CHAPTER XXV.
AS IN A DREAM.

This evening, as she sat beside the hammock, looking at the stars, which were beginning to peep out from the midst of the deep blue of the sky, and thinking of the past, she was conscious, in a half-troubled way, of recalling one of the innumerable services Percy Levant had rendered her, and she started when Lady Despard said, in her sleepy fashion:

"I wonder where Mr. Levant is? Has he gone to the hotel? I haven't seen him all the evening. How one misses him, doesn't one?"

"Yes," said Doris. "That is our tribute to his amiability."

Lady Despard laughed.

"He is quite the bright particular star of our group," she said. "Some of our fair Florentine friends are almost mad about him. I shouldn't wonder if he were caught and chained before we leave."

"Yes," said Doris.

Lady Despard leant over the hammock and regarded her with a lazy smile.

"What a cold little 'yes'!" she said. "I really believe you are the only woman here who doesn't admire him."

"But I do admire him," said Doris, smiling in return. "I think he is the handsomest man I ever saw."

She stopped and picked up the book—for, unnoticed by Lady Despard, he had come up and stood beside the hammock.

"May one enquire the subject of Miss Marlowe's encomium?" he asked, and he looked from one to the other with his usual smile; but Doris, glancing up at him, saw—or fancied she saw—the shadow of the darkness which she, and she alone, had discovered his face could wear.

"Oh, no one you know," said Lady Despard. "May one ask where you have been all this long while?"

"All this long while! A few hours! What a testimony to one's worth!" he said, as lightly as before; but his grey eyes, as they rested on Doris's pensive face, were grave and intent. "I have been wandering in the woods, listening to the birds."

"While we have been dying to listen to you," said Lady Despard, with mock reproach. "We have missed you terribly—haven't we, Doris?"

"Miss Marlowe is halting between truth and politeness," he said, as Doris remained silent. "I will spare her a reply."

"We've had no music to speak of," said Lady Despard. "Won't you sing us something now? Shall we go into the house?"

"No, no," he said, almost abruptly. "Who would exchange this"—and he waved his hand—"for four walls? What shall I sing to you? Let me think."

He thought for a moment, then he began to sing.

Doris never heard his voice, even in the crowded saloon, without feeling a thrill run through her; but to-night, although he sang in so low a tone that it seemed scarcely more than a whisper, the melody stirred her to her depths and brought the tears to her eyes.

"That is beautiful," said Lady Despard, with a little sigh. "We won't spoil it by asking for another. Come, Doris dear. Will you come in, Mr. Levant?"

"No, thanks," he said, slowly. "I'll say good-night now."

He did not offer to shake hands, and the two ladies left him and went towards the house. As they were ascending the steps, Lady Despard stopped and uttered an exclamation:

"Oh, my bracelet!"

"What is it? Have you lost it?" inquired Doris.

"Yes; I must have dropped it while I was in the hammock. I'll go back."

"No; I'll go!" said Doris, and she ran back.

She had almost reached the spot where they had been sitting when, with a start, she saw in the starlight a man lying full length on the grass, with his face hidden on his arm. It was Percy Levant. He sprang up at the sound of her footsteps, and confronted her, and Doris saw that his face was pale and haggard—so different, indeed, to its usual bright and careless expression that she felt a shock of distress and almost fear.

"Mr. Levant!" she said, falteringly; then she recovered herself. "I have come back for Lady Despard's bracelet," stooping down and looking about her, to give him time.

"It is here," he said, picking it up. "Thanks!" she said. "Good-night!"

"Wait! Will you wait a moment?" he asked and his voice, usually so soft and musical, sounded hoarse and strained.

Doris stood, silent and downcast, and waited for him to go on.

CHAPTER XXVI.
NOT LOVE, BUT PITY.

Doris's own face grew a little paler as she looked at him, so haggard was his; and yet his pallor lent an added charm to his delicately cut features and expressive, deeply coloured eyes bent upon her with a strange, intent look, as she sat on the edge of the hammock, and half-trembling—for she knew not what reason—waited for him to speak. She was startled by the changed appearance of the man, who was usually self-possession itself. He stood for a moment in silence, leaning against one of the trees to which the hammock was slung his arms folded his head sunk on his breast, as a nightingale in a neighbouring tree commenced to sing; all her life afterwards Doris never heard a nightingale without recalling this night.

"Miss Marlowe," he said, at last—and he spoke in a voice so low that it seemed to harmonise with the voice of the bird. "If I were wise I should let you go, even now! But—I cannot, I cannot! Chance is too strong for me. It sent you back to find me—as you found me, and I must speak to you, and perhaps for the last time. I am leaving the villa—Italy. I go to England to-morrow."

Doris glanced up at him. A streak of light from one of the brilliant windows fell across his handsome face, and she saw that, with all his self-command, his lips trembled.

"I am sorry," she murmured, and a faint thrill of regret stirred her. She knew that he had been her friend; that, with all his apparent coldness and reserve, he had never lost an opportunity of quietly serving her. "I am afraid you have heard bad news."

"No," he said. "I have heard no bad news, for the best of reasons—there is on one to send me news of any kind, bad or good. I am a man without a friend in the world."

"Ah, no!" she said, almost inaudibly.

"I am not forgetting you nor Lady Despard," he said. "But you—but Lady Despard, for whose kindness I am, and shall ever be, grateful—will she remember me after one week's absence, excepting as that of the man whose voice helped to while away an idle half-hour, and amuse her friends? And why should she?" he added, not bitterly, but with a grave sadness that

HOW YOU CAN TELL GENUINE ASPIRIN

Only Tablets with "Bayer Cross" are Aspirin—No others!

If you don't see the "Bayer Cross" on the tablets, refuse them—they are not Aspirin at all.

There is only one Aspirin, that marked with the "Bayer Cross"—all other tablets are only acid imitations. Look for the "Bayer Cross"! Then it is real Aspirin, for which there is no substitute.

Aspirin is not German but is made in America, and is owned by an American Company, all rights being purchased from the U. S. Government.

Genuine "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" have been proved safe by millions for Pain, Headache, Neuralgia, Colds, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Neuritis.

Handy tin boxes of 12 tablets—also larger "Bayer" packages, can be had at any drug store.

Aspirin is the trade mark (Newfoundland Registration No. 761), of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacid-ester of Salicylicacid.

touched Doris deeply. "I am, as I have always been, alone in the world—a man of no account, a speck of dust dancing in the sunbeam one moment, the next, floating in the gutter. Don't think I say this to excite your pity. No! It is because I want you to remember what I am, how worthless and insignificant—just Percy Levant, the man who sings for Lady Despard!"

He smiled with a bitter self-scorn which lent to his face an air of tragedy that fascinated Doris.

"And now you wonder, seeing that I am basking in the sunshine just at present, that I should wish to leave it, and sink into the mire again. I don't wish it. If I could, I would remain at the Villa Rimini, to play the part of Lady Despard's singing man, till she grew weary, or the voice which renders me acceptable lost its novelty and became valueless. But I cannot stay. A power stronger than my will is driving me, and if you had not come back to seek for her ladyship's bracelet, I should have gone without a word of farewell to you, who are the cause of my flight."

Doris started and looked up at him.

"It" she said, her brows drawn together with startled trouble.

"Yes, you, Miss Marlowe," he said, quietly, but with something in the music of his voice that thrilled Doris. "You will listen while I try and tell you? Heaven knows, I find it heard enough. Be patient with me—oh, be patient with me!" He held out his hand with a sudden gesture of entreaty, then let it fall to his side. "How poor, how friendless, how completely alone I am, you know; but I am base enough to be proud as well, and all my life I have been prouder of nothing more than my power to repay the world's scorn of my poverty and abjectness with my scorn for the world. I prided myself on the fact that I had no heart. For other men there might be happiness, a life shared with someone whom they loved, and who loved them in return; for me, the social outcast, the pariah, there could be no such thing as love, no hope that any woman could be found to share my poverty and my hopelessness. So I went through the world, hardening my heart, and telling myself that at least I should be spared the madness which men call love."

He paused a moment, and looked at her downcast face, then went on:

"This was before I went to Chester Gardens. You don't remember that night, I daresay. I shall never forget it, for it was the night upon which I first saw you—first learnt that all my pride was to melt at the sight of a woman's voice. Miss Marlowe, if I had been a wise man I would have taken my hat and gone out of your presence never to return; but the spell was wrought and I consented to come here in the train of Lady Despard, as her jester—her singing man. I would have come in the capacity of her footman or boot-boy if there had been no other place for me, no other way of being near you."

Doris looked up with a pale, startled face, and made a movement to depart; but he stretched out his hand again pleadingly.

"Ah! wait! Let me finish. I fought hard against the influence which had fallen on me—fought day by day, with all my strength; but against the spell you had, all unconsciously, woven around me, fighting was of as little avail as it would be to try and stem the incoming tide. The iron had entered my soul, and I knew all at once that my heart and life were bound up in one sentiment, my intense love for you!"

Doris rose trembling.

"I have said it now," he continued. "My secret is out. I love you, Miss Marlowe—I, Lady Despard's camp follower, the jester of the Villa Rimini, have dared to love its brightest ornament!"

And he laughed with mingled sadness and bitterness.

"I was mad, was I not? I ought to have selected her lady's-maid—any one of the maids about the place. But Miss Marlowe! The beautiful creature for whose smiles lords and princes, men of fame and note, were willing to contend! Mad! Yes! But all love is madness, so they say, and—well, that is my only excuse. And now, before you send me away with one of those gentle smiles of yours, let me tell you what I have to offer you. Myself—and nothing! I have nothing but my voice to depend upon. I lay it at your feet, knowing well that at a word from you other men would lay their coronets and there gold there." He laughed again. "Not much to offer, Miss Marlowe, but it is my all, and my life goes with it! And yet, if you stooped to take it—well!—he drew a long breath, and his magnificent eyes seemed to glow—"well, I think I could make a good fight of it! The world should hear of Percy Levant, and you should not be ashamed of the man whose hand you had stooped to take. Yes!"—he bent forward with outstretched hands. "With your love to encourage me, with you by my side to make the struggle worth while, I would win a name which at least might be not unworthy of you! Ah! think a moment!" he pleaded, his voice suddenly quivering in its intensity. "Think what your answer means to me! To any of these others it might matter a good deal, I grant, whether you said them 'yes' or 'no'; but they have so many other things to live for—rank, wealth, place in the world! But I have nothing but this wild, mad love of mine, this deep love for you which seems part and parcel of my very being! Miss Marlowe—Doris—it is a beggar who pleads to you for the one chance which will lift him from a life which has never yet known happiness to one of hope and perfect joy! Think and—ah! I love you! I love you! Don't send me away!" and he was on his knees beside her, his face upturned to hers with an expression which a man might wear who is indeed pleading for his life.

Doris looked down at him speechlessly. His passionate avowal, the wonderful music of every word, the handsome face and thrilling eyes affected her strangely; but she was more moved by the confession of his loneliness and loneliness than by aught else. She, too, was she not lowly enough and lonely enough also? This, at least, made a bond between them.

She did not love him, but—she pitied him; and pity, with such a girl as Doris, is, indeed, near akin to love.

Lloyd George to Address League of Nations.

Strikers and Strike-Breakers Clash in Brooklyn---Railway Accident at Moncton---Mission to Silesia---British Tars Go Sightseeing.

LLOYD GEORGE ON ECONOMICAL SITUATION.

LONDON, Aug. 22. (Reuter's Despatch.)—Premier Lloyd George has issued a lengthy summary of the Government's policy regarding trade industry and labor, as announced in his recent address in the House of Commons. It emphasizes strongly points made on that occasion and states that the Government is deeply impressed with the evidence secured by the coal commission and the necessity of ameliorating the unsatisfactory social and housing conditions of the miners. Any scheme of reorganization of industry, it is stated, must ensure sufficient coal supply at such cost as to enable the export trade of the country to be maintained and extended. The committee, it is announced, will immediately establish an enquiry into the decrease of the output in regard to trade policy. Steps will be taken to promote industrial research, invention and increasing efficiency by developing technical education. Increased output will be stimulated by propaganda and the importance of the principle of standardization is emphasized. It is proposed to establish a Department of Standards to promote and co-ordinate standardization generally and administer all necessary testing institutions, trade organizations or private firms. Unstable industries are defined as fulfilling the following test: Produce essential for war or for maintenance of the country during the war, industry, so neglected before the war that there was an inadequate supply of the product; industry about which the Government found it necessary to take special steps during the war, industry which if special Government support were withdrawn could not maintain itself at the level of production necessary to national life. It is proposed that fees charged for the maintenance itself at the level of production with regard in each case to the difference between the price at which the article can be imported and the price at which the similar article can be sold in the United Kingdom. It is stated that it may be necessary for the Government to assist these industries for some years.

