A REPLY TO "SPRING CLEANING

A REFLY TO "SPRING CLEANING."
You lazy old villain! how dare you?
Your wife has got trouble enough,
Without having a man who will grumble
And say such nonsensical stuff,
If you expect to be carried through April
On "flowery beds," and all that
You don't know the first thing about it,
And I'll venture my new Easter hat
That you never tacked down a carpet
"I'll your I-nees were all blistered and num
With a mean little contrary hammer
That insisted on pounding your thumb.
You never washed any windows
Or paint with a pailful of suds,
And had every drop in the bucket
Slop over on you and your duds.

She has worked every straight blessed minustices she kissed you good by at the door. If you had any feeling you'd notice She can hardly stand up any more. You might give her one word of comfort Instead of beginning to swear. You promised the day you were married Her life's heavy burden to share.

To all intents and purposes they have now been afforded the coveted opportunity of doing so. Out of the sixty members returned for Scotland, more than one half are unconditionally in favor of the disestablishment of the Scotch Church. Not a single Radical returned for a constituency north of the Tweed has declared himself hostile to the proposal, while several have expressed their readiness to accept the verdict of the country in regard to the question, or to follow the leaders of their party if they should make up their minds to an aggressive step. Against this large Parliamentary body clamoring for the discstablishment and disendowment of the Scotch Church, there are only six Conservatives to counteract their influence. Episcopalians generally are, however, preparing to fight for the Scotch National Church on the ground that should the attacking party succeed in carrying the first parallel,

The volume of poems by Amos H. Chandler and Charles Pelham Mulvany, if the Tories be in power. Freeman. nounced some time ago, has, at last ap peared, and more than fulfils all expecta tions. It is an achievement of which all Canadians have cause to be proud, and contains poems that rank with the mature work of the leading English and American Poets. Mr. Mulvany's writings have long een held in the highest estimation at Dublin University and at Oxford, where hey have enjoyed an extensive private Some of his "society verses" have already been noticed in the ADVANCE and in this class of composition probably he has no superior in America. In weigh tier subjects he has made the days of the Latter Empire peculiarly his own, and such lyrics as "Messalina," "Theodora," Epichare," and "In Nero's Gardens," are masterpieces of dramatic strength and usical versification. Take any lines from the latter poem, which describes with fearful vividness a night-feast in the pleasuregardens of the mighty Voluptuary,-il-anguage, and the metre, which is borrowed from Swinburne, is used with no inferior subtle analysis of motive and a vigorous grasp of the subject, that recall Browning at his best. In this poem, and others similar, it must be remembered that it is the character herself that speaks—they are essentially "Dramatic Lyrics." A hearing is given to the Empress so lashed by Tacitus and Juvenal, and she makes her defence. It is she who says :-"For the gods ordain since earth began, By perfect conditions the perfect man; Vice comes or virtue, good comes or sin. From the world without to the world within a species of philosophical apology valid for a Pagan. "Only a woman's Hair" is a strong and pathetic poem on poor Stella, and still more-to-be pitied, Swift. When we find true pathos in a writer, we may confidently look for true humour: and here also our author is well equipped. His humour, as seen in his parodies, and in the racy verses on "The Loves Religions and Whiskers of Mr. Arthur Cecil Payne," is of the kind that forces a smile, and fastens itself in one's remembrance, but never creates a laugh. His Sonnets have a slight but very pleasant Rosittian flavour. and both they and the minor lyrics are very evidently each the genuine expression of a mood. The Hymns, English and Latin, are admirable, the former in sentiment and language, the latter in the perfection of the Leonine verse. His command of language is vast, and the Latin poem "Quid est Vita?" is superior to its English equivalent. It must breathe of weariness even to those not understanding :-"Quid est vita?

Quid nos sumus?
Via trita,
Labor, fumus
Hen sensistis
Quam sit tristis"
In Mr. Chandler's work there appears to be much nice feeling, fluency of thought and language, and brightness of colouring, iects than does his "Senior Partner;" while "Elegies" and "In Memoriams" are perhaps rather too abundant. There is plenty of evidence of his acquaintance with and love for the older English Poets, and he has caught several of their quaint tricks of expression.

In binding letterpress etc., the book equally excels, and is a credit to Canadian publishers. But among the contents exist the foundations for our Literature—poems that Canadians will not let die.

The Sunday Boats.

To the Editor of the Miramichi Advance. NEWCASTLE, May, 27th 1880. DEAR SIR:-Pardon me for trespassing n your space, but I will be as brief as sible in my remarks anent the petition of some ladies, gentlemen and children of Chatham asking Mr. Call to discontinue unning his boats on the Sabbath Day, which appeared in your issue of last week. I may commence by saying that there is no one who respects the proper observance and sauctity of Sunday more than I do, it being a day set apart by the Church in obedience to the commandment of God, for the rest and healthful recreation of soul and body. Therefore, we must re-Glassondock, deals, D. & J. Ritchie, & Co. member that it is the creature of God and his Church, and the worshiping of it would be a breach of another commandment Although the Sacred law commands a cessation of bodily labor in the 'man who have to turn out or get run over by those Sabbath-breakers. Now, Sunday the petition yet livery and private stables | The following vessels are reported for Miramichi are in full blast and the 'men servants' the Sabbath night-sometimes, no doubt, the foaming steed of a Chatham Clergyman I would, therefore, ask those petitioners where they are going to commence and where they are going to end in their work of keeping the day holy, and whether it is less sinful and 'demoralizing' for 20 men and women to sit on a steam boat, chat, read their pious books, contemplate God in his creation and his providence along our beautiful river on their way to Divine worship, or to take 20 horses and waggons and drive to and from Church. Even the Union Advocate has a troubled conscience over the innovation, but it must be remembered that the junior Editor has keen perception of moral questions and occupies too elevated a platform in the region of ethics to be considered an exponent of public opinion on such [subjects. Since the late visitation of electric fluid to his office he has grown ethereal and his moral system has become quite effervescent by strange piety. To my mind Mr. Call ather deserves the thanks of those ladies. gentlemen and children who sent that petition by post, for in running his steamers he forwards the chief object of the petition by rendering unnecessary a great amount of Sabbath desecration by young men and ladies driving and the consequent labor of the "man servant," for whereas there are only three persons working on the boat, there would be three dozen violating the charity by this least sinful mode of locomotion, while I will join the hard working in door and out door laborers in singing :-Hail, Sabbath: thee I hail— The poor man's day. In all the other days, The poor man of toil is doomed To eat his joyless bread.
