally. An individual who thinks he knows something about the business may want to buy dairy products and put them into his store, but if he is obliged to have a license and to give a guarantee, he cannot do it, because he would not think it worth while to take out his license. Therefore, I fear that it would work to the greater detriment to the sale of our butter and cheese at the factories.

Mr. EDWARDS. The dairy men themselves do not agree with the minister.

Mr. FISHER. Some of them do not, and some of them do. The question has been discussed for some time. I know that the deputation my hon. friend refers to gave that view, and I venture to think they did not consider the other side of the question very thoroughly. I know there are a number of dairymen who have expressed the fear I have just uttered. I think the result would be that comparatively few men would take out their licenses and furnish the guarantee, and that a closer monopoly would be established than now exists. True, there have been a few failures. I think in the last quarter of a century there have been comparatively few among purchasers and dealers in dairy products. None of the great houses, none of the big dealers, have failed, within my memory. I do not think the hurt to the farmers has been as great as would be the restriction and the monopoly of the right to purchase. I am glad to discuss this question, and have discussed it with my deputy, and with the Department of Trade and Commerce, and will do so again. The views I am now giving are, I think, based on the best interests of the trade. I am not wedded to my opinion, I am only giving it as an opinion, perhaps not absolutely final. I want to put that side of the question before the hon. member and before those for whom he is speaking, so that they may realize that what they are proposing has its dangers—dangers which are very considerable, and which may work greater harm than their proposals would work good.

Mr. KIDD. If the minister would appoint an official weigher at Montreal it would remove a grievance of which the farmers and dairymen have been complaining for years.

Mr. FISHER. What difference would a second official weigher make?

Mr. KIDD. He would settle the disputes that arise in Montreal.

Mr. FISHER. Will not Mr. Cameron do that to-day? He has every power of an official weigher.

Mr. EDWARDS. I have not the pleasure of Mr. Cameron's acquaintance, therefore, this matter cannot be taken as having any personal bearing. I do not question his standing at all in any respect but in the minds of some people, possibly entirely wrongly, there is the impression that in a dispute as to weights between a shipper, say, from Frontenac, or any other part of the country, and a buyer, a resident of Montreal, the official weigher in Montreal, appointed by the Montreal Board of Trade, and living there, would be influenced in favour of a fellow resident of his own city rather than a stranger. Many of the shippers of cheese have felt that about the only way they could have any guarantee that they were getting correct weights was to follow their shipments down to Montreal, a course entailing expense and trouble, I do not think they would have that impression with regard to an official weigher appointed by this government.

Mr. FISHER. The shippers allow themselves to be imposed upon by the certificate of a man who is not an official weigher. I would immediately yield if anybody could show me that Mr. Cameron's certificate has been disputed. The trouble is that the sellers accept Mr. McLeod's certificate. Mr. McLeod is a servant of the man who buys and they allow themselves to be imposed upon. It is not the certificate of the official weigher in Montreal with which they are confronted but it is the certificate of an absolutely irresponsible employee of the other side of the bargain. Mr. Cameron is there, he has every authority that anybody I could appoint could have, and until his certificates are shown to be bad, unfair or unjust, it seems to me that it is not necessary to appoint a second man. I do not think that the hon. member has realized that it is not the official weigher's certificates that have been complained of. If they had been then there would be reason for appointing a second official weigher or changing the official weigher, but that is not the case. It is the certificates of Mr. McLeod, who is not an official weigher but who is the servant of the buyer and who therefore is under the control of the buyer, that are complained of. Mr. Cameron is not under the control of the buyer, he is under the control of the Board of Trade of Montreal and he has no responsibility and is under no obligation to any butter or cheese association.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The position taken by the Minister of Agriculture is a most pitiable one. The minister knows full well that in the past ten years the members on this side of the House have been trying to force him to appoint a government weigher at Montreal. He knows full well that even his own officials have told him that that is the position for him to take. Mr. Parmelee who went down and examined into this question showed him the utter folly it would be to continue the system which now prevails at the port of Montreal. The men in the dairy industry of this country are being fleeced out of hundreds of thousands of dollars every year, the minister knows it and yet he says let these men go to the courts and collect from the exporters the amount that is due to them. That is nothing but a baby position for any man to take; that is not the position that the Minister of Agriculture should take. If the Minister of Agriculture would appoint a government weigher at Montreal and force all shipments to be weighed by that government weigher, not by an official appointed by the Board of Trade, but a man in the employ of this government, whose duty it would be to weigh all the butter and cheese shipped through the port of Montreal, the people would be satisfied that they had at least justice. But at the present time the minister says that it is open to the buyers to simply give any weights they wish of butter and cheese sent for export. I certainly think it is a most pitiable position for the minister to take on this question because we have brought it to his attention year after year and he knows that the farmers are being fleeced out of hundreds of thousands of dollars every year and that that money goes into the pockets of the exporters in Montreal. He knows that if he would appoint a government weigher at Montreal and require all goods sent there to be weighed by him the exporters could not take the advantage that they are taking of the farmers to-day. I regret indeed to see the minister take such a position on this question, but we have brought this matter before this House year after year for the last ten years and we do not seem to be able to pound into the head of the minister the fact that it is necessary to appoint a government weigher at Montreal. Every little municipality throughout the country appoints its own weigher and forces practically everything that goes to the market to be weighed on the market scales. If we had a government weigher at Montreal there is no reason why all shipments of butter, cheese and dairy products should not be weighed by him with the result that the shippers of the country would receive their just dues in this regard.

Mr. THORNTON. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to a point in connection with the sale of cheese in the old country. Two years ago I called his attention to the fact that Canadian bacon was being sold in England as United States product. Now, we have the fact before us that Canadian cheese is being sold continuously in England as American cheese. Something should be done to prevent misrepresentation of that kind. In proof of the statement I make, I want to call the attention of the House to the 'Weekly Report' issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce and bearing date of March 6, 1911. This contains the report of Mr. W. T. R. Preston, who, under the heading of 'Canadian cheese confused with United States product,' says:

> Upon that point a recent incident which came under the notice of this office occurred at one of the largest stores in London. A well known Canadian cheese manufacturer asked a clerk in the dairy section of the store in question for a famous brand of Canadian cream cheese and also for ordinary Canadian Stilton. The assistant stated that he kept only United States brand, as there was little demand for Canadian. As the clerk proceeded to cut off the required quantities, the purchaser recognized the mark as being a Canadian brand of which he was actually the manufacturer, and the Stilton was also seen to be by the mark as coming from within a few miles of Toronto.

If this thing is allowed to go on it is a great injustice to the Canadian cheese trade. Something should be done to protect the Canadian cheese trade so that the United States would not get the credit for what is actually a Canadian product.

Mr. FISHER. I do not dispute the incident, but I have no knowledge of it. As a general rule Canadian cheese commands a higher price in the English market than American cheese, and I do not see how any one would want to sell Canadian cheese as American except it be some foolish man who does not know the difference.

Mr. THORNTON. There is no question about the fact; it is stated by our trade commissioner.

Mr. FISHER. I am not disputing it at all.

Mr. SCHELL. I want to correct the idea that seems to prevail with some people that the farmers are being robbed by the cheese buyers. I take exception to that statement. I have had a good deal to do with the weighing and handling of cheese in Oxford factories, and I know that the cheese maker or the salesman at the factory usually does the weighing and the buyers almost invariably accept the weights given them. Occasionally they weigh half a dozen cheeses or so, and if they find them varying sufficiently to justify suspicion that they were not properly weighed they make a reduction of say 100 pounds or 150 pounds as the case may be, but usually the weights given to the buyers are paid for. I think that is the custom in other places as well as in Oxford. If the farmers are robbed by the buyers it is because of carelessness on the part of the cheese maker or the salesman in whose hands the weighing of and settlement for the cheese is left. If the weights the buyers propose to pay for are not satisfactory to the salesman he does not have to accept whatever amount is offered. I think it is only fair to the cheese buyers that I should make this statement.

Mr. NESBITT. I attended a meeting of the eastern dairymen, and when I returned home I took particular care to make inquiry from the salesmen of our different factories, and they all assured me they had no trouble whatever of that kind

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Did the hon. gentleman ask how much extra cheese and butter they put into each package they sent to Montreal?

Mr. NESBITT. I explained to them the statement that had been made, and their answer was that they had no complaint of that kind to make.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

SUPPLY.

To encourage the production and use of superior seeds for farm crops and enforcement of the Seed Control Act, $60,000.

Mr. FISHER. The increase of $10,000 is due to the enlargement of the work all along the line.

Mr. FOSTER. The expenditure of $50,000 for seeds alone is a pretty large expenditure, and the minister might tell us briefly his system, and what the ultimate aim is; whether this is simply to be continued until the time when the farmers may through their associations or individually look after their own seeds, and if so, how long does the minister expect this appropriation will be necessary?

Mr. FISHER. This covers the expenditure for the administration of the Seed Control Act. There is a chief inspector for the maritime provinces, one for Quebec, one for Ontario, one for Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and one for Alberta and British Columbia. We have a seed laboratory at Ottawa where we test samples of seeds, and we have a subsidiary laboratory at Calgary where we test seeds for the western country.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the laboratory cost?

Mr. FISHER. The officials are under the Civil Service Act, and I would have to pick them out to see what the cost is. There are five clerks in the third division, subdivision (a) with salaries ranging from $1,150 to $1,200, and 12 clerks in subdivision (b) including two typewriters and stenographers.

Mr. FOSTER. How many clerks are there in Calgary?

Mr. FISHER. In addition to the superintendent, who is in charge of the whole work in Alberta and British Columbia, there is one permanent clerk, and two temporary clerks who are employed at the rate of $50 a month for a short time in the spring when a great many seeds are being tested. Then, there are the expenses of the laboratory besides. We are asking for $4,000 for the whole laboratory supply, for which last year we had $3,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the minister tell us the cost of administering the Seeds Control Act?

Mr. FISHER. It is about $4,000, not including the salaries.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the next item?

Mr. FISHER. The salaries of the outside service, for which we are asking for $12,000; it was $10,000 last year. For travelling expenses we are asking for $10,000; last year the amount was $8,500. For office supplies generally, we are asking for $2,500. For the publication of bulletins we are asking for $9,000 as against $6,000 last year. The work of preparing these bulletins is done by the staff. We are also preparing a book upon the grasses of Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it going to be an edition de luxe?

Mr. FISHER. No, but a very well illustrated book. There is also an item of $12,000 for seed fairs and field competitions. We encourage the holding of fairs all over the country for competition in the judging of good seeds. We pay practically all the expenses except the cost of the prizes. The field competitions are carried on largely in co-operation with the Provincial Department of Agriculture, for the purpose of encouraging the growing of good seeds. Wherever a provincial department of agriculture asks for our aid, we supply the judges and send out the formulae, rules, &c., of the competitions. We also give encouragement to the Canadian Seed Growers' Association, which has been in existence ten or twelve years, and has a large number of members in all parts of the country, of course who are engaged in the production of seed and in what is called the breeding of seed. That association issues certificates for the pedigrees of seeds, to show that they are pure seeds grown under favourable conditions. We make a grant to the association of $4,000 a year. We also give aid to provincial exhibitions to the amount of $2,500 a year, wherever a provincial government organizes a seed exhibition and applies for this aid.

Mr. FOSTER. How many of these exhibitions were held last year?

Mr. FISHER. They were held in every province except British Columbia. To most of them we give about $250 each. Ontario did not apply for it last year.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the department had knowledge that these exhibitions have excited interest and proved successful?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, very much so. Our officers are always present at them. That is practically the list of items.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like a little information as to what the laboratory does. I find there are 19 clerks and part of the time of a superintendent for Alberta and British Columbia; the salaries amount to about $16,000, and the expenses to about $4,000. What does the country get for that expenditure in the way of education?

Mr. FISHER. We receive the samples from the farmers, and a great many from seed dealers who wish to know if the seed they are handling is up to standard. We are obliged to reply promptly, we get about 70 samples a day and it takes about an hour for a clerk or employee to do a sample. A little over 7,000 samples were tested last year. The samples come generally from all the provinces, but the greater number from Ontario, which is the great grass seed producing province.

Mr. FOSTER. How many would there be at Calgary?

Mr. FISHER. Not quite a thousand. Two or three years ago when there was a great deal of frosted wheat in the Northwest we received more than 14,000 samples, because the farmers were suspicious of their seed grain.

Mr. FOSTER. Do any of the provinces operate seed laboratories?

Mr. FISHER. No. I may say that we have received high encomiums on the work done. There is an organization of seed laboratories in the United States, and they have frequently praised the work here very highly.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any means by which the information acquired through testing the samples is given to the farmers generally, or is the benefit solely to the farmer who sends in the sample? That is, do you give information as to the best varieties in reference to germination, &c.?

Mr. FISHER. We do not undertake to say whether generally timothy would be the best seed or alsike. We keep the information here of all tests and it is useful in preparing our dicta as to the best varieties to use.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose that 7,000 or 8,000 farmers then get the benefit of this service? If you were to make it so general as to be useful to the great majority of farmers, it would involve a great expense. You make no charge for the services rendered the farmers? How is that carried on in other countries?

Mr. FISHER. In Europe the farmers pay for it. In the work in our department we have never charged the farmers for anything we do for them. In addition to what the farmers send in we collect large numbers of samples through our own agents, especially from dealers, and we always publish the results and give the names of the dealers in these cases, so as to be a check on them, to help advertise the good ones and condemn the bad ones. We do not do that with the samples sent in by the farmers.

Mr. FOSTER. Are the laboratory help employed all the time?

Mr. FISHER. During the busy season they are very strenuously employed. At other times, when there is not such pressure, they are employed in sending out bulletins and in carrying on investigations.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). How many copies of the book on farm weeds are on hand?

Mr. FISHER. We have issued the second edition, which has been largely distributed. We found it was an expensive book, and beyond the distribution to members of parliament and to some schools and libraries, &c., the King's Printer has been selling the book at a dollar a copy. It costs us about $1.30 a volume, but we wish to give it as wide a circulation as possible, and so have been charging only $1.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). A couple of young men from my riding, students in the Agricultural College at Guelph, wrote me stating that every other student in the college had a copy of this work from the members of their several counties. I applied to the minister and was politely told that I might have the book if I paid for it. Is the minister so strict as that in the distribution?

Mr. FISHER. At the beginning we gave out a certain number to every member of parliament. Since that, I have been answering every member as my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart, Lanark) was answered. I confess that I have paid for a good many copies myself and sent them out. But the department has tried to be strict in the distribution, because the book is too good for general circulation. Every college library and every school library is furnished on application, and the agricultural colleges have not only one, but several copies. But we have not undertaken to give them to each pupil in the agricultural colleges.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). I wanted to know if there was any favouritism in this matter.

Mr. FISHER. There is not.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). I think the minister should make an exception in the case of boys studying agriculture, and that in case of application on their behalf the minister might order copies to be sent them.

Mr. FISHER. That would mean a pretty wide distribution. In the Agricultural College at Guelph alone, I think it would mean about 1,200 copies a year. There are a good many of what are called short course men.

Mr. STAPLES. Does the minister supply the municipalities that make application?

Mr. FISHER. I think copies of the first edition were sent to the secretary-treasurers of the municipalities.

Mr. STAPLES. Throughout the entire Dominion?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, whatever we have done in this direction applies to the whole Dominion. But we found that many of the secretary-treasurers took the book for themselves instead of leaving it in the archives of the municipal council. And the same way with school teachers—in many cases the teacher, on leaving school, took the book with him. Now, we send them only to schools that have libraries.

Mr. STAPLES. Is a letter sent to the secretary-treasurer of the school district informing him that the book is for the school library only?

Mr. FISHER. Each book is stamped to indicate that it is for the school library. When a school applies, the inspector must state that the school has a library or the book is not sent.

Mr. HENDERSON. Like the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) I had an application from a young man from my own county attending the Agricultural College at Guelph. I applied to the minister and was told that I should apply to the King's Printer who would supply me at the nominal price of $1 a copy. I had not been accustomed to pay for these publications, and I wrote to the young man and told him that the government sent these books in such cases as his only when they were paid for. But I confess I have no sympathy with this policy of the minister; I think it is false economy. What is the use of this parliament legislating against noxious weeds if the men to whom it is most important to instruct in this matter are not given the information which the minister possesses? I think the minister will find that there are hundreds of thousands of dollars spent in this country for purposes not half so commendable as supplying these students with information which will be valuable to the country as well as to themselves.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) struck the right note in his closing words. I have a great deal of sympathy with the minister who wants to make a show of being economical, though he is mighty extravagant in everything else. But the question has to be settled how far the government is to go into the publishing business, especially in publishing editions de luxe. Well, some one I think has been issuing an edition de luxe.

Mr. FISHER. There has been one issued by the Geological Survey.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought so. It would be nice for the government to go to work and get out all these beautiful things and put them into that splendid form, and send one to every family in the Dominion. But the question is how far the government can go into this matter of book publication and of free distribution. That is a matter which we cannot settle too lightly. But there is one thing that might be done, if the government is determined to make expenditures of a certain sort which are absolutely useless, if they would take the suggestion of my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson). For instance, about half a million dollars has already been spent on the Newmarket canal, and with that money all the agricultural students in the Dominion of Canada for years could be given this edition de luxe.

Mr. STRATTON. I agree with hon. gentlemen opposite as to the distribution of this book. It would be a good idea if the Minister of Agriculture would bring about a more general distribution. I have quite a number of applications from young men in my own county, and I have found that by sending a dollar a copy to the department I am able to get the book. I see the difficulty the minister has in drawing the line. But I think it would be desirable if he could find some way by which members would be able to send the book to the young men in their constituencies that really require it for an education. Naturally, the minister is anxious not to charge his department with an unnecessary expenditure, because this is an expensive book. But it could be got out in a less expensive form, and be brought more generally into the hands of those who really desire it and need it for educational purposes. I agree in the idea of a wider distribution.

Mr. FISHER. I must take exception to the remarks of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) about this book being an edition de luxe. While it is a very handsome and well got up book, at the same time the expense is confined almost entirely to the preparation of the plates and the printing of these illustrations in colours. But that is an essential, there is no luxury about it, is is an essential to the farmer and students who use the book. The letterpress was prepared by my own department, and the printing does not cost any more than that of an ordinary book. Of course, the binding is strong, as it should be for a book that is printed for distribution. There is no luxury about the book unless you choose to call beautiful illustrations a luxury.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not agree that it is essential that the colours should be reproduced in all their beauty. There are other distinguishing marks besides colours which divide books off into families and species. All that is necessary for an intelligent observer is that he should have these distinguishing things put into form, and then put alongside of it the different colours if you want to. Now that you have got the plates you might get this book out for a shilling or not much more.

Mr. NESBITT. I would like to say to hon. gentlemen opposite that they are not alone in being obliged to pay for the book. They might think that simply because they sit on the other side of the House they would be told that they must purchase the book. I have been obliged to pay for the books I have got from the department. I do not agree with the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) that the book should not be published in natural colours representing the various weeds. That is a feature which is of great assistance to those who are studying the question of weeds, it is essential that they should be represented in their natural colours. Of course I may not know as much about weeds as the hon. member for North Toronto, but that is the view that I take of this question. Nor do I agree that it would be of any great public utility to send a book out broadcast to people who do not appreciate it. It can be found in all reference libraries. The minister has distributed it very freely, and he says he has sent it to every member of parliament free. I have distributed mine where I thought they would be most useful, mainly to schools. The book is, of course, found in all the agricultural colleges, and I venture to affirm that any student who is anxious to pursue the study of this subject can find the book in the libraries of his neighbourhood. If any student wishes to get the book he can apply to his member to get it for him. A dollar for the book is not much for a man who is really anxious to obtain knowledge. After all, I thoroughly endorse what the Minister of Agriculture has done with reference to the distribution of the book.

Mr. McLEAN (Huron). The book in question, I think, is very useful and very beautifully got up. I think if the mechanical part of it were made any cheaper you would largely destroy the usefulness of the book. During the past year I have had quite a number of applications for the book from students and others, perhaps 12 or 15 in all, and on each occasion that I sent a dollar to the department the book was sent back to me. If hon. gentlemen opposite had done the same thing they would have got the book.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me there is a feeling in this House that this book should be distributed with a little more generosity. We are not all like the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McLean) and the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), we are not millionaires. We cannot afford to put our hands into our pockets and hand out a dollar for every book which we wish to supply to the students in our respective counties. I think it is the duty of the government; what the government is for is to help the people.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is one of the things that we expect the government to do. We have had a resolution brought down here to-day with regard to the destruction of noxious weeds, and we are actually going to seal up in the archives of the country the information that is necessary to know which weeds are bad and which are not so bad. The Minister of Agriculture has gone back on his record. At one time it was thought that he was the friend of the farmer.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. The right hon. the Prime Minister endorses what I say that at one time he was thought the friend of the farmer. I am glad to hear my right hon. friend say 'hear, hear,' to that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I believe it yet.

Mr. HENDERSON. He thinks he is yet; I cannot agree with my right hon. friend. I think he has gone back on the farmers. Some two years ago he distributed this beautiful, well-bound, handsome book, it need not have been so handsome. If he had given a little less attention to the outward appearance of the book and paid a little more attention to what was contained within it I think it would have met the need just as well and would have served the purpose of students. I am surprised that the minister went to so much expense in making this beautiful book unless he wanted just to tickle the fancy of some friends. It was very kind of him to send me three copies. I do not know where he ever found so much generosity in his heart as to do that, but he no doubt intended me to place these books in the hands of somebody who would make use of them, and I did that. I do not think that I retained one. But, they are not enough; I want more. I think there should be a liberal distribution of that book. I do not think the country will find fault with, at any rate, meeting the wishes of students at agricultural colleges. They cannot possibly become familiar with the distribution of weeds unless they are given, in some form, the information that they require. I hope the minister will relent, and turn his economy in some other direction. He could save in some other way the money that would be necessary to print the requisite number of these books. I hope he will give us a sufficient number to supply any of the students in the agricultural colleges who come from our counties.

Mr. FISHER. I will look up and see how many we have of the edition and how far it will go. I shall try to distribute more of these books to hon. members if they wish. Of course, the edition is limited, I think, to 12,000 copies, and we have distributed probably more than half. The idea we had was that the edition would last seven years, but if the House wishes to have a further distribution I can easily order another edition.

Mr. BLAIN. When this matter was up for discussion on a former occasion I understood the Minister of Agriculture to say that every public school would be supplied with a copy.

Mr. FISHER. Every public school that has a library.

Mr. BLAIN. How have the books been distributed—by application from the public school inspector of the county?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Has there been any case of that kind in which they have been refused?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I quite agree with my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) that this is a very valuable book, and we should have a wider distribution of it. I have heard the Minister of Agriculture talking of trying to economize while upon looking at an answer given to a question yesterday, and appearing in 'Hansard' I see that $17,000,000 has been paid out by this government in bounties on iron and steel, which is double the amount that has been spent for the whole agricultural industry of Canada. I have no objection to protection being given to the manufacturer of iron and steel in this country, it is a great industry, and while the government have not seen fit to give it protection in another form they have given it protection in the way of a bounty. Seventeen million dollars is an enormous sum, but here we are carping over the saving of a few dollars for the publication of a very valuable book the object of which is to educate the people right along the lines that the minister wants to pursue and for which he introduced a Bill into this House to-day. It is a ridiculous position that we find ourselves in. We are spending enormous sums of money every day and every year to build up industries that are not one hundredth part as important as the agricultural industry. I think it is time that the members of this House should stand up and advise the Minister of Agriculture to be a little more generous to the great industry of agriculture, and to get his share of the revenue for it. The provincial government at Toronto spends $1 out of every $6 or $7 of its income on agriculture, while the Dominion government spends $1 for agriculture out of every $120 or thereabouts of revenue. As the minister has said that he would be willing to issue a further edition of a few hundred or a few thousand more copies of this valuable book I would strongly advise him to do so.

Mr. MARSHALL. What is the difference in the cost of the first and second edition? I have had several inquiries for the book. I think it is one of the most useful books that the government has sent out. I have placed a copy in nearly every school in my county, and I have applications, I might say, every week for it. I agree with what my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) says that it is not necessary to have such an expensive book. I understand the minister has the cuts illustrating these weeds and if he has it would not cost nearly so much to print the book. You have the cuts have you not?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. MARSHALL. And they are copyrighted? That being the case it seems to me that a new edition of the book could be produced cheaper than the former editions.

Mr. FISHER. Another edition could be. Of course we had to pay for the plates for the first edition. The second edition contains twenty more plates than the first one and that, of course, we had to pay for out of the edition.

Mr. MARSHALL. What would a new edition cost with the facilities you have for the printing and the plates?

Mr. FISHER. I would not undertake offhand to give an opinion.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the cost per book of the first edition?

Mr. FISHER. About a dollar a copy.

Mr. FOSTER. And the second?

Mr. FISHER. $1.30.

Mr. FOSTER. The second edition only cost thirty cents more.

Mr. FISHER. We had the plates which were used in the first one.

Mr. FOSTER. What would an edition like the first cost if now struck off considering that you have the plates?

Mr. FISHER. You mean having the plates and all that just to strike it off? I would not like to say; perhaps 25 per cent less.

Mr. MARSHALL. Could not the cost be reduced by putting on a cheaper binding?

Mr. FISHER. I think the book is worth a good binding; the present binding is useful rather than expensive. It is the cost of the plates and illustrations that makes it come high.

Mr. MARSHALL. It is a very valuable book.

Mr. SPROULE. The thought has occurred to me as to how far a member of parliament can buy anything from the government without violating the Independence of Parliament Act. I am told that a member of parliament cannot buy an animal or grain from the experimental farm, and if that be so how can he buy a book from the government? It seems to me that the principle is the same; you get something of value and you pay money for it.

Mr. FISHER. I do not want to give a legal opinion, but I have understood there is nothing to interfere with a member of parliament buying from the government, although he may not sell to the government.

Mr. LENNOX. We will have that point threshed out in the House very soon.

Mr. FISHER. That is my understanding of it, but I may be wrong. If buying this book would interfere with the Independence of Parliament Act there are a good many members of parliament who would be in trouble because I know that they buy seed and animals from the experimental farm.

Mr. FOSTER. And they buy the 'Hansard' too.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, but I can hardly think that would be an infringement of the Independence of Parliament Act.

Mr. SPROULE. Some years ago I thought of purchasing some animals at the experimental farm, but a lawyer advised me that it would not be a proper thing for a member of parliament to do. If you cannot buy an animal can you buy seed, and if you cannot buy seed can you buy a book, and if you cannot buy a book how can you buy copies of 'Hansard' as we do. Are we violating the Independence of Parliament Act in that? What difference in principle is there between buying a timber limit and buying a book, so long as you pay the government a valuable consideration for it? It is worth while knowing how far we can go in these things. Can the minister tell what was expended last year in the enforcement of the Seed Control Act, and whether there were prosecutions?

Mr. FISHER. There were a number of prosecutions.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

Mr. FISHER.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 137) for the relief of Maggie Florence Sadler.—Mr. Henderson.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Mr. BLAIN. Last year I directed the minister's attention to something that I thought required his personal attention and the attention of his department, that was the fact that in the sale of seeds in small packages at groceries, drug stores and other places of business throughout the country, it was customary to have a goodly number left over at the end of the season, and in such cases the boxes containing the packages of seeds were closed up and put away for another year, and when the spring time came again, these were taken out and put on sale again, the boxes being in some instances replenished and in other instances not. I suggested that it would be only fair, in the interest of the public, that the date when the seeds were put into the packages should be stamped clearly and distinctly thereon. I think my hon. friend said that it was a matter that should have consideration. I hope that he will have a clause put into the Seed Control Bill requiring every person who offers seed for sale in this way to have this done. I believe it will have the support of everybody interested in pure seeds, and my hon. friend's department will receive compliments from all over Canada from people who sow these seeds in the spring only to find at harvest time that they are no use.

Mr. KIDD. I quite agree with the hon. member for Peel. In a great many cases I believe the old seeds are gathered up and mixed with the new. The seedsmen are very often blamed for this, and I think the minister should put a clause in the Act to stop this practice.

Mr. FISHER. There is no doubt that it is a great evil, and if there were any practical way of meeting it, we would be glad to adopt it. We have been carrying on a campaign against this evil. Under section 8a of the Seed Control Act of last year, any person who sells or offers for sale or has in his possession for sale any seeds two-thirds of which are not capable of germinating, must mark the package with the kind of seeds and the percentage of seeds capable of germinating.

Mr. BLAIN. That does not cover the case in point.

Mr. FISHER. It is impossible to tell by any test in the laboratory what the age of seed is. We can tell whether it will germinate or not. A man might put into a package seeds ten years old and mark them as this year's seeds, and there would be no means by which we could check the false marking. The only thing we can do is to fix a standard of germination. That is the practical difficulty, and that is why my officers, who know the trade better than anybody else, have always said that there was no object at all in marking the date when the seed was put into the package.

Mr. BLAIN. I think my hon. friend's reason for not adopting the suggestion is rather insufficient. Every package of seed that is put up is open to the same objection to which my hon. friend has referred. He does not suggest that any considerable proportion of the seeds that are sold and are planted come under the inspection of the department. I do not think the country will expect that my hon. friend should know the age of seeds, but he knows that this evil has been going on in this country for many years. It is to be found in every village and cross-roads in Canada. There are business establishments in Toronto which make a business of putting up seeds in small packages to retail at five or ten cents a piece. These are boxed up and sent out in the spring, and at the end of the season a man goes around and takes an inventory of what has been sold and what is there. The merchant pays for what has been sold, and the rest are boxed up and put away till the following spring, when they are offered for sale again. What objection could my hon. friend have to compelling the person who puts up the seed stamping on the package the date when it was put up? I am quite sure that it would result in this, that instead of these boxes being left with the merchants, they would be returned to the seedsman, and he would find that it would be to his advantage to supply fresh seed, because the old seed would be rejected by the purchaser. I fear that my hon. friend is not conversant with the large trade that is being done in this way throughout this country. The matter should receive careful consideration and I propose to draw the attention of the department and of the country to this evil which I hope my hon. friend will redress, so that the people will have an opportunity at least of knowing what they purchase rather than be in the hands of the larger seed merchants in the centres of population.

Mr. FISHER. This matter has suggested itself and my hon. friend has suggested it over and over again. It has been studied by those engaged in the seed trade, and the remedy suggested is not supposed to be effective.

Mr. BLAIN. What would be effective?

Mr. FISHER. We test the germination of the seeds and if they do not germinate we prosecute the people who sell them as good germinating seeds. The marking of the date on the seed package would deceive the purchaser as the seed merchants necessarily import many seeds and could not possibly know the age of such seeds. They might thus unwittingly put false dates on the packages. Marking the age would not be any real test. The trade is constantly testing in our laboratory for their own convenience, and for the protection of themselves and their customers. I would not be prepared to insist on the remedy my hon. friend proposes which would not be any remedy at all.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend has not grasped my point. I never suggested that a person putting up the seeds would be responsible for the age of the seeds. No such suggestion came from me on a former occasion or this year. I am not condemning but approving of the action of the department in finding out the age of the seed. If the department is not doing that it is neglecting the interest of the public.

Mr. FISHER. I said we knew we could not find out the age of the seed, but did try to, and could find out its germinating quality.

Mr. BLAIN. I am not objecting to that. My point is that when the seed merchant puts seed into these small packages, he shall stamp plainly upon the package the date when the seeds are put in the package. I can see no objection to that, and it would prevent the sale of seeds which have been lying in these packages for one, two, or four years.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). In the west we have a great deal of trouble in connection with the seed business, the seed is put in the storekeeper's hands by the seed companies. But that is not the only trouble. One year a seed dealer could not get any one to handle his seeds in our town, and sold them to hardware stores and places like that at half price. These seeds were kept in these stores year after year and sold to the people. If the suggestion of my hon. friend from Peel had been in force and these packages had been dated, the farmers and the farmers' wives would not have bought that kind of seed. While on my feet I wish to say a word about the weeds book —a very fine book, and very much sought after in my constituency. I supplied copies as far as I could from those I received from the department. Some time ago, I received a request from the Mennonite college in my constituency for one of these books. I went to the department, and found that I could not get a copy except on an order from the minister. I wrote the minister a note across the floor of the House, and he sent back word that if I would write to the department I would get it. I wrote to the department, and received an answer from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) himself, saying that if I would send him the name he would send the book. I did not want the book sent in that way. I wanted to send the book myself. I took the only book I had remaining from the allotment made to me and sent that to the college, and now I am without a copy myself. I do not think that is the way the department should be run: it seems to me very shabby dealing.

Mr. FISHER. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sharpe, Lisgar) misunderstood. The college, its name having been drawn to our attention, ought to receive the book

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). It did.

Mr. FISHER. If the book was not sent to the college originally, it was because we did not know of the existence of the college.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). It has been recently established.

Mr. FISHER. All the hon. member had to do was to let the department know of the existence of the college, and the book would be sent by the department itself. If the department answered the hon. member in that way, it was intended to be in courtesy to him and in order that the college might be on the regular list. A book sent without our knowing where it went would not serve the same purpose, because the college would not be known to us any more than before, and we could not send it other papers. I do not know that the idea was properly expressed, for I do not remember the letter, but certainly there was no intention to be discourteous to the hon. gentleman or treat him in any way wrongly.

Mr. SHARPE. I did not consider it very discourteous. But the minister did not say in his letter anything about putting this college on the list, but simply said: Send me the name and I will send the book. The teacher of this college asked me for the book and expected me to send it, and I did send it. But I do not think the department's treatment was fair.

Mr. LENNOX. Referring again to the matter spoken of by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain), I think the minister ought to give it a little more study than, evidently, he has given it. The provision of section 8a is good in itself, I think, and no one, so far as I know, questions the wisdom of it. It affords some surety of the germinating qualities of seed. But I think it could be improved by carrying out the suggestion of the hon. member for Peel. That suggestion is that provision should be made in the law that the person who puts up seeds in packages for sale shall, at the time he puts them up, endorse upon the packages—I suppose in addition to the statement provided under the Bill—the date of making up. I assume that wholesale dealers try to procure fresh seed. The danger is not so much, therefore, from poor seed being put up in packages as in seed losing its vitality after being put up in the package. The minister raises the point that it would be difficult to have an honest administration of such a provision. I do not accept that view. The wholesale dealer putting up seed in 1911 would not date it 1912, for he is looking for sale this season. On the other hand, he would not date it 1910, because that would be obviously against his interest. There is a guarantee from the circumstances of the case that he will endorse it honestly if you compel him to endorse it at all. If people buy in 1912 seed put up in packages in 1911, they will buy it with their eyes open. But I understand that the custom of the trade is that packages not sold are returned after the season to the wholesale dealer. It may be said that the wholesale dealer will repack the seed dating the package anew. But this will be got over by a provision that is quite capable of enforcement, and that, even if never actively enforced, would have great effect, and that would be to make it a criminal offence to take seeds from a dated package and put them in a new package.

If you make first the provision in the law that the wholesale vendor has to endorse upon the packet a statement of the date when it was put up, and if you couple with that a criminal provision that he shall not tamper with that package unless under certain conditions, then you will protect the public to a large extent. I realize that people living in the country often desire to possess a garden. I have had that idea grow upon me once or twice, and when I put in a great many seeds, so few of them came up that I became discouraged, and thought it much cheaper to buy my vegetables than to grow them. But if we could have a guarantee of good seed, almost every man who has a little plot of land would have a garden. You can hardly estimate the advantage it would be, both materially and in other respects, for the head of a household to have a garden in which he is much interested, and where he could spend a portion of his time. Anything that we can do to encourage people to put small plots of land into a garden, and raise a portion at least of their vegetables, would be a great advantage to the individual, and if the custom were general, to the public at large. I think the minister will appreciate this point of view. Let me speak of another class of seeds. It would be a great advantage if people were encouraged to cultivate flowers, to pay attention to beauty as well as to utility; and if we could have some guarantee that the flower seeds we buy would germinate, we would be encouraging the poorer classes of the people to pay more attention to flowers than they do at present. I think there is a great deal in what the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) has urged on previous occasions as well as on the present, that there is a means of making this a useful provision.

Mr. FISHER. I confess I had misunderstood the intention of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) until I have just now heard it explained. I thought he wanted to put on the package the date of the ripening of the seed. I now understand he only wants to put upon it the date on which the seed was put in the package. Is that correct?

Mr. BLAIN. That is all I ever suggested.

Mr. FISHER. There would be no difficulty in a man putting on the date on which he put the seed into the package, except that the people might think that the seed was grown in that year. That is a point worthy of consideration, and when the new Bill comes up we will discuss it.

Mr. LALOR. I am afraid that such a provision as compelling dealers to put the date upon the package of seeds will entail a great deal of trouble and inconvenience upon the men who are engaged in the seed business. If the dealer in seeds was inclined to be dishonest, he could easily empty the different packages into bulk and again put them up into packages and redate them. Some years ago I was in the retail business myself; I remember that these packages are gathered each year and taken back again to the dealer, and if he wished to evade the law it would be easy for him to do so. Our seed dealers in this country are men of character, they have a reputation to sustain, and I doubt very much if they would knowingly put up an old seed, or one that would not germinate. There are a few seeds that do not germinate after a certain number of years, and I am skeptical whether it would be an advantage to have the date stamped upon the package. I think our dealers realize that it is to their own interest that the seeds they put up should be reliable, and if they do not put up reliable seeds, seeds that are not too old, and do not germinate properly, they would soon lose their reputation and destroy the value of their brand. I would like to see everything done which would assure the people good, honest and fresh seed, but I doubt if a proposition to stamp the date on the package will add materially to the reliability of the seed.

Mr. BLAIN. I think my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Lalor) has not quite caught my point. I am not suggesting that this would make a dishonest dealer honest, nor am I suggesting that it would cause the dealer to put a better class of seed in the paper. My suggestion is that the public would learn to know themselves when the seed was put in the package. When these packages are gathered up, at the close of the season, they are in many cases taken back and in other cases they are not taken back, but are left in the merchant's place. I am speaking of my own town as a fair example of the country generally. I know that in many cases the packages are left in the store year after year, and in some cases where the seeds are sold out they are replenished, and you can trace them five or six years, you can find the packages that were put up six years ago and are still being offered to the public for sale.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Are you speaking now of commission seeds, or of seeds sold outright to the merchants?

Mr. BLAIN. It would apply to both. If seeds were sold outright then what I am saying would apply; because if they are bought outright, using my hon. friend's own term, then the merchant would keep them in a box for sale and offers them year after year. But if they were bought on commission, as my hon. friend suggests, then the ownership is to some extent divided. The wholesale merchant would send his agent as he does now, and receive from the merchant the value of the seeds that were sold out of the box; that is the custom.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Then he would take the others back?

Mr. BLAIN. Would he take the old seed out and put new seed in?

Mr. DOUGLAS. A reputable seed merchant generally does that now. No wholesale merchant who has a reputation to maintain would change the seed in the packages.

Mr. BLAIN. If they do that then the suggestion I make would be all the better and it would be altogether in the interests of the people. Purchasers of seed when they go into a store should know by the packages themselves when the seed was put into the packages. I am quite sure that this proposition would appeal to the purchasers of seed throughout Canada.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have listened very carefully to the statement of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain). I do not wish to deprecate the suggestion offered if it can be put into practical form and I think it might work a great deal of good, but my idea is that purchasers of seed must rely upon the reputation of the person from whom they buy. That is the best guarantee we can get under the present law.

Mr. BLAIN. Why not apply the same test to seed that has to be stamped under the Seeds Bill? I suppose the same code honour would apply to one as to the other. If the purchaser of small seed has to rely upon the honesty of the person who puts the seed into the package I presume that the farmer would have to rely on the honesty of the merchant who puts the seed into the bag.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not taking any exception to the hon. gentleman's suggestion, I rather applaud the hon. gentleman for the effort he has made, but I fail to see that anything can be done to put his plan into practical operation, and in the meantime the only certain way is to rely upon the man who sells the seed. Make sure that you buy your seed from a reputable person who would be liable to secure seed that would germinate. I am not finding fault with my hon. friend from Peel, I think he is on the right track, but the minister is unable to give him any encouragement that he will be able to work out the plan that he suggests. In the meantime I fail to see anything better than putting your trust in the man who is selling the seed.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend from Halton has not noticed the reference that the Minister of Agriculture has made to my statement. The minister said that when the Seed Bill came up for discussion he would keep my suggestion in view. I do not know what my hon. friend could do more than that.

Mr. LENNOX. I cannot be accused of having too much faith in the Minister of Agriculture but on this occasion I very much prefer to put my trust in the Minister of Agriculture to putting it in these seed dealers. I do not think that we are working upon the line of putting trust in people that we are dealing with. We are working upon the line of dealing with them on a business basis and if the reputation of the seedsman was sufficient in all cases then we would not need to have these laws at all. We are working on the basis of compelling these people to treat the public fairly and if it is important in the big case, relatively it is equally important in the small case. These seeds in small packages are not sold upon reputation. I imagine that when the tradesman or the tradesman's wife goes in to buy a few packages of vegetable or flower seeds he or she does not ask who the person is who put them up. I do not think they know the name of the person as a rule. There are a great many people who have very little knowledge of the persons who have a reputation for being good seed dealers. We cannot rely upon the reputation of the seed dealer and I know from experience that seeds do remain for almost centuries upon the shelves of the retail dealers of the country. I want to say a word with reference to the statement of my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Lalor). I have great respect for him upon those matters to which he has given special attention, not less respect than I have for my hon. friend from Peel. But, my hon. friend from Peel has been giving some study to this matter. He has been studying it year after year as I think other hon. gentlemen who have spoken upon it have not. We have succeeded tonight in getting the minister to realize where the difficulty is and where the remedy can be found. My hon. friend from Haldimand said that there would be a difficulty because it would entail printing. There is no difficulty upon that point because we do require that certain things shall be printed on the package now and the addition of a few words involves no considerable expense or difficulty. I know the minister will give this matter consideration. It is of very great importance to a class of people that I would like to see encouraged, those who have small homes and grounds and who should be encouraged to cultivate small gardens. In this way a great benefit, far beyond the pecuniary aspects of the case, would result from the adoption of something in the line of that which has been suggested.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). Has the minister any idea of the length of time that these garden seeds will retain their germinating qualities?

Mr. FISHER. I could not give my hon. friend an exact statement on that point but we have tables in the department indicating the length of time that seeds retain their germinating power.

Mr. JOSEPH GIRARD (Chicoutimi-et-Saguenay. (Translation.). Mr. Chairman, I listened very attentively to the discussion which has just taken place on the important question of the care to be given the grain and seed trade. I think it my duty to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture on the care he has taken, more especially during the last few years, to find the best possible remedies to eradicate the scourge of bad seeds which has been the ruin of the province of Quebec and of the agricultural class throughout the country, a scourge which has entailed considerable losses.

The law about the sale of seeds which has been proposed by the minister, works in a satisfactory way. The reputation of the vendors is no security because it is very difficult to say that the most reliable dealers cannot be deceived by their own employees—it follows that the buying public, being unable to rely on such reputation, is suffering and has suffered in some place very large losses.

In the county I have the honour to represent, spring wheat for seeding was purchased, and fall wheat was delivered; white fyfe wheat was purchased, and red fyfe was delivered. Other apparently fraudulent deliveries were made without the agricultural public having any recourse against the sellers who, of course, deceived the farmers. These can very hardly make out at first sight the difference between those various kinds of grain, as they are not tempted to make a special study of it on account of the trust they are putting in the reputation of certain dealers, and they necessarily rely on the bills that are sent to them, hence the losses I spoke about.

As to hay seed, I would compare it with pharmaceutical preparations containing certain quantities of poison which formerly were freely sold. In order to protect the public against accidental poisoning, they have compelled dealers and producers to label their products by putting the exact composition on the package, so that experts may analyze them and verify the correctness of the composition stated on the label. Weeds contained in hay seed are to farmers' fields the poisons which have caused so much damage and which are bought by the farmers without these being practically able to detect them unless they should make examinations which it is impossible for them to make. In order to protect the farmer in his operations, I think it would be proper to compel the dealers and producers of these seeds, as druggists are compelled, to state the exact composition of the seeds they put in the market, from the point of view of the purity of the product as well as of its germinating power.

The hon. minister has done all that was possible to remedy the evil I speak about and which is occupying the attention of the House, but in my opinion it might be well to still increase the seller's liability, as the farmers are not sufficiently good judges of the products they buy. I had some complaints last spring against certain brands of hay seed which was marked number one and is nothing else but what is called number one seed for consumption.

I would bring the attention of the hon. minister on that point. Serious mistakes were caused in our place last spring. Certain suits were brought by the Department of Agriculture to protect the farmers against unscrupulous dealers and to prevent the recurrence of such sales, which I will not call dishonest, but dangerous.

I would bring the minister's attention once more and would ask him to make the regulations he may make under the present law as hard as possible, in order to better protect the agricultural public against the dealers.

I offer my thanks to the minister and to his officers for the work they have imposed upon themselves in order to check the evil. His work thus far has been practical and there has been much improvement. Without wishing to produce a crisis in the market or create any unnecessary alarm, the hon. minister must continue his work and apply the regulations with vigour so as to bring about all the possible improvement.

Hon. Mr. FISHER. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. member for Chicoutimi for the remarks he has just made on the Seed Bill and for the wise advice he has given the farmers in the Quebec district. I well know there has been much improvement in that district, and in my opinion if there is such a large demand for good seeds, that is due to the unceasing efforts of my officers in the strict application of the law concerning seed.

I hope to be able to improve the situation again. I congratulate the hon. member on his constant efforts to improve the condition of the farmers in his home.

Mr. HENDERSON. I never care about buying these small packages for the reason that we have no guarantee of the age of the seed. I would advise every one to buy bulk seed instead of the seed put up in paper.

For the development of the dairying and fruit industries; and the improvement and transportation of the sale and trade in food and other agricultural products, $110,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is the branch of dairying and fruit inspection, and cold-storage, and extension of markets. We have the dairying work under Mr. Barr, we have the fruit work under Mr. McNeil, and we have the extension of markets under Mr. Moore. The $10,000 increase is due to the general extension of the work. We intend to make some special experiments in butter making, and we propose having a national fruit conference such as we had in 1906, and which the fruit interests considered very valuable. The last conference cost $4,000 or $5,000, but I think the money was well spent.

Mr. KIDD. What experiments are you carrying on in butter making?

Mr. FISHER. We will carry on somewhat similar experiments to those with regard to cheese a couple of years ago.

Mr. SEXSMITH. What is the object of these experiments?

Mr. FISHER. In some factories they gather the cream already separated, and in others they gather the milk and separate it at the creamery, and there has been a good deal of discussion as to which was the better method. In both cases good butter has been made, but the question is which system gives the better average.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Is it intended to conduct these experiments at private creameries throughout the country?

Mr. FISHER. The experiments will be conducted at one or two selected places by experts, and special apparatus will be required.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Could you not select a number of places and ship this apparatus from one place to the other?

Mr. FISHER. I would have to leave that largely to the judgment of my officers. I assume that experiments would have to be made at one place where the cream gathering system is in force, and at another where the other system is carried on. Not only will one system be tested against the other, but experiments will be made to see how each system can be most successfully operated.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Could you not conduct some of these experiments on the farm here?

Mr. FISHER. They would have to be conducted on a large scale where there is a quantity of cream coming into the factory.

Mr. SEXSMITH. The provinces of Ontario and Quebec are so interested in the dairying industry that you should at least select a place in each province.

Mr. FISHER. The conditions will be the same at different places so that the result of the experiment in one place will apply to the others.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is it the hon. minister's intention to make these experimental stations schools of instruction?

Mr. FISHER. No. Our expert is there doing experimental work very accurately and carefully, and the presence of pupils would only interfere with the work. Besides, we do not undertake to establish schools of instruction. We leave that to the provincial authorities.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me that the minister is losing sight of the very best part of the work. I do not think he is going to gain very much by experimenting on what has been experimented on for the last 20 years—whether the cream should be separated at home or at the factory. At this age it must be pretty well decided what is the best system. I do not see why young men should not be invited to these experimental stations to see the operation of making butter. In that way we would gain very much more than we would by simply having experiments by experts who already know all about the making of butter. I notice that during the past year a very large amount of Canadian cream has been sold across the line, and I presume that under the new treaty, if it goes into force, that will be very much more encouraged, and the making of butter in this country will not be carried on to the same extent that it has been in the past—that the encouragement will be to send the cream out of the country, and have it manufactured on the other side, in accordance with the principle laid down by the president when he said: 'Send us your raw materials, and we will send you our manufactured goods.' I fear there will be too much of that, and I do not see the propriety of voting money to experiment on something that we are practically trying to do away with.

Mr. FISHER. I could only say that my dairy experts believe that the experiments we are making will result in the discovery of some things that will improve butter-making in the country. I do not consider that we know everything about butter-making, in Canada or anywhere else in the world. I believe there is room for improvement. With regard to pupils, I differ with my hon. friend entirely. When you are doing scientific experimental work, which has to be done under the constant supervision of experts, you cannot allow pupils to meddle with it. With regard to the export of cream, anything that will improve butter-making will tend to discourage that, and personally I would rather see the cream made into butter in Canada.

Mr. SEXSMITH. What progress are you making with the cow testing?

Mr. FISHER. I am glad to say that we are making considerable progress. For some time I was rather discouraged about it. When it was started, I thought it would be a very valuable adjunct to the dairying and would be of great advantage to the country, but the people were slow to take it up. We went on, however, under a good deal of discouragement, and I am glad to say that now we seem to have turned the point, and it is becoming more successful. In eastern Ontario there are 25 associations with 1,123 cows, in western Ontario 42 associations with 3,549 cows, in Quebec 62 associations with 4.600 cows, in New Brunswick 11 associations with 342 cows, in Nova Scotia 4 associations with 258 cows, in Prince Edward Island 17 associations with 1,119 cows, in British Columbia 6 associations with 801 cows; a total of 167 associations, with 1,143 members, and nearly 12,000 cows being tested. There has been a great deal of interest taken in it in the different dairy associations. We have been sending officers of the department to explain the system to them, and I think that now the attention of the cow experts of Canada is being directed to the subject, and I hope that great good will accrue from the experiments.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I realize that it is a good work, but I think you have only touched a very small portion of the dairying districts of Canada as yet. Is there a report on these cow tests?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, there is an annual report.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Has the minister any idea of the standard of cows kept in Ontario?

Mr. FISHER. Only of those that were tested. As my hon. friend says, we have only touched the fringe of the work as yet. I would not like to say that we have made a test of the cows of Ontario. We have of course the figures of all the tests that were made. The great point of the test is to show how many cows have paid badly, and how many have paid well, so that the poor ones may be discarded, and the better ones kept and bred from. In that way we give all that information to the farmers, of course not divulging the records of the individual herds.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Has the department compared the tests of some of the herds in Ontario with those of the herd at the Experimental Farm here?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think so.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I think the tests of some of the individual herds are better than the tests at the Experimental Farm here.

Mr. FISHER. That is possible; I do not know.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I would think we would have the very best cows at the farm.

Mr. FISHER. I think we have very good ones, I will give that when we come to the Farm vote.

Mr. SEXSMITH. A meeting was held in Peterborough in connection with some testing experiment.

Mr. FISHER. Yes. We propose to place special officers in certain sections to work up this cow testing in a whole neighbourhood, to see its effect upon a group of factories or farmers. We think in this way it will do more good than by the present system of tests with individual herds. Each farmer is asked to take a sample of the milk of each cow, and the samples are sent in bottles to a factory. We pay a factory five cents a test, the results are given to our officer and the farmer himself keeps the record of the weight of the milk. Our officer collates these results and gives them to the farmer.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Is there to be any extension of this work in British Columbia this year?

Mr. FISHER. We have added an officer this year in British Columbia to press and stimulate this work.

Mr. NESBITT. In our section of country, several men in the last five years have doubled the output of their herds through this cow-testing experiment. One man increased it over 50 per cent in a herd of 70 cows in the last three years, and also increased the percentage of butter fat. The farmers there are taking a great interest in it and it is having very excellent results. They keep track of the tests themselves, and this not only teaches them to improve their cows but to improve their feeding to get the best results. The testing gives them an education in bookkeeping on their cows, and they become very scientific not only in the care but in the feeding of cows. One young man in that section of country has in five years increased his cows from an average of 5,500 pounds per cow to over 12,000 pounds per cow, and increased the percentage of butter fat from 3.30 to 3.50. Another farmer in the same district has had practically as good results I would advise members from sections where the farmers are interested in the raising of cattle to get Mr. Grisdale of the Experimental Farm to lecture to his farmers on the feeding and care of cows. It will be quite worth their while and such members will never begrudge any money to the Experimental Farm after hearing Mr. Grisdale's lecture, and I am sure none of the farmers will regret having heard him. He does not speak a word in repetition and every bit of information he gives is worth following. I have followed his instructions more or less myself, and I know that what he states is absolutely correct. If anybody will follow his directions he can increase the output of his cows—the very same cows—probably fifty per cent in one season. I cannot speak to strongly in favour of this work of cow-testing, because it educates the farmer in the keeping of books, and it checks up what his animals are doing. This is the science of farming, and it is the only way, in my judgment, in which farming will ever be made to pay as it ought to pay.

Mr. SPROULE. I have listened with a good deal of interest to the hon. member (Mr. Nesbitt), because I have a distinct recollection that Professor Robertson came before the Agricultural Committee many years ago and contended very strongly that you could not, to any appreciable extent, increase the butter fat in milk by feeding, that this was a matter controlled by hereditary influences in the animal. He said the butter fat return could be improved by weeding out those animals whose milk showed a low percentage of fat and replacing them with better ones, but that practically nothing in this direction could be done by feeding. Though this was contrary to the opinion held by many authorities at that time, Professor Robertson gave what he thought satisfactory evidence in support of his opinion. The case only shows that even men who have given great attention to a given subject will sometimes disagree.

Mr. NESBITT. No doubt, if you improve the quality of your herd you will get better results. But, there is no doubt in my mind that I have got better results by feeding also.

Mr. SPROULE. You can increase the proportion of butter fat by breeding, but not by feeding, if Professor Robertson's theory is correct.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I agree with the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) in what he says about cow-testing. I appreciate highly Professor Grisdale's teaching. We have had a great many good men engaged in farmers' institute work in Ontario for many years, competent men both in dairy business and in beef business, and good lecturers. But this cow-testing, if you can get farmers to take hold of it, is of far greater importance than speech-making, because the farmers get practical knowledge—it is demonstrated before their eyes. I have in mind a man who had a cow which, at six years old, produced 7,000 pounds of milk, and he thought he had just about a world-beater. But when the cow was 15 years old, the man having learned in the meantime to feed—and he thought before that he knew that—produced better than 15,000 pounds of milk, and with more profit in proportion than when she produce 7,000 pounds. A great lesson that we need to learn is how to feed and what to feed, also the proper care of animals and the culling out of the poor individual cows under this system of cow-testing. If we can extend the use of this cow-testing method, we shall increase our dairy products more quickly than by anything else we can do.

Mr. JOSEPH GIRARD. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, if the hon. minister will allow me, I would like to draw his attention to the desirability of having his officers carry on these dairy tests, which he initiated a number of years ago in such a business-like manner. It has been stated within my hearing, in the course of this debate, that these experiments had been carried on for a sufficient length of time to satisfy the public as to their usefulness, and that they should be discontinued. To my mind such a view is not warranted, and these tests should not be given up, but on the contrary continued.

I am a member of the board of directors of the Dairymen's Association of the province of Quebec, and have been so for a number of years. We follow closely the progress of that industry in our province, and we believe we are cognizant of its requirements. Just now, throughout the various provinces, the best means for obtaining an increased supply of milk are being discussed. We are not agreed as to the best treatment for milk to be used for butter-making or for cheese-making. Seeing the lack of uniformity in the views of dairymen on that point in the various provinces, I think it is incumbent on the minister to find out what rules should be adopted under the circumstances and would be likely to give the best results all round.

Another question which is being very much discussed is that regarding the use of hand separators on farms, farmers having been persuaded that they would thereby be in a position to turn out just as good a quality of butter as that made in a central factory. Is it possible and practicable, from cream separated on the various farms, to obtain a butter the quality of which will compare with that of the butter turned out by a central cream-separating establishment? The question is being very much discussed, and this government is the only agency through which a conclusion may be safely arrived at by means of comparative experiments covering the whole ground.

The establishment of schools has been suggested. I am not certain whether it would be advisable for the government to open such schools before these points have been settled, otherwise faulty methods might be advocated. To my mind the government would be acting more wisely by postponing all such action until positive results may be laid before the public. It will be time to have such central schools when some definite conclusion will have been reached in this connection.

Cow-testing associations have been referred to. Surely, the minister is entitled to some credit for having started this work and taking the practical means to ensure the great improvement which it is expected will result therefrom. The results obtained so far have not been very satisfactory. I represent here a constituency wholly made up of farmers. Cow-testing associations have been started in our district, and the government have done everything in their power, through lecturers and financial aid, towards inducing farmers to join in the work. I am satisfied that farmers throughout the country do not fully realize the usefulness of such associations, notwithstanding the efforts made by the minister and his officers and notwithstanding the energy displayed. If better results have not been obtained, that is due rather to misgivings on the part of the farmers who do not realize fully the significance of such a movement, and not to any fault of the minister. That is why I say it is incumbent on him to continue the work which has been started through all the means at his disposal. I think the best way of inducing farmers to join such associations would be to send out practical men to educate them and make known the great benefits accruing from such work, while at the same time prompting them to show greater perseverance.

That the quality of a cow's milk cannot be improved by a mere change in the feeding is a fact that seems uncontrovertible. Selection is the practical means of getting around the difficulty, and for the purpose of selection it is necessary that the best cows in the herd be distinguished, a result which cannot be reached outside of these associations for the testing of cows which the minister has been striving to have formed for a good many years past. No doubt the results obtained so far are not as satisfactory as they might have been, but I am confident that by sticking to it a little longer the minister who originated this move will secure the satisfactory results which he anticipated at the outset. The improvement obtained in Denmark will necessarily follow here, provided the Dominion government show as much energy as the Danish government did show towards setting the dairy industry of that country on a solid foundation and bringing the Danish farmer to a point where he is looked to as a model by the whole world. The Hon. Mr. Fisher is undoubtedly the man of the hour, and the Canadian farmers are, to say the least, as intelligent as their Danish competitors. Several years of effort have been expended in Denmark before perfection was attained. There is no cause for surprise if in Canada, even after the road has been shown to us, toil and perseverance are required to secure as good results. In this connection all public men should be as one and make it a point to uphold the far-seeing efforts of the minister who, in the public eye, is solely responsible.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, that is splendid. After hearing my hon. friend from Chicoutimi (Mr. Girard), I can understand that if he came up to Dauphin he would be elected sure, because, from his flow of language, it is evident that nobody would ever get a chance to put in a word. I can say that for him without offence, I am sure. I was reading over this item 49: 'For the development of the dairying and fruit industries; and the improvement'—so far it is all right—'and transportation of the sale and trade in food and other agricultural products.' The last part of this paragraph I cannot understand: 'The transportation of the sale and trade,' unless it refers in some way to this bugbear of the Liberal party which is called reciprocity. I would like to be enlightened by the minister. How is he going to transport the sale and trade of food products?

Mr. FISHER. The intention is to do what we have been doing for some time back, to transport our perishable food products in such a manner as to contribute to their improvement and their sale.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would like the minister to give me a little further explanation of this item, in regard to the improvement and transportation of the sale. I never heard before of the sale being transported, and I would like to know something about it.

Mr. MARSHALL. I was going to ask how we are going to reach these tests. Are you going to send out new men?

Mr. FISHER. These tests are made in the neighbourhood by some prominent butter and cheese makers; we pay them for every test they make. Anybody that applies to us for a test will get a form explaining how he must go to work, and then he applies to the factory.

Mr. MARSHALL. We have been operating a condensed milk factory for three years, and some dairies have found that by changing the food and the system of taking care of cows, they have increased the flow of milk.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I heard the other evening the Minister of Agriculture referring to the fact that he was doing the best he could for the dairy industry in his own province, and also in the Dominion generally. Now I understand that as Minister of Agriculture he poses as a farmer, and has a herd of cattle of dairy breed. Now would it be unfair of me to ask if that herd has been tested along with other herds in the same province? I ask this for the information of the House; and how does his herd stand the test as compared with other herds throughout that province?

Mr. FISHER. I could not give my hon. friend the figures. I have belonged to one of these associations.

Mr. CAMPBELL. My hon. friend as Minister of Agriculture is setting an example to other farmers, he has everything at his disposal, owing to the fact that he can utilize every possibility with regard to tests and everything else, and I would like to know if his own private herd has been tested.

Mr. FISHER. My herd has been tested, but I have not got the figures, and cannot give them.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understand this system has been in vogue for more than a year, and if the test has not been published for the last year, surely it was for the previous year. Might I ask what that test was last year?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say, I do not know.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, if I professed to be a farmer and did not know the result of my farming operations, I would not call myself a farmer at all. I think that is the most ridiculous answer I ever heard in this House. Surely the minister knows what the test of his herds has been last year, or the previous year, as compared with others in that province. I think that is a fair question for one farmer to ask another farmer.

Mr. BLAIN. I think that is a fair appeal by my hon. friend from Dauphin.

Mr. FISHER. I think that is a personal appeal, and an interference with my private business, which I decline to agree to.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not wish the minister to look at it in that way at all. If he looks at it in that way, I have nothing more to say.

Mr. FISHER. Well, I do look at it in that way.

Mr. BLAIN. I think there is a misunderstanding between my hon. friend from Dauphin and the Minister of Agriculture. The question was as to whether the Minister of Agriculture ever had his herd tested, and how the test compared with other herds in the same district; not as to how much money my hon. friend made out of it, not as to whether my hon. friend should keep the best class of catttle or other classes of cattle, but whether my hon. friend would give us the knowledge that he has with respect to the testing of cattle upon his own farm which might be of some value to other farmers throughout Canada. My hon. friend from Dauphin had no idea of entering into any personal matter with the Minister of Agriculture. Is it that my hon. friend's herd stood at the top and he is so modest that he would not state that his herd did stand at the top in that district, or is it that my hon. friend's herd was at the bottom? If it is I am sure that my hon. friend cannot sustain his reputation as being a successful farmer. My hon. friend must not be so touchy upon these points because they are important matters from the agricultural standpoint.

An hon. MEMBER. Carried.

Mr. BLAIN. No, we are not carrying it yet because I think that my hon. friend from Dauphin is entitled to an explanation from the Minister of Agriculture. We frequently have statements from hon. members opposite, perhaps from the hon. member who cried 'carried,' that the Minister of Agriculture is rendering very valuable service to Canada because he is a practical farmer. I remember the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), stating in the House that the Minister of Agriculture is of special value in his department because he is a practical farmer and because he has cattle at home of a superior class. I recall the case of a man in my own county who was out attending Farmers' Institutes and teaching the farmers how to kill Canadian thistles. I do not suggest that that is the case with the Minister of Agriculture because I believe that he has a very good farm, but I urge the matter on the minister because the statement of my hon. friend from Dauphin was reasonable and his question was a very important one. My hon. friend cannot say that he does not know whether his herd stood high or low because he would be as anxious as any other owner of cattle coming under the test in his district to know whether his herd stood high or low. The question of my hon. friend from Dauphin is a reasonable one and I am sure the minister will be able to answer it.

Mr. PORTER. I would like to ask the minister, speaking of the testing of milk by inspectors who are appointed, whether these inspectors are empowered, when they find milk that has been sent by farmers to factories in a deteriorated state, to settle the offence that is created by the act with the person who has been guilty of sending the deteriorated milk. I have had called to my attention a number of cases where the inspectors have found milk sent to the factory in a deteriorated condition. In one case they would settle with the farmer who was guilty for $5 or $10, and in another case they would settle for $25.

Mr. FISHER. These are provincial inspectors who do not belong to our department at all, and we do not have anything to do with that work.

Mr. PORTER. Then, another question: Did the minister ever consider the question of conflict between the provincial and Dominion laws with regard to the sending of deteriorated milk? Under the provincial law a man cannot be convicted of an offence without proving knowledge on the part of the person who is sending the milk. Under the Dominion law a person can be convicted of sending deteriorated milk even if it can be proved beyond any question that he had no knowledge of the deteriorated milk being sent. There is a direct conflict between the two acts, one requiring knowledge for conviction and the other conviction without knowledge at all. It does appear to me that the provincial Act is much the fairer one because a man ought not to be convicted of a quasi criminal offence without having some knowledge of having violated the statute. I would like to ask the minister if he has or will consider the propriety of bringing these two Acts into harmony in that respect.

Mr. FISHER. I think that question was discussed when the Dominion Act was framed. I confess that if there is to be any change I would like to see the provincial Act changed so as to harmonize it with the Dominion Act. I do not think that ignorance in such a case ought to absolve a person.

Mr. PORTER. It occurs to me that to carry out that principle would be in direct opposition to all other Dominion laws dealing with similar offences. I do not know of any case where a conviction may be made without knowledge on the part of the person committing the offence, but in this particular instance it is so. It would be more in conformity with the general law and it would be more just to make the change I suggest. Let me illustrate what I mean. The milk that a farmer sends to the factory is tested by an inspector and is found to be deteriorated. The farmer is summoned to court for a violation of the Act and he and every one in his employ testifies that they did not do anything to deteriorate the milk, such as taking the cream, pouring in water, or resorting to any of those devices that are used for that purpose. The farmer proves absolutely that as far as he is concerned he is innocent of an offence. That man ought not to be convicted. I have one case in my mind where, after a conviction took place, the milk drawer admitted—and the fine was afterwards remitted—that he stopped at a creek to water his horses and that he took a quantity of milk out of three cans on his wagon, poured it into his own can and put an equal quantity of water out of the creek into the cans that he had robbed. One of the farmers whose cans had been robbed was fined for sending deteriorated milk and he could be fined under the present Act. It was only by reason of the form of the Dominion Act that he could be convicted and he was convicted. It is absolutely no defence to prove that the man had nothing to do with it. He can be convicted of an offence that he did not commit which is contrary to the ordinary principles of fair play.

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that the provincial government, in taking up these prosecutions, have found that persons charged could not be convicted under the provincial Act and the consequence is that they generally take the actions under the Dominion Act.

Mr. PORTER. The minister is quite right.

Mr. FISHER. I do not know anything about the circumstances, beyond what my hon. friend has stated, of this particular case, but if the evidence that he now speaks of had been given in that case I can hardly believe that the magistrate would have convicted that man or fined him. Of course, there might be other circumstances that I do not know anything about.

Mr. PORTER. But the fact of proving no knowledge is absolutely no defence. If the milk comes to the factory in a deteriorated condition the offence is committed under the Act. You may prove that somebody else entirely unconnected with the farmer committed the offence, and yet it is absolutely no defence. That is a great hardship. The magistrate or trial court has absolutely no discretion because the Act says that if the milk is found on arrival at the factory in a deteriorated condition the offence is committed and the person sending the milk is liable. That seems altogether unfair. I know, as the minister says, that the inspectors do take advantage of the provisions of the Dominion Act because in some cases where they prosecute under the provincial Act, and where want of knowledge on the part of the accused is proven the court will dismiss the case. But in proceeding under the Dominion Act, even if he proves absolute want of knowledge, the defendant has to be convicted.

Mr. FISHER. Under such circumstances the magistrate I should think would suspend sentence or impose a trivial fine.

Mr. PORTER. But the Act says that the fine shall be not less than so much, and not more than so much, and the magistrate must impose the penalty, having no discretion.

Mr. FISHER. He could suspend payment of the fine.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Minister of Agriculture evidently does not realize the position he holds in Canada. All the farmers of Canada think he is the high mucky-muck, and that he is the greatest farmer that ever lived, and whenever he carries out a test successfully the farmers think the best thing they can do is to follow in his footsteps. The other night the minister brought into this House his own private herd of Guernseys, and I assume they were tested the same as any other herd, and that being so it is fair for me to ask the Minister of Agriculture as a leading farmer in Canada, what the result of the test was?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Cannot I have an answer to the question Mr. Chairman?

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is not usual in debate to make inquiry with regard to the private business of any member. In this case I do not think the question is out of order in this particular connection, but it is for the member questioned whether he will answer or not. To refuse an answer as to a member's private business would not be uncourteous.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not want to inquire into the private business of the member at all, but I heard him the other night bringing his Guernsey herd into the House himself. He is looked upon all over Canada as a leading farmer.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, I believe it is a mistaken idea, but he poses as such. He told us the other night that his Guernsey herd was tested and these Guernseys being specially bred for dairy animals it is only fair that the farmers of Canada should know how they turned out in the test. I do not care whether it came out first, second or last, but if he does not answer I will believe it came out last.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. member (Mr. Campbell) is entitled to an answer, especially as the minister referred to his own herd and admitted they were subject to the same test as others.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think it is a proper thing to bring a man's personal affairs into a public discussion.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister has brought it in himself.

Mr. FISHER. I do not remember anything of the kind.

Mr. CAMPBELL. There was a discussion the other day, and I heard the minister refer to his herd of Guernsey cattle. I never knew that the Minister of Agriculture had a thoroughbred calf of any breed till I heard him mention his Guernseys, and while I have no desire to pry into the private affairs of the minister I think my question is a fair one.

Mr. FISHER. I must say that from the way the hon. gentleman asked the question I thought he was prying into my personal affairs, but it is very evident, from what he has said, that he does not understand in the slightest degree this question of testing cows. He talks of a herd being No. 1, No. 2, No. 3. The test is not of herds, but of individual cows. It is a test of the quantity of milk and butter fat which an individual cow gives, so that the owner of the cow may know which are good cows, and which are poor cows. In the reports there is no marking up of one herd as being superior to another or any comparison between herds. There is a marking up of the details of what each of the cows tested makes up for its owner. That is kept for the owner. If he chooses, he can publish it, but the department does not publish it. There are some individual herds reported by permission of the owner, but not in any other way. As a matter of fact, I could not tell the hon. member what any individual cow gave in my herd. I would have to go and examine the records. I have made no comparison between those cows and other cows in the neighbourhood, or in the province of Quebec, or in the Dominion of Canada, and I cannot answer the hon. gentleman's question in the way he put it. The data is of no consequence to any one except myself, to enable me to judge which of my cows is the best, which the second best, which the third best, and so on.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I had no desire at all to antagonize the hon. minister by the question. I thought it was a perfectly fair question, because in years gone by, when I studied the various cattle and horse papers in the United States, I saw statements of what certain herds would aggregate or average for milk production and butter fat production, and on those tests the value of a herd largely depended. I can assure the hon. minister that I had no desire to pry into his private business. I thought that under what he called the perfect system of the Department of Agriculture he would have the various herds, not only in his own province, but throughout Canada, recorded for the benefit not only of the owners, but of prospective buyers. I can assure the minister that I had no desire to hurt his feelings.

Mr. THORNTON. If a fruit inspector exceeds his duty, and unjustly and dishonestly has a farmer or a packer fined for putting up fruit contrary to the law, what recourse has the farmer or packer against the inspector?

Mr. FISHER. If any such accusation were reported to me, I would certainly investigate it at once on behalf of the department, because I would not wish to have such an inspector continue in the employ of the department for a moment. I have had no such accusation made against any of my inspectors.

Mr. THORNTON. I was anxious to know because there have been cases in my county.

Mr. FISHER. Has any complaint been made to the department?

Mr. THORNTON. No, because they thought they had no remedy.

Mr. FISHER. I can assure the hon. gentleman that any such conduct on the part of an inspector would be investigated, and if it were proved true, would lead to his dismissal.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Reverting to the minister's statement that an officer of his department has been sent to British Columbia, I would ask him if he can give some particulars of what is being done in British Columbia in connection with his department.

Mr. FISHER. We have been instrumental in the formation of six cow associations in British Columbia, and we have added to the force, so that this season we shall have a man in British Columbia especially for this work of cow-testing.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I asked the minister whether there was any provision under this vote for dairying experiments or dairying operations in connection with the experimental farm in British Columbia.

Mr. FISHER. That of course comes under the farm vote. The agriculturist of the experimental farm system is now on his way to British Columbia to establish a dairy herd and dairy operations at the farm at Agassiz, which I hope will be put through this season. He is gone for the purpose of changing the buildings with that object. Mr. Sharpe, who has been the superintendent of that farm for several years, has resigned, and the new incumbent will be installed on the 1st of April.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I refer to the question asked about the minister's own herd, I have been told on reliable authority that it tested the lowest of any herd in the association. I would like to know whether that is a fact or not.

Mr. FISHER. I don't know.

Mr. BLAIN. What are the duties of the hon. gentleman's agents in Liverpool, London and Bristol, and do they give an annual report as to their work?

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Grindley, in Liverpool, is the chief cargo inspector in the mother land. He has under him officers in the other large ports who watch the entry of our products, the conditions under which they are handled, and report on each ship upon its arrival. They also remove and return to the department the thermograph records and thermographs which are placed in cold-storage compartments on this side of the ocean. If they report any inefficient handling of Canadian products we make representations to the shipping companies who respond very well indeed to our complaints. Mr. Grindley makes a general report every year.

Mr. BLAIN. Are they skilled men?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, they are accustomed to the docks and work of this kind. Mr. Grindley is a Canadian who has been over there about 12 years, and is thoroughly competent for this work. He is a man of a higher stamp than the others who were engaged over there, who had been in the employ of the produce houses and were thoroughly acquainted with the practice and method of landing.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Who is Mr. Caldwell who was employed for seven months at Montreal at $90 a month?

Mr. FISHER. He was a farmer in my county for many years. He was thoroughly acquainted with the produce trade. He rented his farm some years ago, and I appointed him in Montreal to act as cargo inspector.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How has this to do with the extension of markets?

Mr. FISHER. Because the extension of markets division includes the supervision and inspection of the handling of our goods, with a view to placing them on the foreign markets in good condition.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understand that Mr. Caldwell was such a good farmer that he could rent his farm for only $6 a month. He had let his farm run down so that it was absolutely useless and therefore my hon. friend took him into the fold and gave him this salary. There is another gentleman named Cook who was employed for three months at $75. Who was he?

Mr. FISHER. I never asked Mr. Caldwell at what rate he rented his farm, I never inquire into the private business of my friends or of those who are employed by the government. Mr. Cook is also a cargo inspector for some months doing the same class of work.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Where did he come from?

Mr. FISHER. From Lachute.

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is a Mr. Daymond, who was employed at $75.

Mr. FISHER. I do not know him or where he came from, he is one of our employees there

Mr. BLAIN. On June 6, 1906, this question was asked and answered:

BEEF CATTLE INDUSTRY.

Mr. SCHAFFNER asked:

Has the government any knowledge by letter, petition or complaint from any source, of the unsatisfactory condition that prevails in the beef cattle industry in the province of Manitoba, and throughout western Canada generally, by which the farmer is not receiving a normal price for his beef sold to wholesale meat dealers? If so, does the government propose to take any action in the premises?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). The government has received several communications asking for an investigation and an amelioration of the condition of the beef cattle industry in Manitoba and the west, and has the same under consideration.

What has been done since then?

Mr. FISHER. I would like to have the hon. member ask that question again when the health of animals and live stock division comes up. The investigation was carried on under Dr. Rutherford, who it not here to-night, and I have not his report with me.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What action has the hon. minister taken with regard to the subject discussed very fully in this House, cold-storage as applied to the transportation of agricultural products from the west to the markets of the world?

Mr. FISHER. Nothing further has occurred since that discussion, except the representations that were made by the Farmers' Delegation here. I discussed their suggestions with them. Some investigation has been made by the livestock division into the question. We will have that when the livestock vote comes up.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Then, the minister has nothing new.

Mr. FISHER. Not that I can give on this vote. It does not come up on this vote.

Mr. STAPLES. I think this question of cold-storage naturally comes up on this item. It is owing to the want of cold-storage that the cattle production of the west has been falling off.

Mr. FISHER. I have no objection to giving the information if I had it, but as I assumed that this matter would come up on a different vote, the officer who made the investigation is not here, nor have I his report before me. Therefore, I cannot give the information.

Mr. STAPLES. If we let this item pass, I am afraid we get away from the question of cold-storage altogether.

Mr. FISHER. The whole question can be discussed on the other vote.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think the point taken by my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Staples) is justifiable. This vote is for the transportation and trade in ' food and other agricultural products.' Surely, meat is food, and surely it is an agricultural product.

Mr. FISHER. There is no objection to discussing the matter, but I have not the information here, and consequently I cannot reply to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am glad to hear the minister say he has not the information. We have been telling him that right along.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The various items of agricultural estimates are closely connected, and it is not easy to separate them. The particular point now referred to could be discussed under this item. I think it would be a little more proper under item 51, which refers specially to cold storage and the preservation and handling of perishable food products. But the discussion would not be out of order on this item.

Mr. STAPLES. If the minister is not in a position to give the information, perhaps it would be better to wait until he has it.

Mr. FISHER. That is what I suggested.

Mr. STAPLES. The government have voted down a policy which we on this side of the House thought would be of advantage to the producers of live stock, and I think that this committee should not appropriate money under such a vote as this without understanding what benefit the producer is to get from it. I do not want to let the minister get away from the question, so that when we try to discuss it on some other item we shall be told we are out of order. If we can bring the matter up on some other item, for my part, I am willing that the question should stand over. But the minister should be able to fully justify the appropriation, because the producer of live stock is not getting the attention to which he is entitled at the hands of the Minister of Agriculture. The falling off in live stock production is a deplorable thing; and, while the minister may think that he is not responsible for it, I, as a farmer, have to hold him responsible in great degree. The minister has been dilatory, though, perhaps, not consciously so.

Mr. FISHER. I have not suggested that the discussion would be out of order on this item. I was asked a question about one particular thing, and I said that I had that information and would bring it on another vote. But I am perfectly willing to have it discussed now, if the hon. gentleman wishes.

Mr. STAPLES. I do not believe in the discussion unless the minister has before him the information which he says is in his possession. It would be only a waste of time, and I am sure the committee does not wish to waste time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I tried to get some sense out of the wording of this item. It speaks of the trade 'In food and other agricultural products.' What does the minister mean by that as applied under this item of $110,000?

Mr. FISHER. It means any other agricultural products, such as meat, eggs and anything in the way of agricultural products that go forward. Our cargo inspectors do not supervise the handling or transport of grain, because these things are not what are called perishable. This item refers to perishable food products such as those that are sent in cold storage or in cooled air, that are liable to be hurt in transportation.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is the very point. The minister knew when he came to this House that he would be asked such a question as that. We want the information.

Mr. FISHER. I have told the hon. gentleman that I have not got the information here to-night.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Would the minister tell us what is being done in connection with the improvement in the transportation of fruit?

Mr. FISHER. We have been discussing, and I hope we will be able to carry out, some experiments in the way of chilling or cooling fruit rapidly before it is shipped. There has been a suggestion made by the fruit growers of Ontario with regard to cooling fruit in the car, and I hope in the coming year to see what can be done in that way. There is a system used in California, though the conditions are somewhat different there from ours, still we may be able to adopt some parts of that system in the way of cooling fruit. The system has been in operation for several years in California. I believe it is subject to a patent, but I think something might be done without reference to the patent. According to that system, the fruit is packed in cars in such a way as to leave small air spaces between the packages. These cars are taken to a place where there is a cold storage plant and cold air of a certain temperature is forced through the car by the cold storage plant just as under ordinary circumstances it is forced into refrigerator chambers. Then when the fruit has been cooled down to the proper temperature, the car is closed up. I think ice is put in to maintain the temperature low enough, and then the car is shipped to its destination. I think there are two such plants in operation in California, in each of which many thousand cars are cooled, and from which fruit is shipped all over the continent. It is said that the fruit is carried in much better condition than when cooled in any other way. We propose to try the experiment in this country.

Mr. STAPLES. The minister said there was a patent, what is the nature of the patent?

Mr. FISHER. I am not quite sure.

Mr. SEXSMITH. What officers are employed to administer the Fruit Marks Act?

Mr. FISHER. We have a chief inspector, and 13 inspectors altogether. Three of these are only on for a short time. We have several temporary inspectors, and five helpers at Montreal and two at Halifax.

Mr. STAPLES. Are these inspectors employed the whole year round?

Mr. FISHER. Ten of them are. They are employed during the shipping season in inspecting, and the rest of the time they are employed in going around the country giving lectures and explaining to the people the best way of packing and handling fruit.

Mr. CAMPBELL. With regard to this patent for cooling fruit, does the minister mean that he cannot employ that system until he finds out whether some one has the patent?

Mr. FISHER. We would not be able to employ the exact system that is patented, if the patent is valid; that is a matter I will have to inquire into.

Mr. STAPLES. Has the minister inquired what they ask for this patent?

Mr. FISHER. I have not yet.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What steps has the minister taken to find out?

Mr. FISHER. I am making inquiries.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If these inquiries take as long as the inquiries with regard to the validity in other matters it will take many years to find out. I am referring to the inquiries of the Minister of Agriculture with regard to a contract; it has taken him two years to find out and we have no solution of it yet. I would hope that the Minister of Agriculture would expedite matters so that he would know inside of a reasonable time. This system has been in use in Canada by the Hudson Bay Company for three hundred years. They have left an air space in the storing of frozen rabbits and fish for three hundred years and the minister ought to be able to show that it is a question of precedent, not of patent.

Mr. THORNTON. Have the fruit inspectors any other duties than inspecting fruit? I understand that during the apple season they are busy but have they duties other than those in connection with the inspection of apples?

Mr. FISHER. During the shipping season they are extremely busy with the inspection. During the slacker season they go around and give lectures on packing and orchard treatment. Most of them are expert fruit growers as well as handlers. They inspect during the whole shipping season, commencing with the small fruits in the early part of the summer and running through the fall almost to the end of winter. During the winter there is not as much fruit shipped as in the fall but during most of the time they are busy with the inspection.

Mr. THORNTON. They would have no authority to settle any difficulty that packers might have in their business relations with the growers?

Mr. STAPLES. The inspectors that the minister is providing for, I suppose, are the inspectors who inspect apples that are packed and shipped out to the west?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. STAPLES. That is part of their duty?

Mr. FISHER. We do not undertake, under the Fruit Marks Act, to inspect all shipments. It is quite impossible. But, the inspectors, wherever they happen to be, keep an eye on the fruit and they may inspect fruit that is being sold by the retailer as well as by the shipper. They are liable to examine any lot of fruit that does not fulfil the requirements of the Act. But, we do not undertake to inspect the whole shipment of fruit.

Mr. STAPLES. How is the fruit marked?

Mr. FISHER. It is marked No. 1, No. 2, and No. 3.

Mr. STAPLES. Who puts the mark on the barrel?

Mr. FISHER. The packer.

Mr. STAPLES. Would an ordinary farmer put it on?

Mr. FISHER. Whoever packs the barrel. It does not matter whether it is a farmer an expert packer, or a merchant or anybody else, the man who packs the barrel is responsible.

Mr. STAPLES. How does he determine what the qualifications are?

Mr. FISHER. He has to know what the Act says. The grades are described as follows:

Fancy quality consists of well grown specimens of one variety, sound, of uniform and of at least normal size and of good colour for the variety, of normal shape, free from worm holes, bruises, scab and other defects, and properly packed.

No. 1 quality, includes no culls and consists of well grown specimens of one variety, sound, of not less than medium size and of good colour for the variety, of normal shape and not less than ninety per centum free from scab, worm holes, bruises and other defects and properly packed.

No. 2 quality, includes no culls and consists of specimens of not less than medium size for the variety, and not less than eighty per centum free from worm holes and such other defects as cause material waste, and properly packed.

Then there is another condition:

In any package in which the faced or shown surface gives a false representation of the contents of such package; and it shall be considered a false representation when more than fifteen per centum of such fruit is substantially smaller in size than, or inferior in grade to, or different in variety from, the faced or shown surface of such package.

These are the conditions which guide packers as to what fruit they are permitted to put in their packages.

Mr. STAPLES. How are the proceedings taken against a man? Who can lay an information?

Mr. FISHER. Anybody.

Mr. STAPLES. For example, if I go on the market and buy a barrel of apples and it is not up to the quality indicated on the barrel, what is my redress?

Mr. FISHER. You can take out an action against the person who sold you the apples under the Fruit Marks Act, or you can take an action against him for defrauding you. If you do it under the Fruit Marks Act and if you prove your facts in the case you can have the penalty imposed.

Mr. STAPLES. I have a right of action against the retailer?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. STAPLES. Is there any redress from the person he bought them from?

Mr. FISHER. There is no special provision by which the retailer can have redress, but he can have the same redress against the person who sold the barrel of apples to him as you can have against the retailer.

Mr. THORNTON. We have been told by the superintendent of the fruit division that he would like to see more attention paid to associations packing and handling fruit. I would like to know whether the inspectors have found that the associations' work has been more successful than that of private individuals.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think there is any doubt but what the associations have done a great deal indeed to improve the packing of fruit, and the proper marking of it. I am not sure that I can say that no cases have been found of fruit packing by an association that did not fulfil the law, but I am quite certain that few cases have been found. The report from the inspectors and especially from the chief inspector, is that these associations are doing a lot of good in the way of fruit handling and marking.

Mr. STAPLES. What is the penalty for the violation of the Act?

Mr. FISHER. There are several different clauses in the Act which provide penalties. For a first offence the penalty is not less than $10, and not more than $25, and so on.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the inspection apply to apples going from Ontario to the west the same as it applies to apples which are exported to Liverpool?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. We have been doing a good deal in the way of inspecting apples going to the west and in the west when they arrive there. We also inspect the fruit that comes from the United States into the west to ensure that it fulfils the requirements of our law.

Mr. STAPLES. Has the minister ever considered the question of the freight rates charged on apples from eastern Canada to the west? That is a serious matter just now when under reciprocity a great many of the apples consumed in the west will be coming from the south. These American apples do not compare in quality with the apples we have been getting from eastern Canada. and I suppose the western market will now be flooded with inferior fruit. If the government directed its attention to the question of freight rates on fruit from eastern points to western points it might help the Ontario fruit grower to keep the market in the west. We are anxious to get Canadian fruit of good quality rather than United States fruit of inferior quality, but the great difficulty in the way is the high freight rate. That is the problem the minister and his colleagues should have been dealing with instead of running down to Washington.

Mr. FISHER. The freight rates are under the control of the Railway Commission and in some parts of the country they have ordered the rates to be reduced. I have no doubt the same will be done in the Northwest if it is found necessary.

Mr. STAPLES. I know that the Railway Commission fixes rates, but unless some person brings the matter to its attention the Railway Commission does not go around the country looking for an opportunity to reduce railway rates. I do not know any one that could bring the matter before them with such effect as could the government, and especially a character like the Minister of Agriculture, who would be able to present the case with great intelligence. Is the minister making any effort along that line?

Mr. FISHER. I have not made any complaint to the Railway Commission about freight rates.

Mr. STAPLES. Did the minister ever make a complaint about the freight rates on fruit going to the west?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. STAPLES. Then I have to criticise the minister if there is any man in Canada that should be up and doing along this line, it is he. When he tells the committee that he has never taken the matter up with the Railway Commission and hints that he is not going to do so. I do not know where we are going to get a remedy. Usually the Railway Commission and the railway companies will sit up and listen to a complaint from the government when they wont pay much attention to a private citizen. I hope the minister will be more active in future along this line.

Mr. SEXSMITH. No reference has been made to-night to the very important poultry industry which last year produced in Canada $40,000,000 in poultry and poultry products, and the product of which in the States amounted to $700,000,000; it being the greatest industry except corn in that country. It looks as if in the near future we will not be producing in Canada enough poultry and eggs to supply our home market unless greater progress is made. That is a serious state of affairs in this country where we should be producing twice as much as we consume. Has the minister done anything for that particular industry?

Mr. FISHER. The poultry industry is very progressive and I think there never before has been as large a production in Canada as during the last 12 months. Ten years ago there was a large export trade in poultry but of late years it has almost disappeared because of the greatly increased consumption at home. The prices have been very high in Canada, and not so high in England, and consequently we have not been exporting to the same extent as formerly. We do still export some eggs though a very small quantity in comparison with former years.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I agree with the minister that the industry is progressing fairly well and that the production has increased enormously in the last 10 years, but I believe that the product could be doubled in a few years if the government put forth some well considered efforts.

Mr. EDWARDS. With regard to the egg trade of Canada I think the policy of this government as well as of former governments has been entirely wrong. As a matter of fact we are not now producing enough eggs in Canada to supply the home market, and we have been importing 700,000 or 800,000 dozen a year. The United States government placed a duty of 5 cents a dozen on eggs, and I believe that our policy was entirely wrong in allowing eggs to come into Canada by paying a duty of only 3 cents a dozen. That is not giving the encouragement to the producer in this country that he should receive. I think this is an industry which could be and should be more encouraged than it has been. I think we should have had a duty on eggs at least as high as the United States had on our eggs going into that country. If we had increased our duty to five cents a dozen, it would have greatly stimulated the poultry business in this country and the production of eggs. I do not see why Canada should not produce at least enough eggs for home consumption. As a matter of fact, we have not been doing that for a number of years. I think our farmers should have sufficient protection on eggs to enable them to compete successfully with the producers across the line, where the season continues the year round, whereas ours is limited because of our climate.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the export of butter on the increase or the decrease?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think there has been any considerable variation in the last two or three years, but the exports are much less than they were five years ago.

Mr. BLAIN. Does that mean that we are producing less or consuming more?

Mr. FISHER. I think we are consuming a great deal more. We have a means of getting at the amount of creamery butter produced. The production of dairy butter is an estimate, but the estimate is that there is a very much larger amount produced in Canada than there was five years ago.

Mr. BLAIN. At page D—36 in the Auditor General's Report I notice this item:

Oshawa Fruit Growers, Ltd.: apples, 204 brls. at $3.75, 202 brls. at $3.25, 140 brls. at $2.75, 140 brls. at $2.50, 229 brls. at $1.35, 226 boxes at $1.25; total, $2,748.15.

What was this purchase for?

Mr. FISHER. It was to try some experiments in keeping apples in cold storage.

Mr. BLAIN. What was the result?

Mr. FISHER. They were bought in that year and sold in the year afterwards, so that my hon. friend does not see the returns. There was a bulletin issued recently giving the results of those experiments.

Mr. EDWARDS.

Mr. BLAIN. Were these held in Canada?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, and the apples were afterwards exported, some at one time, and some at another. We watched carefully the results, and had reports from our officers in England as to how they reached the markets. The bulletin was published in June last.

Mr. BLAIN. Were the experiments entirely satisfactory to the department?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. The market went off that year, and we did not do very well with the sales.

Mr. BLAIN. Was there a profit or a loss?

Mr. FISHER. There was a profit on some, and a loss on some.

Mr. BLAIN. The government of Ontario is experimenting in the shipment of fruit from that province. Is the hon. minister co-operating with that government, or with other provincial governments to further the interests of the farmers who grow fruit?

Mr. FISHER. As a matter of fact, we shipped a large amount of fruit last year to England as an experiment. When my hon. friend says that the Ontario government shipped fruit, I think they assisted some private individuals to ship it.

Mr. BLAIN. There was a shipment of their own peaches.

Mr. FISHER. I am told they did not as a government ship any at all. As a matter of fact, we shipped a considerable quantity of peaches of last season's crop, and made a very good profit on them. We took the peaches from the grower, packed them and sent them to England, and out of what we got for them, we more than covered all the expenses, and gave to the shipper a considerably higher price than he would have got if he had sold the peaches at his own home. The experiment involved no expense to the department, except the supervision of the work. We guaranteed to the shipper the market price at the time, and we handed over to him three times the price we had guaranteed.

Mr. STAPLES. This is a new policy which the minister has adopted. He has been buying and selling fruit, and has been paying the lucky individual who got in touch with the government three times the price he would have got in his home market. I hope the minister did not show any partiality when he went out to purchase the fruit. He might tell the committee where he got the bulk of the fruit, and if he advised the fruit producers throughout the country that he was going to ship fruit in this way, so that they all might have a fair chance.

Mr. FISHER. What we did was to make an arrangement with the St. Catharines Cold Storage Company, who are practically the Fruit Growers' Association. We took their fruit of the best quality, and guaranteed them the market price of it at that time. We handled it as we thought best for an experimental purpose to test the best way to put it up.

Mr. STAPLES. Did the minister get the fruit from a company in St. Catharines or from individual producers?

Mr. FISHER. It is an association. We asked the association to co-operate with us to get the best fruit. When we got our returns we charged the expenses only and made a full return to the producers. That was three times what we guaranteed them. It was simply an experiment to show the result of packing and handling the fruit in a certain way and was very satisfactory. We purchased the apples, put them in cold storage and ran the risks.

Mr. THORNTON. From how many points were apples shipped in that way?

Mr. FISHER. From the counties of Elgin and Ontario. The Ontario apples were purchased from the Oshawa Fruit Growers, Limited.

Mr. THORNTON. Who was at the head of that?

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Lick.

Mr. THORNTON. Is he or was he an employee of the government?

Mr. FISHER. He was a fruit inspector for us years ago, but has not been for a long time.

Mr. STAPLES. Does the minister intend to continue this policy next year?

Mr. FISHER. We have a carload of apples now.

Mr. STAPLES. The minister has shown what a little thought and enterprise will do. The fault I have been finding with him is that he does not experiment enough along these lines. Will he continue this?

Mr. FISHER. I think the individual fruit growers ought to follow the example given, put up their fruit in the same way, and get the profit. We will not undertake to do the business for them.

Mr. EDWARDS. Did the packages bear a stamp to show that they were shipped by the government?

Mr. FISHER. No, they were simply marked 'Canadian peaches, Niagara brand.'

Mr. STAPLES. Who handled them on the other side?

Mr. FISHER. They were shipped to brokers in the ordinary way.

Mr. EDWARDS. The result of this experiment bears out my contention of this afternoon, that the government might well establish some system for the inspection and guaranteeing of our cheese.

To encourage the production and sale of Canadian tobacco, $15,000.

Mr. FISHER. I have had an expert from France making experiments in different parts of the country in the growing, handling and curing of tobacco. He reported that he would require two or three stations where he could grow tobacco in rotation with other crops, and have them go on permanently. We established one station in Essex and two small ones in Quebec, and have been trying to arrange to establish one in British Columbia. As the stations developed we added two more experts to the staff, one French and one English. I hear very favourable reports of the results of this work. The quality of the Canadian tobacco has largely improved and the growers have taken heart again in the production of this crop in Canada. A few years ago they were nearly in despair, but I am glad to say that things have revived, and last year especially in the county of Essex, they got a very handsome price indeed for their tobacco, and are very much encouraged.

Mr. SPROULE. About what price?

Mr. FISHER. At one time, 18 cents a pound.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister is a strong advocate of the abolition of cigarettes, and has voted in favour of the abolition of their manufacture, importation and sale. How does he square himself—shall I use that term—for proposing such a large expenditure to encourage the farmers of Canada to produce tobacco?

Mr. FISHER. I should be glad if nobody in Canada used tobacco, but if they will use it, I want the Canadian farmer and tobacco-grower to get the full advantage of it.

Mr. BLAIN. How about the youth of the land?

Mr. FISHER. I should be glad if they did not use tobacco.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. minister attempted once before to explain his position in this matter, but failed. I thought perhaps he would have thought out an explanation by this time. But he does not seem to be able to explain it, and I do not think I can assist him very much, for the matter is very hard of explanation.

Mr. FISHER. We will leave it, then.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the minister give us information as to the quantity of home-grown tobacco manufactured in Canada, and the quantity imported?

Mr. FISHER. I am told that last year 10,000,000 pounds was grown in Canada, about the same quantity as the year before, but at a better price.

Mr. SPROULE. And how about the quantity imported?

Mr. FISHER. I have not those figures at hand, but I could procure them from the Inland Revenue and Customs Departments.

Mr. STAPLES. What is the commercial value of last year's crop?

Mr. FISHER. I think it would average about 12 cents a pound, but assuming that it was only 10 cents a pound, the crop would represent about $1,000,000.

Mr. EDWARDS. The minister has established two or three experimental stations to assist in the development of the tobacco-growing industry? Has he considered the advisability of helping in any way this industry in eastern Ontario? In the city of Kingston, we have several quite large manufactories of tobacco and cigars. The proprietor of one has been endeavouring to interest the local farmers in the production of tobacco, claiming that it could be produced at a good profit. Seeing that so much tobacco is produced in Canada, I do not think the minister could prevent its production, even if he desired to do so, and if we are to go on producing it, I would like to see the people of eastern Ontario get a share of the profit.

Mr. FISHER. The two regions in eastern Canada where tobacco is chiefly produced are the counties of Kent and Essex, in southwestern Ontario, and such counties in Quebec as Montcalm, Rouville, Two Mountains and L'Assomption.

Mr. EDWARDS. Is the climate of these two sections the same?

Mr. FISHER. No, and the varieties of tobacco that they grow are different. Some tobacco is grown in Prince Edward county, and a little in places along the shore of Lake Ontario. A considerable quantity is grown in British Columbia, especially along Okanagan lake. It is there I hope to establish another station. My expert tells me that there is no reason why tobacco should not be grown in Prince Edward county as well as in Essex and Kent. The farmers, apparently, have not taken it up. The growth of this crop in Essex and Kent is probably due in part to the proximity of Michigan, where, under similar conditions, considerable quanities of tobacco are grown.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. JAMESON. Has the minister any reports of experiments of tobacco growing in the maritime provinces? I know that in the western part of Nova Scotia tobacco was grown by a gentleman as an experiment, and he told me that while it was not sufficiently fragrant to smoke in the house except in the day time—he being a sort of grass-widower—still he had proven that a crop could be grown there.

Mr. FISHER. We propose to make some experiments at the new station at Kentville which is in process of establishment.

Mr. STAPLES. Has the minister made any experiments in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta?

Mr. FISHER. No, not yet.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 11.47 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, March 29, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

RECIPROCITY AGREEMENT—WOOL IN THE FLEECE.

*Mr. ELSON:

For what reason was wool in the fleece, which is a product of the farm, not placed on the free list in the proposed reciprocity agreement between Canada and the United States, on which the American duty is now twelve cents per pound on Canada's long wools?

Mr. FIELDING. This item was not one of those upon which an agreement was reached. It might be difficult to determine the reason which entered into the minds of the negotiators as respects any particular item.

IMPORTS OF BEEF, PORK, &c.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds):

1. How many barrels, boxes or packages of pork, beef, mutton, lamb and cheese have been imported into Canada during the months of October, November and December, 1910, and for the months of January and February, 1911?

2. What was the weight and value thereof, and the countries from which the same were imported?

3. What was the number of pounds of butter and number of dozens of eggs, and the value thereof, and the countries imported from, for the month of February, 1911.

Mr. PATERSON:

1. The department has no record of the number of barrels, boxes or packages of pork, beef, &c., imported, the quantity in pounds simply being shown.

2. The quantity and value of pork, beef, mutton, lamb and cheese imported into Canada, by countries, during the months of October, November, December, January and February, was as follows:

PETIT ROCHER WHARF.

Mr. CROCKET:

What expenditure has been made since April 1, 1910, on account of roadway and repairs to wharf at Petit Rocher, N.B., and what are the items of said expenditure?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

1. $1,047.45, itemized as follows:

Balance on extra work on contract	344 70
Labour	273 06
Timber	325 04
Stone	104 65
Total to date, March 23, 1911,	$1,047 45

WHEAT PRICES IN WEST.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar):

1. Is the price of wheat higher in Dakota than in Manitoba?

2. Is the price of wheat shipped from the United States higher in the Liverpool markets than wheat shipped from Canada?

3. If so, what reason does the government assign for wheat in Dakota being higher than the price of wheat in Manitoba?

Mr. FISHER:

1, 2 and 3. The grain markets in Dakota are purely local, and in order to get prices current it would be necessary either to write local dealers or else procure copies of the local papers.

The principal grain markets in the Northwestern states of the union are Minneapolis and Duluth, and quotations at these centres can be furnished, but Dakota quotations have not been observed by my department.

The price of wheat shipped from the United States and from Canada is exactly the same in the Liverpool markets.

THE DUMPING CLAUSE.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario):

1. How often has the government put in operation the dumping clause of the Customs Act in respect to articles for the production of which bounties have been paid in regard to the steel and iron industries?

2. What are the dates, particulars, and reasons which induced the government to put in operation the said dumping clause?

Mr. PATERSON:

1 and 2. The collection of dumping duty is made by collectors of customs as in the case of other customs duties. Subject to the regulations and to certain exemptions temporary and otherwise, the dumping clause is operative through an Act of parliament as set forth in section 6 of the Customs Tariff, 1907—the provisions of the law being applied by collectors of customs to articles of a class or kind made in Canada, when such articles are exported to Canada, if the export or selling price to an importer in Canada is less than the fair market value of the same article as sold for home consumption in the country of export.

It would take a lengthy investigation to ascertain how often dumping duty has been collected in respect of imported iron or steel products similar to those to which bounties applied, since the dumping clause came into operation in 1904.

THE QUEBEC BRIDGE.

Mr. LENNOX:

1. Has the government made any definite investigation as to the feasibility of constructing a tunnel under the St. Lawrence river, in lieu of the Quebec bridge at or near Quebec, whether near the site of the bridge or elsewhere.

2. Has the government ascertained anything as to the cost of a tunnel?

3. Is there to the knowledge of the government any report or evidence in existence as to the nature of the material or formation through which a tunnel would be constructed under the river and the approaches to the tunnel at or near Quebec? If so what kind of material would be encountered?

Mr. GRAHAM: This department has no record of any investigation being held as to the advisability of constructing a tunnel under the St. Lawrence river at Quebec, in lieu of the Quebec bridge.

RECIPROCITY—BRITISH TARIFF COMMISSION.

Mr. LENNOX:

1. Has the government obtained copies of the report of the British Tariff Commission, to the British government, on the proposed reciprocal trade arrangement between Canada and the United States, and will the government lay a copy on the table of the House?

2. When did the government take steps to obtain official or definite knowledge of this report?

3. Will the government furnish each member of the House with one or more copies of this report, and how soon will they be available?

4. Has the government carefully perused and considered this report, and, in the opinion of this government, are the statements it contains, particularly as to exports and imports of Canada, the United States and the United Kingdom, affected by the agreement, correct?

5. If not apparently correct, or if not satisfactory to our government, has the attention of the British government been called to the matters objected to?

Mr. FIELDING. The government is not aware of any such report to the British government. I think it probable that the hon. gentleman has in mind a document, which is not official, issued by a political organization in England.

VALIDITY OF MARRIAGES.

Mr. SEXSMITH:

1. Under the laws of Canada or of the several provinces, are marriages valid when contracted between persons of different religious beliefs? If so, in what cases?

2. Has any one the right to urge persons who have contracted such valid marriages to disregard them on the ground that they are invalid?

3. If such right does not exist what is the remedy?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH:

1. There is no Dominion legislation on the subject.

The solemnization of marriage in the provinces is, under the British North America Act, matter entirely of provincial jurisdiction.

Section 92 of that statute enacts that in each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to matters coming within the classes of subjects next hereinafter enumerated; that is to say:

12. The solemnization of marriage in the provinces.

EXPORTS OF MILK.

Mr. SEXSMITH:

1. What quantity of milk was exported from Canada to the United States in 1910, and what was the value of the same?

2. What quantity of cream was exported from Canada to the United States in 1910, and what was the value of the same?

Mr. PATERSON:

1. The quantity and value of milk exported from Canada to the United States during the 11 months ended February 28, 1911 amounted to 39,773 gallons, valued at $4,276.

2. The quantity and value of cream exported from Canada to the United States during the 11 months ended February 28, 1911 amounted to 1,866,577 gallons, valued at $1,699,934.

Note.—Milk and cream were not separately enumerated in the classification of exports prior to the beginning of the fiscal year 1911.

BARK LAKE POST OFFICE.

Mr. FOSTER:

1. When and why was the Bark Lake post office closed?

2. When and why was it again reopened, and with what points did it then and does it now receive and send by carrier direct?

3. What was then and what is now the frequency of service?

4. What is the distance between it and the nearest post office east and west?

5. What is the record of business of Barry's Lake post office, Opeongo post office and Bark Lake post office?

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Bark Lake post office was closed on the 31st January, 1900, the office not being at that time considered necessary.

2. The office was reopened at a point one half mile distant from the former site on the 21st March, 1903, it having been represented that the office was again required. The office is served direct from the Barry's Bay post office.

3. The service was formerly tri-weekly. It is now weekly.

4. It is three miles distant from Opeongo post office on the west and five and a half miles distant from Barry's Bay post office on the east.

5. The Barry's Bay post office shows an annual revenue of $620.09, the Opeongo post office a revenue of $56.75, and the Bark Lake post office a revenue of $26.90.

EXPORT OF AMERICAN SILVER.

Mr. FOSTER:

1. What amount of United States silver currency has been exported each year from Canada by the banks since the policy was adopted of paying them a commission therefor, and what commission and express expenses have been paid therefor each year?

2. Has the department made any estimate of the amount in circulation in Canada, and as to what extent it has decreased since the above policy was adopted?

Mr. FIELDING:

1.

	United States Silver. Exported.	Commission.	Express Charges.
1906..	$ 576,661.30	$2,162.45	$5,054.91
1909-10	918,530.12	3,444.28	5,049.09
1910-11	1,482,503.96	5,557.80	7,476.35

2. No estimate has been made of the United States silver in circulation in Canada on account of the inherent difficulties in making an exact, or even approximate, estimate of this character.

That the Canadian silver is taking the place of the United States coinage thus exported is evident from the fact that during the year 1909-10, $1,097,925 Canadian silver was issued in Canada, and in 1910-11 $1,452,400; whereas, for some years previously the average amount of Canadian silver issued did not exceed $600,000 a year.

TRANSPORT OF FISH.

Mr. FOSTER:

1. What amount has been expended each year in assisting the transport of fish from the maritime provinces to the provinces west of them, to whom has the money been paid, and in what manner?

2. What has been the value of fish so transported each year?

3. How far west have assisted shipments been extended?

Mr. BRODEUR:

Year.	Cold Storage Freight Service
	I.C.R.	Halifax and Southwestern, R. R.	Canadian Express Company.	Dominion Express Company.
1907-08.	224 41	.....	.....	.....

1910-11.	acct. not yet rec'd.	.....	7,793 23	8,535 69

2. As the department accepts responsibility only for a portion of the transportation charges, it has no record of the value of the fish.

3. To the western boundary of Ontario.

EXPORTS OF POTATOES.

Mr. SEXSMITH:

1. What is the quantity and value of potatoes exported from Canada to the United States in each of the years 1901 to 1910, inclusive?

2. What is the quantity and value of potatoes imported from the United States in each of the years 1901 to 1910, inclusive?

Mr. PATERSON:

1. The quantity and value of potatoes (Canadian produce) exported from Canada to the United States during the fiscal years from 1901 to 1910, inclusive, was as follows:

	Bushels.	Value.
1901	232,101	$ 68,151
1902	808,041	327,046
1903	138,855	56,969
1904	1,451,070	742,537
1905	34,870	18,301

1909	574,454	251,907
1910	678,632	345,903

2. The quantity and value of potatoes imported into Canada from the United States during the fiscal years from 1901 to 1910, inclusive, was as follows:

	Bushels.	Value.
1901	136,666	$ 88,649
1902	81,771	87,970
1903	407,425	228,609

1907 (9 months)	94,521	71,065
1908	249,907	195,650
1909	127,110	129,725
1910	217,170	181,751

WINDSOR GOVERNMENT DOCK.

Mr. WILCOX:

1. Is it the intention of the Department of Public Works to establish a government dock at Windsor? If so, when does the department propose to start?

2. What will be the preliminary appropriation, if any?

3. What portion of the cost has the city of Windsor agreed to bear, if any?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

1, 2 and 3. The matter is now under consideration.

MR. JOHN SINCLAIR.

Mr. BRADBURY:

1. Is Mr. John Sinclair still acting inspector at the new Indian reserve, Fisher river? If so, what are his duties and what salary does he receive?

2. How long has he been employed by the government?

Mr. OLIVER:

1. Mr. Sinclair is employed as foreman on the new Indian reserve at Fisher river to look after the construction of houses for the Indians and to give the Indians instruction in farming. His salary is $75 a month.

2. He has been employed by the Department of Indian Affairs since the 28th of April, 1900.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—OVERCLASSIFICATION, &c.

Mr. LENNOX. I wish to ask the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham), one or two questions with reference to the overclassifications and overbreaks and train hauls which are being investigated by the Board of Engineers. Is the minister able to give us any definite information? The other day, on the 10th March, he could not do so. He said there were certain statements which had to be prepared and which it would take some time to furnish, but he hoped to be ready before long to inform the House what the overbreak and overclassifications and other over-charges amounted to in such a way that the House would understand them, and that they would be given not necessarily in the terms which the engineers would use.

Mr. GRAHAM. I said on that occasion that these details were being worked out by the assistant engineer, but he informed me that it would take a lot of work and some time to complete it. I shall make inquiry and see if it is completed, but it strikes me that it cannot be completed until the snow is away as no practical work can be done until then. However, I may be wrong.

THE QUEBEC BRIDGE.

Mr. LENNOX. Will the minister inform the House as to the situation of the Quebec bridge—as to whether any plan has been definitely determined on, whether the contract has been let, and the time limit stipulated for completing the work?

Mr. GRAHAM. Progress has been made, but I think it would not be in the public interest to make any statement at present. I hope shortly to be able to give all the information required. The contract has not yet been signed.

THE SOULANGES CANAL.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham), for some information with regard to the report of Mr. Boyer upon the charges made respecting the administration of the Soulanges canal. During the session of 1907-8, a report was sent in to the government and we were asked to vote a sum to pay the commissioner. Several times has that report been asked for but my hon. friend has always said that he could not bring it down until the government had taken action on it. It was again asked for during the session of 1909. Before we go on with further estimates of that department, I would ask my hon. friend to lay that report on the table of the House.

Mr. GRAHAM. I thought the report had been brought down. If not, I have no objection to bringing it down; I shall look into it.

Mr. MONK. I have found no trace of it.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to give notice that to-morrow, I shall bring up the report of the West Indian Commission, if the Finance Minister has no objection.

Mr. FIELDING. I have no objection.

SUPPLY—GOVERNMENT AID TO AGRICULTURE.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. ARTHUR GILBERT (Drummond and Arthabaska.) (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to invite the House to a consideration of the means which it is desirable we should adopt with a view to forwarding the agricultural interests of the country.

Is our farming community in a position to hold their own against foreign competition on the markets of the world? Of course, they may ship abroad whatever is left over and above the quantities consumed at home; but in order to compete vigorously against foreigners, it is necessary in the first place that they should have as much science as they have with respect to making the soil productive, with respect also to cattle breeding, dairying, agriculture, bee-keeping and fruit-growing. Whatever success has been accomplished by Denmark, Belgium and Holland, and other countries, I think I would have no difficulty in showing that we are in a position to get still better results. The hon. Minister of Agriculture, has so stated to the House in his speech of April 15, 1910, (page 7380) of which I shall quote a few lines:

> Any unprejudiced mind must conclude that in view of the fertile soil which spreads all over this Dominion, and the intelligence of our people, the annual crop production per acre is not what it ought to be. I believe that is due to the fact that scientific methods of cultivating the soil and the treatment of land are not thoroughly well understood by our people generally. To instruct and teach the people, object lessons are of the primest importance.

Of course it is of primary importance that he should be given object lessons. The most effective way would consist in starting experiment stations at a central point in each of the various constituencies, in such a way that the farmers in the neighbouring district might see for themselves the results obtained from good farming methods and a scientific management of the soil. There should be in connection with these experiment stations practical and scientific men whose duty it would be to educate the farmers in these respects. The hon. Minister of Agriculture realizes fully the great importance of having a greater number of illustration stations, and he has clearly stated so in his speech of April 15, 1910, (page 7380) of which the following is an extract :

If those who live in a particular district can go to an easily accessible central point and there see illustrated the result of good management of the crops and of scientific treatment of the soil, they can learn more than they can by any amount of reading and oral instruction. It is therefore highly important that the number of branch stations should be increased. Now, if each of these stations were to cost $25,000 or $35,000 the appropriations I ask from parliament would not enable me to establish any great number. It is my belief that we should establish comparatively smaller stations and deal simply with crop production, and not include stock experiments to any great extent, if at all. After all, the experiment of feeding stock indoors is very much the same in one place as in another, and the results obtained will serve the industry in all parts of the country. But, experiments in the treatment of the soil and the production of the crops must be conducted in as many different localities as possible. I am therefore trying to establish a very considerable number of branch stations of this character on the land of the science which has been adduced from successful experimentation. This is a new principle in the establishment of these branch farms, which I trust will appeal to the House as I know it will appeal to the farming people of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, does dairying give as large returns as one might expect it to give? I realize fully the advance we have made of late years, but if we take note of what is going on in foreign lands, we cannot but acknowledge that we might increase two-fold, and even three-fold, the revenue from our cows.

As evidence I shall quote the statements made in this connection by the hon. Minister of Agriculture in his speech of April 15, 1910 (pages 7386 and 7387 of 'Hansard'):

One of the most glaring facts in connection with the insufficient realization of the proper profits on our farms in Canada, is the small average production of the cow. Those of us who have studied this question know that in Denmark and Holland 15 or 20 years ago, they were in about the same position in this respect as we are to-day, but by a thorough system and co-operative work and testing the individual cows, by cutting out the bad one and keeping the good one and only breeding from the good ones, they are gradually and steadily increasing the average products and have reached the point that the cows of Denmark produce more than double per year individual cow, than the cows of Canada. Now this is a very unfortunate, a very bad condition of affairs.

And a little further on he continues as follows:

There is no reason to believe that in a few years the Canadians will not be able to say that the average cow production in Canada is what the Danes produce, 9,000 pounds a year for every cow in the country, instead of the Canadian average of 3,000.

The Danes obtain a yield of 9,000 pounds of milk per cow per annum, while Canadians are content with an average yield of 3,000 pounds; that is a difference of 6,000 pounds per cow per annum against us, through lack of requisite knowledge on our part.

Mr. Speaker, soil drainage is another matter to which we should give attention. There are still a great many who do not realize the importance of improvements in this particular line. It is well known that soil drainage increases the yield from the land; in certain localities that increase may amount to fifty per cent and even more. In order to induce farmers to drain their lands I think the government should grant a bonus. We also need the aid of the government towards draining certain lands which require an exceptional outlay to carry on the work, and the country would benefit thereby.

In my constituency, about Drummondville, St. Germain and Wickham, there is an area of about 3,500 acres of good hay land which suffers at times from the overflow of a small stream. The injury caused by these freshets might be avoided by means of protection works. However, that is a rather costly undertaking which the owners of these lands could not think of carrying out without the help of the government.

Mr. Speaker, considering that thirty or forty families more might eke out a living from these lands when drained, the increase in the population, which would amount to 300 at the lowest, would compensate the country for the money expended. As the population is continually increasing from one census to another, it is difficult to state accurately what revenue the government get per annum per head of population, but I think we might, without exaggeration, place it at $15, and that would mean $4,500 of revenue forthcoming to the government from these families. It is unfortunate that lands of such fertility should not be under cultivation; we are losing heavily every year. These people, unable to live on such lands, have gone to the United States.

Mr. Speaker, if we wish to make a success of agriculture, I think we should bring about and encourage the formation of agricultural co-operative associations. The countries which are to-day leaders in agriculture have a great number of these co-operative associations; the subject was a live one at the last convention of the United States and Canadian Agricultural Lecturers held at Washington on November 14, 1910.

Here is a short extract from the report of Mr. Gigault, Deputy Minister of Agriculture:

At each of these conventions the hon. Mr. Wilson, secretary of agriculture at Washington, insisted on the importance of agricultural education and co-operation. Referring to the high cost of food products, he taunted the farming class for dispensing with the necessary efforts towards acquiring the knowledge indispensable for developing the agricultural resources of the country and increasing the yield of farm lands. At the same time, he recommended that they should have recourse to co-operation with a view to safeguarding their interests and securing a greater proportion of the price paid by consumers. An inquiry has shown as regards certain food products, the farmer received only 35 per cent if the price paid by consumers, the remaining sixty-five per cent falling into the purse of middlemen or being taken up by other factories. It cannot be denied that between the producer and the consumer, there are many useless middlemen whom it would be in the interest of the farming community to dispense with if they are intent on reaping the fruit of their labours. In a great many cases a food product will go through the hands of two or three dealers before reaching the consumer.

In order that we may have within the shortest possible time the benefit of the working of these associations, I think the government should introduce forthwith legislation providing for the establishment of such associations, and send out lecturers to spread a knowledge of their usefulness and of the systems of co-operative association at present known best adapted to the needs of the various localities.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the most effective encouragement these associations could receive would be in the shape of a yearly grant to the treasure of each of these agricultural co-operative associations, say a grant of $5 or more for each farmer who would be willing to join such association, with the understanding that such fund would be employed for the benefit of the said association in accordance with the directions of its officers.

To my mind, that would be a most beneficial appropriation in the interest of the country, for by helping on and developing the farming industry we are actually helping every other class of society, for they are all dependent on the agricultural community. In the very measure that the latter prosper, the whole country is benefited.

Mr. Speaker, these agricultural co-operative associations would aid in developing more rapidly dairying, breeding, poultry raising, bee-keeping and agriculture. They would also enable the grain growers to get better results from their labours through the turning of their grain crops into commodities available for consumption. They would bring about, in connection with the government grant of 30 per cent, the building of cold storage warehouses throughout the country for the preservation of our meats, our eggs, our fruit and other farm products, these associations becoming the agencies through which cold storage accommodation could thus be provided in the various localities.