BOLSHEVIKS DRIVEN BACK.

LONDON, Aug. 21. A Bolshevik wireless communication received here this evening, says fighting is proceeding along the Murman River. Our advance toward the River Suna continues on the Southwestern Front. Under enemy pressure we abandoned Kazatin on the front of Gen. Denekine, the anti-Bolshevik. After fierce fighting our troops are retreating to new positions west of the Zubna. We have abandoned Kornevo.

DENEKINE FORCING BACK ENEMY

LONDON, Aug. 22. (Reuter's Despatch)—Authoritative information shows that the operations against the Russian Bolsheviki have now reached an interesting stage. The Russian northwestern army and the Estonians have during the past week thrown back the Bolsheviki across the Laga River while farther south serious fighting is going on north-west of Pskov and south of Pskov. In both of those sectors however the Bolsheviki have been counter-attacking for the past fortnight and have succeeded in pushing back their opponents for twenty miles. In the Pskov sector the Bolsheviki are within nine miles of the Pskov-Riga railway but certain weaknesses are observed in the Bolsheviki troops, and recently one regiment deserted completely with the transport. The recent Polish operations brought their left wing first to the lake region south of Minsk and south as far as Volhynsk. The completeness of the Polish victory at Minsk is shown by the fact that the Bolsheviki were driven back fifty miles on a front of a hundred miles. The Poles are also attacking on a hundred and twenty mile front from the Pripiet river to south of Rovno. On the northern Polish front the Bolsheviki have been driven back behind the Corin river. The Poles now hold the whole trunk line from Vilna by Baranovitch to Ostrog the left wing of Gen. Petluras' army is pushing forward towards Kieff from which he is now twenty miles away. In the meanwhile serious uprisings on a large scale have broken out against the Bolsheviki west, south and southwest of Kieff. Indeed it appears that the whole interior of the Ukraine is rising en masse to throw off the Bolsheviki yoke. The left wing of Gen. Denikine's army is advancing with great rapidity. The Bolsheviki forces are now behind the Bug river while farther north Elizavetgrad has been entered by Denikine's armored train. Heavy fighting is proceeding north of the Delper and particularly around Lubni 110 miles south-east of Kieff. Farther north Denikine's forces are advancing towards Konotop on the main Kieff-Moscow line, while north of Khar'kov he has commenced an offensive toward Kursk on the main centre of the western front where his successes may shortly bring him into touch with the Allied troops on his left which gave them signals for the uprising of the whole of the Ukraine, resulting in the Bolsheviki being driven back into the barren region of central Russia. At present less than 160 miles separates the anti-Bolshevik forces of the west Russian and south Russian fronts. The latest information shows that the Bolsheviki forces consist of fifteen armies of which 39,000 men are on the north Russian front, 167,000 on the west, 146,000 on the south and 133,000 on the east. It is estimated that there are 727,000 additional in the interior.

RECOMMENDS DISMISSAL OF ARCHDUKE.

PARIS, Aug. 21. Herbert Hoover, head of the International Relief Organization, who has just returned from a two weeks' trip through Central Europe, told correspondents to-day that it is imperative that decisive steps be taken immediately to displace Archduke Joseph as head of the Hungarian Government and to give Hungary a chance to establish a popular government.

PLEASURE TRIP FOR SAILORS.

OTTAWA, Aug. 21. The Government has arranged to have fifty officers and five hundred petty officers and men from H. M. S. Renown, Dragon and Dauntless, which conveyed H. R. H. the Prince of Wales to Canada, brought on a sightseeing tour, which will last five days and will include several of the most important cities in Eastern Canada. It has been decided that the party will leave Quebec on Sunday, August 24th, and will visit Montreal, Ottawa, Niagara Falls, and Toronto in order named, remaining in each city one day. The party will return to Quebec on Friday, August 29th. Two special trains will be provided for the conveyance of the party.

WILL ADDRESS LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

LONDON, Aug. 21. David Lloyd George, the British Prime Minister, will address the League of Nations Union on September first, according to an announcement by the Lord Mayor of London to-day. The meeting which will be attended by representatives of all British peoples, will mark the opening of a campaign. The Union is undertaking to impress the need of everybody's co-operation in the movement for world peace.

EVACUATING LITHUANIA.

BERLIN, Aug. 22. Announcement that the evacuation of Lithuania has begun was contained in a note sent to-day to the Entente Powers by the German Government.

MORE RACE TROUBLES.

NEW YORK, Aug. 21. Several persons were injured today in a clash between negro strike breakers and white strikers on a construction job in Brooklyn. The police reserves were called and four were arrested charged with intimidating men who wanted to work.

A CHAIN OF SELF-DEPENDENT STATES.

LONDON, Aug. 21. (Reuter's)—Speaking recently at a luncheon to Australians here, Lieut. Col. Emmery, Under Secretary for the Colonies, expressed the opinion that we must get away from the idea that Imperial unity meant drawing together more closely to a centre in London. The British Empire, he said, must be regarded not as a group of states round a common centre, but a chain of self-dependent states round the world, each of which regard itself as a centre of a whole. The morning Post states that enquiries show that the sentiment is acclaimed in the Dominions. It publishes an interview with Senator Pearce, the Australian Minister of Militia and Defence, who said that he welcomed this new conception of Empire, and added, "If that conception dominates the policy and action of the Imperial Government in its future relations with the component parts of the British Empire, it will be a long step toward the realization of the aims and aspirations of the Dominions."

IMPERIAL PREFERENCE.

LONDON, Aug. 22. Imperial Preference goes into effect on Sept. 1.

OPPOSE VACATION.

PARIS, Aug. 12. There is much discussion of a possible vacation for the Peace Conference, but this is bitterly opposed by many members who insist that it is impossible for the conference to take recess until the Austrian treaty is disposed of at least. This probably cannot be before Sept. 1.

MISSION TO SILESIA.

PARIS, Aug. 22. The Supreme Council will probably send an Allied military mission to Silesia in an effort to settle the three cornered fight between Spartacans, Poles and Germans, which involve mining districts, and is making more acute coal shortage in Central Europe.

RAILWAY ACCIDENT.

MONCTON, N. B., Aug. 22. William Stevens, of Moncton, aged 21 years, employed as car checker C. N. R. yesterday, was run over by train early this morning. Both legs were almost severed from his body. He was immediately taken to hospital where he died an hour later.

Trawling Needs Restriction.

A report to the Board of Trade of the fishery between Bridgeport and Wild Cove Head N.D.B. states:—"Some parties have done well with codfish in Exploits Bay by setting trawls in 4 or 5 fathoms of water. This mode of procedure should be restricted at once and limited to a certain depth for trawls to be set, as it will be ruinous to that inland bay fishery."

League Football.

The Stars defeated the B.I.S. in last night's football game by a score of 2 goals to 0. The B.I.S. put up a fine exhibition and made several attempts to reach the net but every rush was checked by the Stars' backs, whose defence was excellent. The second round was better than the first, both teams getting in some splendid work, but no further scoring was done, a chance from a penalty being missed by the B.I.S. and the game ended in a victory for their opponents. Mr. E. Churchill was referee and the following were the players:—

Star.—Goal, Delahunty; backs, Sullivan, Kavanagh; halves, W. Hart, Duggan, L. Kavanagh; forwards, Brien, Simms, Power, Hart, Kavanagh.

B.I.S.—Goal, Nash; backs, Kelly, O'Reilly; halves, Alsop, Brown, Burke; forwards, Devine, F. Phelan, Skinner, Kent, H. Phelan.

By their victory over the B.I.S. the Stars have won second place in the League Football fixtures, the championship having been already carried off by the Saints. The final games of the series will be run off next week, the B.I.S. and Cadets competing on Monday evening and the B.I.S. and Collegians on Friday.

Obituary.

MILDRED JANES.

Much sympathy will be felt for Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Janes, 29 1/2 Angel Place, in the death of their 3-year-old daughter Mildred, which occurred at the Fever Hospital, yesterday, after a brief illness, of diphtheria. This is the second child Mr. and Mrs. Janes have lost within two years, which make the blow doubly hard to bear. The funeral took place this afternoon from the Fever Hospital. Mr. Janes is at present at sea, having left on a foreign voyage some time ago, and the news of his little daughter's death will be a hard blow indeed to him. The Telegram extends sincere sympathy.

Turpentine mixed with a little linseed oil is an excellent thing to use in taking finger marks off white paint. Put it on a soft cloth and wipe the paint.

To-day's Messages.

Magnificent Bequests.

Special to Evening Telegram.
NEW YORK, To-day.
The report of the Sterling estate have been made known. Eighteen million dollars go to Yale University. This is the second largest bequest ever made to science. Half a million dollars for a thousand memorial homes in Canada have also been mentioned.

DISTRIBUTING FREE FISH.

LONDON, Aug. 21.
(Reuter Ottawa Agency.)—Two tons of fish, consisting of frozen herrings and haddocks, forming the first consignment from the five hundred tons given by the headquarters of the overseas military forces of Canada, was distributed to-day at Bermondsey. Eager crowds waited for two hours, and everybody was supplied. Similar distribution will take place to-morrow at Rotherhithe and other centers, when ten tons will be given away.

AUTHORITIES GIVE OPINIONS.

LONDON, Aug. 21.
(Reuter Despatch.)—The Trade Correspondent of the Daily Mail, who has been investigating the congestion of the docks in London cites a high official of the port as saying that the one danger point is in regard to large timber consignments coming on Government account for housing schemes. A million tons are to come from Canada. If it is shipped in steamers that do not require deep water docks, it will not matter so much, but otherwise it will need lighters to move it to places where it will have to be stored, and that will accentuate the shortage of lighters for general cargo vessels. Another authority said that much space had been used of late for food stuffs that was formerly used for timber. If all this timber is brought in ahead of the housing schemes, for which it is intended, and not stored elsewhere, there will be a direct effect on the food storage accommodation and that might easily affect food prices.

CANADIAN GROCERS MEET.

OTTAWA, Ont., Aug. 22.
With about sixty delegates in attendance from principal cities of Canada, the newly organized Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association opened its first annual convention in Chateau Laurier, to-day. H. W. Chamberlain, of Ottawa, was elected Chairman. W. F. O'Connor, Vice-President of the Canadian Board of Commerce, at the request of the convention, attended and explained clauses of bills Nos. 166 and 167, giving members of the Association the fullest possible information regarding the working of the new acts.

STEAM BARGE SINKS.

QUEBEC, Aug. 22.
The steam barge, Capt. Dunn, from the Great Lakes, sank here this morning at 3.30 off the breakwater. She had come from points below with pulp wood for the Lakes a half hour before and collided with the Point Cardy wharf, immediately springing a-leak. The crew sped her towards the Beaufort strait to beach her, but she sank on the way.

STERLING VALUE DECLINES.

LONDON, Aug. 21.
(Reuter Ottawa Agency.)—The decline in sterling, especially in the American Exchange, is followed in the newspapers here. The sovereign fell yesterday to $4.10, the lowest on record. This one pound sterling is only worth seventeen shillings. American experts here are exhorting the public to study foreign exchange in order to appreciate the necessity of economy, and increasing the production of exports, pointing out that money which now seems so plentiful is fictitious owing to being inflated by paper currency. Similar concern is expressed in Paris. "Le Temps" of that city compares the position of France unfavorably with that of Great Britain, pointing out that the pound sterling is worth thirty-four francs in France. It urges an increase of cheaper production as the only remedy. It concludes its comment on the subject by stating "that it is unlikely the Allies will resume a system of artificial stabilization of exchange." A telegram from the Berlin Food Department states that owing to the decreasing value of the mark, which is now worth two pence half penny, is prohibited from buying certain goods abroad, such as food supplies, mentioning Denmark and Holland particularly.

