A Clean Man

Outside cleanliness is less than half the battle. A man may scrub himself a dozen times a day, and still be unclean. Good health means cleanliness not only outside, but inside. It means a clean stomach, clean bowels, clean blood, a clean liver, and new, clean, healthy tissues. The man who is clean in this way will look it and act it. He will work with energy and think clean, clear, healthy thoughts.

He will never be troubled with liver, lung, stomach or blood disorders. Dyspepsia and indigestion originate in unclean stomachs. Blood diseases are found where there is unclean blood. Consumption and bronchitis mean unclean lungs.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

prevents these diseases. It makes a man's insides clean and healthy. It cleans the digestive organs, makes pure, clean blood, and cleans, healthy flesh.

It restores tone to the nervous system, and cures nervous exhaustion and prostration. It contains no alcohol or habit-forming drugs. Constipation is the most unclean uncleanness. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure it. They never gripe. Easy to take as candy.

FARM TOPICS.

How much time did you spend cleaning up and putting your farm implements in to repair last spring? Many farmers will remember the trouble they experienced and how the wisdom of taking steps to prevent the difficulty the previous fall was driven home to them. It impressed many to the extent that they are spending their spare time this month putting all machinery under shelter, where possible, making any necessary repairs and cleaning up every instrument that is to lie idle until spring. The farmer who does this will find peace of mind during the months that the ground is covered with snow in knowing that every piece of summer apparatus is in its place, safe and clean, as when spring comes his time is fully taken up with the early season's work. System is not required in any place more insistently than on the farm.

The Winter Feed Situation.

A dry, hot summer always leaves the farmer in a dilemma in the fall, and this autumn the situation is most acute. With the sobering in to-day of November, the herald of wintry weather, the question of keeping or disposing of one's stock is made more serious and demands immediate attention. The stock as a whole have suffered in eastern Canada from severe drought of last summer, and will be in poor condition on entering the stable for winter. The feed supply is so scarce that the farmer can see difficulty ahead of him should he attempt to keep them to round off their shoulders for winter selling. The outlook appears gloomy to many, and there is little doubt but that a large number of animals will be sold between now and Christmas simply because the farmers could not keep them.

The Christmas beef market will be glutted if the feed supply continues to be low, as it can scarcely be otherwise, and, judging from the quality of much of the stock being placed on the markets now, the beef will be an inferior class. The price is already beginning to drop on thin animals, while that paid for first quality beef remains comparatively high and gives promise of being much higher in a few months. The price of feed is also unusually high and may continue so for a considerable time, but a number of farmers will hold for even higher prices, and a slump may come later in the winter. Fewer oats than any other cereal is being offered on the market, which although it emphasizes the low yield, in Ontario particularly, this summer, also seems to indicate that many farmers are not selling any at all. It is the best move at present to hold oats for feed where a farmer has much stock or horses, and even where he has not for the price is almost sure to climb a good deal higher than at present.

But the wisdom of keeping as many cattle as possible is easily seen from the present outlook. Fat and well-finished stock will bring big prices in March or April, and the demand for milch cows and young dairy cattle will be great. Straw will be a dear article this winter and great care must be exercised in stabling and feeding in order to prevent any unnecessary waste. Fed carefully and with sufficient variety of other fodder, straw can be made to achieve good results.

The report comes from the west that 50,000,000 bushels of Canadian wheat this fall is unmarketable for milling purposes owing to frosts and other curtailments. This will find its way to eastern Canada for feed, and it is believed will solve the difficulty for many farmers who will attempt to hold and feed their stock. The low grade wheat makes excellent feed for cattle and hogs and will be the cheapest grain at seventy cents a bushel, which is the price it now promises to be.

Many farmers will not be able to hold their beef cattle in view of the scarcity of feed, but for those who can it is the most glaring folly to sell now.

Winter Feed for Cattle and Horses.

In determining the feed for the cattle in the winter it is well to keep in mind that alfalfa is preferable. However, many cows will do well to get timothy this winter in view of the dire scarcity of feedstuffs in all parts of the country. In ing of a hitherto unknown living east of the Mackenzie River, and between the Great Bear Lake and the Arctic Ocean, a tribe which has been entirely untouched by the advance of the white man.

The members of this tribe, the Bishop said, were still making their living with their bows and arrows and stone implements. He had not seen them himself, but in the course of a voyage down the great Mackenzie River, he had heard of them, and it was his earnest wish that the Gospel should be taken to them. At present it was impossible because of lack of funds and lack of men, both of which needs, he hoped would soon be filled.

Bishop Holmes had a very high opinion of the Eskimos who, he said, were in intelligence as high above the Indians as were the Japanese above the Eskimos. They were very receptive to the preaching of the Gospel, and wherever he had gone, he had been received with outstretched arms. The Eskimos were longing for the Gospel, and at present in the whole 1200 miles of the length of the Mackenzie River, there were only two missionaries.

POSSIBILITIES OF MACKENZIE LAND

With the possibilities of the great district bordering on the Mackenzie, Bishop Holmes was deeply impressed. "I am confident," he said, "that in twenty years the banks of the river will be dotted with houses, and many mining communities."

The pioneer Bishop also told of the enormous influx of settlers into the new west in the Great Slave Lake Country and the Peace River district, where there were need for twenty churches, much money and many workers. He spoke of the uplifting work the missions had been doing and of the difference in matter of cleanliness and intelligence between the Christianized and educated Indians, and those who were still heathens. The Indian mission schools were, however, being superceded, as the country they lived in became settled. Several of them had been discontinued in the last few years, and several more would cease in the next two years.

Cheese Day in Brockville.

To the dairymen of Brockville district Thursday is the most important day of the week, and to many of them it is most joyful. A stranger in Brockville on a Thursday remarks upon the number of "dressed up" farmers that are in town, and he is looked at with amazement by the townsman, who exclaims: "Why, don't you know this is Cheese Day." If the farmers who he sees so numerous upon the streets were in their ordinary clothes, the stranger might just think country business was brisk for the Brockville merchants, but it is a peculiarity of Cheese Day that the farmers all like to "top up a bit" before they come in. Perhaps they do this because they don't like handling money in any other than their best clothes, for it is to handle money that the dairymen of Brockville district come to town on Thursdays.

On this all-important day the Board of Trade of the Brockville Dairymen's Association meet and fix the price of cheese for the coming week. If it is to be higher, or if it is to be lower, the cheesemen are anxious to know, as many of them have a week's production ready to hand over. The new price is regulated by the demand of the English market and the scrupulousness of the Montreal buyers, a number of whom are represented in Brockville on Thursdays by agent or by person. The Cheese Board, as it is commonly called, meets in the afternoon and from ten in the morning until the close of the meeting which is often supper time you will see the cheese men standing around in groups speculating upon the outcome. They are 'wise heads' for the most part, and if they scent a reduction of say, an eighth of a cent a pound in the air, they sell at once, otherwise they may hold and sell later. A lot of money at any rate, changes hands in Brockville on Cheese Day and it is said that the local buyers write checks to the credit of the farmers for more than $60,000 before they have left for home. In the middle of the afternoon the cheese factories throughout the country keep the rural phone lines hot inquiring for the latest prospects of the market, and if these are reported favorable, executing sales.

Chief Crawford Advised Hyomei for Catarrh.

J. Wilfred Brown of Water Street, Campbellton, N. B., says: "Hyomei cured me of a severe case of catarrh and asthma after four years of suffering. I was constantly hacking and spitting and the catarrhal droppings that came from the head into my throat affected my stomach and I could not enjoy my meals. Chief Crawford having the same trouble advised me to try Hyomei. I did so and soon was without a sign of the health racking disease that had troubled me for so long. I now recommend Hyomei to all catarrh sufferers."

Hyomei (pronounced High-o-me) is guaranteed to cure asthma, bronchitis, croup, coughs and colds. A complete outfit consists of a hard rubber inhaler, a bottle of Hyomei and a unique dropper for filling the inhaler. Your druggist will supply you the outfit for $1.00 (extra bottles 50c.) or postpaid from the R. T. Booth Co. Ltd., Fort Erie, Ont. Sold and guaranteed by J. Sutton Clark. Money back if it fails.

The Blood of the Martyrs.

