HON. MR. POWER—It was shown that the other persons had only tendered to supply a limited quantity; and the remainder were to be supplied by Cooper, Fairman & Co. But putting it in the worst possible light—supposing Cooper, Fairman & Co. were the highest tenderers and had to supply everything, what was the difficulty in that case? One of the partners of Cooper, Fairman & Co. was a brother of the Premier of the day. Cooper, Fairman & Co. were not themselves the contractors, but agents of the contractors, and as agents they could at most make only a small commission on the sale. Hon. gentlemen at that time were virtuously indignant that a firm of which the brother of the Premier was a member should be the agents to supply steel rails under contract. It was quite true that it required an unusual want of faith in human nature to suppose that there was anything wrong in the Premier's conduct in that case; still hon. gentlemen so insisted that the public business of the country should be above suspicion that they made that one of the most serious charges against the administration of the day. What have we in this case? We have not simply brothers or cousins of members of parliament acting as agents for the contractors—the people who are getting the money—but we have members of both Houses of Parliament getting this grant from the Government, out of which they may make $500,000; and the singular thing is that in this House and in the committee also, some of the men who were most virtuously indignant over the so-called steel rails scandal, cannot see anything wrong in this transaction, and they are indignant that gentlemen like themselves should be asked unpleasant questions about their connection with this company. It just shows, I am sorry to say it, that the tone of public morals—not of the wretched Liberals who were so bad in 1876-77, but the tone of the moral, high-toned Conservatives of that day has fallen in a most lamentable way since then.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—My hon. friend has stated that a member of the House of Commons and also a member of this House was interested in this enterprise: I think it would be only proper that the House should know what member of it, if my hon. friend will favor us with that information.

HON. MR. POWER—I think I indicated very clearly who it was.

HON. MR. PLUMB—As one of the members of that committee which met today, I am somewhat surprised at the statement which has been made by the hon. gentleman from Halifax. In the first place he is so incorrect in his statements as to refer to an hon. member of this House as being a director of that Company who has nothing to do with it; and the general confidence which can be placed in his remarks may be inferred from that—he is so unacquainted with the facts as to refer to a member of this House as one of the directors of the Company upon which he is endeavoring to throw suspicion. That hon. gentleman has nothing to do with the Company.

HON. MR. POWER—It is another Company.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman ought to be ashamed to make such a statement.

HON. MR. POWER

HON. MR. POWER—I made a mistake about it.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I do not rise for the purpose of defending this Company at all. It is a simple matter referred to the Committee. The Committee had to judge of that Bill upon what was before them, and I object very much to any gentleman in this House going into details with regard to a Committee of that kind, as a member of the Committee, and stating as belonging to the proceedings of the Committee that with which the committee were not seized and had nothing to do. It is very well known that a virulent controversy has been going on in another place over that road. Where is the man who was charging impropriety with respect to that company? He never came to the Senate. He must have been aware that the question would be discussed, yet he never came forward with his charges. The gentleman by whom the statements of the hon. member from Halifax have been inspired—I do not say directly, but undoubtedly he accepted the statements of that gentleman—was not there. That company has the privilege of issuing bonds to the extent of $25,000 a mile. Every railway charter in the North-West embraces those provisions, or similar ones, in some perhaps not so large, and others have greater privileges. That company is to have a bonus of 6,400 acres of land per mile, and when it is remembered that the Government which the hon. gentleman opposite supported from 1873 to 1878 proposed to give 12,800 acres of land per mile for any line that was constructed north of the Pacific railway, this may not seem an extravagant bonus. The statement before the committee was that the directors of this road, with commendable caution, had so arranged that they expected the contractors would sell the bonds for what they could get for them, and that $1,500 per mile was to be paid back to the company out of the proceeds, whether they sold at 60, 80 or 90 per cent., and they are not likely to bring an extravagant price at present. That $1,500 was stated by the gentlemen who appeared on behalf of the railway, to be reserved for the purpose of paying the running expenses of the road.

at the outset, and of paying the interest on the bonds. He says it was suggested that the interest on the bonds was to be paid. So it was: I suggested it myself. I said that the interest would be $7,000 the first year and it was not likely that the road would be earning the interest on its bonds the first year and pay running expenses: and it was an act of commendable caution on the part of the directors to reserve enough to pay the interest. I have no doubt the road is demanded by the people of the North-West. We are asked by the Legislature of Manitoba to pass this Bill; every restriction is put on this contract so that if the promoters do not arrange for a contract which will be satisfactory to the Government by the 1st day of June, or if they do not build 50 miles of that road by next December, their charter will expire. There was absolutely nothing before the Committee which in the slightest degree suggested bad faith on the part of the Company: there was nothing proved, nothing hinted at, no suggestion by which the foul aspersion that these gentlemen could pocket half a million of dollars out of this transaction could be substantiated. Contractors have not that hankering for railway enterprise in the North-West that would induce them to give any gentlemen who happened to hold a charter $600,000 for the privilege of going up there and spending their money to construct and run a road. There is no such avidity on the part of railway contractors for charters that they will allow, for the sake of getting the contract, any set of directors to put $500,000 in their pockets and hand over the charter. They want that money. Railway contractors are not such a liberal and confiding set of people that they will not take all they can get, if I know anything about them. I think it was not fair for the hon. gentleman to make the statement he did. He says also it appears that the directors have not put any money into the project.

HON. MR. POWER—Parliamentary directors.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—One admitted it.

HON. MR. PLUMB—No, there was no such thing. He simply declined, when asked, making a statement; but a very responsible gentleman, who was not a director, and who of course would not stand by and see his money going into the concern without insisting that the directors should share with him—a gentleman who had put $5,000 into the project—stated that he had put his money there two years ago; and he also said that he had followed the proceedings of the company from the beginning to the end with the strongest possible reasons for watching them closely, because he had got his money there, and he volunteered the statement that he had entire confidence in those who were managing the company, and in default of any evidence to the contrary I do not think it is fair to state that there was any suspicion thrown, either on the prominent promoters of the company or upon the directors. My hon. friend goes out of his way to say that probably the money paid by this gentleman, who had perfect confidence in the directorate, was expended for the purpose of paying the expenses of the promoters to London and New York. No such thing appears, and no such thing was hinted at in the Committee. I defy the hon. gentleman to state that the slightest suggestion was made upon which to base that statement, and therefore the animus of the hon. member can be inferred from that as well as from the fact that he recklessly charged a member of this House with being a director of this company.

HON. MR. POWER—It was not a charge; it was simply a statement.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman has gone out of his way also to lug in a transaction of the late Government. Now I shall take him on his statement. He says that in a fit of virtue we called the late Government to account for a purchase of steel rails. Well, it is a very stale and rusty business, one may say, but inasmuch as the hon. gentleman has chosen to provoke a discussion on that subject, I will tell him what the steel rails controversy meant. It meant this: that tenders were called for a large quantity of steel rails. They were advertised for in September, weekly in a newspaper, and advertised only three weeks in this country, and not in England. A certain firm who were prepared to make an offer, who had prices before them in Montreal, and one of whose number was a brother of the late Premier of Canada, tendered for those rails when no proper competition could take place. That is where the troubles comes in.

HON. MR. POWER—There were several tenders.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The tenders were advertised for, to come in about the first day of October. There was not time enough given for these advertisements to go to England to be seen by the great ironmasters there, not time enough for proper competition. That was where the trouble was. It was upon that, and upon that alone, that the charge was made of favoritism in giving out that contract. The hon. gentleman did not state that fact, that Cooper, Fairman & Co. were enabled, by means of that tender, to have an advantage over people in England who should have been given an opportunity to compete. The rails were not required at the time, and before they were used the price of them had fallen nearly one-half. That is the steel rails scandal and the hon. gentleman was very unfortunate in bringing it up at this day as an illustration of the character of this transaction, in which nothing appeared to the committee which was for one moment worthy of consideration which would warrant them in refusing to report the Bill to this House without amendment. They had no greater privileges than Parliament has granted to any other company; we had no right to inquire what contracts they were making. If we should follow every railway charter and find what contracts were made by those who got those charters we would be doing that which we are not called upon to do, that which we have no right to do, and would have our hands full. This Railway Company has no advantage over other companies. It has a good line and its construction is desired by the country. An hon. member has stated that the Legislature of Manitoba had requested that this Bill should pass and that they are perfectly satisfied with its provisions.

HON. MR. POWER—No.

HON. MR. PLUMB

HON. MR. PLUMB—I am making a statement of fact and I am a little more accurate in my statement than the hon. gentleman has proved himself to be on this occasion.

HON MR. READ—I have no doubt that this Railway is a very important one and that it is necessary it should be constructed. In all railway enterprises those who promote them expect to make some money, and if these people should make money properly we have no reason to complain. Railway construction has not been generally profitable though we seem to find money for railways when it cannot be obtained for anything else. But in this discussion there has been a most unfortunate reference to the steel rails transaction, and as statements have been made which are not exactly in accordance with the facts, and as I know a good deal about that transaction, I am not going to let the hon. gentleman from Halifax make erroneous statements without contradicting them. He states that Cooper, Fairman & Co. were agents of certain ironmasters and manufacturers in England. It is true that they were, for certain contracts, but they were not the agents of certain manufacturers in England when the Government telegraphed them that they required a certain amount of steel rails and offered for them £10 10 per ton delivered at Montreal. At the time that offer was made the Department were in possession of letters and telegrams offering steel rails at £10 per ton, delivered in Montreal, from certain contractors who had fulfilled their contracts. Cooper, Fairman & Co. were placed in a position which enabled them to go into the English markets and make agreements for the delivery of steel rails in Montreal on the best terms they could secure, and the difference between the price they paid and £10 10 would go into their pockets. On a large quantity of steel rails that would amount to a nice thing. There were other transaction with Cooper, Fairman & Co. which attracted a good deal of attention. There was freighting to be done to Lake Superior ports, and this favored firm got the contract at higher prices than another party, who was prepared to give security, was willing to take the contract for. The lower tender was rejected on that occasion on the ground that the parties who made it were not steamboat owners; but Cooper, Fairman and Co., who got the contract at a higher price, were not steamboat owners either. All these facts are established by public documents. A certain quantity of those steel rails had to be taken to Manitoba, and the contract was given, without asking for tenders, to a firm in St. Paul, Kittson & Co., at $15 a ton of 2,000 pounds, when two parties in Hamilton, Fuller and Milne, had offered to carry the rails at $13.50 per ton of 2,240 lbs. On these three transactions this country lost $110,000, as the public documents show. The statement could not be denied at the time the matter was brought up, and I think it is unfortunate that the hon. member from Halifax should at this time revive the question. The transactions to which I have referred could not bear investigation when they were fresh, and as time passes by they only look worse. I merely rose for the purpose of correcting the erroneous statement of my hon. friend from Halifax with reference to the steel rail scandal.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I do not think the House will be disposed to continue any debate on the question of the steel rails. It is a very old subject, and, as the hon. member from Niagara says, a very stale one. I rise simply for the purpose of observing that the hon. member from Niagara is equal to every occasion. He now occupies the position on the Treasury Benches to which he has long aspired, and I have no doubt if Sir John Macdonald will place him there that he will adorn the position, with his great eloquence and parliamentary experience and must necessarily be a very popular leader in this House. The hon. gentleman made a great mistake in his early life when he did not choose the legal profession. If he had done so he would doubtless have become a most distinguished member of the Bar.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—What has that got to do with the question?

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I suppose we must assume that with legal gentlemen principle is not essential.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—The hon. gentleman is reading his speech.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—The hon. member, who has reached an advanced age, might allow me to proceed without destroying the respect which we might desire to entertain for him. Since the hon. member from Niagara has entered this House he has pretty well established his character for utter recklessness of statements.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I think that I must call the hon. gentleman to order. I do not mind much what he says—it is not of much consequence; but still, for the sake of the dignity of the House, I must ask whether he can charge another member with utter recklessness of statement. If it is held to be parliamentary I bow, of course, to the decision of the Chair.

THE SPEAKER—I consider that the hon. member from Woodstock is wandering from the subject. These personal reflections are certainly not in order.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I am sure the House must feel that I am often called to order by the hon. member from Niagara when I am in order.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—In dealing with the Bill before the House, it seems to me that bringing up matters of the past has no relevancy. So much has been said about this measure, both in Parliament and out of Parliament, I think it should not be permitted to pass through the Senate without some comment. The great object in granting charters originally was to give railway facilities where they were needed, and the holders of the charter in this case have been remiss, or entirely unable to carry out the enterprise. It is said, and I believe truly, by people from that part of the country that it is a line much needed; but it is over six years since this charter has been granted, and nothing has been done on this railway. A great deal has transpired to which we cannot close our eyes, that is anything but creditable—much that any man who desires to uphold the dignity of Parliament must condemn. We find that members, hitherto held as respectable men, have been dealing in the charter and hawking it about. That business should, in my opinion, be left to men who are not members of Parliament. I do not rise to oppose the passage of the Bill but to condemn trafficking of this character, and whatever another House may have said about it I do trust that anything so shady will always meet with a cold reception in this honorable body. The shortness of the time given the promoters of this Bill to prove their ability to construct the road, being only the interval between this time and the 1st of June, renders it only fair and right to give them this dernier opportunity of accomplishing it, if they are able. We know that when that time comes, unless they exhibit their means and ability and proceed with the work of constructing 50 miles of this road by December next, their charter falls to the ground; and however much I deprecate and condemn all that has been said and done in reference to it, and the action of certain members of Parliament in connection with the measure, in my anxiety to see the road which is so much needed constructed, I withdraw all opposition from the Bill and am willing to concede the time which the Government have thought fit to grant to this Company to show their ability to construct this line.

HON. MR. POWER—I feel that I cannot allow the motion to pass without making an apology to the hon. member from the Gulf division, as to whom I gave it to be understood that he was one of the directors of the Company. I have learned that the hon. gentleman is not; but in justice to myself I should say how I came to make the mistake. There is another Railway Company incorporated or being incorporated, of which that hon. gentleman and Mr. Riopel, the member in the House of Commons from Bonaventure, are directors and I had confounded the two companies. Mr. Riopel is also a director of the Company whose charter we are now amending; and I was under the impression that the hon. gentleman from the Gulf division was also a director. I am very sorry that I should have been led into the mistake that I have made.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I am not a member of the Railway Committee, and it is not my intention to take part in the discussion of matters which are brought before that Committee, but as a member of this House I may be called upon to give a vote upon this question, and I think it is hardly possible for me to record it in silence. Not long ago when this Bill was referred to the Railway Committee, some facts were stated in this Chamber which had been published in the press and had been the subject of discussion in another place, and seemed to me to be of the greatest importance. While I would not be prepared to say that those statements are sufficient to warrant the House in defeating the Bill, I consider that they are of such a character that the House should not pronounce upon the merits of this Bill without having the charges that have been made properly investigated. It is said that those who raised that question failed to appear before the Railway Committee of this House. When the order of reference was made, it will be remembered that a motion to give special instructions to the Committee was declared out of order, on the ground that the Committee possesses all the powers requisite to make a proper investigation. When grave charges are made publicly and supported by written documents which all of us must have seen, the members of this House and the public generally must have a conviction that there is something wrong in this matter, and I do not think the mere fact that no one has appeared before the Railway Committee to oppose the Bill should be considered sufficient to justify the House in passing it without further information. The absence of accusers, as we may call them, may be accounted for by a hundred different causes. No information has been elicited, and the accusations remain as they were before the Bill was referred. I will not enter into a discussion of the matter, but from my point of view I would not be justified in voting for the Bill until proper means have been taken by a committee of this House to make a thorough investigation and to bring the parties interested before them for examination. Transactions of this character are becoming more and more frequent. I will not quote any particular instance, but it is well known by all the members of this House that at this day certain parties in this country are making a regular business of obtaining charters from parliament for the purpose of selling them and procuring subsidies from governments with a view to disposing of the advantages which they have secured through their parliamentary influence and making private profits by such transactions. This is becoming of very frequent occurrence, and when the House has before it a case where the parties are very strongly suspected of having acted in such a way, we should not vote in a manner calculated to encourage the practice. I think the House, in passing this Bill, would sanction an abuse which, to my mind, is detrimental to the public interest.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I think we have all read in the papers, and many of us have listened to the very charges which the hon. gentleman from DeSalaberry speaks of and which were investigated in another place. Two noted committees, which were going to unearth any amount of scandal against members of the Government and their supporters, have been investigating them. I listened to a good deal of what took place in those committees and I know that it has all ended in smoke, or less than smoke, because there was not enough in the charges to give them any color of truth. To start another investigation here would be absurd. It is the easiest thing in the world to make assertions and charges but it is quite another thing to prove them. The hon. gentleman from DeSalaberry states that it is becoming quite common for persons to secure charters through their parliamentary influence and sell them for their private advantage. He may know of such cases, but I doubt very much if other members of this House do. I certainly do not; I cannot recall one single instance in which money has been made in that way, although the hon. gentleman says it is frequently done. I think that we should pass the Bill. To appoint a committee for the investigation of the statements which have been made, I think would be most absurd.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I did not propose a committee, but I said that without such an investigation I would not feel justified in voting for the Bill. The least that a member of this House can do when such a matter comes before him is to say whether the evidence is sufficient to warrant him in voting one way or the other.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I should like to say to the hon. gentleman from DeSalaberry that I think he has made an unnecessary and uncalled for reflection on the Committee. If he had been present at the meeting of the Committee he would not have made that reflection. He has stated that the Committee did not take the trouble to inquire into the matter.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I did not say that.

HON. MR. DICKEY—It was leading in that direction. I am quite aware of his disposition to deal fairly with every question, and I am sure he will be quite pleased to learn that the Committee took every pains. The Clerk of the Committee interviewed the gentleman whose name has been bandied about in connection with this measure—I allude to the member for King's, Nova Scotia,—and told him when the Committee was to meet and we fully expected that he would attend. He said that he expected to be present. When the Committee met, finding that he was not there, we actually sent a messenger to the House of Commons to see if he would attend. This much is certainly due to the Committee: but we did not stop there, because, although nobody appeared to oppose the Bill, we thought we should take notice of a statement made by an hon. member of this House in his place on his own responsibility, and one of the directors being there and some of the shareholders, we thought it our duty to examine into the matter and probe it to the bottom. When I state that the examination of those gentlemen was left to me, as chairman, by a member of this House who was quite competent to conduct the examination himself (I allude to the senior Member from Halifax) I hope that every member of the Senate will admit that it was done thoroughly. It has extracted from the hon. gentleman himself a quasi admission that he heard a good deal then that he had not known before, and that he had not the same impression that he, in common with other members, had entertained before. I do not want to enter into the matter at all because, in dealing with it, our disposition was to elicit every fact that it was possible to discover in respect to the bona fides of this transaction. We went even into the amount of stock each person held, the amount paid upon it, the work done, the reasons for delays and the prospects of the work being prosecuted, for it was a matter of great importance to the people of Manitoba. I think I may say that the question was looked at by some gentlemen with a little irritation, but certainly my desire as chairman was not to be satisfied with a bare examination of the matter, but to probe it to the bottom, and that is what we did. It was not our fault that there was nobody there to oppose the Bill.

HON. MR. TRUDEL.—The hon. gentleman having stated that I passed a reflection on the work of the Committee, I wish to explain that it was not my intention to do so. At the same time, I think the hon. member cannot find fault with me if I am dissatisfied with the enquiry which took place. Though I am not a member of the Committee I was present at the meeting and heard what took place. I may be wrong—it is very likely that I am wrong—and if it is necessary for the prestige of the Committee that I should say I am mistaken, I have no objection to ask every gentleman to consider that I was wrong. At the same time I think that the investigation which took place was not a proper one. I am very sorry to have to say so, but that is my opinion. The Chairman will recollect the way in which the several points were investigated and questions asked and answers given.

HON. MR. ALMON—I rise to a point of order: this is the third time that the hon. gentleman has risen to speak.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I forgot to ask permission to make an explanation. I have already stated why I thought it was necessary for me to give my own opinion. I ask a thousand pardons for having come to the conclusion that the investigation was not satisfactory. I will not make any motion but content myself with expressing my opinion.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I think the House will not grudge me a few minutes of its time while I offer some remarks on this question. It seems to me that the explanation which has just fallen from the hon. member from Amherst has quite vindicated the action of the Railway Committee on this Bill. I think also that it has vindicated the action of those hon. gentlemen who the other day, when the same question was before the House, sought, although they were out of order, to ensure that the question should come before the Railway Committee and be thoroughly investigated there. It is quite true that the Speaker decided we were out of order in the course that we took on that occasion: nevertheless it was evident to everyone here that a necessity for an inquiry existed, and perhaps still exists. I think it is an undesirable thing to irritate old sores. It is much better to let the steel rails lie in the quiet to which they have been consigned for several years. But as an hon. gentleman who has occupied the position of Premier of the Dominion, and bears throughout the length and breadth of this country the highest possible character for integrity, both as a man and a Minister, has been attacked, I think some explanation is required from gentlemen on the other side; and I say this, myself, that if, when the question was new, the hon. gentleman from Belleville or any of his friends had been able to substantiate their charges against Mr. Mackenzie and his Government, I for one would never have supported them.

HON. MR. PLUMB—We did substantiate them.

HON. MR. READ—Every one of them.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—But now the hon. gentleman has thought proper to draw forth from his memory words that have been laid up for many years ready to be brought forward on an occasion like this; he has thought proper to bring forward these charges to-day.

HON. MR. READ—No, they were every one of them stated before.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—They might be very persuasive and convincing words to move a Tory audience, but in a mixed audience, particularly in the province from which I come, they will be listened to with very little credence. In speaking of this matter, hon. gentlemen have given no prominence whatever to the fact that Mr. Mackenzie's action with regard to the steel rails was taken on the advice of his chief engineer. The circumstances under which that Government was formed and the position in which they were placed at that time, the hon. gentlemen who have spoken on both sides of the House were very willing to pass sub silentio. They were quite willing to forget the conduct of their own political friends in similar cases. They had quite forgotten their own conduct with regard to steel rails and steam dredges in England. They had quite forgotten how persons employed by themselves had actually been convicted in a court of British justice, and condemned. If anyone wants to know the real origin of the charges against Mr. Mackenzie on the steel rail question, I will tell him that it is just a set off against a conviction being had by the Mackenzie Government in English courts. At that time the market for rails and the production of rails of all kinds was much less extensive than it is now, and Mr. Mackenzie, with the prospect of the Pacific Railway before him, was perfectly justified in assuring himself and his colleagues, and Parliament too, that he was not likely to be arrested in his progress by an insufficient supply of rails. He was perfectly justified under those circumstances, and by the advice of the chief engineer, in giving the orders that he did; and as to the statement that his brother was a gainer by it, that has never been proved. It has never been shown that Mr. Mackenzie's brother profited to the extent of $1 by that transaction.

HON. MR. PLUMB—It has been shown a dozen times.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—If anybody had been in a position when that matter was fresh before the public, and when the existence of proof of that charge could have been brought forward, to have done so I would have abandoned the Mackenzie Government myself in despair.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—Before the question is put I would like to say a few words. I do not rise as the champion of the promoters of this railway. I have not been asked by them to champion their cause, and I do not rise to do so now. My principal motive in rising in support of the Bill is that I believe it to be in the interest of my province. My other reason is to answer a remark made by the hon. gentleman from Toronto which might mislead the House. He mentioned that this charter had been before the country for some six years, and that there was large trafficking in charters going on, which might lead hon. gentlemen to infer that possibly this same charter might be one of the worst in the lot, and that there was nothing done by the company. Perhaps the hon. gentleman is not aware that the first company graded some seventy miles of that railway and they found after doing so that they had not funds enough to go on with it. In the first place I do not think they had any subsidy; at all events they did not have sufficient land subsidy to induce capitalists to take hold of the project. The consequence was they came back to Parliament to get a grant of land, and they got it, but when they got the land they had not time to go on when their charter expired. I think with this explanation the House will have a better understanding of how the matter stands.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I did not expect to speak upon the present occasion, but from the course the debate has taken, particularly after the stale argument advanced by the hon. gentleman from Montreal, as well as my colleague from Prince Edward Island, it is incumbent on me to say a few words with regard to this matter. I have always understood that the position of a Member of Parliament was very different from that of a private citizen, who is bound by the words which he makes use of outside of the walls of Parliament, while a Member of Parliament is not bound in the same way by what he says inside of the walls of Parliament as he would be outside. My hon. friend from New Brunswick, Mr. McClelan, is very apt to smile about these things. Perhaps before I am done he will smile from the other side of his face. A member of Parliament stands in a different position from a private citizen. Outside of parliament he is responsible to the individual and to every court of law, but here he is not. Therefore, it is not looked upon as a proper position to take to accuse a man of improper conduct, when he is not in parliament to defend himself. I might call the attention of the House to the motto above the Speaker's chair, "Honi soit qui mal y pense" It is wonderful how some gentlemen elevate themselves on the high pedestal of virtue and liberty and look down upon those who are beneath them. It is with them always the great "I" and the little "you;" they are so virtuous, so great that they have the whole concentration of the human virtues and human ability in this House; they can see nothing disinterested, just or patriotic in any other men but themselves. Everything that does not emanate from themselves is tinged with something bad, and it necessarily follows that it is bad, because it does not happen to meet their particular view. The Bill that we have before us now has been under consideration in the Commons from day to day and from week to week. Every argument that it is possible to advance, and all the ingenuity that could be exercised by advocates on one side and the other were advanced and exercised and what do we find? That the committee there failed to find the charges proven, and the Government are now taking the responsibility of the whole matter and saying if certain things are not done by the 1st of June the charter will lapse. Is there anything wrong about that? There are some men in every parliament and in every community who are perhaps a little in advance of others in their ideas. The hon. gentleman from Hope-well smiles at me across the room. I believe he is a director of the Albert Railway. Is that a reason why he should smile?

HON. MR. McCLELAN—The hon. gentleman is misinformed if that is what he thinks I smile about.

HON. MR. HOWLAN.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—The Parliamentary Companion is my authority. Can he deny that he is not?

HON. MR. McCLELAN—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon he is wrong again. I am not a director of the Albert Railway.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Were you not a director of the Albert Railway?

HON. MR. McCLELAN—I have never been a director of any railway company.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Were you never director of the Albert Railway?

HON. MR. McCLELAN—I have never been a director of any railway company.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Supposing he was a director, that fact would not detract from his honesty or his intelligence. My hon. friend from Halifax I think is not a director of a railway company; perhaps in the near future he may occupy such a position. Does it necessarily follow, when he becomes a director of a railway company, that he must become untruthful and dishonest?

HON. MR. TRUDEL—Who pretends that?

HON. MR. HOWLAN—The hon. gentleman from DeSalaberry is one who creates the impression that such is the case.

HON. MR. McCLELAN—The hon. gentleman is not very correct in his statements.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I am quite as correct as you are in any statement I have made to this House.

HON. MR. DEVER—I rise to a question of order. I hold that it is not in order to make such taxing and vexatious allusions to any hon. gentleman in this House.

THE SPEAKER—The taxing and personal remarks are certainly out of order.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I think the point that should be taken is the conversation between gentlemen across the House.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—The hon. gentleman must not attack me across the House or he will get attacked in return. It is not so often a smile passes over his lips, and if it is any pleasure to him I shall let him have his smile.

HON. MR. POWER—Is a smile an attack?

HON. MR. HOWLAN—It appears to me that it is the duty of every man holding a seat in Parliament to be very careful not to make statements inside of the House which he would not make elsewhere.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time on a division and passed.

THE SEDUCTION BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. VIDAL moved the third reading of Bill (20) "An Act to punish Seduction and like offences, and to make further provision for the protection of women and girls."

HON. MR. MCINNES—Yesterday when this Bill was in the Committee of the Whole I gave notice that I would move on the third reading that the second clause be struck out, but on reflection as to how the clause was amended in Committee of the Whole I have come to the conclusion that the sting has been taken out of that clause, and it is certainly to my mind a great deal more acceptable now than it was before those amendments were made. Even with the amendments, it is yet the objectionable clause in the Bill. In fact, in my opinion, it is now the only objectionable clause in the entire measure. The principle of the Bill I endorse and approve of, and I am prepared now to withdraw the notice that I gave that I would move that the Bill should be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole to strike out the second clause. I do not wish to put my objections and my opinions against those advanced by men of maturer years and greater experience than I possess in matters of this kind. However, I feel bound to express my conviction, that more depends upon the training of our youth than upon any legislation that can emanate from this or the other branch of the Legislature in making our young people moral. A great many hon. gentlemen within the last two years, notably on that Bill, brought in as an amendment to the Scott Act, asserted positively that it was impossible to make men temperate by legislation. There was a great deal of force in their argument; and a couple of days ago we had a Bill before us to force people to be religious. If those objections were considered good and valid as against those two measures, I claim that in this case it is utterly impossible to make people virtuous by Act of Parliament. I am yet of the same opinion that I held when this measure was introduced and before the lengthy discussion took place yesterday. I still believe that if guardians and parents, and especially mothers, would look after their daughters and their sons too, and see that they did not go out and come in at all hours of the day and night, and with whom they please, a great number of those revolting and sad cases that we have recorded in the daily press would never be heard of or occur. I claim that any girl or woman who is capable of maintaining her virtue and her honour until the period when she extracts perhaps a promise or pledge from her lover that he will marry her, is capable of resisting those improper advances that ought to be treated with scorn and contempt; she is quite capable of resisting them until they are joined in holy matrimony, if the couple intend that such a ceremony is to be performed and they are to become man and wife. Owing to the fact of having given notice that I would move that this clause be struck out, I thought it right to state that owing to the age of the girl being reduced from 21 to 18, and the age of the man fixed at 21 or over 21 years, that my objection to the second clause of the Bill has been to a very great extent removed. Similar legislation to this is, I believe, in force and has been in force a number of years in some thirty different States of the Union. Any person who has looked over the records of the different tribunals before which such cases as those have been tried will have no hesitation in arriving at the conclusion that the people of Canada stand higher in the scale of virtue and morality than the population of those States, and I am proud to say from everything that I have been able to gather from the statistics of this country that the people of the Dominion stand not only as high in this respect as any people in the world, but stand at the head of them all. I say this with pride and I hope this legislation will not have an effect different from that which the promoter of the Bill had in view when he presented it to Parliament. That gentleman (Mr. Charlton) no doubt is conscientious and has worked hard to promote the morality of this country, and I think he deserves all credit for it, yet I am bound to say I believe some of the details of the Bill are defective, and I fear will not have the desired effect.

HON. MR. NELSON—Since the Bill was committed yesterday an idea struck me that there is a very grave flaw in clause number one. It provides for the case of any person who seduces and has illicit connection with any girl of previously chaste character, or who attempts to seduce and have illicit connection with any girl of previously chaste character, being of or above the age of ten years, and under the age of 16. But there is no provision at all, and I think there should be a provision for the case where the illicit connection took place between a girl under the age of sixteen and a boy under the age of sixteen. In almost nine cases out of ten, where it occurs between a boy and a girl under sixteen, the girl is as much to blame as the boy. I would therefore move that the Bill be not now read the third time but that it be recommitted to add the following to clause number one: "Any person who being above the age of sixteen years seduces and has illicit connection with any girl of previously chaste character, etc." I think that would be a move in the right direction. I think it would be very hard in a case such as I have mentioned that the boy should be condemned to punishment for an act of that kind. The same thing will apply to subsection two of the clause.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I am sorry to state that I am not in a position to accept the amendment. I must confess that I can scarcely understand this line of argument. It has made no impression on my mind that there is any flaw in the measure, as it stands, requiring an amendment which he proposes. It has so far received the sanction of the House, and I think it should pass. I do not know why he should overlook this particular fact, that we are not legislating to make people moral. That is not the the object of the Bill. The advocates of this Bill know perfectly well that they cannot affect a man's character and make him moral by legislation; but we can do this by legislation.

HON. MR. MCINNES (B. C.)—Can you make them temperate?

HON. MR. VIDAL—We do not undertake to make men temperate by legislation; we punish people who committ a certain offence who do certain wrong things to the injury of themselves and others, just as when we legislate against stealing. We do not legislate to make people honest; we legislate to punish the particular act of wrongdoing; and so through all our legislation. It is a wrong thing to attach a meaning like that to it. We simply say that such and such a thing will be an offence and will be punished. As to morality we know that it cannot be affected by law. We know that in the sight of Him who judges the human heart, morality will count for nothing in the case of the man, who, in the absence of law, will do that which is wrong.

The amendment was declared lost on a division.

THE SPEAKER—The question is now on the third reading of the Bill.

HON. MR. POWER—I think the alterations which were made in the Bill by the House yesterday, although some of us may not have concurred in them at the time, are in the right direction with one exception, and that is the change made in the second clause. In the original Bill a man over the age of 21 who seduced a girl under 21 years, under a promise of marriage, was subject to the penalties imposed by this Bill. The amendment which was made in this clause—the amendment to which I have referred—alters the age of the girl from 21 to 18. It has struck me that that is an undesirable amendment. I think as a general thing, that men who are guilty of this offence are not very young men—they are generally men over the age of 30; and any man who ruins a girl under the age of 21 should be punished. I think he should be punished if she is over 21 and there is a promise of marriage; and I do think the amendment made in this House in that particular respect is an undesirable one, and the motion which I propose is to reinstate the words “21 years” and strike out the words “18 years.”

HON. MR. VIDAL—I think the hon. gentleman is under a mistake. The amendment as there recorded in our minutes is not made.

HON. MR. POWER—The amendment was carried in committee, whether it is recorded in the minutes or not; and I should not care to take advantage of an omission which had been unintentionally made by one of the officials of the House. There is no doubt the amendment was carried, and it is an undesirable one.

HON. MR. VIDAL—Then the hon. gentleman should see that it finds its place in the Bill, because there is no official record of such an amendment being made.

THE SPEAKER—It is a mistake of the clerk.

HON. MR. VIDAL—If an error, it is a clerical error, and it is supposed to be there.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Is it in the minutes that the man shall be over twenty-one years?

HON. MR. VIDAL—Yes.

THE SPEAKER—And the female under eighteen.

HON. MR. SMITH—Let the clause stand at that.

HON. MR. DEVER—Make the ages equal.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I would ask if it does not require a notice to make an amendment? There has been no notice given.

THE SPEAKER—No notice is necessary, as this is a public Bill.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I voted against the change yesterday and it is only consistent on my own part to vote for the amendment now proposed by the hon. gentleman from Halifax.

The House divided on the amendment which was declared lost on a division.

The Bill was read the third time as amended and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (101) “An Act in amendment of the Consolidated Inland Revenue Act, 1883, and the Act amending the same.” (Mr. Plumb.)

Bill (125) “An Act to amend the law relating to the salaries of certain judges of the Supreme Court of Judicature for Ontario.” (Mr. Plumb.)

Bili (126) “An Act to amend the law respecting Crown cases reserved.” (Mr. Plumb.)

Bill (120) “An Act to make further provision respecting the administration of public lands of Canada in British Columbia.” (Mr. Plumb.)

SCHOOL SAVINGS BANK BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. GIRARD moved the second reading of Bill (75) “An Act to incorporate the School Savings Bank.” He said: After having provided so well for the protection of women and girls, I suppose the House will have no hesitation to provide for the care of those who cannot administer their own money. The Bill provides for the establishment of School Savings Banks, an institution which is rather new in this country, but which has been in operation for some time in Europe. Wherever it has been tried it has produced good results and proved advantageous to the community. I believe the system originated in France. As the preamble states, the object of the Bill is to encourage the teaching of economy in the various educational institutions of this country—to induce school children and apprentices who may have small amounts of money that they should save, and which would otherwise be unprofitably spent, to deposit them for safe keeping in these banks. The principle of the Bill is to encourage thrift among children. I have taken some notes from an article on “Thrift among the children,” published in the April number of The Nineteenth Century, from which I learn that “thrift among the children has been inculcated to such purpose in France that, since 1874, over twenty-three thousand Schools Savings Banks have been opened numbering, in January 1885, no less than 488,624 depositors, with deposits amounting in the aggregate formed of the bona fide pocket money of the children, to a sum of 11,285,046 francs—£451,026.” Such banks exist in England and in different parts of Europe, but to France belongs the distinction, a distinction of which she is justly proud, of having attained a national system of school banks. The object of these banks is to train children in foresight, and in provident, thrifty habits, so that as men and women they may be both able to save carefully and know how to spend wisely, and no one can spend wisely who has not learned the self-restraint of careful saving. This Bill comes to us from the other House were it received careful attention. The first clause gives the names of the incorporators, and they are as such as to inspire public confidence, and insure the success of the enterprise. Perhaps the word “bank” is not the proper one to use in describing these institutions: we have enough large banks already. But I think the young and especially the poor need some institution of this kind. I do not ask that provision be made for the savings of the children of the wealthy, who are either looked after by their parents or will be able to look after themselves, but I am speaking of cases where the amounts which can be deposited do not exceed 10, 20 or 25 cents. These small sums can be deposited from time to time and will bear interest at 4%. Depositors will not be able to withdraw their money without the consent of their parents, guardians or tutors. I think that provision will be a great protection not only for the children but also for the parents. The children will naturally feel ambitious to improve their positions and increase their little fortunes by deposits that they will have a chance to make from time to time. Poor parents will also find it to their advantage. They will be naturally pleased to see the disposition of their children to be thrifty and become useful members of society, and will aid them as far as they can by giving them small sums of ten or twenty cents at a time to be deposited in these banks. They will take a pride also in showing to their friends these deposit books, and the tendency will be to increase the thrift of the people. The capital stock of the Association is limited to $200,000, in shares of $25 each. When one-fourth of the capital stock is subscribed and paid up the bank will begin its organization. Directors will be appointed and provision is made for the proper organization of these institutions. The head office of the bank will be in Montreal, but branches will be established, as occasion may call for them, in other parts of the Dominion. The directors will be remunerated for attending the meetings of directors and supervising the affairs of the bank, but it is provided that their remuneration shall be paid only out of the net revenue of the year after paying all expenses and interest due to depositors, and after the approval of such by-law by the shareholders. The directors will have no chance to make money in any way beyond this remuneration. The 14th clause provides how deposits may be received and from whom. The depositors shall be “clerks, servants, students in colleges or schools, apprentices, mechanics, workmen, laborers and other employees and from no other person whomsoever.” The amount that can be deposited at any one time is not to exceed $10, nor shall any deposit exceed $250 in all. The Bill received very careful consideration in the House of Commons, and I have no doubt it will be equally attentively considered here and receive the sanction of this House.

HON. MR. DICKEY—We are all disposed to regard most favorably anything which emanates from my hon. friend from St. Boniface. He has made on this occasion a special appeal to this House for the protection of the interests of women and children. I shall look at this measure entirely by the light of the rule which he has himself laid down. It is only because it is exceptional altogether, and deals solely with the property of women and children and other persons not accustomed to business, that I venture to offer a suggestion as to it. I certainly shall not oppose the second reading of the Bill, but I think it will conduce to a better appreciation of the measure itself in committee if I point out some objections, or rather points on which the committee should exercise some little inquiry and insight before they pass the measure. The Bill is to authorize the bank to receive deposits from certain persons. What is the security that these people are to have? In the first place they have $50,000, the 25 per cent. of paid up capital. It is proper to mention that there is that fund for them. This institution is authorized to receive deposits and pay interest upon them and make investments in government and municipal securities. The interest which the bank is authorized to pay is 4 per cent. It is not likely that they can get deposits for any less rate, because there are other savings banks which give that. The 16th clause provides:—

The bank shall invest its moneys, including the paid up capital thereof, in the securities of the Dominion of Canada, or any of the provinces thereof; or in debentures issued by the corporation of any city or county but not otherwise.

If these investments are safe, we cannot count upon their producing more than the average price of 4%, that is to say, the amount that they have to pay for interest on deposits, except they should be authorized to deal in debentures issued by the corporations of cities or counties. In that case they get a higher rate of interest, but the higher the interest the less will be the security for depositors whoever they may be. I think that is perfectly obvious. My difficulty with regard to this Bill is to know how any money is to be made out of this enterprise. If they are to pay depositors 4% and are obliged to invest in securities which yield only 4%, how are they to pay the directors, not only at the head office but at the various branches, employes, rent and other charges? I cannot see how it is to be done. I am afraid as the Bill stands it will be unworkable. My hon. friend says that it has been found workable in France, but it has not been tried in other countries. It makes it the more necessary that we should carefully scrutinize this Bill before we legislate upon it. Assuming that the House will pass the second reading, as I am disposed to do, and refer the Bill to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, I wish to state to them that there appears to be a defect in the 6th clause which authorizes directors to be appointed at the different branches but does not state what powers those directors shall exercise. They are to be subordinate to the directors at the head office, but there is no definition of their powers. Then in the 13th section there is a provision that the President shall call a special meeting of the shareholders at the request of 15 shareholders of the bank, but it does not require that the shareholders shall be notified what the object of the meeting is to be. There is also an objectionable principle introduced into the 19th clause which creates the reserve fund: that fund is to be made out of the capital of the bank, and and therefore will come out of this $50,000, or whatever the sum may be. I am bound to say, however, that the names of the provisional directors furnish a sufficient guarantee of the respectable character of the institution; at the same time we must legislate in matters of this kind with reference to the future, and as to the persons who may or may not be directors. We know who the first directors are to be; but no one can tell who, in a very few years, will represent this company, and it is in the interests of the Bill itself that attention should be drawn to these circumstances, in no unfriendly spirit—I am sure my hon. friend will acquit me of that—but in the interest of good legislation.

I will make no objection to the second reading of the Bill, but content myself with calling attention to the points to which I have referred.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I have examined the Bill, and while I fully sympathize with my hon. friend, the mover, in the almost charitable object for which the measure evidently is designed, we must understand that our duty is very imperative, to see that if a Bill of this kind is permitted to pass this House that it is guarded in every possible way to ensure the security of the depositor. If the principle is admitted it will be necessary to scrutinize the Bill in regard to its machinery and working, and as that, I suppose, will be carefully done in the Committee, I certainly see no objection to the second reading of the Bill, and its being discussed by the experienced members of the Committee on Banking and Commerce. In passing through their hands, it undoubtedly will be so amended as to protect the interests of those who cannot protect themselves. The object, as stated in the preamble, is a laudable one, but in my judgment when it comes to be carried out in detail it will be found that there will be great difficulty, as far as I can see, in getting any sufficient return for the capital invested to pay any considerable expenses, or in fact even to pay such an ordinary rate of interest as will satisfy depositors. That is a matter to be ascertained. I do not intend to criticize the Bill. My sympathies rather go with it, if it can be found on examination that perfect security can be given to those who confide their money to the custody of the corporators.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Much has been said that I intended to say on this matter. I agree with my hon. friend who has just spoken in thinking that there is not much to be made out of those banks by the depositors. It seems to me that the savings banks of Canada have been established chiefly to meet the needs of mechanics, laborers and others who have small amounts to invest. They can deposit very small sums—I believe to the fraction of $1—and though the interest is not so large, they can draw the deposits any time when necessity requires it, and the Government security is ample and beyond any question. Here the security, it seems to me, is not so good, although it consists of investments in Dominion and Provincial securities, and securities of city and county corporation. They may be safe enough, but after paying all the expenses necessary to run these banks the profits cannot be as large as the promoters of the Bill anticipate. Although the system may have worked well in France, I do not see, with our present savings banks in operation throughout the country, how those institutions can be very successful. Of course the object is very laudable—to induce people to save small sums of money—and if we had not already savings banks I should highly approve of this measure. I do not propose to offer any opposition to the Bill.

HON. MR. POWER—I think that the gentlemen who have taken hold of the matter are actuated by the very best motives and deserve a great deal of credit; but I am myself opposed to the principle of the Bill. Looking at the list of directors I find that while they are all very respectable and public spirited gentlemen they are as a rule not business men; they are not capitalists or men whose business is banking. To-day when we find numerous banks reducing their capital, because there is not enough for them to do, is not a time well chosen for establishing a bank which is to have branches throughout the country. It will be observed that in this Bill it is provided that the rate of interest shall be 4%. Looking at the present value of money in this country these gentlemen really can not carry on their bank and pay 4% to the depositors. I think there is very considerable doubt as to whether this institution would be permanent and as to whether the earnings deposited in it would be perfectly safe. I find that in England the Post Office savings banks are used as school savings banks; and it occurs to me that the better course would be to so modify the law with respect to the existing savings banks as to facilitate the deposits in those banks by school children. The depositors will then have the security of the Dominion for the return of their money, and their deposits will be perfectly safe. There is no doubt that the Committee to whom this is to go will give the Bill every attention, but I hope that they will not feel bound to report in its favor. If they think that on the whole the principle of the Bill does not commend itself to their judgment, I hope that they will report against it.

HON. MR. ALMON—Not approving of the Bill, I certainly shall vote against the second reading. I think the Government Savings Banks already established meet the view of the hon. member from St. Boniface—that is, they enable persons wishing to invest small sums to do so. We should be more careful of the interests of the poor than of the interests of the rich. Savings banks in the United States have very frequently failed, and we should endeavor to prevent such disasters in this country. I do not know the persons whose names are mentioned as provisional directors, but as the Government Savings-Banks already supply all that this measure is intended to secure, I am opposed to the principle of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time on a division.

CHIGNECTO MARINE TRANSPORT RAILWAY BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (105) "An Act to amend the Act to provide for the granting of a subsidy to the Chignecto Marine Transport Railway Co. (Limited)."

IN THE COMMITTEE.

HON. MR. DICKEY—The House will remember that on the second reading my hon. friend from York adverted to the fact that he thought the agreement which was made between the Company and the Government with respect to this change of subsidy, both as to its terms and as to its amount, should be placed on the table, and ought to be inserted as a schedule to the Bill. In point of fact, the agreement had been placed on the table, and the suggestion that was made then had not escaped my notice; but in accordance with that idea, I communicated by letter with the Minister of Justice, pointing out the omission of this agreement from the Act, in which I think it clearly ought to have been incorporated. The result of that was, that after some little circumlocution it at last got to the right department, and upon being examined, the Department accepted the suggestion and asked me to have this done: and it is obviously necessary. The 4th sub-section of the agreement which has been laid on the Table, is to this effect:—

"Whereas, the terms of payment fixed by the Act of the Parliament of Canada, 45th Victoria, cap. 55 (1882), of the subsidy granted to the said Company, are hereby modified to a certain extent, this agreement is made subject to the approval of the said Parliament of Canada at its now next session."