Then, again, these co-operative associations would enable cattle breeders to build abattoirs with government aid. The hon. Minister of Agriculture seems willing to help those who are intent on helping themselves. Dealing with that question of the abattoirs, he expressed views to that effect, as will be seen in the following extract from a speech delivered by him on December 13, 1910 (page 1242):

Now I wish to say a word or two more in regard to abattoirs. I have here the annual report of the Department of Agriculture for the province of Alberta, and it contains a report of the commissioners on beef, mutton, &c. I have said that this proposal was an enormous one, it was a proposal to expend about eight million dollars. When that proposal was laid before me, I told the promoters frankly that I considered it far too big, that there was no prospect of its being successful. It was a very elaborate scheme, with two or three central plants, and a lot of outside plants. It was going to absorb the whole trade of the country. Now, while I believe that it is important to promote the development of these different businesses, they ought to have some natural basis for success. They ought to begin in a small way, and grow up, instead of starting out at once as huge enterprises, with an enormous capital invested, which would never have a prospect of paying. The only way in which capital could be tempted into this investment was by the government backing it up, and agreeing to pay all the losses. In short language, that is what the proposal meant. Now, I believe, to a certain extent, in giving public assistance, but I believe that the government should only assist those who are ready to assist themselves. I believe in the government aiding enterprises, but at the same time, private individuals ought to be willing to show their good faith in the enterprises, by putting some of their own money into it, because it would then be more likely to succeed. I say it was too large a scheme for the government to undertake. I have here a report of the commissioners to the provincial government of Alberta, from which I will read an extract:—

I am perfectly in accord with the hon. Minister of Agriculture in this connecton.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture, in a speech of April 15, 1910 (page 7387) referred to some work done by Mr. McNeil for the purpose of encouraging the formation of such associations:

A word in regard to some work instituted by Mr McNeill, head of the fruit branch, which points in the right direction, that is the encouragement and establishment of fruit growers' or shippers' and packers' associations. One of the greatest difficulties our fruit growers in Canada have experienced is that their work is largely done by each individual, and that one individual has not enough fruit to fill large orders or to make an impression on the market. By forming an association, a group of people in a particular district can get together and employ one efficient and competent expert packer and grader, who will grade and pack their fruit so that in the aggregate the fruit which is thus handled in co-operation amongst a number of people will bring in a larger return and be better accepted and received on the market than fruit sent forward by the individual. This work was started in the southwestern part of Ontario by Mr. McNeill some years ago, and to-day, I am glad to know, there are a number of such associations working most satisfactorily and most successfully. It is work of the department in one sense, because we indicate the road. It is work of the people themselves, however, and it can only be successfully carried on by the co-operative work of the people combining together, mutually trusting one another, associating themselves for combined work and carrying on the whole thing as a business transaction in a business way. I am glad they are doing it successfully as it is an important work, for the improvement of the fruit trade of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I think that in order to promote agriculture the government should undertake the publication of an agricultural paper for the use of the members of these agricultural co-operative associations, wherein such members might record their grievances and impart the required information.

That paper would be for the exclusive use of agricultural co-operative associations to facilitate the work of these purveyors on the local and world markets, and enable them to secure a uniform grading of farm products, &c.

Mr. Speaker, is the farming population increasing as rapidly as that in the towns? Judging from the number of houses which are closed in the rural districts, and from the energy displayed in the building line in cities, I am bound to come to the conclusion that the farming populations is being depleted and transferred to the cities.

I think it is much to be regretted for the farming community and for the country as a whole that such conditions should exist, as they cannot but result in still more enhancing the cost of living.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture pointed out those results when he addressed the House on the 13th December, 1910, as reported in 'Hansard,' page 1233:

> In eastern Canada, in Ontario, and Quebec, and in the maritime provinces the population in the rural districts is almost stationary and possibly in some places it may have decreased while the fact is that the total population of these provinces has increased largely and rapidly. Large cities like Montreal and Toronto in these two provinces, and like Sydney and St. John in the lower provinces, are building up at an immense rate, and the inhabitants of those cities are consumers, and not producers of food products.

Sir, how is it, I ask, that the increase in the population of our rural districts did not keep pace with that of our urban population? In the first place, when farmers are doing well they do not, as a rule, desert their farm lands, and that accounts for that rural population being stationary. Others go west, and rightly so.

As to those farmers who have to give up their farm lands, either because they are over head and ears in debt, or because they do not know how to secure a good return from their land farms for lack of scientific farming, or, again, on account of the infertility of the soil, those men, I say, are like the sons of our good farmers who, for some reason or other, drift away from their homes because the father cannot afford to provide for their settling.

Then those people have to choose between living on a mortgaged farm land or taking up a timbered land which is being plundered by the lumberman. When confronted by such conditions they are to be seen looking all around for some means of bettering their position, and while some go to work on the railways, in the mines or in the lumber camps, others drift into the cities where they engage in various commercial occupations or work in the shops or factories because they get better pay. That is a fact much to be regretted. The hon. Minister of Agriculture referred to it in his speech of December 13, 1910, page 1241, as follows:

> I want to mention another thing which perhaps, may not affect the west so much, but it certainly affects the east. By reason of various economic facts, it has been well understood for the last few years that the reward of a man's toil and investment in other industries, has been much greater than it has been in agriculture, notwithstanding the high prices which farmers have received for a great deal of their products. The consequence is, that a great number of men and women who used to be engaged in agriculture, and who were glad to live on the farm, have drifted into the cities, and have taken up other occupations, dealing with the country's commerce, railroads, mining, transportation, and so forth. The consequence is, that there is to-day, on the farms of eastern Canada, at any rate, less labour and less efficient labour available for agricultural products than there used to be six or eight years ago. This is a fact, which we cannot but recognize, and which we must all deplore. I know that personally, being engaged in farming myself, I deplore it very much, and I find it detrimental to the progress and prosperity of the country. The result is, combined with other things, that our exports of agricultural products, with the exception of raw grades produced in the northwest, have been decreasing, and perhaps in some particular instances, there may be some slight failure in the progress of production.

Within the last few years, Sir, our exports of cattle, butter, cheese, ham, bacon, potatoes, eggs, &c., have decreased to such a point that before many years have elapsed, should the production of those articles not keep pace with the requirements of consumption, we shall have to import those products from abroad.

Sir, what is to be done under such circumstances? Remedies have to be applied to existing evils. I think the hon. Minister of Agriculture, from what he told us on the 13th December, 1910 (page 1251) when he spoke of stimulating the efforts of the producer to the highest degree, is ready to take action and set to work, and here are his words:

If I knew of any way in which I could stimulate production in Canada to a greater degree, I would be glad to do it.

Sir, the proper remedy within our reach is to be found in the government directly expending at least one-tenth of the yearly revenue of the Dominion of Canada in the interest of the farming community so that agriculture may flourish and advance here, just as it is making headway in Denmark, Belgium, Holland and elsewhere.

May we, Canadian farmers, ever hope to secure our legitimate share of the national budget after having won the fair land of ours from the primeval forest and having, up to now, cleared and tilled the soil in order to wrest from its bosom the necessary food products of our maintenance and that of the whole country, not to mention the fact that we are indirectly paying two-thirds of the country's public expenditure?

Since confederation we have subsidized various railway companies to the extent of $607,776,853.50.

There has been expended on the Canadian militia $83,193,389.45.

The uprising in the Northwest in 1884 saddled the country with an expenditure of $1,697,851.52.

We also gave the British government from 1889 to 1906, for the maintenance of the Esquimalt garrison, $1,237,288.

The South African war, the provisional garrison of Halifax, have cost us $2,826,608.99.

We have also paid bonuses towards the encouragement of the manufacture of iron and steel to the extent of $17,119,051.

Since 1867 there has been expended for arts, agriculture, statistics, civil government, immigration and quarantine an aggregate sum of $28,399,327.37.

What I find most deplorable is that since 1867 we have devoted but $14,464,935.48 to the arts, agriculture and statistics, whereas all the countries which are anxious to succeed do not shrink from making the necessary expenditure towards diffusing the science of agriculture among the farming population and encouraging the foundation of co-operative agricultural societies. To realize just what I just said, you have but to read the reports which have been issued from Rome by the International Institute of Agriculture, which comprises forty-seven world powers.

Sir, the proposal which I make is with a view to promoting the general interests of agriculture. Living as we do upon Canadian soil and feeding upon its products, we should take a deep concern in the tillers of the soil. I do not know of a single man in this country who is not to benefit by the diffusion of the agricultural science and the prosperity of the farming community.

The manufacturers, the workingmen, the traders, the transportation companies, the liberal professions, will all benefit by it. I hope, therefore, that my proposal will meet with no opposition from this House, and I submit the following amendment:

That all the words after 'that' in the main motion be struck out and replaced by the following:

In the opinion of this House, one-tenth at least of our yearly national income could be spent by the government on the improvement and advancement of Canadian agriculture and devoted, among other, to the following purposes:

(a) More efficacious diffusion of the agricultural sciences among the farming community.

(b) The improved drainage of many agricultural lands now insufficiently drained and whose yield would be doubled by means of works necessitating government assistance.

(c) The foundation and subsidizing of co-operative agricultural societies and the assistance given to cold storage plants established by those societies under the Act; the publication and the free distribution of an agricultural journal for the use of the members of those societies.

Mr. EDWARDS. I desire to speak briefly in favour of the motion of the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Gilbert). While perhaps objection might be taken to specifying a certain amount, such as one-tenth of the revenue, to be devoted to agricultural purposes, the main object of the resolution is nevertheless right. If it should be found in the interest of agriculture to expend three-tenths, or four-tenths, or whatever other amount is necessary, then that sum should be spent. But I do think that much less is being spent at present in the interest of agriculture throughout the Dominion of Canada than should be spent. The amount expended by the Dominion of Canada purely and simply on agriculture is, I believe, less than the amount expended by the province of Ontario for the same purpose. The amount expended by this government is exceedingly small compared with the amounts expended by some other governments in the interest of agriculture:

France	$ 9,200,000
Austria	9,240,000
Hungary	9,400,000
United States	10,000,000
Russia	25,280,000
Japan	3,750,000
Canada, average of last ten years	604,188

Now, I think the motion of my hon. friend is very opportune, especially at the present time when we are considering a proposal brought down by the Minister of Finance to establish closer trade relations between this country and the United States, because, if that agreement is ratified, it will bring our farmers into competition, not only with those of the United States, but with the leading agricultural countries of the world. In view of the inadequate amount expended by the federal government in the interests of agriculture, compared with the amounts expended by some of the countries I have named, it does seem to me that this government should take immediately a step forward, and place our agriculturalists in a position where they will be able to meet the competition which they will have to meet if this agreement is ratified. That is one of the reasons why I think the resolution proposed by my hon. friend is peculiarly opportune at the present time. It will be necessary not only for the federal government, but for the provincial governments, to spend more money along the line of instructing the people in the principles of scientific farming. Instructors must be sent out in order to teach the people how they may compete successfully with the agriculturalists of other countries. There is another point in the resolution to which I wish to refer, and that is the suggestion that the government take up the matter of drainage, bringing some of the waste lands of the country under cultivation. As I caught that part of the resolution, it states it to be advisable that the government should expend money to drain large areas of land that are now under water, or that are otherwise incapable of tillage, because of lack of drainage, and which, if drained, would become very valuable land. I think that part of the resolution should receive careful consideration by this House. The Dominion of Canada is expending large sums of money in opening up the great west by building lines of railway and otherwise, and since the burden of that work is borne by the older provinces, Ontario and Quebec and the maritime provinces, they are entitled to every consideration in any scheme for reclaiming waste lands by drainage. If it is a good thing for this government to subsidize lines of railway to run into a new country to open it up for settlement, surely it would be equally advisable for us to take some means of draining large tracts of land such as we have in various parts of eastern Canada, and which are accessible to markets, but which are now incapable of being cultivated. With the reservation that I am not prepared to specify what sum should be granted for the general purpose of agriculture, I endorse the motion of the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska.

Mr. EDWARDS.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I am fully in accord with the motion made by the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Gilbert). For a number of years in this House I have been urging upon the government the expenditure of more money in the interest of the farmers. If I remember rightly, last year the amount of money ostensibly expended by the Agricultural Department in the interest of the farmers was put down as something over a million dollars; but when we came to analyse that sum, and to take out the amount paid for archives, the patent branch, statistics and so on, the sum was reduced to only about $400,000 actually expended in the interests of the farmer. There are many ways in which a greater sum could be advantageously expended. In a debate which took place in this House yesterday, there was a question quoted which had been put by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) with regard to the meat industry, urging that something should be done to improve that industry. As I understand it, there is not a province in Canada but that is complaining about the meat industry, and urging that something should be done to help the farmers in that respect. Then we have the cheese and butter industry in eastern Ontario. Early in this session we had a delegation of some 600 farmers from Eastern Ontario complaining bitterly about the treatment they were receiving in regard to the disposal of their cheese, and they asked that something be done to relieve them from the losses they were suffering. Not one dollar is being spent for that purpose, no notice is taken of it. There is another thing that I believe should be done in the interest of the farmers of this country, namely, a certain amount should be expended every year towards improving roads throughout the country. Some system should be adopted of assisting the municipalities or the local governments in improving roads for the benefit of the farmers. The province of Ontario is already doing that, but some other provinces are not able to do so, and I think the federal government should come to their assistance. I feel myself that something will have to be done for the farmers if this reciprocity agreement goes through, something will have to be done to assist them to change their mode of farming. At present, even under the measure of protection given to the farmers, large quantities of farm produce are coming into this country. According to a statement made yesterday by the Minister of Customs, in answer to a question put by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), it appears that considerable quantities of agricultural produce are being imported into Canada. This is the statement presented by the Minister of Customs:

Statement showing the quantity and value of butter and eggs imported for consumption into Canada, by countries, during the month of February, 1911.

	Lbs.	Value.
Butter—
Great Britain..	2,800	$ 689
Australia..	15,008	3,000
New Zealand..	181,826	41,813
United States..	6,838	1,707
Total..	206,472	$47,209
Eggs—
Hong Kong..	4,250	$ 193
Chinese Empire... ..	11,138	1,673
United States..	719,315	131,341
Total..	734,703	$133,207

Now there is no doubt that something will have to be done to protect the farmers from falling prices, which will inevitably result from importations of agricultural produce, particularly if this reciprocity agreement goes through. For that reason I am in hearty accord with this motion. If the government object to expending any specified sum such as one-tenth of the revenue, they might at least accept the motion modified, and agree that a larger amount should be expended in the interest of the farmers than is being expended at present; because we must all remember that the farming industry is the backbone of this country.

Mr. ROCH LANCTOT (Laprairie-Napierville.) (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, as a farmer representing one of the finest agricultural constituencies in the province of Quebec, I think it is incumbent on me to offer a few remarks in reference to the motion before the House.

To begin with, I wonder whether the hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska (Mr. Gilbert) holds a special mandate to cut down the appropriation provided to meet the needs of the farming community in such a way that in future they would not be entitled to more than one-tenth of the whole revenue; that is, eight to ten millions?

The hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) stated that the hon. Minister of Agriculture has spent last year for agricultural purposes $1,000,000 only. That may be true, but it should not be forgotten that the building of the Transcontinental is properly an expenditure of which the farming community has the benefit. That undertaking will cost, according to hon. gentlemen opposite, more than $200,000,000. Will not this expenditure be beneficial to the general agricultural interests of the country, and more particularly of the districts through which the railway passes? That cannot be gainsaid, and as an illustration I may refer to what is going on in my own constituency. Four years ago this House voted subsidies for various railways, and amongst others to the Napierville Junction railway, which was being built through the constituency of Laprairie-Napierville for a distance of 27 miles and two-tenths; the subsidies thus voted amounted to $174,500. That appropriation, I dare say, was made purely and simply to aid the farming community in the constituency which I have the honour to represent.

Were we to restrict the appropriation for agriculture to an amount of $10,000,000, that expenditure could not be exceeded, and should the rural constituencies be in need of more, they would have to do without, as the law of the country would have to be complied with. That reason would be sufficient in itself to induce me to vote against the proposal of the hon. member. But there are many others. Take, for instance, the improvement of our navigable waterways, and especially of the St. Lawrence, the improvement of the harbour of Montreal, in short, the improvement of our transportation system as a whole. Does not the farming community profit largely by these works? Take the exportation of our farm products to Europe through the port of Montreal. Does not the export trade of these products. of butter and cheese, for instance, profit by these improvements, by the aids to navigation and the deepening of that same channel effected by the Dominion government? Is it not a fact that shippers pay less than they were formerly called upon to pay for the transportation of these products as the result of these improvements brought about in connection with the navigation of the St. Lawrence route?

Since the Liberal party has been in power is it not a fact that we have a cold storage system on steamers and railway lines, by means of which our products are safely taken to Montreal and thence to Europe? All of this enormous expenditure is effected by the government, and nobody's alimony is cut down in consequence.

Moreover, I think that if we asked for a fixed appropriation for agriculture, the other classes in the community might make a similar claim on their own behalf, and such a demand could not be rejected. Would that be a desirable policy to adopt? Would it be in the general interest of the country? I do not think it would.

Is it not to be assumed that the people of this country, and particularly the farming class, have greater confidence in the hon. Minister of Agriculture, who for fifteen years past has administered this department with such wisdom and ability, have greater confidence, I say, in the hon. minister and prefer seeing him at the head of that department rather than confiding to the member for Drummond and Arthabaska? I for one proclaim myself satisfied with the ability shown by the hon. minister in the management of that department, and as long as he shows such wisdom I shall give him my sincere and loyal support.

The hon. member for Grenville contended that the government should appropriate money for the improvement of roads. He pointed to the province of Ontario where good roads are being built with the help of the provincial government. I must inform the hon. member that we also have a progressive government in the province of Quebec under the guidance of Sir Lomer Gouin, and that for some years past we have been improving our roads as much as they have in the province of Ontario. The Gouin government now grants to all municipalities undertaking to build macadam roads $1,000 per annum provided they themselves expend more than $2,000; $500 is granted in the same way for every $1,000 expended on the improvement of roads which are not laid down to macadam. But I have reason to believe that this government will do still more in the future.

I do not think that the federal government should undertake the construction or the maintenance of roads which are under provincial jurisdiction. The same applies to the request of the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska as to the drainage of lands. That also pertains to the local authorities. It is quite enough for the federal government to build canals, to construct and maintain light houses, to equip harbours, to attend to several other works of national utility without burdening themselves with enterprises entirely within the jurisdiction of the provincial authorities such as the betterment of the roads.

I do not wish to detain the House any longer, Mr. Speaker, and for the reasons just stated I will vote against the motion of the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska.

Mr. E. PAQUET (L'Islet). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I will endeavour to justify, as briefly as possible, the principles of the amendment moved by my hon. friend, the member for Drummond-Arthabaska. It is not my desire to underrate the work done by my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture and his department. I give him full credit for his efforts and the fair play accorded to the French Canadians and the French language. But I sincerely believe that the government should do much more to render the lands more productive and for the improvement and advancement of Canadian agriculture. The questions relating to customs, taxes, transportation and foreign competition have a great influence on the agricultural development of the country. Our railways and water routes are an important factor, but for the moment I will not discuss these problems in the solution of which the different departments of the federal government are engaged.

I extend my sincere thanks to the hon. Minister of Agriculture for attending at the opening of the first exhibition of seed grain held in the city of Quebec, the 19th and 20th January last. In the 'Journal d'Agriculture' of the 15th January, 1910, (page 156), the hon. minister is reported as follows:

The hon. Minister of Agriculture then quoted the report of Mr. Robertson, of the Macdonald Institute, on the agricultural possibilities of our lands. The agricultural production of the land, in the province of Quebec, last year, is estimated at $73,000,000. If all the land under cultivation had been cultivated as it is done on the farm of the Institute, the return would have been at least $147,000,000. If you cultivate with method, you will double the production. The soil, at the Macdonald Institute was, at first, better than at other places. It is only by methodical cultivation that such admirable results have been attained.

On the 11th January, 1910, the hon. minister, speaking at Rigaud, said:

In the whole of Canada, it is the province of Quebec, that have accomplished the greater progress in the dairy industry. But there is much more to be done. The production can be considerably augmented in the province and it is the duty of our farmers to accomplish the necessary improvements.

In these utterances of the minister we have the proof that the government are bound to give their best attention to the productive power of the land and the development of the dairy industry.

We have much to do if we want to get from the soil all the agricultural richness that it contains.

The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska in his remarks has mentioned the slaughter-houses. At the present moment, a movement is on foot in the city of Quebec for the establishment of large slaughter-houses. The establishment of that industry would be an encouragement to the cattle breeders of the district and would make of the city of Quebec the natural outlet for the cattle industry of the west. I have no doubt that the hon. minister in the interest of the whole country will give aid and encouragement to that industry.

The seed grains competitions, the seed shows, the Canadian Seedmen's Association are very useful to the farmers. Here is what Mr. Robertson says:

Some years ago, a competition was organized in 450 localities in Canada, to determine what results could be obtained by the selection of the seeds. If you look at the results, you find that a surplus of 190 millions of bushels of oats, wheat and barley could have been obtained by that means only in 1909. Those 190 millions of bushels of grain would give 1,500 car loads.

It is not possible to demonstrate more forcibly the importance of pure seeds. We must also have seeds appropriate to the soil and the climate, and to that end we must have numerous and constant tests at the experimental farms.

According to the monthly statistics of February, over 125,000 bushels of seed grains of first quality and that carried prizes at the shows, were offered for sale at the 33 agricultural shows held in the province of Alberta during the present season.

The local seed grain shows in the province of Quebec were held during the month of February. The Department of Agriculture must make all necessary arrangements to have a strict inspection of the seed grain. The work carried on by the seed grain division of the department has rendered valuable services, but we want more. The hon. minister will shortly have an experimental farm in the district east of Quebec. It is a step in the right direction. Our farmers are too far away from the central farm of Ottawa to derive from it all the advantages they would have a right to expect. With that new experimental station the farmers of the district will be in a position to apply the newest and most effective methods of fighting the weeds and insects.

According to Professor Robertson, the insects take at least 17 per cent of our crops. That will give you an idea of the work to be done.

Every year the minister takes a pretty large vote for exhibition purposes. Since 1900 we have taken part in the exhibitions of Buffalo, St. Louis, Japan, Liège, Milan, Dublin, Paris, London, Seattle, Brussels. At every place Canada has appeared with marked success. Foreigners have admired our agricultural products, the wealth of our mines and our forests. For my part, I think that these exhibitions have a good deal of influence in developing our trade, attracting capital, opening new markets and securing a desirable class of immigrants. We are bound to take part in these great exhibitions where are gathered the producers of every country in the world. There is to be seen the full history of all the products of a country—agricultural, mining, forest and manufacturing.

Formerly Europe was the only continent enjoying the privilege of bringing together the nations of the world. In 1876 a world's fair was held at Philadelphia. Why should not Canada have also its universal exhibition? You would thereby call on our country the attention of all the civilized nations of the world.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture could do much for the progress of agriculture in this country. The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska insists, wisely I think, on the foundation of co-operative agricultural societies assisted by the government. According to a well known writer on political economy, Mr. J. Meline, 'the co-operative societies will become, in time, the great tool of the emancipation of agriculture. They will afford the means of realizing the greatest possible return for farm products, in bringing together the producer and the consumer.'

In the spring of 1910, the co-operative agricultural society of the cheese manufacturers of Quebec was organized. According to Mr. G. A. Gigault, Deputy Minister of Agriculture of Quebec, that society has already caused an increase of 17 per cent in the proportion of the cheese of first quality. The members of the society have agreed by contract to sell their products through the assistance of the society during the season of 1910. In almost every case better prices have been obtained by the society than by the cheese manufacturers who do not belong to the society.

Denmark owes a good deal of the development of its agricultural resources to the numerous co-operative societies that are to be found in that country. We are meeting with a keen competition in the English market, and if we want to emerge successfully from the fight we must have products of the very first quality.

In the opinion of all statesmen and economists, well administered co-operative agricultural societies have always resulted in bettering and perfecting the agricultural products of a country.

On the 14th of November, 1910, at the convention of the agricultural lecturers of the United States and Canada, held at Washington, Mr. Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, laid great stress on the usefulness and necessity of co-operative agricultural societies. In the 'Journal d'Agriculture' of the 15th December last, Mr. Wilson is reported as follows: 'It has been established by a commission that on certain food products the producer gets only 35 per cent of the price paid by the consumer; 65 per cent go in the pocket of the middleman or are taken up by other expenses.'

The 'Canadian Farm' of Toronto, on the 24th March, gives the following statistics based on the findings of Mr. Wilson:

The milk producer gets 50 per cent of the price paid by the consumer. The apicultor, 50 per cent; on eggs, 69 per cent; on vegetables, 48 per cent; on potatoes, 59 per cent; on oats, 74 per cent.

I intend to make a few remarks on the fruit industry. The first experimental stations for fruit trees were established in 1898, and have rendered valuable services in acquainting the farmers with the varieties best adapted to the different districts of the province. Thanks to the numerous tests carried on in these experimental stations, the farmer is less exposed to the danger of buying varieties of plants not well suited to the climate and soil of this country. In the 'Journal d'Agriculture' of the 15th September, 1910, I find a report of Mr. Ruddick, from which I quote the following extract:

Up to this day, cold storage warehouses have not been generally availed of for the preservation of fruits. During the season 1909-1910, only 60,000 barrels of apples went into cold storage. This abstention in the use of cold storage is due partly to the absence of cold storage plants at suitable points and partly to a lack of knowledge on the part of the producer and the merchant, as to the advantages they could get from those plants.

Co-operation should be the basis of the aspirations of our horticultural societies. Mr. McNeil, chief of the fruit service, has published a bulletin in which he shows the importance of co-operation in the fruit trade. Those co-operative societies might be under the direction of a competent officer of the Department of Agriculture. Our farmers need assistance for the buying of the fruit trees, and for the packing and the sale of fruits.

In 1908, the Agricultural Society of the province of Quebec was being organized. We have in the county of l'Islet a society whose progress is remarkable. I have already called the attention of the hon. minister to the utility of stations for the breeding of bees. The fruit station of the Aulnaie village contributes to the progress of horticulture in our region. That locality is well situated for the establishment of a station for bee-breeding. There, again, co-operation is important. With the help of the government, the farmers who would be desirous to go into that industry could buy their bee-hives at a moderate price. By giving extension to that industry, the hon. minister could contribute to increase the revenues of the farmers.

The necessity of a practical agricultural instruction is generally admitted. The European governments have organized in that respect systems which are worth being carefully studied. France is wonderfully organized for agriculture. In the first place, France possesses its National Agronomic Institute. And then, there are the national schools of agriculture, the practical schools and the training-farms.

We have to compete on the English market with the farmers of Denmark, Australia, New Zealand and the Argentine Republic. We may be called to compete tomorrow on the American market with our powerful neighbours. We will come out victors, if we adopt the agricultural methods which are the most efficacious.

I must acknowledge the beneficient and patriotic work which has been accomplished by our schools of agriculture. But we must reach all our farmers, and give them a practical instruction. The Agricultural lecturers of the United States and Canada who have convened in Washington on November 14, 1910, have given their approbation to the system inaugurated in Ontario. I mean the nomination of a lecturer for each county. The hon. minister might follow that example. The lecturers could organize the co-operative agricultural societies, and look after their working.

In our agricultural publications, in our conferences, let us always encourage our rural population to remain on the farm. Let us develop a taste for rural life and agriculture, and we will then have assured the constant progress of the agricultural classes.

Mr. ANDREW BRODER (Dundas). In the main, I think, the amendment of the hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska (Mr. Gilbert) is in the right direction. Of course, it is well recognized that there is a great deal of the public expenditure which cannot be particularized as agricultural expenditure, but which, directly or indirectly, benefits agriculture. For instance, you cannot improve transportation without assisting the agricultural class. I am not one to advocate the necessity of putting the farmer to bed at night and waking him up in the morning. He will take care of himself. But we should expend more freely in leading and instructing the farmer—not carrying him round in a handbasket, but leading and instructing him. In this way, you would not only get his co-operation, but you would get his effort as well. We must look our problems squarely in the face. Any man who has studied the agricultural interest of this country must realize that we are simply on the fringe of what is possible with our resources. We are in a half wakeful, dreamy sleep, towards the morning, merely guessing at what nature is willing to do for us. We are not doing what we should do, for there is nothing that will give so much back to the people for something given to her as good old mother earth. The trouble is, the farmer has been stealing all his life—that is a pretty strong statement to make—stealing all his life from mother earth, and giving back very little to her. That is where the necessity comes in for instruction and assistance through our Department of Agriculture. It is possible, through co-operation with the farmers, and with the necessary instruction to double the yield of every acre of crop in this country. I do not say that the scientific man can do this. The scientific man alone cannot do it; he has to mix his science with the common sense of the every-day life of the farmer. But science and common sense in co-operation will do more than either can do singly. Some things referred to in this resolution may be of rather a local nature for the Dominion government to deal with. Drainage, for instance, is, perhaps, local in its nature and should be more under the control of the province. But I think it is possible to so arrange our machinery with that of the provinces that, with the federal assistance, much more might be done through the machinery controlled by the province than is now done. The reason I use that argument is this: I believe the federal government should be the colonizers in this country. If you increase the population of a country, you of necessity increase the federal revenues, but you also of necessity increase the expenditures of the province upon schools, administration of justice and other things which are properly the function of the province, and without increasing the provincial revenue. For that reason, the federal authorities should get down to the necessity of assisting the provinces to carry out through their machinery, which is more directly in touch with the people, many things that are in the interest not only of the agriculturists, but of the people generally. This resolution, on the whole, is in the right direction, and ought to receive recognition on the part of the authorities which will lead to some results other than those we have already achieved.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). The thanks of this House, to a certain extent, are due to the hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska for bringing forward this resolution. The resolution is worthy of our consideration, and many of the points in it are of direct interest to the people of Canada at this time. I was surprised indeed to hear the hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville (Mr. Lanctot) state that the hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska had brought forward this motion with a political purpose in view. If I understood the hon. member correctly, that is the statement he made. I should be sorry to come to the conclusion that a resolution of this kind was brought forward for such a purpose, and I am satisfied that the hon. member (Mr. Gilbert) had not any such purpose in mind. The hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville also asked whether the mover of this resolution had a mandate from the farmers to ask for these reforms. So far as the hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska is concerned, I am sure he has brought forward the resolution believing and knowing that he represents the views of his people, and he is deserving of credit for bringing it forward. The hon. member (Mr. Lanctot) said also that the government were improving our harbours and waterways and referred to the Grand Trunk Pacific and the wonderful advantage it will be to the farmers. We cannot but feel of course, that the money expended in harbours, in waterways and in railways facilitates the transportation to market of the products of the farm. But we must not forget that many other interests are assisted by these improvements in transportation, and it is not fair to charge up to the farming industry all the money that is being spent in this way. The figures show that 72 or 73 per cent of the people of Canada live in rural districts while about 27 per cent live in urban centres. This fact alone shows that the farming interests of Canada should have much greater consideration than it has received at the hands of this government, or, I might say, of any previous government. Certainly, Canada is a farming country, and will be for generations to come, and it behooves us, as representatives of the people, to see to it that the expenditures made in aid of agriculture by authority of this House are of a liberal nature, and are granted in favour of propositions that will really assist in the development of this great industry.

Let us see what this resolution contains. The hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska asks us to look with favour on a greater amount of money being expended for agriculture and the practice of agricultural industry in Canada, having, among other, the following objects: The spreading of a wider scale of agricultural science amongst the farming community. The distributing of literature throughout the country to the farmers, and the establishment of experimental farms throughout the provinces of the Dominion.

Worthy objects, surely, for this House of Commons to promote. Let us see what the Minister of Agriculture has done with reference to experimental farms in our Dominion. That is a question worthy the consideration of the House. In 1884 there were five experimental farms in Canada and to-day there are only nine, although year after year members on this side of the House have been urging on the Minister of Agriculture to establish more experimental farms and to increase the expenditure for the purpose of educating our agriculturalists. In reply to a question which I recently put to the Minister of Agriculture he replied that during the fiscal year there were nine experimental farms and stations operated by the Dominion government, and that the total expenditure on them was $120,000, of which $53,000 was expended on the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa. I am not criticising the expenditure at the Central Experimental Farm, but at the same time it seems remarkable that more than half the total expenditure should be made at the one farm in Ottawa, and that only about $65,000 is expended for this purpose throughout the rest of the Dominion.

Mr. GAUVREAU. Is it not a fact that when 10 years ago the present Minister of Agriculture laid a project before the House for the establishment of experimental farms throughout Canada the whole opposition was against it?

Mr. BLAIN. No.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I had not the honour of being a member of the House at that time, but I would be very much surprised if the statement made by the hon. member (Mr. Gauvreau) was correct. Can the hon. gentleman prove his statement?

Mr. GAUVREAU. I will leave that to the Minister of Agriculture himself.

Mr. BLAIN. May I be permitted to say—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will be considered as having spoken if he makes a statement now.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I direct the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the fact that tens of thousands of newcomers are entering our great west and that practically nine-tenths of them are without definite knowledge of the mode in which farming operations should be carried on in this country, and I state to the minister that long ago he should have established experimental stations in many districts of our western country. In the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan there is no agricultural college and only a few experimental stations of any kind, and recently the province of Saskatchewan had to take of its means to establish small experimental stations. It was stated in the legislature on that occasion that the province had not the means to carry on the work as they would like to carry it on and that an agricultural college should be established. There is no question in my mind but that it is the duty of this government to hand over to the different provincial governments a large amount of the revenue of this country to assist the provincial governments to educate the farmers up to the standard of intensive farming, as is done in many of the states of the United States. I point out to the Minister of Agriculture that $12,000,000 annually are expended in the United States for the purpose of developing intensive farming, and unless we carry on education of that kind amongst our farming people we will certainly lag behind in the march of progress. Let me remind the Minister of Agriculture that our butter industry, our cheese industry, our sheep industry, our cattle industry, our poultry industry, and our egg industry are declining, and that the product of grain per acre in Canada is less to-day than it was a few years ago. When you consider the development of the Dominion generally in the last few years you have to deplore all the more the fact that the products of the orchards of the fair province of Ontario have been greatly reduced of recent years. Then again our rural population is drifting into the cities, and this and other defects in our system is brought about by the want of aid to advance agriculture in Canada. Then, the important question of the transportation facilities is unattended to and we have the fact staring us in the face that the ocean freight rates from American ports are far less than from Canadian ports, and that in shipping produce from the port of Montreal the farmers are obliged to pay large amounts to the shippers, and do not receive the advantages which it is reasonable to expect they should receive. Yesterday we saw the position taken by the Minister of Agriculture in reference to the question of appointing a government weigher to the port of Montreal. The minister gave the House to understand that the exporters of dairy products out of the port of Montreal were being fleeced right and left, and that tens of thousands of dollars are being taken out of the pockets of the farmers by the large exporters. But he held up his hands and told the House he was helpless to deal with the matter. And why was he helpless? Simply because, he said that the exporters had one man who did all the weighing of the dairy products that went out of the port of Montreal, and that if the dairy men did not consider that they were being fairly treated by that weigher they could appeal to the Montreal Board of Trade, or if necessary go into the courts to obtain justice. And yet, we have been asking the Minister of Agriculture year after year for the last 10 years to appoint a government weigher at the port of Montreal, who would weigh impartially all the butter and cheese and dairy products that are exported to Europe. But it is impossible to get the minister to appoint such an officer. We find that he is not dealing with other questions in the way we would like. For instance, what has he done to bring about the removal of the cattle embargo? He knows that a few years ago the Committee on Agriculture passed a resolution asking him to call upon the Ministers of Agriculture in the various provinces of the Dominion to go as a body to Great Britain and urge upon the government there the removal of the embargo; but the Minister of Agriculture ignored the wishes of the Committee on Agriculture and also the position taken by members of this House on that important question.

Mr. NESBITT. Why does the hon. member want the cattle embargo removed?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It is easily seen that the hon. gentleman has been paying more attention to his law practice than to the interests of the farming community.

Mr. NESBITT. Never mind my law practice; just answer the question.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am surprised to hear the hon. member ask such a question. Does he not know that the farmers throughout the Dominion are anxious to have that cattle embargo removed?

Mr. NESBITT. I know they are not. That is not answering the question.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The hon. gentleman knows very little about it. Canadian cattle shipped to England have to be killed within nine days after landing. If they were allowed to remain for a month, to be fed upon the rich grasses and other feed of England, our meats would sell for at least a cent a pound more in the British market, and not only so, but our cattle would increase in weight, and the advantage to the farmers of this Dominion would be enormous. The Minister of Agriculture will not say that it would not be to the advantage of the farmers of the Dominion to have that cattle embargo removed. There is no doubt that it would materially assist the cattle interests of the country, and that the farmers of the Dominion desire it to be removed. We have been asking the Minister of Agriculture to assist materially in the dead meat trade which is being carried on to a small extent in this country. In 20 years the dead meat exports of Australia and New Zealand have increased from nothing to $25,000,000. The trade of the Argentine Republic in chilled and frozen meat has grown from $1,700,000 to $17,000,000 in 10 years, while the exports of live cattle have declined in the same years from $7,000,000 to $3,000,000. In the United States the dressed meat trade from 1890 to 1907 increased from $12,860,000 to $26,000,000, not counting the packing industry of that country. They exported in 1907, $203,500,000. Compare this with the Canadian trade. Canada alone, of all meat exporting countries, exports solely on the hoof. In 1889 she exported 211,847 cattle, in 1908 this number had declined to 150,993. Our packing house trade, which in 1900, amounted to $13,400,000, dropped, in 1907, to $9,900,000, and to-day the Minister of Agriculture knows that that trade is materially less than it was a few years ago. These are important statements, which go to show that unless the Department of Agriculture wakes up to a sense of its duty, Canada is going to hold a position in regard to our export trade that is anything but advantageous to our farmers

Mr. LANCASTER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to correct a statement that he has made? In referring to the hon. member for South Oxford the hon. gentleman pilloried him as a lawyer. As a member of that profession, I know that we have a lot to answer for, but I want to correct that statement. The hon. member for South Oxford is not a lawyer. There must be a limit to the sins of the legal profession.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I will leave that to the hon. member. There is another matter in this resolution worthy of the consideration of the members of this House. The hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska calls attention to the fact that the advantages of drainage of the farm lands of this country are being curtailed to a great extent owing to the fact that the drainage laws of the Dominion and of the provinces conflict. The Dominion parliament seems to take the position that rivers must be navigable in order to be dredged and opened up by this government, while the provinces claim that they have not sufficient money to open up the rivers that should be opened up in many parts of the country. In a district convenient to my riding we have a river that is not what might be called navigable for a large portion of the year; but if that river were dredged and the lands near by were opened up for agricultural purposes, these lands would be most valuable and would make large returns to that district; but the local government say they have not sufficient money to do the necessary dredging. This is a matter that should receive the attention of the Minister of Agriculture—as to whether the Dominion government should not set aside a sum of money for the purpose of dredging rivers in the different provinces, thereby draining large areas of land, which could be placed on the market and become an important source of revenue to those provinces. So that I think if you take into consideration the many matters that are dealt with in this resolution, we cannot help but feel that it is in the best interests of our people, and I hope the Minister of Agriculture will see his way clear to give it his support.

Mr. JOSEPH GIRARD (Chicoutimi and Saguenay.) (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to offer a few remarks on the proposition now before this House.

I have the honour to represent a constituency which is practically an absolutely agricultural one, and the conclusions of this motion require special attention on the part of farmers as well as of those who represent them here.

I have the honour to be, and to have always been a professional farmer and, of course, I have listened with great interest to the speech delivered by the hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska. I have noted down some of the most important remarks he has made.

According to the hon. gentleman's contention, our Canadian farmers are not sufficiently prepared for entering into competition with European farmers on European markets. He is probably right, because in the old world farming is not on the same footing as in this country, being much more intensive and, consequently, requiring from those who engage in it an amount of knowledge which we do not possess in this country. I would not even dare to advise the government to give the Canadian farming at this moment an impulse in that direction.

The hon. member has referred to experimental farms. As well as I can remember a dozen of years ago the question of experimental farms has been discussed here. The House, I think, was far from being of one mind as to the proposal then made by the Hon. Mr. Fisher who asked for the multiplication of those experimental farms. Yet his proposal was based upon substantial reasons. The opponents of that measure contended that it was virtually needless and that it would entail an excessive expenditure. However, the minister went on and increased the number of experimental farms in proportion of the funds which the House agreed to put at his disposal. Thus he has established two experimental stations in the province of Quebec last year, and I should like to think that these will not be the last ones.

The province of Quebec has its agricultural schools, but side by side with those schools and in order to perfect the practical training, we must have experimental stations where experiments are resorted to so as to help these schools in increasing the efficiency of the teaching. The province on account of its limited means cannot establish a sufficient number of schools to answer the requirements of the different districts within its territory. I represent a constituency which lies north of the Laurentian mountains, and which is the farthest inhabited northern region of the province. Its geological formation, its climate during spring and autumn and several other circumstances are different from those prevailing south of these mountains. The settlers and farmers must, therefore, overcome the peculiar impediments existing in the district. Then as our agricultural schools and the Dominion experimental stations are established south of these mountains they cannot teach the farmers the best methods of overcoming the impediments I have just mentioned.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture has visited Lake St. John and Chicoutimi; he has been able to ascertain whether I tell the truth and by all means he is a good judge in such a matter. On account of its peculiar geographic situation which I have just mentioned I think it is absolutely necessary to have there an experimental station under the control of the federal government. After having studied and realized the conditions, that station could make experiments which would enable it to point to the farmers the best methods to be resorted to and the most efficient means of surmounting the obstacles and the difficulties characteristic of that district. Such a powerful help would create confidence among the local farmers and would encourage colonization and the growth of agricultural industry. Owing to the achievments of the local experimental station, our settlers and farmers would be confident of success, whereas nowadays the people are always afraid of failure when it is a question of applying outside methods and theories, on account of the disparity existing between this district and the rest of the province.

Moreover, we must not forget that that vast territory is inhabited by settlers who are unavoidably poor and that its population will always be destitute, as it is a region of colonization; now, those impecunious people living under the circumstances characteristic of that district cannot afford to make the necessary disbursements in order to visit experimental farms or agronomic stations established elsewhere. Not being able to incur large travelling expenses they will stay at home and will derive no benefit from these experimental farms. But suppose even that they could visit them, those visits would not be as profitable to them as to the other farmers, because those farmers are under climatic and other conditions different from the conditions which prevail in our district. Therefore, it is absolutely necessary in the best interest of colonization, consequently for the public weal and agricultural development, that the government set up an experimental station there. I have no doubt that the hon. Minister of Agriculture will be pleased to grant such a station for he is well acquainted with that country and with its peculiar needs.

The hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska has referred to the desertion of farm lands. He seemed to lay blame for it upon the bad policy of the Minister of Agriculture. First, is this evil as great as he intimated? I dont think so. It exists, but we must not overstate it for it is far less predominant than heretofore.

The question is not a new one and it has absorbed the thoughts of public men for a long while. What are the real sources of that evil? It cannot be seriously asserted that farming is not remunerative enough to retain upon the farms the agricultural community. That farming is more paying than it was formerly is unquestionable. Therefore the cause of the evil does not lie there. Inclinations have changed since twenty or thirty years, the time of comfort is not the same as it was formerly and we consider as indispensable things we did not think of twenty or thirty years ago. Some people call it progress, but such a progress costs dear since it is manifested by an increased daily expenditure whence the insufficiency of the resources which farming, although more paying, puts within the reach of the farmers. I am speaking of the incomprehensible luxury and of the false notions which are created among the agricultural community by every kind of deceptive delusions. People are only told of industries, of manufactures, of large trade, of all kinds of speculations which are far more remunerative than farming and which increase the comforts of life, so they say at least. Are we then to be surprised that the farmers living in such an atmosphere are attracted towards the industrial and commercial centres and inclined to desert the noble profession of their ancestors? It sometimes happens that children imbued with such notions have their parents to share in their delusions, and the desertion is complete. Fortunately these are exceptional cases which cannot be generalized. Is it conceivable that a government could devise a policy which would prevent the effects of such causes. Certainly not, because they are utterly uncontrollable. Therefore, it is not fair to hold the government or the minister responsible for these lamentable events.

The unbearable conditions now imposed upon colonization are another cause which accounts for the desertion of farm lands. Formerly the ancient parishes sent settlers into the colonization districts, and these settlers did come because they expected to succeed. The regulations as to the sale of lands and the terms of settlement were such that the most destitute person had an even chance to establish a comfortable home for himself and his family by industry and perseverance. It is under such propitious circumstances that my district was opened up and settled. Since then, the regulations as to the sale of lands have been often amended, always in a way inimical to colonization, and, on account of the regulations passed during the two last years, I can assert that at present in the province of Quebec colonization has become impossible. This is so true that an officer of the land branch at Quebec told me less than a fortnight ago in a train going from Ottawa to Montreal that colonization was no more possible, as far as he knew, and that as soon as a settler who intends to buy public lands is shown the new law, he puts on his hat and leaves.

It is understood that a settler in order to clear his land must light a fire. Under the present regulations, properly speaking, he can light a fire for his clearings only when rain is pouring down. If such regulations had been in force in the days of Champlain, how many Canadians, I ask you, would there be in this country? I cite this example among a score of others so as to show that a settler cannot live nowadays. I hold in my hands the provincial law of Quebec to prove my statements, and I challenge anybody who will study its details to show that they are exaggerated. Since five years, in the district I have the honour of representing, colonization which was so marked in the previous years is at a standstill, being entrammelled by the regulations I have just mentioned.

I hold myself responsible for the statements I now make. I speak in the presence of the Prime Minister of Canada who listens to me. I believe that I am serving the people of my province and the interested government by disclosing the facts as they are known to me, and I hope that before long all well-meaning people will join hands in order to improve these conditions.

Mr. DEVLIN (Wright.) Am I to understand that the hon. member for Chicoutimi has asserted that the Quebec government have done nothing to promote colonization in his district?

Mr. GIRARD. I did not say that. I am willing to admit that the Quebec government have done their utmost to promote colonization, but the settlement of the district is prevented by the iniquitous land law.

The hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska has contended that the dairy industry does not give to the farmers all the revenue it ought to give them, and that farming in general is not as remunerative as it should be. That is conceded, we all know. The question is to remedy this evil. The question came before the House yesterday and has been sufficiently threshed out. Every one admits that the agricultural industry in general and the dairy industry do not return what they should return. For instance, some speak of Denmark.

In order to cover the deficiency which confronts us, the first practicable means is the one mentioned by the hon. Minister of Agriculture, that is to say, the selection of the herds through the milch cows testing associations. The question has been discussed yesterday and I shall not go over what has been said. The successful work undertaken by the Hon. Mr. Fisher is not very apparent yet, but the fault is not his, nor his officers, who have displayed all the necessary earnestness and industry.

Denmark is to-day cited as an example, but it must not be forgotten that it took the work of years to achieve the perfection that is found in that country. It is perseverance and constant efforts which saved Denmark and which will produce the same results in Canada. In my county they tried these societies. The Minister of Agriculture sent lecturers in all the parishes; he paid the expense for organization, the inspectors' salaries, and did all the law allowed him to do to incite the farmers to follow more closely the regulations of the associations in question. On account of the apparent trouble this implied and of the want of confidence in the results, the farmers got tired and gradually went out of those associations without realizing the harm they were doing to themselves.

They talk about co-operative associations and their advantages; they also talk about roads. I understand that at the time of the establishment of confederation it was understood the provinces were to take charge of certain things and the federal government was to be charged with other special obligations, each side in its own sphere of action to exercise its best judgment. Concerning the improvement of roads, that question was raised long ago. I remember about 1894 there came from my district a delegation to Ottawa to request assistance for the improvement of colonization roads, because the provincial government did not then have at its disposal sufficient resources to meet all needs. The answer which was then given us was that the federal government did not have the right to grant our request. But the federal government was then, as it is to-day, paying the provinces a subsidy. On account of the increase in provincial expenditures, the present government gave what is called 'better terms,' that is, a large increase in the subsidy to each province, the expenditure of which is absolutely under the control of the government of each of them. Under the law, the federal government may be brought about to give new 'better terms,' from which the provincial governments will find a way to facilitate the improvement of the roads spoken of. It is in my opinion the only legal way for the federal government to meet the request of the hon. member for Arthabaska.

Let us now return to co-operative associations. But, according to the constitution, they seem rather to be depending on the provincial legislatures. I would, however, be perfectly satisfied to see a federal law passed to that intent, as that would allow the central government to help out these societies created under its own law. The Quebec government passed a law allowing the formation of various co-operative societies. I would particularly draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Agriculture to the one which it has created under the name of 'Société co-operative des veurreries et formagenis de la province de Québec.' Last year that society busied itself with cheese factories only. The object of the society is to succeed, through a classification of the products, in compelling the producers to improve their manufacturing process, and to bring about, as a consequence, the putting on the market of an absolutely uniform and superior product, which will allow it to command higher products. The basis of classification is a scale of 100 points, and they call 'finest' a cheese which does not keep less than 95 points out of 100, which means an almost perfect cheese. The society also imposes upon its members the obligation to have model buildings in which they receive an average of not less than 4,000 pounds of milk per day. The Quebec government has advertised that new organization throughout the province. Prizes have been promised for the best cheese and the best buildings. Sixty-five factories throughout the province have consented, with fears at first, to join the society. In my district sixteen cheese factories joined with full confidence The reason for that feeling of confidence was the improvement brought about in the buildings as well as in the methods of labour in the factories, thanks to the impetus previously given by Hon. Mr. Fisher. Through lecturers chosen by him from among the best agricultural authorities in his department, and instructed to visit in detail every factory in the county so as to meet the farmers at home and to be able to point out to them the defects in the buildings and in the manufacture of cheese, the care of milk, &c., and the way to improve everything; through building model maturing rooms, the cost of which he paid for, and by sending these principal lecturers each year to see again the same farmers and incite them to continue their work of improvement with perseverance and energy, he has succeeded in preparing the following result secured through the work of the co-operative society. The first four prizes for cheese in a six-months' competition were secured by cheesemakers in my district, the highest prize being awarded to a cheesemaker who kept 97·07 points out of 100, and the lowest 95. Which means coming very near perfection. Out of ten prizes awarded for the best buildings, four were secured in my district, including the first and third prize. Which explains why our farmers confidently joined the movement.

Mr. MONK. If I understand right, the hon. member is in favour of co-operation?

Mr. GIRARD. Certainly, and I have been for a long time. That co-operation movement started long ago, and long before the motion of the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska. That society was organized by the provincial government. Those who joined it in my district have received indirectly from the federal government all the assistance they needed. It is, thanks to the valuable help of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, who, foreseeing the future, had prepared the minds of the people through his own work and that of his lecturers, it is owing to this that we have secured so many adhesions to that society, which accounts for the fact that our region is ahead of the whole province as far as buildings and the quality of cheese are concerned.

Mr. MONK. In what did the Minister of Agriculture favour the formation of agricultural co-operative societies in my hon. friend's county? Which were the means he used to help that formation?

Mr. GIRARD. The minister did not directly contribute to the formation of a provincial society, but he had prepared the ground so well that those who wished to get on with him reached the goal first, as I have just shown.

In pursuance of his work of agricultural improvement, uniting his efforts to those of the Quebec and the Quebec Dairy Society, it affords me great pleasure to say that last year, when we secured the first co-operation prizes in the provincial agricultural merit competition, the gold medal was awarded to a young farmer in my county, and twenty-four other farmers received the silver medal, making a total of one hundred decorations of that kind awarded to as many farmers in my county during the last twelve years. If the fact is taken into account that we live in a region which is only sixty-five years old, the facts I have just recalled clearly show that the work of the Minister of Agriculture necessarily produced good results when people were willing to bring themselves into connection with him.

While I am speaking about the co-operative I want to draw the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the fact that it is necessary to have in my district and elsewhere, at certain railway stations, cold storage plants in order to complete the organization for the transportation of the cheese from the factory to the great warehouses in Montreal. Dairy products kept in cold rooms in the factory are likely to be damaged by the heat at shipping points if cold storage cars are not there in advance to receive them. Cold storage plants are then necessarily needed at the stations. It has been claimed the farmers themselves should undertake that organization. I think it is better that the federal government should complete the system by undertaking itself the building and maintaining of those establishments, as it alone is able to have an effective control of that service.

There has been some talk of weighing dairy products. This question has come before the House already. There is a complaint about the method followed by the present weighers, and I believe the farmers are right. If it is wanted to weigh from five to ten boxes alone in a lot, why not put the number of boxes you want to weigh together on the scales in order to have the total weight instead of weighing one box at a time in the hope of detecting some error in the weight marked on each of them, and then of making a general reduction on the lot. That is not fair, and that sometimes cause the producers considerable loss. I draw the attention of the hon. minister to that fact and beg of him to be kind enough to see to it with a view to improve the conditions if possible.

It is said cheese and butter production is decreasing. That is well known, but it is not the minister's fault. It is true exports of butter have decreased enormously and those of cheese have somewhat decreased. But that does not mean milk production has decreased, for it goes increasing year by year. But local consumption has increased in such a way that exports have suffered therefrom. The sale of cream in its natural state is another cause of the seeming decrease in the production of butter as well as the sale of milk in the natural state in the cities, a sale which is increasing considerably each year. That does not mean that the farmers' income has decreased; quite the contrary, as the price of cream and milk sold in the natural state is higher than when the milk is manufactured into butter or cheese. In other places farmers thought it best to give up the dairy industry in order to go into the raising of cattle for the production of meat, where it appears they can get a higher income than in the dairy industry. It is another seeming cause of the decrease in our dairy products, but it is far from showing that the farmers' income has decreased. Now, how can the minister or the government be responsible for those facts?

According to the motion before us, it is attempted to have the government give members of the proposed co-operative societies a grant of $5 per head.

The motion submitted to the House proposes that the government should grant to the members of the proposed co-operative association a bonus of $5 a head. Has the hon. member duly thought the matter over previous to making such a proposal? Of course I am in favour of granting aid to such associations, but it should be done in the way that the Quebec government grants moneys in aid of farmers' clubs, which are entitled to $50 per annum, and to agricultural societies, which are entitled to $800. It seems to me that the proposal as it is made would tend, if it were carried out, to reduce the standing of such associations.

As far as I am concerned, I agree with the opinion expressed by the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder), that the main point is to educate our farmers as regards certain matters so as to instil into their minds the idea that their calling is a noble and profitable one, and that they should be proud of it. The only way in which such a result may be reached is by sending out practical lecturers, experts if necessary, who would meet the farmers as often as possible to talk over with them matters relating to the improvement of agriculture, and induce them to keep up with the times. Heretofore, unfortunately, lecturers have not always been the best that could have been selected. Farmers do not care to go long distances to listen to a professional man dealing with agricultural questions. They take a particular interest in lectures given by men whom they know to be farmers themselves. I have been requested by farmers in my district to draw the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the good work done by Mr. Clément and to have him sent out once more to my district as soon as possible. As a judge in the competitions of standing field crops he succeeded in interesting the farmers whom he met at these lectures, which were of a practical character and were readily understood. Of course, among the lecturers which the public appreciate I wish to include the leading officers of the department, such as Mr. Grisdale and others.

The motion which is submitted to us is, of course, one that appeals to the farming community, since it calls on parliament to make an increased expenditure in the interest of that class. Being a farmer myself, and having the honour to represent a strictly agricultural constituency, I am in full sympathy with the proposal. I sincerely believe that a much larger appropriation should be put at the disposal of the Minister of Agriculture in the interests of agriculture, and I suggest that the government should at once consider the desirability of complying with such a request. However, the proposal being made in the shape of a motion of non-confidence in the government, despite all the help which the Minister of Agriculture has given to the farming interests in my constituency and elsewhere, I do not think it would be fair to give my support to it, which I would be glad to do if it were put in the shape of a resolution of the House.

Mr. GIRARD.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) said that in 1884 there were five experimental farms and that now there are only nine. He is incorrect in that statement. The first experimental farm was established in 1886, five were established in the beginning, and there are now 13. Eight of these have been established within the last five years. The hon. gentleman challenged the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Gauvreau) when the latter said that the government had proposed some years ago to establish experimental and illustration stations all over the Dominion. He asked for the proof. I find it in the 'Hansard' of 1899. I then proposed a vote of $20,000 to commence the establishment of illustration stations. I explained that while that was a beginning, I hoped to go on and establish one in every county in the Dominion just as the hon. member for Drummondville now complains the government have not done. That vote was stopped by ferocious opposition from the other side of the House. Had it been carried at that time I believe that to-day nearly every electoral division in the country would have had an illustration station. Mr. Clancy who was then the acknowledged critic of agriculture for the opposition said immediately after I had explained what I proposed to do:

> I have no hesitation in saying at the outset that this is a highly visionary scheme and one without foundation, and as applied to Canadian agriculture utterly worthless.

A little later on in the same debate Sir Charles Tupper, then the leader of the opposition, said:

> So far as the farming stations are concerned, I have heard nothing in their favour approaching to an argument from anybody. . . . I hope my hon. friend will see his way clear to drop the other portion of the vote and let the committee divide so as to show who are in favour of and who are opposed to this large and absolutely useless expenditure.

In view of the lateness of the session at that time, and the determined opposition of the other side of the House my colleagues asked me to withdraw the vote. I did so and the result is that to-day my hon. friend from Drummond and Arthabaska complains that that was not done.

Mr. MONK. What part of the motion has reference to illustration stations?

Mr. FISHER. In the early part of his address the hon. gentleman said that there ought to be an agricultural experimental station in every county in the Dominion. I attempted to lay the foundation for that kind of work, and hon. gentlemen opposite blocked and stopped my efforts.

Mr. MONK. I was asking to what part of the motion it referred?

Mr. FISHER. I think the motion indicates that, but I was speaking of what my hon. friend said, not the actual words of the motion.

Mr. LENNOX. Did the minister ever renew the effort to establish these stations?

Mr. FISHER. No, I did not. I appreciate the compliment paid me by the hon. member (Mr. Gilbert) in quoting over and over again sayings of mine in regard to the necessities of agriculture, and how it could be improved. I gathered that he quoted those sayings with approval. I have no objection to that, it is a tribute, partial it may be, but still a tribute to what the department has been doing.

I have no fault to find with the statements made in support of expenditure in regard to agriculture. I find on both sides of the House a disposition to spend on agriculture whatever is asked. I have over and over again stated that I had no fault to find in that respect, but that on the contrary parliament has been generous in support of my votes for agricultural development and assistance. I have also said that whenever there seems to be a clear indication that money could be spent successfully and usefully I have not hesitated to ask for it. I am prepared to do that today, and the evidence of it is that in the votes for the next ensuing fiscal year I am asking considerably more than I asked last year. This is in consequence of the fact that we have been able to work out, by the co-operation of my chief officers details of work which we think will be advantageous to the agriculture of the country.

This motion calls for the devoting of one-tenth of the whole expenditure of the Dominion of Canada to agriculture. I think that any such statement or principle adopted in our expenditure would be vicious. Our expenditure is supposed to be, and I believe is in accordance with the needs and the demands of the different services carried out by the government of Canada in the interests of the people. These services may at one time be most important in relation to the development of railways, at another time in relation to the development of canals, at another time in the administration of one department or another, or in the development of certain branches of agriculture. This is the principle, an absolute principle in our estimates, that the money shall be applied to what is considered to be the necessities of the administration of affairs of the country; and to lay down a principle that one-tenth of all the money so voted should always go to agriculture would be to introduce a vicious principle, an improper principle to apply, just as it would be improper to say that another one-tenth or one-fifteenth or one twenty-fifth should be devoted to railroads or to canals, or to the collection of revenue or to anything else. It is a vicious principle and I could not agree for a moment to its being introduced into the preparation of the estimates for the services and administration of the country.

I notice that nobody on the other side of House has supported that principle. The hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) took exception to it himself, and I think my hon. friend from L'Islet (Mr. Paquet) did also, though I am not certain. I think nobody on the other side has supported it, any yet that is the essence of the whole proposition. Nobody is objecting to a proposition that more money should be spent on agriculture when it is shown to be necessary or advisable. We would be ready to accept a general resolution of that kind. But a formal resolution that a certain definite proportion of the revenue of this country should be applied to any part or any division of the expenditure is a principle which I cannot accept, and which I must call upon the House to vote down.

Now, my hon. friends say, we want more money spent. I think they do; but I am sorry to see that they do not exhibit much eagerness to pass the estimates on agriculture. They have a right to criticise, and they exercise that right to the full; but I think sometimes they go a little further in criticising the agricultural estimates than they do most other expenditures. I have frequently seen votes of millions, ten, fifteen and twenty million at a time, proposed by some other department of the government, and they pass in five minutes. But when a vote for agriculture comes up it generally takes five hours to get through a single item. I am not complaining of that, hon. gentlemen opposite are quite within their rights, but I do not think it is a proof of their eagerness to see public money expended on agriculture. I want to say to my hon. friend from Chicoutimi (Mr. Girard) that I appreciate the request he has made in relation to one or two points. I am prepared at any time to meet the views and the requests of hon. gentlemen on either side of the House who represent agricultural constituencies. I have always been willing to take advice from those hon. members on either side of the House, I want to get all the assistance I can, and I am ready to acknowledge now that I have usually been generously supported by the House. True, the criticisms that are freely indulged in sometimes look very much like obstruction, but on the whole I am well supported in the work I am doing. The Department of Agriculture has been created in the interest of the farmers of this country. It often happens that hon. gentlemen are much inclined to make appeals to the department with a view of obtaining the support of the farmers, and the trouble is that they do not know often what the farmers want, and therefore when they go back for re-election they do not get the farmers' support.

Mr. BLAIN. I am sure the House has been much edified by the remarks of the Minister of Agriculture, particularly with his concluding remark that the representatives of the farmers on this side of the House do not know what they want, and therefore when they go back for re-election they are defeated. Well, other men have been defeated, and the Minister of Agriculture himself is well aware of that. I was amused to listen to the remarks of the minister in defending his department and giving reasons why we have not an experimental station in every county in Canada. My hon. friend says that at one time when he was Minister of Agriculture, away back in 1899, he introduced a broad scheme for the benefit of the agriculturalists of Canada, and when it came to a vote in committee, Mr. Clancy rose in his place and made some criticism of it; then Sir Charles Tupper, the leader of the Liberal-Conservative party at that time, also offered some slight criticism, and because of these two criticisms that item proposed in the interest of the farmers disappeared and has never been heard of since. Did ever any one hear such a defence as that in this House? My hon. friend has been Minister of Agriculture from that moment down to the present, and if that was a good thing in the interest of the farmers why has he not, with the great majority at his back, reintroduced it? Why he has not called upon his majority to pass that or a similar resolution in the interest of the farmers? But after all these years, he now comes forward and says that the reason why we have not an experimental station in every county is because Sir Charles Tupper and Mr. Clancy, many years ago, opposed a similar resolution in this House. Was the Minister of Agriculture in earnest when he introduced that item in his estimates and asked the committee to adopt it, or was he trifling with the agricultural interest of Canada? At a previous date in this session he paid a compliment to this House, as we find on 'Hansard', page 1250, after making reference to some recommendations he had made to his colleagues:

> Judging by past experience, my colleagues will enable me to present its claims to parliament; and I must say for both sides of the House that they have been ready and willing to give me the opportunity to carry out these recommendations.

That is a statement of the minister, made this session. This afternoon he made a similar statement, he complimented both sides of the House for their willingness to vote every item that he recommended in the interest of the agricultural development of Canada. In discussing this very motion a few minutes ago, he said that if a recommendation was made by the House to the government for the expenditure of a large sum of money in the interest of agriculture, he did not know but he would support it. Am I right in what my hon. friend said?

Mr. FISHER. I said something of that kind.

Mr. BLAIN. Therefore, my hon. friend feels that the agricultural interest of Canada has not been very well taken care of in the expenditure of money in their interest.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. BLAIN. Hon. gentlemen laugh at that. I am not surprised. They are willing, of course, to oppose this, I would like to say, right or wrong. But that is the criticism we have on this side of the House with regard to the Minister of Agriculture. He has such a ready lot of supporters, why does not he bring forward the resolution which he says he might support if it came from this side of the House for the expenditure of money?

Mr. FISHER. The estimates show that we are doing that.

Mr. BLAIN. But the hon. gentleman gets support in any case. However, I did not rise to discuss the matter, but to correct the statement to which I have referred and to quote the minister's own statement that, whenever he brought forward a proposition in the interest of the farmers he received ready and willing support from this side of the House as well as from his own.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BRUNO NANTEL (Terrebonne). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, the motion now before the House is of real importance. It may, perhaps, be said to be imperfect, and I admit its limitations in certain respects, but, as a whole, it is acceptable. I should prefer it if the amount of one-tenth of the public revenue were not mentioned, but, on the other hand, is it not unjust that out of a budget of over one hundred millions the agricultural class, which is the most numerous and important in this country, should be benefited to the extent of only about one million; that is to say, of one per cent. Now, it will be admitted that between one and ten per cent there is a wide margin. We are told that had the hon. member been content simply to ask for a larger grant for agricultural purposes, without mentioning any special amount, his motion would have been accepted. This appears to me merely a pretext for setting aside a motion which it is thought advisable not to oppose directly. The argument rests upon no firmer basis than a syllogistic circle.

In the course of the debate it has been stated that a few years ago the Minister of Agriculture had requested the House to authorize him to carry out a portion of the reforms mentioned in this motion. For instance, the establishment of experimental stations, and that his request was not entertained, which made him reluctant to renew it.

I believe that in that respect the motion of the hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska is quite right; it is most important at the present time to educate our agricultural classes if we desire to come out ahead in our competition with other countries. If nothing is done we shall remain in a condition of inferiority.

The hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Girard) acknowledged that farmers were deserting the rural districts. Why so? To me the reason appears quite clear. It is because in this country the agriculturist is, so to speak, an outcast. Would it not be most desirable to raise the agricultural profession in public estimation and place it on a par with trade, industry and the liberal professions? That is the remedy to be applied. If the farmer was educated he would not leave his farm. Were the highest positions in the land open to him the farmer would not give up his calling as he is at present doing.

Although farming seems to pay better to-day than formerly, yet farmers are still leaving the land, and one is surprised to meet constantly in factories, on the trains, and elsewhere, young farmer lads full of health and strength who have abandoned their father's calling to earn what appears to them an easier living and with the hope of improving their social standing.

The hon. member for Laprairie and Napierville (Mr. Lanctot) surprised me when he expressed his fear that these demands on behalf of the agricultural community might give rise to other demands of other classes of the community. When have the latter ever been known to remain in the background? Has not the labouring class, for instance, no later than in the course of the present session, demanded an exceptive law, fixing the labour day at eight hours with a ten hours' wage.

These people do not hang back. There can be no doubt that if the agricultural class is so badly treated it is because farmers are too timid and not properly organized. Farmers are generally easy going, but if they had followed the lead of the labour unions—who keep the government thinking—had they claimed exceptive legislation as do other classes, they would soon have secured their rights. It seems to me that the day is not far off when farmers, following the example of workmen will form unions, and when they do their demands will have to be attended to. One easily perceives to-day that labour unions carry more weight with the government than do the agricultural classes; that is why farmers are deserting their farms for the cities, where they enter the unions in order to enjoy the benefits of their influence.

It is clear that the farmers are leaving the land. The hon. the Minister of Agriculture admitted it himself. Is it not strange and deplorable that in an agricultural country like Canada the rural population should dwindle and nothing be done to arrest the evil. The least that should be done, in my opinion, would be to appoint a commission to inquire into the matter and suggest remedies. This fact being established, the government, if they were to appoint a commission, would be doing good work from a national standpoint.

The hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska demands, amongst other things, a refrigerator car service. Such a service should be established by the government at once; its usefulness would be very great on railways. For my part, I frequently travel between St. Jérome and Montreal, and I am always surprised to see the conditions under which the milk trade, for instance, is carried on. On the station platforms may be seen in enormous numbers cans of milk to be shipped for consumption in Montreal. No care is taken of these cans, nor is there any cold place in which they can be stored. Children die by thousands in the cities; their loss is due to this state of things, and the government should oblige the railway companies to provide cold storage on trains carrying milk. Milk, as everybody knows, requires more careful handling than butter or cheese. The consequences of any negligence are more serious and the improvement would cost little.

I do not wish to blame the minister. In my opinion, he has not enough money at his disposal. Out of a total budget of over one hundred millions, he receives $1,492,500. Deducting from this $351,337 for the salaries and other expenses of his department, there remains scarcely one million for agriculture. Under the head of agriculture are, moreover, to be found a number of items which are not agricultural at all. For instance, archives, statistics, trade marks, matters in which the farmer has no direct interest and from which he derives no advantage. If instead of one per cent the minister were to receive, if not ten per cent, at least a larger proportion of public funds than at present, he might establish a cold storage service on ships and railways, and the public, especially in the city of Montreal, would reap the benefit.

The hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Girard) is of opinion that a good way of helping the farming community would be to send out agricultural lecturers. I agree with him. But such lecturers should be competent, and not be, as have been the greater number of those sent out heretofore, simply political agents sounding the praises of the government employing them. Specialists would be required; men able to speak to farmers in such a manner as to be understood by them; practical men able to teach practical things, not mere theorists getting their ideas from books, which they themselves imperfectly understand. They might be selected in Canada, as the thing is sometimes done in the case of other special work, or, if they cannot be found here in sufficient numbers, young agricultural instructors might be obtained from abroad. Take, for instance, the example of Denmark. That small country is one of the most advanced from an agricultural point of view in consequence of the educational facilities given the farmers, land produces over 41 bushels per acre. Experts for the education of our farmers might be obtained from Belgium, which is one of the most advanced countries in the agricultural science. Once more I say that if our farmers were better educated I am convinced that young Canadians would not desert the land as they have been doing. They are acting as they do because they are ashamed of their profession. The occupation of farming should enable the person exercising it to aspire to any position, political or otherwise, which he may reasonably expect to fill. The farmer should not be neglected. Generally, however, he is thought of only at election time.

If farmers formed unions and claimed their rights as workmen do not hesitate to——

Mr. MARTIN (St. Mary's.) Do you blame them for that?

Mr. NANTEL. I do not wish to blame them, as I would not blame the farmers if they did the same thing. The labour unions and their strikes have given, as I said before, a good deal of trouble to the government. They have often defied the municipal authorities and even obliged the government to interfere with armed force. However, they are tenderly treated. Why so? Because they insist upon obtaining their rights. They are, therefore, respected by the authorities, while the agricultural class, which forms two-thirds of the population, is neglected in many respects. There are many ways in which agriculture might be encouraged. Take, for instance, the postal service. When we leave the city to visit the country parts and outlying townships, we find that a number of farmers receive their mail only once or twice a week, and that they must travel several miles to obtain it. And yet we are asked why young educated Canadians desert the farms for the cities. I have no intention of casting any reflection upon the Postmaster General, but it seems to me that the same advantages should be granted to the agricultural community as to other classes in the country.

We have now incurred all the great expenditures necessary for the opening up of the country, and it is time, I think, that the farmers should get their share. They have no doubt benefited by the building of canals and railways, but it must not be forgotten that these works have also benefited other classes besides the farmers who are the most numerous and who have paid their proportionate share of the expenditure incurred for such undertakings.

Still more will have to be done in behalf of the farmers, with a view to creating conditions which will render their calling a more profitable one, and thereby keeping them at home. For that purpose, it will be necessary to do away with slipshod methods and to impart a knowledge of the most approved practices of intensive agriculture. I would like to see a knowledge of scientific agriculture disseminated in such measure that we would no longer hear expounded in this House, astounding, not to say preposterous, theories, as that according to which satisfactory crops of hay may be obtained in uninterrupted succession from the same land. That is, to my mind, an agricultural heresay. To teach to the people that they may go in for hay cropping for periods of fifty, seventy-five and even two hundred years in succession on the same land, that is, I repeat it, something that smacks of heresy. I would like farmers to be sufficiently well posted that they might detect at once the falsity of such contentions.

I am satisfied that hon. members who have stated this fact would not repeat it before an audience of farmers, or in the presence of professors of the Guelph or Macdonald colleges. At any rate, if they did so, they would be in direct opposition to the teaching of professor Robertson.

Mr. WILSON. (Translation.) Will the hon. member allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. NANTEL. (Translation.) Yes, certainly.

Mr. WILSON. (Translation.) The hon. member stated a moment ago that some one in this House had asserted the possibility of growing hay for fifty, seventy-five and even two hundred years in succession on the same land; I would like to know who made such a statement. Let the hon. member just give out the name.

Mr. NANTEL (Translation.) I shall give the quotation, it will be still better. For instance the hon. Minister of Agriculture on February 28 last, expressed himself as follows in answer to the member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton):

But, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) is not aware of the fact that there are areas of land in the province of Quebec from which hay has been sold to the American and the English market for from 50 to 75 years steadily, and the crop of hay on these lands is just as abundant and as excellent in quality as it was half a century ago. These hay-growing lands are lands which are frequently flooded, and on which there is a constant succession of alluvial deposits, and the land is in that way specially adapted for the growing of hay.

Further on the hon. minister remarked:

So, in some part of Nova Scotia on the dyke lands around the Bay of Fundy, hay has been grown for I do not know how many years.
Mr. BLACK. Two hundred years.

Following suit, the right hon. Prime Minister a few days later, made practically the same statement. I shall quote his very words, which to my mind embody an agricultural heresy:

I can tell my hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Sifton) that no hay will be exported from the hillsides of the eastern townships of the province of Quebec, but as the Minister of Agriculture reminded my hon. friend from Brandon, we have in the province of Quebec natural meadows, which require no tillage, and upon which the best of timothy has been grown, not for 50 years, but for 100 years. Along the two shores of Lake St. Peter there are natural meadows a few inches only above the level of the water which are yearly flooded, and which, to the knowedge of every one in the province, have been for a hundred years or more growing hay and nothing else. The counties of Berthier, Montmagny and St. Maurice, on the north shore, and the counties of Nicolet, Yamaska and Richelieu on the south, are so situated that they have a population of, perhaps, 1,000, who are growers of hay and for whom this treaty, if it becomes law, will be the most positive boon.

I challenge any hon. gentleman in this House to say that timothy may be grown in this way. For blue grass and red top, or low meadow, or marsh hay that would be possible; but as regards clover or timothy, which constitute the hay of commerce. I will not admit that. Clover runs out every two or three years, and must be seeded down anew; timothy fields must be turned over every seventh or eigth year. Marsh hay is not an exportable product.

Here is what Dr. Robertson states in a speech which I find reported in the yearly publication of the Conservation for 1910 at page 63:

It will be seen in the reports that in 1909 the quantities of butter imported from Denmark into the United Kingdom reached a total of 197,571,024 pounds, having a value of about $49,802,400, and that the quantity of butter thus representing a value of $50,000,000, takes away from Denmark a smaller proportion of fertilizing elements than do a thousand tons of hay shipped from Quebec. There is a contrast in the national management of agriculture, 50,000,000 pounds of butter impoverishes the soil less than does the exportation of a thousand tons of hay worth at most $14,000.

Mr. GIRARD. (Translation.) Will the hon. member allow me to say a word in answer to the challenge which he made as to the possibility of growing timothy for more than a certain number of years?

Mr. NANTEL. (Translation.) Do you mean to say that it can be grown for fifty years without ploughing the land?

Mr. GIRARD. (Translation.) If the hon. gentleman will allow me I will state that on the farm where I was born, which my father owned but which has since been sold—I left it thirty years ago—on that farm, as well as in the neighbourhood, timothy grows luxuriantly, although the land has never been ploughed.

Mr. GAUVREAU (Temiscouata.) (Translation.) It is a practical farmer who says so.

Mr. NANTEL. (Translation.) If I had the right to take the hon. gentleman at his word, I would be willing to wager a fair amount on the truth of my contention. In any case, I would wish people to be sufficiently grounded on the principles of agriculture to be in a position to judge the credibility of such theories.

My hon. friend from Temiscouata has just said, referring to the member for Chicoutimi: It is a farmer who says so. Well, as far as that goes I may say that I have for many years taken an interest in agriculture. I own land which every spring is submerged by the overflow of the North river. These freshets carry with them humus and alluvial soil material as does the St. Lawrence. Neverthless, if I neglected putting in new seed every three or four years I would soon have only low meadow grasses and weeds. I might quote other authorities, but that will be enough in regard to this matter.

To contend that the farmers of Manitoba would be depriving themselves of a source of revenue by giving up the repeated cropping of wheat from the same land, is a mistake. Were there ever more fertile fields than those bordering on the Nile, and nevertheless was not that soil depleted of its fertility and ruined by such a system of repeated cropping. Originally fertile, these lands became impoverished to such a point that in order to restore their former productive power it was necessary to have recourse to scientific agriculture. Plants require certain nutritive elements, in greater or smaller quantity. That is readily understood. Some, like clover, for instance, return to the soil a part of the food material which they have consumed. That is all very well explained by Dr. Robertson. I shall not discuss this theory at any greater length, and shall be content with saying that it is a very risky business to keep on growing the same plant on the same soil in the expectation that the yield will be maintained. No such doctrine is taught, and were farmers to take seriously to it, I believe it would be most unfortunate.

We should endeavour, by means of a sound and healthful policy, to retain our young men on the farms; in that way will they be of greater service to the country. Particular pains are taken to turn out good sailors and soldiers; why not show as much activity and energy towards turning out efficient teachers and agricultural leaders who would be of greater service to the country than officers for the army or the navy?

If the proposal of the hon. member for Drummond is lacking in certain respects, it cannot be gainsaid that there is in it much that is good, for it deals with all these questions. I fail to see why the House should not accept it.

It will be objected that it is in the shape of a non-confidence motion. Well, retain whatever in it is good in order that the farming class may be dealt with according to their merits. Such is the rule which should be followed under the circumstances.

The hon. member for Chicoutimi acknowledges the desirability of most of the changes asked for in this motion. Unfortunately he is quite willing to stultify himself by voting for its rejection. He thinks the principle is right, but the consequences he will not accept.. A practical farmer himself, he refuses to join with us, and inquires from the member for Drummond whether he holds a brief for introducing such a motion. Well, the member for Drummond may be said practically to hold a brief for this purpose. He is a farmer; he has gone to the polls against a candidate belonging to the liberal professions, and had he not been a farmer it is likely he would have had greater difficulty in winning his election. I say, therefore, he holds a special mandate and he is anxious to do something for the farming community.

Some time ago I voted in favour of the motion submitted by the hon. member for North Grey asking that further steps be taken for the improvement of the cold storage service. I did so believing that such a proposal was a fair and equitable one from the standpoint of the farming class. The same principle is at stake in the present instance. As already stated, there are certain things in this motion which are not approvable, but on the whole, it is beneficial and should be endorsed by this House, and I deem it my duty to support it by my vote.

Mr. J. P. TURCOTTE (Quebec County.) (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I do not know what will be the fate of the motion introduced by the member for Drummond and Arthabaska. He is at liberty to withdraw it with the consent of the House. If he insists on a vote a decision will soon be reached. I for one am satisfied that it is not in the interest of the farming class. I intend to vote against this motion, not through any ill-will towards the member for Drummond, for I know he has done his duty in submitting it. He is a practical farmer, he was elected as such, and he holds a seat here as a representative of the farming class; it is then incumbent on him to forward the interests of that class. From that standpoint, he is in a position to put before the House the results of his own experience. On the other hand, it must be admitted that such experience is a rather brief one. As years go by, owing to his more mature judgment and to his wider knowledge of parliamentary practice, he will satisfy himself that in submitting this motion as it is worded, he has injured rather than forwarded the interests of the farming class, since he proposes to restrict the expenditure of the Dominion government in connection with agriculture to one-tenth of the total yearly revenue. But, Sir, if the government, any government, in this country should apply only one-tenth of the annual revenue for the benefit of that class, it would not be fulfilling its duty. Such a government would be wiped out of existence at the general election.

The farming class is entitled to a great deal more than ten per cent or fifty per cent. When the hon. member endeavours to cut down the benefits direct or indirect which accrue to the farming community through the action of a bountiful government, it is incumbent on us to protest and to intimate to the hon. member that he does not represent properly the interests of the class to which he belongs.

No government contributes in a direct manner a single dollar for the benefit of the farmers. No contributions whatever are made direct to individuals or to families. All benefactions originating with the government reach individuals in an indirect way; they are available to all classes of society, whether labouring, manufacturing or farming. They are for the benefit of the population as a whole. The larger the number of persons making up a class of the population, the larger its quota of favours, and the farming class is on a par with the others in that respect.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe a single member of this House has ever voted or has even thought of voting against a measure proposed in the interest of the agricultural class. Hon. gentlemen are at one in acknowledging that whatever profits to the farming class profits to the people as a whole. We are all agreed as to that on both sides of the House; but the real point at issue is the modus operandi whereby such a result should be effected. Now, I think for my part that the means suggested is not acceptable.

Mr. GILBERT. (Translation.) The hon. member says that the motion is contrary to the interests of the farming community, because it proposes that at least one tenth of the public revenue be appropriated towards promoting the interests of that class. May I inquire from him what proportion of the public revenue has been appropriated directly for the benefit of the farming class since confederation?

Mr. TURCOTTE (Translation.) A similar question has already been put by the hon. member and has been answered, as may be ascertained by referring to 'Hansard.' What need is there of reverting once more to the matter?

Mr. GILBERT. (Translation.) I am referring to the amounts which have been expended in the interest of agriculture proper. In the estimates of the Department of Agriculture there are included amounts for matters which are foreign to agriculture, such as immigration and arts. To build up a great country, it is necessary as in the case of any structure, to begin at the foundation.

Some hon. MEMBERS—Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. (Translation.) The hon. gentleman should confine himself to asking a question, he has no right to argue.

Mr. GILBERT. (Translation.) I consider as being appropriated for agriculture such amounts only as are expended directly for the benefit of the agricultural class. Whatever sums are appropriated towards the building of railways or canals are not of any more advantage to that particular class than to the remainder of the people.

Mr. TURCOTTE. (Translation.) That is all right, we are exactly of the same opinion, and the hon. member would certainly be justified in considering himself as one of the majority in this House, had he not thought fit to join the minority and share the erroneous views of his leader the hon. member for Jacques Cartier.

In Canada, we should in a certan measure consider ourselves as being all of one family, of one household, and I am satisfied that anything which is being done in the interest of Canada is in a general way and to a large extent beneficial to the farming class. Much is being said in reference to railways, canals, the administration of justice; but ultimately all such matters turn out to the benefit of the rural classes. Why are these great highways of trade being built and maintained, if not to transport to the large centres of population and to the shipping ports the products of the farm?

Sir, that is all I have to say to the hon. member for Drummond; but since the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has seconded this motion I wish briefly to consider with him the legal side of this question. One sure fact is that we are all desirous of promoting the interest of the farming class. On the other hand, I claim that the means suggested by this motion are contrary to the interests of that class. What is the object of restricting the expenditure? Certain requirements are pointed to; in the first place, a wider dissemination of agricultural science is asked for. Well, I flatly contradict the assumption on which this plea is made, as well as that for the free circulation of an agricultural journal for the use of members of co-operative associations. Two means are proposed for the wider dissemination of knowledge in matters agricultural among our people. The first consists in the publication and free circulation of a paper devoted to imparting to the country people information already contained in publications issued and distributed at this very day by the Department of Agriculture. I have endeavoured to discover another educational agency outside the school, but failed. We have our experiment stations which are giving results, but they do not go in for teaching in the strict sense of the word, save through object lessons. Are there any other means? In looking into this proposal, I am led to the conclusion that the hon. member would have this government undertake to start schools for the teaching of agriculture, and I am dubious whether that would not be infringing on provincial rights which are paramount in such matters; for, to my mind, there is really no difference between the teaching of agriculture and that of any other technical subject.

Then, there is behind this proposal an effort to put under the control of this government, schools—public or sectarian, as the hon. member for Jacques Cartier will no doubt explain—schools which, to my mind, come within the scope of provincial rights. I say that is a misinterpretation of the constitution. I hope that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, who holds a chair in the university, will dispel my fears in this regard.

Another object for which, according to the promoters of this motion, this tithe of our public revenue might be employed is the drainage of lands as indicated in the following lines:

Through the effective draining of large areas of land insufficiently drained at the present time and the cultivation of which would become twice as profitable through improvements requiring the aid of the government.

Should this proposition be adopted, the effect would be to induce the government to take hold of the drainage of land not only as regards the public domain, but of lands privately owned. Thus would the government be transformed into a contractor of public works. In respect to such undertakings as the building of the Transcontinental or the Intercolonial, which the government has started as links between the various provinces, or in respect to works of irrigation which are being effected in the Canadian west by private holders with the aid of the government, it is quite a different matter. But I am not aware that the Canadian government has ever in the ordinary course of events undertaken to carry out such works of farm draining. Even in the event of the government being recuperated of the expenditure made, the proposal of the member for Drummond is to my mind fanciful and one which no government should take to. This government is made up of business men who are not willing to engage in neck-breaking schemes.

The motion winds up in three paragraphs, the last of which is as follows: 'Through the founding and subsidizing of agriculture co-operative associations, the bonusing of cold storage warehouses established by these associations in compliance with statutory requirements, the publication and free circulation of an agricultural paper for the use of members of these associations.'

Well, I contend that this is another glaring mistake. It is desired that the government should establish co-operative associations; that is, should establish, maintain and operate business institutions made up of farmers and run in their interest. I claim that such a proposal is contrary to the letter and spirit of our constitution. I cannot conceive that any one having the slightest knowledge of constitutional law should introduce a motion calling on the government to subsidize agricultural co-operative associations. There is no sense in that. I look with great favour on co-operative associations, but I hold that they should be self-governing institutions independent of the government. I submit, therefore, that these suggestions as to the means of helping on the farming community through governmental aid are vitiated by serious errors.

I think I said enough. I represent an agricultural constituency; I am cognizant of what the government has accomplished for the rural population as a whole, and especially for that of the province of Quebec. I am aware that until the present year in the province of Quebec we had no experiment station under the control of the Dominion government, while such stations were in existence in the other provinces. I am glad to find that we now have two of these stations—one in close proximity to Quebec, at Cap Rouge, and another at Ste. Anne de la Pocatière, in the coutny of Kamouraska, not far from the county line of l'Islet.

For all this it is only fair that we should be thankful to the Minister of Agriculture, and it is with pleasure that on this occasion, on behalf of the province of Quebec, I express my gratitude for the fair treatment now accorded and which for so long had been denied it. Thereby has the government settled a difficult question and shown its sympathy for the farming class. Why should we be called upon today to vote in support of a motion which, while stating a fact true in itself, is in reality such as to do the government great harm? I for one think it my duty to state right here my intention to vote against this motion as it is worded, reserving my right to listen and give due consideration to the arguments which my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier may bring forth.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Mr. Speaker, I feel it my duty to say a few words on this important question which has been so ably brought to the attention of the House by my hon. friend from Drummond and Arthabaska (Mr. Gilbert). My hon. friend (Mr. Gilbert) has implemented the promise he made to the electors of his county in submitting to the House this motion, which, if adopted, is bound to result in the greatest good to the agricultural interests of this country. I am glad to hear my hon. friends opposite, who during the election in Drummond and Arthabaska cast a certain amount of ridicule on my hon. friend (Mr. Gilbert), now admit that on the present occasion he has amply implemented the promises he made to his electors. These hon. gentlemen must bear in mind that after that election they themselves, and their organs in the province of Quebec, endeavoured to cast ridicule on the role which the hon. member (Mr. Gilbert) was called upon to play in this House. My hon. friend, during his candidature declared he was the representative of the agricultural classes, and that if elected he would move in favour of an increased annual appropriation for the advancement of agriculture and to-day the hon. gentleman has in a highly creditable manner carried out that promise. We have heard a great deal to-day as to the means which we ought to adopt to further the interests of our agricultural classes, and I was surprised to hear my hon. friend from Quebec county (Mr. Turcotte) finding fault with the motion moved by my hon. friend (Mr. Gilbert) because it did not go far enough. I may say that the thought has occurred to me, that while a fair sprinkling of lawyers is essential in this House, we have not perhaps a sufficient representation from amongst the agricultural classes themselves in this House. The hon. gentleman from Quebec county (Mr. Turcotte) tortured his system of reasoning to an extent which appeared to me almost pitiful, and I would like to know from him if he did say that a very much larger proportion than one-tenth of our entire revenue should be spent by the Dominion on the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. TURCOTTE (Quebec County). I said there is much more than that spent.

Mr. MONK. How does my hon. friend support that contention in view of the fact that out of the hundreds and hundreds of millions of revenue we have received since confederation, we have scarcely spent $8,000,000 all told on agriculture. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Turcotte) say that out of our present annual revenue of $100,000,000 and with a surplus that is boasted to be $18,000,000, we spent more than $500,000 upon the cause of agriculture? Is that expenditure sufficient? Is it not fair that in view of the importance that should be given to educating our people towards the advancement of the largest industry in this Dominion, we should define, as my hon. friend (Mr. Gilbert) has asked us to define, what proportion we shall consecrate to that purpose. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Turcotte) criticised the quantum mentioned in the motion, but if we should adopt that motion we are not bound to an exact amount of $10,000,000 for we might spend a little more or a little less. It is however a fair proposition to place before the House —and I believe it will be endorsed throughout the country by our agricultural population—that we should lay down the principle that at least that proportion of our revenue should be devoted to agriculture. I was present at the meeting of the Conservation Commission held recently in the city of Quebec, and at that meeting I heard from Mr. James, deputy Minister of Agriculture for the province of Ontario, one of the most admirable addresses that has even been delivered in Canada, upon the present condition of our agricultural community. Mr. James presented to that meeting the idea that while we had experimental farms and experimental stations, and agricultural colleges, yet, the last word in agricultural science, as the experience of the most advanced countries in the world has proved, is that in order to reach the farmer we must go to him and teach him in his own district. Better than all the other forms of teaching, according to this eminent authority is to send down to an agricultural district an expert who will live with the people, who will find out the crops most suitable to a particular locality, and who will then teach them how best to farm these crops. I was much pleased to hear last night my hon. friend from Chicoutimi (Mr. Girard) an experienced man in these matters, advocate just the policy that Mr. James advocated before the Conservation Commission at Quebec. And, if that is the best system, what have we been doing in the past to carry it out, and if we are going to adopt it in the future is it not a fact that we will require a very much larger expenditure on agriculture than we have hitherto devoted to it. Until the year 1882 there was no Department of Agriculture in France, but in that year such a department was organized upon the principle of sending experienced men into different localities and teaching the cultivators of the soil how best to make it productive. Recently the most eminent occupants of the different departments of the administration in France have undertaken to publish articles in a popular review descriptive of the working of their departments, and the very first article is devoted to a description of the work of the Department of Agriculture in France, by Mr. Meline who is one of the most eminent authorities on the subject in Europe. That article shows that by adopting the methods advocated by Mr. James the results achieved have been marvellous, that France has become the first agricultural country in Europe, and at present she not only supplies her own wants, but is able to export largely of agricultural products. Is it not time that there was an improvement in our methods in this country. I was glad to hear from my hon. friend (Mr. Turcotte) that there are experimental farms in the province of Quebec, because I was not previously aware that there were any in actual operation. I knew that some property had been purchased for the purpose, but I did not know that an experimental farm was actually in operation in the province of Quebec at the present time. But, if agricultural colleges and experimental stations are good, there is this still better system of teaching the farmers throughout the country which gets nearer to the people actually engaged on the land, and if we are to make Canada the great agricultural country that nature has destined her to be, it is not too much to ask that one-tenth of our national revenue should be appropriated to that object. I do not wish to follow my hon. friend from Quebec county in his analysis of the different motives of the motion of my hon. friend. My hon. friend prepared that motion himself alone; no one word of it but emanated from himself. I hear laughter on the other side, and I think it proceeds from some of that numerous class of professional men who almost exclusively represent in this House the province of Quebec. I find no objection to that. My hon. friend from Quebec county, with the true nature of the legal gentleman, has endeavoured to pick flaws in this very motion on constitutional grounds. My hon. friend from Drummond and Arthabaska is not a constitutional lawyer; but the question is not whether he is a constitutional lawyer, but whether he is a farmer fully informed of the wants of those he represents. If he has erred to any extent from a strictly constitutional standpoint, if he has not conformed to May or Bourinot, or other great writers on constitutional law in regard to the means he suggests, I do not think it is quite fair for my hon. friend, who is himself a great constitutional authority, to find fault with his motion.

Mr. TURCOTTE (Quebec County). I would like an answer.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend knows that even on the clearest constitutional points lawyers as well as doctors will differ, and I am afraid that my answer would not satisfy my hon. friend. But one point raised by my hon. friend from Quebec County was that the school rights of the minority of the population of Quebec were invaded by the terms of this motion. He feared for the minority, and on what grounds? Because he said the motion implied teaching, which was strictly reserved to the provincial jurisdiction. Will my hon. friend go so far as to say that the Department of Agriculture must absolutely abstain from giving any instruction whatever to the farmers as to the best means of improving their agriculture?

Mr. TURCOTTE (Quebec County). Is it in the schools that this teaching will be given?

Mr. MONK. The word 'schools' is not mentioned in the motion. Having jurisdiction over agriculture, we must impart to the farmer all the instruction necessary for him to succeed in the important work in which he is engaged, and, therefore, it seems to me that my hon. friend's objection on constitutional grounds cannot be maintained. There is a point in the motion of my hon. friend which should receive the consideration of the House. The progress of agriculture throughout the world, particularly in Europe, has been advanced by the introduction and encouragement of co-operative societies; and in the United States a short time ago President Roosevelt instituted an inquiry as to the most appropriate remedies for that desertion of farm lands and country life which has been so unanimously deplored in the House to-day. One of the principal means of reviving interest in agriculture is the foundation and encouragement of co-operative societies. My hon. friend from Quebec County objects particularly to any such movement on the part of the government. In that he is in contradiction with the experience of every country in the world. For years I have endeavoured to secure in this House legislation which would permit of the incorporation of co-operative societies. It is the way out of most of the difficulties that have been pointed out in this House to-day, and my hon. friend from Chicoutimi (Mr. Girard) was the first to agree to that proposition. Why is it that we have not been able, during the five or six years that this subject has been before this House, to secure the passage of a law authorizing, as has been done in every other country in the world, the formation of co-operative societies to advance the cause of agriculture—to permit our country people to meet together, work together and combine together, as all other classes of society do to-day, to advance their interests? Members of the House who have taken some interest in these attempts at legislation know that all such attempts hitherto have failed through the action of a most powerful association, the Retail Dealers' Association, who have vowed and determined that the farmers and the workingmen of this country shall not have that privilege, granted everywhere else and to all other classes, to organize their modest efforts together. They have succeeded in blocking that legislation, although many members of this government and a great many members of this House are in favour of it, and from the selfish motive, that while they themselves can obtain legislation to organize and co-operate together, they will not allow these numerous and influential classes to enjoy the same privilege. I hope the discussion had here to-day, and the statements made by several members who are more conversant than myself with agricultural matters, will advance that cause, which has been in the hands of the House and in abeyance for such a long time, so that the two Bills in favour of co-operation now before the House, will receive the encouragement of the government, and be carried into law. Those who have read up the matter will agree with me that it is useless for us to hope for co-operation unless we have a general law governing these societies, applicable throughout the entire Dominion, and unless we do what has been done in every country in the world, have a natural propaganda in favour of co-operation. We should have a department for the special purpose of encouraging, organizing and overseeing co-operative societies, and I think it was with very good reason that my hon. friend proposed and advocated a regular publication to advance the cause of co-operation throughout the country, as we have in the Department of Labour a publication in the interest of the labouring classes.

My own belief is that we should separate the Department of Agriculture from all alien or foreign matter. It is said that we spend a million dollars in that department. That is true, but we have there the Archives and the Census and other departments which should be separated from it, and have the Department of Agriculture devoted exclusively to agriculture. My hon. friend from Laprairie (Mr. Lanctot)—and we have very few representatives of agriculture in this House from the province of Quebec, fewer by far than from the other provinces, I regret to say—thought he met the argument of the mover of this resolution by saying that we spend a great deal of money in the port of Montreal. But that is not an answer. These expenditures, to which the hon. member from Laprairie (Mr. Lanctot) refers, are for the general benefit of the country, and do not come within the purview of the resolution before the House. The object of the resolution is that we should here express an opinion as to what proportion of our national revenue should be devoted exclusively to agriculture by the Department of Agriculture as a national annual expenditure; and it is idle for an agriculturist to say that the expenditures we are making on railways and other public works are expenditures of the nature referred to by my hon. friend from Drummond and Arthabaska.

I hope that my hon. friend is gratified at any rate with the result of the discussion he has brought before the House. For my part I see no reason why we should not accept his motion. It is in favour of the agricultural classes, it represents with extreme fairness justice and common sense the contentions of the agricultural class in the province of Quebec and throughout this country, and the refusal to entertain it comes with bad grace from this government.

Mr. GUSTAVE BOYER (Vaudreuil.) (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, in closing his speech the hon. member for Terrebonne in mellowing tones apprised the House of the fact that the hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska owed to his occupation as a farmer the seat which he holds here. There is something humourous in this statement to my mind, for I have always been under the impression that the battle in that constituency had been fought on an altogether different issue—an issue, to a certain extent, concerned with the creation of a Canadian navy.

I am glad to be able to congratulate the hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska on the speech which he delivered at this afternoon's sitting in support of his motion.

I recognize he deserves much credit for the preparation of his work, but I cannot share his opinion as to the way of increasing on agricultural grants, but I agree with him on the main idea of his motion, viz: that we ought to do more as regards agriculture.

The hon. members who spoke in turn this afternoon were glad to recognize that agriculture had considerably extended in this country during the last two decades, especially during the last. Meanwhile some had grounds to complain stating that our progress is too slow and they make comparisons between our statistics and those of the European countries.

Are we able, Sir, to reasonably bring about such comparisons? I do not believe it. Is it possible to speak of Denmark, for instance which is a country where the main industry is butter making; an ideal country, whose people are astonishing the world? The hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska has given us statistics showing that the Danish thoroughbred cow or a native cow of that country is able to furnish 9,000 pounds of milk annually, as against 3,000 for the average Canadian cow no matter of what breed she would be.

The hon. member for Terrebonne, supporting his statement with statistics, has told us that the yield of wheat to the acre was higher in Europe than in Canada.

I say once more, is there any comparison to set forth between European countries and Canada? Those statements have, of course, been made with a view to throw blame on the government on account of our inferiority. It might be true that we could make use of those figures to point out what we have still to do in order to get from our agricultural industry all the benefits obtainable. We could acquaint the farmers with the statistics so as to show them how resourceful is the farming industry when wisely conducted. That such results as mentioned by the hon. members, be obtained, in Europe is not a matter of surprise, if we take into consideration that scientific farming is applied there so extensively. France, England, Belgium, Italy, Austria, etc., have agricultural colleges which might truly be called universities. Moreover, all over those countries are established farming institutes and farm instructors.

We readily understand the urgent needs prevailing amongst those people. Population is dense and land area is limited; there is not an inch of it to be spared. In order to supply food to so many million inhabitants, it is necessary to grow all possible crops. People try to draw from the soil all what is available. It is for them a vital question. The governments of those countries have spared nothing for the establishment of agricultural schools in their territories together with farmers institutes; in brief all possible means to provide information and extend agricultural science. Amongst all, France is splendidly equipped for the teaching of agriculture. She has an agricultural college, national in its scope, where students are taught scientific farming; she has also experimental and demonstrative stations. Besides the two abovementioned schools, France has established national schools, agricultural training schools, model farms and special teaching of some branches of crop growing suitable for every part of the country.

I summarize that enumeration showing to what extent have results been obtained in that country.

Such an organization involves a great expenditure of money, but the numerous population and its urgent needs justify the cost.

Here, in Canada, we may say that we have valuable farming organization. There is a federal department of agriculture and nine provincial departments of agriculture, all of which deal exclusively with the farmers' interests; we own thirteen experimental farms established in various parts of the country; in every province, there are one or more agricultural schools, moreover, a number of farmers' institutes, clubs or organizations have been formed in different localities, all of which aim at the development of the resources of the soil.

I would not pretend that our teaching staff is all up to date nor sufficient in number, but I am certain that, if all the farming people would take advantage of those organizations, the results would be, by any means, far different.

In Europe the scientific teaching of farming is appreciated; it is needed and its extention is felt. The conditions as regards the immediate needs are different from those in Canada. Our farms being nearly as large as a domain in Europe. Our climate cannot be compared with southern Europe, but we may say that we are able to make use of the land for either crop growing or pasture during an average of seven months a year. Finally we can live on the farm quite cheaply and without working too hard.

Now, to find the cause of the inactivity, if we may use such term, or rather to find out the real cause of the slow progress as regards agriculture, on which subject some hon. members of the opposition have passed critical remarks. The government should not be blamed for that, the Department of Agriculture and the sums needed for the carrying out of its works are not to be blamed. No, Sir, the cause is to be found at the hand of all interested parties. We must confess that the carelessness of a great number of farmers in each region tends to paralyze the efforts of those who mean to be earnest.

Supposing that our budget for agriculture should be the largest in the world, if we can not succeed to change that state of apathy, we will spend our millions in vain. For, unfortunately, the great success that costs very little toil induces the farmers to till their lands as they did long ago when the routine was ahead of science.

I do not say that this state of affairs is existing all through the country, but it is to be noticed in these provinces where more elementary instruction is lacking.

The motion of the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska is too general to receive my support. I should have liked more specific. To ask the government to spend the tenth part of our national revenue, that is, from ten to twelve millions a year, without giving a definite method of applying these sums, gives much ground to discuss this motion.

Whilst some of the hon. member's propositions may be admitted, others give rise to complicated studies of the subject which, from my standpoint, makes it impossible to pass this motion.

The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska complains of the fact that our farms are deserted and wants to remedy this by the expenditure of millions for agricultural purposes. I say, Sir, that this flow of people towards the manufacturing cities, especially as regards the young country people, is not as much due to the apathy regarding agriculture as to the wish of those young people to go and live in those cities where the activity and the money in circulation seem to them, at sight, a promise that they will get their share of riches. Very often they are very miserable at the start, but others will, nevertheless, follow. Love, greed for salary, money after each week is preferred to the quiet life of the fields which is more free from anxiety. But what would be the cause of the desertion of our farms, which, in the whole, is not so extraordinary as all that? One of the chief causes would be found in connection with protection—I was going to say over production—which was granted manufacturing industry.

Numerous manufactures were constructed. These structures are huge and millions of employees are needed for their operations. Workmen were needed and had to come from somewhere, so the country put in the largest share of working hands. But I declare, Sir, that it is a thousand fold preferable to see this rush take place towards the Canadian cities, if this flow is more considerable than the emigration towards the American republic such as we had to deplore under the Conservative government.

The country man who goes to the city, within his own country, is at home, whilst he who passes the frontier runs 99 chances against 100 of never coming back home.

The subject of co-operative societies was discussed. My hon. friend said a lot on the matter. No man understands better than I do the importance of co-operation, for I know that the success of the farmer is based upon collectiveness. Left to himself, the farmer can do very little, but if his efforts and those of his neighbours are collective, the greatest enterprises may be successfully brought to an end and fine results may be obtained. I know that the provincial laws, those of Quebec, for instance, authorize the farmers to unite in different enterprises to suit their conveniences. But I would be in favour of such a law by the federal if it were equally advantageous to all and be in force in all the Canadian territory, but not only to help a certain group or class and that in a certain part of the country only. On this question I have the same views as the hon. member, but I differ with him on another subject. It is when he proposes the creation of those societies and would have the government encourage them by paying $5 premium to each member joining them.

At this point, Sir, I can not admit this principle, which I consider dangerous. At the present time we have, in the province of Quebec, some agricultural societies whose members receive a certain allocation from the government besides the agricultural publication. I always wondered if this was the best policy to encourage the farmers to join their own societies.

At all events, this institution is already old enough that I would not grant my approval to a measure whose object would be to pay the farmer in order to encourage him to join a society in which he finds an immediate advantage. I would consider this measure as lowering to the farmer. Rather an effort should be made to educate the farmers in this respect.

The hon. member for Terrebonne exclaimed a moment ago: Beware, if you do not grant to the farming community their fair quota of the public moneys, they will form unions like the workingmen in cities have done, and have recourse to forceful means for getting what they want. I may not recollect the very words he used, but that is at any rate the purport of his appeal.

I may answer my hon. friend from Terrebonne. Pray to God that such an idea, which I consider as most excellent, be taken up by the farming class; it will help them on in many ways. But if this is to come about, the farmer should take after the city workmen and go in for closer solidarity with his fellow-workers. The city workman joins an association which is expected to look after his interests, to promote his general welfare. Through it he has succeeded in having his salary increased and in keeping within more reasonable bounds the hours of daily toil. Through its efforts he has secured a better ventilation of his workshop, the carrying out of sanitary measures, as well as protection against fire and all manners of accident. And all will admit that had the individual workman striven single-handed to improve matters, he would have failed. It was through united effort that the workingmen obtained a fair and equitable consideration of their claims. I may state for the information of the hon. members for Terrebonne and Drummond and Arthabaska that these people, far from being bonused for the purpose of inducing them to join these associations, contribute largely, from week to week, from month to month, from year to year, towards their maintenance. The prospect of seeing farmers form unions such as workingmen have formed has no fears for me; I rather wish they would do so in their own interest. Many a time have I urged on them the necessity of co-operation and good-will to ensure permanent success.

The hon. member for Terrebonne referred to agricultural lecturers, and claimed that many of them were not qualified for the work which they were expected to do. I will not deny that, but I may point out to my hon. friend that there is not in Canada any institution for turning out expert lecturers on such subjects, that such as are to be found have become so through their own efforts solely, and this accounts for the great inequalities in the result. However, I am in sympathy with the views he expressed, and I only hope that the educational campaign in matters agricultural will be carried on by competent men. A move which I would favour, even if it were to cost several thousand dollars, is the appointment of practical teachers in agriculture for each county. A leader who would be in constant touch with a given community would be in a position to guide them effectively in the management of their farms and the carrying on of the various branches of agriculture, and might also reveal to them the benefit of co-operative working and trading processes. Lastly, if our model farms, our schools, our agricultural periodicals and papers do not suffice, let the government knock at the door of the farmer's home and teach him on the spot the most profitable and most up-to-date methods. Sir, I would strongly favour such a proposal. For, to my mind, one of the most sensible and rapid means of educating the farmers and improving their methods is teaching them at home. The toiler of the fields is a close observer of nature, his insight into its phenomena is most remarkable, and oftentimes he attains results which would seem to us beyond his grasp without the help of science and scientific training. Consequently, it would seem to me an easy matter, by means of technical instruction imparted at home, to bring about a rapid and fruitful dissemination throughout a parish, a township, a whole province, of improved methods in crop growing, breeding, &c. The immediate outcome of such a training would be the carrying out of such improvements as experiments effected on a model farm would have shown to be profitable in connection with cultivation of the soil, dairying and other branches of farm work.

I regret that the hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska has not included such a proposal in his motion, for I certainly would have given it my support. Instead, the hon. member calls for the publication of a paper to be distributed free of charge throughout the country.

Sir, the matter of greatest importance just now is not the starting of a new journal of agriculture, but impressing on the minds of farmers the importance of carefully reading those publications which are now circulated in their midst. The province of Quebec has to-day a journal of agriculture very well edited and full of valuable pointers in regard to farming. The province of Ontario, on the other hand, is favoured with several agricultural periodicals and papers which are objects of general admiration.

Unlike my hon. friend from Drummond and Arthabaska, I would rather be inclined to favour a proposal for an increase of the provincial subsidies, with the understanding that this surplus endowment would be applied to the promotion of agriculture. Whatever the amount this government would be ready to grant in this way, and even if it were as much as the amount suggested by the hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska, I would favour the proposal. I am satisfied that such moneys would be expended to better effect by the various provincial governments, they being in a better position to know exactly what are the requirements for the time being, considering the status of the community at the time.

When my hon. friend complains that the federal government do not spend enough for agricultural purposes and when he bases his statements on the few hundred thousand dollars which appear in the public accounts for these purposes, he is not fair, or his investigations and researches are prejudiced. However, I don't care to lay such a blame upon him.

For my part I have always understood that under the constitution which governs us, the federal government have prerogatives and the local governments quite different ones, but that all these are combined so that each government have their own responsibilities and advantages.

The federal government attend to large public works, railways, canals, rivers, to the opening of unexplored districts, to the settlement of the surveyed domain, to the development of the country, to the making of treaties relating to trade, to the improvement of our transportation. These are the general outlines, and it seems to me that each finally tends towards agriculture. Indeed, how could you sell your products if you could not remove them by rail or water and if there were no profitable commercial intercourse.

In short, that argument is so simple that I shall not detain the House any longer. But in concluding, Mr Speaker, let me tell you that the government have just found a great remedy for the evil of which the hon. member from Drummond and Arthabaska complains, and I will let you know what it is. It will not make necessary at present any notable change in the agricultural estimates although its results shall be quick and astounding.

Following the example of the hon. member from Terrebonne and of the hon. member from Jacques Cartier and others who have addressed the House upon this question, I love the farmer, I love the brave and laborious man who follows this calling, and no one more than I wishes him happiness and prosperity. And I am sure that all the members of this House are of the same mind. Therefore, I invite the member from Drummond and Arthabaska when he shall meet his constituents to speak to them in the following terms: 'My friends, I had promised you to take an interest in you. I have kept my word. I have moved in the House that the tenth part of the public revenue be expended for agricultural purposes, but the government have found the means of rendering farming still more prosperous without such an expenditure. Thus we will be enabled to save ten per cent of the public revenue and to spend the amount. This means, my friends, is the commercial agreement which they are about to enter upon with the United States for the marketing of our natural products.' When this agreement is sanctioned, we shall see our agriculture taking an expansion unexampled in our history, and agriculture has in store for the farming community the most brilliant possibilities.

The hon. member from Drummond and Arthabaska did not say in his speech that agriculture was not thriving in his country, but he wants to render it more flourishing. This aim is not a legitimate one, since, according to a maxim, all men must tend towards perfection. Now, I verily believe that the new policy of the government towards the United States will satisfy not only his own desires, but the wishes of thousands and thousands of farmers in this country.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

SUPPLY.

Mr. SPEAKER. Mr. Chairman, when the estimates of the House of Commons were under discussion the other day, I inadvertently made an incorrect statement in reference to the supply of stationery to the Senate. I stated that the members of the Senate were still supplied with trunks of stationery as the members of the House of Commons were formerly supplied. I had been misinformed on that point. The Speaker of the Upper Chamber, having called my attention to the matter, I think it only right to state that the stationery trunk was done away with in the Senate about the same time it was done away with in this House, and their system of supplying stationery is now the same as ours. A misapprehension has also arisen in connection with another statement of mine, in which I said that the Senate being an independent chamber, disbursed their funds as they thought best. A more correct method of stating the case would be that the Senate disburse their moneys in accordance with the estimates they have made up for necessary expenditures.

Mr. HENDERSON. I made certain criticisms of the stationery supplied to the Senate, stating that they should not be treated differently from the members of the House of Commons. As I understand some criticism was made in the Senate of our comments in this House, and I wish to explain that I was led astray by Mr. Speaker in the manner he has just explained.

Mr. SPEAKER. They have a stationery office in the Senate distinct from ours, and I was informed that the old system was in vogue there when in reality it had been changed. I must apologize to the committee for making the statement; I made it in good faith.

Mr. MILLER. While we are discussing these matters, some ladies, wives of members of the Senate and of the House of Commons both, think they might be supplied with a telephone and clock in the ladies' sitting room near the parliamentary restaurant. That would not be too much to do for the ladies.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Railways and canals collection of revenue Intercolonial Railway, $9,500,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is the working expenses of the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. SPROULE. We understood that the estimates of the Minister of Agriculture would go on to-night, and the members who wish to discuss them are present. Some of those who wish to discuss the Intercolonial railway are not present, and if we allow items to pass one item should be kept open on which members may discuss any of these matters.

Mr. GRAHAM. There will be no objection to keeping an item over for general discussion. This is the annual vote for the working expenses of the Intercolonial railway. We had a vote last year of $9,000,000. Of course the vote is only approximate because the greater the amount of business the more expenses we have. We took a supplementary vote the other day of $250,000, and possibly before the 31st of March we may have to take another. We are increasing the vote this year by half a million which we hope will cover our requirements, but it depends on the amount of business we do. Within the last couple of months we have added to the salaries of the employees of the Intercolonial railway to the amount approximately $300,000 for next year.

Mr. DANIEL. Does the minister expect that the revenue in the coming year will be over $9,500,000?

Mr. GRAHAM. We estimate that this year the income will approximate $10,000,000.

Mr. DANIEL. And the working expenses?

Mr. GRAHAM. The working expenses proper will be about $9,250,000. The reason I say we may have to ask another supplementary is that we want to pay $76,000 out of revenue for the loss at Campbellton. We also want to take out $200,000 from the revenue in addition to the $25,000 a month to put in the equipment renewal account. I have the money, but I cannot take it out unless I get a vote for it. This is merely giving authority to use it for that purpose.

Mr. DANIEL. What portion of the Intercolonial railway does the minister expect to double track this year?

Mr. GRAHAM. There is a piece in connection with the yard at St. John and some at Stellarton and at New Glasgow. We have not taken up the matter of double tracking the through line, that would be a capital vote.

Mr. DANIEL. There is a portion double tracked between Moncton and Port Duchene. I understood that when the hon. member for Westmorland was Minister of Railways he took a vote for double tracking from Moncton to St. John. Have the department given up the idea of double tracking in that direction?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not find any record of a vote to double track there. We double tracked to Painsec Junction. As I understand, if the Intercolonial railway undertakes to handle the trade of the Canadian Pacific railway, the Grand Trunk Pacific and in future the Canadian Northern, as a government road, it will have to be double tracked from St. John all the way through to Halifax. It is part of a big problem the government now have under consideration.

Mr. HUGHES. What about changing the route of the Intercolonial railway around the Folly Heights?

Mr. GRAHAM. We had a survey made, and my information is that we may not get a better grade by diverting the road than by double tracking the present road.

Mr. STANFIELD. The engineers tell me quite different.

Mr. GRAHAM. My information was received within a week. It is a big question. I do not vouch for its accuracy. To go around by the other side of Cobequid mountain means a double number of stations and double overhead expenses for that district, but it might serve a territory. The question of double tracking is a big one, and will have to be solved in some way. The Canadian Pacific railway, the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Northern must eventually have a way more independent than the Canadian Pacific railway now has of getting into Halifax. It is part of a big scheme. It means eventually a double track and larger terminal facilities at Halifax. We have not taken any vote for it this year, possibly next year we will be in a better position to deal with it on a large scale. In the meantime, I believe the Intercolonial can handle at the present time the traffic that is offered from the other roads.

Mr. STANFIELD. I would like to point out one little injustice that is being done to a certain class of employees on the Intercolonial, I mean the porters. It is a small matter to the railroad, but it means a good deal to the men. A new man, we will say, is taken on as porter at Montreal and put in charge of a dead-head car running from Montreal to Halifax and return, and he has to pay for his own meals at Halifax, while getting a small salary. I would like to suggest to the minister that the Intercolonial do as other roads do, when a man is in charge of a dead-head car he should be allowed a certain amount of pay per day for meals and expenses. I think where men are kept over in Halifax for two or three days they should be allowed a certain amount for expenses.

Mr. GRAHAM. The question is surrounded with difficulty. A man may live in Montreal, when it would be far better for him to live in Halifax; and vice versa. Of course, I am speaking generally. We have some men now on our dining and sleeping cars who, the management says, ought to live in Halifax, but the men prefer to to live in Montreal. It is difficult for the management to pay for that man living in Montreal when he ought to live in Halifax.

Mr. HUGHES. If a man who is in the service of the company is held off from a terminal point, and has to stop over, why not give him a stop over allowance?

Mr. GRAHAM. The roads do not do that. The men board themselves. On the dining cars I think they are given a very low rate for any meals they take.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister was to produce a statement showing the amount of money paid for car rent, and the revenue.

Mr. GRAHAM. The amount received for cars last year was $454,035, and the amount paid out $246,212, on car transfers.

Mr. DANIEL. How many cars has the Intercolonial running on other railway lines?. I think a large number of them are used by the Grand Trunk railway, and a number of other railways.

Mr. GRAHAM. The number varies. We load a car on the Intercolonial and this car goes somewhere on the Grand Trunk. Of course the Grand Trunk takes it. Under the arrangement, the Grand Trunk must start it eastward again and not westward when they get through with it. They do not want to start it eastward unless they can get something to put into it, and they will bring it back to us by easy stages. If they keep it over a certain length of time they pay us 35 cents a day, and we receive the same as they pay other roads. But our trouble is this: We are not an international railway, and we do not get nearly the same number of American cars that they get of ours. For instance, a man in Quebec the other day wanted 30 cars. We could only give him 20 cars the next day. These cars will be loaded and started off, and we must get them back after two months. These cars cross the line with pulpwood, and we may only get two or three cars in exchange when they come back, because pulpwood is very bulky and they are waiting for return freight. It is difficult for us to get those cars back. As a matter of fact, with that arrangement the Intercolonial gets the worst of it. We send men to look after these cars and try to hurry them back, but it is difficult to get them back.

Mr. HUGHES. There is a regular system in looking up these cars.

Mr. GRAHAM. There is a regular system of exchange; they are supposed to report where they are. We send to see why they do not get started on their way back according to our exchange arrangement. A car starts back, it will be put off the main line and be started back three or four miles from some other station, and be handed on to a branch line, and be exchanged with another line that is not theirs, and be kept a couple of weeks, and then come back on their line again. I may say at the present time there are about 3,000 cars away. The number varies.

Mr. BLAIN. What proportion is that of the total number of cars on the road?

Mr. GRAHAM. About twenty-five per cent.

Mr. DANIEL. Is 30 cents a day a paying rent for the use of the car?

Mr. GRAHAM. In that arrangement I think the Intercolonial gets the worst of it. The difficulty is that this is a government road. There is an association of the various railways, and that association meets and fixes the price that each company pays the other, and the conditions.

Mr. DANIEL. What is the value of one of these big box freight cars?

Mr. GRAHAM. $1,100 or $1,200.

Mr. HUGHES. Supposing one of the Intercolonial cars is wrecked on another line, what then?

Mr. GRAHAM. They repair the car, I understand.

Mr. LENNOX. Is the Intercolonial railway a member of this association the minister speaks of?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. Is the government compelled to submit to that kind of thing? In railway legislation we except the Intercolonial railway. The minister points out that this is an exceptional position, and that the Intercolonial does not get a corresponding benefit by this exchange of cars. I do not see why the government should submit to paying 25 cents per diem for cars that cost $1,200 apiece. Assuming that Sunday is included, that would not represent more than $90 a year, scarcely more than enough to pay the interest on the cost of the car. I think if we got 30 cents a day it would not be more than enough. The minister is not bound to submit to this very unfair arrangement.

Mr. GRAHAM. If you did not make that kind of an arrangement, you could not send pulp wood in cars out of Canada, for the American roads would not haul your cars.

Mr. HUGHES. Is the 25 cents a day paid from the time the loaded car is taken over by another road on its way to its destination, or is it only when it commences to return?