WHAT DOES THIS MEAN?

BERLIN, Aug. 21.
A mysterious distribution of arms among Pomeranian peasants is reported by the Sewoelf Uhr Blatt, which says that a military automobile delivered a load of arms Saturday. Another automobile was seized when about to deliver 400 rifles and a quantity of ammunition to the Pomeranian Agricultural League.

PREFERENCE FOR EMPIRE GOODS

LONDON, Aug. 22.
(Reuter's Despatch.)—The Commissioner of Customs has issued an explanation of the New Empire preference rates mentioned in the Budget Speech, which become operative on Sept. 1st. In the case of manufactured goods the preference is only claimable if twenty-five per cent. of the factory or workshop cost of each article is due to labor within the Empire. The exceptions are manufactured tobacco, refined sugar, syrup and molasses. The onus of proof as to the origin of the goods rests with the importers.

AIR MINISTRY STIMULATING AIR FORCES.

LONDON, Aug. 22.
(Reuter Despatch.)—The Air Ministry issues details of the airplane competition which will commence on the 1st of March next year, in regard to the developments of aviation lines and increased safety in flying. The rules are framed to ensure that the machines and engines must be designed and conducted within the Empire except the ignition system, carburetors and instruments. The large type of machine must have accommodation for fifteen besides the crew, and must travel ninety miles an hour. The small type must carry two including the pilot and must travel one hundred miles an hour. Seaplanes must carry four exclusive of the crew and must travel eighty knots per hour.

Reids' Boats.

Argyle leaving Placentia on bay route to-day.
Clyde left Moreton's Harbor 10.45 a.m. yesterday, outward.
Dundee left Port Blandford 9.55 p.m. yesterday, outward.

Petrel left Hillview 9.50 a.m. yesterday.

RECEIVED INCREASE.—The members of the Police and Fire Brigades are in a good humor to-day, having received the back money on the increase that was voted by the Government, from July 1st.

Parents Almost Lost All Hope of Raising Him

Harold Farthing Seemed to be Wasting Away—Tanlac Builds Him Up.

"Only mothers will ever know how grateful I am to Tanlac for making our boy well and strong after we had almost given up hope of ever being able to raise him," said Mrs. E. Farthing, whose husband is a well known employee of the Canadian National Railroad, and who lives at 628 Alexander Avenue, Winnipeg.

"It was two years ago, when Harold was thirteen years old," she continued, "that he was taken with rheumatism, and soon after the first attack rapidly grew worse. He finally got in such an awful condition that he was unable to stand alone, and he suffered so much when anything rough came in contact with his body that we had to keep him wrapped in cotton batting all the time. We tried specialists, electrical treatments, and even sent to the States to get medicines that promised relief, but nothing reached his case. My heart was simply breaking as I saw him wasting away while I was unable to get anything to help him. He did not eat enough to more than keep a bird alive and his suffering was so great both day and night that for months he got no sound restful sleep, but would only be able to doze and get cat naps from time to time. He finally got so thin that I don't believe he weighed as much as seventy-five pounds. Just as his father and I were on the verge of despair we heard about the wonderful good that Tanlac was doing right around us, and decided to try it, and now I want to tell the whole world that it is the grandest medicine that ever was made by the hand of man.

Why my neighbors say that if they hadn't seen the change with their own eyes they wouldn't have believed it. Tanlac took hold of Harold right from the start, and as he began to build up the rheumatism began to leave, and now he hasn't an ache or a pain. He is up and around and as strong and healthy as any other boy his age and has such a tremendous appetite that he cannot wait until meal time to eat. He has gained at least forty pounds in weight and sleeps as soundly as a normal boy of fifteen years should. He certainly doesn't look like the same boy. When I see him so robust and ruddy now, and think how terribly he suffered for two years, I just bless the name of Tanlac and wish that I could tell every woman who has a boy with the same trouble mine had what I know Tanlac can do."

Tanlac is sold in St. John's by M. Connors under the personal direction of a special Tanlac Representative.—adv.

Home Completely Destroyed.

Editor Evening Telegram.
Dear Sir:—The fire-bred gained the mastery at Colliers on Sunday, August 10th, and, in the course of a few hours, the entire premises of Mr. James Cole was completely destroyed.

The origin of the fire is wrapped in mystery. An outburst of flames through the roof of the barn was the first intimation the people had of its presence, and the dwelling and outhouses being but very short distances apart soon fell an easy prey to the consuming element.

A moderate westerly wind was blowing at the time, which, together with the dry condition of everything owing to the time of season, simply maddened the flames, so that by the time the people gathered on the premises all efforts were of no avail to save any of the buildings.

Mr. Cole was absent on Bell Island, endeavouring to secure his day's pay, and, in fact Mrs. Cole and the other members of the family were absent from their home at the time, which serves to render the cause or origin of the sad occurrence more mysterious.

The actual property destroyed comprises, with all their contents, except the kitchen stove and the carriage. The contents destroyed would then be articles of almost every description, comprising the accumulation of a lifetime of sixty years of hard work and energy of the most praiseworthy type.

At the present rate of labour and material and the increasing cost of every commodity we are very confident that Mr. Cole's possession on August 11th would be good value for seven thousand dollars, while before the sun went down on the following day he had to boil his kettle over a fire kindled among the ruins nearby the ruins of his premises and depend on the mercy of the firmament to bestow on his heavy family that warmth and protection from the night winds while he had not a blanket or a sheet to secure for them.

Such a misfortune, Mr. Editor, occurring to a man of more than sixty years of age and dependent on his day's pay for his and his family's support is one from which, unaided, it is impossible for him to recover.

The people of Colliers, Conception and Avondale are doing all possible in the way of meeting his immediate and urgent requirements by collecting money and material and erecting a temporary dwelling until the winter months will enable them to get some timber from the woods. Should any of your readers, Mr. Editor, desire to contribute any assistance in money or otherwise towards the alleviation of Mr. Cole's misfortune I am sure Mr. George Kennedy, the member for the district, will be only too glad to receive and acknowledge the same from any kind-hearted and practical sympathizer.

That Mr. Cole may have the best possible of that assistance which he so sorely deserves I would kindly ask the other city papers to please copy this letter of appeal.

Yours very sincerely,
MATTHEW WHELAN,
Teacher,
Avondale,
August, 1919.

NEW CHURCH.—Work has been commenced on the new Catholic Church at Fox Harbor, P. B., and will be completed, it is expected, next summer.

AT THE CROSSIE.—The following are guests at the Crossie: O. Leach, Harbor Grace; J. Syons, Moncton; W. Farrell, Bell Island.

POLICE COURT.—A case of assault was heard in the Police Court this morning. The accused was fined $2 or 7 days.

DR. G. N. MURPHY'S office will be closed from Tuesday, August 12th, to August 26th.

36 BIG FISH.—The whaling steamer Catchlot at Hawk's Harbor, has secured 36 of the big fish to date, and the leviathans still continue plentiful in that neighbourhood.

WILL ENTER DOCK AGAIN.—The steamer Fern which, it will be remembered, went ashore at Knight's Cove near King's Cove and was badly damaged, and towed here for repairs, came off dock yesterday where she had been undergoing survey, and will go on again on Monday to have repairs completed.

Wedding Bells.

GIBB-TAIT.

A pretty wedding was solemnized at the Presbyterian Church at 11 o'clock this morning, when Major Robert Holland Tait, M.C., son of Dr. J. Sinclair and Mrs. Tait, was united in holy bonds of matrimony with Miss Margaret Gertrude Gibb, daughter of Mr. Archibald G. and Mrs. Gibb. Lieut.-Col. W. F. Rendell acted as best man, while Misses Marlon and Frances Sclater and Misses Bettie and Jean Tait performed the duties of bridesmaids and flower girls, respectively. The bride was tastefully attired in a dress of white georgette over white satin. The marriage spread was partaken of at the home of the bride and at 3 o'clock this afternoon the happy pair left for a month's honeymoon in New York, by the Rosalind. The Telegram wishes them many years of happy wedded life. The guests at the luncheon were: Dr. Arch and Mrs. Tait, Miss Edna Blair, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Stirling, Mr. W. Watts McDonald, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Dalwood, Capt. and Mrs. Lloyd Woods, Capt. and Mrs. Cooper, Misses Jean and May Robertson, Mrs. R. Ritchie, Mr. Cyril Fox, Miss A. Ledingham, Mr. and Mrs. E. Pinset.

The actual property destroyed comprises, with all their contents, except the kitchen stove and the carriage. The contents destroyed would then be articles of almost every description, comprising the accumulation of a lifetime of sixty years of hard work and energy of the most praiseworthy type.

At the present rate of labour and material and the increasing cost of every commodity we are very confident that Mr. Cole's possession on August 11th would be good value for seven thousand dollars, while before the sun went down on the following day he had to boil his kettle over a fire kindled among the ruins nearby the ruins of his premises and depend on the mercy of the firmament to bestow on his heavy family that warmth and protection from the night winds while he had not a blanket or a sheet to secure for them.

Such a misfortune, Mr. Editor, occurring to a man of more than sixty years of age and dependent on his day's pay for his and his family's support is one from which, unaided, it is impossible for him to recover.

The people of Colliers, Conception and Avondale are doing all possible in the way of meeting his immediate and urgent requirements by collecting money and material and erecting a temporary dwelling until the winter months will enable them to get some timber from the woods. Should any of your readers, Mr. Editor, desire to contribute any assistance in money or otherwise towards the alleviation of Mr. Cole's misfortune I am sure Mr. George Kennedy, the member for the district, will be only too glad to receive and acknowledge the same from any kind-hearted and practical sympathizer.

That Mr. Cole may have the best possible of that assistance which he so sorely deserves I would kindly ask the other city papers to please copy this letter of appeal.

Yours very sincerely,

MEDICINE FOR A FEVER.

RUTH CAMERON

Did you ever stop, when you were pitying yourself a t t e r some disagreement with your husband, a n d wonder what he was pitying himself for?

Well, suppose you have a falling out because you wanted him to go out and play cards with some friends and he says he is too tired and wants to sit at home in his arm chair and just rest and read.

have to have a reason for self-pity (which is not saying he hasn't). Self-pity is akin to self-love—it is subjective rather than objective in its nature.

But just for the interest of it, try to think what he could find to pity himself about if he were trying to. Couldn't he think, "Here I work hard all day earning the money to keep this house going, and when I come home so dead tired that I can hardly move and just aching for a comfortable chair and a little peace, she's at me to go out and meet a lot of people. If she knew how tired I felt she wouldn't be at me this way every night," (of course it isn't "every night," but self-pitiers don't stick at little details like that.)

Self Pitiers Never Stick At Small Details.

You urge your wishes and he urges his, and finally he says he'll go and you say you don't think you care to go if he is going to be so mean about it, and then he sits down with his pipe and his paper and his grouch, and you go to bed without kissing him. And as you lie there you are thinking what a hard time you have, busy around the house all day doing monotonous housework, and then when evening comes and you plan a little outing with your husband, he isn't willing to make the effort to go with you. Of course, you could go alone, but what's the sense of being married if you never go anywhere together? People will begin to think it's queer that you never go out together (of course, it isn't "never," but self-pitiers never stick at little details like that.)

And as these thoughts race through your mind, your pillow gets hotter and your bed more uncomfortable and your sense of your own misfortunes more poignant, until you are in a perfect fever of resentment and self-pity.

What Is He Pitying Himself About?

Now here's a medicine for that fever. Stop, as I said above, and try to think what your husband is pitying himself about. For that is probably what he is doing. That's why he didn't have a word to say when you ostentatiously went to bed without kissing him. You don't see why he should pity himself? One doesn't Could You Accomplish That Miracle?