This is the agreement which is dated on the 4th March last, I now beg to move in accordance with that provision that the following be the fourth clause of the Bill:—

"4. The Indenture made on the fourth day of March, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six, between The Chignecto Marine Transport Company (Limited), and Her Majesty the Queen, represented therein by the Minister of Railways and Canals of Canada, a copy of which is in the Schedule annexed to this Bill, is hereby approved and ratified."

The clause was agreed to,

HON. MR. DICKEY moved that the contract be added as a schedule to the Bill.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion that the title of the Bill be agreed to,

HON. MR. POWER said: Before that is carried, I might state that I took the liberty when this Bill was at its second reading to make some reference to the commercial value of this undertaking. I had not at that time the official report of the Commissioners who were appointed in 1875 to inquire into and report upon the nature and extent of the commercial advantage to be derived from the Baie Verte canal. Of course the arguments applied to the canal will apply to this Railway also. I find that the commissioners reported adversely to the construction of the canal and gave their reason for so doing. They went into the matter at considerable length. They inquired into the trade of the lower Provinces,

New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, and they established from statistics and otherwise in a manner to satisfy any unprejudiced mind that the commercial advantages to be derived from the construction of the canal were very small, and the evidence which they submit establishes the same fact. I do not propose to trouble this House with reading much of the evidence; but there are one or two pieces of testimony which I shall read as illustrations. Evidence was taken in St. John and Charlottetown, and in Quebec, Summerside and Halifax; and the preponderance of testimony was altogether against the commercial value of the canal. One-half the witnesses examined in Prince Edward Island were of opinion that this canal would be of no commercial value to that Province. I do not wish to detain the committee by going into the evidence in detail. There were witnesses examined in Pictou, and those witnesses also unanimously were of opinion that the commercial value of the canal was next to nothing. They also spoke of the character of the navigation of the Bay of Fundy. I will just quote from the examination of one gentleman living in Halifax, a man of very great experience, as a sample of the evidence given by several merchants. Daniel Cronan says, at page 89 :

"I have been engaged in shipping and general business with the West Indies and Gulf ports for the last forty-three years; I have no business that would be injured by the construction of the Baie Verte Canal, but from my experience and the knowledge I have of the business of the maritime provinces, I consider its construction would be a useless expenditure of public money; it would not benefit trade with the West Indies, from the Gulf or North Shore Ports of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, for all would prefer using the Gut of Canso or going round Cape North, as circumstances may direct, to using the proposed canal; the same remark would apply with greater force to the trade of South America, as it is advantageous for ships to sail out a long way to the east. From my knowledge of the American fishing vessels, I am quite sure they would not take the canal in preference to the present routes. I am a director of a Marine Insurance Company, and if I was asked the rate via Canso or the canal, I would say much less by the Canso route than by the canal from Gulf Ports, in consequence of the increased dangers of navigation by strong currents and fogs in the Bay of Fundy. As far as the St. John trade is concerned, I would say that a railroad from Shediac to St. John is sufficient for its purposes.

HON. MR. POWER.

"In my opinion there is no prospective increase of trade that would lessen the conditions that at present exist adverse to the canal."

I read that simply as a specimen of the kind of evidence taken in all those places. It will be noticed what Mr. Cronan thinks about the navigation of the Bay of Fundy, but there is other evidence on that subject. I might quote the report of the canal commissioners, but members might possibly say they were prejudiced. I quote, however, from page 16 of the report from the Admiralty sailing directions, wherein it is stated :—

"Ships navigating the Bay of Fundy have to encounter an atmosphere almost constantly enveloped in dense fogs, the tides setting in with great rapidity over the rocks and shoals with which it abounds, and a difficulty of obtaining anchorage on account of the depth; so that under these circumstances, the most unremitting attention is requisite to prevent the disastrous consequences which would necessarily attend a want of knowledge and caution."

That quotation from the Admiralty sailing directions refers to the Bay of Fundy end of the proposed ship railway; and here is what the St. Lawrence Pilot, published by order of the Admiralty, says on the same subject :—

"Baie Verte is completely open to easterly winds, as well as very shallow water near its head, where flats of mud and weeds dry out to a distance of three-quarters of a mile from the shore. It was formerly erroneously represented as being free from dangers with mud bottom—shoaling gradually to its head. The Admiralty Survey has, in great part, deprived it of that character, by the discovery of dangerous rocky shoals being directly in the way of vessels entering the Bay."

I have read these extracts simply to show that when I spoke of the difficulties and dangers of the navigation of the Bay of Fundy I was not speaking without some authority.

HON. MR. DICKEY—Who were those commissioners?

HON. MR. POWER—I think Mr. Keefer and some others.

HON. MR. DEVER—Have you the report of Mr. Lawrence there?

HON. MR. POWER—Mr. Lawrence dissented I know; but these gentlemen were appointed to go down and report on the matter, and they probably reported under a sense of responsibility, and they have annexed the evidence which they took. I will just quote again, from the evidence of James A. Hughes, a ship captain of Digby, given at page 43 :

“I do not consider the navigation of the Bay of Fundy as good as that outside. With vessels in foreign ports asking for freights, objection is always made to the fog, high tides and currents in the Bay of Fundy. I have been up in the upper part of the Bay of Fundy, towards Au Lac, the entrance to the proposed canal; I have knowledge of its navigation, of its shifting sand and mud bars, and think the navigation very intricate, rendered more so by the very high rise of tides, especially at high tides. I have thought a good deal about the proposed canal, and think there would be a good deal of difficulty, occasionally, in getting vessels out.”

HON. MR. DICKEY—With regard to that report, my hon. friend has not yet stated by whom it was signed.

HON. MR. POWER—It is signed by John Young, Chairman of the Commissioners.

HON. MR. DICKEY—Who are the other commissioners?

HON. MR. POWER—I do not know, but I know that Lawrence was one, and he dissented.

HON. MR. DICKEY—It is well, as my hon. friend has made a point of this, to remind the House of the origin of that commission. The canal was decided upon under the Government which preceded Mr. Mackenzie's administration, and money was voted for the purpose by the consent of Parliament, and the first act that the Mackenzie Government did—I am not complaining of it—was to send out a commission for the purpose of destroying this work.

HON. MR. POWER—It is not right to impute motives.

HON. MR. DICKEY—It is no imputation except politically; he had a perfect right to do so politically if he thought it was wrong, but he differed from the other Government in his policy on this question. They appointed a commission, one member of which had to be from the Lower Provinces. I cannot penetrate the secrets of the commission, but we can all understand that those gentlemen went there with their instructions, and sought evidence that would be necessary to fortify their conclusions in the report, and the fact ought to be stated that Mr. Lawrence, who knew more about it than any of them, because he lived in the Port of St. John, presented the minority report differing from his colleagues. After all, it has nothing to do with the merits of this Bill, because the Bill is not a proposition to impose any charge upon this country with respect to the navigation of the Bay of Fundy, but it is to aid persons, if they choose to undertake this project, in doing it at their own cost, and spending an enormous sum of money in this country. If that experiment proves successful, then and only then shall the subsidy be granted. That is the whole case. I did not go into the commercial features of the question at all, because it is for the company to do so. The hon. gentleman may be right in his conclusions that he drew from the evidence of the witnesses selected for examination; there are, however, gentlemen in this building who know more about the navigation of the Bay of Fundy than the commissioners did, who will differ from their conclusions. The fact is patent on the face of it, that the people who are advancing the money for this enterprise will satisfy themselves upon that point. On behalf of my own province, I protest against those insinuations against the navigation of one of the finest estuaries of the world, the Bay of Fundy. Some gentlemen are frightened because they get into a little bit of fog crossing the Bay of Fundy. Then because a vessel occasionally touches they are afraid; but we never hear of a want of safety in the port of Halifax—we never hear of any difficulty because a vessel is occasionally picked up on the Thrumcap ledges or some other outlying dangers near the harbor of Halifax. The bottom of the ocean is not thoroughly level and free from those obstructions, but I do say upon that point that the Bay of Fundy is as safe as any other arm of the sea that I know of; and the only obstructions that exist from one end of the Bay to the other are the Quaco ledges, and these are only on one side of the Bay ; they are perfectly well known, and it is only once in 20 years that a vessel touches them.

HON. MR. DEVER—At this late period it is hardly right to bring up the dead question of the Baie Verte Canal. At one time it was a pretty live question ; a vote of half a million of dollars was placed in the Estimates for the purpose of holding out inducements to the Lower Provinces respecting this canal. What it was done for I cannot say, but such is the fact that half a million of dollars was placed in the Estimates for it. My hon. friend from Halifax dealt unfairly with the report of the Canal Commission. He took great care not to quote the evidence of a gentleman from St. John. He took good care to quote the evidence of Mr. Cronan, a gentleman from Halifax, and the evidence of a gentleman from Prince Edward Island. This evidence was very unfair, especially as the hon. gentleman suppressed the report of our Commissioner, Mr. Lawrence, who made a separate report from the fact that the whole proceedings were unfair. From then until now it is a question in St. John if the whole report was not a political juggle.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I think this is a fair discussion, because the hon. gentleman from Amherst referred to the navigation of the Bay of Fundy, which I at the time condemned. From what little knowledge I have from my association with some Marine Insurance Companies, I am aware that they make a large difference in favor of vessels going east from Halifax from those that go up to the Bay of Fundy. In fact, it is noted by the whole of them that the tides and currents and fogs of the Bay necessarily make that navigation more difficult and dangerous. I am very glad my hon. friend put that right so far as regards our coast of Nova Scotia.

HON. MR. POWER—A good example of the evil effect of party spirit is the speech of the hon. gentleman from Amherst this afternoon. He is a gentleman whom we are in the habit of looking upon as one of the most judicial minded men in this House, but that hon. gentleman did not extend to the Mackenzie Government who have been so long dead the mantle of charity that he thinks should be extended to the acts of the present Government. My hon. friend began by telling us that the commission was appointed for the purpose of destroying the canal. I think that is an allegation unworthy of the hon. gentleman's character and position, and probably I would say with just as much correctness, to put it in the mildest form, that $500,000 had been put in the estimates before the election of 1872 for the purpose of influencing the vote in the counties of Westmoreland and Cumberland in favor of the Conservative Government. It might be quite as true as to say that this commission was appointed for the purpose of destroying the Baie Verte Canal. There was a great difference of opinion as to the value of the Baie Verte Canal. People in the immediate vicinity of the canal thought it would be an important public work ; everybody else, as far as I know, thought it was of comparatively little value ; and I think the Government were perfectly right. What was the natural thing to do, this question having been raised, a sum of money being found in the estimates, and a proposition to spend $8,000,000 of the public money? I think it was a duty which the Government owed to the people of the country to have an investigation of a proper character into the commercial value of this canal, before committing themselves to that vast expenditure.

HON. MR. PLUMB—What is the date of the report?

HON. MR. POWER—December, 1875.

HON. MR. PLUMB—But the Government kept the item in the Estimates in 1874 and 1875 also!

HON. MR. POWER—The report was made in 1875, and the item did not appear in the Estimates afterwards. I think the hon. gentleman from Amherst described the commission unfairly. The hon. John Young was not a man who would take a commission under instructions of that sort.

HON. MR. ALMON—He was the man who opened certain letters, I think.

HON. MR. DICKEY.

HON. MR. POWER—I think he was one of the greatest authorities on commercial questions in Canada. That was the reason he was appointed. The hon. gentleman from St. John (Mr. Dever) said that Mr. Lawrence presented a minority report. I admitted that he had dissented and I stated at once that I had not gone into the personnel of the commission at all; nor did I make the allegations that I did for the purpose of injuring the reputation of the Bay of Fundy. I think that the Admiralty sailing directions are in the hands of all seamen, and anything that can be said on the floor of this House is not going to affect in any way their opinion of the navigation of the Bay of Fundy. The statement that I made was not an uncalled for statement, because this whole measure is based on the supposition that this undertaking is of great commercial value. One of the reasons given why it was not of commercial value was that the navigation of the Bay of Fundy was more difficult than the navigation round the southern and eastern shores of Nova Scotia, and the statements I have read from the report establish that fact. It is unfair for the hon. gentleman from St. John to charge me with suppressing anything.

The title was agreed to.

HON. MR. VIDAL, from the Committee, reported the Bill with amendments.

The amendments were concurred in, and the Bill was then read the third time and passed.

NIAGARA FRONTIER BRIDGE COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill (48) "An Act to amend the Act to incorporate the Niagara Frontier Bridge Company." He said: This Bill relates to a work near where I reside. It is for the purpose of extending the time for building a suspension bridge across the Niagara River to connect a railway from the State of New York with the Grand Trunk system in the Province of Ontario.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

It being six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

SUBSIDIES INLAND TO RAILWAYS BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (117) "An Act to amend an act to authorize the granting of subsidies in land to certain Railway Companies."

In the Committee.

On the first clause.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The object of this Bill is to authorize the granting of subsidies in land to certain Railway Companies in a different way from that which is at present authorized by law. Hitherto these grants have been made in odd sections: the propositions is to grant them in alternate townships and lots. It has already been done in certain cases by order in Council, and the object of the Bill is to sanction what has already been done, and to permit the Governor in Council to continue the system in future. By the terms and conditions of the arrangement with the Hudson Bay Company, that Company is entitled to one-twentieth of lands surveyed into townships, and in each township the Company have had a section reserved. These rights of the Company will not be interfered with by this legislation. It is intended by this Bill, with the consent of the Hudson Bay Company, in granting subsidies of land to Railway Companies to do so without having the tracts so granted broken upon by the Hudson Bay reserves, or by school sections. It is proposed to accomplish this by reserving an equal quantity of lands elsewhere. That cannot be done without the consent of the parties interested. In many respects it is desirable that this power should exist. For instance, in granting lands for grazing purposes: any one who understands the subject knows that it is absolutely necessary that a tract used for grazing should be in a block. You cannot have a reservation of a section, or two or three sections, in the midst of lands which are used for cattle grazing. It destroys the value of lands for that purpose. The cattle must remain undisturbed, and if there are people living in the middle of the range it is good for nothing. It is the same way with the land granted to railway companies; it is desirable that they would be in large blocks, instead of being divided up as they have been in some parts of the North-West.

HON. MR. POWER—I think the explanation of the hon. gentleman is very good as far as it goes. I should like, however, to hear a little further from him. The hon. gentleman said that the Hudson Bay Company's lands and the school lands were treated in the same way. As I read the clause before the Committee it is not so. If the hon. gentleman will look at lines 20 and 21 he will see that the change is to be assented to by the Hudson Bay Company, but if he looks at lines 25 and 26 he will see that there is no such provision made as to the school lands. The Government simply grant other lands for school purposes, and there is no discretion in the hands of anybody else. While that may be perfectly correct in the territories, I doubt whether it is so in the Province of Manitoba. I think the Hudson Bay Company should be treated in the same way. As to requiring the assent of the Hudson Bay Company, it may be taken for granted that as a general thing they would not sanction any change in the location of their lands unless the new lands were worth rather more than the old. I think it may safely be taken for granted that any private corporation would act in that way. Perhaps the hon. gentleman can point out what provision there is here to prevent the Company from being unreasonable. The Government ought to have some means of compelling the Company to take land which is clearly equivalent to the land they lose. If the principle of the Bill is good as respects land granted to railways, I do not see why it should not apply to other land too.

HON. MR. PLUMB—As regards the school lands they are in the hands of the Government. If the hon. gentleman will look at Section 20 of the Act of 1883, he will see that the school lands shall be administered by the Governor in Council through the Minister of the Interior, and if he can show me what other authority there is to be referred to, and how else the decision shall be given as to the school lands to be substituted, I should be glad to see it. As far as the Hudson Bay Company is concerned, the hon. gentleman will permit me to say I have no doubt that the Company and the Government will be able to agree upon the terms on which the exchange shall be made, and I do not think that it is desirable, or important, or necessary in any way to put safe-guards around the arrangements.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I understood my hon. friend to say that the Hudson Bay Company has consented to the terms on which this substitution shall be made?

HON. MR. PLUMB—Their consent is required.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I have endeavored to follow some of the legislation proposed by the Government this session, and several of those bills are drawn in most ambiguous terms. The provisions are made to appear so tortuous and conflicting that they must lead to litigation and trouble. I am surprised that Parliament permits the Government to bring in bills merely referring to other Acts of Parliament of former sessions. Why should members of Parliament, and the courts, and the whole country, have to refer to a dozen Acts of Parliament to know the meaning and object of a bill? No such system of drawing bills can be satisfactory to the people of this country. It is only another evidence to me that this Government is drifting more and more into bad methods and ways which certainly mean no good for the country. The time has arrived when members of Parliament ought to speak out. This Government has become sadly depraved in many respects—depraved in their money expenditures and legislation. No lawyer in this House can say to-day what ground this Bill covers and I am surprised that the hon. member from Lunenburg and other gentlemen present, who are astute lawyers do not raise their voice and say, that they will not allow the Bill to go through in that shape. I am surprised that the House should allow such a bill to pass.

HON. MR. WARK—I approve of this mode of granting lands for railways. I think it was a great mistake when they were divided into one mile squares. These lands ought to have been granted in townships, and then settlers could have settled close together. There is one serious objection to this Bill—that is extracting school lands from the townships. The school lands ought to remain there for the benefit of the settlers in the future. If the whole township is given to a Railway Company and by them sold to settlers, are the inhabitants of the township to buy land on which to build their school houses and residences for school teachers? The school lands ought to be left there and the township granted with the school lots reserved.

The clause was adopted.

HON. MR. GIRARD, from the Committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was read the third time and passed.

PROTECTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (96) "An Act respecting the protection of navigable waters."

In the Committee,

On the first clause.

HON. MR. DICKEY—The object of this Bill is to make regulations somewhat better than exist under the law for the protection of navigable waters.

The clause was adopted.

On the second clause.

HON. MR. POWER—I quite concur in the spirit of this clause but I think the wording includes rather too much. Under the language of this clause if a fisherman's boat happens to sink near the shore in the loneliest part of say Cape Breton or Prince Edward Island, in a place where the little wreck does not occasion the slightest risk to anybody; unless the owner puts a light upon it and notifies the collector of Customs in the nearest port, he is subject to a penalty of $40 per day for every day he neglects to do so. Now that is legislation which is very likely to be abused. It seems to me that before the owner of the vessel should be liable to a penalty he should have been notified himself to remove the wreck, or something of that sort. I think it would have been more reasonable. If the wreck interferes with navigation he should be requested to remove it, and it would be time enough if he refused to do so, or to place the lights on the wreck in the manner described in this clause, to fine him.

THE SPEAKER—Do you think a fisherman's boat would obstruct navigation?

HON. MR. POWER—Under some circumstances it might.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Under such circumstances, where a wreck is an obstruction to navigation, this clause should apply. I think the harbor master is particularly interested in this matter. It is his special duty to look after the harbors. In some cases the collector may be some ten or fifteen miles from where the obstruction is, and there may be some difficulty in getting at him. On such a river as La Have, in the County of Lunenburg, there are two or three harbor masters and they are appointed specially for the purpose of seeing that the navigation is kept clear and unobstructed. I think the clause might be amended by inserting "Harbor Master."

HON. MR. DICKEY—The object of this clause, as the hon. member Lunenburg has stated, is to deal only with cases where navigation is obstructed. The time within which notice is to be given is "forthwith." The reason of that is that the time must necessarily vary with the circumstances, and the object is to give reasonable time in which to notify the collector. The Act must be construed in that way. My hon. friend suggests that the notice should be given to the Harbor Master.

HON MR. KAULBACH—The collector or the harbor master.

HON MR. DICKEY—I do not know that there is any reasonable objection to that. If notice is not given "forthwith"—that is within a reasonable time—a great deal of mischief may be done by the obstruction of navigation. It is hardly likely that a boat grounding would prove an obstruction to navigation, because it would necessarily occur in a shallow place and out of the track of ships, but where a vessel is grounded it is reasonable that the party should give notice as soon as possible and display a signal to warn other vessels and prevent the risk of destroying lives and property.

THE SPEAKER—I doubt very much if you would find a harbor master where there is no collector of Customs.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—But the Custom House officer is sometimes so far removed that it is inconvenient, while the harbor master's office is at the mouth of the river usually.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I would say, as regards the Bill, we are looking at it with the best light we have, and as far as I am concerned I have no particular official knowledge on the subject. If the clause is allowed to pass in committee I will make inquiries before the third reading to see if it can be altered in any way.

HON. MR. POWER—Hon. gentleman may think the criticism on this matter is of too microscopic a character; but if the hon. gentleman will read the clause they may think differently:—

4. If, in the opinion of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the navigation of any navigable water as aforesaid is obstructed, impeded or rendered more difficult or dangerous by reason of the wreck sinking, lying ashore or grounding of any vessel or of any part thereof, or other thing &c."

Vessel, by the first clause is defined to include every description of ship, boat or craft of any kind. The Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction over all our sea-coast waters, and the case I put of a fisherman's boat interfering with navigation would be construed as coming under this clause. As to the improbability of any difficulty arising under that, I would call the attention of the committee to a case which occurred in Nova Scotia. Under an Act which we passed here some three or four years ago, there was a provision as to bridges interfering with navigation. An old bridge was removed from Porter's Lake in Halifax County and a new one built instead of it. The new bridge was an iron bridge. It happened that the contractors who built the new bridge made the passage between the piers some six inches narrower than it was before, and a man in the neighborhood took a scow and let her drift against the pier of the bridge, it was supposed purposely, and the scow was injured, and he brought an action against the contractor on the ground that the bridge interfered with navigation. The court decided that because the space between the piers of the bridge was six inches less than the space between the piers of the old bridge, the contractors were liable for a considerable amount of damages. We ought to be careful not to put anything in this Bill which a litigious or quarrelsome man could avail himself of. I think that the party should receive notice to put a light on his vessel or to remove it before he is made liable to the penalty.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—But the danger is an immediate danger; after a time it diminishes, and it might be some time before he would receive notice, and the greatest danger would be over.

HON. MR. WARK—It is worthy of notice that this Bill places the owner of a vessel residing in Canada at great disadvantage as compared with a foreign owner. We frequently have foreign ships wrecked at the mouths of our harbors, in which case all the captain does is merely to get what he can out of the wreck and leave it there. Is it fair then that the owner of a Canadian vessel cast away at the same place, because he resides in the country, should be compelled to go to this expense? My impression is that the Government ought to assume the whole expense of keeping our harbors clear, and mete out equal justice to all: because on enquiry hon. gentlemen will find that there are more foreign ships, including English vessels and vessels on the continent, wrecked in our harbors than Canadian vessels, and I think the owners of Canadian ships will be placed at an unreasonable disadvantage by this Bill.

The clause was agreed to.

On the fifth clause,

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I see by the first clause that the action shall be brought against the registered owner although he may not be the real owner of the vessel.

HON. MR. DICKEY—It says that the amount shall be recoverable from the managing owner.

The clause was agreed to.

On the seventh clause,

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I object to this clause although there is discretionary power given to the Governor in Council, because it is questionable whether this is not infringing upon Provincial rights. It may be that streams tributary to navigable waters are subject to legislation by this Parliament. I know that in Nova Scotia, where there is one large gang mill, and we have hundreds of small mills over the country for the benefit of settlers, it has been very severely and harshly used by officers for their own benefit in order to get fees. It is not so objectionable as I first thought, as by the next clause of the Bill the Government have discretionary power to exempt streams that will not interfere with navigation from the operation of this clause.

HON. MR. HOWLAN, from the Committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

MANITOBA CLAIMS ON THE DOMINION BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. GIRARD moved the second reading of Bill (123) "An Act to explain the Act intituled 'An Act for the final settlement of the claims made by the Province of Manitoba on the Dominion.'" He said: This Bill is simply to remedy an error that we find in the Bill passed last year for the final settlement of the claims of Manitoba against the Dominion. The amendment which is asked for is to the second clause of the Act. By that clause it is provided that the sum which the province is entitled to receive in payment of the Dominion subsidy is to be based on a population of 125,000 souls. The amendment is to provide that the intention of section 6 is that the rate per capita at which the calculations therein mentioned are to be made shall be taken and construed to be the rate per capita ascertained by dividing by 17,000 (the estimated population of the Province of Manitoba under 33 Vic. cap. 3) the sum of $551,447, being the amount of capital on which the province was entitled to receive interest. That is all the change that is asked for by the Bill. Under the construction of the Act of last year the Province of Manitoba would be treated unjustly, and it is but right that Parliament should render justice to the province I represent.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

TOWN OF COBOURG RELIEF BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill (122) "An Act for the relief of the corporation of the town of Cobourg." He said: In 1884 the town of Cobourg was indebted to the Dominion in the sum of $44,798 arising out of the purchase of the Cobourg harbor and the Port Hope and Rice Lake road. The corporation of Cobourg contributed in the financial year 1876-77 the sum of $25,507.49 towards defraying the cost of constructing a harbor of refuge, which is of great advantage to the shipping on Lake Ontario though of no special advantage to the town. The corporation pray for relief against the indebtedness to the Dominion to the amount which they have expended in the construction of that harbor.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—What is the balance they will have to pay?

HON. MR. PLUMB—The balance they will have to pay will be $19,290.75.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman who represents the Government just now has not informed the House why this Bill should be adopted. I might be able myself to give a reason, but perhaps hon. gentlemen would not think it was the sort of reason that should be given. I remember that shortly before the last general election a measure was introduced to relieve the town of Pembroke. Pembroke owed the Dominion some $70,000 or or $80,000, and just on the eve of an election, the constituency being a rather close one, it was thought desirable to remit that debt to the town. I do not make any assertion, but I dare say there are a great many men of my own political creed who would be suspicious enough to think that this $20,000 that we are about to give to the town of Cobourg is intended to influence the elections that are expected to come on during the ensuing year; and I do not think the Bill should pass unless we hear a more substantial reason for it.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The town of Cobourg owes the Government $44,927. As an offset to that debt, the corporation has expended for the harbor upon which this debt has been incurred, the sum of $25,507, and though that expenditure was made in 1876-77, Cobourg very reasonably asks, inasmuch as that expenditure has been made for the general benefit of the Dominion, that the Government shall credit the town with that amount of money as the work for which it was expended brings them no revenue. If it had been, as my hon. friend so kindly suggests, for the purpose of influencing the elections, the Government might have gone further and allowed the town interest on that sum from the time it was expended, which I am sorry they have not done. I regret that my hon. friend thinks that in every measure of this kind there is something that refers to elections which are pending.

HON. MR. POWER—We have been there before.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I think the House will see that it is perfectly right, under the circumstances, that the town of Cobourg should be relieved of the debt incurred for this purpose, by the amount it has taxed its own people for a work which brings it no profit, and which is not peculiarly for the benefit of the town.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—What is the character of the work done?

HON. MR. PLUMB—Piers have been built for the protection of the harbor. It is a harbor of refuge for that part of Lake Ontario.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Will the House permit me to show the actual position of this debt due by Cobourg to the Dominion. The town of Cobourg purchased their harbor at an expense of $44,798, and, as the hon. gentleman from Niagara has further informed the House, the corporation expended the sum of $25,507 upon the ground that it was a harbor of refuge. I asked the hon. Senator from Belleville, Mr. Flint, whether he, as formerly engaged in lumbering, and employing many schooners to carry his lumber from the western part of Lake Ontario to the east, regarded the harbor of Cobourg as a harbor of refuge? I have frequently entered the piers at Cobourg, and I certainly do not think refuge could be taken there in any storm, and I want to know upon what ground the Government should remit this debt and not in the same way come to the relief of Kingston, Toronto, Hamilton, Port Dalhousie, and all the harbors on Lake Ontario. I cannot see. I do not think that the senior member from Halifax is very far astray when he mentions upon his own authority, or upon public rumor, that this is nothing more or less than a Bill to relieve an important town of its indebtedness with a view to influencing the extn election. There can be no doubt of it. Just in the same way as the Chignecto railway subsidy Bill has been introduced by the First Minister to throw public money broadcast over the provinces in order that he may buy up the Dominion from one end to the other. Could the cloven foot be more plainly shown than in the case of this sort of legislation? A port into which no vessel can go in a storm! You may possibly pilot a small boat into that harbor in a storm at the risk of life, but I defy the most experienced captain on the Lake to pilot a boat into that harbor in any kind of a storm. I am astonished that the Senate should allow this Bill and other bills of this kind to pass where the object is so apparent. The learned gentleman from Niagara is always equal for every occasion. He is a man of great ability, but, I am afraid, destitute of principle.

HON. MR. PLUMB.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I move that the Bill be read the second time.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—This is truly a grave matter. The town of Woodstock, from which I come, has sent deputation after deputation to the Government asking them to build a much-needed post office there, without avail. The policy is, "You don't send anyone to support us; until you do you will get no post office and no favors." If you go to Barrie, Galt and other Conservative towns, you will find magnificent post offices and customs houses. Why, there is no such absolutism, no such infamy, and no such corruption as this under absolute monarchy!

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I call the attention of the Speaker to the fact that the member from Woodstock is out of order!

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman is attacking the Government. The Government have not complained, and I think they can stand it.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—One is obliged to use strong language when he finds the most intelligent constituencies in the Dominion denied the accommodation of post office and customs house, while counties that send men to Parliament to give a servile support to a Government that is demoralizing the country and lavishing millions of the public money for their own purposes, receive every favor: it is time to use strong language. I am surprised that the people do not rise in their might to stamp out such a system of carrying on the Government in a free country like Canada.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I move that the Bill be read the second time.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—With respect to this port, I can say from personal knowledge that from the time you leave Kingston until you go to Hamilton it is the only place to which vessels can run for shelter with safety; and if there be one port or place on the whole of Lake Ontario that deserves consideration it is the town of Cobourg. If the people of that town have paid their money for a work which is of a public character, it is only just and proper that they should be reimbursed. I think the Bill before us is a proper one. We in Ontario seldom ask for any grant—indeed we are not asking for a grant in this case—we are simply asking to be reimbursed moneys which we have paid in the public service.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

ST. GABRIEL LEEVE AND RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill (116) "An Act to incorporate the St. Gabriel Levee and Railway Company."

He said—This is a Bill, the object of which is explained in the preamble:—

Whereas, it is of urgent importance that measures should be taken to protect that portion of the city of Montréal and its suburbs lying south of the Lachine Canal from disastrous floods; and, whereas, the construction of a levee or dyke from the abutment of the Victoria Bridge to a point above the Pavilion Road, on or near the northern bank of the River St. Lawrence, would tend to prevent the recurrence of such floods; and, whereas, the construction of a railway upon the said levee or dyke to connect with the Grand Trunk Railway at Point St. Charles and St. Henri, crossing the Lachine Canal at the bridge at St. Paul's locks, would protect the proposed work, and greatly diminish its cost.

It is in the form of a general railway Act, with permission to build the levee. I believe that there have been some objections made to it by the City Engineer of Montreal. The corporators of the Bill are the Mayor of Montreal, three or four leading members of the Council, and other prominent citizens, and the active promoter is Sir Alexander Galt. I presume that the members of this House are all acquainted with the nature of the undertaking, and it will not be necessary for me to explain it further.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I beg to second the motion.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—The second reading of the Bill having been seconded by the hon. member from Montreal, I rise with great hesitation to object to the measure. I am opposed to the principle of the Bill. It appears to have been sprung upon us at a late hour of the session. It proposes to protect that portion of the City of Montreal and its suburb lying south of the Lachine Canal from disastrous floods. Now, it seems to me that this is a matter of public importance, and the Dominion should take hold of it and not hand it over to a private company. The Corporation of Montreal the Harbor Commissioners, or the Board of Trade should express an opinion upon it before we are asked to pass this Bill and hand the work over to a private Company, who, no doubt, are more interested in promoting their own interests than the interests of Montreal. I would not rise to discuss this matter at all—because it might appear that I am talking of something which I know nothing about—but for the fact that this question was brought to my notice by a prominent resident of Montreal, who is a large property owner there, and who thinks that this Bill is calculated to do great injustice. I was in Montreal during the late flood and witnessed the distress which attended the calamity, and I should be glad to see any proper measure adopted to prevent a recurrence of these floods. But this Bill interferes with Government and municipal property, and the rights of the Harbors Commissioners, and I think it is rather dangerous to place a matter of such magnitude in the hands of any private company. We have to look beyond the present time and see whether it may in the future conflict with some general system of protection to Montreal. I believe the Harbor Commissioners exercise control up to River St. Pierre. They should be consulted, and so should the Board of Trade. My hon. friend has referred to the report of the Harbor Commissioners' engineer. His report is not favorable to the undertaking. As the preamble of the Bill points out, this is something which is essential to the protection of life and property in Montreal, and we should hesitate before giving a matter, which is of so much importance to the leading city of the Dominion, to a private company, which may do something that may afterwards have to be undone. There are matters of detail in the Bill to which I object, but I press strongly upon the House, that in view of the great damage done there by floods, whether we should pass a Bill giving such an important undertaking over to a private company, for them to do what they may conceive to be for their own interest, and, at the same time, incidentally what may be to some extent a protection to the harbor of Montreal. It is not in the public interest that this should be relegated to a private company when it is a matter of such public importance.

HON. MR. DEVER—I think there is a great deal in the argument of the hon. member from Lunenburg—it would be quite wrong to give to any private company a matter of such vital importance to Montreal. If other interests are opposed to this measure they should have appeared and opposed this measure before now. The Bill has passed through all its stages in the House of Commons and is regularly before us. When the parties most deeply interested in the matter have taken no action against it, I do not see why we should raise objections to the passage of the measure.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I am exceedingly obliged to the hon. member from Lunenburg for the interest he takes in Montreal; but he must not consider, nor must the House think, that Montreal is asleep to her own interests. A deputation from the Board of Trade, the Corn Exchange and the City met the Minister of Public Works here yesterday, and had a talk with him over the matter. I am fully alive to the objections that are very properly raised by the hon. member from Lunenburg to this Bill, but I did not think it was much use bringing them up here at the second reading: I thought the best place to urge them was before the Railway Committee. When Sir A. T. Galt, the principal promoter of the Bill, was speaking of it to me some time ago, I said that I could see no objections to it, and would be glad to support him as far as I could. Since then I have seen serious objections to the measure, in many of its clauses. I intend to propose to-morrow in the Railway Committee that the charter be not allowed to take effect until this commission of engineers, which is to be appointed by the Dominion Government, send in their report. We thought it would be better to have this commission appointed by the Government, than by the city, or Board of Trade, or Corn Exchange. The Government will see that the best and most impartial men, who will study only the public interests, are chosen, and I intend to ask that this charter be suspended until we have their report; because, if this charter were to take effect at once, and the report of the commissioners should recommend something which might interfere with it, this company might come and say, "You cannot touch this; it belongs to us." All the amendment and changes which have been spoken of were talked over yesterday and to-day with the mayor and some of the aldermen of the city of Montreal. I telegraphed to Montreal to one of the parties interested in this measure, asking him to see his confreres and have some one here to-morrow to look after the Bill, as I was determined to oppose it or have it amended very considerably. Thanking the hon. member from Lunenburg for the interest he takes in Montreal, I want the House to understand that the leading city of the Dominion has not been neglecting its own interests.

HON. MR. DEBOUCHERVILLE— I do not rise for the purpose of opposing the second reading of the Bill, but I wish to call the attention of this House, and more particularly the Government, to a point which seems to be very important. No one desires more earnestly than I do that this levee should have the effect of saving the low portions of the city from inundations, but there are other parts of the country besides Montreal. The south shore has been frequently, and more especially for the last two years, very much inundated. The question arises— will this levee, by saving Montreal, throw the water over on the south shore and cause even more serious inundation? In that case, if there is not something in the charter to make the company responsible for damages which may be occasioned by this levee, I think the Government will be responsible. I would remind the House of the damages which the Government had to pay owing to the construction of the levee at Beauharnois. I think this should be taken into consideration by the Government, and I shall certainly, for my part, in the Railway Committee try to introduce such amendments in the Bill as will secure the interests of the people residing on the south shore. I wish the members of the House who are not members of the Committee, to keep in view the deep responsibility which the country will assume, if this work should have the effect of increasing the inundation on the south shore.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I have received letters from Montreal, some of them from gentlemen who have been alluded to in this discussion. Amongst the promoters of the Bill there are some—I might say the majority—who have given their names to this Bill, believing it to be a matter of public interest and conceiving it to be a public measure. They have written to me suggesting that a clause be added to the Bill to provide that if the work should not be executed within a given time the right to construct it should be given to the City of Montreal. It is hardly necessary to say that we could not legislate in that way. This is a private bill and we could not introduce in it a clause which would give it a general effect or make it a public bill.

Though it may be open to objection that a private company should undertake such a work, we cannot find fault with the promoters of this Bill, as it is a matter of great urgency. On the contrary, we ought to thank those who have come forward with a proposition, to avert the disastrous consequences of these floods. Perhaps the public authorities have not been quick enough to take action in the matter, and we cannot, therefore, find fault with private parties who have taken a step in the right direction. I have risen to suggest that a clause be added to the Bill providing that if the work is not promptly begun and satisfactory progress made in the course of three months, that the company shall lose the rights granted by the charter. I thought it my duty to make this suggestion in order that some of the promoters, who may not have seen things in that light, may ask for such an amendment. The hon. member from Montreal stated that the Bill will come before the Railway Committee to-morrow; I think it is hardly within the rules of the House to refer a bill so soon after the second reading.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I was going to ask that the rules of the House be suspended to permit the reference of the Bill to-morrow.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—My hon. friend from DeLanauidiere and myself had an interview yesterday with some members of a deputation who told us that they had received assurances that the second reading of the Bill would not take place until Friday. We then told them that in that case the matter could not come before the committee until next week, so that those gentlemen, who are members of the corporation of Montreal and men of high standing, who are deeply interested in the matter, would be taken by surprise if the Bill should come before the Railway Committee to-morrow. I think, therefore, that they should have proper notice in order that they may be given an opportunity to state their views before the committee.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I cannot consent to the Bill going to the committee to-morrow, for the reasons stated by my hon. friend from De Salaberry. Having been informed that the second reading would not take place until to-day, we told some members of the deputation that it would not come before the committee until Tuesday or Wednesday next.

HON. MR. TRUDEL,

THE SPEAKER—It cannot come before the Committee to-morrow without a suspension of the 61st Rule.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I understand the hon. gentleman from Niagara intends to ask for a suspension of the rule. We cannot consent to that. Remarks have been made as to the interests of the south shore of the St. Lawrence, and with good reason, because the residents in that section have suffered more in comparison than the people of Montreal. The whole of Laprairie, which is a very large parish, and St. Lambert's have suffered a great deal. The extent of the flood in Longueuil can be imagined when I tell the House that this year there was water to a depth of three or four feet in the parish church there. The House will therefore see the necessity, before such a bill goes into operation, of inquiring into these matters, not only in the interest of Montreal, but also in the interest of other places in the vicinity which contribute so largely to the business of the commercial metropolis. The rising of the St. Lawrence has an influence, not only on that river itself, but also on the branch of the Ottawa river which passes between the Island of Montreal and Isle Jesus, the island on which I live. This year the rise was so great that the low portion of the parish of St. Vincent de Paul, was covered with water for a distance of 4 or 5 miles along the shore, and the people residing there had to watch day and night for about a week to see that the ice passing down with the current did not carry away their buildings.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Is that below or above the place where this dyke is to be built?

HON. MR. DEBOUCHERVILLE—St. Lambert and Laprairie are above.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—So is St. Vincent de Paul. If this levee is made, it will certainly raise the waters of the St. Lawrence, because now, in flood time, the St. Lawrence, which is about three miles wide at summer level, is about four or five miles wide at Montreal. If the water is confined to a narrower channel, it will certainly increase its depth, and the effect will be to make the flood greater in other places. All those considerations should be present in the minds of those who are to be appointed to look after the matter, and they are stated now in order that they may be dealt with by those who have to make the inquiry and report to the Government.

HON MR. PLUMB—Under the circumstance I will not propose, as I had intended to do, to suspend the 61st rule, because what has been stated in this discussion makes it perfectly evident that there are very serious questions connected with this Bill; but I presume there will be no objection to the second reading to-day.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that the Bill be referred to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbors.

HON MR. BELLEROSE—The Committee generally meets on Tuesdays, I believe. The day of meeting should be fixed, because the people of Montreal, who are interested in this matter, wish to be present.

HON MR. TRUDEL—There will be deputations here to watch the progress of the Bill.

HON MR. OGILVIE—I think it would be better to postpone the consideration of the Bill until Tuesday morning.

HON MR. DICKEY—In my experience it is always desirable, where so many interests are affected by a measure, that a particular day should be fixed for bringing it before the Committee. Tuesday is the regular day for the meeting of the Railway Committee. I will not be here then, but I presume whoever will act as Chairman will be sure to have the Bill proceeded with.

HON. MR. DEBOUCHERVILLE—The Chairman of the Railway Committee, before leaving, might give instructions to the clerk to convene the meeting for Tuesday.

HON. MR. PLUMB—We will try to have the Committee meet on Tuesday.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Then it is understood that the Committee will meet on Tuesday.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned at 9.30 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Friday, May 14th, 1886.

The Speaker took the Chair at three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills, reported from the committee on Banking and Commerce, were read the third time and passed without debate:

Bill (95) "An Act to incorporate the Victoria and Sault Ste. Marie Junction Railway Company." (Mr. O'Donohoe.)

Bill (69) "An Act respecting the Bank of Yarmouth." (Mr. Plumb).

Bill (114) "An Act to amend an Act respecting the British Canadian Bank." (Mr. Allan)

MONTREAL BOARD OF TRADE BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON MR. ALLAN, from the committee on Banking and Commerce, reported Bill (90) "An Act respecting the Montreal Board of Trade," with certain amendments. He said: The first two amendments are purely verbal. The second is to this effect: the Bill, as it originally came before the committee, in section 11, stated the oath to be administered by the President and Vice-President shall be administered by the Mayor of the City of Montreal. Of course that was ultra vires. There was no power here to say that the oath shall be administered by that officer; instead of that, it is inserted "may be administered by the Mayor of the city of Montreal, or by any commissioner for receiving affidavits in the Superior Court of Lower Canada."

HON. MR. OGILVIE moved that the amendments be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was then read the third time and passed.

WINNIPEG & NORTH PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. DICKEY, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbors, reported Bill (78) "An Act to incorporate the Winnipeg & North Pacific Railway Company." He said: the amendments made in this Bill are entirely verbal, with the exception of two. The first occurs in the clause which relates to the receiving of aids by the railway in the shape of bonuses, lands and so on. This provision in the Bill is that the Company shall be authorized to receive from the Government of Canada or from the Government of any Province, or from any corporations, aids with respect to the undertaking in the shape of lands, bonuses and so on, and that they shall be at liberty afterwards to sell and dispose of the same. So far as that goes, the Bill was perfectly correct and there was no amendment; but there was a condition to this effect—That it shall be lawful for the said Governments and corporations to do so. We have no power to do that, and, besides, it was a dangerous precedent to establish, for the reason that it gave an unlimited power to the Government of Canada or any other Government to grant any number of subsidies for the promotion of this railway. We therefore struck it out, and gave the Company authority to receive aids the same way as other companies. The other was an amendment with respect to the clause for the issuing of bonds, where we introduced the ordinary requirements that at any meeting for the purpose the Company shall be represented by the two-thirds at least in value of the stock, by person or by proxy, so that the majority of two-thirds would be required to act in that respect.

HON. MR. CLEMOW moved that the amendments be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was then read the third time and passed.

A QUESTION OF PROCEDURE.

HON. MR. POWER—I wish to call attention to a matter with reference to the procedure of the Railway Committee, which, I think, comes in properly now. It may be remembered that amongst the bills which were referred to the Railway Committee—the report on which we have had from the Chairman to-day—there was a bill entitled "An Act further to amend the Consolidated Railway Act." That Bill was thrown out in committee, and a question of procedure has arisen in connection with it, which I think proper to bring before the notice of the House, in order to have the decision of His Honor the Speaker on the question. It was held by the Chairman of the Committee, and I think by the majority of the Committee, that there was no necessity for making any report to the House in connection with the Bill. I humbly submit that the decision of the Chairman in that matter was incorrect, and I shall refer the Speaker to one or two authorities on the subject. Rule 67 of this House says:—

"The committee to which a private bill may have been referred shall report the same to the Senate in every case."

An hon. gentleman behind me suggests that that refers to a private bill. It is quite true that this is not strictly speaking a private bill, but it was referred to that committee as though it were a private bill; and the reasons which require the committee to report on a private bill require still more urgently that they should report on a public bill which affects the whole country. On that point I refer to Bourinot, page 658:—

"By the rule previously cited, the committee to which a bill may have been referred, 'shall report the same to the House in every case'; and when it is decided not to go on with the bill, it is proper to move in the House for its withdrawal. In case the committee do not report with reference to a bill, the House should take cognizance of the matter. 'It is the duty of every committee to report to the House the bill that has been committed to them,' says the best English authority."

I do not propose to read any more to show that the authorities are in favor of the reasonable and proper view. This House, by reading the Bill the second time, in a certain measure endorsed the principle of it. It was referred to the Committee; and it was clearly the duty of the Committee to report it back to the House with a recommendation, if they thought proper, that the Bill should be deferred for six months, or that the introducer have leave to withdraw it. I am myself opposed to the Bill, but I think that the action of the Committee might form an undesirable precedent, and I consider it my duty to bring it to the notice of the House.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I agree with the member from Halifax who has thought proper to make some remarks with regard to the action of the Chairman of the Committee in not reporting this Bill.

HON. MR. POWER—Not specially with regard to the action of the Chairman—I did not mean to reflect on the Chairman.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—We ought by our committee reports certainly to show the fate of such a bill as that. This Bill was introduced by Mr. Dalton McCarthy, M.P., an eminent barrister of Toronto, and it was shown by the hon. gentleman from Ottawa (Mr. Scott) to be a bill clearly brought in for a special case, a very unworthy object, and I do not think Parliament ought to let a matter of that sort drop without marking its displeasure at members of Parliament, barristers, bringing in skilfully worded bills which are hurried through the lower House, and when they come to us we find them brought in for a special purpose, bills of a most reprehensible character which the Senator who introduced them thought he would smuggle through, and by which gross injustice would be done. Because they are skilled lawyers, they think they will by their legal acumen draw Bills so complicated in their character that they can get them through, and then gross injustice is done in the courts of law.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I suppose it will be expected that I should make an explanation with regard to this matter as, although my hon. friend has very courteously not charged me with anything, his remarks affect me as one of the majority in the Committee. I understand my hon. friend to say that the bill was thrown out by the Committee. In that he is wrong. The bill was not thrown out or reported upon in any way whatever.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—It was objected to.

