On Saturday last Fido Deagle, of Rollo Bay Cross, rolled his horse to the cart and went to a spring for water. On the way back he fell off the cart and died. The body was discovered by a passer-by, who informed the deceased's relatives of the fact. The coroner was notified, and he, on viewing the body, declared that death was caused by heart disease, and that it was unnecessary to hold an inquest. Mr. Deagle was about 80 years of age.

Mr. Joseph Unsworth, the efficient and gentlemanly Superintendent of the Prince Edward Island Railway, leaves nothing undone that enhances the pleasure or convenience of the travelling public. His latest move in this direction is the inauguration of the "Saturday Excursions," which will be found advertised in another column. These cheap fares must prove a great accommodation to the public. By means of these excursion tickets many persons will be able to go to the country and stay over Sunday with their friends. Movements of this kind, while popularizing the road, will also, doubtless, prove a source of profit to it, and its patronous a debt of gratitude to Mr. Unsworth, for his wisdom and foresight in placing at their disposal this great accommodation.

TRUE AND FALSE SCIENCE.

A fair child about a thousand in the world, and here he, sparkling, pale, a deep...

THE EVIL MAY DAY, OR A FOOL AND HIS FOLLY.

A Tale of the Time of Henry VIII. CHAPTER III. ROSEMARY AND STAMFORD.

"The church!" exclaimed Stephen. "Poor, old man!" said Ambrose; "I hope they are good to him!"

"On to Uncle Hal. I ever looked most to him. He will purvey me to a page's place in some noble household, and get those clerk's or scholar's place in my Lord of York's House."

"How now, my son?" said a full-chested voice, and to their joy, they found themselves pushed up against Father Shovellet.

"Retreated! Alas! Did you get soot on your nose at Hyde? Here, come where we can get a true breath, and tell me."

"How did they ask you?" exclaimed Stephen; "I suppose and letters were the best words they had for us."

THE CHARLOTTETOWN HERALD

point you to your uncle—Randall call to him—as readily as I could show you my brother, Thomas Shovellet, of Cranbury. But you are just as like to meet with some knave who might come of all you have, or maybe a headlin might take you up for vagabonds, and thrust you in the stocks, or even you get to London town; so I would fain give you some commendation, as I know to whom to make it, and you be not too proud to take it."

"You are but too good to me, sir," said Ambrose, quite conformed, though Stephen only half believed in the difficulty. The father took them within the west door of the Minister, and looking up and down the long arcade of the southern aisle to see that no one was watching, he inspected the tokens, and cross-examined them on their knowledge of the man's name.

His latest gift, the rosary, had been the hands of Frier Hares, a Minorite of Southampton, who had it from another of his order at Winchester, who had received it from one of the king's brothers at the Castle, with a message from Sirs Birkenholt that it came from her brother, Master Randall, who had good professions in London, and the house of my Lord Archbishop of York, without whose counsel King Henry never stirred. As to the coming of the agate and pomegranate, the minds of the boys were very busy. They knew that the pomegranate had been conveyed through the attendants of the Abbot of Beaulieu, but they were only sure that from time to time the belief had prevailed with their mother that her brother was prospering in the house of the all-powerful Wolsley. The good Augustinian, examining the tokens, thought they gave color to that opinion. The rosary and agate might have been picked up in an ecclesiastical household, and the lid of the pomegranate was made of a Spanish gold, likely to have come through some of the attendants of Queen Katharine.

"I hath an appearance," he said. "I marvel whether there be still at the Castle this archer who had speech with Master Randall, for if you know no more than at present, 'tis seeking a needle in a bottle of hay. But see, here come the brothers that he to sing Vespers."

Again the unwilling Stephen had to submit. There was no feeling for the impostures in those days, and reverence took very different directions from those in which it now shows itself, so that nobody had any objection to Spring's padding gravely with the others towards the Lady Chapel, where the Hours were sung, since the choir was in the hands of workmen, and the sound of chipping stone could be heard from it, where Bishop Fox's elaborate lace work records was in course of erection. Passing the shrine of St. Swithun, and the grand tomb of Cardinal Beaufort, where his life-colored effigy filled the boys with wonder, they followed their leader's example, and knelt within the Lady Chapel, and the boys' attention, it must be confessed, was chiefly expended on the wonderful miracle of the Blessed Virgin in fresco on the walls of the chapel, all tending to prove that there was hope for those who called on her in any extremity of fire or flood.

Father Shovellet, with many a halt for greeting or gossip, took the lady up the hill towards the white-fortified walls, where the old castle and royal hall of Henry of Winchester looked down on the city, and after some friendly paces with the warden at the gate, Father Shovellet explained that he was in quest of some one recently from court, of whom the stripplings in his company could make inquiry concerning a kinsman in the household of my Lord Archbishop of York. The warden scratched his head, and bethinking himself that Estreep Jockey was the reverend father's man, summoned a horse-boy to call that worthy.

"Where was he?" "Sitting over his pottle in the hall," was the reply, and the monk said he would seek him there, and accordingly with his lofty dark mantle slung over his shoulder, he went to the round table of King Arthur suspended at the Upper end. The governor of the Castle had risen from his meal long ago, but the garrison in the piping times of peace would make their ration of ale last as far into the afternoon, as their company would suffer, and had the dinner was served there, one or two snoring, two playing at dice on a clear checker of the board, and another, a small, well-dressed fellow in a bright scarlet jerkin, laying down the law to a country bumpkin, who looked somewhat dazed. The first of these was, as it appeared, Estreep Jockey, and there was something about the readiness and the impudence of the Londoner in his manner, when he turned to answer the question. He knew many in my Lord of York's house, as many as a man was like to know where there was a matter of two hundred folk between clerks and soldiers; he had often crushed a pottle with them. No; he had never heard of one called Randall, neither in his own court, but he knew more of them by face than by name, and more by bays than by names or christened names. He was certainly not the archer who had brought a token of the archer, and his comrades all appeared equal ignorance on the subject. Nothing could be gained there, and while Father Shovellet walked his last half in consideration, Stephen rose to take leave.

