When blessed with health and prosperity, cultivate a humble and compassionate disposition: think of the distresses of human life; of the solitary cottage, the dying parent, and the weeping orphan.

Avoid all harshness in behaviour: treat every one with that courtesy which springs from a mild and gentle heart.

Almost all our desires are apt to wander into an improper course: to direct them properly requires care; but that care will render us safe and happy through life.

Be slow in forming intimate connexions: they may bring dishonour and misery.

The days that are past are gone forever; those that are to come may not come to us; the present time only is ours; let us therefore, improve it as much as possible.

They who are moderate in their expectations, meet with few disappointments; the eager and presumptuous are continually disappointed.

Whatever is worth doing at all, is worth doing well: but it is impossible to do any thing well, without attention.

An honest man, (as Pope expresses himself,) is the noblest work of God.

Let us not expect too much pleasure in this life : no situation is exempt from trouble. The best persons are no doubt, the happiest; but they too have their trials and afflictions.

How greatly do the kind offices of a dutiful and affectionate child, gladden the heart of a parent, especially when sinking under age and infirmities !

How can we spend our time foolishly, when we know that we must give an account hereafter, of our thoughts words and actions ?

What better proof can we give of wisdom and goodness, than to be content with the station in which Providence has placed us? How pleasant it is when we lie down at night, to reflect that we are at peace with all persons! that we have carefully performed the duties of the day! that the Almighty beholds and loves us! How readily should we forgive those who offend us, if we consider how much our heavenly Father forgive us! Who could exchange the humble peace which virtue gives, for all the honors and pleasures of a vain world?

Pride (to use the emphatical words of a sacred writer) was not made for man.

The following was a favourite sentiment of the wise and good Socrates; "We should eat and drink, in order to live: instead of living, as many do, to eat and drink."

Behold, how rich and beautiful are the works of nature! What a bountiful provision is made for our wants and pleasures! Surely, the author of so many blessings is worthy of our love and gratitude!

How glorious an object is the sun! but how much more glorious is that great and good Being who made it for our use!

CYRUS, when young, being asked what was the first thing he learned, answered; "To speak the truth."

Epaminodas, the celebrated Theban General, was remarkable for his love of truth. He never told a lie, even in jest.

All our noble duties are contained in these few words; "Do as you would be done by."

Gratitude is a delightful emotion. The grateful heart at once performs its duty, and endears itself to others.

Artaxerxes Mnemon, king of Persia, being upon an extraordinary occasion, reduced to eat barley-bread and dried figs, and to drink water; "What pleasure," said he, "have I lost till now, by my delicacies and excess."

When Cato drew near the close of life, he made this most benevolent declaration to his friends: "The greatest comfort of my old age, is the pleasing remembrance of the friendly offices I have done to others. To see them easy and happy by my means makes me truly so."

Mark Antony, when under adverse circumstances, made this interesting exclamation; "I have lost all, except what I have given away!"

Edward the VI. king of England, being, when very young, required by his uncle to sign a warrant for the execution of a poor woman, on account of her religious principles, said, with tears in his eyes: "I almost wish I had never learned to write."

Pity the sorrows and sufferings of the poor. Disdain not to enter their wretched abodes; nor to listen to their moving lamentations.

If we ought to be grateful for services received from our friends, how should our hearts glow with thankfulness to Him, who has given us being and all the blessings we enjoy!

We ought not to be proud or vain of the advantages we possess; but humbly endeavour to use them for the benefit of our fellow-creatures, and the glory of that great Being from whom we have received them.

A family where the great Father of the universe is duly revered; where parents are honored and obeyed: where brothers and sisters dwell together in love and harmony! where peace and order reign; where there is no law but the law of kindness and wisdom; is surely a most delightful and interesting spectacle!

The Emperor Marcus Aurelius, a pious and good man, expressed the benevolence of his heart, in these words: "I cannot relish a happiness which no one partakes of but myself."

When we are in a state of affliction, let us humbly apply to God for his mercies!