Doesn't that point of view make him seem a little less unreasonable as he sits downstairs in his chair puffing at his pipe, and frowning at his paper? Doesn't it give you a little different idea of him to think of him sitting there pitying himself than it did to fancy him sitting there determined to have his own way and keep you from having a good time.

If you could possibly accomplish the further miracle of feeling just a twinge of pity for him instead of for yourself,—the quarrel would surely be on its way out. But perhaps that is asking too much.

Any how it's an interesting experiment for husband and wives,—and other folks too.

A Mother of Sixty-Two.

So far as can be gathered, the honour of being the mother of the biggest family in this country belongs to the late Mrs. Mary Jones, of Chester, who had thirty-three children — fifteen pairs of twins and three singly born.

Every child was born alive, and the record is inscribed on a headstone in Chester Cemetery, where this champion mother is buried.

Thirty-four children were born to Mr. William Bonnett, of York, but in this case they were divided between three mothers. Of the first marriage four children were born; of the second, twenty-six, including triplets and twins; and of the third four.

These records, however, are completely out-classed by that of an Italian woman, Signora, Gionetta, of Nocera, Naples, who, in nineteen years of married life, gave birth to fifty-nine boys and three girls. In nine years she had eleven sets of triplets, three times she had four at a birth, and on one occasion she gave birth to five boys and a girl.

The case is quite authentic, and seventeen years ago a petition was presented to the Italian Government asking for an annual pension for the woman who had established the world's birth record.

THE SUMMER OPTIMIST.

WILY MASON

If man's an optimist these days, when this old world seems all ablaze, if he can gayly sing and smile, he is an optimist worth while. There is no trick in being gay upon a spring or autumn day, when gentle breezes slip along and birds put up a gladsome song, and nature seems to strain a t.e.w to bring all pleasant things in view. Then any man can wear a grin, the ends of which obscure his chin. But when the sun rays scorch your pet, and all your innards seem to melt; when after days that make you weep, you go to bed and cannot sleep, and get up at the break of dawn, all in, worn out and spent and gone, methinks it is another thing to beam around and smile and sing. I've never seen a sunshine gent who shone in summer worth a cent. I know a lot of Sunny Jims who prance around on buoyant limbs at other seasons of the year, but they all wilt when summer's here.

When they break out with prickly heat, their words no more are honey sweet; when they are pestered by the flies, they hand us out no maxims wise. Like all the rest of mortal men, they cuss and rant, and cuss again.

'Waiting at the Church.'

Weddings Which have been Stopped or Postponed at the Altar Steps.

The dramatic disappointment of one of the season's prettiest brides and her gallant bridegroom, when they made the discovery that a very high dignitary of the Roman Catholic Church had forgotten to notify the registrar, has had many previous examples.

Some of them far more really tragic than this was, even though there were "dukes and earls and such fine girls" waiting at the church.

Another prominent clergyman omitted to publish the banns of a couple on the second Sunday, by an oversight. The pair had intended to go to America after being united on the Monday after the "third time of asking."

When the mistake was discovered the clergyman took counsel's opinion, and was informed the wedding would not be legal. This mistake cost the clergyman a good round sum. The couple were detained at his expense, and lawyer's charges amounted to £40.

In the Wild West a certain man was arrested at the altar for an alleged shooting affair, and the wedding was not only postponed, but the (b)alter took on another initial letter, or seemed likely to do so. The intended wife was to be the principal witness at the trial. But the young couple were not to be defeated so easily.

Arrangements were made through friends who were allowed to see the prisoner, and late at night the "lady," disguised as a negro employed about the prison, climbed to the cell window, where the lovers joined hands through the bars whilst a clergyman friend stood below and said the words which made them man and wife. All the State went into fits of joy at the occurrence, and as there was now no evidence, the bridegroom was released.

Some years ago a wedding was just about to be celebrated, and all the guests were in their places in the church. The bridegroom had arrived, and was waiting for his prospective bride, when a stranger was seen to come in from the vestry and touch him on the arm. The young man left the church with him, smiling and nodding to the many people he knew.

That was the last anyone ever saw of him. He was a most respectable and estimable young man, and no one knows to this day how or why he was spirited away. The young lady, married another man some years later, but still believes in her first love, and thinks he met foul play.

OBVIATING STREET CONFUSION.

If there is one thing above most others that strikes the visitor to our city as being strange it must surely be the confusion and absence of systematized arrangement of traffic and pedestrians.

There are many needed improvements to be effected in St. John's, most of them being of a nature that requires rather lavish expenditure. There are some, however, that are just as needed that would cost little or nothing to have made. The matter of street traffic is one of them.

As far as horses, cars and other vehicles are concerned, there is not a great deal lacking. Room for some improvement, of course, there is, but not to such an extent as that of the pedestrians who cause, by their lack of regulated movements, the confusion so evident on our streets.

It is the rule of the road, where horses and other conveyances are concerned, to keep always to the left hand side. In this way much confusion is obviated and there is not the number of accidents there would be were the rule not in force and enforced.

With pedestrians, on the other hand, there is no rule. People may and do walk to the right or to the left, just as they feel inclined. On a sidewalk are people going in opposite directions and the number of collisions is big.

Everyone has witnessed the confusion caused by a man who is in a hurry. He cuts around this man, dodges another, swerves narrowly from still another and then dashes into—perhaps an old lady. This picture is not overdrawn. There is confusion. Too much confusion. And absolutely unnecessary confusion.

Everyone knows the value of orderliness. The very function of good government is based on orderliness. Without it all is anarchy.

If we have order and regularity in one thing why not in another? If order and regularity are enforced in the middle of the street why not on the sidewalks?

The power to make and enforce such regulations is in the hands of the police. There is no reason why the police should not, and every reason why the police should, immediately formulate such regulation, make it known to the public and enforce it.

No difficulty will be experienced. No opposition or antagonism from the people will be met with. Everyone realizes the confusion in our streets—especially on a Saturday night. The good sense of all will cause all to co-operate with the police in obviating and even eliminating this unnecessary confusion, and in observing the regulations governing it.

A man runs his life in danger on Water Street on a Saturday night, when he essays to get through the struggling crowds and attempts to dodge hatpins, umbrellas, elbows and other extremities.

In any other city but this these regulations will be found. They do obviate disorder and confusion. People on the sidewalks there keep either to the right or to the left. They do it automatically. They do not need to be told. The police officers do not have to remind them of the regulations. They are born in it and get the habit.

St. John's is a city incorporated. It has a population of about forty-five thousand citizens. The regulations are needed and easy to formulate and to enforce.

Now, then, Mr. Inspector General . . . . . ?

S. A. Congress.

The welcome meeting of the Congress takes place to-night in No. 1 Citadel, New Gower Street, at 8 p.m. Delegates from various parts of the country, together with Commissioner Richards and Staff from Toronto, will be given a public welcome. Tomorrow all day very special gatherings will be held, beginning at 7 a.m. At 11 o'clock at the Citadel, New Gower Street, a Holiness Convention will be conducted by the Commissioner, assisted by a number of leading officers. In the afternoon in the Methodist College Hall, the Commissioner will deliver a lecture on "The world wide Salvation Army." His Excellency the Governor and a number of leading gentlemen will be present. At night a great Salvation meeting will be conducted. The Commissioner will preach. Visitors will please remember that the entrance will be from the Harvey Road door only. A hearty invitation is extended to all.

Wednesday's Garden Party.

St. Michael's Church holds a garden party at Simm's field on Wednesday afternoon, when a football game will constitute one of the special points of interest. Rev. E. Fletcher will referee the game and the players will be—Arthur Curnew, Goal; H. Adams, G. Bartlett, full backs; A. Fever, J. Pearsey, D. Ellis, halves; Eric Ewing, H. Hookey, E. Reid, B. Reeves, T. Hall, forwards. Red Sox—H. Belbin, goal; E. Luther, W. Newhook, full backs; J. Newhook, G. Hunter, halves; T. Healey, B. Sawyers, S. McNeill, H. Goodland, R. Vasey, forwards.

Missing Domestic Found.

Alice Brown, the domestic of Mrs. Wm. Sinnott, of Kilbride, who had been missing from her home for 8 days, was found Thursday night by a man of that vicinity. The girl, who is insane, went away on Regatta Day 10 days ago and no search party was sent to look for her—and apparently no effort was made, being found, when she was, quite by accident. Dr. Duncan, of the Insane Asylum, was sent for and he ordered her to be taken to the home of her employer. Before the unfortunate girl goes astray again—or does something even worse, the authorities should attend to her case. Human life is too valuable to be allowed to be snuffed out without a protecting hand being raised.

TO PLAY RETURN MATCH.—Arrangements are now being made for the return cricket match between the Shamrocks and Nondescripts, and will likely be played next week. In the last game the Shamrocks won by only 2 runs, and a hard fought contest is looked forward to.

Inter-Denominational Education.

SOME NOTABLE OPINIONS.

There can be no doubt that Interdenominational Education is the system favored by nearly every right-thinking man in the country to-day. Many have pronounced their approval of the principle, while many more, who have not done so, consider it right and the only right one. Some time ago we published the opinions of some prominent men on the important subject, and to-day we append more. That they are clear-cut and sharply-defined is evident, and each one is worded in such emphatic and decisive language that there can be no mistaking its meaning. Possibly the most interesting of to-day's list is that of Mr. Dugald Munn, who, as he states, is prepared to give Twenty-five Thousand Dollars to Education if it be Interdenominational. Naturally, such a pronouncement as this does much to bring forward a system as the one on which the following quotations have been given.

Rev. J. W. A. N. Nicholson, Moderator of Halifax Presbytery, and now Supplying in St. Andrew's Church, Says:—"The closer co-operation the different denominations have in education the better for the dominion, and for that reason the proposed amalgamation is a step in the right direction. As an outsider, I may say that I do not understand how the present "system" could have been tolerated for so long."

Mr. Charles P. Ayre, of the firm of Ayre & Sons, a Prominent Church and Business Man, Says:—"The adoption of Interdenominational Education will mark a great step forward in the training of the young people of this country. In most of the outports it will make possible properly graded, better staffed, and more efficiently equipped schools, in which the teachers, instead of working alone, will have the advantages that come from personal contact with others of the same profession. The scholars will benefit by a larger environment and a more practical system. Compulsory education will be made feasible in all the more populous centres."

Rev. D. B. Ashford, of the Congregational Church, Says:—"Education is a National affair, and ought not to be in the hands of the Churches, as such, at all, or subject to the whims and wiles of party politics. But bearing in mind the evolution of our present system, I believe that Interdenominational Education would be a great step forward, and would make for both efficiency and economy. The Churches have no right to allow vested interest or denominational jealousy to stand in the way of a more perfect system of education."

Mr. Dugald Munn Says: Give the Youngsters a Chance!—"There is a tide in the affairs of men which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune: Omitted, all the voyage of their life is bound in shallows and in miseries. On such a full sea are we now afloat."

Newfoundland has made a great name for herself in this World War. She must now prepare to take rank with other countries in the years to come.

It is the duty of Church, State and individuals to submerge private prejudices for the public good. I do not believe that you will find a cleverer lot of people anywhere in the whole world than the Newfoundlanders, especially those of the outports.

We all know that it is a crime and a shame that there is not a town nor village in this Colony that has what may be termed a really up-to-date school. And, furthermore, there are many places with no school at all.

The first, and I may say the only, remedy, for improvement is united schools. And not have our educational grant squandered into small sections,—thus making it impossible to employ and hold good teachers, and also impossible to have graded schools.

The Methodist and Church of England people have had Educational Drives, and I have promised that if they will pool their funds and amalgamate I will subscribe Twenty-five Thousand Dollars towards it, for the uplifting of my native land. Give the youngsters a chance!—and forward Newfoundland!

The gentlemen whose opinions, all favoring the proposed system, were given in this column last time, were:

REV. DR. GEORGE BOND,
President Methodist Conference.
REV. DR. CURTIS,
Pres. Meth. Board of Education.
REV. DR. EDGAR JONES,

At the Majestic.