HON. MR. DICKEY—In the first place it was a public bill. The authorities my hon. friend has cited are entirely inapplicable, because it is not a private bill. For convenience, and in order that all parties might be heard, it was thought better to refer it to the Committee as the more convenient mode of ascertaining what ought to be done with the Bill. It lay over for the purpose of having the amendments printed that were proposed to be made. When the amendments were printed the Bill came up before us to be considered to-day. It was talked over by several members, and one of the members of the Government said it was a very proper case in which the Bill might stand over until next session, and it might be withdrawn. The hon. member from York, who was in charge of the Bill, then rose and said he withdrew it.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—When the Committee objected to receive it.

HON. MR. DICKEY—The Bill was withdrawn. At the same time, I stated on the spur of the moment, whether correctly or not, that it was open to any member who objected to the course taken or wished to consider the measure further, to make a motion in the House, after giving due notice, to do anything that he pleased with the bill. It was in the hands of the House if they thought proper to deal with it after it was withdrawn, so that there would be no injustice done. That was the view that I took of it and, accordingly, with the concurrence of the majority of the Committee, I considered that there was nothing for me to report. The Bill was withdrawn: there was an end of it. That was the view I took of it, and I wish to make that explanation.

HON. MR. POWER—I forgot to say that the member in charge of the bill expressed a desire to withdraw it. My opinion is after a bill has been introduced, and certainly after having been read the second time and referred to a committee, it is not the property of any member, but of the House.

THE SPEAKER—It is true that the rule cited by the hon. member from Halifax refers to private bills and it is also correct that the authorities cited from Bourinot refer to private bills: nevertheless I am inclined to the opinion that the same rule applies to public bills when referred to select or special committees. A special committee of this House or a committee of the whole has no power to deal finally with any bill. The House alone has power to do so. A bill cannot be withdrawn in committee: it can only be withdrawn by leave of the House. Every bill that is sent to a select or special committee must be reported upon, no matter what the decision of the committee may be with regard to it: otherwise the House could not keep track of the public business. No action of a committee is valid or has any force until it is ratified by the House. A committee has only a delegated authority, and anything it does under that delegated authority amounts to nothing unless it is ratified by the House. Although the cases cited are in reference to private bills I think the same principle must apply with equal force to public bills—when sent to any of the Standing Committees of the House. A Select Committee must report to the Senate its action on any bill referred to it whether public or private. In addition to the authorities cited by the hon. member from Halifax, I find here in May an authority exactly in point. It will be found at page 809 of the 8th edition, and is as follows:—

HON. MR. DICKEY.

“If the parties acquaint the committee that they do not desire to proceed with a bill that fact is reported to the House and the bill may be ordered to be withdrawn. It cannot be withdrawn in the committee.”

I think it is the duty of the committee to report every bill sent them, whether public or private, and although I have given my opinion without having made any particular research, I have little doubt that the principle asserted by the hon. member from Halifax is right.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I wish to express my concurrence in the views expressed by the hon. member from Halifax and the decision of the Speaker. There is one point to which attention has been directed which shows that our practice is not in accordance with the rules laid down. For instance, a very few days ago the House in committee had a bill before it which was not reported. There was a motion that the Chairman leave the Chair, which was adopted, and nothing was reported to the Speaker or to the House, consequently we should be careful to bring our practice in harmony with the rule. I certainly coincide with the views of the hon. member from Halifax, and did at the time in committee.

THE SPEAKER—What I said just now was that no Special Committee, or Committee of the Whole, has power to finally dispose of a bill. The Committee the other day did not finally dispose of the bill before them: the bill is still alive and may be put on the orders and proceeded with. Any gentleman who wishes to put that bill upon the orders may do so at any time, and the House can proceed with it.

HON. MR. VIDAL—Is not the bill which is now under discussion in exactly the same position? I do not myself see any difference in the action taken in the Committee of the Whole, and the action taken by the Railway Committee this morning. The bill was simply dropped and no report was made upon it.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Chair, chair!

HON. MR. VIDAL—I simply ask for information. I bow to the decision of the chair with the greatest respect and I fully approve of the decision.

THE SPEAKER—The rule referred to here applies to bills before special or select committees. A bill referred to committee of the whole is subject to different rules and for evident reasons. The Bill to which the hon. member for Sarnia refers was dropped under a special rule and practice of parliament only applicable to committees of the whole. No similar proceeding could take place before a select or special committee. The action of a committee of the whole is patent to the House. Not so the action of a select committee. But even before a committee of the whole, a bill could not be withdrawn. There is no analogy between the two cases, as stated by the member from Sarnia.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE moved.
That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House, copies of all reports which may have been made by Inspector Moylan, or by any other persons appointed by the Government for that purpose, on and upon the occasion of the escapes in 1881, of certain persons named Herwood and Williams, then prisoners at St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary; as well as copies of all evidence taken at the enquiries which preceded these reports, and also copies of all other documents forming part of the record thereof.

HON. MR. DICKEY—There is no objection to the Address.

The motion was agreed to.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE moved
That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House, a copy of the report upon the enquiry made by Inspector Moylan into certain complaints or charges made against Romuald Gadbois, one of the employees at St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, at the end of the year 1884, or the commencement of the year 1885, together with copies of the evidence taken and all of other documents forming part of the record thereof.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I am instructed to state, with regard to that motion, that there will be no objection to the Address.

The motion was agreed to.

CATHOLIC REPRESENTATION IN THE CABINET.

MOTION.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE moved:—

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before this House, the Patent of appointment, or copy thereof, of John O'Donohoe to the Privy Council, a copy of letters of the Right Honorable Sir John Macdonald to their Lordships certain Bishops of the Province of Ontario, and all other letters and papers, and a copy of all Orders in Council in reference to said appointment or the cancellation thereof.

He said: For some time past considerable attention has been given to the subject upon which I am about to make some remarks. Questions were put and answered in the House of Commons which have been commented upon very largely throughout the Dominion, and I must say that almost any other duty would be more pleasing to myself than to dwell upon a matter in which I am personally concerned. But as a member of this House I feel it a duty to the Senate as well as to myself, to state as briefly as I can the nature of these proceedings. For the greater part of my own life I have been a member of the Liberal party of Canada, particularly in Ontario. From my boyhood upwards I worked with them. I had thorough faith in the principles of their policy. My fellow-countrymen and co-religionists in the Province of Ontario were one with them during the early period of our difficulties. When Downing Street ruled and Baldwin and Lafontaine were leaders of the Liberal party, the Catholic people of Ontario were one with them and continued so. Afterwards a good deal of irritation arose between Upper and Lower Canada on the issues of representation by population, the school question and various other matters of that kind. They were spoken of by a wing of the Reform party, led by the Hon. George Brown, in language so strong, so vituperative and abusive that the Catholics who, up to that time, had been part and parcel of the Liberal party, had to withdraw from it. They had no alternative. They then joined the Conservative party, finding that party yielding more of those particular demands on which they insisted than the party with which they had been acting. They continued supporting Sir John Macdonald and his party firmly and almost unanimously until 1871. During a period of 20 years or more they had supported that party. In 1871 they met, by calling members of their body from all parts of the Province and outside of the Province together to take counsel with one another as to their then position. They found upon consultation that although they had been supporting the Conservative party in all matters of representation, in all matters of honor and emolument they themselves had no place. They found that they were only used at times of elections to support Sir John Macdonald and his party. They bore their share of the public burdens; they bore more than their share in the political battles of the country, for both parties were in unison, at all events on one point, to vie with each other in their generosity in allowing them all the honors of the hardest battles that had to be fought, and often left them the honor of the field. These were the honors that were conferred upon our people, but to look for them in the Senate, in the House of Commons, or in the Legislative Assembly was to look for them in vain. They then decided that they should no longer continue in that position. They put themselves in communication with both political parties and found that while both of them were willing at all times to avail themselves of the support of our people, neither was willing to do full or fair justice. The Irish Catholics insisted that they should continue in that groove no longer, but should look for representation, believing that all other matters which belonged of right to them would follow. They found that with the Liberal party of that day they were more likely to succeed in securing that representation than they were with the Conservative party. During all this time I myself took a pretty active interest with the Liberal party in seeking to obtain representation of our people. In 1871, they founded an association called the Catholic League, in which members of the hierarchy, reverend clergymen, and the masses of the people joined. On the next election succeeding that event, we found in the elections for the Assembly that both the Conservatives and the Liberals vied with each other as to which of them would exhibit the greatest degree of liberality in this respect, and we found as the result of our labors and our organization that for the first time in our history in Ontario we were approaching a fair representation in that House, with one distinguished member in the Cabinet, the Hon. Christopher Finlay Fraser. That was our position in those days, and it so continued and would still continue if the Reform party had remained in opposition, but when the Liberal party under the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie got power, he seemed to forget himself—seemed to forget his undertakings—seemed to forget the very people who were the highest element in placing him in office. A large and influential body of our people came down here to wait upon him on this question, and in meeting with them he refused to listen to that delegation while one of them was present who was not friendly to his Government. This was treatment to which we were not prepared to submit—conduct to which we could not submit; we were pledged to our own people all along that while we took away the power of our people from Sir John Macdonald and brought it to Mr. Mackenzie and made him successful, that the day the Liberal party attained power, if they did not do our people justice, we, who advised them to support the Reform party, would be the first to abandon and withdraw our confidence from them. That was the position of things in 1878 when the National Policy was initiated. On that occasion, and in order to avenge ourselves upon Mr. Mackenzie for his conduct, we joined ourselves together. Our people are very largely mechanics and of the laboring class. An additional inducement to the desire to have revenge upon the leader of the Reform party, was the inducement of qualified protection, which we believed would be beneficial to Canada, and towards that point we leaned, and we fell in, many of us, as did many of the leading Reformers of Ontario, at all events, for the sake of that issue, and gave our support to the Conservative party. Many of them had gone to stay in the ranks of that party, but a very large number of them, I have no doubt, fell back from time to time again into the ranks of the political party to which they belonged, and whose principles they upheld. I took a strong part in the elections of that time, and continued giving my support in every way I could to the Conservative party until towards 1882. The elections of 1882 were coming on, and much correspondence took place between Sir John Macdonald and myself. He knew very well our purpose; he knew that we were united as a people upon one point—representation—particularly representation in the Cabinet. Having no representation in the House of Commons, being the minority in Ontario, it became of paramount importance to us to have in the Cabinet at all events some representation. He himself, unsolicited by me, offered me a seat in the Cabinet and in the Senate. After conferring with my friends, and they having acquiesced in that arrangement, it was consented to, and shortly afterwards the right hon. gentleman wrote a letter offering me a seat in the Senate. I did not understand that exactly. The arrangement once made with a man in his position, made when many were present, made where it was well understood, I considered just as good and as binding as if it had been on parchment. There was considerable correspondence, much of which I cannot use because of its being private, or intended to be private, but the last one was:—

That was on the 23rd of May, after a good deal of correspondence.

HON. MR. MCINNES (B.C.)—In what year?

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—In 1882. On the 23rd May he telegraphed me “I write.” In answer to that telegram he was written to as follows:—

“25th May, 1882.—Sir John Macdonald, Ottawa—Letter received. Does the letter mean that our people in this Province shall have no seat in the Cabinet? If so their protest will be prompt and unanimous.

J. O'DONOHUE.”

Then he came to Toronto, and invited us to the residence of the Hon. D. L. Macpherson. We met there. The Hon. Mr. Smith, the Hon. David Macpherson, Mr. Boyle, Mr. Shields, and the Premier; and on that occasion he signified his full adherence to the arrangement he had made, and declared his intention of carrying it out. He presented on that occasion the patent of appointment, executed and signed by the Marquis of Lorne. Every thing was done and perfected. Then it was expected that we should, of course, give all the support in our power and bring all the influence to bear that we could for the support of the Administration. We did so, and we issued an address to the people of Canada, signed by Mr. Smith, Mr. Costigan, and myself. Before letting it go abroad we desired to have the matter communicated to our bishops so that they would understand the position of affairs, and Sir John Macdonald on that occasion wrote to them this letter:

TORONTO, June 5th, 1882.

(Private and confidential.)

My dear Lord,—Mr. O'Donohue will tell you of the tempest that has been raised here in Toronto on account of the supposition that his views are extreme as to the Irish question.

This might destroy his future, and it has therefore been arranged between the Hon. Frank Smith and O'Donohue that the former is to represent the Irish Catholics in the Cabinet, while O'Donohue will get a seat in the Senate.

Frank Smith is to make way for O'Donohue in the Ministry when they think the time is opportune. Those two gentlemen are acting in perfect accord, and desire that I should explain to Your Lordship the nature of their arrangement which of course must be kept a profound secret for the present.

Believe me, my dear Lord,

Faithfully yours,

(Sgd), JOHN A. MACDONALD.

HON. MR. MCINNES—To whom was that letter addressed?

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—To certain bishops. That letter having been sent, the letters were given to me to deliver. They were read, conned over and considered in the presence of all whom I have named. On that being done, an address was signed by the three to whom I have referred, from which I will take the liberty of reading a passage or two :

"In 1871 the Catholic League, composed of Irish Catholics of both shades of politics, was formed for the purpose of securing some measures of representation for the Irish Catholic people. Prior to that, the Irish Catholics of Ontario had been, practically, unrepresented. Negotiations, honorable alike to all parties concerned, were opened with the party leaders of those days, the result being that our people cast their votes mainly for the Reform candidates.

One of us (Mr. O'Donohoe) declared from the first, that if the Liberal party with which he was then acting should prove recreant to its pledges, he would be the first to avenge such a breach of faith by voting and working against it.

We qualified our adhesion to the National Party by declaring that if the Government of Sir John Macdonald did not carry out its pledges, our support should forthwith be withdrawn from it. But as you are aware, Sir John Macdonald has not merely done what he promised but excelled his promise. The tariff now in operation has given the Canadian manufacturer and the Canadian mechanic that protection without which the successful prosecution of their industries had become impossible. From 1874 until 1878 we had depression; now we have prosperity; then we had gloom and despondency, poor wages and poverty; now we can, crediting the Government with their due, thank Providence that a better state of things has set in.

The undesigned appeal therefore to their fellow countrymen, no matter what may be their creed, to judge them and the Ministry which they have the honor to support, not fairly only but generously. We do not hesitate, however, to declare to you that should the Ministry of which we are the supporters, slight or neglect either our Irish Protestant or our Irish Catholic countrymen or prove untrue to the principles of the National Policy, we shall at once withdraw our support and appeal to those whose good and kindly offices we owe such influence as we may possess."

From that one of my hon. friends here a few moments ago stated that which has been asserted in many another place—that I sold my party. Of course I give him leave to take all the pleasure he pleases from that. I have had one object in view in politics all my life. I believe that in a country like Canada, in which there is one law for all, the people should be upon an equality. I believe that no class of people should be, from their nationality or creed, repressed. I believe that there should be generosity from the majority to the minority in every country—that the minority should not only get that degree of position to which it is entitled according to numbers, but even more. That would be the way to make the whole people feel content and happy. Has it been so with us? I have related enough to have hon. gentlemen understand that we were not idle in supporting parties and hon. gentlemen must also be aware that on every occasion we were supporting Protestant parties—being Catholics had no effect in keeping us back from aiding Protestants to places of position. I myself have stood on platforms of Ontario with the late Hon. George Brown in many of the counties in Ontario, at a time when my co-religionists looked upon me as a man that no Catholic could stand by. Times have changed; and he was found, after these questions which irritated the country and in which he was such a factor had been settled and buried, to be one of the most anxious men in the whole of Ontario to deal liberally and generously with the minority in this province. How have we treated the minorities where the Catholic people have the power? Take Ireland? There you find Catholic constituencies electing Protestants over and over again, making them their leaders. How do you find Protestant England? In the whole of Great Britain only two Irish Catholics are sent to the House of Commons. What a contrast! Coming out to this country to Quebec, we find in Quebec there are 65 representatives, 13 of whom are Protestants, and of that 13 many are elected where the Catholic vote is in the ascendency. We find that at Confederation the Protestants having representation from Ontario, the Catholics having none. We find 12 or 13 of the constituencies of Quebec walled in. We find the Constitutional Act providing that no change can be made in those constituencies which up to that time had been supporting Protestant candidates, without the consent and approbation of the people living within them. There was a protection thrown about the Protestant minority in Quebec. Where was the protection thrown about the Catholic minority in Ontario? None at all. Why? Because we had no representatives there so that representation became the paramount object with us. We find how much we suffered in every respect from want of representation. We find how much our young men suffered from it. We find from the present government that the public offices in Ontario are being turned into Orange lodges, that the Custom House and the Post Office are being filled in the same way. We find the Customs represented in the Cabinet by the Ex-Grand Master Mackenzie Bowell. We find the Customs houses in Ontario nothing less than Orange lodges. Our Catholic young men get an education just as good as any young men in the province. They pass examinations for the Civil Service, but they have no civil service positions to obtain. They see their neighbors being appointed to office. They have an opportunity of looking on but they cannot touch them. They have no representatives to advance their interests and because they have not they must either pursue some other occupation or leave the province. In order that there shall be no doubt at all about the state of things in the province of Quebec, I mention the names of Protestants who represent 13 constituencies in that province.

These are all Protestant gentlemen and no man in Quebec or elsewhere is prouder of that fact than I am. I believe in liberality to the minority. I believe that the hand of the strong should ever be stretched forward to lift the weak and to make them happy and make them feel that those who are stronger than themselves are capable of extending to them the hand of succor. How is it in Ontario? We have, as against 65 representatives in the House of Commons from Quebec, 98 members from Ontario.

HON. MR. PLUMB—92.

HON. MR. O'DOHOHOE—Then 92. If my hon. friend will turn to Bourinot he will find the correct figures. We are one-sixth of the population of Ontario by the last census. What representation have we in the Commons? We have two Irish Catholics, one Frenchman elected in Ontario and one Scotchman, Mr. Dawson, from Algoma. Notwithstanding our efforts for party that is where we are placed. I know well that here, as outside, in bringing up these questions they are most distasteful to Protestant gentlemen. They say "that man is a nuisance who brings forward these questions and bores us with the names of Catholic, Irishman and religion." But hon. gentlemen will have to bear it and must be content to bear it until common justice is done us. We have four representatives from the province of Ontario; we have nobody in the Cabinet from Ontario. When the arrangement was made in Toronto for the appointment of one of us to the Cabinet it leaked out, and at once an Orange procession was organized in the city of Toronto and they marched in their war paint up to the park, where Sir John Macdonald was sojourning. They marched there and they said to him "Sir John, that man O'Donohoe is objectionable to us; you must not appoint him to the Cabinet. If you do we will raise the lodges throughout the land and hurl you and your ministry from power forever." That was the threat. That is what they did. They were not content with having themselves full representation in the Cabinet there. They are not content with having representation everywhere. They never heard—nobody ever did—of a Catholic coming forward and saying, "You must not appoint that Orangeman." On the contrary, I myself went into the counties and helped to elect Orangemen. John Grey who is dead did the same. We helped to elect them notwithstanding they were Orangemen; but the instant a Catholic is brought forward for appointment to any position, then the Orange lodges go to work and tell Sir John Macdonald that these appointments must not be made. Sir John leans upon that power; he gives his influence and adhesion to that power because without it he would not have a crutch upon which to lean in our Province, and therefore he supports it, and therefore he panders. But that is our position. And what does Sir John Macdonald do? He finds his difficulty still; he did not come and say

"Well O'Donohoe, we find the Orangemen will not take you, but they are willing to take Smith; they will not take you; you are too Irish for them altogether;" So when I say we have not representation in the Cabinet, I mean to say the Catholics have none there because Mr. Smith is put there by the favor of the Orangemen, and that is the body he is representing there and not the Catholics. He is there without a portfolio. He is but an ornament—he is here leading the Government; that is his position. There are times when he attends—that is when his business at home will admit of it. There are some occasions that he makes sure to be here. If there is a very large bonus to be obtained for a railway of which he is a Director, he really can feel young again and become one of the boys. If a change is to be made in the tariff there is no man knows better the value of a little information upon such an occasion than my hon. friend, Senator Smith. Sir John Macdonald has not stated the fact in this letter. The hon. gentleman had agreed—he had pressed upon me in my own house to come into the arrangement; he appealed to me that I knew very well that he did not want to be there, that he had too much to go through, and to go there merely to bridge over this Orange tempest, for while Sir John Macdonald calls it a little tempest, that is the tempest it was—a tempest of his friends. I am neither ashamed nor afraid to leave these matters to reasonable and sensible men as hon. gentlemen are. I think it is only right and proper that it should be known throughout the length and breadth of the land that this is the state of things in our province. We find in Newfoundland, when one of our creed and nationality is offered the Governorship of that province, that the Orange body there organize and send home to England and get that appointment cancelled. We find when we come to Kingston that the late James O'Reilly was appointed a judge, but the Orangemen came down to Sir Alex. Campbell and appealed to him to erase his name from the parchment and reduce that gentleman who had been all his lifetime a supporter of the Conservative party. That is the power the Orangemen are exercising over us. Political power is what they want. Shakespeare says: "He takes my life who takes the means by which I live." Take pabulum and political power from them and they go down without a blow. For this the Catholics of Ontario are themselves largely to blame. They have been voting for them and giving them power which is simply used against themselves. Any liberal Protestant who wishes to get into parliament or into any high position considers the best mode of doing it. How does he reason with himself? "I will first go into the Orange lodge. By getting there I will secure myself the Orange vote, and although I do that I know I can get my Catholic friends to vote for me, and by thus combining forces I will be successful." That is the way we help to take away liberal Protestants and make Orangemen of them. We have here, as well as elsewhere, Catholics well described by Archbishop Croke. He says: "There are Tory Orange Catholics who are always ready to sell country and creed for party, plunder and pelf." So there are; but there are very few, thank God! My hon. friend keeps up the reciprocity with these people. A difficulty arose a few days ago in the city of Toronto between the Street Car Company and their employes, and he says to the public, "I have eighty per cent. of them Orangemen." That accounts for the profound peace and want of strikes in the Street Car Company of Toronto. Following the question of representation, if we received the same proportion according to our population that Quebec does we should have 17 members in the House of Commons, or, according to our population, at the very least 15. We want, as soon as possible, to get up to that position, and we want to have our Protestant friends understand that we are willing to help them, but not entirely to our own exclusion. They say, and their press says, "Oh, you are arguing this thing on religious principles; that is most distasteful. Why should you bring religion into politics?" I simply answer that by saying "We bring it up because you exclude us because we are Catholics; we bring it up to prevent our exclusion on account of our religion, and that is the way you treat us." You have heard the answers which the right hon. gentleman gave in the other House in reply to questions put to him with regard to these appointments.

I do not know what to make of them. Up to the opening of the present session the hon. gentleman always felt as anxious to carry out what is termed in some places Sir John Macdonald's quibble, as he was on the very day I did my utmost to put an end to the matter, but some of you may have had the pleasure of intercourse with him. It is difficult to break with him. He makes you almost feel that his last word is the Gospel itself.

HON. MR. MCINNES (B. C.)—The fifth and last Gospel—the Gospel according to Sir John.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—Yes, the Gospel according to Sir John. The correspondence would be more consecutive and connected if it had not been for the words "private and confidential," and there are very few of his letters without them. This is a letter sent to him on the 14th July, 1883 :—

"I have been daily expecting to hear from you since 14th ult. At my interview with you at end of the session you said you would have a full meeting of Council, with Smith present, on that date. Not hearing from you on the subject then referred to, I asked Smith and Boyle to meet me. We met to-day, when Smith said that he was no party to the arrangement mentioned in your letter, of which for easy reference I enclose a copy. You will easily judge my surprise at his taking such an attitude. He seemed both to admit that there was a telegram from the Governor General to you—that he had signed my appointment to the Cabinet. Even when Mr. Boyle assured him that he had seen the appointment signed and sealed by the Governor General, he simply remarked that he did not want to be "cornered." I called his attention to our joint address, appealing to the Catholics of the province, particularly the Irish Catholics, for their support of your government on the ground of representation being accorded. It would be no less than obtaining, or attempting to obtain their support by false pretences to allege to them that Mr. Smith warming a seat in the Cabinet when he liked, constituted representation. Such a view would be considered a huge sham. Surely sufficient time has elapsed to warrant me in setting myself right with you and our people. I therefore, my dear Sir John, ask from you a frank explanation of his position."

To that the reply was that they were to meet immediately and Mr. Smith would be present. On the 29th October 1885 —which I intended to be the ending of the matter—I wrote him reminding him of the promise that we were to have a meeting on the first of October.

TORONTO, 29th October, 1885.

My dear Sir John :—

The first of October has come and gone. You intended seeing me here about that time. May I now expect that you will communicate to me definitely your views as to the subject of intended interview had you come up. This is now fairly due to me. It would be better not postponed further. Representation, you know, was the aim. The travesty of it has lasted long enough. Depend upon it, Sir John, there is a smouldering fire which if not quenched will soon become uncontrollable. I am subpoenaed to Ottawa on the 6th prox., Should you rather see me there then, write—kindly meantime let me know.

Yours faithfully,

J. O'DONOHUE.

There are some who have gone so far as to allege that the rousing of the Orange procession was inspired by himself. I never believed that; I do not believe it now. I have no objection to my hon. friend, the leader of the Government here, becoming a member of any association he likes, but I have a great objection to his pretending to be representing Catholics while he is representing Orangemen. Look at the Cabinet! Sir John is an Orangeman; Mackenzie Bowell is an Orangeman. Tom White, it is said, is one.

HON. GENTLEMEN—No, no.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—If my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Clemow) says no, I will take it as good authority. At all events it is hard to blame them. They say "if you take away from us the Orange vote or break it up in any way, you take our lives. We cannot exist without that organization. We can have that body all over the country, but we cannot make sure of the Catholics. You are generally known as the breed that we do not like." That expression, and its meaning, are terribly modified as you approach a general election. If a general election was announced for three or four months hence you would find the most white headed boys of all Canada were the Catholics. You would find Sir John Macdonald patting them on the back and saying he would rather let the Orangemen go down the stream than do the Catholics an injury.

That is his way. I do not speak, remember, of other Provinces or their representation. I only advert to our own Province and to the minority there. I say we are absolutely without any representation in the Cabinet; we are the same as without any in the House of Commons, and we have no place in the public offices. That is our position hon. gentlemen. I trust when any of you have an opportunity that you will use your influence to change that invidious state of things. I have gone through those remarks with a good deal of fear and trembling; there is so much that is religious that I was very much afraid that some hon. gentlemen would grow impatient. I have said all on this occasion that I intend to say, beyond this, that undoubtedly shortly there will be an opportunity of righting those wrongs. Before long the Government will be required to go to the people, and I have no doubt that when they do appeal to the country it will be the last of them. Their acts are viewed by the enlightened people of this Dominion as corrupt. They stand to-day in the eyes of the community as a stranded old hulk that is about to be dashed by the waves against the rocks, in the storm of public opinion which is gathering, and will drive them from power forever. They are not the Government for a country like this. They are a Government sustained by plunder of their supporters, by charter selling, by bribery, by every sort of corruption. That is not the kind of Government that this young country of ours, great by nature and with a great destiny, should possess. A time is coming when the people of Canada will find amongst her own sons one to lead them on—to whom they can look for power—that will not lean upon any secret society, or political-religious secret combination. They will find one to lead them who will depend upon the people's support in doing to the whole people entire justice—who will not buy them or hold them by self-interest as they are now held. Every day is causing to ooze out the price that members have been receiving for their support. That must come to an end—the sooner it comes to an end the better. Let people who love Canada and desire its future prosperity rally to the support of a man of illustrious family, possessed of great power, who is pure in every sense of the word—a man that Canadians can speak of without having to blush for this truckling, this trickery, this mean device that is used to keep the present Administration in power. Such a day is shortly to come; I wish it were to-morrow, because then I think there would be an end to one of the most corrupt systems of Government that ever any country had to deal with. What do we find in this effete Administration? We find the country pouring out its millions; we find the blood of her bravest citizens deluging its fruitful soil—why? Because we have an incapable Administration. What was it all about? The power of Canada was set in motion to capture two lunatics, Louis Riel and Jackson. That is what all our money went for; that is what the blood of our people was shed for; that is what so many homes in this land were cast in mourning for—that is why so many have to mourn the loss of brothers, sons or husbands. This is the result of an effete Administration, men who are fitter to be retired from the world than in the exercise of active life and administration. Who will say that Sir David Macpherson, now roaming through Germany after his inactivity here, had not much to do with these evils? Who will say that any one man of them was fit for active life in a great country like the North-West? The consequence has been such that as long as the history of Canada is read there will be found attached to the present Administration this disgraceful episode, and the Administration conducting its affairs at the present time will forever stand known as the bloody Administration of Sir John Macdonald.

HON. MR. SMITH—Before answering this motion I wish to say a few words in reply to the hon. member who has moved it. I do not intend to make a speech, or to go so far back as 1871, as he has thought proper to do. I shall, to a great extent, confine myself to what took place, to my knowledge, in 1882, the time when, as the hon. gentleman alleges, the premier of this country acted a false part. I will give the facts as I recollect them, and if I make any mistake, it is because the subject on which I speak did not occur in my presence. I am only accountable for what I personally know. Previous to the last general election in 1882, Sir John Macdonald and Sir David Macpherson met in Toronto. They sent for me and offered me a seat in the Cabinet in the Conservative interest. I was then, as I am now, a Conservative. I thanked them for the great honor they had conferred on me by such an invitation. It was one which I had never expected. I said "the honor is a great one, but I cannot under any consideration accept the position. In the first place, I am not well up in parliamentary practice: I have never had the time or the opportunity to study it: I am not fit to represent the Catholic people of Ontario, and I would be better pleased if you would select a more suitable representative than I am." I said, further, that my business would scarcely allow me to be away from Toronto and it would be unbecoming of me to take a position in the Catholic interest where I could not do them justice. This was at the first meeting. They pressed me very strongly, but I declined—positively declined. The question then arose—who was the man that the Catholics would require to represent them in the Cabinet? I made a mistake on that occasion. That mistake has brought trouble on me and on the Conservative Government from that day until now. I acted from a friendly motive. I made the suggestion with the best possible feeling towards a countryman of my own—one who had persecuted me for 15 years before that—a countryman who, whenever he could intrigue against me, did so and that is the gentleman who has just addressed you. Of course I am speaking of political intrigue. Notwithstanding all that, he had helped the Conservative party a few years before 1882 to some extent or, if he had not, he pretended to help us: but I think he was honest in his efforts, and did all he could to help the Conservative party. For that reason, being an Irishman and a Catholic, and an early acquaintance of mine in my boyhood in Toronto, I thought it my duty to give his name first to the Government, and insist upon his being taken into the Cabinet. As I have said I made a mistake on that occasion; I did not ask my Catholic friends to meet—I did not consult them, and let them say who should go into the Cabinet. I proposed Mr. O'Donohoe, and the recommendation was considered. I think negotiations were going on for nearly two days, and I kept out of the way. After the lapse of a couple of days I was requested by Sir John Macdonald to meet himself and the Hon. D. L. Macpherson. When I did meet them Mr. O'Donohoe was there present with his friend Mr. Boyle. The negotiations were still going on; difficulties were arising. The trouble was very great, and the Conservative party, not only the Conservative Protestants but the Conservative Catholics, pressed on me in the strongest possible manner not to have Mr. O'Donohoe taken into the Cabinet. Every Irish Catholic that has met me, with one exception, to this hour has blamed me for advising that that hon. gentleman should be taken into the cabinet, and that one gentleman was Mr. Boyle. With that exception I was bitterly condemned by all. I was called upon by several: everywhere I went in the city of Toronto I was told "Smith you have made a mistake." My reply was "perhaps I have: if so I am sorry for it. I have made mistakes in my lifetime, and if this is one I am sorry for it." Some gentlemen said to me "we will never support the government of which John O'Donohoe is a member," and those were Irish Catholics.

HON. MR. O'DONOHOE—Name them.

HON. MR. SMITH—It is not necessary to name them: if the hon gentleman thinks it is necessary I will call a meeting in Toronto and show him who they are. The negotiations still went on, and I said, after considerable time, "this is a very strange affair." I supposed that Mr. O'Donohoe would be accepted in the Cabinet and that everything would go on well. I was lead to suppose that the pressure was too great from the Conservative party—not from the Orangemen alone, but Catholics as well as Protestants:—

HON. MR. O'DONOHOE—What about the procession?

HON. MR. SMITH—I never heard of the procession before the hon. gentleman made use of those words. I believe in my heart there was no such thing as a procession. I never heard of it until he spoke of a procession a moment ago. After the negotiation in the Hon. D. L. Macpherson's house, they pressed on Mr. O'Donohoe the necessity of withdrawing, as they thought he was going to be a great trouble to them.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—Who pressed on them my withdrawal?

HON. MR. SMITH—I did not interrupt the hon. gentleman. Just allow me to proceed.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—That is a proper question.

HON. MR. SMITH—After finding that the pressure was great, Mr. O'Donohoe then consented to withdraw, and in doing so he knew that they wanted me to accept the position. After considerable negotiation I said to Sir John Macdonald, "This will complicate things very much. I do not want the position. I have all that I want. I know that others would like the position—that many Catholic gentlemen could represent the Catholic people very much better than I can, and therefore I am willing that they should do so." But no, I was pressed to take a seat in the Cabinet and do what I could for the benefit of the Roman Catholic people. I said: "What will become of Mr. O'Donohoe if I take a seat in the Cabinet now? He will fall between two stools, as it were, or between two parties: for the party he did work with formerly would not touch him at all."

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—You will see.

HON. MR. SMITH—"Our party—my friends—the Catholic people, will say that I am too greedy, that I want everything. Now, that is not the case; I do not want it. To compromise this matter I will tell you gentlemen what I will do if it is satisfactory to the powers that be: I will take a seat in the Cabinet without pay or portfolio if you will appoint Mr. O'Donohoe to the Senate." That was the first I heard of Mr. O'Donohoe going to the Senate. I pressed the matter and said positively I would not take a seat in the Cabinet and leave him out altogether. I said so and I stuck to it. I said "not only shall the promise be carried out, but it shall be done to-night." I said so sitting in Hon. D. L. Macpherson's parlor. I said further, "don't be afraid, because I know what I am talking about. If I am mistaken in that, and that my views and my advice to-night will not prove beneficial to the Conservative party, I tell you I will resign my seat in the Senate, and never sit there again." I added, "Give Mr. O'Donohoe the seat in the Senate; I will accept the seat in the Cabinet without portfolio, and if that does not bring the Government back to Ottawa with fifteen majority at least from Ontario, I will never predict anything again." Mr. Macpherson appealed to me and said that was a very bold assertion. I replied "Never mind, I know what I am talking about, and I do not care whether I ever take a seat in the Senate again." I said "If I want to get into Parliament I can go to a dozen constituencies in Ontario and be elected." I said so then, and I say it again; I am not afraid to appeal to the people of this country, although my hon. friend has insisted that I do not represent the Catholic people, but that I represent the Orangemen of Ontario. I have never flinched from Catholic representation when it was necessary to come forward and do so. I never turned my back on a meeting when it was necessary to stand by my fellow countrymen.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—I never saw you at the Parnell meetings.

HON. MR. SMITH—No, it was not becoming of me, from the position I occupy, to be at a Parnell meeting. I know better than to be at a Parnell meeting; but when it was necessary to bring pressure to bear for Ireland at the time that Mr. Costigan's resolutions were put through Parliament I was one of the most prominent supporters of those resolutions.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—Mr. Power's resolution.

HON. MR. SMITH—No, not Mr. Power's resolution, but the Hon. John Costigan's resolution—a man in whom I had faith—a man in whom I still have faith, and a man who represents the Catholic party in Canada to-day better than any other man that can be sent there.

HON. MR. DEVER—It is not true ! Its is not true !

HON. GENTLEMEN—Order ! Order ! Order !

HON. MR. DEVER—Nor do you.

HON. MR. SMITH—I do not pretend to ; that is the beauty of it. When the resolutions were almost a failure—when some people were afraid to identify themselves with them, I went, after being here three weeks, and rallied the people again and brought on those resolutions ; and I am not afraid to say so to-day. They were moved for the welfare of my hon. friend, and of my fellow countrymen, I am perfectly satisfied. I suppose it would not be out of place to tell the House that I am the first man who ever signed a requisition to bring the late lamented D'Arcy McGee to this country ; and I could only get three friends to do it with me, and when he came to London to lecture, there were not twenty people in the hall who had paid their entrance fee. But when he came the second and third time the hall would not hold them, and who was to blame for that ? Whether it was his misfortune or not, it was due to me ; but the intention on my part was good, and it was for this purpose : it was to put down and checkmate the efforts of the Globe at that time. We were hounded from one end of the Dominion to the other as being the Priest's party—the petticoat party ; and I have in my possession many clippings from newspapers of those days on that subject. It was to meet and checkmate that policy that I endeavored to bring McGee to this country. Now we come down to 1871. I was a very short time in Toronto. My former place of business was London, Ontario, where I had lived seventeen years, and where the party said I represented them fairly well. When I came down to Toronto, I endeavoured to be friendly with my hon. friend, but it was almost impossible. The Catholic League was then formed, and he took a course in the league that I could not endorse. I opposed him, and from that day until previous to 1882 he was an opponent of mine ; and I may say that notwithstanding what happened in 1882 until the time he spoke here to-day, he has scarcely been friendly with me, notwithstanding the fact that I have tried to do everything in my power to place him in the position he now occupies in this House. He spoke of Mr. Boyle, himself, and me meeting ; I will show you how that meeting came about. Mr. Boyle and Mr. O'Donohoe called on me on one occasion in my warehouse, in the office, and they sat down and had a conversation with me. They asked one question after another, and I answered them to the best of my ability. The hon. gentleman has referred to this meeting, and that is the reason why I want to show how it came about. I did not go to meet them : they came to me.

HON. MR. O'DONOHOE — I wrote you and you replied.

HON. MR. SMITH—They came to me and asked me why I would not resign. I said, "Why do you ask me to resign?" They asked, "Was it not the understanding?" I said I had no such understanding, and never had. There was no such intimation made to me by any one, and if there had been I would not have taken a seat in the Cabinet on any such condition. They then retired. I said I was going to keep that seat as long as it suited me ; and when my friends of the Catholic party wished me to retire, I would do so. The same two gentleman came to me and pressed me again ; and on that occasion the hon. gentleman said he was going to Ottawa that night and asked me if I would say that I would resign if Sir John Macdonald requested me to do so. I said, "No, I will not say anything of the kind ; I am not here to be kicked about by you or any other man. When the party I represent, or endeavor to represent, in the Cabinet say they are tired of me I will retire and give the place to some other and more worthy man." I have not the slightest doubt of the good faith of the Government. I cannot stand here and say that they were playing false, for I believe it was the intention of the Conservative party to have Mr. O'Donohoe or some other Irish Catholic representative in the Cabinet. I know that Sir John Macdonald and his colleagues in the Cabinet were anxious to do so, although the Roman Catholics of the Dominion had five representatives in the Cabinet without me. Those Catholics are in the Cabinet now, and there is no ground for all this talk about Catholic representation. If those gentlemen are not able to protect the interests of the Catholic people in this country, I do not know how many we want. Supposing the hon. gentleman had got the appointment to the Cabinet, what good would it have done him? He would have had to go to the people and look for a constituency.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—Not necessarily.

HON. MR. SMITH—He could not have sat here, for an appointment to the Senate was not mentioned before I spoke of it and demanded it. He would have had to go the country, and where would the hon. gentleman have got a constituency? Let him try it to-morrow! I challenge him to resign and appeal to the people, and if he goes out and stumps the country, I will meet him on the stump, and shew that he has not the confidence of the Catholic electors of this Province! I know that he dare not accept my challenge. If he could not have found a constituency, he could not have remained in the Cabinet. He would have had neither portfolio nor pay; the premier would not have asked any other members of his Cabinet to resign for the sake of giving Mr. O'Donohoe a seat in his Cabinet. There was no vacancy; there was no necessity for creating one, and therefore Mr. O'Donohoe was very much better provided for by my pressing him into the Senate. I thought the act was a kind one, and I did it with the best intention in the world towards him; but from that day to this he has scarcely looked pleasant at me, and I cannot suggest a reason for it. I thought he had fought me long enough. He had made no headway while he did fight me, and I have always endeavored to return good for evil and not to hate those who spitefully use me. If any one has made a mistake in the appointment of Mr.

O'Donohoe, the fault is mine in failing to consult the Catholic people of Toronto at a meeting that should have been called for the purpose of saying who should be their representative in the Cabinet. I tell you as a fact that the Conservative party said if I would not accept that position, if it was impossible for me to take a seat in the Cabinet they would take Mr. O'Keefe, Mr. Foy, or one of several other Catholic gentlemen of Toronto whose names were given. That was the suggestion, it was not me alone; it was not "Orange Frank Smith," as the hon. gentleman calls me, that they wanted to represent the Catholics of Ontario. The Conservative party would have taken any intelligent and respectable Catholic into the Cabinet except John O'Donohoe, on that occasion, and the reason they gave was that they knew him too well—they knew him very much better than I did. He was a citizen of Toronto that they had known for a number of years; I had been absent in the city of London for several years, and had not paid much attention to his course, and when I returned to Toronto I was very friendly with him, though he pressed on me a great many things to which I was not very favorable—amongst the rest that document that I signed with him. I shall never sign another document with him. This gentleman has not only attempted to-day to brand me amongst my fellow countrymen as unworthy of the position I hold; he has endeavored not only to bring my public character in question, but he has coolly and deliberately brought in my private business.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—No, no, no.

HON. MR. SMITH—The hon. gentleman has endeavored to shew that when there is any change in the excise or Custom duties under consideration, that I am always alive to my own interest, and that I am always in Ottawa when it is politic to occupy my chair in the Cabinet. He has done this for the purpose of leading the public to believe that I am an intriguer and that I make money by the knowledge I obtain as a Cabinet Minister. I would have the hon. gentleman to understand that the man who uses the information he obtains by his position as a member of the Cabinet, in violation of his oath of office, is unworthy to hold any public position in this or any other country. I tell the hon. gentleman this, and I am willing to state it under oath if necessary, and bring a dozen witnesses to prove it, that when I knew last year that the excise duty was to be increased to a great extent, for I could not help but know it, I had less spirit and whiskey in my warehouse, or in my possession, than I ever had on any occasion before from the day I commenced business in a small way until then. And what was the reason? The reason was, my honor was at stake; I dare not move; the people of Toronto would say, "What is Frank Smith doing?" Frank Smith is doing nothing; he is making no change in his stock or in his business; his regular business is going on; and up to the hour the increase in duty was declared, every barrel of spirit I had in my possession I allowed to go at the old price. I make that statement as a fact; and I may add that on former occasions when there was a change in the excise and custom duties I have had as much as 4,000 barrels of liquor in my possession on which I took the chances. Sometimes I won and sometimes I lost; but I speculated in nothing but my business. The hon. gentleman has dragged in my street car business into this discussion. He has introduced that question for the purpose of bringing more trouble on my head. He has brought it in for the purpose of misleading the Catholics of Toronto into believing that I am employing nothing else but Orangemen. When I took possession of the Toronto street railway, I said to the Superintendent, "I want you to be very careful; I want you to employ, to a great extent, married men of the city, no matter what their creed, nationality or politics may be. Next to them I want you to employ the young man who has a home and lives with his father and mother here, and make no difference as to what creed or nationality he may claim—ask no questions. He did so, and when the question was asked me some time ago, how this matter stood, I was unable to answer but said "I will ask the Superintendent." I then inquired of the Superintendent how the employes stood as regards creed and nationality. His reply was "as to their nationality most of them are Irish men and Canadians; about two-thirds are Protestant and one-third Catholic;" and he added "next time you ask me I will be able to give it to you exactly." The second time I asked him he said "there is about eighty per cent. Protestants and twenty per cent. Catholics." That being the case, I do not know how the hon. gentleman can find fault with me and charge me with employing nothing but Orangemen.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—Did't you say eighty per cent. of Orangemen?

HON. MR. SMITH—If I did I mean that they were Protestants—the fact that they are Protestants does not imply that they are Orangemen. I cannot understand why the hon. gentleman has made this move to-day unless it is to make the people of Toronto believe that I am employing men that I ought not to employ, and that I ought to be more favorable to the Roman Catholics. His object in doing it is to bring more trouble on my head than I now have; but I can tell him that if the trouble comes again, and ten times the trouble, I am going to stand by my property, in this country—the property I represent—the property I made by honest hard work.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—It is the property of the Company, not yours.

HON. MR. SMITH—I am going to stand by that property, I am not going to allow a lot of thieves to come in and take it from me notwithstanding the fact that the hon. gentleman has been trying to abuse me and represent me in false colors.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—That is not true.

HON. MR. SMITH—I am satisfied than he has been doing it, from what he said here to-day. He had no right to bring my private business before the House. I stand in defiance of him and of all those who want to rob me of my property, I have the law of the country at my back to protect me. I am a Canadian by adoption. I will continue to be a Canadian while I live, and I am going to fight for my rights in this country. What has the hon. gentleman to complain of? Is not his course to-day sufficient justification for the action of the Government and of the Conservative party, Catholic as well as Protestant, in not accepting Mr. O'Donohoe on that occasion? Could there be better proof adduced that that hon. gentleman would deceive any party with whom he was connected, so long as he could not make it profitable to himself, and put himself forward as the leader of the Catholic party?

HON. MR. O'DONOHOE—Sir John Macdonald does not say so.

HON. MR. SMITH—If the Catholics of this Province speak out to-morrow and ask me to resign my seat in the Cabinet for Mr. O'Donohoe, I will retire in an hour. But is there a Catholic petition? Has there been a demand? Has the hon. gentleman since he was appointed to the Senate made himself any more popular in the country? I ask him has he made himself any more popular in this House or in Parliament from the time he came into it until the last three weeks? I say no; his every action, his very look proclaim that he is not the man to represent his fellow Catholics in this country. Is it because John O'Donohoe can make a good speech on a stump or in a place where he has got "an Irish crowd," as he says, that he thinks he can rally them to his call? Is that a proof that the Catholics want him as their representative? I say no! God knows they are badly enough represented as it is, but from the bottom of my heart I think they would be worse off if they had him as their representative.

HON. MR. O'DONOHOE—The Orangemen think so.