"Look you here, my fair son," said he, "starting at this hour, though the day be long, you will not reach any safe bidding place with daylight, whereas by lying a night in this good city, you might reach Alton to-morrow, and there is a house where the name of Father Shovellet will win you free lodging and entertainment."

why should he wish to lose a whole day?" grumbled Stephen. "What special gain would a day be to me?" asked Ambrose. "I am thankful that you should take heed for me."

"Aye, you have leading strings," returned Stephen. "Where is he going now? All out of our way?" Father Shovellet, however, as he went down the Castle hill, explained that the Warden of St. Elizabeth's Hospital was his friend, and knowing him to have acquaintance among the clergy of St. Paul's, it would be well to obtain a letter of commendation from him, which might serve them in good stead in case they were disappointed of finding their uncle at home.

"It would be better for Spring to have a little more rest," thought Stephen. They had a kindly welcome in the pretty little college of St. Elizabeth of Hungary, lying in the meadows between William of Wykeham's College and the round hill of St. Catherine. The garden was a more scholarly and ecclesiastical-looking garden than his friend, the good-natured Augustinian.

After commending them to his care, and partaking of a drink of mead, the monk of Silkestele took leave of the youths, with a hearty blessing and advice to husband their few crowns, not to fall everyone of their tokens, and to take the counsel of the Warden of St. Elizabeth's, assuming them that if they turned back to the Forest, they should have a welcome at Silkestele. Moreover he parted Spring pitifully, and wished him and his master well through the journey.

St. Elizabeth's College was a hundred years older than its neighbor St. Mary's, as was evident to practiced eyes by its arches and windows, but it had been so entirely eclipsed by Wykeham's foundation that the number of its students and choir-boys that it intended to maintain had dwindled away, so that it now contained merely the Warden, a supernumerary priest, and a couple of lay boys who acted as servants. There was an air of great quietude and coolness about the pointed arches of its tiny cloister on that summer day, with the old monk dozing in his chair over the manuscript. But the Birkenholts were of the age at which quick means dullness, and both Stephen was, and the Warden had pity both on them and on himself; and hearing joyful shouts outside, he opened a little door in the cloister wall, and revealed a multitude of boys with their black gowns tucked up, playing at the ball—these being the scholars of St. Mary's. Beckoning to a pair of older ones, who were walking up and down more quietly, he conveyed the strangers to their care, sweetening the introduction by an invitation to supper, for which he would give permission from their Warden.

One of the young Wykehamites was shy and bashful, and shied off from the brothers, but the other catbowed them on their views of becoming scholars in the college. He pointed out the cloister where the studies took place in all weathers, showed them the hall, the chapel, and the chambers, and expatiated on the chances of attaining to New College. Being, moreover, a scholarly fellow, he advised the boys to a dissertation over the passage of Virgil, copied out on a bit of paper, which he was learning by heart. Some other scholars having finished their game, and become aware of the presence of a strange dog and two strange boys, proceeded to mob Stephen and Spring, whereupon the shy boy stood forth and declared that the Warden of St. Elizabeth's had brought them in for an hour's sport.

Of course, in such close quarters, the rival Warden was esteemed a natural enemy, and went by the name of 'Old Bess,' so that his recommendation was for Spring to make no mention of the hospitable young savages. Stephen stood on the defence in sea, but the shy lad stood by him, calling for fair play and one at a time. Of course a fight ensued, and Spring was champion on the one side, and two assailants on the other, till, after a fall on either side, Ambrose's friend interfered with a voice as thundering as the many creek would permit, peace was restored, Stephen and Spring were led to the meads, and Spring was carested instead of being tormented.

Stephen was examined on his past, present and future, enquired for his Forest home, and begged into magnificent accounts, not only of the deer that had fallen to his bow, and the bears that had fallen to his father's spear, but of the honors to which his uncle in the Archbishop's household would prefer him—far be viewed it as an absolute certainty that his kinsman was captain among the men-at-arms, who he endowed on the spot with purple points faced with black velvet, and silver medals and chains, and a horse-boy to carry his baggage. Wherever one of the other boys was not behind in telling how his father was purvising to my Lord Duke of Norfolk, and never went abroad save with silver horse, hounded on both sides and impetuous going before; and another dealt on the splendors of the may; and altogether of Southampton with their chains and cups of gold. Stephen felt bound to surpass this with the last report that my Lord of York's men rode Flemish steeds in crimson velvet harness, presented with gold and gowns, and of course his uncle had the leading of them.

Stephen felt bound to surpass this with the last report that my Lord of York's men rode Flemish steeds in crimson velvet harness, presented with gold and gowns, and of course his uncle had the leading of them.

"Who by this name?" demanded a thin, squeaky voice. "I have heard it, however, in my Lord of York's household," said Stephen. "Nip up in captain Harry Randall of Bristley," quoth Stephen magnificently, scornfully surveying the small proportions of the speaker.

"What is thy brother?" "Head turnip," said a rude voice, provoking a general shout of laughter; but the boy stood his ground, and said boldly: "My father is a page to the comptroller of my Lord's household, and walks at the second table, and I know every one of the captives!"