"You can easily slay me," exclaimed Kiang Kuang Jen as he and five other young Chinese patriots were led out to be beheaded on September 28, 1898, "but a multitude will rise to take our place." His prophecy has been fulfilled. Reform was stamped out in blood and in its place has sprung up the army of revolution. Whether China's new birth comes by way of reform or revolution is still on the knees of the gods. One thing seems assured. "The six martyrs," as they are styled in reform calendars have not died in vain. The present uprising has its roots deeply embedded in the remote past. It is, however, definitely associated with the stirring events that preceded the Boxer conspiracy.

In 1894, on her sixtieth birthday, the late Dowager was presented by over ten thousand native Christians with a beautifully bound New Testament. The curiosity of the Emperor was excited, and he asked for a copy. This was followed by requests for books and magazines. The rumor went abroad that the Emperor was converted to Christianity. He left no room for doubt, however as to his conversion to western ideals. Edicts soon followed calling on the officials to introduce reforms in education and in the administration of the laws. In the Board of Works at this period was one Kiang Yu Wei, who was known as "the modern sage and reformer." He had a wide reputation as a man of deep learning and progressive ideas. When the Emperor looked around for counsellors on whom he could rely the name of Kiang was brought under his notice. Then commenced a close intimacy and association between the Emperor and Kiang, which is one of the romances of China's evolution, and which ended only with the imprisonment and compulsory abdication of the one and the exile of the other.

Far-reaching reforms were drawn up for infusing China with western ideals. A newspaper served with the official organ of the movement. The breath of a new life was passing over the stagnant Empire. The spirit of progress and reform was shaking the land. A new heaven and a new earth seemed to be unfolding before the awakened people. Thousands went to Japan and foreign countries to be educated and to imbibe the spirit of bigoted conservatism and reaction was also abroad. The storm burst with terrific suddenness and ferocity. A coup d'etat by the fanatical Dowager Empress deprived the moment at one stroke of his head and impelling force. The Emperor was a prisoner and the reformers were hunted down like vermin. Kiang, the adviser of the Emperor, escaped, but his brother, Kiang Kuang Jen, was one of the six martyrs. The Emperor had forebodings of the secret conspiracy against his authority. In a letter to Kiang he implored him to go abroad and "advise means, without a moment's delay to save me." But it was too late. The blow had fallen and the Boxers were already spreading death and desolation throughout the land under the controlling hand of the Empress. In a paroxysm of frenzied fanaticism this modern Jebel scoured the country for the heads of the reformers, and it was not till the glint of foreign bayonets was seen in the streets of the Forbidden City that the plague of blood was stayed.

Thirteen years have elapsed and the Manchu dynasty meets the hunt, persecuted reformers as an army of revolution. Young China has found itself. A recent dispatch stated that Kiang Yu Wei, "the sage and reformer," had joined the revolutionary forces at Hankow, but no confirmation of this has since appeared. Many reputations will be made and unmade on the field of revolution, but the new China is not likely to forget the debt owed to the memory of the late Emperor Kuang Hsu and the reformers of his time. Had the late Emperor lived he would have unified China by building the Manchu throne and dynasty on the secure foundation of an ever-widening democracy. His sacrifice on the altar of reaction has consolidated the Chinese race against the Manchu usurper and raised a storm that threatens to sweep away his throne.—Tor. Globe.

Giants' Bones Found in Shale.

Little Rock, Ark., Oct. 28.—Wonderful relicts of prehistoric man have been discovered on the high bluff above the White River, fifteen miles from Bentonville. Skeletons have been found by investigators that measure from five to eleven feet in height and one in particular seems to have lived to a great age, having a skull nearly two inches thick and the teeth setting crosswise, the enamel being practically worn away. The skull is almost devoid of seams.

These skeletons were found buried in one grave in a sitting position in prepared cement which still remains intact. They were protected by a solid granite wall and preserved by the salts of the Eureka shale, in which they were placed. The high water mark which has left its imprint above the grave seems to indicate that they are 31,000 years old.

The local archaeologists who made the following statement: "No longer should we regard this as the new country, for doubtless it is much older than Asia—that is, when we speak of the age of man."

"When the earth first cooled off sufficiently for life to exist, the country nearest the north pole must have been the first to become populated, and man must have gradually worked his way south as the climate grew cooler.—Ex.

the matter of roots, many farmers have found that the best results come from feeding mangels in preference to all other roots. Turnips are perhaps equally good, but are being replaced by mangels owing largely to the fact that mangels yield better in a great many parts of Canada, and in Ontario particularly. To produce results in fattening, as in aiming to increase the milk supply, plain bran or cotton seed is declared by experts in animal husbandry to be the safest and most satisfactory. The water supply is also of great importance in feeding stable stock during the cold months. It should never be allowed to get down.

Just as alfalfa is the better food for cattle, timothy is undoubtedly the safest for horses. Straw is also good food for horses, but where this is fed in preference to timothy the oat ration should be increased. Two gallons of oats a day, with a few handfuls of bran, are required where straw is fed to any extent to big horses not working. Where the horse is 1,600 pounds or over, and is fed on straw from six to eight pounds of oats are none too much and where hay is fed this ration can be considerably reduced.—Tor. Globe.

Dairy Farmers and Bacon Pigs.

There is a branch of farming that is so closely related to the dairying business that no dairying district is complete without it—that is the raising of pigs. It is the best cheese-making parts it's no ordinary hog they attempt to raise that would put them in a class with ordinary farmers; it's "the bacon pig" they go after. Dairymen know that cheese is made up of three equal constituents—casein, the solids of the milk to which the solids of the milk, and water, and that after these are extracted from the milk there remains what is known as whey, containing a large percentage of sugar. The farmer who handles his supply of milk to the cheese factory daily generally brings back the whey from the milk that he took the day before. This is invaluable as feed for hogs and calves, and as there is usually more whey than there are calves to consume it, the good dairy farmers always has pigs. The whey, with a few handfuls of ground peas and oat meal, fattens hogs very quickly, and it pays to sell them when they are at the bacon stage, about 200 pounds.

With prices at $7.25, which they were before the elections, and allowing 3 1/2 c as a conservative estimate of the cost per pound to raise it, the bacon pig is indeed a profitable animal.—Tor. Globe.

'Tis A Fine Record.

There have been nine administrations in Canada since Confederation. The names of the ministries and the length of time they lasted were as follows:

- 1 Right Honorable Sir J. A. Macdonald, Premier. From July 1st, 1867, to November 6th, 1873, 6 years, 96 days.
- 2 Honorable A. Mackenzie, Premier. From November 7th, 1873, to October 16th, 1879, 5 years, 312 days.
- 3 Right Honorable Sir J. A. Macdonald, Premier. From October 17th, 1879 to June 6th, 1891, 11 years, 229 days.
- 4 Honorable Sir J. J. C. Abbott, Premier. From June 16th, 1891, to December 5th, 1892, 1 year, 71 days.

- 9 Honorable R. L. Borden, Premier. October 10, 1911.

The ministry of Sir Wilfrid Laurier holds the record for unbroken length of rule. It likewise goes into Canadian history with the record of achievements in the country's interest and with the record of growth and progress in wealth, population, agriculture, mining, manufacturing, commerce, and, in fact, in every department of human effort. Canada is doing very well, and Sir Wilfrid's Government has set a good mark. -Hamilton Times.

Agree That Lying is Justifiable At Times.

Columbus, Ind., Oct. 21. The men's Bible class of the First Baptist Church here had a hard nut to crack when the topic assigned for discussion was, "Is a Lie ever Justifiable?" The class divided on the question, some of the members holding that no person is ever justified in telling anything save the truth.

The majority of the class members, however, agreed that physicians are justified in misrepresenting the physical condition of their patients where the truth might cause a shock that would prove fatal.

The Rev. F. L. Harding, pastor of the church and teacher of the class, related that his mother came near dying recently, and his physician advised him to cable for his sister, who is a teacher in Honolulu. When Mrs. Harding heard that her daughter was coming she asked the minister if he had sent her a cable.

The minister said he did not lie outright but he admitted that he evaded the question in such a manner that he might as well have lied in a straight forward manner. He said he feared to tell his mother he had cabled for his sister for fear the knowledge that she was so ill might make her worse.

The class agreed that the action of the minister in failing to tell the truth was justified.

Molded His Death Toll.

The poor sinner's bell is a bell in the city of Bresian, in the province of Silesia Prussia, and hangs in the tower of one of the churches. It was cast July 14, 1386 according to historic records. It is said that a great bell founder of the place had undertaken to make the finest church bell he had ever made.