Mr. GRAHAM. The per diem allowance is not paid for the car going. The other road is allowed a certain time to send it back to us—I think two weeks on the average distance. If the car is not back in that time, the charge commences to run.

Mr. SPROULE. This is a large vote, and if the minister would make a statement of the purposes for which it was required we should have a better understanding of what we are asked to vote.

Mr. DANIEL. And the minister might also state whether there has been any increase in the rate for passengers or freight on the Intercolonial railway since the management came under the commission, and also whether, in the opinion of the minister, the management by commission is an advantage over the former method.

Mr. GRAHAM. According to the last report, our expenses for the fiscal year ending March, 1910, were as follows:

Maintenance of way and structures	$1,622,279 75
Maintenance of equipment..	1,851,792 68
Traffic expenses	179,882 61
Transportation expenses	4,784,667 76
General expenses	206,447 53

Maintenance of way and structures includes the pay of section men, maintenance of bridges and of the line in general. Maintenance of equipment includes repairs to rolling stock. General expenses includes office expenses. We have at the head of the mechanical branch Mr. Joughins; maintenance of way and structures, Mr. Burpee; traffic manager, Mr. Tiffin, and general superintendent, Mr. Brady. Mr. Pottinger has immediate supervision of the offices at Moncton.

Mr. HUGHES. He is head of the whole concern?

Mr. GRAHAM. No, Mr. Campbell, the deputy minister, is chairman of the board. And each member of the board has his own department to oversee. The appropriation this year will be approximately the same as last.

Mr. HUGHES. Is there an increase in the number of men?

Mr. GRAHAM. Quite a large increase this year.

Mr. STANFIELD. How much is spent in ballasting?

Mr. GRAHAM. For eleven months last year, $21,000, and this year for eleven months, $58,000.

Mr. STANFIELD. My advice to the minister would be to spend a good deal more than that in the coming year.

Mr. GRAHAM. We are spending more in ballasting now than has been spent in any previous year.

Mr. HUGHES. What class of ties is being used?

Mr. GRAHAM. Princess, pine and cedar.

Mr. STANFIELD. Quite a number of night operators have been laid off recently. On Monday evening, coming up on the train, two passengers wanted to buy tickets at College Bridge, but, as there was no night operator there, they could not get their tickets. In some of the newspapers it is indicated that accidents occurring have been due to the absence of night operators.

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not agree that that is the case. A number of night operators have been dropped along the Intercolonial railway, but only from places where they would not have been stationed at all on a company road. This is not economy at the expense of safety. I looked into some of these things that were said in the newspapers on this subject, and I do not think that the absence of night operators has had anything to do with accidents on the road.

Mr. STANFIELD. What about the tickets?

Mr. GRAHAM. I will leave it to any members of the House who are in a position to compare the Intercolonial railway in this matter with any company road. It would not pay to keep a man on at night because now and again a couple of men want to get tickets. Tickets can be got on the train.

Mr. STANFIELD. But these men wanted return tickets to Riviére du Loup, you cannot buy a return ticket from the conductor.

Mr. GRAHAM. But night operators cannot be kept on at such points if we are to run the line on anything like business principles. The other night I was criticised because it was said the line was not run on business principles. No company road would keep a night man at such a point as that referred to by the hon. member (Mr. Stanfield). In fact, I think no other road would stop a train there. But we stop the train, and, instead of getting credit for it, we get discredit because we do not do still more. In answer to my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule), I have here the figures for the eleven months ending March last, as follows:

Maintenance of way and structures	$1,687,000
Maintenance of equipment	1,875,000
Traffic expenses	172,000
Transportation expenses	4,552,000
General expenses	201,000

Mr. STANFIELD. What amount has been stopped from the men for leaving their positions without notice?

Mr. GRAHAM. There are about 6,000 men, and I could not tell that offhand.

Mr. STANFIELD. Has the minister a legal right to stop a man's pay for a month or six weeks?

Mr. GRAHAM. Our arrangement with the men is absolutely under union rules, and we have to abide by it.

Mr. STANFIELD. I know one case where the board agreed to pay a man's wages to his wife, but found that the man had gone to some other road and would not pay him.

Mr. GRAHAM. The arrangement with the union men is that when a man leaves the employ of the Intercolonial railway and takes employment somewhere else, he is not entitled to his pay.

Mr. STANFIELD. It should not be five or six weeks, though; that is the way you get your surplus.

Mr. BLAIN. How do wages on the Intercolonial railway compare with wages on other Canadian railways?

Mr. GRAHAM. They compare very favourably with the wages on other railways. The Grand Trunk pays a minimum of $1.40 per day to maintenance of way men, the Canadian Pacific railway pays $1.55, unless it was changed by the last adjustment, and the Intercolonial railway recently adjusted the wages to $1.60 per day.

Mr. BLAIN. Does that proportion apply all along the line to the different employees?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think so. We have within the last few weeks adjusted the salaries of practically all the employees on the Intercolonial railway and the adjustment is acceptable to them, but it will mean an increase of about $300,000 a year to the road.

Mr. SPROULE. Are you spending more in the betterment of the road this year than you did last?

Mr. GRAHAM. On maintenance of way we spent this year out of revenue about $260,000 more than we did last year. We expect to spend at least as much as that in the coming year, and I have a Bill before the House making it legal to take an amount of $200,000 in excess of our present taking of $300,000 out of revenue for the purchase of rolling stock.

Mr. STANFIELD. Does the minister think his traffic department is aggressive enough in looking after business? In our district we see the Canadian Pacific railway and the Grand Trunk railway travelling traffic men much oftener than we do the Intercolonial men.

Mr. GRAHAM. That should not be so. I did not know that was the case. I will bring that remark of my hon. friend to the attention of the head of our traffic department.

Mr. STANFIELD. It might be no harm to speak to him about it.

Mr. GRAHAM. He is well equipped with a good staff, and we ought to get around as well as the other railroads do.

Mr. HUGHES. Perhaps he does not do any more than draw his salary.

Mr. GRAHAM. Oh, yes he does. Of course, it is a disadvantage to us that our road ends at Montreal and we are handicapped in getting traffic for west of Montreal.

Mr. STANFIELD. The Canadian Pacific railway is now carrying freight from St. John to Halifax across the bay. I would recommend the minister to advise his men in Ontario to try and procure all the traffic they could for the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. HUGHES. In shipping freight from a point on the Intercolonial east of Moncton to Vancouver, is it delivered to the Canadian Pacific railway at St. John or Montreal?

Mr. GRAHAM. At Montreal.

Mr. STANFIELD. At. St. Rosalie?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, 40 miles east of Montreal.

Mr. SPROULE. Does your traffic manager make any special effort to induce the establishment of industries along the road? and does he confer with people along the line to that end? I remember once being on a western United States road and I found they issued a very interesting circular to all the business men along the line asking them if there was any natural resource in their locality that could be developed such as mines or quarries, or if there was any industry that might profitably be established. The traffic manager, when he got these replies, went along the road and consulted with the people. This gentleman was a Canadian whom I knew very well, and he told me that for the three years he had been with the company they succeeded in almost doubling the traffic of that road by that means. Employment was given to a great many people in this way and additional traffic came to the road. I often wonder that our Canadian railways do not do more of that kind of work. Does the Intercolonial railway follow that practice?

Mr. GRAHAM. The Intercolonial railway is supposed to do through its traffic department anything that any railway would do, but we are handicapped in this way, that some of the men connected with other roads assist with their capital in forming subsidiary companies which develop traffic along the road, and of course the government could not do that. I am glad these observations are made by hon. gentlemen, because they are helpful rather than hurtful to us, and I will make a synopsis of them and draw them at once to the attention of our traffic manager. We want to make the Intercolonial railway self-sustaining as nearly as we possibly can while at the same time we serve the public well.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like the minister to give me the rate on plain brick, cement blocks for building, and building tiles for say 100 miles, 200 miles, 300 miles, and so on in carload lots.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will wire and get my hon. friend that information.

Mr. HUGHES. The minister will find in the Manitoba 'Free Press' of March 27, page 4, a very interesting table which gives the rate on the Canadian Pacific railway and on the Great Northern in North Dakota for carload lots on these three commodities. We hear a great deal about low rates on the Intercolonial railway, and I would like to compare them with these rates.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will get that information.

Mr. DANIEL. What is the present condition of the Intercolonial railway in the matter of stone or cement culverts, steel bridges, and other details of modern construction?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think that practically all the bridges are now of modern construction, and we expect this year to have the culverts in the same condition, approximately at least; I am speaking of the main line.

Mr. DANIEL. Can the minister state whether the Canada Eastern, now a part of the Intercolonial, is paying its expenses, and doing as well as was expected when it was taken over?

Mr. GRAHAM. The accounts have not been kept separate, and therefore it is difficult to say. While the Canada Eastern as a separate line might not pay, the increased traffic which it hands over to the Intercolonial might make up the difference.

Mr. DANIEL. What is the policy of the minister with regard to taking over any of the other branches?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is a large order. The Act passed last year was a very restricted Act, and I am not sure that under it we could take over a branch line.

Mr. DANIEL. That was the object of the Act, was it not?

Mr. GRAHAM. That was not my object

Mr. HUGHES. Were there not plans to take over some of them?

Mr. GRAHAM. There were not plans for taking over any particular one. If the Intercolonial were controlled by a company, it might take over a number of these branch lines which are beneficial to the Intercolonial, even though in themselves they do not pay, in order to control the traffic. I am having a close investigation made of all the branch lines in New Brunswick and various lines in Nova Scotia, and I have had one or two reports on them, and I am quite frankly prospective of constructing some more in Nova Scotia, and also in Prince Edward Island. I am getting a report of that kind for my own digestion, and I hope to be able to say something on branch lines before the end of the session.

Mr. LENNOX. Is there any reason why the accounts of this branch line should not be kept separate? I think the understanding at the time it was taken over was that they should be kept separate, so as to test the representations made at that time.

Mr. GRAHAM. I would prefer to have the accounts kept separate, both for the good of the Intercolonial railway, and to test the branch lines. I think they add to the revenue of the Intercolonial, so that any deficit there might be in the separate branch lines would be made up by the increased traffic on the Intercolonial. It is my intention to have the accounts kept separate.

Mr. HUGHES. I see that Judge Barron has been down in the maritime provinces, and I noticed an article from him practically condemning the present management of the Intercolonial railway, and recommending that it should be handed over to the Canadian Northern. Was he inspired by the minister?

Mr. GRAHAM. Certainly he was not inspired, if he hinted that the Intercolonial railway was not well managed, and not if he hinted further that it should be given to the Canadian Northern.

Mr. STANFIELD. If it is not too great a secret, will the minister tell us what branch lines in Nova Scotia he contemplates taking over?

Mr. GRAHAM. I would not be prepared to do that.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend's predecessor on one or two occasions in the committee made the statement that the freight rates on the Intercolonial were only about 50 per cent of those of the other leading railways of Canada. How is that now?

Mr. GRAHAM. I took a great deal of pains, before I made my statement to the House this year, at the request of the leader of the opposition made last year, to have made up a comparative statement of the rates of the Canadian Pacific railway, the Grand Trunk railway, the Temiscaming and Northern Ontario, and the Canadian Northern, from five miles up to 200 or 300. That shows, generally speaking that above 15 or 20 miles the Intercolonial rates per ton per mile are much lower than those of any other road in Canada. That statement will be found in 'Hansard'.

Mr. DANIEL. Is it not a fact that the local rates on the Intercolonial are about as high as those on any other railway?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend will find the full comparison in my statement.

Mr. SPROULE. I remember some years ago seeing the rate for hauling grain 800 miles on the Intercolonial railway, and it was about the same as the Grand Trunk railway charge for hauling 200 miles.

Mr. STANFIELD. Hon. gentlemen opposite will see that there is not much in this talk of low rates if they will look into the conditions. Where there is water competition, the Intercolonial railway has to lower its rate to meet that competition, but inland the rates are higher. I can speak from personal experience as I am one of those who indirectly contribute a good deal towards the revenue of the Intercolonial railway. What we object to is having to pay such high rates on inland traffic. Take from Stellarton to Truro, Nova Scotia, some 40 miles, we have to pay 80 cents per ton on coal, whereas to Halifax, which is 60 miles further, the coal is carried at the same rate. If hon. gentlemen will take into consideration the fact that there is water competition where the rates are low, they will understand the case more readily.

Mr. BLAIN. That applies to all parts of Canada. Take my own section of country, the illustration which my hon. friend has given would apply there with equal force. But that is not the essence of the question. I am not making any complaint or any criticism, but I am simply seeking information, and I understand that the rates on the Intercolonial railway are very much lower than those on any other railway in Canada. I could cite in proof of that statement the Minister of Railways of to-day and also the Minister of Railways of many years ago.

Mr. STANFIELD. The rates have been raised since.

Mr. BLAIN. Nevertheless I understand that they are lower. The minister tells us that the Intercolonial railway pays wages equal to those paid by any other railway in Canada, but the fact remain that it does not collect anything like the rates that are collected on other lines.

Mr. GRAHAM. Take the province of New Brunswick, and compare the rates. I take this table which will be found in 'Hansard' page 5196:

	Classes.
	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10
C.P.R. 84 miles	32	28	24	20	16	14	12	13	12	10
I.C.R. 89 "	26	23	20	16	13	12	10	11	10	8
C.P.R. 137 "	40	35	30	25	20	18	15	16	16	13
I.C.R. 137 "	29	26	22	18	15	14	11	12	11	9
C.P.R. 223 "	48	42	36	30	24	22	18	19	19	16
I.C.R. 223 "	36	32	27	23	18	16	14	15	14	12

Mr. STANFIELD. Were these rates taken under similar conditions? Take from Stellarton to Halifax, a distance of 106 miles, and compare the rates on that distance with the rate on the Canadian Pacific railway where they have not such competition.

Mr. GRAHAM. I cannot take any particular locality, but these rates are taken from the tariff in the province of New Brunswick, where the conditions in the case of each railway are practically the same.

Mr. DANIEL. I notice in the Auditor General's Report, page W—22, that the locomotive power works at Moncton cost $220,905.17. What does that include?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is capital expenditure on the new shops, largely on machinery for the new locomotives and car shops. In addition we are taking an appropriation this year for the yards.

Mr. DANIEL. Are they now completely fitted up?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am informed that our new shops are practically completed, but the yards are not.

Mr. DANIEL. Is it expected that the Intercolonial railway will be able to have its locomotives made in these shops?

Mr. GRAHAM. These shops are largely for the purpose of repairing locomotives. The large number of locomotives requiring repairs keeps us busy without our constructing new ones. Of course some of the repairs are practically reconstruction. At present we have arranged to equip 50 steel frame box cars, and build 50 new cars in our shops there in addition to the repairs.

Mr. DANIEL. How much does the minister calculate it will take to complete and fit up these car works?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am informed that the present capacity of the shops is practically sufficient to keep our locomotives in repair. We shall not add any machinery at present. We will not be adding any material machinery at present.

Mr. DANIEL. What did the buildings and machinery cost?

Mr. GRAHAM. The shops, lands and machinery have cost approximately $3,000,000.

Mr. STANFIELD. Are the engines put in thorough repair at Moncton?

Mr. GRAHAM. As on other railways, there are always some engines out of commission.

Mr. HUGHES. What is the percentage?

Mr. GRAHAM. About 10 per cent.

Mr. HUGHES. That is pretty low?

Mr. STANFIELD. Have you sufficient engines at Moncton to do the work?

Mr. GRAHAM. It depends on the work. This has been a very heavy traffic year. We have bought a number this year, we purchased three a short time ago, and we intend to add more. That is why I am asking for $200,000 to remain in my hands instead of going into the revenue as part of the surplus.

Mr. HUGHES. From whom are they being ordered?

Mr. GRAHAM. There are only two firms in Canada, at Montreal and Kingston. I think this contract goes to the Kingston one.

Mr. HUGHES. Does the minister make comparisons with what outside contractors would ask?

Mr. GRAHAM. I did that once or twice, but did not make anything by it. Their prices are a little higher than the Canadian prices and I always buy in Canada where I can. I have compared the prices and I think we buy our locomotives as cheaply as any person.

Mr. STANFIELD. Last fall I happened to be travelling towards Montreal on a train to which some special cars were attached. We should have run in two sections, but they had only one engine at Moncton for that train. The minister is quite right in saying that the Intercolonial railway should have more engines.

Mr. BLAIN. How are the passenger rates on the Intercolonial railway as compared with other roads?

Mr. GRAHAM. I gave that information in my speech the other day. The comparison was as follows:

	Per pasenger per mile.
Intercolonial	1·691 cents.
Canadian Pacific	1·821 "
Grand Trunk	1·767 "
Canadian Northern	2·184 "

Our receipts per passenger per mile were thus the lowest of any railway in Canada.

Mr. DANIEL. The sleeping car rate from Montreal to St. John has been increased by 50 cents. I do not know whether there has been any conspiracy between the Intercolonial railway and the Canadian Pacific railway and the Railway Commission, but I would think that since the matter had been before the board the rates would be lower.

Mr. GRAHAM. The order of the Board of Railway Commissioners is being obeyed by the railway companies. The charge for the upper berth is lower, but the rate is based on distance.

Mr. DANIEL. On other runs the lower berth has also been reduced in price, for instance between here and Toronto there is a reduction of 50 cents on the lower berth.

Mr. HUGHES. Has the minister a statement of the number of grades on the Intercolonial railway from Montreal east that exceed four-tenths per cent per mile?

Mr. GRAHAM. I can get that profile.

Mr. HUGHES. Is the minister taking any steps to reduce the grades? It is not possible to haul freight over a one per cent grade.

Mr. GRAHAM. It would be necessary to make the Intercolonial part of a through line, as we hope to do, and reduce some of the grades, and make pusher grades where necessary. I think myself that the grades could be reduced. In some places a pusher grade would be cheaper than to reduce the grade.

Mr. DANIEL. Returning to the Pullman car rates, I think there must be some misapprehension. I have just learned from one of the British Columbia members that the rates out to the coast are really a few cents less than they were before, so it cannot be the distance. I also understand that the rates for the same mileage going west are somewhat lower than the rates coming east. Now why it should cost more to come east than it does to go west, is something that perhaps the minister can explain.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the minister considered the question of giving on that road a second-class rate, the same as they are giving on the Grand Trunk or rather a third-class rate on the Grand Trunk between Toronto and Montreal? A two cent rate has often been advocated by the hon. member for York (Mr. Maclean). I heard the minister quoting a rate per mile, which was a good deal below a two cent rate on some of the roads. It would be interesting to know how much of that is made up out of excursion rates, and how much out of regular travel.

Mr. GRAHAM. If you put on a regular two cent rate the result might be the same as it is on some of the United States railways where they have cut out all excursion rates of every class, and have gone back to the old system. We run a second class car, but not a third class. The judgment of the court I think only compelled the Grand Trunk to run a third class between Toronto and Montreal, and nowhere else, and only one train a day.

Windsor branch, $35,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is a branch over which the Dominion Atlantic railway has running rights. They give us a third of the gross proceeds. Last year we made on this branch $37,000.

Prince Edward Island railway, $450,000.

Mr. FRASER. I would like some information from the minister concerning this branch line from Harmony to Elmira, what is the amount of the contract, who are the contractors, and when they expect to finish this road? This is a branch line of about 10 miles, and they have been at work on it for three years, and it is only half done yet. I would like to ask the minister when he expects this line will be finished and running?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am not surprised at my hon. friend's complaint about the slowness of the contractors. This contract was let to the Whitehead Bros. at schedule prices. As our department figured their schedule prices, they amounted to $135,000, that was only for comparative purposes. Our estimates showed $315,000. The Whitehead Bros. took this contract and got into some difficulty. There were some claims made against them, and we held up their estimates until their claims were settled. These claims were settled. But you can understand in what position the young contractors would be in. They have been very slow, but I think they have got things straightened out. It has been suggested to me that a strong contractor is about to take hold and help them.

Mr. FRASER. What is his name?

Mr. GRAHAM. Kitchen. A good deal of the road is graded. The man who had the contract for building the station built it very rapidly, it is nearly completed. The grading is pretty well along. The rails have been ordered from the Intercolonial, we are selling them Canada Eastern rails, 56 lbs. to the yard. These rails will be shipped immediately to the branch line. They are second-hand rails, but in good condition, and were used on the Canada Eastern for heavy traffic. We are charging them $27.50 per ton, $32 is the price of new rails. We sell the old rails that are useable at $27.50 a ton We expect the road will be completed this year. The rails, I think, cost $40,000. The total cost of the road as estimated by the engineer is $315,000.

Mr. FRASER. How much has been spent on that road up to the present time?

Mr. GRAHAM. $128,000.

Mr. FRASER. The minister says it will be completed this year. Does he mean before the end of 1911?

Mr. GRAHAM. The year I have reference to was during this season, that is before the winter sets in.

Mr. FRASER. The minister says the stations are all finished along that line. I do not think that is quite correct. For one of the stations a tender was accepted, but I do not think any work has been done on it, and that is the principal station on the road, at the terminus. I understand that the contractor has no intention of accepting the contract now.

Mr. GRAHAM. We have not heard anything in the department, I am sure. I was pointing out that a good deal of work had been done on the station buildings.

Mr. HUGHES. How many stations are there on this ten-mile road?

Mr. GRAHAM. Three. The reason that I made the remark about the buildings is that the complaint is made that the stations are so far advanced and could be completed, but there was no railway for them.

Mr. FRASER. On one station no work has been done yet. Has the department paid for the stations as finished? They ought to know whether they are finished or not.

Mr. GRAHAM. We have paid accounts for buildings, I think, of about $14,000 up to date.

Mr. FRASER. I do not know now whether the department is aware that one of the stations has not been touched yet.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will make inquiry, and will let my hon. friend know privately how they stand before I ask for Supply again.

Mr. FRASER. As to the operation of this road, I wish to say that for the last few years it has not been giving the satisfaction to the public that it formerly did. Complaint is made of cheeseparing in the operation, and the trouble that the people have in getting redress of their grievances. I do not wish to find fault with the officers, but I believe if some of these things were brought to the attention of the minister they would be remedied. To the road running east from Charlottetown, there are two branches, one to the town of Souris, 60 miles, and the other to Murray harbour, a distance south of 46 miles. About the end of last December one train was taken off the Souris branch, and from that time and until now there has not been as good accommodation on the road as we had thirty years ago. All the freight and passengers have to go on one train a day from Charlottetown to Souris. Every second day they call it an express train for the carriage of passengers only. The next day it is an accommodation or mixed train. There is a certain timetable, but the freight is all left until the mixed is going through, and consequently the train comes in from an hour to two and a half hours late both ways. The road is not earning what it ought to be because any one living within fifteen or twenty miles of Charlottetown will drive rather than use the railway because of the uncertainty of the train. I have gone to a station within seventeen miles of Charlottetown and have had to wait an hour and a half for the train. One could almost drive in that time. The same may be said of the Murray harbour branch. During the winter, there is a great deal of traffic on these roads. I would suggest to the minister and his deputy, who, I understand, is willing to listen to reason and do what is right for the people, that a freight train should be put on these roads every second day—run to Murray harbour one day and to Souris the second day. This would keep the freight cleaned up, and would allow the express to carry the passengers and mail on regular time. And there would be no great expenditure involved. There would be three freight trains a week to Souris and three to Murray harbour. The effect would be to increase the revenue. Another thing in relation to this matter is one that I brought to the attention of the department when

Mr. Butler was deputy minister. The road stopped running one train right in the middle of the Christmas holidays, when students were travelling and the general movement of passengers was heavy. Many passengers went on return tickets, and, one train being taken off before they returned, they had to be satisfied with the accommodation afforded them by one freight train. Mr. Butler said he would have the matter rectified, but, in the meantime, he was transferred to other work. I did not bring the matter up again, because I thought it would be attended to. Last Christmas, the very same thing happened. At the end of December, and in the middle of the holidays this train was taken off. Had the train been run, let us say, until the 12th of January to accommodate the Christmas travel—students home for the holidays and others—it would not have been so unreasonable. If the department can put this freight train on three days a week in each place, and occupy the time of the crew I do not think it would be very much extra expense, and it would give a great deal of satisfaction to the people. This matter has been brought before the superintendent time and again by different persons, but I regret he has not seen fit to make a recommendation to the department. There are several other complaints I might make against the superintendent, but I do not wish to find fault with him in his absence. I may state that the management of the road at present is not satisfactory to the people, and I think there are other members from the island present to-night who can say the same thing.

Mr. GRAHAM. Some suggestion was made as to the autumn time-table, and the board has that under consideration. Mr. Campbell, the chairman of the board, drew my attention to the matter yesterday, but I was very busy, and had not time to discuss it with him. We will take these representations of my hon. friend and see if we cannot work out something a little more satisfactory to the people of the island. I may say to the House, and to the country, for that matter, that I have a great deal of sympathy with the situation of Prince Edward Island, and I never made any pretense to make the Prince Edward Island railway pay. Last year the deficit was $108,000 and this year it will be $85,000. The conditions are such there that the railway cannot pay, but I, nevertheless think it is the duty of the Dominion of Canada to give fair transportation for the products of the people of Prince Edward Island without regard to the fact that there must be an annual deficit in the operation of that road.

Mr. FRASER. Does the Act passed last year to provide for the adjudication of small claims against the government railways, include claims arising on the Prince Edward Island railway?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. FRASER. During the last few years especially, the people have found a great deal of difficulty in getting these claims adjusted. I can tell the minister that in some places the railway fences have been allowed to tumble down, and animals have been killed, and the owners consider it waste of time and money to attempt to get compensation.

Mr. GRAHAM. That Act applies to the Prince Edward Island railway, and the general Railway Act applying to other railways has been changed to apply to the Intercolonial railway so far as damages are concerned. These small cases can be tried in the local courts of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. FRASER. The Act does not say the Prince Edward Island railway.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is called the government railway.

Mr. FRASER. Yes, but it refers to the Intercolonial railway all through the Act, although it says 'government owned railways.'

Mr. GRAHAM. It is intended to apply to the Prince Edward Island railway.

Mr. STANFIELD. A good many shippers lost considerably by the fire which took place in the freight shed at Truro last Thursday. Will the minister issue orders to have all just claims settled immediately?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think the agent is down there now.

Mr. STANFIELD. I know, but is he empowered to settle at once?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, and the new member of the board will assist. I do not think there will be any trouble in getting settlements promptly made.

Mr. LENNOX. Before you come to the item for the National Transcontinental railway I would like the returns all completed, especially that one with reference to the itemized expenditures, and estimates of further expenditures on contract No. 21. The minister sent one of his officials round to see me in reference to it, and I think it is under way.

Mr. GRAHAM. Will the hon. gentleman give me a memorandum?

Mr. LENNOX. I shall, to-morrow.

Chambly canal—bridge between Iberville and St. John's, $40,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. The bridge is being constructed over the river and the canal, and we have come to an arrangement by which we are combining in the construction, and our share will be four-tenths of the cost amounting to about $52,000.

Mr. HUGHES. Who pays the other share?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think the town and the provincial legislature.

Mr. DANIEL. What is supposed to be the entire cost of the bridge?

Mr. GRAHAM. $130,000. On account of the improvements made there by the government, it has to be a more expensive bridge than would otherwise have been the case. Our engineers went into the matter and reported that four-tenths would be our fair share of the cost.

Chambly canal—new machinery, $31,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. We have completed the power house, and this is to install the new machinery to light the canal by electricity.

Mr. HUGHES. Why don't you do that on the Trent canal?

Mr. GRAHAM. We will eventually.

Mr. HUGHES. I want it now.

Mr. SPROULE. Does this machinery belong to the government?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. STANFIELD. How do you get the power—by steam or water?

Mr. GRAHAM. By power from the dam.

Mr. HUGHES. Is there reciprocity in canal traffic? Do we allow the Yankee boats, when laden, to come through our canal to Montreal, and why does the minister not see that our boats are allowed to go through their canal to Albany?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think they do.

Mr. HUGHES. I have a memorandum from the Minister of Customs stating that it is not so.

Mr. GRAHAM. The hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) last year brought up the matter in the House, and I wrote to Albany and was informed in reply that Canadian boats had not been charged in recent years if they went through the canal.

Mr. HUGHES. It is not a question of charges. They are not allowed to go any further than Whitehall. The minister might look into that matter.

Mr. DANIEL. I think what turned out to be the case was that the American Canal was so small that the Canadian barges could not go through.

Lachine canal—concrete vertical wall, $250,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. This work has been going on for some years. It is to provide against leaks.

Mr. HUGHES. What is the present bank?

Mr. GRAHAM. A kind of riprap.

Mr. HUGHES. Is not some of it timbered?

Mr. GRAHAM. I suppose there is some crib work. After full consideration, we came to the conclusion that we would have to build concrete walls to protect the banks.

Mr. BOYCE. Are you going to concrete the Sault Ste. Marie canal?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not think it is necessary there.

Mr. HUGHES. Where is this work on the Lachine canal going on?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is practically in Montreal. It was completed last year up to about the car works, and the work is now going on from there west.

Mr. SPROULE. How much is it proposed to do of this the present year?

Mr. GRAHAM. This is to build a wall on the south side of the canal. It will cost approximately $350,000 and the amount required this year is $250,000. This concrete wall is to be similar to that already constructed on the north side. The foundation of this vertical wall is on a sloping underneath.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the minister advised that that will be a permanent and safe structure—a vertical wall on top of a sloping wall?

Mr. GRAHAM. The engineers say there is no doubt it will.

Mr. LENNOX. I would think that very doubtful.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the foundation for the sloping wall, stone or clay?

Mr. GRAHAM. The engineers' report that they have a good solid foundation. In some places the foundation will be rock and in others probably hard pan.

Mr. SPROULE. What are the dimensions of this sloping wall?

Mr. GRAHAM. Two feet thick at the bottom and about 18 inches at the top.

Mr. HUGHES. When was that built?

Mr. GRAHAM. Some five or six years ago.

Mr. LENNOX. What is the width of the vertical wall?

Mr. GRAHAM. About 18 inches. The bank will be filled in up to this wall, and thus have greater strength.

New tug $6,000.

Mr. LENNOX. Is this the total cost?

Mr. GRAHAM. This is not ordered yet. We hire one now, for which we are paying $15 per day.

Towards completion of wharfs and basins, Lachine, $35,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. This will complete the wharf and basins on the north side of the Lachine. This is an old work.

Mr. HUGHES. What is the nature of the work?

Mr. GRAHAM. Dredging and completion of the wharf. The items are: Land, $75,000, earth excavation $37,500; covering old stone wall, concrete, iron posts, life ladders, diversion of a river and engineering expenses. The estimate was $318,000. This $35,000 is expected to complete it.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. In Supply we will continue the estimates of the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. HUGHES. When is the reciprocity debate coming on again?

Mr. FIELDING. In good time.

Mr. HUGHES. Is it true the government has withdrawn it?

Mr. FIELDING. I have not heard of that.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.49 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, March 30, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE—MR. BOYCE.

On the order of the day being called:

Mr. A. C. BOYCE (West Algoma). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. A few days ago I called to the attention of the Minister of Labour (Mr. King), as I thought in a reasonable and moderate manner, an incipient labour excitement at Sault Ste. Marie. I explained to the hon. gentleman fully the circumstances and quoted certain newspapers and reminded him of what had been promised by his predecessor in office from his place in the House with regard to similar conditions about three years ago. The hon. gentleman (Mr. King) himself at the time, I think, did not accuse me of having in any way violated the rules of parliamentary etiquette, or of having gone beyond what might be done by public men in a representative capacity. In the issue of the 'Sault Express', published at Sault Ste. Marie, March 24th instant, and edited by a gentleman who has occupied more or less a notorious position in this country, Mr. C. N. Smith, I find the following article:

MR. BOYCE TO BLAME.

In the House of Commons last Friday Mr. Boyce, the celebrated muckraker from this constituency, endeavoured to place upon the shoulders of the Labour Department responsibility for the labour difficulties at the steel plant, and the 'Express' has taken the trouble to make some inquiries regarding the phase of the subject to which the member refers, with the result that we find Mr. Boyce himself and his political friends in the Soo and in Toronto are the real culprits. An interview with Mr. Armstrong, the senior immigration inspector at this point, throws a new light on this subject which will be of general interest to the workmen directly concerned. In speaking of the importation of so many aliens who have come in and crowded Canadian workmen out of their employment, Mr. Armstrong stated that in every instance he had insisted upon the requirements of his department being complied with, but he pointed out that the immigration inspectors had no authority to enforce the Alien Labour law. The enforcement of that law, he said, was in the hands of the provincial authorities whose consent had to be obtained before a prosecution could be effective. Mr. Armstrong was asked if he had ever made an effort to get consent to prosecute under the law from the provincial authorities, and his reply was: 'Yes, I have much evidence of violations of the labour law at this port, and so far the Attorney General has not granted the consent asked for.'

What reason could there be for refusing to grant your request?

'I attribute it to the utter lack of interest in the workingmen's cause on the part of our local member in Toronto, who does not seem to have any sympathy at all for the cause of the poor man. One word from Mr. Hearst and the Alien Labour law would have been put into operation long ago,' replied the inspector. 'And the present trouble at the steel plant would have been avoided.'

Under the circumstances, were you surprised at the attack which Mr. Boyce made upon the Dominion government the other day in this connection? was asked.

Inspector Armstrong's reply was: 'Yes, I was very much surprised, because what I know makes it clear that Mr. Boyce was trying to deceive the public, pure and simple. But in this case he is caught right in the act, for let me tell you that it was right in Mr. Boyce's law office where the legal application was made to the district judge to whom I had been referred by the Attorney General when asking for consent to prosecute under the Alien Labour law. That application was refused, and Mr. Boyce knows it. If the workmen want to know who are directly responsible for their troubles all they have to do is look in the direction of the two members of this riding at Ottawa and Toronto and they will find out. And I think by this time the men concerned know this as well as I do.'

As to the first part, that 'Mr. Boyce, the celebrated muckraker from this constituency' having made certain attacks upon the government, I am not here to vindicate myself against such a charge from such a quarter. Considering that the man who makes it was the hero of the 'Minnie M.' expedition in 1903, and a gentleman whom, I believe, my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has specially endeavoured to persuade to become a candidate in West Algoma at the next election—(I do not want to put that into the mouth of my hon. friend, but the gentleman himself advertises it as a fact)— I believe that I could not have a better testimonial of efficiency in the representation of the interests of my constituents than in such a phrase coming from a gentleman with the notorious reputation which this gentleman bears. But it is a pity that where one does endeavour to do his public duty in the way which honestly seems best to himself, and in what I consider a moderate manner—though possibly, at times a forcible manner—appeals such as this are to be directed against a public man absolutely without ground, as the Minister of Labour, I am sure, in this instance, will testify. But let that go for what it is worth. My shoulders are strong enough to bear it. I am quite willing to take knocks; —I give them sometimes, but I endeavour to give them, as well as I can and according to the breeding I have had, in as gentlemanly a way as possible, having regard to the feelings of those involved. But, with regard to the interview with this immigration officer, I desire to have the attention of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) for a moment. Since when has it been proper or seemly for an officer of this government to engage in political discussion and to give interviews saddling responsibility for grievances such as the importation of labour from abroad upon the members of parliament absolutely without cause and in the most ridiculous manner as in this case?

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyce) is speaking to a question of privilege as I understand. In that case, he must confine himself to the question of privilege.

Mr. BOYCE. I am confining myself to the fact that I have been absolutely misrepresented. This interview states that the member for West Algoma is responsible for deceiving this House. I resent that, and I ask the Minister of the Interior to look into the facts and ascertain whether such an interview has been had with the senior immigration agent, and if so to tell the House whether such an officer should be permitted to give interviews criticising members absolutely without justification.

UNITED STATES WARSHIPS ON THE GREAT LAKES.

On the order of the day being called:

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Some days ago I called attention to a newspaper report alluding to the nine war vessels of the United States now located at various places on the Great Lakes. The Prime Minister seemed to be uncertain at that time as to whether or not these vessels were armed. I should certainly infer from the description contained in this report that they are armed. I wish to inquire whether the government has any information in its possession on that point and if so, what is the armament of each of these vessels. If the government have not that information will they procure it? It seems to be information that should be in the possession of the House and of the country.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. These vessels were passed through the canals from the ocean on the application of the American government to be used as training ships, that was the official information that we had. As to their subsequently becoming training ships or not I think we have some confidential information; I am not sure that we have anything else on the subject.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I asked the question because I did not very well understand how these vessels could undertake and be engaged in a peaceful bombardment of the city of Chicago unless they were armed in some way. I think that very circumstance would indicate that they are armed vessels to all intents and purposes.

COAL STRIKES IN NOVA SCOTIA AND BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Might I ask the Minister of Labour as to the present situation at Springhill with regard to the strike which has been continuing there for a very long time. I have not brought to the House a great many communications I have received on the subject, but I would be glad if the Minister of Labour would give a brief statement of the actual conditions and how long that strike has been in progress. I have refrained from bringing these communications to the attention of the minister or of the House for the reason that it did not seem to me that any good object could be served by doing so, but they are becoming somewhat pressing and insistent and I would like to have a brief statement on the subject.

Hon. MACKENZIE KING (Minister of Labour). Speaking from memory, I think the strike at Springhill has been on for something like 16 or 18 months, over a year and a half. Before the strike took place the whole subject was fully investigated, first of all by a board under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, and later by the Deputy Minister of Labour. The board, I think, were unanimous, in the statement that the conditions did not seem to be such as would justify a strike. The circumstances at Springhill were of a nature which would not admit of the company granting the concessions asked by the men and the board expressed the hope that under the circumstances the miners would see the wisdom of not pressing their demands, and of continuing at work. However, they did not accept the finding and they were then at liberty to strike. When the Deputy Minister of Labour investigated the conditions generally he made a similar report saying that from full and careful investigation, if the demands of the men were persisted in, he could not see that there could be anything other than a fight of great length between the parties. I think the main difference is the question of the recognition of the union. The company took the position that they wished to be at liberty to employ any one they desired, whether he was a member of a particular union or not. The men out on strike belonged to an organization and insisted that this organization should be recognized. The company owning the mines is not willing to recognize the organization, and the men say they will not go back to work until the organization is recognized. I do not know any power that can settle a difference of that kind except by one party or the other changing its position. The position has been frankly stated to the parties, they have known it for a year and a half, and notwithstanding that the personnel of the management has changed recently, and a secondary grievance ended in this way, the trouble has continued; the new manager has made his position plain, that the company does not see its way to any change. I am afraid that as long as the present attitude is maintained by each of the parties the present struggle will continue.

Mr. HERRON. Have there been any later developments in the situation in southern Alberta and British Columbia?

Mr. KING. As I mentioned when the subject was brought up the other day the operators and miners had a conference at Calgary to see if it was possible to reach a new agreement. The agreement which they have been working under terminates on Friday of this week. The result of that conference unfortunately was not what the country generally hoped it might have been. The parties were unable to reach an agreement. Then a meeting was held yesterday at Fernie to receive the report of the committee that went to attend this conference. Knowing that this meeting was about to take place I sent the following telegram to the president, the vice-president and the secretary of the district union of the United Mine Workers, thinking it desirable that the country generally should know exactly the position in British Columbia and Alberta and that the parties should be in full possession of the facts:

(Telegram)

Ottawa, March 29, 1911.

W. B. Powell,
President District Union,
United Mine Works of America,
Fernie, B. C.

Am informed there is a possibility of a strike taking place in consequence of dispute between operators and miners in Southern British Columbia and Alberta, without said dispute being referred in first instance under provisions of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, which applies to mines, and that this course may be taken with the knowledge and sanction of the officers of the unions to which the miners concerned belong.

As the matter has already been made the subject of a question in parliament and is likely to be further discussed at any moment, will you kindly telegraph me at your earliest convenience for the information of the government, if this report is or is not correct; also whether as one of the officers of the District union you are prepared to do all in your power to secure a compliance with existing laws on the part of those whom you represent.

The government is prepared to do all in its power to secure to the miners of British Columbia and Alberta fair play and justice in the consideration of any of their demands, and to facilitate in every way possible the means necessary to this end, and in the public interest, not less than the interest of the miners, it is hoped that those in positions of responsibility and authority will co-operate with the government in its endeavour to prevent any step being taken which might prove of serious injury to the general public as well as prejudicially affect the cause of either of the parties.

I understand a mass meeting of the miners is to be held at Fernie this afternoon to receive the report of delegates to the Calgary conference and that there is a possibility of this meeting declaring for a strike. Should such prove to be the case, I much hope that with the assurance given that everything possible to expedite the inquiry required by the Act will be done, the meeting will agree to defer this step until it is seen if some settlement of the difference cannot yet be effected by legislation which parliament has enacted with the express purpose of aiding in the furtherance of industrial peace.

(Sgd) W. L. MACKENZIE KING,
Minister of Labour.

This telegram was also sent to C. Stubbs, vice-president district union, United Mine Workers of America, Fernie, and A. J. Carter, Secretary district union United Mine Workers of America, Fernie, B.C.

Mr. HERRON. May I ask the hon. minister if he has a reply to that telegram?

Mr. KING. I received last night a reply from Mr. Carter, secretary of the district union, who was at Fernie. The reply was simply an acknowledgment but he stated that he would send further information this morning. Up to the present time I have not received further reply. The other two officers did not reply and I have asked the Canadian Pacific Railway Telegraph Company to find out if my message has been delivered to them. I received a wire saying that my message had reached Mr. Stubbs, vice-president, at Michel this morning, but that Mr. Powell had not as yet been located. I expect that probably some time during the day I will get a further reply from these officers. I might say that the Department of Labour has one of its officers out in the Crowsnest Pass at the present time with the object of endeavouring to point out to those concerned the advisability of having this dispute referred to a board of investigation, and of being on hand to expedite matters and to lend the good offices of the government in any way which may be possible. We are doing whatever we can but I must confess that I regard the whole matter as being in a very critical position at the present moment.

Mr. BOYCE. May I ask the Minister of Labour if he has any new information with reference to the little labour trouble up at Sault Ste. Marie, and whether he will bring down the correspondence with reference to it and lay it on the table.

Mr. KING. I shall certainly be pleased to bring the correspondence down.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Mr. Speaker, I presume the minister is aware that two years ago we had a strike in British Columbia, in the same district, that is affected by this threatened strike. That an agreement was made then for two years, and that the strike commenced then in March and continued until July. Is the minister aware that at that time the leading men amongst the strikers published a statement in the papers defying the Labour Department and the Hon. Mr. Lemieux to interfere with them in their strike? I could give the Minister of Labour the statement published over the signatures of these gentlemen at that time. The strike was carried on until a settlement was arranged, I was interested in a mine in that district at that time, I was on the ground, I read that statement in the papers defying the government and the Department of Labour and I sent the papers to the minister.

Mr. KING. I think I remember the correspondence to which my hon. friend refers. If I recall the matter correctly the mine with which the hon. gentleman was connected was the Hillcrest mine.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Yes.

Mr. KING. Some time ago the company locked out the men, the men brought an action against the company under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, and the company was fined for having locked them out in violation of the provisions of that Act. I mention that incident to show that the provisions of the Act respecting penalties for non-compliance with the Act have been tested and found effective when applied to a company. Now, the law is on the statute-book and it is open to the company with which my hon. friend is connected, or to any person who believes that his interests are going to be prejudicially affected, to take similar action.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I am not now connected with that mine and I never heard of a lockout. It may have happened under the new company that is in charge of the mine.

Mr. KING. It was the Hillcrest Company and I can assure my hon. friend that the facts as stated are correct. Should there be any violation of the Act in this particular instance the same means of redress would be open to the parties affected as were open at that time.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). If there is a strike, is it the intention of the government to enforce the law, as my hon. friend has read it, against the strikers?

Mr. KING. The law is there and any citizen of the Dominion who wishes to lay information may do so.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). What is the Department of Labour for but to enforce the law? They would not enforce it when the strike was on two years ago and the strikers defied them to do it.

Mr. BLAIN. Listening to the answers given by the hon. Minister of Labour about strikes in different parts of Canada, we learn that the conflict is between organized and free labour. May I ask my hon. friend if the policy of his department is to favour organized or free labour?

Mr. KING. I would answer the hon. gentleman by saying that the policy of the department in that particular is the same as the policy of every other department of the government—to watch the general interests of the public and not to take sides with one or the other.

Mr. BLAIN. No policy there at all.

Mr. KING. I think I have indicated the policy.

SUPPLY—HEALTH CONDITIONS IN CITY OF OTTAWA.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. E. N. LEWIS (West Huron). Mr. Speaker, I desire to move an amendment to the motion to go into Supply on a matter which is of vital interest to this House and the country. I do so entirely of my own motion, because I have thought over this question with considerable anxiety for some time and I would not have brought it to the attention of the House did I not consider it in the interest of the people of the country that I should do so, and that I would not be doing my duty if I did not do so. Before presenting the motion I wish to make a few remarks and especially to draw the attention of the government and the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), to certain facts bearing out and supporting the amendment which I desire to lay before the House. Many members agree with my motion although they may not say so. The credit of any town or municipality is founded upon the character of the citizens which inhabit that town and of the buildings which are located within its bounds. The credit of any country is based upon the character of the people living within its borders and of its cities and towns and other municipalities. But, the capital of any country is in an entirely different position from that occupied by an ordinary city or town. While the honour of this House is largely in the hands of the government and of the opposition the credit of the capital of the country is, to a far greater extent than that of other cities or towns, in the hands of the government and especially of the Prime Minister. If hon. members will look into the tomes that are in the library of parliament, if they will turn up the records of the British War Office, that office which had stations in every section of the world they will find that Gibraltar occupies the proud distinction of being the healthiest station of any possessed by the mother country and that second to the fortress of Gibraltar in that respect is the city of Ottawa, the capital of the Dominion of Canada, second to only one in the whole world. I do not desire to besmirch the character of Ottawa, but I ask the government and the Prime Minister to take careful note of what I am going to say. Whether it is that we have here two overgrown villages belonging to people speaking different languages, or, that the city is still a lumber town except for the government part of it, whether it is because of the authority which directs the affairs of the capital is divided, different powers being exercised by the municipal body and by the Ottawa Improvement Commission, I cannot say, but I do assert without fear of contradiction that the administration of this city is a municipal hodge-podge.

I say without fear of contradiction that the administration of this city is nothing but a municipal hodge-podge, in fact there is no valid administration at all. I desire to call attention to the statutes of the province of Ontario which have been in vogue during the last twenty years, and in chapter 223, section 541, &c., of the Municipal Statutes, are set out some of the duties of municipal officers. I do not know whether the municipal officers in this city are appointed as they should be under this municipal law, but there is hardly an officer who is carrying out the duties which are carried out in any small town of four or five thousand inhabitants in Canada. Take, for instance, the construction of public buildings, a matter which has been called to our attention by the terrible holocaust which took place in New York city the other day. There are public buildings in this city which are absolutely unsafe. There is sitting before me in this House a gentleman who left a public place of amusement in this city the other night because he was afraid something would happen. Every seat was occupied and the aisles all crowded, there were only two small doors of egress possible. Now in section 541 of the Municipal Act of Ontario it is laid down that the police officer, or some inspector, shall see that no place of public entertainment, church, or amusement hall shall be constructed without the doors opening outwards, and in certain ways, and that the aisles are free. That is not carried out in this city. As to fire escapes, I know there are public buildings in this city four or five stories high which have not even an ordinary rope for the purpose of a fire escape. There is no inspector of buildings looking after this matter as he should. Within five hundred yards of this parliament House there are buildings put up within the last few years, to my own knowledge, which are stored with inflammable material, and which cannot be described as anything less than fire traps, wood, covered with tin and others of wood alone. Across the Rideau canal I have seen myself numbers of buildings being put up in a congested street, frame brick veneer which are absolutely fire traps. No town of the size of Ottawa should allow such things. It is something disgraceful that in a city of this size a sewerage system should be allowed to exist such as we know exists in Ottawa. There are outside closets in use which no other town in Canada of four or five thousand would allow to exist. Worse that that. We read that a man living on Douglas Avenue was fined $10 for having filthy conditions in his premises without any closet at all. That item is going the rounds of the press, and it is a disgrace to Ottawa and to Canada. While Sparks street is a white way, Queen is a dark way, and dangerous, not a light between Elgin and Metcalf. I do not single out any particular person as being to blame, I only say that it is all part of gross mismanagement or rather it shows no management at all. Perhaps it is owing to divided responsibility. The First Minister is trying to make of Ottawa the Washington of the north, and he deserves credit for it. At the present time we may look forward to a great influx of visitors during the coming year. When these visitors have come and have looked over our city, we want them to go away with a green memory of the city of Ottawa and not a gangrene memory.

Now with regard to the typhoid epidemic in Ottawa, I want to bring also to the notice of the government the fact that there is a public institution in this city, in which there are eighty persons, which has been quarantined for small-pox. A small-pox hospital has been established on an Island called Porter's Island, and after the patients were taken there they were allowed to be interviewed and visited by other people of this city, thus offering more opportunities for contagion and spreading the disease than they would have offered if they had remained in their own homes. I say the time has come when the government should take charge of this city. The fever epidemic started over three months ago, and there is no question now where it arose. We know now that the intake pipe of the city of Hull has its mouth almost opposite the place where the intake pipe of the city of Ottawa is placed, and that Hull has had no typhoid epidemic. There is no doubt in the world that the typhoid epidemic started through the opening of a valve of that intake pipe. I have been there personally and examined the situation, and I leave it to any hon. gentleman to say if the difficulty has not arisen where that valve was opened. It is on the bottom of the bed of a shallow bay of the river in absolutely dead water, no current whatsoever. If the corporation had tried for ten years they could not have found a place better fitted, owing to the stagnant and filthy water there, to originate a typhoid epidemic. If proper precautions had been taken to sterilize that water no doubt the epidemic could have been prevented. Why, we know that for two months after the epidemic began the sewers were not flushed until last week. I say this shows great neglect on the part of the corporation. When the warm weather comes, and the flies begin to travel, and the water gets low, there will be still more liability to an epidemic. I had forgotten to state that there are meat shops in this city where meat absolutely uneatable is offered for sale. These should be looked after. The people of Ottawa are in great danger still. The members of this House are in great danger. I see before me in this House men so eminent that it would be a great loss to this country if they were removed. I see before me men who have suffered sickness from this cause. There is hardly a man in this house who has not had trouble one way or another, either personally or through relatives or friends, from this epidemic. I say, therefore, that it is the duty of the government to prorogue this House until this epidemic of sickness has abated. While it might be somewhat expensive to prorogue temporarily, I think it would be justifiable owing to the mismanagement of the city of Ottawa that Ottawa should pay the extra expense thus incurred, that the amount we pay to this city ought to be diminished until conditions are improved. I, therefore, beg to move that:

That owing to the epidemic of typhoid fever and the frequency of small-pox and other contagious diseases now prevalent in Ottawa, this parliament should immediately after voting enough supply to carry on the government, prorogue and that the government call a special session in the early fall to close up this session's unfinished business providing said sickness has abated.

I make this motion in all earnestness. The condition of affairs is more serious than my forensic powers enable me to portray. And I call upon the medical men in this House to support my motion, and to say if it is not true that after warm weather comes and the rivers are open the condition will be worse than it is to-day.

Mr. SPEAKER. Moved by Mr. Lewis, seconded by Mr. Daniel—

Mr. DANIEL. No. While I am agreeable to some parts of that motion, I cannot agree with all of it.

Mr. SPEAKER. I shall have to declare the amendment lost for want of a seconder. Lost.

Amendment negatived.

TRADE WITH THE WEST INDIES.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House and of the government for a short time to the trade situation between Canada and the West India Islands. Not very long ago a Royal Commission was appointed, consisting of the Right Hon. Lord Balfour, of Burleigh, Sir John Poynder Dixon-Poynder, and Sir Edwin Morris, K. C.M.G., on behalf of Great Britain, and the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs of Canada, on behalf of this country, the duties of which were to inquire into the conditions of trade and communication between Canada and the West Indies, and to suggest means for their improvement. That commission commenced its work in the city of Ottawa, and spent some time in different cities in Canada, afterwards went to the West Indies, where it travelled through all the large groups of islands and held meetings for investigation and the taking of evidence, and then adjourned to London, where it finally prepared its report. This report was given in on the 19th of August of last year. As presented to the British parliament, it is in two parts—one, the report of the commission, and the other, the report of evidence with certain statistical tables. I am not aware that any report has been issued by the Dominion government. If I am wrong in that, the Finance Minister can set me right.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the official report was laid on the table by the Minister of Customs at an early stage of the session, and we obtained a supply of copies which were accessible to any hon. member who wished them.

Mr. FOSTER. The British report?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. It may be useful to make a very short historical review of the subject. This commission had its initiative from Canada, and not from the British government. An order in council was passed on a report of the Finance Minister, in which, after the recitation of certain conditions that existed and certain things that had been done, it was suggested as advisable, in order to facilitate arrangements for more extended and better trade relations between the two countries, that it would be well to enlist the co-operation of the British government, and it was upon the adoption of that report, which was responded to at once by the British government, that we had the Joint Commission. I have no hesitation in saying that it was a wise thing to have that Joint Commission, and to enlist the co-operation of the British government in its purpose. For a great many years, of course, better trade relations with the British West India Islands have been a topic of discussion in this parliament, and there have been several tentative endeavours of more or less importance to bring them about, but up to that time these endeavours had not proved successful, for various reasons. In 1890 I had the pleasure myself of making a short tour through the West Indies, and of conversing with business men and with officials of the different islands; and whilst I found, what has always been found there, I think, a favourable and friendly feeling towards this country, the conditions were such as to make it seem to the people there inadvisable to undertake any preferential or treaty relations with the Dominion of Canada. In 1898 the Dominion of Canada extended the preference to the West India Islands, giving them, I think, a preference of 25 per cent upon their exports to this country. That was given without any compensation on their part. It was given by way of good-will and friendliness, and was given at a time when the fortunes of the West Indies were not looking particularly bright. I have never heard in this House, from either side of it, any dissent from that act of good-will and neighbourliness to the West Indies from ourselves. But eleven years after that uncompensated preference had been granted, the Dominion government, I think, felt that the time had come when there ought to be more equitable relations between the West Indies and ourselves, and when we might very well look for a compensation from the West India Islands for the preference in our markets. That, I imagine, was the prime motive which actuated the government in the appointment of this commission. Well, the commission came to its conclusions, and we now have before us what I must say is a very full and at the same time not overloaded report, in which all the members of the commission agree, which is very explicit in its recommendations, and which is very friendly towards the extension of preferential relations between the West Indies and Canada.

Now, it is well to have in mind the changes which have taken place in the situation between, we will say 1897, and the later periods. There were previously two obstacles to making preferential arrangements with the West India Islands: first, that they had had long and comparatively easy access to the United States markets, which had absorbed a very large proportion of their products, and secondly, that in regard to their chief product, sugar, the Dominion of Canada was not in a position if it gave the whole of its market to the West Indies, to take more than a fractional part of their whole sugar product. They, therefore, naturally hesitated to make preferential relations which would be operative against the United States market, when the consumptive demand in this country was not sufficient to take more than a comparatively small share of their chief product. The first preference given by the Minister of Finance had not very much effect for a number of years, and there were many reasons why it did not. Chief among these was the countervailing duty which the United States placed upon the importations of beet root sugar from Germany, which practically nullified the attraction of the preferential reduction made by Canada in favour of sugar from the West Indies. So long as that countervailing duty existed there was, therefore, very little effect in the way of diverting sugar from its old channels to Canada.

But several occurrences took place. The Brussels convention resultled in a reduction of the bounties in continental Europe. That removed at once a great handicap from the shoulders of the sugar producers in the West Indies. It also completely nullified the countervailing duty which had existed in the United States, so that the results of the sugar convention in 1903, or thereabouts effectually changed the conditions of things and made the situation very different. In the next place the German surtax was imposed in 1903, and that operated very powerfully in making the Canadian a favoured market for the West Indies. What was also a very large item in the factors that changed the situation was the fact that the consumption in Canada was rapidly overcoming production in the West India islands.

Then again the difficulty which took place between the United States and Spain resulted in sugar from the Philippines and Porto Rico and Cuba getting free or favoured entrance into the American market. All those four factors had the effect of almost absolutely changing the situation, and these factors, aided by the preference given by Canada, operated to turn the sugar trade almost completely towards Canada. As an evidence of this, while in 1897 only 11,000 tons of West Indies raw sugar came into Canada, in 1909 that quantity had increased to 133,000 tons. If we take British Guiana alone, the production of raw sugar in 1900 went to the United States to the extent of £782,500, and only £3,860 to Canada. In 1908 the export to the United States was nil, and to Canada £858,800. In 1909 there seems to have been some change, but even then the product of Guiana went to the United States to the amount of £268,960, and to Canada £756,306 in value. If you take the average of five years, it will be found that the West Indies exports of raw sugar averaged 198,300 tons; and the imports into Canada, deducting what came in at Vancouver, and a small quantity which was let in at a preference for the refiners, had increased to 151,410 tons. Thus our imports had mounted up very considerably towards an equality with the production in the West Indies, and if these arrangements which the Finance Minister made with the sugar refiners in this country were counted out, that would bring our market up from 151,410 tons to about 190,000 or, 195,000 tons, which shows that our market requirements for raw sugar are at the present time equal to the whole production of raw sugars in the British West Indies.

Any one can easily see what an important effect that had upon the whole situation and how much easier it makes the effecting of preferential arrangements between that country and our own. The disposition of the people of the West India islands is shown strongly in that matter. We know that in 1908 there was a convention at Barbados to which we sent two delegates, and the West Indian convention, at that time, through its delegate, passed a resolution in favour of preferential arrangements with the Dominion. And shortly afterwards the legislature of Barbados passed resolutions authorizing preferential arrangements on certain conditions with this country. From that time up to this, tentative efforts have ben made by other West India colonies, looking to the same end. Probaly one of the most significant of those is that which has lately been made by the legislature of the Bahamas. So strong is the favourable sentiment there that they passed a resolution advising the undertaking of negotiations with Canada, either for preferential arrangements, or for annexation to this country. I cite these facts as undoubted proof of the improved situation and the improved sentiment in the West Indian islands with reference to this matter.

Now there have been two flies in the ointment, or possibly one of double dimensions, which has made a little difficulty. That was the arrangement made, in consequence of a dispute between the refiners of Canada and the planters of the West Indies as to who were getting the best share of the preference. The Finance Minister introduced legislation by which a certain percentage of the foreign sugars—one-fifth I think it was of the amount refined in this country—should be allowed in under the conditions of the British preference. Another derangement was the concession made to the manufacturers of sugar from the beet in this country, by which they were allowed to bring in two tons of foreign sugar under British preference rates for every ton of Canadian beet root sugar they refined. Now, the dispute between the refiners and the planters and the government, and the method by which it is attempted to arrange that dispute has introduced into the situation an element of some difficulty, but not one which it is impossible to overcome.

The opinion of the commission is very decided in that respect, and they point out means by which they think it can be overcome, and to which I will refer later. The commission is of opinion that, whilst there are difficulties in the way, they are not insuperable, but can be overcome by conference, and they lay down certain lines upon which they think they could be fairly easily overcome. One difficulty that arises is that these several groups of islands, or, in some cases, single islands, have different tariffs, and it seems impossible, stretched as they are over such a wide extent and with their different sectional and revenue necessities, for all to come together and agree upon a uniform tariff. The commission unanimously propose that, instead of attempting the impossible, the principle be laid down that, on a selected list of articles, the exports from Canada—or, if you put it that way, the imports into these islands—shall be brought under the plan of allowing a preference to Canada of 20 per cent upon whatever duties are deemed necessary upon imports into their several islands—and the same, of course to Great Britain, for Great Britain follows in this arrangement in the line of concessions they would make to Canada;—and further that they be allowed to make that preference either by adding to the imports from other countries or by reducing the duties on goods from Canada, or by combining these two. That gives a great deal of freedom and makes it comparatively easy to come to an arrangement. It is the opinion of the commission that a twenty per cent preference given by the West India Islands could be brought about, and it would be a preference to be given in compensation for a preference from Canada. But they also say that, uncertainty and indefiniteness arises out of the breach which is made every year in the preference as granted by Canada of allowing a percentage of foreign raw sugar to be imported at a lower rate or under the preference, and, unless that could be eliminated, it will be difficult to bring about the desired end; and the suggestion is made, based upon evidence gathered in the West India Islands themselves, that they would be satisfied with a preference of 15 per cent as compared with the present 25 per cent, provided they had the assurance of permanence and knew that it would not be broken in upon by the arrangement that at present exists for the refiners. This is the conclusion, the unanimous conclusion, I take it, of the commission.

Then, in reference to the Canadian side, there is to be either a free list as compared with duties charged when imported from other countries, or a reduction upon the import duties upon dutiable goods. And the commission suggest that, in view of the fact of the diversity of opinion and the difficulty of getting all these colonies together and concluding an arrangement with all at once, it would be better policy to make an arrangement with, say, three of the largest groups, and then allow adherence to that arrangement by the other colonies and groups as they might wish to come in. Apparently it is their view that it would not be difficult to make an arrangement with British Guiana, Barbados, Trinidad and Tobago, these being the three—outside of Jamaica—of the most importance. Others could be allowed to adhere to the arrangement from time to time. And the commission suggest that, in the meantime, while a reasonable time is allowed for adherence, they be not deprived of their present entrance on a preferential basis into the Canadian market, that, as the Canadian market has afforded an uncompensated preference for a considerable length of time, it would not be a hardship for Canada, nor would it be difficult, to continue it for a period of time in order to give them an opportunity to acquiesce.

Jamaica, the commission put upon a different plane, and for sufficient reasons. The troubles that I have hinted at pretty well broke up the sugar trade in the island of Jamaica, and turned the attention of the people chiefly to fruits, in the cultivation of which they have made great progress, and a very large market for which they have in the United States of America. They have still the fear that Canada would not consume fruits to the extent of taking their whole production, and that they might incur the ill-will of the United States, and might invite reprisals if they were to form a preferential arrangement with this country. I think it is a pity that our government and the British government did not take efficient means to set this fear at rest. The commission touched that subject and argued inferentially that there are no grounds for any such fear that, as in the negotiations between the United States and Canada, objection was not made to the Canadian tariff because of preference granted either to Great Britain or to sister colonies, therefore, the United States has waived that objection and would not raise it in the case of new preferential arrangements entered into between ourselves and the West India Islands. That may be a fair inference, and time may prove it to be a correct inference; but it seems a thousand pities that, when these negotiations were going on, it was not settled once and for all with the United States of America that they would not press the claim—and, if pressed, it would not be reasonable to allow it—that arrangements which were made between the colonies within the empire, or between the colonies and the mother country, should be liable to objection by the United States on the ground of compensating rights. However, that has not been authoritatively settled, and the only thing that remains is the inference I have referred to, an inference which, I am bound to admit, rests upon pretty substantial ground, but is not sufficient to take away the fear from the people of the West Indies who are in a position with reference to their production and our consumption, that our consumption, if they bound themselves up with a preferential treaty, would be insufficient to take their supply in whole or in larger part.

Another point that was brought out very clearly was the necessity for increased facilities of transport. The commission were very decided upon that, and the evidence that they took both in Canada and in the West Indies ran very strongly upon the inefficiency of the transport system in two respects, lack of punctuality and frequency of service. For instance, there is no strict schedule time upon which the present services, starting out from Canada, operate either going or coming and of course the disabilities connected with that are very marked and operate to the great disadvantage of Canadian trade, particularly when we recollect that the United States services are both shorter in distance and are managed with greater regularity and frequency. A man wishing to embark goods or to receive them from a Canadian ship cannot tell in advance when it will reach a particular island. This lack of punctuality operates strongly against the success of the service.

They wish a more frequent service and the proposition unanimously put forth by the commission is what is called the St. Vincent plan or some modification of it by which the services should be run outwards stopping at three or four of the principal island, and then on the return should call at all the various islands on that route. It is also proposed to have the voyages start so that the boats sailing from St. John fortnightly and the others sailing from Halifax fortnightly should run in alternate weeks which would make a weekly service instead of the present fortnightly service. It is recommended that in summer the service shall start from Montreal and Quebec. That, in brief, is the plan they recommend and it is gratifying to see that the British members of the commission were very heartily and very strongly in favour of the continuation of the co-operation by actual subsidy which is at present given by Great Britain and even suggested methods by which that co-operation could be made even stronger and more fruitful of effect. In connection with that they recommend that there be commission houses such as the United States dealers have and that is highly recommended also in the evidence of merchants and shippers at the various points where evidence was taken in Canada. The advantage of having storehouses or commission houses, so that collected consignments might be made, is of course apparent to every one and in the competition between two countries like the United States and ourselves, the lack of such accommodation for traders on our part would tell very strongly in favour of our competitors.

I wish in conclusion to drive home, if I can, the conclusions reached and to dwell for a moment upon the present favourable situation and to ask the question why we are not taking advantage of that situation and of the present favourable opinion. If I am not wrongly informed, every legislature of the West Indies, with the exception of Jamaica, have pronounced themselves in favour of preferential arrangements with the Dominion of Canada. There can be no doubt that we who have given the non-compensated preference for so long are in favour of its being continued and enlarged. After the labours of a commission which has placed its evidence and its recommendations so clearly and so completely before our country and the West Indies, after that preliminary work has been done and in the face of the present favourable situation and the favourable sentiment, it seems to me that more ought to be doing than so far as I can find out has been done or is being done in order to strike this iron while it is hot, and to have these arrangements made while both parties, and the situation are favourable thereto. I am not going to say that the government has done nothing, but so far as the newspaper prints go, so far as we can gather from any general lines of knowledge, so far as we have any information from the government itself since this report was tabled, nothing has been done, at least if anything has been done, nothing has up to the present time resulted, and nothing is apparent to the public mind.

This is not by any means a slight matter. In the first place, as between the West Indies and ourselves these are the permanent favourable conditions for reciprocity in trade. The West India Islands, on account of their geographical situation, is a country whose population need to-day, need next year and will need so long as they live, just the kind of products that we have to sell abroad. That, as everybody knows, is a splendid condition for reciprocal trade. For exchange we can take from them their tropical produce. That is something we can never raise, but will always want, and as our population increases our demand will increase year by year. It is a mistake to think that the West India Islands have reached the limit of their development. The opposite is the fact and under proper stimulus there is tremendous development in store for the West India Islands themselves so that as our needs increase—and they will continually increase by leaps and bounds for tropical products—the stimulus of that demand will impel the people of the West Indies to greater production. So that, my first point is that here if anywhere in the wide world, Canada has a field open for herself to procure an arrangement by which true, real reciprocity can be carried on, by means of a preferential tariff, and it must be the only means which give us an advantage permanently in the market of the West Indies, and which gives the West Indies a preference, and an advantage permanently in the market that we afford to them. In both of these respects then the conditions are ideal for reciprocity.

Well, there is another reason. It was probably the milk of human kindness, the impulse of brotherhood, the desire to lend a helping hand to colonies in trouble at the time, that led the Dominion government to give an uncompensated preference, because these islands were a part of the British Empire, and because they were in that sense brethren of our own. Very well, do we remember the strong sentiment with regard to what I have stated. Here there is a collection of countries in regard to which we might, whilst we are doing good to ourselves and good to them also, help to develop and bind together the empire of which we form a part. Then, there is what seems to be so favourable in the situation, and so desirable as to result, added now to the fact that men's minds are turned towards it, and if all the conditions are so favourable it seems to me as almost throwing back the opportunity which has been thurst upon us for the development of our trade in this permanent and very advantageous way not to avail ourselves of it. The trade is not a small one. I have just totalled up the imports for 1909, with these different islands, and they amount to $46,000,000. Now, we must bear in mind that under the preference that would be a trade of $46,000,000, almost all of which could be supplied by Canada, and could be supplied under the preference in competition with any other country in the world, because it would be a competition which would be shielded by preference. It is a market which never varies in the way of an influx of home products coming to meet our exports because they do not, and can not raise the articles that they need, and which their climate makes it impossible for them to raise. Therefore, in this particular it is a very eligible market of $46,000,000 worth which could be easily developed in a few years of stimulating prosperity in the West Indies, until it ran up to $90,000,000 or $100,000,000. It is worth seeking for, it is worth bending a great deal of energy to get and maintain—a population of 2,000,000 at present with the chances for a growth of that population, all of them consumers of what we have to sell, and which, I cannot say it too often, they find it impossible to raise there. What do they need? They need fish, flour, lumber, boots and shoes, condensed milk, machinery, hardware and cutlery, soaps, and all the agricultural and animal products. These are the great bulk of the things that they consume. They give us just what we ourselves cannot raise, what we need, what we are consuming large quantities of, and what we will consume in increasing quantities as our population increases. I think I have made that plain enough to make it unnecessary to spend any more time upon it.

Now, comes my criticism, and it is that with this opportunity before us we undertake a compact with another country. How does that affect the situation as regards a preference with the West Indies? To my mind it cuts squarely across it. Incentive is one thing. If we raise more potatoes than we find a home market for we are impelled to seek foreign markets. After we have met the home market demands there is a pressure from within for a market outside to which to send these products. If we have opened, or do open a market to the south of us by means of which we get for fish, and for all those agricultural and animal products free entrance, the incentive which would press us forward in the line of forming a preferential arrangement with the West Indies is to that extent diminished. This is the side of it from the Canadian point of view. By weakening the desire it takes away a large part of the incentive, and there is consequent inaction in that respect. As to the other side of it, what have we done? The sugar trade is one of the largest and upon that the West Indies would base their largest desire for reciprocity. But there is another very large trade, which is becoming every year larger, and that is the fruit trade. There is the production of coffee, and of tropical fruits, but, confining myself to the fruit trade, what is the position in which we would be placed? It is that if we are to meet the two great wants and so get preference from the West Indies, it has to be with reference to their sugar and their fruits. Canada will be a very large consumer of tropical fruits, leaving out for the time being fruits of the temperate zone. The only way we can give a preference to the West India Islands in the matter of fruits is to have a general tariff against fruits with a lighter tariff on fruits coming from the West Indies, or with free fruit which is still better, from the West Indies. The United States itself is in part a tropical country, and it produces fruits in competition with the fruits of the West India Islands. To that extent we have put it out of our power, if we pass the agreement with the United States, to proffer on the matter of tropical fruits to the West Indies what would be their second greatest incentive to form a preferential arrangement with the Dominion of Canada. In those two respects you will find that the accomplishment of the proposed arrangement with the United States will be a bar, I think almost if not entirely insuperable, to our preference arrangements in the future with the West India Islands. I think it is a pity that an occasional market, with all its contingencies and uncertainties, should thus cut across the prospect of having a useful and a most profitable preferential arrangement between two parts of the empire in connection with our fellow colonists in the West India Islands.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have brought this little digest, imperfect and not as comprehensive as I would like to have made it, to the attention of the House and of the country, I hope to a certain extent, for this reason, that it so often happens that the best knowledge we have is hidden away in the reports of commissions and of blue-books, and we do not get it, even when a commission is allowed to go on to the very end of its existence, and when its work is taken up as alone was contemplated when the commission began. But like ashes in the mouth is a commission, however able, whose findings, after it has done its work and done it well, are simply pigeon-holed and musted over by the passage of years, and result in nothing. It is the temptation of a government to allow that to be done, it is the glory of any government that will carry out to the end its commissions, properly conceived, and ably worked out, to the time the results are placed in their hands to take charge of and carry into effect. It was with that view that I ventured to trespass thus long in putting these facts upon 'Hansard,' and in bringing them to the ears of so many as have done me the honour of listening to me, and to add to that a plea, not only for consideration of businessmen, and boards of trade, and thinking men all through the country; and added to that, a plea for action on the part of the government itself, in order to bring advantage out of what I consider a most favourable position, and an opportunity which occurs only once in a long while. I want also to say that these blue-books are very good if they are read. Whilst I am on my feet I wish to make a suggestion to the government with reference to all these Dominion numbers. We have a secretariat, they are doing very good work, they will do better work in the future. Every once in a while they embody the result of their work in a blue-book, and I think the least the government can do, and they ought not to hesitate a moment, is not so much to reprint those, because that is not necessary, but to make an arrangement with the Secretary of State for the Colonies by which these numbers, when issued, shall also be issued to the Dominion in quantities sufficient at least for supplying the members of the two Houses, the boards of trade, and other public associations of that kind. I daresay the Colonial Office would do it without charge, but the charge is a mere bagatelle, and to prevent the duplication in printing, an arrangement ought to be made by which these when they come out—and some of them are treasure houses of information, they are filled as it were with the spirit of all the colonies and not simply devoted to the affairs of one; and so they give to the minds of those who read them, and furnish the understanding of those who are privileged to read them, with a fresh and current idea not only of what we are doing in the Dominion of Canada, but what other dominions outside of us are doing. There is a spirit in these Dominion numbers, and a retrospect of the affairs in brief of the great family to which we belong, which are very interesting. I cannot urge too strongly upon the government, if they have not done it already, the advisability of securing a reasonable number of the output of every number one of the Dominion Numbers which are now being published by the Colonial Departement under the new plan which has been arranged.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). It is only with two or three sentences of my hon. friend's remarks near the close that I am unable to agree with him. I think he attaches undue importance to the effect of our reciprocity agreement with the United States upon our relations with the West Indies. I think it will be found on careful examination that, with the exception of a very small percentage of our trade, our business with the West Indies is not touched by the arrangement with the United States. The item fruit is of some importance, but I think hardly of as much as my hon. friend supposes. We have today the principal West India fruits, oranges, lemons, limes, shaddocks on our free list; and while the possibility of placing these on the dutiable list in the way of a discriminative tariff was discussed in the report, and suggested as a possibility, I do not think the West Indies themselves will attach great importance to it. The island of Jamaica was the only one who would attach great importance to that. I regret to say, however, that nothing we could do with relation to fruit or anything else is likely to win the approval of Jamaica to the project. My hon. friend is aware, from the general tenor of the report, that the feeling of Jamaica—where the commissioners were received with every possible courtesy and consideration—the feeling of the business community was not well-disposed towards a reciprocal arrangement with Canada. Since the publication of this report the Governor of Jamaica has published a statement in which he has taken very decided ground against entering into any arrangement with Canada. So with respect to the principal island concerned in the fruit trade, I do not think there has been any change of opinion upon the part of Jamaica.

Passing from that, I have listened with great interest and pleasure to my hon. friend's remarks. He has given us a substantially accurate review of the history of the question of better trade relations with the West Indies from the year 1900 when he himself visited the islands, down to a very recent date. Several years before 1900, and a year or two before I entered office here, I had the pleasure of making a trip to these islands, and I heard then of the efforts my hon. friend had made a year or two before in order to interest the people in the subject. I realized then, as he realizes now, the many difficulties in the way. He is correct in stating that in later years conditions seem to have become more favourable. The island of Barbados passed a Bill for the purpose of granting preferential terms to Canada. In that Bill it was proposed to admit certain products of Canada into Barbados on preferential terms, but the list of those products was one that had never been agreed to by Canada. At all events, it was a list adopted by the government of Barbados at that time, and on further consideration, although it was a comprehensive list, we did not think it covered all that was desirable. Then they required that, as a condition of our receiving the measure of preference indicated by the Bill, we should give them not only the present liberal concession in the matter of sugar, but we should give them a further preference. It seemed that while they manifested by that Bill a very friendly disposition towards us, while they put their project into a precise form, it was quite impossible for us to do anything with it on the lines laid down, nor would it have been possible, even if the lines were satisfactory, to have made an arrangement with one colony only. In consequence of that the suggestion was made, in communication with the Imperial government, that the whole matter might become a subject of inquiry with a view of ascertaining whether a number of the West India Islands would unite for the purpose of making a friendly arrangement with Canada. The British government, readily acquiescing in that suggestion, appointed the commission to which my hon. friend has referred, headed by Lord Balfour of Burleigh as chairman, and the other members being Sir John Dickson-Poynder, now Lord Islington, Governor of New Zealand, Sir Daniel Morris, a gentleman well acquainted with the West Indies, the Minister of Customs and myself. I must not take to myself any large share of credit for what is in that report, because I was not able to give as much attention to the work of the commission as were some of my colleagues. I attended the meetings held in Canada and the final meeting in England; but I had not the pleasure of visiting the islands, which was the most interesting part of the inquiry. The outcome is the report which my hon. friend has been kind enough to speak of as a very full and able one.

Now, I come to speak of what is to be done in consequence of that report. My hon. friend has stated that all the islands, except Jamaica, have passed resolutions in favour of preferential trade with Canada. That may be correct, but I do not think it is correct as applied to events subsequent to the making of this report. The report was issued in the early autumn and was distributed to the various West India parliaments. We were asked by the Imperial government whether we were willing to have a conference with any of the colonies, to which we replied that if several of the colonies would indicate their willingness to approach the question by a conference, we would be quite ready to take it up, and, subject only to the demands of our parliamentary session, we would be very happy to arrange to meet our friends of the West Indies at such time and place as might be found most convenient to them. I think I am correct in stating that the only one of the West India colonies which has officially expressed a willingness to take up the negotiation is British Guiana. That does not mean that the other colonies have refused. It may be that on a matter of such importance they desire an opportunity for fuller investigation. At all events, I can assure my hon. friend that we appreciate the importance of the subject as fully as he does, and that whenever an opportunity occurs of holding a conference, as foreshadowed in the report of the commission, it will be both our pleasure and our duty to meet our friends from the West Indies to see if a satisfactory agreement can be reached. I agree entirely with him as to the importance of the matter, and that we should avail ourselves of that opportunity if it occurs; but he will see that when the various colonies have been invited to express their willingness to meet Canada in a conference, and when up to the present only one of them has so expressed itself, the moment has hardly arrived at which we can proceed. But whenever several of the larger colonies indicate their desire—because it would not be convenient to deal with a group of the smaller ones—to discuss the subject, we shall feel it our duty to meet them.

Mr. FOSTER. British Guiana is very important.

Mr. FIELDING. I quite agree with my hon. friend. British Guiana, with Trinidad and Barbados would represent a very powerful organization, and I am not without hope that that may come about at no distant date. I may say that in all our negotiations with the representatives of the West Indies, we have found that the great question was the sugar question. Other questions, relating to coffee, spices, fruits and so on, have their value, but the sugar interest is the one of greatest value to the West Indies, and it represents such a large percentage of our imports from the West Indies, that so long as we are able to give a substantial preference on sugar, we have a very strong lever to negotiate with.

I wish to say a word or two on the steamship question. We desire to have an improved steamship service. My hon. friend has indicated some of the objections taken to the old service, in some cases that it was slow, in other cases that the passenger accommodation was not as good as it should be, in other cases that there was a lack of punctuality, regularity, and so on. We all appreciated that, and desired to have a better service. While we were considering the matter along these lines, a very interesting incident occurred which gave us a new subject for thought. There is an existing service from Halifax and St. John to Demerara, touching at a number of the islands. This service is aided by the Dominion government and by the Imperial government, each government paying one-half. We were desirous that that service should be enlarged and improved, and while we were considering the matter along these lines we discovered that the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company, of Great Britain, which had a contract for carrying the mails from Great Britain direct to the West Indies, had become dissatisfied with its arrangement with the Imperial government, and had given notice to terminate the contract. That led us to enter into communication with the British government on the subject. The British Post Office Department were deeply interested in that contract, and when they found that they were likely to lose the direct service from Great Britain to the principal West India Islands, they turned to us and said: You are trying to make arrangements for an improved service from Canada to the West Indies; if you make your service better and faster, we will help you, and we will send our mails to the West Indies by way of Canada. So we had the inducement of the co-operation of the Imperial government, and we felt that, in addition to what was already granted by the Imperial government, the British Post Office Department would throw into the scale the sum contributed to the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company for carrying the mails, and we could possibly establish a direct service to the West Indies, which, in conjunction with the fairly fast service which we have across the Atlantic, would give us a satisfactory service to the West Indies, and give the British government a fairly satisfactory mail service. The report of the commission refers to that in a general way; but apart from that, the Canadian ministers spent some time in negotiating with the British post office authorities with the view of bringing about that desirable scheme; and when I left England last autumn we had an understanding with the British government that they would have a fast service betwen Great Britain, Canada and the West Indies established on the lines suggested.

That was the situation when I left England in the autumn and for some little time afterwards. Quite an agitation, however, arose in the West Indies against breaking away from the old direct service, and the impression prevailed there that we had something to do with the termination of that contract. What occurred actually was this. The company gave notice that it could not longer engage in the service, from Great Britain to the West Indies, and the British post office people suggested that we should work together and establish a service which would be imperial But the moment it became known that there was a probability of the contract service between Great Britain and the West Indies ceasing, there was a strong agitation in these islands to do something to prevent the change, and in some instances the West India colonies agreed to contribute to the British government a sum which would help to re-establish the direct service. Consequently when we were hoping for the co-operation of the British government to help us, we discovered that, in consequence of this agitation in the West Indies and their contributions, the British government decided to make a new contract with the Royal Mail Packet Company, and we were left to make our own arrangements as before. We received notification from the British government explaining the circumstances and their inability to go on with the scheme according to the understanding we had in England. The explanation they gave was that owing to the strong objections made in the West India Islands to the termination of the contract, and to the willingness of these islands to contribute to a direct service, they found themselves unable to carry out the arrangement they had contemplated making with us. Then they reminded us that as Great Britain had no direct interest in the Canadian service, we need not expect any contribution from the imperial government towards it.

As to what effect that may have on our policy regarding the West Indian service, I am not prepared to say. I regret that the Imperial government have taken the step they did, but under the circumstances we can not blame them for having done so. We are still anxious to have a better service than we now have with the West India Islands; but in view of the change of attitude on the part of the British government, we have to consider whether we can appropriate an additional sum to secure that service, and also to ascertain whether the West India colonies themselves will be willing to contribute something to attain that object. I quite agree as to the desirability of an improvement, and trust that in some way or other we shall be able to have a more efficient service and that, although we shall not be able to have as fast a line as we contemplated, had we secured the assistance of the British government, we still may have a better service in every point of view than the existing one. I agree with my hon. friend in what he has said regarding the advisability of our having improved steam communication, and it will be the duty of this government to take the matter up and do what we can in that respect.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How long does the present contract last?

Mr. FIELDING. It had expired and was carried over a year pending the report of the commission. We suggested carrying it over another year, but the British government are not willing. I do not know that we have had the last word, but that is the position of the matter at present.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We are all very much indebted to my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) for having brought this matter to the attention of the House. I should regret very much if the steamship service between Canada and the West Indies were not improved in the early future. It is very desirable that we should keep in the closest touch with these islands and use every endeavour to increase our trade with them. If there be any country in the world with which we might, to the advantage of both parties, enter into a commercial arrangement, it seems to me that that country is the West India Islands. We produce exactly what the British West India Islands must purchase, and these islands produce the things which we cannot grow in this country and must import.

I had hoped, from my brief acquaintance with the matters dealt with by this commission, that there would have been a more favourable outcome than seems to be anticipated by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. And I desire to express the hope now that although that favourable outcome may not be realizable apparently in the early future, it still may be brought about. There is hardly a province in Canada which does not produce many of the articles required by the British West Indies. In Nova Scotia we have the fish, in other provinces the breadstuffs and in others manufactures of many kinds, so that every province of Canada is interested in closer commercial relations between this country and the British West Indies. Whatever policy the government may put forward for the encouragement of those closer commercial relations, provided it be a reasonable and sane policy, I certainly will be prepared to support.

Railways and canals—chargeable to capital—canals, Quebec—new tug, $6,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. These tugs are for the handling of our dredging fleet. We want to put a larger tug on this canal and to transfer to the Chambly canal one of the smaller ones that we have.

Mr. DANIEL. Does the department do this work of dredging, concreting, &c., on the canals by contract, or in what way?

Mr. GRAHAM. Large works, such as those we were talking about last night, are done by contract after tenders publicly called for. But small works of dredging we do ourselves.

Mr. BLAIN. Where is the tug purchased?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is purchased by tender.

Mr. FOSTER. How are tenders advertised for?

Mr. GRAHAM. The establishments that can turn out a vessel of this kind are limited in number. We ask the various builders to send in tenders.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to plead with the minister (Mr. Graham) not to fall too far from grace. Starting out a year or two ago, he promised, with reference to the Intercolonial, that there would be no political favouritism in the distribution of his advertising. A very worthy citizen of this Dominion occupies some months of his time in the summer down near a station on the Intercolonial, and as he is averse to buying Grit newspapers, he never can tell when a train is coming or going, for the time table is not advertised in his own party newspaper. It is a special grievance to him which he has not heretofore voiced, but which, some of these days, he may voice. The practice followed seems to be against the principle that the minister started out with and in which I applauded him. There is no reason why, in regard to the country's railway, a newspaper which stands for the Liberal-Conservative party in so important a place as St. John, N.B., should not have the time table; no reason why the minister should compel us to pay two cents extra to get the news and have it go into such detestable quarters.

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not know about the time table, but I know that a great deal of special advertising of excursions, &c., is put in some Conservative papers.

Mr. DANIEL. It may appear in the Halifax 'Herald', but not in the St. John 'Standard'—even advertisements of excursions which are supposed to reach the community at large. I brought the matter up two or three years ago, and the minister stated there was every reason why this advertising should be general, and he would see that it was done.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have no definite information as to the particular paper to which my hon. friend refers, but I know that I have seen the advertisement in some of the other papers.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the same policy prevail in the advertising of the Intercolonial in Ontario?

Mr. GRAHAM. In Ontario—I suppose I should not say 'I regret'—the board saw fit to discontinue a large amount of advertising in the smaller papers. If I remember correctly, we now advertise only in the 'Globe,' the 'Star,' and the 'World' in Toronto, and in no papers outside that city. We have an office in Toronto.

Mr. BLAIN. And the 'Mail and Empire'—how will it be able to reach the government?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am not sure about that.

Mr. DANIEL. What horse-power is this tug to be?

Mr. GRAHAM. About 100 horse-power.

Soulanges—mooring posts, $3,400.

Mr. GRAHAM. About thirty of these posts are to be placed. The work will be done by our own staff, and the amount of this vote is expected to cover the cost.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Where are the posts made?

Mr. GRAHAM. We buy them under contract after public competition.

Soulanges—new machinery, $1,150.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is to buy an electrically-driven force pump, and engine and boiler, &c., for a new gate-lifter.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you buy directly from the makers?

Mr. GRAHAM. Where possible. This question has arisen lately in that connection. The makers of much of the material we want have their sales agents, and often they will not give prices, but refer us to their agents. Of course, that is perfectly legitimate. If a man has charge of a territory, he has a right to sell the goods that are sold in that territory.

Mr. FOSTER. That often occurs in certain classes of articles. But a department like that of Railways and Canals must buy a great deal of what may be called standard articles. For the purchase of that kind of standard articles which are always needed, the government should have an arrangement with the makers that would leave the government perfectly free with reference to what you might call occasional articles.

Mr. GRAHAM. We invariably communicate with the manufacturers themselves and with the various sales agents. In several instances the sales agents gave us a lower price than the manufacturers, explaining that they divided their commission with us. In some cases the manufacturers and sales agents quarrelled because the agent really gave a lower price than the manufacturers quoted to us.

Protection works, upper entrance, $100,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. This work will take about two years to complete. Since the opening of the Soulanges canal the marine men have complained of the difficulty of making the entrance to the upper gates on account of the storms that often prevail on the lake. They discussed with us methods of obviating that difficulty. One was to remove the locks further down from the entrance to the canal. The other was to extend out the pier on the south side. I suppose we will extend it out 1,200 feet. After discussing it with the department the Marine Association have agreed to this proposition as laid down here as the better way to obviate the difficulty. If that does not serve a short breakwater will be run north and south a little further west which will overcome any little difficulty. It will cost about $205,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the traffic through the Soulanges canal increasing as compared with some previous years?

Mr. GRAHAM. It has increased. Last year the tonnage passing through the canal was 1,727,564 tons.

Stopping leaks and trimming slopes, $150,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. The Soulanges canal is constructed through very treacherous soil. Leaks have been constantly feared and on the outside of the banks the signs have been very plain that the water has been trickling through. The department undertook to build a sloped wall made of concrete at an angle of 45 degrees. We are first protecting the points that appear most dangerous. The vessel owners tell me that with these banks they feel safe in making better speed through the canal but the main object is to prevent the breaking away of the bank. An examination of the outside of the bank shows that where we have done this work the small leaks are stopped.

Mr. FOSTER. Will that have to be done the whole length of the canal?

Mr. GRAHAM. There are parts that do not appear to be dangerous and for the present we are doing only the parts on the south bank where it seems risky to leave it undone. It costs about $31 per lineal foot. The concrete is about 3 feet deep at the bottom and 2 at the top. It extends, of course, to the depth of the water in the canal, about 14 feet.

Mr. SPROULE. It is difficult to tell just what this work is costing. Is it done by day's work or contract? If this is built all of concrete it will cost more than if a good deal of stone were mixed with the concrete.

Mr. GRAHAM. This costs approximately $8 per cubic yard.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it done by contract?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is done by contract let to the lowest tenderer. There was only one tenderer, I believe, for this work.

Mr. SPROULE. In the specifications does it stipulate what and how much stone shall be used and the strength of the cement?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, we have a regular standard specification governing all that kind of work. We have spent on the work about $85,000.

Mr. SPROULE. The contractor gets a very good price for it.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). The minister had better advertise again for tenders if he is paying $8 per square yard, because any person who is acquainted with concrete work knows that a great deal of it is broken stone. There is very little cement in it. The mould is filled up, a foot or two at a time, with broken stone and the cement is mixed and poured on top of the stone. We have a lot of that down with our concrete dams at Gananoque, and I know that it does not cost any such money as that.

Mr. GRAHAM. This requires a special plant for depositing the concrete under water. The contractors informed me that they needed a special plant costing about $40,000 to handle this work which would not be required to handle it above water.

Mr. GRAHAM.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). There is no difficulty in doing the work under water. They simply use a coffer dam and fill it in from the top. There is no machinery needed at all. We are doing this work under water all the time at Gananoque.

Mr. GRAHAM. As a matter of fact, it took months of experimenting before they could get the special machinery to enable them to do this work under water. We find that the proper way to get these things done is to advertise for tenders, and get the best offer. Then, getting the best offer, we let the contract.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). We simply make a water-tight box, sink it and fill it.

Mr. BLAIN. What firm has this contract?

Mr. GRAHAM. Messers. Haney, Quinlan and Robertson.

Mr. REID (Grenville). How many tenders were received?

Mr. GRAHAM. Two.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). You said one a moment ago.

Mr. GRAHAM. Two were received originally, but a change had to be made in the specification, and only one was finally received.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). It looks like a job.

Mr. GRAHAM. There is no job about it.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). It certainly is a job if you are paying $31 per lineal foot.

Mr. GRAHAM. We asked for tenders on a specification which was not quite clear. We revised the specification and received but one tender, Messrs. Morseen & Co. refusing to tender under the new specification. Therefore, the tender of Messrs. Haney, Quinlan and Robertson was accepted.

Mr. BLAIN. How did you advertise?

Mr. GRAHAM. In the public press.

Mr. REID (Grenville). In how many papers?

Mr. GRAHAM. About 15.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). It looks something like the dredging contracts when a fellow was bought off who had a share in the lucky company.

Mr. GRAHAM. There was nothing of that kind in this.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). It looks like it.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Are these advertisements published only in the local Liberal newspapers? Can you tell me the names of the newspapers in which you advertised?

Mr. GRAHAM. No, I could not tell that, but we advertised in Montreal, Toronto, and Ottawa, the centres where large contractors are.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to ask the minister if there has been any change in the policy with regard to advertising of tenders. I hesitate to bring it up year after year, but I notice my hon. friend is changing his policy with regard to a few things.

Mr. GRAHAM. Not at all.

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose my hon. friend thinks he and his department are getting better. May I ask what is the policy of my hon. friend with regard to advertising works of this kind in the public newspapers. Does my hon. friend allow advertisements of this kind to go into newspapers other than those which are supporting the government?

Mr. GRAHAM. I would rather be anything else than hypocritical. We have party government in the Dominion, and if my hon. friend were in my place he would put the advertisements, everything being equal, in his own friend's newspapers.

Mr. BLAIN. How does my hon. friend know that?

Mr. GRAHAM. I judge that from his usual conduct. It has been the custom of all governments in Canada, and will continue to be. Everything being equal, we have a slight cant towards Biddy.

Mr. REID (Grenville). For how long a period were these advertisements inserted in the papers?

Mr. GRAHAM. About four weeks.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend says that, everything being equal, he selects his own party organs. In many cases there is a great inequality. A newspaper may have a circulation of 500, while another newspaper published in the same town may have a circulation of 1,500; my hon. friend selects the paper with a circulation of 500 because it happens to be a supporter of the government and overlooks the paper having a circulation of 1,500. All things are not equal there and it is because they are not equal that we offer this criticism. I compliment my hon. friend on one thing; he is very frank, and being so frank, I suppose we need not press it further. His frankness will indicate to the members of the committee that he is putting all these advertisements in papers supporting his own government.

Mr. REID (Grenville). May I ask if this advertisement is inserted in the Canada 'Gazette' as well?

Mr. GRAHAM. No, I do not think we ever do that. It is a matter of record if you want to conceal an advertisement put it in the Canada 'Gazette.'

Mr. REID (Grenville). I take issue with the hon. gentleman in that regard, I advocated in this House a few years ago that all advertisements should be inserted in the Canada 'Gazette.' Then all contractors throughout the Dominion could subscribe to the Canada 'Gazette' and they would know everything that was being offered for competition, because they would see it in this official organ. There is the contract at Soulanges that the minister speaks of; there might be men in St. Catharines who might not be taking the Toronto 'Globe' and the result would be that they would never know anything about this until the contract had been let. It would be in the interest of the public if it were generally known that all advertisements would be inserted in the official government organ, and then publish them in the newspapers as well. I cannot see why that should be objected to and why the several departments have refused to insert these advertisements in that publication. It looks to me that by inserting these advertisements only in government newspapers they desire to give a preference to those who are supporting the government, and who get these contracts for the reason that others who are not supporting the government may not be taking these government newspapers. What objection would there be to inserting all the advertisements in the Canada 'Gazette' issued by this government, and in the other papers as well?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not see any objection to it whatever, it is well worth considering. We would have to take some other means of notifying the public, because people do not usually see the 'Canada Gazette.' But if it were known that these advertisements were to be published in the 'Canada Gazette' it might make a difference.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I mean in addition to the newspapers.

Mr. GRAHAM. If it were known that advertisements of this kind were put in the 'Canada Gazette,' contractors might look into it.

Mr. HUGHES. Can the minister recall an instance in history where an advertisement in a newspaper in connection with these contracts ever brought a tender?

Mr. GRAHAM. My experience is that the contractors are on hand all the time, and they know almost before you know yourself where work is going to be done. They are on the go all the time.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). There were not many of them on the go for this work.

Mr. GRAHAM. There were not many equipped for this work.

Mr. FOSTER. May be the minister would think it important enough to inquire into that. He would be perhaps surprised and humiliated if it turned out some of these days that a plan had been arranged on him.

Mr. GRAHAM. I discussed the matter with several people including contractors, and I was informed that practically those were the only people that had a plant for it, and that is the reason we did not get more bids for this work. In reply to my hon. friend just now—there is an increase in 1908 of 154,765 tons.

St. Ours' lock—electrical equipment, $2,500; movable dam, $13,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is to provide for operating the gates. We have made an arrangement with the Sorel Electric Light Power Company for lighting the canal and operating the gates. We pay $50 per horse-power.

Mr. REID (Grenville). That is altogether too much. The minister knows that in any part of Canada you can get horse-power for from $15 to $25. In the city of Kingston to-day they are offering it at $25, brought all the way from Trenton. In Montreal it is being offered for $15 and so on. In the city of Sorel they are selling horse-power at $15 to $20. $50 per horse-power at this time in the history of Canada is an outrage. This electric power comes from Shawenegan, only a few miles away, which also furnishes electric power to the city of Montreal.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am surprised at my hon. friend's statement. If my hon. friend will look through Ontario, he will find that some of the users of small amounts of horse-power have to pay $50. As a matter of fact, this horse-power, all told, is only 12, and they build a transmission line ten miles and bring it to us. There are four gates, with a three horse-power motor in each gate. I doubt if the hon. gentleman can find a single instance in Ontario or in Canada where so small an amount of power is furnished under similar conditions for less than $50. My hon. friend talks about Montreal, but he knows that Montreal takes a vast amount. He knows that in every town which wants to get the cheapest power, the price is based on the guaranteed number of horse-power the municipality will take, and if they do not take a certain amount they do not get the low price. In comparison even with what has been offered to Brockville by the Hydro-Electric, considering the quantity, this is dirt cheap.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds).

Mr. HUGHES. Has the minister any data as to prices paid for electrical power under similar conditions in other towns in the same locality?

Mr. GRAHAM. I cannot answer that question directly. We are dealing with the Sorel Electric Light Company. In making an arrangement with them our engineers in charge assured me that it is a fair price, in consideration of all the charges that were being made in that vicinity.

Mr. HUGHES. It is $17 in the town of Lindsay, a larger town than Sorel.

Mr. GRAHAM. But remember that this is ten miles away, and they build us the line, and only supply us with twelve horse-power.

Mr. SPROULE. How long do you agree to take this horse-power?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think the contract is for five years.

Mr. SPROULE. Having regard to the fact that this is a small quantity, of course that would increase the price.

Mr. GRAHAM. Above the St. Ours dam the channel is very narrow and shallow, and we wanted to put a movable dam on top of the present dam, to conserve the water so that we can take it off when we need it.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the traffic through St. Ours?

Mr. GRAHAM. In 1909 we had 494 vessels passing up, and 497 passing down. In 1910 the number had decreased to 418 and 368.

Mr. FOSTER. What river is it on?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is in the Richelieu river and is only about one-eighth of a mile long.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What is the fall there?

Mr. GRAHAM. Six or eight feet.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Was it not possible to have a little power of your own which would open and shut the locks and furnish light, without going to the expense of bringing the transmission line there?

Mr. GRAHAM. It would hardly pay us to go to the expense of developing the power there for that purpose.

Mr. BRODER. What is being done about the electric power on the Williamsburg canal?

Mr. GRAHAM. That matter has been discussed with Mr. Beach, who was anxious to erect a transmission line, and who proposed to make some contracts in which the lighting of the canals would be included. I said that I was ready to discuss the question if he could make contracts say with Brockville and Prescott as well.

Sault Ste. Marie canal—extending north mooring pier at upper entrance, $32,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is to enable at least two more vessels to be tied up at the western entrance.

Mr. BOYCE. How far are you going to extend it?

Mr. GRAHAM. 300 or 400 feet of new pier.

Mr. BOYCE. I have written to the minister several times about a man named Ericson who was injured there, and who is now helpless and unable to work. It is a case of great urgency and misfortune, and I would ask the minister to give it the consideration it deserves, and as quickly as possible.

Mr. GRAHAM. The department has been considering that case and has decided to do something, but I cannot give the particulars at present.

Mr. BOYCE. Will this work of extending the piers be commenced at once?

Mr. GRAHAM. As soon as navigation opens.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Welland canal—Port Colborne Improvements, $189,000.

Mr. RUSSELL. Have you any intention of going on with the improvement of the Welland this year?

Mr. GRAHAM. The question of the Welland canal as well as the Georgian Bay canal is occupying the attention of the government very seriously. I have no item in any of these votes for the enlargement or construction of the new Welland canal. The situation is this. The engineering staff has been at work some time looking over the different routes and possibilities. There were two routes investigated, each of which would use a portion of the present Welland canal. Then there is a third route which would tap Lake Erie from three or four miles west of Port Colborne, and come out on Lake Ontario at what is called Jordan harbour. This would be altogether a new canal. It would look at first blush and it may turn out to be the case that it would possibly be better to utilize a portion of the present canal. The engineers found along this route a quantity of quicksand which has almost frightened them from it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Is that the Jordan route?

Mr. GRAHAM. No, the Jordan route is a new one. Whether the quicksand is an insurmountable difficulty, I would not like to say at present. The engineers have made a thorough survey and borings on what I have described as the Jordan route. It is possible to construct on this route, but it will include something that may startle the ordinary individual. The idea in the minds of the engineering staff at present would be, if that route were adopted, to do away with all but two lifts. This would mean a lift at each place of over 150 feet. Mr. Weller and the chief engineers say that is practicable. At first thought, as a layman, I hesitated to believe it was, but I am assured that from an engineering standpoint it is. However, before it is adopted we will make a closer investigation, and get the best advice possible.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the height of the lift lock at Peterborough?

Mr. GRAHAM. Sixty-five feet. There would be a great saving in time in getting through the Welland canal if we had just two lifts instead of 26 or 27 locks.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). How would the cost compare?

Mr. GRAHAM. It would be a trifle less than using the flight of locks. The suggestion first was to use six or seven ordinary locks, but it was just as practicable to use the two and make two enormous lifts and complete the entire lift with these two locks.

Mr. SPROULE. Have the engineers completed their survey?

Mr. GRAHAM. They have and this is their judgment; but I would not like to say positively that a decision has been arrived at until I would call in one of the best men I could get on the continent to consult with my chief engineer, and my chief engineer would want that done.

Mr. SEALEY. Has the department any report on the Selkirk route where there is supposed to be no quicksand to overcome?

Mr. GRAHAM. The information we have is that, owing to the height of land, it is an impracticable route.

Mr. SEALEY. Was that arrived at by survey or casual observation?

Mr. GRAHAM. Not by actual survey, but by observation of the country. The difficulties are so great that there was no need to make a survey. The new canal by the Jordan route, if carried out, would be built with a view to deepening to thirty feet. The locks would be made of that depth and the canal of 25 feet, so that, if we needed the additional five feet, there would only be the expense of dredging out the canal. The details in connection with this matter are under consideration of the government, and it may be possible, before the House rises, that we shall have something else to present, but I am not asking for anything now.

Mr. RUSSELL. Does not the minister intend to get this expert advice?

Mr. GRAHAM. No.

Mr. RUSSELL. Is it not important enough?

Mr. GRAHAM. One difficulty is that I have not enough money.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Finance Minister will furnish the money.

Mr. GRAHAM. He can't do it without a vote.

Mr. RUSSELL. We can vote it, then.

Mr. GRAHAM. My idea is, before we proceed, to thoroughly investigate the other two routes also, for any person can see the advantage of using part of the old canal, if practical. A new route would be decided upon only if the other were found impracticable.

Mr. LENNOX. But the old canal will be used for some purposes, even if the new route were selected, would it not?

Mr. GRAHAM. We would have to keep the old canal open as far as Welland. There are many industries on that canal that will have to be served by it. Then, as to Port Colborne harbour, we would have to proceed with the work for which I am asking money now to make that harbour a little better. We built an elevator at Port Colborne, and last year that elevator paid running expenses and $2,000 besides. The cost of handling the grain, I think, was nine-sixteenths cents per bushel, and we handled something over 3,000,000 bushels. Of that quantity, 1,700,000 was distributed from that elevator by train, a good deal of it going to points in Ontario. So, for the convenience of western Ontario millers and their trade, that elevator would have to be continued, and we would have to maintain the harbour there. It would be an advantage also to the local traffic and the local industries. I was surprised at the elevator coming out a little ahead. It is the first year it has done so.

Mr. LENNOX. Is the minister allowing anything for the cost of the elevator?

Mr. GRAHAM. No, merely operating expenses. We try to keep the rate low.

Mr. LENNOX. That is rather valuable information as bearing on the western elevators—it shows that we could operate these probably without great loss.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Do you charge the same rate as other elevators?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am not sure what the others charge; we charge three-fourths of a cent.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I think they charge one-half cent in and one-half cent out.

Mr. SPROULE. Three million bushels was a very small quantity for such an elevator to handle, was it not?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, we could handle much more.

Mr. STAPLES. What did the elevator cost?

Mr. GRAHAM. It cost $1,100,000, I think.

Mr. STAPLES. What is its capacity?

Mr. GRAHAM. Eight hundred thousand bushels, with the foundations in for enlargement to two millions. The vote we have now under consideration is really for the completion of the work we have been doing there. We wish to extend the dock at the elevator, and place electric light and power works along the western pier. We will have the work done by contract. The expenditure on improvements at Port Colborne altogether have been $1,118,806, not including the elevator.

Mr. SPROULE. Considering the size of vessels on the lakes, does the minister think it necessary to give the canal a depth of more than 25 feet?

Mr. GRAHAM. The harbours at Duluth, Fort William and Port Arthur are made to accommodate vessels of 25 feet draught, and the main channel is being made 25 feet. The difference in cost between deepening the canal from 22 feet to 25 feet will be comparatively light.

Mr. SPROULE. But I understood the minister to speak of a depth of 30 feet. What I asked was, as there are very few vessels on the upper lakes drawing more than 25 feet, and very few harbours into which vessels can go that draw more than that depth, it would seem unnecessary to make the canal more than 25 feet deep.

Mr. GRAHAM. A very material part of the expense in enlarging the canal is in making the locks. While we are at the work it probably would be cheaper to provide locks of a depth of 30 feet, even though the canal is only 25 feet. Then, when the time comes to deepen the canal to 30 feet, all that will be necessary is to dredge the canal to the depth. One of the great items of expense in deepening the Erie canal, for instance, is in putting in new locks, all along the route.

Mr. DANIEL. How wide will the new canal be?

Mr. GRAHAM. Two hundred feet.

Mr. McCALL (Norfolk). I regret that I did not hear the remarks of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) on this general question. What I have to say is not in way of criticism, but rather to give—I would hardly say information, but the result of my own observation in regard to the Welland canal. I worked on the canal in the former enlargement. It occurs to me that this country ought to be in a position to declare a definite policy on the question of its canal transportation, that we ought not to have a Welland canal enlargement simply, without an enlargement of all the other canals leading to tide water. An enlargement of the Welland canal would divert business to Oswego, to the enlarged Erie canal of 2.000 tons capacity. An enlarged system the whole way to tide water would certainly hold our through traffic and we ought to gain by it.

I heard the minister's remarks in regard to a possible 25 foot draft. I am bound to say that 25 feet is an impossibility in practice; it is not an absolute impossibility, but it will involve an expenditure beyond our resources. I think that 20 feet is now the maximum depth of all the water courses from the head of the lakes to the foot of Lake Erie. A 20 foot draught passes a 10,000 ton vessel. The obstacles are the St. Mary's river, the St. Clair Flats, the outlet of the Detroit river and every harbour upon the lake would have to be enlarged to meet the maximum draught of all these points. I think I am safe in saying that 18 feet is nearer the greatest draught of any vessel now plying upon the lakes. The ocean vessel of large capacity is an impossibility on the lakes by reason of her construction. Any one who is familiar with naval architecture is aware that the ocean vessel is moulded sharp and deep to hold her course in the sea against an adverse wind that would tend to blow her out of her course. The lake vessel is flat bottomed, with a full bow and stern. She holds her way in the water by her displacement. Therefore, I think I am safe in saying that we will not see the ocean vessel on our lakes, nor will we see the lake vessel making the trip across the ocean. In my earlier business days I remember one little Swedish brig, such a brig as I presume Columbus navigated the ocean in. She came to Milwaukee once a year with a cargo of gin, 600 tons. It was a great wonder to the shipping people in those days. At one time the experiment was made of sending lake craft across the ocean. About the time of the first enlargement of the Welland canal two vessels drawing 14 feet went to the old country, one with a cargo of lumber and one with a cargo of staves. These vessels were found wholly unfit for the ocean voyage for the reason I gave that they were flat-bottomed with centre boards and could not hold up against the winds.

It would seem the part of wisdom before we engaged in any large expenditure to get the opinion of a naval constructor to see if it is possible that a steamship of 5,000 tons capacity can be built sufficiently strong to stand the ocean voyage and with a draught that will enable her to navigate the lakes and the various harbours on the lakes. Twenty feet is possible. We will find 20 feet depth hard to maintain in all the channels I have named, that is the St. Mary's river, the St. Clair Flats, the lower Detroit river and the harbours through which our traffic must come. I assure the minister he will find the task of securing 20 feet depth outside of Port Colborne harbour over a sufficient area to allow a vessel to come in with safety very costly. In fact 20 feet is not sufficient, because the action of the waves would cause a falling and rising of the vessel which would require 24 feet depth of water. There is an immense area of rock outside of Port Colborne harbour that would have to be dredged over a wide space. If we could settle down to 20 feet depth in the Welland and the Lower St. Lawrence canals, so as to have a continuous passage of 20 feet we would have accomplished a great work. I will make a guess, which the minister may take for what it is worth, that every foot depth which would add to our present 14 feet on our canal system will cost pretty nearly $10,000,000. If you increase the depth from 14 feet to 20 feet, that is 6 feet, it will take $60,000,000. So when you talk of 22 or 25 feet I think you are talking of a physical impossibility. There is the question which came up this afternoon of leaks on these embankments, the enormous amount of water that must be held in retaining walls that may develop faults. I would be glad to hear if the minister had thought out a scheme that would cover our whole canal system. I am speaking of the canals connecting the lakes with a view to maintaining our through trade on the assumption that there will be some interprovincial trade in this country in the years to come. We will try to save enough to keep the canals going at least part of the season.

I think our great object in dealing with our watercourses is to prevent the diversion of our trade at certain points. There is a diversion at Buffalo which is hard to account for. It is difficult to see why we should send wheat through the Erie canal system when we claim to have the cheapest route, but it must be remembered that occasionally a steamship must have outward freight, and will take it at the bare cost of handling or a fraction over. Formerly they would take it for ballast, but in these later days they use water for ballast and the necessity for carrying cargo as ballast is not so great. Agents of these steamship lines could cable to shippers all along the lakes and have a cargo ready which they could carry at rates which none of our vessels could compete with. We must face that condition. Not only have we to face the Erie canal system, but the six or seven lines of double or four track railways from the foot of Lake Erie across to New York harbour carrying 2,500 and 3,000 tons of freight in one train. Those trains are dispatched every 15 minutes, and a train of that kind will be transported from Buffalo to New York harbour, while the canal boat would be getting to Rochester and making the first lockage, and while our vessel navigating our own canal would be still hanging around at the foot of the Welland canal. We have to face that and it requires bigger schemes than we have heard announced in this country; if we are to save our freight for our own vessels, we should do still more. I venture to say that the records of the traffic of the Welland canal will show that in the earliest days of the canals a considerable quantity of American produce, chiefly corn from Chicago and Duluth, passed through that canal. I do not believe the traffic of the Welland canal has increased in the 20 odd years since the enlargement in the same proportion as on any other trade route we have. At the same time we have the property, it is a part of our system of transportation. We have taken a great deal of pride in that system. The history of the Welland canal shows as many other things we have undertaken in this country show, an heroic effort on the part of a few people with small means to build a highway and make it in some sense national. We have gone on in that way. We control the natural outlet to this enormous chain of lakes draining the traffic of ten or eleven of the largest states of the Union and also draining the traffic of our own northwest. The outlet to the ocean follows a natural route without lines of resistance. We simply require to construct a canal so that traffic in sufficient volume may profitably be engaged in. I offer these suggestions and I trust that I have contributed a little to the discussion of the subject. If at any time I can do so I will be only too glad to do my part in furthering this great project. I repeat what I said earlier that this government should have an altogether comprehensive scheme. There is no immediate hurry, the canal is not getting away from us and the traffic is not getting away from us, so that we need not be in too great haste. Let us get all the information, let us get all the figures, and then submit a plan to the House for its consideration.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am very glad, and I am sure the committee will be, that we have had the opportunity of listening to the practical remarks of my hon. friend from Norfolk (Mr. McCall). Those are the kind of remarks that help to the practical solution of these difficulties. I do not agree with him as to losing our traffic at Oswego. I have paid some attention to that question recently and I convinced myself that that danger does not exist practically. As far as I can ascertain the very greatest depth that is practicable from the expense standpoint for a canal leading from Oswego will be 14 feet. The number of days time to get to New York and back is much in excess of the number that it would take to get a cargo to Montreal and so, I think, the Canadian route cannot help but take the traffic. This, to my mind, is important, and I think it accounts in a way for Buffalo getting a large portion of our traffic although we have the better facilities at the present time in so far as the canals are concerned. Up to recent years the St. Lawrence route has, rightly or wrongly, not been considered as safe as it possibly might be and insurance rates have been high. That has been one difficulty. A vast amount of money has been expended upon it, and more will be expended to get a proper and safe depth to Montreal as well as to light the channel thoroughly. In discussing this matter with men who have a more intimate knowledge with it than I have, they have said that insurance rates will be further greatly reduced. In fact at the present time the only great difference is early and late in the season. Then, up to recently, we have not had the facilities at Montreal to handle the traffic that should be poured in there and as a result Buffalo, having the greater advantage, and New York being ready for quick shipment, the Canadian route was at a disadvantage. Under conditions that ought to exist in the future, with enlarged accommodation at ocean ports, and I speak of Montreal as an ocean port, the very enormous expenditure that will be entailed in providing these facilities at New York will tend, I believe, to the advantage of the Montreal route where the facilities can be improved at much less cost.

The other question arises of which my hon. friend speaks, and I desire to place before the committee a view that has been placed before me by men engaged in shipping. They tell me that for practical purposes grain can be carried as cheaply and transhipped at the foot of Lake Ontario as if a larger vessel occupied its time going through the canal system to Montreal and return; in other words, that if the Welland canal were deepened to accommodate the largest and deepest draught vessels the cargo could be taken to Prescott or Kingston at the foot of the Lake, transhipped, into barges taken down through our present canals and the rate would not be any higher, and possibly not as high as if we enlarged these canals and occupied larger and more expensive vessels for a greater length of time going at a slow rate, to say nothing of the dangers that attend large vessels being canaled for long distances. We had this year a rate of 3½ cents, but that was owing to return cargoes which actually were taken at a very small rate.

Mr. SPROULE. That was from Fort William to Montreal?

Mr. GRAHAM. From Fort William to Montreal. But with the Welland canal enlarged, as it has been represented to be by Mr. Richardson of Kingston and several other members of the Marine Association, they believe that a rate could be maintained from Fort William, Port Arthur, or Duluth, to Montreal at a profit to the vessel owners of 3½ cents per bushel. If that would work out it strikes me that the American route could not hope to compete with that rate. If I remember rightly the rate via rail from Buffalo to New York is from 4½ to 6 cents per bushel. The Erie canal, when reconstructed, will only be I think, from 12 to 14 feet. Twelve feet was the first draught mentioned, but I think 14 feet has been discussed since. That canal alone is to cost New York state over $100,000,000.

Mr. SPROULE. They are estimating $101,000,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes something over $100,000,000. That canal, when completed, at the very greatest depth mentioned, will only be the same as our present canals forming part of the St. Lawrence route, and the number of days occupied in going to New York will, I think, render it altogether impossible for that route to compete with the port of Montreal and the St. Lawrence route. No doubt it will have the tendency to compel the railways to carry traffic from Buffalo at a cheaper rate than they have been carrying it. My hon. friend has been giving us some very practical information, and he, being a practical man, I am very glad to have it indeed.

Now, a word as to the depth of the canal. The American government are making any harbours they are deepening 25 feet. They are making the Sault canal 25 feet in depth, and they are enlarging the channel at the entrance to the Detroit river. One of their engineers, in discussing this matter with me not long since, assured me that they proposed to provide all along for 25-foot navigation. That being so, I had it in my mind that if we were going to enlarge the Welland canal we ought to enlarge it to accommodate vessels of 25 feet draught, because, if we enlarged it to 20 feet and in three or four years we were up against the proposition again, that vessels drawing 25 feet of water could not go beyond Port Colborne, and we could not accommodate them, we would be just where we were before. The Welland canal was originally started with 9 foot draught, then it was enlarged to 12 and then finally to 14 feet. In discussing the draught of the canals, I may say in reference to the Georgian bay that Sir Wm. Van Horne at one time expressed the opinion that if it was part of his transportation scheme he would make it 14 feet draught and use barges all the way from the head of Georgian bay to Montreal. I will not discuss that, but I have been assured by more that one shipper that they think very much cheaper transportation could be secured if we deepened the Welland canal to let large lake vessels come down to the foot of Lake Ontario as far as Prescott or Kingston, and use barges from there down. The problem would be solved for many years. I am not adopting that theory, I am simply giving it as I heard it.

Mr. McCALL. The minister has no doubt considered the question of return freight in the shape of coal if the St. Lawrence canal were enlarged. I would like to know how far he has considered this question, and if we cannot have Nova Scotia coal carried as a return cargo from Montreal upwards. In an enlarged canal we could use larger vessels both ways. The time will come when we will have to face the lumber trade on the Pacific ocean. The minister might do well to consider the whole scheme of a continued water-way from the lakes to the ocean, so that a vessel which goes down loaded with grain may come back loaded with Nova Scotia coal.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have discussed the coal problem with Nova Scotia people. Conditions might be changed so that larger vessels could come to Montreal. But so far as the Nova Scotia mines are concerned, they have not been able to place their coal in Ontario at a profit.

Mr. McCALL. It would be desirable if they could.

Mr. GRAHAM. No doubt. They made the experiment, I think trying it as far as Brockville and Belleville. The Grand Trunk railway uses it at some of those points, but I am informed it was not a paying proposition to go any further west than Montreal. Conditions might change if we had, as my hon. friend suggests, larger vessels coming down. At the present time I. presume a return cargo of coal to the west would be carried by a vessel going to Kingston and back from Oswego. A vessel might run from Oswego with coal, and come back with grain to Kingston.

Mr. LENNOX. Can you handle grain in the same vessel as you handle coal?

Mr. GRAHAM. They do it. It is a big problem, and I do not feel like launching out on any project until we have the best information available as to cost.

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). I would like to call attention to the fact that American coal is carried down these present canals and competes in Montreal now with Nova Scotia coal. Now how could you pretend to bring coal up the canal past Montreal and compete against American coal in Ontario? For instance, coal in Montreal is probably worth about a dollar a ton higher than it is in Lake Ontario ports. Nova Scotia coal certainly would never pass Montreal where the market is a dollar higher, and come up and compete in Ontario where coal is a dollar lower.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Huron). What kind of coal is brought through these canals, is it not anthracite?

Mr. SMITH (Stormont). The only coal in which there would be traffic to any extent would be soft coal going down to Montreal. No anthracite could come up from Montreal. Soft coal goes to Montreal now, and competes with Nova Scotia coal.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the minister reached any conclusion as to when that Welland canal is likely to be commenced?

Mr. GRAHAM. I would not say anything except that the government has the matter under serious consideration. The fact that I have no item in here for a complete survey, and the securing of all data, would indicate that possibly before the session is over we might have an item for something of that kind.