HON. MR. SMITH—If I were John O'Donohoe, and if I had the grievance that he pretends to have on this occasion, I would say to the Government of Canada, "Gentlemen I have been mistaken; I took a seat in the Senate under your Government; I do not like your actions; you have deceived me; I tender you my seat, and I am going back to see if the people will put me there again. I will depend upon the people either to put me there or in the other House as their representative." That hon. gentleman was a long time associated with the Reform party, and they did nothing for him, and said they would do nothing for him.

HON. MR. O'DONOHOE—You were in the same company too.

HON. MR. SMITH—The leader of that party would not vote for him or endorse him, and he left in disgust. But he is going back to them; they are patting him on the back; they say "O'Donohoe you are a right good fellow; make trouble as fast as you can, and there is some chance of our doing something for you in the future—that is, provided we get into power." That contingency has been talked of for a number of years, but I think its consummation is a good way off yet. I do not wish to continue this debate. I will soon come to the question and answer the notice of motion. I have been deceived by that gentleman more than I can speak of to-day. I am sorry that an Irishman has to speak in this way of his countryman. I regret it; it would be the glory of my life if I could stand up here to-day and endorse him, and stand by him as I would desire to do, and as I have hitherto done by the Hon. John Costigan, notwithstanding the attacks of the Montreal Post and another paper or two that put themselves forward as representing the views of the Catholic people of this country. They have no such authority; they do not speak for the Catholic people. They have never been authorized to do so. They are not representatives of the Catholic people, and they never will be.

HON. MR. O'DONOHOE—But you are.

HON. MR. SMITH—No, unfortunately I am not. Unfortunately my early training and my attainments are such as prevent me from doing that justice to my countrymen which they deserve, or to the position I occupy. The fault is not mine; it is my misfortune, not my fault. I have always endeavored to help my countrymen in time of need, and am ready to do so still when occasion offers; and when I pretend to support a party, and give my word, they can rely on me as if I had sworn to it. I joined the Conservative party years ago in the city of London, when a countryman of mine was about to be insulted by those who now profess to be the friends of our worthy senator.

HON. MR. SMITH.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—You presided at the Reform meeting in Toronto; man, what are you talking about?

HON. MR. SMITH—So I did. I came down from London, and they put me in the chair. It was a Catholic meeting; it was not a Reform meeting, and the hon. gentleman endeavored to have them agree that whichever party would get the majority there that night, all the Catholics should go with him. I would not agree to that; I never could agree to such a proposal. I opposed it and took up the Hon. John O'Connor on that occasion, and fell out with my hon. friend there and then. I stuck by the Hon. John O'Connor, and we paddled our own canoe, from that day to this. I supported him until I got my countryman appointed as a Judge on the Bench of this country, and the Orangemen never protested; the Protestants never protested against it; the Conservative party favored it, and he is there to-day, and the way is open, when he steps out, for some other good Catholic who I hope will be found to take his place. The Hon. John O'Connor is to-day an ornament to the bench, and notwithstanding there was some slight feeling against him at the time he was appointed, he has outlived it. It is not for him alone that I have worked hard; and the sense of justice and fair play of the Conservative Government has given the Roman Catholics fair recognition in all parts of the country. There is scarcely a position vacant for which a Catholic appointment is not asked.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—What about Grey? How did you get rid of him in the matter of the collectorship at Prescott?

HON. MR. SMITH—We will dispose of poor John Grey now—God be merciful to him to-day. All of us who know the history of the unfortunate man are aware that for years he was in delicate health—that he was not very strong in mind, that he was very excitable and irritable, and hard to keep in one place. His Catholic Conservative friends stuck to him until the day he died and did the best they could for him. The Hon. John Costigan got him a place in Stratford and took care of him.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—That is no answer to my question.

HON. MR. SMITH—I am prepared to say that if the appointment had been in my hands—and it is a pretty strong statement to make—and I had been asked to put poor Grey into a place where he would have to be responsible for handling money and doing business, I would have said no. Grey was not fit to be in such a position for some years before his death.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—That is not so.

HON. MR. SMITH—He was an honest well meaning man, but he was weakly and could not well attend to any office, and that was the reason that he was not given the collectorship at Prescott. He was not deserted by his Catholic Conservative friends. If the party with which the hon. member from Toronto is allying himself will stick by him as well as the Conservatives did by Grey it will be well for him.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—Was he not given a position by the Government and was he not, under Orange influence, disappointed?

HON. MR. SMITH—I am not here to answer your questions. I did not disturb you or interrupt you while you were speaking. I let you fire away and get through with your tirade as you pleased. You have endeavored to interrupt me a dozen times, and break the thread of my remarks. It is very unfair, but it is no more than you have always been with me—you have been most unfair towards me at all times.

I am, as I have already stated, prepared to give my place in the Government to a more worthy Catholic than I am, and we have in the rising generation a large number of them who will do credit not only to the Catholics of Ontario but to Canada, and be valuable members of any government of which they may become members; but I will retire at the dictation of no man, and not until I see a proper successor selected to fill my place. But if the Hierarchy of this country wish me to retire, one insinuation would be quite sufficient. If they ask me to retire in favor of a certain Catholic I am prepared to say, "Gentlemen, I bow to you." Such a request coming from the bishops and clergy of this country I would treat with all respect and deference. But they have not asked me to do so; they have not found fault with me; I have never been found fault with for any political act in my life, public or private, with the exception of pressing the appointment of the Hon. John Donohoe to the Senate, and for that I have been censured a great deal. I repeat, if the hon. gentleman wants to be considered an honorable man; if he wants the public to regard him as such, and to believe that it is not for personal gain that he is taking this course, then let him resign and appeal to a Reform constituency in this country, and if there is one, Reform or otherwise, that will elect him, I am much mistaken. If the hon. gentleman had been in my place, without salary or portfolio, from the time he wanted it until now, he would have been very much worse off than he is to-day, and there is no vacancy in the Cabinet at present to my knowledge. I am sure that the Catholic people as a body will not ask any hon. gentleman in the Cabinet to resign his seat previous to a general election. If the Conservative party are not successful at the next election, and it is their misfortune to be beaten (which I do not at all anticipate), then the the Conservative Catholics have to step out, and the Catholic Reformers can step in, and we will see then how many are taken into the Government. How many of them were appointed when Mr. Mackenzie was in power? Was there a Catholic from Ontario in the Cabinet?

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—There was.

HON. MR. SMITH.

HON. MR. SMITH—Who was he?

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—Scott.

HON. MR. SMITH—Mr. Scott is an excellent man; but did Mr. Mackenzie take an Irish Catholic in?

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—He placed one in the Speaker's chair.

HON. MR. SMITH—I was coming to that; did he take Mr. Anglin into his Cabinet? No he did not. What did he do? He said, "The Speakership is all I can give you." If Mr. Anglin had the pluck that some men possess, he would have thanked Mr. Mackenzie and said, "If you cannot take one Irish Catholic into your Cabinet, why then I will take a seat on the independent benches and vote as the interests of my people dictate." Mr. Anglin is a man who stands very high in my estimation in a great many ways, although we entertain different views on many subjects; but I say if he had properly represented the Irish people he would have demanded a seat in the Cabinet or refused to fill the Speaker's chair. The hon. member says that there was an Irish Catholic in the Cabinet in the person of Mr. Scott; but Mr. Scott is not an Irish Catholic.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—His father was an Irish Catholic.

HON. MR. SMITH—Mr. Scott is a very good and agreeable man, but he does not represent the Irish Catholic people. There were a great many other Irish Catholics who could have represented them and I would not have been annoyed—I would have been proud to have seen Mr. Anglin taken into Mr. Mackenzie's Cabinet. What do we find to-day? There are six Catholics in the Cabinet, three of whom are Irishmen. I am the most humble of the whole of them; but the others are fit to represent any population on the face of the earth. Therefore the Conservative Catholics are well represented in the Cabinet, leaving me aside altogether. I do not wish to be considered much of a representative man, but I have done my best for the Catholic people and will continue to represent them to the best of my ability as long as they recognize me as a representative, and when they do not want me in the Cabinet I will retire. The hon. gentleman calls for letters and a patent, and the cancellation of a patent. In answer to his motion I may say if there are any letters that are not of a private nature I will ask for them. If they are of a private nature I may not be able to furnish them. Very likely copies were not kept of many of the letters.

HON. MR. POWER—Hear, hear.

HON. MR. SMITH—It is not likely they were kept because a gentleman, who is not in his own office, receiving a letter generally tears it up when he replies. As regards the patent, there was none ever issued for the hon. gentleman's appointment, and there can be no cancellation of a patent which was not in existence.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—The Order in Council.

HON. MR. SMITH—If there is one it can be produced; but I know of none. The Council, in my opinion—I am speaking now of what I think is the fact—did not meet from the time Sir John Macdonald left for Toronto until his return, and he was two or three days there and through the country. It was not likely there was any Order-in-Council while he was going about the country and on a friendly visit at Sir David Macpherson's. Now these are the answers I give to the motion of the hon. gentleman: if there are such documents (and I am almost satisfied there are none) they will be produced; but I state positively there was no patent issued and consequently there was no cancellation of one. I do not think it is becoming for the hon. gentleman, from all the services that he ever rendered the Conservative party, to endeavor to put me in a false position before the Irish Catholic population of this country. He says I am not true to them, but that I am more of the Orange type. I tell him I am straight forward and intend to remain so and when I meet a man I do not inquire what his religious views are. I repeat before I sit down that the moment the bishops and clergy of the Catholic Church of this country say that the Catholic population of Ontario is not properly represented by me in the Cabinet and that I had better retire, I will bow to their decision and say they are quite right. There is no objection to the address, and if there are any papers such as the hon. gentleman calls for I will have them brought down.

HON. MR. HOWLAN moved the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (9) "An Act respecting the Revised Statutes of Canada." (Mr. Smith.)

It being six o'clock the Speaker left the chair.

AFTER RECESS.

EXPERIMENTAL FARM STATIONS BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. ALLAN moved the second reading of Bill (124) "An Act respecting experimental farm stations." He said: I have been requested to take charge of this Bill. It will be in the recollection of hon. gentlemen that a select committee was appointed by the House of Commons in 1884, to enquire into the best means of encouraging and developing the agricultural interests of Canada. That Committee made a very full and exhaustive report, and with it they submitted certain very important recommendations to the Government. These recommendations were to the following effect:—

"Considering that the proper development of our agricultural resources is indispensable to the upbuilding and maintenance of our national wealth and prosperity, and that all progressive countries are at present making strenuous efforts for the introduction of improved methods of agriculture, your committee believe that no object is more deserving of the active and generous support of the Federal Government than that of fostering and promoting this great industry, and of promoting, guiding and co-operating with all local and provincial institutions formed for the furtherance of this object. Your committee, therefore, beg leave to submit the following recommendations:—

"That the Government take into earnest and favorable consideration the advisability of establishing a bureau of agriculture, and an experimental farm in connection therewith.

"That this bureau be formed in connection with, and under the supervision of, the present Department of Agriculture.

"That the object aimed at in the establishment of such bureau and farm be as follows :

"1. To conduct such experiments in the introduction and culture of new varieties of seeds, plants, trees, etc., as will most efficiently aid in the advancement of Canadian agriculture; to institute experiments with regard to the comparative value of fertilizers, the proper testing of seeds as to vitality and purity, and the healthy preservation and productive conditions of plants and animals.

"2. To make careful investigation into the origin, distribution and habits of insects injurious and beneficial, and the contagious and other diseases to which animals and plants are subject, in order to arrive at the best method of destroying and counteracting them.

"3. To study the qualities of the various breeds of cattle and other domestic animals, with the view of reporting on the best means of improving them; of protecting them from parasites and epidemic diseases, of feeding them for the market, and on the treatment of milch cattle.

"4. To initiate and carry out a convenient and comprehensive system of gathering the latest and most useful information, statistical and otherwise.

"5. To publish and send to the press and the various agricultural and horticultural societies of the Dominion, at different periods of the year, bulletins giving the results of trials made on the experimental farm, and whatever other information the Bureau may consider useful, either in the prevention of the ravages of insects and of contagious diseases among animals, concerning improved methods of culture that have stood test, or for the special advancement of any line of agricultural pursuits.

During the session of 1885, hon. gentlemen will remember, that following up the report of the committee—which was a report of a very large committee, composed of gentlemen from both sides of the House, a vote of $2c,000 was made as an aid towards establishing an experimental farm. Before acting, however, on that vote, the Minister of Agriculture deemed it desirable to avail himself of the services of a gentleman whose scientific acquirements and valuable contributions on many important subjects connected both with agriculture and horticulture have made his name a household word with us, Prof. Saunders, of London, Ontario, to obtain further information in connection with the subject by visiting and reporting upon the work being carried on at the agricultural colleges and experimental farms in the United States. The instructions to Mr. Saunders were, that he was to visit as many of the more important agricultural colleges and experimental farm stations in the United States as he might think necessary, for the purpose of enquiring into their various methods of working, and with a view of ascertaining as far as possible what benefits either direct or indirect, they were conferring on practical agriculture, including stock-raising, dairying, &c.; and also, of ascertaining what was being done in horticulture, especially in regard to the production of fruit. He was further desired to incidentally inquire into the subject of forestry, to ascertain as far as practicable the extent and character of tree-planting in the Western States, the varieties chiefly used, and the success which had attended the efforts that had been made. It was also desired that he should ascertain the areas of land occupied by the several institutions he visited, the character of the soil and equipments, with capital cost, together with the expense of maintenance. He was further instructed to prepare and submit, as early as practicable, a report on the whole of these subjects. That report, I presume, has been seen by most hon. gentlemen, as it forms an appendix to the report of the Minister of Agriculture for 1885. I may briefly state for the information of hon. members who have not seen the report, or having seen it have not had an opportunity of reading it, some of the particulars which are to be found in it. Alluding to the different experimental farms and stations which he visited, Professor Saunders says he found that the work going on there consisted of experiments which were being conducted to ascertain the relative value of agricultural implements, experiments in testing varieties of wheat, oats, corn, grasses and potatoes, methods and rates of seeding, effects of fertilizers, with comparisons as to relative vigor and ability of different seeds and plants to endure severe climatic changes. Experiments were also being undertaken with small fruits to ascertain their relative hardiness, vigor, productiveness and quality of fruit. At some of the stations varieties of wheat, barley and oats were being tested in experimental plots, the best of which, after several years trial, were then grown on a large scale in field culture for the purpose of obtaining seed in large quantities with which to supply the farmers at moderate prices, with a view to the general introduction of the most desirable sorts throughout the State. He mentions that at some of these stations more than one hundred varieties of wheat had been tested, and their relative merits discussed in the bulletins and reports which had been issued by the stations. Another important work in which they were engaged was tests with regard to noxious weeds, to determine their relative growth and rapidity of multiplication, and the best methods of exterminating them. Observations on injurious insects had also been conducted and recorded, with tests of the several insecticides which had been recommended for destroying them. (Such enquiries as these will no doubt be of great assistance to horticulturists as well as farmers.) In other places he found that they were making experiments as to feeding, particularly with sheep, to ascertain the relative value of the different kinds of feed as flesh producing material. Great attention has also been given to the examination of agricultural seeds for the purpose of ascertaining their purity and quality, and to investigations connected with insect pests. In another place he speaks of the chemical department at one of these experimental farms as being very complete, and doing very thorough work in the analysis of fertilizers, and the analysis of milk. Experiments with fertilizers were also being carried on on a large scale, and the results were published for the benefit of farmers, and sent to every part of the State. Now, hon. gentlemen, these are exactly the sort of enquiries which it is proposed to institute, and the information resulting from them is what it is proposed to furnish to our agriculturists by means of the experimental farm stations which it is the object of this Bill to establish. I think hon. gentlemen will agree with me that the importance of such information to a great agricultural country like Canada can hardly be over-estimated. I am sure they will also agree with me that the days of slipshod husbandry, when farming was supposed to be a kind of business that any man might take up successfully, no matter how ignorant he might be of the simplest principles of agriculture, have passed away. Our agriculturists are now convinced that to be prosperous and successful they must bring to their aid just the kind of knowledge which institutions such as those to which this Bill relates can furnish them with. They want to know what crops are most suitable for the soil and climate of their particular locality. They want to know what seeds succeed best and are most productive in particular soils; the best and most economical fertilizers; the diseases to which plants are subject; the insect pests and how to deal with them. They want to know what are the most suitable and best kinds of stock for their particular localities, and what are the best systems of feeding to obtain the most satisfactory results. These and similar important questions will receive, I think, their best solution in the results of the experiments and tests which will be carried on at these proposed experimental farm stations. I am, of course, aware that there are stock farms already established, though on a small scale, in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia—and I think in Prince Edward Island; and in Ontario we have our Agricultural College, at Guelph, which has been doing most excellent work not only in the training and education of our young farmers, but by importing and keeping the very best breeds of stock, by their field experiments, and by the work carried on in connection with the College. We have also the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association and the Entomological Association of Ontario, doing excellent service in the interests of farmers and fruit growers by disseminating much valuable information. In this way they are all doing their share of a very important work, but they do not and cannot fulfil the important purposes which these experimental farm stations are intended to carry out. By the Bill it is proposed that the Governor-in-Council may establish first a farm station for the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec jointly. Clause 3 provides that:—

The Governor-in-Council may establish, first, a farm station for the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec jointly; secondly one for the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island jointly; thirdly, one for the Provinces of Manitoba; fourthly, one for the North-West Territories of Canada, and fifthly one for the Province of British Columbia; and the farm station for the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec jointly shall be the principal or central station.

The fourth clause provides:—

The Governor-in-Council may, for the purpose of establishing such farm stations, acquire by purchase an extent of land, not exceeding five hundred acres, in the vicinity of the seat of Government, for the central farm station, and an extent of land, not exceeding three hundred acres, in either of the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island, and a like extent of land in the Province of British Columbia, for the farm stations, secondly and fifthly mentioned in the next preceding section; and the Governor-in-Council may, for the like purpose, set apart in Manitoba and in the North-West Territories of Canada such tracts of unoccupied available public lands, which are the property of Canada, as are necessary for the farm stations thirdly and fourthly mentioned in the next preceding section; but the tract of public land so set apart shall not, in each case, exceed one section.

Sub-Section 2, provides that the Governor-in-Council may set apart in the Province of Manitoba and in the Railway belt in British Columbia, and in each of the provisional districts of the North-West Territory, a tract or tracts not exceeding ten sections for tree planting and timber growing. It is provided that the farm stations shall be under the control and direction of the Minister, subject to regulations made by the Governor in Council; and the Governor in Council may appoint a director and such officers and employes as are necessary for each farm station. The duties of the officers at these several stations are precisely of the character which I have already stated as are being carried out at those different stations in the United States visited by Professor Saunders. They are:—

To conduct researches and verify experiments designed to test the relative value, for all purposes, of different breeds of stock, and their adaptability to the varying climatic or other conditions which prevail in the several Provinces and in the North-West Territories;

Examine into the economic questions involved in the production of butter and cheese;

Test the merits, hardiness and adaptability of new or untried varieties of wheat or other cereals, and of field crops, grasses and forage-plants, fruits, vegetables, plants and trees, and disseminate among persons engaged in farming, gardening or fruit growing, upon such conditions as are prescribed by the Minister, samples of the surplus of such products as are considered to be specially worthy of introduction;

Analyze fertilizers, whether natural or artificial, and conduct experiments with such fertilizers, in order to test their comparative value as applied to crops of different kinds;

Examine into the composition and digestibility of foods for domestic animals;

Conduct experiments in the planting of trees for timber and for shelter;

These are the principal objects which are to be carried out by the provisions of the Bill. Great as are the advantages which these proposed experimental farm stations and the work to be done by them will confer on the older provinces of Canada, in no part of the Dominion will they be of greater service than in Manitoba and the North-West; and, looking to the diversity of soil, climate and elevation in that vast territory, I think the Government have done wisely in taking power to establish separate stations in Manitoba, the North-West Territories, and in British Columbia. There is one subject connected with the working of those stations which appears to me to be of paramount importance. I allude to the science of forestry. If the House will permit me for a moment, I should like to read a short extract which will be found in this report of Professor Saunders, and which is contained in a letter to him from a gentleman whose name is well known to those who are interested in forestry:—

“No where, it seems to me, are measures of encouragement by Government called for more urgently than in establishing systematic forestry in your country. Part of Canada's wealth lies in Canada's forests; the nature of the soil and climate in the northern districts of the eastern and central provinces is, to a large extent, not fit for anything but forest growth. Yet Canada is utilizing the natural growth in such a manner as to deteriorate her forest capacity, and often even her agricultural possibilities. Timber growing will eventually become an economic necessity for Canada; few lumbermen, under existing conditions, can see any advantage in utilizing supplies with other views than those of immediate gain—a man's life seems too short to enter upon such extended enterprise as forestry—interest in future supplies can concern the State alone; at least, so it seems at present.

“The time for a wiser forest policy has come, and the Government should lay now, while it still retains land and forest, the foundation of systematic forest management—at least, to set, as in Germany, the example after which private owners may form their forestry.

We know to our cost that the work of deforesting, and denuding the country entirely of timber has been carried on, in Ontario at all events, to a very reckless and improvident extent. It is a fact that in many parts of Ontario farmers have not as much timber left on their land as would mend a hen coop or light a fire; whereas if greater pains had been taken in the earlier history of the country to impress upon our people the great necessity and the great advantage both of replanting and of retaining small plots of timber on each of their farms, they might have had sufficient for their own purposes not only during their own lifetime but for their children and their great grand children after them. As it is, Ontario will have to depend to great extent for its fuel on the United States; and not only so but we shall feel the evil effects of this sweeping destruction of our forests on our climate and vegetation; on our rivers and streams by sudden freshets in the Spring, and their drying up in Summer. I am aware that of late years some attempt have been made to direct the attention of our people to this subject. The Americans seem to have suddenly taken the alarm on this question and are turning their attention to it, and are making great efforts to repair the waste that has been going on for years, both by replanting and by adopting a better system for the management and preservation of their remaining timber lands. I have always felt strongly that if in the early days of Canada certain portions of Ontario, where the soil was comparatively of an inferior description, had been retained as timber reserves under the restrictions and rules which have been for so many years in force in Europe, and more especially in Germany; these tracts of inferior soil now all cleared of their timber and yielding but a poor return for their cultivation might have been much better employed in growing trees, and large tracts of forest land might thus have been preserved for cutting over not only for the present but for a generation to come. I know that in Quebec, thanks to the great efforts of a very enlightened and public gentleman, Mr. Joly, the subject has received a great deal of attention amongst our friends in Lower Canada and efforts have been made there not only to repair the mischief which has been done, but to carry out a regular system of tree planting. In no part of the Dominion will this subject be found to be of greater importance than in the North-West Territory. It may bring many parts of the country there which are now difficult to cultivate, which suffer from drying winds in summer and cold biting blasts in winter, into a condition in which they can be cultivated with profit. We cannot tell to what extent judicious tree planting may affect the whole climate of the North-West. As you go further west, and approach the mountains now covered with forest, and in which many of the great rivers of the North West have their source, it is of the utmost importance that the sources of these springs should be protected by preserving the forests which now shelter them. For all these reasons I think that the forestry part of the work of the experimental farm stations will be of the greatest possible benefit. Then again with regard to fruit trees we know that in the Western States, in the State of Iowa particularly, where great difficulty has been found in growing fruit, a complete revolution is likely to be made there by the pains that have been taken to test various descriptions of hardy fruit trees from Russia, and which now promise to be a great success there, and numbers of which are being brought to us in Canada. Having regard then to all these important subjects connected with the agriculture and horticulture of our country, there can be no question I think about the great advantages that will accrue to the Dominion if these experimental farm stations, (particularly the central one) are conducted with ability and energy. The central station, more especially, will be the means of disseminating information all over the country which will be of the greatest possible benefit to the grain grower the stock breeder and the horticulturist. This Bill has received the strong support of the House of Commons, and I am only sorry that in being placed in my hands to take charge of it in the Senate it has not been committed to some one who can do the subject greater justice, although it is one which I have very much at heart. Further explanations as to the details of the measure can be given in Committee of the whole.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE.—Will the hon. gentleman state the total capital, fixed and floating, which will be required for these institutions?

HON. MR. ALLAN—I am informed that the central station is estimated to cost $120,000. That is for everything—buildings, appliances, chemical apparatus—the whole expense; and that the annual expenditure is estimated at something like from $12,000 to $15,000. I think the other stations are calculated to cost $25,000, with an annual expenditure of $5,000—that is if the land at other places has not to be purchased. If the land has to be bought, the Minister thought $10,000 more would be necessary; so that the statement is that the total cost $240,000 for land building etc., and a total annual expense of $35,000 for maintenance will have to be incurred.

HON. MR. VIDAL—Will my hon. friend inform me whether the American farm stations are maintained at the expense of the Federal Government or of the State Governments?

HON. MR. ALLAN—At the expense of both, as I understand. There are different Experimental Farms supported at the expense of the State; and in this report from which I have read just now, Professor Saunders states that a measure was before the United States Congress by which the American Government proposed to give an annual grant of some $15,000 from the Federal Treasury for the establishment of Experimental Farms which are to be under Federal control throughout the different states.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I have to congratulate the leader of this House, Senator Smith from Toronto, upon having summoned to his assistance one or two of the most distinguished members of this Chamber. In having the assistance of the hon. gentleman from Niagara he has an old parliamentarian, and a man of ability. This is a Government Bill, which has only just been laid upon our table, and we have not had time to study it. The hon. gentleman who has taken charge of this Government Bill, is the President of the Bible Society of Toronto—of course, a gentleman of great integrity. Of course he has been proved to be a man of very great integrity to occupy that position.

HON. MR. POWER—I rise to a question of order. I do not think this has anything to do with the matter before the House.

THE CHAIRMAN—I must express my deep regret, that the hon. member from Woodstock cannot rise to address this House without directing his remarks so as to reflect on some member of this Chamber. I very much regret it, and I think the sense of the Senate is strongly opposed to it. I do not believe that on either side of the House the hon. gentleman receives any sympathy in the course he thinks proper to pursue.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I will put myself in order. As an old President of the Provincial Agricultural Association of Upper Canada in 1857, and as a member of the Board of Agriculture of Upper Canada for nearly 20 years, I am a little surprised at the Dominion Government bringing in this Bill. I suppose that the 13 Ministers of the Crown standing at the heads of departments, and drawing large salaries, must make an appearance of doing something to warrant our continuing 13 portfolios; but I ask this House what is the use of such a Bill as this? Have not the Provinces under the provisions of the Union Act of Ontario and Quebec dealt with this subject and do not the other Provinces in like manner?

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—No.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I say those provinces have.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—Does the hon. member mean to say that the Province of New Brunswick has?

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—If it has not, it ought to have. The people of New Brunswick have a noble province and they ought to be able to have an experimental farm, because it does not cost a large amount and at all events the provinces ought to govern such institutions. I am utterly surprised at the present time, when we have a deficit of over $3,000,000, that the Government should be creating unnecessary offices—and sources of public expenditure. Is the policy of Sir John Macdonald to force upon the country a legislative union? It would almost appear so. Although the provinces, under the British North America Act, were assigned the appointment of license commissioners he brought in a bill in the Dominion Parliament to deal with that subject. So with regard to this question. I suppose, such encroachments are made to give him more influence, more patronage, and to waste the public money. The hon. gentleman from Toronto is just the person to bring in such a bill. The Government could not possibly find any gentleman better fitted to advocate such a measure. If there is anything that will arouse this country, it is the recklessness of the present administration. They have enough to do if they attend to their own duties, and so with regard to the licensing question, they appointed commissioners and brought upon the provinces trouble and expense as the result of unconstitutional legislation. Here again we are called upon to deal with a bill to duplicate officers in every direction, with what other object but to increase the patronage of the Government? I speak as an old member of the Board of Agriculture of Upper Canada for 20 years, and as an old President of the Provincial Agricultural Association knowing the working of such institutions, and if this House does not desire to be considered a mere register office of the acts of the Government and the pocket borough of Sir John Macdonald, it will throw out this Bill as a measure to squander the public money. If the measure were confined to the North-West there might be some justification for its introduction. They have no Provincial Government there, but why apply it to Ontario and Quebec, which possess their Boards of Agriculture and have their regular agricultural exhibitions? It is only another illustration of the manner in which this Government is throwing broadcast the public money.

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The different States of the neighboring Union have exercised a wise course with regard to this subject. They have endowed these institutions with grants of land, and now the experimental farms are self-supporting. The rents and revenues of those lands go towards paying the expenses of those farms. I find that there are in the United States 36 experimental farms spread over the country, and attached to them there are colleges as well, where a highly scientific education is given to students. I hope the Government will carry out the plan proposed in this Bill. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman who has charge of the measure that he should recommend to the Government to set apart lands in the North-West for the purpose of sustaining those colleges. Those lands will increase in value from year to year and help ere many years to make these colleges self-sustaining.

HON. MR. VIDAL—While warmly sympathizing with the object which the Government have in view in bringing in this measure, I for once agree with the remarks made by the hon. member from Woodstock. I have very grave doubts as to the propriety of the Dominion Government undertaking the work. It appears to me that it is one of these matters which come properly under the management of the Provincial Legislature. I think if the Government had confined the operation of this Bill to the North-West and had there conducted the experiments in the most thorough and efficient way—with a lavish expenditure, if you like, of money—it would have been a very desirable and proper thing. I do not feel that I could venture to urge my view strongly, because this has received the sanction of a great many gentlemen more competent to judge of provincial rights than I am; but in my opinion it is a measure which could with great propriety have been confined to our North-West Territories.

HON. MR. DEBOUCHVILLE—I cannot agree with the hon. member from Sarnia. If he refers to clause seven he will see that the experiments and researches bearing upon the agricultural industry or Canada, will be of great importance to all the Provinces. Seven or eight subjects, concerning which experiments are to be made, are specified, and the results attained cannot fail to benefit the whole Dominion: the cost of conducting these experiments would be too great, I think, for the local governments to incur. It is necessary also that there should be uniformity in making those researches, and it is only by the Federal Government directing them that we can expect to attain a good result. Another gentleman who spoke before the hon. member from Sarnia reproached the Government for having brought in this Bill; I am disposed to compliment the Government for having introduced such a measure, but it must not be forgotten that this is only the result of the investigations of a committee of the House of Commons last year which sat for the greater part of the session, and which I may mention was presided over by Mr. Gigault, the member for Rouville, who showed, in the researches he made, a great deal of industry, for which he deserves the thanks of the country. If any fault is to be found, it should be with this committee as well as with the Government. However, in my opinion, the Government deserve the greatest credit from the country and from this House for the course they are pursuing on this subject.

HON. MR. VIDAL—My hon. friend has misunderstood me; I have no objection to the Dominion Government expending money in this direction, but I think it would be more consistent with our constitutional usage if it were done by giving liberal grants to the Provincial institutions to carry out the experiments required. My objection is, perhaps, only technical; I do not object to the expenditure, but to the mode in which it is made.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—As the House is not in committee now, it is not the proper time for a minute discussion of details. For my part I perceive pretty clearly that much good may result from the contemplated experimental farms, provided they are well managed—that care is taken that the business is conducted on a safe and sure basis, that the farms are not made political farms, and that great care is taken in the selection of those who are to manage them. One of those farms committed to the care of an incompetent manager will be worse than useless: it will not accomplish the objects intended and it will bring the Government experimental farms into disrepute. On the other hand great good can be done by putting good and efficient men there, quite apart from politics. If the Government in power can find a capable farm manager of Liberal tendencies, let them appoint him, and that will give the public confidence: it is confidence which above all is necessary to make an experiment of this kind work smoothly. I am still rather in the dark with regard to the course of practice intended to be pursued. There is one clause of this Bill which I should assume intends that stock breeding shall be a part of the business of the farm, and I suppose it will, to a certain extent, but that is not made sufficiently clear with reference to one of its most important branches, particularly as regard the Maritime Provinces—that is the 'breeding of horses. Now, I believe that if experimental farms were established in some convenient places in the Maritime provinces, in which the breeding of stud horses would be a special object, that in ten years time the Maritime Provinces might become the best market for horses in America. I say this after a great many years experience, and I know the chief obstacle to our success in that point is the inability of the several Provinces and individuals to invest a sufficient sum for the purchase of the very highest class of stud horses. Let hon. gentleman look at the history of the American trotting horse, and they will find, I think, in every instance that the race horse of to-day in America has derived his principal good qualities from some high class English imported stud, and we know to-day that there is a constant importation going on amongst the more wealthy Americans of English horses. What has enabled American and French gentlemen to raise horses which have carried off the principal prizes on the English race courses? It is that the English have freely permitted the exportation of their highly bred horses. In Kentucky the English race horse seems to be perfectly at home, and I may say from my observation that he is equally at home in the Maritime Provinces, and his progeny can be reared with as excellent qualities—and as cheaply—even more cheaply than in any other part of North America. It is, of course, an important thing to decide what shall be the chief object to which the experimental farms shall be devoted. I believe that in the Maritime Provinces dairying and cattle and horse breeding are amongst the most important interests we have. We cannot pretend to compete with the West in the production of wheat, nor with India and the Australian colonies. It is with us, as with a great deal of the western part of America: we have lost that famous wheat trade which used to pour a treasure annually into the remotest districts, but we have substituted other things for wheat, oats, potatoes and articles of that description. Our attention is now being turned to dairying—the production of cheese and butter—and the feeding of bullocks and rearing horses. It was stated the other day, on good authority I believe, that Prince Edward Island exported 1500 horses in one year. That is a very large number and no doubt the export could be greatly increased: and what is perhaps of equal importance, the price realized for them might be very readily enhanced simply by the possession of superior stock. It is in accomplishing this object that the experimental farms could be most advantageously used. They could set at rest which breed is best, and, having demonstrated this by experiments, it would not be so difficult to encourage farmers generally to follow in their steps. In Prince Edward Island we have had two stock farms, one of which has been in existence for 25 or 30 years. The object there has not been to experiment in fruit or grain growing. What we have done has been to rear the best cattle, sheep and horses which our circumstances would admit of, and sell them by auction once or twice a year to the farmers of the Province. Often and often I have known—because I have been on the board of managers—animals to be sold at the stock farm for very much less than the managers could have obtained for them for export; but that was not the object for which the farm was established. It was felt more in the interest of the Province to sell them at a far less sum and keep them in the Province than to realize a higher price and send them abroad. I feel perfectly satisfied that if a first-class stud of English horses were established at an experimental farm in the Maritime Provinces, and followed up, perhaps, by a lot of imported mares of the same character, in 10 years there would be a market in those Provinces for horses of the best quality and character to be found in all this continent. As to some of the other uses to which the experimental farms could be applied, I think they could be made very valuable. Some of the problems referred to here have been solved to a certain extent at the Ontario farm. I believe large experiments have been made there in feeding cattle and an accurate record has been kept of the consumption of feed by an animal from the day of its birth to the day of slaughter. They have shown the relation which food bore annually to cost, a most valuable experiment for farmers, and the result has been, I think, very encouraging on the whole. Another thing which has been done there is to ascertain the value and peculiarities of the different breeds of stock. In fact, so far as Ontario is concerned I should say this: that if the Government experimental farm is conducted as successfully as I understand the Guelph farm has been, it will leave very little to be desired. It will furnish a good pattern and afford a stimulus to exceed it if possible. There are many experiments in fruit growing—with the vine for instance—which might be made. We know very little about the vine in Canada. I am not aware that extensive experiments have yet been made to show which are the hardiest and earliest varieties of grapes; that is a most important subject in a climate where the summer is barely long enough to mature the fruit. I know in the Maritime Provinces the production of fruit has increased enormously of late years. After failures for two or three years I have myself at last succeeded in growing fruit. The great point in those experimental farms is to prevent the loss of time and money which attends experiments when conducted by individuals. They would put the farmer on the right track and demonstrate the best kinds of fruit to grow, show how they are to be obtained, and so with regard to insects which are so destructive. The Guelph farm and, I think, the famous Commission of the Ontario Legislature furnish an extensive history of these things. No work which has come before me on the subject of agriculture is more thoroughly searching than the report of the Ontario Agricultural Commission. Some gentleman connected with the Agricultural Department at Toronto was polite enough to send a copy of it to me. I have taken pains to circulate it amongst some of the most intelligent farmers of my Province, and invariably they have expressed surprise and admiration at the amount of good done by that Agricultural Commission. There is another thing to which I would like to allude before sitting down: it is the benefit derived all over the provinces from the Agricultural School at Guelph. Several times I have made application on behalf of people in Prince Edward Island for the admission of students, and I have always found a readiness to admit them to share in the great benefits to be obtained in that college. They have been admitted without scruple or hesitation; no unnecessary difficulties have been thrown in the way. The youth obtain a knowledge of agriculture there which they could not otherwise acquire without the experience of half a lifetime. I would touch upon one point more which I think will prove conclusively the necessity of the farmers of this country availing themselves of every possible means of improving their position. We see large quantities of mineral phosphates mined every year, particularly in the Province of Quebec, and yet, strange to say, by far the greater portion of it is exported to foreign countries. We hear frequently of failures of crops, even in wealthy, rich Ontario, where the land is supposed to be of the most fertile character and admirably suited for the growth of cereals. We hear of disappointments in the wheat crops—that they have been destroyed by rust, by the fly, or fail to come to maturity. Farmers generally do not appear to care to investigate those things, and yet if they obtained and read some of the manuals in use in agricultural schools in the United States they might see the causes of those failures to a great extent explained. It is shown that these mineral matters, which are found in every plant of wheat, are as essential to the growth of that plant as nails are to the building of a house. Without the nails a house cannot be made to stand, it falls to pieces, and without these mineral phosphates, apatites, and other fertilizers, a cereal plant, wheat particularly, cannot come to perfection. It is from long cultivation that these particular properties come to be exhausted from the soil. Science tells us how to replace them. It tells us that the minerals which are found in such great abundance in this country can, with a little preparation, be applied to the restoration of those exhausted phosphates to the soil. With reference to stock, I would say this with regard to my own province: It is alleged that for every hundred acres of improved land—and one-half of the whole area of the province is improved—there are 55 head of stock. I cannot from personal knowledge vouch for the accuracy of that statement.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—The figures in the census are 57 to the hundred acres.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I would just suggest to the House that if it were possible to add a dollar to the value of each animal, what an immense access to the public wealth that alone would make, and any one who has a practical knowledge of farming must be aware that there is far more difference than that between the value of, for example, a good grade short-horn ox three years old, and an animal of similar age not of improved blood. The one can be fed to advantage—the other scarcely pays for the food he consumes. Now carry out that idea throughout the country generally for a moment—every cow, every sheep, every ox and horse having but $1 added to its present value, see if there is not something to be gained by improving our system of agriculture. I do not wish to let it be supposed that in my opinion no dangers attend these farms. For instance, the Government may be remiss in establishing some of the remoter stations. We may have this 500 acres farm established here in the neighborhood of the capital, to be a very nice show place for visitors to Ottawa, or members of Parliament to drive out to on a holiday and spend an afternoon there: but the remoter parts—the Maritime Provinces for instance—may be forgotten, and we may find unexplained delays in the establishment of our experimental farm down there. Then, again, it may be right to record my opinion that the success of those experimental farms depends entirely on the honesty and skill with which they are conducted. If they are conducted on a proper basis they will be successful: if not they will be abused.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—I have felt a good deal of pleasure in listening to my hon. friend who has just taken his seat, and on the subjects he has dealt with I have nothing to say. I agree with almost everything he has said and I have an idea with regard to the mode of setting this thing on a suitable and permanent basis. As to the colleges themselves, I believe in them: but as to conducting them and supporting them from the seat of Government here I have doubts. I believe that at distant points there may be the neglect that my hon. friend adverted to: but when he speaks of anything affecting Prince Edward Island being forgotten or kept out of sight in this Chamber, at all events nobody will be disposed to agree with him, as long as its present representatives occupy their positions in the Senate. The idea which I wish to express is this: in my opinion it would be better if the Central Government appropriated a sum of money to be used by each province as soon as the provinces showed interest enough in the enterprise to put up some proportion of the money themselves, and give each province the management of the institution therein established. If we do not interest the provincial authorities in the institution, and leave it entirely in the hands of the Central Government, for my part I believe it will become extremely expensive, and will not be thoroughly conducted. But if—taking any basis you please, whether it be population or any other—the Central Government appropriate a sum of money to each of the provinces to be used as soon as that province comes down with a stated sum of money, then I think that province would take care of its own interest and the chances are that the experimental farm would be a success. This would not apply, of course, to the North-West Territories. Their supervision should be done from here; but, without knowing much on this subject, I have a very strong belief that this system would best secure the desired end. It would create an interest in it in each province, and when it became known that a sum of money was lying to the credit of each province in the Dominion exchequer, to be called upon when a province produced such additional sum as would be necessary, I feel that it would not be long left idle, and that it would produce more good than to leave the entire control with the Central Government.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I was very glad to listen to the clear, lucid and exhaustive statement made by the hon. gentleman from Toronto in introducing this Bill. We are very much indebted to him for giving us a full explanation of the contents of the Bill, of the principles which are contained in it and of its laudable objects. I was also very much gratified to hear an expression in its favor from gentlemen on the other side of the House, one of whom gave us, as he always does, a speech which was comprehensive, and which showed that he had fairly mastered the subject; at the same time I imagine that many details of the Bill had better be left until it is read clause by clause, and we have an opportunity of discussing it in Committee of the Whole. I do not rise for the purpose of discussing the details of the measure, but to correct an impression which seemed so material as to lead the hon. gentlemen from Sarnia to strike hands with a member with whom he does not often agree—a gentleman whose course in this House has not been such as to lead anyone to follow him very closely. The hon. gentleman from Sarnia said he thought this was particularly a matter which should be dealt with by the several provinces, and my hon. friend who has just sat down has also spoken somewhat to the same effect, although not exactly in the same line. The hon. gentleman from Sarnia thought it should be left to the provinces altogether; and the hon. gentleman from Toronto thought it would be well that the Dominion should make certain appropriations for each of the provinces, those appropriations to be used for the purpose mentioned here, and to be supplemented by similar appropriations from the provinces, the working out of the institutions to be thus created to be left to the provinces themselves. I will not discuss that question. I have my own opinion upon the success of some institutions that have been started in that way; but I wish to say that there is a clause in the British North America Act, which obviates entirely the objection which is made by my hon. friend, if he intended to convey the idea that there was constitutional objection to this kind of legislation. The 95th Section of the Act of Confederation reads this way :—

“In each province the Legislature may make laws in relation to agriculture in the province, and to the immigration into the province; and it is hereby declared that the Parliament of Canada may from time to time make laws in relation to agriculture in all or any of the Provinces, and to immigration into all or any of the Provinces; and law of the Legislature of a Province relative to agriculture or to immigration shall have effect in and for the Province as long and as far only as it is not repugnant to any Act of the Parliament of Canada.”

It was therefore intended that this, the paramount interest of this country—the interest which is the basis of all the wealth of this country—should be regulated finally by the Dominion Parliament, and I think that clause effectually settles the question as to whether the Parliament of Canada has any right to inaugurate such legislation as this. My hon. friend from Prince Edward Island, with that loyalty to his own Province which is apparent in every address that he makes to this House—which is very laudable, and which everyone admires—has suggested certain departures from this Bill in the enlargement of its scope. He speaks of the raising of horses. I think it is entirely foreign to a bill of this kind to provide that the Government shall go into stock raising. In the first place, the experiments in that direction are enormously expensive. The hon. gentleman has referred to race horses. Does he not know that those horses which have enabled the American breeders to win the prizes on the race courses of England are the result of an outlay so great that no success in the way of experimental stock raising can repay it in the slightest degree? I know that the gentleman who is the owner of Rayon D'Or paid $40,000 for that horse. Lexington and those famous horses that have been the progenitors of this stock were horses of priceless value and could not be reached by Parliament, and to breed from second rate stock is simply to deteriorate the stock that now exists. The same way with the breeding of thorough bred cattle—all experiments of that kind can be very safely left to private enterprise. There is wealth, enterprise and skill enough in all the Provinces to keep up the breed of horses, but I am sorry to say that it is not done as well as it ought to be. Nothing remunerates the farming community better than to have the best class of stock, whether it be in horses, cattle, sheep or swine, or even poultry. The hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island says that while he is quite sure the objects of this Bill will be carried out in the neighborhood of the capital, there will doubtless be an outlay which will enable gentlemen who have leisure time, as we have at our disposal occasionally, to drive out and visit those places: and they will be kept in special order for the inspection of members of parliament, to whom the officials will be indebted for appropriations from time to time: and he seems to suspect that the Maritime Provinces will be forgotten. From my experience in this House I do not think that the Maritime Provinces are likely to be forgotten. I think they are likely, under any circumstances, to make themselves heard, and if there is any neglect, we may be sure that my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island will make us acquainted with it. Even though his observations in that respect are sometimes microscopic they are useful, and he will not let us forget him or his island. But there is always a fly in the ointment. The hon. gentleman is a little afraid that this project will not be carried out with honesty and skill. I can say to the hon. gentleman that so far as my experience is concerned, honesty and skill are not confined to one side of the House or to the other: and I think he may safely trust the Conservative party, who are likely to carry out the provisions of this Bill, and to see those experiments extended for a good many years to come, will have the political tact to see that institutions of this kind are carried out skilfully and honestly for the purpose for which they are created because the mainstay of any political party is the agricultural interest of the country. The farming interest is that which any political party must ultimately depend on for success, and I say with particular pleasure that, so far as I know anything about the political conditions of the Provinces with which I have acquaintance, I think we are fairly supported by the agricultural interests, and we shall endeavor in carrying out a measure of this kind to show our gratitude for that support. In the North-West it is of vast importance that experiments of this kind shall be made. Everyone can understand that it is for the interest of the Government and the people of Canada, because we should not on every occasion look at the measure from a political point of view. I hope we may be able, in discussions of this sort, to divest ourselves as far as possible of political leanings, and everything which can be done to develop the agricultural interests of the North-west (the only interest there worth developing except the coal and cattle interest) should be done for the benefit of the older provinces, in order to increase the revenue of the people and to make their lands valuable. As an evidence of what may be done in that country, I see that the revenue receipts of Manitoba and the North-West together are almost enough to pay the interest upon the whole debt created by the expenditures upon those Provinces, including outlay upon the Canadian Pacific Railway—in a country which fifteen years ago did not yield revenue enough to pay the expense of keeping up custom houses.