When the metal was melted the founder withdrew for a few moments, leaving a boy to watch the furnace and enjoying him not to meddle with the catch that held the molten metal, but the boy disobeyed the caution, and when he saw the metal flowing into the mold he called the founder.

The latter rushed in and, seeing as he thought his work of weeks undone and his masterpiece ruined, struck the boy a blow that caused his immediate death. When the metal cooled and the mold

The Romance of Irish Point Lace.

Youghal point lace of which a complete dress has been made for Queen Mary, is the most beautiful and costly of Irish lace and originated indirectly from the failure of the potato crop in 1845, though the inspiration was furnished by a piece of point de Milan which fell into the hands of the abbess of a convent at Youghal, Co. Cork. Hitting upon the idea of setting up a laceraive industry for the half starved children attending the convent school, studied this stray bit of lace, unravelled the threads one by one, and finally mastered the complicated details. She then selected the children cleverest at needlework, and taught them separately what she herself had learned. From Youghal the point lace industry has spread to other parts of Ireland, notably to some districts in the neighborhood of Kenmare, County Kerry. The chief characteristic of Youghal point lace is that it is worked entirely with the needle.

FRIDAY, NOV. 10, 1911

Mr. Borden and the Navy.

Mr. Borden has the wolf by the ears and is afraid to let go. If he authorizes the rejection of the tenders
for war vessels opened at Ottawa
some time ago it will be a confession
of complete capitulation to the Nationalists. If he orders a plebiscite on the question of naval defence he has been warned by Mr. Bourassa it must be in such form that those who are opposed either to a contribution to the Imperial navy or to a Canadian navy may give a direct negative vote. Failure thus to frame the questions for the electors would, if Mr.
Bourassa is to be taken seriously,
send the Nationalists into Opposition and reduce Mr. Borden's majority to the vanishing point.

The straight-line Conservative papers are becoming very uneasy. The Hamilton Spectator thinks that "the Nationalists are very close to the rest of us on the navy question," and believes "the representatives of the people in Parliament assembled should be able satisfactorily to voice majority opinion throughout the country."
The Hamilton Herald, which is independent Conservative and anti-Bour-assa, jeers at the Spectator's pious hope that a referendum may be avoided as follows:

"Not much indication here of what in The Spec's opinion, Canada's naval policy should be. Being interpreted, it's obscure language probably means: 'It doesn't matter much what policy we adopt so long as the Nationalist support is retained by the Government. If you insist, Mr. Bour-assa, on your referendum, why, you must have it. But, kind sir, wouldn't it be gracious and considerate of you to bow to the will of the majority in Parliament instead of demanding the submission of the question to the people?' It would be so much easier, so much less provocative of internal party dissension, to have the matter comfortably settled by the Parliamentary majority."

While The Hamilton Spectator is eager to dodge a referendum and
The Montreal Star wants an immediate contribution of two or three Dreadnoughts, the Ottawa Journal
comes out strongly for the Liberal policy of a Canadian navy under control of the Parliament of Canada.

"May we ask," says the Journal,
"what particular efficacy characterizes this country that to undertake a direct naval responsibility is unwise?
Are we not fit to rank in national effort with Argentina, or Chili, or China, or Denmark, or Belgium?
What's the matter with us? Is the breed here inferior to that in Australia or New Zealand? We have constructed the greatest railways in the world, and the greatest canals; we have in forty years welded half a continent of sparse, feeble Provinces into a strong nation. What mysterious disability prevents us building war ships? Extravagance, is it argued?
Graft? Corruption? Nonsense.
There will be no more of either than there has been about the rest of our nation-building, which on the whole

has been a mighty good job."

The Journal's argument is a sound and irrefutable one. It takes the true Canadian position, if Mr. Borden is well advised he will take the same attitude. It may be difficult for him to summon courage enough to resist the Nationalists' demand and defend himself from their attack, but he cannot govern Canada while holding a wolf by the ears. Mr. Borden should remember that it was Sir Wilfrid Laurier and not Mr. Bourassa who carried the Province of Quebec. The Liberal majority there was secured
after a campaign in which every elector was fully informed of the intention of Sir Wilfrid and his colleagues, if returned to power, to begin the building of vessels for the naval defence of the Dominion.

A Canadian "Jeanie Deans"

In his novel, "The Heart of Midlothian" Sir Walter Scott made famous the name of "Jeanie Deans,"
but perhaps it is not very generally known that Canada can count among her heroines of real life a woman who struggled as devotedly as the Scottish maid in the story to save
one dear to her from a felon's death.

After the rebellion of 1837 some of Mackenzie's followers who had once escaped to the United States,
ventured to recross the boundary.
Two of these, Benjamin Wait (who had a wife and a baby daughter) and Chandler (who was the father of ten children), were captured, tried and condemned to death. The crowd in the Court House was horrified at the sentence, which was to be carried out within two weeks, but there was no
mercy to be expected from the stern
Lieutenant-Governor, Arthur, Mrs.
Waite, however, refused to give up hope. Leaving her delicate baby with friends and persuading Chandler's daughter to accompany her she set out for Quebec to appeal to Lord Durham, then Governor-General. In those days there were no railways,
no steamboats that piled on the lakes
were very slow.

There was indeed not a moment to be lost. The young woman was short of money, but strangers befriended her on the way, and she and her companion reached the capital in safety. At once they climbed up the hill to the Chateau, only to find that the Governor was too ill to see them.
All that day and the next day they waited in sickening suspense. They feared that the only boat by which they could possibly get back to Niagara in time would sail without them.
It was at the last moment that a kind officer took in a message to Lord Durham which induced him to order the execution to be stayed. With a letter and messenger from him, they went back to Niagara to find men setting up the gallows. On the way they had fallen in with the surly
Arthur, and though he dared not refuse the reprieve, he neglected to send it till the prisoners and their friends were in despair. Some months later Waite was banished to Van Dic men's Land, but his wife would not rest until she had obtained a full pardon for him. She journeyed to England to appeal to Queen Victoria on the eve
her marriage. Failing in this she returned to Canada to try to interest the new Governor-General, and it seemed that she was on the point of success when she heard that her husband had escaped from the place of his exile in an open boat and had been picked up by a whaling vessel. Lackless still, Waite was wrecked on his homeward voyage,
but at last rejoined his brave wife at Buffalo, where she was supporting herself teaching. After a reunion Maria lived only a year, but her husband, for whom she had done so much, survived her for half a century.

Stopping the Fight

At the morning service at Regent's Park Baptist Chapel, Rev. F. B. Meyer
made reference to the recent successful
agitation against the Johnson-Wells fight before the second prayer Mr. Meyer said: "Let us first consider the things we want to pray about. Chiefly, at this time, there should be thanksgiving for the fact that the pressure of public opinion had forced the fight to be called off"

Many letters had come to Mr. Meyer congratulating him on the victory which he had won. "Now I," said he, "do not feel like shouting over victory.
Whilst we are profoundly thankful for what has happened, let us avoid provoking, by self-congratulation, disappointed men to the exasperation. We have necessarily wounded men's feelings in this conflict; don't rub salt into their wounds."

Proceeding, Mr. Meyer gave it as his firm belief that the unanimity with which all the forces of Christian life in England had resisted this unholy revival of spectacular pugilism marked the beginning of a new era in the religious life of the land. It had proved that the church was forced to be reckoned with when moral issues were at stake. Churches and churchmen must be prepared to suffer in consequence. There would be no little mud-slinging at the Christian profession and the Christians, but that was a thing to thank God for. The thing that had been troubling the churches of Christ in the last generation was the tendency to sit on the fence when great moral issues were being discussed. The result of the recent agitation proved the heart of England to be right still. Let us, then, thank God and move forward to the next duty.

Mr. Meyer preached with remarkable force and vigor from that great text of Amos, "Prepare to meet thy God, O Israel," and by a series of comparisons in smile and contrast brought the prophet's message to his own nation to bear upon the condition and prospects of moral and religious life in England to-day. "I cannot understand the spirit," he said,
"which sees the working of the Spirit of God in Samson or in Jephthah and refuses it to Wellington and Pitt, and I have no sympathy with a method of spiritual interpretation which makes much of the crossing of the Red Sea and little of the defeat of the Spanish Armada." As one listened to this grand and versatile old man, in the Indian summer of his career of Christian service, it was impossible not to wish, for the sake of the Churches of Christ, that he was in the thirties instead of the sixties of his age, for Mr. Meyer has obviously found, and is confessedly filling, a post in the van of Christian and public life of England for which his gifts and history have uniquely fitted him.—E.X.