Mr. SPROULE. When you decide to have an election you will make up your mind?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend need not be afraid of that just now. These are big problems, and you cannot arrive at a decision in a short time concerning them. But the government is considering both this project and the Georgian Bay canal.

Mr. LENNOX. Does this item comprise all the improvements contemplated at Port Colborne for the present?

Mr GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). I suppose the minister is not going into a large work like that without having well considered the cost of the scheme. We do not want another Quebec bridge disaster. I suppose the minister will not go into this undertaking without fully considering the difference between building a new canal and enlarging the old one.

Mr. GRAHAM. If it were practicable to make the old canal of the dimensions I have indicated in the suggested new canal, and the engineers do not at the moment say that it is, it would cost fully as much, possibly a little more, than to construct a new one.

To widen canal near Welland, $5,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is a very narrow point where several accidents have occurred. This is cleaning up the contract. It will be 125 feet wide.

Williamsburg canal—residence for lockmaster at Morrisburg, $3,200.

Mr. GRAHAM. Before the canal was enlarged we had a very disreputable little house which had not been occupied for years. The lockmaster lives at a distance from the lock, and it is considered that in the interest of navigation we should have a residence near it. This covers the whole expense.

Chambly canal—macadamizing road, $16,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is the minister going in for good roads?

Mr. GRAHAM. As a matter of fact, this is a work we have been doing. Up to 1910 we spent $23,000 on it. When the canal was constructed, the road was placed in a new position, and we had to construct practically a new road. It was estimated that it would cost $39,000. We have spent $23,000, and this vote is to complete the work. The road is a highway.

Mr. LENNOX. How much does it cost per mile on the average?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think between $3,000 and $4,000.

Mr. SPROULE. This commits you to a perpetual maintenance of this road, which is really a provincial highway and ought to be constructed from other sources.

Mr. GRAHAM. Wherever a canal interferes with a highway, the government has to place the highway in as good a condition as we found it. It does not follow that we have to maintain it for all time to come. It becomes a provincial or municipal highway.

Mr. LENNOX. This is really an altogether different class of highway from the one the government displaced, I assume.

There would be no highway in that locality which would cost anything like $4,000 a mile.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think the government ought to make a good highway even if there was not a good one there before.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). How long is it?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think about 4 miles to complete. There were 6 or 7 miles before.

Cornwall canal—enlarging canal office, $5,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is necessary from the fact that we are concentrating our office-work for the Williamsburg canal and the whole system at Cornwall.

Mr. LENNOX. How much have you spent on this before?

Mr. GRAHAM. The office has been there a good many years. The present building cost about $6,000. We are practically doubling the size of it. This will include everything.

Cornwall canal—improving upper entrance, lock 17, $24,400.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is already under contract. The amount of the original estimate was $55,000. Up to September 30, 1910, we spent $27,680.54. The work, figured at the contractor's prices, will cost between $55,000 and $60,000. The contract is let after public tender.

Cornwall canal—improving upper entrance, lock 19, $16,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. Last year we took a vote of $5,000. The work was to be done by the canal staff. We spent $4,826. The balance of the work is so large, that we ought to advertise for tenders for it.

Reinforcing bank at Robertson's culvert, Cornwall, $3,500.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is one of the cases where there has been a leakage in the canal bank, and it is absolutely necessary to stop it as soon as possible.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Is this being done by contract?

Mr. GRAHAM. No; we can do that better with our staff, perhaps engaging a few extra men.

Removing high spots from prism of canal, Cornwall, $3,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. This will complete the work which was under contract.

Farran's Point—improving lower entrance, $65,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is one of the most difficult locks to enter from the east owing to the very strong eddy there. The eddies along the shore are one of the most difficult things vessel men have to contend with. After a good deal of consultation with the vessel men, our staff think they can undertake the work at a cost of about $65,000, and thus save the shipping men from much difficulty in coming from the east. The work proposed is to run a crib pier down the north side and surmount that with a concrete wall. That will enable vessels to make the entrance from the east without the difficulty they now experience from the eddy. The work will cost $65,000 when completed. Tenders will be advertised for.

Improving upper entrance lock 28, Galops canal, $52,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is to dredge off the slope of the south canal bank and replace it by cribwork and concrete the approach wall. The vessel men complain of difficulty with the southwest wind at that entrance, and this work will obviate that trouble. Total expenditure about $65,000.

Mr. LENNOX. Why not undertake the whole thing this year?

Mr. GRAHAM. We are asking for all we can possibly expend.

Rebuilding dock at Cardinal, $2,100.

Mr. GRAHAM. This was a river dock at the head of Cardinal. This dock was of use to vessels coming east. Vessels going west go through the canal. It is on the bank of the old canal.

Concrete walls, &c., Lachine, $42,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is to complete the work between lock 2 and St. Gabriel basin. The sheds have been remodelled the last two years except a portion of shed No. 2, St. Gabriel. This amount of $42,000 is expected to finish the work. The work will be advertised and let by tender.

Dredging Murray canal, $15,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. This will be done under contract. A deputation waited on me to-day from Belleville urging the deepening of the Murray canal to 14 feet. This vote is not for that purpose, but to take out the sand and material which has really drifted in. The present depth is only 11 feet. We shall have to consider the advisability of making it 14 feet. Belleville is becoming important as a manufacturing centre, it has large cement works, and there is a good deal of traffic going through the Murray canal. At present vessels drawing 14 feet of water through the St. Lawrence canals cannot get through the Murray, and the question is whether we ought not to consider deepening the Murray to 14 feet.

Mr. LENNOX. Will this be let by tender?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

To build scow, Murray canal, $1,800.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is for our repair work in the canal.

Canals—Quebec—dredging, $22,500.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is for Soulanges, St. Ours, Ste. Anne, Carillon, Grenville and Chambly. It is to keep the channel clean.

Mr. LENNOX. It is perpetual then?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, we have to have a vote every year. Of this, $12,000 is to be spent on the Lachine canal, $4,500 on Chambly, and $6,000 among the others.

Canals—Quebec—macadamizing two miles of public road, Hungry bay dike, $15,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is an expensive affair. This Hungry bay dyke was built in 1856 to protect the lands against high water owing to dams at the head of the Beauharnois canal. The road has become impassable, and two years ago the work was begun of rebuilding it. The expenditure up to September last was $11,000.

Mr. LENNOX. What is the total length of the road?

Mr. GRAHAM. We are remodelling about eight miles of it. The total estimated cost is $40,000.

Mr. LENNOX. Was there not any way to get around, instead of spending this enormous sum of money on this road? And are we to understand that this is a road substituted for some other road taken by the government?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is under arrangements made years ago. We had to build a dyke and maintain it for the protection of the farms, and by agreement we have to maintain a road in good condition upon it. It has been patched and patched, and we have been trying to make a job of it.

Mr. LENNOX. It seems to be a job.

Mr. GRAHAM. We are going to make a good job of it.

Mr. LENNOX. But it has been a bad job hitherto.

Mr. GRAHAM. Anyhow we want to make a complete job this time. My deputy who is a pretty good judge of roads, says this is the best way to do it—to make a good road while we are about it.

Mr. LENNOX. Is it done by contract?

Mr. GRAHAM. The materials are delivered under contract, and we do the spreading and rolling ourselves.

Mr. TAYLOR. (Leeds). In the summer time?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Then, you cannot use your canal men to do the work; you are simply jobbing it out?

Mr. GRAHAM. No, we have had a repair staff on this work for a year or two.

Mr. LENNOX. How do you finish it? Is it paved?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is just a well-rolled, crushed-stone road. Perhaps I am wrong, but I have the idea that where a government does a piece of work of this kind, it ought to be a little bit of an object lesson to those who may contemplate building a road.

Mr. LENNOX. They would never build it like that.

Mr. EDWARDS. It would bankrupt them if they did.

Mr. GRAHAM. We do not know the effect of a good example in road-building or in anything else. If the people see a really good thing, they will imitate it sooner or later. This work bears about the same relation to a poor road as a granolithic pavement does to a plank sidewalk—it costs more at first, but it is economy in the end

Mr. SPROULE. Is not this in contradiction of the statement the minister made some time ago that the government was not responsible for the maintenance of the road?

Mr. GRAHAM. This is a special agreement. When we raised the water, the government of that day had to enter into an agreement to maintain this road on the dyke.

Canals—Quebec—protection walls north and south side of Lake St. Francis, $8,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is a vote that has to be taken year after year, as the action of the waters makes repairs necessary.

Mr. LENNOX. Are we to understand that the minister waits until damage is done before taking action? Or is the minister carrying on a certain work to protect the banks?

Mr. GRAHAM. Along the lake shore, it is a little difficult to say just where the work is necessary until damage from the action of the water is threatened. It is difficult to make an estimate. This is to protect the lake shore.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Why do you protect the lake shore?

Mr. GRAHAM. This government, for purposes of navigation, has raised the water on the lands at different points, and that is why we undertook in a measure to protect the shores at points where the waters are likely to injure the farm owners.

Mr. LENNOX. How much has been expended?

Mr. GRAHAM. $4,500 last year, $8,000 this year. This vote started some 25 years ago, and there is a small amount every year.

Mr. LENNOX. Would it not be cheaper to pay the farmers for land damages once for all?

Mr. GRAHAM. Along the St. Lawrence route it costs a lot of money to pay damages.

Mr. EDWARDS. Has the department been called upon to pay damages for land anywhere along the canal?

Mr. GRAHAM. Not of recent years.

Mr. EDWARDS. The minister knows why I am inquiring.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will have it looked up.

Mr. EDWARDS. The minister might take into consideration again the position in the neighbourhood of Wolfe lake, township of Bedford. Damage is caused to a road there every year from a dam built by the government. I do not think the dam was ever any use, and if some one were to blow it out I doubt if any one would want to have it replaced.

Mr. GRAHAM. Some one would want the contract. I have a note of my hon. friend's request somewhere.

Rapide Plat, dredging, $7,500.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is to clean up this canal which is opposite Morrisburg. There is some cleaning to be done all the way down the canal.

Mr. BRODER. Is any work being done at the upper or western entrance to the canal?

Mr. GRAHAM. The next vote, 'Improving lower entrance, lock 24, $45,000,' is to improve the lower entrance, lock 24. This work at the lower entrance will cost in the vicinity of $100,000. The work at the lower entrance is being done at the request of the steamship men.

Rideau canal, rebuilding bridges at Old Slys and Oliver's Ferry, $3,500.

Mr. EDWARDS. Will that complete the rebuilding?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is supposed it will.

Mr. EDWARDS. Has the minister received requests from the lockmen along the Rideau canal for an increase of pay? How does their pay compare with that of men on other canals? I believe that their hours are 24 per day, that they must be ready at any time to give their services to that work. Some of these men have written me to bring this matter to the attention of the minister. Consideration should be given to the length of time they are on duty.

Mr. GRAHAM. One question I can answer quite readily. Every body on the Rideau canal has asked for an increase of pay. It is true they have to be ready any time to pass a boat through, but navigation on the Rideau canal at night is not extensive, and the men are not prevented by their work on the canal from engaging in other vocations. Some of them have small farms. I am just pointing that out to you that when we say a 24-hour service it may be that they are not overworked with the night traffic on the Rideau canal. When we get to the votes for the staff, I am asking for an additional amount and the department is taking into consideration the lockmen on the canals.

Mr. BRODER. It seems to me that it would be wise to give these men more permanency. Lock labourers should be given wages throughout the year, and have permanent work. It is not easy for these men to get other employment. The general impression seems to be that they are already well paid and, therefore, it is difficult for them to get other work.

Mr. EDWARDS. I am glad to hear the minister say that the matter of increased pay to the staff is under advisement. The statement of my hon. friend from Dundas (Mr. Broder) is one that should receive serious consideration. It is true that the traffic on the Rideau canal is not as great as it is on the other canals, it is true that the actual labour of locking through boats is not very great, but the fact remains that these men are required to be on duty for the whole 24 hours. They must be ready whenever they are called upon no matter what the time may be. It may be true that there are not many vessels going through at night, but the fact that they are always liable to be called should be taken into consideration, and the fact that for a part of the year they are out of employment should also be remembered in considering the wages that these men should receive. There are not very many of them on the Rideau canal. I am not speaking from personal acquaintance with very many of them, but what I have stated has been represented to me by the men at Kingston Mills.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is correct too.

Mr. EDWARDS. I really think that their claim is a just one and should be given consideration. The men ought to get more pay.

Mr. GRAHAM. We will consider them all. I am asking for an increased vote for the labourers on the canal.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I want to draw the minister's attention to the fact that within the last three or four years, since gasolene has become a motive power, the lockages have more than trebled on the Rideau canal.

Mr. GRAHAM. I imagine there is something in that.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). The lockmasters and lock labourers are on duty almost night and day. This is especially true at Newboro and Jones' Falls. Now that the Department of Marine is lighting the Rideau canal the night traffic is nearly as great as that during the day. The minister says that many of these men have little farms. That is not the case. I have several locks of the Rideau canal in my county and these lock labourers start work in the spring, are discharged in the fall and have practically nothing to do in the winter. They ought to be employed permanently. There is lots of work to do on the canal during winter, repairing, mason work and work calling for labourers.

Mr. HARTY. Quarrying.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Quarrying. These men should be put upon a permanent basis. A few years ago nearly all the lock labourers were discharged, and new men put in their places because the men who had been employed there were not of the same political faith as the minister. Although they had been employed for a great many years, they were told that their engagement was only for the season, and they could put new men on in the spring. They are practically working 24 hours now, and they have to live in their clothes all the time ready to jump. If a gasolene launch whistles they have to come down and let her through. Their work has increased and the minister should take these things into account and give them largely increased pay and employment all the year round.

Mr. GRAHAM. In figuring out the pay we have a record of the lockages, and we will take that into consideration. With regard to what my hon. friends say as to yearly employment, I am afraid that if we were to do that, and these men were standing round doing nothing and drawing their pay people would think, even more than they do now, that the government was too generous.

Mr. BRODER. I suppose the hon. gentleman is aware that the Sheet Steel Company of Morrisburg have men employed during the winter to look after the ice?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is not part of our contract to do that work. They would have to do that anyway.

Mr. GRAHAM.

Mr. BRODER. You rent the water and do not give it to them.

Mr. GRAHAM. In repairing our canals early in the spring, we give the men of the regular staff the first chance to work, and a good many of them are employed on repair work for quite a while before navigation opens.

Mr. EDWARDS. There is another matter which I would like to mention. I have been told that the minister is quite an enthusiastic yachtsman. At all events he will know that I am correct in stating that probably there is no more picturesque waterway in Canada than the Rideau canal and its connections. I have heard American tourists say that from Kingston to Ottawa there is the most picturesque stretch of water that they have ever seen in their lives. The beauty of that waterway, however, is marred by unsightly stumps all along the line. I do not know whether it is feasible, but it seems to me that after navigation closes in the fall, a sufficient amount of water might be let off so that men could go in and remove these stumps entirely. You would then have between Kingston and Ottawa the most attractive waterway probably to be found in all North America. I cannot undertake to say whether it is feasible or not, but it seems possible that something along that line should be done.

Mr. GRAHAM. It could be done, but it would be pretty expensive. It is worthy of thinking about. The stumps do detract from the beauty of the route.

Mr. EDWARDS. I do not think it would be expensive at all. It would not cost any more than letting the water off. I believe you could get any amount of people who would be glad to go in there, cut the wood out and take it away.

Mr. GRAHAM. If it were only the canal it might be feasible, but if these stumps are in the lakes it would be very difficult to let sufficient water off.

Sault Ste. Marie—rebuilding north entrance pier, upper entrance, $28,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. I explained this work this afternoon while the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Boyce) was in. We are building a portion of this pier, about 300 feet out of capital. This is a portion of the same pier that has been in a dilapidated condition. We are building this portion out of the amount.

Mr. LENNOX. Is this the total amount required?

Mr. GRAHAM. The estimated cost is about $68,000, with the original appropriation.

Tug, $9,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is a steel patrol boat to be used for the purpose of preventing more boats from entering than can be accommodated at the piers. A year or two ago we had an accident there owing to carelessness. Boats will crowd in, particularly at the Soo, where there has been a congestion, merely in order to get the lock. We propose to have a tug that will patrol to the west as a police boat, and see that no greater number of vessels go into the entrance to the lock than can be accommodated safely.

Improvements, $15,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is for new lock gates, derricks, scow and repairs to dam. We have expended $163,000, and require this year to expend about $15,000.

Mr. LENNOX. How do your lock gates at St. Mary's and our system generally compare with those on the American side? Could the minister tell what tonnage has been locked through that canal last year, and to what extent the traffic is increasing?

Mr. GRAHAM. The size of the lock on the Canadian side is 860 x 60. Our draught is now 20 feet. The traffic through the Soo canal has increased enormously during the last ten years, something like 600 per cent. The American side has now two canals and is building a third. Our canal at the present time has a little deeper draught than their deepest. Their new canal is providing for a draught of 25 feet. After their canal is constructed they will have better accommodation for deep draught vessels than we have. Our immense traffic going through the last few years is due to the fact that a little heavier vessel can go through the Canadian lock than can go through the American lock.

Mr. LENNOX. Does our government contemplate any change in the channel?

Mr. GRAHAM. It all depends on the results of the new lock on the American side when it is built. It may be that will accommodate traffic to such an extent that we will not be compelled for the present at least to build an additional canal. The suggestion has been made that we should build another canal besides the one we have, with a 25 foot draught. My own view is that we should not do this until we see what the result will be in the new 25 foot draught canal on the American side. We have been carrying their traffic for several years, a great portion of it.

Mr. LENNOX. What has been done in the last few years in the way of dockage accommodation in the neighbourhood of the canal, at the lower entrance? And what about the channel? I understand the channel was not very satisfactory down below the gates. Three or four years ago when I was there it was pointed out to me that there was very poor dockage accommodation, and that the channel was not in good shape.

Mr. GRAHAM. Practically all our traffic is handled at the platform at the lock. We have a pier at the lower entrance, though not an extravagant one, that will have to be repaired or rebuilt. It is not a dock of large dimensions. But outside of that the Railways and Canals Department has no docks.

Mr. LENNOX. I thought it was about as dilapidated and unsightly a place as I had ever seen. What docks there were seemed to be in very poor state of construction, everything seemed to be in confusion, and compared badly with the appearance of things on the other side. Where we come into direct competition with our American neighbours in the striking way we do at the Soo, it is worth something that Canada should present an appearance as good as is presented on the other side. To my mind, three or four years ago, the contrast was very painful indeed. I think the government could and should do something in the way of improving conditions round about the Sault canal, particularly below the gate.

Mr. GRAHAM. As I have explained, the only property we own is a small wharf at the lower side, which ought to be reconstructed. The United States government are practically making a small park in connection with their canal grounds. I have an idea that the Canadian government ought to do something of that kind where they have ground, so that it will look respectable at least. I am instructing the staff at the Sault to spend a reasonable amount of money this year in beautifying the ground.

Mr. LENNOX. At least 75 per cent of the people who see one shore will see the other, and they are very apt to draw contrasts between the two, and I think Canada is big enough and important enough to be able to make the conditions about the Sault canal more attractive than they are.

Mr. GRAHAM. In the year 1908 there passed through the Sault canal 12,759,216 tons, and in 1909, 27,861,245 tons.

St. Peter's canal—improvements, $150,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. This canal is 2,400 feet long and it connects St. Peter's bay with the Bras d'Or lakes. My late deputy, Mr. Butler, had an examination made of this canal, and we took a vote of $25,000 with which it was thought at first we could make some repairs. After he had an engineer look over it thoroughly, he came to the conclusion that there was no use attempting to repair it, that we would have to make new lock gates and make a complete job of the whole thing.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the total expenditure on this up to date?

Mr. GRAHAM. It was started away before confederation. I am told that about $800,000 has been expended on it altogether. The walls and locks are practically worn out, and we have to rebuild it.

Mr. LENNOX. Are you changing the depth?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think there is no provision for that. The locks will probably accommodate a little larger boats, but the canal has a depth of 18 feet now. It is estimated that one scheme will cost $260,000 and another $300,000.

Mr. LENNOX. Has not the minister adopted one scheme, or is it possible to begin the work first?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think the scheme will be the $300,000 scheme. My own opinion is that the most permanent way of doing the work is the cheapest in the end.

Mr. LENNOX. What is the difference between the two schemes?

Mr. GRAHAM. The $260,000 scheme would involve the repairing of the present canal and stopping navigation while doing it. The $300,000 scheme would mean making a new entrance and building another canal beside the present one. The old canal could be used while the new one was being constructed. One canal will be as good as the other when completed.

Mr. BLAIN. How did the old canal get into such a bad state of repair—through anybody's neglect?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is an old-timer, and timber was used in its construction.

Mr. LENNOX. What are you going to build the new one of?

Mr. GRAHAM. Concrete.

Trent canal—improvements, $74,500.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is for the usual improvements which we make year by year with our own staff. Last year we spent to the 30th of September, $35,000.

Mr. SEXSMITH. What are the repairs this year?

Mr. GRAHAM. They are as follows:

Dredging—
Between Kirkfield lift lock and Lake Simcoe	$ 5,000
Lake Simcoe at Gamebridge, entrance to canal	2,500
Otonabee river, between Peterborough and Rice lake	5,000
Sturgeon lake, Lindsay river	$ 4,000
Between Lakefield and Peterborough, including Little lake	2,000
Rip-rapping Balsam lake, Lake Simcoe division	4,000
Duplicate lock gates	5,000
Reservoir waters, Jumbo lake, township of Glemorgan	9,000
Reservoir waters, Sheldon lake, township of Lutterworth	4,000
Reservoir waters, Percy lake, Paint lake and Bedstone lake dams	4,000
Reservoir waters, Long lake, township of Burleigh (two dams)	4,000
Entrance piers at Buckhorn locks, two piers above and one below	4,000
Lockmaster's houses, Peterborough lift lock	4,000
Moving bridge at Fenelon Falls	2,000
Purchase of land, &c., filling flume and repairs to lock, Bobcaygeon	15,000
	$74,500

Mr. LENNOX. I desire to bring to the minister's attention work that requires to be done at Bradford. The people there do not approve of that piece of work towards Newmarket, not because it is leading to a rival town, but because they think it an unjustifiable expenditure. If, however, there was anything that would mitigate the offence, it would be to show some little justice to the town of Bradford. The minister promised to investigate and find out what it would cost to run a channel up from the Devil's Elbow to the neighbourhood of the railway station, but so far has done nothing. The navigation of Lake Simcoe is very considerable, and the navigation of the Holland river from Lake Simcoe down through the Trent valley system would be good right up to the town of Bradford if the minister would construct that half mile of channel. That would not cost a great deal, and would cost a good deal less if the work were carried on at the same time as the other stretch from the river down to Newmarket. The minister has put it off from time to time, and I think he ought to deal with that matter now. In South Simcoe we have not asked for any public expenditure and do not propose to ask for any unless it be an expenditure absolutely justifiable in every respect. I cannot understand how any argument could be urged against this small expenditure in the interests of the people of Bradford, and I trust the hon. gentleman will see that some provision be made during this session for the carrying on of this work.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have not forgotten the matter to which my hon. friend refers, but have it in my mind. We have not come to the item for No. 1 section of the Holland river yet, but I believe we can do that work ourselves better than by letting it out on contract. We are now figuring out a scheme which will enable us to have a plant to do that work on the Holland river and then utilize it for the Bradford work.

Mr. HUGHES. Do the Bradford work first.

Mr. GRAHAM. I believe we could take a plant of our own for channels of that kind without a very large expenditure. I believe we could use our own dredge to do just this kind of work, and Bradford is one of the places I had in mind when trying to work out that scheme.

Mr. HUGHES. Is the Newmarket channel not being done by contract?

Mr. GRAHAM. There are two sections, Nos. 1 and 2. No. 1 is the section I have been discussing, from the lake up to Holland Landing. The same dredge which would do that work could be utilized to make a channel up to Bradford.

Mr. HUGHES. You could take a dredge and dredge the channel to Bradford in two months.

Mr. LENNOX. In my opinion there is no possibility of the government proceeding to build the Newmarket canal until after another election, for this reason. If that canal were completed, its unwisdom would be self-evident, but at present we can only assume that it will be useless. I do not think, therefore, that the government will place us in a position of being able to show absolutely that it is of no use—at least not until after the next election. Am I to understand that the minister now says definitely that he is determined to cut that little channel from the point I have mentioned up to Bradford? And if so, about what time may we expect the work to be commenced?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think I have made all the statements I can reasonably be asked to make, and that my hon. friend ought to be —I will not say, thankful—greatly encouraged, because, though I am sure he thought I had forgotten it I have kept it in mind. If he is patient, he will find that the work into Bradford will be done, not by contract, but by ourselves.

Mr. LENNOX. Nothing in the estimates this year?

Mr. GRAHAM. No.

Mr. HUGHES. Some time ago I drew attention to the fact that in the early years the waters of Hollow lake flowed down Gull river and into the Trent waters and so onwards. But, years ago, the lumberers changed the flow of many of the waters in that locality. The first change was to divert them down the Black river. Later on, about 1850, when lumbering became brisk about Bracebridge, the waters were blockaded into both the Gull river systems and the Black river system, down Muskoka. For years, in periods of high water, there were two outlets from Hollow lake, one through Muskoka, and one down the overflow into Gull lake and the Trent waters, flowing, often, even where they had dammed up the Gull waters. There are indications there yet of where they have to dam these waters. I drew the attention of the Ontario government also to this matter, and I was sent a very nice map with data by the engineers, showing that in 1860, the outlet had been found as it is now. Of course, I am prepared to go into the matter at any time, and also to go over the ground with the engineers, and have levels taken and demonstrate that every statement I have made is borne out by the facts. I got it from men who, in the early days travelled in canoes down the river at a time when the Gull river waters were the only outlet of Hollow lake—except that in high waters there was some flow into Muskoka. The entrance into the Muskoka was lowered by a number of feet so that the main flow went by the Muskoka way. What has the minister (Mr. Graham) to say about it?

Mr. GRAHAM. At the request of the hon. member (Mr. Hughes), I had some correspondence with, and communicated with the Ontario government, and I think the reply they sent me was a copy of the letter written by my hon. friend.

Mr. HUGHES. No, I sent it.

Mr. GRAHAM. In any case, we sent an engineer on the ground, and I expect his report in a short time. When I get it, I will confer with my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes).

Mr. HUGHES. If the engineer has not gone, I would like to have half an hour's conversation with him before he goes.

Mr. GRAHAM. He has gone.

Mr. HUGHES. I asked the minister to let me know first. I could have given the engineer some pointers, knowing the country as I do.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is not so far but that, if he has made a mistake, we can send him back. When I get his report, I will have him confer with my hon. friend.

Mr. HUGHES. The minister is putting in reservoir dams for the Trent navigation and for manufacturing purposes. I would like to point out that the system could probably be improved without injuring the scenic beauty of the region. One instance is the very excellent dam being constructed at Redstone lake. That lake, like others, has two outlets, one by Redstone river into Grass lake, and the other into Eagle lake. This dam is being constructed on the Eagle lake side, and there is another dam at the Redstone river end. Now, Redstone lake is certainly one of the most beautiful lakes in the world. Any one who has seen the Swiss lakes and the lakes of the Highlands of Scotland will admit that Redstone lake is unsurpassed for beauty. But many of the most beautiful beaches of that lake will be under water for a number of weeks in the early summer, and also the foliage will be destroyed, if the water is kept at a high level. I do not think it necessary to raise the water so high; means could be devised for storing the water in other ways without spoiling the beauty of the place, or injuring property that will be of value in the future. I could give the engineers my ideas on the subject, and they could do no harm, for I know the country very well. I have talked with the officials of the government on this subject, who are doing their best, looking after everything in as proper a spirit as could be expected. I think these things could be done in a proper way.

Mr. GRAHAM. I agree with my hon. friend.

Mr. HUGHES. I noticed an item in the estimates for cleaning up the Lindsay river. It is the Scugog river—but that is a detail. Is this work to be done above or below Lindsay?

Mr. GRAHAM. For taking out the deadheads below Lindsay.

Mr. HUGHES. What policy has the minister in that regard? I have pointed out not only to the present minister, but to several of his predecessors, both Conservative and Liberal, that a system could be devised to rid these waters of deadheads, these sunken logs which rise when the water is disturbed by the wheel of a passing steamer, and the even more dangerous ones with one end at the bottom and the other floating. When a man owns a yacht costing him from $600 to $2,000, it is not pleasant to have a hole stove in her by an old log. The lumbermen object to having these logs confiscated. But they are very dangerous to navigation. Many boats and canoes are upset and yachts are damaged—I have had my own boat smashed two or three times. But if a system were adopted under which any person could take one of these logs to the mill owner and give him the opportunity to pay 50 cents and take the log or leave it to the ownership of the man who found it, these waters would soon be cleared of these logs. Of course, if this sum were paid for a floating log, men might be tempted to take them out of the booms, but that could be easily provided for. At present, ten cents is allowed for one of these logs, but at that rate it does not pay. But with gasolene launches multiplying every year, with hundreds of them plying those waters, scores of which are damaged every summer by these logs, something should be done to rid the waters of these dangerous obstructions.

Mr. GRAHAM. We are considering a regulation for the Trent canal, by which we will take these logs out and charge the owners 50 cents each. If the owner does not want to pay, he does not get the logs.

Mr. HUGHES. At Ancona, where the Canadian Pacific railway touches Sturgeon lake, the minister's officers are planning to build a little wharf. I presume that is included in this or some other vote?

Mr. GRAHAM. The Public Works Department make the grant, but they allow us to spend the money for them.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The minister knows there has been complaint about the keeping of the bridge at Cardinal?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend spoke to me, and instructions were given to put snow on the bridge. I suppose it has been done.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Can the minister say it has been done?

Mr. GRAHAM. Instructions were given to do so. If they have not been carried out I would like to have my attention drawn to it.

Mr. HUGHES. There is an item for the repair of Fenelon Falls bridge. What is that?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is proposed to move the present wooden bridge a sufficient distance away from the lock to prevent the operating of the lock interfering with traffic on the bridge.

Mr. HUGHES. That will not meet the difficulty. The bridge now is opposite the main street running north and south and unless you had a high protection wall there would be danger of accidents. It would be better to leave the present bridge where it is and construct another higher up; then traffic could use either bridge and there would never be a blockade.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is worth looking into, and we will look into it.

Mr. HUGHES. The Scugog river above Lindsay is badly in need of dredging. That district is largely used as a summer resort by Toronto people, and there are many pleasure yachts on the river. There has not been much heavy traffic there, and there are a lot of weeds in the channel and some logs. I understand that the minister's officers have a plan for cleaning out the logs and the weeds below Lindsay, and I would like to have them at the same time look into the conditions above Lindsay.

Mr. GRAHAM. There is no difficulty in what my hon. friend proposes. For years there has been a discussion between the people of Port Perry and some others as to the depth of water in Scugog lake. The Port Perry people think we are draining the water off that lake.

Mr. HUGHES. You have been. That is why I proposed to have a double lock at Lindsay to prevent waste. The Port Perry people have been complaining that the water at Lindsay has been allowed to get down three feet below the dam.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think they have that provided for now.

Mr. FOWKE. I think it is generally understood that since the construction of the new lock the water will be raised all the way to Port Perry. I understand there is some conflict as to jurisdiction as to which department will do the work on Scugog river. The Minister of Marine has kindly said he will send up his engineers to investigate with a view to dredging, and also putting up lights along the way.

Mr. HUGHES. Scugog lake and river have always been under the Railways and Canals Department.

Mr. FOWKE. We have reasonably good assurance that something will be done at the opening of spring.

Highway bridge at Jane street, Welland, $2,500.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is for a small steel bridge which we will buy and have put up by our own staff.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the bridge for?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is over the raceway in connection with the canal.

Mr. BLAIN. For vehicles?

Mr. GRAHAM. The bridge will be for vehicles and foot passenger traffic.

Welland canal—stone protection to banks, $10,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is for stone protection to banks. The high waters of Lake Erie injure the protection and we have to keep repairing it from time to time.

Mr. LENNOX. Is there much of this to be done?

Mr. GRAHAM. We spent up to March 31, 1909, $446, and up to March 31, 1910, $9,000. We have spent up to September 30, 1910, $298. This is nearly all a revote.

Mr. LENNOX. It is not said to be a revote at all.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is nearly all a revote. We did not get sufficiently low water this year to enable us to spend more than $298 out of last year's vote.

Mr. LENNOX. It is not specified to be a revote; does that occasion any complication or difficulty?

Mr. GRAHAM. No; it is just lapsed.

Mr. LENNOX. No danger of the money going wrong?

Mr. GRAHAM. The Auditor General would not allow us to take a farthing of it even if we wanted to.

Williamsburg canal—building entrance pier, old lock 23, $1,500.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is for repairing the entrance pier to the old lock at Morrisburg.

Mr. LENNOX. This seems to be much cheaper than work of this kind generally.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is an old lock that we have to keep in repair. It is really beyond repair and 'replacing' perhaps would be the proper word to use.

Iron mooring posts, $2,500.

Mr. GRAHAM. These are iron mooring posts along the Williamsburg canal.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What did they use before?

Mr. GRAHAM. In my time we had the old wooden snubbing posts that we used to sit on as boys.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is a pity you are not sitting on one now.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have a better post now.

New machinery, $1,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is to buy a new suction, centrifugal pump with engine.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Where will this be purchased?

Mr. GRAHAM. We will ask for offers from the various pump men, and then we will have to leave it to our mechanical department to say which is the best one.

Mr. SPROULE. You will not purchase it from Merwin?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not know the man.

Mr. BLAIN. Will you invite public competition?

Mr. GRAHAM. One thousand dollars is not a very large amount to spend much on advertising. We will write to several dealers and get their best figures.

Mr. BLAIN. Who are on the list to supply these?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have no list for these.

Mr. BLAIN. How does my hon. friend in his department know where to send?

Mr. GRAHAM. We have directories and that kind of thing. The political persuasion of the men with whom we deal does not make any difference when we are buying goods for the public. We have a purchasing agent who attends to that fairly well.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister does not seem to have learned anything from his associates. He does not understand things as they do.

Mr. GRAHAM. Well, I am slow in some things.

Railways and Canals—miscellaneous—arbitration and awards, $4,000.

Mr. LENNOX. You have a vote every year?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes. We have just spent a few hundred dollars this year.

Mr. LENNOX. This is not said to be a revote?

Mr. GRAHAM. No; it is a vote that we take every year.

Mr. LENNOX. If you take a vote of, say, $4,000, and only spend $500 I would suppose there will be a revote of $3,500.

Mr. GRAHAM. This estimate is made up in September, and we cannot tell how much will be expended before the end of the year. Perhaps the whole $4,000 may be expended before March 31, and we would be misleading the committee if we called it a revote, because we might expend it or a great deal of it.

Mr. LENNOX. How much was spent last year?

Mr. GRAHAM. Less than $500.

Mr. LENNOX. How much the year before?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is in the annual report.

Mr. LENNOX. What are these arbitrations generally about?

Mr. GRAHAM. I will try to get the details of one case and show my hon. friend what they are.

Mr. LENNOX. I was only wanting to see the class of things that you refer to arbitration.

Mr. GRAHAM. We might have a dispute as to a water-power on a canal, or flooded land, or an old claim in connection with some canal. These things are constantly arising.

Board of Railway Commissioners of Canada—maintenance and operation of the, $138,000.

Mr. LENNOX. I see that $121,400 was voted last year. Was that all spent?

Mr. GRAHAM. Every cent of it was expended.

Mr. GRAHAM.

Mr. LENNOX. How was it expended?

Mr. GRAHAM (reading):

Staff and secretary's office	$ 3,650
Assistant secretary to the staff	4,700
Chief engineer with four assistants	15,950
Traffic officer and staff	15,100
Operating officer and staff	18,400

Our operating officer, Mr. Nixon, is a new appointment; he was appointed last year.

We divided the traffic department from the operating department, and put a man at the head of that staff. His duty is to decide questions where there is a dispute as to what the railways ought to do in matters of operating. For instance, at a level crossing of two railways the commission decides the kind of connection or crossing; there we must have a man acquainted with railway operations who could tell the railways what it was possible to do. Mr. Nixon is an operating man who has come up from all the lower grades. He was a superintendent on the Grand Trunk.

Mr. LENNOX. When they want to make connection between two lines would he have anything to do with that?

Mr. GRAHAM. He would be the man to decide disputes as to the practicability of the junction. I will read to the committee a list of the various officials employed on the board, with their salaries:

Staff in secretary's office	$ 3,650
Assistant secretary and staff	4,700
Chief engineer, 4 assistants and staff	15,950
Traffic officer and staff	15,100
Operating officer and staff	18,400
Law clerk	2,600
Record officer and staff	8,850
Private secretary to Chief Commissioner	2,000
Stenographers (12)	8,150
Messengers (4)	2,650
Official reporting	12,550
Official car	3,000
Printing	2,000
Stationery	5,000
Board and staff's travelling expenses	12,000
Telephone and telegraph	1,500
Outside service, persons not appointed by order in council	2,000
Contingencies	10,000
Increase in salary expenditure	8,000
Total	$138,100

Expended at September 30, $61,296.36.

That is the estimate for this year, and we have some increases. The operating staff is enlarged this year. The commissioners' salaries authorized by statute are $55,000, in addition to the $138,000.

Mr. BLAIN. What was the total cost of the Railway Board last year?

Mr. GRAHAM. $162,000; that includes everything.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you the staff complete now?

Mr. GRAHAM. The staff is complete at the present time. But the chairman of the board is recommending the appointment of three men who will act as inspectors of rolling stock. There have been a good many complaints, and the question was raised in the House in reference to locomotives, and the head of the operating department thinks we ought to have three practical men in different parts of the country who would be competent, one of them at least, to jump on a locomotive and see if it was what it ought to be before it left the shop. That is for the protection of the lives of the travelling public as well as of railway employees. To-morrow morning we have an appointment with representatives of the employees of railways in Canada, and I imagine it is something along the lines I have been indicating. The chairman of the board is appointing three such men to make the rolling stock more secure than it is at present.

Mr. SPROULE. Are you going to take those men out of the present staff?

Mr. GRAHAM. The staff is kept as busy as any staff you can find in the city of Ottawa. I have not interfered with the appointments by the board. I seldom know who their appointee is until they recommend him to me, and I take it to Council. The Governor in Council appoints on the recommendation of the board.

Mr. LENNOX. What is the board doing in regard to railway crossings? How many railway crossings have been separated during the last year, and what money has been expended? Also, what is the board doing to ascertain which crossings should be taken up and dealt with first? We have discussed the question as to the advisability of getting some general information in regard to crossings which have to be dealt with by the board. Is it just by haphazard that certain parties come before the board and represent that a certain crossing should be attended to, while other men less alert do not make any representation? If so, it will happen that a great many crossings that require immediate attention will be neglected, and others that are not so necessary will be carried through. I think if the government is going to get the best results they should ascertain and classify those crossings, so that some would be regarded as immediate, some as important, and others that do not require to be dealt with at present. I do not urge the expenditure of money uselessly, but I believe it will not be found satisfactory, and there will not be an efficient service, until some person is charged with the duty of ascertaining by inspection those crossings which require attention sooner than others. What money has been expended and how many crossings have been improved?

Mr. GRAHAM. I laid that report on the table some time ago. The commission at the outset, asked the railways to give a statement showing every crossing. Then the commission had their inspectors examine a large number of these. We had passed an Act declaring that where an accident had occurred at any crossing, that crossing would be regarded as dangerous, and the commission requested the railway companies to provide protection for these or show cause why they should not. A good deal of that work has been done.

Mr. LENNOX. Did the commission ask the railway companies to give their views?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think they did. The commission sent their own men to look at these crossings and dealt with the great majority of those which the Act declared dangerous. The railway companies objected at first but have now agreed to provide a remedy as prescribed by the commission.

Mr. LENNOX. Has the fund set aside by parliament been exhausted?

Mr. GRAHAM. No, it has been more than sufficient up to the present, but we shall have to renew or extend it when the period runs out.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the minister inform us what has been done towards determining what kind of cattle guards should be used? Some years ago there was a good deal of agitation about this. I understand that the commission was to take that question up.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have discussed that on several occasions with the chairman of the commission and representative farmers. In the west the railways have in some cases cattle guards more or less effective. They take them up in the winter, because they say they interfere with the snowploughs and they also take up the planking at the crossings. I am considering an amendment to the Railway Act, but do not know whether it will meet the case altogether or not. There does not seem to be a cattle guard yet invented that will give protection to the railway or the stock that go on it. It has been claimed that if we made the railways responsible for the killing of stock in any event, we might perhaps then get a good cattle guard. I am not sure whether that would open the way for good lawsuits or not.

Mr. LENNOX. They would settle when they knew they would be liable.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have had consultations with the chairman of the commission and farmers of the west to see if we could provide a clause not too severe on the railways and would still afford sufficient protection for the public. I hope to be able to introduce that measure and have it discussed, and shall then be better able to judge its efficacy.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the minister any idea of the salaries to be paid those three new men?

Mr. GRAHAM. I asked the chairman of the commission if that was going to add anything to his estimates, because if so I would have to add an item, to the supplementaries. But I have not yet got any reply.

Mr. LENNOX. I hope the minister will introduce the legislation he speaks of pretty soon so that we may have an opportunity of dealing with it properly and not have it rushed through at the end of the session with other legislation. Will legislation with regard to interswitching, to meet that passed by the Ontario legislature, be included in this Bill?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. ROCHE. I have not been a close reader of the report of the railway commission which is annually laid on the table, and therefore, I would ask the hon. minister to inform me, if in that report there is any comparison of rates charged, for instance, in the provinces of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan and those charged south of the international boundary. Such a statement would be of much advantage and dispel a great deal of the misconception at present existing, according to the statement made by the hon. minister a week or two ago. If it be not in the report, I think it would be a good idea to have the commission include such a comparative statement in their future reports, just as we have information in connection with the reciprocity question—a comparison of the prices in the American and Canadian markets—submitted for the consideration of this House. A week or so ago the minister stated that notwithstanding the good work performed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the railway freight rates charged in the Canadian northwest were lower than those charged on the American side. The reason I bring this to the attention of the minister is that the chief Liberal newspaper in Winnipeg has denied the accuracy of that statement, and even correspondents of the paper have alleged that he is misinformed in making it. A leading article in the 'Free Press' of the 27th of March gives concrete instances of freight rates on the Great Northern in North Dakota and Minnesota which are considerably lower than the rates on the same articles on the Canadian Pacific Railway in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. If the statement of the minister can be borne out, and an authentic report to that effect were issued by a responsible body like the Board of Railway Commissioners, it would do much towards dispelling misconception among the farmers of western Canada, and would avert a great deal of adverse criticism of the minister and his department as well as of the railway commission. A comparison of the rates on both sides of the line might be given in their annual report.

Mr. GRAHAM. The report would not be big enough for that. It would have to give the rates from every place to every other place, or some person would accuse the commission of being misinformed or of giving wrong information. What I was discussing, and I have no reason to change my statement, was the rate paid on the wheat haul from points in western Canada to Port Arthur compared with the rate from similar points in the States to Duluth. What the Winnipeg 'Free Press' discusses are the rates on other kinds of goods going in, such as brick, cement, tile, and that kind of thing. I was confining myself to the transfer of the wheat crop, and I took different points in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and I was assured that one of the reasons for the lower rates was the Act passed by the present legislature of Manitoba. Then I was asked about coal, and I stated that the rate from Port Arthur to Winnipeg was $2.50, and from Duluth to Winnipeg, $3. I did not go into a discussion of the other items dealt with by the 'Free Press,' with regard to which it may be correct—I do not know.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the minister's statement apply to other grain as well as wheat?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, it was grain in general, I think.

Mr. BLAIN. That is a very important statement for the people of Canada, because we have had a good deal of complaint of freight rates both in the east and the west. Is the Board of Railway Commissioners in any way under the control of the Railway Department or under the direction of the minister, or are they free to do and go as and where they wish?

Mr. GRAHAM. Their duties are outlined by statute, and while they are a branch of the department and report through the head of the department, he does not control their movements in any way. They make their own appointments and go and come as they see fit in the interests of their work. If any complaints were made as to their work, I suppose the head of the department would have to take the responsibility, but I do not attempt to control their actions or their work.

Mr. LENNOX. What arrangement is made, if any, by the government in the way of prosecuting cases before the board? It was suggested at one time that the Solicitor General could render some valuable legal assistance in the way of bringing forward cases on behalf of persons who did not want to go to the expense of employing a solicitor. Is any provision made for employing anybody to protect the public interest in cases heard by the board where the railway companies are represented by counsel?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not see any necessity of having a public prosecutor in these cases. The beauty of this Board of Railway Commissioners is that the poorest man in Canada can go before it and tell his own story and get justice as quickly as he would if he had the best lawyer in the country. The board is very careful about that. If a farmer goes there about a crossing, he can have the matter settled in five minutes without a solicitor, and in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred it is settled without any cost to him. I have discussed the question with the chairman, and he is of opinion that it is not necessary to have a public prosecutor, and I think rather prides himself on the fact that the public gets justice and is thoroughly protected without a solicitor.

Mr. LENNOX. I am prepared to believe that in many cases it is much as the minister says. But I cannot subscribe to the doctrine that in all cases, even with the greatest activity on the part of the board in the interest of the person who brings the case, the case can be presented as well as by counsel. There is a certain amount of preparation required for a case that can only be made by a person who is skilled in that kind of thing. There must be a good many cases in which, however desirous the chairman may be that justice shall be meted out to all parties, yet, with, an astute counsel on behalf of the railway company and on the other side a man who is not experienced in the collection of evidence, or the marshalling of facts, and coming before the commission unprepared, unintentionally, of course, justice is not meted out. I think it would be advisable for the minister to consider further whether he ought not to appoint some one to represent the public. I can imagine that there are many cases, also, in which there is an individual having certain interests on one side, and the railway company having certain interests on the other side, with the general public between, and having interests also. In such a case it would clearly be necessary to have some one representing the public interest. The minister will see that I am anxious that the Solicitor General should have something to do. And I think it would be worth while to consider whether something could not be found for the Solicitor General to do in connection with this Railway Board, or in connection with the enforcement of some of the penal statutes of which we have passed so many within the last few years. Of course, I think the chairman of the board is doing what he can to make certain that on all occasions the man who has not much experience shall be protected against the railway interests. Of course, I must remind the minister of what he seemed to forget—that the railway companies appear by counsel.

Mr. MILLER. Is it not true that where there is a dispute, the board sends its own inspector to learn the facts?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. They may in many cases send a man to inspect, but that is a different proposition from bringing evidence in support of the case; and his action cannot dispense with the necessity of collecting evidence.

Mr. SPROULE. The greatest weakness in this matter is that the railway company always has an expert at hand well skilled in the arguments to be used against individuals. The board are doing good work and making praiseworthy efforts to do what is right. But in some cases this constant presence of the company's counsel seems to be the weakness. They got more familiar with railway companies, than with the people, and sometimes, when the railway companies got through practically dictating what should be done and why, that pretty much settled the case in many instances. The inspector goes to the place and looks over the ground, but it all turns out about as the railway wants it. I saw some cases argued out like that, not before this board, but before the old Railway Board. There is a good deal of merit in so arranging it that any one can present his case, but it does not follow that because they do so that either the individual or the municipality gets full justice.

Mr. ROCHE. I did not know, when I drew the attention of the minister to this article in the Manitoba 'Free Press' that it had been up on a previous occasion, called attention to I think, by the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes). I understand that the minister promised that he would give reasons for the discrepancy between the rates charged on the American and on the Canadian side.

Mr. GRAHAM. No, but we were discussing the Intercolonial, and I was asked by the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton to compare international rates with these.

Mr. ROCHE. When the minister brings the information, will he be in a position to give the rates charged on these articles mentioned in the 'Free Press' on each side of the boundary line?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am not an expert in railway rates.

Mr. ROCHE. But the minister has his experts.

Mr. GRAHAM. The Board of Railway Commissioners fix the rates on this side, and the Interstate Commerce Commission on the other side.

Mr. ROCHE. Then, the minister does not attempt to dispute the statement?

Mr. GRAHAM. No.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I was pleased to hear the minister hand out a bouquet to the Manitoba government on the ground that the rates in that province are low, owing to the action of the Conservative government there.

Mr. GRAHAM. I said that was claimed by their friends.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I accept that as a bouquet, and I think it was intended as such. In any case, the facts bear it out. I listened attentively to the minister, and wondered whether he was telling us what was right or not. I have shipped both ways, and my impression is that a freight rate of 10 cents per hundred would cover a distance of 50 miles less on the other side of the line than on this side. I think the minister had better revise what he said.

Mr. GRAHAM. The hon. member (Mr. Campbell) seems to steal the bouquet from his friends.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would not wish to do that and could not. For, if it had not been for my friends the farmers of Manitoba would have been paying two cents per hundred more from Winnipeg than at present.

Mr. GRAHAM. I gave the statement showing the rates from point to point on the different roads, and I have no reason to revise it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Did the minister quote the rate from Winnipeg to Port Arthur and to Duluth from Minneapolis?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not think I included Winnipeg. I was discussing the rates from the three provinces and took various central points and compared them with practically the same mileage on the south side of the line, and the charge for carrying our grain on the Canadian side to Port Arthur and Fort William, for the same distance, was cheaper on the Canadian side than on the American in nearly every case.

Mr. CAMPBELL. From Saskatchewan and Alberta as well as from Manitoba?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. I spoke in the House last year in respect of complaints among farmers in western Ontario, as to insufficient accommodation at small railway stations where they are shipping cream and milk to Toronto and other cities. In some of these stations there is no accommodation for farmers when they drive in, and they are compelled to wait until the train comes to put their cream on board. Application has been made to the railway companies to provide for the farmers, and in almost every case they are told that provision of that kind must be made by the farmers themselves. The railway companies are receiving daily patronage from the farmers, and they should provide suitable accommodation for the protection of the farmers and their horses. The minister should take some note of this and see that the railway companies are compelled to provide some accommodation.

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not at all object to bringing it to the attention of the Railway Commission, but it would be easy for my hon. friend to drop a line to the Secretary of the Commission.

Mr. BLAIN. It will have more influence coming from the minister. This is a matter that should not be left on the shoulders of any member.

Mr. NESBITT. Do not the farmers ship their milk and cream by express?

Mr. BLAIN. I think so.

Mr. NESBITT. I ship cream constantly, and there is no occasion for my men to wait, they leave the cream on the platform and it is loaded.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not know what is going on in Oxford nor do I know that it makes any difference whether the shipment is by express or freight, but I know that the farmer is compelled to remain at the station and load his cream. There are as many as 150 cans of milk and cream at some stations, and one man could not load them in the time that the trains would stop at the station. The railway companies refuse to allow their trains to stop long enough for that.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will make that suggestion to the Railway Commission.

Mr. LENNOX. I presume the Railway Commission have control of the management of railway stations. I know of cases where there is a kind of shelter but no fire, and passengers coming in the early morning may have to wait in the shelter for a long time. I am thinking of one at Brentwood, on the Grand Trunk. I suppose if complaint were made to the Commissioners, they have jurisdiction over matters of that kind.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. I recognize that where there is an individual case it is a matter for some one to make a complaint, but where it is a matter of policy it is for the minister to express his opinion as to what he desires shall be done and the commissioners will then naturally carry it out. Here is a matter that should receive some attention from the minister. Sectionmen on the railway go out in the morning, have to attend to a certain division of track and do not return to their homes until the evening. They have to contend with all kinds of weather. The railway companies have not provided any shelter for these men. The section extends for a few miles and there is a certain portion of the road at which the men are liable to be about mid-day. I think that, having regard to our climate and the conditions that these men have to contend with, the time has arrived when it ought to be the policy of the government to see that some shelter is provided. I notice that in some places the men themselves have built little huts where they go to take their mid-day meal. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule), says that there is some provision in his part of the country.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. Well I think the minister should see to it that that would be regarded as something that the government thinks ought to be done, and an expression of opinion in that direction ought to be given by the minister so that all over the country some general system will be adopted and the companies will be compelled to put up some reasonably comfortable shelter at a proper point in each section where the men can take shelter during a storm, and have an opportunity of enjoying a little degree of comfort while they are having their mid-day meal. There might be a stove, a small supply of wood with which they could light a fire and have their meals in some kind of comfort. They should also have a place where they could take shelter from a sudden blizzard or storm. If the minister would announce it as being something that meets with his approval and would intimate to the commissioners that he thought it would be a proper thing to do and to enforce, the public would be apprised of it and the necessary action would be taken in case railway companies do not of their own motion make a movement for carrying out the idea of the minister.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think that in most cases it is the custom to have small section houses at different points along the line.

Mr. LENNOX. There is nothing of the kind in any part of the county of Simcoe.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will make a note of it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I just want to say a word in support of what has been said by my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) in regard to compelling railway companies to construct shelters for the men who are keeping the roads in order. If it is necessary anywhere in Canada it is necessary in the Northwest. There we have 30 to 40 degrees below zero, and almost all of the men have districts ranging from 10 to 15 miles in extent to keep in order. As my hon. friend said they leave home in the morning, they go out and they are subjected to whatever weather there happens to be, no matter how cold, the luncheon they may have taken with them is frozen hard and they are placed under the greatest possible conditions of discomfort. It is time that the government insisted upon the railway companies providing shelters for these men. They need not be very costly; a few dollars will erect a little shanty with a small stove in order to make the lives of these men a little more comfortable. If men are working under comfortable conditions their work is very much better done, and the minister should give careful consideration to what has been suggested by my hon. friend.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, the House adjourned at 11.48 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, March 31, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. GERVAIS moved that the first report of the Select Standing Committee appointed to supervise the Debates of the House, be concurred in.

Mr. FIELDING. I would suggest that my hon. friend let that remain until Monday, and in the meantime be printed in the records.

Mr. GERVAIS. The object of the report is very simple; it is merely to provide for a re-arrangement of the staff, and a redefinition of the duties of the chief reporter; it is to make him chief editor, and to appoint a sub-editor. But there is no question of the expenditure of money.

Mr. FIELDING. I have no objection to the hon. gentleman's motion, but I think the report ought to be printed in the records so that we may see what it is.

Motion stands.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 152) respecting the Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec.—Mr. Fowke.

Bill (No. 159) to change the name of the Manitoulin and North Shore Railway Company.—Mr. Tolmie.

REVILLON FRERES TRADING COMPANY, LIMITED.

Mr. DEVLIN moved the first reading of Bill (No. 158) to incorporate the Revillon Frères Trading Company, Ltd.

Mr. GERVAIS. I would like to know if there has been a petition presented asking for leave to introduce this Bill?

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand the Bill is referred to the Committee on Standing Orders, which will inquire into it.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE BUDGET.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to inquire of the Minister of Finance if he has any intimation to give to us as to the date on which he will deliver the Budget.

Mr. FIELDING. Unless something unexpected occurs, I expect on Tuesday next to deliver the Budget.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Resolutions reported and agreed to.

INTERIM SUPPLY BILL.

Mr. FIELDING To further facilitate the passage of the desired Supply Bill, it is necessary that the House consider some matters in Committee of Supply. I therefore beg to move that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Mr. FIELDING. This is the last day of the fiscal year. To-morrow a new year begins. As respects a portion of the estimates, the committee has dealt with them, and concurrence has been taken in due course. But there is a large portion of the estimates with which the Committee of Supply has not dealt. It is desirable, therefore, that we should obtain what is commonly called a vote on account. I, therefore, beg to move that, as respects those items of the estimates with which the Committee of Supply has not dealt, we appropriate one-sixth of the amount of each item. I shall not ask that the House be detained by the reading of all the items in detail. I think we may rely on it that the officers of the House have correctly made the calculations.

Resolution reported accordingly and concurred in.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House went into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. FIELDING moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the Supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1911, the sum of $2,460,549.81 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

He said: This is the sum we have voted in the supplementary estimates for the current year. The items have been collected by the officers of the House, and I have no doubt are correct.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING. I now desire to move a similar resolution covering the appropriations for the new year:

Resolved, that towards making good the Supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1912, the sum of $45,115,912.81 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Mr. HENDERSON. May I ask the Finance Minister what does one-sixth of the items that have not yet passed amount to?

Mr. FIELDING. The one-sixth amounts to $13,113,283.56.

Mr. HENDERSON. I just thought that, as we passed an item of $13,000,000 in about one minute, we should not hear anything more about blocking Supply.

Mr. FIELDING. I will testify at any time that there has been no blocking of Supply to-day.

Mr. HENDERSON. Nor any other day.

Mr. FIELDING. Sufficient unto the day is the good thereof.

Motion agreed to.

Resolutions from Committee of Ways and Means reported, read the first and second time, and concurred in.

Mr. FIELDING moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 160) for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending respectively the 31st March, 1911, and the 31st March, 1912.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first and the second time, considered in committee, read the third time and passed.

Mr. FOSTER. As I do not like to rob the hon. Finance Minister of any of the honours that legitimately belong to him, I might point out that this is probably the first time in the records of Canada when its Finance Minister allowed some 15 months to elapse without making his yearly financial statement.

Mr. FIELDING. We have to suit ourselves to circumstances. New occasions teach new duties.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose if it is possible to go 15 months longer without making that statement, that will be just another of the steps which hon. gentlemen opposite are taking to govern us outside of constitutional practice.

Mr. FIELDING. I think my hon. friend is unnecessarily disturbed, as both the constitution and the country are safe in our hands.

SUPPLY—BANK ACT.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. LENNOX. I wish to call the attention of the Finance Minister to the question of the Bank Act. Some months ago the hon. minister assured the House that this Bill would be proceeded with this session, and I suppose we may, therefore, take it for granted that it will. But having regard to its importance and the necessity for a very careful investigation of all its provisions, it is to be regretted that the government is so dilatory in proceeding with this legislation. The Bill was introduced on the 15th of December last, and received its first reading. We have now been in session about four months and a half, and it is not too much to say that notwithstanding the agitation in the country over the question of reciprocity, a great deal of concern is felt regarding this Bank Act. After a lapse of 10 years in the history of a country developing so rapidly as this, it would be only natural that our people take a good deal of interest in a measure of this kind especially in view of the many disasters in banking which have occurred in that period, and there is a very strong feeling of disappointment over this unprecedented delay. I presume that this measure will be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee. Before that committee a great many people will want to be heard, and a great deal of time must be taken before that committee gets through with the Bill. It would not be surprising if it required almost as thorough an investigation as the Insurance Bill, and why the government have not seen fit to put it through its second reading and refer it to the committee it is hard to understand. It is absolutely necessary that it should be dealt with this session, and if it is to receive at all the consideration to which it is entitled, it is necessary that the government should not lose any more time in pressing it forward.

To hon. members of the House a great many different questions will present themselves in connection with this Bill. One that occurs to me is that, having regard to the disastrous insufficiency of our legislation up to this day, we must take greater precautions to have a closer inquiry into the issuing of certificates. It might have appeared until recently that the statute was practically sufficient on that point, but we have the most unfortunate proof that it is not sufficient. It will involve considerable discussion and the taking of evidence from various interests to enable us to determine just what precautions should be taken, and what inquiry made in reference to the issuing of these certificates. Another matter is that there seems to be no provision in the Banking Act for suspending or cancelling a certificate. That may have been one of the reasons—it does not appear to be, however—that the Farmers' Bank certificate was not recalled. One experience shows that there should be power somewhere to recall a certificate, or suspend it under circumstances similar to those in connection with the Farmers' Bank. Then, there is a practical question which will probably need a great deal of investigation and will range people on opposite sides, the question of external audit and inspection. I am aware that there are great differences of opinion in reference to that matter, and we will have to investigate it thoroughly. But this and other questions will not be satisfactorily dealt with if this matter is left until about the time when the House is closing and this Bill must be rushed through in the dying hours of the session. Then, I notice that the minister has provided in the new Bill for some protection to the subscribers for stock in the way of giving them notice of the double liability.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would like to understand whether the House gives general consent to the discussion in this way of a Bill which is on the Order Paper.

Mr. FIELDING. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) does not enter into the question largely, I have no objection. But the discussion is not in order.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is contrary to the rule to anticipate an order that is on the Paper. Of course, it can be done by consent.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not wish to press a matter which is not fairly before the House. I was calling the attention of the minister (Mr. Fielding) to the fact as an illustration, that this Bill would involve very considerable time, both in the taking of evidence, and in the discussion, as a reason for urging upon him that, if he is going to send the Banking Bill to the Committee on Banking and Commerce—as I assume to be his intention—he should press the Bill to its second reading, so that it may be sent to the committee at an early day.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. member (Mr. Lennox) will observe that the Banking Bill is one of a number of government measures on the Order Paper which we have not been able to advance. He will acquit the House I am sure, of being idle, for it has been steadily occupied with matters which, in the judgment of hon. members, must have been important, otherwise time would not have been taken up in discussing them. But we have not been able to advance the Banking Act as I expected to do. I intended, and I still intend, that the Bill shall go to the Committee on Banking and Commerce for the reason that there should be opportunity for the fullest inquiry. When the hon. member (Mr. Lennox) last mentioned the matter, I answered positively that we intended to proceed with the Banking Act this session. I still expect to proceed with it, though I must speak with more reserve, as the matter must depend on the progress made with the business of the House. But, if circumstances make it necessary to bring in a temporary Bill carrying the banks over for another year, I think no harm would be done. A little further time will not be to the disadvantage of any interest concerned. We brought in the Bill with the intention of proceeding with it this session, and may yet be able to do so; but, if business should so shape that some government measures cannot be proceeded with, I do not think that any great public interest will suffer if this measure has to stand for another year.

Mr. LENNOX. I would like to ask the minister a question. I have no criticisms to make of the minister's reply more than is suggested by asking whether it would not be possible to have this Bill referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee which could then go on with it without interfering with the business of the House, or the general business of which the government has charge? It seems to me that that could be done.

Mr. FIELDING. If it were a matter of less importance, I would readily concur in that view. But the hon. gentleman has said, quite truly, that this is a very important measure. If it were sent to the committee, it would occupy the attention not only of the committee but of some of the ministers. We will keep the matter in mind with the desire still to expedite the enactment of the measure. But, as I have said, if it is to be deferred for another session, no substantial injury will follow. It is a matter we have to take into consideration.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot appreciate the argument of the Minister of Finance in his reply to the plea that this Bill should now be under way in the Banking and Commerce Committee. For the last three weeks, certainly, we have not been doing a very great deal of business in the House, and what business we have been doing has not, apparently, called for the presence of more than one or two ministers at any sitting, and for a small proportion of the members of the House. So, three weeks have past which might have been utilized for the discussion of this Bill in the Banking and Commerce Committee. The Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding), has had none of his own estimates before the Committee of Supply, and therefore he has been free of attendance so far as the estimates are concerned. Matters that have been discussed, in all but one instance, did not seem to require the attention of the Finance Minister, nor of any of the other ministers except the one who was under review. So, in this respect, three weeks of very valuable time, a splendid opportunity, it seems to me, to have taken up the Banking Act before the Committee on Banking and Commerce and of hearing representations of business and other interests, has been entirely lost. The minister now states that he cannot give a pledge that the Act will be taken up and put through this session. It would certainly seem that it is beyond the category of the doubtful in the mind of the minister that the Bill will not be taken up. The action of the last three weeks seems to make it pretty certain that it cannot be taken up and that it is not the intention to take it up? That is a disadvantage. We have heretofore kept steadily to the custom and tradition of what, I think, is fairly proper unless there be some strong countervailing reason, that the Banking Act should be revised before the expiry of the time. If there ever was a time when the people of Canada felt a lively interest in the provisions of the Banking Act, it is now—because of circumstances which it is unnecessary for me to recall. At such a time, when the minds of people are aroused, is the time when we are sure to get the best representation of various opinions. I do not mean it would be proper to pass a measure under a period of abnormal excitement, but there is nothing like that apparent in the country. What is apparent in the country is that there is need of a revision of the Bank Act, not such a formal revision as we have had the last two or three times, but some revision which should go to the root of what are acknowledged to be great weaknesses in the Act. At such a time when the public mind is alive to the question would seem to be the most opportune period for taking up the matter and having these different phases thoroughly examined. I regret on the whole that the Finance Minister has practically intimated to the House and to the country that this measure will not be taken up for examination, and is not likely to be passed at the present session.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Before you leave the Chair I want to bring to the notice of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver)—who happens not to be present at the moment—an order of the House which was granted the other day with regard to what is called the Aylwin Irrigation grant. I am anxious to have the papers laid on the table as early as possible. I know it will take no time, the file is on the table of the official in charge of that particular department, and for reasons of my own I am anxious to have it here.

Mr. FIELDING. I will call the attention of the Minister of the Interior to the hon. gentleman's inquiry.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

SUPPLY.

Railways and canals—contribution of the government railways to the faculty of McGill university towards the foundation of a school of railway engineering and transportation in general, in connection with the faculty of applied science, $2,500.

Mr. LENNOX. I desire to ask the minister with reference to this and the next item, whether this grant is to apply to any other colleges. I should think, for instance, that the University of Toronto and other educational bodies throughout Canada would be anxious to avail themselves of this grant, and I presume the minister would be willing to make a similar grant to the other institutions.

Mr. GRAHAM. There are two institutions that have branches of railway engineering, and particularly they give lectures on transportation, rates, tariffs and that kind of thing. If any of the other universities were doing the same thing, I would be glad to consider their application.

Governor General's cars—attendance, repairs and alterations to, $2,500.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is an annual vote. Up to September 30, we had expended only $659 of last year's vote.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). Is this car kept continuously for the Governor General's use?

Mr. GRAHAM. There are two cars kept for the use of the Governor General, and for no other purpose.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). Do we understand that a certain amount of money is used every year to keep up these two cars? I should think that he could not occupy more than one very well. I recollect there has been a good deal of talk about these private cars, and others for members of the government. I think the minister had better explain this item more fully.

Mr. GRAHAM. As I have said, last year there were only expended out of this vote $659. But there may be some repairs required for which we would need $2,500 a year on the two cars, but it is not likely we will spend half of it. Repairs are constantly being made on the cars. You may start out on a trip and break down. For instance, there have been repairs to the electric light on the cars, belts break, and sometimes they break twice in a month. We have an electrician who looks after them. This item includes attending to the electrical apparatus, the storage battery, sundries, smithwork, repairs, fuel, &c., on the 'Cornwall' and on the 'York.' As long as you keep a car you have to keep it in repair.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). How many private cars are there for the use of members of the government, and what do they cost?

Mr. GRAHAM. We have four cars. The car 'Ottawa' is used nearly altogether by Mr. Schreiber in connection with his inspection work on the Grand Trunk Pacific. The items are found on page W—47. The car 'Ottawa' is used for other purposes when it is desired. Car '139' is the car that the Prime Minister generally uses, and it can be used for other purposes. It cost last year $1,741. Car '109' is the car the Minister of Railways and Canals uses. That cost $1,266.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). Does that mean for repairs?

Mr. GRAHAM. No, it means for running the car the entire year. The Minister of Railways does not have to pay anything to any railway for drawing his car. It is his right to have it drawn for nothing.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). How about other members of the government?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not know about the others.

Mr. CROSBY. Do you have to pay when you cross the line?

Mr. GRAHAM. The car of the Minister of Railways is taken on any system in America. As a matter of fact, I have the same right as the president of a railway company by virtue of being head of the Railway Department.

Mr. FOSTER. The country pays for it, because you have to provide the same courtesy to magnates who come from the other side.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, it is an exchange of courtesy between all the railways. Car 'No. 128,' $534.29. These are the amounts paid for the upkeep of official cars during the past year.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). Does the minister pretend to say that he does not know whether the ministers have to pay for hauling their private cars over the different railways?

Mr. GRAHAM. I never asked them that question, and I do not know. When they take the car from the Railway Department they have to make all their own arrangements and provide for the food supply, transportation and everything else.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). We should have some more ministers here, so that we could get an answer to these questions.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How many private cars are there on the Intercolonial railway?

Mr. GRAHAM. We do not call them private cars; we call them official. The cars which I have been talking of, belong to the Department of Railways and Canals, and not to the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). You have extra ones for the Intercolonial railway?

Mr. GRAHAM. The officials of the Intercolonial railway have their own the same as the officials of any other road.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How many official and private cars have the government altogether?

Mr. GRAHAM. Four.

Mr. LENNOX. How many on the Intercolonial railway?

Mr. GRAHAM. Three.

Mr. LENNOX. How many have the Railway Commissioners here?

Mr. GRAHAM. One. They asked for another last year, but they did not get it. The Transcontinental Railway Commission I think has one, and the chief engineer of the Transcontinental railway has one.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). I should think that the government would be very much crowded if they have only four cars and two of these are required to take care of the Governor General.

Mr. CROSBY.

Mr. GRAHAM. He carries a suite wherever he goes.

Mr. FOSTER. They must bunk together?

Mr. CROSBY. I understand that there are only four cars owned by the government and under the control of the Department of Railways and Canals?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, that does not include the three on the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. CROSBY. We want to know how many cars there are, including those for the use of the members of the government and also those used by officials of the government in order that we may make a comparison between the number of cars owned by the present government and the number that we had in 1896 when this government came into power. We used to hear a great deal about this private car business when we only had one car for the Governor General and all combined. I know that some of the officials of the Intercolonial railway have cars of their own with which they travel from one end of the road to the other.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have repeated it, but I will repeat it again, for fear that my hon. friend did not hear at this distance——

Mr. CROSBY. I heard it very well, but I want to get the facts.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have told the committee that there are four cars owned by the Department of Railways and Canals, and three owned by the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. CROSBY. That is seven?

Mr. GRAHAM. That would appear to be —yes.

Mr. CROSBY. I understood the minister to say that it would appear to be? Does he not know that it is seven?

Mr. GRAHAM. There are some self-evident facts.

Mr. CROSBY. The minister says that we have four here and three on the Intercolonial railway, which appear to be seven. He does not really know exactly what he has. I understand that we have seven cars.

Mr. LENNOX. I think we have twelve—two used by the Governor General, four for the government, three for the Intercolonial railway, one for the Railway Commissioners, one for the Transcontinental Railway Commissioners, and one for the engineer.

Mr. CROSBY. What appearance has that now?

Mr. LENNOX. Another may appear at any time.

Grand Trunk Pacific Railway—remuneration to government director of, $2,000.

Mr. LENNOX. What is that?

Mr. GRAHAM. This is the remuneration of the representative of the government under the statute on the Grand Trunk Pacific Board.

Mr. LENNOX. How much has that cost up to date?

Mr. GRAHAM. It would be $12,000 in six years.

Mr. LENNOX. Are there any perquisites or anything that would go to increase this amount?

Mr. GRAHAM. No.

Mr. LENNOX. That is not included in any return we have got with reference to the expense of building the Transcontinental railway?

Mr. GRAHAM. No; it does not come out of the Transcontinental railway vote.

Mr. LENNOX. It is not classified in any return we have got as being one of the expenses in connection with this road?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think not.

Mr. LENNOX. But it is solely for the purpose of this road?

Mr. GRAHAM. No; not for the Transcontinental railway, but for the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Mr. LENNOX. I know it is for the Grand Trunk Pacific, but I do not think there is any distinction to be drawn between the two things.

Mr. GRAHAM. Excepting that we are building one of them.

Mr. LENNOX. We are building one, and we are having this director who is costing $2,000 a year, and when we come to make up the total cost of the line from ocean to ocean, it will include this item?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, it would include that item.

Mr. LENNOX. This is only a little item, but there might be a lot of the same kind. For instance, I asked a question yesterday about the supervision of the Quebec bridge. I asked:

What are the names of the engineers and other persons acting for and on behalf of the government, in what capacity did these persons respectively act, when and for how long, and what were the sums paid each of them for these services? Are these sums exclusive of the sum of about $7,000,000 said to have been paid out on taking over the Quebec bridge undertaking?

I am told that there were various officers employed, and that no charge has been made in connection with the building of the Quebec bridge in reference to any of them. For instance, it is said that Mr. Collingwood Schreiber, chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, was one of them.

Mr. GRAHAM. He was chief engineer of the department.

Mr. LENNOX. He was chief engineer of the department, and although a large portion of his time is taken up in looking after the Quebec bridge, no part of his salary is apportioned to this expense.

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not think there was very much of his time taken up.

Mr. LENNOX. It comes down to one thing or the other; either some of them had assigned to their charge the supervision of the Quebec bridge or else the Quebec bridge had no supervision at all. I do not know which horn of the dilemma it ultimately rests upon. Then it says that Collingwood Schreiber, chief engineer of the department, was succeeded by M. J. Butler on July 29, 1905, as chief engineer; Robert C. Douglas, bridge engineer, inspector of substructure; E. B. Johnston, engineer, Department of Railways and Canals, checking up monthly progress estimates on superstructure; G. A. Bell, as auditor of the Department of Railways and Canals; and it says that the above officers were paid out of civil government under their regular yearly salaries and received no further remuneration. Would the minister explain how much of the time of any one of these officers was devoted to the supervision of the Quebec bridge. I understand from the evidence that one official went down to the Phoenix shops to supervise the work while it was being turned out. How many men representing the government were actually engaged their whole time, or most of their time, in connection with the Quebec bridge?

Mr. GRAHAM. As a matter of fact Mr. Schreiber, or his successor, Mr. Butler, were not supervising the superstructure of the Quebec bridge at all. The Quebec bridge was being built by a company. The bonds were guaranteed by the Dominion, and Mr. Bell audited these accounts, as he does the other accounts of the department.

Mr. LENNOX. Something like the Auditor General?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, he is supposed to do that work in his official capacity. Mr. Johnston checked over the progress estimates for the purpose of showing that the government was all right in releasing its guarantee. Mr. Tolmie was sent down to the Phoenix shops, and his salary was about $70 a month.

Mr. LENNOX. He is not mentioned in this answer at all.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will have that inquired into.

Mr. LENNOX. I am endeavouring to find out how many men had some charge over this old Quebec bridge on behalf of the government to see that it was properly constructed and how much the services of these men cost.

Mr. GRAHAM. Those officers mentioned are all servants of the department, and not a cent of their remuneration was charged to the Quebec bridge. I cannot make that any clearer.

Mr. LENNOX. I am satisfied with that. I understand these men had not supervision of the bridge in any shape or form. But what we have a right to know is what men, if any, looked after the construction of this bridge to see, in the interests of the country, that a safe and proper structure was being erected?

Mr. GRAHAM. As a matter of fact, Mr. Cooper, of New York, was accepted by all parties as the inspecting engineer, and he is the only man who had oversight. The government did not have an inspector. It is in the evidence that Mr. Cooper said he would resign if any man was appointed in that capacity. Mr. Cooper was accepted by all parties as the best authority on the subject that could be found at that time. The government was not supervising the bridge and had no person there for that purpose.

Mr. LENNOX. When we made the guarantee it was arranged that the government should exercise supervision and would have a competent man in charge.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Cooper was agreed to for that purpose.

Mr. LENNOX. Mr. Cooper was an engineer, residing in New York, and a man in feeble health.

Mr. GRAHAM. Only since that time.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not know whether Mr. Cooper ever came to visit the bridge at all, but at all events he was not exercising any degree of actual inspection on the work. As I understand it, there was no one representing the government inspecting the work, but I did see in the evidence that one man went down to the manufacturing concern to inspect some work there. I want to get his name and what it cost?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is Mr. Tolmie.

Mr. LENNOX. Who is the director?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Brunet.

Mr. LENNOX. Where does he reside?

Mr. GRAHAM. Montreal.

Mr. LENNOX. What is his occupation?

Mr. GRAHAM. He was a commissioner of the Transcontinental railway, and resigned that position, and was appointed to this.

Mr. LENNOX. Has he any other occupation that takes up his time or attention?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think not, I think he is a man of considerable wealth.

Mr. LENNOX. Is he the first appointee or has it been in the hands of others.

Mr. GRAHAM. He is the only appointee, I think.

Surveys and inspection—canals, $25,000.

Mr. LENNOX. What is this item for, it is increased?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am frequently asked to make surveys of canals, and this vote is for that purpose. For instance, I have been requested to look over the Rideau canal, as boat-owners complain that it is not in proper shape at the present time. Incidentally it might develop some water-power, but that would only be incidental to the survey. At present I have some figures as to that, but they are not satisfactory.

Surveys and inspection of railways including inspection Grand Trunk Pacific, $50,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. We have to inspect every railway that is subsidized before the subsidy is paid, and this vote provides for that. The inspection of the branch lines was taken out of this vote, and the inspection of the Grand Trunk Pacific is also provided for here.

Mr. LENNOX. Of that $22,000 expended last year did you expend anything in reference to the Grand Trunk Pacific?

Mr. GRAHAM. $12,225.

Mr. LENNOX. Is that included in the sum of $94,000,000 which the minister stated as having been expended on the Transcontinental?

Mr. GRAHAM. No, that is not included in the Transcontinental. That would be west of Winnipeg, where we have to inspect the line for guarantee purposes.

Mr. LENNOX. When this scheme was launched, the whole scheme from ocean to ocean was spoken of as the Transcontinental railway, and the division from Winnipeg to Moncton I understand to be the eastern division of the Transcontinental railway. Now the portion west of Winnipeg is said to be the Grand Trunk Pacific?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Canals, collection of revenue, $1,250,720.

Mr. GRAHAM. This item is really the working expenses of all the canals. It is increased over last year by about $100,000, which is to be used in the adjustment of the wages of the men operating the canals. We have had requests from them all, and the deputy and chief engineer will go into the whole question, with the view of making a general adjustment. Everything else is the same as last year. There are about 1,900 men employed.

Mr. RUSSELL. Are any of the men to be provided for employed on the Newmarket canal?

Mr. GRAHAM. They will be when it is completed.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the aggregate amount of the salaries of these employees at present?

Mr. GRAHAM. The aggregate of all the salaries last year was $1,106,460.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). What is the average salary you pay to the lock-keepers?

Mr. GRAHAM. Take the Sault canal: the lock-master gets $70 a month, motormen, linemen, lamp trimmers and night watchmen, $50; painters, $2.50 a day; carpenters, $2.50. On the Rideau canal, lock-keepers get $1.50, lock-masters $1.50, caretakers $36 a month.

Mr. RUSSELL. What percentage of increase will they get?

Mr. GRAHAM. It seems to be nearly 10 per cent, but it may not work out that way, because there may be some men in the upper grades who are getting enough. My idea is to give the increase mostly to the men who are getting the lower pay.

Mr. EDWARDS. Do I understand it to be the minister's intention to apply this increase to the lock-men on all the canals?

Mr. GRAHAM. We intend to adjust the salaries of all the employees. It will result in an increase to the men who are paid the lower salaries.

Mr. EDWARDS. Then I would be justified in telling the men at Kingston Mills, Brewer's Mills, and along the Rideau that there is a good prospect of their getting an increase?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think so.

Mr. RUSSELL. How many months in the year are these men employed?

Mr. GRAHAM. The lock-masters have employment the year round, the lock-labourers during the season of navigation. Then we have repairs going on at both ends of the season, and the lock-labourers are given a preference over others on the repair staff.

To pay damages by flooding—Trent canal, $30,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. We have paid for land damages along the Trent canal since 1908, $131,345. Last year we paid $29,981 to October 31.

Mr. LENNOX. On the main item which is held over, I intend calling the attention of the minister to a case which was before the House last year. I forget the gentleman's name, but it was the case of a lawyer. I asked a question or two this year, and did not get a satisfactory answer.

Mr. GRAHAM. He was engaged by the Justice Department.

Mr. LENNOX. I understood the Minister of Justice last year, and the Minister of Railways to make two promises, namely, that they would investigate and would probably, under certain circumstances, prosecute.

Mr. GRAHAM. I never made any such statement.

Mr. LENNOX. The statements are on record in 'Hansard.' I put a question this year, and was told that nothing had been done.

Mr. GRAHAM. The Minister of Justice answered the question, not I.

Mr. LENNOX. Both gentlemen spoke last year, and what they said is on record, and, according to my construction of what they said, they have not carried out either promise.

Mr. WALLACE. A return was asked for which has not been brought down.

Mr. GRAHAM. I shall try and get it. There was a return brought down, but perhaps not this year.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not think any was brought down last year.

Mr. GRAHAM. If I can find the return, I suppose that will answer the purpose.

Salaries and allowances to lighthouse keepers, $450,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This shows an increase of $50,000. The House is aware that for some time recommendations have been made by a large number of members for larger salaries to the light keepers. Some years ago we thought of classifying the light keepers according to the importance of their lights. This $50,000 increase will provide for an augmentation of salaries of from 15 per cent to 35 per cent.

Agencies, rents and contingencies—lighthouse and coast service, $60,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This shows an apparent increase of $10,000 but really there is none. We had in the different agencies some men paid out of this vote, and others out of maintenance and construction, and we thought that all the men employed permanently in some agencies should be paid entirely out of this vote. We take $10,000 to provide for the transfer.

Maintenance and repairs to lighthouses, $650,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This shows an increase of $100,000. It is accounted for by the fact that certain steamers, which had formerly been paid out of this vote, will be paid next year out of the vote for Dominion steamers. In the latter there will be an increase which makes a decrease in this.

Mr. ARTHURS. In my riding certain repairs were made to the channel in Lake Nipissing under the direction of the Department of Public Works. The engineers of the department reported that certain changes in the lights were necessary on account of the change in the channel. The light is a lamp stuck on a pole, and is more likely to lead a vessel into trouble than out of it. Would that come under the minister's department?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is under our control if it is a question of light.

Mr. ARTHURS. I have a largely signed petition showing the facts.

Construction of lighthouses and aids to navigation, including apparatus, submarine signals, and providing suitable boats for carrying on construction work; also for the improvement of the West Coast Trail, B.C., $1,000,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This sum is the same as last year. The work is divided into two parts, one which is administered by the chief engineer, and comprises the construction of the lighthouse. The other provides for the apparatus. On construction apparatus we propose to make the following expenditures:

British Columbia	$116,000
Ontario	165,000
Quebec	70,000
Montreal district	18,000
New Brunswick	30,000
Nova Scotia	125,000
Prince Edward Island	17,000
General	18,000
Total	$500,000

So far as construction is concerned, we estimate that the following will be required: British Columbia, $300,000; Ontario, $60,000; Quebec , $100,000; Montreal, $1,000; maritime provinces, $85,000; general account, $115,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Why is the distinction made between Quebec and Montreal?

Mr. BRODEUR. There are two agencies, the Montreal and the Quebec. The Quebec agency covers from Quebec city down to the sea, including the lights in the Strait of Belle Isle and on the coast of Newfoundland.

Mr. HUGHES. Does the Dominion maintain lights on Newfoundland?

Mr. BRODEUR. Of course, we could not expect Newfoundland to light the Strait of Belle Isle because they are not interested in the navigation of those waters, and the same in regard to the southern coast of Newfoundland. So, we obtained permission from the Newfoundland authorities to erect lights where the interests of navigation demanded.

Mr. SPROULE. How many of these lights are to be established on the St. Lawrence?

Mr. BRODEUR. The principal works are. Flat Island, new lighthouse; Bagot Bluff, completon of station; Little Metis, new dwelling; Kamouraska, new dwelling; Natashkwan, light; Ferolles Point, new station; Carleton, rebuilding light; Father Point, repairs to dwelling; Cape Chatte, submarine bell station.

Mr. SPROULE. This is intended to cover repairs as well as the erection of new lighthouses?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, this is for construction; repairs come under the vote we have just passed.

Mr. SPROULE. We are told, year after year, that this channel between Montreal and Quebec is perfectly lighted, and much is said of the improvements in navigation and the consequent reductions in marine insurance rates effected by this government. This is what we have been told for the last three or four years, but every succeeding session money is asked for new lights. I am not complaining of the expenditure; if new lights are needed, it is the part of wisdom to provide them. But I do complain of the statement repeated year after year that this government has finished this work of lighting and otherwise improving this channel.

Mr. BRODEUR. The amount we ask this year is not very large, and if the hon. member will consider the figures I gave, he will find that there are only two new lighthouses, those at Flat Island and Natashkwan. This latter is not properly in the St. Lawrence channel, that is, the channel navigated by the large ships; it is on the north shore where the channel is used by vessels of two or three thousand tons plying between Blanc Sablon and Natashkwan and other north shore ports. Ferolles Point and Flat Island are to have new stations. These are on the Newfoundland coast of the Strait of Belle Isle. These have been asked for by the federation of shipping and the shipping interests generally. They have been reported on favourably by the lighthouse board and I think we should provide for their erection. These other expenditures are mainly for dwellings for stations already in existence. Little Metis, for instance—the expenditure there is for a new dwelling, but the station has been in existence, perhaps, for fifty years. The same is true of Kamouraska. At Carleton the lighthouse is to be reconstructed in part. The expenditure at Father Point is for a dwelling, and at Cape Chatte is a submarine bell station. We are constantly in receipt of communications from different maritime bodies stating that the work we have been carrying on in the St. Lawrence has been fruitful of good results. However, we do not wish to prevent further improvements, and give careful attention to requests for improvements that come to us.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister has given himself unnecessary trouble, giving one kind of answer at one time, and fifteen minutes later a different kind. I asked how much of this money was to be spent for new lighthouses on the St. Lawrence, and he told me it would all be spent in that way. Now he says it is for the erection of dwelling houses and for repairs. My object was to find out how much was to be spent for new stations and how much for improvements. In his latest explanation he says that there are only two new lighthouses contemplated.

Mr. BRODEUR. I misunderstood my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule), I thought he was asking how much was to be spent on the St. Lawrence.

Mr. SPROULE. My aim was to ascertain whether the St. Lawrence was properly lighted, and if so, and if the work was completed, it seemed strange that we would have every year an item of about the same size for doing practically the same work. I am not at all objecting to lights and lighthouses where they are needed.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Before passing this item, I would like to ask the minister with reference to wireless telegraph stations. Last January a return was brought down in which I noticed that the minister had expended over $200,000, and the revenue from that expenditure only amounted to about $2,000. He states in this return that the bulk of these wireless telegraph stations are operated under contract by the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company of Canada, as aids to navigation. Would the minister give us an idea of what that contract contains, and the amount of money that is likely to come back to the government?

Mr. BRODEUR. That does not come under this item. The wireless telegraph system has been transferred to the Naval Service. It comes under item 235, that may come up this evening.

Mr. DANIEL. I would like to ask the minister if he is meeting with any better success with regard to the gas and whistling buoys that are established, especially about the Bay of Fundy. I notice that a good many of them often go adrift. It would appear there must be some cause for their going adrift, either that they are not sufficiently anchored, or that the chain is too slight. There must be some method by which the government could maintain these buoys in place. When this matter was up before, the minister stated that there was so much trouble with these buoys that he was really considering whether it was worth while to place them there at all. This is a very important matter, and where navigators are in the habit of seeing a lighted buoy when they come along at night, they are much embarrassed when they fail to find one. I would like to know if the government has adopted any different policy, has found out any better means of keeping the buoys in place?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is true that there were in the Bay of Fundy some complaints with regard to these buoys going adrift. They are very heavy buoys. Unfortunately, we had only one ship which could attend to them, and in spite of all the efforts which were made in the way of anchors, we found that a certain number, especially in very heavy gales, went adrift. I gave instructions a little more than a year ago that another vessel should be sent to the Bay of Fundy to assist the 'Lansdowne' in looking after them. We sent the 'Stanley,' removing it from the Prince Edward Island route. When the 'Earl Grey' was put on that route we thought we could dispense with the services of the 'Stanley,' and we sent her to the Bay of Fundy. For more than a year now the 'Stanley' has been in the Bay of Fundy, and has been assisting the 'Lansdowne.' We have no complaints lately of the buoys going adrift, or if any did go adrift, it was immediately reported, and the agent at St. John sent a vessel up there to see that they were put right. My hon. friend knows that there is a very strong current in the Bay of Fundy, and that accounts probably for these buoys going adrift. But with the addition of another ship we find that the number of accidents has been materially reduced.

Mr. DANIEL. How often are these buoys regularly visited to see that the carbide is sufficient and the light is burning?

Mr. BRODEUR. The orders given to the agent are to see that all the buoys are visited. There is no set time fixed for visiting them, but he is instructed to see that they are always kept in order, these are the general instructions. Besides that, when other vessels, merchant vessels, pass that way, if they see that the light is not strong enough, they are asked to report to us, and a vessel is sent on immediately to make repairs.

Mr. DANIEL. Does the government not know how long the amount of carbide that is put into one of these buoys is supposed to last?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is supposed to last for some months. Sometimes it happens that the supply does not need to be renewed for three or four months. But the buoys are visited much oftener, in order to see that the light is well maintained, and to renew it with carbide if necessary.

Mr. DANIEL. I think in the case of the Old Proprietor buoy that went wrong, the evidence was that it had not been visited within a year.

Mr. BRODEUR. That was at a time when we had only one ship, the 'Lansdowne,' there, which is not a very fast ship, and according to the evidence, she tried several times to get near that buoy and replenish the light. But it was found impossible for some reason or other, and the buoy went wrong. I see by the reports which we have that since the 'Stanley' has been on the route there has been such an improvement that no complaints have reached the department.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the minister be good enough to bring along with him a statement of the total amount received by the Marconi Company for the 18,000 messages that they forwarded, and if possible the profits that they made out of these stations? Would the minister also be good enough to give us the reason why the government should build these important stations and place them in the hands of the Wireless Telegraph Company?

Mr. BRODEUR. These stations were built as aids to navigation. Most of them are situated at places where no business was expected. It was found necessary in the interests of navigation that these wireless telegraph stations should be established along the St. Lawrence in order that if an accident occurred to a vessel plying on these waters she could put herself into communication with Montreal and Quebec and receive succour. I will be very glad to supply my hon. friend with the information if we have it in the department.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. We gave them 18,000 messages, amounting to 265,000 words, showing that considerable business is being done, and while I appreciate the work that is being done I wonder why it is not under government control.

Mr. BRODEUR. These messages are government messages, and there is no money coming to the company out of them. This business is done on the Pacific coast, not by the Marconi Company, but by the government system of wireless which is established there.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox and Addington). How many lighthouses have we in Newfoundland, and what does it cost us to maintain them?

Mr. BRODEUR. I will supply the list in a moment.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I take it for granted that these vessels that go around visiting the lights, &c., are all charged up to the vote for the construction of lighthouses?

Mr. BRODEUR. Not all the vessels.

Mr. REID (Grenville). A good many are used for that purpose?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). And they are charged to this account?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, I have made a change this year.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I see by the heading that they are charged to this account.

Mr. BRODEUR. For the hiring of vessels. We have not changed the vote because sometimes we may want vessels for the purpose of carrying out our work. But I have adopted a different system this year. I thought it would be more convenient for every member of this House if all the Dominion steamers were put under one vote. If my hon. friend will look at the vote for Dominion steamers he will find an increase which provides for an expenditure under that vote on vessels that formerly came under the item for the maintenance of vessels.

Mr. REID (Grenville). As I understand there are some vessels used in connection with the construction of lights. This item is more than construction. In last year's Auditor General's Report we see the headings: 'Construction of Lights, Aids to Navigation', &c.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, there were some last year, but I am changing the system. I thought that all these vessels should be put under the one vote of Dominion steamers. But we have left the vote as it was before because it may be necessary to hire boats to carry out our work. In British Columbia, which has a very extensive coast, we are carrying on some very large construction work. It may be necessary, in order to carry out this work expeditiously, to hire boats, and in order to do that we provide in this estimate for the hiring of boats.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The item in the estimates is:

Construction of lighthouses and aids to navigation, including apparatus, submarine signals, and providing suitable boats for carrying on construction work; also for the improvement of the West Coast trail, B.C.

Under that heading would come aids to navigation, and so on, and under that heading would be work done at Sorel, and charged to this account. There must be some work in connection with aids to navigation. Boats must be repaired.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, those boats belong to what is called the St. Lawrence channel and they do not come under this vote at all.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would like to know what procedure the minister follows now in so far as the building of these lighthouses and the fitting of them up is concerned. The minister knows that after he took charge of the department there were a great many of these lighthouses built under his instructions. We all agreed that many of these lighthouses were necessary, and there were many more required. I believe that this House will be unanimous in voting any money necessary for the improvement of navigation. I do not know whether the minister changed the method of erecting these lighthouses when he took charge of the department. The minister knows that the course was first to select the place, then to give the work out practically without tender, send men down to do it and buy the supplies that were necessary at exorbitant prices without tender. Take cement, as an instance; I remember that we had one instance of buying cement at very much more than any private individual would purchase it for. Then, there were other items charged up to these lighthouse buildings. There was $4,000 or $5,000 worth of files charged up to the building of a lighthouse, or something of that kind. I think that was done after the minister took charge.

Mr. BRODEUR. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; the files were before my time.

Mr. REID (Grenville). We had the instances of Merwin being paid from 50 to 150 per cent more than any private individual could purchase goods for, and although we brought it to the minister's attention he still continues to do business with the same man for a year or two; at least, I noticed that he was doing business with this same firm and at the same prices. We objected very strongly, but the minister still does business at the same old stand, and at the same old prices, even after the disclosures of the Judge Cassels' investigation.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). They have Lymburner now.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Yes. Lymburner is a new man, and they are paying him 150 per cent more than anybody else could purchase the stuff for. There are instances in the Auditor General's Report which show that graft still continues. There are some items here that look rather fishy. Last session the minister wanted an ice-breaker and plans were made for a boat that would go through the St. Lawrence and Welland canals, and tenders were to be called for, but the size of the boat was enlarged so that she could not go through the canals, and hence our Canadian builders could not tender.

Mr. BRODEUR. Was that the 'Earl Grey?'

Mr. REID (Grenville). I do not know her name, but the plans were changed so as to make the boat one foot wider, and one foot longer than the canal, and it seems to me it does not make any difference whether an ice-breaker was a foot longer or a foot shorter. Then again when tenders were called for, the minister did not accept the lowest tender but paid $150,000 more.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The minister paid a very large sum in excess of the lowest tender. Now, the excuse the minister is going to give is that the boat he purchased can go 17 knots an hour, while the one originally provided for only could go 16½ knots, but I cannot see what difference the extra half knot per hour would make in an ice-breaker. The tenderers were all good responsible firms, and yet the minister did not accept the lowest. Then again the minister is going to tell us that some of the firms that tendered were not well known, but as I understand it the plans and specifications are all furnished by a marine architect, and they are followed exactly, and there is no reason why any reliable firm cannot do the work. Another reason the minister is going to give for having this boat built in England is that no firm in Canada is used to building ice-breakers. He told us he had to go to Russia himself to find out how an ice-breaker was built, and that there is only one firm in England competent to build an ice-breaker. But let me tell him that we have in Prescott a car ferry which is also used as an ice-breaker, and it will go through any amount of ice, and it was built by the Polson Iron Works at Toronto. Then, the Grand Trunk Company have a ferry running to Cobourg that will go through any quantity of ice, and she was not built in England. I would like to get some new reason from the minister as to why this boat was not built in Canada. A few years ago the Minister of Finance told us that if they could buy steamers cheaper in England they would buy them there. The Minister of Marine gave an order for a small vessel that cost $15,000 less in England than he could buy it for in Canada, but if he added the duty on the iron and other materials, and the extra cost of labour in Canada, he would find that it would be cheaper to get it in Canada. I am satisfied that there is some thing that looks—if I may use the word—crooked in the way the whole deal is put through. If I or any other private individual wanted a steamer I would go myself or I would send my head man to negotiate with the builder, but the minister will have to admit that he does not negotiate with the builder or have his deputy minister or any of his high officials do it. The first thing he will do if he wants a vessel is to send down for Mr. Lewis of Lewis Brothers, hardware merchants, of Montreal. The minister knows that Mr. Lewis is the grit organizer and heeler of the province of Quebec, the man who handles the funds for the Liberal party, and he says to him: I want a vessel, and Mr. Lewis goes over to England, and does the whole business for the Minister of Marine.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). And gets a rake off.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I do not know who gets it, but the rake-off must go to somebody. Mr. Lewis does not travel backward and forward to England for nothing.

Mr. BRODEUR. I would like to know where my hon. friend gets that information; his statements are most extraordinary.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Does the minister deny that he buys vessels through Mr. Lewis of Montreal?

Mr. BRODEUR. All the vessels we have bought of late years have been bought on public tender.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Take the 'Earl Grey' as a sample.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). That boat was bought from Mr. Lewis.

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Mr. Lewis bought that vessel, and the way the minister gets over it is that he puts him down as agent for Vickers Sons, & Maxim.

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Mr. Lewis is the agent, or rather the middleman, to call him by his right name. Mr. Lewis makes the deal with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to buy this vessel. The minister calls for public tenders, and he gets six tenders. I think that of Vickers-Maxim is the highest. Then the minister refers the matter to his naval architect to find out which of the firms tendering is the best. The naval architect is Mr. Duguid, who was employed by Vickers-Maxim, and who was sent over here, where the Minister of Marine and Fisheries gives him a job, and, of course, he recommends this firm because they have had experience in building these ice-breakers, while the others have never had any experience; and so the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has to pay a very large amount above the amount of the lowest tender. The minister may as well own up and say that the difference between the lowest price and what he paid was a loss to this country, and that he was the means of losing that amount. That was the rake-off that went to somebody—to Mr. Lewis, and what he did with it the Minister of Marine and Fisheries should tell us; because a certain percentage of it went into the campaign fund. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries smiles. He is glad to see the country lose a large amount of money by that kind of management of his department. It is getting to be a serious thing, having the department carried on in that way. After the experience the minister had, not only from members of this House and from the Public Accounts Committee, but from Judge Cassels, we looked to him to give us a good deal better department than he has; but it seems to come out in the same old way—when you drop one middleman, another looms up. I have asked the minister to explain a few points, and I would like him to give me an answer.

Mr. BRODEUR. I will certainly give the hon. gentleman all the information he wants in regard to the 'Earl Grey' or any other business of the department, since I have been connected with it. The hon. gentleman has been labouring under a delusion in stating that I have made purchases of files from Merwin. These files were purchased before I was in the department. The same is true of Merwin's accounts. Some of them have been paid since I have been in the department, but for purchases made before I came there. I am surprised that my hon. friend did not know that. We have now in that department a purchasing agent who makes all the purchases. He is absolutely independent and free from any political influence, and everything is done above board. My hon. friend said that we were not willing to encourage Canadian ship-building. In that respect also he is mistaken. In all cases where the difference between the tender of a Canadian shipbuilder and the tender of a British shipbuilder is not more than 20 per cent, I recommend to my colleagues to give the contract to the Canadian shipbuilder, as it is in the interest of the country that we should develop the Canadian ship-building industry. There is no duty on ships coming from England, while our Canadian shipbuilders are obliged to pay a large amount of duty sometimes on the materials which go into the ships they build. Besides, the Canadian shipbuilder is obliged, under our law, to observe the fair wage clause, while the British builder is not. Under these circumstances, the policy of the department and of the government has been to give the Canadian shipbuilder some protection and consideration.

Mr. REID (Grenville). When did you commence?

Mr. BRODEUR. Some years ago. My hon. friend cannot mention one case in which a Canadian shipbuilder who has tendered at not more than 20 per cent above the British shipbuilder, has not got the contract.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I have given the case of the 'Earl Grey.' You changed the plans, making the vessel one foot longer and one foot wider.

Mr. BRODEUR. Let us come to that case. My hon. friend has been trying to investigate it, and he knows it exactly; but he did not give all the particulars that might have been given to show how the construction of the 'Earl Grey' was carried out. The 'Earl Grey' was an ice-breaker required for the Northumberland Straits. For years we had complaints that the service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland was not satisfactory. We were bound by the Act of Union to provide as good a steam service as possible. Some years ago the Canadian government purchased the 'Stanley' and later the 'Minto,' for that route. For many years these two vessels had been performing that service, but still it was not satisfactory, and the people of Prince Edward Island complained that we were not fulfilling the terms of union. What did we do? We took steps to ascertain whether it would not be possible to have an ice-breaker strong enough to pass through even 15 inches of ice.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Do you mean to say that could not be built in Toronto?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not say that it could not, but I am stating the facts as they are. The department got experts, and we studied the question for some years. My hon. friend states that the Naval Architect of the department was formerly employed by Vickers-Maxim. That is true, and my hon. friend will find by the records of the department that this man was selected under the following circumstances. We wanted as a naval architect a man of ability and experience, whose opinion could be relied on in all cases. My predecessor applied to Lord Strathcona, and Lord Strathcona recommended this man. My hon. friend finds fault with the government for having such a good man in our service. I think that on the contrary he should compliment us. In order to get a competent naval architect we went to England, which is the greatest ship-building country in the world. That is how Mr. Duguid came to be selected. Before we came to a decision about the 'Earl Grey,' I made a trip myself to Germany accompanied by the technical officers of my department, and we found that in England we could get better ice-breakers than anywhere else. We had to prepare plans and this naval architect prepared them.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Did he draw the plans himself?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes. My hon. friend complains that the plans were changed and that the vessel could not get into the Great Lakes. I do not remember whether the plans prepared by Mr. Duguid prevented her from going through the canals or not, but my hon. friend knows that the plans were referred to the British Admiralty.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Supposing they had been, if the plans had been referred to the British Admiralty, why could not the contract have been given a Toronto firm?

Mr. BRODEUR. Let me make my statement and I will come to that. The plans were referred to the British Admiralty, as my hon. friend well knew, why did he not mention that in his remarks?

Mr. REID (Grenville). I did not know that. How should I know?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, my hon. friend knew.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What difference does that make? Suppose they had been referred——

Mr. BRODEUR. The plans were referred to the British Admiralty. After examining them the British Admiralty recommended certain changes in the dimensions and we followed the recommendations. Had I not done so, I would have been open to censure. I accepted the plans as amended by the British Admiralty, and these plans required a vessel which was not wider than could pass through the canals. I am very glad that the hon. gentleman brought up this question, because the facts show conclusively the department could not have done otherwise than it did. What happened since? We called for public tenders. We did not go and negotiate with Mr. Lewis, of Montreal, or anybody else, but we called for tenders and awarded the contract to a firm recommended as being best able to execute it.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Who recommended it?

Mr. BRODEUR. The technical officers of my department, Mr. Desbarats and Mr. Duguid. Mr. Desbarats is one of the best engineers in this country, and has had great experience in the construction of ships. I accepted the recommendation of these men, and the firm which was given the contract was not the one which had submitted the highest tender. There were other tenders very much higher, but the tender of this firm according to the laws, they had made the necessary deposit, and were the firm best able to do the work.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would like to know if the minister referred the first plans to the British Admiralty. There were two plans made, as the minister practically admits; and in the first the boat was one foot narrower and one foot shorter than the one actually built. Were those plans all submitted to the British Admiralty for its approval? Was it the admiralty who changed the plans? I never heard that it was, and that is a point which has not been clearly explained. I want the minister to say whether the first plans were submitted to the admiralty, and if these plans had been revised, or if the admiralty suggested that the boat was too narrow or too short, and if new plans were then made.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not remember all the circumstances. My hon. friend has followed the investigation before the Public Accounts Committee, and is perhaps better informed in that respect than I. The plans accepted have been approved by the British Admiralty and we made great——

Mr. REID (Grenville). Well, take the minister at his word. These plans were submitted to the British Admiralty. Was it necessary that these plans for an ice-breaker should be submitted to the admiralty and approved by them before the minister could give the contract?

Mr. BRODEUR. I will tell my hon. friend the reason. I thought that before spending $500,000 or $600,000 on a vessel it was well to take the precaution of finding out that she would meet the purpose we had in view. The British Admiralty has the best naval architects in the world—I think no one will deny that, and as they were good enough to go over our plans, I thought we should avail ourselves of their kindness and ask for their opinion.

Mr. REID (Grenville). But, after the plans and specifications had been approved by the admiralty, they could have been handed over to the Toronto firm, and they would be capable of building that vessel, under the instructions of the minister's naval architect. But the minister is trying to make us believe that the fact of the plans being submitted to the British Admiralty made it necessary to have the vessel built in England. The hon. minister must assume the responsibility of that position. But, suppose he wanted another ice-breaker, a vessel that would go through the canals, and if he submitted the plans to the admiralty, and then asked for tenders, if the Toronto firm's tender were no more than 20 per cent higher, would he not give it to the Toronto firm?

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly, if plans could be devised that would meet the approval of the British Admiralty by which the vessel could have a width which would allow her to pass through the canals, I would be glad of it.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE. THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 148) respecting the Manitoba Radial Railway Company.—Mr. Molloy.

Bill (No. 149) respecting the Hamilton, Waterloo and Guelph Railway Company.—Mr. Harris.

Bill (No. 139), for the relief of George Addison Brown.—Mr. Thornton.

Bill (No. 138) for the relief of Gertrude Maud Grant.—Mr. Martin (Regina).

Bill (No. 140) for the relief of Mary Hamilton Johnson.—Mr. Tolmie.

Bill (No. 141) for the relief of Dalton Mary Stapleton.—Mr. Tolmie.

Bill (No. 142) for the relief of Lorne Forbes Robertson.—Mr. Rankin.

Bill (No. 143) for the relief of Cecil Ernest Freeman.—Mr. Blain.

Bill (No. 144) for the relief of Ethel Mary Hornell.—Mr. McCraney.

Bill (No. 145) for the relief of Paulina Verena Meyer.—Mr. Rankin.

Bill (No. 137) for the relief of Maggie Florence Sadler—Mr. Reid (Grenville).

CANADIAN NORTHEN BRANCH LINES COMPANY.

Mr. CASH moved that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 81) to incorporate the Canadian Northern Branch Lines Company, be concurred in.

Mr. GRAHAM. These are several amendments made by the Senate and concurred in by the Railway Committee of this House to whom they were referred. Section 8 in the original Bill is struck out. The old clause allowing them to deal in stock for all purposes has been struck out. In section 12 a clause allowing them to hold stock of other companies is struck out. In section 16 these words are struck out:

And thereafter the company may acquire and hold guaranteed bonds and securities of other companies.

In 18 and 19 a provision with reference to the authorization of stock has been replaced by the standard clause. In 21 these words are added:

Any transportation company authorized to carry on any business incidental to the work of the railway, and upon such terms as are specified.

Motion agreed to.

ALBERTA CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. CASH moved that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 92) respecting the Alberta Central Railway Company be concurred in.

Mr. GRAHAM. The chief amendment made to this Bill is to strike out the particular clause they had asked for as to the authorization of capital, and putting in the standard clause. These words are also added: 'Subject to the Navigable Waters Protection Act, chapter 115 of the Revised Statutes.'

Mr. SPROULE. It would appear from the amendment made in clause 21 that what we have frequently refused in other Bills has been granted in this. In clause 21 it says:

The company may, in addition to the powers hereinbefore contained, acquire, hold, guarantee, pledge and dispose of stocks, bonds and other securities of any railway company, or of any transportation, navigation, transfer, express, hotel or other company, authorized to carry on the business incidental to the work of the railway.

That was practically giving them a general power to amalgamate which we generally refuse to do. I see no reason why we should give that right to the Canadian Northern Branch Lines Company and refuse it to every other company. We should make one rule which would apply to all and show no favouritism.

Mr. GRAHAM. That point was thrashed out at considerable length in the committee, and it would seem that this clause appears in practically the same language in the original Canadian Northern Act and also in the original Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Act. The Canadian Northern has a system of financing all peculiar to itself under which the parent company assists the other subsidiary companies and they being all the same people they all deal in the stock of the different companies. Both the Committee of the House and the Committee of the Senate concluded unanimously that we might disturb their system of financing if we change this, they having acted on these powers for years.

Mr. SPROULE. The Committee of the House was unanimous for clause (b) in the Bill, but this is an amendment made by the Senate.

Mr. GRAHAM. The Senate rather curtailed than enlarged the scope of the Bill. The original clause left the company to deal in the bonds of any company but the Senate restricted it to some company having a business incidental to the working of a railway.

Mr. SPROULE. That is exactly what they wanted. It is true the original clause was wider in some respects, but in this particular case the scope of it is wider than the House agreed to give them.

Motion agreed to.

The order for Private Bills having expired the House resumed in Committee of Supply.

SUPPLY.

Construction of lighthouses, $100,000.

Mr. REID (Grenville). At six o'clock I was replying to the statement of the minister that he now had a purchasing agent and that the department was free from political influence. But I would like to know how it is that practically all the supplies for his department continue to be purchased from Liberals. Is not the same patronage list hung up before this purchasing agent; has he not to go to the Liberals in different localities and buy from them? In Montreal are there not a selected few from whom he must purchase and who knowing that, all put on the same price. Will the minister explain how it is that if this purchasing agent wants anything in Montreal he has to go to Lymburner who charges 125 per cent more than the stuff is worth. What is the use of having a purchasing agent if it is only for the purpose of cloaking over the rascality that is going on in this department, by saying that there is now a man who is free from political influence and who can do as he likes. That is only a myth. The system is just exactly the same as before he was appointed. The minister complains that I was finding fault with the naval architect, but that is not so. I believe it was absolutely necessary that the minister should have a naval architect, and as I do not believe in employing a cheap man I believe he should have the very best man he could get. I never saw the naval architect to my knowledge, and I have nothing against him, but it did seem to me a little strange that when the minister required an ice-breaker he did not get it made in Canada especially in view of the fact that the minister admitted to-day that so long as the plans were approved by the admiralty, any concern that had the necessary plant could build the steamer, and that a ship-building firm in Toronto could build it. The minister puts the whole blame on the naval architect, but if I were a minister I would assume the responsibility no matter what the consequences, and would not blame my officials. I never liked the idea of a minister blaming his officials and trying to shield himself. There is no doubt at all that in this case the naval architect made plans for a vessel that would go through the Welland canal, and if I remember aright tenders were advertised about the 18th of February to be received in Ottawa about the 10th of March, and they had to come all the way from England.

How could any Toronto or Collingwood firm tender on a vessel that they could not get through the canals because of that little change? Some one suggested to the naval architect that change in the plans—I am not suggesting that it was the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, because it may have been some one else—and the result was that tenders had to be asked in England. The minister cannot deny that there were several tenders lower by thousands of dollars than that of Vickers-Maxim. This certainly calls for an explanation. The minister was in England, and he could deal directly with these people. I want to tell him that I had it from a representative of one of the largest concerns in England that had sold vessels to the department in Ottawa, that it was absolutely necessary for them to have an agent in Canada, because they had to pay a commission in order to sell a vessel to this government. The minister knows that the agent in Canada of Vickers-Maxim is Lewis, of Lewis Brothers, Montreal, and he said before six o'clock, if I understood him correctly, that Lewis had not had anything whatever to do with this contract, and knew nothing about it. Is that right? If my memory serves me, Lewis telegraphed to the minister to hurry, and have the money sent on. Why was the minister dealing with Lewis if his firm represented Vickers-Maxim? The Minister of Marine and Fisheries, after having been on the gridiron for two or three years, promised us solemnly that in future he would do right and be good. Now he comes with another deal, and it appears to me like this: I want a steamer; my naval architect makes out the plans of what will suit; I have to give out the contract; if I gave it to Polson's or some other Canadian shipbuilder, they would not give us a commission for political purposes; I will make the vessels a foot wider and a foot longer, and it will have to be built in the old country; now, whom can I get to handle this for me? Lewis of Montreal handles the goods for us for elections.

Mr. REID (Grenville).

Lewis is sent for; he goes to England; he handles this contract through Vickers-Maxim, the concern with which Mr. Deguid is connected; and the deal goes through. That is enough to convince me that the thing is not exactly right. I am afraid that if work of this kind continues, we shall have to get the minister up again and give him another lesson, so that he will again promise to be good. The minister says that this government has adopted a policy not to buy a vessel in England so long as they can purchase it in Canada for 20 per cent more than the English price. I can hardly believe that is correct in every department, because I was more than surprised the other day at reading in a newspaper that a vessel only 90 feet long had been bought in England for this government. I thought it was for the Department of Marine, and I was not surprised knowing what I did about the 'Earl Grey' scrape; but when I found that the Minister of Agriculture was the culprit, I concluded that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries must have been giving him some lessons. It does seem strange to me that we cannot give this work to our own Canadian ship-building firms. I have heard some of them say: Give us 20 per cent more than the English price of a vessel, and we will build it every time. But I want to tell the minister wherein he does not treat the Canadian shipbuilders fairly. He calls for tenders for a vessel, and these men come to Ottawa. Then he tells them they will have to have this thing and that thing, and these fittings to fit up the interior in elegant shape, and then they can figure. But he does not tell this to Vickers-Maxim; and when the vessel comes over, you can find in the Auditor General's Report that there is a great deal more added to the cost than there would be if a Canadian firm did the work. It is not necessary to say to the minister that if there is any middleman to carry the funds in Quebec when an election comes on, or if it is necessary to have a rake-off, we cannot trace it in England, it is absolutely safe. We cannot trace it in England, and are willing to hold up our hands in that respect. Therefore it looks to me that there is something else besides cheapness which induced buying in the old country. I do not take any stock in that old story about the willingness of the government to give 20 per cent in advance of what they can buy at in England. The next time the minister wants a steamer built in Canada, let him send the specifications and the lowest tender he gets in England to our ship-building firms in Canada. We have one in Toronto, one at Collingwood, one near Niagara Falls, and one about to start in Port Arthur in a very few weeks, and no doubt there are some in the east, and I would like him to say to these: Here are the tenders I have got from England and I will give you 20 per cent more. If he would do this, he would soon get a contract in Canada. But let him not take the course he did in the case of the 'Earl Grey.' Let him not accept a tender which, if not the highest, was pretty near the top. The minister will not say that in that case he accepted the lowest tender. The one he accepted was thousands and thousands of dollars higher than several others.

Mr. BRODEUR. I entirely agree with my hon. friend that the government should if possible have the ships built here, and that is our policy. Not many months ago, we gave the construction of two ships to Canadian shipbuilders, although their tenders were not the lowest. One of these vessels is the 'Estavan' and the other the 'Bellechasse'. In both cases the lowest tenders were not taken, but as the Canadians were obliged to pay duty on certain goods to be used in the construction of these vessels, we thought it advisable to take that into consideration, and at the same time give our Canadian industries a certain percentage of protection. There is no protection now at all in the case of shipbuilding. Ships built on the other side come to this country free of duty, and the shipbuilders there are not obliged to submit to the fair wage clause which we force on our Canadian firms.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). You do not mean vessels coming from the United States?

Mr. BRODEUR. No; there is a duty on ships from the United States, and besides we have never had any tenders from any American shipbuilders. It is only fair that we should give a certain percentage of protection to our Canadian shipbuilders, and that is what we have been doing. Coming to the 'Earl Grey', my hon. friend claims that a change was made in the width of the vessel, and that this change prevented her from passing through the canal, and consequently prevented Canadian ship-builders on the Great Lakes from tendering. But it was after consulting with the people of Prince Edward Island that we determined on having a draught of 18 feet loaded and 15 feet and a few inches light. A vessel of that draught could not pass through our canals, because our canals can only accommodate 14 feet. We took all the necessary precautions to make sure that this ice-breaker would be a complete success. For a great many years, we had complaints that the service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland by the 'Stanley' and the 'Minto' was not at all satisfactory, and it became absolutely necessary that we should have a stronger ice-breaker. We had the plans submitted to experts. Captain Brown, whom we sent to England, has been in charge for many years of the 'Stanley' and is considered by the people of Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia coast as one of the best sea-faring men in the country. He has been many years on the service between the mainland and Prince Edward Island, and is considered a very competent authority on the navigation between these two places. I thought it advisable to send Captain Brown to England to confer with the architects there. When he arrived he suggested a change in the first design made. He suggested that the space for the cargo and passengers should be changed, and that put the vessel a little higher. As he knew exactly the local conditions, his opinion was accepted, but that change could only be made on condition that the width of the vessel should be increased. Captain Brown acted purely and simply in the interests of the localities interested, and the width was changed on the advice of the British Admiralty. We must not forget that the vessel is a sea-going one engaged in very important work, and 18 feet was considered by every one as the proper fraught for the work she has to do. Therefore 14 feet would not have been suitable.

No naval architect would have recommended such a draught. It was a requirement due to the circumstances and to the service the vessel was required to render. So, the width and the draught accepted as being necessary by the British Admiralty were the two conditions which prevented the vessel from being built on the Great Lakes. To charge the department with preventing the shipbuilders on the Great Lakes from tendering for this ship seems to me a preposterous thing. Consider the results that have been attained. Last winter, it is true, was a mild winter. The vessel could go almost during the whole time from Charlottetown to Pictou and all the time from Georgetown to Pictou, and there was no interruption of the service for a single day. The present winter has been, in the opinion of men living in the locality, one of the worst and coldest ever known, and yet we find with the exception of two or three days, this vessel able to make the passage regularly, when the other vessel, the 'Minto,' which also is a powerful ice-breaker, was stuck in the ice. My hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. Reid) says that in the case of the 'Earl Grey,' we did not accept the lowest tender. There were lower tenders, but they did not comply with the conditions; there were lower tenders which were not even accompanied with a deposit. Would it have been sound administration on the part of the department to accept tenders sent in in that form? No one will contend that. We accepted the lowest tender that complied with the conditions.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is it the fact that the minister made his purchase through Mr. Lewis of Montreal? Why did he not make the purchase direct?

Mr. BRODEUR. That is quite incorrect. There was no purchase through Mr. Lewis. Tenders were called for the construction of the vessel, and Messrs. Vickers, Sons & Maxim were given the contract. My hon. friend says the correspondence shows that Mr. Lewis communicated concerning the money due to Messrs Vickers, Sons & Maxim. That may be true. It is quite the common thing for these firms to have agents in Canada, and Mr. Lewis may be acting for these people.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Taking the statement of the minister, it would appear that it was impossible for any firm in Canada to tender, and the vessel would have to be got from abroad.

Mr. BRODEUR. I say the vessel could not be built on the Great Lakes, for she had a draught of 18 feet, as against a depth of 14 feet in the canal and she was wider than the canal provided for. When tenders were called for it was open to the builders on the Great Lakes to tender, provided they could deliver the ship in Charlottetown. And we gave the builders in Canada a special advantage by providing that the vessel must be delivered in Canada.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The minister gives as one reason why this vessel could not be built on the Great Lakes the fact that her draught was 18 feet, which is four feet deeper than the canal.

Mr. SPROULE. Her light draught is 15 feet.