HON. MR. POWER—I had not proposed saying anything on this measure until I listened to the observations of the hon. gentleman from Niagara. The hon. member who introduced the Bill made an admirable speech, in which there was no word of politics. The several gentlemen who followed him said nothing about politics. The hon. gentleman from Sarnia, and the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Mr. O'Donohoe) thought it might be better that the Government should not undertake the experimental farms in the older Provinces, but should assist the Provinces in doing the work, and I was rather disposed to adopt that view myself, but as it was a matter concerning which one could not be quite certain, I did not propose to say anything. I thought this was a measure introduced by the Government simply for the purpose of improving the agriculture of the country.

HON. MR. ALLAN—So it is.

HON. MR. POWER—I gathered from the remarks of the hon. gentleman who represents the Government occasionally that that is not the sole object of the Bill. The hon. gentleman from Niagara has perhaps given us another reason for the introduction of this measure, and that is that the Conservative party have been receiving a very large agricultural vote for some time, and they think desirable that this measure should be introduced as an indication that the Conservative party has at last awakened to the fact that they do owe something to the agricultural interests. Up to the present they have not seemed to realize that fact at all. They have been doing a good deal for manufacturers, contractors and people of that sort, and now, as the elections are approaching, we are informed by the hon. gentleman that they have awakened to the value of the agricultural vote. If that is what this measure means I think it is to be regretted that so much is to be expended for such a purpose. If the money is to be spent in an honest effort to improve the agriculture of the country it will be money well invested. If it were placed in the hands of a department which was under the control of a gentleman like the hon. member who has introduced this measure in the Senate. I should feel satisfied that it would be well expended in the interest of agriculture and not in the interest of politics. As it is not, I feel rather doubtful.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into committee of the whole on Bill (103) "An Act further to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act 1882"

In the committee, on the 1st clause.

HON. MR. PLUMB said: This clause really provides that the certificate given shall be on parchment instead of on paper.

HON. MR. POWER—It provides also that the certificate shall be granted by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries instead of by the Board of Inspection. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell us why that change has been made.

HON. MR. PLUMB—In order to save the necessity of going before the Board of inspection, as far as I can understand it.

HON. MR. POWER—The candidate has to pass his examination now as well as before ; it is only as to the certificate that the change is made.

HON. MR. PLUMB—He brings the certificate from the Board of Inspection, and I think it is perfectly simple that he gets his certificate from the Minister after passing his examination.

HON. MR. DEBOUCHERVILLE — The explanation is in the preamble ; that the board of Trade of the United Kingdom have reported to Her Majesty that they are satisfied that the examination under the Canadian laws of persons applying for certificates as engineers are equally efficient with those granted for the like purpose under the Imperial Acts, and they have advised the extension of the provisions of the Order in Council made under the Merchant's Shipping Act to persons intending to act as masters on board British sea-going ships, making Colonial certificates of competency of the same force as if they had been granted under the Imperial Acts.

The clause was agreed to.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD, from the Committee, reported the bill without amendment.

FINAL SETTLEMENT OF MANITOBA CLAIMS BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a committee of the whole on Bill (123) "An Act to explain the Act intituled 'An Act for the final settlement of the claims made by the Province of Manitoba on the Dominion.'"

In the committee,

HON. MR. POWER—This is a Bill of some little consequence, and I think we ought to be informed as to what its effects would be. I do not think the members of this House ought to shut their eyes and open their mouths and swallow any measure the Government give them. As far as I can make out, it provides that Manitoba shall be allowed a debt of $4,000,000. Under the Act of last year, which this Bill amends, and which we were told was a final settlement of the claims of Manitoba, we were informed that the population was to be estimated at 125,000, and that the subsidy was to be at the rate per capita as fixed by Act 33, Vic. Cap. 3. Will the hon. gentleman be kind enough to explain the object of this Bill.

HON. MR. GIRARD—The object of the Bill is to repair an error in the Act of last year. That Act, instead of referring to the measure of 1873, which adjusted the share of each Province, referred to the Act of 1870, generally known as the Manitoba Act. That was a mistake, the effect of which would be that Manitoba would lose $4.67 per head of its population. The object of this Bill is to rectify that error and complete the arrangement intended to be sanctioned by the Act of last year.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I hope the hon. member from Halifax is abundantly satisfied with the explanation which has been given, but I repel with considerable indignation the charge made against this House of adopting any measure without intelligently inquiring into it and understanding its provisions. Such a charge we certainly are not open to.

HON. MR. POWER—I hope my hon. friend quite understands the provisions of the Steamboat Inspection Bill.

HON. MR. VIDAL—Where is the necessity for even the explanation which has been given. The preamble tells us that the Bill is to remove all doubts as to the interpretation of a certain section. I take it, when a bill comes to us with a preamble of that kind, that its object is unmistakable—that it is simply to make more clear some expression in a former statute.

HON. MR. POWER—I do not see why the hon. member from Sarnia should give me to understand that I had no business to ask for this information.

HON. MR. VIDAL—Not at all; I did not say that.

HON. MR. POWER—I have to thank the hon. member from St. Boniface for explaining the difficulty in my mind. I find (I had not noticed it before) that section 24 of the Manitoba Act provided that the Province of Manitoba was entitled to receive from the Dominion of Canada interest at the rate of 5 per cent. on the sum of $472,090. Then, under the Act which was passed in 1882, the subsidies to all the provinces were increased and Manitoba became entitled to an amount per capita, equal to interest on an amount of $551,447: last year's Act, instead of being based on the Act 45 Vic., was based on the Act of 33 Vic. I quite understand the object of the Bill now: I did not understand it before. I only wish that other Bills which come before this Chamber were explained in as satisfactory a way as this has been.

HON. MR. ALLAN, from the Committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned at 9:45 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Monday, May 17th, 1886.

The Speaker took the Chair at three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

FREE PASSES ON THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY AND GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY.

MOTION.

HON. MR. MCINNES (B. C.) moved: That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before this House, a list of the names of all Senators and Members of the House of Commons who received Half Fare Tickets and Free Passes over all roads or portions of roads owned or operated by the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk Railway Companies between the first of November last and the first of April, 1886.

He said: As hon. gentlemen will remember, the reason I gave some time ago, when I asked that this notice should stand, was that I had written to a distant part of the country for some information having a direct and important bearing upon the subject under consideration. I regret to say that that information has not come to hand yet. However, although it has not come, I will proceed with the motion, although at considerable disadvantage, in consequence of not having that information. All of us who have been in public life for any length of time, in the honest discharge of our public duties have often been called upon to do and say things that we would much prefer to leave undone and unsaid or let others do them for us. That is the position in which I find myself to-day. I find that I am taking a very unpleasant and unpopular course. I am quite conscious of the fact that this motion is not only unpopular but highly distasteful to a large majority of the members of the House of Commons as well as in the Senate. Yet, however disagreeable and distasteful the task may be, I feel that it is a duty I owe to this House and to the country to bring to public notice a custom that has been in vogue for some time and which can have but one tendency, and that tendency an evil one. The custom has prevailed for some time that all railway companies in Canada give half fare tickets to members of parliament. That has become one of the unwritten laws of our country. Even the Intercolonial Railway has adopted the system and there is not an hon. gentleman in the Senate or the House of Commons who has not received a half fare pass over the Intercolonial Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway, and not only that, but I am credibly informed that a great number of them receive free passes over the Canadian Pacific Railway, with the exception of one humble member of this House.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Who is he?

HON. MR. MCINNES—When the return comes down the hon. gentleman from Lunenburg will see who it is. I might say for the information of my hon. friend that that hon. gentleman up to last year, was as highly favored probably as any member of the Senate in that respect. He not only received a half fare pass, but received an annual free pass over all the roads owned and run by this particular company, but it has endeavored to single him out and boycott him this year. This has all been done in consequence of that hon. gentleman having taken the liberty of criticizing some of the particular actions of that company. I have two objects in bringing this matter before the notice of the House. The first and most important is to prevent or discourage this vicious system of issuing passes to favored members, or rather to supporters of the Government, without making it general.

HON. MR. READ—Because you did not get one yourself.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I did not catch the hon. gentleman's remarks.

HON. MR. MACDONALD—It is only an "Oh!"—an Irish objection.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Some hon. gentlemen cannot be convinced. I do not think any reason, any logic, or any evidence in the world would convince them, because their minds are fully made up to support one course—right or wrong—and that runs in a very narrow channel.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—It is not true.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I would state for the information of the hon. gentleman who last interrupted me that the understanding was entered into at the request of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway companies of this country at the beginning of this year, that no free passes should be issued to any member of this House or of the House of Commons; that they were to receive half-fare tickets which would be good only during the Session and not during the year. That was done at the special request of the manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway. At that time the President of the Company and another very important director, as well as the Premier of this country, were absent from the Dominion; but after they returned a very suspicious occurrence took place, that is—instead of adhering to the agreement entered into between themselves and the Grand Trunk Railway Company, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company went to work and issued passes wholesale to members of this House and members of the Commons who support the Government. I have heard it stated by several reliable men who know a good deal about the internal working of these companies that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company did not intend to issue any free passes until they found out that they had to come to the Government of Canada to seek aid. That is the reason, I am told, why they departed from their own arrangement of only granting half-fare tickets during the Session.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Who told you so?

HON. MR. MCINNES—If the hon. gentleman is so anxious to find out who told me, I have only to say that if this House grants me a private commission, I will prove all I have stated on the floor of this Chamber, and a great deal more. I am stating what I know to be correct, and I challenge the Government to gainsay it; if they do, I only ask for the machinery by which I can prove it under oath from the mouths of those individuals themselves.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—What individuals?

HON. MR. MCINNES—Persons connected with the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, if the hon. gentleman is anxious to find out. They do not give free passes to members on the Opposition side of the House?

HON. MR. McMILLAN—They did not grant me a half-fare pass.

HON. MR. MCINNES—They have granted not only free passes but more valuable considerations in some instances.

Now I ask hon. gentlemen why do the Canadian Pacific Railway Company or other Railway Companies distribute their favors in the shape of free passes to Government supporters in Parliament?

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—To Government supporters only?

HON. MR. MCINNES—Almost exclusively. There are a few exceptions, but very few.

HON. MR. ALMON—There is the senior member for Halifax.

HON. MR. MCINNES—We will find out when the list comes down. Are the members of this House who support the Government all such sweet, dear creatures that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company cannot resist their smiles, and must reward them in some way, and the cheapest, by giving them free passes? If it is not owing to their sweet smiles, and meeting the managers of the Canadian Pacific Railway hat in hand and bowing to them, and all that kind of thing, it must be that the Company think they are very poor—very hard up and have not funds enough to pay their way the same as ordinary people; what is more likely and the view that the taxpayers of this country will take of it, is that those passes are given for the most selfish and sordid purposes, in order to place the supporters of the Government in this House and in the other House under an obligation, and the motive, no doubt, is to bribe. I would not for a moment say of members of this House that such a trivial affair as this would bribe them; but I have no doubt that the ratepayers of this country will view it in that light—that that is the sole object of the Railway Company in issuing free passes to members of Parliament. I believe it is only right and proper that we should all meet here on the same level. I believe that it is wrong and vicious on the part of any Railway Company to approach private members of this House by giving them free passes—especially any Railway Company that is coming before us asking for further legislation—for new favors as the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is doing at the present time. It cannot be looked upon without suspicion. I have heard it stated, on what I consider to be pretty good authority, that the Government are going to oppose this motion; that they are going to claim they have no power to demand such a statement; that this is a private matter wholly between the railway companies and individual members, and that this Government could not interfere with their internal arrangements. In order to satisfy myself on that point, I wrote some time ago to the solicitor of the Grand Trunk Railway, Mr. John Bell, of Belleville, a gentleman who has occupied that position for the last 35 years, and enclosed a copy of my notice asking him if the Government had the power to compel the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Company of which he was the solicitor to bring down a return. The reply was that, in his opinion, they had the power to do so. This letter is dated "Grand Trunk Railway of Canada, Solicitor's Office, Belleville, Ont., May 6th, 1886." If any hon. gentleman desires to see the letter he can have it.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Why did you not write to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the same information?

HON. MR. MCINNES—The Solicitor of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company stands in such a position in relation to this matter that his opinion would be entirely useless.

HON. MR. McMILLAN—The other road is antagonistic.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I am not aware that there is any antagonism,—a return is asked from the Grand Trunk as well as from the Canadian Pacific Railway?

HON. MR. McMILLAN—The aim is at the Canadian Pacific Railway.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I think it is high time that in the interests of this House, and in the interests of the fair name of the Senate of Canada (which I am sorry does not stand as high in the estimation of the people of the country as it ought to) that they should stamp out this evil which has done a great deal of mischief in the past and is likely to do a great deal more in the future, unless it is checked. If I live for another year it is my intention to introduce a bill, not for the purpose of preventing railway companies giving their pets in both Houses of Parliament free passes, because I am afraid that they would evade a law of that kind—but in defence of ourselves it is my intention to bring in a bill to compel every railway company in Canada to grant a free pass to every member of the Senate and of the Commons over their roads.

HON. MR. READ—And you will not get a seconder.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Hon. gentlemen may laugh; it may, perhaps, be a laughing matter to some hon. gentlemen, but I think it is a proper one, and a great many of the members of this House and of the other Chamber also would not be giving so many blind, foolish and I might say stupid votes as they are compelled to give by not having a better knowledge of the country that they represent.

HON. MR. VIDAL—It is a general insult to the House.

HON. MR. MCINNES—No it is not intended as a general insult to the House.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Then the hon. gentleman does not know what an insult is.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I say that it is impossible for a member of the Senate or of the other House to give an intelligent vote on a measure that affects the North-West Territory or British Columbia, places that they have never seen and in which the conditions of the matter under legislation might be totally different from anything we have here, thousands of miles away. I believe that it would be in the interests of the country were such a law passed. It would enable members of this House and of the House of Commons to travel and acquire that knowledge which they ought to possess to vote intelligently on matters affecting the different sections of this country.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—It is very gratifying indeed to find in this House such a very great purist as the hon. member from New Westminster, but it is not quite so pleasant to listen to the statements he makes indicating the very low estimate which he puts upon members of Parliament. He thinks that for a half-fare ticket or a free pass they are prepared to vote against what they believe to be right and for what they believe to be wrong. I think his estimate of the public men of this country is lower than that formed by the Canadian people.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I did not say that; I said it was quite evident—

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman should rise to a question of order.

THE SPEAKER—What is the question of order.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I do not rise to a point of order; I rise to make an explanation.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman cannot, without permission, interrupt another member even to make an explanation.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—The hon. gentleman said something about an agreement made between two railway companies on a certain subject. I have heard something about it, and think I am quite as good an authority on that matter as the hon. gentleman from New Westminster. I am not prepared to detail the statements which were made to me by those connected with the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, as I look upon what was said as private; at the same time I know that the hon. member is very far from being correct in the statements he has made. I know that positively, because I have seen the documents. The hon. member from New Westminster warns us of the terrible things that are going to happen to us if we continue to take these tickets, if we consent to be bribed—he stopped at that word because he thought it was going a little too far. It was rather funny, to say the least of it, that the hon. member had nothing to say about these passes or half fare tickets or anything of the kind until the Company ceased to send them to him

HON. MR. MCINNES—I rise to a question of order. I did not say that they had not sent a ticket to me. The hon. gentleman is stating something that I did not say.

THE SPEAKER—That is not a question of order.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I did not state that the hon. gentleman said so at all. I said myself that he did not raise any objection until they ceased sending him passes and I think most hon. gentlemen in this House understood me. Then he began to feel annoyed about it, and this motion is the result of it. Last year I heard a great many complaints from the hon. gentleman about the stupidity of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in making their western terminus at any place but Port Moody. People say (I cannot tell you whether it is true or not) that the hon. gentleman owned a very large amount of land there. This year the hon. member from New Westminster, who had been a supporter of the Government, has been very much opposed to them on almost every question that has come up and wicked people like myself could not help feeling that it was simply because he could not sell his lands about Port Moody, and because Mr. Van Horne had found it was more convenient to establish the western terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway at another place. I know it is very hard for a man who has calculated on making a half a million to a million of dollars on lands about Port Moody, to find that he has been engaged in a losing speculation.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I rise to a point of order. Is it the western terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway that is under consideration, or the subject of granting free passes to members of Parliament?

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman from Montreal is not speaking to the question, and besides he should not attribute motives.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I have heard a great many members travelling further from the real subject before the House than I have been to-day, as the House I am sure will see. I think the hon. gentleman is incorrect in asserting that there has been a wholesale showering of passes among members of Parliament. Then, as to travelling on passes, I had passes over the Grand Trunk Railway before I became a member of the Senate, and I hope I may have them again. I had passes to go through the states of Michigan, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska last December, and back again; I do not think the companies I received them from expected me to vote for anything on the other side of the line because of issuing those passes. To show the House that I am not mistaken in saying that the hon. member from New Westminster did not object to these passes until he ceased to get them himself, I will read a letter from him to Mr. Van Horne, dated April 9th, 1886:—

“All the members of House of Commons and Senate, with the exception of the undersigned, received half fare passes from all the railway companies in Canada, and I understand, the majority of them have free passes over the Canadian Pacific Railway east of Port Arthur. As I am the only exception I would like to know the reason why.

I have the honor to be,

Your obedient servant,

THOS. R. MCINNES.

I think that will bear out what I was saying a few minutes ago. I do not doubt that the hon. member from New Westminster felt annoyed because they did not think enough of his letter to give it a reply. That I suppose has irritated him, and he feels now that if others are granted passes he will try to prevent it because he has not got one himself. He says all the railway companies send half fare tickets to members. He is wrong there. There are a great many railway companies in Canada that have not sent half fare tickets to me, and railways connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway too. If I cross the St. Lawrence to travel by the South-Eastern I do not get passes, though I can come up here by the Grand Trunk or Canadian Pacific Railway without paying fare. It is something new to have an hon. member stand up here and give as his reason for moving this resolution, that he is afraid it may influence members to vote for the measures in which those railway companies are interested if they receive free passes. When I did have a pass over the Grand Trunk Railway on one occasion two or three years ago I voted dead against a bill in which they were interested. I would oppose anything that the Grand Trunk Railway or Canadian Pacific Railway Company might want to-morrow if I thought it was not in the public interest, and I am satisfied that a very large majority in both Houses would pursue the same course. I do think it is a great pity that a gentleman who has been respected so much as the hon. member from New Westminster has been should trouble himself about a small matter like this.

HON. MR. ALMON—We have all listened to the very sad, I might almost say moody—yes I will say moody, remarks which have fallen from the hon. gentleman opposite. He stated that passes had been given to hon. gentlemen because of their services as supporters of the Government. I am glad to hear that, because the senior member from Halifax, if that be true, is on our side: he has a pass over the Canadian Pacific Railway, as I have. In most cases, however, I have supported the Government, yet I have found myself differing very much from my colleague. But the hon. member from New Westminster says that is the test, and I must regard my colleague as a strong supporter of the Government. I am very glad of it: I think what we gain in that way will compensate for the three members we have lost. The hon. member from New Westminster says that these half-fare tickets and passes are given to us for either one of two reasons—either from sordid seasons, or because we are too poor to pay our fares. If I were the representative of New Westminster, residing in Toronto, and drawing an allowance every session for travelling from New Westminster to the Capital and return, I would no doubt be richer than I am. I do not know that the hon. gentleman does that, but I repeat if I was the member for New Westminster and had been living for a year and a half or two years in Toronto and intended to remain there for some time longer, and was drawing a travelling allowance, as I have described, of a thousand and odd dollars—am I correct as to the amount?

HON. MR. MCINNES—Nearly everything you have stated is incorrect.

HON. MR. ALMON—If I were drawing an allowance of that kind I would not be seeking to travel on half fare tickets or in forma pauperis. Still I do not think I am at all bought by anything I have received from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; and as for the Intercolonial Railway, though I do not claim free passes over that road for members of the Senate and House of Commons, I do think they ought to be given to members of the Civil Service, who are an under worked and under paid class. I think the Government should give them passes over all the roads they control, during the vacation. After all, I do not think there is any extraordinary privilege in granting half fare tickets. It gives me the same privilege I would have if I were to put on a white choker and pass as a minister of the Gospel. If I were travelling for a shoe manufacturing establishment in Montreal I would have half fare tickets over all the railroads. If I want to attend a Sunday school picnic, I can have the same privilege, and though the hon. gentleman may think that every man has his price, I should be sorry to suppose that it was so small an amount as a half fare pass.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Why make an invidious distinction? Why not treat all alike?

HON. MR. ALMON—The hon. gentleman divides those who take those tickets into two classes, sordid men, who are open to be bought, and paupers. Now I have proved that although we do not get travelling expenses for journeys that we do not make or intend to make, we still have money enough to pay our way. I am glad that this resolution has at last come up for discussion, because it is a disgraceful motion to appear on the order paper.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Yes; granting free passes to Government supporters only.

HON. MR. ALMON—Whether I have had tickets or not, I never wrote to Mr Drinkwater, or whatever his name is, asking for one.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Who asked for them?

HON. MR. OGILVIE—You asked why you did not get one.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I did, and had perfect right to do so.

HON. MR. ALMON—That question has already been answered by the letter that the hon. member from Montreal read. I am glad this motion is to be taken off the paper, because everybody, without exception, has looked upon it as a disgrace to the Senate.

HON. MR. READ—I would ask the hon. gentleman, who has made this motion, why make an invidious distinction of these two railways—why not say “all railways under the control of the Dominion of Canada?”

HON. MR. KAULBACH—And steamboats.

THE SPEAKER—He cannot do that without the consent of the House.

HON. MR. BELLEROSÉ—I may say that I am one of those members of parliament who have experienced the liberality of the Pacific Railway Company in the matter alluded to. I have been about 25 years in Parliament, and God knows, as well as man, whether I have been bribed at any time. I will not wait for the returns to come. I say at once that I received a free pass from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company this very year, and I cannot believe that their intention was to bribe me, because only last year and two years ago I opposed their Bills. Am I to suppose that they pay me in this way for having opposed them? I know there is a good deal of bribery, and that the affairs of this country are carried on largely on that principle, but it is not wise to be seeking for bribery in every act which the company or the Government may do. If you attempt to prove too much you will prove nothing, and any man who wishes to impeach the Government successfully should think before he acts and see that he does so on such grounds as will meet with popular approval. In this instance I think the hon. gentleman is making a mistake. In my own case the House will recollect how decidedly I opposed measures of the Canadian Pacific Railway last year, and that even late at night I detained members of the House here while I was making observations to prove how incorrect it was on the part of the Government to allow the Canadian Pacific Railway to extend their lines to Portland rather than to Halifax, and how I denounced any scheme which would prevent us having a Canadian all rail route from ocean to ocean. I condemned the Government not only for having decided in favor of the extension to Portland, but I said they had done wrong in coupling in that same bill two public enterprises, one of which I could not vote against, though I was opposed to the other. As I stated on that occasion, I had to vote for the bill because it contained a measure favorable to my province, which I could not oppose. Now that was a strong argument against the Canadian Pacific Railway and against the Government, and yet I received a free pass this year. I am convinced therefore that the Pacific Railway Company never thought that by such means they could induce a member of Parliament to support them when he thought they were wrong.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Why do they not give passes to Opposition members as well as to others?

HON. MR. BELLEROSÉ—Because the company are working with the party in power. Have the Opposition at any time ever set aside party feeling and voted in favor of the Canadian Pacific Railway? Never. I thought in receiving that free pass from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company this year that they were doing nothing more or less than any hon. gentleman might do—that they said to me “You have stood by the Pacific Railway for ten years past; during that time we did not offer you a single cent; now that the work is over, now that the gigantic railway system of Canada has been completed, we will offer you a reward." Is that bribery? Had I been offered a free pass at the beginning, I would have refused it; but how can I refuse it when I am offered the compliment after the work is completed. I am sure that any hon. gentleman who will look into the matter will see it in the same light.

HON. MR. MCINNES—What about the bill that they have before the House now?

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—If the hon. gentleman understands anything about logical argument he should see that my course in the past is evidence of the course I will pursue in the future. The Pacific Railway know that the party in power have stood by their enterprise for ten years. Last year when they asked for $22,000,000 what did I say? I took a stand in advance of any member in either House. I not only approved of lending the money, but I said I was prepared to vote to give them the money, and I say so now, because we ought to be willing to give the same amount that we had offered to give ten years before. The Company have done their work so well that even Opposition members like Mr. Mackenzie are forced to say that the enterprise has been carried out more successfully than they had anticipated. If I criticise the Government every day, it is because I believe they are doing wrong and ought to do better, but when the Pacific Railway Company are doing their duty and rendering a great service to the country, I say it is not proper to represent them to the people as men who are lowering themselves so far as to be bribing members of Parliament for a trifle.

HON. MR. FLINT—I regret very much to have to make a few remarks in reference to this question which is now before us. In the first place, I think that the motion of my hon. friend is altogether wrong and I am very sorry that he has pressed it. I think he will come off the worst in the battle. So far as free passes are concerned, I can say this much—I have never asked of the Grand Trunk Railway, the Pacific Railway or any other company a free pass, half fare pass or any other pass over any of their roads. I had something to do with the Grand Trunk at its inception. I have been in Parliament the greater part of the time since and had something to do with the Canadian Pacific Railway and am not sorry for any vote that I have given on that question. It was a wonderful undertaking and just what Canada needed to place it in a position to induce people to settle in our country, as they had been settling in the western states. And without this great line of railway we could not expect that our North-West Territories would become populated. It was impossible to expect it, because the experience of late years has been that immigration has followed the lines of railway. I regret very much that my hon. friend has placed such stress on this question; I do not think it is possible that any member of this House, or of the House of Commons, would be bribed to give a vote for the Canadian Pacific Railway because he got a free pass or a half-fare ticket over their road. So far as I am individually concerned, I can safely say that I have not been bribed; but it has looked to me a little as though my hon. friend would have been bribed if his wishes had been carried out as regards the purchase of land at the proposed terminus of the railway at Port Moody. I am sorry for my hon. friend, because I think he has taken a wrong course. He has given us a quotation from a letter written by Mr. Bell, the solicitor for the Grand Trunk Railway. I am well acquainted with Mr. Bell, and have known him for some fifty years. He is a gentleman of high standing in his profession, and a man much respected; but I may say this much for Mr. Bell's opinion: he is not always correct. It is not long since that gentleman gave an opinion on a matter connected with the County Council, and the judge at the last Assizes decided against that opinion and gave his judgment in favor of the opinion advanced by myself and others. Not being a member of the legal profession, it was not supposed that I should know as much about it as a lawyer, but I took the plain, common-sense view of it, and Mr. Bell's opinion has been pronounced wrong. If his opinion in that case was incorrect, his opinion in this case may be wrong also. I cannot see for the life of me how it is

HON. MR. BELLEROSE.

Possible that the Government can dictate to the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway as to whom they may give passes and to whom they shall not.

HON. MR. MCINNES—The Government propose to make the Canadian Pacific Railway a present of $15,000,000 this year.

HON. MR. FLINT—Supposing they do? If I give you $20,000,000 that is no reason why I should give you more or that you should control me in anything. The fact is, the Government are not giving it to them; they are giving it to the country, and the country has the benefit of it, and the hon. gentleman voted for it himself.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Not all of it.

HON. MR. FLINT—The hon. gentleman did vote for the greater part of it; he voted until he found he could not make money out of it.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I am sorry that I am obliged to call my venerable friend to order. It is a sad state of affairs when an hon. gentleman cannot rise in this Chamber to discuss any public question without bringing in personalities. It is monstrous!

HON. MR. FLINT—I stand corrected.

THE SPEAKER—I think the hon. gentleman is wandering from the question and also that he is wrong in attributing motives to the hon. gentleman from New Westminster.

HON. MR. FLINT—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I do not like to be personal, but it does strike me as strange that the hon. gentleman can rise here and impugn the motives of every gentleman in this House in accepting free passes.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I did not impugn the motives of hon. gentlemen here; I impugned the motives of the Company in issuing free passes to Government supporters and Government supporters only.

HON. MR. FLINT—It is the same thing.

THE SPEAKER—It is in that way I understood the remarks of the hon. gentleman from New Westminster—as not imputing motives to members of this House but to the Company.

HON. MR. FLINT—If that be the case then the Company, from what the hon. gentleman said, was issuing tickets to members of this House and to members of the Commons for the purpose of bribing them.

HON. MR. MCINNES—No doubt that was their object.

HON. MR. FLINT—It is suggested as being a kind of sop thrown out to members. I travel for half fare over that road, and is it to be supposed that I am, on that account, bribed to come here and vote any amount of money that the company see fit to ask? The thing is perfectly ridiculous. I happen to hold not only the Grand Trunk Railway pass at half-fare up to the last of May, but also a free pass on the Canadian Pacific Railway. I never sought for these advantages. I hold one for the Canada Atlantic, and also one for the Intercolonial Railway. I never sought for these; I never asked for them; and if they had not been sent to me I should never have grumbled about it; and if I had been placed in the position that the hon. gentleman occupies, and if all the members of both Houses except myself had received free passes, I would not have complained. I should never have written a letter asking the reasons for an oversight of that kind; I would have quietly submitted to it and said I was as able to pay my fare now as I had been before free passes were issued. I do not know whether the Government will give the hon. gentleman what he asks for or not; I am an independent man and not in the secrets of the Government; but I cannot see any good reason why the Government should be asked to bring down such a return as is asked for in this motion. I do not believe that any hon. gentleman here or in the other House who has got a free pass or a half-fare ticket would object to showing them to the hon. gentleman if he asked to see them.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I will read from the journals of the House the names of those gentlemen who voted with the hon. member from New Westminster last year in opposition to the extension of the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Port Moody to Coal Harbor. I may say that a number of those gentlemen to my knowledge have received free passes. Was it a bribe to them or was it a reward for having opposed and voted against the company that free passes were given to those gentlemen? Amongst those who voted with the hon. gentleman from New Westminster are Mr. Armand, Mr. Bellerose, Mr. Guévermont, Mr. Kaulbach, Mr. Dever, Mr. Haythorne, and others—twelve in one of those divisions. There are some other divisions in which the same names appear, and I know that some of them have received free passes and half fare tickets. Is it because they opposed the Canadian Pacific Railway Company last session that they have received those passes?

HON. MR. LEONARD—This is a matter which I am sure interests the whole country. We are having a net work of railways all over the Dominion, and of course it affects the affairs of Parliament, and I feel that we are indebted to the hon. gentleman for bringing up this question, because it is only the beginning of a long contest that is looming up before us. My opinion about the whole thing is that the railways have a perfect right, and they exercise that right under the charters, to issue free passes or half fare tickets as they please. The railway companies of this country, like all other companies are seeking their own interest at the expense of the public, and I think that sooner or later Parliament will have to step in and regulate this whole system. I feel that these railway companies have made a great mistake in issuing free passes and half rate passages to certain parties. What is the object of it? We must conclude that it is in order to carry out their own designs, which is perfectly natural. This question is now before us and we ought to consider it and see how they are working their schemes in order to carry out their own ends. I think the hon. gentleman is entitled to our gratitude for directing attention to this matter, which is an important one that we have got to investigate and will have eventually to regulate, because in our own little city I find that our Grand Trunk Railway are in the habit of giving drawbacks on freight to certain men who ship certain quantities of freight to different localities. It is very unfair: the honest man who is compelled to pay full rates is thus subjected to unfair competition. Hon. gentlemen rise here and say that the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway are perfectly fair and perfectly right in what they have done, and this is proof to me that they have all got passes: and although I have had half fare passes myself, I refused to use them until two years ago when I saw that other members went in for it, and I thought I would go in with the crowd. But the principle is all wrong; we will have to regulate this vicious system by legislation.

HON. MR. POWER—I was very much pleased indeed to hear the remarks of the hon. gentleman from London. I believe it is the first time this session that we have had the pleasure of hearing his voice in this House, and I regret we do not hear it oftener; because it is the voice of reason, common sense and fair play. I should not have said anything on this motion if my hon. colleague had not thought proper to inform the House that I was the holder of a free pass from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company this session. I did receive a free pass from the Company this year, and I was very much surprised at getting it. I have constantly voted against their measures since the session of 1880, and any measure of theirs that I think is not in the public interest I shall vote against in the future. I was not aware, when I received that pass, that other members of the same political faith as myself had not received the same favor. I presumed that the company had made the issuing of the passes a general thing. I think it is to be regretted that they have not. I think the present system of singling out certain members as objects of special favor is a very objectionable one, and I hope it will be put an end to. There is no reason why a member of Parliament should receive at any rate more than a half fare ticket. That is a usual favor I believe to other persons besides members of Parliament. We receive a very liberal allowance from the country for our mileage, and I think the least we may expect to do is to pay half fare rates. The system of issuing free passes is an objectionable one; or if they are to be issued they should be given to all members indiscriminately—adopt either one system or the other. Some hon. gentlemen have spoken of this privilege as being too small to influence the votes of members. It is not easy to tell how small a matter may influence the vote of a member sometimes; and I notice that in the United States this subject of railway passes has been thought worthy of special legislation in some of the States: and if I am not mistaken, the hon. gentleman from London indicates what is coming when he says that in the not distant future we shall have to deal with the matter here. There is this to be said about the Canadian Pacific Railway Company also, they have received very large sums from the public treasury. These funds are drawn from all classes of the population. The strongest Reformer has to pay his share as well the strongest Conservative; and as, in a certain way, it is public money that is being spent in giving these free passes, one party is quite as much entitled to them as the other. I repeat that the system is an objectionable one, and that it ought to be put an end to. There ought to be no free passes: but if there are free passes they ought to be free to both sides of the House. With respect to the letter of the hon. gentleman from New Westminster, which has been read by the hon. gentleman from Alma, I happen to know something about it, because the hon. gentleman spoke to me about this matter some time ago. I said to him that possibly he was under a misapprehension—that his pass might have been sent to British Columbia, or that it had missed him in some other way; that I hardly thought the company would have singled him out as an exception to the general rule; and he concluded then, in order to be sure that he had been so singled out, that he had better write to the Vice-President of the company and ascertain whether his not receiving the pass was an oversight or accident, or whether it was the result of deliberation; consequently I think the letter does not tell for anything against the hon. gentleman.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—If this was a question with regard to Government railways I should support it, because we should have annually handed to us the statement of what is done on the Government lines; and if it were done it might disclose the existence of a system of which Parliament would not approve. From my own personal knowledge I believe such is the case: but my hon. friend asks for what I do not think the Government has any authority to grant. The hon. gentleman rather considered that the motive of the company in issuing free passes was to bribe, and he said it had a corrupt tendency, and if it were not for that there would not be so many blind, stupid, and foolish votes given by this House.

HON. MR. MCINNES—No I did not.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—The hon. gentleman said that, or words to that effect.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I did not say that in connection with the passes; but I said in reference to gentlemen in both Houses that they had not a sufficient knowledge of the country, and if all companies were compelled to give free passes to members of Parliament it would enable them to travel over the country and get a better idea of what legislation was required in order to benefit the country.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I accept the hon. gentleman's explanation, but he stated the object of issuing these free passes, yet he complains that he is the only exception—the only gentleman who did not get one.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I did not say that.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I do not think this has been made a matter of politics at all.

HON. MR. PELLETIER—I did not get a pass.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—The hon. gentleman stands just in the same position as I do. I have received no pass, and have paid my own fare over the railway. I received no passes within the time mentioned in this statement. It is strange that the hon. gentleman did not see the evil tendency of the granting of free passes until he was left without one. It had no evil effect on him when he was the possessor of a free pass; it did not prevent him from voting against the Pacific Railway,—neither had it that effect on me. Last year I went largely with my hon. friend on the Port Moody question, but I do not believe that it was in consequence of my independent vote in this House, that I did not receive a free pass. If I said anything about the company, or had called them robbers or plunderers, probably I would not consider myself entitled to a complimentary pass.

HON. MR. ALMON—You would not have accepted it from them if you had.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—No, I would not have accepted it from the company if I had as poor an opinion of them as my hon. friend from New Westminster seems to have. I do not think it becomes the hon. gentleman to bring this motion before the House, as it is only since he has failed to receive this favor himself that his eyes are opened to the corrupt tendency of the free pass system. I should not ask the company for a pass if I never got one. I never asked for a free pass from a railway or steamboat company in my life. If they think proper to send me one, I accept the compliment: nevertheless if I thought the company were not worthy of public confidence I should not accept a pass from them. I am sorry that this motion did not include free passes over Government roads, as I think it would show that improprieties exist there and that invidious distinctions are made in the issuing of passes.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I think we have wandered very far from the subject which is properly before us in the motion before the House. If the hon. gentleman had really introduced the bill, which he has told us he contemplates introducing on a future occasion, then the discussion would have been in order, and pertinent to the subject; but what has the discussion been all about? All about the propriety or impropriety, the rectitude or the wrong in granting free passes. A very simple proposal is made to us that this House shall pass an address to His Excellency, asking for certain information. As to that information supposing it was in the power of the Governor in Council to give it to us, what object is to be gained by it? I cannot conceive any public interest that is to be advanced by the House being put in possession of the information asked for. It appears to me that it is a private concern between the railroad, and those to whom the railway company think proper to pay this compliment.

HON. MR. MCINNES—My hon. friend is afraid to give the true information to the public.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I do not think the public care one straw to know anything about the matter. It would be just the same thing to me to be told that every member in this House but myself got half fare or free passes as to be told that Mr. A, Mr. B or Mr. C, got free passes. But what position has this House to take? We ought to act deliberately and in a way consistent with our dignity and our intelligence. We ought not to approach the Governor in Council and ask him for that which we know he cannot give us. He is not in possession of the information which this address professes to ask from him. Those railway companies do not make these returns. The Government have no right to ask for such returns—I do not care for the opinion which has been advanced from Mr. Bell. In my opinion there is nothing in the law by which the Government can compel the companies to give this private information which we are asking for in this address, and by adopting it we are acting in a manner inconsistent with our position and seeing that the Government has no power to obtain this information, I think the hon. gentleman would best consult the dignity of this House and his own character and reputation by withdrawing the motion.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—When my hon. friend presented his motion he mentioned two different names as seconders. I think it has been questioned whether these gentlemen would second the motion or not. I told my hon. friend in such a case I would second the motion myself, though I would reserve my right to vote against it. I would have seconded it as a matter of courtesy, though I believe it is not necessary under the rules that there should be a seconder. Though I am ready to second the motion I may say that I do not believe we have the right to ask for such a return, and supposing the address were voted, I do not think His Excellency would have the power to order such a statement to be brought down to the House. It seems to me that this matter is about on the same footing as the private business of a bank. The fact of a man holding a free pass does not necessarily show that he has received a favor from a company. It may be, and it has happened very often that the accepting of a free pass and using it may be a favor conferred upon the company by the person receiving it. For instance, one of our colleagues here, who is well known to all of us as doing an immense business with the West; it is very well known that it is to the interest of the two railway companies to secure his trade, and this gentleman by accepting a free pass has an occasion to judge of the efficiency of the road, and whether it is in his interest to send his freight in that way. It does not necessarily follow that because a man has accepted a free pass that he has received a favor. It is a private matter into which we should not inquire. It does not follow that my hon. friend is altogether wrong in bringing this matter before the notice of the House. It might happen that bribery is done through free passes: at the same time the mode adopted by the hon. gentleman of bringing this matter forward is not the proper one. It would be first necessary to bring a case before the House: and the moment there is a special case where a member of this House is satisfied that there has been a case of bribery or an attempt to bribe, then it would certainly be judicious to move in the matter, either by asking for a committee, or by some other course.

HON. MR. CLEMOU—I intend to discuss this question from a different standpoint altogether. I intend to consider it from its financial aspect. I presume that the percentage of free passes issued is very small; therefore the advantage of half fares is in the company's favor. The company are naturally anxious to induce people to travel; they give this privilege not only to members of Parliament, but to all commercial travellers, to large associations, to Boards of Trade and others, to encourage travel and to increase the financial success of the road. I believe that if railway companies were to do more in the way of half fare rates that it would be a great advantage to the roads themselves by largely increasing their revenue, and by encouraging travel would be a benefit to the people. We know that in the United States the railway companies adopt every means in their power to encourage people to travel over their roads. I know that this session a great many gentlemen have taken advantage of the half fare rates to travel to their homes four or five times, who would, if they were obliged to pay full fares, have remained in the city the entire session. I look upon it as a sound financial policy well worthy of the consideration of all railway companies. As to the suggestion of corruption and bribery in the issuing of free passes, for my part I do not believe that any member of this House or the other House is in the slightest degree influenced by receiving the small consideration that is given to many other people in this country.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I concur in the remarks which have fallen from the hon. gentleman who spoke last. It is a matter of dollars and cents in the case of the company and the members. The members of Parliament here are a numerous body of customers, and it is felt by the companies that if they place certain advantages at their disposal they are likely to spend a larger sum in travelling than they would do if they had to pay full fare. A statement of this kind is not of much value unless supported by facts. I will therefore place a few facts before the House that will substantiate the proposition put forward by the hon. gentleman from Ottawa. The distance from my own place to Ottawa and back is a little over 2,000 miles. Last session I travelled backwards and forwards altogether over 6,000 miles. If I had to travel on a full fare ticket I should not have gone backwards and forwards more than necessary to bring me to Ottawa to my Parliamentary duties and return. That is to say, I should have only made two thousand miles of mileage; but, having the privilege of half-fare tickets I travelled three times that amount. That is to say, six thousand miles. Therefore, I pay to the Railway Company fully 1,000 miles of full fare more than I should have done if I had full fare tickets. It was some advantage to me, but it was a clear gain to the company who own the road. I pay into their treasury one thousand miles of full fare more than I should have expended if I had had no half-fare privilege.

HON. MR. DEVER—I fully agree with the hon. gentleman from Ottawa that we should look at this matter from a commercial standpoint; but I will go a little further. I should consider that giving advantages to travellers on our railways would certainly add much to the revenue of those companies. There is an item that has not been spoken of, and that is the sleeping cars. The Pullman cars are known now to be the property of the Intercolonial Railway and also of the Canadian Pacific Railway. On the Intercolonial Railway we get a half-fare pass—but we get no half-fare rate for our Pullman; consequently the Government receive the full benefit of the Pullman car fare as much as if the passenger had paid full rates for his tickets. Many gentlemen, in my opinion, would not travel so often backwards and forwards as they now do were it not for the inducement of the half-fare ticket on that road. During the adjournment it has been a question with me whether I could go home or stay in Ottawa. On investigation of the expense here I have found that I could go home on a half-fare ticket for the same amount it would cost me to stop at the hotel, and the consequence was the railway company gained some $35. As for the Canadian Pacific Railway, I have been the recipient of a pass from that company, but until this year I never embraced the opportunity of taking a trip over their road. I was induced to come by it this year simply because I found that I could not go at mid-day by the other line and that I could go in the afternoon by the Canadian Pacific Railway; consequently I travelled that way on the free pass: but I had to pay for my meals and for the Pullman car. There is always some gain to the company. In my opinion it adds to the trade and traffic of the road incidentally, and therefore, from a commercial standpoint, the case is not as black as the hon. gentleman from New Westminster would try to present it to us. If there is anything wrong in the matter I have no objection that it should be known: but I think the question has been thoroughly discussed, and I would propose in amendment that this motion be voted on this day six months.

HON. MR. PLUMB—After all that has been said here, and after the wide range the debate has taken, I shall intrude but briefly upon the time of the Senate to make a few observations. Whatever my personal feeling towards the mover of this motion may be, I certainly do not wish to add to the humiliation which has been put upon him by the disclosure that has been made during this debate.

HON. MR. McINNES—Hear! hear!

HON. MR. PLUMB—I do not envy the hon. gentleman the position which he holds, or the idea that he entertains that members of this House or of the other House can be influenced by so small a consideration as that of holding a free pass or half-fare ticket over the Canadian Pacific Railway. That hon. gentleman knows his own value best, and is best qualified to judge how far that would affect him; and we can imagine what influence—

HON. MR. McINNES—I rise to a question of order. Here is the reputed leader of the Government imputing motives in almost the very first sentence in reply to my motion. It shows what a capable gentleman he is to lead this House. He has brought more disgrace upon the Senate than any member in it.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE

HON. GENTLEMEN—Order, order!

THE SPEAKER—I think the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Niagara are rather of a taxing character, according to the rules of this House.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I have only to say that the Pacific Railway Company spoken of here is not at the present time, so far as I know, a suitor for favours at the hands of this House or of the other House. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company is asking the privilege of paying back the large loan advanced last Session. It is now proposing to square off this loan account, as to which predictions were made that it would never be paid. With regard to what the hon. gentleman has insinuated as to the passes over any of these roads, I think it is derogatory to this House and discreditable to its members to insinuate that such a courtesy could affect their votes. I do not think that any hon. member has fallen so low that a free pass will influence his vote in one way or the other. In order to close this discussion I am instructed to say that the Government has nothing to do with the matter contained in the resolution and the list in question cannot be laid before the House.

THE SPEAKER—The motion of the hon. gentleman from St. John is not in order.

HON. MR. MCINNES—In rising to reply to remarks which have fallen from hon. gentlemen on this motion, I would first refer to the position taken by the hon. member from Montreal who, I regret to observe, is not in his place. I never like to say anything against a man when he is present to hear what I have to say. However, he referred to a letter and sought to create the impression that I wrote to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company on the 9th April asking for a pass. I never did anything of the kind. After having given notice of this motion for about a week or ten days, in talking with hon. members of this House I came to the conclusion that it was just possible that an invidious distinction was not made in my case by not giving me a half fare ticket the same as I got—and every member in this House got—from all the other railway companies of Canada. I thought it just possible they had sent one and that the letter miscarried. I did not wish to do the company any injustice and, as has been explained to the House, I wrote to the Vice-president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company simply asking why it was that I had not received a half fare ticket such as was issued to every member of the House of Commons and the Senate irrespective of political considerations. That was what I wrote and I was perfectly justified in doing so, notwithstanding the fact that the hon. gentleman from Montreal, who appears to be the advocate of the Canadian Pacific Railway here to-day, has endeavored to place me in a false position. The fact is established that they themselves made a bargain with the Grand Trunk Railway Company by which no passes should be issued by either company, and that when they decided to come to Parliament and ask for a grant of a few million dollars more, then and not until then did they see fit to issue passes to members of both Houses supporting the Government. Hon. gentlemen think this is a trivial matter and one with which this House has no concern, but I can assure them that every taxpayer in the Dominion has an interest in knowing how the millions of dollars granted in aid of that enterprise are expended. It all has to come of the pockets of the taxpayers of the country.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—No, it is not true.