Young people should be diligent in their studies, that they may be able to give an account of their knowledge.

To repine at our condition, is to show a disposition to be discontented with our lot.

When we feel our inability to resist evil, and to do good, what a comfort it is, to know that our heavenly Father will, if we humbly apply to him, hear our prayers, and graciously assist us!

Young people too often set out in life, with too much confidence in themselves. Alas! how little do they know the dangers that await them!

To repine at the improvement of others, and wish to deprive them of the praise they have deserved, is an envious and odious disposition.

If we consider how much the comfort, or the uneasiness of all around us, depends upon the state of our own temper, we should surely endeavour to render it sweet and accomodating.

When young persons afflicted with illness, how greatly do they endear themselves to all about them, by being tractable, considerate, gentle, and grateful! but how painful it is, to see them peevish, self-willed, and unthankful! How much do the former qualities lessen the affliction! and the latter increase it! Deceit discovers a little mind.

SOUND ADVICE.

The fault alluded to in the following, which we copy from an English agricultural work, is not by any means confined to that country; and the corrective recommended, will be found as valuable here as there. It is high time the farmer understood that for success he must depend, under providence, on himself, and that reliance on any government for the relief of his wants, is to rely on a broken reed.

"Every Calm and thinking man must own, that the greatest fault at the present day in the English Agriculturalist, is the looking to or trusting to government, than each man to his own foresight and labor. We would assure our brethren of the plow, that it is not in the power of any government to bolster up the state of Agriculture. A wise and good government will not enact laws prejudicial to any part of the community, and they may be assured that it is not forcing wheat to be sold at a sovereign a bushel or meat at five shillings per pound, that will ever make the agriculture of the country prosper, or the farmer rich. Is it by the manufacturer selling his prints at a sovereign per yard, that he has amassed a fortune. No—it is the greatest quantity produced at the cheapest rate, that makes a prosperous trade. If wheat is low in price, let the farmer bestir himself. Instead of setting whole evenings, (as many does) soaking over a cup of cider, or a drop of home brewed, while he grumbles, and spells the columns of an old newspaper, and abuses the government for the 'great cry and no Wool' in the way of help in the Agricultural distress, let him toss aside

SCAB IN SHEEP.

The following remarks are from the pen of one of the most experienced and competent woolgrowers in this country. We have had some acquaintance with the remedies proposed by Mr. Grove and can add our testimony to their value.

"The scab is very contagious, but when observed at an early period, it may easily be cured, or at least from spreading. One of the best remedies is a strong decoction of tobacco, to be applied to the diseased parts, after scratching off the scabs with a comb or other instrument. The decoction of tobacco mixed with lime water and oil of vitriol, and used constantly when necessary, for some time: will generally effect a radical cure. Another excellent remedy is a decoction of hellebore, mixed with vinegar, sulphur, and spirits of turpentine. Internal remedies are of no use, except when the disorder has induced other complaints by weakening the general health."

BAULKY HORSES.

There are multitudes of these most uncomfortable and vexatious animals in the country, many more than there would be, if common prudence and care in breaking into the harness were used; and if the following mode of treating them, which we copy from a Boston newspaper, should it perform what it promises, it would prevent much hard swearing, and save many a poor beast a cruel and useless beating.

"A truckman in Boston, that had a refractory horse that would not draw or move forward, beat him most unmercifully. A gentleman came along, who told him he must not beat him any more. 'What shall I do?' said the man 'my horse has stood here these two hours. Shall I stand here all the day?' 'Oh no, the horse must go, but you must not beat the horse any more. Get me a rope twice as long as the horse.' The rope was got, secured to his tail, and then passed between his legs forward, then a smart pull on the rope was given. The horse was frightened and showed symptoms of kicking, but the pulling was continued. Suddenly he started forward, and went without any more beating. The gentleman had seen that method tried on that most refractory of animals, the Jackass of South America. If you question this, you that have obstinate horses, try it for yourselves."