Last evening's show at the Majestic Theatre was witnessed by the crowded house with deep interest. The picture, "In the Shadow," featuring Gordon de Maine, is remarkable in as much as it stars an unusual number of high-class players, every one of whom takes his part with a skill and ability good to see. The Ford Educational Film, demonstrating vividly the wonderful process of manufacturing table salt, is an "education in itself." It is a fact that there were many in the hall last evening who left vastly more enlightened on this process than upon entering. A good comedy added the climax to the show, which was judged by all as a high-class one. Tonight it will be repeated, when the Orchestra will render the latest and most up-to-date music obtainable.

Labrador Reports.

The following report was received from Labrador by the Department of Marine and Fisheries last evening: Makovick—Fresh north wind, fish slacking off. Grady and Smoky—Calm; clearing. Holton—No report. Flat Islands and Domino—Light east wind; fair hooking. Vension Island—Clear; fair hooking. Battle Harbor—Clear, calm; hooking and trapping little.

Our Baseball Column.

PLAGIARISED AND OTHERWISE.

They talk about the cripples and the sundry other things that keep a team from playing pennant winning ball.

Now that the regular League schedule is finished, the next thing to engage the attention of the fans is the Inter-Town series for the championship of Newfoundland and incidentally the valued silver trophy offered by Mr. R. G. Reid.

The first game will be played on Monday week, and then it is proposed to start the game at six o'clock so as to give everyone an opportunity of seeing it.

The admission fee will be as usual—ten cents—but in response to popular request the Baseball League has decided to reserve the grandstand seats at a quarter each. Tickets will be on sale at Mr. Chesman's on Tuesday.

In order to augment the League funds which are sadly depleted owing to the cost of improvements this year to St. George's Field, it is hoped to arrange a baseball game for Wednesday afternoon between the Cubs and Red Lions. This clash will surely interest the fans.

Welcome home, Hooks! You're just in time for the Inter-Town series. We missed your "Atta Boy" all summer.

Mike Shallow is coming with the Grand Falls team as trainer and his many friends will be glad to shake his big mitt once more. Incidentally, won't it be interesting to hear Hooks tell him how Dempsey put it all over Willard?

Efficiency experts declare that if correctly applied the hot air expended by Ducky Raines and Bill Duggan in the Lions-Wanderers game would prove sufficient to inflate every catcher's wind-pad in the Inter-Town series. Not forgetting, of course, that Bobby Burns' efforts at the football games would be jolly useful too.

The "home-team" will be picked this afternoon by Major Montgomerie and Messrs. Hartnett and Chesman.

It is known that the Grand Falls batteries will be Slocum and McHenry, and Sebatt, Foran and Cohen.

FOR THE "STAR'S" CUB REPORTER! August 23, 1919. Sporting Editor Evening Telegram. Dear Sir—Did you give the "once over" to the following extract that appeared in the Sporting Columns of last night's Star?

"The Wanderers fielded perfectly in the third, blanking the Lions. The Hartnetts in this half while on the bases, allowed themselves to be thrown out on impossible stealing. This kind of play looked very suspicious to a number of the spectators and several remarks were passed such as selling the game, etc."

I did not think that our genial cub reporter would ever treat us that way, more especially as it was through the Wanderers' indirectly that he was able to secure his old position as Star Cosen for the Cub team. He is quite right, however, when he says several of the Wanderers were thrown out on "impossible stealing." Hiltz's perfect throws (2 only) made these particular steals impossible.

Now we come to the sad part of it. "for it seems that" this kind of play made some of the spectators suspicious, etc." We have a sneaky feeling as to who these spectators were, because we got their full approval up to the fourth inning, when the score remained a tie. After the Lions put the game on ice very little noise was made by these particular spectators.

Now Harvey, you have done the Red Lions an injustice. They outclassed us in every particular in Thursday night's game and you should be sporty enough to give them their due. Another outburst like the above and we will have you written up by "the Dreadful Bone" I Thank You!

In conclusion let me offer the sincere congratulations of the Wanderer team to Manager Hiltz and his team mates on their victory. Playing an uphill game since the inception of the League they have never allowed themselves to become discouraged, and when enlistments crippled their ranks, year after year, each man played harder than ever before and fans are proud of the fact that the returned men helped in no small way to make the Red Lions a pennant contender for some time to come.

Yours very truly, T. V. HARTNETT, Manager of the Wanderers' Baseball Club.

Popular Captain Gets An Address.

Courteousness of Captain Tavernor, of Steamer Glencoe, is Appreciated by Grateful Passengers, on Recent Trip of Steamer Here.

The last trip of the steamer Portia from the West Coast of Newfoundland to Port aux Basques was delayed some two hours, owing to bad weather. On board the Portia were some sixty passengers, many of them on their way to points in the United States. Knowing this, Captain Tavernor, the always obliging commander of the steamer Glencoe, lost two hours at Port aux Basques, in order to accommodate the incoming passengers. Despite this delay, the Glencoe arrived here in time to connect with the outgoing express, thus relieving those on board of much worry and inconvenience.

So delighted were the passengers that they made Captain Tavernor a very substantial presentation, accompanied by a lengthy and eulogistic address.

The signers were: Misses Brewer and Brunslett; Mrs. T. Moulton, P. Wagg, G. C. Rogers, G. R. Courage, M. A. Paul, Geo. Farthing, F. J. Swann, Miss Charlotte Swann, Mrs. John J. Penney, W. H. Moulton, Frances Evans, Detroit; Bessie Evans, North Sydney; Mrs. W. G. Buffett, Evanah Pines, Miss M. G. Smith, Eva Alsop, E. J. Myers and Leonard Bronner, New York; Thos. P. Mitchell, George Fargins, Robert Kennedy, M. S. Thomas, F. J. Swann, M. Clarke, Fred Thomas, John Pines, James Green, John Thomas, Walter F. Gear, L. A. McCuish, Wm. Burns, George Mitchell, P. Moynan.

Needless to say, Captain Tavernor was completely taken by surprise, especially when it is understood the address and presentation only took place when the good ship Glencoe was coming up the harbor and her commander a very busy official. However, he replied in a neat and well worded address, in which he thanked the donors, and pointed out that he was simply doing his duties; that his position called for courtesy and attention to patrons of the service.—North Sydney Herald, Aug. 20.

Hymeneal.

On August 20th, at the Chapel of Our Lady of Good Counsel, Presentation Convent, a very pretty wedding was solemnized by the Rev. Dr. Green. The contracting parties were Mr. James Mahon and Miss Lillian Walsh. The bride wore a very handsome gown of white crepe de chene and carried a bouquet of white carnations and asparagus fern, and looked charming. She was attended by her sister, Miss Katherine who looked very attractive in a gown of champagne georgette. The groom is a returned soldier, having done active service for over 2 years and had been severely wounded, was attended by his brother, Mr. John, who has also seen active service. After the ceremony refreshments were served at the home of the bride's mother, Barnes' Road. The happy couple then motored to the station where they entrained for Holyrood, where the honeymoon will be spent. The presents received were many and costly, testifying to the popularity of the bride and groom. The Telegram joins with their many friends in wishing Mr. and Mrs. Mahon every success and happiness in their married life.

Market Prices.

COD LIVER OIL. The most of the refiners are shipping part or all of their oil in now at $2 per gallon. We think they are wise as the price is a good one and they are only losing in gauge by holding it over as every refiner knows better than we can tell them. The word is that all are shipping it in as they make it this year, and we heard one buyer say he would be only too pleased to guarantee October price if the refiner would agree to that, as he fully expected to see it cheaper then.

COD OIL. Five years ago $90 per tun was looked upon as top figures, in fact many of our fishermen will remember when they sold oil for $60 per tun.

Two years ago when Cod Oil reached $250 or practically $1 per gallon, there were many hurrahs and waving of caps among the fishermen—everyone was delighted to get this fancy price.

Last year just before the end of the war prices went to $400 per tun, but it must be remembered that little or no oil was exported at this figure and we know for a fact that the merchants who paid that price had to cut the value in two and sell for $200 and even less before they got clear of their stocks.

These facts are worth recalling now, as while we want to see the fishermen get every cent they can for their oil, they should be reasonable and accept good prices when they are offered as we cannot expect to see present values last for ever.

The regular quotation by principal buyers here is $225.00 but we have heard that something higher has been paid in one or two cases.

LOBSTERS.

Prices have gone sky-high on the West Coast no less than $37.50 per case of 48 one pound tins. Exporters have refused to give this figure and the most of the pack went into the hands of the middle men regarding whom it will be an interesting problem to watch as to how they will come out of the transaction. The St. John's price is $33.00 per case, more than which Exporters here believe it is not possible to give and make a living profit.

MOLASSES.

Two cargoes arrived from Barbados this week putting the total imports up to 8,164 puncheons as compared with 8,921 puncheons at a corresponding date last year. The local prices are unchanged viz 93 to 94 cents per gallon for puncheon lots, 95 per single puncheon 97 for tierces, and $1.00 in barrels. Four or five Nfld. schooners will load molasses at Barbados this month. It is likely that the total imports will be in excess of last years.

PORK.

Pork though unchanged in price since our last issue is showing signs of weakness. The scarcity at packing centres since July is keeping the rates sustained so long, but a more plentiful supply due in a few weeks is expected to bring about a beginning in the long-expected decline. Ham Butt in the local market, almost the only kind now imported, is selling at $80 in barrel lost and $62 single.

BEEF.

Beef is a little firmer this week in the Chicago and New York markets, but not notably higher so far. The local prices according to grade run from $42 to $49 and Boneless at $41 wholesale. There is no immediate prospect of a decline, and the Fall Trade rates are likely to be within the scope of the figures quoted above. The imports to date amount to 12,119 barrels against 17,335 barrels this date last year.

FLOUR.

Some new all white flour arrived here this week to one of the large importers and is we are informed selling 50 cents higher than standard per barrel. Full shipments will start to come here about the last of August and prices may then shade off a little by reason of the general competition. The price of standard is unchanged. The imports to date amount to 97,229 barrels as compared with 99,940 barrels in 1918 at this date.

SUGAR.

There is once more a marked scarcity of white granulated sugar in the local market. The S.S.—is now on the way from Montreal and may have some, and a steamer is leaving there on the 23rd inst. for St. John's which is definitely known to be bringing a good consignment. The U. S. Government is refusing permits to dealers to export sugar just now with a view to keeping an ample supply for their own people and bringing down the cost of living. Next imports will be $13 to $13.50 wholesale.

APPLES.

The first shipment of new apples was received this week by George Neal, the headquarters for fruit. The brand is "Crimean Beauties," and they are going out quickly at $8.50 per barrel.

OATS, HAY, POTATOES.

Mr. Joliffe Quinton Replies to Advocate.

Editor Evening Telegram. Dear Sir—Will you kindly publish the enclosed letter in your paper, and oblige.

Yours very truly, JOLIFFE QUINTON. Princeton, N.F., Aug. 25.

(Copy).

Editor Evening Advocate. Sir—Allow me to draw attention to the editorial columns of your paper of Aug. 15th, wherein you make a most vicious attack on myself and Mr. Levi Prince, classifying us as "Notorious Try Heelers," and falsely charging us with selecting a certain few to work Government money.

How dare you, Sir, a perfect stranger to me, allow yourself to be misled by the evil report of irresponsible persons, and publish false and libelous statements.

I understand your name is Mews. I knew man of this name, who was honorable and true, who would not stoop to attack an enemy in this manner. And yet you, who have been allowed the prefix "Honourable," with a seat in our Legislative Council, do not hesitate to attack strangers in this shameless way.

I shall expect an apology at once, or otherwise I shall deal with you in a manner that may be pleasant to you.

Had you taken the trouble to make an enquiry regarding the money and road in question, you would have been informed of the following facts. When the branch railroad was built about nine years ago, the builders cut up the main line of road, making four crossings within a distance of two hundred yards, and rendering the road impassable for the use of horses and carts.

The Government of the day had a new road surveyed; the Reid Nfld. Co. commenced to build it, but the man in charge of the work was driven out of the place by the same parties who are now using you to make false and malicious statements about persons who are utterly unknown to you.