HON. MR. MCINNES—It is true, and not only that, the members of that company will have on completion of the road millions of dollars to their credit more than when they entered into the enterprise; and if there ever was a company that was bound, or ought to be bound, to disclose their workings to the ratepayers, it is the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is only another evidence that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Government are one, and that the company, as it has been stated, has the Government by the throat. It is another evidence that the Government dare not move, and that its only hope in the future is in supporting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I would like to ask who has conducted the Railway Department of this country for the last two years. Is it Mr. Pope the present acting Minister? No, the real ministers are Sir George Stephen and Van Horne.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—I call the hon. gentleman to order. I think the hon. gentleman is certainly wandering from the subject.

THE SPEAKER—I think so too.

HON. MR. MCINNES—The very fact of that railway company singling out a member of this House and denying him what is his privilege, his due and his right—a right that is recognized and conceded by every other railway company in Canada—that is, the right to have a half fare pass—when that invidious distinction is made I say it is sufficient evidence of the arbitrary and despotic disposition of the Company to condemn it. It is boycotting that member. It is a declaration to those who have received free passes and half fare tickets that they had better look out how they criticize the policy or conduct of the company—that if they do not study the interests of the company they will receive the same treatment. I believe the gentleman who manages that company exposes himself sufficiently when he fails to answer the letter sent to him by a member of this House.

HON. MR. CARVELL—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has a right to reply certainly, but to rise here and attack individual officers of the Company in the way he is doing is out of order. The motion, if I read it right, is for papers, and he is transgressing the rules of debate and if we are to stay here until six o'clock debating this matter I think we are simply losing time.

THE SPEAKER—It is altogether a matter of taste. The hon. gentleman can use his parliamentary privilege as long as he keeps within the rules of Parliament. I cannot see that the hon. gentleman is infringing the rule.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I would not perhaps have spoken as strongly as I did

on that point, but after addressing as respectful a letter as I could to an officer of the company, he did not think it proper to reply. I think common courtesy demanded that he should at least have acknowledged the receipt of it, even if he withheld the information that was asked for. The Canadian Pacific Railway, in trying to punish a humble member of this House by making this invidious distinction which I have described, are guilty of an action which is unworthy of them. It is such an action as would be expected from a lot of school boys and not from a Company with a capital of over $100,000,000. It is really childish; but so far as that hon. gentleman against whom it is directed is concerned, I can tell the House and that company that if they were worth ten times as much money and possessed ten times the influence that they exercise here to-day—an influence that they are using I am afraid, not in the true interests of the company or the country—it would not affect in the slightest the course he is pursuing. He has never, thank goodness, been in the position that he could not pay his own fare over any railway that he has travelled by, and I think he is in just as good a position to-day as he ever was to pay his own fare. Last year that hon. gentleman was a whiteheaded boy and patted on the back; he supported the railway as long as he could—until its policy became intolerable; and so long as he did that there was no favor too great for him. In conclusion I wish to say to the leader of the government, or one of the leaders of the government, the person who occupies the position of a gentleman that I sincerely regret is not here to conduct the affairs of this House—if he was here we would not have witnessed the scenes that have been enacted of late, or the scene that the hon. gentleman provoked a little while ago—I can tell the hon. member from Niagara now that if he is entrusted by the government to lead this House, I will not submit to any of his interruptions or irrelevant remarks. I will not brook any longer those vile insinuations that he has often thrown out. He interrupts me with out the slightest provocation when I am endeavoring to discharge my duty in this House, and I give him warning now that I will not tolerate it longer—that I will not permit him to attack and interrupt me in future as he has done in the past. It is only in keeping with his past history in the other House and in the Senate; but no amount of impertinence will prevent or deter me discharging my duty as a member of the Senate. I have constitutional rights and privileges as a member of this House and will exercise them despite the hostility of that hon. gentleman who has so long acted as a government lackey.

HON. MR. BOSTFORD—I rise to a question of order; the hon. gentleman has no right to use such language.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman from New Westminster concluded his remarks with an observation which was certainly most parliamentary and it does not diminish the discredit of his conduct that he did it when he was resuming his seat and when he thought he was free from the censure of the chair.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I should like to say a few words.

HON. GENTLEMEN—Spoke! spoke!

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman has already spoken and cannot speak again without the consent of the House.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—It was not my purpose to have made one observation on the motion now before the House, and I would have carried out that purpose had not one remark fallen from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Plumb) who, I suppose, now acts as the leader of the House. We must assume this, from his name appearing in charge of Government Bills, and that he has been appointed by Sir John Macdonald to represent the Government in this House. The remark which the hon. gentleman from Niagara made was that painful disclosures had been made since the debate commenced affecting the hon. gentleman on my right. Now, I conceive it to be my duty as a humble member of this House to say that we all have the honor of this House as well as our leaders and of the Government in our hands, and from that standpoint I am impelled by a sense of duty to put a simple question before Parliament and the country. I put the question to the hon. gentleman from Niagara (Mr. Plumb) and call upon him now for an explanation with regard to certain rumours which have been current for many years respecting him and affecting his honor. I call upon him now to place us in the position to deny those rumours if he can. Those rumours are to the effect that he left Albany—

HON. GENTLEMEN—Order! Order!

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman is certainly out of order and cannot proceed without the leave of the Senate.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I dissent from the Speaker's ruling, and I wish to take the sense of the House upon it.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman appeals from the ruling of the chair and wishes to have the sense of the House taken. I therefore ask that the hon. gentlemen's appeal be taken into consideration by the House. Shall the hon. gentleman be heard?

HON. MR. DEVER—Yes, he shall.

THE SPEAKER—Those in favor of his being allowed to proceed will please rise.

HON. MR. DE BOUCHERVILLE—There ought to be a motion before the House.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman appealed to the House, and the House alone can decide upon it.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I believe it would be better to enter into the matter with a little more coolness and patience. Sometimes members of this House have gone even further than the hon. gentleman has gone to-day. I do not approve of it, but justice should be rendered in every case, and though I disapprove of the course of the hon. gentleman, I believe the House should not go too far. When the hon. gentleman is wrong he ought to be let alone and a motion made that his speech be not published. I believe that would be the best way to punish those who have not sufficient self-respect ; but it is not wise to have these unseemly quarrels and let reports of them go to the country. The public will look upon this House as a body that has little sense of self-respect or dignity.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I do not know any more serious question that could be submitted to us than the one that is really before us—that is, whether the Speaker's decision is to be sustained by the House. An appeal from the decision of the Speaker is not very common, and it involves very serious consequences. I think we should at once endeavor to have the authority of the Speaker sustained.

HON. MR. DEVER—The hon. gentleman who is supposed to have transgressed the rules of this House was called to order. The Speaker ruled that he was out of order, but he left it to the House to deal with the decision. I do not think we should shut off any member, especially when he is attacking a member who is well able to defend himself. The hon. member from Niagara is one who is not very easily put down himself, and he is willing and anxious at all times to attack others. This House is not going to be ruled by a party. It has been ruled long enough by a party. We must have fair play in this House and free discussion. It would be a shame to allow hon. gentlemen to be bulldozed in this manner.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I do not wish to be understood as saying that the ruling of the Speaker was wrong. I say it was right, but I think it would be better for the hon. gentleman from Woodstock not to appeal to the House but to ask leave to go on and then, if permitted, proceed with his remarks.

THE SPEAKER—The question of order was raised and I decided it in my humble judgment as I thought right. The hon. gentleman thought proper to appeal from that decision, and that meant, of course appeal to the House. I asked the House for its opinion as I think I was perfectly right in doing. I do not think I would have been doing right if I had not submitted it to the House after the hon.

gentleman had asked that it should be so submitted. According to the rules of the Senate when a member is called to order he must sit down and must not proceed until he is permitted to do so.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—If I said anything on the floor of this House—(order, order) I only wish to make an explanation.

HON. MR. SMITH—The question is before the House.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I desire to say that if I used any language disrespectful to the Speaker, or in any way infringed the rules of this House, I now make an apology.

THE SPEAKER—Does the House wish the hon. gentleman to proceed.

HON. GENTLEMEN — Question ! question !

THE SPEAKER—The question is on the motion of the hon. member from New Westminster.

The motion was declared lost on a division.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (130) "An Act respecting certain works constructed in and over navigable waters." (Mr. Plumb.)

Bill (22) "An Act respecting interest in the Province of British Columbia." (Mr. Plumb.)

Bill (65) "An Act respecting the Northern and North-Western Junction Railway Company." (Mr. Vidal.)

Bill (106) "An Act to amend and consolidate as amended the statutory provisions respecting Chinese immigration." (Mr. Plumb.)

Bill (94) "An Act further to amend the Dominion Lands Act, 1883." (Mr. Plumb.)

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY.

MOTION.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE moved,

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General; praying that His Excellency will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House, a copy of a letter or memorandum addressed by F. G. Baillargé, Esquire, one of the members of the Commission appointed to make an investigation into the management of St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary in 1884, to Godfroi Laviolette, Esquire, Warden of that Penitentiary, requesting the latter to withdraw from his reply to the defence of Mr. Telesphore Ouimet all that might be considered an attack upon, or complaint against, the Inspector, the other member of the Commission of Enquiry; also a copy of Mr. Laviolette's answer to this demand; also a copy of the report upon the state of that building made by the Warden of the aforesaid Penitentiary to the Inspector, after the customary visit of the latter at the beginning of the present year 1886, probably in February last, if such report has been made; also a copy of the judgment or decision of the Honorable Minister of Justice following the report by Messrs. Moylan and Baillargé, upon the Enquiry held by them in 1884, into the management of the aforesaid Penitentiary.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The Government has no objection to furnishing the papers asked for.

The motion was agreed to.

LAW OF EVIDENCE AMENDMENT BILL.

MOTION.

HON. MR. KAULBACH moved

That this House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider further of the Bill from the House of Commons (No. 3) intitled: "An Act for the further amendment of the Law of Evidence in Certain Cases."

He said:—It will be remembered that this Bill was dropped in Committee, and I ask to restore it to the same position that it occupied before. I have a precedent for it in the House of Commons.

THE SPEAKER—There is no doubt about that: it is quite in order.

HON. MR. SCOTT—The proposition if adopted will, of course, bind the House to go into Committee on this Bill. If it is the feeling of the House that this measure should be taken up, it would be much better to have a direct vote now as to whether the House should go into committee or not, because if the House should order as my hon. friend proposes, then the House must go into committee, and the Bill will be debated there with a result similar, perhaps, to what occurred on a previous occasion. It might be desirable—the House having committed itself to a particular line when in Committee—to have a decision now whether they propose to re-open the question or whether they would re-affirm the conclusion of that Committee. I did not take part in the discussion in committee. A good part of the time when the Bill was before the House I was unavoidably absent, and therefore I did not express an opinion or vote upon the measure; but it seemed to me that a very considerable number of gentlemen were in doubt as to whether, at the present time, this Bill was necessary or not, feeling that no very serious danger or injury would accrue. Seeing that it was a novel feature in our legislation, they thought that it might, at all events, be wisely and prudently postponed for some future day. If that is still the opinion of the House, then I have only to suggest that it would be better to negative this motion rather than to affirm it; otherwise, after an idle debate in committee of the whole, some gentleman will probably move that the committee rise and we will be in the same position we occupied before. If those who voted that the committee rise are prepared to reverse their votes and consider this Bill on its merits, then it will be proper for them to support the hon. member from Lunenburg and place the Bill on the order paper. For myself, not having spoken the other day, perhaps I might be permitted to say that I share to a very large extent the sentiments expressed by the hon. Senator from Toronto (Mr. Allan) who felt that it was a recognition of something that was repulsive and antagonistic to the best feelings of our nature; and that until it was established that there was an absolute necessity for this legislation to permit a class of persons who are now excluded from taking oaths and enabling them to give testimony in the way pointed out by this Bill—until a case of that kind was made out, that we really required a change in the law, a very considerable number preferred that the measure should not pass. I sympathise largely with the very proper view that he expressed. I myself entertain very much the same feelings, but I am bound to say that I consider in the present condition of society that that Bill is a necessity. I cannot, when called upon to express my opinion in this Chamber, ignore the sentiment that prevails abroad—that there is a very considerable number of people in this country, as well as in other countries, for whom this Bill is a necessity. Hon. gentlemen have given their experience—we can only speak of subjects of this kind from the standpoint of our experience. I have myself, in forty years, had considerable experience in courts of law, and have felt year by year that the necessity for this legislation was growing. It may do no very great injury to still further postpone it; but, if called upon to express an opinion on this subject, and to say now whether I think it ought to be put on the Statute book, then to my very great regret, I say in humiliation and sorrow, that it is a necessity. I will give hon. gentleman, without going into the whys and wherefores of it, an illustration. There appear in our courts from time to time people whose testimony it is most important to obtain pro or con. Those people are excluded from giving testimony, as the law at present stands. Many of them, rather than be excluded, take the oath. My hon. friend opposite (Mr. Bellerose), who said that this class of people ought to be forced to take the oath, has expressed an opinion that shocks one even more than the affirmation proposed in this Bill. To compel a man to do as Bradlaugh has done—to go up to the desk and put his lips to the Bible when all men knew well that he paid no respect to the oath he was taking—I say is more shocking than the statement of a man who says “No: I believe in the uplifted hand, the moral statement, having more force than putting my hand on a book that I do not believe in.” I would rather, from my experience in Courts of law, take the moral affirmation of many a man than his oath. When one considers the reckless way in which the oath is administered on the Holy Bible one is shocked, and is far more disposed to believe the testimony of one who says “I am going to speak the truth; I feel the responsibility of the statement I make.” I would put far more weight in the testimony of such a witness than I would in that of the man who glibly swallows the oath and thinks nothing more about it. The man who makes a false statement on affirmation can under this Bill be indicted for perjury just the same as the man who takes an oath and breaks it. There is no difference on that point. We consider that the crime of perjury is one that should be punished, that it is largely for the protection of the people who have to rely upon the oaths of others. If it is to be regarded in that light, then why not go further and say that the affirmation of the man who has no faith in the oath shall also be regarded in the same light, and if he makes the affirmation and tells an untruth, he may be indicted for perjury? A case recently came under my own observation—a very singular case, in connection with this subject. It was the case of an indictment found against a criminal. The party was charged with a crime and a true bill was found by the Grand Jury. After the bill had been returned to the court, and after the jury had been discharged, an affidavit was put in by the counsel for the accused that there was on the Grand Jury panel a man known as an Agnostic, who did not believe in the oath. I was acting as Crown Counsel, and I was rather astonished at the turn affairs had taken. The case was suspended, and on examining the juror I found that the affidavit was true—that he had taken the oath, though having no belief in it. His explanation was that he did not want to be excluded from the Grand Jury, and he could not remain without taking the oath, and he took it, in order to go on the panel. The panel ranges from sixteen to twenty-four jurors. At the moment I did not think that the fact that an Agnostic having been one of the jurors on this panel was a sufficient ground on which to quash the indictment. The court held, however, that the proceedings of the Grand Jury room could not be disclosed, and therefore the indictment fell to the ground. There was a miscarriage of justice which, under this Bill, would have been avoided.

That man would have made his application, he would have served on the Grand Jury, and no disadvantage would have resulted from it. I need not go on and illustrate the necessity that exists for a law of this kind. I am free to confess that it is repugnant to myself, and I was not sorry the other day to see it thrown out. It is one of those things that I dislike to entertain—one of those things that is unpleasant for us to look upon, as a necessity; but there is a growing demand for it, and we have to put it on the Statute Book sooner or later. Whether we do it this session or next may not be important, but it is one of these inevitable things that we cannot withstand.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—The observations made by the hon. gentleman from Ottawa only confirm me more strongly in the view I took when this Bill was under discussion. This instance he has given is a very peculiar one, but it is strong evidence in favor of passing the Bill which the motion now refers to. It is just as well to state that this motion brings in the Bill and places it in the same position that it occupied previous to the vote which was taken in the Committee, on the motion that the Committee do rise. If it is passed in the affirmative, the measure will come before the House and be settled. If, on the contrary, the motion is not concurred in—if hon. gentlemen who opposed the Bill when in Committee before, are still of the same opinion, they will of course vote against this motion. If this motion is carried, then the Bill will come up for discussion, and any objectionable features in it may be eliminated and the clauses to which there is no objection can be adopted.

HON. MR. POWER—I think hon. members should bear in mind that this Bill is not a measure of one clause; it is a Bill of four clauses. As I understood it, the objection of members of this House, who voted that the Committee should rise was solely to the first clause, the clause which allowed Agnostics and Atheists to give the testimony upon affirmation. The second clause was to allow persons who had conscientious scruples against the taking of an oath to give evidence; and perhaps a more important clause than that was the fourth, which provided that the laws of the different Provinces might be given in evidence in criminal cases—that the Courts should take judicial notice of them, and it was intended to remedy a great inconvenience that now exists in the matter of proving the statutes of the different Provinces. The occasion which gave rise to this particular clause arose in the Maritime Provinces where there was a necessity in a criminal proceeding in Prince Edward Island to prove a statute of Nova Scotia, which could not be done because, under the existing law, the Queen's Printer's copies could not be accepted as proof. The fourth clause is a most laudable one and should be adopted. If the House decides that this Bill shall go to Committee, and it goes to Committee, it will not be necessary to kill the Bill, even though the majority of the House desire to expunge the first clause. The Committee can strike out the first clause, and leave in the Bill those provisions to which there is no objection. For that reason I think the proper course now is to let the Bill go to Committee, and to there strike out the first clause if the majority of the House think it expedient to do so.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I do not wish to consider this a test of the principle of the Bill; but what my hon. friend says is very important. The fourth clause is a necessary amendment to our law. In our practice in the courts, when we want to prove a statute of another province, we are obliged either to send for an expert or to get a commission taken to prove what the law is in the other province. It certainly is very desirable that the law should be altered in that regard. In the Committee we could not call in the members in order to take the sense of the House on the principle of the Bill; and in order to test the matter now I would ask that the members be called in.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—As being one of those who voted against the Bill on the previous occasion, I think it necessary to say a few words, as the opinion I entertain has not been expressed on this motion. I think there is no great inconvenience likely to arise if this matter was allowed to stand over for another session. We have been 6,000 years at least without this law, and I do not see why we should not wait a few months longer for it. It seems to me that this is a measure of such an important character that it should be dealt with by the Government, and be brought in under the responsibility of the Minister of Justice. When the subject was before the House the other day the opinion of the Minister of Justice was quoted here as being in favor of the measure. Since then I have received reliable information to the contrary—that the Minister of Justice had very great doubt as to the necessity for this Bill. His first opinion was against the Bill. I may say also that many members of the other House have told me personally that they had not understood the full meaning of it; that they had been misled by the title "An Act further to amend the law of evidence," and that if they had known that this measure was of such a character as it really is, they would have given it more serious consideration. For these reasons, at this late period of the session, we should allow the Bill to remain as it is, so that proper care should be taken to bring in a better bill next session. I have listened with the greatest attention to the arguments of the leader of the Opposition—the more so as he is a gentleman who has had large experience in such matters. But because some legislation in this direction is required, it does not follow that this Bill is necessary. I have examined the measure, and I do not think such legislation should be amended—it should be changed altogether; there should not be a single clause of this Bill passed in its present shape—so that I hope the House will persist in its former decision.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—The majority of this House voted against the Bill the other day. Are we now to say that we repent of what we then did? What have we heard to-day? The hon. member from Ottawa, who is rather favorably disposed to this Bill, says he has grave doubts whether it would not be better to let it stand for another year. If the legislation is so important it is our duty to take time and to consider it thoroughly. I do not say that this legislation ought not to be adopted, but if it is to be adopted, and we do not now know what is the best legislation to enact, we had better wait for another session. As the hon. gentleman from DeSalaberry says we have done without legislation of this kind for 6000 years, and we can not suffer much if it is postponed for another year.

THE SPEAKER—I presume that if the House takes a vote upon this motion now, it is desirous that it should be a conclusive one. As the matter now stands, the hon. gentleman may to-morrow put a similar motion, because it does not finally dispose of the Bill, and some other gentleman may wish to introduce another Bill with most of those clauses in it, and until there is a final decision on this Bill it is a question whether another of the same nature can be introduced. Therefore I think it is desirable that some gentleman who is opposed to this measure should move that the Bill be referred to a Committee of the Whole House this day three months.

HON. MR. PELLETIER—That is just what I was about to move when His Honor the Speaker arose. The hon. gentleman from Halifax has introduced a Bill somewhat in the same terms as this one which could not be carried through this session unless this matter is decided at once; I therefore move in amendment that this House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on this Bill this day three months.

HON. MR. POWER—I wish to call the attention of hon. gentlemen to this fact: The Bill which is now before us has gone through the House of Commons. There are some commendable features in it, and if we go into committee on it here and strike out the first clause, it will go back as amended to the Commons, and our amendment will probably be accepted at once. If the other Bill which I took the liberty of introducing the other day should pass this House, it will have only a chance of going through the Commons at this period of the Session: consequently the wisest course is to dispose of this one by sending it to the committee and there amending it.

The Senate divided on the amendment, which was carried on the following division:—

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the third reading of Bill (103) "An Act further to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act, 1882."

HON. MR. POWER—The clause as to which I ask for some information when the Bill was in committee was the fifteenth clause. Under the existing law the engineer has to renew his license every year. This clause repeals that provision, and I simply ask the hon. gentleman from Niagara if he would be kind enough to tell us what is the reason for that change?

HON. MR. PLUMB—I can only say that in the working of the Act it has been found necessary not to keep the clause as it was. It has been changed in order to make it work more easily.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Is the certificate subject to the same regulations as the one granted under the Imperial Act.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Yes, I think it is.

HON. MR. POWER—I cannot say that the hon. gentleman's explanation has thrown much light on the Bill.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

THE SPEAKER—It being six o'clock I now leave the chair.

AFTER RECESS.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill (101) "An Act in amendment of 'The Consolidated Inland Revenue Act, 1883,' and the Act amending the same."

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

SALARIES OF ONTARIO JUDGES BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill (125) "An Act to amend the law relating to the salaries of certain judges of the Supreme Court of Judicature for Ontario." He said: It is provided in section 3 of 48 Vic., of the statutes of Ontario, that there shall be an additional judge of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice. Previous to that it was provided that the salary of the additional judge should be $5,000 a year, but the same section which provided that salary is now re-enacted. That is repealed in order to embody the reference to the Ontario Act by which the said judge has been appointed. It is only in order to make the statute more clear that the first Act is repealed, which is precisely the same in language. It is merely a question of bringing the statute in harmony with the Ontario Act.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

PUBLIC LANDS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill (120) "An Act to make further provision respecting the administration of Public Lands in British Columbia." He said: Under the Dominion Lands Act of 1883 jurisdiction was given to the Dominion Lands Board over all the public lands of Manitoba and the North-West. By this Bill it is intended to extend that jurisdiction to the lands which have been placed in the possession of the Dominion in British Columbia and which have heretofore been under the charge of the agent for the Dominion in that province. I may say that this Bill has been received with approval by the leading members on both sides in another place.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

TOWN OF COBOURG RELIEF BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (122) "An Act for the relief of the corporation of the Town of Cobourg."

In the Committee,

HON. MR. POWER—I think that we ought to be informed in a more satisfactory way than we have been yet why this town should receive this relief. I presume if we forgive the town of Cobourg, when the City of Montreal comes to us and asks to be recouped the money which the Harbor Commissioners have expended on the harbor of Montreal, they will be in a position to say "You have done this thing for Cobourg, and why not for us?" I hope the member in charge will be able to give us some reason that we can present to those who will advocate the relieving of Montreal from the harbor debt consistent with our passing this Bill.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The town of Cobourg expended some $44,798.24 in the purchase of the Cobourg harbour and the Port Hope and Rice Lake Road. They have contributed $25,507.49 towards defraying the cost of constructing the harbour.

HON. MR. POWER—That all appears from the preamble.

HON. MR. PLUMB.

HON. MR. PLUMB—It is necessary to state it to show the position of affairs. The harbour was not created by the town of Cobourg, but it was established by the Government as a Harbour of Refuge and upon that, as a Government work, the town of Cobourg expended some $25,507.49. There is no interest calculated in it, although it was done eight or ten years ago. No revenue comes into the town of Cobourg from that work. It has been objected that this is not a Harbour of Refuge: but the North shore of Lake Ontario is very deficient in harbours. This is one of the very few in which a vessel can take refuge: and if it has saved, in the meantime, one life or one vessel it has done good service. My hon. friend on my right (Mr. Smith) knows that it is an important work and the town of Cobourg, owing a debt to the Government, think they have a fair claim to ask that a part of it, equal to the amount that has been expended on the harbor by the corporation, should be remitted. They owe the Government for that harbor and a small road connected with it. It seems to me that it is a matter in which they are fairly entitled to relief. I am not aware that any objection was made to the Bill in another place. We are asked to provide that if the corporation, which owes the Government $44,789.24, shall pay that sum, with the interest, deducting from it $25,507.49, they shall be discharged from their debt. It seems a reasonable matter. I am not personally acquainted with the facts, but from what I can gather it is a measure which will not establish a precedent. I do not know that it has anything to do with the Montreal harbor or the expenditure upon it; and I do not know that the city of Montreal has claimed this kind of relief.

HON. MR. POWER—Oh, yes.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Not the kind of relief which is asked for here; this is simply a harbor of refuge on a stormy lake. I do not know that my hon. friend is aware of the fact that throughout the whole of that seaboard there are not half a dozen places where a vessel can take shelter. Very often a vessel that misses this port has to run to Kingston for refuge. Above Cobourg there is hardly a place where a considerable vessel can take shelter until you come to Toronto; between Toronto and Hamilton there is none; and between Hamilton and the Niagara river the only place is Port Dalhousie, on which the Government have expended large sums, but it is unavailable for the purpose of a harbor of refuge, and vessels have to run to Niagara river, where there is a heavy current and a bad shoal on the Canadian side.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat of course knows that he is addressing a large body of gentleman who have never seen the north shore of Lake Ontario, and he is presuming upon their not having travelled there, upon their not knowing that part of the country, to make the most extravagant statements. I never knew in the course of my life a gentleman occupying the position of a political leader go so far in his statements. He says there is no other place where vessels can run into along that shore, which is quite true. The hon. gentleman must have studied the arts of the ancient Sophists, who lived simultaneously with the Epicureans and other schools of philosophy in ancient Greece. He does not tell you that the piers of this harbour are so placed that no vessel can enter in a storm. I asked the hon. gentleman from Belleville with regard to that yesterday. He used to trade there and he said he once came there during a storm with one of his vessels, could not enter, and had to go on to Kingston.

HON. MR. FLINT—I did not say that.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; I understood him to say so. Several members of this House know that in a storm a vessel cannot enter between those piers. It only shows the recklessness of the hon. gentleman, and his conduct will bring discredit on Sir John who has assigned to him his present duties.

HON. MR. FLINT—The hon. gentleman who has just spoken knows as little about the shore of Lake Ontario as the hon. member for Niagara.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I have been there a hundred times.

HON. MR. FLINT—That may be and yet the hon. gentleman may know nothing about it. He speaks of vessels of mine not being able to enter the harbour of Cobourg. I never had one to run to Cobourg. What I did say was that coming from Toronto on a steamboat the wind was so high and the swell so heavy that we could not enter that harbour: but if I had been in a bark canoe I would have ventured to enter. I would have to go to Kingston for refuge if that harbour had not been there and come up next day from Kingston to Belleville, and have a team to meet me to take me home. The harbour of Cobourg is not what we might call a harbour of refuge, such as Presqu'île. On the way down from Toronto there is Frenchman's Bay, which is a sort of harbour; then Port Hope, and then Cobourg. Both Port Hope and Cobourg harbours have been the means—notwithstanding the hon. gentleman's remarks—of saving a great many vessels, and no doubt a great many lives. I think it is no more than right, under all the circumstances of the case, that they should have this relief. For a long time they have been paying to keep up this harbour. As they are not asking the Government for money we can well afford to allow this Bill to pass and give them what they are asking. They are not demanding much. The senior member for Halifax has brought up the subject of Montreal harbour; there is a vast difference between the two cases. During the season of open navigation you can get into Montreal harbour at all times. Cobourg harbour you can only get into on certain occasions. Often vessels run there when a storm is approaching and remain until it is over, when they would otherwise have to run down the Lake and make Presqu'île harbour. If they can get into Cobourg they are safe and can remain until they can cross the lake to Rochester. When they can run in there it saves a vast amount of time. I have been in Cobourg several times when vessels have undertaken to enter and could not; and I have been there when vessels have run in and been secure when they could not venture out with safety for two or three days. This harbour must be a great benefit to the navigation of the lake so far as sailing vessels are concerned. There are times when steamers cannot enter the harbour, and times when they can. Under all the circumstances of the case, although I have nothing to do with the people of Cobourg further than to express my desire that justice should be done, I think that they ought to be granted this relief. I know something about Lake Ontario. I have been up and down it perhaps not quite as often as the hon. gentleman from Woodstock, but I am a man of observation, and when I travel I take note of what I see and I say that the harbour of Cobourg has been a great benefit particularly to schooners on the lake, and I think this Bill under all the circumstances ought to pass.

HON. MR. POWER—I do not myself yet see clearly why this Bill is being passed.

HON. MR. FLINT—The hon. gentleman does not see anything clearly.

HON. MR. POWER—I have not the perspicacity of the hon. gentleman from Belleville.

HON. MR. FLINT—You will perhaps if you live long enough.

HON. MR. POWER—The preamble states that the indebtedness of the town of Cobourg arose from the purchase of the harbour and Rice Lake Road. The hon. gentleman from Niagara has given us no history of the transaction. It would seem that at some time the town of Cobourg thought it would be to its advantage to own this harbour, as they thought proper to purchase the harbour and road. The meaning of this Bill, I presume, is that, having purchased the harbour and road, they come now and ask to be relieved of a large proportion of the price that they had agreed to pay. I presume that is the way. We have not been informed to the contrary. No reason has been given why they should not pay the amount they agreed to give. However, an election is not far off, and this is a cheap and easy way of getting support in that district, as was done in the case of the town of Pembroke before. Perhaps the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill would tell us how the town of Cobourg came to own this harbour?

HON. MR. PLUMB—I do not know it is necessary to go into any further explanation.

HON. MR. FLINT—If my memory is right the harbour was bought by the Corporation of the town of Cobourg from the Government before Confederation, in the same way as Port Hope purchased its harbour. They have been keeping it up at a considerable expense ever since. With regard to the road which has been spoken of here, it was only a gravel road some four or five miles long, and it does not amount to much anyway. It would be better to make it a free road by abolishing the tolls. In the county of Hastings, from which I come, we have 200 miles of gravel roads, and there is not a single toll gate on them. We abolished the toll gates and we maintain our roads by direct taxation.

HON. MR. POWER—This Bill does not say any thing about the toll gates.

HON. MR. FLINT—It does not, but I do. As to the time when the harbour was purchased, I cannot say exactly, but I remember that it was when Upper and Lower Canada were united, before Confederation. This harbour was bought then, and not since Confederation.

HON. MR. POWER—They have waited a long time to get justice.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—What has the Dominion Government to do with buying gravel roads? There is not a county in Ontario that has not incurred indebtedness in making gravel roads. The idea of asking Parliament to remit the debt incurred for a gravel road! The real object is to buy up voters in the next general election. There could not be a more corrupt measure than this.

HON. MR. FLINT.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Last October I walked all over the piers at Cobourg and Port Hope, and I was quite surprised, as well as pleased, to find those harbours were so well conceived for the relief of shipping on that particular lake. I thought the harbours were well prepared and I had an opportunity of seeing three ships enter between the breakwaters.

HON. MR. GIRARD, from the Committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

PAWNBROKER'S BILL.

WITHDRAWN.

The Order of the Day having been called for the second reading of Bill (B) "An Act to make further provision respecting Pawnbrokers,"

HON. MR. ALLAN said:—When I asked the permission of the House to postpone the second reading of this Bill I did it at the request of the Minister of Justice, and since then I have had a note from him saying that a Pawnbroker's Bill would be embodied in the revised statutes so as to meet the object of this measure. Therefore, with the permission of the House, I would ask leave to withdraw this Bill.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was withdrawn.

LAW OF EVIDENCE AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. POWER moved the second reading of Bill (P) "An Act to amend the law of evidence in certain cases." He said: I was under the impression when I introduced this Bill that there was no means in the old Province of Canada of getting the evidence of Quakers and others having conscientious objections to taking an oath, in criminal cases. Since then I have found that I was under an erroneous impression, and that one of the criminal acts or 1869 provides for such cases, consequently the first clause of this Bill will not be necessary. Then the only clause of the Bill which I propose that the House should proceed with is the clause which provides for the giving in evidence of the statutes of one province in another province—obliging the courts to take judicial notice of the Queen's Printer's copies of the Statutes.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

EXPERIMENTAL FARMS BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The order of the day having been called that the House go into a committee of the whole on Bill (124) "An Act respecting experimental farm stations,"

HON. MR. ALEXANDER said: I beg to move in amendment that the Speaker do not leave the chair, but that the House go into a committee of the whole on this Bill this day three months. I again appeal to the House that the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, to my knowledge, have their Boards of Agriculture organized, and receive large amounts from the Government to attend to all questions connected with agriculture. Under the Union Act it is the duty of those Provinces to attend to this special industry; and if an experimental farm is required in the North-West there is nothing to prevent the Government from establishing it there, but why the Government should bring in a measure like this, simply to increase their patronage, I cannot see. The Province of Ontario has its experimental farms at Mimico and Guelph, and how can the Legislature, knowing the position of Ontario and Quebec on this question—I know nothing of what Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have done, but if they have not attended to this matter it was their duty to have done so—I cannot understand why the Government have brought in this Bill. They step in now, as they did on the license question, and introduce a measure that is sure to bring about a collision between the Dominion and the Provinces, involving the country in so much trouble and expense. One would suppose that the first Minister of the Crown had lost his head—that he had softening of the brain to bring in such legislation as this.

The amendment was declared lost on a division.

The House resolved itself into a committee of the whole on the Bill.

In the Committee,

HON. MR. ALLAN—I do not know that it is necessary for me to go into any further explanation on the Bill, as I did so at considerable length when moving the second reading; but I shall be very glad to answer any question, so far as I am informed, with regard to the subject matter of the Bill, that the House may desire to put.

On the fourth clause :

HON. MR. TRUDEL—Would the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him if it would not be better to have two of those experimental farm stations for the older provinces—one in Quebec and one in Ontario?

HON. MR. ALLAN—The Government think they have gone far enough in establishing one central station for Ontario and Quebec to begin with. If found necessary hereafter, it is always easy to increase the number.

HON. MR. GIRARD—For my part, I think there are too many experimental stations provided for; I would prefer to see practical farms established in different parts of the North-West. There should be two experimental farms established in the Dominion—one in the East and one in the West; but there are some parts of the North-West where practical farms are absolutely necessary. We have industrial schools now for the instruction of the Indians, and if practical farms were established in connection with those industrial schools they would do a great deal of good. It is well known that Ontario has advanced nearly as far as it can go in agricultural knowledge, and the same may be said of Quebec—at all events a good deal has been done in that direction, and in many districts agriculture is carried on with great perfection. It is not the same in Manitoba and the North-West, where the agriculturists are all strangers, and where it is important for the Government to introduce another system instead of this by which to feed the Indians. We cannot continue to feed the Indians as we are doing now: we must teach them to earn their own living. We can arrive at the solution of that problem best by teaching them how to cultivate the soil, and to feed and clothe themselves as the white people do. They cannot be taught it in this generation: but the rising generation who attend those industrial schools, if they had the advantage of being taught practical farming, would take more interest in it, and such institutions would be of great benefit to the people. While the Bill is certainly a step in the right direction, and I am quite ready to support it, there is a very large expenditure connected with it which would be better devoted in the North-West to establishing practical farms rather than institutions of the kind provided for in this measure.

HON. MR. READ—It applies to the North-West also.

HON. MR. GIRARD—No doubt it applies to the North-West, but we want something more practical. It is not experimental farms that we require in the North-West; we need something more elementary and practical, which will produce more immediate good. Experimental farm stations will suit Ontario and Quebec, and other provinces which are well advanced in the art of agriculture: but they will not do for a new country, like the North-West, that is not in a position to take advantage of the results attained by such institutions, and will not be for some years to come.

HON. MR. ALLAN—I hope that in Manitoba and the North-West we shall see agricultural colleges established in the early future. The hon. gentleman admits that this Bill is a step in the right direction. The Government will proceed safely and prudently, and he must see that it is absolutely necessary for the North-West that such experiments should be made. Nothing will conduce more to the prosperity of that country than the finding out as early as possible the best description of seeds to be sown, the best cattle to be bred, and the best system of agriculture to adopt for that soil and climate.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER.

HON. MR. GIRARD—In my opinion two experimental farm stations for the whole Dominion would be sufficient at present—one for the west and one for the east, and that the rest should be practical farms.

The clause was adopted.

On clause ten,

HON. MR. POWER—As was stated at the second reading of this Bill, the success of these experimental farms depends largely upon the men in whose charge they are placed. If they are men who are interested in agriculture, and familiar with the subjects that they have to deal with, the farms may do a great deal of good; if, however, the men are not qualified in that way—but qualified possibly by services in another field altogether, these farm stations will simply involve a waste of money, and I think that the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill will not have any objection to adding a clause to this effect.

“No person shall be appointed to take charge of any farm station until he shall have passed an examination satisfactorily showing his familiarity with all the duties mentioned in section 7; such examination to be conducted under regulations to be made by the Governor in Council.”

That will be some guarantee that the officer who is appointed to take charge of one of those farms shall know something of the business with which he is entrusted: and it leaves the regulations as to the examinations to the Governor in Council.

HON. MR. PLUMB—It must be seen that the Government, in taking up a measure of this kind, will be open to censure and it will be very much to their disadvantage if they fail to carry it out efficiently. With them is the responsibility; they should not be relieved of it, and it ought to be understood in the House and elsewhere that the safest way will be to leave it entirely in the hands of those who will suffer most if it prove to be a failure.

HON. MR. POWER—I wish to protest against the doctrine laid down by the hon. gentleman from Niagara. The Postmaster-General, who has had much experience in the way of leading a House, did not hesitate to accept amendments even to Government measures if he thought they were calculated to improve them. If the House is prepared to accept the theory laid down by the hon. gentleman that no Government bill is to be amended in this House, why go through the useless form of submitting measures to us for our consideration? We find that year after year the Government come in with amendments to measures which have been for years on the Statute book, and which have been revised over and over again; and it is not to be supposed that this measure, which is in itself an experimental measure, is perfect when it first comes before us. The fair way is to appeal to the common sense and the sound judgment of the members of this House. Is the provision which I propose calculated to ensure to a larger extent than the bill now does a satisfactory result from these experimental farms? I contend that it is, and I think that any member of this House who is not wedded to the Government or to the Opposition, but simply looks at the question as a mere matter of business, must be of the same opinion.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I regret that the hon. gentleman should have misconstrued or misinterpreted what I said. I did not intend to convey in any sense the idea that no bill brought in by the Government should be amended or interfered with. The hon. gentleman must know, or will know if he looks at it, that my language is not capable of that construction at all. I appeal to the common sense of the House as the hon. gentleman propose to do. I merely stated that it is obvious, in a matter of this kind, which is an experiment altogether, that it would be better in the hands of the Government, upon whom all the responsibility would fall if it fails. Otherwise they would say that the appointment of those who were put in charge of the establishments was taken out of their hands by an amendment which gave the appointment to a board, and therefore they would not be so responsible for the failures as they would be if they had appointed the managers themselves. I appeal to the House to say if any other possible interpretation could be put upon the remarks I made, to warrant the observations made in some little temper by the hon. gentleman from Halifax.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—The fair presumption is that the Government will not appoint parties who are not fit to occupy these positions. The Governor in Council, in the first place, and the Minister of Agriculture especially, are responsible for the fair working of the farm.

HON. MR. ALLAN—The purport of the amendment of the hon. gentleman from Halifax is that before a manager is appointed for these farms, he shall undergo an examination. He suggested also that it is not an unfrequent practice of the leader of the House that when an amendment is proposed to a Government Bill to acquiesce in it if he thought it a proper one. But my position is very different from that of the Postmaster General: not being leader of the House and a member of the Government, I cannot use exactly the same discretion as I would otherwise do as to accepting the hon. gentleman's amendment. I must tell him frankly that in my judgment the amendment does not commend itself, because as it has just been stated by hon gentlemen opposite, there are certain regulations which are to be laid down by the Governor in Council for the appointment of those officers. The experiment is a very important one, and one which will be productive of a great deal of good to the country if honestly and faithfully carried out. The Government are as much concerned in its success as it is possible to be, because returns have to be made to Parliament as to the results of the working of those stations; and if it is found they are not efficient, and the parties in charge are not capable men, it will soon be known, and the Legislature will interfere. I do not think it is a necessary addition to the Bill, and I would suggest to the hon. gentleman to withdraw his amendment now, and, if he desires to do so, move it at the third reading.

HON. MR. DEBOUCHERVILLE—By the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman, the Government will not be at liberty to appoint any person to those farms unless he passes an examination. Supposing a highly qualified gentleman from Europe, who has been at the head of some experimental farm there, should be chosen to manage one of these farms established under this Bill, he would have to pass an examination, and if he declined to submit to it, he could not be appointed.

HON. MR. READ—Is the candidate for the position obliged to understand all those subjects included in section seven?

HON. MR. POWER—Certainly.

HON. MR. READ—Then I should like to find the man who thoroughly understands all those subjects.

HON. MR. POWER—Unless the man in charge thoroughly understands all those subjects, the experiment is likely not to turn out very satisfactorily; and my amendment provides that the examination is to be conducted under regulations to be made by the Governor in Council.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I should suggest to my hon. friend from Halifax, whose intention with regard to this amendment I approve, that he should withdraw it for the present, and move an amendment embodying the principle of his amendment on the third reading of the Bill. It occurs to me, however, that any manager of an experimental farm who fully comprehends the ten subjects comprised in the sub-sections of section 7 will be an abnormal individual. If we cast our eyes over the headings of these subjects we will find they are various and of a very complex character. Moreover, some of them demand the closest attention and will occupy pretty nearly all a man's time; and if he succeeds in two or three of them it is quite as much as can be expected from one man. I think the qualification will be quite sufficient if the man shows his capacity to pass an examination in half of those subjects. To require that he shall pass examinations in them all would very likely shut the door upon the appointment of some useful and competent individuals.

HON. MR. POWER—With the permission of the committee I shall withdraw the amendment for the present.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE, from the committee, reported the Bill with several amendments.

CATHOLIC REPRESENTATION IN THE CABINET.

DEBATE CONCLUDED.

The Order of the Day having been called—

Resuming adjourned debate on the Hon. Mr. O'Donohoe's motion, viz:—"That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before this House, the patent of appointment, or copy thereof, of John O'Donohoe to the Privy Council, a copy of letters of the Right Hon. Sir John Macdonald to their Lordships certain Bishops of the Province of Ontario, and all other letters and papers, a copy of all Orders in Council in reference to said appointment or the cancellation thereof."

HON. MR. HOWLAN said: I moved the adjournment of the debate at the request of the hon. member from Kingston. I merely rise to mention that fact, reserving to myself the right to speak on this motion at any future stage of the debate.