Toujours Amour.

Prithee, tell me, Dimple-Chin,
At what age does Love begin?
Your blue eyes have scarcely seen
Summer three, my fairy queen
But a miracle of sweets,
Soft approaches, sly retreats,
Show the little archer there,
Hidden in your pretty hair;
When didst learn a heart to win?
Prithee tell me, Dimple Chin!
"Oh!" the rosy lips reply,
"I can't tell you if I try."
"Is so long I can't remember."
"Ask some younger lass than I!"
Tell, oh, tell me, Grizzled-Face,
Do your heart and head keep pace?
When does hoary Love expire,
When do frosts put out the fire?
All that chill December snow?
Care you still soft hands jo' press,
Bonny heads to smooth and bless?
When does Love give up the Chase?
Tell, oh, tell me, Grizzled-Face!
"Ah!" the wise old lips reply,
"Youth may pass and strength may die;
But of love I can't foretoken,
Ask some older sage than I!"
—Edmund Clarence Steadman.

The Men's Missionary Congress to be held in St. John, Nov. 20th to 22nd, serves to direct the attention anew to what someone has termed "the biggest thing in the world" certainly the greatest factor in recent years in the spiritual awakening of the manhood of our churches—the Laymen's Missionary Movement.

Whatever attitude one may profess towards missions in general, the position of the Men's Missionary movement is so fair as to challenge the most kindly consideration of every right thinking man.
The purposes of the movement, to investigate the Missionary needs of the church at home and abroad and then to inspire the manhood of the church adequately to support the great enterprise,
is broadening and uplifting.

Humane Problems.

From Address by Dr. Wm. O. Stillman
One of the most important topics which can be considered by humanitarians anywhere is—"How can societies doing anti-cruelty work be made more efficient and permanently successful?"
This is an old problem, which has received much attention, but which may still be profitably studied by all friends of this work, young or old. In the start I wish to state that I earnestly believe that we have overworked, as a rule,
the sentimental end and too often neglected the business end. We have appealed to the emotional sentiments and often failed to make good when it came to finances and results. Philanthropy in our day has become a business enterprise, and should be conducted strictly on business principles, if the well-wishers
of our work are to support it liberally.
The time has gone by when business men
can be fed on wind in return for cash surrendered. This should be carefully borne in mind. Records should be kept of all cases attended to, full and exact financial statements of moneys received and paid out should be sent in pretty full details to all contributors. Societies which cannot show concrete results in full and reliable regular statements, as dividends for humane patrons who may be regarded as investors, should not be surprised if these investors fail to renew subscriptions.

When as regards our line of work to be exploited I believe that while primarily and fundamentally we should prevent cruelty, we should also fight the conditions which cause cruelty if we are to be consistent. There has been a disposition in the past to neglect this phase of the work. Of course this largely means humane education. Humane education is the best prevention. Not only do we need to educate the school children and the general public in the tenets of our faith, but we also need to educate the police, the magistrates and the legislators. They usually desire to do right and are frequently abused because they do not co-operate with us. As a rule they do not understand the subject sufficiently.

Their prejudices and sympathies are often on the other side and are increased not infrequently by intemperate and offen abusive attacks or remarks by unwise friends of our cause. It is better to make friends with the police, magistrates and legislators, and to furnish them with humane literature. They become powerful friends, frequently, when they understand that we are reasonable, fair and just. Their assistance is worth having.
Abuse and suspicion, too frequently openly voiced, alienates and antagonizes these public officers. The good will of the newspaper press is also much to be desired, and a little tact and fair treatment will usually secure it. Above all things avoid partisanship and bias in the management of local societies.—E.X.

New Orleans Again Sails the Ohio

Cincinnati, O., Nov. 3. The people all along the Ohio River are on the look out these days to see a little steamer puffing and wheezing its way down the stream. The little craft, which looks strange to eyes accustomed to the large and imposing steamboats of the present
lay, is the replica of the "New Orleans,"
the first steamer to make the trip down the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. The original trip was made just one hundred years ago and marked the beginning of steam navigation on America's inland rivers. To commemorate the centenary of that event the replica was built and yesterday it started from Pittsburg on a trip to New Orleans. The boat is due to reach Cincinnati Sunday and on the following day there will be a celebration in her honor. Similar celebrations will be held at points along the entire route under the auspices of the various state and local historical societies.

The original "New Orleans" called at first the "Enterprise," was built at Marietta and sent to Pittsburg to be provided with engine and stern wheel of Robert Fulton's design. The little boat of some 350 tons cost $40,000 to build,
and left Pittsburg on its trial trip October 11, 1811. Thereafter for three years it made regular trips between New Orleans and Natchez, until it was wrecked. Ex

Lumber Outlook Very Gloomy

(Fredericton Mail)

A slack winter as far as lumbering is concerned is what seems to be promised for the Miramichi as well as other parts of the province. This is due to the depression in the British lumber market which it is feared will continue for some time to come. Hon. John Morrissey stated this morning that although it was difficult to forecast what would happen
in the lumber market it was generally expected that the cut by Miramichi operations would be curtailed. Mr. Morrissey stated further that the extension of the time for the free exportation of pulp wood from the province would not have much effect towards bettering conditions.

Many operators in Miramichi have not shipped a deal to the British market preferring to hold their lumber in their mill yards to selling in a low market. Recently an increase in freight rates in New Brunswick to British ports has aggravated conditions for the lumber operators.
With a season's cut in the mill yards it is highly improbable that any large amount of lumber will be brought of the woods next spring. Conditions in Great Britain at the present time do not seem to indicate that better prices will be realized in the near future.

Use of Alum

Sprinkled powdered alum among and in furs before putting them away for summer; also under edges of carpets for prevention of moth.

In case of croup, beat white of an egg
to stiff froth, add a little sugar, one-fourth teaspoonful of powdered alum and give one half teaspoonful every 15 minutes until relieved.

To set color in light shades of pink and blue, soak goods in salt water, to which has been added good sized lump of alum. In violet and lilac, use alum and water without salt. After color is set,
wash in borax water.

For tender feet bathe in strong solution of alum and boric acid.

Abolishing the Parlor

Ottawa is the centre of a better housing movement, which has some novel and attractive features, not the least of which is the abolition of the parlor. The house as a home, where every room will be used and used without restriction, is the idea
which is promulgated, and the competition for prizes for the best plans will be open to the architects of the whole Dominion. The organizers of the movement are evidently of the opinion that the race has been held in bondage to the parlor long enough.—London Free Press.

Husband and wife forever estranged one man killed, another man sentenced for life imprisonment in the terrible toll of religious strife disclosed in the trial of F. D. McRae at Cornwall last week. In spite of the praiseworthy efforts of the Crown Prosecutor, the defence lawyer, the judge and the jury to keep the religious part of the miserable quarrel out of the evidence as far as possible, it came out quite clearly that, first, differing on religion, other matters came in, with the result already stated. Once more people aghast at the crimes committed in the name of creeds. It is surely the duty of all who desire the cessation of such unseemly strife to unite and endeavor to eradicate the bitter feelings which seem to be engendered even in the homes when religious strife begins.—Tor Globe.

Guideposts in Germany.

An artistic substitute for the old and misplaced and misleading guidepost has been introduced in some German highways. A French tourist who has seen the country from a motorcycle says: "At a crossroad I came upon what looked like a man with a scythe. Nearer by I saw that it was the figure of a farmer whose scythe pointing south, bore information in the dialect, 'One hour to Gierdorf.' Another equally artistic guide post was a rustic post 10 feet high, the top of which had been carved to represent a schoolboy. His left hand pointed south, and his right hand held a slate inscribed, 'To the Pullner Kolonie.' So much favorable comment has been created by these guides that a rivalry as to who should have the best has been created in the various rural communities.—Weekly Siftings.

Women in the Churches

The question of ladies serving on the diocesan was raised at the quarterly social gathering of King Street Church, Yarmouth, England. Rev. C. McLacchie said he knew nothing in the rules of the Church to forbid a woman serving on the diocesan. It was pointed out that women, who were a majority of the members, had no direct representation on the Church's Executive, though there were many who were equally capable and businesslike with the men chosen to serve the church. Two ladies were duly nominated as deacons, but it was suggested that so radical a departure from practice and precedent should not be taken without notice and adequate discussion. It was also alternatively urged that half a dozen deaconesses could be appointed to act in conjunction with the deacons, but not actually elected, to the diocesan. Eventually, the ladies present concurred in the proposal to discuss the principle of feminine deacons at the next church meeting, and by consent the lady candidates' names were removed from the list. One curious objection urged in this discussion was that if ladies were eligible both as deacon and his wife might be elected, which a member thought might lead to trouble.—Ex.