You would have also learnt that the present Road Board as constituted, is not representative of the people, but composed of self-nominated members who assumed office in the absence of nearly all the voters of the place. You would have also understood that the personnel of the Board is composed of three young men, one of whom is unmarried, who did not offer to fight for their King and Country, but allowed others to defend them and devoted themselves to all the Government pickings they could get.

It ill becomes you, or either of your Road Board Chums to vilify me, whose two sons fought their country's battles on the fields of France, and returned to me wounded and broken in health for the remainder of their days. Mr. Prince has recently suffered bereavement in the death of his son and daughter under exceptionally sad circumstances, which makes your conduct all the more vile.

I want you to understand that I am no "Heeler," that I am a free and independent British subject and have the right and courage to use my own opinion with regard to politics or any other question of vital interest to my country.

Thanks to the Hon. A. B. Morine, we now have a good road with which the public are well pleased, and it was not built by an elected few, as you falsely state, but by every man who applied for work. Had you continued your enquiries, you would have found that the famous letter you published some time ago threatening Mr. Morine, was not signed by any of the men whose names appeared upon it. In fact you would have found that many of them know nothing of the matter until a few days ago.

If your object in abusing Mr. Morine is to make him more popular, I assure you you have succeeded better than you know. I am sending a copy of this letter to the Evening Telegram and Daily News and shall expect you to publish this in your paper with an apology for your vile conduct.

Do Flirts Make the Best Husbands?

"Because He Settles Down so Much Better Afterwards," Says a Contributor.

"Once a flirt always a flirt," say the wiseacres. Without using the exact words that was what most people —especially my feminine friends—
meant by the wagging of their heads on the day I announced my engagement to Jim.

Jim was, is, and always will be, a flirt.
And that's partly why I married him. It sounds mad, perhaps, but when I've explained, maybe you'll agree with me.

To begin with, I'm one of those women who can't live without attention and compliments. I should hate to be married and treated as if I were a bit of nice china, put safely into a cabinet, and looking at and admired now and again.

Some men treat their wives like that.
Those men are not flirts; they're such dry-as-dust types that they couldn't flirt.

They don't understand woman—how she starves when she's expected just to settle down and be content; how she longs for fire and life—for little bits of courtship, although she's married, for a stray compliment and an unexpected caress.

Now, what I maintain is that a flirt understands women, therefore the emotional type of woman is far more likely to be happy if she marries a flirt. She'll be appreciated, paid court to, given her fill of "pretty talk," and,
what is best of all to a woman, she'll still be made love to.

And there's another point about marrying a flirt. A man who has been one is more likely to have sown his wild oats and to be content to settle down to the role of husband and father.

When he has flirted with many girls,
a wife knows that she must indeed be the chosen one, if he proposes to her after having had so much experience.

You may say that the thought must cross her mind as to whether he flirts with others when away from her. He is so charming a husband-lover that it doesn't. She believes in him, because he satisfies her woman's vanity.

Possibly, being a flirt, he does carry on harmless flirtations with one and another, but, so long as she doesn't see, what matter? "What the eye doesn't see the heart never grieves over." Somehow, a woman doesn't suspect a man of being untrue, so long as he gives her affection.

And now for my last confession. I was a flirt myself before I married Jim. I'm a flirt still, but I flirt with my own man. We both think we've solved the problem of married boredom. If wives and husbands would flirt with each other there's no chance of boredom. At any rate Jim and I have never known it yet.—Tit Bits.

Lunatics at Large.

Maniacs Who Prowl the Streets.
"There are hundreds of madmen at large!"

This startling statement was made to the writer recently when talking of the stupid and harmful commitments which are constantly being committed on women in the streets of our big towns. These men, my informant said, ought to be kept under control behind four walls, but they are artful
as well as mad.

Take the case of the man, or it may be a woman, whose latest mania is destroying the blouses of women travelling on omnibuses or in trains.
Sometimes holes are burnt in them with lighted cigarettes, but usually points to the use of some corrosive fluid, which the assailant squirts from a small syringe, and then escapes before the damage which has been inflicted is noticed.

What satisfaction is derived from such a senseless outrage? None at all. It simply points to a kink in the nature of the assailant, which impels him or her to be destructive.

Sometimes the police manage to catch these minor maniacs. A short time ago a man was caught red-handed cutting with a dagger-like knife a girl's coat as he sat behind her on a bus. There were also found in his possession three pairs of scissors, which led the police to the conclusion that he was responsible for the outrages on girls who had complained that some spiteful person had cut off their plaited hair.

The worst form of street fiend the police have come across, however, is the man who takes a delight in trying to throw lighted matches on women's hats and dresses. Occasionally this has been accidentally done by careless smokers travelling on the tops of omnibuses, but the frequency with which ladies' hats and dresses were set on fire in the streets led the police to believe that there were certain individuals with a diabolical mania for injuring girls and women in this manner.

Particular warning is given against men who seem to have a mania for sticking pins and needles into girls.
Sometimes these pins and needles are really the points of tiny syringes with which girls are drugged, and in certain cases they have fallen victims to the villainy of the perpetrators of the outrages.—English Ex.

How to Play Gooseberry.

Hints All Chaperons Should Read.
(Florence Mackenzie in P. W.)

This is the gooseberry season, from now until the end of September. The two-legged gooseberry.

Hundreds of young couples have gooseberry breakfast, tea and supper, sour gooseberries; while just a few have gooseberry for breakfast and supper, sweet gooseberries.

Playing gooseberry is not all jam.
I know, for I have played at it and it gets exhausting at times and leaves one with a flabby skin, and makes one feel a gooseberry fool. But I've played at it so often that I am beginning to know the rules of the game, and I have left the sour gooseberry class and entered the sweet one.

The trouble about playing gooseberry is this: On the one hand, if you are conscientious, you must keep your victim in sight every minute they are together. On the other hand, if you are a sporting gooseberry, you will keep them out of sight as much as possible. The judicious gooseberry chooses the happy medium and bobs up just when she is wanted, and bobs down at all other times.

When to Have a Headache.
Green gooseberries should take lessons from those of riper years. The general training is quite simple.

For example, you are walking with your charges in the country. Well, when the country is open and we can see for miles round the gooseberry keeps close to her charges. As the leafy tree-covered lanes approach she should announce that she has dropped her handkerchief a few hundred yards back, ask her charges not to hurry while she walks back to find it.

If it is raining and all three are confined to the house, then Miss Gooseberry should have at least one hour's headache in the afternoon, and preferably two, and be compelled to lie down for that period. There is nothing young couples like better than headaches in gooseberries!

One young couple whom I gooseber-ried for a week at the seaside once brought me no fewer than seven different varieties of headache cures and gave me four magnificent bottles of eau-de-cologne to take the pain away.
I was kept in scent for a whole year and voted one of the "sweetest old dears" they had ever come across!

A sweet gooseberry will let her charges go out alone, and arrange to meet them a little later on—and turn up at the wrong place! She will never be there when she is not wanted, and always there when she is—which is jolly seldom!

I've left off playing gooseberry myself, after having had a most successful career. Though I say it myself, I think I retired at a record age for a gooseberry, twenty-five.

The fact was that early this season
I was talking one day to a discharged officer, and he told me his favourite fruit was gooseberries.

Well, what could I do after that?

A Little Ballast Aft.

With many a hitch of his trousers and pulls at his forelock in respectful salute to justice, Jack Collins, able seaman, was navigated up to the court room railing by a policeman on a charge of cruelty to animals.

"He had a paving stone tied to the tail of the horse he was riding, your worship," said the officer who had arrested him.

"What was that for?" asked the magistrate.

"Well, admiral, that wasn't no
cruelty to animals, as the officer says, at all," blurted Jack. "I hired that pony craft outside for a short cruise ashore. Soon after getting under way I found the bloomin' old packet wouldn't steer a little bit. She was all down by the head, and tacked about the street when the wind was fair astern. Try as I would, I couldn't get the steady storage way on her, and she drifted to the windward just as often as she did to leeward. Then I thought I, she's too tight by the stern, as her heels were constantly liftin' and racing just for all the world like our propellers on the ship when she tosses on a big sea. 'She wants more weight aft,'" says an old shipmate of mine that I met, and then I just got him to help me come to an anchor while I shipped a little ballast aft.

"That's all, your worship. All shipshape and overboard, and no reason in the world why this blue and brass-bound corvette here should have overhauled me at all."

"Dismissed," said the justice, after Jack had agreed to jettison the ballast and take the "craft" home in "tow," which meant lead the ancient steed back to the stable.

The World on the Brink.

If We Knew the World Was Coming to an End---What Would Happen?

(By AUBREY WILMER.)

Suppose some great astronomer were to discover a new star which, in twenty years, was destined to strike the world and destroy it for ever. Suppose he were to discover it beyond all possibility of doubt. Suppose he were to make his appalling discovery public. And suppose the world were to believe his statement—that in twenty years humanity would be abruptly wiped off the face of the universe. How would we meet the situation? How change our ways of life? How face the horror before us? This is the problem in imagination which Mr. Aubrey Wilmer has set himself to solve in the following vivid article.

Suppose, for a moment, that we knew for certain that the world would end in twenty years!

If the world were to wake up one morning to read in its daily newspapers that it had but twenty years longer to exist, its immediate sensation would be much the same as that of a man who, having believed himself in the pink of health, is suddenly informed by his medical adviser that he is dying a swift and certain death.

That is to say, its immediate sensation would be one of panic. The panic that numbs, that suspends action, that exalts its cause into the only reality and makes all else appear a grim and hollow mockery.

For some time, beyond question, the world would merely gasp at a situation it was unable to grasp. The new ideas which, in time, must inevitably be brought to birth by such a catastrophic menace would still lie in darkness.

Smith would go down to his office, add up his figures, obey his boss, manufacture his paper protectors for his cuffs.

But the spirit in which he would do these things would not be the old spirit. Unrelieved gloom would be followed by vague reflections on the travesty of doing these things "all for nothing."

For that, we must mark clearly, would be the great revolution which the discovery of an imminent end-of-the-world would work in the mind of man.

Hitherto he has believed that, even strangely blended with the terrors of this frenzied Carnival, a human kindness, a sympathy for fellow-sufferers more Christian than any manifestation of Christianity yet seen in men and women on earth.

For perhaps the key to Christianity is the realization that we are all in the same boat. And that realization would be paramount in the minds of men in such circumstances as we are imagining.

Meanwhile where would our Government be? How would the affairs of the country be regulated from headquarters and from what point of view? In some degree government would proceed on the usual lines—on the lines that while we are here, we must make the best arrangements for ourselves that we are able.

But in one great respect there would be a change. Governments would not prepare. Education, as I have suggested, would at first gradually, then with increasing rapidity, be allowed to lapse. Navies would be allowed to rot, armies to disband, new constructive schemes would be set aside. The business of Governments, in fact, would become this: to see that the people enjoy the advantage of all that has been already stored up, rather than to store up more. We may imagine a cry of "No Waste!" in the papers. "Are We Going to Use Up Everything in Time?"

In this connection the sudden realization of Government stock on all hands would present a serious problem. Clearly the Stock Exchanges would soon be out of business.

And then would come the great movement—the movement towards religion. The cry of salvation: You are Doomed—Are you Saved?

Gradually, as the fateful hour drew nearer, it would sweep more and more into its net, as man turns to repentance on his death-bed. From street processions, calling on all sinners to amend their ways, there would emerge colossal meetings—meetings of piper so densely packed that no church, no cathedral, could hold them, and every hill and every dale would become a House of God.

Prayer, the salvation of the soul, would become the one and only business of the day. The ranks of the merry-makers would dwindle. The theatres would fall into decay.

It is beyond dispute. At the very last the world would become the Kingdom of Heaven on Earth.

And so the catastrophe would find us prepared.

There would, I think, be no terror, no wailing or gnashing of teeth as man waited for the blow. For he would wait for it alone. All over the world, I believe, there would be a spontaneous desire to meet death hand-in-hand and there is a picture in my mind suggestive of how that desire might find fruition.

It is the picture of a great mountain. At the top of that great mountain there is an image, and around it are priests addressing the multitude. For there is a multitude upon that mountain, a multitude that covers its surface so completely that the mountain has become a mountain of human beings, who are upon their knees. Here and there among them I descried preachers, and more preachers, each ministering to those about him, some of whom, perhaps, pay little heed to what he says, for they may find little comfort in the actual words, but all of whom find great comfort in the sense of congregation which is the symbol of the brotherhood of man.