Mr. REID (Grenville). But there would be the same difficulty of passing her through the canal. Now, if one did not understand the conditions, he would have to admit that the minister was right and that the vessel could not be built on the Great Lakes. Let me tell the minister that there is a vessel running between Montreal and Quebec which has a greater draught than the depth of the canal, and yet she was built by the Polson works of Toronto. They first built the hull and took her down to Montreal without engines and boilers. Thus, her draught was only about 10 feet. Then the machinery was loaded on a vessel and went through also, and at Montreal they simply put the machinery into the hull. The machinists could work at Montreal as well as at Toronto when their work was inside the vessel. Whoever gave the minister information to try to let him out of the hole has merely put him in a worse position. For the vessel could have been built in Toronto and taken down in the way I have indicated, even if her draught had been 25 feet.

Mr. BRODEUR. Then, why did not they tender?

Mr. REID (Grenville). Because the minister changed the plans. The minister admits that he changed the plans. These people were ready to tender on the old plans, but when he changed the plans they could not tender, because they could not get her through the canals. The minister told us he had one of the best experts in the world to design this vessel. The minister told this naval architect what was required of this vessel—to carry freight and passengers, to break the ice and so on. On this basis the expert made up his plans. Yet he tells us here that he gives these plans to a gentleman named Captain Brown, the man who is running the steamer across from Prince Edward Island, and Captain Brown has full authority to change those plans and to do what he likes. After he has got his plans all ready, he hands them to the captain of a vessel who is not an architect, and tells him to go to England with them. When he gets to England, this captain decides that this vessel must be made just one foot wider and one foot longer. It seems suspicious that everything was placed in this man's hands. Does the minister say that if this vessel had been one foot narrower and one foot shorter she would not have been just as useful a vessel in plying between Prince Edward Island and the mainland? I would like to know if this vessel has been carrying a full cargo of freight and passengers all the time. As I have heard his officers state, the chief thing required in an ice-breaker is to run as fast as she can, a few miles an hour. Now, I do not think the people of Canada will believe that it is necessary to pay thousands of dollars in addition for a vessel to break ice, the speed of which is sixteen and a-half knots an hour, or seventeen knots. The thing seems absurd. I cannot understand why the minister did that thing. I think myself that the whole deal was arranged. Lewis, of Montreal, is agent for Vickers, Sons & Maxim, and the minister knows that it was not necessary for this firm to have an agent in Montreal in order to get this business from the government. The minister picks out one of the leading Liberals of the province of Quebec, a man who assists him with campaign funds, and the minister knows well enough that Vickers, Sons & Maxim had Mr. Lewis there for the purpose of a great big rake-off. The only excuse given is that the naval architect, a former employee of Vickers, Sons & Maxim, recognizes this firm and discards all the others. He discarded the firm that built the two Empresses for the Canadian Pacific railway. But the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was afraid to give it to a firm that built the 'Empress of Britain,' and the 'Empress of Ireland,' and I do not hesitate to say that in my opinion it was not done for that purpose at all. Lewis, of Montreal, is the man who knows what it was done for, and if the minister does not know why it was done, it is about time he did.

Mr. WARBURTON. I happen to know something about this ship, which I do not think the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) does. He speaks about the Canadian Pacific railway building the empresses. That is true, but the empresses are an entirely different class of ship from the 'Earl Grey,' and a shipbuilding firm that would build an empress might not be able to build an ice-breaker like the 'Earl Grey.' If my memory serves me right, Vickers, Sons & Maxim were the people whom the Russian government employed to build their ice-breakers. The ice-breakers of the Russian government have very heavy work to do, and this firm was selected in preference to all other firms because of their capability for doing that kind of work. I do not think the Minister of Marine and Fisheries would have beeen justified in going up the Great Lakes and trying experiments there which might result to our disadvantage. He would not have been justified in giving the people there a contract to build a boat which is required for the most arduous work perhaps in the service. The 'Earl Grey' is no doubt a remarkably fine boat, and she has stood a very severe test this winter. This has been one of the most severe winters we have had for many years, and she has proved a great success. It is questionable whether she would have proved so great a success had she been built by men who did not understand that sort of work. A vessel engaged in that work has to be of great weight, she has to have good speed, to have plenty of beam in order to afford accommodation. True, she is not always loaded with passengers and freight, but at other times she is. But the point I wish to make is that the men who built this ship were not the men who build ocean greyhounds. They build men of war, and have built ice-breakers for the Baltic and for the northern seas. You will find in the reports that many of the English firms who are good shipbuilders would not undertake to build vessels of this class because it is out of their line, they have not the necessary experience and skill. I suppose there are no better shipbuilders in the world than Harland & Wolff, of Belfast, but I doubt if they would undertake to build a vessel of this kind, because it is out of their line. To build a vessel of this kind requires peculiar facilities and peculiar skill. If the minister sees his way shortly to build another vessel, I hope he will follow the course he has adopted with regard to the 'Earl Grey,' and not trust the building of the new vessel to inexperienced firms. It is too important a matter. If you make a mistake in the building of a vessel of that kind you cannot repair it. It will take a couple of years to get such a vessel built.

Now, I would like to say a word or two about Captain Brown, whose name has been mentioned. I know Captain Brown very well. He is an old, experienced mariner, and I am quite sure that he could have built a ship if he was put to it. I have no doubt that if you put him down in a shipyard, provided with plans, and with the necessary facilities, he could oversee the construction of a ship of this class. But a man like Captain Brown, a first-class seaman of great experience, a man who has had many years experience in ice navigation, would be just the man to consult with a naval expert, or naval architect, in regard to improvements in a vessel you were building for that sort of work.

Any intelligent sea captain—and Captain Brown is a particularly intelligent man—knowing ships as well as Captain Brown knows them, in the course of a very short experience, would be able to point out the important features in building of a vessel of that kind, and in view of the fact that Captain Brown has had an experience of these straits for the last twelve or fourteen years it is beyond question that he would probably know more than any other man, except his brother captain who is engaged in the same occupation, what sort of a vessel is best adapted for that route. Mr. Duguid went down there and crossed week after week in these vessels to see what kind of work they did and to see what improvements he could make upon the plans that had been adopted, and he was largely indebted to the captain of these vessels for the knowledge that he acquired.

There is a great difference in builders. The 'Stanley' was built by the late government about twenty years ago, and the 'Minto' some twelve or fourteen years ago. The 'Stanley' is generally believed to have been a better vessel than the 'Minto.' She was built by the Fairchilds, a firm of large experience in that style of building, and she was built to some extent under the direction of a well known old sea captain who at one time was a member of this House, and who was able to give information with reference to the ice conditions to be met with in the straits. They turned out a remarkably good vessel; she was not as strong as the later ones, but she was a good vessel and she was probably built by a better builder of that class of ships than the firm that the 'Minto' was built by.

The experience of those working the vessels enabled the architects to find out any defects that there were in the previous vessels, and those defects were to a large extent if not entirely removed in the new ship, the 'Earl Grey.' No man, I take it in his own private business, would have a ship of that kind, if he required one, built by men who were accustomed to build lake vessels or even ocean steamers. If he were a man of business at all he would put the building of a ship of that kind into the hands of people who understood that particular class of work. That is what was done in this case. Even although the department did not accept the lowest tender, even although any other tender complied with the conditions, they would have been very well justified in spending some thousands of pounds more to get the work done by a firm which they knew perfectly well was capable of doing it.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I do not wish the hon. member for Queens, Prince Edward Island (Mr. Warburton) to feel that I am at all reflecting upon Captain Brown. I do not know the gentleman, and never heard of him. But the minister stated that he had a naval architect who was an expert upon this class of vessel, that he had served with this firm in England, that he knew all about this kind of work and he was certainly supposed to have the experience and knowledge to enable him to design the class of vessel that is required more than the captain of a vessel running from one shore to the other. I am perfectly satisfied that Captain Brown is a good man, but it is not to be expected that he could have the same knowledge. Then, as the minister states, after the naval expert made these plans, in order to prove that they were correct and satisfactory, he sent them to Captain Brown to give him the benefit of his experience and knowledge after which they were changed. If, Captain Brown is a man of the qualifications and ability that the hon. member for Queens credits him with, the minister has not done justice to Captain Brown. He should be occupying the position of Mr. Duguid here in Ottawa. If he is so much superior to Mr. Duguid then he should be filling that position. What is going to be the result when we come to build the class of vessels that are required in Canada? Here you have a man who has not the qualifications to build that sort of vessel and who is inquiring from Captain Brown what he should do; in fact, it is the captain who comes and changes the whole plan. My opinion is that you should get Captain Brown here at once and turn over to him the architectural branch of the department for he apparently is the man who has the information. Let Mr. Duguid draw the plan and let Captain Brown tell him what is required. There is not the slightest dispute as to the 'Earl Grey' being a first-class vessel. Whether this or that firm got the contract you would not have anything else but a first-class vessel. Nobody is finding fault with that vessel, but what we are finding fault with is the price that was paid. The hon. member for Queens states that he would only give a contract like this to some firm that knows how to build these vessels. We are building vessels on the upper lakes as large as the vessels going from Montreal to the old country. We have built on the upper lakes numbers of vessels which have been taken down to Montreal and are now sailing on the ocean. They are, in fact, ocean vessels. I remember several. They could not take them through the canals completed because they were too long, being 300 or 400 feet in length, but they built them on the upper lakes, put them all together, ran them down to the canals, cut them in two, took the rivets out, put in false bulkheads, took them down in two parts and when they got them to Montreal or Quebec they put them together again and they are now running as sea-going vessels. There are shipbuilding concerns in Canada just as well qualified to build vessels as are Harland and Wolff or any other firms on the other side. The architect makes out the plans and specifications according to a certain mold or design, he specifies whether it shall be Lowmoor iron or steel and what kind of material shall go into the vessel, the thickness or size of the sheets, the kind and number of rivets, how they are to be placed, the number of frames; everything is put down there in detail. The builder is not the man who has to plan and figure out what is to be done. This is all done for him by the architect. The contract for a vessel is the same as the contract for a house. If you want to build a house you show the contractor the plan and specification he carries them out and you are supposed to have some one there to look after him. If you have one of these vessels built it is the naval architect who must make the plans and specifications, and it is the duty of the minister to require the naval architect to see that the plans and specifications are carried out. Why cannot we build these vessels just as well in Canada? We can build 'Empresses' at Toronto.

Mr. SPROULE. Or at Collingwood.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Yes, or at Collingwood. They are probably too large for the canal, but we are building vessels as large as the Empresses. There are vessels on the upper lakes 600 feet long and carrying 350,000 bushels of wheat, but you could not build them up there and compete with the English shipbuilder if you get the price without graft in England, and you have to pay graft in Ontario. The member for Queens, P.E.I. knows as well as I do that there were seven or eight tenderers for the 'Earl Grey', and that Vickers, Sons & Maxim were amongst the highest, if not the highest, by a very large sum of money. Yet the member for Queens, P.E.I. is willing to see that amount of money squandered and go to some grafters simply because he was told by the Minister of Marine or somebody else that Vickers, Sons & Maxim built ice-breakers for the Russian government. Perhaps it was Lewis told him that. I have no hesitation in saying that the 'Earl Grey' would not be in it as an ice-breaker with the Grand Trunk steamer that runs from Cobourg to Rochester. Hon. members have now heard both sides of the argument, and I am willing to drop it here and let the committee decide whether the minister or I am right.

Mr. CROSBY. I know something about ships and shipbuilding, and I can say that the remarks made by the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) about the construction of the 'Earl Grey' are highly applicable to the conditions. There are vessels carrying freight across the Atlantic that can carry three times the cargo of the 'Earl Grey' on 14 or 15 foot draught and I believe that a vessel doing the work of the 'Earl Grey is doing can be constructed to go anywhere on less than 14 foot draft. The marine architect draws the plans, makes the specification, and sets out exactly where every bolt and plate and piece of machinery is to be put, and any competent shipbuilder can and must follow the architect's plan, no matter whether the vessel is built on the Great Lakes, or on our Atlantic coast, or in England, or anywhere else. The minister told us that Captain Brown took these plans, which were carefully prepared by this special naval expert from the old country, and that he went to London and that somebody got hold of him there. I say that this country cannot give too good a service to Prince Edward Island, because the better the service for Prince Edward Island, the better for the island, and the better for all Canada. For my part I would be very glad to see the tunnel built if it is feasible, and I think some effort should be made in that direction. I am glad to know that the 'Earl Grey' has been more successful than any former steamer on that route, and that is very natural because year after year the science of naval architecture is improving, and we can get vessels to perform work now that was impossible 10 or 20 years ago. There is no reason in the world why the 'Earl Grey' should not have been built in Canada. If I am well informed that she cost somewhere close to $1,000,000 she could be built in Canada, and built at a very good profit.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend is a little astray; she cost $500,000.

Mr. CROSBY. I was going to say that if she cost $900,000 she cost as much as one of the Empresses cost. There are lots of places in eastern Canada where that vessel could be built. She could have been built in Pictou; they built one large sailing ship there and she has been very successful. We have facilities in Halifax, and our friends there have been trying to get the government to give them a chance at shipbuilding.

Mr. BRODEUR. Why did they not tender?

Mr. CROSBY. Because the government made it impossible for them to tender, and I say right now that the government should have given some Canadian firm 10 per cent on the construction of that vessel in order to have her built in Canada. The minister shakes his head, but will he get up here and state that this government is opposed to giving assistance to the shipbuilding industry in this country. Delegation after delegation from eastern Canada has come to the government wanting $6 a ton, and not less than $5 a ton, and I myself heard the government offering $3 or $4 a ton to encourage shipbuilding. Why did not the government give the building of this ship to some firm in Canada to encourage the industry, and if they did the ship would be well built. We are doing in Halifax some of the best repair work that is done in America, and we get some of the shafting from Pictou.

I am satisfied that good work can be done in the lakes. There is nothing to prevent a vessel being built in Canada so far as draught is concerned. The people of this country made a name for themselves in the construction of wooden ships. We put the British sailing ship out of business, because it was a narrow, deep, long-keeled ship, which could not hold her own with the Canadian ships. We out-pointed the British shipbuilders in building wooden ships, and I believe we will in time outpoint them in building iron ships. But how are we going to get a start if the government does not give us a chance? I am ashamed to say that only a few days ago I saw that a little boat 80 feet long and 18 feet wide was built in Dartmouth, England, and brought to Canada for the quarantine service. The 'Earl Grey' is a good ship, and we are glad to have a ship able to give the accommodation she does, but she cost a lot of money. I know of ships a great deal larger and as well constructed that did not cost anything like as much money. We have two or three ships sailing out of Halifax, which were constructed for the carrying of passengers between Halifax, New York and Newfoundland, and so constructed as to be used in sealing in the St. Lawrence in winter time. Though they are much larger than the 'Earl Grey,' they did not cost nearly so much money. I am not complaining of the cost of the 'Earl Grey,' but I am complaining, as every member of this House should complain, that some of our shipbuilders in the east have not been given an opportunity to construct these ships for the government. The minister says he is anxious to give us a chance. Well, the best way to show that anxiety is to give us one of these contracts. I do not care whether the ship is constructed at Halifax or Pictou or Yarmouth or anywhere else, I believe you would get a good job. If the government gave an order for one ship to be constructed on a 10 per cent profit, would they be hurt very much? I do not think they would. It would be an honest proposition, and I believe you would get a good job. When we want to purchase anything that we cannot manufacture in this country, then let us go to the mother country to get it; but, on the other hand, anything that we can produce or manufacture in this country we should get here; that is the principle I go upon. I am glad to hear that the 'Earl Grey' is a good boat and is giving good service. But the time has come when the ships required for this country should be built in this country as far as possible; and do not let us be too exacting in the specifications. Twenty years ago or even ten years ago we could not get as good a ship built in England as we can to-day. Let us give the people of our own country an opportunity to try what they can do; and if the first ship they build is not quite as good a ship as we would like to have, let us give them a second opportunity, and in the course of time we shall establish a shipbuilding industry that will be a credit to Canada. So far as Captain Brown is concerned, while he is a good man, and is well fitted for the position he occupies, we have in the province of Nova Scotia just as good men. You will find plenty of them in Pictou county, in Richmond county and in Cape Breton. In fact the province of Nova Scotia is full of good captains. Let us build the next ship we require in Canada, and not plead as an excuse for not doing so some quibbling about the contract or the deposit. Should the government not be able to get any concern in this country which would undertake the contract and make the deposit, let the government hand the work over to one of these concerns I have referred to, in Halifax, Pictou or Yarmouth, which are accustomed to build seagoing vessels. Though of course I am more interested in Halifax, I would not raise any objection if the contracts should go to Pictou or Yarmouth, but what I want is that the boat should be built in Canada.

Mr. CROSBY.

Mr. SPROULE. I would scarcely be doing justice to the section from which I come, were I not to say something with regard to the shipbuilding plant at Collingwood, which is turning out so many large vessels on the upper lakes to-day. I cannot see why the contract for the 'Earl Grey' should not have been given to the Collingwood Ship Building Company. The objection cannot be the length of the vessel, because that company has built many much longer, nor could it be owing to its depth, because it has built boats of two or three times that capacity. What length is this boat?

Mr. BRODEUR. 250 feet long.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that the reason the contract was not given to a Canadian firm was because the vessel was too long to go through the canal. If my hon. friend from Grenville is correct the length was changed in order to provide just such a reason for not having the boat built at Collingwood. But the company there has built boats 400 and 500 feet long, and can build them even longer, because there is a dry dock at Collingwood which the government has subsidized for the building of such vessels. When, however, the government has any work to be done, it entirely overloks this Canadian firm and gives the contract to an English firm. I understood the hon. minister to say that he was desirous of favouring Canadian firms even though he might have to pay them 15 or 20 per cent more.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is my own personal view.

Mr. SPROULE. Then I cannot see why the hon. gentleman did not make some effort to have this boat built in Canada. As my hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. Reid) has said, it could have been built just as well in Collingwood as in Halifax or in England. The objection that the draught was too great cannot hold because several boats have been built at Collingwood of heavier draught and taken right down the canal. By not putting the heavy machinery into it, until it gets through the canals, a vessel with an 18 foot draught would probably only draw 11 or 12 feet, and our canals can accommodate 14 feet. Nor could it be on account of the inability of Canadian firms to build a boat of this class that the contract was not given to any of them because men eminent in the shipbuilding line, with experience both in the old country and Canada, have told me that they can get just as good a boat at Collingwood as at the Clyde, or Glasgow, or in Ireland. When we pay out money to construct a dry dock for the purpose of building boats, I do not see why the Minister did not make an effort to have this boat built at Collingwood, and we can hardly take him seriously when he says he is desirous of giving the work to Canadian firms.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou). I do not think that any one who has looked at this question with any degree of care could take much stock in the proposition that a boat of the type of the 'Earl Grey' could be constructed in the upper lakes and brought down to the Atlantic ocean. I am quite aware that at Collingwood there is a splendidly equipped shipbuilding plant which has turned out many vessels of most satisfactory type and that nothing can be said against the capability of that plant to build vessels. The construction of the 'Earl Grey,' however, was a peculiar proposition, in that it involved the carrying out of the terms of confederation in regard to the maintenance of continuous navigation between the mainland and the island of Prince Edward. To say, as the hon. member for Grenville says, that a vessel of the type of the 'Earl Grey,' as she is known to the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Crosby) and the members for Prince Edward Island, could have been built, and then cut in two and then brought down the canals and then meet the ice conditions in the Gulf of St. Lawrence is to my mind, an absurdity. But that is not the main point. Every one agrees that, in the past, we have had to go to Great Britain to get our vessels built. But I think the time has come in Canada when we should not be obliged to go to England for our vessels; they can be constructed here in Canada. They can be constructed in Collingwood or in other plants on the upper lakes, and in Halifax and Pictou counties we have plants in which vessels have been constructed, and where, if the minister carries out the policy he has expressed a desire to carry out, we can construct all the vessels required for the fisheries protection and lighthouse services.

Mr. BRODEUR. And the naval service too.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou). I was just going to refer to that. The policy of the minister in that regard has been shown by the fact that in connection with the ships of the navy it is rendered absolutely essential that these should be constructed in Canada. Let me point out one difficulty that arises through the construction of vessels in England. Machinery of a patented kind is prescribed very often, and in vessels constructed in Great Britain conditions are sometimes established in regard to the draught of the boilers suitable peculiarly for the use of Welsh coal, the highest type of coal, and which, to a certain extent, interfere with the use of Canadian coal. There there are peculiarities in connection with the engine and all the motive parts of the steamer, which compel the government to send these vessels back to Great Britain to be repaired. There is no reason why vessels should be so made that they must go to Great Britain for repairs. They ought to be repaired here. And, in view of the development here of the iron and steel industry and attendant manufactures, I strongly join in supporting the proposition that, in all our services requiring vessels for any purpose whatever, we should give a preference to their construction in Canada.

Mr. BRODEUR. On this question I have already expressed myself strongly in favour of the construction of ships in Canada. We have carried out that policy in all cases where conditions would permit. In every instance, where vessels are required public tenders have been called for, and one of the provisions of the contract is that the vessel should be delivered in Canada. Why make this condition? In order to give the Canadian builder an advantage over the British builder or any other. In that way, they were obliged to arrange for the delivery of the ship in Canada. My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Crosby) stated a few minutes ago that in the case of the 'Earl Grey' that we should have given opportunity to the builders in the east to tender. As a matter of fact, they were given every opportunity possible. And we went further. In the case of the 'Earl Grey' it was provided that she was to be delivered either in Halifax or in Charlottetown. Therefore, the Halifax shipbuilder had an opportunity to tender at an advantage over all other builders. Now, as to building ships on the Great Lakes, let me give the committee facts which will show how anxious the department and the government are to do something for this important industry at Collingwood, Toronto and now at Kingston—because another industry is being established in Kingston. I believe there was an industry of this kind on Lake Erie, but I think it is not in operation now; at any rate, they have never tendered upon any ships for which we offered contracts.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). What is the name of the firm in Kingston?

Mr BRODEUR. The Kingston Shipbuilding Company.

Mr. SPROULE. They are only talking about organizing that, I think.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, we have contracts with them. That is a fact of which my hon. friend probably is not aware. It has not been brought before parliament, but I am glad my hon. friends have given me this opportunity to show what we have done. When I have given the facts, I think he will be satisfied that we are doing everything possible to aid the Kingston industry. We have asked for tenders for three ships lately. One of these, the 'Estevan,' was to be used on the Pacific coast. Another was the 'Bellechasse,' and another the 'Dollard.'

Mr. CROSBY. What size are these vessels?

Mr. BRODEUR. The 'Estevan' is 200 feet long, and the 'Bellechasse' 160 feet.

Mr. CROSBY. Where is the 'Bellechasse' for?

Mr. BRODEUR. For the ship channel of the St. Lawrence. As the 'Estevan' was to be used on the British Columbia coast, we provided that she should be delivered there. The Collingwood Shipbuilding Company tendered, undertaking to deliver the vessel on the Pacific coast and offered a better price than the other Canadian tenderer, the British Columbia Marine Railway Company of Victoria. The tender of this latter firm was $455,000, while the Collingwood Shipbuilding Company undertook to build the vessel and deliver her at Victoria for $260,000, or almost sixty per cent less.

The lowest British tender was that of Dobson & Company of Newcastle-on-Tyne, $201,000, delivered at Victoria. Well, it is not more expensive for a British firm to deliver at Victoria than on the Great Lakes, perhaps not as expensive. But this firm did not send a deposit cheque, and we could not accept it. The second tender was Bow McLachlan & Co., $219,000. Then Fleming & Ferguson, $236,000; Campbell & Laird, Birkenhead, $227,000; Swan & Hunter, $253,000; McMillan, $243,000; Vickers Sons & Maxim, $267,000; Fleming & Ferguson, $236,000 were much lower than the Collingwood Shipbuilding Company at $260,000. We gave the contract to the latter company, because we wished to encourage Canadian shipbuilding. The British firm have no duty to pay upon ships, whereas Canadian builders have to import a certain quantity of goods from the other side upon which they have to pay a duty of from twenty to thirty per cent. We thought under the circumstances we should encourage this Canadian shipbuilding company, and we gave the contract for $260,000 to the Collingwood Shipbuilding Company.

Mr. SPROULE. If the Collingwood Company were under the same agreement to deliver the vessel at Victoria you were giving the British firm a financial advantage.

Mr. BRODEUR.

Mr. BRODEUR. Dobson & Company tendered for $204,000. For delivery at Victoria there was added £3,000, that makes $219,000. We gave the contract to the Collingwood Company for $260,000. Now take Swan & Hunter, a very reputable firm, they tendered for $233,000, and they added $4,000 for delivery at Victoria, that would make $237,000.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the minister give us the difference between the price paid to the Maxim people and the lowest tender on the 'Earl Grey'?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have not got the figures here. The 'Earl Grey' was built three years ago, and I did not expect this question would be brought up to-night. But here are the actual facts. Here are the contracts which have been made. Here is one made on the 24th of January, 1911.

Mr. CROSBY. Did you ask a Halifax firm to tender?

Mr. BRODEUR. I believe Mr. Brookfield is a very reputable firm, but he has never tendered. Now, take another ship for which an Order in Council was passed on the 25th of February 1911, the 'Bellechasse,' which is going to be engaged in the survey of the St. Lawrence. On this ship we had several tenders. We had Charline & Company, $97,000, but no deposit cheque. McLachlan & Co., Paisley, $128,285. In that case again it was provided that the ship should be delivered in Canada. It has always been the policy of the department to encourage the construction of ships in Canada, and we have done so in all cases where the tenders justified us. Then Thornycroft, a very good firm, tendered for $138,681. Fairfield tendered for $136,000. The Polson Iron Works tendered for $178,000, and we gave the contract to a Canadian firm, the Kingston Shipbuilding Company. There were some other British firms who tendered, and their tenders were higher than that of the Canadian firm. The Palmer Shipbuilding Company, The Ferguson Company and Vickers, Sons & Maxim tendered at a higher figure.

Mr. DANIEL. Was the vessel to be delivered in Canada?

Mr. BRODEUR. All with the condition attached that the vessel was to be delivered in Canada. Vickers, Sons & Maxim's price was $154,000 delivered at Quebec.

Mr. JAMESON. Is there any duty chargeable on these ships?

Mr. BRODEUR. There are no duties. British ships coming into Canada to engage in the coasting trade are not dutiable, except under a provision that we adopted some years ago, that ships registered but not built in Great Britain are dutiable. We found that some American firms, in order to evade payment of the duty, were going to have their ships registered in Great Britain or Newfoundland, and then were going to bring them into Canada to engage in the coasting trade. In order to prevent this the parliament of Canada, six or seven years ago, passed legislation by which these vessels, although ships of British register, would be dutiable. Ships built in Great Britain are not dutiable when they come to Canada.

Mr. JAMESON. Is not the duty on ships constructed in Great Britain, brought to Canada and registered as Canadian shipping, 25 per cent ordinarily and, under the British preference, 15 per cent?

Mr. BRODEUR. No; they are free.

Mr. JAMESON. When was that change made?

Mr. BRODEUR. In 1902 or 1904. My hon. friend will find it in the statutes of one of those years.

Mr. ARTHURS. Was the general average of the Canadian tenders above or below the general average of the British tenders?

Mr. BRODEUR. Above.

Mr. FRASER. Canada is the pioneer in ice-breaking ships. The first ship that was put on this route was the 'Northern Light,' built about 1873 or 1875, largely as an experiment in that line of navigation. Afterwards this question was taken up by the Russian government and further developed. Then we had the 'Stanley' built by the late government. It was considered an up-to-date ship at that time, and one of the best ships that had been built for the ice-breaking service. She was followed by the building by this government of the 'Minto' and again by the latest addition to the service, the 'Earl Grey.' The 'Earl Grey' is the most up-to-date ice-breaker, not only in Canada, but also in the world. I understand that this government sent men to Russia to study the construction of ice-breaking ships there before they gave the contract for this work. I do not know anything about the letting of the contract. I am not prepared to discuss that point, but, speaking from experience, because I crossed the Straits on the 18th of this month after one of the severest winters we have had on the Atlantic coast for years, I am prepared to give the full measure of credit to this government for having built one of the best ships for ice-breaking service in the world. The 'Earl Grey' is giving us the best service that has been given up to this stage, and if she did cost about $500,000 I think she is worth every cent of it. I am not prepared to say anything about how the contract was let, but I do say that that ship is worth all the money she cost. She is finished in the very best manner inside and out, and is one of the strongest and best ships that could be provided for that work. The 'Stanley' and 'Minto,' her predecessors in this service, had a horse-power of less than 4,000, while this ship has a horse-power of about 7,000, or almost twice as much. In building a ship for ice-fighting there are two things that are specially required—strength and power. She has the power. She has 3,000 or perhaps 3,500 horse-power more than the other boats, and her strength is also proportionately greater. I am willing to give credit to the government for doing anything of this kind, and I think that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, if he is soon to be translated to another sphere, will leave a monument to his good work in carrying out the terms of confederation. I only trust that he may remain with us a sufficient time to give us a sister ship to the 'Earl Grey.' It is the opinion of a great many people that if we had another ship we would have the best service we could get next to getting the tunnel, and I hope we will get that also in the course of time. This is a young country, and when the tunnel was first spoken of it was looked upon as a mighty project. I was reading in a newspaper to-night an account of the completion of a tunnel nine miles long in Switzerland at a cost of only $20,000,000. If we could demonstrate to the Minister of Public Works that we could get the tunnel built for $20,000,000 I do not think there is a member in this House who would oppose it. But, at the present time we are only asking that a survey be made to ascertain what the cost will be.

Mr. DANIEL. How long will the tunnel be?

Mr. FRASER. About nine miles, and, as I say, I was reading in the newspapers only to-night about a tunnel which they finished recently in Switzerland nine miles long at a cost of $20,000,000.

Mr. SPROULE. If I understood the statement of the hon. gentleman correctly, it was to the effect that the two special advantages of the 'Earl Grey' were her strength and power?

Mr. FRASER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there any reason why a vessel could not be built just as strongly here as in England, or why you could not put as great horse-power in her here as in England? I think there is none.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). We are just coming to that.

Mr. SPROULE. The remark was made by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) that it was a palpable absurdity to think that you could do it, and before he sat down he was in favour of everything of that kind being done here. His argument was a palpable inconsistency.

Mr. FRASER. As to building ships and building everything else in Canada that we can build, I do not think that there are any two opinions in this House. Both sides would be united with regard to building ships or anything else in Canada so long as we could do it, but I firmly believe that this ship that was built two or three years ago could not be duplicated in Canada. At least, I don't think she could, and I am only giving my own opinion on that matter for what it is worth. If the government should decide to build a new ship in Canada I would be only too glad of it, and on that point I do not think there is any difference of opinion. Perhaps the government will build a ship in Canada, and if she is finished on the basis of this 10 per cent, I think that perhaps there would be as much criticism of her as there was in this case. However, I can say that if the members of this committee had crossed in that boat on the 18th day of this month they would at once come to the conclusion that the 'Earl Grey' is to-day one of the finest ships for such a service on the North American continent, if not in the world. As to the capability and qualification of Captain Brown, there are no two questions; I have already spoken of his high qualities in this House, and I need say no more. He is a careful, efficient, and good commander, and no one can say a word against him. The people living in this inland country can hardly realize what winter navigation down there is, and what the responsibilities of the captains of these ships. Only a week ago the good ship 'Bruce,' plying between Nova Scotia, Cape Breton and Newfoundland, went on the rocks, and out of 150 passengers only two were lost, which was a tribute to the fitness of the officers of that vessel for their command. I think the department realizes, although a great many people who live in this part of Canada do not realize, the dangers and hardships of winter navigation in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. There are a number of ice-breakers on the River St. Lawrence engaged in breaking ice so as to hasten the opening of navigation, to let the mercantile people get their goods in and out at an earlier date than otherwise would be the case, and if I am not mistaken this vote is largely intended for that service.

Mr. BARNARD. What proportion of this vote does the minister purpose spending on the British Columbia west coast trail this year?

Mr. BRODEUR. The estimated amount is $30,000.

Mr. BARNARD. What distance of trail does the minister intend to build for that?

Mr. BRODEUR. The matter is under the consideration of the engineer.

Mr. BARNARD. When the engineer gives an estimate of $30,000, does he not know what he expects to do with the money?

Mr. BRODEUR. The assistant engineer has been investigating this question in the west and he has only just returned and has not made his report.

Mr. BARNARD. What length of trail has been built?

Mr. BRODEUR. Fifteen miles.

Mr. BARNARD. Is it a road or just a trail?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is a pretty good road, wide enough for a horse and cart to travel.

Mr. BARNARD. What is the total cost to date?

Mr. BRODEUR. $150,000.

Mr. BARNARD. The object of the trail is for life-saving purposes along the coast?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BARNARD. What is the full length of coast line that requires this trail and between what points will it be finally built?

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman remembers the circumstances under which the west coast trail was undertaken. Some years ago a shipping fatality disaster occurred, and petitions were sent asking for the building of this trail so that succour might be sent to ships in distress. We thought at the time that this request represented the unanimous opinion of the people.

Mr. BARNARD. So it did.

Mr. BRODEUR. And that it is still unanimous?

Mr. BARNARD. I may say for the information of the minister, that the only reluctant party in the matter was the Dominion government, which asked the provincial government to do this work although it was none of their business.

Mr. BRODEUR. The question arose as to whether the provincial government should not do something, and so far the provincial government has not subscribed. This road is considered as an aid to navigation.

Mr. BARNARD. Then why should the provincial government be asked to assist?

Mr. BRODEUR. Because some day the road would doubtless be used for general traffic. The provincial government refused to assist, and we had to do it ourselves. I hope that some day the provincial government will at least give us the land on which the trail has been constructed.

Mr. BARNARD. I would like to have my question answered as to the full length of the road when completed, and for what length of coast the road is required?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is difficult to answer that definitely. The matter is engaging the attention of the engineers of the department as to whether it is absolutely necessary to push the work very much further. It is expected that a few miles more will cover sufficient of the coast line to meet the request made some years ago.

Mr. BARNARD. It is fair to assume that the government recognizes the necessity for that work or else they would not have undertaken it. I point out to the minister that he has constructed 16 miles of road in four years, and I am credibly informed that although it is intended for life-saving purposes there are grades on the road so steep that it is practically impossible to get a life-saving apparatus up or down them. I am further informed that the road in many cases is half a mile from the coast, and any one who knows the roughness of that country, its rocky character, and the density of the underbrush, will know how absolutely impossible it would be to get from the road to the sea. Under the conditions the minister might as well have built the road ten miles off as half a mile. To build an ordinary road over where a horse and cart might go is costing $10,000 a mile, pretty nearly as much as he could build a railway for. It is possible that there is an explanation of this in the fact that it was rumoured at the time of the last election that every man was required to sign a document before he was employed that he would vote for the government candidate. I am not saying that rumour was true, but I do say that it gained a good deal of credence in the locality. It does seem to me outrageous that $153,000 should have been spent on 15 miles of road. I do not complain of the work; it is an absolute necessity, so much so that it should have been finished long ago; and if the work had been done in an ordinary business-like way, it would have been completed long ago, instead of being half done, and would not have cost any more than it has cost.

Mr. CROTHERS. Before we grant this item, it would seem expedient that we should have some detailed explanation of it. It is about four hours since it was called, and in that time we have had no information concerning it. It is only one item of a million dollars, which is a mere bagatelle to the Minister of Marine, too trifling to warrant any explanation whatever. It seems to me that these items should be put into some sort of intelligent shape. The minister does not condescend to tell us how many lighthouses he proposes to build, where they are to be erected and the estimated cost of each. If the members of this House are expected to scrutinize or criticise this item surely we should have something more from the minister than the mere statement that he wants a million dollars for the construction of lighthouses and aids to navigation. It seems to me that the minister can tell us where these lighthouses are to be built, the number of them, and the necessity for their construction—something to enable us to exercise our judgment upon it.

Mr. BRODEUR. I suppose my hon. friend was not here this afternoon when I gave the details.

Mr. CROTHERS. I was here, but I did not hear anything about the points I have suggested.

Mr. BRODEUR. However, I will repeat the statement. The vote is divided into two parts. The part relating to lighting apparatus covers the following requirements:

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Prince Rupert, buoy depot machinery	$10,000
Holland Rock, apparatus and lantern	2,000
Brown passage, apparatus and lantern	20,000
Rose Spit, gas beacon	2,000
Langara island, apparatus and lantern	20,000
Point No Point, apparatus and lantern	20,000
Improvement of 3 stations at $1,000	3,000
Five gas beacons at $2,000	10,000
Four gas buoys at $4,000	16,000
Gas buoy lanterns	6,000
Unlighted buoys	2,000
Freight, erection, &c	5,000
		$116,000

ONTARIO.

Improvement of 18 stations at at $1,000	18,000
Four gas buoys at $2,500	10,000
Gas buoy lantern	6,000
Unlighted buoys	1,000
Lighthouse depot, Prescott, improvements	5,000
Testing and experimenting at Prescott	5,000
Freight, erection, &c	4,000
		49,000

QUEBEC.

Bagot bluff, apparatus and lantern	$ 7,000
Ferroll point, apparatus and lantern	20,000
Cape Chatte, submarine signal apparatus	15,000
Improvement of 11 stations at $1,000	11,000
Four gas buoys at $2,500	10,000
Gas buoy lanterns	3,000

Unlighted buoys	$ 1,000
Freight, erection, &c	3,000
		$ 70,000

MONTREAL.

Four gas buoys at $2,500	$10,000
Gas buoy lanterns	3,000
		13,000

NEW BRUNSWICK.

Improvement of 11 stations at $1,000	$11,000
Two gas buoys at $4,000	8,000
Gas buoy lanterns	3,000
Unlighted buoys	5,000
Freight, erection, &c	3,000
		30,000

NOVA SCOTIA.

Sydney bar, apparatus and lantern	$ 1,000
Brier island, apparatus and lantern	20,000
Improvement of 74 stations at $1,000	74,000
Four gas buoys at $4,000	16,000
Gas buoy lanterns	6,000
Unlighted buoys	4,000
Freight, erection, &c	4,000
		125,000

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Improvement of 10 stations at $1,000	$10,000
One gas buoy	4,000
Gas buoy lantern	1,000
Unlighted buoys	1,000
Freight, erection, &c	1,000
		17,000

GENERAL.

Proportion of hire of boats for construction apparatus	30,000
Unforeseen expenses generally	50,000
		80,000
Total		$500,000

The second part of the item relates to lighthouse construction proper, of which the principal details of probable cost are as follows:

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Prince Rupert, construction of depot	$160,000
Point Atkinson, new tower	10,000
Holland Rock, new station	6,000
Rose Spit, new tower	5,000
Langara island, new station	40,000
Active Pass, new fog alarm	9,000
West Coast Trails	30,000
	$260,000

ONTARIO.

Cobourg, erection of a new light and fog alarm	$ 5,000
Red Rock, new tower and fog alarm	15,000
Kokanongwi, new range	4,000
Michipicoten, new tower	5,000
Lake Superior, new fog alarm	12,000
Portsmouth, range lights	4,000
	$45,000

QUEBEC.

Flat island, lighthouse	$ 6,000
Bagot Bluff, to compete station	10,000
Little Metis, new dwelling	4,000
Kamouraska, new dwelling	$ 4,000
Natashkwan, lighthouse on the point	5,000
Feroll's Point, new station	25,000
Carleton, to renew the lighthouse	1,200
Father Point, to repair the dwelling	1,000
Cape Chatte, sub. bell station	2,000
	$58,200
Montreal	$30,000

NEW BRUNSWICK.

Campbellton, to rebuild a lighthouse	$1,000
Grindstone island, to rebuild a lighthouse	5,000
Machias seal island, new fog alarm	7,000
	$13,000

NOVA SCOTIA.

Sydney S. Bar, light on pier	$ 8,000
Flint island, new dwelling	4,500
Cape Fourchu, to renew dwelling	3,000
Sambro, to renew dwelling	2,500
Point Prim, to renew fog alarm	10,000
Cape Race	2,000
Scatari, repairs to fog alarm	2,000
Mauger beach, new double dwelling	4,000
Hall harbour, Hampton, Owl's head — new lights	4,000
	$40,000
Prince Edward Island	$ 5,000

Mr. DANIEL. Are these submarine signals of any use except to those vessels supplied with telephone arrangements in the wheel house?

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. DANIEL. These submarine bells cannot be heard by vessels unless they have the telephone attachment?

Mr. BRODEUR. Precisely.

Mr. DANIEL. And they have to pay a royalty for the use of that attachment?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. Are all the government steamers provided with this telephone apparatus?

Mr. BRODEUR. The most important ones are.

Mr. DANIEL. Are many vessels of the ordinary merchant marine equipped with it?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, for instance, the Allan and the Canadian Pacific Railway lines. The stations are at Negro Point, Anticosti lightship, Red Island lightship, South Sea Shore lightship.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). How many lighthouses are there in Newfoundland, what did it cost to erect them, and what is the cost of their upkeep?

Mr. BRODEUR. There are lighthouses at Belleisle island, Cape Race, Cape Ray, Cape Anguille, Cape Norman, Cape Bauld, Point Rich. I am informed by my chief engineer that it costs about $1,000 for the equipping and $500 for maintenance per year. The more important lighthouses cost about $40,000 each to erect.

Mr. DANIEL. According to the Auditor General's Report, it costs from $4,000 to $5,000 a year to keep them up. Is there any drawback on the material used in building ships in Canada?

Mr. FIELDING. There are certain things in the free list, but apart from that there has been for many years a system of drawbacks based on so much per ton. That however, was devised in the days of the old wooden ships, and is not adapted to present conditions. In the case of the wooden ships it remains, but it is not adapted to modern steamships.

Mr. DANIEL. When a very large vessel is built on our inland waters, the amount of duty paid on the material entering into its construction is very heavy, and that may be one of the reasons why it costs so much more to build a vessel in this country than across the water. One way to assist the shipbuilding industry in Canada would be to allow the materials to come in free of duty. As a matter of fact our navigation companies on the Atlantic and Pacific go to England for their steamers because they can get them built there very much cheaper; but if the government would help the industry in the way I suggest, that might go a considerable way towards encouraging the building of these steamers in Canada.

Mr. CROSBY. I did not notice any amount for a lighthouse at Owl's head.

Mr. BRODEUR. It has been decided to build a lighthouse at that point, and there is an amount in the estimates for that purpose.

Mr. ARTHURS. Has the department an engineer who reports on questions of lighthouses and lights before the matter is brought to the Lighthouse Board? And who are the Lighthouse Board? Are its members principally from the maritime provinces or do they include men who are familiar with the conditions of inland waters?

Mr. BRODEUR. Lately, we decided to ask the president of the Dominion Marine Association, which is composed of those interested in shipping on the Great Lakes to join the Lighthouse Board. And the other day, at a meeting of the Lighthouse Board, this gentleman and also the secretary of the association were present. The Shipping Federation is also represented on the board by its president, and there is a representative from British Columbia. Besides these three, there are the deputy minister, the chief engineer—or, in his absence, the assistant chief engineer—the commissioner of lights and the chairman of the Quebec Harbour Commission; these compose the board.

Mr. ARTHURS. Last year and the year before I brought to the attention of the department the necessity for improving the lights on Lake Nipissing, particularly the one at Callender. The application was for a gas buoy at or near the mouth of South East bay. This was refused by the Lighthouse Board, for reasons that I could not understand. I am sure it will appeal to the minister or any practical man that, where there is one gas buoy, the additional cost of the upkeep of another light would be small. There is one on Lake Nipissing, and the application was for another. The lights on Lake Nipissing have been there for twenty or twenty-five years without being improved. The shipping on that lake has vastly increased aside altogether from pleasure boats which are very numerous. There should be a light at the mouth of South East bay and also one at the mouth of South river, going toward the village of Nipissing. It costs the department as much, I am sure, to keep the little lighthouse that is there now—practically a lantern on a pole—as to maintain a modern gas buoy or a lighthouse. I would press upon the minister very strongly the advisability of looking after this matter in some way, because, undoubtedly, the present condition will result in a very serious accident some day and probably loss of life. If the department has an officer of the kind I have spoken of I think it would be advisable to have him go up and make a report on the condition of these lights. I am confident that the report of this officer would be to the effect that the lights should be improved.

Mr. BRODEUR. I might inform my hon. friend (Mr. Arthurs) that a man was sent up there, but, unfortunately, he died.

Mr. ARTHURS. Will the hon. minister say that he will send up another man?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. JAMESON. In the report of the minister at page 13, I find it stated that the New Brunswick agency 'extends along the coast of the province in the Bay of Fundy, including part of Nova Scotia as far as Yarmouth and around the coast on the north side of the province.' The other evening we had some discussion with regard to St. John and Halifax agencies, and the minister said that there were two ships one of which he could not transfer across the Bay unless the Halifax agency were divested of the service of the Bay of Fundy. From this report of the minister it would appear that the St. John agency already has charge of the Bay of Fundy as far as Yarmouth. If the minister would give the St. John agency absolute control of the Bay of Fundy service, it would facilitate the business and be an improvement all round. I think the committee would be in favour of that change.

The minister referred to vessels constructed outside of Canada. I find, from the report of the minister, that, since 1899, ten ships used in the Canadian service, have been constructed outside of Canada, some of them costing as high as half a million dollars. They are as follows:

Vessel.	Where Constructed.	Date.
'Arctic'	Kiel, Germany.	1901.
'Montcalm'	Yoker, Great Britain.	1904.
'Druid'	Paisley, Scotland.	1902.
'Champlain'	Paisley, Scotland.	1904.
'Lady Laurier'	Paisley, Scotland.	1902.
'Lady Grey'	Barrow, Great Britain.	1906.
'Earl Grey'	Barrow, Great Britain.	1909.
'Minto'	Dundee.	1899.
'Simcoe'	Wallsend-on-Tyne	1909.
*'Cartier'	Great Britain	1910.

*In course of construction.

The construction of these ships involved a large expenditure of public money. The people of the maritime provinces have been for some time pressing upon the government that aid should be given to develop shipbuilding there. It is suggested that this aid should take the form of a bounty upon ships of a certain class, and I think it would be a very excellent plan indeed to give assistance of some kind to enable our people to profitably construct these ships. The minister, a few moments ago, spoke of the question of duties on ships coming into Canada. I have here the Canadian Customs tariff of 1907, and I find that item 589 reads:

Ships and other vessels built in any foreign country, if British registered since September 1, 1902, on application for license to engage in the Canadian coasting trade; on the fair market value of the hull, rigging, machinery, boilers, furniture and appurtenances thereof (as provided in part XVI. of the Canadian Shipping Act), British preferential tariff free; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

And item 590 reads as follows:

Vessels, dredges, scows, yachts, boats and other water-borne craft, built outside of Canada, of any material, destined for use or service in Canadian waters (not including registered vessels entitled to engage in the coasting trade, nor vessels in transit between Canada and any place outside thereof), n.o.p., on the fair market value of the hull, rigging, machinery boilers, furniture and appurtenances thereof, on arrival in Canada: British preference, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. JAMESON.

It seems to me that ships designed for the service of the government would certainly not be regarded as registered vessels entitled to engage in the coasting trade and I do not see how they come in free. However I understand that the minister thinks differently. They are able to construct a ship cheaper in Britain and Germany than in this country, and there is no protection to our people unless you give them a bounty.

To provide for breaking ice in Thunder bay and Lake Superior, and other points deemed advisable for the good of navigation, $40,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is for the purpose of keeping navigation open at Fort William and Port Arthur; Midland and Tiffin on the Georgian bay. One boat is used for Fort William and Port Arthur, and the same boat can serve at Midland and Tiffin. We have called for tenders for breaking the ice, and we only received one tender, to which we gave the contract.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to see the advertisement that was put out for tenders. I have a recollection of previous work in that line, and it seemed to me that the whole thing was a pre-arranged job to put it into the hands of one man.

Mr. DANIEL. What kind of vessels are used for breaking ice here?

Mr. BRODEUR. The work consists in breaking the ice and keeping the passage free for the access of vessels within the limits of the harbours of Port Arthur and Fort William. Parties tendering must satisfy the department that they are in a position to carry out the work, and must furnish with their tenders a list of the boats they propose to use. All steamboats employed must be owned and registered in Canada. A lump sum must be mentioned for the work and the tender must be accompanied by a deposite of ten per cent of the amount of tender.

Mr. SPROULE. Who got the tender?

Mr. BRODEUR. The Canadian Towing and Wrecking Company were the tenderers, and they received the contract.

Mr. SPROULE. What was the amount of the contract for one year?

Mr. BRODEUR. It was for three years, $30,000 a year.

Mr. SPROULE. What kind of boats are used?

Mr. BRODEUR. There are six or seven boats employed in that business. The contract provides that they shall keep the harbour free of ice.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to know something about the dimensions of these boats, and the horse-power of their engines.

Mr. BRODEUR. They are very powerful boats, and have always been carrying on the work successfully. We have an officer there to supervise the work, and he has always reported that the work was perfectly well done by these different tugs.

Mr. SPROULE. I have heard the very opposite report. If I knew the horse-power of these boats I could have some judgment as to their working capacity.

Mr. BRODEUR. I can supply information as to the size of the tugs. The department has never received complaints from any ship owner stating that work was not properly carried on. On the contrary, we have received resolutions from public bodies congratulating the department upon the work which was being done there.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister always has enough friends there, who are financially and otherwise interested, to get up these resolutions. I am told that the whole business is controlled pratically by the son-in-law of the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee), and that the Bowman firm has been exploiting the treasury for their own benefit in several of these cases. A few of them have these boats there and, as a general thing, it has been claimed that whenever a notice is put up for any tender there are certain provisions put in which practically make it impossible for any outsider to come in and tender for this service. At one time there is one reason and at another time another. I remember one some years ago. The boats must be there at a given time, they must be owned by parties in the place and they could not be brought from the outside because it was at a season of the year when it would be impossible to bring any boats in. The result is that the boats owned in the place are the only ones available, the same parties get the contract because nobody else can tender. I have no doubt that when new tenders are called for there will be the same ingenious device so that the contract always goes to the same parties and practically at their own figures.

Mr. BRODEUR. The only restriction which is being made is that they must be Canadian vessels; otherwise, so long as vessels are powerful enough to carry out the work we give them an opportunity. It is important that these vessels should be powerful.

Mr. SPROULE. I am told that these 'powerful' vessels are small tugs that are working around the harbour. I am told that by people who have lived there for the last twenty years, who ought to know, and who, to my knowledge and belief, are perfectly reliable and truthful men.

Mr. BRODEUR. The reports in the department generally go to prove that the contract is being properly carried out, that the ice is removed so completely that there is not the least obstruction to vessels going in there.

Mr. SPROULE. I saw an account in the papers not longer ago than the present session, that a boat was breaking the ice around the harbour, but that she was making very poor progress with it, notwithstanding the fact that the ice was not thick then. I would like to know something about the horse-power of these boats, and then I would have some idea of what their capacity is. It might be a rat power for all we know, if we are merely to accept the statement that they are powerful boats.

Mr. ARTHURS. Has the minister any good reason why the harbours of Midland and Tiffin are selected, and why other harbours on the Georgian bay are not treated in the same way?

Mr. BRODEUR. They are the two ports where the largest shipments of grain take place at the beginning of the winter.

Mr. ARTHURS. That was not true five years ago at the time the work was entered into.

Mr. BRODEUR. That was left to the Dominion Marine Association. It is only two years ago that we commenced this work at Midland and Tiffin. We began first by making a contract for breaking the ice in Thunder bay. Later on the suggestion was made, I think by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), that we should also provide for those vessels being able to come into the Georgian bay, and as a result of those representations we decided to enter into a small contract for the purpose of seeing that Midland and Tiffin were also kept free from ice at the opening of the season.

Mr. SPROULE. Then I understand that the minister will give us at a later date the number of these boats, the horse-power of each, and who owns them?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, I will give that.

Signal Service—$12,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This service is maintained for the purpose of reporting ships at various points.

To provide for the administration of pilotage and maintenance and repairs to steamer 'Eureka,' $35,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. The following is an estimate of the cost of the maintenance of the steamer 'Eureka':

Wages	$7,500
Board	3,000
Fuel	2,100
Deck and Engine	7,500
Auxiliary boat service at Father Point	2,000
Miscellaneous, rent, &c.	12,900
	$35,000

Mr. DANIEL. Is this for the Quebec Pilotage district alone?

Mr. BRODEUR. The amount that is voted does not only cover the Quebec district, but the 'Eureka' is connected with the Quebec district.

Mr. DANIEL. How much of the vote does the 'Eureka' take?

Mr. BRODEUR. $20,100.

Mr. DANIEL. That would leave about $15,000 to run the pilotage office?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. What have you there? Do you pay for a building and two or three clerks?

Mr. BRODEUR. We have, a superintendent of pilots in Montreal and one in Quebec, because the department at these two places is the pilotage authority. There are different organizations in other places. In other places where they have a pilotage authority it is appointed sometimes by the government, and sometimes by public bodies. This amount is appropriated for the administration of pilotage generally and the incidental expenses which may be incurred in connection with the other pilotage superintendents at the two places where the department is the pilotage authority.

Mr. DANIEL. The minister, under the Act, has taken over the pilotage authority at Montreal and Quebec?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, in those two pilotage districts. Formerly they were under the control of the Quebec and Montreal Harbour Commissioners. Very serious complaints were made with regard to the administration of the pilotage districts, and it was decided that the department should become the pilotage authority in those districts.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, April 3, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

INTERNATIONAL FISHERIES REGULATIONS.

On the orders of the day being called.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Mr. Speaker, I beg to renew my question to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries as to whether he has heard from Washington if the regulations under the International Fisheries Treaty have been dealt with by Congress?

Mr. BRODEUR. A message was sent during last session by the President of the United States recommending the adoption of legislation which would provide for the putting into force of the regulations. A Bill was introduced in the Senate, but was not finally passed. It is expected that the matter will be taken up during the session of Congress which opens to-morrow. I was so informed in a letter which I received this morning from Dr. Starr Jordan.

RECIPROCITY — ADMISSION OF OLEOMARGARINE.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the Minister of Customs inform me whether oleomargarine will come into Canada free of duty in competition with Canadian made butter under the new tariff arrangement when it is completed?

Mr. PATERSON. That matter is not dealt with, as far as I remember.

Mr. SPROULE. It is one of the dairy products, it must come under the arrangement.

Mr. BLAIN. I have had some inquiries about it, and I assumed the minister would be able to say whether it would come in.

Mr. PATERSON. Oleomargarine is at present on the prohibited list, and I do not understand that has been abolished, but if my hon. friend will put a question on the Order Paper I shall get precise information.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 152) respecting the Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec.—Mr. Fowke.

Bill (No. 159) to change the name of the Manitoulin and North Shore Railway Company.—Mr. Tolmie.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

SASKATCHEWAN POST OFFICES.

Mr. LAKE:

1. How many post offices are there in the province of Saskatchewan which are not situated on existing lines of railways?
2. How many are accommodated with daily mails?
3. How many twice a week?
4. How many weekly?
5. How many at longer intervals than once a week?

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. 738.
2. Five.
3. 253.
4. 469.
5. Five.

ELORA POST OFFICE.

Mr. HENDERSON:

1. Has the site for the new post office at Elora, Ontario, been deeded to the government? If so, when, and by whom was such deed executed?
2. What price was paid for the site?

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. (a) Yes. (b) October 15, 1908. (c) By Udney Richardson.
2. $380.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

For a copy of all correspondence, declarations, telegrams, mailing lists, and other documents relating to an application asking for the granting of statutory postal privileges to a newspaper published at New Glasgow Nova Scotia, called the Guysborough 'Times.'—Mr. Sinclair.

For a return showing the amount of money invested by Canadian loan, insurance and other financial companies in bonds, securities and other undertakings in the United States.—Mr. Rutan.

For a copy of all the correspondence in connection with the building of bait freezers at Louisburg and Lingan in the riding of South Cape Breton.—Mr. McKenzie.

For a copy of all orders in council, memoranda, papers and documents, relating to the transfer, or any negotiations concerning the transfer of a charter known as the Manitoba and South Eastern Railway Company.—Mr. McCarthy.

For a return showing the itemized accounts, vouchers, statements, reports and other papers relating to the salary and expenses of and payments to W. O. Creighton, farmer delegate to Great Britain in 1910.—Mr. Stanfield.

For a return showing all itemized accounts, vouchers, statements, reports and other papers relating to the salary of and payments to W. A. Hickman, immigration agent to Great Britain in 1902 and 1903.—Mr. Stanfield.

SUPPLY—TRANSPORTATION OF FISH.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to ask the Minister of Marine (Mr. Brodeur) for a little information in connection with an answer given to me on the 29th of March in reference to the transportation of fish. I wanted to know what was the amount paid out of that aiding fund for transportation of fish from the maritime provinces westward during the several years, to whom it had been paid, how far the distribution of the fish extended towards the west, and what was more important, the quantity of fish transported and the amount paid for transportation. The minister answered all the questions except that with reference to the value of the fish. It seems to me the whole point is involved there. If we appropriate money to aid the maritime provinces to transport fish into Ontario and the western market the essential thing to know is the transportation of the fish encouraged in that way increased, and if so to what extent. If we get no benefit from the money we pay out we do not need to continue.

Mr. BRODEUR. The information in the department only covers the quantity of fish transported. The express companies charge according to the quantity, and not the value of the article transported.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister ought to be able to state what the quantity is.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think we have that in the department.

Mr. FOSTER. If you have not it is a very odd way of doing business.

Mr. BRODEUR. I will get that.

Mr. FOSTER. If you could give as well a description of the kinds of fish it would be useful.

THE CORONATION CONTINGENT.

Mr. HUGHES. (Victoria and Haliburton). I call the attention of the Prime Minister to the following item published in this morning's 'Citizen':

INDIAN CONTINGENT.

473 Native Officers and Troops for the Coronation.

London, April 1.—In the Indian army contingent, which is to come to England for the coronation, the regular army will be represented by 27 British officers, 221 Indian officers drawn from every unit of the Indian army, and 218 Sepoys. The Imperial Service troops—the force maintained by certain of the native states—will be represented by 34 Indian officers. There will be in addition the usual proportion of Indian servants and followers. Now that the exact composition of the force is settled, arrangements are being made by the home authorities for the camp and other arrangements.

There is to be a contingent from Canada of 600 or 700 men. These are mostly young privates who, in due time, I hope, become men of standing in the country; but very few officers are going. I do not know whether the composition or nature of the contingent is prescribed by the Imperial authorities or by the Canadian authorities; but if it could be arranged that a number of officers, men who have given splendid service in the militia force of Canada, and who have earned the honour, could be selected, I am satisfied that this would meet with the approbation of the force throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion. I do not for a moment object to the noncommissioned officers and privates going; they are the men who will in due time become officers of the force; but if there is any possibility of sending some of the officers who in the past have given their services to the country, at great expense and inconvenience to themselves, I maintain that these are the men who should first obtain recognition. If the government have any control over the matter, I would be pleased if they would give it their consideration.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I regret that my colleague the Minister of Militia is not here in his seat to give my hon. friend the information he desires. My impression is that he has already stated to the House the lines on which he intends to select the force for the coronation. I believe it is intended to have 750, all told. I will ask my colleague to look at the observations of my hon. friend, and he will perhaps give his answer later on.

Mr. HUGHES. I see that the great majority of the contingent from India are officers who have obtained standing in the service.

THE NEW PLAZA.

Mr. J. D. REID. I see that the government are calling for tenders for the new plaza opposite the Ottawa post office, and I would suggest that before the contract is let, provision be made for removing the unsightly poles which are standing in that locality.

THE CENSUS ENUMERATORS.

Mr. JOHN A. BEST (Dufferin). Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Agriculture is not in his seat, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he is aware that some of the census enumerators in the county of Dufferin are going about trying to get signatures to a petition in favour of reciprocity. I would ask if the government is paying these men, or who is paying them, for doing so, or if they have received instructions to go out and get signatures to a petition of that kind.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am quite sure that they are not paid by the government. They will not go into office as enumerators until the first of June or thereabouts. I know of no fund in connection with reciprocity except the anti-reciprocity fund.

Mr. BEST. I am aware that they have been appointed by the enumerator for the county of Dufferin.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not think they have been appointed yet. The order for the appointment of enumerators is not yet issued.

Mr. HUGHES. Perhaps they are only qualifying for the job.

RECIPROCITY—INQUIRY FOR INFORMATION.

Mr. PERLEY. On the 16th of March last a return was ordered by this House, on motion of Mr. Sharpe (Ontario), calling for a statement showing the average prices of butter and eggs in London, England, for the past five years, in comparison with the prices respectively in the Eastern Provinces, in Montreal, in Toronto, in Minneapolis, in Chicago, in Detroit, in Buffalo, in Boston and in New York. In response to this order, the following answer was brought down last Friday:

Trade and Commerce Department,
Ottawa, 25th March, 1911.
Order of the House.

Sir,—I beg to return you herewith your reference No. 172 for statement showing comparative prices of butter and eggs in London, England, and certain points in Canada and the United States. This department has no information upon the subject. Such average prices of butter and eggs, however, are published in trade papers all over the world which can be referred to by any one desiring the information.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
F. C. T. O'HARA,
Deputy Minister.

Thomas Mulvey, Esq.,
Under secretary of State,
Ottawa.

This reply simply shows that the Department of Trade and Commerce has not got the statistics in its possession, and I wish to register as strong a protest as I can against the government giving an answer of this kind or of refusing us information of this sort. The motion for this information was moved in the ordinary way in this House, and was agreed to unanimously, and I take it that it is the inalienable right of this House to obtain from the government such information as is necessary for the conduct of the business of this House. This information is required for the discussion of the reciprocity agreement. It is utterly impossible for any one to express a reasonable opinion on that agreement, from an economic point of view, without having such information. If the ministers who made the arrangement at Washington did not have this information, then they entered into the agreement without really knowing what they were doing. If, on the other hand, the government has this information, I care not in which department it is, then every member of this House is entitled to that information, and the answer which I have read is a very extraordinary answer for the government to give. The only inference we can draw from it is that the government think that every member of parliament should go and dig out this information for himself. We have a staff of clerks employed in the different departments of the government at great expense to this country; they do not belong to the Liberal party any more than to the Conservative party; and if this information is not in the government's possession, it should be obtained. The clerks are here for that purpose, and I submit that we are entitled to the information to enable us to make up our minds in a reasonable way on the very important question before this House.

I have here a book prepared by the tariff commission in the United Kingdom which gives a lot of statistics similar to those asked for in this return. I have also an official publication of the Senate of the United States, White Book No. 849, headed 'Reciprocity for Canada' in which are given a number of statistics regarding relative prices in the United States and Canada, and a great deal of other valuable information. Is this country so poor that information of a similar character cannot be provided for us in order that we may discuss this question intelligently and make up our minds on it in a reasonable way? The government either should have had this information in their possession, before entering into this arrangement, or they have been very derelict in their duty. If they have this information, why not give it to us? They should not have brought this agreement down without producing that information. Or if they have not got it, why can they not obtain it and lay it before the House?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I could not catch at first the tenor of my hon. friend's observations, but as he went on I think his complaint was that a return ordered by this House had not been supplied by the Department of Trade and Commerce. As the minister of that department is not sitting here, it is impossible for me or any member of the government to give any information regarding the refusal of that department if it made any such refusal. The matter is a new one, of which we have had no notice, but I shall take a note of my hon. friend's complaint and submit it to my hon. colleague.

Mr. PERLEY. What I submit is that we should not be compelled to resort to the newspapers or the libraries to obtain information which ought to be in the possession of the Department of Trade and Commerce. That department or some other surely must have had these figures before our ministers entered into this agreement, and if so they should be put into the possession of this House, and to tell us to hunt them up ourselves is not treating us with the consideration to which we are entitled.

Mr. LAKE. The Department of Trade and Commerce has given an answer which is not at all satisfactory to my hon. friend especially in a matter of such emergency. The plea that the matter is new and brought on without notice is no reason for not supplying the very necessary information asked for.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we would search the records in vain to find anywhere any such answer given to a demand for information on a matter of paramount importance as that given by the Department of Trade and Commerce to my hon. friend (Mr. Perley). That department has been in existence a considerable number of years, it should be manned by a competent staff and have access to all trade records just as much as any department in the United States or elsewhere. Yet when an order is given by this House for a return giving statistics absolutely necessary for a reasonable discussion of this proposed reciprocity agreement, we are told by the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce to go to the library, and look the thing up for ourselves.

Mr. STAPLES. I would like to ask the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) if he had this information in his hands when he went to Washington and entered into this treaty. It seems to me that it was a very singular procedure on the part of a couple of our ministers to enter into an agreement such as this without being possessed of all such information as my hon. friend has moved for. Take for example the prices of wheat and barley. Does the minister know what was the average price of wheat at Minneapolis, say for the last ten years, and at Fort William? Did he know before entering into that agreement what was the average price of land in the maritime provinces as compared with its average price in the adjoining states? Did he know the average prices of cattle, hogs, &c., in both countries? It seems to me, from the information we have been able to get from the ministers who went to Washington, that they simply went down there and in common parlance 'went it blind.' They either did not have this information, or else they should have communicated it to us in order that we might be able to reason out whether or not reciprocity is in the best interests of Canada, especially the Canadian farmers. Since the question came before the House, I have been trying to get at the facts, but have not been able to do so simply because I do not know where to procure them. One has by dint of minute research to pick them out from day to day. How different on the other side of the line. There they have official publication giving all the details they deemed necessary for their purpose, whereas we have no information of the kind prepared by this government. The United States authorities had this prepared before they entered into this agreement, but they kept it back until they had the agreement signed by our two bright ministers who went to Washington, and then had all the material at hand to show what advantages this arrangement would give the United States. They were careful however, to hold this information back until such time as they had our government tied hard and fast. From all we can learn, our ministers were not aware what they were entering into, and were not fully prepared to make the best bargain possible in the interests of Canada. I think we are entitled to an answer from the Minister of Customs.

Mr. PATERSON. I have heard the hon. gentleman express his views and he is entitled to all the comfort he can obtain from them.

Mr. STAPLES. I do not think that the hon. minister is treating this House fairly by any means. The people of Canada have the right to know whether or not our ministers, when they went to Washington, had the information it was necessary they should have in order to guard the interests of the Dominion.

Mr. CONMEE. They made a good bargain anyhow.

Mr. LAKE. I think that the government or the Department of Trade and Commerce should be able to give us information regarding the prices of all agricultural products in these twelve other countries, and the British colonies which, under the favoured nation clause, will be able to enter our markets on the same terms as the United States. We should have the average prices of all these different products in these countries before being called on to decide this question.

Mr. BOYCE. I do not think the Minister of Customs is acting within his rights in refusing the information asked for by my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Staples), if the minister has that information. What is the situation in which we find ourselves? It is a most peculiar one. The Minister of Customs and the Minister of Finance went down to Washington, apparently without adequate statistical information, and in a very short time entered into an agreement, the effect of which on the people of Canada no one can at present foresee. It is an arrangement, which, in the opinion of a majority of our people, will cripple Canadian industries and lead to very serious trade complications.

That agreement, it is said, was put through in a very short time. The two plenipotentiaries for this country came back and, after practically only one hour's consultation at the Council Board, the agreement was laid upon the table of this House and parliament was asked to ratify it. Now, Sir, I do think that what my hon. friend from Macdonald says is entitled to a great deal more consideration than the Minister of Customs, or the Prime Minister, or any other member of this government, gives to it. If these ministers had the relative information upon which to justify that pact with the United States and without which it could not be justified, they should, immediately the agreement was brought here, and parliament was asked to ratify it, in all fairness and decency, have laid that information on the table of the House so that the opposition, or any member of the House, or anybody in the country, would not have to come begging day after day to extract it from this government. To be met in such a serious crisis as this in the commercial history of this country with what I think is a very discourteous reply to my hon. friend from Macdonald, from the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, is certainly not giving the amount of information which parliament is entitled to have. I should like to know for my own information, and for the information of my constituents, what are the relative prices included in the information which the ministers had before them when they made this agreement. How do the favoured nations benefit by it, to what extent, and what are the relative prices of the commodities which are included in the schedules affected by the favoured nation treaty? Surely, if the Minister of Customs or the Minister of Finance did not go at this matter in a blind manner, they must have had this information, and if they had it they should bring it down and not send impertinent answers when hon. members of this House ask for the information now.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Staples) is certainly within his rights in asking for this information. He wants information that affects his part of the country, I suppose, more particularly, and I also want it for my part of the country. Cheese, butter, hogs, potatoes and vegetables are the most important commodities in so far as my district is concerned. I cannot believe for one minute that the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) and the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) went to Washington without having had all these statements laid before them, showing the business that was being done with other countries in these articles. If my hon. friend the Minister of Customs had these statements when he went to Washington, why does he now not lay them on the table of the House? Why should they not be printed? We have appealed to the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and to the government several times to give us some information, so that we could judge as to whether this was a good arrangement or not, but we have not so far been able to get any information other than the little blue-book showing the changes in the tariff. President Taft has submitted to the members of Congress a little book showing the comparative prices or values of farm products in Canada and the United States. He has started at the Atlantic and gone through to the Pacific. Will the Minister of Customs deny that that statement is not correct? It shows that the values in Canada are much higher than they are in the United States. It shows that it would be an advantage to the American farmers to get into this country because the prices of farm products are higher in Canada than in the United States. The Minister of Customs must have had that information when he made this agreement, or if he had that information, he must have known that he was selling out the farmers of this country, body and bones, to the American farmers. Why could he not give us this information? In my opinion the Minister of Customs knows that he was gold bricked when he made this arrangement, and that an investigation made since the conclusion of the negotiations shows conclusively that the statement is true, that prices of farm products are higher in Canada than they are in the United States. The minister finds that the farmers are getting better prices here, he knows that if the tariff wall is thrown down they will get lower prices, and he is afraid to sumbit to this House the information which we are anxious to secure because he knows that it condemns his agreement. The minister could send his officials from one end of this Dominion to the other and get this information, but the very fact that the minister has not got this information and has not laid it on the table convinces me, as it convinces the farmers of this country, that he is afraid to undertake that task because we would not be able to see that the statement that the farmers are getting better prices in Canada than in the United States, is borne out by the evidence. I have no hesitation in saying that the prices of farm products in Canada to-day are higher than they are in the United States, and that the value of farms in Canada is higher than it is in the United States. What is the reason the minister will not give us this information? He has not given us any information except that for which he has been asked in the House. Is he afraid to give us a pamphlet like that which the President of the United States has laid before Congress? Yes, he is afraid to do it. He knows he could not face the farmers with such a statement as that. I think it is time for the Minister of Customs to do something of this kind. He has all that information in his department, we are entitled to it, he should bring it down, and if he does he will never try to shove this reciprocity agreement through.

Mr. BLAIN. Mr. Speaker, I think we have proved this afternoon that the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) is not in possession of all the information that was necessary in forming the agreement. I asked the plain question on the orders of the day this afternoon whether or not oleomargarine, an article that will come into competition with the butter made by the farmers of Canada, would be admitted free under this new agreement. In the United States, this is a very important industry, so important that the government have a revenue of over $2,000,000 per year derived from a tax upon this adulterated article that comes into competition with the butter made by the farmers of the United States. One would have thought that the Minister of Customs, when he was at Washington would have looked into this question. When an important industry such as that is flourishing in the United States, bringing this adulterated article into competition with the butter made by the farmers of that country, surely my hon. friend, in making this agreement, would have considered whether or not this article was to be admitted into Canada in competition with the butter made by our Canadian farmers. My hon. friend says this afternoon in answer to that question, I don't know.

Mr. PATERSON. I said, No.

Mr. BLAIN. He said, No, then hesitated, and finally he said across the House to myself, 'Put a question on the Order Paper, and I will give you an answer.' One would think that a question like that could have been answered at once by one of the gentlemen who were at Washington with three months' time for consideration. My hon. friend did overlook that important question when he was considering these things at Washington, and one would suppose there had never been any suggestions in this House that he should learn the facts in respect of this agreement before now.

Mr. PATERSON. I told you.

Mr. BLAIN. I accept that. Finally, however, he said, 'Put a question on the Order Paper.'

Mr. PATERSON. Because there seemed to be a doubt in the hon. gentleman's mind, and I had not the documents before me, and I was going to look this up.

Mr. BLAIN. Then we will have the answer, I suppose. Now there is another point. The United States government are experts on tariffs, as everybody knows. There are a great many regulations that the United States have in respect of their tariff that admit goods free from Canada, and that the Canadian people do not understand. This House should be in possession of that information when we are dealing with these important questions. For example, a prominent cattleman comes into my county every year, and purchases the very best cattle that are to be found, and he takes them free into the United States under a regulation made by the United States government. My farmers ask the question, particularly after the speech of the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), when he said that cattle would be worth $14 a head more under this agreement than they are now; they are confronted with that statement of my hon. friend, who I do not think believes it himself. Now, I am asked the question in my county by the farmers: Mr. Blain, will we get a better price for our cattle when this agreement goes into operation? I ought to be in a position to answer that, I should be in possession of the information furnished by the Minister of Customs, or the Minister of Finance, so that I might be able to say to my farmers: The government say that you will get a better price.

Mr. PATERSON. Would you believe it?

Mr. BLAIN. Well, one would hesitate to believe it, that is, in view of such insufficient information as my hon. friend is giving to the House to-day. Yet I would not hesitate to believe my hon. friend. That is about the way it strikes my mind this afternoon. Now, the United States government have regulations of that kind. The fact is that these cattle are purchased every year by United States cattlemen coming from Chicago into the county of Peel, and other counties, they purchase the best cattle in the county, and under regulations of the United States tariff they take these cattle over into the United States absolutely free of duty. Then my hon. friend says under this new arrangement that our farmers will get a better price because we have free trade between the United States and Canada in cattle. Then why does not my hon. friend furnish this House with the facts? The same regulation applies to western wheats. As I understand it, the wheat that the Minneapolis and St. Paul miller requires to grind, under this agreement is admitted into the United States free of duty now. Why does not my hon. friend show over his own signature what the facts are in respect to all these matters as affected by this agreement? These are matters that ought to receive some attention. My hon. friend is a little late in the day in shaking his head. If he had done this before he made the agreement, of course the agreement might never have been made. I am only directing attention to one or two matters concerning which the facts ought to be in the possession of every member of this House. If these facts were made known by the government, the newspapers would not be called upon to make statements from this man, or from the other man, instead of making statements authorized by the government. I say we have just ground of complaint against my hon. friend. I hope we will be able, even at this late day, to give some information to the House for the benefit of the farmers in our constituencies. Naturally they will hold my hon. friend responsible, seeing that he took so active a part in making the agreement. If he will give us the facts we are asking for, I will be glad to communicate them to the farmers of my county.

Mr. PATERSON. I will remind my hon. friend that when we reach the agreement again, he will see that in these matters there may be differences in the administration of our customs laws. It is provided and agreed that if there should be friction in these matters, they shall be made as reciprocal as possible, and if it is necessary on either side to have legislation, the legislation will be had. The matter my hon. friend brings up will be dealt with. For instance they may require certificates from us that we do not require from them, and in some cases we may require certificates that they may think are not necessary. These questions will be the subject of conferences, for which the agreement itself provides.

Mr. PERLEY. Did the hon. the minister, or did he not, in Washington, have the statistics of comparative prices of the various farm products as between the United States and Canada when he was making this agreement?

Mr. PATERSON. We had all the information that we thought was necessary to justify us in making the agreement.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think, perhaps, hon. gentlemen are a little too severe on the Minister of Customs in demanding this additional information; personally I am under the impression that the Minister of Customs never had the information. I do not think, either, that the Minister of Finance ever took the trouble to inquire as to what these common prices were between this country and the United States. They simply jumped into the arrangement that was handed down, cut and dried, by President Taft, who no doubt took the same means of forcing this agreement upon them as he did in Albany a year ago, when he held a club over the head of the Finance Minister and demanded that he should come down or he would shoot, and Mr. Fielding came down. He gave away a lot of our market, and got nothing whatever in return. I presume the procedure at Washington was very much the same. I have an impression from what I can learn that this whole arrangement was presented to the two ministers who went down there, all cut and dried, and they were told, 'You have got to accept it,' and I do not believe there was any alternative offered them. I do not think the question of prices ever entered into the consideration by the two ministers. What did it signify to them? They were to get a treaty, they found one cut and dried, they took it and came back; and inside of an hour after they met their colleagues, it was thrown on the table, and this parliament was told, 'You must take every word of it, you cannot even take the dot off an 'i' or the stroke off a 't,' you have to accept the whole thing. Why, it was not the purpose of the ministers to make an intelligent agreement, they wanted an agreement, and they were bound to make one, and they did make one. Now I believe if they had had the information, they never would have made such a stupid agreement as that. I take the Minister of Custom's silence as indicating that they did not know a thing about the difference between the prices on this side and on the other side; there can be no other conclusion. I do not think the minister will ever make the people believe that he knew what he was doing. They went along hap-hazard, without considering at all what was best in the interests of Canada. Of course they talk about bigger prices in the United States. They are telling the people of this country that if they can only get their commodities into the United States they will get bigger prices; then, if they can only buy in the United States, they will buy cheaper. All their propositions are so extremely absurd and so contradictory, that I am convinced they never attempted to gather any information about these facts, and never got the information. It was a go-it-blind and that was all they wanted.

Mr. PATERSON. I am glad to find that at any rate some few gentlemen on the other side of the House have made up their minds what they ought to do on this question. We may hear from the others by and by.

Mr. BURRELL. I think it must strike every member on this side and the country as well as an extraordinary thing that with such an important matter as this before the country the one little piece of statistical information that the country needs on which to base their reasoning is absolutely denied by the government who are in charge of the whole thing. The Minister of Customs says that they had all the information that they thought necessary, and yet he refuses apparently to tabulate that information in such a shape that the House can understand it and the country base their arguments upon it. It is extraordinary, the minister would hardly think he was justified in going to the length he did, in reference to the fruit industry unless he had posted himself upon the subject statistically and if he had all the statistics in his possession the fruit growers of Canada have an absolute right to have them laid on the table. Seven weeks have elapsed since an important delegation of 800 fruit growers from Niagara appeared before the government. An order was issued that their representations should be printed forthwith, yet seven weeks have elapsed and we have not received the printed copies of those representations, so that the country have neither the information on which the ministers acted nor the arguments advanced by the fruit men.

Mr. MURPHY. When the hon. member drew attention to the printing of the proceedings, on the occasion of the visit of that deputation to Ottawa, I made inquiry and was told that the report was ready for distribution that day.

Mr. HENDERSON. Where is it now?

Mr. MURPHY. In the distribution office.

EUCHARISTIC CONGRESS—RECEPTION TO CARDINAL VANNUTELLI.

Mr. SPROULE. This seems to be an hour of complaint about the answers given by members of the government. I would call attention to some answers which I received which in my judgment were not proper answers. These answers are either right or wrong; if they are right, they do not accord with what has been accepted as reliable information from other sources. On December 5, I asked:

1. By what authority or under what commission was Mr. Justice Girouard appointed to act as Deputy Governor, or administrator of the government, during the absence of His Excellency the Governor General, last summer and fall?
2. What powers were conferred upon him by any such commission?
3. Did he as such administrator send a telegram or message to Cardinal Vannutelli, the papal legate, on the latter's arrival in Canada? If so, what were the contents of such message or telegram?
4. In sending such message or telegram did he act upon the advice of his constitutional adviser?

The right hon. the Prime Minister replied to Nos. 1 and 2, by letters patent constituting the office, and then he went on to deal with the matter of form, which was quite regular. The right hon. gentleman read the Marconi telegram in French and then translated it into English. The translation, to begin with, is different from all translations I saw of it in any of the literature relating to it. The French version was 'gives homages,' or 'homage.' But the right hon. the first minister translated:

The administrator of the government of Canada presents his respects to His Excellency and bids him welcome.

I am not so specially concerned with that as with the other part of the answer.

On the face of it, this Marconigram was sent during the month of August. During that month Mr. Justice Girouard did not act in the capacity of Administrator, as, during the whole of August, His Excellency, was in Canada, but, on the 1st of August, His Excellency the Governor General, before leaving for his trip to the Hudson Bay, appointed Mr. Justice Girouard, Deputy Governor. Mr. Justice Girouard did not consult the ministers of the Crown and received no advice from any of them.

If he was appointed on the first of August and the Governor General left on that day surely he must have been acting in that month, and yet the previous part of the answer says he was not acting, as the Governor General was here and was attending to the duties himself. That may be a typographical error, it may be the first of September or any other month, but that is all the answer I received. I submit that it cannot be a correct or reasonable answer. On the same day I asked another question concerning guards of honour. The answer to that was given by the Minister of Militia as follows:

1. Guards of honour are authorized by King's regulations and orders for the Canadian militia, 1910, to be furnished as follows:—

(a) To attend upon the King and other royal personages, and upon presidents of those republican states in which the Sovereign is represented by an ambassador.
(b) At state ceremonials.
(c) For governors and lieutenant governors administering the governments of His Majesty's possessions on such occasions as are customary within their governments.
(d) To a lieutenant governor of a province on the opening and prorogation of a provincial legislature.
(e) Special guards of honour may be furnished to the Governor General at any time upon the requisition of the military secretary.
(f) On the arrival and departure of a general officer appointed to command the Canadian forces.
(g) In the absence of the Governor General, the administrator of the government in entitled to receive the same honours as those accorded to the Governor General.
(h) When a foreign general or flag officer lands at a military station within His Majesty's dominion to visit the civil governor or officer in command.
(i) When a naval officer of flag rank commanding in chief lands for the first time at a port within his command.
(j) If deemed expedient to receive distinguished personages other than those mentioned in (a), (b) and (c), and on occasions other than those specified in paragraph 1370 of the regulations, where it is laid down when honours and salutes are to be given by troops on parade.

Guards of honour are to be carried out on all occasions where practicable by the permanent force, but, if a unit of the force is not available then by a corps of the active militia.

2. Guards of honour are furnished by officers commanding commands or independent districts under authority of King's regulations and orders for the Canadian militia, 1910.

If guards of honour are required to be furnished for any occasion other than as specified in (1), then special authority for the same must be obtained from militia headquarters.

3. Quebec—Opening of provincial legislature, March 15, 1910. Authority—para. 1391, King's regulations and orders, 1910.

Arrival of Major General Sir John French, inspector general of the imperial forces, 19th May, 1910. Authority given from militia headquarters, 17th May, 1910.

Departure of Major General Sir John French, 8th July, 1910. Authority issued from militia headquarters, 6th July, 1910.

Three Rivers—None.

That is all it says about Quebec. I want to say that I have in my possession a letter from a gentleman living in Quebec, who so far as I know, is reliable, and he says that he was present when the guard of honour was there to meet Cardinal Vannutelli, and that it escorted him through the city and accompanied him to the boat on his departure. I am not going to say that that information is correct, but it certainly conflicts with the information given here. The answer also says that at Three Rivers there was none, but I have information there was a guard at Three Rivers. The answer says that at Montreal there was none and I am not going to dispute that. Then the question was put:

On what state occasions or other occasions, if any, is it proper for the Hon. the Speaker of the House of Commons, or Senate, to wear his official robes or apparel outside the precincts of parliament during the recess or when parliament is prorogued?

On all such occasions when he attends any function or gathering in that capacity should he not be accompanied by the Sergeant-at-Arms with the mace?

That was answered as follows:

The government is not aware of any precedents in the matter referred to; although there may have been occasions when speakers of Canadian legislatures have attended such celebrations.

Well, I was not aware that there ever was such a celebration in Canada before. Then the answer continues:

On such occasions it is customary in the province of Quebec for judges of the higher courts to appear in their official costumes, and His Honour the Speaker holding rank as a magistrate——

Not as the Speaker of the House of Commons, but as a magistrate, and I ask myself the question: If he were going on the bench to try a case would he appear there in his official robes as the Speaker of the Commons.

—informs the government that on the occasion above referred to he appeared similarly attired as a mark of respect for the solemnity of the occasion.

Well, that is rather a peculiar answer if it is not somewhat amusing. Then, I asked a question with regard to the administrator of the government, and the answer is that Mr. Justice Girouard was not acting in August as the Governor General was here during all the month of August and attended to his duties, but afterwards the answer says that Justice Girouard was appointed in August. Then it says that Mr. Justice Girouard was applied to for information, but he failed to give it. It does seem to me that when the government is asked to give information on a public question they should surely have sufficient authority to enable them to make any official give an official answer. I am speaking on this matter with a little restraint on account of the lamented demise of Mr. Justice Girouard, and I only refer to it because I am obliged to do so in connection with these other matters. I think the least that could be expected is a courteous reply, but that is not deigned to be given to the House. It may be in the estimation of the person who gave the reply that it was only some insignificant private member who asked the question, and therefore any answer would do, but in my judgment a member of parliament is a member of parliament, and as such is entitled to the courtesy of a proper reply to any proper questions that are put by him. Then, the following question was put the other day by my hon. friend from Dufferin:

1. Did the federal government tender a reception to Cardinal Vannutelli in Montreal during his attendance at the Eucharistic Congress in September last?
2. If so under whose supervision or orders, acting for the government, was it carried out?
3. What members of the federal government attended?
4. How many invitations were issued?
5. What government officials besides the cabinet ministers attended?
6. Did such government officials including the Speaker of the House of Commons, attend clothed in their official robes of office?
7. How much did it cost the country, under whose authority and out of what item of the Supply Bill or estimates was it paid?

The simple answer given to that question by the First Minister is:

The federal government did not tender a reception to Cardinal Vannutelli during his attendance at the Eucharistic Congress in September?

But, I have in my hand the narrative of that gathering in Montreal published by the parties themselves, and it states:

Reception of the Dominion government. Unusual, not in magnitude, perhaps, but by reason of the cosmopolitan character of the guests was the reception given at night at the Windsor by the Hon. Charles Murphy, Secretary of State, acting for the federal government.

It says:

The gathering was large but the composition of it was its striking feature.

And it gives a full account of the reception. The question now is which is right, and which is wrong. I do not say that the answer given by the First Minister is wrong, but one or the other is wrong. Of course, the denial that there was any state reception given covered all the other questions. I draw attention to these answers because they appeal to me as not being proper, or at least not such as give the whole information. They may be absolutely correct so far as I know, but they are certainly not in accord with the information given to me by reliable sources.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have already spoken on this matter, but the House will,

I hope bear with me if I answer my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule). There is one portion of the hon. gentleman's observations which I was sorry to hear, and that is when he complained that he had not been treated with proper courtesy in the answer he received. I can assure my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) that there was no intention on my part to be discourteous to him, and if he feels he was treated discourteously I am sorry he did not at the time call my attention to the matter, because I would have deemed it my duty to give him every possible satisfaction. There is nothing further from my mind than not to deal with an old member (and I may say an old friend as I regard the hon. member from Grey) in a courteous manner. I hope he will acquit me of any intention of being discourteous to him.

Mr. SPROULE. Certainly.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In the answer which I gave to my hon. friend on the 5th December (page 724, 'Hansard') there is a misprint which is very obvious. In the month of August His Excellency was not in the country; I think he came here about the end of August or thereabouts. Then His Excellency went to the Hudson Bay, and he was absent from the capital, but he was still in Canada. When His Excellency was out of the country there was an administrator, but when he was in the country there was a Deputy Governor. That is the difference. The answer which I gave my hon. friend is to be found as follows on page 725, of 'Hansard':

On the face of it this Marconigram was sent during the month of August. During that month Mr. Justice Girouard did not act in the capacity of administrator, as during the whole of August, His Excellency was in Canada, but on the first of August——

That is a misprint; it should be the first of September.

—but on the first of September His Excellency before leaving for his trip to the Hudson Bay appointed Mr. Justice Girouard Deputy Governor.

I think I am correct about this, but I will have it verified again. With regard to the answer given to this inquiry of the hon. member for Dufferin as to whether the government had tendered a reception to His Eminence Cardinal Vannutelli, I can only say that the government did not do anything of the kind, but a member of the government, my colleague the Secretary of State did tender a reception to His Eminence Cardinal Vannutelli.

NEGRO IMMIGRATION.

Mr. THOBURN (Lanark). Mr. Speaker, is it the intention of the government to place any restrictions on or to stop altogether negro immigration from the southern states into our Canadian Northwest? We find by the newspaper reports that these people are coming over into Canada by the hundreds; later on they will come by thousands, and so long as we give them free homesteads in the Canadian Northwest they will come by the tens of thousands. I would like to ask the government if they think it in the interests of Canada that we should have negro colonization in our Canadian Northwest? Would it not be preferable to preserve for the sons of Canada the lands they propose to give to niggers? I draw the attention of the minister of the Interior to an article bearing on this question which appears in one of our newspapers. The article is headed: 'Many Negroes Coming Over,' and is as follows:

Winnipeg March 28.—The arrival of a party of two hundred negroes from Oklahoma last week bound for free homestead land in Athabasca Landing district northwest of Edmonton, is raising a good deal of protest throughout the west and the opinion is freely offered that steps should be taken by the Dominion government to put a stop to a class of immigration that the experience of the Southern States would indicate is hardly to be classed as desirable. The party, which came into Canada by way of Emerson last week, was subjected to the most rigorous examination by the immigration officials, who found themselves unable to stop a single member of the party. All had plenty of money, were in perfect health and apparently of good moral standing. They talked freely and stated that they feared neither cold nor privation, and that all they were seeking was free land and a chance to make homes for their families.

The final action of the Canadian government in admitting to that country negro families from Oklahoma whose members possess $5 each is having the effect of furthering the colonization movement among Oklahoma's negroes, especially in Okfusgee, Muskogee and Creek counties, where there is a large negro population.

The first immigration to Canada during the past week was of ninety families, 500 negroes in all, from the vicinity of Clearview, in Okfusgee county. They sold all their property in this state, intending to take up homesteads in Canada. Many other negroes are making preparations to start and indications are there will be a general exodus.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend wants to know what the government is going to do under a certain condition which he has stated. The government can only do as parliament authorizes it to do. Parliament has passed a certain law in regard to immigration, and the government is administering that law. There is no provision in the law to prevent negroes from coming into Canada, and until parliament makes such provision, it will not be possible for the government to take action on its own responsibility. As to the facts of the case as stated by my hon. friend there is practically no question. There are already in the prairie provinces several settlements of negroes from Oklahoma. When these people came to Canada they get the same rights as anybody else. Any person coming from another country into Canada and having the necessary qualifications is entitled to a homestead, and negroes get free homesteads the same as any other people. So far they have been treated exactly the same as other people have been, both in their admission to the country and in regard to taking up land in the country. They will have to be continued in that treatment until parliament authorizes some other action on the part of the government.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the minister give the House information as to the number of negroes in these colonies, where they are situated, and how long they have been accumulating? I think it is fair to say that the House has only within the last few days understood that there was any movement of this kind.

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot give my hon. friend a comprehensive answer at the moment; but I am aware that there is a negro colony at or near Paynton, in Saskatchewan, on the Canadian Northern line midway between Battleford and Lloydminster. I should think there are upwards of 100 families.

Mr. SPROULE. I saw a statement of a reverend gentleman that there were over 17,000.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend is mistaken. At the census of 1901 there were something like 17,000 altogether in Canada. There is another colony of 20 or 30 families on the Grand Trunk Pacific 75 or 80 miles west of Edmonton, around the shores of Chip lake. There is still another colony, and it is to this that the present movement is being directed, near Athabasca Landing, about 100 miles north of Edmonton, with 30 or 40 families. The movement of this spring is the first large, organized movement. Those who came previously drifted in casually. No special attention was paid to their arrival, they passed inspection and got their land the same as other people. There have been objections raised against their being so dealt with, but it did not seem possible for the Department of the Interior to take any other action until parliament had made provision in the law that some other action should be taken.

Mr. FOSTER. I think this matter is a little more important than the words or the action of the Minister of the Interior would seem to indicate that he thinks it to be. I would be very sorry indeed to see any colour line drawn in the Dominion of Canada. We have quite a large negro population in Canada, some of whom came over, but most of whom are descendants of those who came in the old days, when slavery flourished in the United States. We gave them a hearty welcome and a hospitable one. They have retained generally the respect of the people of Canada, and they have enjoyed all the rights and privileges of free men here. We are glad that they are doing so. But I think the government should recollect that there are some ten millions of a coloured population in the United States of America, in many districts under conditions which are not at all agreeable to the coloured people.

There is a feeling in that country that we in Canada know scarcely anything of, and attempts have been made there to solve that difficulty in various ways so as to assuage that feeling if possible; but now, if an organized effort is made, and if it becomes known that every adult negro in the United States may take up 160 acres of our best land, a migration may be formed, the extent of which, and the result of which we have not the least idea at present. It seems to me that the matter is one of such importance that the minister can hardly say he cannot do anything because parliament has not legislated on the subject. The matter is one which the government ought to take under its immediate consideration and concerning which it ought to define a policy and submit that policy to parliament. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) has not been backwards in defining a policy with reference to British subjects who are not of the same colour and nationality as ourselves. He has not been at all feeble in preventing in a most effective way the settlement of our country of inhabitants of the empire who are loyal to us and have fought for British rule in all quarters of the world. If the hon. minister has any intention of meeting this question he can find a way of carrying out that intention; but if not it seems to me he scarcely sees what may come as a result of this movement which has now been started. I do not want to criticise, but I submit that this is something worth thinking about and having a policy about.

Mr. OLIVER. I would impress upon my hon. friend the distinction between legislation and administration. We are at present administering the immigration law as enacted by parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. But my hon. friend is also the author of the law.

Mr. OLIVER. I am quite prepared to admit that, and accept the situation, but

I want to emphasize the difference between administrative and legislative responsibility and to place myself before the House as having acted so far absolutely according to administrative responsibility. As to legislative responsibility, that is a matter in which my hon. friend will have to assume his share of responsibility.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the government any policy on this question?

Mr. OLIVER. The question has only just arisen. Would my hon. friend suggest that we should adopt a drastic policy because of an occasional incident of immigration? We do not know that there is such a campaign being organized as my hon. friend (Mr. Thoburn) alleges. No doubt there has been some talk in the newspapers about such a campaign, but that has only arisen within the last month, and, therefore, we are hardly chargeable with negligence in not having framed a policy to anticipate something which so far is only in the prospective stage.

Mr. THOBURN. Does the hon. minister think that it is in the best interests of Canada that we should have this negro colonization in our Northwest? I should like to draw attention to this clause in the article to which I have referred:

> The opinion is freely offered that steps should be taken by the Dominion government to put a stop to a class of immigration that the experience of the southern states would indicate is hardly to be considered to be desirable.

Would the hon. minister think it advisable that we should change our law so as to enable the government to interdict immigration of this character?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou). If the proposition of my hon. friend involves anything, it means that the minister should provide some further legislation which would enable him to exclude from Canada, on account of colour, people who at present do not come within any of the provisions regarding undesirables. Of course, if a man be undesirable within the meaning of the statute, he should be excluded, whether he be coloured or white; but I trust that my hon. friends opposite do not propose to exclude a man simply because of his colour, whether from the United States or any other part of the world. The law we have is very broad. It has ample provisions dealing with the exclusion of undesirables, no matter from what country they come, or of what colour, or nationality. But does my hon. friend pretend that we should exclude a man simply because he is coloured, regardless whether he be an undesirable or not in other respects.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. THOBURN. Will the minister answer my question?

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has already spoken several times and cannot take up further the time of the House unless with the consent of the House.

THE FISHERIES TREATY.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I desire to draw attention to the non-fulfilment by the United States of their obligation under the Fisheries Treaty of 1908. That treaty was not of Canadian seeking but like other arrangements, not necessary to revert to at present, was entered into at the solicitation of the United States. At the time it was supposed to be a matter of urgency, and time was made the essence of the contract from the beginning. It was provided that the commissioners should be appointed for three months and that, within six months after appointment, they should draw up a set of regulations to govern the international fisheries. It was further provided that the two governments should enforce by legislation and executive action, with as little delay as possible, whatever regulations those commissioners might agree to. It was also agreed by the Canadian government that they should make certain concurrent regulations with respect to the fisheries on the Fraser river. On the part of Canada, as usual, there was rigid compliance with the stipulations of this treaty. We appointed our commissioner and adopted regulations and made the concurrent regulations respecting the Fraser river. On the part of the United States, however, the whole result of this attempt at fisheries regulation was to secure a draft made by the two commissioners binding upon Canada, to which the Marine and Fisheries Department has adhered, so far as Canadian fisheries are concerned, but to which, in the two years that have elapsed, the United States have not paid the slightest attention. I find that these regulations were transmitted to Congress by President Taft, in his message of February, 1910. In that message, President Taft submitted the report of Secretary of State Knox, in which Mr. Knox said:

> It is appropriate that they should now be transmitted by you to the Congress in order that due legislative action on the part of this government, stipulated for by article III, of the treaty, may be taken.

By the Congress of 1910 no action was taken. Again, in 1911, the regulations were recommended to the consideration of Congress, but Congress rose without any action being taken at that second session. We have no record of any appeal on the part of this government against the breach of faith implied by the failure of the executive of the United States to secure action by their Congress. We learn to-day, for the first time, that a third attempt is to be made by President Taft to get Congress to consider these regulations. I think the history of this transaction shows the folly of the Canadian government continuing in the course upon which it has embarked of making one treaty after another with the United States without any guarantee, or any attempt to exact a guarantee from the United States, that this treaty will be enforced, that the same code of honour should be applied on the American side as is applied on the Canadian side in connection with matters of this kind.

I may say that there is a very urgent reason, with respect to the fisheries of the Fraser river and of Puget Sound, why this treaty should be put into effect, and it is that under the arrangement existing at the present time, American trap fishermen are taking in wholesale quantities, the salmon on their way to the Fraser river, without any regulations at all such as prevail on the Canadian side for the preservation of this fishery, in regard to a close season, to prevent the taking of fish by destructive methods. So much is that the case that the American commissioner, Professor David Starr Jordan, has sent to Secretary Knox a statement with regard to the operations going on in the state of Washington from which I will read a short extract. Professor Starr Jordan says:

> With upwards of 2,500 square miles of fishing territory, the State of Washington has no patrol vessels, and so far as I know but a single gasoline launch. The present statutes are fairly well enforced in most of the eastern boundary States, notably so in Ohio and Pennsylvania. In Washington they are not adequately enforced. It is claimed that in the current season the fishermen of Washington caught by encroachment on the close season, salmon to the value of upward of $600,000, to which they were not entitled. Part of these should have been taken in British Columbia waters. The others should have escaped up Fraser river to the spawning grounds. In Canada, throughout the boundary waters, the statutes now in effect are rigidly enforced. It does not even occur to any one to violate them. The real need of the boundary situation is less that of stringent legislation than of equal enforcement of law on either side. I see no way to accomplish this except by a federal patrol, corresponding to the Dominion patrol of Canada.

It is such a federal patrol that Congress has been asked to establish, and so far has refused to establish, so that for two seasons after this recommendation has been made we still find our fish being taken without any restriction whatever by trap fishermen in Puget Sound waters. The matter is particularly worthy of discussion at the present moment from the fact that by a subsequent arrangement it is proposed to allow free into Canada the whole catch of these traps if our canners desire to import the fish. It makes it all the more exasperating that the fishermen of the Fraser river should see the fish bound to their river being illegally caught in the United States, being caught without any restriction whatever, and this government making it easier to bring these fish into competition with our Canadian caught fish by a proposal to remove the duty and make them as free in Canada as are the fish caught under strict regulation in Canada at the present time. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that in view of the conditions this government might very well lay before the government at Washington the idea that it is well to take one international arrangement at a time, particularly where there are two under discussion affecting the same subject, as the two now under discussion affect this subject of fisheries, that it is due to our Canadian fishing interests to insist that this Fisheries Treaty should be honourably observed by the government of the United States, that it should be put into force and that they should observe the agreed-upon regulations for the preservation of the fisheries in international waters on the Pacific before we agree to any other arrangement affecting the product of those fisheries.

I understand the reason that the Senate of the United States hesitates to give effect to this treaty is that hearings have been given to the fishery interests of the United States affected by the proposals. That is a privilege which the United States commissioner distinctly agreed with the Canadian commissioner should not be given. It was distinctly arranged that the regulations as agreed upon by these two commissioners should go into effect without any change whatever for a fixed period and that if the experience of their operation showed that a change should be necessary it should be made by agreement between the two commissioners. The regulations are in many respects very unsatisfactory to the Canadian fishery interests. It is unnecessary now to go into detail as to the matters of dissatisfaction. They were discussed in this House on a previous occasion, but, since the American interests are being heard by the Senate at Washington with a view to a modification of the regulations in their interest, it seems to be more than ever incumbent that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries should arrange with Washington that a similar privilege on this side of the line should be allowed and that the proposal made in this House two sessions ago to refer this matter to our Committee on Fisheries, as it has been referred at Washington to their Committee on Fisheries, should be adopted so that we could hear our interests and learn from them what we should do to make these regulations effective for the protection of Canadian interests as well as the protection of American interests. When I discussed this question before with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, he told me that this was a matter altogether impossible, because it was an affair of honour between him and the government at Washington that these regulations should be adopted precisely as they stood. Now, it seems to me that as this pledge of honour has not been fulfilled at Washington, we are absolved from being any more strict with regard to our share of this matter than they are with respect to their share, and I would ask the minister whether he will not take into consideration a representation to Washington under which, without any charge of breach of faith, we might submit this matter to our Committee on Fisheries, so that we may discuss there the amendments which I think should be made to these regulations.

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. Speaker, I have already spoken on this question, but I suppose I will be permitted to offer a few remarks in answer to what has been said by my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Taylor). This Boundary Waters Treaty, as my hon. friend has stated, has been under consideration for some time. Some two years ago it was agreed that a joint commission should be appointed by the United States and by the British authorities, for the purpose of framing fishery regulations to apply to the boundary waters. Dr. Starr Jordan was appointed on the American side, and Professor Prince was appointed on our side. Both set to work and framed a set of regulations, which were to be submitted to both governments. It was necessary on our part to pass legislation for the purpose of putting in force those regulations after the issuance of the proclamation contemplated by the treaty. This was done last year. In the United States it is contended that those regulations must be submitted to the Senate. It is contended in the United States that the treaty-making power is vested, not as in Great Britain, with the King, with the advice and consent of his counsellors, but the treaty-making power in the United States is vested in the President and the Senate of the United States. Therefore, in order that a treaty may come into force it is necessary not only that the President should sign it, but that it should be approved by the Senate, since the treaty-making power is vested in the President, on the advice and consent of the Senate. The regulations in question were submitted to the United States Senate, but so far they have not thought fit to approve of them. That is the way the matter stands at the present. When I was in Washington, in the month of January, in connection with the settlement of the objections made by the United States to our legislation concerning the treaty coasts under the treaty of 1818, I took the opportunity of discussing with the Counsellor at Law of the Secretary of State this whole matter. There was one objection made by some members of Congress which strongly appealed to me. It seemed that a mistake had been made in framing the regulations concerning one of the boundary waters. Different provision was made as to the size of the mesh for pound-nets and the size of the mesh in seine-nets. It was stated that so far as we were concerned there was no objection to this difference being adjusted, and on my assurance that the matter would be remedied, I was promised that the President would send a message to the United States Senate, recommending the adoption of the regulations which were based on the treaty. The message has been sent, I had the pleasure of reading it a few days ago, and I find that the President urged strongly the Senate to pass the necessary legislation. The Senate, however, adjourned without taking the final steps; but it is expected, as I have already informed my hon. friend, that during the session that is to open to-morrow the question will again be taken up by the Senate. We must recognize that there are difficulties in the United States with regard to making treaties that do not exist in Canada. I admit that the regulations that were concurred in by the two commissioners, and that we have adopted, are not up to the standard of the regulations I would like to see introduced. They are not as severe as they should be, they do not go so far as our own regulations go in respect to the preservation of the fisheries. At the same time, they do not affect the preservation of our fisheries, because we have taken power to maintain the regulations which exist to-day with regard to the preservation of our fisheries. But these regulations were a step in the right direction. They tended to concentrate power in the federal authorities of the United States, which was formerly exercised by the different states of the union. For instance, my hon. friend knows that the various border states, like Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, New York, Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota, have been in the habit of framing their own regulations, and a good deal of divergence exists between them. In most of those states the regulations are not up to the standard of those we have put upon our own statute-book. I think we ought at least to be satisfied with the fact that the treaty has been made. Now, I would like for my part to see them expedite their legislation and to approve of the regulations, but we must all realize that in this matter the authority of the United States Senate is supreme. The President has taken all the steps which are necessary to urge upon the United States Senate the necessity of approving of these regulations, and putting the treaty into force. Now my hon. friend would like that we should refer this matter to the Committee on Marine and Fisheries. I think that would simply mean the creation of new difficulties, and I think the House will agree that the matter had better be left as it is as far as we are concerned. We expect that the American authorities will soon pass the necessary legislation in order to put in force those regulations, and to bring the treaty into effect.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

SUPPLY.

Department of Marine and Fisheries—amount required to pay pensions, $300 each, to pilots, $7,800.

Mr. BRODEUR. The increase from $4,800 to $7,800 is to cover the cases of men who were superannuated last year and others who are to be superannuated this year. A number were superannuated last year for whom we had to take a supplementary vote.

Mr. DANIEL. What is the age at which they are superannuated?

Mr. BRODEUR. Sixty, but if before that age a pilot is found to have defective eyesight or other disqualification, the pilot association puts him on the superannuation list and we decide whether or not this decision is correct.

Mr. DANIEL. Is the rule of superannuation at 60 absolute? There is a great difference in men at 60.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, we do not necessarily put men on the superannuation list at 60 because some men at 60 are equal to others at 40. The government exercises its discretion as to whether the reports on the man in question justify superannuation.

Mr. DANIEL. Is a medical certificate required in all cases?

Mr. BRODEUR. Oh, yes, and we generally require them to be very strong in order to avoid paying pensions that are not deserved.

Mr. SPROULE. How many pilots are now on the superannuation list?

Mr. BRODEUR. Those mentioned here and those mentioned in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. DANIEL. Is there a special test of eyesight for colour blindness when the pilots are first appointed?

Mr. BRODEUR. When we became the pilotage authority in 1905 or 1906 we gave positive instructions that every year these men should be tested as to eyesight. That is a great improvement on the former system and even on what is done in the case of masters and mates.

Mr. DANIEL. Are the men sent to an eye specialist or has the minister a medical man appointed?

Mr. BRODEUR. We have our own man, Dr. Pagé, of Quebec, to test their eyesight. I have a good deal of confidence in the doctors generally, but I thought it would be better that we should have certificates from the one medical man under our control.

Mr. DANIEL. That is all right so long as he is a specialist in that.

Mr. BRODEUR. He is one of the best doctors in Quebec.

Mr. BARNARD. Are these men in a compulsory pilotage district?

Mr. BRODEUR. We have no compulsory pilotage in the Dominion, but there is compulsory payment of pilotage dues.

Mr. BARNARD. That is about the same thing. I suppose the dues go to the payment of the wages of these pilots?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BARNARD. It is practically the same system as on the Pacific coast in connection with the Victoria and Esquimalt Pilotage Board.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BARNARD. Would the minister consider placing on this pension list a man named Beddington whose case I mentioned to the hon. gentleman two years ago, and who was discharged by the pilotage board on the ground that he was no longer fit to continue his duties on account of having the palsy? The case was the subject of much discussion in that part of the country at the time, and there was a general feeling that this man had not been well treated. The minister told me on a previous occasion that there was no provision for superannuation, but it appears to me that Mr. Beddington's case is similar to the case of the man mentioned here, and possibly the hon. gentleman can make some provision for him.

Mr. BRODEUR. I may state briefly the history of how we came to pension the Quebec pilots. They obtained many years ago under legislation very extensive powers which permitted them to control almost everything in connection with pilotage. Complaints were made by the shipping interests on the St. Lawrence as to the manner in which these pilots were discharging their duties but we could not deprive them of their charter and so we had to negotiate with them. The St. Lawrence shipping interests wanted to extend the pilotage district and to provide for an annual inspection or examination and the pilots were willing provided compensation was given them, and one of the terms was that we should give them a pension on retirement. The pilotage association had the right to pension the old members but they were not doing so, and because of the charter they had we had no right to say who should be or who should not be a pilot. The situation was serious as the whole trade of the country was affected, and we thought it advisable that the government should provide pensions. My hon. friend (Mr. Barnard), has several times brought to my notice the case of Mr. Beddington, and although the case seems to be a hard one the matter is absolutely in the hands of the district pilotage authority and we have no jurisdiction. I do not consider Mr. Beddington's case similar to the present one.

Mr. BARNARD. There is a similarity which the minister has overlooked in that from time to time there has been a strong agitation on the part of the Victoria Board of Trade to do away with compulsory pilotage dues altogether and representations have frequently been made to the government to that effect. The minister in the course of correspondence, I think suggested, that by getting rid of Beddington they might reduce the number of pilots and in that way to a certain extent allay the outcry for doing away with the pilotage system altogether. I think Beddington is entitled to consideration at the hands of the government. Are the St. Lawrence river pilots the only pilots in Canada pensioned by the government?

Mr. BRODEUR. The only pilots pensioned are those of the Quebec pilotage district but not the Montreal district.

Mr. BARNARD. I would again ask the minister to make some provision for Beddington. The medical certificates were favourable to him, but nevertheless he was dismissed and deprived of his sole means of livelihood. It is an extremely hard case and one in which the department should render natural justice by making the provision for him, particularly as they are making this provision for men in a similar class of life in other parts of the country. The fact that the government find it expedient to pay the Quebec pilots a pension because they originally had given them too much power, fits the situation so far as Beddington is concerned. I think that some consideration should be given to this case.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think my hon. friend is mistaken in stating that there was a letter from me or the department suggesting that this man should be pensioned or dismissed. I do not remember any such letter. However, I will look into the matter, and if the department is in any way responsible, I shall be glad to take into consideration the remarks of my hon. friend.

Mr. BARNARD. What has been done with the application of the Board of Trade for the abolition of the pilotage system in that district, and what is the minister's intention with regard to it? This matter has been agitated for two or three years, and I would think that by this time he had come to some conclusion.

Mr. BRODEUR. As my hon. friend is aware, pilotage dues are compulsory in all parts of Canada where there are pilotage districts. If we had not pilotage dues, the pilots might not keep themselves familiar with the parts of the rivers which they have to navigate. That is why we have had laws compelling shipping companies to pay pilotage dues whether they used pilots or not. The same system is in force in the old country. To cease collecting the pilotage dues would be a very serious departure, and before taking that step I would desire to have further reasons to convince me that it would be in the interest of shipping.

Mr. BARNARD. I take it, then, from the minister's reply that there is no intention at present of making any change?

Mr. BRODEUR. The policy of the government is embodied in the Bill that I introduced the other day. I know there is a good deal of divergence of opinion on the subject in Victoria; some people want the system changed and some are opposed to any change. In some districts, in St. John, for instance, a change in the system would cause a very serious disturbance of conditions, If, however, it is found that Victoria really wishes to do away with the system of compulsory pilotage, I am willing to consider that; but in view of the fact that the system has been in force generally throughout this country for many years, and that the same system exists in other countries, I do not think that it would be advisable to make any change just now.

Mr. BARNARD. How does the minister expect to find out whether the people of Victoria want the system or not?

Mr. BRODEUR. I suppose through the pilotage authorities.

Mr. BARNARD. Are the pilotage authorities under salary?

Mr. BRODEUR. The members of the Board are not paid; but generally the secretary is paid a small allowance.

Mr. DANIEL. In St. John, the Board pays the secretary out of the earnings of the pilots. When may we expect the hon. minister's Bill, No. 155, to be brought up for a second reading and referred to the Committee on Marine and Fisheries?

Mr. BRODEUR. The Bill is not yet printed in French. As soon as it is ready, my intention is to ask that it be read the second time and referred to the Committee on Marine and Fisheries, where it can be discussed, and where an opportunity can be given to any persons to appear and give their views upon it.

Mr. DANIEL. Will that be done before the Easter recess?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. If that Bill is put through, will there be the same discrimination against Ontario vessels as now obtains, or will they be put on a parity with vessels of other provinces in so far as the payment of pilotage dues is concerned?

Mr. BRODEUR. There will be no discrimination at all, but all will be put on the same footing. All vessels of a certain draught will be obliged not only to pay pilotage dues, but to take pilots.

Mr. EDWARDS. Will that in any way lessen the responsibility of the vessel owners? In other words, will the placing of a vessel in charge of a pilot place any of that responsibility on the pilot's shoulders?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is no provision in that respect. The liability of vessel owners will be the same as to-day. When they take a pilot, they are just as responsible as they would be if the vessel were under the control of the master of the ship.

Mr. EDWARDS. The captain of a vessel who has navigated these waters year after year would no doubt consider himself just as capable of handling it as a pilot, and probably more so. The placing of a pilot on board does not in any way, I understand, lessen the responsibility of the captain, and the vessel has to pay pilotage dues to this close corporation in Montreal, no matter whether a pilot be really required or not.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is a provision in the Bill to enable masters to take charge of their vessels when in the St. Lawrence on one condition, and that is that they pass before us an examination, and I understand that this is acceptable to the Dominion Marine Association.

Mr. BARNARD. But the vessel would have to pay in any case.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, when the master has become qualified by examination, and takes charge of his own vessel, there is no need to take a pilot on board or pay any pilotage dues.

Mr. DANIEL. Does this apply to every part of Canada?

Mr. BRODEUR. It applies to the two pilotage districts of Montreal and Quebec.

Mr. CROSBY. Why should it not apply also to St. John and Halifax?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have never had any request from St. John and Halifax to make pilotage compulsory there.

To provide for maintenance and repairs to wharfs, $5,000.

Mr. DANIEL. There was an appropriation made for the purchase of some wharf property in St. John for the use of vessels of the department. Has anything been done in that matter?

Mr. BRODEUR. It has been engaging the attention of the department. We are trying to find a suitable locality. Negotiations are going on, and if we can find a locality, I think there is a vote in the estimates for that purpose.

Mr. DANIEL. There was a vote last year of $50,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. Is there not a vote this year in the Public Works Department?

Mr. DANIEL. I think it was put in the Public Works Department.

Mr. CROSBY. I draw the hon. minister's attention to the condition of a wharf at East Chezzetcook. It is a substantial and well constructed wharf, but nothing has been done to it for a number of years, and it is in urgent need of repairs. If it be not put in proper repair soon, it will become useless. There are also two wharfs, one at Moshers river and one at Port Dufferin. In these, surface planking is absolutely necessary. Of course if these repairs be not attended to in time, the department will have to stand a much heavier expense later.

Mr. BRODEUR. I shall take a note of my hon. friend's remarks.

To provide for the establishment of telephone reporting stations along the St. Lawrence river between Montreal and Quebec, $24,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is for the purpose of connecting life stations by telephone or telegraph for the purpose of facilitating communication with ships.

Mr. JAMESON. Is there any report of what has been done in connection with this service?

Mr. BRODEUR. The report will be found on page 239 of the Marine and Fisheries Department.

Mr. JAMESON. Is the report of Captain Bernier yet printed?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed that it will be ready in a few days.

Mr. JAMESON. Is there any reason for the delay which has taken place in connection with it? I spoke to the minister last session with regard to this report, and the minister told me that he expected it would be out very soon. This is a report in connection with the 'Arctic' and the voyage of Captain Bernier to the Arctic regions. I see that there is a short report of Captain Bernier in the report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, but I would not wish the minister to confuse this with the report that I am looking for. This short report is dated April 5, 1910, and in the last clause of it he says:

I have prepared a detailed report which includes the report on the annexation of the northern lands.

That is the report we want to get, that is the report I am interested in, and I would like to know very much what it contains. So far the minister knows that all the information that we have had in this House is the information which appears on the tablet which will be found in the lobby leading to the library, and the extent of the information which we have from that tablet is not very great. The tablet itself, however, announces a concrete fact, and I think it is a matter of sufficient importance for the government to give the House and the country all the information that is contained in Captain Bernier's report. The tablet or memorial, bears the following inscription:

Winter Harbour Melville Island,
C. G. S. 'Arctic,' July 1, 1909.

This memorial is erected to-day to commemorate the taking possession for the Dominion of Canada of the whole Arctic archipelago lying to the north of America from longitude 60 W. to 141 W. up to the latitude of 90 N.

J. E. BERNIER, Commander.

This subject is one that I think of sufficient importance for us to know something more about; at all events it has involved a somewhat expensive service, beginning in 1906, and continuing up to the present time.

A few evenings ago the House was asked to vote the large sum of $59,000 for continuing this service for another year, and we voted that money without the report Captain Bernier had made to the government being placed in the hands of members of this House to show what he had actually done during his previous visit to these regions. In 1906 we expended for this service $63,849.86; in 1907, $34,706.39; in 1908, $55,733.94; in 1909, $36,942.75. In 1910 there was voted $59,000. I cannot say how much of that has been expended up to date, because the report is not out yet. In 1911 we have been asked to vote, and we did vote the other evening, $59,000, making a total of $309,232.94. All we have to show for this expenditure up to date is a report made in 1907 and the memorial tablet erected in the corridor leading to the library.

The minister, the other evening when this vote was being asked—and it was very briefly discussed because it was just as the House was closing—gave us a very important statement in connection with it. Speaking of Captain Bernier's expedition, he said:

As there might be dispute some day about these islands being part of Canada, we thought we should assert our sovereignty.

And so Captain Bernier was sent to the Arctic regions for the purpose of asserting the sovereignty of Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. What sovereignty has Canada?

Mr. JAMESON. Well, let us say the sovereignty of Great Britain.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the whole thing is a superlative farce.

Mr. JAMESON. Well, there may be two opinions about that. We want to know what is contained in this report in order that we may be able to judge whether it is a superlative farce or whether it is a positive farce. But the great difficulty is that the report has not been brought down, and we do not know what it contains. The minister said that Captain Bernier was attempting to make the northwest passage during the present visitation which he is making to the northern regions with the view, it may be, of preventing poaching.

In the report of Mr. G. L. Jennings, who is commanding the Mackenzie river subdistrict of the Northwest Mounted Police, he states that there is considerable, of what I suppose to be, poaching going on, on the other side of the continent. He says at page 149 of the report of the Northwest Mounted Police for 1910, referring to this very matter:

In August, 1909, the steamer 'Karluk' arrived at Herschel island. She is an independent whaler, the stock of the venture amounting to $32,000, being owned by the captain, the officers, and some merchants of San Francisco. The 'Karluk' cruised in the neighbourhood of Baillie island and Banks Land until the close of navigation. She returned to Herschel island on September 23, having killed 11 bowhead whales, 8 of which I understand were taken in Canadian waters, north and east of Cape Parry. The value of this cargo of 11 head is, at a low estimate of the present low price of bone, $85,000. The 'Karluk' is wintering at Herschel island and will return to the eastward by first open water. As she will have the field to herself for at least six weeks before any other ships can arrive from the westward the chances are that she will make another large catch and will no doubt leave in the fall of this year for San Francisco with a cargo of bone valued from $150,000 upwards.