THE STANDING ALIBI OF H. STANLEIGH STORME

(By Wm. Hamilton Osborne.)

I wasn't an' I found that my watch was about ten minutes slow.

"Now we started in to play, understand. And when you're playing cards time flies like the dickens. We've got a tunc up there in the green room and it runs all night as well as all day. The telegraph people here run it."

"And I want to tell you," continued the sheriff, "that the news of this robbery came in over the ticker while we were sitting there—Storme and the rest of us—about half past two in the morning. And Storme was there—sat next to me. And I said to Storme, when the news came in, 'Storme, I said, Mordant's safe's been cracked, and there's a pile of money gone.'"

His testimony was identical. It was the purpose of the prisoner's counsel to call the prisoner, but he was too busy to do so, the prisoner plucked him by the sleeve.

After a short conference, the attorney for the defence announced that the defence closed his case.

The judge's charge was normal and formal in the extreme. At the close of it the jury although invited to retire, declined to do so, and without stopping from the jury box returned a verdict of "not guilty."

CHAPTER VII.

The Shadows and the Shadowed.

It took Storme some time to escape entirely from the clutches of his over-enthusiastic friends. All the way along the street he met them. By means of one pretext and another, however, he finally eluded them and slipped down a quiet street. From this one he emerged into a more open thoroughfare, and finally stood before the Gouverneur, his bachelor apartment home.

Once there, he glanced hastily up and down the street to make sure that no one saw him, then quickly unlocked the door and stepped inside. He ascended noiselessly to the second floor apartment. He entered it, and lastly passed through room after room.

"Nobody here," he remarked with a sigh of relief. "I am all alone."

He seated himself at a desk and began to write.

"It is just as well," he said to himself, "to write once more, now that it's all over. It was just as well, too, to write before, when—the first—catastrophe occurred. It's safer if anything. It's taking chances—big chances perhaps—but in a safe quarter, after all."

He wrote hastily as follows:

My Dear Miss Dumont,—

It seems better to address you so for the present. There are certain things to which I prefer to refer by letter alone.

"You will recall that I wrote you on the twenty-fourth of last month requiring you to make no reference in my presence, or to me, to anything which might have happened. That request was not prompted by any desire to be spared humiliation—it was a part of the peculiar circumstances which have constituted a part of my present life.

"Now that I have been vindicated in your eyes and in the eyes of the world I ask you to make to me no reference to to-day's happenings, nor to such vindication, nor, indeed, to this letter or the other."

I have many good reasons for making this request, which will appear later. I close with the expression of much regard. Sincerely,

"H. STANLEIGH STORME."

"A bit formal, perhaps," continued Storme, "but certainly imperative. This complication with Miss Dumont was certainly unlooked for—and yet—he smiled to himself—"not altogether unfortunate, for me. I don't know after all, but that it is a good thing—a very good thing, perhaps after all."

He enclosed it in an envelope, addressed the latter, and sealed it carefully with wax, upon which he impressed the seal ring he wore.

He looked at his watch.

"There's plenty of time," he said to himself by messenger. "That's best!"

Rising from the desk, he drew upon his head a soft felt hat which partly covered his face, and stole downstairs again. He carefully opened the front door and looked out.

The street was deserted—almost. But not quite—for at each end of the blocked road one man, intent, apparently, on everything except the Gouverneur or H. Stanleigh Storme.

"Great Scott!" murmured Storme to himself, "so soon again!"

He retraced his steps and re-entered the hall and, passing through to the rear of the apartment house, made his exit through an alleyway.

Once clear of the place, he hastened towards the centre of the town and handed his message in at a local delivery office with instructions to send it out at once.

In the meantime one of the two men who had stood outside sauntered up and accosted the other.

"Did you see him then, Jim, when he stuck his head outside?"

Burke nodded—for it was he.

"He won't come out till dark, now," he replies, "you see if he does."

"Well," returned the first man, "he saw us all right, all right—though he can't be sure just who we are since we're all togged out in this way. We might just as well stick together now for a while, anyway. Gimme a chew of tobacco, will you? That's the ticket."

There was a silence while he carefully adjusted the stuff to suit his taste.

Suddenly he grasped the other man by the sleeve.

"Geel!" he exclaimed. "Look a here. How the devil now did he get out? He gave us the slip, after all."

He pointed down the street.

Burke nodded his head.

"He's been out—blamed if he ain't," assented he, "and now he's coming back. He's a slick one, all right. Went out the back way, probably, and now he's comin' back as bold as brass."

The object of their remarks disappeared within the house. He looked neither to the right nor to the left. Most certainly he did not see the two plain clothes men, or, if he did, he gave no sign.

It was now fairly late in the afternoon.

"Stumpy," exclaimed Burke, "go around the corner there and 'phone headquarters. We may see another man. An' you keep that alleyway under yer eye, too."

"We got this fellow now where we want him, an' it's a blame good thing I forgot something and had to come back. We'll camp on his trail; we'll follow him, no matter where he goes."

"Stumpy," he continued, "let me tell you. I told it in court, an' I say that there man is the man who robbed that bank, and, by George, I'm goin' to keep him in sight if it takes the whole force to do it. Understand! I am, so help me God."

The other man came up from head-quarters.

"Say, Burke," he exclaimed. "I saw your man downtown. What're you doin' up here?"

"I know you did," replied Burke. "An' he came back, an' he's in the Gouverneur over there, an' don't you forget it."

The other glanced at him doubtfully.

"Oh, that's it, is it?" he returned. "I didn't know. I only know I saw him—that's all—an' I wondered at the time where you was."

Burke and the two men vanished into thin air. Once more the street became deserted. Dusk had come on—it was growing darker very moment.

At a quarter to eight a man clad in a dress suit and a light overcoat emerged from the apartment house and sauntered down the street.

In front of a house with an English basement stood an electric street lamp. He passed this, and the light shone full on his face.

When he reached the corner he glanced up and down and behind him for an instant, and then, breaking into a fast walk, made for the west end of town.

He had no sooner done so than a man emerged from the basement, another from an alleyway across the street, and a third from a recess round the corner.

Without the slightest recognition of each other they turned in and followed the man in the light coat, each man in his own way.

Down at headquarters late that afternoon the sergeant called to a special officer. The officer hurried in.

"Say, Flynn," he remarked, "look here. There's the man the bank want us to keep tab on. See him. The fellow with the slouch hat? Yes, that's the chap."

"Now, look here, Burke is after him, but there ain't a sign of Burke around. He's slipped a cog somehow. Spose you turn in and follow the fellow. The banks are standing behind us, and they're paying good money to keep track of this man, and it ain't our business to lose him. S'pose you reckon him up a bit."

The officer nodded and started off. He kept his man in sight. It was difficult work, not only because his man was a rapid walker and swerved in and out of different thoroughfares with rapidity, but also because he kept constantly looking around behind him.

Storme—for it was he—knew that he was being followed, and though he was the shadowed, and though he was the shadower, for he kept his eye on his pursuer quite as faithfully as did the officer keep track of him.

The afternoon passed and evening came, but still on and on walked Storme. They reached a residential portion of the town.

Suddenly Storme turned swiftly down a dark, narrow street, and when his pursuer reached the corner, Storme had disappeared. Search as he would, there was no trace of the man.

The special devoted some ten minutes to a fruitless search, and then retraced his steps to the corner whence Storme had disappeared.

As he stood there, nonplussed, a man suddenly touched him on the back of the hand. The special knew the touch. He said nothing, but followed the man to a dark recess.

"Well, Burke," he remarked, "what're you doin' here? I've been followin' your man all the evening, an' by George, I just lost him!"

"What man?" demanded Burke.

"Aw," returned the other, "you know that fellow Storme."

"Geel!" returned Burke, "have they put you on, too? Well, by George, with the crowd we've got, there ain't anything he can do without our seein' it. It's a blame good thing we got him in tow, too. Only we got considerable of a wait before us before he comes out."

Belgium's Mad Ex-Empress.