Yes, the time of panic is at an end for ever. And the cataclysm which ends the world proves, not an act of destruction, but the most profound and amazing act of creation the world has ever known.—Tit Bits.

Kirke's Lambs.

When Charles II. married Catherine of Braganza, on August 24, 1662, she brought to him as part of her marriage dowry, the possession of Tangier. As the place could only be held by force, a body known sometimes as the 1st Tangier Regiment, and sometimes as Queen Catherine's Regiment, was formed for service there, and the Colonel of the regiment became Governor. As the regiment would be chiefly engaged in war against the Mohammedans, it was thought appropriate that their emblem should be more essentially a Christian symbol, and the Paschal Lamb accordingly was chosen for their badge. In 1682 Percy Kirke was appointed Colonel, and proceeded to Tangier to take command. Even in the corrupt and dissolute period following the Restoration, Kirke seems to have been notorious for vice and cruelty. At so great a distance from any check or restraint, such a man naturally developed the worst vices, both in himself and in those under him. He is said to have treated his men with the greatest severity for trivial offences, and at the same time to have allowed them the fullest license to rob and ill-treat the natives. When in 1684, on account of the expense of the occupation, England gave up Tangier to the Sultan of Morocco, the regiment was called home. From their arrival in England, Kirke and his men seem to have been notorious for their wickedness, and the regimental symbol of the Paschal Lamb contrasted so strangely with the conduct of those who wore it, that they were soon nicknamed "Kirke's Lambs." They were engaged at the battle of Sedgemoor, and showed to the fullest extent their cruelty in the wholesale butchery which followed on the failure of Monmouth's unfortunate rebellion. It was Kirke who had command of the expedition which relieved Londonderry in 1689, and the regiment associated with his name gained in after years well-merited renown in Egypt and other parts of the world.

In Praise of Shrimps.

"The lobster," writes a correspondent, "is considered a very choice fish, but it is not to be compared with the delicacy of flavor, palatability and food value of shrimp, and strange as it may be, it appears that only in the East and North, where lobsters are well known, is the shrimp appreciated at its true worth. Fish is practically unknown, and in many cases never heard of, yet if the Southern and Western people had a full knowledge of this fish it would largely take the place of the very high-priced luxury, the lobster.

"As an illustration of the desirability of this fish it is known that at some of the famous fish dinner resorts along the Atlantic coast they serve lobster salad, utilizing with it a large portion of shrimp; and it is very difficult for any one but a connoisseur to detect the admixture. Yet if a lobster salad were compared with a shrimp salad, almost any one would say the shrimp was superior in every particular, with the advantage of a much lower cost." — N. Y. Fishing Gazette.

What Parnell Paid For Love.

The Tragic Romance of a Great Career.

"The Lost Leader," the strikingly interesting new play at the Court Theatre, London, is based on an assumption that Charles Stewart Parnell did not die in 1891, but lived in retirement, under an assumed name, in a remote Irish village until recently.

This recalls the romance and tragedy of the great Irish leader's life—the price he paid for love.

"On the platform for Eitham, at Charing Cross, stood Mr. Parnell, waiting. As our eyes met, he turned and walked by my side, without speaking a word. He helped me into the train and sat down opposite me; and I was too exhausted to care that he saw me wet and dishevelled. There were others in the carriage.

"I was very cold; and I felt that he took off his coat and threw it round me; but I would not open my eyes to look at him. He crossed over to the seat next to mine, and, leaning over me to fold the coat more closely round my knees, he whispered, 'I love you, I love you! Oh, my dear, how I love you!' And I slipped my hand into his, and knew that I was not afraid."

Such, in the heroine's own words, was the opening scene in one of the most remarkable dramas of our age—a drama which opened with love and romance, and closed in political tragedy and eclipse; for that fateful meeting was the herald of disaster to one of the greatest of British statesmen, Ireland's hope and idol.

At this time Charles Stewart Parnell had reached the zenith of his great and dramatic career. He was universally acclaimed the "uncrowned king" of his native land, the man who was to lead her to her emancipation. And his fame was rivalled by a passionate homage which almost amounted to idolatry. It was at this time of his greatness that love entered his life to work his ruin with its sweet poison.

From the moment he first set eyes on the beautiful and fascinating wife of Captain O'Shea, he had loved her. As a man of honour he had struggled against the passion that was consuming him. He spoke no word and gave no sign; he avoided meeting her.

A Fateful Hour.

But fate was too strong for him, and the climax of his long struggle came when his passion broke down its barriers and flamed forth in the whispered words, "I love you. Oh, my dear, how I love you!"

From that fateful hour, to Katherine O'Shea there was only one man in all the world, and for Parnell, only one woman. Their hearts and lives were indissolubly linked for weal or woe. They knew no happiness apart from each other. Each day almost that followed brought its blissful meeting—at dinner-parties or the theatre, where Mrs. O'Shea tells us, "I had a feeling of complete sympathy and companionship with him, as though I had always known this strange, unusual man, with the thin face and flaming eyes."

When he wished to escape altogether from the world for a time, or when danger of arrest for "sedition" made flight prudent; he would seek a refuge in her home for weeks together, and there she would keep him hidden in a little room adjoining her own, "taking his food up at night, cooking little dainty dishes for him at the open fire, much to his pleasure and amusement"—not even the most trusted servant suspecting that he was in the house.

When these days of sweet communion were tragically interrupted in 1891 by Parnell's arrest and imprisonment in Kilmalham Jail, they exchanged letters of the most tender and passionate devotion, Parnell addressing her as "my own dearest wife," or "my darling Queenie."

When at last Parnell recovered his freedom, the joy of seeing again the woman he loved better far than life was "beyond all words to describe," shadowed though it was by the death of the child of their love a few weeks earlier. Then followed eight years of happiness such as has fallen to the lot of few lovers—delightful holidays together at Eastbourne, Brighton, and elsewhere; housekeeping together at

The Tongue of Scandal.

But such halcyon days could not last for ever. Parnell's mysterious disappearances and his intimacy with Captain O'Shea's wife had long set the tongue of scandal wagging, and the climax came one day in November, 1890, when Parnell was served at Brighton with a copy of the petition in the divorce case, "O'Shea v. O'Shea and Parnell," an event which he had long expected and which he met not only with philosophy but with actual pleasure.

In vain did Sir Frank Lockwood and his "wife" beg him to take up the cudgels and fight the case. "After he had had his dinner," Mrs. O'Shea tells us, "he came up and smoked by my bedside. I tried to persuade him to go up with me in the morning to the Court, and make some fight, but he said, 'No, Queenie. What's the use? We want the divorce, and, divorce or not, I shall always come where you are. I shall always come to my home every night whatever happens. Now I'm going to read you to sleep.'" Thus lightly did Ireland's "uncrowned king" take the blow that was to lay his splendid career in ruins.

"I have given and will give Ireland what is mine to give," he declared. "That I have vowed to her, but my private life shall never belong to any country, but to one woman. If Ireland turns from me, it matters not at all in the end. All that I ask of life is that we love one another." And thus it was that the decree nisi was pronounced without a word of opposition.

In this hour of impending tragedy Mrs. O'Shea's impulse was to "take him away from all the ingratitude and trouble, to some sunny land where we could forget the world and be forgotten."

But then, she says, "I knew that he would not forget; that he would come at my bidding; but that his desertion of Ireland would lie at his heart; that, if he was to be happy, he must fight to the end."

And this is precisely what Parnell wished to do—to die still fighting. "I am feeling very ill, Queenie," he told her, "but I think I shall win through. I shall never give in unless you make me; and I want you to promise that you will never make me feel less than the man you have known."

No man was more physically unfit to face a battle such as now awaited Parnell, for his health was breaking down in an alarming fashion. Powerful forces, too, were arrayed against the man who had, in the world's eyes, disgraced himself by such a flagrant lapse from morality. The Gladstonian party demanded his retirement from the leadership of the Irish cause; and Mr. Gladstone told the Irish members that they must choose between Parnell and himself.

As the result of a fierce and protracted battle in Committee Room 15, the majority ended the discussion by leaving the room and electing Justin McCarthy as their chairman. Ireland's king was thus quickly deposed.

Nor was fate any more kind to him when, with the shattered remnants of his party, he carried the war into Ireland. He found himself under the ban of the Church; his old friends turned their backs on him; the populace which had idolized now reviled him.

He had fought with his usual amazing courage, and had reaped only defeat and disaster. His reign was ended. But he had at least crowned his life's happiness on that June day in 1891 when at last he stood at the altar by the side of the woman he loved so well, and for love of whom he had paid so terrible a price. And he counted all his losses gain. And he shared his hand in his, by the sea near Shoreham, speaking together of the future that was to be theirs, "with the happiness that has no words."—"Tit-Bits."

Thought She Had Moved

Mrs. Clancy was a very sarcastic woman, and it is probably due to this fact that she had a falling out with her friend, Mrs. Murphy, who lived in the apartment just under her.

One day, while Mrs. Clancy was feeling particularly mean, she looked down from her window and saw Mrs. Murphy also enjoying the scenery. She could not resist the temptation to take a shot at her.

"Oh say, Murphy, she called down in deep sarcasm, 'why don't ye take your ugly old mug out iv the windy and put your pet monkey in its place? That'd give the neighbors a change they'd like.'"

Mrs. Murphy looked up. "Well, now, Mrs. Clancy," she slowly said, "it was only this mornin' that I did that very thing, an the polecatman came along, and whin he saw the monkey he bowed and shrimled and said: 'Why, Mrs. Clancy, whin did ye move downsstairs?'"

Nfld. Scotch Cured Herring.

Although this market remains quiet and buyers continue to adhere to a policy of buying from hand-to-mouth, there are indications of improvement, which, considered in the light of present day conditions, are at least hopeful. It is noted that the domestic trade has been taking on small quantities of Newfoundland Scotch cured herring of late, and local importers report that New York buyers have been seeking quotations of more liberal quantities than have been selling. This new condition is at variance with the outlook of a few weeks ago when it was reported that some 25,000 barrels of Newfoundland Scotch herring were yet to be shipped from St. John's to New York. Moreover, it is reported from several points in Newfoundland that the pack of herring during the winter and spring was far and away superior to the pack of last fall. In explanation of this improvement in the quality of the Newfoundland herring of the spring and winter pack it is stated that the lesson of last fall "brought packers to their senses." According to inspectors for the Newfoundland Government who have lately completed inspections at Green Bay, the quality of the herring being shipped from there to-day is in every respect superior to that shipped early last winter. New York importers doubtless will be glad to learn of the improved quality of the Newfoundland herring, for it is recognized that one of the most serious drawbacks this season has been the uncertain and general inferior quality of the offerings. So far as could be learned the prevailing prices in the market are unchanged. Holders are asking from $16 to $18 and even $20 for fancy large fulls, while small herring can be purchased from $12 and up, according to size and quality. The stock of winter and spring herring now in New York is variously priced at from $12 to $16, the greater quantity being held at the lower figure. Further shipments of new stocks will be coming forward from now on, and it may be expected that before colder weather there will be a liberal stock on the spot in New York.—N.Y. Fishing Gazette.

Fleets Beneath the Seas.

Few people know that the British have a sunken fleet nearly half as large again as the German fleet that lies beneath the waves at Scapa Flow.

In 1693 an English merchant fleet of 400 sail was being convoyed to the Mediterranean by twenty-three English and Dutch men-of-war, when they were attacked by seventy-one French ships. No less than ninety of our vessels went down, but Admiral Rooke by brilliant manoeuvring brought the others away in safety.

How many people, too, know that ninety-two years ago a fleet of sixty ships was sent to the bottom by the English when we were not even at war?

During the Greek War of Independence an Anglo-French fleet under Admiral Codrington was sent to Navarino to prevent the Turkish and Greek fleets from resuming hostilities. By some misunderstanding the moving of a fire-ship led to the Turks opening fire on the Greeks, and as they would not desert, Codrington joined in the fray and sank sixty of the Turkish vessels.