HON. MR. SULLIVAN—I thank the hon. gentleman for the favor he has conferred on me in moving the adjournment of the debate in my absence. Having had an appointment which took me away from here I was glad to have his assistance. I regret that I should have on this, my first occasion, to address the House on such a subject. If there is any question which I should like to avoid discussing it is this, and had the hon. gentleman from Toronto confined his remarks to the personal explanations which were necessary, I should have considered it an impertinence on my part to interfere; but the language which he used in his speech last Friday was so out of harmony with the dignity of this Senate, and so calculated to stir up religious animosities, that I consider it my duty as a Catholic Conservative from Ontario, cognizant of his misstatements and perversion of facts, to address the House on the subject. The hon. gentleman gave us a pretty long historical review. He mentioned the Hon. George Brown as leading a wing of the Reform party and driving the Catholics, by his intolerance and bigotry, from him. It was the first time I have heard that the late Mr. Brown was an assistant or one of the generals, in any party. I consider, and I am sure his biographer will claim the distinction for him, that he was rather the founder of the present Reform party. The former Liberal party, whose traditions the hon. member so much esteems and for which I also entertain so much respect, united with the Conservative party in 1854, at the time of the formation of McNab-Morin Ministry, when such gentlemen as the Hon. J. A. Macdonald, now Sir John Macdonald, united with such distinguished and honest Liberals as Spence, Drummond and Hon. John Rose. That I always considered to be the foundation of the Liberal-Conservative party, and if there is any political organization which possesses the traditions and holds the principles and has the succession of that party, which the present Reformers seem to look back upon with so much pride, and to which we all look back with respect, it is certainly the present Liberal-Conservative party. As he has said, it is impossible that anyone professing the Catholic faith could have any respect for, or could be found in the ranks of the party which was led by the hon. George Brown and, of necessity, they were compelled to have recourse to the party which has always treated them with the utmost fairness and which has never neglected their interests. Matters went on, the hon. gentleman said, until 1871 when, as I understood from his remarks, the Catholics not being treated with that consideration which they should receive, the Catholic League was formed. I am well aware, having taken an active part in the political movements of that time, of the treatment they received. I have again and again seen Sir John Macdonald appear on the hustings of a town which, certainly, in the intensity of its Protestantism, is not inferior to any in this country—namely the old city of Kingston—and refuse to accede to the wishes of his friends who threatened that his election would be lost if he would not vote against the Separate School Bill and for representation by population. He obstinately refused to do so, and on all occasions he succeeded in securing the respect and the confidence of the Roman Catholic people. Every Bishop in succession who has held that See has entertained for him not only respect and confidence, but even a personal affection. Amongst his most intimate friends will be found men who have been held in the highest repute by the Catholic Church—men such as the Very Rev. Angus Macdonald, nephew of the great Bishop Macdonald, Father McDowell, and others who have had a provincial reputation. These men, as I have said, were not only supporters of Sir John Macdonald, but his intimate friends and held him in the highest esteem. Not only that, but we find the same body obtaining support for their schools and colleges: by his efforts they were enabled to secure grants which kept their institutions going and promoted their prosperity. Their hospitals also received the same aid, and the Catholic people evinced their gratitude, when the city was contested by the present Attorney-General of Ontario, Hon. Oliver Mowat, on which occasion only one Catholic of all in that city voted for that gentleman. Then came, as the hon. gentleman says, the Catholic League. Why this organization was attempted I do not know, but a good deal has been said about it. It is one of those organizations that I think exercised more influence than probably it was entitled to. I do not remember any gentleman from Eastern Ontario attending that; I certainly do not remember that any of the guardians of the Catholic people, those to whom they look for advice, the Bishops and the clergy, gave it any countenance or encouragement, or stated that it was in any way necessary; but it was held, and its objects were good enough if the gentlemen by whom it was led studied to elevate themselves and to secure more favorable positions in the country. They had a perfect right to do that, but in seeking to attain those objects I contend that they secured more from the Conservative party than they did from any other. The most astounding and unfounded charge which the hon. gentleman from Toronto has made is that which he has uttered against the Hon. Mr. Bowell. I am not going to touch on this question of Orangeism—there are others who can defend the organization if it be necessary; but I am bound to mention a circumstance which occurred in 1882. I recollect in the Conservative convention which was called in Toronto on the very day on which Sir Garnet Wolseley was scattering the forces of Arabi at Tel el Kebir, a scene which occurred: the Hon. Mr. Bowell and the Hon. Mr. O'Donohoe met on the same platform and shook hands in the most cordial manner. They agreed to bury the past—at least Mr. O'Donohoe did, and Mr. Bowell agreed to do likewise—and we considered that a political millenium was at hand, that we had heard the last of Orange and Green, of Orangemen and Catholics; but such has not been the case, unfortunately. The friendship that was then cemented in so remarkable a manner was neither lasting nor enduring, as is shown by the action of the hon. gentleman from Toronto. I have a distinct recollection of the way in which the customs houses are managed in our neighborhood, and I certainly cannot find any ground whatever for the hon. gentleman's charge that they are being converted into Orange lodges, or that undue favoritism is shown to anyone holding official positions in those offices. On the contrary, I am very proud to have occasion to state, and I do so without pandering in any way or stooping to flattery—I only state what I have heard on all sides from fair-minded, impartial men—that nobody could have shown more impartiality, or conducted his department with more tolerance and liberality, or a greater desire to reward honesty and fidelity than the gentleman who so successfully manages the Department at the present time. The hon. gentleman from Toronto made an attempt to cast obloquy on the Conservative party by allusions to the late Mr. James O'Reilly, barrister, of Kingston. I happen to know all about that case, and I am aware that it is not as the hon. gentleman has stated it. Mr. O'Reilly had the good fortune to be offered a judgeship by Sir John Macdonald. At that time the leader of the Senate, Sir Alex. Campbell, was running for the Upper House. He felt somewhat timid about the result of the election and it being noised abroad, during the excitement, that Mr. O'Reilly had secured this judgeship, some gentlemen—I do not know that they were Orangemen, it was not said that they were, and certainly the Orangemen, as a body, made no particular demonstration on that occasion—but the supporters of Sir Alex. Campbell told him they were afraid that his election would be lost if Mr. O'Reilly secured the judgeship. It was said then, I do not know with how much truth, of Sir Alex. Campbell that he refused to contest the constituency. Sir John Macdonald showed Mr. O'Reilly the critical position in which matter stood: he did not request Mr. O'Reilly to give up the office; he merely showed him the position of affairs. Mr. O'Reilly consulted the Bishop of Kingston and several other of his friends. They advised him, at first, to hold the position, but in a few days, when the excitement began to wear off, he agreed to surrender the position rather than that Sir John Macdonald should be injured through his generosity. He agreed to give up the position, and did so of his own accord. No one urged him to take the step and he was rewarded for it. He was made a Queen's Counsel and given the recordership at Kingston, and subsequently, after the election, his partner was made a judge. That is the only case of which a great flourish was made to prove bigotry, etc. You can understand from that what grounds there are for such assertions as have been made in other cases. These are the principal ones which the hon. gentleman brought forward to convince you of the bigotry of the Orange party. I am sure that his words would not have any effect on this House, nor would it be necessary for me to make any appeal to the Senate, but I make this explanation in refutation of these remarks that when they go forth to the public they may possibly have some effect on those who are not posted in political matters or who may be easily misled. As to the gentleman himself, no one regrets more than I do the course which he has taken. Up to October last he acted in unison and harmony with the Conservative party; until October last he solicited a position in the Cabinet. He should have reflected that the announcement that he was to be given a position in the Cabinet was received with amazement by those who had borne the brunt of the fight, the Catholics who had for years given their adhesion to and worked for the party—who had labored faithfully and zealously to maintain it in power. It was not wonderful, therefore, that they were astonished at the rumored appointment of Mr. O'Donohoe to such a position, and I am quite sure that the Conservatives of other denominations did not favor it, so that it was, I contend, a great honor for him to receive even a call to this hon. House. I have no doubt that Sir John Macdonald acted in good faith and did really intend to take Mr. O'Donohoe into the Cabinet, but when he found that it was distasteful to his Catholic supporters and decidedly objected to by his Protestant friends, there was no alternative but to refuse to appoint him. He could not injure or damage his party by making such an appointment, and what politician would expect him to do so? Is there any one who would expect that a statesman—one with even much less devotion to his party than the right hon. gentleman has displayed—would for any individual expose that party to danger and risk its vitality by making such an appointment? Therefore, I contend, it comes with a very bad grace from the hon. gentleman to be so persistent, so determined to exact the pound of flesh. That it will be to his credit I am sure no one will say. As to his being the nominee of the Catholic people of Ontario, such an idea is out of the question. As you are aware there is no organization of a political character among the Catholic body; there is no way of arriving at their opinions collectively. The only way in which we can find that they suffer from any grievances or that their interests require to be attended to, is from their guardians who are qualified to speak for them—that is, the bishops and priests of the church. These are the only ones who can give any authoritative opinion, and while they may hold Mr. O'Donohoe in great esteem, still they have not ventured to express any opinion as to his merits or qualifications for the position. But I will call Mr. O'Donohoe as a witness against himself. I will appeal from Mr. O'Donohoe, inflamed with passion and smarting under what he feels to be a rebuff, to Mr. O'Donohoe expressing his thoughts and feelings in the calmness of the closet, when conviction was forced on him and he could take a calm and thoughtful retrospect of the past. What does the hon. gentleman write in this famous manifesto which was published over his signature? I do not know what possible effect that document might have had on the Protestant electors, but I know, in the interests of the Catholic candidates, it were better it had never been published. As soon as any Catholic who was contesting a constituency received these manifestos—and there was a bundle of them sent to all, I presume, as there was a bundle sent to me—they were hidden away in the most careful manner and destroyed as rapidly as possible for fear that they would fall into the hands of the people, for they would only wound the feelings of their Catholic supporters and irritate Reformers, and I know, consequently, that it was a matter of extreme care on my part to prevent anyone other than myself and my friends seeing that manifesto. That was the effect of it, so far as the Catholic Conservatives are concerned. I take a page and a half of this manifesto, written by Mr. O'Donohoe and signed by himself, Mr. Costigan and Mr. Smith, and I find the following:—

The undersigned, in common with a large number of their Catholic fellow-countrymen, are in alliance with the Conservative or Liberal-Conservative party. They recognize in that party and in its policy the strongest claim on their support as citizens; and as Catholics they declare that the history of the country will show that it is from this party only that the Catholic people have received fair representation in the Cabinet and in the Senate, a fair distribution of the public patronage, and a fair support at all times for Catholic candidates at the polls.

On the other hand, they assert with confidence that the relations between the Liberal or Reform party and the Catholic people have been most unsatisfactory to the latter. When the Reform party had power to use, and patronage to bestow, the Catholic people, even that portion of the Catholic people in direct alliance with them, remained without representation of a proper character in the Government and the Senate; Catholic candidates were openly abandoned by the Liberals at the polls; and the public patronage was distributed without regard to their interests under a system of administration which practically recognized such interests as regarded the rest of the population. And for several years at an earlier period than this, the Catholic Church, its doctrines, ceremonies, religious orders, bishops, priests, and people, were the victims of the incessant and blasphemous vituperation of the recognized organs of the Liberal party; while in the press, in the Legislature, and at the polls the Conservative party acted in friendly accord with, and support of, the Catholic Church and people.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—What is the date of that?

HON. MR. SULLIVAN—This is an extract from a letter in the Mail of November 1st, 1882, and signed by Mr. O'Donohoe. That is evidence sufficient, I should think, to show what the real sentiments of Mr. O'Donohoe were and what they should be. I do not think it is necessary for me to enter into any defence of the Conservative party. I regret exceedingly that this question should have come forward. If there is anything which I have tried, as an individual, to repress, any feeling which I have striven to keep down, it is this of religious prejudice. I have always advocated and asserted that fidelity, zeal and works were what should be recognized in a party, and on these principles I have ever acted. It is, therefore, with the most extreme regret that I find myself called on, as a Conservative Senator from Ontario, to reply in this House to the tirade from the hon. gentleman from Toronto. He has spoken, also, in most unmeasured terms—in what he would call vituperative terms—of the Government, describing it as being sanguinary, corrupt &c.; yet, after all, he was willing to be one of the principal men in this same Government and to help to carry on this reign of corruption and bloodshed. He was perfectly willing, up to last October, to take a seat in the Cabinet: what change has taken place in his mind since then I do not know, but he has become completely converted. If the hon. gentleman wishes to find out whether the Catholics were suffering from any want of patronage, or from disabilities, or that they were being treated with intolerance, he could readily have moved for an inquiry and the matter could have been discussed fairly. But the violent speech which he made here last Friday was not intended, I presume, for the Senate but for the country. He wishes to show his bravery and determination, how reckless he is of every other consideration except the interests of the Catholics. Well, I am perfectly satisfied if they will only take the whole matter into consideration and then give their verdict accordingly. I do not intend to occupy your time any further. I have gone over most of the points on which the hon. gentleman touched: but there is one to which I should make some reference, and that is his eulogy of his friend, Mr. Blake. I have heard it stated—I do not know whether it is true or not, but the hon. gentleman can contradict the assertion if it be incorrect—that Mr. Blake refused to attend his meeting or give him that assistance which any member of a party, let alone such an important man as its leader, should give to the humblest of its supporters. I am satisfied, if the hon. member will put one leader against the other, what the verdict of the people will be. The sentiments which the Conservative party have professed, the policy which they have pursued, have led to prosperity in the country and to all sharing the benefits alike. The policy of the Government has been such as I think will make it the ground on which their administration will be tested by the electorate, and I am satisfied that an impartial verdict will be given when these bigoted appeals to class shall have subsided. I trust that we shall see, ere long, the termination of such a course as the hon. member from Toronto has pursued to-day—that now we have heard, for the last time in Canada, mention of such a thing as a Catholic vote, and appeals to sectional and sectarian prejudices. I presume that Catholics may sometimes, on account of want of organization, not be able to receive as much consideration as others, but a good deal of that is their own fault. If they will give the matter proper consideration and take their stand as citizens having, as they have, an interest in this country, as men who have given their sweat and labor to build it up, who will feel that they have something at stake and that all their interests are bound up in its future—if they will act in that spirit, and act with the rest of the people, I am satisfied that the most designing politician and the craftiest knave will be forced to retire and not again bring this matter to their notice.

HON. MR. POWER—If no other member wishes to address the House on this subject, I should like to say a few words before the motion is put. It may be said that this is an Ontario question, but still it is one which interests other people beside those who dwell in Ontario. I may say at the outset that I have been very much gratified indeed at the tone of the speech of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down. His closing sentiments I most cordially concur in. I hope that the time is coming, and is very near at hand, when we in this country shall be able to forget that we are of English, Irish, Scotch, or French descent, and shall remember that we are all Canadians; and when we shall forget that we are Catholics, Presbyterians, Episcopalians or members of any other religious denomination, and shall remember only that we are simply citizens of Canada. I think the sooner that day comes the better for this country and for its people. I look forward with hope to the day—I trust it is not far distant—when gentlemen will be appointed to the Cabinet, when judges will be put on the bench, when officers will be appointed to the Civil Service, not on account of their race or creed or anything of that sort, but for their merits and fitness for the positions to which they aspire. I am glad to be able to say that these sentiments I do not express now for the first time. This question of the political rights of Catholics or rather of the neglect of their proper and just claims to political appointments was brought before this Senate in the year 1878, and at that time the complaint was made that the Catholics in the Lower Provinces were not getting the fair play which they should receive from the administration of that day. At that time I made a few observations in the course of the debate, and made them without any previous reflection or preparation, but I am glad to be able to say that they express the views which I hold still. I said I thought that “ Religion should be kept out of politics as much as possible, and that before a charge of the exclusion of any body from any position in consequence of their religious belief should be brought before the Legislature, very convincing proof should be produced that that denomination were being dealt with in an unfair manner."

I went on then to show that the Catholics were not so dealt with at that time. That was the way I began; and in conclusion I said, speaking of Catholics generally:—

"If there was a gentleman of that denomination who was in harmony with the party in power for the time being, who was better qualified than gentlemen of other denominations, for a seat in the Government, I presumed that he should be appointed, on account of his superior qualifications; but, apart from that, the question of religion should not be introduced at all. As long as the Roman Catholics of the Lower Provinces felt that they were receiving moderately fair play, it did not make much difference whether they were represented in the Cabinet or not."

Those sentiments expressed in 1878 by a Liberal representative from the Province of Nova Scotia I am glad to observe appear to be about the same as those which have been expressed this evening by a Conservative from the Province of Ontario, and I hope before long that the sentiments which the hon. gentleman from Kingston and myself agree in now may be the general sentiment of our people throughout the country. I say, as I said at that time, that no race or creed should be proscribed; that is perfectly true, but I do not think, and it has never been shown, that any race or creed has been proscribed during the past ten or twelve years. I do not think that it can be shown that in any Province of this Dominion the Roman Catholics have been proscribed since 1874. I think one can go back to that date safely. I cannot understand the theory which some gentlemen appear to entertain, that people of any race or creed, the Irish Catholics, the French Catholics or the Scotch Presbyterians should be expected to condone corruption, incapacity or tyranny, on the part of a Government, simply because some prominent member of that particular race or creed holds an office in that Government. I have never been able to understand that; but there is I regret to say a good deal of that feeling in the country. Now, speaking of the two hon. gentlemen who began this debate, there is just one point which has suggested itself with regard to them, and I am glad to find that the hon.

gentleman who has just spoken confirms the view which I entertain. I think with all deference to those hon. gentlemen, neither of them holds any commission to represent the Catholic body of Ontario, or the Catholic body outside of that Province. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down has given us to understand that as to both of them. They are here on their merits, and in virtue of the favor of Sir John Macdonald, but they are not in any way the official representatives of the Irish Catholics. The history that we have had in the last three speeches that have been made has been valuable and interesting. It appears from what we have heard that the two hon. gentlemen who began the debate, that it suited the purposes of the Premier to make use of them to carry the election of 1882, as it had suited that right hon. gentleman to make use of the Orange association for the purpose of carrying a great many previous elections, as well as the election of 1882. I have not perhaps had the intimate acquaintance with the Premier that a good many other hon. gentlemen have had, but I have had an opportunity of observing his career to some extent, and I think that anyone who knows him well will not deny that the great cardinal point of his creed is that the essential thing is that Sir John Macdonald shall be at the head of the administration.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—At any cost.

HON. MR. POWER—That is the essential thing.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—Somebody must be.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman thinks that is the one desirable thing.

HON. MR. PLUMB—His followers think so too.

HON. MR. POWER—The right hon. gentleman thinks more than that—that any means are justifiable to obtain that most desirable end.

HON. MR. OGILIVIE—Any legitimate means.

HON. MR. POWER—Means which would not be legitimate for any other end he thinks would be justifiable for that.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—No.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentlemen can have his opinion; I shall have mine. I must say that the Premier has shown a most wonderful capacity for keeping himself in power, for so arranging, managing and manipulating people and things as to keep himself in office; but I shall tell my hon. friends opposite what the Premier has never done to my knowledge—he has never yet gone to the country on his record. He has never appealed, as a statesman should appeal to the electors, on his record—never once. He has never gone to the people and presented an administrative record of his Government and asked them for a renewal of their confidence on that record.

HON. MR. READ—He did at the last election.

HON. MR. POWER—I propose to review very briefly the manner in which the Premier has supplemented that record in former cases. I shall not talk of the election of 1867, because that was the beginning of a new era; such changes had taken place that parties had become commingled, and old party lines were obliterated; but in 1872 the Premier went to the country. At that time Canada was prosperous; and he had had a large majority in the House from 1867 to 1872. Did he go to the country then on the merits of his administration? Not at all. The Premier secured the assistance of some $300,000 from Sir Hugh Allan. That was one supplement to his record. Then the Premier took with him to the elections the unanimous or nearly unanimous support of the Orangemen of Ontario; and he took with him, of course, the support of the Conservatives of Quebec. The right hon. gentleman came to grief shortly after the election of 1872. He had a chance to go to the country in 1878.

HON. MR. McMILLAN—On the National Policy.

HON. MR. POWER—Yes; and he did more than that, he appealed to the people of the Maritime Provinces, not on the National Policy, but on the ground that he was going to get a reciprocity of trade by a reciprocity of tariffs. He took the Orangemen with him then, and the French Conservatives, and with the assistance of the hon. gentleman who opened this discussion he took with him a large portion of the Irish Catholic vote in Ontario as well as in the other Provinces. In 1882, the Premier had been in power for a term of four years; the country had been comparatively prosperous: the great National Policy had been operating for some time, and it had not begun to work out its legitimate results when we went to the country. But the Premier was not satisfied to go the country on his four years' record. Before going to the people, he perpetrated the Gerrymander Act. He did not appeal to the constituency which had elected him before; but gerrymandered the constituencies in such a way as to give himself a very considerable advantage. That was one of the elements which supplemented his record. Then the Premier had with him the large body of wealthy men who had embarked their money in manufactures, and who were anxious that the tariff should be continued. It will be remembered perhaps by some hon. gentlemen that the Premier told the people that there were $10,000,000 of foreign capital ready to be poured into this country as soon as those capitalists found that National Policy was a permanent thing. We have not seen the capital yet but the promise served the purpose it was intended to serve—to carry the right hon. gentleman over the election.

HON. MR. McMILLAN—It is in the country.

HON. MR. POWER—Not at all. The hon. gentleman cannot persuade me or persuade any sensible man that any appreciable amount of this $10,000,000 has come into the country to be invested in manufactures since 1882. He further supplemented his record by the aid of the contractors who had been engaged on the Canadian Pacific Railway; and we know that some of those gentlemen rendered yeoman service. Then the Premier went to the Orange body; and this time he had something more than a mere friendly word to give; he proposed to give them an Act of incorporation. He then went to our Irish Catholic friends in Ontario, and he proposed to give them representation in the Cabinet; and he still retained his Conservative friends from Quebec.

HON. MR. ALMON—What was the policy that Mr. Blake opposed him with?

HON. MR. POWER—We are not now discussing Mr. Blake's policy. One thing at a time. Hon. gentlemen will see that the Premier contrived by his wonderful skill to perform the unprecedented feat of riding at the same time on several horses, each one running in a different direction. He combined the most Catholic people in the Province of Quebec, the enthusiastic Irish Catholics, and the enthusiastic Orangemen. We know how he did this; we know how he appealed to the prejudices and feelings of those different classes. While I quite agree with the hon. gentleman from Kingston in thinking that this system of selecting men for public positions simply because they belong to certain religions or certain races, and not because of their qualifications or their merits—while I think that this is exceedingly objectionable; still while a gentleman occupying the position of a Premier of Canada, resorts to a system of that kind—when he recognises it and practices it, the system should be operated as fairly and honestly as such a system can. For this reason, I think it is worth our while to consider whether the system was fairly and honestly carried out in the case which is before this House. The hon. gentleman from Toronto (Mr. O'Donohoe) had grown up to a certain extent under this system; it had been in operation around him; he found that people were pushed forward because they were representative Catholics or because they were representative Orangemen; and he felt, that having been recognized for some time as a representative in a certain sense of the Irish Catholics, he was entitled to a seat in the Cabinet. Sir John Macdonald recognized the claim of the hon. gentleman, and in order that there shall be no doubt on that matter, I shall quote the Premier's language on that subject. On the 8th of March last, in answer to a question asked by the leader of the Opposition, Sir John Macdonald used the following language:—

"In 1882 negotiations were opened with Mr. O'Donohoe with the view of his entering the Ministry, and the assent of the Governor General was obtained to his being asked to enter the Government. It was, however, found that Mr. O'Donohoe could not at that time, from various causes, bring the expected strength to the Administration, either generally or from his co-religionists; and, after consultation between Mr. O'Donohoe and the Hon. Frank Smith, Senator, the former was appointed Senator, and Mr. Smith was appointed to the Privy Council, without, according to my recollection, any office being assigned to him."

There you have the admission of the Premier, that he had undertaken to place Mr. O'Donohoe in the Cabinet, and the admission that he had not kept his promise. But lest there should be any doubt on that, it may be well to refer again to a letter which was quoted by the hon. gentleman from Toronto, in his speech on Friday last. I propose to quote the circular letter which Sir John Macdonald wrote to the Catholic Bishops of Ontario.

"TORONTO, June 5th, 1882.

"(Private and confidential.)

"My Dear Lord,—

"Mr. O'Donohoe will tell you of the tempest that has been raised here in Toronto, on account of the supposition that his views are extreme as to the Irish question. This might destroy his future."

One can see how tender at that time—before the elections of 1882—Sir John was, as to the fate of Mr. O'Donohoe. He continues:—

"And it has therefore been arranged between the Hon. Frank Smith and Mr. O'Donohoe that the former is to represent the Irish Catholics in the Cabinet, while Mr. O'Donohoe will get a seat in the Senate. Hon. Frank Smith is to make way for O'Donohoe in the Ministry, when they think the time is opportune."

HON. MR. SMITH—To whom was that letter written?

HON. MR. POWER—It is signed "John A. Macdonald."

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B. C.)—There is no promise in that.

HON. MR. READ—The time has not come yet.

HON. MR. POWER—The letter continues:—

“These two gentlemen are acting in perfect accord, and desire that I should explain to your Lordship the nature of their arrangements, which, of course, must be kept a profound secret for the present. Believe me, my dear Lord, faithfully yours”

HON. MR. SMITH—To whom was that letter written?

HON. MR. POWER—It is a circular letter addressed by Sir John Macdonald to the Roman Catholic Bishops of Ontario, on the 5th of June 1882. The elections took place that year on the 20th of June.

HON. MR. SMITH—Does it give the name of any person to whom it is addressed?

HON. MR. POWER—I presume that, although the hon. gentleman said some very severe things of his fellow townsman on Friday last, he will not go so far as to accuse him of forgery.

HON. MR. SMITH—No, but I want the names.

HON. MR. POWER—I have produced the letter, which the hon. gentleman from Toronto states was written by Sir John Macdonald, and was received by more than one Catholic Bishop of Ontario.

HON. MR. SMITH—Name one of them.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman can get the information from his hon. friend (Mr. O'Donohoe) on his own side of the House.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman from Halifax is making use of the letter, and I want him to name any Bishop who received it.

HON. MR. POWER—I take it to be granted that the letter was not written without being sent.

HON. MR. O'DONOHOE—I will tell my hon. friends that I delivered the original of that letter myself into the hands of three Bishops, at the request of Sir John Macdonald, and with the knowledge and consent of Mr. Smith.

HON. MR. SMITH—I deny any such thing. I say positively that I never knew of Mr. O'Donohoe delivering that letter to any Bishop or clergyman in the Dominion.

HON. MR. O'DONOHOE—Did you ever hear it read?

HON. MR. SMITH—And I never heard it read until it was read in this House by the hon. gentleman himself on Friday last; and I say that when he reads a letter here he should state to whom it is directed, and not bring in anything under a disguise. I say that the hon. gentleman ought to be ashamed to bring it in here. I dare him to name the Bishop to whom that letter was addressed.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman is out of order. I think the House has a right to be protected from such interruptions. There is no reason why the discussion on this subject should not be conducted in the same orderly way as discussions on other questions. When I read Sir John Macdonald's statement in the House of Commons, and when I read that circular letter which the hon. gentleman opposite states he delivered personally to three of the Catholic Bishops of Ontario, I cannot help feeling that Sir John Macdonald's statement, and that circular harmonize remarkably well. Taking those two things together, there is no doubt whatever that the Hon. Mr. O'Donohoe was promised this seat in the Cabinet, and that when Sir John Macdonald found that there was a tempest raised over his appointment, he thought he had better let the matter stand over for a while, and that he gave the Bishops to understand that the arrangement would be carried out, after the tempest that he spoke of, had passed away. I happened to be in the House of Commons the evening Sir John made that statement; not by any previous arrangement with the Premier; my being there was purely accidental, and I think that after that statement was made in the House of Commons with respect to a member of this House, Mr. O'Donohoe owed it to himself and to the Senate to bring the matter up in this Chamber. It may be said that the hon. gentleman did not take this step early enough. There was a very good reason why he did not bring it up until now. Up to the time of the Easter holidays the Premier was not well enough to attend in his place in the House of Commons, and I think the hon. gentleman from Toronto showed good taste in letting the matter stand over until Sir John Macdonald was again able to attend to his Parliamentary duties. The hon. gentleman who represents the Government in the House now, (Mr. Smith) made use of some language on Friday last which was calculated to create the impression that Mr. O'Donohoe was acting in some sense on behalf of the Reform party, or was induced to bring in this resolution by some member of the Reform party. As far as I am aware, that statement has no foundation whatever. As far as I know, the hon. gentleman has brought the matter up entirely on his own motion, and there is no Reformer concealed about the premises at all.

HON. MR. PLUMB—There is no Reformer "in the fence."

HON. MR. POWER—No. I think Mr. O'Donohoe has established his case in such a way as to satisfy any reasonable and unprejudiced man. When we take all the circumstances—the fact that my hon. friend worked very hard for the Conservative party in 1878; that he then did ycoman service, as the member of the Government admitted; when we find that he was dissatisfied in 1882; that his dissatisfaction was removed, and that he worked energetically and vigorously during that campaign, and amongst other things produced the manifesto which the hon. gentleman from Kingston remarked did more harm to the Conservative cause than good; (I can understand that among some of his Orange friends in Kingston it might do some mischief, but I do not see how it could amongst Catholic voters); looking at Sir John's letter to the Bishops, and his statement in the other House, it is perfect clear that the Premier did enter into the arrangement that Mr. O'Donohoe has described; and when the elections were over, Mr. O'Donohoe, having served the purposes of the Premier, was thrown over to the Orange wolf. That is a way the Premier has of disposing of people when they cease to be of use to him.

HON. MR. DEVER—It serves him right; it was a fool's bargain.

HON. MR. SMITH—He had a right to keep away from him.

HON. MR. POWER—I hope the hon. gentleman will apply that moral to himself. He has done a good deal of work for the Premier, and certainly has made nothing out of it himself. The hon. gentleman must have lost a great deal, and gained nothing financially by his action with the Government.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—We are told by the hon. gentleman who has introduced this question that he (Mr. Smith) took advantage of the knowledge he got in the Cabinet, of the change in the tariff.

HON. MR. POWER—I think the hon. gentleman may regret before long, the losses sustained for the sake of his party.

HON. MR. SMITH—I will report when that day comes.

HON. MR. POWER—I have just stated that the Premier, when Mr. O'Donohoe had served his purpose, had thrown him over to the Orange wolf. But another thing happened: the Orange body who had reposed their faith in the Premier's promise that they were to have an Act of Incorporation when the next sitting of Parliament came around, were disappointed; the Premier threw the Orange body overboard to the Bleu wolf, which was a more formidable animal then, and the poor Orange bill was made the victim.

HON. MR. PLUMB—What a terrible fellow he is.

HON. MR. SMITH—It was not brought in as a Government measure.

HON. MR. POWER—No, the Premier was a little too shrewd to bring it in as a Government measure: but he gave the Orangemen to understand that the bill would be passed, and the bill was not passed.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—Imputing motives again.

HON. MR. SMITH—Did the Bill never come up in the Ontario Legislature?

HON. MR. POWER—I think it did in 1871.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Under Mowat's administration?

HON. MR. POWER—I have not said that the House of Commons was wrong in rejecting that measure, or right. That has nothing to do with the question. I am simply illustrating the way in which my co-religionists as well as the Orangemen, have been manipulated and utilized by the gentleman whom it would not be wrong to call the political Barnum—he is the prince of political humbugs. I do not make the statement which I am about to make, as positively as I have made some others; but I say that, looking at what we know of the character of the Premier and at all the circumstances of the case, it is perhaps not uncharitable to say, that the Premier in 1885, as he had previously sacrificed Irish Catholics to the Orangemen, and had sacrificed the Orangemen to the overwhelming Catholic vote, chiefly French—sacrificed the French to the overwhelming English vote.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—In what way?

HON. MR. POWER—My hon. friend has I think paid a fair amount of attention to the recent proceedings in the Province of Quebec and elsewhere, and he must know.

HON. MR. PLUMB—According to the hon. gentleman he has sacrificed them all, and where is he now?

HON. MR. POWER—The conclusion I draw is simply this: we are not to be surprised at what has been made known in the case before the House. I take it that the leader of the Government is prepared to sacrifice any principle or any friend for the purpose of gaining or retaining office; and this history illustrates the way in which he uses the prejudices and feelings of races and creeds just as pawns on a political chess-board.

HON. MR. MACDONALD—And you would do the same thing if you were in power.

HON. MR. POWER—I do not care to make individual references but there are times when one is really almost tempted, and I think the hon. gentleman behind me might point a moral as well as anybody else. I referred before to the Premier's wonderful capacity for combining classes that no other man could combine. He has had in his Cabinet for a very long time a member of the Orange body, and the Orangemen of Canada, or at least the Orangemen of Ontario—it is not true of the Orangemen of the lower Provinces—but the Orangemen of Ontario are so influenced, chiefly by that fact, that the Conservative Government can go on and misgovern the country—they can be as extravagant and corrupt as they please, and the Orangemen of Ontario will support Sir John as long as he has an Orangeman with him in the Cabinet. Then he has an Irish Catholic in the Cabinet—my hon. friend opposite. I think the impression that will be left upon one's mind is that, in the opinion of that hon. gentleman and of the hon. gentleman from Kingston, and of a good many others of that party in the Province of Ontario, the Premier is at liberty to misgovern in every way that he pleases, and it is expected that because there is an Irish Catholic in the Cabinet it will be all condoned and forgiven. The Premier has been able to combine the French element with the Irish Catholic and the Orange elements. The Premier has obeyed one of the injunctions of St. Paul to "be all things to all men." I was rather struck a while ago by the reference of the hon. gentleman from Kingston to the millennium which is coming. I think Sir John's Cabinet approaches as nearly to the millennium as anything one knows of. The millennium is described as being the time when the lion and the lamb shall lie down together, and a little child shall lead them. I can imagine the Cabinet being described as a case of the Bleu Lion and the Orange Lamb lying down together, and the Irish Catholic little boy leading them.

HON. MR. ALMON—No, Sir John is the little boy.

HON. MR. POWER—Or one might if he were a little more poetically inclined, fancy the Cabinet a concert company from which could be heard the strains of the “Boyne Water” mingled with those of “Patrick’s Day” and “Un Canadien Errant” in an unique and wondrous harmony.

HON. MR. SMITH—Is not that the way he should be?

HON. MR. POWER—I do not propose to say anything more on what I may call the general subject; but I shall refer to one or two things that the member of the Government spoke of. He referred to some resolutions with respect to Home Rule which were adopted by this Parliament in 1882. Mr. O’Donohue suggested that they had been drawn by me. I wish to say that they were not drawn by me alone. I was a member of the sub-committee appointed to draw them up; and the resolutions were drafted by Mr. Patterson, the Conservative member for Essex in the House of Commons and myself; and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Smith) was incorrect in saying that they were Mr. Costigan’s resolutions in the sense that Mr. Costigan had drawn them. Mr. Costigan took the resolutions and submitted them to the Premier.

HON. MR. ALMON—May I ask the hon. gentleman what answer Mr. Gladstone gave to that address?

HON. MR. POWER—This matter has really nothing to do with the subject before the House; but the hon. gentleman opposite referred to it, and I think it desirable to correct the statement that he has made. Mr. Costigan submitted those resolutions to the Premier, and the Premier made such alterations in them as to take the force out of them to a very considerable extent, just as the Government did with the resolutions introduced the other day by the leader of the Opposition in the other House.

HON. MR. SMITH—Did the hon. gentleman not find fault with me for not accepting the resolutions which he had drawn in that committee on that occasion: and did he draw any of those resolutions he speaks of now? His resolutions were cast aside, and the Hon. John Costigan and Mr. Patterson, Essex, and some other gentlemen I could name framed those resolutions, and the hon. gentleman from Halifax had nothing to do with them. The hon. gentleman found fault with me at the table in the committee room, and said that everything that he brought up there was objected to by me. This was at the second meeting of the committee, and I ask him is not that the case?

HON. MR. POWER—No.

HON. MR. SMITH—Did the hon. gentleman not find fault with me at the table?

HON. MR. POWER—Whatever doubt, I might have had as to the relative merits of the statements made by the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, and the hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. O’Donohue) have been removed by the statement now made. I did not care to trouble the House with the details of that old story, if the hon. gentleman had not challenged my statement.

HON. MR. SMITH—Tell it all.

HON. MR. POWER—I prepared the first draft of the resolutions, if I remember rightly. Mr. Patterson prepared another draft; and I remember that the resolutions ultimately adopted were made up partly of those which I had drawn, and partly of those drawn by Mr. Patterson. I had occasion to speak to Mr. Patterson myself within the last three days on this subject, and his recollection of it is the same as mine.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Who were the committee.

HON. MR. POWER—The point is that the Hon. John Costigan did not write a line of those resolutions.

HON. MR. POWER.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Name the sub-committee?

HON. MR. POWER—The Hon. G. W. Howlan, Mr. Patterson, of Essex, and your humble servant.

HON. MR. DEVER—Good men.

HON. MR. POWER—There is another remark bearing on the case. I think really the Senator from Kingston owes an explanation to the leader of this House and to the Government for his statement. There was a manifesto which he says was signed by Mr. O'Donohue, at that time not a member of the Senate, by the Hon. Mr. Smith and the Hon. Mr. Costigan; and the hon. gentleman from Kingston says that that was so mal à propos an address that he suppressed it as far as was in his power.

HON. MR. SULLIVAN—Certainly I did.

HON. MR. POWER—Surely that is paying a very poor compliment to the hon. gentleman's friends in the Government.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I only propose to claim the indulgence of the House for one or two moments after the very long speech which has just fallen from the senior member for Halifax. We all regretted, of course, the differences which have arisen between the leader of the House (Mr. Smith) and my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. O'Donohue)—differences between two gentlemen who have been much respected by all who know them—members of one church, and the more to regretted because they are members of a church in which unity generally prevails. As regarding the statement of the hon. gentleman from Toronto, (Mr. O'Donohue,) I say that speech, which was delivered by him, was characterized by its simplicity, its honesty and its truth: and it is not very seemly for the leader of the House to belittle the Senator or to challenge his motives, or the honesty of his purpose. I say that a man who is honest and does his duty to his country and to his fellow men is as much to be respected as a man who possesses wealth, and it ill became the hon. gentleman to employ such terms to my hon. friend, simply because he has not as much wealth as he has, and I am sure he will regret his utterances when he sees them appear in the public journals. It was very proper that my hon. friend should bring this matter before the House. Is it seemly or honest that a Minister of the Crown of a country such as this Dominion should practice such artifices as are daily brought to light? Is it proper that the First Minister of the Crown should go to bishops of the Church of Rome and to clergymen of the Church of Rome and make solemn statements and solemn promises, which are all to be broken like pie-crust simply to suit his own convenience, and that he may retain the rein of power? His purpose is to secure his object by intrigue, and every sort of artifice. Can we expect the blessing of God to rest upon the country when its First Minister practices such artifices as are daily brought to light in the press and in the Parliament of the Dominion? What is the result of all this demoralization? The standards of honor, which ought to govern society, appear to be impaired. Have we not seen a member of this Senate guilty of taking upwards of $600 of the public money for simply 11 days' attendance, and on signing a false declaration which in my judgment is an act of perjury? Could you find any man of respectable position in England, in France or in Germany, do so dishonoring an act? The higher classes of society in England recognize truth and honor in their private and public life, and they do not have recourse to dishonourable means to obtain money. If a man is once convicted of anything dishonourable in England, he is excluded from society. You will not find even a mechanic or an artisan associate with a man who has taken other people's money fraudulently, and who could sign a false declaration for the sake of a paltry $600.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—I call the hon. gentleman to order.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—The hon. gentleman is afraid that I will call attention to the bad conduct of some of the members.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—The hon. gentleman is making use of language which is perfectly unjustifiable. No one who hears him can mistake his insinuation against a member of this House.

THE SPEAKER—I certainly think the hon. member is not in order. I would request him to confine himself strictly to the motion before the House.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I am sure my hon. friend, Senator O'Donohoe, may congratulate himself that he was not taken into the Government. Who would desire to become a member of a Government which waste millions of dollars to keep themselves in power? Who would care to become a member of a Government that have introduced bills such as those which have been passed in this House lately? When we see responsible men in this House trying to justify such measures by special pleadings, we can well suppose that they were brought up in the old Grecian schools of sophistry. That is the way such members purchase their way to Speakerships, to Portfolios, to Government offices, by sophistry and fraud.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—I call the hon. gentleman to order.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman is out of order, and grossly out of order. The language he has used is as unparliamentary as any I have heard used in this Chamber, and he seems determined to defy the authority of the House, and the decency and decorum that ought to prevail in debate. I leave the hon. gentleman in the hands of the House.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—If the House—

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—The hon. gentleman cannot rise to speak again without the permission of the House.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—If the House will not permit me to rise, of course I cannot continue.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman having been called to order can only speak again with the consent of the House.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I ask the House to permit me to go on for a few minutes.

HON. GENTLEMEN—No! No!!

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I had no intention to speak on this subject, but some remarks which have fallen from the hon. members from Kingston and Halifax force me to make a few observations. I was surprised to hear them take a position similar to that which others have assumed in this House on other occasions—that those questions of religion and nationality ought not to be brought before Parliament. In principle I approve of that; I am always astonished to see a community like ours, composed of people of so many different origins, unable to live in harmony, and to find from time to time that it is necessary for minorities to call upon their fellow men for justice. In the Province of Quebec, during the last forty years, since the union of Upper and Lower Canada, peace and harmony have prevailed; there is no trouble there; you never hear of any difficulties in the Legislature of that province about religion or nationality. Why? Because the majority, being French, take a pride in seeing that the minority are treated with liberality. The French are in the minority here. Let the representatives of all other races unite and give the minority that to which they are entitled, and they may be sure that the minority will never ask for special privileges and favors. They ask simply for their rights and nothing more, and the majority should, without having to be appealed to, grant them that to which they are entitled. The hon. member from Kingston says that the Catholics receive ample justice. If his heart tells him so, I say it does not inform him correctly. How have the Catholics of New Brunswick been treated on the subject of education by the Government of the day? As to Quebec, how was the question of marriage settled in 1867? Was it not settled in such a way that Sir Alexander Campbell acknowledged in this House that Sir John Macdonald and himself, when in England, had done the reverse of what they had promised to do before they left Canada in 1866. Is that something which should make the minority happy? Yet the result of the course pursued by the majority on that occasion has been that the portion of the civil code of Lower Canada relating to marriage, which have been left to that Province has been set aside by the interpretation put upon the British North America Act of 1867. Is that proper conduct on the part of the Government of the day, and have I not a right to come here and say that, however much I may dislike it, I am obliged to speak of my church and nationality, because the majority have been unjust to us? Was the hon. member from Kingston, who acknowledges himself to be a Catholic, so well pleased in 1872 when he saw the Catholics of New Brunswick suffering under an unjust law, because it pleased Sir John Macdonald to prove a traitor to his friends and violate his word of honor that the rights of the minority should be protected under the Confederation Act? However the hon. gentleman from Kingston thinks it all right and advocates the principle that we ought not in Parliament to speak of religious differences; but is he satisfied with the position which his countrymen and my countrymen occupy in this Dominion? Does he not know that in this country the minority have only half of what is due to them, and notwithstanding that fact, they do not complain much. They suffer patiently; but why should we not in this House state their grievances? What is our proportion of representation in this very Chamber? Have the nationality to which the hon. gentleman himself belongs the proportion of representation here to which they are entitled? I say they have not. Let him look round the Senate and state upon his honor whether he believes that his nationality has its fair proportion of representation. His party feeling tells him that the representation is sufficient, but it will not satisfy me. I am as good a Conservative and as good a Catholic as the hon. member for Kingston, and I am not satisfied when I am denied my rights.

HON. MR. SMITH—I thought this was an Irish fight.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—Yes, it is an Irish fight; but when principles are laid down in such a way that others who have been fighting the battle of their country are accused, it is time to point out what is right. To this very day the French minority in this House are denied their rights. The Government of the day, three or four years ago, through the then Minister of Justice, Sir Alex. Campbell, from his place in the Senate, acknowledged that the minority are entitled to a French Minister on the Treasury Benches in the Senate, who should reply to questions put by French members in their own language. We are without such representation still, and yet the hon. member says that minorities ought not to complain, and ought not to introduce questions of religion and nationality. I say we should not be obliged to speak on those questions. The true remedy, and the only remedy, is for every man to do his duty, and when that is done all will be satisfied. Justitia et pax osculate sunt. Without justice to all we cannot have peace and happiness in the country: we must have trouble and complaints. I desire, as much as any member of this House, to see the government of this country conducted in a peaceful and harmonious way; but we are all representatives of the people, and it is our duty to protect the rights of those who have placed us in the position which we hold here. If we fail to do so, we are derelict in our duty. I could state a number of facts to prove that the minority in this House are unjustly treated, and show that the Irish, as well as the French, are interested in having the present condition of affairs remedied. I wish to state to those gentlemen who have advised us against introducing questions of religion or nationality here, that every time such doctrines are advocated in the Senate I will be ready to admit their correctness in principle: but I am not ready practically to submit to it except another principle is recognized—that is, of doing justice to everyone, and giving to everyone that to which he has a right. I do not like this sort of discussion; but it is a necessity until the majority understand what their duties are, and until the minority have reason to place confidence in the majority.

HON. MR. DEVER—If there is anything on earth that I despise it is talking about religion. I think if possible all religious questions, especially when mingled with politics, should be kept out of this Senate: unfortunately a question has arisen here into which a good deal of religious controversy has been introduced. It is no concern of mine: I have no part or parcel in it. I did not introduce it: I did not know it was coming up: but I feel it my duty, as a Catholic Senator from the city and county of St. John, to speak on my own behalf and on behalf of those voters and citizens who may take the same view that I do with reference to this question. During this debate quotations have been made from a document prepared by the Hon. John O'Donohoe, Hon. John Costigan, and the Hon. Frank Smith, in the house of the Hon. David Macpherson, at Toronto.

HON. MR. SMITH—Mr. Costigan was not there.

HON. MR. DEVER—We are told that he signed the proclamation.

HON. MR. SMITH—He did not: he was not there at all.

HON. MR. DEVER—He signed the proclamation.

HON. MR. SMITH—That was not the time.

HON. MR. DEVER—I quote the words of one who has spoken in this Senate as follows: "As a result of the bargain at Mr. Macpherson's house in Toronto an address to the Irish Catholics of Canada was issued and the support of the administration was assured. Sir John Macdonald then wrote to the bishops acquainting them with the position of affairs." The address bears the signature of Hon. Mr. Smith, Hon. Mr. Costigan, and the Hon. Mr. O'Donohoe.

HON. MR. SMITH—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. The address had nothing at all to do with the time that the meeting was held at Sir David Macpherson's. It is a different affair altogether. The hon. gentleman who brought up the question will explain it.

HON. MR. DEVER—He has explained it. It is a matter between the hon. gentlemen who presumed to speak for the Catholics of Canada. To this I take exception, and I do so because the Irish Roman Catholics—a large portion of them—feel aggrieved that they have no representation in the Cabinet—that, on the contrary, two gentlemen are in it who are looked on as catspaws—in other words, decoy ducks, for the purpose of catching the votes of confiding Catholics of Canada.

HON. MR. SMITH—You need not find fault, for they would say you are not one.

HON. MR. DEVER—My position is this. I feel it my duty to protest against the presumption of those three gentlemen assuming, on behalf of the Catholics of the Dominion, to sell, bargain and traffic in our political rights. They have a perfect right to speak and act for themselves, and to secure all the honors and emoluments they can by their own exertions: but to speak for the Catholics of this country is a presumption that I cannot tolerate, as far as I am concerned. I submit to the Catholics of this country to say whether they will sustain it or not. In fact, to me this conduct looks so ridiculous that I can compare it to nothing only to the meeting of the three tailors of Tooley street, who presumed to speak on behalf of the people of England—"We (3) the Catholic, representatives of this country speak on behalf of the Catholics of the Dominion of Canada." I feel that the Catholics, as a body, will repudiate such conduct: they will not stand it. When they want representatives they will feel that they have a right to select them, and that those representatives will be made by them—not for them. Another point came under my notice in this debate—and it is this: the Hon. Mr. Smith, in the most ungenerous way I thought, alluding to his associate from Toronto, Mr. O'Donohoe, taunted him with being unable to get a constituency—that he should appeal to the people, or that he appealed and could not be elected. Mr. O'Donohoe might have retorted that Mr. Smith could not get elected either, though he is a very respectable man; but is it not a notorious fact that the Catholics of the Province of Ontario are so scattered and in such a minority that there is hardly a county in the province in which a Catholic can be returned without Protestant support; and I am sorry to say it is frequently the fact that in the counties where the Protestants predominate they are not so liberal as they ought to be if they want to have peace, comfort and true loyalty in this country. There is another thing which struck me as a very surprising matter. He said "The only thing that would induce him to resign would be to receive an intimation from the hierarchy of this country." An intimation from the hierarchy of this country! I do not believe the hierarchy would trouble themselves to intimate to him that he should resign.

HON. MR. SMITH—I do not think they will; I do not think there is the slightest danger of it.

HON. MR. DEVER—I think it is bringing them down to a very low level to assume for a moment that they would bother themselves about the Hon. Mr. Smith. He also said he would not retire from the Government until a proper Catholic representative was selected. The Hon. Mr. Smith must be a great man. Certainly a very important man! Why, he must have wings! He must think himself floating in the air when it is necessary to consult him before making a place for a Catholic Irishman in the Government of Canada. He also said that the Catholic interest was now well represented by himself and Mr. Costigan. I deny it!