The mad ex-Empress of Mexico kept her birthday recently, and members of the Belgian Royal family journeyed out to the Chateau de Bouchoit to wish her "many happy returns." This wish seems almost a mockery, says The American Woman's Review, for the seventy-first birthday of the Empress Carlotta.

Ever since 1867 she has been mad, and has had to be looked after as a madwoman. Her mother, Leopold II, took charge of her, and she has never left Belgium since. They were devoted as children to each other, and one of the King's choicest treasures was a marble figure of his sister as a child.

For years the ex-Empress was lodged in the Terneuzen Palace; but in those days she was very violent, and contrived to set it on fire and burn it down. She has become more quiet, but leads a strange life. She never goes outside her own park gates, and for many years would see no one but her ladies in waiting. But of late she does not refuse to see members of the Royal family, though she never speaks to them.

For a good many years she had a hallucination that she would be poisoned through her food. So a special servant carried her meals into a private room, which he locked. Then the Empress entered, locked the door and partook of her meal alone. Now she is more reasonable, and eats with her ladies in waiting. She has lapses of silence of years' duration; then she will begin to talk again, but always of trivial things, and she never refers to the past.

She reads books and papers, but never makes any reference to what she reads. All newspapers were kept from her when King Leopold died, as the news of his death would, it was feared, cause a shock. But she reads the journal again now, and must know he is dead, but makes no reference to it.

She plays the piano constantly, but only just those pieces which she learned as a girl, and though a good performer she cannot be persuaded to look at a new composition. She plays carols in the evenings with one of her three ladies in waiting; but always in silence, and it is an unwritten law that she must be allowed to win the game. She seldom speaks and always impersonally, never using even the Royal "we."

From time to time some of the leading medical men make an examination of her health. Not long ago she completely surprised one of them by speaking to him. She called him to the window and said: "Do you see a serpent coiled around those trees?" The doctor, thinking to humor her said he did.

"And," she went on, "do you see a serpent coiled around the branch above him?" The doctor saw that, too, and made other strange things besides or said he did. "Then," she cried angrily, "it is you who are mad and not I; for I see none of those things."

She is extremely particular about her dignity and exacts every ounce of the prestige which was hers as the Empress of Mexico. Nothing makes her so angry as for anyone to refer to her as the Princess. In all her weak moments she never forgets her once great position. It is small wonder that her mind being fixed at the moment when she lost her reason, she cannot believe she has changed in power. Having once seen herself in a mirror under her changed condition, she screamed out, "No! no!" and be-

Long Lost Ring Found

Cleaner: A most remarkable discovery, perhaps the only one of its kind heard of in this vicinity for some years, was made on Monday afternoon, when Mrs. A. A. Treadwell, the wife of a well known Mangerville farmer, found imbedded in a large turnip a gentleman's solid gold ring.

Mrs. Treadwell had been in the cellar looking over some turnips which had just been placed in the cellar that day, when she noticed a bright glistering amongst them, and upon close examination saw what she thought to be a piece of brass protruding from the side of one of the largest turnips. On cutting the turnip with a knife she was surprised to find that the shining that she noticed came from nothing else than a gentleman's large sized ring.

Mrs. Treadwell was naturally very much pleased over the extraordinary discovery, and on inquiry among the neighbors found that a ring answering that description had been lost in the same field where the turnips had grown by a young man who had been visiting there from Boston upwards of ten years ago. Mrs. Treadwell had only a few days before lost her own ring, and when she saw this one protruding from the turnip she thought that she had discovered her lost property.

Another Great Tunnel.

Another great tunnel is being driven through the great mountain range between the towns of Grousemount and Christchurch, New Zealand. It was begun in 1908, and the contractors are allowed five years for completion. The work of drilling is done by the latest compressed air methods, and the work at each end is progressing from four to ten feet each day. The tunnel will be about five and a half miles in length. It will be situated one half mile above the rail level and is in the form of a horse-shoe. It is about fourteen feet in width at the rail level and is to be lined with the very best tubular structure. It is one of the great feats of engineering and will be one of the best tunnels in the world when completed. It will make a wonderful change in the mode of travel in the section of the country where it is being constructed.

Trades and Their Diseases.

"Every trade has its peculiar disease," said Lecoq, the detective. "Thus a criminal's malady will often afford a valuable clue to his identity."

"Blacksmiths are liable to paralysis of the right side, due to the shock of hammering with the sledge, and they are also liable to weak eyes, due to the glare of the forge."

"Carpenters are liable to varicose veins because they stand so much, and continuous sawing tends to injure the artery that carries the blood from the head to the carpenter's right arm."

"Bakers and miners, the one through the white dust of flour and the other through the black dust of coal, get weak lungs. Miners get weak eyes, too, from working in the dark."

"Cooper get swollen knees from pressing them against barrels. This, though is nothing like so bad a swelling as house maids develop from the kneeling that scrubbing entails."

"India rubber workers are to be pitied for they suffer from headaches and mental depression, due to the rubber fumes. Painters are the most unfortunate of all. They get lead poisoning, a disease that is often fatal."

Villa Unearthed at Pompeii

According to the archaeologist, Dr. Johann Bergman, who recently returned to Stockholm from Italy, the Italian authorities are now excavating the most magnificent villa that has yet been found at Pompeii. The villa, of which only ten rooms have been laid bare, was ac-identally discovered by workmen employ-

in vineyards.

One of the rooms is practically uninjured. It is as large as a fair sized hall and contains a beautiful mosaic floor, while the walls are decorated with the most perfect frescoes ever seen at Pompeii. These paintings constitute a series of life sized human figures not less than twenty nine in number. They are executed in an unrivalled fashion. From the style of the painting it is evident that the villa belongs to the period of Augustus, thirty or twenty B. C.

At the present moment a jawait is in progress between the owner and the Italian Government regarding the price which the State must pay for this unique find. As matters stand the Government has forbidden any further excavations to be made. People are even inhibited from photographing any object in the villa, which is in charge of an official custodian.

Only three villas of similar character have been found outside Pompeii. The first was the Diomedes villa, which was discovered in the year 1700, the second was the Boscoreale villa, in 1835, on which occasion ninety six silver vessels were found. These vessels were purchased for the Louvre for half a million francs. Last of all was the great villa near Boscoreale, with twenty four rooms, containing many fine wall paintings in a damaged condition. The newly discovered villa surpasses all the others not only as regards its size, but in the artistic value and remarkable preserved state of its wall paintings.

"Bird Day" for Georgia

Georgia is putting on her statute-books a law that a "bird day" shall be observed in the public schools.

This is not to be a holiday, but a day set apart for instruction in bird life and uses, so that children may be educated along these lines to such an extent that the birds of the state may receive the protection they should have.

Not only will the children be instructed as to bird manners and habits, but they will be impressed as to the usefulness of the little creatures in keeping down insect life, and thus protecting trees and growing crops.

Side by side with other lessons, boys who are hunters, or who will grow to be hunters, are taught the game laws on these bird days, so they may not ignorantly kill game birds out of season or song-birds in any season.—Memphis Commercial Appeal.

I have one preacher that I love better than any other on earth; it is my little tame robin, who preaches to me daily. I put his crumbs upon my window-sill when he wants his supply, and takes as much as he desires for his need. From thence he always hops to a little tree near by, and 'tits his voice to God and sings his carol of praise and gratitude, tucks his little head under his wing, and goes fast to sleep, and leaves tomorrow to look after itself. It is the best preacher that I have on earth.

Martin Luther.

Scottish Absinence.

An angry Scottish clergyman has written to the London Times in protest against a slander upon the Scotch nation incorporated by Mr. Alfred Austin in his Autobiography. Mr. Austin once went to Irvine to unveil a statue of Robert Burns. He writes:

On my arrival I spent the evening with the local authorities, and at the supper or early dinner to which they treated me as a guest, I felt they must have thought me a poor creature, unless they were familiar with Southern ways-for I drank sparingly, according to my custom, while they, to my amazement, tossed off glass after glass of whisky neat remaining just as sober when we sat down.