This is what the Duke of Wellington spoke of as "an untoward incident which he trusted would not disturb the amicable relations" between us and the Turks. But it did. The Turks, in fact, declared war; though, of course, they did not stand a chance with their fleet already at the bottom.

But will all history, past and future, be able to show another fleet coasting £50,000,000, boasted of by 50,000,000 people, lying idle during five years of war, and finally sunk in an afternoon?—"Tit-Bits."

SAID HIS MOTHER TO ME.

"Few understand him as I." Said his mother to me. "There are some who say he will lie. But I'm sure it can't be. His lips have been sweet with a song From the days of his youth. And always, whatever the wrong, He has told me the truth."

"His hand, which the cold-hearted spare, Has been tender to me; He has come when the stars faintly burn Many times to my knee. And though all the old friendships have died, And men sneer at his ways, I know just how hard he has tried To be worthy of praise."

"Through the nights when his fever ran high I watched by his bed; I answered his pitiful cry, I heard all he said. It was my hand he longed for back then."

To stroke his hot brow; He has called me again and again As he's calling me now.

"Did I fall him because he was ill? Or whimper the night that he came? Then shall I not mother him still Though he's blackened with shame? Though he's lost to the world and its joys, And is sick as can be, Oh, shall I not answer my boy When he calls unto me?"

Hints to Autoists.

If your motor depends on a storage battery for ignition (that is, a motor without a magneto), would suggest taking a few dry cells on any extended trip. One dry cell for each unit in your storage battery. If the electrical system on your car is a six-volt one, that would mean three dry cells, which should be connected together in series, that is, the positive or carbon electrode of one to the negative or zinc electrode of another. Now, should the motor refuse to run, due to a "dead" storage battery, disconnect the positive lead from the weak battery, and connect this lead wire to the carbon terminal of dry cells to end of lead wire fastened to negative terminal of storage battery, and your motor should be ready to start. You will have to crank it by hand, and then, too, you must not use the lights, for the amperage in the dry cells would not be sufficient to operate the starter or the lights. The arrangements, however, should furnish a sufficient spark to run the motor for hundreds of miles.

After inflating a tire or testing one for pressure, moisten the valve with a little saliva to see that valve is tight. If it leaks, the air will blow a bubble through the moisture. If valve leaks it will generally be found that the rubber washer in same has a rubber "thread" lying across its face, which prevents valve seating properly. Unscrew the valve and remove it, replace with a new extra valve from a spare tube.

When the sun is shining, your watch is your compass. Point the hour hand to the sun, and half way between it and twelve o'clock on the dial is due south. Make one hour allowance for daylight saving.

At night, if the stars are visible, you can check up your direction of running by locating the North Star, which is always due north from you. It is an easy matter to locate the North Star. Everybody is familiar with the Big Dipper and can easily locate it in the sky. The two stars in the dipper end of it, known as the pointers, always point to the North Star, which is about five times the distance away from the nearer of the two, as the two pointers are apart.

A friend of the writer built his garage with the floor about two feet above the approach. When he has occasion to do any work on the under part of the car, he places two heavy planks from the floor of the garage to two stout wood horses, backing the car out by hand on the two level planks. For a heavy car the span of the planks should be shortened by using four wood horses.

Before driving out in the rain, rub over the nickel or brass trimming of a car with a cloth moistened with kerosene. It does a lot toward maintaining the high polish of the plating. Be careful to keep the wires in the ignition and lighting systems of the car free from oil. All the wires are insulated by rubber, and if they get oil-soaked, the value of the rubber as an insulator is destroyed, and the current is very apt to jump through to the metal part of the car, causing a ground and a lot of annoyance.

If you are driving along a road where traffic is heavy, be sure that there is no one immediately back of you, should you want to stop quickly. If, for any reason, you must stop quickly, pull over to the right of the road before doing so.

Bogus Sleuths.

Fraudulent Private Inquiry Agents and Detectives.

The private detective and inquiry agent is a useful man on occasions. Unfortunately, however, he numbers in his ranks many rogues whose sphere is the reverse of useful to the public.

There are numerous rascals in this profession who find that they can make much more profit through being unscrupulous in their dealings with the public than if they conducted a legitimate inquiry business.

The bogus private detective finds blackmail a very lucrative side-line to his other nefarious schemes. One may recall the case of Kimpton's Private Detective Agency, which occupied the attention of the Courts some time ago. Three men trading under the above name, and describing themselves as "inquiry agents" and having a "unique secret service," were found guilty of extorting money from a countess. In addition, one of the "detectives" took from her a chain and pendant, worth £65, "for expenses."

Blackmailing Blackmailers. The description given in his booklets by Kimpton's Private Detective Agency of the manner in which it dealt with blackmailers was significant:

"If one shady passage in the blackmailer's life is known, the victim's course is easy. Kimpton's method is to find out the blackmailer's weak spot and play on that. Kimpton's specialise in the blackmailing of blackmailers. They say that if you are blackmailed by someone, 'We will find out something about his life and blackmail him in return.'"

Apparently, Kimpton's found it equally effective to blackmail their own clients! Two other so-called private detectives were sentenced at the Old Bailey for a similar offence—demanding money with menaces. In this case a Canadian was robbed of a mass of correspondence, a photograph, a portfolio, and an address book. The two private detectives, named Marshall and Butler, got hold of the letters and visited their intended victim. Their plan was to make certain allegations against the Canadian with regard to a young woman known to the latter.

Posed as a Detective. A bogus detective's terrorism of wives was detailed when James Egan was accused, at the Tower Bridge Court, of obtaining money from married women by posing as a detective. Mr. Plevier, who prosecuted, told how Egan called on Mrs. E. L., of Lambeth. "He told her he was a detective," said Mr. Plevier, "and said her husband was in trouble over an I.O.U. Unless she could give him £2 10s. he was going to arrest Mr. L. at his work. He obtained 10s. from Mrs. L."

He then visited Mrs. O. M., of Walworth, and said he had some bad news to tell her. "I am a detective," he said. "You have a very bad husband. I have just taken him to the police station. He has taken £5 from his place of business." He suggested that if Mrs. M. had £5 he could take it to her husband to enable him to repay the money. All she had was seven shillings. Egan took that, and also tried to take her wedding ring. After attempting to attack her he hurried away.

Connected Evidence.

It is because there are so many black sheep among private sleuths that their evidence in divorce and other cases is always looked askance at in the Law Courts. Often their evidence is concocted on behalf of their clients. By various ruses and underhand methods, the unscrupulous sleuth will see to it that his client has the evidence he desires, providing he pays for it, and also providing that the other side do not offer better terms for the suppression of such evidence! Certain private detectives are not above working hand-in-hand with both sides, for by this means they are naturally able to fill their pockets quicker.

In connection with connected evidence against the "other side," an incident that occurred some time ago may be cited. A husband who proved himself a blackguard wished to obtain a divorce from his young wife. But he knew nothing whatever against her, her character being unimpeachable. So he went to a private detective, whose advertisement he had seen in a newspaper, and asked his advice. As a result of their conference, the detective agreed, for a certain sum, to arrange that the lady was compromised.

Working Hand-in-Hand.

A few nights later the detective hid himself in the wife's bedroom. After she had retired, he emerged from his hiding-place. At that—the pre-arranged moment—the husband entered the room and accused his wife of unfaithfulness. Thus he obtained evidence for his divorce.

In blackmailing cases a detective of this description has been known to approach the blackmailer, ostensibly on behalf of his client, but really to suggest a scheme whereby they may work hand-in-hand to fleece the victim.

Don't Run Risks.

Another side-line found to be lucrative by many private inquiry agents who are not too conscientious in money lending. Once the unsuspecting client has borrowed their money he is more than ever in the hands of such men.

Let it be repeated that, in spite of the unscrupulous private detectives, there are many who carry on a legitimate business. So, should it be necessary to enlist the aid of a private inquiry agent, the only safe method is to go to one who has been recommended by a solicitor or by Scotland Yard. Some others may be safe, but many risks are run by consulting them until it has been found that they are above reproach in all their dealings. —Tit-Bits.

From Street Hawker to Baronet.

Sir James Hill, Bart., a prince of the wool trade, ex-Lord Mayor of Bradford, and one of the wealthiest men in England, began his business life as a hawker.

At ten years of age he was the main support of a blind grandfather. Twice a week he went with his grandfather from Haden, his native village, to Bradford, to buy vegetables, and these he sold from door to door in his own neighborhood.

It was a humble sort of calling, but Sir James admits that it was during those early business deals with keen market salesmen that he acquired the shrewdness and knack of bargaining that stood him in such good stead later in life.

Two years afterwards his mother, a hard-working woman, anxious for his welfare, told him he must learn a trade. After working for a short time as an errand-boy in a mill, he was apprenticed to a wool-sorter. His employer had quaint ideas of teaching him his business, for young Hill spent much of his time doing household work. Cleaning boots, fetching water—any odd job fell to his lot.

But this humdrum existence did not fit in with the boy's determination to make good, and before long he went to another mill, where he began to learn weaving. There he remained a few years.

Meanwhile, he had realized the value of thrift. His firm intention was, sooner or later, to be his own master.

Sir James himself relates what a herculean task the raising of his first £50 was. "That £50," he says, "was the hardest struggle to save money I ever had. Once I got that sum it was a comparatively easy matter to increase my banking account."

The foundation of his fortune was laid in those dreary days when, with his donkey and cart, he went from street to street selling cabbage. Every copper that could be spared was carefully put away. As an apprentice and afterwards when his earnings were larger, always a proportion of his wages was placed in the bank. "Often," he says, "the temptation to break into my savings was strong within me, but I steadfastly kept my goal in view."

When young Hill blossomed out as a wood-merchant, his first precious £50 was invested in the business. "But one of my principal assets," he says, "was an unlimited amount of confidence."

His reward came when, having in due course obtained a position as a buyer and salesman, he was able to demand £1,000 a year or threaten to set up business on his own account in competition.

Sir James Hill is one of those men whose motto in life is, "Work hard, save, and put a proper value on yourself." When therefore, while still a young man he conceived the idea that the work he was doing was worth £1,000 a year, he decided to ask for it. His master, a bluff old Yorkshireman, laughed heartily. "Nay, lad," he said, "I'm noan bahn to gi' thee that."

"Well," replied young Hill, "I shall leave and start business for myself in opposition to you if you don't."

"Get on wi' it, my lad," was the retort. "I'll three weeks that'll be back again asking for the job, an' that won't get it."

But his gloomy prophecy was not fulfilled. There is no doubt that, in addition to confidence, Hill displayed an extraordinary degree of commercial ability, for his progress was amazing. The crowning event of his remarkable business career came when he formed one of a syndicate which recently took over the huge Saltaire Mills, founded many years ago by the famous Sir Titus Salt. He is now chairman of the concern.

Busy as he is, Sir James has found time to devote to the interests of his fellow-citizens. Only such a man, with his boundless energy and enthusiasm for whatever he undertakes, could have raised £100,000 for a new infirmary during his term of office as Lord Mayor. That sum included a handsome donation from his own purse. This merchant prince, who was once a hawker, has also had the distinction of representing Central Bradford in Parliament.

The general feeling, when his baronetcy was conferred in 1916, was that the seal had been set upon one of the most remarkable careers in the kingdom.

When you want Sausages, why—get ELLIS'; they're the best.

The Newest 1919 Trench Coats!

The Trench Coats for men we are now showing arrived on the last English boat and are quite the finest Coats we have ever handled. They are the product of a first class English firm, famed for its Military Tailoring, are built of fine quality Gabardine in all shades of Khaki, well-lined with smart-patterned Twill Plaid. Pockets velvet lined. Three very special features in these Coats are: (1) Extra high and well-fitting storm collar; (2) extra wide revers, forming when fastened ample throat and chest protection; (3) an entire interlining of Oilskin, rendering them not only doubly waterproof but absolutely wind and cold proof as well; forming an ideal Coat for all weathers. All Coats are belted and strapped at wrists. All sizes.

PRICE FROM $30.00 UP.
