GT. ANDREWS STANDARD. JANUARY 1, 1842.

Thee's a manue of gloom o'er nature thrown he weeps for the very dead! From the book of Eternity's torn. A year of lang syne has fled.

one with the hues of the Landing It usher'd to man - a weal - a wee -Thro' its portal - the New-Years morn.

Chail we meet again? said a laughing youth Shall we meet again? or can it be truth. That the parted shall meet no more Tis truth my child, nay ! do not start-

Yet the aged was sobbing, when— He said (as it thrill'd to the wild boy's heart) We part-but we meet again! Cheer thee my child, 'tis a saddened thought,

That the links of our love must sever, That the web which our boyhood fancy wro't, In the grave must be loos d for ever.

Yet beyond the Tomb! is a "happy home" Where the sever'd shall meet again, Where no moth, nor rust, nor the guawing Shall prey on the frames of men. [worm,

There will we meet, where our tossing ark, Mid the sea-weed, shall drift no more, No ripples of tide shall chafe life's bark, When moored on that distant shore.

Shall we meet again on this gladsome eve-Will a tear drop, gush out for none— Will no chord be struck! no fond heart grieve? For a missing-an absent onc.

Oh! history has many a darkened tale
Of savage deed—and woman's piteous wail—
Of Cabins wrapped in firmes, while savage yells
Are the first sign the kindling fire tells!
Off perished thus, the siern and hirdy hand
That cleared the forests of our smiling land.