The minister of Irvine, as one of the few survivors of that memorable occasion makes effective denial, and leaves little doubt as to who is the best literary craftsman of the two men. "Mr. Austin was entertained by the late Provost Breckenridge, not to 'supper or early dinner,' what a strange inversion-but to dinner somewhat after eight o'clock. I do not know what Mr. Austin drank. I was not so rude as to note, but I take his work. Will he take mine? It is not, in my experience it never has been, the habit of the habit of the 'local authorities' to toss off glass after glass of whisky." It certainly was not the case that night. Further, those hardy drinkers according to Mr. Austin, would not have the hardihood to drink whisky 'neat' There is one part of his story true, they were just as sober as before we sat down. So they were, for an obvious reason; they happened to be well bred men. Mr. Austin is, perhaps, as ignorant of Northern ways as he supposes us to be of Southern. Was he surprised that we were not all dressed in kilts? We have had evidently a 'chief' among us making 'notakin' notes, and now that he has printed them, they must, if they are all like this sample, be a monument of poetic inventive genius."

South Norwalk, Conn., Nov. 7 A dog collar held up a wedding here yesterday. In a spirit of fun the best man snatched it around the neck of Miss Mabel Stevenson, a belle of Silvermine, as she was preparing for the nuptials, and as the contrivance could not be unlocked or broken the bride had to be rushed in an auto four miles to this place, where the combined efforts of a locksmith and a blacksmith were necessary to remove the encumbrance.

"Prepare to meet thy fate," said Howard Aiken, as he snapped the dog collar around Miss Stevenson's neck as she made ready for the ceremony, which was scheduled for 2 p. m. George Worden, the bridegroom, tried his best to free the girl and so did the other members of the party. While the two guests were at work the minister and guests sat in the parlor, laughing and joking at the unfortunate bride's expenses.-Tel.

Land For The Landless is to be the policy of an organization or company to be founded in Canada as a result of the Duke of Sutherland's visit. Sir Henry M. Pellat, speaking for the Duke and for a body of capitalists associated with him, says applications will be made to the Dominion and Provincial Governments for grants of suitable land, and that a class of settlers from Britain of the highest character, but who have but little capital, will be assisted to take up farms on these lands. The capitalists will not expect to make any great return on their investment, but hope for its repayments in instalments and the continued use of these repayments to bring others out.-Ex.

Winnipeg Magistrates View of Barks

Extraordinary Pronouncement in Western Court.

Winnipeg, Oct. 31--In discussing the case in which John K. McLeod and Gordon Naele, two young bank clerks, are charged with embezzlement and attempted arson, Police Magistrate Walker today arraigned the banks as "simply shops for turning out criminals." He arraigned the system which permitted continuous thefts without detection, saying in part: "If banks can't get a system by which these boys can be checked up regularly, the sooner they shut their doors the better for the world. As things are they are simply shops for turning out criminals." The boys are technically the guilty party, but to my mind the institutions are equally culpable, for it is their negligence which makes possible the crime."

The clerks, who have pleaded guilty, were remanded for sentence.-Ex.

Indian Chief at Ottawa To See Duke of Connaught.

Ottawa, Nov. 8. Claiming that an ancient proclamation of King George III is being violated, Chief Joseph K. Gabriel, head of the Iroquois Indians of the Lake of Two Mountains reservation, arrived in the City last night and tomorrow will seek an audience with the Duke of Connaught to the end that the commands of King George III may be obeyed and the Lake of Two Mountains Indians relieved from undesirable association with white people.

The chief was sent here by the Indians to intercede with the governor general and the prime minister to have the settlement of white people on the Lake of Two Mountains reservation discontinued. He claims that white people in large numbers are settling on Indian lands and that this is objectionable both because of the association and usurpation of the land from the Indians. He asserts that the majority of white people offending in this way are French Canadians.-Tel.

Rumors of port development are in the air. We hope they will materialize. So far as this paper is concerned we care not which government provides the necessary harbor improvements, so long as they are provided. We have been fed on promises long enough.-Beacon.

It is reported that Dr. Daniel's recent visit to St. Andrews was in connection with a scheme of development which has in view the utilization of the port of St. Andrews in connection with the winter port of St. John. This scheme, it is said, includes the ports of Halifax and Quebec for the 18,000 ton ships of the C. P. R., and the ports of St. John and St. Andrews, and possibly Letang, for smaller steamship lines. Beacon.

Charlotte County Notes

Rev. A. B. O'Neill (formerly of St. George) received rather a notable tribute on Columbus Day from Hon. Quinn O'Brien, of Chicago, who followed him in an address at South Bend, Ind., on the day in question. Mr. O'Brien stated that he was a somewhat extensive traveller who had attended numberless public meetings and big banquets, at which speeches were made by exceptionally fine speakers, but he had never heard a more thoroughly eloquent address than one just made by Father O'Neill. The polished diction, poetic imagery and varied arguments of the reverend orator, supplemented by his irresistible convincingness and the impassioned fervor of his delivery, had made oration a classic gem chiselled to the point of perfection. Ex.

The speeches of the Ministers at the Borden banquet were chiefly notable for what they did not say about the Navy. In fact, it seemed like a conspiracy of silence.-Cron.

Calais Pastors in Verbal Set To Calais, Nov. 2.--A meeting of those interested in what is known as the "forward" movement among men was held Tuesday evening, Oct. 31, at the Baptist vestry, on which occasion Rev. J. C. G. well Hughes, pastor of the Baptist church openly accused Rev. R. A. Macdonald, of the Congregational Church, of having started the Boy Scout movement for the purpose of taking boys away from the other Sunday schools. The remarks of Rev. M. Hughes created a very painful impression, and the situation was only relieved by the tact of the chairman, Hon. Geo. H. Eaton. Rev. Mr. Macdonald, in reply to Mr. Hughes, stated that he had no intention of trying to take scholars from the other Sunday schools, and that when the Boy Scouts were organized it was his intention to confine membership in this particular contingent to the children of his own parish; but that other boys desired to join, and he saw no reason for refusing their applications. It is to be feared that the forward movement received rather a set-back on this occasion. The affair was discussed freely about the city streets on Wednesday, and the weight of the opinion expressed was that the action of the Rev. Mr. Hughes was ill advised, to say the least.

The Italian-Turco War continues, but evidently both sides are determined to prevent much news reaching the outside regarding the progress of hostilities. Italy is slowly and at a great cost of life tightening her hold on Tripoli. She is finding that the Turks and their Arab allies can fight desperately, and plot with usual cunning. Italian soldiers are charged with having slain non-combatants, as well as soldiers, and with having committed other acts of cruelty. It is hoped that more detailed and accurate reports may contradict these stories. Nothing will turn opinion so rapidly against Italy, as authenticated reports of cruelty.-Tor. Globe.

Seeing a Purple Cow
Perfectly Natural Under Certain Conditions, Says an Artist.
H. Anthony Dyer, painter of water colors, was explaining the matter to some possible buyers of his wares.

"Suppose while you are in the country in summer," said he, "you chance upon a Holstein cow grazing on a hillside. Holsteins, of course you know, are black and white. The pasture is green. Off at one side is a gray unpainted barn. Do you stagger with surprise when you notice that that cow is purple? Not a bit of it. If it were not purple you might reasonably consult an oculist. That would be a sign that your eyes needed attention."

"But you may never have tried to figure out why the cow is purple. Here is the answer: The complementary color of the green pasture is red. The sight of green always suggests red, although we don't realize it. Flooding the scene is the yellow sunshine. The yellow, the red and the green combine to tint the grazing neutral colored cow purple, and purple is undeniably, as you must admit when next you encounter one under such circumstances. Nevertheless, therefore, may you sing with Gellert Burgess: I never saw a purple cow.

And never hope to see one.

A Railway Ticket Puzzle.

(London Times.) An amusing discussion took place on Saturday night at King's Cross Station of the Great Northern Railway, when the twin sisters Blazek arrived from Edinburgh. Born 31 years ago in Bohemia, Yosefa and Rosa Blazek, who are known as the successor of the Siamese Twins are inseparably joined together, and when it was found that they had only bought one ticket the question arose whether the railway company was entitled to ask for a second fare. Such a case had never been heard of before, and after much perplexity the railway officials satisfied themselves with taking the name and address of Ike S. Rose of Berlin, who is accompanying the twins on their travels, and who explained that he had never taken more than one ticket for them, and had never been asked for a second fare.

The object of the sisters' visit to London is to undergo an examination by surgeons and doctors of the General Medical Council. One of the sisters has a nine months' old baby, which she was carrying in her arms on her arrival at King's Cross.