He goes on to speak of the trade that is developing there and says that unless some Canadian traders locate there it will fall into American hands. But the point I wish to bring to the minister's attention is that while Captain Bernier is perhaps ice bound in Hudson bay, or in the waters adjacent thereto, American fishing is going on near the head waters of Mackenzie river, and there does not seem to be any systematic effort to prevent poaching:

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have been somewhat reluctant to break in on the hon. member (Mr. Jameson), but the item before the committee is for the establishment of telephonic communication between Montreal and Quebec.

Mr. JAMESON. I think that possibly it may be that, strictly speaking, this discussion will be out of order, but if you, Mr. Chairman, will permit me, I shall be through in a moment. I have thought this matter of such importance that the minister would like to have it brought to his attention, and I think it also well that the committee should understand the position. Just one word in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, and it is to say that after the statement the minister made to the committee the other evening with regard to this voyage of Captain Bernier to the Arctic regions, and as to the work which he was doing there in collecting license fees from American poachers, a statement appeared in the New York 'Sun' to the effect that the license fee which was being collected was $50 in each case. I would like to ask the minister whether there has been any collection of this license fee from those whalers who are operating on the coast to the north-westward, or whether any attempt has been made to enforce any such collection. So far, the minister told the House $500 had been received in all.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think we have collected anything from the whalers at the mouth of the Mackenzie river, but there have been some collections made at other points. If Captain Bernier succeeds in making the Northwest passage he will have an opportunity of making these whalers pay the fees. I must tell my hon. friend that the report was handed to me on Friday last. But there were some maps which were not included, and that is the reason which delayed the distribution. But it will be done in a few days.

Mr. DANIEL. While on that matter of a report, I may say that Captain Bernier took with him as historian a Mr. Vanasse. He has been with him on each trip. So far, I believe, Mr. Vanasse has made no report; at all events, I have seen no published report made over his signature.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is a report of Mr. Vanasse, I have seen it myself. A few days before he left, Mr. Vanasse handed in a report to the department, and it has been sent to the printers. He was desirous that the history should comprehend a longer period of time.

Mr. JAMESON. What is the total expense likely to be in connection with this telephone service?

Mr. BRODEUR. The amount expended last year was $22,180. The work is completed.

To provide for telephones at different points throughout the Dominion in connection with aids to navigation, $10,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is for the purpose of connecting lighthouse stations by telephone or telegraph lines in order to facilitate communication with ships.

Mr. DANIEL. Is there anything in this vote for the purpose of increasing telephone communication in connection with the new life-saving stations?

Mr. BRODEUR. Part of this vote will be applied to that purpose. It is for the purpose of connecting life stations with the telephone and telegraph stations. Colonel Anderson is looking after this part of the work.

Repairs to maritime road, $1,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is a road on the north side of Gaspé for the purpose of giving access to the Gulf telephone line. The sum of $1,000 has been spent. The money is expended by day labour under the supervision of Commander Wakeham. The road is on the north shore of Gaspé, running between Metis and Gaspé, several hundred miles.

Mr. DANIEL. How much has been spent on it now.

Mr. BRODEUR. Only $2,000 or $3,000. This is to make repairs which are absolutely necessary on the road in order to give access to our life station.

Mr. DANIEL. Is it a highway road or is it a special road?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is a highway road.

Mr. JAMESON. Do I understand there is a road leading from the high road to your station.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. JAMESON. And this expenditure is in connection with the road leading from the high road to the station?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have been anxious to get some information about the wireless telegraph stations which the minister promised me.

Mr. BRODEUR. That item will be discussed under the Naval Service, but in the meantime I hand my hon. friend a copy of the contract, and also a statement giving the cost of our stations with the Marconi Company.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the maritime road, which is under discussion, a municipal road?

Mr. BRODEUR. This is a road running along the Gaspé peninsula, from Metis to Gaspé, some hundreds of miles. In much of this country there are no municipalities, and it is important to our lightkeepers that the road should be kept in proper shape in order that they may have communication with the outside world. This is the fifth year in which this vote of $1,000 has been taken. It was reported to the department that $5,000 should be expended to put this road in proper repair through the sections where there are no municipalities.

Mr. BLAIN. Who constructed the road in the first instance?

Mr. BRODEUR. The federal government I think or the government of the Union.

Mr. DANIEL. I notice on page O-108, that $903 was spent on this road last year, most of it for labour. One man, Mr. Veit, was employed for only six days at $3 per day and travelling expenses; the others were all labourers who received from $1 to $1.75 per day.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is all under Commander Wakeham. The travelling expenses in that item would hardly cover the salary of Mr. Veit. That might be for travelling expenses for some of the workmen.

Mr. DANIEL. The minister does not seem to have much information about the road. Is it a provincial or a municipal highway, and what length of roadway does the government undertake to assist in keeping in order and repair?

Mr. BRODEUR. Our expenditure is of course made in the unsettled districts.

Mr. CROSBY. I understood that this road was from the main road to the lighthouses?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. CROSBY. And now I understand this $5,000 has been spent on the highways?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. CROSBY. Is this a mail or post road?

Mr. BRODEUR. This is the mail route. The communication by which the mail is delivered from Matane to Gaspé.

Mr. CROSBY. If the federal government is going to construct municipal roads in one province they should do so in every other province. In Nova Scotia we have very bad roads, and it would be very satisfactory if the federal government would put them in order. Take the road in the western part of Halifax county going to the lighthouse along Herring Cove, and after you get to Sambro it is in exceedingly bad repair. There are lights and life-saving stations along that coast; the road is not even a post road, and if this is to be the policy of the government we have a fair claim to ask them for help.

Mr. BRODEUR. What is that road used for?

Mr. CROSBY. For the convenience of the fishermen and the light-keepers and the life-saving stations. I do not suppose any of the officials of the department were down there because they are too precious, and they could only travel that road at the risk of their lives. There is another road at Peggy's Cove lighthouse which is exceedingly dangerous.

Mr. BRODEUR. Does it connect the lighthouse with the main road?

Mr. CROSBY. Yes. I wish the minister would keep these roads in repair.

Mr. DANIEL. I may inform the minister that the road to Cape Spencer, in St. John county, is in a dreadful condition. It is full of boulders and stones and there is hardly a roadway there at all. Then, part of the road to Point Lepreaux light is almost as bad, and if it is the policy of the department to assist roadways leading to the lighthouses, I submit these two roads for the consideration of the minister.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed that we have already expended money on the roads mentioned by my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel). I will have my officers report on their present condition and if necessary repairs will be made.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister seems to be in a happy mood for receiving applications for expenditure on municipal roads. Surely, the roads the minister has referred to must be used by some one else than the lighthouse officials?

Mr. BRODEUR. These roads are generally for the use of the light-keepers, and I suppose it is only fair we should pay a share of the expense.

Mr. BLAIN. Who is paying the other share?

Mr. BRODEUR. If there is an organized municipality it would pay. This road was originally built by the government and it is only fair we should contribute towards its maintenance.

Mr. BLAIN. What money was expended by the government for the construction of these roads, what has been expended for maintenance, and on how many miles of such roads has money been expended by the government? The minister told us that this road is 600 or 700 miles long and that the municipalities maintain some parts of it.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think I said it was 600 miles long.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). You said 750 miles.

Mr. BRODEUR. If I said that it is a mistake. Any one who is au fait with the Gaspé peninsula will know what the length of the road is. If part of that road connects the main road with our light station, and if, as we have done in several cases, we have expropriated property to make that road it is our duty to maintain it.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). How many rights-of-way has the government expropriated?

Mr. BRODEUR. We expropriate very often.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). In this case?

Mr. BRODEUR. Some of these lighthouses have been in existence for years and I cannot give the particulars off hand.

Charter of steamers for Lime Kiln Crossing to be employed keeping the channel open, Detroit river, $10,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to maintain a patrol for the regulation of traffic at the Lime Kiln Crossing. The necessity for this arose because of the dredging operations in that locality and the congestion of traffic. Last season it was not necessary to expend any of this vote, but it is considered advisable to have money on hand in case of an emergency.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). What steamer did you charter?

Mr. BRODEUR. We did not charter any last year. Some years ago the American government obtained authority from this government to dredge at the Lime Kiln Crossing in Canadian territory. Regulations were passed for directing the traffic in these waters and the patrolling was at first done by the American government, but as it was in Canadian waters I thought we should do that ourselves and we chartered a boat for that purpose.

Mr. DANIEL. Is this a police boat?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes. The regulations provide that the boats going down the river have to pass on one side and the boats going up the river have to pass on the other side, and we have a tug there for the purpose of seeing that this regulation is carried out.

Mr. BARNARD. For how many seasons does the minister expect that this work will have to be kept up?

Mr. BRODEUR. We do not know exactly because the Americans are now dredging another channel on the other side of the river, and when this is completed, it will not be necessary to maintain a police boat there.

Mr. DANIEL. I do not see why the minister wants $10,000 for this service when he spent only $4,000 on it last year.

Mr. BRODEUR. We do not know what may happen, and we have to provide for contingencies.

To provide for the purchase or construction of a lighthouse and buoy steamer for River St. Lawrence to replace the 'Shamrock,' $175,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. The 'Shamrock' is an old boat and a very slow one, and this vote is for the purpose of purchasing another one. Public tenders have been called for, and the contract will probably be awarded in a few days.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). How many steamers has the minister between Montreal and the head of the lakes looking after the buoy and the lighthouse service?

Mr. BRODEUR. Four.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). A few years ago this whole work was done by one steamer.

Now the minister has four steamers and a floating blacksmith shop, which is in charge of another tug, besides two or three big scows. About once a week they stop at Gananoque from Saturday till Monday with a big gang of men. It is costing to-day $5 where it used to cost $1 to look after the lighthouses between Montreal and the lakes. The expense at present is something awful.

Mr. BRODEUR. I cannot agree with the criticism of my hon. friend. It is true, some years ago the number of boats was less than it is to-day. There were then no gas buoys. We have installed them in the St. Lawrence, and with very good results in the interest of navigation. In 1895-96 there were no gas buoys; now we have 79, and since we have established that system the traffic has greatly increased. Instead of vessels being obliged to lie up at nights, they can continue on their route, and in that way we have almost doubled the transportation facilities of the country. We require some boats to look after this system, both on the St. Lawrence and on the Great Lakes. Formerly we chartered a boat for the purpose of provisioning our lighthouses on the lakes; but this was a very expensive and unsatisfactory method, which could be carried out only at certain times of the year. Now we have a vessel which is engaged all the time in inspecting and looking after our lights, so that if an accident occurs it can be attended to at once. We had to put another boat there, and since then everything has been going on very nicely, and the aids to navigation are kept in proper shape.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I asked for a return of the cost since 1896 and previous to 1896 of the lights west of Montreal, but have not been able to get it. When I do get it I am satisfied it will show that the cost is $5 to $1 what it was before.

Mr. BRODEUR. That return was brought down.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Between Montreal and Kingston, the cost is $5 to $1 compared with what it used to be. The minister promised, when establishing the acetylene gas business, to reduce the cost, but it is five times what it formerly was. He has not dispensed with the lightkeepers in many cases, and the 'Reserve' and the 'Scout' with a blacksmith shop and a big barge with a derrick on it, are moving up and down the river and through the islands between Kingston and Montreal all the time, and what they are doing no one can tell.

Mr. BRODEUR. The report was brought down some time in December or January. In 1895 we had only 238 lights; now we have 366. At present the aids to navigation are 520, and they were only 270 in 1895.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds).

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). What do you call aids to navigation? Do you mean the steel buoys which the department bought at a tremendous price and which are no better than the painted ones?

Mr. BRODEUR. They are much better.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). At night time we cannot see them, and the painted buoys were just as good.

Mr. BRODEUR. Let my hon. friend compare our harbour with places where the Americans have a lighting system, and he will find that ours is much superior. Let him go to the Detroit river.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). You have built a system to make somebody rich, buying these buoys at extravagant prices instead of using what we had before and which answered the purpose just as well.

Mr. BRODEUR. Well, we are getting the business for it. Just look at the freight tonnage.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). That has not been increased by putting on these gas buoys.

Mr. BRODEUR. To a certain extent it has, because we are giving better facilities.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). You had the facilities before and just as few accidents, and the river was just as well lighted throughout the Thousand islands.

Mr. CROSBY. What is the size of the boat?

Mr. BRODEUR. 170 feet long, 32 feet beam, draught 10 feet, and speed 12 knots.

Mr. CROSBY. Is there any chance of building her down in your department at Halifax?

Mr. BRODEUR. Not at our department, but we are calling for tenders, and I hope that the contract will go to a Canadian firm. I am extremely sorry to find that we have no tender from Halifax, but that is not our fault.

Mr. CROSBY. Would it not be a good plan for the government to build that ship themselves in their own dockyard. They have a splendid place, abundant facilities, and the latest kind of machinery for doing all kinds of work. I would like to see the department making some good use of the dockyard there, and I think it would be only fair for the minister to try and build one ship in it. Then you have men in Halifax, Pictou and Yarmouth, good marine engineers who are constructing marine engines all the time. Now that the minister is building some ships on the upper lakes, he ought to build a ship in the dockyard of Halifax.

Mr. BRODEUR. The policy of the department is to call for public tenders. The tenders are in and are now engaging our attention, and the contract will probably be awarded this week. I would be very glad to see some one from Halifax taking sufficient interest in naval construction to put in a tender for those ships, but I am afraid that none has tendered. As to the government undertaking its construction, I doubt whether that would be advisable, seeing that we have in this country several shipyards belonging to private parties who are willing to tender. It would be just as well to leave that to private initiative.

Mr. CROSBY. The ship will be built in Canada anyhow?

Mr. BRODEUR. I hope so.

Mr. CROSBY. But the minister is not certain. Instead of having this built in England, the government would do better to undertake the work themselves and build it in their own shipyards.

Mr. BRODEUR. We shall be guided by the tenders which are in, and I have every reason to believe that the contract will go to a Canadian firm.

Mr. CROSBY. Is the time for tendering up?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. Is this boat to be built of steel?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. What will be the length, depth and width?

Mr. BRODEUR. Length 170 feet, 32 feet beam and 10 feet draught.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Was there a vote last year to cover this expenditure?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, but we did not use the money, because we are just making the contract.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). You do not say it is a revote.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is a revote.

Mr. BLAIN. Are there any tenders from outside Canada?

Mr. BRODEUR. I would not like to give any information now because the tenders are under consideration, but I think there are.

Mr. CROSBY. I do not think there would be any harm in saying whether there were tenders from outside of Canada.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think there are.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I have just sent upstairs and I find that there are no returns brought down in my name. There are returns brought down in the names of Mr. Monk and Mr. Blondin, but they do not apply to the district west of Montreal. They have reference to the district between Quebec and Montreal and the river and gulf of St. Lawrence. The return I asked for has not been brought down yet.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am surprised, because I was almost sure that all the returns affecting my department had been brought down.

For the purchase or construction of a lighthouse and buoy steamer for the Pacific coast, $200,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is a revote. The contract for the construction of this steamer has been awarded to the Collingwood Shipbuilding Company, a Canadian company, for $260,000. The other night I was very much criticised for having given a contract to Vickers, Sons & Maxim. Vickers, Sons & Maxim were lower tenderers in this case than the Canadian shipbuilders, but I gave it to the Canadian company.

Mr. BARNARD. What is the size of this ship?

Mr. BRODEUR. The dimensions will be as follow: length, 200 feet over all; beam, 43 feet; draught, 12 feet; speed, 12 knots.

Mr. BARNARD. Is she to be constructed of steel or wood?

Mr. BRODEUR. Steel.

Mr. BARNARD. I would like to ask the minister if he does not think it would have been very much more advantageous to the service in that province to have used the 'Kestrel' for this service, and to have built a proper fisheries protection cruiser. He could have built a cruiser, or possibly two small ones, for the same amount of money, and thus have provided a fishery protection service. The 'Kestrel' has done this work at different times and she is just as good, if not a very much better ship than the present lighthouse tender—the 'Quadra.' I would ask if that would not be a far better disposal of that amount of money than to build this new ship?

Mr. BRODEUR. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Barnard) is mistaken with regard to the 'Kestrel' being used for this service. The 'Kestrel' is engaged in the fisheries protection service.

Mr. BARNARD. She does not protect anything.

Mr. BRODEUR. Well, I think she is doing fairly good work. I do not think she would be of any use however for the lighthouse service. That requires a different boat entirely and the 'Kestrel' would not be suitable. We are doing a great deal on the Pacific coast, though little was done in the past, and in view of the large amount of shipping which is being carried on it is necessary to provide better aids to navigation. We have one boat there which has been engaged in lighthouse service—the 'Quadra'—but it was found necessary that a new one should be placed in this service. So, we called for tenders, and the contract has been given to the Collingwood Shipbuilding Company.

Mr. BARNARD. What I stated was that the 'Kestrel' had relieved the 'Quadra' from time to time, and I think that is the case if I am not very much mistaken.

Mr. BRODEUR. I never heard of it, and the commissioner of lights informs me that he does not remember it.

Mr. BARNARD. I think he is mistaken.

Mr. BRODEUR. He may be.

Mr. BARNARD. However, in connection with this question, I want to point out once more, as I have already twice done during the present session, the necessity for at once providing permanently for better fisheries protection on that coast. Since the last time I mentioned this matter in the House I have seen some reports of fishery poachers again operating on that coast, and apparently without very much attempt on the part of this department to stop that poaching. I will quote from the 'Colonist' newspaper of March 22, and possibly in quoting that I will show the minister how much use the 'Kestrel' is for the purpose of fishery protection. The article is as follows:

The fish poachers have seemingly extended their operations from the the west coast of Vancouver island to the Queen Charlottes according to advices brought by the steamer 'Amur.' Arrivals by the Canadian Pacific railway steamer from the islands state that two gasoline auxiliary United States fishing schooners were sighted with their dories out fishing within the three-mile limit off Rose harbour close to the whaling station. The schooners were well within the three-mile limit, poaching on the British Columbia fishing grounds. The Dominion government's fishery protection cruiser 'Kestrel' was lying at Queen Charlotte city when the 'Amur' called there.

My hon. friend's protection cruiser. the 'Kestrel,' was within hailing distance practically of these schooners that were poaching, and yet, through no fault of the men in charge, but probably because the 'Kestrel' was too slow to catch them, they were not interfered with. This question has been agitated by the people of that province for a number of years. They have been put off with promise after promise by the department for the same length of time. Votes have been put into the estimates annually and never expended, until to-day the situation is a disgrace to this government. To show you what our friends on the other side of the line think in regard to this matter, I will read you another short extract taken from the 'Colonist' of March 25, just the other day, which publishes a statement from the Seattle 'Post Intelligencer.' The quotation is as follows:

The halibut schooner 'Montana,' which has been building at the shipyards of Markey & Wilson, in the east waterway, was launched at 7 o'clock yesterday morning, says the 'Post-Intelligencer.' The 'Montana' is being constructed for W. H. Butt, of Seattle, and will be used off the coast of Vancouver island the coming summer. The vessel is 81 feet long and 18 feet beam. She will be able to carry 90,000 pounds of halibut under deck. She will be equipped with an 85-horse power Imperial engine, and her bunkers will hold fuel enough for a 4,000-mile voyage. She will be ready to leave for the north in about three weeks.

Now, I say it is the business of the minister and of his department to see that if that vessel does leave for the north in three weeks, she does not go to the west coast of Vancouver island, and if she does, it is further the business of the minister and his department and his officials to see that she does not carry any 90,000 pounds of halibut. This grievance has been going on unremedied for so long a time that one gets almost tired mentioning it. I understand that the minister has some votes in the supplementary estimates this year for the purpose of chartering some vessels for this service, and I want to tell him that is not sufficient. He cannot hope by chartering vessels to stop this poaching, he needs a permanent force there all the time. Now, last year he chartered a vessel for the fisheries protection service which, as a matter of fact, is a tugboat, and he paid $21,645 for doing it. That is an extravagant way of doing the business, because this will need to be a permanent matter. Every time he charters a vessel he uses her for two or three months, and then she is laid off. The result is there is an interregnum, during which the poachers do just as they please along the coast. If the hon. gentleman wants to stop this, the only way he can do it is by organizing a proper patrol of the whole coast, and to do that he must have a proper and regularly organized force. I submit further, that he will find it very much less expensive by going to work and ordering his boats now. In the past he has promised us cruisers and other kinds of boats, and given us nothing. This matter is an outrage on the people of the province of British Columbia, it has gone so far, according to reports that come from there, that even the Indians on the coast, who see these poachers coming ashore and breaking the game laws, want to know why the Dominion government cannot protect the fisheries which belong to them.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think the reports mentioned by the hon. gentleman are somewhat exaggerated. That question does not come up under this item, but I may deal with it. We have been doing our best to protect the fisheries. My hon. friend complains, and other complaints have been brought before the House, that some of those poachers who come ashore, were stealing game from the province. It is not our duty to protect the game of British Columbia, that is a work which pertains to the provincial authorities. If there is any lack of protection or enforcement of the game laws of the province of British Columbia, certainly my hon. friend is not justified in charging this government with it. We are looking after the protection of the fisheries, and we are doing it so well that I think nobody can seriously complain. We had some fishery protection vessels there, but they were not found numerous enough, and at the request of some members of this House, I do not know whether my hon. friend is one of them, we chartered a vessel to look after the protection of the fisheries, with very good results. Immediately after the 'Rainbow' arrived in this country we gave her instructions to look after the fisheries. The 'Rainbow' has done so, and the other day she seized an American vessel which was fishing within the three-mile limit on the north shore of the island of Vancouver, off Cape Scott. The matter is now before the courts, and will soon be adjudicated. I hope we will succeed in proving that this vessel was within the three-mile limit, and that the seizure was valid. My hon. friend will admit that there has been a good deal of exaggeration in the reports in regard to poaching. People think that a vessel is fishing within the limit, when, as a matter of fact, she may be outside of it. Three miles is a short distance from the shore, and people imagine that the fishing is going on within the three-mile limit when it is outside.

Mr. BARNARD. With regard to exaggerated reports, I think the minister has very much underestimated the situation in which they are exaggerated. It is a matter of common knowledge all along the Pacific coast cities that that poaching goes on practically unchecked, and has gone on for years; and I am much mistaken if a great many representations have not been made to the minister by boards of trade and other official bodies to that effect. With regard to his suggestion that I am complaining that the game laws of the province of British Columbia are not enforced by the Dominion government, he is either very dense or is trying to misenterpret what I said. That is not my complaint at all. What I am trying to point out is that the fishermen are actually so bold that they come into the harbours along that coast, anchor their vessels and go ashore, and commit breaches of the game laws. They leave their vessels and go ashore and there is no one to check them.

Mr. BRODEUR. What can we do in a case like that?

Mr. BARNARD. I am not asking this government to enforce the game laws, but to stop these men from fishing. If you stop them from fishing they won't come ashore. That is the situation. I am not asking the minister to enforce the British Columbia game laws; as has been shown frequently, the provincial government are well able to take care of their own game laws. But I say the minister and his department have so far neglected to stop this poaching, they have brought the administration in that particular into contempt, and not only into the contempt of the business people of the province, but into contempt even of the aborigines who are not supposed to know very much about it.

River St. Lawrence ship channel, $900,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This vote is to make provision for ship channel dredging, for the maintenance and improvement of the shipyards, as well as renewal of machinery and plant. We have now in the service six elevator dredges, and we are building a new steel elevator dredge, which will be completed during the next season of navigation. We have also one hydraulic dredge and two suction dredges. I may say that the department is contemplating increasing very materially the expenditure on this work. For some years there has been an agitation among the shipping interests and in the country generally in favour of deepening the St. Lawrence to 35 feet. To-day we have a 30 foot channel at high tide from Montreal to the sea. When we remember that at one time we had only a 10 foot channel in some parts of the river, we are able to appreciate the extent of the work which has been done. Our purpose is to deepen this channel to 35 feet. We will require some new dredges for that purpose, and this vote is to cover that expenditure. So far the cost of dredging the St. Lawrence has been $3,549,460.78 and the cost of the plant $2,696,741.16. This work consisted in dredging the 27½ foot channel between Montreal and Quebec to 30 feet. This was decided on in 1897. It included the widening of the straight parts of the channel to a minimum width of 450 feet and the curves to 600 and 750 feet, and at Lake St. Peter to 800 feet. This also included work below Quebec. Until 1906, no work had been done below Quebec.

Mr. BLAIN. Do the items that are now under construction and investigation in the Privileges and Elections Committee come under this vote?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Then I think we should leave this open until that committee reports.

Mr. BRODEUR. The investigation has nothing to do with the deepening of the St. Lawrence channel. I might make my statement with regard to the work and then allow the item to stand.

Mr. BLAIN. I think it is a rule of the House that an item under discussion in the committee cannot be discussed here. I would ask for the Chairman's ruling.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I know of nothing that would prevent the item being discussed. There is a rule which would prevent a discussion here of the matter still before the Privileges and Elections Committee.

Mr. BLAIN. The money for the work being investigated in that committee will be paid under this item, and therefore I think it is a direct violation of the rule.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is in connection with this item a great question of policy, whether this committee would accept the idea of deepening the channel to 35 feet. We might discuss that and then allow the vote to stand until the committee reports.

Mr. DANIEL. I think it would be advisable to go to some other item just now. None of the members from Montreal are here and others interested are absent. Then there is great force in the contention of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain). There has been evidence that work was done on Mr. Lanctot's house and on other buildings in the city of Sorel with which the government have nothing whatever to do. It is quite a large question in itself.

Mr. BRODEUR. The engineer who is in charge of this work came to Ottawa for the purpose of discussing this great question of the increase of the depth of the St. Lawrence, and it would be a pity to have that question set aside to-night.

Mr. CROSBY. I do not think there can be two minds on the deepening of the St. Lawrence, and therefore I think we may fairly go from this to other items of the minister's estimates. No one can hesitate about making the St. Lawrence channel, the great summer highway waterway of Canada, as deep as it can be made. I think the committee take this Sorel matter into consideration to-morrow.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Crosby) has hit the nail on the head. There are no two opinions about the deepening of the St. Lawrence ship channel; we are all in favour of that, only we think it is costing too much owing to the reckless way in which the minister does the work. I find at O—134 he gave an order to the Lymburner Company, Montreal, for brass condenser ferrules, $25; steel ranges, three at $35 each; Chapleau range, $100; parts of John Bull steel range, $38.85, and so on. Two years ago the same Lymburner was asked to supply belting for the custom house, Montreal, and he charged $800 odd, and before the Public Accounts Committee the manufacturers of the belting showed if the Minister of Public Works had applied to them they would supply it for $200, and Lymburner had a rake-off of $600 on $800 worth of goods. And the Department of Public Works, in face of that, continued to deal with Lymburner. Then, the Minister of Public Works goes to his friends, McAvity & Sons, of St. John, N.B, and buys $4,000 worth of supplies for the Montreal ship channel, and they have to pay freight on it and send it up to Montreal. The whole thing wants investigating from top to bottom, and we must have an explanation why the government continues to deal with Lymburner who, as was proven before the Public Accounts Committee made a clean steal of $600 on $800 worth of a purchase.

Mr. STANFIELD. Lymburner is up before the committee this year.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Yes, and the government have gone to work and appointed him purchasing agent or inspector of buildings, or something like that in Montreal. Unless the minister promises he will not purchase from this man we should not let these items go through. The Minister of Public Works stated plainly he would have this matter inquired into, and make a report, but he never did so, and then he appointed Lymburner one of his officials in Montreal, and he purchases from the firm of Lymburner & Co., in which he says he has an interest. Why does not the Minister of Public Works, instead of buying from his political friends, McAvity & Sons of St. John, N.B., go to his friend Mr. Lewis of Montreal who, the hon. member for Grenville said, was their political agent in Montreal, and handled the party funds. The minister did not deny that statement.

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly, I deny it most emphatically.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Deny what?

Mr. BRODEUR. That he is the political agent of the government.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). He is not the political agent of the government?

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly not?

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). My friend from Grenville (Mr. Reid) said he was the financial agent for the Liberal party in Montreal.

Mr. BRODEUR. He is not, and the hon. member for Grenville made a lot of insinuations like that the other night.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). They were not insinuations, they were plain statements.

Mr. BRODEUR. He stated we were giving contracts to the firm represented by Mr. Lewis, but as I pointed out a few minutes ago, notwithstanding that Vickers, Sons & Maxim put in a lower tender than the Collingwood Shipbuilding Company, we gave the contract to the Collingwood Company. That shows what truth there was in the statement made by the hon. member for Grenville.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). That does not disprove the statement made by the hon. member for Grenville, and he defied the minister to deny it: that Mr. Lewis was his purchasing agent, and that this vessel was increased a foot in width so that she could not go through the canal. The minister did not deny that statement when it was made. This vote should stand over until we know more about McAvity and Lymburner.

Mr. BRODEUR. These same accounts were referred to the Public Accounts Committe, and the committee has reported.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). The committee has not yet reported.

Mr. BRODEUR. We will welcome any investigation with regard to the purchases made from Lymburner or any one else.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). You will get it.

Mr. CROSBY. I think the minister should go on with some other items.

Mr. BRODEUR. If the committee is of opinion that we should not discuss this big question of the St. Lawrence ship canal because there is an item of $400 in dispute I will go on with something else.

Magnetic observatory, $3,200.

Mr. DANIEL. Where is this observatory?

Mr. BRODEUR. At Agincourt, near Toronto.

Mr. DANIEL. What is that observatory for?

Mr. BRODEUR. For observing the magnetism of the earth.

Mr. DANIEL. What kind of observations are made at this place?

Mr. BRODEUR. Observations of the magnetism of the earth. My hon. friend can see the report of Mr. Stupart at page 198 of the Marine report.

Mr. HENDERSON. Of what practical use is all this going to be?

Mr. BRODEUR. It has been going on for many years. I have no doubt that these scientific observations will bring some good results.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Last year $1,674 was spent on this. Why is it necessary to ask for $3,200 this year?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have explained how it is proposed to be spent.

Mr. HUGHES. What instruments are used in this observatory?

Mr. BRODEUR. I cannot give my hon. friend the information.

Mr. HENDERSON. The salaries of these officials are very low—$500 and $600. They surely cannot be high-class scientific men.

Mr. BRODEUR. They are not working the whole year. Besides, some of them are paid out of two votes.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Out of the next vote Mr. Stupart gets a salary of $3,100, and he is paid here $85 for expenses.

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. Stupart is in charge of both the meteorological office in Toronto and the magnetic observatory at Agincourt. He goes there occasionally, and is paid his travelling expenses.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Why should he be paid his laundry account?

Mr. BRODEUR. I suppose that is part of his expenses. It is a very small item.

Mr. HENDERSON. How long has this observatory at Agincourt been established? I never heard of it before.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think in 1840. I am under the impression that it was at the same time that the meteorological office was opened. We rent a house for the purpose at Agincourt.

Mr. HENDERSON. Of what particular advantage is this place for an observatory?

Mr. BRODEUR. Probably because it is far from the city. No doubt there were good reasons.

Mr. HUGHES. Who owns the house?

Mr. BRODEUR. I cannot say.

Mr. BLAIN. In the Auditor General's Report it appears that Mr. Menzies, who works at the Toronto office, is the agent for it, and that the government rent a room in his house for this purpose.

Mr. BRODEUR. I see that we pay to Mr. William Menzies the rent of a house, so that I suppose we rent the whole house. However, I shall make inquiries and find out why observations have been carried out in that place. I suppose they could not be carried on in the city.

Mr. HUGHES. Would it not be well to find out the facts before passing the item?

Mr. BRODEUR. The whole responsibility lies with the director. He has been running this establishment many years, and I have every confidence in him. The director is Mr. Stupart, a very good man.

Mr. DANIEL. No doubt the matter is all right, but no one seems to know anything about it. In the Auditor General's Report I find that this item costs $1,674. What is the reason for the increase?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is no increase. It is the same vote that we have always had.

Mr. DANIEL. You are asking more for the instruments.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is an item of $1,100 for the instruments. I must admit that I have not looked very closely into this matter because I relied entirely on the report of the director, and I am sure he would not recommend anything which should not be accepted. However, I shall inquire and find out if there is anything not proper in this matter.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. minister might inquire at the same time how long this institution has been established. He says there was an observatory there in 1840, but at that time the place was practically a wilderness and Toronto only a very small town. I think he has made a mistake and should have said 1894 instead of 1840. I recollect something of a discussion about 18 years ago regarding the establishment of an observatory out there, but I think my hon. friend is about 40 years out in his date.

Mr. BRODEUR. The reason I gave that date is because the meteorological office was established in the 40's, and I thought that this magnetic observatory might have been established at the same time. It is possible, however, that the two were combined in Toronto, because Toronto was not then the big city it is to-day. No doubt these observations are better taken out in the country than in the city.

Mr. HENDERSON. Of course it is only reasonable that it should be away from the city where it would be subjected to electrical influences which might interfere with the correctness of the observations.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the minister bring the particulars with respect to William Menzies as to whether this is one and the same person or not?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have no doubt it is the same person. Mr. Menzies is one of the officers of the meteorological service, and I suppose that he makes observations at the magnetic observatory.

Mr. BLAIN. Where does he reside?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know, whether he resides at Agincourt or not.

Mr. HENDERSON. Perhaps he has his summer residence at Agincourt.

Mr. BRODEUR. He may have his summer residence at Agincourt.

Mr. BLAIN. If that is right surely my hon. friend would not tolerate this condition of things. At page O—109 of the Auditor General's Report he will find this entry:

Menzies, Wm., Agincourt, rent of hse., 9 m. to Mar. 31, 1910, at $15, $135.

Then the Auditor General gives the salary of William Menzies at the central office, Toronto, as $1,420. Would my hon. friend think it a proper thing for an officer residing at Agincourt to rent his house to the department for $135, or at the rate of $15 per month?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think there would be a very serious objection to that. I remember that when I was practising my profession in Montreal I lived for years twenty-five miles from the city, and I could be at my office every morning earlier almost than all my confrères. So, I do not think it would be a very serious objection. He may live in the country and attend to his business in the city of Toronto.

Mr. BLAIN. That is not my point, and the minister knows it very well. I am not concerned whether Mr. Menzies should live in Agincourt or Toronto. The point is whether William Menzies is receiving this large salary at the central office in Toronto and whether he is renting his house to the government at $15 a month or $135 for nine months?

Mr. BRODEUR. The only question is whether the rent we are paying is too large or not. Fifteen dollars a month does not seem to me to be a very extravagant price.

Mr. BLAIN. What about the principle of his renting his house to the government?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not see any very serious objection to that. An officer of the government might lease a property which he has to the government. He is not the director of the service. The director is Mr. Stupart. This man might be the owner of a property in the country which is needed for our purposes.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). What salary is Mr. Menzies getting?

Mr. BRODEUR. $1,420.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Does he not get something out of the other vote?

Mr. BRODEUR. Not out of the two.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). What are these two salaries and to whom are they paid?

Mr. BRODEUR:

Salaries detailed under central office, meteorological service, $1,230.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Who is the $1,230 paid to?

Mr. BRODEUR. To two persons.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Yes, and Menzies is one of them.

Mr. BRODEUR. Menzies is one of them.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). How much goes to Menzies?

Mr. BRODEUR. $690.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). And then, out of the other vote, he gets $1,420?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, the two votes give him $1,420.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I do not see how the minister makes that out.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Then you are asking for a double amount; you are asking for $1,230 and $690 in the vote, and then, in the next vote you are asking for $1,420.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, out of the other vote we are simply paying the difference between $690 and $1,420.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). My hon. friend then is asking for too much money because he is asking for $3,700 for three men: Menzies, $1,420; Davidson, $1,000; and Tweedie, $1,150. That makes $3,570. He does not give the names, but he puts in $1,230 and $690 and the $1,230 is for Menzies. Add that $690 to $1,420 and you get $2,110 a year.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, my hon. friend is wrong. Let us take the magnetic observatory. We have:

Salaries detailed under central office, meteorological service, $1,230.

Now, in the meteorological service there is paid to William Menzies, $1,420. Then, of this amount of $1,420, there is $690 which is being paid out of the appropriation for the magnetic observatory.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Then why does my hon. friend ask for two votes?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not ask for two votes, because when we come to the meteorological service I ask simply for the difference.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). What difference?

Mr. BRODEUR. Between $690 and $1,420.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Then why do you extend the $3,570?

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend is mistaken. The salaries of the observers appear under the heading of 'Central office, Toronto.' Mr. Tweedie has nothing to do with the magnetic observatory.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I am bound to accept the Auditor General's Report in preference to the statement of my hon. friend, and he has charged this amount of money as having been paid to Mr. Menzies last year. He has charged $1,230 to the vote for the magnetic observatory, $690 was paid to Mr. Menzies and then he has charged the meteorological office with $1,420 paid to the same man. Who is wrong, the minister or the Auditor General?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think anybody is wrong.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds).. Look at the Auditor General's Report page O—109. The Auditor General has paid out $1,230 and he says that the salaries are detailed under the central office, meteorological service. Then, under the heading of 'Central office,' the names are given but not the amounts.

Mr. BRODEUR. Out of the vote for the magnetic observatory two observers are being paid their salaries in part—William Menzies and W. F. Davidson. Those men are also employed in the meteorological office in Toronto, and they receive a certain salary there, Mr. Menzies receiving in all $1,420. Of that $690 is paid out of——

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I guess the minister has found out that he has made a mistake and that the Auditor General is right.

Mr. BRODEUR. $1,420 is paid in Toronto and $690 is paid out of the vote for the magnetic observatory.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). That is what I have been arguing all the time, and the minister stated it was not so.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is perhaps the fault of the Auditor General who has stated that these salaries will be detailed in the next item, but he does not seem to have done it.

Mr. BLAIN. What is Mr. Menzies' total salary?

Mr. BRODEUR. $2,110.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). The minister stated a moment ago that it was only $1,430.

Mr. BLAIN. When Mr. Menzies is receiving this salary, does the minister think it is fair that this same officer should rent a house to the department?

Mr. BRODEUR. I understand that Mr. Menzies works the greatest part of the year in the Toronto office, and the balance of the year at Agincourt making magnetic observations. His salary is $1,426 for his work in Toronto, and $690 for his work at Agincourt. He resides in Toronto, and only goes to Agincourt at certain parts of the year to make magnetic observations.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is it customary for the government to pay an employee $175 a month, and then rent his house from him?

Mr. BRODEUR. I suppose the house is under our control, because the instruments are kept there.

Mr. JAMESON. May I ask the minister what useful purpose is being served by this service, which he says has now been in operation for forty years?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is no doubt that the service has been of great use to the country in giving information as to the weather prospects. I see by a report which has been made with regard to magnetic observations, there was a question as to whether the instrument used in Canada was as good as that used in the United States. If I may judge by the report which we had in our hands from Mr. Stupart, these observations are of a scientific character, and are used by scientists to a large extent.

Meteorological service, $143,000.

Mr. BURRELL. With regard to this expenditure for meteorological stations, it has been suggested, in discussing this matter in British Columbia, that the government might well deem it worth while to pay a small fee to these men who have charge of the various stations. Now the practice has been, I understand, to get certain men to take charge of meteorological work, to provide them with instruments, and they are to keep a record and make an annual report. I believe a great many of the men are good men, and there is a lot of good work done. I do not know whether the minister quite understands how important this work is in what we call the semi-arid belt of British Columbia. An accurate knowledge over a long period of the total annual precipitation is one of the first things that is required. We find that men coming in to make big investments, especially for fruit-growing purposes, in parts of our semi-arid belt, attach great importance to this information. In some districts there may be a precipitation of 10 or 12 inches, and in other parts of from 14 even up to 20 inches. This difference will make a considerable difference in the value of that particular section for certain purposes, as to the necessity of irrigation works, and so on. The present practice is this: That a man who is given one of these instruments in charge by the government, will do his work faithfully for a year or two, and then perhaps he may fall sick or may go away on a holiday, and he is not in a position to pay other men to do his work. There is consequently a hiatus in the observations, that renders valueless the whole of that work, which, to be of value, must be carried on over a consecutive period of years. I would like to impress upon the minister that the great importance of this work would justify a nominal fee or salary, a small sum paid to the men who have charge of that work, especially in the fruit district which stretches from the Kootenay district to west Yale.

Mr. BRODEUR. Are there not some stations to-day in that district?

Mr. BURRELL. There are quite a number, where I presume the work is carried on under the direction of the head office in Victoria. As I understand it, these men who are occupying sub-stations report to the Victoria office to Mr. Baynes Reed. But it seems to me that the importance of the information, if carried over a period of years, is so great as to justify the minister in paying more attention to this service that he has been doing, because we have hundreds of thousands of acres in that belt the value of which is affected by the result of these observations of the rainfall in different districts. I think the government would be justified in making a small appropriation of that kind.

Mr. BRODEUR. I will be glad to take into consideration the suggestions of my hon. friend. I was under the impression, however, that reports were being constantly made without interruption. If there are cases to the contrary, I will see about it.

Mr. BURRELL. I am not speaking of any specific cases. But I do know that one of the first questions asked by capitalists coming into that country, and by investors generally, is as to the average annual precipitation in these districts, and in many cases they fail to obtain the information. However good and reliable the man may be who is in charge of a station, if he goes away, he is not able to turn that work over to somebody else. As the minister can see one break will destroy the value of the whole record. If the man was sick or away he would be responsible and would have to pay some one to keep the record?

Mr. BRODEUR. I think my hon. friend is right.

Mr. JAMESON. The minister has not given any explanation as to the increase of $4,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. The increase of $4,000 is largely to cover increases of salaries and I think it may cover the case to which my hon. friend has alluded. The salaries will be as follows:

Central office, $35,928; chief stations, $12,480; telegraph stations, $14,275; special stations, $7,849; temporary stations, $6,536; miscellaneous stations, $540. The telegraphic tolls amounted to $36,000; instruments and apparatus, $3,000; postage, $800; printing and stationery, $7,000, and then there are the other miscellaneous expenses. The entire increase of $4,000 is for the purpose of giving increases of salary to these men. I think it may cover what my hon. friend (Mr. Burrell) has brought to my attention.

Mr. BURRELL. I hope the minister's assurance is satisfactory. It is very important in what we call the dry belt in British Columbia. While it is of importance everywhere it is vital where the rainfall is not sufficient because we are embarking millions of dollars in irrigation systems in that country. I suppose that $3,000,000 have been spent for irrigation in the semi-arid belt in British Columbia.

Mr. BRODEUR. I realize how important it is and if this item is not sufficient I think I will ask the director to provide for a supplementary estimate.

Mr. JAMESON. Can the minister tell in what percentage of cases the forecasts have been correct?

Mr. BRODEUR. In 92 per cent.

Mr. JAMESON. I think that shows the value of this service to the country. The great difficulty of course is that many people who would be benefited by promptly receiving the information are not in a position to profit by it. A few evenings ago I pointed out to the minister that it would be a great advantage to our fishermen if when these forecasts are being telephoned to different stations they could be sent to all the fishing stations along the Atlantic coast, at least which have telephone communication.

Mr. BRODEUR. We are actually looking into the question the hon. member has raised.

Mr. JAMESON. I urged this on the minister last year and also this session and I hope he will do more than look into it. If he considers the large number of people who are every day at the mercy of wind, sea and weather he will see that he is not doing his full duty to the fishermen and others who would be benefited by this information if he withholds it from any section of the country, even if some trifling additional expense is entailed. I do not think people will cavil at the expenditure of a few thousand dollars so long as they get results and the money is honestly expended. No better result could be achieved by any expenditure than the placing of that information at the disposal of people on the coasts. It would really add little to the expense and it would round out the system and make it of use to those who would benefit most by it.

Mr. BRODEUR. We are increasing our service every year. Of course we cannot expect to cover all places at the same time, and I do not know if we will ever be able to establish these stations at all places. We are trying to take the most important places one after the other. This is rather a large amount we are spending, $143,000, and proves the interest the government take in this question. Every year we open some new stations.

Mr. HENDERSON. Some years ago the morning trains running out of Toronto carried on the side of the car discs which indicated to the farmers the weather forecasts for the ensuing 24 hours. The information thus conveyed was of great value to the farmers, particularly during harvest time. I do not know whether that was done by the railway companies themselves or by the government. Has that service been discontinued?

Mr. BRODEUR. My impression is that this service was given by the railway companies themselves. Perhaps the railway companies might be induced to return to the system which supplied useful information to the farmers living along the railway.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I can inform my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) that it was not in 1840 that magnetic observatory was established, because I find no mention of it in the Auditor General's Report for 1896. In that year the expenditure on the Meteorological office was $15,000, and now it has risen to $27,900, or an increase of $13,000.

Marine Hospitals and care of sick seamen, $73,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. We impose a tax upon shipping to recoup us for this expenditure. We generally collect sufficient for that purpose.

Mr. CROSBY. Generally more.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is about even. We have reduced the rate.

Mr. JAMESON. Will any new hospitals be established this year?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am opposed to establishing any more of these hospitals. My experience is that the seamen can be better cared for in regularly established hospitals.

Mr. JAMESON. How many marine hospitals are there in existence?

Mr. BRODEUR. Victoria, Yarmouth, Pictou, Chatham, Lunenberg, Louisburg.

Mr. JAMESON. The minister is not going to extend the system?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am not favourable to it. We have made arrangements in Montreal, Quebec, St. John and Halifax with the regular hospitals to care for the sick seamen. When British Columbia entered the union one of the conditions was that we should maintain the marine hospital at Victoria, but recently the legislature passed a resolution stating that they would consider it a compliance with that condition if the marine hospital were discontinued and the care of sick seamen given to the general hospital.

Mr. JAMESON. There is also an arrangement in force by which sick seamen are taken care of, not in hospitals, but by persons appointed for that purpose. In what places is there an arrangement of that sort?

Mr. BRODEUR. The number is large and it would not be possible off-hand to give that information in detail.

Mr. JAMESON. That information does not appear in any departmental report.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I would not like the minister to say positively that no new marine hospitals would be established. I agree that wherever there is a suitable general hospital it would be better to send the sick sailors there, but there are places on the coast where there are no hospitals of any kind and where great hardships are endured by sick sailors. In the town of Canso, one of the most important fishing ports in Canada, and where hundreds of vessels come week after week, there are generally a number of sick seamen. Canso has no railway communication with the outside world and no hospital of any kind, and the sick sailors have to be kept in boarding houses, where the accommodation sometimes is very bad. There is not much chance for a man suffering from severe illness to recover, if he is living in a small house of one or two rooms where there is no possibility of proper attendance. I think the minister ought to consider the advisability of establishing small marine hospitals at such places. Some time ago an application came from Canso for something of that kind. I have known men to be brought in sick in fishing vessels for whom it would be almost impossible to find accommodation; nobody wanted them. Men have died because they could not get to the hospital at Halifax. If there had been a proper place where they could have been attended to when coming in sick from the sea, lives could have been saved. If we maintain this service at all, we should provide accommodation at points where no hospitals are available.

Mr. JAMESON. That seems a very reasonable presentation of the case, and I think the committee would be interested in hearing the minister's reply to it. If his policy is not to construct any more hospitals, I think it would be well for the public to understand that. On the other hand, if he can make his policy a little more elastic, I would like to lay before him some facts in regard to other parts of the province.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have given the committee my view of these hospitals. At the places where we have them, they cost us a good deal more money than we get in revenue. We must remember that this money which we collect from the shipping interest is trust money, and they have something to say about the way in which it is administered. The law itself fixes the conditions under which this money is to be expended. Recently some doubt was raised as to whether we had the right under the law to use some of that money for the purpose of paying the funeral expenses of a deceased seaman, and I am asking the House, in the Bill which I introduced a few days ago, to give authority for such an expenditure. I do not think it would be possible for us to establish a hospital at places where the revenue was not sufficient to maintain it, because the shipping interest would object. It is not a matter on which we are absolutely free, because this is trust money, and has to be administered in the best interests of those who have contributed the money.

Mr. JAMESON. I quite appreciate the fact that this is trust money; but the lives of the fishermen and the seamen of this country should be of as much importance to the government as the expenditure of trust funds. The minister has taken the position that because these are trust funds, therefore no further expenditures can be made to provide for the safety, comfort, and well-being of sick and distressed seamen, the very reason for which the fund was created. That seems to me to be an untenable position. The case as presented by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) seems to me to be unanswerable. I would like to draw the minister's attention to the fact that since 1896 there has been a vast accumulation of these trust funds. The amounts received by the government year after year have been very much in excess of the amounts they have expended. The report for 1910 shows that over $200,000 of a surplus should be in the hands of the government, and I would like to know where that money is. I cannot find any reference to it among the trust funds mentioned in the Public Accounts. If there is a large amount of money to the credit of this fund, why should it not be expended for the purpose the hon. member for Guysborough has mentioned? The whole question is one of such importance that we should not pass this item until we understand whether or not the minister, in cases where it is obviously impossible to give proper medical care and treatment to sick and distressed seamen, will relax his policy so far as to make proper provision for their care and comfort.

Mr. BRODEUR. We are always doing that. In all cases we take the necessary precaution to give to the seamen proper treatment. But there are a great many abuses in connection with that. Men who pay us a few dollars very often saddle their seamen upon us. We have, therefore, to be very careful in the administration of the law. The shipping interest has represented that they would be in favour of abolishing absolutely the system of paying these dues, and assume the care of their own sick seamen, because they claim that this is an undue tax upon them. There is a great deal in what they represent in that respect; and I do not know but the country will some day put that charge on the vessel owners themselves. If we proposed to make some large expenditures in the construction of marine hospitals, the shipping interest would be certain to be up in arms against it, because it would mean an increased tax upon them. In other countries no such thing exists, but the ship owners look after their own sick seamen.

Mr. CROSBY. I think that the suggestion made by the hon. member for Guysborough is a good one. The difficulty is that our fishermen ought to have some assistance in the way of hospital protection frequently have no chance at all to go to a hospital either at Halifax or Pictou, because the vessels on which they work do not pay dues.

Mr. SINCLAIR. That is their own fault. They ought to pay dues.

Mr. CROSBY. They are not compelled to pay.

Mr. BRODEUR. They are not, but they might take advantage of the Act and pay them.

Mr. CROSBY. Still that is not the fault of the poor fishermen who ship on these vessels. They do not make it a point to see that the vessel on which they engage pays dues; and the fishermen off one of these vessels who requires hospital treatment is just as much entitled to it as any other man. Take the man who goes on a fishing schooner of from 40 to 100 tons. He does not know that the schooner does not pay the dues. Should he fall sick or be injured, he is put on shore and has no place to go to. Some provision should be made to meet cases of that kind. I quite agree with my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) that in Canso and its vicinity, where there is a number of places at which fishing vessels call, some place should be chosen in which to put a marine hospital, also in the vicinity of Digby, and some regulations should be made for the protection of our sick and injured fishermen. I thought that the revenue from these dues was greater than the amount expended.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, we decreased the tax a couple of years ago, and since then there is barely a small surplus, if there is any.

Mr. CROSBY. What are the rates now—2 cents a ton?

Mr. BRODEUR. There was a reduction made two years ago of half a cent.

Mr. CROSBY. That would make it 1½ cent per ton. I think that the minister should accept the suggestion of my hon. friend from Digby (Mr. Jameson), and my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) and provide some way for taking care of our fishermen.

Mr. BLAIN. Are the supplies for these hospitals bought by tender?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, the quantity is too small.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the total number in the different hospitals?

Mr. BRODEUR. 3,629.

Mr. BLAIN. The supplies for that number would be considerable.

Mr. BRODEUR. They are not all in the marine hospitals of the government. Some are in the public hospitals. In the large places we have made arrangements with public hospitals to receive the seamen. In other places where there are no hospitals, we make arrangements with private houses to receive sick seamen at so much per day, so that the amount of supplies purchased is very small. Take the case of Douglastown where there is a hospital; the coal will be $12.50, wood and sundry supplies, $21.80. Then, there is telephone service, salaries of the attendants, medicines, &c. In Nova Scotia the hospital at Lunenburg costs $1,196.07; Louisburg, $1,191.48, and North Sydney, $1,167.60. So, as my hon. friend sees, the amount which is spent at each of these places is very small. That would certainly not justify the department in advertising for supplies because the advertisement would cost more than the amount of money which is being spent for the supplies in these places.

Mr. JAMESON. I was speaking a few minutes ago about the surplus in connection with this trust fund. I find that between the years 1896 and 1909, according to the report of the minister himself, the receipts amounted to $826,259 and the disbursements to $619,355, so that the balance in hand would be $206,904. This is a trust fund and, in so far as I am aware, without some special legislation in that behalf, it could not be applied to any other purpose than the purpose specified in the Act, which limits its use to the care and comfort of sick and distressed seamen. Here is a surplus then of $206,000 in the operation of this service during the past thirteen years. With that surplus in hand I cannot see that the minister would be justified in refusing any reasonable extension of the service. I do not know where this money appears in the accounts. I do not see it in the trust funds, in the public accounts. I presume it has been carried over from year to year in the consolidated revenue fund because, as a matter of fact, it is not represented in any particular account as a trust fund. But, if it is a trust fund, as the minister states and as the Act states also, it must be available for this service. I think it would be very unreasonable for the shipping interests to say that this trust fund should be used for any other purpose than the care and comfort of sick mariners, and I do not think that the minister could expect that they would take such an unreasonable view. So, I merely desire to register the opinion which I entertain of the matter and it is that with this very large amount of money on hand available for this purpose it is not treating the seamen fairly to withhold from them the comforts and privileges which might properly be provided by a proper expenditure of this fund in their interest. I am sorry that the policy which the minister has announced to-night is of such a character that our seamen and fishermen will be debarred from the advantage which might accrue to them by a proper and reasonable expenditure of this fund in their interest.

Shipwrecked and distressed seamen, $3,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is for the purpose of assisting seamen wrecked and in distress in foreign countries.

Steamboat inspection, $54,000.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). You have an increase of $700; what is that for?

Mr. BRODEUR. We thought it advisable that the inspectors should receive a small increase in their salaries and this additional amount is for that purpose.

Mr. JAMESON. I would like to ask the minister whether it is simply for the inspection of the boilers and machinery of the steamers, or whether it extends to a general inspection, such as the inspection of life-boats and life-saving apparatus generally.

Mr. BRODEUR. It covers not only the inspection of boilers, but the inspection of hulls, gear, life preservers, boats, &c.

Mr. JAMESON. I would like to point out to the minister that in the opinion of a good many people there are a number of steamships, some of them receiving subsidies from this government, that are not properly equipped with life belts of a satisfactory character. Some years ago, it will be remembered, that a terrible accident occurred in American waters and as a result of defective life belts that this accident was attended with great loss of life. The other day we had an instance near Nova Scotia when the steamer 'Bruce' went ashore. It has been stated to me—I do not know whether the information is accurate or not—that one of the passengers found the life belts so defective that although he tried three of them none was strong enough when tied to retain its place on his body, that, as a matter of fact, he could not get proper appliances on the boat for life-saving purposes. That may or may not be correct; I am not stating it as a fact, but merely as a report which has come to me. But, I know there is very grave suspicion in the minds of people generally that enough attention and care are not bestowed upon the life belts on some of the steamers which are plying about our coasts, and that some day there may be a very serious casualty which will result in great loss of life. Then, I think that if the department is looking after the inspection of the hulls and the equipment of these vessels special attention should be paid to life-belts and to life-saving apparatus. I know that it is perhaps rather an unusual thing to overhaul all these belts, but the minister will see, and I am sure the committee will appreciate, the great importance of having them in proper condition for use. A number of them are transferred on those boats, many of them are old. I know some of them have been in the service for many years, and I doubt whether they would be sufficient in case of accident to give people a fighting chance for their lives. I hope the minister will give instructions to his officers to see that every ship plying out of Canadian ports is equipped with life belts which are proper and sufficient.

Mr. BRODEUR. The administration of this branch of the service is in the hands of the chief steamboat inspector, Mr. Adams. Mr. Adams is very severe, and I am sure he is taking all possible precautions in order to ensure the safety of every one who embarks on those ships. Of course he has several inspectors under his control. Coming now to the accident which occurred the other day to the 'Bruce', the 'Bruce' is not a Canadian registered ship. So far as my information goes, she was registered in Newfoundland, and consequently must have got a certificate from the Newfoundland authorities.

Mr. JAMESON. Is she paid a subsidy by this government?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed she was. We are obliged under the law to accept the certificates which are issued by the Newfoundland authorities. If the vessel obtained a certificate from Newfoundland, we have no right to ask for another one. At all events, the wreck commissioner has left for the purpose of making inquiry into all the circumstances surrounding the wreck, and we will not fail to bring to his attention the statement which has been made by my hon. friend to the effect that some of the life-saving apparatus was not in proper shape.

Mr. BLAIN. Are vessels on the lakes inspected as well?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Brodeur, House adjourned at 11 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 4, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

ROYAL ASSENT.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received from the secretary of His Excellency the Governor General the following communication:

Ottawa, April 4, 1911.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that the Right Honourable the Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber on the 4th inst., at 3.15 o'clock, to give the Royal Assent to certain Bills, which have passed the Senate and the House of Commons during the present session of parliament.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
D. O. MALCOLM,
Governor General's Secretary.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the House of Commons.

BRITAIN AND RECIPROCITY.

On the orders of the day being called:

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I understand that a dispatch has been received in Ottawa stating that Sir Edward Grey announced in the British House of Commons that the British government had made a demand on the government of the United States that the United States should grant to Great Britain and all her colonies, the same tariff concessions that the United States propose to grant to Canada under the reciprocity agreement. If that is so I would ask the intention of the government in regard to it.

Mr. FIELDING. That would be a matter entirely between Sir Edward Grey and the British Ambassador at Washington, and I would not care to offer any opinion concerning it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Has the government received any such message?

Mr. FIELDING. I did not understand my hon. friend to say that any message came to us in the matter.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. A message has been received in Ottawa this afternoon.

Mr. FIELDING. I am not aware of any such message. The terms on which goods would be admitted to the United States from Great Britain would be a matter of negotiation between the British authorities and the American government. We would have no right to negotiate concerning that.

ROYAL ASSENT.

A message was received from His Honour the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General by the gentleman usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Honour the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of your honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, with the House, went up to the Senate chamber.

The House having returned.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that when this House did attend His Honour the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General in the Senate Chamber, His Honour was pleased to give, in His Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bills:

An Act respecting the South Ontario Pacific Railway Company.

SUPPLY—THE BUDGET.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply. He said: I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that we shall all rejoice that the facts and figures which it may be my duty to submit to the House to-day will help to tell the continued story of that progress and prosperity which Canada has now happily enjoyed for a long period. Possibly at some previous times there have been some doubts on occasion as to whether or not there was that progress and prosperity which has been claimed, but if there ever was any difference of that kind it certainly does not exist now, for on all hands we have the testimony that the condition of Canada is a very prosperous and satisfactory one.

The Public Accounts submitted to parliament at the present session were for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1910, a period which expired a little more than a year ago. I shall not at this day occupy much time in commenting upon the operations of that year, but there are a few striking points in connection with them of which we may well take note in passing. The estimated revenue for that year, 1909-10 was $97,500,000, accompanied, however, by a hope that under favourable conditions the revenue might reach the round mark of $100,000,000. These favourable conditions did occur, and the revenue reached the hundred million dollar mark and passed it. The actual revenue for that year was $101,503,710.93, being a little more than $4,000,000 in excess of the estimate, $16,000,000 and more in excess of the previous year and nearly $5,500,000 in excess of the revenue of the record year of 1907-8. Thus, so far as the revenue was concerned, the operations of the year were eminently satisfactory.

If we turn to the expenditure side, we shall find an equally satisfactory state of affairs. When our revenues have been buoyant we have felt justified in making liberal provisions for the public service, but when a check comes upon the revenue, then, although it may be only for a time, it is well that we should apply the brakes to expenditure. In the year 1908-9 such a check did come upon our revenue and there was a substantial reduction; our revenue fell off about $11,000,000. In consequence of that, it was thought well to apply the brake somewhat severely to the expenditure of the following year. Happily the check on our revenue proved only temporary. After a short time the revenue continued to grow again, but in the meantime we had endeavoured to check the expenditure with, I think, satisfactory results. The estimated expenditure chargeable to income for 1909-10 was $81,000,000. The actual expenditure of the year was $79,411,747, or $1,588,252 less than the estimates, and $4,652,485 less than the expenditure chargeable to income during the preceding year. In these figures we have the evidence that when the check came upon the revenue, we were able to put the check upon the expenditure too, and there was a very substantial reduction of expenditure in that year.

The surplus estimated for the year was a generous one, $16,500,000; but with a large increase of revenue and a substantial dimnution of expenditure, the surplus naturally grew to a larger figure, and instead of it being the sum counted on, the actual surplus of the year was $22,091,963, which was a record surplus for this Dominion.

Mr. FOSTER. Was that after the payment of the sinking fund?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, sinking fund is always chargeable to income.

Mr. FOSTER. That was over and above that?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, that is my understanding.

We have to consider now the capital and special charges for the year 1909-10. In that year we expended $35,971,911.94, a pretty large sum, on what is called capital and special account. Nearly two-thirds of that we provided out of the revenue for the year. The balance added to the debt was $12,338,267.16. Note that in that year we paid out of our revenue all the ordinary expenses of what we call consolidated fund, all the charges for railways and canals on capital account, all the charges for public works on capital account, all the charges for railway subsidies, all the charges for Dominion lands, all the charges for militia on capital account, all the charges for bounties, and also $7,600,000 towards the cost of the Transcontinental railway. In that year we spent on the Transcontinental railway $19,968,000; but we added to the public debt only $12,338,267. In this hurried glance at the accounts of the year 1909-10 we shall see that the year was a very prosperous one: first, in the matter of liberal revenue; second, in the fact that the expenditure chargeable to consolidated fund showed a substantial reduction; and, third, in the fact that although we spent a very large sum on capital account, we were able to provide for nearly the whole of it out of our revenue, making an addition to the public debt which, having regard to the large outlay of the year, was a very moderate one.

Turning now to the year 1910-11, which has just closed, we ought to be able to estimate a little more closely than usual.

But it should be remembered that with our vast territory, and with the business of our country scattered over such a wide area, it becomes necessary to allow some time to pass for the collection of the accounts. Some weeks will still elapse before we shall be able to close the accounts of the year, so that the figures which I am able to give at the moment will differ materially from the figures which will ultimately be included in our blue-books; but we can form a fairly close estimate.

I have here a statement of the actual revenue for the year 1909-10 and a corresponding statement of the estimated revenue for the year 1910-11, just closed, which it will be understood is necessarily incomplete and is subject to later revision. This statement is as follows:

	1909-10 Actual Revenue	1910-11 Incomplete. Revenue
Customs	$60,156,133 98	$72,704,010 34
Excise	15,253,352 65	16,651,118 06
Post Office ..	7,958,547 72	8,642,090 19
Dominion Lands	2,885,999 67	3,023,872 83
Railways	9,647,550 69	10,368,596 30
Miscellaneous.	5,602,126 22	3,276,538 08
Total	$101,503,710 93	$114,666,225 80

We estimate that when the accounts are closed the revenue for the year 1910-11 will reach $117,500,000.

The expenditure chargeable to consolidated fund to the 31st of March is $75,590,195.74; but of course many accounts have yet to come in, and that sum will be largely exceeded. We estimate that when the accounts are closed the expenditure of the year chargeable to consolidated fund will be $87,000,000. This will be an increase over the previous year of $7,500,000; but there are one or two facts which must be taken into account before we regard that as an actual increase. It may be remembered that in the last session of parliament I spoke of the intention of the government to make a change with regard to certain items which had been charged to capital account. It was, I informed the House, our intention that certain charges for the militia which had generally appeared chargeable to capital, should be charged to income account; also, that the item of Dominion lands, which from time immemorial had been charged to capital account, should be transferred to income. Then, the naval service might properly also be charged to income. On these accounts we have for the militia $1,289,644, and for the Dominion lands $936,171.75. These two items, formerly chargeable to capital, are included in the charges against income. There is also included the naval service on which we expended $1,369,211.94. If then we take these things into account, the transfers from capital to income and the new item for the naval service, we will find that the actual expenditure of the year has not been increased by $7,500,000, but may be roundly stated at $4,000,000.

The estimated revenue for the year ending March 31, 1911, I place at $117,500,000. The estimated expenditure chargeable to Consolidated Fund will be $87,000,000, and this will give us a surplus of revenue over the ordinary expenditure of the government of $30,500,000.

There might be circumstances under which a large surplus of that character would be open to criticism. If it were the result of increased rates of taxation, or of burdensome taxation, it would be. But when, as a matter of fact, our rates of taxation are lower than before, although, owing to the flourishing condition of the country the amount collected is much larger; when, as a matter of fact, the rates of customs taxation are lower, and substantially lower, than they were in former years; and when this surplus comes to us from a system of taxation which is not open to the charge of being generally burdensome, I think we do well to take the surplus obtained in this way and use it in paying some portion of our capital and special charges, which otherwise would have to be represented by additions to the public debt. By this liberal surplus we are able to provide, as I have already shown, for very large expenditures which, in the ordinary course of events might properly be charged to capital and added to the debt.

I have spoken of the revenue, the expenditure and the surplus of the year. This is a surplus on the expenditure that is chargeable to income. Let me say a word or two with regard to that form of expenditure which is known as capital and special expenditure. We voted for the year just closed, for the Transcontinental railway, $27,000,000. Our estimate is that the actual amount of expenditure for that service for the year will be $24,000,000. We shall expend, as closely as we can estimate it, on public works, railways and canals chargeable to capital, railway subsidies, bounties and other minor charges of capital and special character, $11,500,000. Add that to the $24,000,000 for the Transcontinental, and we have an expenditure on capital and special account of $35,500,000. If we set that against the surplus of $30,500,000 and the payments into the sinking fund of $1,100,000, we find the amount which, as the result of the year's operations, has been added to the public debt. These figures show that we have provided for all the ordinary services of the government on a liberal scale, we have provided for public works and railways, railway subsidies, and bounties and various services chargeable to capital account, and have provided even for the Transcontinental railway almost as much as was expended in the year, making a total of $35,500,000 spent on capital and special account, and yet we have added to the public debt of the Dominion only $3,900,000.

The debt of the country, as I have had occasion to remark previously, is only a burden in proportion to the number of shoulders to bear it. And if we view the debt of Canada in that way, we shall find that there is every reason to be gratified and no reason to be alarmed. The net debt of Canada on the 31st March, 1910, was $336,268,546.33. The estimated increase of debt for 1910-11, as I have stated, is $3,900,000, which would make an estimated net debt at March 31, 1911, of $340,168,546.33. Now, if we apply the net debt of Canada year by year to the population of Canada, we shall have a very clear idea of how far the debt of the country is a burden upon the public. I have here a statement beginning with the year 1891, and showing for that year and for the twenty years succeeding, the population and net debt with the net debt per capita:

NET DEBT PER CAPITA.

1911..	7,785,000	*340,168,546.33	43.69

* Estimated.

Thus it will be seen that while, in a young and growing country like Canada, there must be from time to time some additions to the public debt, the additions in our case have been very moderate, and, when considered in proportion to the population of the country are seen to be still more moderate. There is another way in which to measure the proportionate diminution of our public debt. Twenty years ago it would have taken six years revenue to pay the net debt; ten years ago it would have taken five years' revenue to pay the net debt; to-day less than three years' revenue would pay the whole net debt of of Canada.

Since the date of the last Budget Speech (December, 1909), large obligations of the Dominion have matured and been dealt with. On the 1st January, 1910, the 4 per cent Reduced Loan of 1885 for £6,443,136 2s 9d., or $31,356,595.88, matured and was dealt with as follows: $11,915,343.35 redeemed in cash; $8,990,771.45 converted into 3½ per cent loan 1930-50; $9,603,597.84 held in its own sinking funds and cancelled; $846,883.24 held in Investment Account and cancelled. It will thus be seen that of this loan a large portion was redeemed in cash, a portion converted, and a portion cancelled through the operation of the sinking funds.

There was also matured and paid off on the 1st February, 1910, £1,000,000 of Treasury Bills.

Notice had been given that on the 1st July, 1910, the 4 per cent loan of 1885 for £4,000,000 would be redeemed. This was a loan issued in the year 1885 at 4 per cent, redeemable between 1910 and 1935 on the government giving six months' notice. As this loan was bearing 4 per cent interest it was considered advisable to replace it by a loan bearing a lower rate of interest. For this purpose a loan of £4,000,000 3½ per cent stock, redeemable, as in the case of other 3½ per cent loans, on the 1st July, 1950, with the option to redeem at par on or after the 1st July, 1930, on giving six months' notice, was issued at the issue price of 99 per cent.

On the 1st October, 1910, the £1,500,000 of the 4 per cent loan of 1875-8 guaranteed by the imperial government fell due. To provide for this maturity, and also for the purpose of meeting £3,500,000 of treasury bills, due 1st July, 1910, an issue of £5,000,000 3½ per cent stock, redeemable on the 1st July, 1950, with option to redeem at par on or after the 1st July, 1930, on giving six months' notice, was effected at 99½ per cent on the 5th May last.

The next maturity to be dealt with is the balance outstanding of the 4 per cent loan of 1874. This was a loan of £4,000,000 issued in 1874. A part of it was paid off, and the balance, £2,500,000, was extended to the 1st May, 1907. In April, 1907, a further offer to extend the balance outstanding for four years, or to the 1st May, 1911, was given with the option to convert into 3 per cent stock. This option expires on the 30th April, 1911. The amount of the loan so far not converted is £1,635,958. This outstanding amount will be paid off in cash on the 1st May next.

We have thus cleared off all the heavy maturities of the year 1910. Provision is practically made for the payment in cash on the 1st May next of the loan already referred to maturing that date.

There is to-day no temporary loan of any kind outstanding.

In this connection I may say a word on the subject of sinking funds. In the earlier history of the Dominion it was the practice to attach sinking funds to all the loans, and, with the exception of one small loan there was a sinking fund attached to all loans in these earlier years. But after the year 1885 that policy was changed; sinking funds were abolished, and from that time on for many years no sinking funds were attached to the loans. As these old loans matured the sinking fund attached to each was found a most convenient and advantageous thing, and as a result of our consideration of the question of re-establishing the sinking fund system, sinking funds are attached to our recent loans. In the olden times the sinking fund was one-half of one per cent, except in the case of the imperial guarantee loan, when it was 1 per cent. In July, 1909, we issued a loan of £6,500,000, 3½ per cent stock, and to that we attached a sinking fund of one-half of one per cent. We also extended that sinking fund to two previous issues of the same class; one of £3,000,000 issued February, 1908, and another of £5,000,000 issued October, 1908; both of these being of the same class as the loan of 1909, 3½ per cent stock redeemable 1930-50. We have thus fourteen and a half million pounds sterling of recent loans which have been brought under the operation of sinking funds, and the additional amount we have put into the sinking fund by reason of this change now stands at $695,024. There was no particular demand for this from the money market. I have no doubt we could still have obtained our loans without sinking funds, but I am of opinion that even from the money market point of view it was well we should restore the policy of earlier years and attach sinking funds to our loans. We propose, therefore, that as respects loans which may hereafter arise, unless something shall occur to change the policy, that we shall attach sinking funds to them as was done in the earlier history of the Dominion.

In a previous budget speech, I think the last one, I discussed the question of what I thought was a proper subject for borrowing: the things which we might reasonably borrow for, and the things for which we should not borrow. Speaking generally one may say that the things which are chargeable to capital account are usually considered the things for which a government may properly borrow. I think, however, that we might accept that principle only with a modification. I laid it down, not as a rule, but as an object at which we should aim, that we should only borrow for great and important public works such as the National Transcontinental railway. I do not mean to say that under no circumstances would we be justified in borrowing for other purposes, but my idea was that we should endeavour to pay out of revenue not only our ordinary expenditure, but other expenditures which had formerly been charged to capital or special accounts, such as our Public Works, Railways and Canals capital account, bounties, &c. I thought we should endeavour to confine our borrowing to a great national work like the Transcontinental railway and pay all the rest out of our revenue. I am glad to be able to say that has been done, and that we have accomplished more than I set out to accomplish in that way. As I have pointed out, in 1909-10 we spent on the National Transcontinental railway $19,968,064.31, but we only added to the public debt in that time $12,338,267, and in the year just closing we spent $24,000,000 on the National Transcontinental railway, but we shall only add to the public debt $3,900,000. I have already mentioned that we have made a change with regard to certain items being charged to capital account. The expenditure for Dominion lands for a great many years was chargeable to capital account though the revenue from Dominion lands appeared in the ordinary income. We announced last session that we would charge Dominion lands hereafter to income account, also, that portion of the militia expenditure which for some years had been charged to capital account, and also, that we would take the new Naval Service under our care as chargeable to income, and not to capital.

I propose now, in view of the fact that the bounties are pretty well running out, that that which will remain will not be a very heavy charge on the public treasury. I think that from this time forward we may adopt the rule that all these charges for bounties shall hereafter be charged to income and not charged to capital or special account.

With regard to these bounties, as they have been the subject of very much discussion of late in one form or another, I may give the House some information concerning them. I think that the bounty system dates back as far as 1883. In the session of 1883 the first bounty legislation with regard to iron and steel was passed. At one time we granted bounties for the encouragement of the beet sugar industry, but they ceased a good many years ago, and were not renewed. In 1884 we began paying bounties for the production of manufacturing industries, and we have thus for 28 years been assisting in one form or other the iron and steel industry by way of bounties. The following table gives the amount paid for bounties during the year 1910, and the year 1910-11 to 31st March, which however is incomplete:

BOUNTIES.

	Bounties. paid during 1910.	1910-11 to 31st Mar. (Incomplete.)
Pig iron	$573,999	$261,434
Steel	695,722	350,456
Manufactures of steel	538,812	468,461
Lead	340,542	138,913
Manila fibre	61,507	37,288
Crude petroleum	203,589	147,814
Total	$2,414,171	$1,404,366

In the case of the bounties on pig iron, steel and puddled bars, the bounties expired on the 31st December. There is an exception to that, however, in the case of iron produced from Canadian ore by the process of electric smelting. It was provided when the last extension of bounties occurred, that as respects that particular form of industry the bounty should be extended to the 31st of December, 1912. So far as I am aware, however, no operations have been carried on under that provision. The bounty on rolled round wire rods which has been carried on expires on the 1st July, 1911. The provisions of the present statute giving a bounty of 75 cents per 100 pounds on lead contained in lead-bearing ores mined in Canada were extended to the 30th June, 1913, the amount of the bounty being limited to $500,000 in each calendar year. That bounty, therefore, has some time to run. There is a bounty of three-eighths of a cent per pound on manila fibre used in the manufacture of binder twine, due to a discrimination by the United States in the Philippine Islands by which the manufacturers of manila fibre in Canada were obliged to pay a duty which their American competitors were not obliged to pay. That bounty is not limited as to date. There is also a bounty of 1¼ cents per gallon on crude petroleum which was established on the revision of the petroleum duties some years ago, and there is no limitation as to date. Since the inception of the bounty system in 1884 to the 31st March last the total sum paid in bounties has amounted to $21,031,700, as follows:

TOTAL BOUNTIES PAID—1884 to 1911.

Pig iron	$7,707,648
Puddled iron bars	113,674
Steel	6,706,990
Manufactures of steel—
Wire rods	2,541,711
Angle beams, &c.	101,264
Lead	1,610,733
Manila fibre	243,254
Crude petroleum	1,911,075
Beet root sugar	93,284
Law costs	2,067
Total	$21,031,700

I do not desire to present any elaborate system of statistics at the present time, yet, I think it would be well that I should, in a few striking figures, indicate the great progress which we are still able to note in the trade and financial affairs of Canada. I propose to give you figures briefly only for three periods—1900, 1905, 1910—so that we may at a glance see something of the great progress which has been made. I, therefore, beg to present the following statement:

TOTAL TRADE OF CANADA.

Year.	Total Imports into Canada.	Total Exports from Canada.	Total Trade.
1900	189,622,513	191,894,723	381,517,236
1905	266,834,417	203,316,872	470,151,289
1910	418,730,764	309,682,431	728,413,195

Mr. FOSTER. Does that statement include coin and bullion?

Mr. FIELDING. The statement of the total imports includes everything. I propose to present a few figures now with regard to trade with Great Britain and these will not include coin and bullion.

Mr. FOSTER. Merchandise only.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

TOTAL TRADE WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

Year.	Imports (Home Consumption, Coin and Bullion excluded).	Exports (Produce of Canada, Coin and Bullion excluded).	Total Trade with Great Britain (Imports Home Consumption and Exports produce of Canada, Coin and Bullion excluded).
1900	44,279,983	96,562,875	140,842,858
1905	60,342,704	97,114,867	157,457,571
1910	101,068,534	145,505,186	246,573,720

These figures of our trade with the world and our trade with Great Britain give us at a glance some idea of the tremendous expansion of our business. For the year 1910-11, to the 28th February, an incomplete return representing only eleven month, our total trade was $687,376,352. For the corresponding period of the previous year it was $610,577,981, showing, on a statement for eleven months, an increase of $76,798,000. So, it will be seen that the figures which I have given for the periods 1900, 1905 and 1910, may still be reasonably applied to the trade currents of the year; we have every evidence that they are still increasing.

For the year 1911-12, upon which we have just entered, one can only speak generally. It is impossible to make estimates with any degree of accuracy and in all my experience in budget speeches I have though it better to be general in this respect. Let me say, however, that we have no reason to fear that this year will not be in every respect a satisfactory one. The estimates now before the House call for a liberal expenditure and we shall still have supplementary estimates to come which no doubt will add materially to the bill of fare. But, we have every reason to believe that the revenue will be abundant and that we will find it sufficient to meet all our ordinary expenditures and also a share of the expenditures of a capital and special character.

We know that in a country which is so largely agricultural as Canada very much depends upon the condition of the crops, and no man can at this date foreshadow what that condition may be, but we have no reason to doubt that the blessings of Providence in respect to generous crops will be extended to us in this year as in the past. We think that the outlook in every respect is one that should give us much hope. Desirable immigrants are coming in. I emphasize the word 'desirable.' We have surely reached that stage in our affairs now when it is quality rather than quantity that we want in regard to immigration, and we have good reason to believe that the Department of the Interior is using every legitimate effort to see that the immigrants who are coming into the country are of the best class. We are getting capital in abundance. Population and capital are the two things that a new and growing country need, and the country has every reason to be satisfied with its condition in this respect. With every prospect for business activity, with every ground for hoping for good crops, with trade and commerce flourishing, with the outlook so good generally, we have every reason to look with confidence to the future. There are those who will say: That being the case, let well enough alone.

Some hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FIELDING. I say that is not a sound motto for any country in this progressive age. The business man never accepts the motto to let well enough alone. In the time of his greatest activity and his greatest prosperity he is looking for opportunities to open up new fields of business, and as it is with the individual so it should be with the nation. 'Let well enough alone' has never been the motto of the Dominion of Canada. In all times past, when we have had a prosperous condition of affairs, when my predecessors in office were able to make statements perhaps hardly so rosy as that which it is my pleasure to make to-day, but nevertheless hopeful and encouraging statements, they were not content to let well enough alone, and why should they preach that doctrine to us to-day? If we are to adopt that policy let us cease building railways, abolish our subsidies to steamship lines and cease to send trade agents to foreign countries. We are seeking new markets everywhere; our steamships run to all countries, many of them heavily subsidized; we are sending our trade agents over the civilized world; we are doing everything that is inconsistent with the policy of 'let well enough alone' because when things are going favourably that is not a reason for doing nothing, it is rather a reason for being alert to avail ourselves of other opportunities. We need new markets in all directions. We need them for the surplus products of Canada as it is to-day, and we shall need them in even greater degree for the vaster surplus of Canadian products to come to us from the great west in the near future. For these reasons we have endeavoured to enlarge our markets in all directions and it did not seem to be wise, while we were sending agents to Africa and China and the distant parts of the world, to close our eyes to the opportunities lying much nearer home. Into that I do not wish to enter to-day.

Every prospect for Canada to-day is bright and hopeful. With peace and progress and prosperity at home, with the friendliest relations with the great republic lying alongside of us, with the warmest attachment to the great empire of which we are so proud to form a part, the Canadian people can look forward to the future with every hope and every confidence.

Hon. G. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Speaker, we have listened with interest to the remarks made by the Finance Minister in presenting briefly the salient points of the financial year preceding the one that has just ended and also the one which ended on the 31st of March last. I hope my hon. friend will not make a precedent of his action of last year. It is now some fifteen months or thereabouts since this House and the country has had an exposition of its financial position from the Minister of Finance in the Dominion parliament. That is a step which I should be sorry to see made a precedent. The Minister of Finance came to an indulgent House and a warm hearted opposition and asked for $46,000,000 or $47,000,000 of supply for the next year, that is our current year, before he had deigned to make an exposition to the House of the financial stewardship he had undertaken for the past year. That is not a precedent which I think ought to be established and I leave it with that expression of opinion in which I feel sure the whole House will agree. The Minister of Finance may not find so willing an opposition at another time, and it would become a question, and should become a question with an opposition as to whether it should encourage such slovenliness on the part of a Finance Minister and a government.

With the story that the Finance Minister has told of increasing revenues and increasing expenditures, pari passu with increasing revenues, with larger foreign trade in both volume and value, and with general prospects in the country indicating continued prosperity and development, no one on this side of the House and no one in the country sympathizes with any feeling of less pleasure than the Minister of Finance himself has had in detailing it to the House. We on this side of the House and the citizens of Canada generally, are glad that Canada has a large measure of prosperity. We hope it may never be the fate of any succeeding Finance Minister to have to give other than a favourable story of the year's progress in Canada to a parliament that is waiting for his words.

Whilst we rejoice in that and are glad we are careful not to become idolators and bow down and worship these men as though they were gods and the authors of all this prosperity. We find the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues before us and we consider them no more than plain ordinary citizens like ourselves. We do not know that they have any special connecting wires with an all-wise and bountiful Providence by which they establish communications and, acquire information enabling them to take steps which shall be especially beneficial to themselves while they are in office. We do not look at them in that way, we look at them, in the prayer-meeting phraseology, as poor fallible creatures like ourselves with a fair amount of wisdom and experience. very, very liable to make mistakes, very, very liable to yield to temptation and very, very prone to blunder into situations thinking they are stepping almost into the Promised Land, situations from which, when they have once plunged into them, they with tears, and in sackcloth and ashes pray for some means of deliverance. In some such hole as that my right hon. friend and his colleagues, through the ministers who sit one on each side of him, have the extreme felicity of finding themselves on this very date.

The story of 1910 has been told us in the blue-books and the minister, of course, has not attempted to throw any light upon that; that is a reading out of the pages that have been before us all. It may, however, not be unwise to make a comment here and there, to stick a pin in occasionally at this passage and the other, not so as to destroy the feeling of content at the story of 1910 but, by way of admonition, if possible to point a moral and adorn a tale which shall be beneficial in succeeding years to those who may be conducting the affairs of this country. Old history is still old history and I do not propose to go far back in connection with that except just to remind my hon. friend how exceedingly juvenile he was or how exceedingly inexperienced he was, or how exceedingly unveracious he was when, in 1896 and thereabouts, he promised to govern this country with some millions less of yearly taxation than it had been governed with by his opponents at that time in the government, to recall to his mind how he was going to marshall his army of good, pure, Grit free-traders and march upon this great citadel of Ottawa, where were entrenched the men who would dare to propose $40,000,000 as the yearly expenditure of this Dominion of Canada, who were draining from the pockets of the poor people of this country at that time some $27,700,000 of taxation per year.

Just to remind my right hon. friend that it is not safe always to attempt to forecast the future or to use against your opponents a weapon which comes back in future years upon yourself, I have to say that the gentlemen who were going to rule this country by taking from the people taxation of less than $27,000,000 annually, come down to-day, and, with clapping hands and shouts of approval hear the Finance Minister tell us that next year he is going to take $89,355,128 out of the people of this country as taxes. We were sinners beyond redemption when we proposed to take $27,700,000; these are saints beyond praise when they propose to take $89,355,000. So things have changed. There is an increase of taxation amounting to about 195 per cent as between the year 1896 and the year 1910-11. Then, the total revenue of the country in 1896 was in the neighbourhood of $36,600,000. We were vehemently denounced because we raised so much money from the people of the country. The revenue this last year has been $101,503,000, and next year my hon. friend is looking for about $117,500,000. So that in the matter of taxation and in the matter of revenue, including taxation, there have been vast strides forward in this country. Not only have our railways to a certain extent increased, not only has our trade increased, and it is well and pleasant to dwell upon these features, but we must remember that our taxation also has increased; and I absolutely dissent from the statement of the Minister of Finance that neither the burden nor the rate of taxation relatively has been raised in this country. The burden of taxation has been raised relatively, and the incidence of taxation, that is, the real rate that the people pay on the goods that come into this country, is higher to-day than it was in 1896, as I will endeavour to prove before I get through with my remarks. The Minister of Finance was wonderfully prolix in showing how small a thing the debt of the country was, distributed amongst the 7,500,000 people of Canada—that it amounted to only about $44 per head, and that the interest necessary to carry that amount of debt was for each one a bagatelle. I noticed, however, that he did not dwell so much on the figures of population relative to expenditure and taxation. Mr. Speaker, if hon. gentlemen opposite, in the taxes they took from the country, the amount of which has enabled them to keep the debt from increasing as much as it otherwise would, had maintained them during the term of their administration at the point at which they stood in 1896, as they promised to do—in fact, they promised that they would lower them—they could not have told the story which they told to-day of the comparatively small increase of the national debt, although it is $100,000,000 greater; they could not have told the story they have told to-day as to the expenditures and the improvements they have made. It will strike the people of this country a little forcibly when I tell you that these hon. gentlemen, since they came into the administration of affairs, have taken in taxes from the pockets of the people $280,000,000 more than they would have taken in the same time if they had raised each year only the amount that we raised in 1896, and which they condemned. It will also strike the people of the country, and may be some members of this House, that if hon. gentlemen opposite had expended simply $41,702,000 per year, which we expended in 1896, and which they declared was too large, they would not have been able to tell the story that they have told to-day. In the time that they have been in office they have spent over and above what they would have spent, at the rate of $41,700,000 a year, the immense sum of $472,000,000. That is another aspect of the matter. They have increased the expenditures, over and above what they would have been on the normal rate of 1896, by $427,000,000, and they have increased the taxation, over and above the normal rate of that year, by $280,000,000. That is the reason why our debt is not $100,000,000 larger than it is. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance is coming back to saner methods. After a long while of obstinate persistency, he has consented to put the bounties into the consolidated fund expenditure, where we always kept them, and out of which he never should have taken them. At long last, he proposes now to do the right thing, though he has not indicated any repentance for his sins of all these years in the past. He is going to put some other expenditures into the consolidated revenue fund.

Why is he enabled to do it? Because he is taking more out of the pockets of the people; that is what makes it easy for him to do it. He talks about capital expenditure, but much of that is a matter of principle, and some of it a matter of practice. When Canada had a population of 3,000,000 with a country just as large as to-day, and with no facilities for transport and development, it would have been arrant madness to have asked these people, in any single year or series of years, to put their hands down into their pockets and equip this country out of their yearly taxes. That would have been neither reasonable nor just. That deep laid widely extended mechanism of development, then started, was not merely for the men of that generation, but was intended to develop Canada for all generations to come and it was only reasonable that the generations to come should bear a portion of the burden. But when we have a large surplus and determine not to return any of it to the people in the way of lessened taxation, it is comparatively easy not to borrow but to pay for things which, in former stages of our development, could only have been met out of borrowings on capital but which now can be met out of ordinary revenue. That the debt of Canada should be $336,000,000 is something which bears heavily on the country. But our present taxation taking from $70,000,000 to $90,000,000 each year from the people, is a far heavier burden for which there ought to be good reasons or else a portion of it ought to be remitted.

I want to take up for a moment just one or two points regarding the surplus. The Finance Minister says that from this time on he is going to pay for Dominion land expenses out of revenue. In looking over his accounts I find that he gets a portion of that surplus of $22,000,000 by charging bounties of $2,414,000 to capital or special account as he calls it. But he did something else last year. In 1908 my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) told the country he was going to provide for the building of the Hudson Bay railway by the sale of Dominion lands and brought down a measure to that effect—not by leasing these lands, not by renting them, by which he might get a revenue, but by selling them and thereby raising a capital fund for the building of this railway. But what do I find? From 1908 up to the present, whilst millions of acres of land have been sold and millions of dollars paid by the purchasers, every dollar of that capital has been put into revenue so as to swell the surplus. Can the hon. minister find anything in economics which would justify a man in selling his capital and treating the proceeds as current revenue for the year? It is just as if a man had two large mills out of which he made a profit every year. One of these mills he sells at $50,000. Would any rule of business justify him in adding that $50,000 to the revenue account of the current year? What dividends could be paid and what terrible confusion could be created if business were carried on in that way. Yet we have a sample of it in the present administration. In the surplus of last year, there is over $1,600,000, the proceeds of the sale of lands, the year before that the same amount, and this year probably two or three million dollars more. All these capital sums got from the sale of Canada's possessions are treated as revenue, while at the same time the cost of administering those lands is charged to capital. Now I hope to see the Minister of Finance go a step further and bring forth works meek for repentance by putting the sales of that land into a fund out of which the Hudson Bay railway shall be built, and treating it as capital and not as revenue. What has the Finance Minister to say in defence of conduct of this kind? With his authorization, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) declared that the Hudson Bay railway was to be built at an estimated cost of some $25,000,000, and to be paid for out of the proceeds from the sales of Dominion lands. And the whole country applauded and none more than hon. gentlemen on that side. The Minister of the Interior got his Bill through, and has been selling these lands, and to-day there is not one cent left of all the money he got from these sales. It all went into current account, and was spent on different services in the country. I leave the Minister of the Interior and his colleagues to settle that matter among themselves. But I ask whether it is an honest method of conducting business. You get parliamentary authority to sell our lands in sufficient quantities to net some $25,000,000 under pledge that the proceeds shall be used to build the railway, and then you put all that money into current account and spend it on dredging and every other kind of current services. When we come to pay the bills for the Hudson Bay railway we must go to the money markets of the world and borrow it. It is simply a brazen breach of faith.

The Finance Minister was rather troubled about that surplus. He thought that $30,000,000 of surplus was so large that the taxpayers might make a demand for the lessening of their taxes, especially that large portion of them who were brought up under the teachings of the Finance Minister himself. All the time the Finance Minister was going about and telling the people what was right to do, he was a sturdy opponent of surpluses. And so was Hon. David Mills, so was Sir Richard Cartwright, so was the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) himself and all the members of his cabinet. The moment you get a surplus that amounts to anything, these teachers told us, it is warrant positive that you ought to reduce taxation and give relief to the taxpayer. To-day my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) has a different doctrine, but, then, what is there in this wide world of business and politics in Canada on which he has not a different doctrine from that which he had twenty years ago. Why, he has even changed his faith in the national point of view. That is, I suppose he has. I heard him say but a little while ago that he was overjoyed at the stability and prospective permanence of this Dominion, this great confederation. I must believe him. And yet I could not but remember that it was not many years ago that he led a determined campaign to break up this Dominion, to smash confederation into atoms. Not content with attempting to take his own province of Nova Scotia out, he tried to inveigle Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick into the same evil path, and was quite angry when he could not succeed. However, he vowed: Let them go, let them sacrifice to their idols, let them walk in their own paths; but as for me, I will take Nova Scotia out, come what may. Is it that my hon. friend, as he grows older, grows wiser. Or would he yet say, if I asked the question: I still believe Nova Scotia would have been better off if she had been taken out of the union? But after all, has he changed his view? After all, is not the policy he has to-day before this House the same in essence as that which he advocated in 1886? I read, not three months ago, in the Halifax 'Chronicle,' which, I suppose, gives the views of my hon. friend now as it did in those times, the old geographical argument. You cannot fight against geography runs this argument; why not let British Columbia deal with the States to the south of her?—why not let the northwest deal with the adjacent States and the maritime provinces deal with the New England States? That was the argument before confederation. That was the argument in reference to Nova Scotia in 1886, if my hon. friend had been strong enough or straightforward enough to carry out the policy he declared he was convinced was the proper policy for Nova Scotia. So, it is possible that to-day, by another and devious way he is operating to bring about the same condition for all sections of this Dominion that he tried to bring about in 1886 for his own province, and for all the maritime provinces if he could have persuaded them to join with him?

Now, as to the surplus, I quote my hon. friend, not his very words, but the sense. He said: If this surplus of $30,000,000 had been got by burdensome taxation, or by virtual increase in the rate of taxation, then, possibly, we should have no right to continue it; but the rates and taxes are lower to-day than they have been in the past. Now, we have discussed that question from my standpoint in this House, and other hon. members have discussed it. I have here a return which was prepared by the government, and which gives the quantity, value and duty, the average duty rate and the average unit price in 1896 and 1910.

Of articles imported into this country which are subject to ad valorem duties, a comparison of the list shows that of the 156 articles mentioned therein, on 29 the rate paid in 1910 was higher than that paid in 1896, on 34 it was practically the same, on 11 the reduction in 1910 upon the rates of 1896 was less than 1 per cent, on 11 others not more than 2 per cent, on 15 others from 2 to 3 per cent, and on 22 from 3 to 5 per cent, with the remaining items running below a 5 per cent reduction. This shows, on the whole, a very trifling dimunition of the ad valorem rates of 1896.

When, however, we compare the average rate on dutiable imports in 1910 and 1896 which stood at 26·71 per cent and 29·79 per cent respectively, and remember that the prices of goods have advanced on an average thirty or forty per cent between the two periods, it is apparent that even this small reduction of three per cent in rate is far more than counterbalanced by the enhanced price of the articles on which the rate is enacted. The hard fact stares us in the face also that the estimated taxation for the year 1910-11 is $89,350,000 as against $27,700,000 in 1896, or $11.50 per head of the population in 1910 compared with $5.40 per head in 1896.

With these facts and figures in mind there need be little doubt as to the rate and burden of taxation under the present government as contrasted with its predecessor.

I now desire to spend a little time over the matter of trade. The general figures for our trade are very satisfactory. They are, however, the figures of the foreign trade only, and I would like to suggest to the Minister of Finance whether it is not possible and exceedingly desirable that a Finance Minister shall be in a position to tell us something each year of the conditions and progress of the interprovincial trade in this Dominion.

I am not prepared to say what is the proportion that foreign trade bears to inter-provincial trade in Canada, but I am quite certain that it is many times greater than the foreign trade. It is the life-blood which circulates constantly from one limb of this country to the other, forcing itself through all parts of the body and giving it vitality and growth. It is the trade which, in almost its entirety, is the result of two productions, each one of them productions in Canada. For instance, your British Columbia fruit grower raises his fruit in Canada, sends it to the producers of meats, or cattle, or grains, in the prairie provinces. The prairie provinces raise their cattle, their meats and their grains and send them in exchange to the province of British Columbia for the fruit which they have raised—two productions, both in Canada, one in British Columbia and the other in the Northwest. The interchange between them makes the trade, all the profits and all the advantages remain in the country itself, and, more than that we have the population, the labour, the home building, and the absolutely essential accumulation of wealth in the country itself. That is why I think that a Minister of Finance who does not try to give, even if it be an inadequate, yet a somewhat approximate idea of the immense stream of interprovincial trade and commerce which is going on between east and west, north and south in our Dominion, fails to give the country an adequate idea of what it is doing. Trade between a country outside of Canada and Canada itself necessitates one production and one set of profits absolutely outside of this country. The other production and the other set of profits that belong to it are all that remain in this country. Whatever tends to encourage the volume of production of what the different provinces need in the different sections and parts of this country and which leads to the interchange between the different parts of the country of these products, is for the upbuilding of the county. Whatever tends to discourage it is not for the upbuilding of the country but has the contrary effect. Nobody is foolish enough to argue that the time ever can come or should come when there will be no foreign trade. Have all the development possible of interprovincial production and trade and you will have an increasing quantity of foreign trade. All the same, it is the duty of every country to strive to make the most possible of production, and interchange within the limits of the country itself, and as far as possible to relatively lessen the interchange with foreign countries. The first thing then which we note in scanning the trade figures that we have is an entire lack of anything which will give us any idea of this internal production and trade which are so important. The figures of foreign trade are magnified and looked upon as the chief if not the sole indices of progress and advancement. Again

Mr. FOSTER.

I notice with reference to these figures of foreign trade that the balance of trade against this country in its last year's operations is $90,567,876. That is taking home products and home consumption alone into account. It would be better for us if instead of this being an adverse balance of trade, it were a favourable balance of trade. Argue as you please as to what off-sets that adverse balance of trade in the way of unseen imports and exports let that be what it may; it is yet fair to say that so far as possible we ought to strive to reduce the adverse balance of trade against this country. The only way we can reduce it is by exporting more and making more in the country itself. The first criticism upon that state of things, namely, the large increase in our imports as compared with our exports, leads one to ask why the policy of the country should not bring it about that more should be made in this country by the people of the country out of the resources of the country, and consequently less imported from abroad, with the result that more would be had to export abroad and the present adverse balance of trade would be reduced. Smile as much as we like, or look as wise as we like, and we often do both to conceal our lack of knowledge, we cannot get away from the fact that as far as possible the trade policy of a country should aim at stimulating the productions in that country itself out of its own raw material or out of raw material imported from abroad, employing its people, building up its homes and adding to the wealth of the country. Whatever we can make in that way in Canada with Canadian labour and with Canadian capital we ought to aim at doing, and so import relatively less and so have less of an adverse balance. I find in connection with the United Kingdom that our favourable balance of trade is $44,146,518. That looks good, but it is not as good as it ought to be. When we come to the United States of America, what do we find? We find that last year we imported from the United States $217,500,000 worth, that we sold to them $104,000,000 worth in round figures, and that there was an adverse balance against us of $113,000,000 odd. In our commerce with France we have an adverse balance of $7,500,000, with Germany an adverse balance of $5,869,000, and that with all foreign countries we have an adverse balance. We add all these up and after subtracting from the result the favourable balance of our trade with the United Kingdom, it leaves us, as I said, $90,000,000 to the bad, as the adverse balance in our world trade.

Well, the sooner we can remedy that, and the more we can remedy it the better. There are some rather striking things in connection with it, and I want to speak of them just here. It is a striking thing that with reference to certain food products of this country, Canada is getting very closely to the point where she finds it difficult to supply her own people, and she is fast leaving the point of large exports to foreign countries and especially to Great Britain. It rather stunned me when I made a calculation of the figures this morning. Take these exports. Of eggs in 1900 we exported $1,450,000 worth. In 1910 we exported only $41,766 worth.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. But the highest record year was in 1902 when we exported $1,733,242 worth.

The comparison in these products is shown, in round numbers, in the following table:

Article.	Exports.
	1900.	1910.	Record Year.
Eggs	$1,450,000	$ 41,766	(1092)	$1,733,242
Butter	5,000,000	1,000,000	(1906)	7,000,000
Cheese	19,800,000	21,607,000	(1903)	24,712,000
Meats, bacon and hams	12,700,000	6,800,000	(1903)	16,000,000
Beef and mutton	223,000	117,000	(1901)	819,000
Canned meats	309,000	193,000	(1905)	3,500,000
Pork	45,009	48,780	(1904)	446,507
Total of provisions	40,000,000	30,000,000	(1903)	54,000,000
Live animals	12,000,000	12,000,000	.....	.....
Total of animals and their products	56,000,000	53,000,000	(1903)	69,000,000

From this table the House will see that there is a very great falling off in our exports. A ready answer to that, but not a satisfactory one, would be that we are consuming more of these ourselves, but is it a fact that we are satisfied not to have our exports in these lines increase pari passu with our general progress in the export trade? There seems to be something the matter with reference to these products, and in some way or other there is not that stimulus, there is not that production of these which in an eminently agricultural country like Canada there ought to be. We ought to keep pace with the home consumption needs of this country, and at the same time increase our exports. The facts are that we are decreasing our exports almost to the vanishing point, and if the present tendency continues the time will rapidly come when we will have to import these articles. Yet some gentlemen talk about the great necessity for opening and extending markets for these very same commodities.

The only thing that saves us in the agricultural line is the exportation of grains and their products. The total export of agricultural products in 1900 was $27,000,000, and in 1910 $90,000,000. That is satisfactory. The exports of grain in 1900 were $18,000,000 and in 1910 $56,000,000. That you say is satisfactory. Wheat flour shows $2,700,000 in 1900 running up to $14,800,000 in 1910. That is eminently satisfactory because wheat flour is not only an agricultural product but it is a raw product turned into a partly manufactured article, and we have all the advantages that accrue from the doing of that work in this country.

The total exports of grain products increase from $3,000,000 in 1900 to $16,000,000 in 1910. Now, although that is satisfactory in one respect yet when you come to think of the area of new lands that we are adding each year to the cultivable area, thus producing the larger quantity for that export, a certain amount of that satisfaction is taken away. It would be strange indeed if, when we were bringing millions of acres of new lands out of the rough into the producing condition, we should not largely increase our exports.

But when we go back to the old and stable and settled agricultural products and find our exports dwindling and our home consumption calling for almost everything we produce, the condition is not so satisfactory.

Another unsatisfactory situation has developed to-day, not by the fault of Canada, but by the fault of this government itself, that is the disturbance and unsettlement of trade conditions in this country. The Finance Minister sang us a song to the refrain 'Let well enough alone,' and his view of letting well enough alone was to tear up all our railways, do away with our steamship lines and stop all our mechanism of development and transport. That, he said, would be letting well enough alone. I think that would be tearing well enough all to pieces. Does he mean to say that is a fair way to meet our argument? Here we are with an immense production and an immense mechanism of transport and distribution going on swimmingly. Some one says that is an unexampled progress, let well enough alone. Oh, the minister says, if you mean to adopt that principle of letting well enough alone, you must go to work and tear up your railway tracks and take off your steamship lines and destroy all the mechanism of production and transport. Not at all. We admit the principle that progress must always be our motto, that there must be a constant impulse forward. But rashness may imperil the present situation of progress and development, and you cannot excuse that rashness by singing a parody upon the refrain 'Let well enough alone,' with the interpretation given to-day by the Minister of Finance.

As I listened to the opening words of the Minister of Finance, that every thing in Canada was prosperous, giving the prospect of permanency and great development, and as he went on with his story, it impressed itself more and more upon my mind as to why, in that condition of things, where there was no doubt, no contingency, and no risk, the whole frame work and service of our business and trade should be disturbed, dislocated, unsettled, by a rash jump into a new venture the outcome of which the Finance Minister himself is absolutely unable to see. There is unsettlement, there is no doubt about it. I want to ask the Finance Minister one question, the answer to which is historical and a proof of the value of stable settlement. When was it that this Dominion of Canada, as to its constituent parts, began to make real and settled progress? It was when the people made up their minds to join together and make one country. Up to that time the provinces did not know what their future was to be, and there was the searching after something from the country to the south of us, every province diverse, no union. When out of that period of doubt and uncertainty we made up our minds to join our fortunes, to adopt the national idea, that settled all uncertainty for ever, and we commenced to make real progress. When in 1878 we undertook to establish the principle of protection and the National Policy so-called, it was a step in the direction which wise men thought was necessary, and which the event proved was salutary; but when we established the principle in 1879 in our first tariff, matters were not settled, because nearly one-half of the people of this country and a great political party were fighting against it, sworn to defeat it. We are told that progress was not very great at first. How could it be, with nearly half the people fighting for the destruction of that policy, and capital, which is always sensitive, not knowing what the outcome was to be? Election after election was fought on that. Gradually greater confidence arose, but up to 1896 nobody knew for certain what the settled tariff policy of this country would be on a change of government. 1896 came, followed by 1897 and 1898. Then it was settled that the policy of this country, not the policy of a party, was protection, a fair and adequate protection. Then things went ahead. They could not go ahead to the same extent before that. Then great progress took place—why? Because the principle was settled, and settled as we supposed forever; and everybody said, now we can set full sail and dare the ocean, for the old threatened storm of opposition to our trade policy has passed away. There was another instance. The time was in this country when it was a struggle between parties as to our transport system. The Liberal-Conservative party wanted to build railways; the Liberal party opposed it. The Liberal-Conservative party wanted to give subsidies to steamship lines; the Liberal party opposed it. The Liberal-Conservative party wanted to build and widen the canals; the Liberal party criticised it. And, Sir, until these gentlemen came into power there was that war between the factions of this country on the policy of transport development. They came into power, sobered when they assumed the responsibilities, made wise when they got down to the people and found out what they really wanted in a practical way; and these gentlemen became the sponsors for an advanced transport system east and west, even more liberal than that which the Liberal-Conservative party had favoured before. Then things went ahead. The country said: that settles it; here is a nation united, with a fair protection, with an east and west transport system to our own sea-board; with all these things settled, why should not the country go ahead? Now, what has happened? Every one of these policies is unsettled. No man can look out into the future and say how any of them is to be decided. One party in this country, I believe the strong majority, says: put through this newfangled policy, and you will break up the confederation into its original elements as far as trade and commerce and intercommunication are concerned; you will break up more than that. This policy is the first half of what is intended to break up what we supposed was the settled policy of this country as to adequate protection for the industries of this country. You have knocked off half of it; and thousands of men who are to-day supporting the party opposite are howling for the destruction of the other half. And on the other side of the line is an administration which is forcing on this Dominion as fast as they can force it free trade in all products. The transport system, which ran east and west, is now proposed to be tapped by north and south lines. So that you have everything to-day in a state of unsettlement and disturbance from the confederation and unity and integrity of this country down through the protective and the transport systems of the country. That is what these gentlemen have done, and I tell you that the sooner we get to the people of this country, and the sooner we settle this thing, the sooner we shall get into such stable conditions as will enable Canada to go ahead and leave even her past progress in the shade in the future great progress which shall come to her. This pact has unsettled not only the trade in our country, not only the trade as between us and the United States, but the trade as between us and Great Britain. It has unsettled what we supposed were the well-ascertained relations existing between us and the empire as a whole.

In the matter of trade it has thrown an apple of discord into the whole British Empire, that is undoubted. The Finance Minister pledged himself to the British ambassador that he was not going to impair the British preference. But he has impaired it, and he knows he has; and what is more, the British people know now that he has. He knows that the cable which he sent over will not, in the face of the facts as they are coming out from day to day, prove to the British people that he has not disturbed the imperial preference. It is not fair trade that he proposes even. Do you mean to tell our farmers that when New Zealand, Australia, France, Denmark, Austria-Hungry and Switzerland and Argentina can send their butter, cheese, and natural products into our market free of duty, whereas our products are not allowed to go into these markets on the same terms—do you mean to tell our farmers that that is fair trade? It is not; it is unfair trade. They have impaired the imperial preference in many respects. Just look at the absurdity of it. This government is treating with Australia to have a preferential system of trade between the two, and then is throwing open to Australia and to the world our Canadian market and thus giving away the very thing on which we relied to make a preferential arrangement. The point I wish to make is that despite all that Providence has done for us, despite all our great resources, despite the enterprise exhibited by our people, despite all the progress we have made and are now making, the government comes forward at this inopportune time with a proposition which imports disturbance and discord into our whole national trade situation.

Now, I have just a few concluding remarks to make of a general character. I do not know that they will be accepted, but I intend to make them. I make them because I have given some study to public affairs for the last 25 or 30 years, and there are some things which I think the Finance Minister and the government at this time ought to at least set about doing. It is one thing to frame your tariff schedules and gather in your taxes from year to year. It is quite as important to expend these revenues honestly, economically and on intelligent principles. I do not see any greater field for useful work than this, and I do not see any greater object which a government ought to have at heart than to accomplish this in some sort of business and common sense way. We must recollect that conditions are very different from what they were. When we were a small country with a small revenue and a small expenditure, each minister himself had a greater check on the work of his department than he has to-day. The government had a greater check, and so had parliament; but when these operations are multiplied a hundredfold, my view is that these checks are to-day absolutely inadequate and that something more ought to be supplied. What check have the ministers over an expenditure of some $100,000,000 extending all over this country, and on most diversified objects? Under present conditions they are almost entirely at the mercy of others. They cannot give this expenditure the personal supervision which they could an expenditure of a fairly moderate amount, either in its planning, or its carrying out. That applies to the different great departments of this government, and to the minister of each of these departments. With the outside work he has to do, with the cabinet work which takes up his time, no minister can have that check which ought to be had over the administration of his own department in the way of expenditure. But you will say the cabinet checks the minister. That used to be the case when we had a smaller expenditure, and when practically every item came before the cabinet and was explained, and passed upon by the cabinet. But to-day that would be absolutely impossible. It is not attempted to be done except in some very special instances, and the result is that the supervision and check of the cabinet over departmental expenditure has largely passed away. Is not that true? I appeal to the Finance Minister himself. But you may say that ultimately the House of Commons will be a check. Yes, it used to be, but it is not any longer to any considerable extent. When I first came to this House, the items in supply were criticised by men on the government benches as well as in the opposition. But to-day once the estimates are on the table, tell me, have you ever seen a government member attempt anything at all in the way of criticism of any of these estimates. Why, they are not even in the House when the estimates go through. The minister who is putting through his estimates is left alone by his followers, and has the whole business to attend to by himself. And on the opposition side, whatever may be our energy and disposition to work, it is impossible, under present conditions, when $115,000,000 of estimates are turned loose on the House, without any information in the estimates themselves, it is absolutely impossible for the opposition to exercise any effective check. All they can do is to wheedle out from the minister in charge, who is anxious to give no more information than he is absolutely obliged to give, what details they can. Do you mean to tell me that that is an efficient check on expenditure?

Now, ought there not to be a check on expenditure? There ought to be. And where can it be found? Here you have, for instance, millions of dollars being spent every year for the construction of public buildings. And on what principle is this money spent? There is no proper principle on which it should be spent but one: build a public building because the public service needs it and cannot be properly carried on without it. Is there any other reason for providing a public building when it has to be paid for, not with the party's money, not with the government's money, but with the people's money of which the government are the trustees? There is no other reason, no other principle, no other foundation of action but that. And yet, that is not the principle that is followed. Day after day we go through the estimates here when public buildings are under consideration, when large expenditures are initiated and no public need can be shown for the buildings proposed. I do not wish to labour that point, but only indicate a remedy. It seems to me that what ought to be done is to have some system of co-ordination. There ought to be a board in some way established before which all large claims for public expenditures of that kind should go for investigation and impartial report. Not that that board should have power to decide; the duty of the board should be to gather the information and give it impartially from a business standpoint in the form of a printed report, and then the minister and the House could do what it pleased about it. In some way or other a co-ordinating board of that kind will have to be appointed if we wish to reduce this wasteful, unwarranted expense in public buildings.

In the matter of transport there is the same confusion of ideas, the same lack of plan, the same absence of continuity and system. Consequently, what is done in reference to our transport to-day is not necessarily a step onward in what is to be done the next day; we are not working out a perfect system of transport. On this question of transport you have the Minister of Public Works working, building harbours and dredging. You have the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Marine doing other portions of the work. And you will find the officers of these ministers working upon the same area and with regard to the same object but in entirely different ways. And so you have confusion, lack of system, lack of continuity. We have had commissions on transport and splendid reports from them, but we have not carried out the recommendations of the reports. Why? Because of this lack of co-ordination of which I have spoken. And I am sure the broad statement will be accepted in this House, and I think it will be accepted in the country, that a large portion of the money which is expended nominally for improving trade and transportation routes is actually a matter of patronage and is given to the member, or the county, or the district because it is thought that it will help the party. Now, what I would like to see is one of the best boards that ever was established in Canada, far higher in ability even than your Board of Railway Commissioners, where finance, trade, transport and the best scientific engineering skill shall all be represented. And before that high board all plans and propositions to aid in the development of transport and trade facilities should be brought for investigation and fair report, so that the ministry themselves and this parliament might have the information which otherwise they cannot get, and then make the final decision as to what should be done.

Besides that, I should like to have another board. I should like to have a tariff commission for this country. I think we need it: I think the events of the last six months or a year have shown that we need it. By a tariff commission I mean, not a commission that shall fix tariffs and make schedules of rates, not at all, but a tariff commission of undoubted ability which shall get at the foundation information with reference to prices and processes in this country, and in the other countries with which we compete. This board should find out the cost of raw material, the cost of working up the raw material, taking labour and everything else into account. It should take into account both the cost of production and the cost of distribution. It should learn the aids, the abnormal aids, which certain governments give to their manufacturing industries to enable them to compete unfairly with other countries. Appoint a commission of that kind and you would get a body of information upon which the government can form sound opinion, and by which they can be guided in bringing down proper tariffs, and you have also a basis of information which would enable this parliament to judge the same. You would have information which we sadly lack to-day. A man gets on a platform in the northwest and says: We are being bled to death by the makers of agricultural implements; it only costs so much to build them and we have to pay so much more; away with the manufacturer! We have another man who says: Hold on, my friend, there are differing conditions in this matter. Do you know the facts sufficiently well, do you differentiate between the different elements in the problem? The cost to the manufacturer may include more than you allow for and the cost to you covers more than the manufacturer's price. And so one man says that the cost is so much less and the other insists that it is so much more. The only way is to have an authoritative examination which shall be an answer to both. This examination must distinguish between the cost of manufacture, the cost of transport at different distances, the cost of distribution, and other expenses. Suppose I am a farmer in the Northwest, and I buy a reaper. I say: This reaper costs me too much; the manufacturer is bleeding me white, he has no right to exist. But do I know that it is the fault of the manufacturer entirely? What does the transport company charge for carrying from the place of manufacture to the place of distribution? And what does the distribution machinery cost to get the article comfortably into the hands of the consumer? Here are three things which should be differentiated, and each should be held responsible for its own share of the total cost. And without the information we are only combating one another with assertions and windy arguments, threats against the manufacturer that the duties shall be lowered because his charge is too high, and general assertions that the state of things is not as represented, but that the charge is fair and just, and cannot reasonably be lowered.

No farmer that is sane and sensible wants the industrial man to work for him for nothing; he is willing to give the industrial man a fair profit upon his capital and his work. What he quarrels with is the impression that he is giving him more than a fair profit. How it would settle things between us all if we had some authority of standing and repute and undoubted attainments who could tell us where we stand with regard to these matters. In order to get that we must have more than ministers. I know just as well as the Minister of Finance does what a complex thing this making of tariffs is. He travels around the country, just as I did in 1893, and we listen to manufacturers, and farmers and labouring men, and we think we are becoming awfully wise. We get long papers sent into us, and what does the Minister of Finance do with them? Well, he does with them the same as we did; there is a little hazy recollection as to the general view taken, but outside of that there is very little else. And when they come—just as the Minister of Finance, and the Minister of Customs did—to frame a tariff they do it by rule of thumb, or worse, and if they are honest enough they will say so. That is not the way a tariff should be framed, but that is the way a tariff will be framed until we have the body of information that is necessary to put us on a fair and scientific footing. That is why I favour a tariff commission. My friends opposite are very fond just now of admiring the United States; let them admire it a little in useful ways, and let them have a tariff board as the United States has. When they met you two gentlemen down in Washington they had the most elaborate tables of information that were ever got together by any government. When you went there you had nothing, absolutely nothing that was fit to cope with it, and you have not much more to this day. If you had it what right have you to keep it from parliament? We have asked you for it and demanded it, but you have not given it. You have looked wise and you were wise because you had not the goods to deliver, and you had not the goods in Washington, and so all you can do is look wise. But in that, our friendly opponents in Washington had the advantage of you, and that is an absolute proof of the necessity for a tariff board. Now, I have given you my views and there is more in them than at first appears, but at all events they are worth thinking over. The thing which it is almost impossible to keep in the mind of a practical legislator is that he is not dealing with his own money, or the party's money, but the people's money and that he ought not to make one single expenditure of the peoples' money that he would not as a trustee make for an estate which he had in his hands. That is a fair assumption. But, on both sides, we have been going on with the idea that the money we get into the public treasury is to be used for party advantage. What did the Minister of Railways boldly say the other night? He said: If I have advertising to give or supplies to buy, I will deal with a friend of the party. Reason that out, and put it into a general proposition, and it means that the money of this country is for the party and the government to do what it likes with: doing fairly well if possible by the country, but taking mighty good care always to help the party. I tell these gentlemen that this kind of expenditure will be the death of their government if they do not curb extravagance, and wastefulness, and expenditure made without warrant of any kind. In the matter of transport, you will get somewhere when you co-ordinate all your efforts in a uniform and systematic development of the trade routes of this country. Do you mean to tell me that anything like a Newmarket canal would ever have got a dollar of money from this parliament if it had to be reported upon by some such body as that to which I have referred; never in the world. Do you mean to say that the Port Colborne business would have gone on with an expenditure of now more than $2,000,000, and a practical admission by the Minister of Railways last year that it was not going to be of very much use anyway. Sir, there is from one end of this country to the other a steady malversation of the public funds, a using of them where they ought never to be used, and a sad lack of check on extravagant expenditure. I do not see any other way to remedy it than to call to our assistance the best and strongest men, put them upon the work, and say to them: That is your business; leave politics alone, never mind whether one man is hurt or another hurt, your duty is to make an absolutely exhaustive examination, to make an honest and fair report. Such information would give us something to go upon whether we be a minister, or a government, or a parliament. I had intended to say something about the still wider subject of the conservation of the resources of this country, and I would have treated it on the same lines.

Mr. PATERSON. Take it up after six o'clock.

Mr. FOSTER. Whether you call it a conservation commission or not, it should be composed of the very highest and most resourceful body of men we can get in this country, men who would sit up higher than partisanship, higher than sectionalism, and who would have under advisement and under their constant supervision all the great resources of this country: Our lands, our forest, our fisheries, our mines, and our running waters, and who would use every resource of science and every exertion of human endeavour to give us adequate tabulation of them, the best plan of administering them, the best methods of renovating and rejuvenating them. Thus would they help us to keep for this country, protected from waste and safe from exhaustion, these great natural resources, which, if they are fostered and cared for, will make us a great nation and for long centuries, but the dissipation of which will be one reason why this country cannot look forward to a strong and permanent and progressive future.

Mr. PATERSON. Are you coming back after dinner hour?

Mr. FOSTER. And now my hungry friend the Minister of Customs can go home and take his biscuits.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

STERLING TRUSTS CORPORATION.

Consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 32) to incorporate the Sterling Trusts Corporation.—Mr. Martin (Regina).

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). Mr. Speaker, this Bill has come back from the Senate with two or three minor amendments, but, I submit, they are not of such importance as would justify us in referring it back to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. Section 5 of the Bill, as it left this House, provided that the company shall not commence business until at least $200,000 of stock has been bona fide subscribed and $70,000 paid. The Senate inserted the word 'five,' making it $75,000 to be paid. I presume that was a simple clerical error to begin with. Section 11 of the Bill provided that:

> Moneys, properties and securities received or held by the company upon trust or as agent shall not be liable for the debts or obligations of the company.

The Senate cut out that clause entirely, I suppose, on the ground that that is the law in the event, and it is not necessary to enact it in the charter of the company. Section 15, referring to provincial laws, has been also cut out entirely by the Senate. Section 18 of the Bill as it passed this House, was as follows:

> The powers granted by this Act shall expire, and this Act shall cease to be in force, at the end of two years from the passing thereof, unless the company goes into actual operation within such two years.

The Senate has put in the words 'for all purposes except the winding up of the company.' I would ask that the Bill be considered now.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have no option in the matter if the amendment is other than clerical or unimportant. Otherwise the Bill must be referred back to the committee. It is for the House to decide.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think it had better be referred back. The amendment seemed to be more than merely clerical.

Mr. SPROULE. We do not have a copy of these amendments and we cannot exercise our judgment upon them.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). If I may be permitted to say a word again, to my mind there are nothing but really minor amendments made by the Senate.

Mr. SPROULE. The rule says:

> When any private Bill is returned from the Senate with amendments, the same not being merely verbal or unimportant, such amendments are, previous to the second reading, referred to the standing committee to which such Bill was originally referred.

If you cut out a lot of the Bill it is not an amendment that is merely verbal.

Mr. NESBITT. When my hon. friend (Mr. Martin, Regina) says that the amendments are unimportant, I presume that he means that they are unimportant to anybody except the company, and if the promoter and the company are willing to accept them it cannot make any difference to us.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the amendments to this Bill are very important.

Mr. SPEAKER. If there is any doubt about the matter I have to rule that the amendments are important, and the Bill will have to go back to the committee.

Motion agreed to, and Bill referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

IMPERIAL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 105) to incorporate the Imperial Steamship Company.—Mr. McKenzie.

Mr. BRODEUR. Will there be any objection to this Bill being referred to the Committee on Marine and Fisheries? It is a matter pertaining to marine.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not hardly think that is according to the rule. It lays down the class of Bills that goes to the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph lines, that which goes to the Banking and Commerce Committee and it provides that all other Bills shall go to the Private Bills Committee. This certainly is a private Bill other than a Bill affecting a railway, canal or banking corporation.

Mr. BRODEUR. I simply made the suggestion as it is a Bill affecting marine, and perhaps it would be better that it should be examined by that committee. Of course, I know very well what the rule says, but this reference is only for the consideration of the amendment.

Mr. SPROULE. We have never sent Bills to that committee; to do so would be doing something without authority and establishing a new principle. The clerk of the House draws my attention to the fact that the Bill must be sent back to the committee to which it was originally referred, which, in this case, would be the Private Bills Committee.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would think that rule 114 would require the Bill to go to the same committee that considered it before.

Motion agreed to, and Bill referred to Private Bills Committee.

PEOPLE'S RAILWAY COMPANY.

Consideration of an amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 110) respecting the People's Railway Company.—Mr. Nesbitt.

Mr. NESBITT moved that the amendment be considered now. He said: The amendment is not material.

Mr. FOSTER. What is it?

Mr. NESBITT. In clause 16 the amendment strikes out all the lines after the word 'company' in line 23.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me to be pretty important.

Mr. NESBITT. The first part of the clause says that they shall not interfere with any provision of any agreement with a municipality, and the latter part that they have struck out is simply saying that they shall confirm any such agreement. I think the Senate are quite right and that there is no necessity of confirming it when the first part of the clause says that they shall not interfere with it.

SUPPLY — AMERICAN WARSHIPS ON GREAT LAKES.

The hour for private Bills having expired the House resumed discussion of the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding, that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the motion is adopted I would like to bring to the attention of the Prime Minister the lack of information with regard to warships or training ships of the United States upon the Great Lakes. On March 30, 1908, the member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) asked a series of questions one of which concerned the tonnage, horse-power, armament and crew of the 'Nashville.' An answer was given to that. The same day the member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), made a motion for orders in council, papers, &c., from 1907 down to that date, and also for a statement of the numbers and armaments of ships then in commission by the United States upon the Great Lakes. This order was passed without discussion. The first part of this order was complied with but the last part of that order has never been complied with, no statement has ever been brought down although the order of the House passed three years ago.

On November 16, 1909, the member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington), asked for certain information. His question is to be found at page 103 of 'Hansard' for that year. The Prime Minister declined to furnish the information at that time alleging that diplomatic action was pending. On November 16, 1909, the member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards), asked for some further information on the same subject. He asked to what departments the United States had made application for the purpose of enabling their ships to pass into the Great Lakes. The Prime Minister stated that application had been made to either the Minister of Railways and Canals or to the Secretary of State.

On November 17, 1909, the member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards), moved first for the orders in council from 1897 to 1907 and secondly, for orders in council from 1907 to that date. The Prime Minister agreed to the first part of the motion but refused the second part. He said the matter was then the subject of diplomatic action. The motion as amended passed and as far as I have been able to ascertain that order of the House has never been complied with.

On December 1, 1909, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), moved for certain papers relating to this matter, and in the course of his remarks he went into some detail with regard to the training ships of the United States upon the Great Lakes. There seems to be no difficulty in getting at the information from unofficial sources, but great difficulty indeed in obtaining any information from the government in regard to this very important question. In the end, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), having moved for correspondence and all papers, the Prime Minister said that some correspondence could be brought down, but that there was some correspondence that could not be brought down. From that time up to the present I cannot find that that order has ever been complied with.

It seems to me that the House and the country are entitled to be informed as to the exact condition with regard to American warships or training ships on the Great Lakes. We are entitled to know and to know from official sources how far the treaty of 1817 has been departed from and for what reason. I mention this matter to-night in the hope that the government will see fit to have these orders of the House complied with at the earliest possible date and take the House and the country frankly into their confidence with respect to this matter, as to which it seems to me, there has been altogether too much secrecy in the past.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend will readily agree that upon a subject of this character it may be necessary to have a larger measure of secrecy than would be necessary in the case of matters of a different character. These questions, I need not tell my hon. friend, are of a delicate character, and it would not be always wise for the government to present to the House all the information they may possess. However, I quite agree that whatever information is properly available to the House should be brought down. I do not wish to express any opinion on the matter myself, but I shall at once call the attention of the Prime Minister to my hon. friend's remarks and I trust that whatever is available may be brought down at an early date.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If there is to be now and in the future a very considerable departure, not only from the spirit but from the letter of that treaty I think we ought frankly to understand it and consider what our own situation will be with respect to the maintenance of armed vessels upon the Great Lakes.

BOUNTIES ON STEEL WIRE, &c.

Mr. BOYCE. I would like the Minister of Finance to make some plain statement with regard to the renewal of the bounties on iron and steel wire, rods, &c. I listened with a great deal of interest to his utterance this afternoon upon that question. Rumour has it, and one cannot turn a deaf ear altogether to rumour, that the minister has under consideration the renewal of these bounties. I would ask him, as he did not make himself very plain upon that subject this afternoon, and did not even mention that he had under consideration the renewal of these bounties, if he would make a plain statement as to whether he is considering the renewal of the bounties on iron and steel and if so when he proposes to make a statement to the House upon that subject.

Mr. FIELDING. The bounties on a number of articles of iron and steel expired on the 31st of December last past. The bounties on iron rods will expire on the 1st of July ensuing. There is no intention on the part of the government of renewing them.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

SUPPLY.

Fisheries—salaries and disbursements of fishery inspectors, overseers and guardians, $227,500.

Mr. BRODEUR. The amount is the same as last year except a small increase of $7,500. This amount is provided for the purpose of paying the salaries and disbursements of fishery inspectors, overseers and guardians, and this additional amount of $7,500 is to provide for paying increases of salaries to some of those officers.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Will the hon. minister give a full explanation of the new appointments of fishery overseers that he has made in the province of Ontario, with their names, salaries and duties?

Mr. BRODEUR. I laid a report before the House the other day, giving the names of these men. The officers for Ontario are the following:

District No. 1.—Inspector A. G. Duncan, Sault Ste. Marie.

Nominee.	Headquarters.	District.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). What salaries do these overseers get each?

Mr. BRODEUR. $500.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). What are their duties to be?

Mr. BRODEUR. They are to look after the carrying out of our fishery regulations. By the judgment rendered on the fishery question in 1897 or 1898, it was decided that the right of legislation concerning the fisheries belonged to the federal authorities.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). In so far as regulating the close seasons was concerned.

Mr. BRODEUR. The close season, the instruments used for carrying on fishing operations, and everything bearing on the preservation and regulation of the fisheries. At the same time, it was decided in view of the proprietary rights of the provinces, that they had a right to issue licenses. In Quebec that right has been exercised in one section of the province. The other section, the most important one, that is, the section below a line drawn through the St. Lawrence from Cap Chatte to Pointe des Monts, is to be under the federal authorities. In Ontario, the provincial government, took authority to issue licenses, and I understand appointed some officers to look after the carrying out of their regulations; but these officers have no specific authority with regard to our regulations. We had only three officers to carry out our regulations. As a result, a great many complaints were made that our regulations were not being properly observed. For example, in the fall of 1907 there were complaints that the close season for whitefish was being openly violated in the Georgian bay, which is one of the best fishing grounds in the province. The inspector of fisheries was directed to investigate the conditions and he found that a large quantity of whitefish were being taken in the close season. My hon. friend will find the same thing if he consults the report of the Georgian Bay Fishing Commission. The unanimous report of that commission indicated there is abundant evidence of illegal fishing. We have, however, no means, of giving instruction to those officers appointed by the local authorities because they are not under our control; and it seems to me that not only should we appoint officers to see to the carrying out of our own regulations, but also to inform us as to any changes which might be required in them. How could we get that information unless we appoint our own officers? We had none except the three inspectors, and we had no opportunity of being in touch with the different fishing districts. We thought, therefore, it was advisable to appoint inspectors and overseers who would see that our regulations were carried out.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). The only real reason which the minister had for these appointments—45 in number in the province of Ontario—is that he wanted to give a salary of $500 per year each to 45 of his political friends for doing nothing. The only complaint to which he can point as a reason for these appointments is with regard to some illegal fishing having been done in the Georgian Bay in 1907, some four years ago. Since that time he knows that the Ontario government have purchased a boat and have had that district under inspection. He has simply appointed a number of officers to do the work which is now being well done by the provincial government. In my district the fisheries inspectors and officers under the Ontario government are doing efficient work. There was no necessity at all to appoint these 45 men, their appointment will only lead to trouble between them and the officers of the Ontario government, but the hon. minister was anxious to give a fat job to his political supporters.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). Any one who is familiar with the way in which the present government of Ontario is administering the fishing laws must admit that it is high time something was done to protect the fishermen in that province. For the past few years the complaints of the fishermen have been of the strongest character, and rightly so. Until the administration of the fisheries was taken over by the present government, it was customary for the owners of land to get licenses for fishing in the waters adjoining their lands, but at present they are denied this privilege. The licenses have been taken away from practical fishermen and given to men who have no experience, but who are political friends of the party in power in Ontario, and these men make their profit by subletting their licenses to other fishermen. Another complaint was with regard to the sorting out of small fish. Under the regulations of this parliament, fish of a certain size are subject to confiscation, and instances have arisen in which inspectors appointed by the province of Ontario have confiscated fish which were not under size, but should have been allowed to go on the market; and these inspectors have used these fish for their own private purposes. With such a state of things existing, it seems to me there was urgent need for some impartial administration of the fishery law. It is unfortunate that jurisdiction is divided. What I would like to have done would be to have the fishermen take out licenses from this government as well. If licenses were required subject to the supervision of the fishery officers appointed by this government, we could hope for something like an impartial administration of the law.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). The Ontario government has the sole power to issue licenses.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). I do not think it has.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). That is the decision of the Privy Council.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). I do not think my hon. friend will find any decision declaring that the whole power to grant licenses rests with the provincial authorities. True the beds of the rivers and lakes belong to the provincial government, but not the control of the fisheries as regards making regulations for the size of the nets, establishing a close season and such matters. These are in the jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament. And when we make regulations governing these matters, we ought to have officers to see that they are observed.

Mr. BLAIN. I am very much surprised that if there were such a complaint against the Ontario government, as my hon. friend alleges, it should not have been ventilated in the local legislature. I never heard that this tremendous complaint against the Ontario government has ever been mentioned in the local legislature.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). If it has not been mentioned there, I have had several complaints from several fishermen along the line I have stated.

Mr. BLAIN. I am very much surprised that if the local government have been taking away the licenses from the fishermen and giving them to political friends of their own, no such charge was ever made in the local legislature. It cannot be such a very grave charge, but evidently is only one of these political charges, which my hon. friend wants to make use of. But what my hon. friend wants particularly is that this government should issue licenses. Does my hon. friend suggest for a moment that, if the license was issued by this government, it would be more free from partisanship than those issued by the province of Ontario?

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). I never heard any of these complaints from fishermen of either political party under the former administration of the province. I do not mean to say that this government alone could issue a license. I think it is conceded that the Ontario government has power to give licenses. What I say is that if a license is required from here also, then one would be a check upon the other and we should not be likely to hear the complaints that we hear now.

Mr. BLAIN. The point is that my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke, Essex), is anxious that this government should issue licenses to fishermen in the province of Ontario. The grievance he has in mind is that the Ontario government issues licenses. I do not think it would make much change if what he contends for were granted. The people would not have any more faith in this government than in the Conservative government headed by Sir James Whitney. In fact, I think they would have less faith.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). Why do they come to me?

Mr. BLAIN. Because they think that my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke, Essex), has power with this government. He has taken up their case at once and says: I am not in favour of the Ontario government granting licenses; they do not know how to administer anything except in the interest of the Conservative party. But come to this Dominion government and we will give you equal rights. The hon. gentleman nods his head. He does not believe it, of course. But that is not the point, and I am not going to enter into a discussion of the fishing interests of Ontario. But what I do say is that this is a very alarming charge, and I think that on reconsideration my moderate friend from Essex (Mr. Clarke) would not repeat it in this House.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the Dominion government issue licenses to fish in the Georgian bay? Does it propose to do so?

Mr. BRODEUR. The federal government is not issuing any licenses in the province of Ontario. We have the right to do so, but we have not exercised that right.

Mr. SPROULE. I can only say with regard to the observations of my hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Clarke), that they are a surprise to me. I know something of the Georgian Bay fishery. For two or three years in succession I drew attention to the unfortunate condition of this industry; as between the two governments it was not known exactly where the authority lay to control the fisheries. I always understood that a workable arrangement had been made between the two governments on the subject. Until the observations of the hon. gentleman, I have never heard a word of complaint of the administration of the laws in the Georgian bay by the government of Ontario. And I know that the same class of men are carrying on the industry in the Georgian bay that have carried it on for many years. That the licenses were given to Conservatives and farmed out to others who were not fishermen is certainly news to me. The other charge that the hon. gentleman made was that fish which were caught in conformity with the regulations were confiscated and used by the parties themselves. These charges should not be made unless there is evidence to back them up. If I had such information as the hon. member intimates he has—for he says complaints were made to him—I certainly would make the charge and press it; and if I did not make complaint and insist upon an investigation, I should never make mention of the matter in this House. I do not think a member of this House is doing his whole duty who contents himself with making a statement here when his own friends in the province are in a position to discuss it and debate it and bring it before the face of the very men who would be culpable if the charge were correct. The leader of the opposition in the Ontario House lives right on the Georgian bay where the fishing industry is carried on so extensively.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). I did not refer to Georgian bay.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought the hon. gentleman spoke of Georgian bay.

Mr. STRATTON. It was the minister.

Mr. SPROULE. The reference was made by some speaker on that side with regard to the law not being properly enforced in the Georgian bay. I have before now asked in this House if there were any complaints, and was told there were none. It would appear that the working understanding which I thought existed between the two governments has not yet been reached. I have always understood that it was the right of the provincial government to issue licenses, but that it was questionable whether the federal government had that right, but that it had the right to make regulations with regard to close seasons, the size of mesh and other things of that kind. I think an arrangement was made at one time under which the licenses were to be issued by the Ontario government, and the Dominion government would confine itself to such questions as the close season and the size of mesh of nets. I am sorry that that understanding does not seem to exist, and that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries thinks it necessary to appoint practically an army of inspectors to take charge and oversight of the fisheries in Ontario, because, undoubtedly, it will lead to conflict and trouble in the future, for the inspectors belonging to the province of Ontario will not lightly abandon their work, because federal overseers are appointed. This is an old question, and I am sorry that no arrangement has been reached between the two governments.

Mr. MARSHALL. I am rather surprised to hear the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Clarke) make the charges he has made. I am particularly surprised to hear such charges from that hon. gentleman, because we have regarded him as a man who is fair in his statements. But he is altogether wrong when he says that only Conservatives are given licenses at such places as Port Bruce, Port Burwell and Port Stanley, which are large fishing centres.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). I did not make that statement.

Mr. MARSHALL. There are as many Liberals fishing in Port Stanley as there are Conservatives, old fishermen who have been fishing there for years. I must say, I think it a perfect waste of money to appoint these special inspectors. They are not needed at all. The gentleman who was appointed fishery inspector in East Elgin was a good worker for years for the Liberal party. I have never heard of a complaint in East Elgin by the fishery inspector. It is a shame to waste money in this way.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). They are just appointing them as political agents.

Mr. MARSHALL. Oh, yes, that is what the man in East Elgin is; that is what he has been doing for years and that is what he will do.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). The same in Leeds.

Mr. MARSHALL. I do not care what his politics are he is not needed. We have other government inspectors who are doing their duty, but this office is absolutely unnecessary and I object to this wasteful expenditure.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The hon. member for Essex (Mr. Clarke) is usually very fair when he speaks in this House, but I think his remarks are not justifiable in the present case. So far as the Georgian bay is concerned I do not believe the fishery laws have ever been administered so strictly and indeed so severely as since the Ontario government took hold of their administration. I know of three specific cases in my own town where the Ontario inspector seized the boats of the fishermen irrespective of political considerations. In one case the action was so drastic that I had to complain on behalf of a client. Fish were found on the shore during the close season, and on the mere suspicion that this boat had placed them there, they seized the boat. They even refused to lay information against the owner and we had to press the government to lay the information and when it was tried the case was dismissed. The fisherman was out of his boat and consequently the means of earning his livelihood for six weeks, and the government had to pay a small amount in damages. In the other two cases the parties were convicted. Now, if the member for Essex (Mr. Clarke), knows that the overseer in his locality has been guilty of the offence he charged against him, why did the hon. member not give information to the Ontario Minister of Public Works. Before the hon. member made such a charge in this House he should at least have given the Ontario government an opportunity to rectify the grievance he complained of. If there is one thing more than another to the credit of the Whitney government it is that they have ordained an absolutely impartial and drastic enforcement of the laws of this province, so much so indeed that many of their own supporters are not quite as sympathetic towards Sir James Whitney as they otherwise would be. I think the people of Ontario will bear testimony to the fact that the Whitney government has shown absolute impartiality in administering the laws. There is absolutely no necessity for the Dominion government appointing these fishery officials. The Minister of Marine has been able only to mention a single instance on the Georgian bay where there has been an infringement of the fishery laws in four years.

Mr. BRODEUR. Several cases are mentioned in the notes before me. In 1907 the department was informed that there were several cases of violation of the regulations and we sent an inspector there. There were pound nets found at Black bay, and during the close season it was reported that fishing operations were carried on openly in the Georgian bay.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Then it is three years since any complaint has been made to the department as to illegal fishing on the Georgian bay.

Mr. BRODEUR. Since then there is the report of the Georgian Bay Fishery Commission in which such allegations are made.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The minister admits that no specific complaint as to violation of the fishery law has come to his department in three years, and yet he justifies himself for appointing forty-five fishery inspectors on the ground that the laws are violated.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). Does the hon. gentleman think it a proper thing for the Ontario government to have fishery inspectors who go around stumping the country for the provincial candidates in the elections, and acting in every way as partisans?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I do not.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). That is what they do.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I do not believe in such a practice, and if there is anybody in the hon. member's riding who does that and if he complains to the Ontario government that official will receive his just punishment.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). It is a very well known fact.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Here we have forty-five Dominion officers doing exactly the same work as the provincial officers, and the only reason that can be urged for the appointment of these Dominion officials is that the Ontario government cannot do the work properly. The inference is that because a man is a Conservative he will not do his work properly and because he is a Reformer he will, and upon that inference alone the Minister of Marine and Fisheries pays 45 men $500 a year each and has with them an understanding that their salary shall be increased $50 a year until it reaches $700. Is not that so?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. And in addition, are they not entitled to their travelling expenses?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. And the travelling expenses will be paid for the use of their own horse or their own boat as the case may be?

Mr. BRODEUR. That is the practice.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Then, in a couple of years each one of these officials will be drawing a salary and expenses in the neighbourhood of $1,000 a year, which means $45,000 a year thrown away for no other purpose than that these officials will be useful to the government at election times. Why did not the minister go to the Ontario government and make an arrangement with them so that the one set of officials would do this work. If a fisherman violates the law the Ontario government forfeits his license for the next year, but if one of these fishermen is convicted by a Dominion officer how is the provincial government to know that he is not entitled to his license for the ensuing year? The Minister of Marine is going to mix up the whole thing from beginning to end, and the result will be that with this dual administration of the law there is bound to be defective enforcement. So far as the Georgian bay is concerned I may tell the minister that the provincial government has justly and honestly enforced the fishery laws, and there is no necessity in the world for the Dominion government paying these useless officials of theirs. At Wiarton the Ontario government appointed a man by the name of German to enforce the fishery regulations, and I see that another man is being appointed by this department for the same town. These two men go over the same route and do exactly the same work. Is the man appointed by this government going to do any better work because he is a Grit or the man appointed by the Ontario government because he is a Conservative? There seems to be no excuse whatever for making this appointment.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am exceedingly sorry to find that this question is treated as a party question.

Mr. SPROULE. You have made it such.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend is absolutely mistaken. The action which has been taken by my department in connection with this question had regard simply to the protection of the fisheries, and the preservation of this national asset. The hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Middlebro) has stated that there would be some inconveniences in having two sets of officials performing the same duties. But, the duties which have to be performed by the officials of the provincial government and those which have to be performed by the officials of the federal government are not at all the same, and I will try to explain to my hon. friend the reasons why I consider they are not the same. We have our own laws and regulations. Our laws and regulations cover a very wide field—the seasons of fishing, the gears and instruments with which fishing is to be carried on. The Ontario officials are called upon to see that the laws of Ontario are carried out. The laws of Ontario cover the issuing of licenses. On the one side there is the licensing authority, and on the other the regulative authority.

Mr. SPROULE. Could not the Ontario government do that as well?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, they could not do that because in order to carry out those regulations the officials have to receive instructions from this government.

Mr. CROSBY. Give them instructions.

Mr. BRODEUR. We cannot give instructions to officers who are not our own. They are the officers of the Ontario government obliged to carry out the laws and regulations passed by the legislature of Ontario.

Mr. SPROULE. If the regulations are carried out between the two authorities ought there to be any conflict between them and why could not the minister clothe the Ontario officials with the same authority that he clothes the officials appointed by himself?

Mr. BRODEUR. That is a different proposition altogether, but we will take the situation as it is to-day. It is very unfortunate that this question of jurisdiction with regard to the fisheries in Ontario has not been settled. It was to be expected that some settlement would be reached by which the authority with regard to the fisheries should be exercised only by one government. So long as there is divided jurisdiction, so long as we have the right to regulate the fisheries, and the provincial authorities have the right to issue the licenses, there will be conflict and inconvenience. I have made some effort with the view of obtaining a settlement of this question, but unfortunately I have not been successful.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Has the hon. gentleman had any communication with the government of Ontario with the view of settling this question amicably?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, I had the question brought up two years ago. I invited the minister who has charge of the fisheries to come to Ottawa on two different occasions to consider the question of the fisheries of Ontario, and upon one occasion I broached the subject whether it would not be possible to settle the question of jurisdiction. My suggestion would have been that we should continue to exercise the powers which are given to us under the British North America Act to regulate the fisheries, and that we should also issue the licenses and account to the province for the money we collected.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I should like to ask the minister whether or not he ever asked the Ontario government if they would allow the Ontario officials to carry out the Dominion regulations?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, I did not discuss that point with them. I approached the question on a higher plane in order to discover whether it would not be possible to get rid of the divided jurisdiction, which, I think, must have the worst possible effect upon the fisheries in that province. But, I have not been successful. We had this dual jurisdiction, and I thought a settlement could be reached by which we could continue to exercise the powers which are given us by the British North America Act, and account to the province for the money which would be collected, of course, after having deducted the expenditure.

Mr. FOSTER. Would that mean that all licenses would be issued by the Dominion authorities, and not by the province?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, what my hon. friend wanted the Ontario government to do was to give up the rights that they undoubtedly had.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, I wanted to have some settlement. The same situation existed with regard to the province of British Columbia for many years. We have collected the license fees for them, and we accounted to them for the money which we collected. I may say that our relations with the government of British Columbia are good. The other day a question came up with regard to boat rating in the northern part of British Columbia. This arrangement was satisfactory to both governments.

Mr. FOSTER. And they are not issuing any licenses?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, they have begun to issue licenses, since last year, pending the settlement of the question which is now being submitted to the court. One serious difficulty arises with regard to British Columbia, that is to ascertain whether the provincial or federal authority has the power to issue licenses within the three-mile limit. This question was not decided and has been submitted to the courts. Pending the decision of that case each government is now issuing licenses. We have reduced our fees, and they have adopted a fee equal to the amount of the reduction we made, so that practically the British Columbia fisherman is paying the same amount as before and is getting licenses from both the provincial and federal governments. That system is being carried out satisfactorily.

Coming to the province of Ontario, my suggestion would be that if it is not possible to settle the question in the way I am suggesting, that we should continue to make the regulations and issue the licenses ourselves, that at least the licenses should be issued by the provincial and the federal authorities so that the complaints which have been made by my hon. friend from Essex (Mr. Wilcox), will be removed in that respect, because we will then be sure that the licenses will not be issued in a partisan way, but to bona fide fishermen. As to the carrying out of the regulations, the question arises whose duty is it to look after the carrying out of our own regulations, the provincial or federal authorities?

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Have the Ontario government ever refused to carry out the federal regulations through their provincial officers? I understood that when the Minister of Public Works of Ontario was in Ottawa trying to arrange the matter, my hon. friend made the proposition he has suggested to the House, but the Minister of Public Works for Ontario said that they would enforce the regulations and would adopt the close season; my hon. friend was not willing to do that, but employs 45 men at a salary of $500 each and expenses, to enforce his regulations.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am trying to explain the situation. Let us try to understand it and see whether there is not some means of settling this question of jurisdiction which now exists between the provincial and federal authorities. We have all one end in view, the preservation of the fisheries, and so long as this dual jurisdiction exists there will always be trouble and difficulty. My hon. friend asks if the provincial government have refused to carry out our regulations. That is not the question.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). That is the question.

Mr. BRODEUR. The question is, can the department here be sure that their regulations are properly observed when they have not their own officers whom they can instruct as to the interpretation and carrying out of those regulations? They cannot give any instructions to the officials of the provincial government and in order to administer the regulations they must have officials who are under their control. There is another point far more serious: How are we going to be informed as to the wants and requirements of different localities? These matters have to be studied and if we have officers on the spot they can give us the necessary information as to what is to be done. That is the object we have in view. My hon. friend does not seem to accept with favour the statements I am making, but I assure him it is absolutely impossible to frame and carry out regulations without having our own officers to enforce them and at the same time advise us as to changes which have to be made. Some day, perhaps, these fisheries will be depleted and then they will come to the federal government and say: Why did you not see to the carrying out of your regulations. We might say that we expected the provincial authorities to do that, but the provincial authorities would say: We have no jurisdiction on that question, we have to look after our own regulations with regard to licenses, but it is your duty to see to the preservation of the fisheries. The argument would stand against the federal authorities. So long as we have our own officers we are going to be responsible for the preservation of the fisheries. There would then be no question of jurisdiction, or throwing responsibility one on the other, the federal department would be absolutely responsible for the preservation of the fisheries. That duty was imposed on the federal authorities by confederation. We should put this question above party and should consider the general interest of the fisheries.

Mr. EDWARDS. Has the minister appointed overseers for Ontario only, or for the other provinces as well?

Mr. BRODEUR. We have them in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Quebec, the prairie provinces and in British Columbia.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). These are old appointees.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood there was a different situation in the maritime provinces, that the decision of the Privy Council left the responsibility for looking after the fisheries on the Atlantic coast with the federal authorities.

Mr. BRODEUR. Oh, no.

Mr. SPROULE. That was my understanding of the decision, but in regard to the inland fisheries it was different.

Mr. BRODEUR. The situation in the maritime provinces is exactly the same as in the other provinces, and any of them might take the same position as Ontario has done to-day, and say that they were going to take over the issuing of licenses for fisheries. They could do that but they have not done it, because they think it is better that it should be centred in the hands of the federal authorities. It is not a party question. I have been in the department for several years now, but I have yet to receive a single complaint to the effect that we are not issuing licenses to bona fide fishermen in any of these provinces. Not one complaint has reached the department with regard to that, in fact the issuing of licenses never comes before the minister the minister has nothing to do with it; the licenses are issued by the officials to the fishermen.

Mr. CROSBY. I do not want that statement to go uncontradicted. There has been a complaint from Nova Scotia about the issuing of licenses for lobster factories.

Mr. BRODEUR. On party lines?

Mr. CROSBY. I do not know what lines, but you have refused to issue licenses in Nova Scotia except to a few people.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is a matter of general policy; we have refused to issue new licenses to packers. It is a well known policy.

Mr. CROSBY. You said you had not refused any one a license in any part of any province.

Mr. BRODEUR. The statement has been made here that the issuing of licenses was a matter of party politics. I said that nothing of the kind has entered into the administration of the department. With respect to the lobster packers, the department decided some years ago not to issue any new licenses; but we changed that policy a couple of years ago, and decided that where a certain number of fishermen applied for a license, the license should issue. Lately some other changes have been made in the regulations. I believe the present policy is needed for the carrying out of our own regulations and is absolutely necessary for the preservation of the fisheries.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister says this action was taken purely for the protection of the fisheries. Who would have the greatest interest in the protection of the fisheries—the people who live in the locality, who use the fisheries and who benefit by their protection, or those who have never been there at all, and could not in any way benefit from the fisheries? It seems to me that the former would be more likely to have the greater interest in protecting the fisheries. If there is one thing more than another for which the Ontario government is noted, it is for enforcing its own laws, whether it is the license law, the fishery law, or any other.

Mr. BRODEUR. If the provincial authorities have enforced the fishery laws, how is it that during the last five years we have never received from them any money in pursuance of the provision of the Act that the penalties imposed under it shall be handed over to the federal authorities? The inference I draw from that fact is that the provincial authorities have never prosecuted.

Mr. SPROULE. I think there would be two very good reasons for that. They were not charged with the duty of enforcing the federal law, and the penalties collected under the provincial law would naturally go to the province. Then, the provincial officers were never clothed with authority to see that the federal law was enforced. It seems to me that this whole difficulty could have been easily and amicably arranged if the federal government had clothed the provincial inspectors with authority to see that the federal regulations were carried out. I have no doubt that they would have enforced the law and made regular returns to the federal authorities. But I am afraid that the temptation was too strong to get appointed a number of the hon. gentlemen's own political friends who would be useful at election time, and to pay them a respectable salary to keep them going from year to year. I have yet to hear any one in my part of the country say that the laws are not strictly enforced in the province of Ontario by the provincial authorities, I think much more so than the laws enacted by the federal parliament, which are too often a dead letter.

Mr. BEATTIE. With two sets of fishery inspectors, I think clashing is inevitable. The hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Clarke) said that the fishery overseers of the Ontario government were appointed for party purposes. I do not think he was justified in making that statement. Only four years ago Col. Leys, the local member for the city of London, resigned his seat, because the minister in the late Ross government neglected to enforce the law. In fact, the government allowed their partisans to put a net across the River Thames, so that the fish coming from Lake St. Clair could not get up the river. They were caught in a trap and were shipped to Buffalo. In several instances the inspector of the Whitney government has stopped the package at London and has found them packed with fish caught in the close season. I think the law is administered today by the Ontario government as well as it ever has been. I am a pretty good party man, and yet I have tried to get a license for a friend of mine, but without success. All old friends of the Ross government were allowed to retain their licenses, but I could not get a license for my friend. I do not think the Whitney government can be accused with any show of partisanship, because certainly if that government had been partisan in this matter, they would have granted my friend a license.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was very much surprised to hear my hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Clarke) charge the Ontario government with partisanship in the granting of licenses. Why, the Deputy Minister of Fisheries at Toronto is the same man who occupied that position under the Ross government, and he is, I am told, a very strong Liberal.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). What is his name?

Mr. HENDERSON. It is Tinsley. That same gentleman has given a good deal of trouble in my county by interfering in matters in which he had no right to interfere, and annoying the inspector and fishermen. That is the only complaint I have against him. On one occasion when the regulations called for a mesh of two and three-eighths inches for small herring or cisco, he was going to insist on a three-inch mesh. I called on him and remonstrated. I have often wondered why Dr. Rheaume did not dismiss him. That is what he should have done. I agree with the minister that if you want your laws properly administered, you must have officers in sympathy with you. The Whitney government have not such an officer in Mr. Tinsley. He seemed rather disposed to annoy people instead of assisting his government in getting a proper administration of the law. I wish to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if, in the event of two licenses being issued, one by the Ontario government and one by this government, the fishermen would have to pay two license fees. I would also ask him to define what are the rights and privileges of the inspectors appointed by the Ontario government.

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly, if the federal authority should exact a license, the fishermen would have to pay two licenses, unless the Ontario government and this government came to an agreement to issue only one.

Mr. HENDERSON. But you have no authority under the judgment of the Privy Council to issue a license.

Mr. BRODEUR. That judgment never decided that we had no authority to issue licenses. What the Privy Council decided was that the Ontario authorities, in view of their proprietary rights, could issue licenses, and they also formally stated that the right to issue licenses still existed with the federal authority.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it the intention of the hon. minister's department to issue licenses?

Mr. BRODEUR. We have not yet considered that question. Of course if there were serious complaints that licenses were not being issued properly by the Ontario government, we might find it necessary to exercise the power vested in us and issue licenses, but that matter has not yet been considered.

Mr. BLAIN. Have there been any complaints that licenses have not been properly issued?

Mr. BRODEUR. I heard some complaints from members on behalf of fishermen that licenses were issued to persons who were not bona fide fishermen, but I have never ascertained whether that was the case or not.

Mr. BLAIN. Has there been any complaint to the department in writing? We hear plenty of rumours.

Mr. BRODEUR. With regard to the second question raised by my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson), I would not like to define the duties of the Ontario officers; but speaking generally they would have to see that whatever regulations regarding the issue of licenses were made by the Ontario government were observed by the fishermen.

Mr. BEATTIE. Suppose a fisherman has a federal license and a local license as well, and suppose the local officer tells him he is not doing right and the federal officer tells him that he is, which is he going to obey?

Mr. BRODEUR. I give the instance of British Columbia. There was some question of boat rating in that province. The British Columbia government sent their officer and we sent ours, and they determined how many licenses should be issued for boats, and we agreed.

Mr. BEATTIE. If a fisherman had a license from the local government and not from the federal government——?

Mr. BRODEUR. He could not fish.

Mr. BEATTIE. So, the province would have no rights. And, if both federal and local governments issued licenses, which inspector would the fisherman be supposed to obey?

Mr. BRODEUR. He would be obliged to obey the laws of Ontario and the Ontario officer so far as the provincial license is concerned, and, so far as our license is concerned, he would have to observe our regulations and obey the officer of the Dominion.

Mr. BARKER. I think the minister has just shown how absurd the whole situation is. Beyond question, there is an anomaly in the power and authority. But, why in the name of common sense cannot the minister here and the minister in Toronto get together and put a little commonsense into the matter by making proper working arrangements? I happen to know something of this subject: I am interested with other people in a very large property bordering on Lake St. Clair, and I know there are most absurd difficulties arising there simply because nobody knows who is master. It is not that there is no master, but there are too many masters. For the minister to say there is no politics in it is ridiculous. When the time for politics comes, there are no more active politicians than these gentlemen. If the minister here and the minister in Ontario were to get together, I believe they could settle this matter in five minutes. But when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Brodeur) talks about 'our' regulations, there is no chance of an agreement. That is not the way business people go about such matters. A word has been said as to politics about the inspector at Toronto. I happen to know that man, Mr. Tinsley—have known him for twenty years. He was appointed by the Conservative government of Ontario, but at the request of both Liberals and Conservatives. He is a life-long Liberal, but he is above all a sportsman, and is probably the best man in the service in this connection in the whole of Ontario. Everybody respects him, and his whole heart is in the business. I think he has done more good than the two ministers put together—with all respect to the hon. gentlemen. He is a good man, an honest man, and cares more for his duty than he does for his politics, and there are very few in this country who do.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). I notice that this mania for creating new offices has extended into the district of Nipissing. I understand that a Dominion inspector has been appointed for Lake Nipissing and also one for Lake Timiskaming. What on earth is there an inspector required for on Lake Nipissing, where the catching of the principal fish has been prohibited for the last three years, and especially when the matter is being well looked after by the local government? These lakes are open for about only six months a year, and these new inspectorships will cost from $1,100 to $2,000 a year each,—for nothing. I had hoped that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was trying to get his department down to a business basis. I believe that if the minister will consider what he has proposed doing, he will drop it and save that much money from being actually thrown away.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think this money will be thrown away; I believe it will prove of great benefit to the country.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). Did the hon. minister have any complaints from that section?

Mr. BRODEUR. I cannot say, offhand. The hon. member complains because we have appointed two officers there. It is a very large district, and we have appointed one for the south and one for the north. If they carry out their duties properly, as I have no doubt they will, there will be plenty for them to do.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). There are others there now.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, but we have no authority over them. I do not wish to argue that point at such a length that I will incur the displeasure of members of this committee. But if my hon. friend (Mr. Gordon, Nipissing) were administering this department he would like to have officers to whom he could give instructions. We cannot give instruction to the provincial officers. And what is the result? The result is, according to me, that the fisheries are not properly preserved, and the time has come when action has to be taken for the purpose of protecting and preserving the fisheries.

Mr. SPROULE. One of the strong reasons the minister and his friend from South Essex (Mr. Clarke) gave for this change is that licenses are issued by the provincial government to men who are not fishermen, and then these licenses are peddled out again. But what did this government do in the same line? Was Mr. McNee, the Windsor newspaperman, a fisherman? He got a license to fish in the Nelson river and Lesser Slave lake for a number of years for a merely nominal sum. If that argument was a sound one surely it would apply to the appointment by the federal authorities as well as to the others. Was Mr. Markey, a Montreal lawyer, a fisherman when he got a license for a large fishing area in that western country. I might mention many other cases to show that the law in this respect has been violated to a greater extent by the present federal government than by any provincial government that ever existed.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). They never got a license from this government.

Mr. SPROULE. Certainly they did.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). They got concessions, not licenses.

Mr. SPROULE. That is only childish play upon words. The hon. member (Mr. Clarke) knows better. Let them be concessions if you will, but they amount to licenses for twenty years at $10 a year, and they cover immense areas of fishing territory, and they are given in one case to a newspaper man and in another case to a lawyer who farmed out the fishing privileges to others and sent the fish out of the country as well. The provincial law provides that if a fisherman violates his provincial license a second time he will be deprived of his license, but the federal law only provides for a fine no matter how many times he breaks the law, and this certainly leads to a conflict of jurisdiction.

Mr. BRODEUR. If a fisherman violates the law we do not issue a license to him. We have the same rule in that respect that they have in Ontario.

Mr. SPROULE. It is quite easy to see that this variation between the federal and provincial law may be the means of depriving some of these poor fishermen of their means of livelihood. I remember when there was a federal license as well as a provincial license required to sell liquor, that the liquor dealers were practically unable to carry on their business and vexations and annoyances arose and in the end the federal government had to obtain a vote from parliament to recoup those who paid federal license fees. I think the government would be well advised to stay their hand before appointing an army of men whose only mission will be to cause trouble and annoyance to honest fishermen who are endeavouring to earn their livelihood.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Is there any revenue from the province of Ontario with respect to the fisheries, except from the payment of fines?

Mr. BRODEUR. None.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. And the minister has stated that one of the evidences that there were no infractions of the law in Ontario was that there were no fines received by the government.

Mr. BRODEUR. There were fines sent to us by the magistrate who convicted on the complaints of private individuals.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I see in the report of the Fishery Department that there were fines returned from Ontario to the amount of $1,520 which is evidence that there has been enforcement of the law.

Mr. BRODEUR. We did not receive any money from prosecutions taken by provincial officials.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Does the minister say of his own knowledge that this money is not the proceeds of prosecutions by provincial officers?

Mr. BRODEUR. So I am informed.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I know of two prosecutions in my own town instituted by provincial officials.

Mr. BRODEUR. Who got the money?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. You must have got the money and that is where the fifteen hundred dollars come in.

Mr. BRODEUR. Oh, no. The Fishery Act says that money should come to us, but the hon. member (Mr. Middlebro) tells us of a fine being imposed on the prosecution of a provincial officer and we have not received the money. That is serious.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. You got the money all right.

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Has the minister any evidence that the $1,520 referred to in his report was not received as the result of prosecutions by provincial officers?

Mr. BRODEUR. We could get that information.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I asked the minister whether there were any complaints from the province of Ontario to his government with respect to mal-administration in the granting of licenses.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not quite understand the question of my hon. friend.

Mr. BLAIN. My question is based upon the statement made by the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Clarke) who said, at the commencement of this discussion this evening, that in the province of Ontario licenses were taken away from good fishermen by the Conservative administration at Toronto and given to political heelers.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). I never said 'heelers'; I never use that word.

Mr. BLAIN. I will correct it by saying, not 'heelers,' but political supporters. I ask if any such complaints have reached the government in writing.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, we have received complaints from people in Ontario saying that licenses had been taken from men and handed over to men who were not even fishermen.

Mr. BLAIN. Has my hon. friend such complaints in writing?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Will my hon. friend have them brought down?

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly, with pleasure.

Mr. BLAIN. Well, we will continue this item till they are brought down because it is very important.

Mr. TALBOT. May I ask the minister how long this dual authority is going to last? There are lots of complaints from the province of Quebec about this dual legislation. The authorities appointed by the federal government are in conflict with the authorities appointed by the local government. You have inspectors who have to go over the ground covered by the local inspectors and they do not make reports. You cannot follow what is going on upon the St. Lawrence river. I have called the attention of the government and the department to this several times. It is a very important point and I think it is time that this dual authority and dual legislation should cease. It seems to me that the different provincial and federal governments could come to some understanding about it. You have to bear a heavy expense and you are getting no revenue. The local governments are getting all the benefit from the issue of licenses. You have your men who are instructed to go and follow the various fishermen along the St. Lawrence, this involves a great deal of expense and the revenue goes to another point. It is high time that some understanding was arrived at. I do not know what is going on in Ontario or the other provinces but I know that this dual authority is almost a curse in our province.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is very hard for me to state how long it is going to last. This is a question which should be settled by the two governments.

Mr. TALBOT. Why not do it?

Mr. BRODEUR. But it does not seem possible for us to reach a settlement. I have tried to bring the question to an issue, but it has been impossible to reach any settlement.

Mr. EDWARDS. I understand from the minister that the government have not yet made up their minds whether they will authorize these inspectors or overseers to grant licenses. I assume that they have placed in the hands of these overseers or officers printed instructions as to their duty, and if they have done so these instructions would tell these officers whether or not they are to have the right to grant licenses. I fully agree with what has been said as to the likelihood of conflict between the two governments because of the dual authority over these fisheries. If the federal government permits its officers to grant licenses to fishermen there is this point to be considered: In many waters controlled by the provincial authorities they limit the number of licenses that they will grant with the view of protecting the fish. But if you have two different bodies granting licenses it is not going to be long before your waters in certain places will be fished out. Where the authority is under one government they will know from their officers how many licenses should be granted there, but where you have two different bodies granting licenses you are taking a course which is going to result in depleting the waters of fish. That is a very serious matter. I would like to ask the minister when the salaries of these officers commenced. I have been told that they have been drawing salary from the first of the year, is that correct?

Mr. BRODEUR. On the 11th of February, the date of the order in council.

Mr. EDWARDS. So that they will be drawing salaries for two or three months before they can possibly have anything to do?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, they got their instructions immediately and they are going to carry out these regulations.

Mr. EDWARDS. The bulk of their work will be reading over their instructions because they will be unable to do anything until the ice goes out.

Mr. BLAIN. Are they paid monthly or by the quarter?

Mr. BRODEUR. They get a salary of $500 a year and are paid monthly.

Mr. BLAIN. Some salary has been paid some of these officers already. Out of what fund was it paid?

Mr. BRODEUR. Out of the money which was voted last year for this purpose.

Mr. GOODEVE. It seems that the courts have decided that the fish themselves belong to the various provinces, and therefore, the province issue the licenses to fishermen to take fish. At the same time the same courts have decided that the jurisdiction with respect to regulating the fisheries belongs to the Dominion government and therefore the Dominion government issue licenses in order that they may know that every fisherman complies with the Dominion regulations. They get no revenue because the fish themselves belong to the different provinces. Now then, the question naturally arises: Supposing an application is made by an individual to one of your Dominion inspectors and he issues a license allowing him to fish under the regulations of the Dominion government, the provincial government having already issued what they consider sufficient licenses in that particular territory and not desiring to have any more fish taken out of that particular water, what occurs? That man cannot get his license from the provincial government and therefore he cannot fish; or, vice versa, a provincial government issues a license allowing the licensee to take fish in a particular water and the Dominion government refuses to issue a license and therefore he cannot fish. What is the position in a case of that kind? I would like to know who is to have the final jurisdiction and say as to who shall ultimately regulate the right to fish.

Mr. BRODEUR. In such a case where the federal authorities had issued a license and the local authorities refused to issue a license for the same territory or to the same person that person could not fish. That is very clear to me and I think we have had cases of that kind where it was thought by the provincial authorities that it would not be in the interest of the fisheries that more licenses should be issued. In these cases no more licenses are issued.

Mr. GOODEVE. Then it seems to me that properly there should be absolutely no refusal by the Dominion government and for this reason. The courts have set forth that the fish belong to the provinces.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, the courts have not decided that.

Mr. GOODEVE. And it is on that ground they have issued licenses?

Mr. BRODEUR. The Privy Council has declared that the provinces have the proprietary right in the fisheries, but they have not said that the fish belong to the provinces. There is a distinction between the proprietary right in the fisheries and the property in the fish.

Mr. GOODEVE. Taking the proprietary right of the provinces in the fisheries, they have issued licenses for that reason. That being the case, it seems to me the only way that would be fair to those applying for licenses would be that a Dominion license should issue at once upon the issue of a provincial license; otherwise it would be very unfair and a man would never know when he was within his right.

I absolutely agree with the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot), that the Dominion government need only go to the various provinces and make an arrangement with them whereby the provincial authorities will insert in every license issued, the Dominion regulations enacted from time to time and rely on the provinces to carry out those regulations. The provinces would no doubt do so and that would be a very easy and a very fair way of getting over the difficulty. It seems to me the government could trust the various provincial authorities to see that the regulations are carried out and do away with this large additional expense of which we complain and with the dual jurisdiction.

Mr. BRODEUR. Why not adopt the system which exists in the maritime provinces?

Mr. GOODEVE. What is that system? We have been trying to find out all evening whether the minister has a solution of this difficulty before passing the item. If he thinks the maritime regulations will answer all the requirements why not give the committee that information and, if possible, do away with the additional expense. The minister says he does not know what the final result will be and that they have already cases in which the provinces have refused to issue licenses and vice versa.

Mr. TALBOT. This is a very serious question, a national question, and the sooner it is settled the better. Let it be by federal legislation or provincial legislation, I do not care which, but let us have one legislation which we can follow. As it is, one is antagonistic to the other and we do not know where we are. It is a serious matter because it involves large amounts of money to the provinces, and many individuals are giving the best of their ability and investing a great deal of capital in the fisheries. It seems to me that some settlement could be arrived at.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). I think most of the members will agree that the present position in regard to dual jurisdiction is not all that could be desired, but I think that it is a matter that cannot be settled by the Minister of Marine and the provincial authorities who have jurisdiction over fisheries. Take the case where the bed of a river is owned by the adjoining owners, such as the River Thames; I do not understand that under the decision of the Privy Council the Ontario government has any jurisdiction whatever over such a river. As I understand the decision, the reason that the provinces have jurisdiction is by virtue of their ownership of the soil at the bed of the river. If they do not own that soil, if the soil is owned by private persons as is the case in many rivers, then it seems to me that the Dominion alone has jurisdiction over such a river. So in cases of that sort no agreement made by the two governments——

Mr. BARKER. Why not agree as to those special cases?

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). How could the two agree that the province should have jurisdiction?

Mr. BARKER. The two could agree that the one who has the real proprietary rights could exercise them.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). You would still have the division. It seems to me that what is necessary is an amendment to the British North America Act which will set all these matters at rest and give jurisdiction over fisheries to one authority or the other, no matter where these fisheries are.

Mr. LENNOX. Of course if we commence making amendments to the British North America Act we will have many and it is just as wise, I think, to avoid interfering with the British North America Act whenever we can. I have not followed very closely all that the minister said but I would like to know from him whether he has ever made any serious and systematic effort to bring about a conference of the different parties interested in this matter. It appears to me that that is what the minister should do. I recognize that as the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Clarke), says, probably the minister has not power to determine the whole matter but he has the power to make an effort and I think it is his duty to make an effort. The first move to bring about a friendly discussion has to be made by some person and probably it would come from a federal minister as well as from anybody else. The other different authorities all stand on about the same basis; the federal government stands in a position by itself. It is not at all unlikely that if the minister would invite the different provincial legislatures to appoint representatives to confer with him upon this matter, some adjustment of it might be brought about. The present situation is very unprofitable, very unseemly and absolutely unnecessary, and it would be in the public interest if the ministers would get together and endeavour to find a solution. We are different provinces, but we are all one people and it is a matter of comparative indifference in one sense which party exercises jurisdiction if jurisdiction is once definitely placed. I am confident that if the matter was left to the provinces, they would endeavour to administer it in the interests of all concerned. They would exercise that jurisdiction just as well as the federal authority would. I am opposed in principle to arrogating to the Dominion any jurisdiction that properly belongs to the provinces and I am opposed to the government treading upon doubtful ground in a matter of this kind. If there is any doubt I think it is in the best interest of the country as a whole that the provinces should be allowed to exercise jurisdiction. I think that anything that savours of the Dominion parliament usurping jurisdiction is liable in the end to create friction and dissatisfaction and probably worse. The minister, if he has not already done so, should endeavour to bring about a friendly conference, and by some means terminate this dual jurisdiction. There is a waste of money in it, and there are even more serious interests at stake than a waste of money. I would like the minister to tell us what he has done in the way of bringing about a conference of the parties interested, and what he intends to do to that end.

Mr. BRODEUR. Steps have been taken by the government with a view of bringing about a settlement of this question of jurisdiction between the provinces and the federal authorities. It was taken up with the maritime provinces, and we have reached a settlement which is satisfactory to all. Some time ago there was a difficulty with regard to the oyster beds in the maritime provinces. These are within the three-mile limit, and it was a question whether they should be under the control of the federal or the provincial authorities. I had an opportunity of discussing the question with one of the members of the New Brunswick government who came here, and also with Mr. Hazen, the premier. We had conferences also with a representative of the Nova Scotia government, and with the Premier of Prince Edward Island, and we have reached a settlement of the question of oyster beds, which was pending for several years. It has been agreed that we shall issue the licenses in those provinces, and of course we regulate the fisheries, and provide the neccessary guardians and overseers for the purpose of carrying out the regulations and preserving the fisheries. In Quebec, the question has been settled with regard to that part of the province which lies north of Pointe des Monts and Cap Chatte. The provincial government does not issue any licenses or exercise any authority in that part of the province, leaving it entirely to the federal authorities. In the other parts of the province they issue the licenses and we make the regulations. In Ontario, immediately after the judgment of the Privy Council was rendered, the provincial authorities took power to issue licenses, and we have not been able to reach any modus vivendi with them. Some three years ago we appointed an officer for the purpose of conferring with the provincial authorities, but he has been promoted to another place. When the international regulations were under consideration, I invited the representative of the Ontario government to come here, and the Minister of Public Works of that province, who is also the Minister of Fisheries, came. One of the first questions that arose for discussion at the conference I had with him was as to who should issue the licenses in international waters. We have a treaty with the United States under which the regulations with regard to the fisheries in these boundary waters are to be made by two commissioners, and one article of the treaty provides for a system of registration. I thought the best means for carrying out this provision of the treaty would be the granting of licenses; but the representative of the Ontario government protested very strongly against any assumption of power or authority on the part of the federal government to issue any licenses even in these international waters, where we are obliged under the law to protect the fisheries. That showed the position taken by the Ontario government, or at least by its representative. In the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta there is no doubt that we have absolute jurisdiction over the rivers and lakes. In British Columbia, the provincial government did not take power to issue licenses until two years ago, when the question was raised as to whether we had the right to issue licenses within the three-mile limit. This question was made the subject of correspondence between the two governments, and it was at last agreed, after an interview with the attorney general of the province, that the question should be referred to the courts. A question was prepared, and was submitted to the Supreme Court, and we expect a decision at the next sitting of the court, perhaps this month.

Mr. LENNOX. I did not want the details of what was done with the various provinces. That is a kind of huckstering which I do not think will bring about a very satisfactory result. What I would urge the minister to do, as something statesmanlike and in the general interest of the whole country, would be to ask the various provinces to get together as portions of the Dominion of Canada, and consider this matter from a broad national point of view. It is an entirely different proposition to get a representative of one province and try to make the best bargain you can with him, and then proceed with another, and so on. That may be very wise from the standpoint of trying to get as much power for the Dominion government as possible.

Mr. BRODEUR. I may inform my hon. friend that during the late Hon. Mr. Sutherland's time a general conference of the provinces was called for the purpose of discussing this question, and they were not able to reach any settlement. That is the reason we took it up province by province.

Mr. LENNOX. Even if there was such a conference, I think that some concerted action should be taken again. It is absolutely a disgrace to this country that this kind of thing should go on, and I would endeavour to get a conference in the light of day, as a public national deliberation, with the eyes of the people of Canada upon the proceedings, so that if a settlement could not be brought about, we should know exactly with whom the fault rested. I would have a discussion in which perhaps a representative from New Brunswick would be pointing out to the representative of the Ontario government that something should be done by Ontario in the general public interest, and vice versa. You will not have this haggling and quibbling such as would be likely where an official from a provincial government confers with an officer of the Dominion government, but you would have a conference conducted with dignity and in which the representatives of each province would be interested in having the various questions adjusted in the general interests. The government should set to work to have such a conference brought about.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have before me Sessional Paper No. 165, containing questions put by Mr. Porter with reference to this item and the answers given. He asked for the number of fishery officers appointed, their names, rank, the limits territorially of the jurisdiction of each, the salary of each, their duties, &c. The last question he put was this:

Is any and what system followed in making appointments to this service as to efficiency.

The answer given to this question was as follows:

In all instances it was sought to procure the services of energetic, active men, having a knowledge of the fisheries conditions in their respective districts.

Well, I am informed on good authority that among those appointed, one is a blacksmith, a couple are farmers, one is a farm labourer, another is a bar tender, another is a fish buyer for a big company, and still another is a gentleman who at one time was a member of the ministry in a congregation in Ontario. I am not going to read over the names, but surely we ought to have something more definite than the information given in this sessional paper. Surely we ought to have from the minister, with regard to every name on this list, information as to who recommended each and every one of them, why they were recommended, whether they were recommended by political friends; and I understand from good authority that every man on this list is a worker at election times for the Liberal party. I would like to know why they were engaged, what their duties are, and why they stay at home three-quarters of the year and only go around at election time. In looking over another part of this sessional paper, I find this question:

What is the total revenue derived during the years 1908 and 1909 from fisheries for the province of Ontario, and what was the total expenditure?

The answer given was that in 1908-9 the revenue was $770.78, and the expenditure $4,784.23, showing that the department spent $7 of the people's money to get one back. And this year we are asked to vote $50,000 more of the people's money for this purpose. What does the hon. minister expect to get back? I think it is absolutely ridiculous to ask this House to vote an item of this kind. At the same ratio between expenditure and income that prevailed two years ago, for that $50,000 of expenditure, the minister will put the people in the hole to the extent of $350,000. There is no sense in it. It is high time for some one to move that this item be struck out, and I beg to submit that motion.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The motion is that this item be struck out.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). When the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) decided to appoint these new inspectors, I presume it was his intention to improve the fisheries, and no doubt he looked about him to find the very best possible inspectors he could get. I would like, therefore, to ask him if he can tell me what experience in fish inspecting the two gentlemen have got whom he appointed in Nipissing. One of them is named John Murphy and the other Mr. Kill.

Mr. BRODEUR. The requirements are that they should be young men, active and energetic, but we did not require special qualifications because for the sum of $500 you are not likely to get such qualifications.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). Does not the minister think that more than that would be necessary to fit these men to be inspectors?

Mr. BRODEUR. I think that if he were of ordinary ability, and had the qualifications to which I have referred, he would be qualified for the position.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). Does not the minister think he ought to know one kind of fish from another?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, but every man living in a fishing district knows these things.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) has shown the minister how impossible it has been to work out this dual system along the St. Lawrence. The hon. gentleman says that down there they do not know to whom to look for instruction. In the district of Nipissing, we have had a condition just the opposite to that. They have only the one authority to look to, the local government. And now the minister wants to inflict upon that district the same kind of trouble that they are up against on the St. Lawrence. If there was anything to gain on the part of this government, I would tell him to go ahead. They have nothing to gain in a financial way. And no person will insinuate that the provincial authorities have not as much interest in maintaining the local fisheries as the Dominion government have. If, then, there is nothing to gain, what is the sense of appointing two extra inspectors? And especially what is the sense of appointing these men, their salaries to begin on February 11, at a time when the lakes which it is their business to guard are covered with from three and a half to four feet of ice.

Mr. BRODEUR. This service must be organized, and that takes a little time. And the officers of the Ontario government, like these whom we are discussing, are appointed for the year round.

Mr. BLAIN. Looking over the list, I see that some of them get only $40 a year.

Mr. BRODEUR. They are guardians, but what do the overseers get?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would like to ask the minister if he did not listen to a question I propounded? I have not heard any answer to it. Who nominated these men and stated what their qualifications were?

Mr. BRODEUR. They were appointed by order in council upon the recommendation of the minister.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But I am asking the minister who has this vote before the committee what reason he has to recommend these men. Who told him they were capable men? Who told him that a farm labourer was a capable man to act as overseer?

Mr. BRODEUR. Who is he?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The minister knows himself. Who told him that a farmer was capable——

Mr. GRAHAM. Why not? A farmer is capable of being a member of parliament; why should he not be capable of being a fishery overseer?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I acknowledge the corn, Mr. Chairman, and admit at once that a farmer is capable of doing anything. But as to these other people, this bartender, this ex-minister and others, I think we should have information about them.

Mr. BRODEUR. I say without hesitation that a farmer is absolutely capable of carrying on this business.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I accept that at once.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman has stated that a blacksmith is not capable of carrying on this work. I say that a blacksmith, a young, strong and active man, who is honest, is just as capable of being a fishery overseer as any of the others. The hon. gentleman has referred to a former minister. I think one who has been a minister of the church is capable of discharging these duties.

Mr. GRAHAM. Surely; he has been a fisher of men.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Who recommended these men to the minister? I think the minister will tell you Mr. Chairman, that he does not know more than a very small percentage of these men personally. I think I have a right to ask who recommended them to him, especially as I felt called upon to take exception to certain appointments in my own section of the country. For three years I have been pointing out to the minister that he appointed the wrong man, a Grit heeler who was appointed to a similar position to this.

Mr. BRODEUR. Who is he?

Mr. CAMPBELL. A. J. Macpherson of Winnipegosis.

Mr. BRODEUR. He is not a fishery overseer.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not want to contradict the minister flatly, but in reply to a question of mine, he said, and is reported in 'Hansard' as saying, that A. J. Macpherson was appointed to a higher position at a higher salary as chief of the hatchery at Snake island because of the experience he had, and it all has resulted as I warned the minister beforehand, that he was fired for incompetency within the last few months. It is only fair that I should ask what qualifications these men have?

Mr. BRODEUR. Before making these appointments I wrote to different persons in whom I have confidence.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Who were they?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have not the list here, but I have no objection to supply it. I told them what work these men had to do, and I was informed that these were the best men available for the service and I appointed them.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. One of the reasons given by the minister for the appointment of these men is that they were young and active, and could go over their districts with celerity, but I would point out to him that in the Wiarton division which has a coast line of 150 miles to inspect, he has appointed a man about 75 years old who had been acting in the capacity of police magistrate in Wiarton. Does the minister think that a young and active man of 75 years of age can go out in all kinds of stormy weather for the purpose of detecting fishermen breaking the law. This is one more proof that the appointments were made because of political service and not of any service they were supposed to do in enforcing the law.

Mr. BRODEUR. What is the name of that official?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. B. B. Miller.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not remember that name.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I know the man very well.

Mr. BRODEUR. I specially mentioned that the men recommended should be active and energetic. I believe there are one or two cases where those appointed were above the specified age of 40 years, but I was informed that they were fit to carry out their duties properly.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Seventy-five years of age is a good deal above forty.

Mr. BRODEUR. I would be surprised if that were true.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. There may be other surprises in store for the minister.

Mr. BOYCE. The minister must now have sufficient reasons to cause him to reflect before forcing through this item tonight. The minister, must realize that as he has been able so satisfactorily to settle conflicts of jurisdiction with other provinces, he should not weary in well doing if he wants to arrange a modus vivendi with Ontario, or any other province in which there is dual inspection of fisheries. The facts admitted by the minister indicate that there is tremendous confusion in the administration of the fishery laws. Whatever rights the Dominion has, even in international waters, can be protected without making confusion worse confounded by appointing a Dominion inspector to see that the Ontario inspector who issues licenses does his duty and does not transgress the regulations of the Dominion. The whole thing is a farce. It brings us back to thirty years ago when the Ontario government and the Dominion government being of a different political complexion, played the same game at the town of Rat Portage and constables were appointed by the Dominion and constables were appointed by the province, and justices of the peace were appointed by the province and commissioners of police were appointed by the Dominion, and the farce wound up by the two sets of officials arresting one another. This thing is not as bad at the present time as it was then, but I submit to the minister in all reason that it is equally ridiculous. Did the minister appoint his officials to see that the provincial officials did their duty, or did he appoint them to enforce Dominion regulations, and if he did he knows that they do not discharge their duties. Apparently, the Dominion inspectors spend their time watching the Ontario officials, and in exhibiting vigilance and activity in the Liberal interest when election time comes. Granted that there is a Dominion license, and a provincial license, and a fisherman has paid both, then there is an inspector of the Ontario government and an inspector of the Dominion government to see that he observes the regulations of both governments. Are the duties of the Dominion inspector confined to enforcing the regulations under which the Dominion license is issued?

I do not think the minister will admit that his duties and functions consist in the carrying out of these regulations. If they do then there are two or three inspectors whose reports have been before him for three or four years and who ought or ought not to be continued in his department. I ask him which horn of the dilemna he will take. If that be the case, and if he answers in the affirmative that the duties of the Dominion inspectors are confined to Dominion licenses and that the duties of the Ontario inspectors are confined to Ontario licenses, the minister will see how easily an almost daily conflict would arise as between the regulations under which these fishermen are acting. Is there a fisherman acting illegally under an Ontario license? The Dominion inspector may see in that a reason for a complaint which is common to both licenses and there would be a conflict of jurisdiction. If under these conditions, a Dominion inspector interferes with a fisherman acting under an Ontario license, who proceeds, who prosecutes? There is the regulation; what does the minister say with regard to it, who gets the fine, where does the fisherman land in case the Ontario overseer prosecutes? Supposing a fisherman acting under both licenses is charged with violating the regulations again, who prosecutes and why should one inspector be entitled to prosecute more than another? I am simply quoting these hypothetical cases to the minister to show the possibilities of confusion that the situation presents. I am speaking of the Lake Superior division, and he knows these conflicts that are going on. I have no desire to comment upon this unduly, it has been very ably discussed from both sides of the House but I do suggest to the minister that it is time this difficulty was settled. I refuse to believe that it is a difficulty that cannot be settled, I refuse to believe that the minister cannot adjust these matters with the provincial governments, I decline to believe that men in this country, having the interests of Canada at heart and the protection of her resources, either having provincial or federal jurisdiction, are so stubborn that they cannot get together and arrange by themselves at any time a settlement of this whole difficulty. The minister must realize the confusion that arises and one would have supposed that he would have felt called upon years ago, as soon as the jurisdiction became separated, to make an effort to settle this very important question. When the difficulty arose it might have been settled by just a little painstaking, a little anxiety and a little earnest effort to get together in the interests of the fishery resources of Canada and I believe it would still be an easy matter. The complaints are not confined to the province of Ontario. We have heard complaints from the province of Quebec, and I must confess that the suggestion made by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot), who is a pretty strong supporter of the minister's, so strong that his difference from him on this question ought to satisfy the minister that there is merit in it, was a very excellent one. It may not be one that appealed actually to the minister but it was simple and cogent in its effect and I think the minister should hesitate and see if he cannot, before putting this item through, bring down to this committee some suggestion whereby the appointment of two inspectors will be rendered absolutely unnecessary, or some such simple and far reaching suggestion as that which has been made to the committee by one of his own ardent admirers. Under such conditions you will have no conflict of jurisdiction, you will not have the acrimony, strife, uneasiness and unrest that result always from divided jurisdiction. With the possibility of the issuance of two licenses you have the fishermen paying two fees, you have the fisherman subject to two sets of regulations, whether expressed or implied, the regulations which go with each license and to which each license is subject. You have under certain imaginable conditions two penalties and you have a department compelled to serve two masters. I would recommend to the minister again the force of the scriptural saying with regard to a man who serves two masters, and if it has been impressed upon this department I feel satisfied that he will not seek to impress and force it upon some of these poor fishermen. I have here the report of the inspector for the Lake Superior division, Mr. A. G. Duncan, a gentleman who has occupied the position of fishery inspector for some years. Round about election time this gentleman is usually fishing for votes. He is very busy. There always seem to be fishery troubles to carry him at the expense of this government from place to place in the interest of getting out the fishermen's votes, and I venture to suggest to the minister in passing that the travelling expenses of the gentleman in question are very much inflated in consequence of his political activities. The report deals not only with the question of enforcement of the Dominion regulations but refers to some extent to the supervision which he exercises over provincial officers. He tells the minister: Now, I have watched the carrying out of the law by the provincial authorities, I have spied out how there was illegal fishing, I have spied out how the Ontario government did not prosecute in such cases, or, where they did prosecute, I have made it my business to find out that the offenders were not fined but that they were allowed to go on suspended sentence, I reported this matter to the Ontario fishery officer and I found out what his instructions were with regard to the fisheries and the things which he did in consequence of the information which I—A. G. Duncan—had given. Then he says, in substance: In consequence of my supervision the Ontario officials put on a patrol boat and they seized two tugs and a lot of gill nets. That all indicates to the minister the trouble that exists.

Where there are two inspectors there must necessarily be conflict, just the kind of conflict we see in the report of the inspector of the Lake Superior division. Inspectors are only human, an inspector has to make a pretense of earning his salary and this man's report is made up of statements showing how he has spied upon the inspectors of the Ontario government in the performance of their duties. As has been said this is a national question, one which should not be dealt with in a hurried manner and without serious consideration. I would ask the minister not to try to pass the item to-night, and to endeavour at the next meeting of the committee to suggest some rational, broad, national settlement of this conflict of jurisdiction, if not on the lines indicated by the member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) whose suggestion is worth more consideration than the minister gave it, then along some other lines that may appeal to the hon. gentleman. I do not think the minister will find the Ontario officials quite as hardheaded and stubborn as he suggests, but that they would approach the subject with a disposition to deal with it in a fair spirit, having regard to the interests of the province in the protection of its fisheries.

In the appointing of inspectors the minister sometimes makes mistakes as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Campbell). When he appoints as fishery inspectors men who go over the country endeavouring to patch up voters' lists in unorganized territories, and acting as campaigners, spending money in bars to treat electors at election times. I think he is not making a choice of fit and proper persons to carry out any regulation, and that the men who will do that sort of thing will not be very vigilant with regard to the infraction of any regulation around election times.

I commend this matter to the minister's earnest attention in order that we may have a solution of this serious and complicated state of affairs.

Mr. BRODEUR: There is no man more anxious than I to see this matter settled. Since I have been in charge of the despartment I have endeavoured by all means possible to reach an agreement with all the provinces, and I believe that the settlement which has been arrived at with the maritime provinces should commend itself to the other provinces and to the province of Ontario. Unfortunately I did not get from the Ontario government the same consideration as I received from the other provinces.

Mr. SPROULE. What about Quebec?

Mr. BRODEUR. Quebec, as I said, is divided into two parts.

Mr. BOYCE. Is the matter settled as to Quebec?

Mr. BRODEUR. Settled as to one part but not as to the other, so there are only those two, one part of the province of Quebec and the province of Ontario are not settled. The situation in Quebec is not as difficult as it is in Ontario. I mentioned a few moments ago the fact that when we came to settle the regulations concerning the fresh boundary waters, I thought in that case it would have been possible to reach a settlement but even in fact in that case the Minister of Public Works in the Ontario government said they would insist upon all licenses being issued by the Ontario government. That is their right, no one can dispute that right, and if no settlement has been reached it is not necessarily my fault. Nor is it the fault of my predecessors. When the late Mr. Sutherland was Minister of Marine and Fisheries, he called a convention of representatives of the different provinces, but it was then impossible to reach an agreement. I called a conference which was attended by representatives of New Brunswick, Quebec and Ontario, but we could not reach a settlement. We have our regulations. My hon. friend quoted from a report and he will find in that report that the regulations were not observed. For instance, 'the Thessalon fishermen,' 'says the inspector, 'were fishing without licenses and shipping the fish. That is a serious offence against the law. When I reported that to the Ontario fishery authorities, the inspectors were ordered to seize all their nets and fish and were instructed by the Ontario government to remove the article seized, but later the inspector was told to take bonds and all the fishermen were allowed to go on bonds. In the matter of two tugs seized in Lake Erie, they were allowed to go on bonds and I have not heard of a fine being imposed.' The report goes on that the Ontario fishery inspectors have been instructed by the department to notify the fishermen that they could fish away until they could get their licenses. This is absoluetly contrary to the law.

Mr. BOYCE. Which law?

Mr. BRODEUR. The federal legislation, that no one can fish without a license. It is very unfortunate that these regulations are not enforced.

Mr. BOYCE. The report is somewhat vague about that. As I understand there was some technical difficulty about the licenses, they had been paid for, all the preliminaries with regard to the licenses had been observed and it was only with regard to the actual issuance of the license itself, as a ministerial matter, that these instructions or any suggestions of that kind were given out. As a matter of fact the licenses were in the departement at Ottawa, they were not in the hands of the fishermen. That is all that amounted to, but there is another instance of your interfering.

Mr. BRODEUR. I take the report as it is here, perhaps my hon. friend has better information, but I see by the report here that it was stated that the fishing was carried out without any license.

Mr. BOYCE. That is subject to that explanation.

Mr. BRODEUR. Of course if my hon. friend has some particular information as to that I am very willing to accept his word, but it looks to me as if that justified the government in taking the necessary steps to see that our regulations are enforced. I do not want to restrict in any way, shape or form the rights of the provinces. They have certain rights, let them enjoy them, but it is our duty to see that these laws are enforced and that is the reason those appointments have been made. This is not a new policy, it has been in force for more than a year, the money was voted last year for that purpose. The member for Dauphin (Mr. Campbell) has suggested to strike out this item. That would cancel the appointment of all our fishery officers in the country. Is the committee ready to vote for that? It is a matter to be decided by the committee.

Mr. BLAIN. I think this matter is so important that the minister should not press this item to-night. This matter is one that should receive a good deal of consideration by this committee. It looks like a conflict of great importance between this government and the provincial government of Ontario. I asked my hon. friend if he had under consideration the question of issuing licenses from his department, and from his answer it looks as if he intended in the near future to issue licenses. If he does, these licenses will certainly come into conflict with the licenses issued by the government of Ontario. We have had conflicts before between the government of Ontario and the government of the Dominion, and these have been very costly to the people of both the province and the Dominion, and I am very much surprised that my hon. friend, who represents the party that has always claimed to stand for provincial rights, should so willingly press in this committee a matter that might lead almost to a war between this government and the Ontario government. We have asked for information which my hon. friend is not able to give. I asked him if there had been any recent complaints made to his department of abuses of the fishing interests from those asking for licenses from the provincial government. The minister was unable to produce those written complaints, if there were any, and I think we should have them before the committee, to show whether there have been any general complaints of this kind, and, if so, how important they are. I think we should have all the correspondence between my hon. friend's department and the Ontario government with respect to this matter. Coming from the province of Ontario myself, I cannot understand why we should have two sets of officials to protect the fishing interests of that province. I am not going to say who is right. It looks at the moment as if the Ontario government had the right to issue licenses, because they have been doing so. I would like to know just how far my hon. friend has gone in this matter in order that a settlement might be brought about. We should have a more lucid explanation from the minister in respect of this matter. I think he should let the item stand until all this and other information can be brought, so that the House may understand who is responsible for a settlement not being brought about. I am of opinion that the provincial government is quite willing that this matter shall be settled amicably, and the best time to settle it is not after my hon. friend has an army of officers appointed to look after his interests in the province. The better time is before these officers get on far in the work. I regret that officers have been appointed at all. Was my hon. friend in the House last year when his estimates appropriating the portion of the money to pay inspectors was voted?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think so.

Mr. BLAIN. I think not. I looked up 'Hansard', and found that the matter was in the hands of another minister, and there was no explanation at all beyond the statement that a portion of this money was to pay inspectors. We were entitled at that time to a fuller explanation, when there was going to be a change of policy entailing a conflict with the Ontario government. I am not complaining of my hon. friend, who was at the time in ill health ant not able to give us a fuller explanation. Now for the first time we have the hon. minister in his place when this matter is up for consideration, and he should be the first to suggest that it should be left over until he is able to present such information as he has in his department to satisfy the committee that an expenditure of this kind is required.

Mr. EDWARDS. A reason has been given by the hon. minister himself why a portion, at least, of this amount should not be voted. He has stated to the committee that the salaries of these appointees began on the 11th of February. That means that for about three months they will have nothing to do, so that at least one-fourth of the year's salary will not be earned by anything in the shape of practical work. Therefore the minister has condemned at least one-fourth of the amount which he is asking for as payment to these men. The hon. minister says that the officers of the Ontario government are appointed for the whole year. These men have been appointed, and their services go on from year to year. These are new appointees, and it seems to me that if the minister were inclined to be economical, he would have the salaries of these men start when their duties begin, and not two or three months before their duties could begin. This amount will not cover the expenditure, because I think the hon. minister will admit that many of these officers will have to be provided with gasolene launches, in order properly to do their duty. It is strange to me that from 1896 down to the time the Whitney government took office, the hon. minister did not seem to think any such regulation as this was necessary, although it was well known from one end of the province to the other that the fishery overseers appointed by the Dominion government for the province of Ontario were making use of their offices for political purposes—that they were allowing men belonging to the Liberal party to violate the law without bringing them to time. All of this passed without any comment on the part of the gentlemen opposite. They did not consider it necessary, when the Liberal government was in power at Toronto, to appoint any fishery officials from Ottawa. But now when they find that the reins of power have been taken out of their hands in Ontario, and they dread lest they be taken out of their hands in the Dominion, they find it necessary to appoint a horde of fishery inspectors and overseers solely for political purposes.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Do I understand the hon. minister to say that the Dominion government assert their right to issue licenses concurrently with the Ontario government?

Mr. BRODEUR. We have not asserted that right.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Do you intend to?

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Then the number of fishermen will entirely depend on the Ontario government?

Mr. BRODEUR. As regards fishing licenses, yes.

Mr. SPROULE. As there is evidently a conflict here which ought to be straightened out before we dispose of this item, I would suggest that my hon. friend from Dauphin (Mr. Campbell) should withdraw the motion he has put, and that the hon. minister should let this vote stand until we get the information which he says is in his department. In the meantime I think that if he communicated with the Ontario government, both governments might agree on a conference which would result in an amicable settlement of this question—a question which will undoubtedly lead to considerable trouble if not amicably settled.

Mr. CAMPBELL. After listening to my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule), I am quite willing to withdraw my motion on the understanding that this matter is to be held over. In any case I intended to ask permission to amend my motion so as to word it somewhat differently. I understood that this was an itemized vote, or I would not have moved that the whole vote be struck off. I would ask, therefore, to be allowed to amend my motion so as to move that '$26,500 be struck off the amount we are asked to vote,' that $22,500 being the sum required to pay these 45 employees. If the hon. minister is willing to take the suggestion of my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule), I am quite ready to withdraw my motion; but if he is not willing to let this item stand until the information asked for from this side be submitted to the committee, I would ask to have my motion put as I have amended it. I leave it to the hon. minister, whose good sense is always evident in times of stress, whether he should not come to the conclusion that we are only asking for what is very reasonable.

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not know that I would have said anything had not my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) spoken so enthusiastically for every man in the province of Ontario. He said he was sure that there was not a man in that province who would stand for such a proposition as this. Well, I am quite sure of the contrary. I happen to know something about this question. When the decision of the Privy Council was given, the transfer of the right to issue these licenses from the Dominion to the provinces was not made at once. Some time elapsed after that decision was given before it was carried into effect and the transfer made from the federal to the provincial authorities. That transfer was absolutely experimental as every one knows who has had anything to do with it. I am not a lawyer, but to me the decision of the Privy Council was as clear as mud. I had quite enough to do at that time trying to work it out in the province. I saw there was going to be a conflict which could not be avoided between the two authorities under that decision. There is no question among the men who were taking a deep interest in the matter at that time that the arrangement made, in so far as regards this federal authority not taking such an active part was concerned, was altogether experimental. When on the government side in the Ontario House I discussed it, as I also did when on the opposition side. I took the ground which my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) has taken, that if there was any way of getting rid of one jurisdiction or the other, and leaving the question entirely to one of them, that would remove the difficulty, but that did not seem possible. Neither side in the Ontario House is willing to concede anything of what they think they got by the judgment of the Privy Council. That being the case the question of negotiation only resolves itself into this. Let the federal authority hand over its jurisdiction to the provinces. Well, I am not sure that we would be performing our duty if we should do that. It is all very well for us to say that we must not interfere with provincial jurisdiction; but that cannot rid us of our own responsibility one iota. There is a responsibility resting on this government for the preservation of fish, and this government cannot shirk that responsibility. There is another statement which I make advisely, and in making it I am not speaking more of the provincial inspectors and overseers of to-day than of those under the late government. So far as the regulations of the Dominion are concerned, the provincial officers have never tried to enforce them with a heart and will as if these regulations were their own.

And they are not so particular. They will come—and this has come within my own knowledge—to a fisherman, and, being tender hearted men, when the fisherman says: 'That is a very stringent regulation,' they will say: We do not want to put it into force, if it were not that this is a Dominion regulation we would not put it in force this way. The fisherman knows that he does not have to observe that regulation strictly, because the authority that is supposed to enforce it has not it at heart. I admit all the difficulties and clashing of jurisdiction. But we shall never come to an arrangement, I believe, until this federal authority takes advantage of its powers under the decision of the Privy Council. Then it may dawn on some people that the situation is such that there must be only one power. But, so long as the regulations are not enforced by the Dominion authority, it is not enforced and everybody knows it. I am not blaming the provincial authority very much; they look upon these regulations as something that are a superfluous duty, something for which they are not paid, and they have no heart in the work. That is not as it should be. And, until the federal authority and provincial authorities can come to an agreement—and it is not a small question or one that can be settled offhand—it is the duty of this government to have their own officials, not to be over officious or to attend to matters outside their duty, but to see that the regulations which the Privy Council says the federal authority has power to make are enforced. One hon. member referred to the salaries, and said that some guardians received $40 a year. I say that the payment of that amount is merely a gift, the man who gets it does nothing for it, and is not expected to.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). That is what I said.

Mr. GRAHAM. And I agree with the hon. member (Mr. Gordon, Nipissing) thoroughly. If a man is going to do anything he must get some pay for it. I had some experience with these payments of $25 a year to officers. What can you ask a man to do for $25 or $40? You do not expect him to do anything, and he generally earns his money at that. I hope the time will come when this question will be straightened out. But you cannot straighten it out in a few months. In the meantime, it is the duty of this government to assume the responsibility and manifest the courage necessary to the carrying out of its own regulations.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). Does the hon. minister know the Dominion regulations have not been observed by the fishermen in Lake Nipissing?

Mr. GRAHAM. If I were the member for Nipissing, I should like to be consulted on that point.

Mr. LENNOX. Are they not enforced on Lake Simcoe?

Mr. GRAHAM. Even Lake Nipissing and Lake Simcoe are not the whole of Ontario.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have been asked by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) to bring down certain correspondence with regard to the issuing of licenses. I said I would comply with that request, but, of course, I have not the papers with me. I understand that, in the meantime, the hon. gentleman will let the item go. He is within his right to ask for the papers, and they will be brought down. We might proceed with the next item.

Mr. CAMPBELL. After listening to the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) I am sure that this committee sees the question exactly as he sees it, and to us all it must appear as clear as mud. Let me refer the minister to page 5480 of 'Hansard' of 1905, where he will find a question of my hon. friend from Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Boyce) and its answer:

1. Were any requests made to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries last year for the appointment of a commission to investigate the conditions of the fisheries on the Georgian bay, Lake Huron, or Lake Superior?
2. If so, by whom were such requests made, and when?
3. What action was taken upon such requests?

And this was replied to by the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) himself as follows:

1. Yes.
2. The fishermen of Georgian bay by a memorial, dated February 22, 1904.
3. All the preparatory steps were taken for the appointment of a commission; but owing to differences of opinion as to the most suitable season of the year for the sittings of such commission, the matter was held over until the present year. It is proposed to arrange for sittings during the present year.

I would like to ask whether these things were settled and what came of them?

Mr. BRODEUR. The commission was appointed, and the hon. member will find that in its report was a statement to the effect that the regulations were not properly carried out.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This commission was appointed six years ago, and made certain suggestions. Was one of those suggestions that forty or fifty men should be appointed to go over the ground already covered by the appointees of the Ontario government?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, the report stated that the federal regulations were not carried out, and so we thought it advisable to take this step for their enforcement.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This matter has been discussed at some length and it is now twelve o'clock. There is much information still to be brought out, and I think the remainder of the discussion might be postponed.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is understood that we are going to take the other items.

Mr. JAMESON. The Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) says that when an officer is given a salary of $40 a year, he is not expected to do any work for it, and does not. I ask the minister whether in his department any salaries of $40 a year or less are now being paid to officials?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am sorry to say that in some parts of the maritime provinces small salaries of that kind are being paid. When we came to appoint overseers for Ontario we thought it better to appoint a smaller number of men and pay them larger salaries, and hence, we have appointed forty-five officials for the whole province, while in Nova Scotia there are that number in some counties alone.

Mr. DANIEL. What county in Nova Scotia has forty-five fishery overseers?

Mr. BRODEUR. I know there are some, but I cannot mention them offhand.

Mr. BOYCE. How many are you appointing to the Lake Superior division?

Mr. BRODEUR. Two overseers.

Mr. LENNOX. There is a want of harmony amongst the departments in regard to the payment of small salaries. The Minister of Railways told us that a man who only gets $40 a year should not be expected to do anything, but in the Post Office Department there are thousands of postmasters and postmistresses who, the Postmaster General seems to think, should supply part of their houses as a post office, and devote all their time to the service, and live on the princely salary of $34.50 per annum net.

Mr. TALBOT. I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman; is this discussion in order?

Mr. LENNOX. It is quite in order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. As an illustration it is in order.

Mr. LENNOX. It is given as an illustration of the different views taken by the different departments on this question and my hon. friend (Mr. Talbot) may rest easy. It is a bad policy to cut people down to salaries so low that they are not expected to do any work, and I hope the Postmaster General will take note of the announcement made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries with reference to paying his officials large salaries, and that he will do something to increase the pay given to postmasters and postmistresses.

Motion (Mr. Campbell) withdrawn.

Mr. JAMESON. Does the minister intend to put in force in the maritime provinces the system he has given effect to in Ontario, namely, appointing a smaller number of officials and giving them larger salaries. Will the Minister of Marine displace these officials in Nova Scotia who are receiving small salaries, and who, according to the Minister of Railways, are not expected to do any work?

Mr. BRODEUR. If I thought that system would be satisfactory in Nova Scotia I would gladly put it in effect. The matter is engaging the consideration of the department.

Building fishways and clearing rivers, $10,000.

Mr. JAMESON. To-day I received a complaint from a resident of Digby county with regard to the dumping of sawdust in a stream. I can read the letter, or if the minister prefers, I will transmit it to his department, so that it may be dealt with. I presume the intention of the department is that the streams shall be kept free from sawdust and debris injurious to fish life, and that a complaint of this kind will be inquired into and a remedy provided if a remedy is necessary.

Mr. BRODEUR. If the hon. member would be kind enough to send the correspondence to the department I will see that the necessary steps are taken.

Mr. CROSBY. Is it the intention of the minister to clear the riverway at the head of Ketch harbour in the county of Halifax?

Mr. BRODEUR. I will have the matter investigated.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is provision made for fishways at St. Andrew's dam and locks on the Red river?

Mr. BRODEUR. The present condition of that matter is well understood by the hon. members for Selkirk and Lisgar, and negotiations are pending as to a fishway at Pembina river and at St. Andrew's locks.

Mr. DANIEL. I always understood that the department compelled those who built dams to provide fishways.

Mr. BRODEUR. When new dams are built the owners are, generally speaking, called upon to put in the necessary fishways. The Act authorizes the minister to pay a share of the cost and in the case of old dams where fishways are being provided, the government sometimes pays a share of the expense.

Mr. DANIEL. Was any part of this appropriation used last year for this purpose?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, during the last fiscal year we paid $1,475.91.

Mr. DANIEL. Where was that expended?

Mr. BRODEUR. All over Canada.

Mr. JAMESON. Who is in charge of this work? I see that the Auditor General under the heading of 'Building fishways and clearing rivers' has the following entry:

R. M. S. Mignault, St. Michel d'Yamaska, salary, 12 m. to Mar. 31, 1910, $1,200.

Is there an officer permanently employed in charge of this work?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, he is the officer in charge. The man who is looking after this work in the maritime provinces is the inspector of the district there.

Mr. JAMESON. Are we to understand that it is necessary to have a salaried officer drawing $1,200 to look after an expenditure of $1,400?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is not so much the amount of money that is expended, but it is necessary to look after the construction of dams, and to see that fishways are provided. We have provided that all dams shall be built with fishways, and I think it shows that that work is being carried out.

Mr. JAMESON. I do not think it does. We have not had any statement of what has been done in this connection beyond the few items which refer to it in the Auditor General's Report. I would like the minister to inform the committee as to the extent of this gentleman's work.

Mr. BRODEUR. He is the inspector of fisheries, and he is called upon to see that fishways are built in the dams which are being constructed.

Legal and incidental expenses, $4,000.

Mr. BLAIN. What is this for?

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to meet the legal expenses which are incurred during the year in connection with the fisheries.

Mr. LENNOX. How much was expended last year?

Mr. BRODEUR. $1,430.28.

Mr. BLAIN. To whom was it paid?

Mr. BRODEUR. The Justice Department selects the lawyers and we pay them.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Does this cover the amount that will be paid with regard to the cancellation of the leases in the northwest?

Mr. BRODEUR. It would come out of this.

Mr. CAMPBELL. As long as these leases are cancelled it would be cheap at the money.

Canadian fisheries exhibit, $16,000.

Mr. SPROULE. This is the usual vote?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Oyster culture, $10,000.

Mr. JAMESON. We want some statement as to what has been done.

Mr. BRODEUR. With regard to oyster culture the question of jurisdiction is still pending as between the government and the different provinces. The provinces claimed that they had the right to issue leases for oyster beds within the three-mile limit. The federal authorities contended that this power was vested in the federal authority. However, the question is going to be submitted to the courts. In the meantime we have reached a modus vivendi with the maritime provinces by which leases may be given for oyster beds in the barren places. The matter is almost concluded. There are still some negotiations going on, but the principle has been adopted and I expect that in a few days the order in council will be passed to give effect to the settlement.

Mr. JAMESON. What is the term of the lease the department will grant?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is likely to be twenty years, and the amount will likely be $3 per acre.

Mr. JAMESON. I would like to ask the minister where Captain Kemp is prosecuting his inquiries and making his experiments.

Mr. BRODEUR. He made some experiments last year in Richmond bay. He started a bed there and it is our intention to have him do the same thing in the two other provinces.

Mr. JAMESON. Some years ago Captain Kemp planted some oysters in the Annapolis basin, off Goat island, and there was a brief reference to his work when he was before the committee with respect to the matter. At that time he stated that he had not made any examination of the bed since, that a light keeper had been placed in charge of it, that no report had been received at the department since then, and he was not in a position to say in what state it was, or whether the oysters had grown or not. I would like to ask whether any report has been received since that time, whether the minister is in a position to state what the condition of the bed is and what the result of Captain Kemp's work is.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, the oysters were planted at Annapolis at the place which my hon. friend has named and after a couple of years when he went there he could not find much trace of the oysters.

Mr. JAMESON. He did not go back in a couple of years.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. JAMESON. He stated in his evidence before the committee that he did not go back.

Mr. BRODEUR. He went back last year.

Mr. JAMESON. That is seven years after the bed was planted.

Mr. BRODEUR. He was there two years after it was planted. That is the information I received just now. It was found that unfortunately there was not much left. However, he believes that it would be a suitable place for oysters to be planted.

Mr. JAMESON. I understand that there was a suggestion made—I do not know whether by Captain Kemp himself, or some one else—in conversation with some person who was interested in this question, that the oysters had been taken by local persons and used in the usual way. If the department would instruct Captain Kemp to see that another bed was planted there and would look after it we might have some results from his work. I am told that there is a very good ground along there and also in St. Mary's bay, and a part of the Bay of Fundy, for the growth of oysters, and I hope the minister will see that this person does a fair share of his work in various parts of the maritime provinces and does not confine his operations to Prince Edward Island where, I understand, he has been working of late.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is the intention to plant another oyster bed this year in Nova Scotia or New Brunswick. Last year it was in Prince Edward Island, but it is the intention to have it in other provinces.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 12.17 a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, April 5, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

QUEBEC BRIDGE, SERVICES OF MR. COOPER.

*Mr. LENNOX:

1. How often, before construction was actually commenced, at what dates, and for how long on each occasion, did Mr. Cooper visit and remain at the site of the Quebec bridge?
2. The same information is asked in regard to the period when construction began and the collapse of the bridge?
3. What was the nature of the service performed by Mr. Cooper on each of these occasions?
4. Was Mr. Cooper at any time retained to act for or on behalf of the government or the Railway Department, in connection with the Quebec bridge? If so, when, how, for how long, and at what remuneration?
5. Did the government or department understand during the time the bridge was in course of erection that Mr. Cooper was inspecting engineer and having oversight of the work, and did the government or department during this period take any, and if so, what steps to ascertain whether Mr. Cooper was actually and regularly inspecting the work?

Mr. BRODEUR:

1, 2 and 3. Mr. Cooper was at the bridge site on several occasions during the summer of 1903, 1904 and 1905. He examined the site, south pier and other works and the plans and specifications.

4. He was appointed by the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company on May 6, 1900, with the approval of the government. He had no remuneration from the government.

5. He was not inspecting engineer, but consulting engineer, and most of his duties were performed in his office in New York and not in Quebec. Mr. Norman McClure was appointed inspecting engineer by Mr. Cooper some time before April, 1905, and he made weekly reports to Mr. Cooper as to the progress and condition of the work and an additional special report when something would occur requiring more prompt attention.

Mr. LENNOX. The expression 'inspecting engineer,' is a phrase which I got from the minister's statement the other night, in the House.

WINGHAM PUBLIC BUILDING.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Huron):

Has the Department of Public Works expended the money voted during the last session of parliament for the construction of a clock in the tower of the government public building at Wingham? If not, why not?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, on account of pressure of work during the past fiscal year, the tower clock for Wingham post office was not reached, but will be attended to as early as possible during the present fiscal year.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—MR. J. W. GASKIN.

Mr. TAYLOR:

1. Was John W. Gaskin, foreman in the electrical department of the Intercolonial railway, Moncton, during the year charged with appropriating goods belonging to the Intercolonial railway?
2. If so, what quantity and what was the nature of the goods he was charged with appropriating?
3. Was an investigation held in connection therewith? If so, what was the outcome of the investigation?
4. What was the date of his dismissal, if he was dismissed as a result of the above charge?
5. Was any restitution ever made by Gaskin of property said to have been stolen by him?

Mr. GRAHAM:

1. No charge was made against John W. Gaskin of appropriating goods belonging to the Intercolonial railway.
2. Answered by No. 1.
3. No investigation was held.
4. He was not dismissed from the service.
5. He was held responsible for having permitted the loading of a greater weight of scrap than was purchased and paid for by Harvey Gaskin, and he was punished by being compelled to pay $290.89, the value of this excess weight of scrap.

Mr. TAYLOR:

1. What amounts of scrap brass was purchased by one John W. Gaskin, foreman in the electrical department of the Intercolonial railway, Moncton, while he was in government employ?

2. What prices did he pay for the same during the years 1906, 1907 and 1908?

3. Is the said Gaskin now in the employ of the government in the electrical department of the Intercolonial railway at Moncton?

Mr. GRAHAM:

1. No scrap brass was sold to John W. Gaskin, foreman in the electrical department of the Intercolonial railway.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. He is still in the employ of the electrical department of the Intercolonial railway at Moncton.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—MR. JOHN T. HAWKE.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds):

1. Has Mr. John T. Hawke, proprietor of the Moncton 'Transcript,' any special right or privilege to make use of the freight sheds of the Intercolonial railway at Moncton for the storage of his newsprint rolls?

2. Is the government aware that Mr. Hawke has been, as alleged, making use of the said freight sheds for years without paying one cent of demurrage for the above purpose?

3. Why is the said Mr. Hawke forced from time to time to pay demurrage on small parcels of light weight, when at the same time he is said to be continuously blocking the Intercolonial railway freight shed with bulk newsprint rolls that weigh from 700 to 900 pounds each, in quantities sometimes that would constitute an entire carload?

Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Mr. Hawke has no special right to make use of the Intercolonial Railway freight shed. He receives about nine carloads of paper per annum, which he unloads immediately on arrival taking a part to his newspaper office. The balance is left for a short time before being removed.

2. As stated in answer to No. 1 space has been occupied but it did not in any way inconvenience the public or the railway.

3. He is treated exactly the same way that all other patrons are treated in regard to small consignments. The freight shed has never been continuously blocked or even any inconvenience caused by the paper being held.

G. W. BELL AND PASS INVESTIGATION.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds):

1. Did the linesmen of the New Brunswick Fence Company travel on the Intercolonial railway from point to point, while doing construction work, on passes, with the consent of the railway officials?

2. Is it true that Mr. G. W. Bell, who reported on the pass investigation to the Honourable the Minister of Railways, obtained the greater part of his information from Dr. Chas. A. Murray, of Moncton?

Mr. GRAHAM:

1. No.

2. No.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—DISMISSAL OF BLAIR MAGEE.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds):

Was Blair Magee of the electrical department of the Intercolonial railway dismissed? If so, for what reason?

Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Blair Magee of the electrical department of the Intercolonial railway, was suspended in April, 1909, for neglecting his duties. He was not formally dismissed, but he does not appear to have asked to be reinstated.

SUSSEX STREET DEPARTMENT BUILDING.

Mr. THORNTON:

1. From whom are the properties bought on Sussex street on which it is proposed to erect the new government buildings, and how much was paid to each of the persons from whom the properties were bought?

2. What was the total cost of the site?

3. Did the government buy the buildings with land? If so, have the building been sold, and what total sum was obtained for them?

4. What did the site for the new Museum building at the foot of Metcalfe street cost?

5. What was the total cost of the new Museum building?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

OVERCROWDING IN POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. SPROULE:

What branch of the Postmaster General's Department is located in the basement of the Langevin Block, how many employees occupy offices there, how long have they occupied these offices, what are the sizes of the offices, and how many employees are in each room?

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. (a) The Postal Stores Branch, and the Stamp Branch.

(b) 47 in the Postal Stores Branch and 3 in the Stamp Branch.

(c) Since the year 1889.

Size of rooms occupied by Postal Stores Branch in basement of Langevin block and number of employees in each room:

No. of Room.	No. of Men.	Size of Room.	Occupied by stores, cupboards, &c.	Free Air Space.
		cub. ft.	cub. ft.	cub. ft.

In addition to the above, one room in the basement (No. 13) is occupied by three employees of the Stamp Branch for the purpose of checking, racking and distributing therefrom the bulky items of the postage stamp issue, such as stamped envelopes, post cards, post bonds, &c. The size of the room in question is 19 feet 6 inches in length by 11 feet 6 inches in width and 8 feet 6 inches in height.

2. No.

Mr. PUGSLEY

3. The matter is engaging the attention of this department.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—DISTRICT C.

Mr. LENNOX:

1. Why is it that only about 28 per cent of the work under contract No. 12, District C, Transcontinental, has been executed, and when will it be completed?

2. The same inquiry is made as to contract 16 D, where less than 13 per cent has been done?

3. Why has the work not been commenced on contracts 13 C and 18 E, when will the work be commenced, and when will it presumably be completed?

4. Is there any other of the twenty-one upon which work has not been begun?

Mr. GRAHAM: 1, 2 and 3. The reason why only about 28 per cent of the work on contract No. 12 has been executed is because all supplies, material and plant necessary for the prosecution of the work have to be taken in from the east, and until contract No. 11 was far enough advanced to admit of this the work could not be started on No. 12.

Contract No. 13 is in the same position, and until work is further advanced on No. 12 work on No. 13 cannot be commenced.

Contract No. 16 is in the same position which is dependent on work done on contract No. 15, so as to admit of transportation. As to contract No. 18, work has been commenced and up to February 28, 1911, 69·40 per cent of the contract had been done.

It is impossible to state exactly when any of these contracts will be completed, but it is estimated that they will all be completed in 1912.

4. No.

AGRICULTURAL EXPENDITURES IN ONTARIO.

Mr. BLAIN:

1. What amount of money has been expended by the Department of Agriculture within the province of Ontario during the last fiscal year?

2. What amount was paid in salaries and wages?

Mr. FISHER :

1. Expenditure, $605,527.53.

2. Salaries and wages, $445,503.11.

RECIPROCITY—ADMISSION OF OLEOMARGARINE.

Mr. BLAIN:

Will oleomargarine be admitted free into Canada under the proposed tariff agreement between the United States and Canada?

Mr. PATERSON. No.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

On the orders of the day being called:

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would ask the Minister of Agriculture when a return with regard to methods of taking the census in various countries will probably be brought down.

Mr. FISHER. I could at once lay on the table a return giving the information for England, the United States, France and Belgium, but the officials are trying to obtain information with regard to Germany and one or two other countries. If my hon. friend likes, I will bring down the partial return to-morrow.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). A partial return of that kind would be desirable, and it could be supplemented by the further return to which the minister alludes.

QUEBEC BRIDGE—CONTRACT FOR SUPERSTRUCTURE LET.

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce to the House that the contract for the construction and erection of the superstructure of the bridge to span the St. Lawrence river, near the city of Quebec, was to-day duly signed and executed.

The straightening out of the difficulties surrounding this undertaking has been a work fraught with much anxiety, and not a little industry. The undertaking was such a vast one that the engineers engaged on the board fully realized that every step should be made only after the fullest investigation. Differences of opinion arose between these able men which were altogether of a technical nature, and could only be understood by men with a theoretical knowledge and practical experience in bridge building.

The original intention, and in fact the scheme contemplated until very recently, provided for roadways, street railway traffic, as well as steam railway tracks. The majority of the board, after full consideration, recommended the acceptance of the tender of the St. Lawrence Bridge Company, upon a design of their own, which included provision for street railway and driveways. In doing so they called attention to the fact that another design had been submitted by the same company for a purely railway bridge. By the adoption of the latter proposition, it was pointed out that a very material saving could be made.

The government fully considered this suggestion and, as a result, the contract has been signed with the St. Lawrence Bridge Company for a railway bridge which will also have two four-foot sidewalks. The cost of this will be, at the estimated quantities, $8,650,000.

There has been deposited with the government, as security for the carrying out of this project $1,297,500, or 15 per cent of the contract price.

The stock-holders in the Dominion Bridge Company of Montreal, and the Canadian Bridge Company of Walkerville, Ontario, organized the St. Lawrence Bridge Company, but in addition to the last named company signing the contract, the two parent companies, the Dominion Bridge Company, and the Canadian Bridge Company, have guaranteed the carrying out of the work.

Considering the very many difficulties that have surrounded this entire project I am of the opinion that the very best possible contract has been made, and fully believe that these purely Canadian companies are competent to accomplish the task they have undertaken, and that the result will be a credit not only to Canada, but to the ability of the men at the head of these great industries.

As the province of Quebec contributed $250,000, and the city of Quebec $300,000, to the original bridge scheme, as subsidy for the construction of the roadways, it is but fair that these amounts should be returned.

Mr. LENNOX. Will the minister inform the House as to the time for completion mentioned in the contract?

Mr. GRAHAM. I shall lay a copy of the contract on the table in a couple of days with all the particulars.

RECIPROCITY—CONTINUED PAYMENT OF FISHING BOUNTIES

Mr. JAMESON. Does the government intend to continue the payment of fishing bounties to Canadian fishermen in the event of the reciprocity agreement going into effect?

Mr. BRODEUR. We have to pay them under the law now in existence.

Mr. JAMESON. Would the payment be continued as heretofore in the event of the reciprocity agreement going into effect?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not see why it should be discontinued.

Mr. JAMESON. Will it be possible for the United States authorities to pay a similar bounty to American fishermen if this agreement is ratified?

Mr. BRODEUR. That would be for the United States authorities to decide.

Mr. JAMESON. Was this subject of bounties to Canadian or American fishermen discussed by the commissioners of Canada and the commissioners of the United States at the time this agreement was being prepared, and was it understood that a corresponding bounty or any bounty was to be paid to the United States fishermen, or that no such bounty would be paid to United States fishermen by the United States in view of payment of our bounty?

Mr. FIELDING. I have already stated in answer to the question of another hon. gentleman that nothing was understood; there are understandings in this matter, there is nothing but what is to be found in the agreement itself, and that which cannot be found in the agreement has no existence.

Mr. JAMESON. If the United States choose to pay a bounty to its fishermen after the ratification of this agreement it can do so, so far as any agreement is concerned?

Mr. FIELDING. I can only say that there has been no understanding or agreement on the subject. All these matters would have to be discussed if they arose, but there has been no understanding on the matter at all.

WATER-CARRIED FREIGHT.

Mr. LENNOX. In his annual statement on the railway situation on March 10 last, the Minister of Railways and Canals pointed out the increased value of water carried freight. He was asked if he could distinguish between freight which originated in Canada, and that which was of American production, and the minister intimated that some subsequent time he would endeavour to give that information. When are we likely to get it?

Mr. GRAHAM. So far as possible that division is made either in the report of the railway board or the statistical branch.

Mr. LENNOX. It might be possible, by the exercise of a great deal of labour and ingenuity, to ascertain it, but I understood from the minister that, by means of the staff at his disposal, he would furnish the House with that information. Does he say now that he will endeavour to do so?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

THE QUEBEC BRIDGE.

Mr. LENNOX. The other night the hon. minister said he would furnish information as to the actual supervision over the Quebec bridge and the amount that had been paid for such supervision. Will he also bear that in mind?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think I gave the information at the time that only one man was employed at $75 or $70 a month.

Mr. LENNOX. I did not understand my hon. friend to give that as a final answer. There was just this one man which he mentioned that night, and apparently that is the only supervision which the government have over the Quebec bridge.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend is not warranted in drawing that conclusion. He asked me what men were the department paying for, who were employed on the Quebec bridge, and I thought he was endeavouring to get at the amount which has been paid out on account of that undertaking. But there is other supervision, every detail as to which I gave the other night. These others are regular departmental officers who are not paid specially for their services in connection with the Quebec bridge.

Mr. LENNOX. But these have no actual supervision or inspection of the work?

Mr. GRAHAM. I explained the details the other night and every word will be found in 'Hansard.'

Mr. ARMSTRONG. When does the minister expect the bridge will be completed?

Mr. GRAHAM. In reply to my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), I said a few moments ago that I would lay a copy of the contract on the table in a few days.

FISHERY OFFICERS—VICTORIA, NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. MADDIN. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries what progress is being made with a return ordered nearly two months ago for a list of the fishery officers in the county of Victoria, N.S.

Mr. BRODEUR. That was brought down a few days ago.

Mr. MADDIN. An hon. member tells me that he has a record of its having been brought down the 24th of March, but I have been unable to get possession of it, although I called at the office where these reports are kept and asked for it on one or two occasions.

Mr. BRODEUR. Of course I am not responsible for that. As soon as returns are brought down they are in the possession of the officers of the House and not in our control.

Mr. MADDIN. One or two instances which have come under my personal observation emphasize the importance of giving notice to the one who moved for the return when that return is brought down. There would then be no such confusion as has arisen on several occasions this session.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax), The best way to accomplish that would be this. Let there be in the distribution office a number of printed forms which would require only a word or two to be filled in. Then, as soon as a return comes in, let the officer in charge send out one of these forms to the member who moved for it.

ANGLO-JAPANESE COMMERCIAL TREATY.

Mr. FOSTER. I saw an announcement in the paper this morning that the Anglo-Japanese commercial treaty has been signed. Has the right hon. the Prime Minister any information as to where Canada stands in relation to that treaty?

Mr. FIELDING. Canada is for the present not included in that treaty, but the question is under consideration as to whether we may desire to be included in it or have a separate arrangement.

Mr. FOSTER. When may we expect a copy of that treaty?

Mr. FIELDING. As soon as received, I shall be happy to lay it on the table. Whether we should adhere to the English treaty or have a treaty of our own is under consideration.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the government makes up its mind, does it intend to advise the House as to the nature of the treaty?

Mr. FIELDING. So soon as the British treaty becomes public property I shall lay it on the table. As to what action will be taken by the government, that is another matter.

Mr. FOSTER. But before laying it on the table, the government might decide whether to adhere to that treaty or not, and my question is whether the government will take that position before consulting the House.

Mr. FIELDING. I would not like to lay it down as a principle that the government should not do anything in these matters without first coming to the House. At present I have no objection but would not like to lay down the rule that the government should submit such matters to the House in advance.

Mr. FOSTER. I am simply asking for my hon. friend's opinion in this matter which is of special interest.

Mr. FIELDING. Inasmuch as a special case might make a precedent for a general rule, it would be well that I should speak under reserve.

THE RECIPROCITY AGREEMENT.

Mr. LENNOX. Has the attention of the Finance Minister been called to the fact that the United States government has recently established a publicity bureau and that this bureau is under the control of Mr. Champ Clarke and two other gentlemen and at present is especially dealing with the question of reciprocity. Some of the issues of this publication which have already come out have dealt with important phases of that question. I would ask the minister if he would be good enough to obtain copies of that publication while this reciprocity matter is being discussed so that we may have the advantage of using it.

Mr. FIELDING. I would not like to promise to open up any negotiations with Mr. Champ Clarke.

Mr. LENNOX. It is not necessary that the minister should enter into negotiations with Mr. Champ Clarke or any official of the United States government. All that is necessary is that he should apply to the publishers for a sufficient number of copies to supply the members of this House.

Mr. FIELDING. I have reason to believe that all the public documents of the United States are received in our library and are open to every hon. member.

Mr. LENNOX. I have inquired at the library, and this publication has not yet arrived there but I presume that ultimately it will. One copy in the library however, is not sufficient for all the members of this House. We have a right to this document and it is our duty to study it in order to arrive at a proper conclusion, and let the people know that we are speaking by the book. I assume it would not be unreasonable to request that the government should take steps to supply the House with a sufficient number of copies, but of course if the government refuse to do so, I shall endeavour to procure a copy for myself.

Mr. FIELDING. Any intimation given the librarian that additional copies of any public document are required would no doubt be received by him and he would endeavour to meet it. If the hon. gentleman will mention the matter to the librarian, I am sure he will get the copy he desires. If it would suit him better that I should convey his message, I have no objection to do so.

THE BANK ACT.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I desire to ask the government what they propose to do about the Bank Act, which has been mentioned many times in the House? I ask because I observe that the Bill has been on government orders since the 15th of December last, without any steps whatever having been taken, so far as I am aware. That is a period of nearly four months; and during that time this Bill might have been under consideration by the Committee on Banking and Commerce, to which it is usual to refer such a measure. I would like to inquire whether it is the intention to proceed with the Bill this session or not. If it is the intention, I would ask what is the reason of this delay of four months?

Mr. FIELDING. I assume that the hon gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax), was not present on the occasion, a few days ago, when precisely the same question was asked by another hon. member. I made a statement on the subject which will be found in 'Hansard,' and I think the hon. gentleman will find that I dealt with the exact point he has mentioned.

RECIPROCAL TRADE WITH UNITED STATES.

Mr. PERLEY. On Monday last we had some discussion about statistics, showing the comparative prices of certain commodities in the United States and Canada which are absolutely necessary to a due discussion of the reciprocity agreement. The Prime Minister said that he would ask for some information on the subject. I desire to ask if the right hon. gentleman has secured that information?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I made some inquiries from Sir Richard Cartwright, but have not had an answer from him yet.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 155) to amend the Canada Shipping Act. He said: My object in moving the second reading is not to discuss the Bill. But representations have been made by several hon. members concerning the Bill, and it is understood that the measure should be referred to the Committee on Marine and Fisheries with a view to hearing interested parties. Immediately on the second reading, should it be agreed to, I will move that the Bill be so referred.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

Mr. BRODEUR moved that the said Bill be referred to the Committee on Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. SPROULE. This committee and some others were extra committees established a few years ago, but under our rules, no provision is made for sending Bills to them. I do not rise to say that I think it wrong to send Bills to this committee, but to call attention to the fact that we have standing committees to which Bills are sent. Bills relating to railways or canals go to the Railway Committee, those relating to banking or commerce go to the Banking and Commerce Committee, and miscellaneous private Bills go to the Private Bills Committee. If the rules were amended so as to provide that Bills relating to marine or fisheries could be sent to the Committee on Marine and Fisheries, it would be regular.

Mr. BRODEUR. The rule that my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) refers to, if I remember well, applies to private Bills, and indicates to which committee Bills of different character are to be sent. But, the House may send a public Bill to Committee of the Whole, or may refer it to a special committee or to a standing committee. I think that in this case it would be better to refer the measure to the Committee on Marine and Fisheries, as it pertains to a marine matter.

Motion agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS—ACCIDENTS ON THE INTERCOLONIAL.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go again into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. E. N. RHODES (Cumberland). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I desire to draw the attention of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) to a matter of serious importance as affecting a large number of people in Canada, those who have to travel by the Intercolonial railway. I refer to the large number of accidents which have happened on that road of late, accidents which have occurred with most disquieting frequency during the last few weeks. As a matter of fact, the condition has become more or less notorious. I do not think I can bring the matter to the attention of the minister and the House better than by reading two articles in a paper published in the province of Nova Scotia which has not been unfriendly to this government, and whose editor announces himself as being a supporter of this government. I quote from the Amherst 'Daily News,' of April 3, 1911:

> Only a few days ago, the 'News' chronicled two railway disasters on the Intercolonial railway, a collision at Evans' Siding and a run off at Londonderry Station. The accidents referred to tied up the traffic on the Intercolonial for several hours, endangered lives and destroyed much valuable property.
> Between last Saturday afternoon and Sunday evening there were no less than three more accidents on the Intercolonial. Kennedys's special jumped the track at Westchester Station. Ten freight cars were either totally or partially wrecked. the Maritime express bound west and the Canadian Pacific railway bound east had to proceed to their destination via the short line and Truro. The track remained blocked until yesterday morning, and No. 10 train, that is the Boston and Halifax express bound east, had also to reach Halifax via Oxford Junction, Pictou, New Glasgow, Truro. The wreck was of so serious a character that auxiliary trains were sent from Moncton, Truro and Stellarton to relieve the situation.

Yesterday, too, at Memramcook, Smith's special jumped the track and traffic would have been delayed if there were any trains running.

The chapter of accidents does not end here, however, another Intercolonial special ran off the track at West Bay, Cape Breton, on Saturday night and considerable damage to the track and rolling stock is reported.

These railway accidents are recurring week after week with monotonous frequency. Life is being threatened and public property is being destroyed. There must be some underlying cause for all these accidents and no time should be neglected in placing the responsibility.

Is the road undermanned? Are new rails and sleepers wanted? Is the rolling stock old and defective? Are the men careless or is the job of managing the Intercolonial too big for the Railway Commission? This can be said of a truth that in no time of the history of the Intercolonial were accidents so frequent as at the present time.

We cannot urge too strongly for our Maritime province members to bring this matter up in the House of Commons and to place the facts before the Minister of Railways and Canals and his deputy, Mr. Campbell. There is something rotten in the management of the Intercolonial.

It is very well to have a surplus, but down here by the sea we are not worried so much over having a balance on the right side of the books as we are in conserving lives and property. It is up to the Minister of Railways as the responsible head of the Intercolonial to order an investigation of the many and varied accidents that have recently occurred on the Intercolonial, and the heads of the men who are responsible for the same should be handed to him on a charger whether they occupy high or low positions. Numerous accidents mean inefficiency and inefficiency should be followed by immediate reform.

I find also in the same issue, the following editorial article:

Three more railway accidents occurred on the Intercolonial on Saturday and Sunday.

The accident record which the Intercolonial is establishing is simply damnable and should not be allowed to continue.

Is it possible that with a view of making a good financial showing necessary repairs on the road have been neglected? Is it possible that the number of operators have been so reduced that it is hardly safe to run trains from one station to another? Are the men on the Railway Board competent to fill their positions? Are the engines and cars tested and kept in such a condition as to warrant their use in active service? It is time that Honourable Mr. Graham and Deputy Minister Campbell should step in and order an investigation. The discharge of a brakeman or the suspension of an engineer will not satisfy the public. Our own opinion is that the Intercolonial railway is undermanned, that the roadbed has become impaired, and that rolling stock is sent out that should be in the repair shop. We may be wrong, but of this there can be no doubt, that there is a radical cause for the multiplication of accidents, and the cause should be found and the remedy vigorously applied.

It is rather peculiar that this should be the result, in view of the fact that it was a matter of more or less notoriety a few weeks ago, that there was a dispute between the traffic manager of the Intercolonial and the superintendent, which, according to the rumour at least, involved the resignation of one of these gentlemen, pending the settlement of the dispute. The subject at issue was as to whether the traffic manager had sufficient men to maintain the rolling stock of the Intercolonial railway in repair. The Intercolonial railway has in times past been the subject of much criticism, because it was felt that it did not meet the traffic requirements of the country which it serves. There may be some question as to that; but we must all agree upon this point, that it is the duty of the Minister of Railways and his department to have a thorough investigation into the conditions which at present exist on that line, and that a remedy should be applied, so that people who travel upon what is called 'the people's railway,' will not do so with misgivings as they do at present.

Mr. GRAHAM. I had not heard anything at all about the difficulty with the traffic manager; it is news to me, and is probably merely a rumour. I suppose there is no railway in the world that is run so much by rumour as the state-owned railways in this country. I do not admit that there is a greater number of accidents on the Intercolonial than any other railway. If the records are looked into, I think my hon. friend will find that that is so. As to the undermaning of the line, it will be found, I believe, that a greater number of men have been employed on the road this year than for some years past. It is true that we are handling much traffic at the present time, and the liability to accident increases with the volume of traffic. As to the rails and sleepers, nearly 700,000 new ties were placed on the Intercolonial this year, and a greater sum than for some years past was spent on the maintenance of the road. This much must be borne in mind—I am not saying it complainingly at all—it has always been the case, ever since I was old enough to read about the Intercolonial, that an accident on a state-owned railway gets a scare line heading in the newspapers, while an accident on a company railway gets two lines down in a corner, unless there is loss of life on the railway. On railways where the company owns the telegraph lines, there are thousands of accidents that are never heard of; but when an accident occurs on the Intercolonial it is given great prominence. I am not complaining about that; it is accounted for by the fact that it is a state-owned railway. I venture to say that on the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific railways, outside of accidents where loss of life occurs, there have been scores of accidents within the last few weeks about which the newspapers have not had a syllable, and they are just as great as accidents occurring on the Intercolonial that have prominent headings in the newspapers. No one can deplore an accident as much as the man in charge, and the head of the railway department feels more anxiety about these than any single individual can. As a matter of fact, before this article was written, and before my hon. friend had made his speech, I discussed this question of accidents with the chairman, and it was immediately taken up by the board, who are making full inquiry to see if there is not some way by which the number of accidents can be reduced. But after saying that, I still adhere to the statement that there is no greater number of accidents on the Intercolonial, that it is not undermanned, and that it is not in bad condition. There is one point I wish to mention, and when hon. gentlemen are discussing the subject I would like them to bear it in mind, that when complaint is made about purchasing goods on the Intercolonial by tender, probably that applies to axles, wheels and tires, and as my predecessor before me, so I myself, have refused to abide by the rule which says that he must accept the lowest tender for those goods. Great complaint has been found with the department by members of this House whose friends had appealed to them complaining that when they wished to sell some of these goods to the Intercolonial they were passed over, and a better grade of goods was bought. Several of the accidents this year, I am told, have been caused by broken axles, a broken tire or wheel. I do not say that they were of that cheap quality; but I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that it is false economy to buy a cheap article of that kind. When we are discussing these matters in supply, hon. gentlemen will find that we have adopted a policy of buying the best article we can find for that department, though costing considerably more money, for a broken wheel or a broken axle in an accident, to say nothing of the loss of life, can destroy more property than ten times the difference betwen a cheap axle and a good one. I may say to my hon. friend that we are making the fullest inquiry, and are very anxious to have the minimum number of accidents. I still maintain that we do not have any greater number of accidents on the Intercolonial than occur on any other railway doing the same amount of business on the same mileage, although ten times as much publicity is given to accidents on the Intercolonial than is given to those on any other railway on the continent of America.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Is there an official record of all the accidents on all the railways?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Then cannot the minister give us the figures to establish the statement he has made?