Richeson, the Baptist minister accused of murdering Miss Linnell and whom the police seem to be weaving a stray web of circumstantial evidence about, is putting up quite a bluff in his prison planning how he will enter the missionary field on his acquittal of the charge which he treats as a certainty, and if money can do it, he will certainly obtain such an acquittal, although everything points to his guilt at present.

Local Politics.

The local government party is preparing for a convention to nominate a candidate for the county for the seat vacant through the resignation of Mr. James Lowell to run for Ottawa. The local opposition party has not as yet made any move, and, if reports current on the street are correct will not do so. It is said that recent agreement for no election petitions would be offered to the return of the government candidates for the vacant seats in St. John county, Sanbury county and Charlotte county. The government held two or three of these seats before, and the opposition one, so the net result, if the agreement is as reported, will be the gain of one supporter by the government.—Ex.

A Great Reform.

England is moving steadily along democratic lines the announcement of the Premier that he contemplates provision at an early date for manhood suffrage shows its determination to give the whole people opportunity to rule the country by their representatives. The existing system in England is largely a property qualification. A freehold estate of the clear yearly value of forty shillings gives a vote, as does lands of any tenure of five pounds clear yearly value held for life. There are also votes on leasehold property of five pounds clear yearly value, the original term being not less than 60 years. There is also a vote on leasehold value of £50, the original term being not less than 20 years. There is also a household qualification in favor of the inhabitant occupier, which applies throughout the United Kingdom; there is also a lodgers' vote, when the lodger has resided in the one place for one year; there is a London freeman's vote, and the graduates of certain universities have friends. There are borough votes and county votes. The same system does not prevail throughout the three kingdoms and, of course, the general result is a system of many variations. Apparently Mr. Asquith will give one man one vote, and that simple plan will settle a very large question.—St. John Globe.

Madagascar's Two Climates

The island of Madagascar has two distinct climates, two classes of natives and two classes of fauna and flora. The island is about the size of France. Along the coast it is tropical and malarious, and the natives are darker than in the interior. The interior is a high tableland and mountainous. There the climate is cooler and the natives smaller and lighter in color than on the coast. But in the interior they are more intelligent, and they rule the island.

A passenger train of 10 cars moving at the rate of 60 miles an hour can be stopped by means of the airbrakes in 700 feet. To reach this speed after starting takes a far greater distance on a level track. Without the airbrake the high speed of present railroading would be too unsafe to be attempted.

The latest reports from the Chinese revolution point to a complete success of the reform party, and to the total collapse of the present Manchu Dynasty, which have proved themselves so deficient of common sense that they could not see the trend of public opinion; and the awakening of the people to advanced ideas.

A few years ago with a very small relaxing of the old unjust laws the dynasty likely could have been dined in a firm position for years; now no concessions no matter how liberal will save them as the people have no faith in them and want none of them.

On the completion of the movement and the installation of the Reform party in power, it is to be hoped they will prove themselves capable of rightly conducting the country along the prosperous lines of advancement, and not make a failure as the Young Turks did or a partial aim as the Reform party of Portuguese.

The Methodist church of Canada will clear about a million and a half dollars on the sale of St. James church of Montreal. How this sum will be invested is uncertain whether in an immense new church in Montreal or for the general purposes of the denomination. It is only a few years ago since this church was almost put under the hammer and was only saved by the whole denominations throughout the Dominion subscribing enough to clear it of debt.

This is an object lesson of the immense income of property value in Montreal during the past few years as the building is worthless to the purchasers only for the stone in it, and will be torn down.

The Italian-Turkish war is dragging along and the Italians seem to have met a far more stubborn opposition from the inhabitants of Tripoli than they expected, and apparently have a harder nut to crack than they looked for. Reports from a seemingly reliable source accuse them of shocking cruelties even to women and children of the invaded country, they of course doing this and lay the blame on some of the raving tribes of the country. Should the reports prove true on later news it will serve to place Italy in a very unfavorable light and on a level with the heathenish Turks whom they are endeavoring to drive out.

"Doctor," she asked in pleading tones "do you think it will be necessary for me to have an operation?"

"Oh, I hardly think so," he replied.

"There! I told my husband it wouldn't be any use coming to you. My next-door neighbor has a doctor who has prescribed three operations for her during the year."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Publications of the International Agricultural Institute.

The new number of the bulletin "The Publications of the International Agricultural Institute" gives the latest data concerning the Wheat, Rye, Barley, Oat and Corn crops of the world.

Estimates of the wheat crop received by the Institute from twenty countries of the Northern Hemisphere (Austria and the Ottoman Empire being the only important omissions) show a total of 3,048,927,000 bushels compared with 3,034,879,000 for the same countries last year.

No estimates have yet been made for the countries of the Southern Hemisphere—Australia, New Zealand, Argentina and Chili, whose harvest will begin in December.

For fifteen countries reporting, the year-crop of 1911 is 1,364,804,000 bushels compared with 1,419,169,000 for the same countries last year.

Estimates for barley in 18 countries show a total of 1,127,838,000 bushels compared with 1,128,121,000 last year. The oat crop of 17 countries so far reported is 2,838,221,000 bushels compared with 3,151,125,000 last year.

The bulletin contains many brief articles and summaries of articles, written by scientific experimenters and others which have appeared in official bulletins and other trustworthy publications issued by the foremost agricultural countries of the world.

References are made to the following subjects, which are of peculiar interest: The Karite or Butter-tree grows in Central Africa and from which a vegetable butter is produced. The tree grows to a height of nearly 54 feet. The butter is made from the fatty substance found in the seeds. The butter has a slight odor of cocoa. It finds a ready sale in European markets.

An item refers to the product of a cross between the tomato and the pepper, known as the peppermato. In appearance, it resembles the tomato. As the tomato and pepper plants are closely related, it is supposed that the tomato blossom was fertilized with the pollen from the capsicum.

It has been concluded by an Italian investigator, who has gone deeply into the study of the form and performance of cows, that the largest production of milk corresponds with the largest girth and the heaviest weight of the animal.

Under the head of Farm Machinery a description is given of an electric wind motor used in Danish agriculture.

The apparatus includes a windmill, a dynamo, a battery with automatic accumulators, a switchboard, and an automatic tension regulator for lighting purposes. The installation expenses for a farm with 40 incandescent lamps and a 3 to 5 horse power motor is said to be about $1435.

A method of determining the age of eggs is described. It is to float the eggs in a large tumbler of water in which has been dissolved a teaspoonful of ordinary table salt. An egg one day old will fall to the bottom of the glass; if older, it does not reach the bottom. If three days it sinks only just below the surface and the older the egg, the more it protrudes above the surface of the liquid.

The Longevity of Birds

In reading the Proceedings of the Zoological Society of London for 1911 we have been interested in the ages attained by many of the birds mentioned. Of course it is only the exceptional bird that reaches the extreme age indicated, just as it is only the exceptional man that lives to be eighty or ninety. We give only a few of the birds spoken of in the volume referred to above: Ravens have been known to live to be 69 years of age; nightingales 25, skylarks 24, goldfinches 23, canaries 20, the American robin 13, an eagle-owl 68, a gray parrot 93, a sulphur-crested cockatoo 81, an Amazon 102, a white-headed or Egyptian vulture 118, a golden eagle 104, pelicans 31, common herons 22, a black stock 30, a mute swan 70, a domestic goose (authorities somewhat doubtful) 80, wild ducks 29, doves and pigeons from 23 to 40 years, herring-gulls 44, ostriches 55, cranes 50. A peacock now living near Aylesbury is known to be 40 years old.

Dr. Mitchell, the author of the book, who is also at the head of the London Zoological Gardens says, "I think that the most certain general conclusion which I may draw regarding the longevity and viability (capacity of living after birth) of the groups of birds is, that in proportion to size, longevity and viability increase with perfection of organization. The further a bird has advanced along the lines of evolution of the bird group, the more viable it is."—F. H. R.

A Second Shylock

A good many years ago Marse Henry Watterson, of the Louisville Courier-Journal, and Colonel John R. Fellows, wandering about Washington in search of a little relaxation, came upon a senatorial poker game. They both wanted in but this was a game for big money and they were told to keep away.

However, Marse Henry and the Colonel were bound to get their relaxation, and they organized a two-handed game and played until nine o'clock the next morning.

Then they quit for breakfast. As they entered the hotel dining room Marse Henry said: "John, as I figure it, you owe me a million dollars. Now, John, I'll call it square if you will buy the breakfast."

"Henry," replied Fellows, "you are a regular Shylock. The discount isn't big enough."