Mr. GRAHAM. They are in the report of the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Ways and Means.

RECIPROCAL TRADE WITH UNITED STATES.

Mr. G. H. BRADBURY (Selkirk). Mr. Chairman, on rising to address the House at this late hour of this very important debate, I can assure you that I do so with considerable diffidence, occasioned largely by the fact that the matter has been so thoroughly discussed on both sides of the House, and especially by the fact that the speech delivered by the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden), and the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), make it almost impossible for me to add anything new in behalf of the position I intend to support. However, on account of the great importance of this question to the country, I cannot allow this debate to close without expressing my opinion, and giving a reason to the House and to my constituents for the vote I intend to cast on this matter. From the broad standpoint of what is best for Canada as a whole, and I believe that is the proper standpoint from which to discuss this question, I hold that this pact is bad, and well calculated to destroy very much that we have accomplished during the last thirty or forty years in building up this magnificent Dominion of which we are so proud. The class of people that this pact purports to benefit, namely, the farmers, I believe are the very men that will be the worst hit of any class in Canada.

I believe this pact is bound to work injuriously to the farming classes of this country. The agreement creates free trade in nearly everything that the farmer produces and admits the United States farmers and the farmers of some fourteen other countries into the markets of Canada, while the same privileges are denied to the farmers of Canada in these other countries excepting the United States.

Therefore, our farmers are practically put up against the competition of the world. Everything they produce is open to world-wide competition, while on everything that the farmer buys, such as farm implements, wagons, wearing apparel, everything that he consumes that is imported, even the tea he drinks and the sugar that he sweetens it with, he is still compelled to pay a high duty. That is what the government asks and expects the members of this House to accept and support, and that is what the government calls a good thing for the farmers of Canada. It is a gold brick that the government is handing out to the farmers, as great a gold brick as that which the government handed out to the farmers, and which the farmers, unfortunately for themselves, accepted in 1896 when the Liberal party seeking office, pledged the farmers to eliminate every vestige of protection from the tariff if it were returned to power, and promised the farmers free implements and a reduction in the expenditure. Everybody knows how the government never implemented its pledges. I think the present proposition will prove a more serious drawback to the farmers than even the ignoring of the pledges it gave to them in 1896.

This is a jug-handled arrangement with the jug full of Canadian possibilities placed in the hands of the natural competitors of the farmers of this country. I have failed to see any reason why the government is asking this House to accept a proposal of this kind at this time. Reciprocity between the United States and Canada was a dead issue for many years. In 1891 the Conservative party declared against any further attempts to secure a reciprocal arrangement with the United States. In 1897 and 1898 the right hon. gentleman who leads the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) took the very same position, and declared against any further advances to secure reciprocity. Speaking in 1898 the right hon. gentleman made this statement:

Canada to-day is not in favour of reciprocity There was a time when Canadians, beginning with myself would have given many things to obtain the American market, but thank heaven these days are past and over.

Ten years afterwards, at the Imperial Conference in London, he made this statement:

There was a time when we were wanting, reciprocity with the United States, but our efforts and our offers were put aside and negatived. We have said good-bye to that trade, and we now put all our hopes on the British trade.

Later on, in 1909, in this House, the right hon. gentleman said:

Canada has opened her doors to Great Britain in the hope that she would ultimately receive similar preferential treatment from the mother country.

We have had three general elections since these hon. gentlemen came into power. In 1900 the question of reciprocity never was mentioned during all that long campaign. In the campaign of 1904 reciprocity never was mentioned, never was heard of. The people of Canada took it for granted that it was a dead issue, and that both parties had come to the conclusion that they were to turn their backs on any reciprocal arrangement with the United States. In 1908 we had another general election, and reciprocity was not mentioned. So, it is safe to say that for fourteen years it was taken for granted that the question was a dead issue in Canada. It has not been mentioned by any public man in any public way, and the people of Canada naturally took it for granted that the question was dead. Therefore, I think I have a right to say that the government had no mandate from the people to enter into this pact. The government, on account of that fact, have no right to ask this House to accept this proposed agreement until they give the people of the country an opportunity of declaring for or against it. Those favourable to this arrangement never tire of telling us that Sir John A. Macdonald favoured reciprocity. They do not tell us, as I said a moment ago, that the Conservative party under the leadership of Sir John A. Macdonald, declared against any further advances to secure reciprocity. Nor do they tell us that the right hon. gentleman who leads the government took the very same position. However, Mr. Speaker, these references to the past efforts of statesmen, some of them dead and gone, and to the past efforts of the right hon. gentleman, I hold, have no real bearing upon the matter before the country.

What was desired twenty-five or thirty years ago, and what might have been beneficial at that time might easily, under the changed conditions we find in Canada to-day, prove disastrous and ruinous to the country. In those days we were simply feeling our way, a few scattered provinces along the boundary line of the great Republic. We had no great transcontinental line binding the Atlantic and Pacific provinces together, we had no great interprovincial trade, ten times greater than our foreign trade, we had no great west as we have to-day, we had no great home market which consumes fully eighty per cent of nearly everthing which the farmer produces, we had not developed our foreign trade, we had no steamship lines plying to the Orient, Australia, New Zealand, South America, and the West Indies all carrying the products of Canadian industry. Reciprocity might have been of some benefit before these great strides forward had been taken by Canada. But, under the present conditions, I hold that the proposed pact is not in the best interests of Canada, that it is calculated to undo much that we have accomplished during the last thirty or forty years.

The proposed pact, to my mind, is inopportune. We occupy a very different position from that which we occupied twenty-five or thirty years ago. We are not concerned so much about the past; it is the present and the future that we are elected to legislate for, and in view of the bright future looming upon the horizon of this young country, I have no hesitation in saying that if this pact is adopted it will prove disastrous to the hopes and aspirations of the people of Canada. Let us for a few moments look at what we have accomplished during the last 30 or 40 years which makes this pact undesirable to Canadians to-day. In looking over the trade statistics, I find the following figures showing the immense growth of our trade from 1868 to 1910:

	1868. $	1910. $	Increase. $	Per Cent.
Total trade	116,000,000	649,000,000	533,000,000	459
Exports	49,000,000	279,000,000	230,000,000	470
Imports	67,000,000	370,000,000	303,000,000	450

Between 1868 and 1910 our exports increased as follows:

	1868. From	1910. To
Produce of mine	$ 1,225,000	$ 40,000,000
Produce of fisheries	3,000,000	15,000,000
Produce of forest	19,000,000	47,000,000
Animals and their products	7,000,000	54,000,000
Agricultural products	13,000,000	90,000,000
Manufactures	2,000,000	31,000,000
Value total field crops last year		533,000,000
Value total manufactures (estimated) last year		1,000,000,000

The figures, Mr. Speaker, demonstrate clearly the wonderful progress Canada has made, and the wonderful prosperity Canada enjoys to-day. Then why ask us to leave the well-beaten path that was blazed out by the Conservative party in 1878 and travelled on by that party up to 1896, in which the foundations of Canada's greatness were laid deep and strong, on which has been built the magnificent Dominion as we have it to-day. In view of the prosperity of our country, in view of the position we occupy in the eyes of the world, why come before this House with a proposition of this kind which is not thoroughly digested, and on which the people of this country have not been consulted? I say that it is the duty of the government, before asking this House to agree to this reciprocity arrangement with the United States, to give the electors of this country an opportunity of declaring whether they are in favour of it or not.

Mr. BRADBURY.

Now, just for a moment let me direct your attention to a few facts regarding the transportation phase of this question, which will emphasize the undesirableness of this proposed agreement:

	1867.	1910.
Miles of railway	2,240	24,731
Railway earnings	$12,000,000	$174,000,000
	1879.
Tons of freight carried	8,000,000	74,000,000
Passengers carried	6,500,000	36,000,000

The growth of our banks is shown by the following figures:

	1868.	1910.
Bank capital, including reserve fund	$30,000,000	$184,000,000
Bank deposits	33,000,000	925,000,000

In face of these facts, can any fair minded man say that we have not reason to be proud and well satisfied with the wonderful progress made, and the great prosperity enjoyed by the people of Canada to-day? We have developed a great interprovincial trade and a great home market that consumes fully 80 per cent of everything our farmers produce. This great and ever increasing home market was made possible by the operation of the National Policy of 1878 which the present government have been wise enough to adopt, in practice at least, which accounts largely for the prosperous condition Canada is in to-day.

Now, I want to refer for a moment to what Canada has spent on railways and canals, to show that this pact, if entered into, threatens the destruction of much that we have accomplished during the last 30 or 40 years. The Dominion government has spent in cash on railways and canals $440,000,000, the provincial governments $38,000,000, and the municipalities $18,000,000, or a total of nearly $500,000,000 in cash which the people of this country have provided for the building of our canal and railway systems. In addition to this the provincial governments have guaranteed $130,000,000 of railway bonds, and the Dominion government has given something like 55,000,000 acres of land for railway construction. And, Mr. Speaker, we have yet to provide nearly $100,000,000 for the completion of the Transcontinental railway; we are pledged to build the Hudson Bay railway at a cost of $20,000,000 or $30,000,000; and the construction of the Georgian Bay canal will cost at least another $100,000,000. All these great undertakings are absolutely necessary for the carrying trade of this growing country, provided that that trade is not diverted to the south, as this proposed pact threatens to divert it. Now, why have the people of Canada spent all these hundreds of millions of dollars if not for the purpose of developing our independent routes of transportation on our own soil and through our own waters, and thereby building up on this northern half of this continent a British-Canadian nation independent of the great republic to the south of us, and for the further purpose of encouraging and developing our interprovincial trade between the east and the west? This has been done at enormous cost and sacrifice to the people of Canada. And now, when the sun of our success is almost at the meridian, and we have developed a nation independent of the great republic to the south of us, who have not always been as friendly disposed to Canada as they would make us believe they are to-day, our government is preparing by means of this pact to hand over to that country the control of a great part of our traffic from the west. The government proposes an agreement which, if adopted, will, I believe, make nugatory our years of labour and sacrifice in developing the greatest system of inland waterways in the world, and in building our Transcontinental railways and the feeders to them in the different provinces, like a vast network from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

And now at one blow this government threatens to divert the great trade of the west, south over American railroads to American cities to help to build up Americen centres, to assist in building up great American milling centres, to the destruction of our own milling centres, to the detriment of our own railways, and of our own country. If this compact is implemented I am satisfied that it means the diversion of over one-half the trade from the Pacific and western provinces south over American railroads. This means giving employment to hundreds of thousands of American citizens who ought to be employed in Canada; it means giving the carrying trade to American railroads after the large expenditure we have made to build our own railroads. It means that our wheat and the products of the west will reach Liverpool, the market of the world, in American instead of in Canadian or British bottoms. This surely was not the intention of the right hon. gentleman when he came before this House in 1903, and proposed the construction of the National Transcontinental railway. He was then in such haste that he could not wait for an investigation; time would not wait. Surely there must be some greater reason than we know at the present time for the change that has come over the hon. gentleman's dream. I find that the right hon. gentleman in proposing the construction of the Transcontinental railway used this language in this House:

> Such is our duty, it is immediate and imperative. It is not for to-morrow, but of this day, of this hour and of this minute. Heaven grant that it be not already too late; heaven grant that whilst we tarry and dispute, the trade of Canada is not deviated to other channels, and that an ever vigilant competitor does not take to himself the trade that belongs to those who acknowledge Canada as their native or their adopted land. Upon this question we feel that our position is absolutely safe and secure; we feel that it corresponds to the beating of every Canadian heart. Now, sir, we lay it down as a principle, upon which we are to be judged by friend and foe, that we are to have a transcontinental railway, that its terminus must be in Canadian waters, and that the whole line, every inch of it, must be in Canadian territory. We say further that such a line is a necessity of our commercial independence.

If the question was so urgent in 1903 is it not more urgent to-day? Was the right hon. gentleman in earnest when he made that speech? Did he himself believe in the warning he was giving to this country that if this road were not built trade might be diverted to American channels, to this very vigilant foe who was looking for our trade? Does the hon. gentleman imagine that that competitor is not as vigilant to-day as in 1903? If the right hon. gentleman did believe that statement at that time and was in earnest, what has changed his mind? The great undertaking he was then introducing is yet incomplete, and will not be completed for some years. Its completion will involve the expenditure of another hundred million dollars. Yet in the face of all these facts the right hon. gentleman, and his government propose a policy that every school boy familiar with the geographical position of the west knows means the diversion of a large amount of our trade over southern routes. What has caused that change of policy? I would say to the great men in front of me, as has been said to other great men: consistency, thou art a jewel. But it is a jewel very seldom worn by the right hon. gentleman opposite. This proposition means great and far-reaching injury to our national transportation system, and stamps this government, to my mind, as incompetent to deal with great national affairs that require experience and diplomacy and good judgment.

This compact strikes a deadly blow at some of our interests in this country. It strikes a cowardly blow at our market gardeners and fruit-growers, many of whom, without one moment's notice have been wiped out of business. The right hon. gentleman, and the Minister of Finance last session, in answer to a petition which I had the honour of filing, from the market gardeners of Manitoba protesting against the removal of this duty, stated that nothing would be done until an investigation was made. Later on the right hon. gentleman during his tour in the west gave the same pledge to the farmers of the west that no change in the tariff would be made until a thorough investigation was made, and in this House the right hon. gentleman made this statement in the early part of last session:

I stated that we would have a commission of investigation before we undertook a revision of the tariff. Does any member on the other side of the House take issue with the promise I make. Would any of them advocate rushing into a revision of the tariff without previous investigation. Honourable members laugh at that but they will not dare to say they would favour such a course.

In the face of all these promises, and without one word of warning to the market gardening interests of this country, I think I am within the mark when I say that the right hon. gentleman with one stroke of his pen has wiped out one-half the prospective profits of the market gardeners of this country, and destroyed entirely the other half of this great industry.

I have here a letter which I received yesterday from one of my constituents, a market gardener, which I wish to place on record. It reads :

Dear Mr. Bradbury,—I am writing you to find out what is the prospect of this reciprocity business being put through this session.

By the press there does not seem to be much doing in the matter at present; but the very prospect of the thing being put through has paralysed if not already killed out the market gardening business in this district. I hear of about 40 or 50 from Kildonan alone who are going out of the business at once this spring.

I can give my own personal experience of how the thing already is affecting business in this district. As you know, I have one of the best places for a market garden that is to be found between Winnipeg and Selkirk. It is now in the best condition possible; fall ploughed, with all necessary out-buildings, and with many additional conveniences, such as telephone, sidewalk from the main road, and splendid car service, which we had not last year.

A year ago or more, I merely hinted that I might rent it last season, and people from all over the country were after it. I was bored to death by people who wished to get it, even although I had not decided to give up working it myself. Now, on account of some heart weakness, I am forbidden by my physician to carry on the work, and have decided on no account to work it myself.

For the past two months I have the place placarded with 'To Rent' notices, besides advertising in every other way. Now, I have so far failed to get a person to take hold of it, and the reason given in every case was that if this treaty business was put through they would be wasting time and money if they would rent a place.

This is signed by Robert Macbeth, one of the most prominent farmers and market gardeners living in Kildonan municipality. It speaks more loudly than anything I can say to show the effect this proposed pact is going to have on the great market gardening industry of Canada. The market gardeners and farmers of Canada are too intelligent a class to be fooled long; and once they grasp the true meaning of this dangerous agreement, they will wreak their vengeance on the government which negotiated it. This agreement makes free every thing the farmer produces while maintaining a high protective duty on everything he requires, such as implements and machinery of all kinds. There is no lack of protection to the manufacturers of this class of goods. The farmers of Canada, I am satisfied, cannot be hoodwinked very long with a proposition of this kind. They want no special favour. If it be good policy to have free trade in farm products and put the farmer up against the competition of the whole world, as this pact proposes to do, it ought to be at least a fair and equitable policy to have free trade in what the farmer requires and thus put the manufacturers in the same position as the farmers. I say that the present proposition is an unfair one. It places the farmers in an unfair and false position. It is class legislation. While purporting to legislate in the interests of the farmers, you are legislating entirely in the interests of the highly protected manufacturers to the detriment of the farmers. No one sided arrangement such as this can be imposed on the farmers when they get to understand its true meaning.

But the government had an opportunity of meeting the wishes of the farmers of this country. I find that the United States were willing to meet our government half way or more than half way, by including in this pact free farm implements and a number of other manufactured articles and in this way acceding to the request of the farmers' delegation which came to Ottawa. I find that the President of the United States, speaking at Atlanta, made use of the following language:

When we entered upon these negotiations, I asked the Secretary of State and his commissioners to offer free trade in everything, but this Canada could not grant us because she has a protective system and was afraid of competition with our better organized industries.

Mr. LANCASTER. Who said that?

Mr. BRADBURY. President Taft. This matter was brought before the House by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden) and the Finance Minister replied as follows:

That statement may be entirely correct, and I have no doubt it is, as to the instructions which the President gave to his officials, but as to what actually occurred in the conference the matter did not advance to a position which would enable these gentlemen to make such a formal offer in that way. At the very earliest stage in the negotiations——

See how careful our Finance Minister was to take care of the manufacturing interests.

—we certainly gave them to understand that we could not undertake to have any free trade in manufactures, speaking generally. There are certain articles which are on the free list and which were not the subject of discussion, but speaking generally, we gave them to understand that we were not prepared to deal with them on the basis of free trade in manufactures. That circumstance was clearly expressed by us at the beginning and no formal offer such as that suggested was ever made.

Yet the statement is no doubt substantially correct as to the willingness of the President of the United States.

A few days afterwards the question was again brought to the attention of this House by my hon. friend from Dauphin (Mr. Campbell). He drew the attention of the right hon. gentleman to a speech delivered by the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt). Speaking at a meeting composed largely of the manufacturing class the hon. gentleman is reported to have said:

With regard to reciprocity, he noted that very little had been heard about the consumers interest. He did not believe that the reciprocity agreement being negotiated would affect the prices to the consumer adversely. That might seem strange, as it was supposed the farmers would get better prices. He could not see that the manufacturers would be touched very much, as few articles manufactured in Canada were affected. He was sure the Bain and Woodstock wagon companies would compete in the world's market even with a 2½ per cent reduction in the tariff.

I think he is quite right.

He thought the manufacturers opposed reciprocity because of what might follow, the thin edge of the wedge, but he had been assured——

This is what I want to emphasize.

—by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Fielding that nothing of the sort would follow. They had gone as far in the farmers' interests as they would.

I am not going to read all of this, but here is the right hon. gentleman's reply:

The statement made by the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) was quite consistent with our policy. It was nothing new and he had perfect authority, not only he but every member on the Liberal side, to make that statement.

Mr. FOSTER. Did the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance authorize the hon. member in question to make that statement?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have answered that already. It is perfectly true. The hon. member for North Oxford and every Liberal member had such authority, he was not kept in ignorance of our policy in this matter and knew it well. He only stated what is our general policy.

That is a fair, frank avowal of the position of the government. That is not the position they take before the farmers of this country.

Mr. MILLER. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Is he, and is the Conservative party to which he belongs, in favour of free trade in agricultural implements?

Mr. BRADBURY. I can only say to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Miller), that when the leader of the opposition is placed on the other side of the House and charged with the duty of directing the legislative policy of this country, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Miller), will find where we stand. There is no question about the position the government occupies. The government had an offer from the United States to give to the farmer that which they were asking for, that which brought them down in hundreds this year to wait upon the government in this chamber. They asked the government for reciprocity in natural products and in manufactured articles, they asked for free farming implements. But what does the government do? They do exactly as they did in 1896, they gold-brick the farmers of this country. They give the farmer reciprocity in natural products, putting him up against the competition of the world. They talk of extending the farmer's market and make a great deal of this ninety million market that is to be opened. But do not the government realize that for every farmer in this country there are twelve on the other side who are anxious to take our market from us? I do not believe, I cannot believe, that the government entered into this pact with their eyes open. I believe they were led into a trap. And I believe that the means used to drive them into that trap was the Payne-Aldrich maximum tariff. The President of the United States threatened to enforce that maximum tariff and induced the government to send down the Minister of Finance, and, I think, one other to Washington a year ago. When the American government got these gentlemen in Washington, everything was easy. These gentlemen were no match for the shrewd diplomats they met on that occasion. I am satisfied that when the president expressed such feelings of sympathy for Canada he allayed any feeling of doubt that might have been in the breasts of Canada's representatives and that they came back feeling that the American people were very friendly and that any proposition they made for reciprocal trade relations would redound to the benefit of this country. Now, this changed attitude on the part of the United States and of President Taft as compared with that of the American people during the last forty or fifty years, in discussing trade matters with Canada, is very significant. It is following out the advice of Senator Sherman, who gave the following advice in 1888, when a very similar question was under discussion:

Now, Mr. President, taking a broader view of the question, I submit if the time has not come when the people of the United States and Canada should take a broader view of their relations to each other than has heretofore seemed practicable. Since the conquest of Canada by Great Britain in 1763, she has been a continuous warning that we cannot be at peace with each other except by political as well as commercial union. Canada should have followed the fortunes of the colonies in the American revolution. The way to union with Canada is not by hostile legislation, not by acts of retaliation, but by friendly overtures. This union is one of the events that must inevitably come in the future. The true policy of this government then is to tender freedom in trade and intercourse, and to make this tender in such a friendly way that it shall be an overture to the people of Canada to become a part of this Union.

This is the advice which President Taft has taken to heart, and to-day he comes to us with a smiling face and offers our government conditions that we could not secure ten or fifteen years ago when the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), sought it and received the rebuff he did when he went to Washington in 1897. Senator Sherman went on:

Instead of any such mad course as retaliation, the path really open to us is one that will quietly, peaceably and forcibly defeat the whole project of discrimination against our goods. Canadian reciprocity is, in our judgment, the only road of safety and profit now open to us.

Then, we find the President of the United States, speaking on this question a very short time ago, declaring as follows:

They are coming to the parting of the ways. They must soon decide whether their markets are to be isolated by a perpetual wall permanently, or are we to be commercial friends. Should we not now, therefore, before their policy is too crystallized, too fixed for change, meet them in a spirit of real concession, facilitate commerce between the two countries, and thus increase the natural resources available to our people.

Why does the President of the United States advise the government of his country to make conditions with Canada? Not for our good, but for the good of the American people; there is no question about that. President Taft is evidently following the advice given in his time by Senator Sherman. They realize that they cannot force Canada into commercial union or annexation by hostile methods such as they have tried time after time during the last fifty or sixty years. Now, they come to us with a sunny smile; they are to win us by concessions; they are to induce this government to enter into this pact which is simply the thin end of the wedge and, as Mr. Taft says, might well mean 'the parting of the ways.' I find that Mr. Beveridge, another very prominent man, whom we had the honour of seeing in this chamber only a few days ago, made use of the following language.

There must be reciprocity with Canada. Our tariff with the rest of the world does not apply to our northern neighbour. That policy already has driven American manufacturers across the Canadian borders, built vast plants with American capital on Canadian soil, employing Canadian workmen to supply trade. That capital should be kept at home to employ American workingmen to supply Canadian demands. We should admit Canadian wood pulp and Canadian paper free in return for Canada's admitting our agricultural implements, our engines, our pumps and other machinery free. We should freely admit Canadian lumber to American planing mills in return for Canada freely admitting other American manufacturing products to Canadian markets.

Then Mr. Henry Whitney, a very prominent gentleman in the United States, says:

If we were to admit Canadian grain free of tariff charges, much of it would stay with us for home consumption; a portion would go through our ports to foreign lands.

Then, a little further on:

New York and Boston and Portland are the natural outlets for the foreign trade of eastern Canada, St. John and Halifax are twice as far from Montreal as New York or Boston or Portland. The Canadian Atlantic ports are not to be mentioned in competition with the American Atlantic ports for passenger business . . . . The elevators for storing and handling Canadian grain should be located on this side of the line, and the steamers of the Canadian Pacific and the Grand Trunk Pacific should, in the winter time at least, find their home port in New York, or Boston, or Portland. And if, under a reciprocity arrangement or otherwise, the farm products of Canada were admitted free of duty, the Canadian government would be friendly, instead of hostile to the use of American ports for Canadian business.

Then he stated in another part of this article what might be the political effect of the establishment of freer trade and social relations between the United States and Canada, which, he said:

Is a problem that had best be left to work itself out in the years to come. It is quite possible, indeed I think it is quite likely, considering the number of questions of domestic and foreign policy which might arise under such a condition that the two nations would in the end become politically one. But, he says, that would be a long way in the future if it ever came to pass at all.

This shows clearly the tendency of the negotiations, and to my mind is proof of the fact that the hon. gentlemen who went to Washington to negotiate this pact fell into a cleverly conceived trap, and that the Payne-Aldrich tariff was the instrument used for that purpose. Now, Sir, I need not refer to the public pronouncement of the great men on the other side of the line, what they really believe will be the result of this reciprocal trade policy, if it is adopted. Mr. Champ Clarke made that clear in the House of Representatives when he stated boldly that he believed this would lead ultimately to the flying of the stars and stripes over every foot of territory on the northern part of this continent. That was a bold statement to be made by a man so prominent in American politics as Mr. Clarke. It is common talk on the streets in the great American cities that if this reciprocity treaty becomes a fact it is only a question of time until we become part of the great American union. But, Sir, I have no hesitation in saying that the British sentiment in Canada is too strong ever to permit this government to lead Canada into any such trap as that.

Now I wish to refer for a moment to a phase of this question which affects the western provinces more than it does any other part of Canada, and that is the question of wheat. There has been a great deal said in this House and in the newspapers to the effect that to the farmers of the west this reciprocity agreement meant an increased price for the wheat products of Manitoba and other great western provinces. For thirty years or more the United States, especially Minnesota and Dakota, held first place in the markets of the world in the production of wheat, both in quality and quantity. But during the last fifteen or twenty years Manitoba and the other western provinces have been gradually but surely forging to the front, until to-day we occupy the proud position of producing the best hard wheat in the world; and we are no mean competitors in quantity with our neighbours to the south, and with the other great wheat exporting countries. Last year we produced something like 150 million bushels of wheat in Canada, of which we exported 53 million. The United States produced last year something like 725 million bushels of wheat of which amount only 125 million bushels was hard wheat, hardly enough to supply home consumption, even when mixed, as it is, with the softer grades. The United States exported over 60 million bushels of wheat, nearly all of which went to Liverpool in competition with our wheat. They also exported 55 million bushels made up into flour, which went to Liverpool to enter into competition with our western product. That is an answer to the arguments that have been used on the other side of this House that there is a market for our Canadian wheat on the other side of the line. They are our natural competitors, not our natural market. They are producing and exporting twice as much wheat as we are exporting to-day. Now I am satisfied that if this pact becomes law, and the duty of 25 cents per bushel is taken off wheat by the American government—and it would be taken off any way, as has well been said—a large amount of our hard wheat would go to Minneapolis, St. Paul, Duluth and other great American points. This wheat will be carried over American railroads employing thousands of American citizens, building up great American milling centres, all at the expense of the Canadian people, at the expense of our own railroads, on which we have spent hundreds of millions of dollars, and at the expense of the great home market that Canadian farmers enjoy to-day. And, Sir, perhaps worse still, our wheat will find its way to Liverpool in American ships. Our shipping interests will suffer nearly as much as our railways. Every bushel of Canadian wheat that goes through American ports will go through American elevators, and it can be mixed, and will be mixed, with American soft wheat to raise the grade of their wheat; it will be ground into flour in that mixed condition, and will enter into direct competition with our western wheat, tending to lower its grade and lower its price in the Liverpool market. Now let us see what Sir Geo. Ross says on this question. This is a gentleman that our friends opposite used to swear by, and used to like to quote as one of the ablest and most eloquent men in Canada. I am proud to say that he is patriotic enough to cut himself loose from his party on this great question, which he realizes will affect adversely the best interests of Canada. Sir Geo. Ross says:

> We must not forget that the mere exchange of certain articles may involve a great deal more than appears on the surface. For example, to abolish the duty on wheat on both sides of the line looks fair, but to accept an offer of that kind pure and simple would, in my opinion, be a poor bargain for Canada. I believe that the longer the American tariff of 25 cents a bushel on Canadian wheat is maintained the better for us—Canadian wheat has now a distinct place in the British market; if the market of the United States were freely opened it would be impossible to maintain its identity in passing through American elevators, and Canada would be the loser to the extent of any reduction in price.

He goes on further:

> A similar observation will apply to flour. Manitoba flour with rare exception brings a higher price on Mark Lane than any American brand. Who could vouch for the genuineness of this brand if American wheat moved freely across the border. The poorer qualities on the south side of the line would be fortified by the products of Canadian mills, and the better qualities on the north side would be deteriorated by mixture from the south. Such an interchange would be throwing away all the advantages we possess from the great wheat belt of Manitoba and the west.

There is no question that Sir George Ross sized up the situation in a nutshell when he made that statement. That is exactly what is going to happen. Any intelligent man who knows anything about the conditions in the west, who knows the close relationship with St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth, who knows the condition of the wheat trade on the other side of the line, must realize that the statement made by Sir George Ross is absolutely correct and that what he says will surely happen if this pact goes into force.

I have also a statement from the Hon. Philander C. Knox, one of the gentlemen who was clever enough to lead the hon. gentlemen who went from this side to the American side, into the trap that they have been led into, and to send them back home to lay this proposition before parliament, a proposition which, if implemented, in my mind, means the putting back of the hands of the clock, impeding of the wheels of progress that have been set in motion and making nugatory much that we have accomplished in the last forty or fifty years by enormous efforts and expenditures on our part. Mr. Knox is speaking to the farmers on his own side of the line and he says:

In providing for free wheat we also take into accounts the facilities which the United States possesses for handling a part of the surplus of Canadian crop and thus preventing the demoralization of prices which results through the dumping of large quantities upon the European markets, where the world's price is fixed.

Where the world's price is fixed! That is absolutely true, and I would like my hon. friends from the west to keep that in view in speaking in this House, and not hereafter to attempt to make the farmers believe that this pact means an increase in the price. The price is fixed at Liverpool:

The free admission of grain from Canada thus meets the present situation and provides against future contingencies when the Canadian surplus becomes greater by placing the control in the hands of our own grain growers.

That is the situation in a nutshell. It means the placing of the control of the wheat in the North American continent in the hands of the American trusts. He goes on to say:

They have no cause to fear a demoralizing influx under the conditions which will result from the reciprocity agreement.

Mr. BRADBURY

Now, to show the effect that the Americans themselves think this pact is going to have, let me quote a little from the 'Northwest Miller.' The 'Northwest Miller' says:

The disposition of Canada's surplus is a question upon the answer to which depends the future, not only of the milling interests of the (American) northwest, but indeed of the United States. Should this surplus be shipped abroad, it must inevitably mean the destruction of the American export trade, the shifting of the American milling centre, the gradual decline of the American milling interest to a purely domestic basis, and its ultimate retrogression . . .. The miller who is able to grind this enormous (Canadian) crop will be the miller of the future; and, where he is, there will be the great mills of the world.

Mr. Chairman, that is the position exactly. The miller that controls Canadian wheat is the miller of the future. The country that controls our wheat is the country where the large milling centres of the world are going to be placed. If this pact goes into force and our wheat crosses the line, which it is bound to do under this pact, the great milling centres of the world will be in the United States. There is no question about that, and the 'Northwest Miller' is candid enough to point that out to its own people. We have had in this House several quotations from statements made by Mr. J. J. Hill, a man who seems to know what he is talking about, one of the greatest business men in the western states, and I also want to give a quotation from Mr. Hill. He replies to the attack of a North Dakota farmer:

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 23—Discussing an attack made upon him through a letter from a North Dakota farmer, read in the United States Senate, Tuesday, Jas. J. Hill, of the Great Northern Railway said: 'The pending reciprocity treaty before Congress is the most important this country has had before it since the civil war. If, after having Canada waiting for years, they turn her down again, our country will suffer, and one of the hardest hit of our industries will be that of wheat raising. England is waiting and watching for just that thing to happen. Within the fortnight Austen Chamberlain had called up for decision in the British parliament the measure providing an Imperial federation for England and her colonies. Suppose that Canada joins the imperial federation of English colonies, as is proposed. A reasonable differential that England must impose upon our wheat, would be 15 cents a bushel, and that would mean our wheat-growers would find their whole product lowered that much per bushel in value. Great Britain take over practically all of the $200,000,000 in round numbers that Canada now pays us for manufacturing articles, then add the six hundred and more millions we export to Great Britain, and we find that, if we fail to adopt a reciprocity agreement with Canada and drive it to an imperial federation we are cheapening our wheat crop annually, say, 15 cents per bushel, and at the same time we are losing $800,000,000 of export business to England and Canada.

This, Mr. Chairman, is a candid confession that if this reciprocity arrangement is not put into force Mr. Hill sees the possibility, and, I hope, the probability of a British preference in favour of our wheat which would give the Canadian farmers absolute control of the British market. This is the policy that the right hon. gentleman and his government ought to have bent all their energies to secure—a preference in the British market for our wheat that would place our farmers of the west in a position superior not only to the American farmers, but to the farmers of any other part of the world outside of the empire. Mr. James J. Hill fears that if this pact is not implemented the British government may well see its way clear to give us a preference of 15 cents a bushel, which, as he points out, would reduce the value of American wheat in the British market and put the control of the wheat trade absolutely in the hands of the Canadian wheat-grower. Surely this means a great advantage to our Canadian and western wheat-growers. It is a matter that the wheat-growers of western Canada want to take into consideration while listening to the eloquent speeches which will be delivered by hon. gentlemen opposite to convince them that this pact is a good thing for them. They want to realize that they are closing the door to imperial preference as soon as they agree to implement the pact before the House. You are putting in the thin end of the wedge, dividing the east from the west, assisting in building up the trade of the American republic to the south of us, diverting the trade of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, to the western states, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Chicago, diverting the trade of Ontario to the state of New York, and diverting the trade of Quebec and the maritime provinces to the state of Maine and other states.

If this pact is implemented, our great interprovincial trade is going to be interfered with very materially, a trade that is eight or ten times greater than all our foreign trade, and that has been built up by the people of Canada by great sacrifices, and the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars. Secretary Knox, speaking, not to the Canadian people, but to the American people, points out clearly that this pact means that the United States will control the whole situation by getting control of our wheat. This means that American mills, American railways, American steamship lines, and American cities will all reap the reward that belongs to Canada, and the Canadian people. Our grain is to go to create great milling centres which will employ hundreds of thousands of men in the United States, instead of going over our own railroads, and our own shipping lines, through our own canals, building up our own milling centres, and employing hundreds of thousands of Canadian citizens, and thus adding to our Canadian home market of which we are all so proud. Mr. James J. Hill points out clearly that this pact, if implemented will have no influence in increasing or diminishing the price of wheat to the Canadian farmer, or the American farmer. He says:

Now, wheat is a world-wide product. Wheat is produced in large quantities in many countries, and the price of wheat in the world is made by the surplus of all wheat-producing countries selling to those who have to buy in order to supply their people with bread. Liverpool is the great central market of the world. And I don't care where you go on any grain exchange, in every current report in your newspaper, you will find Liverpool a penny or a half-penny up, and in a few minutes it has advanced or fallen correspondingly in our market here. I don't care if the market over the shipping point, if the market itself, as it is frequently in Minneapolis, is higher than you could ship to any European country, still the market is affected actually and equally, instantly affected, by the reports of the market in Liverpool. And if we are shipping, as we are, 50,000,000 bushels—and it used to be 150,000,000 bushels—50,000,000 bushels a year of surplus that goes to Europe, tell me, in God's name, what a 25 cent a bushel protective tariff has to do with the price of that wheat when the price of your entire crop is made by the surplus that is sold to the other fellow? Bear that in mind all the time, and that's the main fact, that will decide who will be elected. Talk about the difference in price between Minneapolis and Winnipeg, and that it is going to ruin the farmer in Minnesota, what difference does it make to the man in Liverpool whether that wheat went out through Duluth, Minneapolis or Port Arthur when it goes to Liverpool. He does not care. It is the price in Liverpool that makes the price, not only on what we sell to Liverpool, but the price of our entire crop. That's a well established commercial law, that price of the surplus that is sold makes the price for all.

That is the position that is taken by every man on this side of the House, and by every man in the west who knows anything about the wheat question. The price of wheat is determined by the price in the Liverpool market. There are times when the price of wheat is eight or ten cents a bushel higher at one point in the United States than at another, simply because of the local demand; but that has nothing to do with regulating the price. This wheat question is one of the greatest questions that Canada has to deal with, and if we are going to allow our wheat to be diverted to the other side of the line, we are going to destroy our milling interests; we are going to prevent the building up of the greatest milling centre in the world, which we should have in Canada, and which we will have if we retain the control of our wheat. The 'Northwest Miller', the chief organ of the American flour and milling trade, published at Minneapolis, says:

Bountiful nature has placed at the very threshold of this country a natural wheat field the like of which has never before been known since the world was made. This magnificent source of supply, a mighty empire in itself, produces glorious wheat of unrivalled quality. Its possibilities are difficult to over-estimate. The land was created for wheat raising. This area can and will produce sufficient wheat to keep American mills supplied to double their present capacity. The future of American milling with free Canadian wheat is a grand one. With this enormous and steadily increasing crop flowing into the mills and elevators of the States, a splendid tide of activity and prosperity would follow in its wake. Assured of their future supply of raw material, the mills of America would go forward on their developing course, continuing the march of progress which has brought them to the front. New mills would be built, and capacities enlarged. New markets abroad would be sought and conquered. The returns from this renewed and extended activity would be felt in increased commercial prosperity. American railroads carrying the flour from the mills would secure additional freights; American banks would obtain increased deposits and greatly enlarged exchange accounts; American mill operatives would be in demand, and pay-rolls would be increased; mill machinery, bags, barrels and other mill supplies would be required in larger quantities; more money would be in circulation; and the benefit would be felt in every artery of industrial life touched by milling. There would be an increase in grain firms, in elevators, and in every branch of the grain-handling and flour-making interests. This would be felt in the added value of (American) real estate and in the solid and substantial development of every undertaking and enterprise that makes a community prosperous.

This indicates that the American milling interests are looking forward to building up their cities, increasing the value of their real estate, increasing the value of their railroads, all at the expense of Canadian wheat growers, and the Canadian people. The 'Northwest Miller' states that the United States milling trade has reached a crisis, and if the effort to capture the Canadian supply of raw material free of duty now fails, the American mills will suffer severely, or else have to move to Canadian soil. It goes on to say:

The disposition of Canada's surplus is a question upon the answer to which depends the future, not only of the milling interests of the American northwest, but indeed of the United States. Should this surplus be shipped abroad, it must inevitably mean the destruction of the American export trade, the shifting of the American milling centre, the gradual decline of the American milling interest to a purely domestic basis, and its ultimate retrogression to a comparatively unimportant place in the list of large American industries.

This indicates exactly what the American millers expect. This seems to me to be a well laid scheme to get control of the wheat of our western country, and if this parliament, and the people of Canada are foolish enough to enter into a compact of this kind they are simply depriving themselves of a great source of wealth which they enjoy to-day. We are asked to agree to this pact, to agree to build up great milling centres on the other side of the line, to create trade for American machine shops, to increase the value of American real estate, to improve the condition in general of the United States, to improve their railways. Are the farmers of Canada ready for a change of this kind? I think not. I think that when the opportunity comes, if the government has the courage to take the plunge and give the farmers of Canada an opportunity to pronounce upon this subject, the farmers and the people of Canada will relieve the hon. gentlemen of all further responsibility.

A phase of this question which has not been dealt with to any extent is the competition to which this pact exposes the wheat growers of Canada. I find that the agreement includes not only the United States, but twelve or fourteen other great wheat exporting countries. I may say that the whole exporting world in natural products is included in this pact, and is given free access to our markets. For instance there is the Argentine, one of the most prosperous countries in the world. That country exported last year 106,000,000 bushels of wheat. Russia exported 70,000,000 bushels of wheat, Australia exported 32,000,000 bushels of wheat, the United States exported something like 124,000,000 bushels including flour; in all about 332,000,000 bushels of wheat is exported by our competitors, by the nations to which this pact opens the door of our home market. A large amount of this foreign wheat can be laid down in Montreal or Vancouver for one-half the freight rates charged on wheat from Regina to Montreal. The rate from the Argentine is about 5½ cents a bushel. Labour in the Argentine, according to the Postmaster General (Hon. Mr. Lemieux), is about 64 cents a day without board; our wheat raisers in the west pay their men all the way from $30 to $60 a month. So I have no hesitation in saying that if this pact goes into force the Canadian wheat grower will lose the home markets in the eastern provinces and even, in part, of Ontario. Ontario is not growing enough wheat to-day for its home comsumption. Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island do not grow enough wheat, they have to get wheat, and flour from other parts of Canada. British Columbia is in the same position. We are opening the doors of the home market of the farmers whom we have protected and encouraged during the last 20 or 30 years. You are opening the door to the nations that can come into the Canadian market, and undersell the Canadian wheat grower. When the wheat growers of the Northwest come to realize what this pact means they will have their eyes opened so wide that no man who dares to advocate the adoption of this reciprocal trade policy in the west will be able to get a hearing twelve months from to-day.

The question of barley also effects the west. On this question a great deal has been said in and out of the House, and no other phase of the pact has been so unfairly dealt with and so misrepresented. Some Winnipeg papers and farmers papers which are in favour of this pact tell the farmers of the west that barley is worth 90 cents in Minneapolis and 45 cents in Winnipeg. They do not tell the farmers that they are quoting high grade malting barley in Minneapolis and St. Paul and feed barley in Winnipeg, two different barleys altogether. I have here a comparative statement which gives the average price of barley across the line and in Winnipeg. The United States crop of 1909 was 170,284,000 bushels. The United States exported, in 1908, 6.580,000 bushels. The average price to the farmers of the United States was 55·2. It is only fair to assume that that average price includes all the malting barley with the feed barley. In 1909 Minnesota raised 31,600,000 bushels of barley. The average price obtained was 46·6 cents. North Dakota raised 20,272,000 bushels. The average price was 43 cents. South Dakota raised 19,910,400 bushels, and the average price was 45 cents. The average price in the United States since 1899 has been as follows:

	Per cent.
1899	40.3
1900	40.8
1901	45.2
1902	45.9
1903	45.6
1904	42.0
1905	40.3
1906	44.5
1907	66.7
1908	55.4
1909	55.2

Now the average price in the city of Winnipeg for October and November was 46⅔ cents per bushel for barley. I would like to know where the argument of hon. gentlemen opposite comes in. I heard the member for Provencher say that if this were the only thing that this pact proposed to do he would be justified in voting for it, to give the farmers of the West a larger market for their barley. Every hon. gentleman who knows anything about this question is aware that the Americans produce 170,000,000 bushels of barley, that they exported last year 8,000,000 bushels while we are exporting only something like 2,000,000 bushels. I would like any hon. gentleman to tell me how he can justify the statements that were made that this is the natural market for our barley, a great nation producing ten times the amount of barley that we produce and exporting a great deal more than we export. They are our natural competitors and not our natural market.

But there in another phase to this question which I would like to impress upon the western farmer. Our Ontario farmers understand this question and have taken advantage of experience. At first glance, one might easily be led to believe that those who raise barley would be greatly benefited by this proposed agreement. But we will remember that in 1890, when President McKinley endeavoured to force this country into commercial union by his famous McKinley Bill—which was a token of the esteem the average American has for the Canadian—he put a duty of thirty cents a bushel on barley which was prohibitive. Our Ontario farmers were hit hard for a short time, as they had been in the habit of exporting all their barley to the United States, but only for a short time. The McKinley Bill turned out to be a Godsend for Canada. It opened the eyes of the Canadian people. It forced our government to seek foreign markets, and develop our home market, and make Canada what it is to-day. The hostile legislation in the United States from year to year has done more to stimulate the people of this country and make them independent and self respecting than anything else that has happened. In 1889 we exported to the United States about 10,000,000 bushels of barley. Then the prohibitive duty was put on by the American government. In 1891, on account of this prohibitive duty of 30 cents per bushel, we exported only about 200,000 bushels. Did our farmers in Ontario give up growing barley? Not at all. Why did they not, when their market was taken from them by this unfair McKinley Bill? That Bill made it impossible for us to export barley to the United States, but under the protecting wing of the National Policy, which was in the hands of skilful men, who knew how to use it, a great hog industry was built up in this country and encouraged. Our farmers began to feed their barley to hogs, and what was the result? They grew more hogs and cattle and made more money than when they exported their barley to the United States. In 1890 we sent 10,000,000 bushels to the United States, in 1891, under the McKinley Bill, that export fell to 190,000 bushels. In 1909 we produced 60,000,000 bushels of barley and only exported something like 270,000 bushels, but our farmers fed six times more to their hogs and cattle than they had ever exported up to 1909, and by doing so, they got a steady market for their barley, steady prices, and established a great growing industry, very profitable to themselves and the country. The production of hogs in Ontario in 1909 was $21,000,000. The report of the Agricultural College at Guelph gives some figures which are very interesting and instructive. It points out that from 3½ pounds of barley we make one pound of pork. The average price of hogs during the last five years has been about $7 per 100 pounds. 3½ pounds of barley will give one pound of pork worth seven cents per pound. That means about 96 cents a bushel for barley, and the enrichment of your farm by home feeding. That is an answer to the argument that it will benefit our farmers to export barley to the other side. The true policy of Canadian farmers is to make the manufactured article and not export the raw material. Let them produce fat hogs and cattle. By so doing they will build up in Canada a great hog industry, a great packing industry, and give employment to thousands of men on our railways, and be a source of revenue to every man in Manitoba. That is the true policy of the farmer in the west to-day. He should go into the raising of cattle and hogs, and feed his barley to them insetad of shipping it to the United States.

The raising of barley is placed in the very same position as the wheat industry. The farmer who wants to export his barley has to meet the competition of the other barley raising nations of the world. I find that the United States—that great market which is held out to our western farmers—exported last year 8,000,000 bushels of barley; Russia exported 80,000,000; Argentina, 21,000,000; Austro-Hungary, 8,000,000; Australia, 2,000,000. These five nations exported 118,000,000 bushels, yet these are the markets that this government is opening up to Canadian farmers. Why, we are taking down the gates to allow these nations to flood our market. This barley can be laid down, just as wheat can, for a freight rate of less than 5½ cents per bushel in Montreal, Vancouver or Halifax, and come into direct competition with every man who produces a bushel of barley in this country.

Another phase of the question which affects Canada is the cattle trade. Hon. gentlemen opposite have tried to make us believe that this agreement means a great increase of prices for our cattle. Why, according to the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvel), we exported something like $10,000,000 worth of cattle last year, whereas the United States exported $18,000,000 that same year. What market then can we expect in the United States for our $10,000,000 worth? The United States exported also $16,000,000 worth of beef, $15,000,000 worth of canned beef, or nearly $49,000,000 worth altogether, while we exported only $10,000,000, and yet we are told that the United States is a good home market for our farmers.

I am just going to place on record the exports of the different nations. Australia exported last year 71,142,000 lbs. of frozen beef. They exported also 23,000,000 lbs. of canned beef. New Zealand exported 54,000,000 lbs. of frozen beef. Argentina exported 461,590,000 lbs. of frozen beef, also 25,615,000 lbs. of jerked beef and 14,000,000 lbs. of pressed beef, making a total of 649,000,000 lbs. of frozen and pressed beef. As against this, where does the Canadian market come in?—the Canadian market we have been building up and protecting for our own farmers, and that has made our farmers happy and contented. We open the door to every pound of that beef. We reduce the figure from 3 cents per lb. to 1¼ cents per lb. Under the reduced duty, that beef can be laid down in Montreal, Halifax, or Vancouver, for less than 7 cents per lb. all ready for the butcher's stall. Why, Sir, I cannot understand any set of men who pretend to legislate for the farmers of this country bringing down a proposition and asking the farmers to accept it which involves such conditions as these. In addition to the figures given above, the United States exported 182,000,000 lbs. of beef, and, as I said, $18,000,000 worth of cattle.

Now, consider the exports of mutton and lamb from some of these favoured nation countries;—and this is another industry which our farmers have been trying to build up but which has not received much assistance from hon. gentlemen opposite, for they have left the farmers without protection on their wool. Argentina exported last year 147,000,000 lbs. of frozen mutton; Australia, 116,000,000 lbs.; New Zealand 222,000,000 lbs.;—a total for these four countries alone of 485,000,000 lbs. of lamb and mutton. This meat can be laid down in Canada under the proposed arrangement for less than 8 cents per lb. Every one knows that if you go into a butcher stall to buy lamb or mutton you will have to pay 15 cents, 16 cents or 18 cents per lb. Where, then, will our farmer come in under an arrangement which brings this meat into Canada at less than 8 cents per lb? The exports of eggs and butter tell the same story. The butter exports from Australia last year were 56,000,000 lbs., from New Zealand 37,000,000 lbs., Argentina 8,000,000 lbs., Russia 112,000,000 lbs., Denmark 196,000,000 lbs., from Sweden 40,000,000 lbs., from Norway 3,400,000 lbs., from the United States

6,000,000 lbs., or a total from these countries alone of 458,400,000 lbs. The present duty on butter is 4 cents per lb., and even in the face of that duty some of these countries have been exporting butter into Canada. What will happen when the duty is taken off? What will be the result to our dairy interests of bringing all these countries into direct competition with them? Then, the export of eggs we find include the following: From the United States 6,000,000 doz.; from Denmark 32,000,000 doz., from Russia 215,000,000 doz., and from Sweden 3,000,000 doz.; or a total from these four countries alone of 256,000,000 dozen of eggs. The present duty is 3 cents per dozen, and in the face of that there has been an import, I think, of one or two million dozen. If this duty is wiped out, it will mean that millions of dozens of these eggs will come into competition with our own. Then, take our hams and bacon. Last year the United States exported 472,000,000 lbs, Denmark 210,000,000 lbs., Sweden 6,000,000 lbs.; or a total of 688,000,000 lbs., for these three countries alone;—and they are the only ones of the favoured nations the figures of which I have had time to gather; the government should have had this information ready to our hand, but I have had to find it as best I could. The present duty on hams and bacon is 2 cents per lb., and under this reciprocity pact it is proposed to reduce it to 1¼ cents per lb. Now, I would like to read a quotation from one of the secretaries of the Minnesota Branch of the National Reciprocity League:

> Our farmers should understand that in opening up our markets to Canada's national products, we are also getting a big market there for our natural products. We hear very much about how the agreement is inimical to the interests of barley raisers, but our attention has not been called to the fact that last year we exported 164,000 bushels of barley and paid thereon a duty of 15 cents a bushel. Canada removes this duty under agreement. Last year, our farmers shipped 7,680 tons of hay to Canada—and somebody paid a duty of $15,360 on that hay. Last year Canada bought 215,000 bushels of potatoes from us, and a duty of $43,000 was paid thereon. Of other fresh vegetables Canada bought from us last year $652,000 worth, and had to pay on them tariff taxes of $195,000. Canada bought from us last year several thousand head of cattle, 121,000 horses, 104,000 sheep and 25,000 other live animals, and a vast quantity of poultry, the total duties levied on which amounted to $175,000. All of these now go on the free list, and the Canadian market for them is to be untrammelled as the market in any part of the United States.
> While meats are not placed on the free list, the reductions offered by Canada are so sweeping that there must inevitably be an immense increase in our exports of such products to Canada.

In competition with whom? In competition with the men to whom the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues are holding out this gold brick and telling them that it will mean untold wealth for them.

Now, what does this proposition mean? The population of the United States is about 90,000,000; that of Canada about 7,500,000. That means that we have twelve American farmers to one Canadian farmer to enjoy the markets we have spent so much money to build up—twelve American invaders to one Canadian defender. It means a protected territory three times the extent of Canada, much of it highly developed, let into our home markets free. It means foreign population—(exclusive of the United States)—forty times the population of Canada furnished with free trade passes into the Canadian market. And every one of these nations living behind high protective walls. Our farmers cannot invade their market,—they have taken good care of that; but our government have taken down our walls.

Mr. PATERSON. What will be the effect in Montreal?

Mr. FOSTER. The Finance Minister ought to know. He was there the other night.

Mr. PATERSON. I see the member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) is cheering.

Mr. BRADBURY. If the Minister of Customs will give the people of Montreal an opportunity, they will show him what they think will be the effect. What does it mean? Including the United States, with twelve favoured nations, it means one acre in Canada to four acres outside of Canada; it means one Canadian farmer matched against forty foreign farmers. That is the position the present government has placed our farmers in. They have matched one of the farmers against forty foreign farmers, including the farmers of the United States. And still they ask the people of this country to believe that this is a good thing for our farmers. As I told the hon. gentleman a short time ago, if he will give the farmers of Canada an opportunity within the next twelve months, they will give their answer in no uncertain terms, and the hon. gentlemen who have gone to the trouble to place Canada in this humiliating position, will find that they will no more be bothered by this question. Now how is our home market going to be affected?

Field crops for Canada for 1909 ..	$532,000,000
Dairy products..	100,000,000
Hay products, estimated..	45,000,000
Animals, estimated..	125,000,000
Total..	$802,000,000

That I think would be a fair estimate of the value of the home markets of Canada. I tried to get that question answered on the order paper to-day, but the government apparently did not have the information, or did not wish to bring it down; therefore I had to make my own estimate, which I think is very fair. Now our total exports of the farm in 1909 amounted to $114,000,000; subtract this from the $802,000,000, and we have $688,000,000, as the value of the home market afforded by our own consumers, or eighty per cent of the total production of the farms. The proposed part opens the door of the farmers of the United States and of the other great exporting countries of the world, to this great home market of our farmers. For the sake of the twenty per cent exports, this agreement will destroy the farmers' market for eighty per cent of his products, in an effort to improve his market for the twenty per cent. Until now the farmer has found a ready market in Canada at good prices for all he produces, no question about that. It is therefore hard to understand what has impelled this government to rush into this proposed agreement at the present time.

In conclusion, let me say that what the farmers of Canada want, and what they ought to have, is not a reciprocal arrangement such as our friends propose to give them. What we ought to have in western Canada especially, is a government assisted cold storage system that will take care of the meat products all the way from the Rocky mountains to the Liverpool market. This would stimulate the meat industry, the cattle industry, and it would help our farmers to produce the finished article in our own country, instead of shipping our grass-fed cattle over to the Americans and allowing them to feed and to ship in competition with our own. The farmers of the west ought to have the Hudson Bay railway, they ought to have it built by the government, controlled and operated by the government, not built by the government and handed over to a private company as they did the Grand Trunk Pacific. The people of the west want a government owned and a government operated Hudson Bay railway. There is work, to my mind, for the Railway Commission to do. The farmers of the west are entitled, if I am rightly informed, to reduced freight rates over our Canadian roads. Give the farmers of the west cheap transportation, and you will solve any difficulties that exist in that western country. My opinion is that your Railway Commission ought to make a thorough investigation into the freight rates charged on all the transcontinental lines, and all lines operating between western and eastern Canada. Sir, the farmers who came down from western Canada in such large numbers a few months ago, did not want the proposition that the government are offering them to-day. They asked the government to give them reciprocity in natural and manufactured articles. The government are handing out to the farmers a proposition that they do not understand, I am satisfied of that. The farmers will understand it, they will understand before long that the proposition the government are offering to them threatens the destruction of their home market, threatens the invasion of their home market by foreign countries, threatens serious injury to our great transcontinental railway lines on which we have spent hundreds of millions of dollars, and threatens beyond any question any future possibility of a British preference that the people of Canada are looking for.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this pact—I hope I have made that clear to the House.:

1. Because we are enjoying unparalleled prosperity under our present fiscal system.

2. Because hundreds of millions of dollars and the best efforts of our citizens have been invested in building up Canada as a nation, developing our agriculture, commerce, industries and finance; and the proposed reciprocal arrangement would tend to destroy our integrity and drain our resources into the United States.

3. Because our wheat, cheese and other commodities would lose their identity in the United States, our natural products would be exported without manufacture, our national railways would be deprived of trade for which they were created, our ocean and inland marine would be seriously crippled, our canal system and our lake, river, and seaports would be robbed of their commerce, while British and foreign capital would not trust itself in a country so unstable in its fiscal policy.

4. Because it would be unfair to our farmers to place them in open competition with the cheap farm labour of such foreign countries as Japan, The Argentine, Russia, Denmark, Norway, Hungary, Spain, Switzerland, and others, from whom Canada would receive no reciprocal advantage whatever.

5. Because it is unfair to place our market gardeners in open competition with the cheap black labour of the southern States, as is proposed by the pact.

6. Because all classes in Canada would have to pay tribute to the trusts and combinations which rule the prices of food and other commodities in the United States.

7. Because in the building up of our country we have made too many sacrifices, have struggled too long, have stood staunch in the midst of too many adversities, to be willing now, when the victory is won, and Canada is at the dawn of her 'century' to see a foreign people reap the reward of our work, courage, patience and loyalty.

8. Because our ambition is for a strong united British Canada, and our country is too vast, and our population too small, to permit of any policy which will tend to weaken the ties that bind our provinces together.

9. Because the parliament of Canada has no mandate from the people to make so radical a change in our commercial policy.

Mr. RALPH SMITH (Nanaimo). Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) who has just taken his seat, has certainly depicted a very blue-ruin condition of things for this country if it should happen to agree to the proposals made by the government. He has covered every argument that has been presented from the opposition side of the House on this question from the time that the resolutions were introduced up to the present. He has contended that all the progress of forty years, the investments of capital, and the development that has been made by Canada as a nation, will be absolutely destroyed by this agreement which we propose to enter into with the United States. I desire to say, Sir, that when the hon. member for Selkirk casts a reflection upon the enterprise and character of the people of this country in assuming that they are going to be affected by fair conditions of competition, I do not think that he speaks for the people of Canada. When my hon. friend suggests that this agreement is not in the interest of the farmers we are reminded that he sits as a representative of farmers, and we are reminded in the second place that the strongest representation that was made by farmers in favour of this proposition came from the great west that my hon. friend represents in this House. He argued very strongly that the competition which would be given the farmers of this country would destroy their interests. He contended that whilst the farmers had requested the government to give them a condition of free trade in agricultural products they had also asked the government to give them free trade in manufactures. I would like to ask my hon friend, and any one else who takes that position on the other side, if the government had brought down a provision for absolute free trade, as my hon. friend suggested, what earthly reason have we for supposing, in view of the arguments presented by hon. gentlemen opposite, that they would have been at all likely to agree to a proposition of that kind. But the astounding thing is that hon. gentlemen who contended so strenuously against a very small measure of free trade find fault with the government because they did not bring down an absolute proposition of free trade. That is an argument that is intended to affect the man in the west that my hon. friend thinks he represents, but when a sensible farmer in the west gets a portion of what he asks, and finds that opposition to that portion is manifested by these hon. gentlemen, he is not likely to put his confidence in them for a larger measure of the same commodity. The only guarantee that my hon. friend can give the farmers that he is sincere when he requests a larger measure of free trade is to support the measure of free trade that is already before the House. The only evidence that the voters in Selkirk can have that my hon. friend is protecting their interests, and that if he had a call to do so he would be in favour of everything they asked for, is to lend his influence, and cast his vote for getting something that they have asked for, and not support the party which is entirely against the proposals of these farmers themselves.

But, my hon. friend drew a doleful picture of the statement of Champ Clarke with regard to annexation, and he read pages of quotations from American statesmen representing their views as to what they thought might be the political results of this association. Well, Champ Clarke has as much right to say that this agreement is going to bring about annexation as hon. gentlemen have. As a matter of fact, my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster), who is giving me his attention, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) and several representative leaders on the other side and, by the way, my good friend from Brandon (Mr. Sifton), all said the same thing that Champ Clarke said. He has as much right as an American to say that as these hon. gentlemen have, and we are far more likely to expect that from Champ Clarke than from loyal, British subjects in this country who ought to know better. I do not expect anything different from Champ Clarke; the wish is father to the thought. I do not blame him a little bit if he wants to have a close political attachment to a great country like Canada, but I do wonder at my hon. friend and those who attach importance to his statements, and those who repeat this same statement, because their British instincts are not strong enough to stand a simple trade agreement with the United States, or to prevent their British affections from being diverted to that country.

I say that all the history of trade in this country, all the evidence of close affiliation by trade, social association, and every kind of connection between Canada and the people of the United States, have demonstrated the very opposite of the proposition that these hon. gentlemen are contending for in this House. If trade would make affiliations with the United States, then, we have had an increasing trade with the United States since the days of confederation. Who creates this trade between Canada and the United States? It is not done by any machinery of government, it is not done by any proposals of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), but it is done by the citizens of this country, and we are reminded that whilst the citizens of Canada have constantly increased their purchases from the United States since the days of confederation up to the present time, there never was a time in the history of this country when the sentiment in favour of British institutions was as strong as it is to-day. I have studied the history of this country closely, I studied it closely before I came to Canada, studied its trade connections before I came here, and particularly since I came to this country, and I repeat the statement which I think I can prove that there is nothing in its trade or social or political history, that demonstrates the conclusion arrived at by hon. gentlemen opposite with regard to the results of this trade pact as between Canada and the United States it is absolutely contrary to the facts.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). Mr. Chairman, at six o'clock I was making reference to a fatal weakness in the speech of my hon. friend from Selkirk, a weakness which has characterized the argument of every hon. gentleman who has addressed the House against the proposals under consideration. The House will notice that no regard was paid, in anything my hon. friend said, to the consumers of this country. He described the effect that this agreement would have on the market gardeners outside of the city of Winnipeg, but he had nothing to say as to how it would affect the interests of the great mass of the consumers in the city of Winnipeg. The same weakness has characterized every speech that has been made against these proposals. When we consider that seventy-five per cent of the people of this country are wage-earners, and when we consider that the value of that wage depends entirely on how much it will purchase of natural agricultural products which are necessary to the lives of these people, then it becomes an important question how far these proposals affect the cost of living in this country.

I want to make some reference also to some of the arguments presented by the hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve) who, I am sorry to see, is not in his seat, and by the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Burrell). While I come from the province of British Columbia, I regard this question as a national question, affecting the interests of all the people of this country; and while I recognize that these proposals may not affect all the interests of Canada alike, and may even partially discourage certain industries in this country under certain conditions, yet it is legislation in the interest of the whole country, and in order to get a correct view of its effect, it is necessary to see just how it affects the interests of the people of Canada as a whole. The hon. member for Kootenay and the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo confined their argument chiefly to the question, how far this agreement would affect the interests of British Columbia; but they never once mentioned the interests of the consumers of British Columbia. As a matter of fact, they confined their attention not merely to British Columbia, but to the application of this agreement to one single industry in British Columbia, namely, the fruit industry. Now, fruit production we of course all recognize as an important industry, and I will discuss that later on, I hope in the presence of the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo. For the time being I want to consider a few of the arguments of the hon. member for Kootenay. That hon. member criticised the speech of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark), saying that he wanted to prick some of the free-trade bubbles of that hon. gentleman. Everybody knows that the hon. member for Red Deer is quite able to defend himself; but there is involved in the points referred to by the hon. member for Kootenay a principle which I strongly defend, and which materially affects the conclusion of the House on these proposals. The hon. member for Kootenay criticised the reference made by the hon. member for Red Deer to Lever Bros., the great soap manufacturers of England, and made the statement that Lever Bros. were compelled by the Canadian tariff to establish their works in this and other protected countries. My hon. friend from Kootenay neglected to follow his argument to its natural and reasonable conclusion. He said that that firm had established a branch in Canada, and had created a home market for the farmer by employing a certain number of men to erect their buildings and carry on their business. But while we might admit that the existence of this industry in Canada benefits a few people, and while we are pleased to have any industry established in this country, we have to consider what effect, beneficial or otherwise, the existence of this enterprise in Canada has upon the consumers of this country. If the hon. member for Kootenay had followed his argument, he would have arrived at three conclusions: he would have remembered, first, that the capital which was invested by Lever Bros. in the soap business in this country, was capital that was made in a free-trade-country; he would have remembered, secondly, that whatever their success was, it was due to and paid for by the consumers of this country, because as a matter of fact what Lever Bros. charge six cents for in England they charge ten cents for in this country; he would have remembered further that while this company exact from the consumers of this country half as much again in price as they get in England for the same article, the profits they make here go back to a free-trade country and are utilized in the development of their business there, under conditions of trade that are contrary to the principles for which my hon. friend contends.

The hon. member for Kootenay also made reference to the remarks of the hon. member for Red Deer on intensive farming in England, citing figures in his attempt to prove the depreciation of agricultural lands in England, especially in connection with the production of certain agricultural products. It is true that certain lands in England that used to grow wheat produce today the finest and greatest beef and mutton in the world, and I suppose the agriculturalists of that country understand exactly how to do their business and what kind of business to do in order to make a reasonable profit. The figures which my hon. friend quoted to substantiate his position as to the decline of agricultural products in England were the figures made up by the tariff reformers of that country two or three years ago and hawked by them around England, and afterwards brought to the United States and then to Canada. They have been conducting a very extensive campaign against the principles of free trade in England. I have read these figures many times, and I think I could place my finger upon the man who tabulated them as a tariff-reform argument. One of the gentlemen sent out by the tariff reformers in England was in Ottawa at the time my hon. friend made his speech and quoted these figures. In England, where the people understand their business, these figures have been turned down by the electors on three different occasions as against the tariff reformers. The object of these figures is to depreciate the agricultural industry of England, and I contend that the greatest enemies of England are the men who are going through the length and breadth of the land depreciating the success and supremacy of the industries of that great country. On the one hand, they call themselves the great loyalist party, the only party true to British interests, and on the other hand they spend their money to disseminate principles throughout England, in the United States and in this country, tending to depreciate the importance and the trade methods of England. Why, Sir, the loyal party in this House in my opinion is the Liberal party, who are leading this country forward in British trade methods. These are the men who help to strengthen the empire. They are not depreciating conditions in the old land. They look to the old land for their ideals and for some of their principles. But the very men who are doing all they can to depreciate British interests, British agriculture and British trade methods, are the very men who are all the time boasting that they are the only loyal party in this country.

My hon. friend from Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve) made some reference to the manner of the Finance Minister and the Minister of Customs when they came back from Washington. He thus described very dramatically the entrance of the Minister of Finance: He walked into the House, laid his Pandora's box carefully on his desk, touched the spring in the midst of expectant silence and the Trojan horse sprang out.

The only thing that was dramatic about this was the member for Kootenay. That was the first time I had ever heard that Pandora's box contained the Trojan horse, and I fancy the illustration is not very beneficial to the argument of my hon. friend from Kootenay. He is a little mixed in his mythology. Pandora's box, according to the ancient myth was supposed to contain treasures. That is not a fortunate reference for the hon. member to make, because that is exactly what we thought this Pandora's box did contain. However, if we take the words of my hon. friend literally, it woud look as if this Trojan horse had got away, and was wandering over the face of the earth, the member for Kootenay after it, and there is no reason to suppose he has caught the animal yet.

My hon. friend argued that the future trade on the Pacific with Oriental countries, and with Australia would be diverted owing to this pact from Canadian channels through the United States. He made that statement, but did not advance any argument in support of it. I cannot understand just what my hon. friend meant by making a statement that Canadian shipping companies already existing, carrying trade from the Orient to Europe, will be deprived of that trade by American companies owing to this agreement. Canada enjoys natural and geographical advantages over the United States with regard to Oriental trade, and the Canadian Pacific railway to-day operates three magnificent Empresses on the Pacific, carrying Oriental goods to Vancouver where it places them on its own railway, carries them to the Atlantic sea-board and thence on its Atlantic steamers to European ports. How will this present agreement affect that trade? If the Americans will be able to secure that trade under this agreement they can do so to-day. I am sorry my hon. friend is not in the House as I would like to have answers to those questions. The large bulk of the carrying of Oriental goods to Europe is to-day done by the Canadian Pacific railway steamers, while the Great Northern railway which formerly operated two or three large steamers between the orient and San Francisco and Seattle to-day operates only one. The oriental trade is carried by the Empress steamers of the Canadian Pacific railway, yet the member for Kootenay, without any argument or any evidence, said that this agreement would divert this trade to United States channels. In a few years the Grand Trunk Pacific will be catering for this same trade. Prince Rupert is thirty hours nearer the Orient by any steamship course than any other Canadian or United States port. How can this reciprocity agreement influence the Grand Trunk Pacific to transfer their European freight through the United States? They will have their own railway, they will be closer to their port than to any port in the United States, and yet the member for Kootenay says that the result of this agreement will be that this trade will be diverted entirely to the United States. The only possible way in which that could be done is as possible to-day as it would be under this agreement, that is for the American steamship lines to reduce their rates to a point at which we could not compete.

It is true that the United States has an advantage in distance to their ports for business done in Australia, but this reciprocity agreement will not bring Australia any nearer to San Francisco and Seattle than it is now. There is nothing in this agreement that will make any geographical change. I think it is important to call these matters to the attention of the House, as my hon. friend's speech has been sent out to the people of British Columbia, and I see absolutely nothing in the statement of my hon. friend to prove that this agreement will divert entirely the trade done on the Pacific by Canadian steamships to United States channels.

My hon. friend read a letter from Cecil Rhodes to Sir John A. Macdonald. Here again he grew very dramatic and read that letter with the assumption that it was entirely opposed to the reciprocity agreement which is about to be made between this government and the United States. Cecil Rhodes in 1891 wrote to Sir John A. Macdonald, and here again I think the hon. member for Kootenay was very unfortunate in his reference. The hon. member said:

> When I read the words of Cecil Rhodes a few months ago I never expected they would apply as they do on the present occasion; I never looked forward to the time, and I hoped I never should see it, when these words would have the bearing on our country's position that this pact gives to them. On the 8th of May, 1891, Mr. Rhodes wrote a letter to Sir John A. Macdonald, and in it he said:
> Dear Sir,—I wish to write and congratulate you on winning the elections in Canada. I read your manifesto, and I could understand the issue. If I might express a wish, it would be that we could meet before stern fate claims us. I might write pages, but I feel I know you and your politics as if we had been friends for years.
> The whole thing lies in the question: Can we invent some tie with our mother country that will prevent separation? It must be a practical one, for future generations will not be born in England. The curse is that English politicians cannot see the future.

This part of the letter I want the House to take notice of:

> They think they will always be the manufacturing market of the world but do not understand what protection coupled with reciprocal relations means. I have taken the liberty of writing to you, and if you honour me with an answer I will write again.

Well, that letter was read by my hon. friend from Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve) as opposed to the policy of this government on the question of reciprocity, but the letter itself compliments Sir John Macdonald on the very same policy which is being carried out by the government of to-day, and which my hon. friend is opposing. Just take these words:

> English statesmen do not understand what protection coupled with reciprocal relations means.

But what was the policy of Sir John Macdonald in 1891? Was it not the policy of protection, coupled with reciprocity? Had he not been endeavouring year after year to bring about reciprocal relations with the United States, yet the hon. member from Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve) with a dramatic gesture, read this letter to the House as entirely opposed to the present policy of the government. Then he went on to read some correspondence of Cecil Rhodes with his friend Mr. Stead. From that correspondence he quoted Mr. Rhodes as saying:

> The labour question is an important thing, but deeper than the labour question is that of the market for the products of labour, and as your local productions can only support about 6,000,000 of people, the balance depends upon the trade of the world.
> If you had had statesmen, you would at the present moment be commercially at war with the United States and would have boycotted their raw products until they came to their senses.

And my hon. friend asked the House, after reading that quotation, whether that was not a marvellous prophetic utterance. Again he went on to quote Cecil Rhodes:

> If you had had statesmen you would have boycotted their raw products until they came to their senses, and I say this because I am a free trader.

But why did Mr. Rhodes make that statement? He made it because he wanted England to use her influence to compel the United States to reduce their duties; and what he proposed to do by boycott, this government is doing by conciliation and persuasion. But the point I want to make is that these utterances of Cecil Rhodes, far from being in opposition to the policy of this government, is in support of that policy. Then my hon. friend might have gone a little further and have made some reference to the great constructive work of Mr. Rhodes—work exactly in line with the proposition now submitted to the House. Why, if we consider the life and work of that great man, there can be no mistake that his object was to conciliate and unite the English speaking races of the world. He used all his influence for that purpose; he set aside a considerable portion of his wealth for the purpose of instituting scholarships which would bring young men from all Anglo-Saxon countries into close application with the very heart of the empire. His purpose was to bring all English races together by sending out from England's great institution of learning, the picked youth of these various countries who would at all times contribute to the unity of the Anglo-Saxon race. Surely it cannot be argued that in this great purpose, Mr. Rhodes was in strong opposition to the proposal of the present government.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not think that a fair reading of the speech of the hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve) would warrant the conclusion my hon. friend draws from it.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). I listened to that speech and I am sorry my hon. friend from Kootenay is not present, but if he did not read these quotations from Mr. Rhodes in opposition to the policy now before the House, I do not know why he read them.

Mr. BLAIN. What he said was:

> It is the statement of a man who did more than any one man in the British Empire for the building up of that empire, a man who almost unaided and alone has brought an entire dominion under the Union Jack.

His point was that Mr. Rhodes was a man who used his influence to keep the empire together, and not to disrupt it.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). I am not saying anything different.

Mr. BLAIN. But my hon. friend suggested that the hon. member for Kootenay quoted the letter of Cecil Rhodes as an attack upon this agreement.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). If not, why did he quote it at all. I, of course, am very happy to take the word of my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) that the hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve) quoted the letter in support of the agreement. I am quite willing to accept my hon. friend's statement and withdraw what I said, if he will take the responsibility of saying that the hon. member for Kootenay read that letter with that object.

Let me now go to another point. The hon. member for Kootenay referred to a great man in the United States, Mr. S. S. McClure, the editor of McClure's magazine. He referred to him as follows:

> I looked to-day for a quotation which I have mislaid from one of the great American magazine men, who spoke before the Canadian Club, Mr. S. S. McClure. I wish you would remember those words of patriotism and faith.

I would like the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) to listen to these words, as I look to him to take in charge the interests of the hon. member for Kootenay.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend from Kootenay can take care of himself.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). I thought the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) was looking after his interests in his absence. That hon. gentleman went on to quote Mr. McClure as having said:

> There has been nothing in the history of the world that has stood for the civilization and advancement of nations in religion, morality and freedom like the great Union Jack.

He, an American citizen, made use of these words.

Well, now, it is a compliment to us for S. S. McClure to hold opinions of that kind, and to be able to make statements of that kind in this country. But what I would like to know is, what harm the Union Jack is going to take at the hands of Americans like S. S. McClure? And what object could my hon. friend have in making reference to such a speech as that of Mr. McClure? Is not that speech in flat contradiction to the position of fearfulness that these gentlemen take with regard to Americans?

Now, getting away from the hon. member for Kootenay for a few minutes I wish to discuss the general question, and especially the question as it was presented to the House by the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Burrell). Those who discuss the question before the House, I think may be clearly divided into two classes—those who protect special interests at the expense of the masses of the people, and those who protect the consuming public against the aggression of organized capital. Now, I am speaking for myself alone. I am not a minister, and am not speaking for the government. And I take the House into my confidence by declaring that during the whole of my experience of eleven years in this House there has been no question discussed here upon which I have had the opportunity to speak and to vote on which it gives me greater pleasure to declare myself than on the present question. Of course, my training, my environment and everything else place me solidly on the free trade principle. I have not said very much about it in this country, because I felt like one kicking against the pricks all the time. Yet, whenever an opportunity has presented itself to say a word or cast a vote in favour of the reduction of duties, especially duties on the food supplies of the people, I have been delighted to say that word or cast that vote. The principle that I support in this discussion is that of a reduction in the taxes on the food supplies of the people and so to benefit the consuming public. And let me point out that not one hon. member on the other side who has made a contribution to this debate even mentioned the great consuming public. I believe in the greatest good to the greatest number. I respect the manufacturers; I want to help them to exist; I respect every interest in this country; I profess to be a broad-minded man, and am prepared to consider every interest, believing that the success of the country depends on every interest. But, after all, the main point with me is to show what the legislation of this House does for the masses of the people. That is the best government that makes the greatest contribution to the interest of the largest number of the people of the country. And one strong point in this agreement that has gained my support and makes me enthusiastic in favour of the proposition is that I believe that freeing agricultural food products between Canada and the United States will offer a tremendous check to the rising cost of living and ultimately bring about a reduction.

Mr. BLAIN. How will that help the farmer?

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). My hon. friend (Mr. Blain) should not forget that the farmer, if he does get the higher price for his product—and that is the point he is driving at——

Mr. BLAIN. No, but how would the hon. gentleman's logic reach to the point that this will be in the interest of the farmer and give him a better price, and at the same time lower the price to the consumer?

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). I know that is a difficulty in the mind of my hon. friend. It is due to the fact that he believes in the protectionist principle.

Mr. BLAIN. And a difficult task for my hon. friend from Nanaimo.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). I am going to answer the question. It is the same question that the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) put to the Postmaster General when he proposed to reduce the postal charges in the face of a deficit of $750,000 a year. The question was: How are you going to manage to reduce the prices of postage and yet meet the deficiency in our postal revenues? And the Postmaster General's answer was: We will see how the operation works out. So, they reduced the British postage from five cents to two cents and the domestic postage from three cents to two cents—a tremendous reduction in favour of the public. And what happened? The very first year after that reduction was made, the Postmaster General was able to announce a surplus. My hon. friend (Mr. Blain) forgets that when prices are reduced the people consume more. The man who had written one letter at a cost of five cents wrote three letters at the cost of six cents. And the great machinery already established took care of the increased business at very little added cost, so that the increased use of the mails not only met that cost, but wiped out the deficit as well.

Mr. GOODEVE. Would the consumer eat three times as much if he got it cheaper?

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). I have no hesitation in giving an answer. I suspect that he would eat three times as much fruit as before. I can quite understand that many poor people have great difficulty in procuring the food supplies that they desire even in this country. They have stability of wage against rising prices in the articles they require. But if this agreement goes into effect, and the prices are reduced, I have no doubt whatever that the money thus saved would be spent for increased supplies of the necessary articles of consumption—some in fruit, some in beef, and so on. In any case consumption will materially increase. And the most successful business in the world is not the business that has a restricted production and a large cost but the business that follows the principle adopted by the leading businesses in England, that of maximum production at a reasonable profit. No doubt that principle will operate in this case. I have absolutely no fear that when the duties are taken off agricultural products between Canada and the United States, the consumers of these products are going to get them at lower prices than they pay to-day. The question of increased cost of living is one which should be taken into consideration. The principle that is at the bottom of the present agitation which has given rise to the question in the United States, that gave rise to the question in England and in Canada is the great increase in the cost of living on this continent and in England and in Germany. The people of Great Britain have three times declared against the policy of Mr. Champlain, a policy of tariff reform, because they objected to have their food products taxed. And I certainly think that the very emphatic declaration by the British people of that principle had its influence in the United States. The masses in the United States have been suffering under the oppression of tremendous increase in the cost of living. This matter has been agitated, and suddenly it breaks out. The man at the head of the nation, who is also at the head of the high protective party in the United States, is compelled by the expression of opinion from the consumers to do something that will reduce the cost of living. And it says something for the wisdom of the Canadian statesmen that they took advantage of the first opportunity that came to bring about this grand result. Hon. members opposite, of course, dispute their mandate. My opinion is that a good government always has a mandate to do good things for the masses of the people. If, when the great consuming public of the United States had aroused the interest of the public men of that country to offer a proposition to Canada, our statesmen had refused that offer, I should have seriously suspected the wisdom of our statesmen. The basis of this whole movement is the rising cost of living, and this government has taken advantage of the first opportunity to offer a check to that rise. Let me quote a few figures that were quoted by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) —quoted by him, of course, with a very different object from that which I have. These figures are taken from the report on prices of the Labour Department.

I take meat, swine and sheep. Meat has risen sixty per cent in ten years, swine eighty-five per cent in ten years, sheep forty per cent in ten years, potatoes one hundred per cent, apples thirty per cent, pears thirty per cent, peaches thirty per cent, grapes thirty per cent, dairy produce, cheese, milk and eggs, thirty-seven per cent, fowls eighty-five per cent, fish of all kinds forty per cent. Food supplies under this list have increased to the consumers in ten years an average of forty per cent. It was therefore a very reasonable thing for this government to take the first opportunity to check the increase in the cost of living to consumers in this country. Now the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Burrell), as I have said, confined his attention entirely to British Columbia, and entirely to the fruit-growers of that province. He stated in his speech that he was dealing with the producers, and that later on he would deal with the consumers. My hon. friend is in his seat, and I want to remind him that he never mentioned the consumers at all, he gave them not the slightest consideration.

Mr. BURRELL. I beg leave to correct the hon. gentleman. He will find my remarks in reference to consumers in my speech.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). Well, I read my hon. friend's speech twice, and while I am glad to take his correction, I want to remind him that whilst fruit-growers are a very important element in British Columbia, and an important element in the community, there are other than the fruit-growers; there are the men that eat fruit as well as the men that grow fruit; there are the people in the cities, there are the lumbermen, there are the miners, all of whom consume this fruit. When my hon. friend comes to consider the reasonableness of protecting the fruit-growers of British Columbia, he has to consider the interests of the consumers of fruit in British Columbia. Now in the province of British Columbia we have a consumption of agricultural food products of about $30,000,000 a year. The member for Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve) referred to this matter in his speech. I hold in my hand a statement prepared by the Finance Minister of the government of British Columbia, and the figures indicate that the general consumption of food products in that province is equal to about $30,000,000 a year and of that sum the province has to import about $15,000,000. My hon. friend from Kootenay referred to this very statement, but with a different object. He pointed out that we should protect the producers of agricultural food supplies in this country for the purpose of assisting them to provide supplies for the home market. My position with regard to that is that if you consume $30,000,000 worth of agricultural food products, and you only produce $13,800,000 worth, if you do not want the people to starve, you have to bring in supplies from some quarter. That is an argument, not in favour of the producer, but an argument in favour of the consumers of that province. Now I read the speech of my hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo very carefully. Unfortunately I was not present when he made his speech, but I will do him the credit of saying that I read it twice, with some effort, and I divided his argument into three propositions. He said it was impossible for the fruit producers of British Columbia to compete against the American producers for three reasons. The first was on account of difference in the cost of labour; the second was the older settlement and better organization of the competing fruit-growers in the western states, while the British Columbian fruit-growers were simply an infant industry; the third was the inequality of the agreement in not providing for corresponding reductions in fruit-growers' supplies. Now, I want to ask my hon. friend a question. He recited a large number of things that enter into the consumption of the fruit-growers. He said, If I go and buy a hat, if I go and buy clothes, if I go and buy a dozen things, I find I am charged higher on account of protection to these enterprises. I would like to ask my hon. friend this question: Supposing the Finance Minister, in bringing down this proposition, had provided for a reduction of duties on fruit-growers' supplies, would he have supported this agreement?

Mr. BURRELL. The difficulty is not mine, the difficulty is my hon. friend's, who is supporting a government that is partly protectionist and partly free trade, which wipes off all the protection of our industry, and compels us to buy the implements that we use at a protectionist charge. The difficulty is not ours. I believe in moderate protection for every Canadian industry, but my hon. friend is supporting a lop-sided arrangement that gives no protection.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). My hon. friend asks the Finance Minister to make a proposal that he would not support if he had an opportunity. What I am pointing out is the uselessness of complaining because the government does not do something that he would not support if it did do it. That is exactly the position of my hon. friend. Now if he will agree to assist us to have the duties taken off these articles that enter into this consumption, I can promise him at once that I will lend him my support. If I have any difficulty with regard to this agreement, it is that it does not go far enough. I can consistently say to the Premier or to the Finance Minister, why didn't you take the duty off hats, and clothes, and boots and shoes, or any other thing? But I do not understand how my hon. friend can complain about the duty not being taken off twenty things, when he complains that it has been taken off one thing. Now the policy of the government is to go step by step. Perhaps at some future time they will bring another little thing down—I am not speaking for the government of course.

Mr. BURRELL. Did not the Finance Minister state that they would not go one step further?

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo. That is not a fair statement of what the Finance Minister said, what he meant to say was that he would not do that at the present time. It is extraordinary that my hon. friend should complain that they do not go fast enough for him on the one hand, and then complain that they go at all on the other hand. That is an inconsistency which appears in the contention of hon. gentlemen opposite. But my hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo was very loyal. He said it was important that the tariff of this country should be maintained, and that we should buy everything in Canada. But I detected in his speech that after all the member for Yale-Cariboo sometimes goes to the United States and buys things. He told us that in his speech. He complained to the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) that whilst they could go to the United States and buy a wagon, the Minister of Customs did not provide for a reduction of duty on this particular thing that my hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo wants.

Now if my hon. friend—and I have quoted his own words—thinks it is in his interest to go to the United States to get a wagon, Jim Smith and Tom Brown and somebody else may think it is in their interest to go to the United States also, and if everybody in Canada thinks as does the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo, evidently, that he can suit his condition better in the United States then, my hon. friend will see just exactly where that will drive him to. If the fruit industry of British Columbia is injured—and I admit on the surface for the moment that, if there is anything that might be hit at all, it might be the youthful industry in the shape of fruit growing—what is the remedy that my hon. friend is suggesting to the government? The difficulty is that the remedy lies in the direction of free trade, and my hon. friend is a protectionist. All he could propose was that the duty should be maintained on fruit. I want the duty taken off fruit, I consume fruit, I do not grow it and there are tens of thousands of others in British Columbia who consume fruit, who do not grow it, and who want the duty taken off. But, I would say to my hon. friend that if he would make a suggestion at all to the government for the benefit of the fruit growers of British Columbia he would ask them to take the duty off sugar entering into the manufacture of jams and the canning of fruit in British Columbia. There are certain industries in British Columbia now engaged in that business. Why does not my hon. friend do that? Would I be unjust to him if I reminded him that he was not doing his duty in the interests of the fruit growers when he failed to ask the government to take the duty off sugar? I do not know whether my hon. friend the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding), or my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) would take any notice of my pleadings, but I would like to recommend to them that they take the duty off sugar. Taking the duty off sugar would not only benefit the general consumer, but it would benefit the fruit growing industry.

Mr. BLAIN. Might I ask the hon. member what the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Gordon), sitting behind him, thinks of that?

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). Well, it does not matter very much to me what my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Gordon) thinks—just about as little on this question as what my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) thinks. Just now I am dealing with what I think myself. I want to repeat to my hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo that he neglected his duty, that he was not looking after the fruit grower's interest in British Columbia or he would have impressed upon the government the necessity of taking the duty off sugar, which I am doing now, and in which I hope I will succeed in getting the support of my hon. friend.

Then, my hon. friend pointed out that the fruit growing industry of British Columbia was in an infant condition, whilst the American industry was better organized. The trouble is that protected interests are always in the infant stage. That is the old trouble that we always found in the arguments of protectionists in England. It is a strange thing, but they are like the ladies—they never grow older. But, here is the inconsistency of the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo: whilst he wanted the protection maintained in favour of the infant of British Columbia, strange to say, he strenuously fought for the old man in Ontario, who has existed for fifty or sixty years. While arguing for the British Columbia infant, my hon. friend was contending for the strong, mature man in Ontario, thus destroying the reasonableness of his argument in favour of the infant industry in British Columbia. Here again I think the fruit grower and the supporter of my hon. friend would be entitled to complain. When arguing before the House in favour of the infant industry in British Columbia he ought to have confined himself to the infant industry in British Columbia and the British Columbia fruit grower has the very reasonable complaint to make against my hon. friend that he interested himself in another industry, and in doing so absolutely and entirely nullified the argument with which he could hope to accomplish anything in favour of his friends in British Columbia. These industries never grow old. But my hon. friend declares that the fruit growing industry in the state of Washington is so well organized as to make it impossible, under this agreement, for them to make any further progress in the fruit growing industry of British Columbia. My hon. friend is an expert and I am going to give him some expert evidence. I am not an expert, I do not know anything about fruit except the choice of it when I eat it, but he presented his views to the House as an expert, and I grant that he is an expert. I appreciate that my hon. friend has had a very large experience in the business. I propose, instead of giving him my own opinions, to which he might not attach very much importance, to give him some expert opinions of his own friends in British Columbia. First of all I want to remind him that the people of Washington and the representatives of Washington in Congress, are labouring under the same alarmed feeling about the competition of British Columbia against them as the people of British Columbia have with regard to the competition of the state of Washington. Endless petitions have gone from Washington and Oregon to the Congress of the United States against the bringing of this pact into existence. The fruit growers on the other side of the line expressed the fear that the cheaper fruit lands and superior quality of the British Columbia fruit will enter into competition with the fruits of Washington and Oregon. But as I have said, I am going to give my hon. friend the evidence. I am going to give him the reports of his own friends in British Columbia, what they say about the fruit, and what they say about the quality and cheapness of the land. I am not going to give him my opinion, and if he has anything to complain of, I will put him in the position that he must complain against his own friends. Before doing this, however, let me read a few lines from a statement of the Hon. Wm. E. Humphrey, representative of the state of Washington who, speaking in Congress, said that the price of farm land near the boundary line was worth from $75 to $300 per acre more than immediately north of the line, and added:

> But the difference in the quality of the land is not nearly so great as the difference in the price. It is just as certain that the price of land on either side of the international boundary will come to a common level if there are no barriers between them. The results must be to greatly increase the price of Canadian farm land, and largely decrease the price of American farm land.

These were the representations made by the representative of the state of Washington in Congress. Let me read next a letter from a gentleman who was in England when he wrote it, and who is the owner of farm land in East Kootenay. A friend sent me a copy of the 'Pall Mall Gazette.' This British Columbia land owner was in London at the time he wrote this letter. I want to call my hon. friend's attention to it because it is entirely opposed to his whole argument, and I take it that this gentleman is an expert. He says that he is the owner of fruit lands, that he has lived in British Columbia for years, that he understands the whole question and he wants to publish this letter before he leaves:

> I am returning to British Columbia within a few days, and as a resident and owner of fruit land in east Kootenay familiar with the conditions in British Columbia, and also in the adjoining state of Washington and Oregon, I would like to make to your readers a plain statement of facts before I sail, and to correct some very erroneous statements that have appeared in various papers lately.

I can only assume that party bias and 'Imperialism' have led some of the writers to make the commercial aspects entirely subservient to political ones.

Before I am misunderstood, let me state that I am not about to express any opinion upon the proposed treaty as regards its general effect either upon Canada or upon the empire, but merely as regards the fruit-growers' interests.

Now to deal with some facts which are apparently unknown to most of the writers:

The apple production of the United States within the past fourteen years has decreased about two-thirds.

Within this period the population of the United States of America has increased about twenty millions, the apple has become more popular as an article of diet; and railway transportation has made its distribution more easy.

Notwithstanding tariff, Ontario, the province of Canada supposed to be most hardly hit by reciprocity in regard to fruit, last year shipped 16,000 barrels into the United States of America.

Concerning British Columbia. Apple-growers in the adjoining states of Washington and Oregon get equally good or better prices for their apples than the British Columbia growers, their lands are dearer to buy, and the apples consequently dearer to produce. The freight rates are by no means inconsiderable, and there is brisk home demand for apples. Consequently there is no inducement to invade British Columbia markets at cut prices.

The removal of tariffs by the United States of America on coal, timber, and wheat will immensely develop these industries in British Columbia and the prairies, and create populations of workers needing food, thus increasing the home markets for the British Columbit growers.

The present United States tariff against apples is 25 cents per bushel and the Canadian tariff (40 cents per barrel) approximately 15 cents per bushel.

At the prices obtained in Canada for first-grade Washington and Oregon apples the protection is only equal to from 7 per cent to 10 per cent on value, which, if the growers had any real over-production, would not prevent competition with British Columbia fruits, as there is ample margin of profits to cut prices 25 per cent, and still make profits greater than those of most businesses.

The tariff, therefore, has not been British Columbia's protection so far as apples are concerned, but the simple factors of supply and demand.

Further on he says:

I will quote an extract from a letter just received from Mr. W. T. Sterling, one of the most experienced fruit growers in British Columbia, who writes as follows:

Re reciprocity treaty.—I see no reason why this should depreciate the value of fruit land in British Columbia.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo).

That is from Mr. Sterling, a large fruit grower of my hon. friend's district. He also said, writing to this gentleman in London:

The greatest effect that could result from the throwing down of all artificial barriers to trade between British Columbia and the States would be that conditions in British Columbia would be assimilated to those in Washington and Oregon. Consequently, values would be similar, and first-class fruit land in the Okanagan would sell at the same price as equally good land does in the Willamette and Yakima valleys, &c. As you know, the price of fruit land in these valleys is higher than it is now in the Okanagan, while our lands enjoy equal natural advantages.

I do not know anything at all about this gentleman, but he says that he owns fruit lands in East Kootenay. I hold in my hand also a letter from a gentleman who says that he owns fruit lands in the Okanagan, H. P. Lee. I do not know him, but his letter is entirely in favour of the contention that there will not be any serious injury to fruit growing in British Columbia. Then, I want to read to the House a few sentences from the British Columbia agricultural report to show the opinion of the agricultural organizations of the province about fruit lands in British Columbia. His Excellency the Governor General, in opening the exhibition at New Westminster, made the following statement:

Fruit growing in your province has acquired the distinction of being a beautiful art as well as a most profitable industry. After a maximum wait of five years, I understand the settler may look forward with reasonable certainty to a net income of from $100 to $150 per acre, after all expenses of cultivation have been paid.

Gentlemen, here is a state of things——

Some hon. MEMBER. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The point is raised that the views or expressions of His Excellency cannot be quoted in the House for the purpose of influencing the House.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). I am glad to obey your ruling, Mr. Chairman. I expected my hon. friends oposite to take that point of order, because the reading of the opinion of His Excellency makes entirely against their argument. Let me read what is said by the writer of the agricultural report:

In 1906, 1907 and 1908 the same success was achieved. In the former year British Columbia fruit won eleven medals in Great Britain, and in the latter was awarded first prize over Ontario and Nova Scotia at the Royal Horticultural Society's Exhibition at London, the gold medal of the Royal Horticultural Society of Scotland, while individual exhibitors won several silver and bronze medals.

It goes on to indicate the quality of the fruit in British Columbia. Let me read this sentence:

Great as were the honours won in Great Britain, a more signal victory for British Columbia fruit was the winning of two first, one second, and three third prizes in competition with fruit from Oregon and Washington.

The very States which these hon. gentlemen complain that the chief competition comes from. Now, I hold in my hand the 'Fruit Growers' Magazine' for March, 1911, in which, at pages 368 and 369, my hon. friend may find an article written by the editor of the magazine, who is a fruit expert, arguing that considering the quality of the fruit in British Columbia and the price of land, there is every reason why the fruit growers of that province should not consider that they will be very seriously affected by the reduction of the duties.

Mr. BURRELL. I might call my hon. friend's attention to another article in that paper by a much greater expert, entirely repudiating that article.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). I think I know whom my hon. friend means—Mr. Cunningham, an inspector of fruit in British Columbia, an official of the British Columbia government. In that article Mr. Cunningham expresses his political views against the Liberal government at Ottawa, and his belief that this government will be put out of office. It is very unfortunate that my hon. friend made that reference. Mr Cunningham's article is entirely a political argument; but the article I referred to is by an expert fruit grower, a man who has been in the business for years, who was employed as a Dominion inspector of fruit, and he gives an absolutely impartial view of the fruit growers of British Columbia. I hold in my hand another letter from a friend of mine in British Columbia, an old settler in my hon. friend's district. This gentleman is an old settler in my hon. friend's district. He settled there 50 or 60 years ago, he has a very respectable family who have been brought up in that province, he is in the fruit growing business. He attaches to the letter an article written by a Conservative paper in the Okanagan Valley contending against the arguments of my hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Burrell). Of course my hon. friend does not like those articles.

Mr. BURRELL. I do not mind them.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). He took the Minister of Customs very severely to task because he read some articles from Conservative newspapers in the fruit growing sections of British Columbia against his arguments. But there are two sides to this question. I am not contending that the fruit growers generally are going to support this agreement, but I say that some of them are, that there is a difference of opinion, that it is not all blue ruin as my hon. friend teaches, and that there are a few people growing fruit as my hon. friend is, who do not think the result will be as serious as my hon. friend fears. My correspondent says:

I herewith inclose you a clipping re reciprocity. This does not fit in very well with Martin Burrell's calamity howl. I was growing fruit here before Mr. Burrell ever gave British Columbia a thought and am still at it. In my humble opinion we should have had this treaty years ago.

Wishing you every success with it.

Yours truly,

JAS. B. LEIGHTON.

Mr. Leighton has been in that province for 50 or 60 years. He is in the fruit business and that is what he writes.

Mr. BURRELL. Is that Mr. Leighton, the general manager of the express company, a very strong Liberal of old standing?

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). I suppose my hon. friend knows who Mr. Leighton is, and he knows if he is a Liberal; but will my hon. friend say that because a man is a Liberal his views on fruit are not acceptable?

Mr. BURRELL. Not at all.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). My hon. friend is not placing himself in a very strong position, because by contending that Mr. Leighton, who is an expert in the business, is not entitled to support this pact because he is a Liberal——

Mr. BURRELL. I did not say that.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). That is what it implies. If that is the case, I would like to know what importance this House should attach to the arguments of my hon. friend (Mr. Burrell) because he is a Conservative.

Mr. BURRELL. I did not object to Mr. Leighton being a Liberal, but I gathered from my hon. friend's remarks that he was quoting from an old fruit grower who had been in British Columbia before I went there, and I was asking if he was the same Mr. Leighton who had been manager of the British Columbia Express Company since 1896, and who is not regarded in British Columbia as an old fruit grower, but as manager of the express company.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). Perhaps he is manager of the express company, but I have given his letter to the House, and I want the House to take it at its face value. Mr. Leighton has been in the country for 50 or 60 years, he is in the fruit business now, and that is what he says about the agreement. It does not matter to the House whether he is a Liberal or a Conservative. Mr. Leighton gives an absolutely independent opinion according to his experience.

Mr. hon. friend's next argument was on the difference in the cost of labour. He said the day labourer received $1.50 to $1.75 in the western states against $2.50 in the Kootenays. My hon. friend of course, knows something about the interior, and I can only speak on this question with regard to the Pacific coast. The fruit growers on the coast of British Columbia have always utilized the largest possible amount of Oriental labour in that province for the growing and picking of fruit. I am not disputing my hon. friend's proposition. It is very difficult to get the difference in wages of employees in the fruit industry in the western states and in British Columbia, and to calculate what that difference amounts to, but so far as the coast is concerned, every kind of available cheap labour has been utilized; Orientals have been utilized by the coast fruit growers to the largest possible extent. I have a suspicion that if they have not Oriental labour in the Okanagan and in the Kootenays it is because they cannot get it. At the present time there is some difficulty in getting all of this class of labour that is necessary on account of the development of railway construction which is so extensive in that province. That is a question which will right itself. My hon. friend must admit that the superior value of fruit lands ought to stand for something. When the reports of the Agricultural Department of the province speak so strongly upon the difference, surely my hon. friend ought to admit that with superior fruit and superior advantages and superior lands the fruit growers of British Columbia ought to be able in their own market to compete with the fruit growers in the western states. As a matter of fact I was pleased to notice a day or two ago that my hon. friend himself was modifying his views about the serious disaster to the fruit growing of British Columbia. If the published reports are correct the hon. member in Toronto on Saturday night exhibited a little change of heart; he had come to the conclusion, evidently, that he had spoken a little too early, some kind of influence was impressing my hon. friend that after all this arrangement was not going to be so bad, and that we were going to be able to survive even the shock of removing the duties on fruit. I think that a year or two from now my hon. friend will find that this change has not been so disastrous to the interests of the fruit growers as he thinks.

A word with reference to other enterprises in British Columbia. I would remind the members from that province that there are other industries than fruit growing in British Columbia, and if the members of this House and the people of this country read the speeches of the hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve), and the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Burrell), especially that of the member for Kootenay, they would think there was nothing in British Columbia but fruit growing. It is the duty of representatives from British Columbia to find out just exactly how this agreement affects the general enterprise of British Columbia. It may press a little hard on fruit. But supposing it does, supposing it helps all the other enterprises, supposing it helps all the industries of that province, surely it ought to be supported, and I think I can demonstrate to the House that two or three of the industries of British Columbia are going to be materially benefited by this agreement.

Take first lumber in which the member for Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve) is largely interested as well as in the question of coal and coke. I think I can demonstrate that if this agreement goes into effect it will be the best thing that could happen for these industries in British Columbia, and I submit that if these three large industries are benefited by this agreement it becomes the duty of hon. gentlemen opposite to consider what they will do about it. A great scare was raised by the Conservative leaders in the province on this general question, very shortly after the Minister of Finance made his speech introducing this agreement.

Mr. McBride, the premier of the province, placed his views before the people, in great headlines, even before the leader of the opposition thought he had time to consider the question. He predicted the absolute ruin and destruction of these enterprises in British Columbia, and the men who were interested in that industry took Mr. McBride, as they had been accustomed to do for many years, at his word, and without waiting to get the schedules and a complete report of the proceedings, they jumped at the conclusion that their interests were seriously injured. But when they read the report, they came to a different conclusion. The moment they understood what was done, every one of them supported the agreement. The men at the head of the lumbering interest which is one of the largest in British Columbia, changed their minds. I have letters from them, which hon. gentlemen opposite will not dispute, but which I cannot take the time to read. I might say that Mr. McRae, in the Kootenay district, and Mr. Cameron, in the district of Victoria, two of the strongest lumbermen in British Columbia, have declared emphatically that nothing has happened at Ottawa which will contribute to the success of the lumber business as much as this agreement.

My hon. friend from Kootenay made some slight reference to the question of lumber.

This government has done nothing, he said, for the lumber industry, but has left things exactly as they were before. But, Mr. Speaker, whatever reductions in duties have been made with regard to lumber were made entirely by hon. gentlemen opposite. Why did my hon. friend from Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve) not reflect on the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) who was Finance Minister 17 years ago, and who took then the duties off rough lumber coming into the Canadian market. But my hon. friend from Kootenay is perfectly satisfied that that was a good government, and that the Conservative government had always done everything in the people's interests, and that when they took the duty off rough lumber 17 years ago, they did it in the interests of the people. Now, however, he wants it put on, and he wants it put on in the interests of the people, when there are 10,000 to-day to every 1,000 we had then. The hon. member for Toronto did a good thing 17 years ago, when he took the duty off rough lumber, and we are doing a bad thing when we are leaving rough lumber as it is.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). The hon. gentleman made the statement that our government is not taking anything off the duty on lumber coming in here, is that right?

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). I was speaking of rough lumber, and rough lumber is the principal article in this agreement, and the principal article which affects our interests.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). He did not include dressed lumber.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). No, but I would remind him that there is a considerable reduction in the duties on dressed lumber and shingles. In this connection if I were to be disposed to indulge in a little criticism, I would liked to have seen the duties taken off manufactured lumber and shingles. But the American duties have been reduced on manufactured lumber and on shingles from 50 to 30 cents per thousand.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). What is the reduction on dressed lumber coming into Canada?

Mr. FIELDING. What is the reduction?

Mr. GORDON. It is 25 per cent ad valorem now,and I understand that under this arrangement boards dressed on all sides can come in at $1.50 per 1,000 feet.

Mr. FIELDING. There is no reduction on lumber coming into Canada.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). The agreement says so.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is entirely mistaken, as he will find if he will look into the agreement.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). I have just looked into the blue-book, and I know that the duty on boards was 25 per cent ad valorem; and under the proposed arrangement the duty on boards dressed on all sides will be $1.50 per 1,000 feet.

Mr. FIELDING. Not coming into Canada.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). It is quite evident that my hon. friend can afford to look up this schedule again, and he will find no doubt that he is entirely mistaken. I was referring to the question of rough lumber, and I was saying that if complaint is due to anybody it is due to the Conservative government which took that duty off 17 years ago, when they opened the markets of Canada to the competition of American lumber, while during all that period the duty was retained by the United States. So that, if there be any complaint about there being no duty on rough lumber coming into Canada, that is due entirely to the action of the Conservative government 17 years ago, and the position to-day is exactly what it was then. No concessions have been made to the United States, so that when the lumber interests of British Columbia got together and looked into the question, they decided that this was a magnificent arrangement in their interest.

Let me now draw the attention of my hon. friend from Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve) to the question of coke and coal. The American duty, which amounts to $1 per ton, is to be taken off. Now British Columbia has the largest deposits of coking coal in the world. My hon. friend from Kootenay represents the great Crowsnest Valley. Let him consider what is going to be the result of taking off this duty. It will mean an enormous increase in the development of mining enterprises in that valley, and an absolute monopoly of the United States market by Canadian coal.

Mr. GOODEVE. What becomes then of my hon. friend's pets the consumers? What will become of the smelters and those who consume the coal?

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). My hon. friend's objection is due to the serious fallacy that protection will benefit the consumer. But let him consider that the development of these mines will mean the employment of thousands of men where there are now only hundreds, it will mean the increasing of the product, and increased production will tend to lower prices. In any case to the consumers of the United States the article must be reduced in price to the extent of the duty taken off, which amounts practically to $1 per ton. But what I would point out particularly is that this means an enormous development of the coal areas in the Crowsnest Pass, and enormous increase in the population of that valley, and a correspondingly improved market for the fruit my hon. friend is growing in the Kootenay district. These hon. gentlemen from British Columbia who are opposing this proposed agreement are neglecting the interests of their province. Nothing can affect the larger number of people more beneficially than the taking off this duty on coke which is $1 per ton at present. As a matter of fact in my district some half a million dollars was spent on coke kilns some 20 years ago that were never operated, but the moment this duty is taken off they will be developed and developed profitably.

Let me say a word on the question of fish, on which perhaps my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Barnard) will have some views. I cannot see that we have anything to lose but everything to gain by the United States taking the duty off fish. The Pacific coast has the largest fish area in the world. We have every reason to suppose that, now that there is a prospect of the duties being taken off fish in the United States creating an enormous market for our fish, and with the sheltered and suitable conditions on the Pacific for catching these deep-sea fish, English and Scotch capital will be invested here, and will develop a great industry. Take the question of fish oil alone. The American duty is eight cents per gallon. The removal of this will amount to a big thing for the Canadian whaler. Whale oil is sent to the United States in tanks from Victoria, and the limit of consumption is restricted to the supply. Several millions of Canadian capital are invested in this enterprise, and a gentleman interested states that the agreement would produce a betterment in this line alone of a quarter of a million a year. In fish oils, of which British Columbia is the largest producer in Canada, the direct gain will be very great. It seems to me that these are important matters for hon. members from British Columbia to take into consideration. And I think I may fairly conclude this part of my address by saying that the fact that two members from that province sitting on the other side of the House have discussed this question at such great length and have confined themselves absolutely to one industry, and have not said a word about these other great industries that I have mentioned, fish, lumber, coal and coke—larger industries by far than fruit—is a significant fact. I conclude that they did not speak of them because they saw it would be fatal to attempt it. I call upon them as loyal members from British Columbia to consider the great interests of their province and its future, and to support the agreement because of the general good it will bring to the country.

Now, I want to look at two arguments put up in this debate by hon. gentlemen opposite. The first is the question of a mandate. I notice that all over the country as in this House, the leaders of the opposition are gradually abandoning certain arguments that formerly they pressed very strongly. They are not so strong on the loyalty question as they were, and they are a little suspicious about the annexation cry, but they are still very strong on the mandate. They never make a speech but they declare that the government has no mandate to enter into this agreement. The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Burrell), and the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) have all taken that position. It seems to me that the large number of wealthy, industrious farmers who came from the west to ask for reciprocity were a considerable mandate. I am certain that, under our representative institutions, the people of the country expect the government not to wait until they are told to do things, but to go ahead and do things which will result in benefit to the masses of the people. The government always has a mandate to do things which will result in the general interest. But I notice that my hon. friend from Brandon was particularly strong about this mandate. I am sorry he is not here that I might ask him a question directly; but I hope he will see it in 'Hansard'. What I was thinking while the hon. gentleman was saying that the government had no mandate was whether the hon. gentleman himself (Mr. Sifton) had a mandate from Brandon to make the speech, and take the position he did. I was wondering if he had abandoned the mandate he considered he had in 1896, 1900, in 1904, and, representing in this House the very people who sent the strongest representations in support of this policy. He certainly did not take his mandate from the people of that district. But the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) put a special and peculiar interpretation upon this question of the mandate. His words are remarkable and worth reading. I quote from page 3778 of the 'Hansard' of this session:

> There is a great political combine in this matter. I have no doubt about that. Hands across the sea, say some people. Yes, and not only hands across the sea, but hands across the boundary line as well. This is a great political scheme, put up by my right hon. friend, concurred in by the government of Great Britain and promoted by President Taft and the government of the United States. . . . So, we have this great triangle, this great trinity, this political combination at work, and it is a little hard for the people of Canada to assert themselves and get their rights under conditions such as those, but we are going to try.

My hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) in speaking in this way mistakes effects for causes. Mr. Asquith, the Prime Minister of Great Britain, answered the demands of that country when he refused to bring about tariff reform. The people of England declared three times within three years that they would refuse to consent to their food supplies being taxed. In the United States the democracy rose on this question of the cost of living. Mr. Taft was not the cause of bringing that about, but simply the effect, or, at the most, the instrument. He tried to do what the people wanted him to do. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) with all due respect, are not the direct cause; they are the representatives of the people. These gentlemen say: We have a mandate; we understand public sentiments, and know what the people want, and we are going to try to accomplish it for them. Let me read a few words from Mr. Asquith from his speech delivered in the House of Commons, in answer to a statement made by Mr. Austen Chamberlain. Mr. Chamberlain had suggested that the relations to be established between Canada and the United States would bring about political union, and that the loyalty of the people of Canada depended upon the trade relations between Great Britain and Canada, and if trade relations were made more favourable between Canada and the United States political union would follow. This is Mr. Asquith's answer:

> What is the situation? Supposing we had consented to tax the food of the people of this country and thereby stopped the disastrous agreement, what would have happened? The Canadian farmer would have been getting less for his corn and paying more for his agricultural machinery, and the British consumer would have been paying more for the necessaries of life. Is that the way to cement the empire? Moreover, is it not obvious that the United States, without any reciprocity at all, could have toppled over the whole fabric of preference at any time by the simple expedient of lowering her own tariff wall along the Canadian border, and the very foundation of your imperial preference is undermined.

Now, Sir, on this question of mandate, so far as I am able to judge, I think the government are doing what the people will support them in doing. I intended to give some figures with reference to trade between this country and the United States, but I will content myself with making a statement. If trade between the United States and Canada has any tendency to alienate the people of Canada from the British Empire, then we might have been annexed many years ago. If you go over the trade records of this country from confederation to the present time you will find that trade with the United States has been gradually increasing during all those years; yet nothing has been said about political union or annexation with the United States, nobody has ever thought of it. Now, if we can do a business with the United States, as we did last year, to the extent of $375,000,000, without weakening the bonds or the spirit of empire in the minds of the Canadian people, can we not increase that trade a few million dollars and yet retain the same feeling of loyalty to the empire? What is there in the history of trade in this country that would indicate that, as it has increased with the people of the United States, there has been a disposition towards political union with that country? So I say there is nothing whatever in this contention of the hon. gentlemen opposite, and they can point to nothing in our past history to support it.

Let us look at the history of British Columbia in this respect. Let me call the attention of members of this House, and particularly of members from British Columbia, to the condition of that province previous to confederation, and previous to the construction of the Canadian Pacific railway. British Columbia was a small province with 20,000 people, separated from the rest of Canada by a sea of mountains four or five hundred miles wide, whose people for a generation had been in contact with the people of the United States, commercially and socially. Separated from the rest of Canada, her people did business north and south with the people of the United States; and yet it has been stated, and it has been demonstrated, that there has been no more loyal province in the Dominion of Canada than British Columbia. After the Canadian Pacific railway was built what happened? Certain trade routes had grown up between British Columbia and the United States, did the Canadian Pacific railway destroy those trade routes, did it break off that intercourse with the United States? No, they immediately provided for carrying on trade between British Columbia and the United States, and to-day, after fifty or sixty years experience, trade between British Columbia and the western states is exactly in the same condition in every particular. That trade is increasing every day between British Columbia and the United States, yet at no period in the history of British Columbia has the spirit of loyalty towards the empire been stronger than it is to-day. So I say there is absolutely no evidence that will support the hon. gentlemen in their argument that closer trade relations with the United States will weaken the imperial bond or the imperial sympathy.

The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) said the government was putting the head of Canada in a noose. I was wondering when the hon. member for Brandon arrived at the conclusion that commercial association with the people of the United States was a dangerous thing to Canada's connection with the empire. I hold in my hand the results of the policy adopted by that same hon. gentleman, a policy which, I may say, has contributed more than any other single thing to the prosperity of this country, to the settlement of the land, to the increase in population, a policy which has been continued by my hon. friend the present Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver). What has been the result of that policy with regard to bringing Americans into this country? I find by the records that from 1897 to 1910 we have brought into the Northwest 681,885 American citizens. Forty per cent of these arrivals have made homestead entries in the western provinces, and in the year 1907-8 they brought with them $52,000,000 in cash and settlers' effects. Now what has been the effect of American settlers coming into this country? One effect has been to provide methods of transportation and trade north and south between the people of Canada and the people of the United States. Yet nothing serious has happened. We find that these American immigrants are the most industrious citizens we have in the Northwest to-day; we find them loyal and true to the institutions of this country, and many of them are loyal and true to the British Empire. We find among these settlers large numbers of men who left this country years ago, and have taken the opportunity to return. Therefore I say there is absolutely nothing in the contention that closer trade relations with the United States will have a tendency to weaken the loyalty of Canadians to the British Empire. I am glad to lend my support to this agreement. In principle it means a reduction of duties on the food supplies of the people, and anything that does that will have my hearty support.

Mr. ANDREW BRODER (Dundas). Before I proceed to deal with the main question, I wish to refer to some of the positions taken up by the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat (Mr. Smith, Nanaimo). He had a difficult task before him to-night, because he had to take care of his free trade principles on the one hand, and of his friends on the other. That is a very unpleasant position for an hon. gentleman to be in. He says that it was hard to kick against the pricks. He had been sitting in this House for several years holding free trade principles, but he had never announced them. He simply rubbed his friends down the back when they were doing what he wanted them to do, and he was careful to support them in nearly every vote. Now I want to ask if there is any sense in any man talking in this House about the interest of this country being conserved along the lines of free trade as they have it in England. Will the hon. gentleman, while he is roaming among the sepulchres of the past to find material with which to defend his argument, prove to me the common sense of any people trying to meet a continuously changing condition outside by an unchanging condition within? That is the position of England to-day. No other country would undertake it, no other country could do it except England, because she has control of the carrying trade of the world. Will he refer to any protected country that has as many unemployed as England has to-day? What about that problem in free trade England? What about the agriculturist in free trade England? What is his position? Driven out of his business virtually, and what surprises me is that the hon. gentleman tries to make the consumer believe that he will get more food than he ever had before and get it cheaper while the producer of that food will get more for his produce.

Now what does the premier say? If there ever was a man found to be on all fours it is the right hon. gentleman himself. Let me see what he telegraphed to one of his friends in York the other day. Here is a telegram sent to Mr. Robinette by the right hon. gentleman and what does he say in it? It is found on the front page of the 'Globe' and dated the 21st March.

Mr. Robinette began by reading this message from Sir Wilfrid Laurier:

> We have not hurt the manufacturer, and we will not do so. We have benefited the farmer and the consumer. When the time comes we will sweep the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

If there ever was anything found on all fours it is this telegram. He is not hurting the manufacturer and he does not intend to. What is the use of my hon. friend (Mr. Smith, Nanaimo), talking free trade? He is helping the farmer and what is going to help the farmer and the consumer? He is going to give the consumer cheaper food and give the farmer more for his produce. This is the meaning of that telegram. I think it is time that we were candid with the people of Canada. My hon. friend (Mr. Smith, Nanaimo), says that the Union Jack is safe in the hands of the American. Does he ever find it there? He finds the Stars and Stripes in his hands out in our western country and I think that should not be. I do not think for one moment that the people of the older settled part of Canada will be affected in so far as their loyalty is concerned by this proposal. The genius of our people in the older settled part of the country is too sturdy and too honest to be swerved by any such thing as that, but, we are attacking this country in its very loin, in the west which is filling up with a foreign element who are not favourably disposed towards British institutions. That is where the danger lies.

My hon. friend had a good deal to say about the farmer and the man that must get cheaper food. I want to say that the farmers' labour has increased fifty per cent during the years when he says that his product has increased forty per cent. The labourer is getting fifty per cent more on the farms than he was getting twenty years ago. There is no man who has to work so long to feed the world cheaply as the farmer, and it is time that he was getting better wages. There is no man who has done so much to feed the world, and to stick at his job as the farmer. But, my hon. friend's heart goes out to the consumer whether he works or plays. I say that the man who is found in the furrow is the man who ought to be considered first, because you may send a man to the battlefield, you may send your statesmen wherever you wish, but if the farmer leaves the furrow and does not feed him he cannot stay in that place very long. I am not ashamed to say that I will stand up here and advocate the interest of the farmer because if his interest is looked after the country will prosper. What the consumer requires and what the country requires, as the history of the world proves, is that the soil shall be covered by people, and unless you improve the condition of the farmer you will never keep the people on the soil. Therefore, it is the interest of the consumer to improve the condition of the farmer and enable him to raise more products in this country which is so well fitted to produce them.

There is another thing that surprised me a little. Here is an hon. gentleman who is an avowed free trader. Well, he may look one, but he does not act like one. There are not many of them on the other side of the House, but there is one that we have heard from to-night, and that is the first in a long while.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark).