HON. MR. SMITH—I say still that the Catholic interest is well represented by Mr. Costigan—very much better than you or I could represent it.

HON. MR. DEVER—That is a question. The hon. gentleman took great care to explain that the Catholics of this country had six representatives in the Government—a thing never heard of before. Would the hon. gentleman state how many Catholics were in the Government in 1879, 1880 and 1881—when New Brunswick was left unrepresented, except by Sir Leonard Tilley. Where was Mr. Costigan then? Where was Mr. Smith then? They were nowhere. They were round the butcher's block picking up the scraps. The hon. gentleman also said that the Hon. Mr. Scott was not an Irishman. He is a good authority, probably, about the biography of members of this House, but I prefer the "Parliamentary Companion," and I find stated therein that Mr. Scott was born of Irish parents.

HON. MR. SMITH—I say so; he is a first-class Canadian.

HON. MR. McMILLAN—He is not descended from Irish parents. His mother was a Scotchwoman.

HON. MR. DEVER—Scotch or Irish, he is of Celtic origin.

HON. MR. McMILLAN—So much the better.

HON. MR. DEVER—I would ask the hon. gentleman, since he is so particular about the nationality of Mr. Scott, what he has to say about the origin of Mr. Costigan? The "Parliamentary Companion" tells us that Mr. Costigan was born at Quebec, so that he has no advantage over Mr. Scott on that score.

HON. MR. ALMON—Then he must be a French Catholic.

HON. MR. DEVER—The fact is, that there are two Irish Catholics in this Government at present, the result of accident; the intention was that there should be only one—that Mr. Costigan should be used to kill two birds with one stone—that he should do duty in Upper Canada first as the representative of the Irish resolutions, as the representative of the New Brunswick school resolutions, as the humbug of the country, to impose upon the Catholics; but the people of Upper Canada would not receive him. That is the hitch; and the consequence was that Mr. O'Donohoe had to be referred to, and failing in that the hon. Mr. Smith had to be appointed. The result is that two Irish Catholics are by accident in the Cabinet.

HON. MR. SMITH—Are you not jealous?

HON. MR. DEVER—Mr. Costigan was then sent down to New Brunswick a second time, when he could not do any good in Upper Canada. He was expected to overwhelm the Catholics and bring them to the standard; and to show that there is truth permeating all those documents that came up, I will quote from one I have here. There has been some talk about a manifesto in Upper Canada. With that I have nothing to do. I am perfectly satisfied that Ontario shall take care of itself, and choose just such representatives as it may think proper: but when gentlemen come down to the Province of New Brunswick, I have a word or two to say about their utterances, and there are others in New Brunswick who should be consulted on public affairs. They do not want to be driven to the polls because Mr. Smith and Mr. Costigan, and even Mr. O'Donohoe, should go into a private room in Sir David Macpherson's house and bargain and traffic and transfer the support of the Catholics of Canada for their own aggrandizement.

HON. MR. SMITH—Mr. Costigan was not there at all.

HON. MR. DEVER—He signed the proclamation, I have a document here which was placed in my hands by a Rev. priest. I am not one to seek the protection or assistance of priests in elections for political purposes. I have due respect for them, such respect as one entertains who has from a boy been brought up in that Church that has braved the battle and the breeze for 1800 years, and I trust will continue for all time to inculcate morality, purity and true philosophy in the minds of the sons and daughters of men. The manifesto is an imposing document, and worthy of the gentleman from whom it emanated. It is dated St. John, June 19th, 1882, and addressed "To the Irish voters of Charlotte County."

"Charles Curliss,

Care of the Mayor of St. Stephen.

State to the priests and all the Catholic people that I trust they will lend all their aid to return Stevenson in support of a Government that has done and will do the fullest justice to them, and support a National Policy that is a blessing to us all. You have my fullest authority."

Napoléon Bonaparte could not say more than that.

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B. C.)—Who said that?

HON. MR. DEVER—I will tell you bye-and-bye. He continues—

"You have my fullest authority to represent me in Charlotte County, which I hope, like the rest of the Province and the Dominion, will do its duty, and support a policy that has raised us."

He should have said "Me": it would have been more appropriate and what he must have really meant.

"Support a policy that has raised us from poverty to prosperity. Surely the political party that voted one hundred thousand dollars to relieve the distress in Ireland, that carried resolutions of sympathy with Ireland triumphantly throughout Parliament, and that now comes before this country with two representatives of our people."

Oh, what a gift! He continues—

"Has a strong claim on the cordial support of Irishmen all over Canada. Ask our Irish friends in my name to support us, that I may be so strengthened as to be of use to them.

JOHN COSTIGAN."

This manifesto went forth, but did not do the duty that was intended, for the gentleman against whom it was directed was triumphantly returned, in spite of it, and the Catholics and clergy of the place laughed at the impudence of Mr. Smith, Mr. Costigan and Mr. Anybody else issuing proclamations calling upon them to support them for their own personal aggrandizement, and I believe I have authority for stating that they repudiate such an impertinence. I know, I do repudiate and resent it.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I am very glad my hon. friend from Halifax has told us that since 1871 no race has been proscribed in this country. He has also told us that Sir John Macdonald has a happy faculty for combining and harmonizing all creeds. I am sure this, coming from my hon. friend, is a eulogy of the leader of the Government which I, for one, am glad to accept at his hands. It seems to me, in this matter in 1882, there must have been some arrangement by which the hon. gentleman who now leads the Senate (Mr. Smith) desired that the mover of this resolution should have a seat in the Cabinet, in preference to himself; but subsequently it was ascertained that the hon. member opposite (O'Donohoe) was not as popular with his party, his co-religionists, or his race, or with any other party, as had been supposed, and it was thought unwise to appoint him to the Cabinet; and therefore the hon. gentleman, who was then in the Cabinet and is still a member of it, was retained in his position. There is another fact which cannot be doubted, that it was agreed that the hon. gentleman who has moved this resolution was to take a seat in the Senate. That agreement was carried out; and from what I can learn from the whole of this controversy there is no ground for complaint. It is very strange that the hon. gentleman who has moved this resolution should at this time censure the party for not appointing him to the Cabinet, and I wish particularly to draw the attention of the House to this fact—the hon. member admits that up to last October and even up, I believe, to the opening of the present Session, he solicited the Premier to carry out certain terms which he says were agreed upon—that Hon. Mr. Smith should retire from the Cabinet, and that he, Mr. O'Donohoe should take his place. It seems to me that that is not denied by my hon. friend—that certainly up to the 29th October (and I think he will admit up to the opening of Parliament) he had interviews personally and by letter with Sir John to that effect. I think my hon. friend will not deny it. If he does deny it I would like to hear him say so. He denounced the Government here by saying that my hon. friend (Mr. Smith) does not represent the Irish Catholic party properly; that he only got into the Cabinet to serve his own purposes; and that he got information as a member of the Government with regard to changes of tariffs and profited by it. I am sure my hon. friend cannot convince this House or the country of that. I believe a more sincere, generous, patriotic, right-thinking man than the present leader of the Government in this House is not to be found inside or outside of Parliament, and he is a gentleman who would scorn to use information that he received in the Cabinet for his own personal advantage. But the hon. gentleman says that this Government is an old hulk drifting on the sands, and that at any moment it may be in such a position that the first storm will break it to pieces. He says also that it is an effete, corrupt Government, a charter-selling Government whose hands are imbrued in blood. If so how is it that the hon. gentleman was so solicitous that my hon. friend opposite (Mr. Smith) should retire from the Cabinet, and that he (Mr. O'Donohoe) should up to a few weeks ago, take his place? If the Government is so effete and corrupt, and so likely to go to pieces, surely the hon. gentleman could not be influenced to go into such a Cabinet? It seems to me that some change has come over the hon. gentleman, and when he found that his last hope was gone, and there was no chance of Mr. Smith retiring—that the "opportune time had not arrived"—he therefore put himself in antagonism to the Government. I cannot understand after all my hon. friend has said about the corruption of the Government, how a man of unblemished reputation and integrity, as he claims to be, should attempt to enter a Cabinet that he now stigmatizes in the way he has done.

HON. MR. O'DONOHOE—My hon. friend from Lunenburg seems not to understand the question very well. In reply I shall only refer to a few points that have been advanced. The hon. Senator from Toronto, now leading the Government, would impress this House with a false notion as to my character. As to my popularity, there can be none of that. As to support from any portion of the people I could not get that: according to him I could not be elected for any part of the Province of Ontario—not even to a town council. I have lived in Toronto for 45 years, and notwithstanding all that my hon. friend has stated, I have the regard of the people of Toronto, of the people of Canada, of those more immediately connected with myself—such a regard as my hon. friend never had. There is nothing that has been in the gift of the Catholic people that has not been conferred upon me. I was elected for the City of Toronto, and I was elected against all the force and power and money of my hon. friend. He told this House on Friday that he wanted to carry me on; he wanted to make me a Senator; he wanted to make me this and that: he would lead the House to believe that he was absolutely a friend of mine. I will tell the House the sort of friend he was: he was a pretended friend, but a treacherous friend; that is what he has been. He says that Conservative Catholics would not accept me. I know the sort of Conservative Catholics. They are my hon. friend and his son-in-law, and the brother of the son-in-law, these are the people that did not want me, on the surface pretending to like me: but behind my back writing against me—writing to the Premier against me. I know that I am speaking by the book. I am speaking by the documents I have read. I have asked him to name the persons who indicated that they would not support the Government if I were a member of it. Did he tell you? Did he give you the name of anyone? He could not do it. In 1871 to which I referred when I spoke on Friday, the Catholics of Ontario met, lay and clerical. They formed an association and whom did they appoint as president of it? They appointed me the man who has no popularity with the Catholics. My hon. friend from Kingston, probably not paying a great deal of attention to the agitation in favour of Catholic rights, and my hon. friend from Halifax, say there has been no proscription. I may be permitted to read for the information of my hon. friend what the Catholics did at that time. I will quote from the constitution and bylaws of the Ontario Catholic league adopted 27th April 1871. It commences—

In order to understand the origin of the organization which it is intended to put in operation under the constitution of the Ontario Catholic League, it is only necessary to mention that, in the month of January of the present year, a number of Catholic gentlemen who take a deep interest in the political and welfare of their co-religionists in this Province, met in private conference to consider what, if anything could be done towards securing to the Catholics of Ontario a just representation in the management of public affairs. What resulted from that conference will be gathered from a perusal of what follows.

The following address was adopted and presented to His Grace the Archbishop and their Lordships the Bishops of Ottawa, Kingston, Hamilton and London:

To His Grace the Archbishop and their Lordships the Bishops of Ontario:

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR LORDSHIPS—

The Catholics of this Province, notwithstanding that they are called upon, in common with their fellow-subjects of every denomination, to bear their due proportion of the expenses of the government of the country, and are in every way affected by the laws from time to time enacted, have felt that they are almost totally unrepresented in the halls of the Legislature.

They attribute this humiliating position partly to the prejudices existing in the minds of the Protestant majority against them on account of the religious belief, and partly, if not principally, to the want of harmony and unity of political action among themselves.

Before taking any step affecting the political interests of the Catholic body as a whole, they deem it as a matter of duty and of the utmost importance that they should first have the counsel and advice of their ecclesiastical superiors, as to the best means of securing due representation to Catholics in the Legislatures of this Province and the Dominion of Canada.

With a view, then, to securing an object so just and so important to all Catholics, the undersigned, on behalf of the Catholics of this Province, humbly and most respectfully pray that your Lordships will consult one another, at as early a day as possible, and appoint such time and place, as will meet the convenience of your Lordships, to confer with a committee of Catholic gentlemen on this subject.

Your Lordships may be assured that political antecedents are, in a step, entirely eschewed, and that its promoters are actuated by the sole desire to secure to Catholics what they consider to be their just rights—a full and fair representation in the Legislatures of this Province and the Dominion of Canada.

To consider the reply of His Grace the Archbishop, embodying the views of himself and the Bishops of Ottawa, Hamilton and London, a meeting was convened by the following circular:—

TORONTO, 23rd February, 1871.

DEAR SIR,

The question of the due representation of the Catholics of this Province in the Local Legislature, as well as in the House of Commons, having engaged the serious attention of Catholic gentlemen in all parts of the Province, a meeting of several of them took place at the residence of the Hon. Frank Smith, in this city, on the 8th December last, with a view to mutual consultation as to what means (if any) should be adopted to secure such representation as the Catholics are entitled to, from their numbers, wealth and intelligence.

Among those present were:

Hon. Frank Smith, Toronto.
 John O'Donohoe, barrister, Toronto
 J. D. Merrick, merchant, Toronto.
 James Stock, merchant, Toronto.
 Patrick Hynes, alderman, Toronto.
 John Carroll, contractor, Toronto.
 Thomas McCrosson, merchant, Toronto.
 Thomas Wilson, merchant, Toronto.
 Patrick Hughes, merchant, Toronto.
 John O'Connor, M. P., Windsor.
 Richard W. Scott, M. P. P., Ottawa.
 John McKeown, barrister, Hamilton.
 James Dawson, merchant, Sombra.
 John B. William, Chatham.
 Christopher Fraser, barrister, Brockville.
 P. McCurry, barrister, Guelph.

These gentlemen, although acting on different sides in past political contests, were unanimously agreed that the Catholics should unite and make a determined effort to secure such just representation.

To accomplish this important object they deemed it their duty, as Catholics, to take the counsel and advice of the Bishops of the Province, and ask their sanction and approval of the movement which was about to be set on foot.

This plan having been adopted, a Committee consisting of the Hon. Frank Smith, John O'Connor, M. P., and John O'Donohoe, presented an Address, embodying these views, to His Grace the Archbishop, in this city, and a copy thereof was sent to their Lordships, the other Bishops of Ontario.

On the 10th instant, His Grace was good enough, by letter, to communicate to the Committee the result of the deliberations of their Lordships, which was the effect that they approved of the course proposed, and would support the united action of the Catholic body.

It was also agreed that, upon receiving the decision of their lordships, the Chairman should again call these gentlemen together and a number of other Catholic gentlemen to meet them at Toronto, to take into consideration the decision of their Lordships, and adopt some general plan of organization to secure the desired object.

You are therefore, invited to attend a meeting to be held in this city, on Thursday, the Ninth day of March next, at 7.30 p.m., at the residence of J. D. Merrick, Esq., No. 154 Mutual street to appoint a "Provisional Executive Committee", and to discuss such a plan of organization as will best insure uniformity of action by Catholics throughout the Province.

As it is understood that the elections for the next Parliament of Ontario, will be held at an early day, there is no time to be lost; and it is hoped you will see the importance of the proposed movement, and that you will feel it to be your imperative duty, to meet your fellow-Catholics, at the time and place above indicated to aid them by your hearty co-operation and advice, in pushing forward the good work in hand.

Yours respectfully,
 JOHN O'CONNOR, Chairman.
 P. MCCURRY, Secretary.

Over 500 copies of the above circular were addressed to prominent Catholic gentlemen throughout the Province of Ontario. In pursuance thereof, the meeting therein referred to was held on the 9th of March, 1871. At that meeting a Provisional Executive Committee was appointed.

A subsequent meeting was held of such Executive and others, April 3rd, 1871, and the following gentlemen were unanimously elected officers of the Provisional Organization, to hold office until a permanent Catholic Organization, representing fully and fairly the Catholic body of Ontario was formed, viz: John O'Donohoe, Esq., Chairman; M. Lawlor, M. D., Secretary; John Shea, Esq., Vice-Chairman; J. D. Merrick, Esq., Treasurer; Wm. A. Lee, Esq., Assistant-Secretary.

Of the association composed in that way the man who, the hon. gentleman tells you, could not get elected for anything, was the choice of that body as their president. He forgot to tell the House that when running for Parliament—when I was running as a candidate for Toronto my hon. friend placed $5,000 in the hands of his bookkeeper to defeat me. He was then at Niagara Falls, on his return home from abroad, and the election was going on. Hearing that I was at the head of the poll he sent his telegram ordering that $2,000 more should be expended if necessary to defeat me. That is the friend, Does he deny that? I ask you now, do you deny that?

HON. MR. SMITH—I do not want to interrupt you: go on!

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—I made some enquiries on this subject the other day, and I will read a note that I received in reply—

Toronto, 15th May, 1886.

Hon. John O'Donohoe, City.

Sir,—In reply to your enquiry relative to certain remarks made by the Hon. Frank Smith at a public meeting at Dixie, I beg to say that the following is about as correct an account as can be furnished you:—"A meeting was called at Dixie, Peel County, in the interest of Mr. Fleming, the Liberal candidate, on the Saturday before the general election of 1882—Captain W. J. McMaster and myself representing Mr. Fleming, and Senator Smith representing Mr. Barber the Conservative candidate. Mr. Smith made an appeal to the Roman Catholics to support the Government candidate on the ground of Sir John Macdonald having appointed him (Mr. Smith) a member of the Government and you to the Senate, and thus manifesting the friendship of the Government for the Catholic people.

He dwelt very strongly on the eminent services you had rendered to your co-religionists and he declared it to be the duty of every Catholic regardless of party politics to support the Government that had so honored him and yourself.

I replied to Mr. Smith, and as an evidence of his insincerity in appealing to the Catholics to give the Government candidate support in return for his appointment to the Government and your elevation to the Senate, that he had previously boasted to me that when he left Toronto prior to the election of 1872 that he left $5,000 with his bookkeeper to help to defeat you, and that on his journey home at Niagara Falls he telegraphed instructions to his office on the day of polling that an additional $2,000 was to be spent from his office in defeating you. His reason for sending the telegram was that he had accounts that you were leading at the polls, and that more money was absolutely necessary to defeat you by bribing the unpollled electors. I said you were just as much an Irish Catholic in 1872 as you were in 1882, and it ill became him to make an appeal to the electors of his own faith to support you on religious grounds when he had ten years before spent his money in bribing and politically prostituting the electorate of East Toronto to defeat you, though you were then as much as ever a Catholic.

Mr. Smith got up in a state of great excitement and declared that he would have spent as much more to defeat you. The truth of the above statement, if denied by Mr. Smith, can be proven by scores of reliable witnesses who were present on that occasion."

HON. MR. SMITH—From whom is letter?

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—It is from Peter Ryan.

HON. MR. SMITH—Oh! it is!

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—Is it not true?

HON. MR. SMITH—I will answer the hon. gentleman by and by.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—An effort is made not only by some hon. gentlemen here but by the party press to make it appear that this is altogether a personal matter of mine; that I am fighting to put Mr. Smith out of his position in the Cabinet and put myself into it. That is the line that is taken. The true origin of this discussion is this: Long before 1871—long before this Catholic combination and association—I was active in working to obtain some measure of representation for Catholics. We succeeded in our province. We were as badly off in the province as we were in the Dominion; but by united effort and by making known in every part of Canada the condition of things, the general elections brought about a fair share of representation in the Provincial Legislature and the taking in of a Roman Catholic gentleman of distinguished abilities as a member of the Government of Ontario. That was the result of our labors. We desired to produce a like result here, and, as I explained on Friday last, when Sir John Macdonald, Sir David Macpherson and the Hon. Mr. Smith—when all three said "Here is representation for you! We give you representation," I considered it a fair recognition of our people. John O'Donohoe never asked them for a place in the Senate or out of the Senate directly or indirectly, and if he had known that the Hon. Mr. Smith had attempted to use his name for anything in that way, he should have at once repudiated the agency. I am here, and Sir John Macdonald is living. I defy him or any man else to say that in all my life I went to him or to his Government for a favor for John O'Donohoe! I may have written him letters as a public man in my position would do to the Premier, for other people, but for nothing in which I had any personal interest. My hon. friend renders it necessary for me to be very tedious to-night in winding up this debate, because he has stated to this honorable House, and he emphasized it with a blow of his hand; that he will call a meeting in the City of Toronto. Now, I want that to be a pledge given by him to this House! I will avail myself of that pledge, and I will gladly meet him there and do the talking there that I can dispense with before the hon. gentleman here to-night.

HON. MR. SMITH—I did not say I would call a meeting. I said a meeting might be called.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—You said you would call a meeting.

HON. MR. SMITH—No, I did not. I never called a meeting in Toronto in my life nor do I intend to. It is a very tedious business for this House to have to sit and listen to all this nonsense.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—I know you do not like it; anyone who does not like it is not constrained to stay and listen. It is perfectly free to anyone to leave if he thinks proper. I quote from the report of the hon. gentleman's remarks in the press:—

“Mr. Smith said he would call a meeting in Toronto and prove his statements.”

HON. MR. SMITH—I did not say that I would call a meeting.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—The hon. gentleman is so reported, and I hope he will call a meeting.

HON. MR. SMITH—You are the convenor of all the meetings—all the secret meetings—yourself.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—My hon. friend indulges in a little bit of gratuitous advice, that if I went into the Cabinet I would have to look for a constituency, a thing I could not get. My hon. friend is in the Cabinet, and he has no constituency. He does not see himself as others see him. He has no constituency, and I think I may truly say that he would have great difficulty in getting one in any part of Ontario, at all events under present circumstances. In reply to a question that I put to him on Friday the hon. gentleman said that I was not, in the first place qualified. He turned round rudely and said, “this man can make a good speech to an Irish crowd.” What does my hon. friend mean by that? Surely he knows that is not a proper way to address any member of this House! “This man can make a good speech to an Irish crowd!” What does he mean here by an Irish crowd? I have often addressed “an Irish crowd”: I hope I shall have the pleasure of doing it again, and I have no doubt the “Irish crowd” will appreciate the flattering manner in which they are referred to in the oratory of the hon. gentleman. He stated that it was not correct that he ever said that he had 80 Orangemen amongst his men. I got the report of the meeting in order to justify the truth of my statement.

HON. MR. SMITH—80 per cent. of Protestants is what I said.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—He is reported as saying that 80 per cent. of his men were Orangemen, and he had the greatest confidence in them acting in harmony with the interests of the public and the company.

HON. MR. SMITH—What paper is it in?

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—In the Toronto Mail.

HON. MR. SMITH—I say it is not true; if it is in the Mail it is at your dictation.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—It is your own dictation.

HON. MR. SMITH—I deny it.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—What I wonder at is that the hon. gentleman will sit and listen calmly to men honored by Her Majesty—the Premier and Sir David Macpherson—agreeing that the Irish Catholics should have a representative in the Cabinet, and then allow that pledge to be broken without protest. They write a letter to that effect; the letter is read by every man present and understood by everybody. They write to the Bishops of Ontario and say, “There is representation for you in the Cabinet; O'Donohoe will take those letters to you and explain the tempest that prevents that arrangement being carried out for the present; but let Mr. Smith take a position in the Cabinet, a nominal position until this tempest is over, and after that Smith will go out and you Catholics will have a representative in the Cabinet.” That is the arrangement which was made. That is the true arrangement. Yet hon. gentlemen sit still while the Premier of Canada repudiates that agreement, and say it is all right because he did it. That is a bad state of things. Supposing the Premier of England was found, after pledging his word of honor—without any writing at all—to be guilty of any perfidy of that kind, how would it be looked upon? How can any man of honor reconcile such conduct with propriety? It is impossible.

In a country of high morality a public man guilty of such conduct would be swept from power if for that and nothing more. What have men in such a position if not their word? If there be no honor, what? And here there has been none. Why, in all the long time since then, had not the hon. gentleman the courtesy to say, "O'Donohoe, something has occurred which renders it impossible to carry out the arrangement with you; but it will not do to leave the matter open, and you must go and explain it to the people to whom you delivered the letters. I gave you them in my difficulty in confidence; go and settle the matter." But he does nothing of the kind—all his letters are to the effect: "I will call a meeting," and all that sort of thing.

HON. MR. POWER—"To-morrow."

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—But my hon. friend from Toronto has a weak disposition. There is nothing that he has ever touched or had anything to say about, more or less, that he did not feel he was the champion of, or that he did it. "I did this. I did that." Is it the building of a church? "I was there at the foundation stone—I built that church." He tells Sir John Macdonald and Sir D. L. Macpherson, "I will run you through the country! I guarantee I will carry you back successful with fifteen majority." Why, he would set afloat the British navy and undertake to run it, such is his overweening vanity.

HON. MR. SMITH—It is the first time I ever heard I was vain.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—You could not see yourself.

HON. MR. SMITH—Or treacherous either.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—It was said that I stood on the platform and shook hands with Mackenzie Bowell. I did so. I was glad to do it. I came out strong with the party, and I know men before me who did the same thing in the hope of succeeding in softening the asperities between the different orders of our countrymen. O'Connell wore the orange ribbon in Dublin, but he found it was no use. Every leader in Ireland has tried to conciliate them and has found it is of no use. It is no use to-day. Any place—in Canada, out of Canada or anywhere in the world where Orangeism is planted their principles are opposition to Catholics. They have no other principle. Wherever they are that is their business and the enlightenment of free discussion never is before them. So it is we find that wherever one of us is spoken of the lodges meet, and immediately who ever has the power must be prevented from conferring any favor upon a Catholic. As to bringing up this matter before this House, why should it not be brought up here. If there is anything affecting a large portion of the people of Canada—one-sixth of the population of our province, where is there a more fitting place to bring it up than in a Chamber like this composed of leading men of all parties, of age and experience? I have no excuse to make for bringing it up. I am no more willing than the hon. gentleman from Kingston to occupy the time of the Senate very largely on a subject of this kind. I feel it myself embarrassing to deal with because I know whatever I feel personally about it that the feelings of those who listen must be anything but pleasant. I regret having to do it, but where a duty has to be performed I never shirk from performing it from fear or cowardice. My hon. friend from Kingston charged me with being guilty of some perversions of fact. He did not exactly point out the perversions of fact. If I am guilty of perversion of fact I do not know it. Whenever I stand before this hon. House, I mean to give them my honest judgment upon every subject with which I deal. I would not consider it deserving of the position I now occupy to do anything less than that. It seems to me that the proper course would be, when the papers that are now asked for are brought down, for this House to pass a resolution condemning conduct of this sort, no matter who would be affected by it. If we find when the papers are brought down that the case I have laid before the House cannot be contradicted, then I say that the Premier of a Government, who is guilty of such conduct deserves the condemnation of this House.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE.

HON. MR. SMITH—I should like to say a few words by way of reply.

HON. MR. POWER—I rise to a question of order. The rule of this House is that on a resolution a member speaks only once.

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B. C.)—He can explain.

HON. MR. POWER—I think it would be more becoming if a gentleman in the position of the hon. member from British Columbia should have less to say when those who are not friends of the Government have the floor.

HON. MR. ALMON—It is not the question before the House.

HON. MR. POWER—I have a right to say what I want to say on a point of order. The rule allows the mover of the resolution the reply. Every other member has but one speech. Mr. O'Donohue moved his resolution and made his speech. The leader of the Government in this House had a right to reply to it at the time and he availed himself of that right most liberally; and now at twenty five minutes to twelve he proposes to rise and make a second reply. I contend that under the rules of the House the hon. gentleman has no right to do so.

HON. MR. SMITH—I only rise to an explanation of the charges that have been brought against me.

HON. MR. POWER—A member has a right to explain his own statements: but has no right to make a second reply to what has been said by somebody else.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman has no right to make a second speech: but he has the right to explain his own speech or statements made by another member of the House.

HON. MR. SMITH—If the hon. gentleman wants to continue this discussion, on a future occasion, when the papers come down, perhaps I will keep it up a little too long for him. In the first place he charges me with opposing him in 1872 in Toronto. It is true I did then oppose him, and I opposed him for the reason that he got up a party by which on every occasion he tried to have the majority dragged in to follow him. I said I would not submit to that. He has charged me with acting treacherously: I will leave it to the public, wherever I am known, to say whether I ever acted treacherously with anybody in this country. He has acted so treacherously with me, that I would have nothing more to do with him.

HON. MR. POWER—I rise to a question of order. This is neither an explanation of what the hon. gentleman from Toronto said or what he (Mr. Smith) said himself.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman from Toronto has no right to make another speech, which he is doing now.

HON. MR. SMITH—If it is understood that I have the right to reply when the papers are brought down I will close the debate to-night: but I will take the opportunity of replying and will give the hon. gentleman the benefit of a little more than he has yet heard in connection with his character.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned at 11.40 P.M.

THE SENATE

Ottawa, Tuesday, May 18th, 1886.

THE SPEAKER took the Chair at three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills, reported from Standing Committees, were read the third time and passed:

Bill (48) "An Act to amend the Act to incorporate the Niagara Frontier Bridge Company." (Mr. Plumb.)

Bill (91) "An Act to incorporate the Yarmouth Steamship Company, Limited." (Mr. Power.)

Bill (75) "An Act to incorporate the Schools Savings Bank." (Mr. Girard.)

MINISTERS OF THE CROWN IN THE SENATE.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—Before the orders of the day are called, I desire to learn from the hon. the Minister whether it is the intention of the Government, during the present session, that the public business shall be carried on in the Senate without the presence of a responsible Minister of the Crown to take charge of it?

HON. MR. SMITH—If the hon. gentleman will make the inquiry in the proper manner he will get an answer in due course.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—It is not necessary to give notice of such a question.

HON. MR. SMITH—That is the only way the information can be obtained.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—Bourinot says, at page 321, that it is an established rule of parliamentary practice, and one which has long prevailed in Parliament, and is now established in the Senate and House of Commons, to put questions to Ministers of the Crown concerning any measure pending in Parliament or other public matter and receiving answers from persons so interrogated.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—The hon. member from Niagara will reply—he is the leader of the House.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Of course it is perfectly proper to put these questions: but there should be a notice given of them. It cannot be expected that any interrogations will be answered by the Government without proper notice of the inquiry. The hon. gentleman will see that there is no rule which applies to a question which demands an immediate answer. I refer the matter to His Honor the Speaker.

HON. MR. SCOTT—Certainly questions relating to the personnel of the Government are invariably answered at once. A question of this kind does not require notice. It is the first time I have heard the Government demand notice in order to answer so simple and straightforward a question. It is a simple question and ought to be answered forthwith I should think.

HON. MR. ALMON—The present leader of this House is laboring under sickness, from which we all hope he will soon recover. He still holds the portfolio of the Post Office, and therefore I think it would be very indelicate to make any permanent arrangement until we know what the result of his sickness will be.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I feel the great weight of the question put by the member from Toronto. I think it is important that some member of this body should have the responsibility thrown on him of being the leader of this House.

THE SPEAKER—I do not think the authority cited by the hon. member from Toronto quite bears out the case, because the authority does not show that such question can be put without notice. In fact all questions, under that authority, are put after notice. There is no reason why the general practice of the House, that notice should be given of questions, should not be followed here. There can be no doubt that in asking questions regarding the personnel of the Government, or respecting Ministerial changes, no notice is required. I think it would be quite proper to ask the Government whether they expect to have the Postmaster-General back again or not, without notice. And if the information is in the possession of any member of the House it should be given. But the question asked is one to which it is almost unreasonable to expect an answer without notice.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—Of course I expected if the hon. Minister was not prepared to answer my question he would say so, and that to-morrow or some other day he would give the information. That would be only reasonable. I think any member of this House is entitled to that.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—You had better give notice for to-morrow.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—No.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—The hon. gentleman must give regular notice.

THE SPEAKER—The Minister can accept it without further notice.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—I desire to know if the Minister does accept it. I wish to get an answer of some sort from the Minister.

HON. MR. SMITH—I am not prepared to give an answer to the hon. gentleman at present. I will make the inquiry.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The Minister should have the exact terms of the question which has been asked verbally. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman wants to create any embarrassment.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—I really am not putting this question to any one but the Minister; from him I want an answer and it is for him to say whether I will get an answer to the question or not. If he says no, then I will know what course to adopt. It is not necessary for any other gentleman to undertake to answer for the Government when he can do nothing more than state something which he knows nothing about.

THE SPEAKER—Perhaps it would be as well for the hon. gentleman to put a notice on the paper and save further trouble. The question is not one of the usual kind to be put without notice. I do not think the Minister could be expected to answer it without notice. I am not so sure whether a written notice is necessary, and the Minister might say he would answer the question without notice.

HON. MR. SMITH—I have already said that I would make the inquiry and give the information.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Be prepared to give an answer to-morrow.

HON. MR. SMITH—I will not say whether I will give an answer to-morrow or not.

EXPERIMENTAL FARM STATIONS BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. ALLAN moved the third reading of Bill (124) "An Act respecting experimental farm stations."

HON. MR. POWER—I now move the amendment of which I gave notice in committee:—

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be amended by adding thereto the following clause:—

"No person shall be appointed to take charge of any farm station, until he shall have satisfactorily passed an examination showing his competency to discharge the duties of the office; such examination to embrace such subjects and to be conducted under such regulations as may be made by the Governor in Council."

Honorable gentlemen will see that that is perfectly reasonable. It simply provides that there shall be such an examination as will guarantee that any one appointed to take charge of one of those farm stations shall be competent to discharge the duties of the position. The nature of the examinations and the regulations under which they are to take place shall be in the discretion of the Governor-in Council.

HON. MR. ALLAN—I am very sorry that I cannot accept my hon. friend's amendment. In the first place, I think it is objectionable in this way, that it takes for granted, as a matter of course almost, that the Government in making those appointments would appoint unfit or improper persons. As I stated last night, it is certainly a matter of the utmost importance for the Government, and for the Department in which this Bill originated, that these experimental farms should be a success. If they are not, the failure can only recoil on the Government. The hon. gentleman's motion is perfectly useless, because section five prescribes that the whole thing shall be under the direction of the Governor-in-Council. The qualifications of those people, any examinations they may have to pass or anything connected with their appointment, must all be done subject to regulations under the Governor-in-Council. Supposing this amendment became law, what would it amount to? If the Government were inclined to appoint incompetent persons who were not thoroughly qualified for the positions they were about to fill, they would only have to make the examinations so light and trifling that they could appoint anybody. If that is the danger this amendment is intended to meet, I respectfully submit that it does not meet it at all, because if the Government were inclined to do wrong and to put in those positions men who have no scientific acquirements or who are incompetent either by lack of education or training to deal with the matters coming under their supervision, this amendment would be inoperative. I think it is unnecessary and I feel called upon to oppose it.

HON. MR. ALMON—I feel very much inclined to support the amendment proposed by my hon. colleague. I grant the hon. member from Toronto that the thing would be entirely unnecessary while the present Government are in power. But dark days may come; the other party may get into power, and then the dreadful things which the member for Halifax has predicted will take place, and to guard for the future I will vote for the amendment.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER — The amendment moved by the senior member for Halifax is a very proper one. We are indebted to that gentleman for many valuable services he renders to this House and to the country. No member of this House shows more assiduity.

HON. MR. ALLAN—Hear, hear.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—The member for Toronto may laugh. He shows little self-respect in his ways and procedure. The hon. gentleman from York little values services rendered to the people. I say no member of this House shows more assiduity than the hon. member from Halifax. He is a practical man and will develop into one of the most valuable members of this House. The gentleman who has taken charge of this Bill appears to me to have been trained in that school of sophists during the old Grecian periods; his arguments breathe always of sophistry. Do they breathe of truth or are they the arguments of an honest man? I have a right to ask this. When members come to this Senate they do not come here to serve their own purposes, which is degrading—

HON, MR. ALLAN.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—I call the hon. gentleman to order.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I am not saying that the hon. gentleman does.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. member is clearly insinuating unparliamentary motives to the hon. member from Toronto. I do not know what to say to the House with regard to this persistent conduct. I think it is clear and evident to the House that something must be done to stop this system of defamation. If the House is to maintain its own self respect; if it is to occupy any position in the estimation of the country, surely one individual cannot be permitted to indulge in a systematic course of personal defamation against several members of this House. I am bound to say that on nearly every occasion when the hon. member from Woodstock rises to speak, he is seldom over one or two minutes on his feet before his remarks take the direction of personal defamation of three or four of the most respected members of this body. I submit to the House whether it can, consistently with its dignity and sense of justice, continue to allow the hon. gentleman to daily persist in such a course which I am unable to stop without the assistance of the House, a course tending to lower the Senate in the estimation of every right thinking man.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I had not the honor of hearing what the Speaker of the House has said.

THE SPEAKER—I have ruled the hon. gentleman out of order, and I leave him in the hands of the House.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I will put myself in order. I think the House will allow that I have had grave provocation—

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman has been ruled out of order. It is now for the Senate to decide whether they will allow the hon. gentleman to proceed or not.

HON. GENTLEMEN—No, no!

HON. MR. McINNES—Although I do not for one moment endorse the course pursued by the hon. gentleman from Woodstock in the personal remarks that he is in the habit of making, at the same time I think it is very unfair to make this a precedent.

THE SPEAKER—I cannot allow the hon. gentleman to criticize the ruling I have made from the Chair.

HON. MR. McINNES—I was not criticizing the ruling of the Speaker, but the action of the majority.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—In supporting this resolution I do not consider that I am reflecting on the honesty of the Government, or suggesting that they will appoint incompetent persons to discharge those duties; at the same time, I think it is a protection to the Government, as well as to the public, that such an amendment as this should be put in the Bill. It is simply that some investigation or examination should be had into the competency of the persons appointed to discharge this duty. I presume it will only apply to the directors of the farm. It is not asking that he shall be required to have a technical knowledge of all branches and all matters referred to in this clause, but that he shall have a general knowledge that shall fit him for the position. I am sure that in a matter of this kind in which we are staking so much money on an experiment the usefulness of which depends a great deal on the care and skill in the development of it, we ought to guard ourselves in the manner suggested. It is not unusual, in many branches of the service, to require examination as to competency of the applicant for the duties of the office to which he is to be appointed. It is necessary in the Civil Service, and in many other branches, where experts are required, that they should pass an examination. I am deeply interested in this experiment, and desire to see it a success and I think we ask nothing more than is reasonable by this amendment.

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B. C.)—The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat generally shows a great deal of discrimination in everything that is discussed in this House and I am surprised that he could see in this one of the bug-bears which the hon. gentleman from Halifax seems to find in every thing that the Government proposes to do—that every appointment they propose to make has something to do with the elections that are shortly to take place, and that they are going to appoint incompetent persons to office. It is a reflection on the Government, I think, after their going to this trouble to establish those experimental farm stations, to say that they will appoint incompetent men and put them in positions of responsibility. It is not reason or common sense to suppose that such will be the case, and I hope the House will vote down the amendment.

HON. MR. POWER—I wish to make a few remarks.

HON. MR. BOSTFORD—I think the hon. gentleman has already spoken.

HON. MR. POWER—I moved a substantive motion and I have a right to reply.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—Yes, but other hon. gentlemen are desirous of speaking.

THE SPEAKER—It is not a usual thing to prevent a gentleman who has moved an amendment of this kind from offering remarks in reply. An hon. gentleman has no right to speak in reply in moving an order of the day, much less on an amendment to an order of the day.

HON. MR. READ—I do not think the objection of the hon. gentleman would amount to anything, because the Government can take advantage of the amendment if it is carried, and can appoint just such persons as the Governor in Council may see fit, or can make an order-in-Council to suit the circumstances of the person they wish to appoint. The director of one of these farms is supposed to understand how to conduct researches and verify experiments, to test the relative value of different breeds of stock, their adaptability to the varying climatic or other conditions which prevail in the North-West: that is one subject. That is enough for any one man to be thoroughly conversant with. Then, he is to examine into the economic questions involved in the production of butter and cheese. Now I think that any man who is thoroughly versed in these experiments ought to possess as many qualifications as can be expected of him. Then he is supposed to know how to analyze fertilizers and to conduct experiments with them, in order to test their comparative value as applied to crops of different kinds; he has to test the merits of new and untried varieties of wheat or other cereals, of field crops, grasses and forage plants, fruits, vegetables, plants, trees, &c. Is not that enough for one man? One professor, if he filled that bill alone, would be sufficient; but here are ten different subjects provided for in this measure, any one of which, if he is fit to pass an examination on, would be sufficient. He has to conduct experiments in the planting of trees for timber and for shelter. He has to examine into the diseases to which cultivated plants and trees are subject, and also into the ravages of destructive insects, and to ascertain the most useful preventives and remedies to be used in each case. He has to investigate the diseases to which domestic animals are subject. If he is a thorough veterinary surgeon, I think it is quite sufficient qualification for that department, and so you go on with ten different subjects in this clause, and it is not possible that the director placed over one of those institutions can be expected to be thoroughly up in all those subjects.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—The amendment does not provide that he shall be.

HON. MR. READ—I do not suppose that the Government, in their wisdom, are bound to appoint anyone who knows none of them; and if the director is thoroughly qualified to test an experiment on one or two of those subjects it is all that can be asked of him. Consequently I do not think this amendment is desirable.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—The hon. gentleman from Belleville states that, even if the amendment of the hon. gentleman from Halifax passes, the Governor in Council, by an Order-in-Council, might still take their own course. It is in effect saying that the Government are not amenable to an Act of Parliament. The Government are, however, as amenable to an Act of Parliament as my hon. friend is; and their Order-in-Council can have no effect in changing, nor does it give them the privilege of doing anything contrary to an Act of Parliament any more than it would an individual. This is all I have to say, and it is with a view that my hon. friend shall not make that mistake again.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—As I cannot vote for the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from Halifax, I find it necessary that I should explain the reason why. It seems to me that a bill of this nature, if it is to be opposed at all, should be opposed upon some specific ground, and that we are not to raise objections to it simply because we anticipate that the Government will appoint incompetent individuals under it. Should they do so the blame will lie with themselves. The members of this House, who are considered usually as the Opposition, will have done their duty when they have warned the Government of the danger of appointing incompetent persons, and of the risk they run, in doing so, of destroying the usefulness of their bill. It appears to me that if we insist upon the capability of persons appointed under this Bill to stand examinations on these ten different subjects, it is asking too much.

HON. MR. POWER—The amendment does not provide for that at all.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—Then I misunderstood the hon. gentleman: but that I thought was the tenor of his observations last evening.

HON. MR. POWER—This is a different amendment altogether—an amendment made in consequence of the hon. gentleman's own suggestion.

HON. MR. WARK—We have had a bill laid before us this year, one which was introduced in the other House, which certainly establishes a precedent for the hon. gentleman's amendment. This is a Government measure, and it is a Government work that is to be undertaken under it. There can be no undertaking more important than that which is intended in the cause of agriculture. The Bill to which I have referred as containing a precedent for this legislation, relates to the establishment of a Department of Printing. Here is a provision of that Bill:—

“No person shall be appointed as superintendent of printing unless he has been at least five years experienced in the management of a publishing house in Canada, or in the management and superintendence of similar service for the Parliament or Government of Canada.”

And again :

“No person shall be appointed accountant unless he has a competent knowledge of keeping accounts and has had five years' experience in the measuring and auditing of printing and binding and so on.”

He also requires to have experience in purchasing stationery. Now, while a Bill of this nature, which is certainly a very important one, should lay down these requirements as being necessary before a man could be appointed, why my hon. friend's amendment should be objected to I cannot see. I think it is of the greatest importance that whoever is appointed to discharge those duties—there must be several officers appointed, and certain duties assigned to each—the public ought to know that he is competent before he is appointed.

HON. MR. DEVER—I do not wish to insinuate that the present Government would appoint a man to this office unless he is a fit and proper person; but after hearing the amendment read, I consider it is a very proper one. While I say that I do not think the Government would do anything wrong in the appointment of a director for this farm, I am aware that in the past gentlemen have been appointed to offices for which they were unfitted, and have been receiving large salaries from the people of this country for services they were incompetent to perform. Under such circumstances, I think there would be no harm in having a provision of this nature. There is no saying when another Government may come into power, and we should be most anxious to prevent a new Government from exercising discretion with which we would not care to trust them.

HON. MR. POWER—I wish to remove from the minds of members of this House the impression that my amendment is conceived in any spirit of hostility to the Bill or the Government. The Bill itself was not opposed by any gentleman in this House, except the member from Woodstock, and I do not hold myself responsible for the actions of the third party in this House. The Bill is before us as legislators, and it is our duty to try and make it as perfect as we can, and it is with that object that I move this amendment. I have understood from the hon. gentleman who introduced the Bill that the Minister of Agriculture is most anxious that those experimental farms may prove under his management a success. There is no doubt, then, that the wish of the Minister is that proper persons shall be appointed as superintendents of those farms, and I will show where the difficulty comes in. We all know how strong the pressure is upon Ministers for appointments of this sort. If the Minister is able to say to the applicant, when he has strong claims of another kind than fitness for the office, that he must pass an examination before he is eligible, does not that strengthen the hands of the Ministry and protect them against undue pressure? It is simply extending to this new office, which is about being created, the principles of the Civil Service Act, which now applies to nearly all the servants of the Government. If it is a fit and proper thing that men should not be appointed tide-waiters, or collectors, or surveyors, or inspectors of customs or inland revenue, unless they pass examinations, is it not also desirable that a man should not be appointed to so responsible an office as director of one of those farms without some satisfactory inquiry as to his competency for his duties? I think it is;

and I feel morally certain that if the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill consults the Minister of Agriculture he will find that gentleman perfectly willing to accept the amendment.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I accord to my hon. friend full credit for a sincere desire to amend this legislation; but I must confess I differ from his view of the necessity or desirability of adding this clause to the Bill—and for this reason, I do not think the hon. gentleman has looked far enough into it to see that he would require an impossibility. I should like to know where he is going to get his Board of Examiners? What board will be competent to examine candidates on these deep subjects, requiring knowledge such as not one man in ten thousand possesses? I contend that he could not get a board qualified to examine candidates for this position, if they are to be men of high attainments, standing at the very top of their profession. I think the simple fact that it is a Government measure, and the Government are interested in making it a success, would justify him in trusting them wholly to select persons who discharge their duties in such a manner as to show that this legislation is desirable.

The House divided on the amendment which was rejected on the following division:—

McMillan,

THE SPEAKER—The motion is now on the third reading of the Bill.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I beg to move in amendment that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of striking out the second section and substituting the following:

“The Governor in Council may establish, first, a farm station for the Province of Manitoba; second, one for the Province of British Columbia; and, third, one for the North-West Territories of Canada. Also, that the lines 26, 27, 28, 29, and 31 in the fourth clause be struck out.”

A large sum of money will be required for the establishing of those experimental farm stations, and the Government is not warranted in expending it in the older provinces, where the capabilities of the soil are so well known; it is not required, but so far as Manitoba and the North-West are concerned they are new countries and we have only an imperfect knowledge of the capabilities of the soil out there. The same remark applies to the province of British Columbia; and I think the large amount of money that would be required for the purpose of a central experimental farm station in the neighborhood of Ottawa and in the Maritime Provinces would be better expended in something of a more practical nature, and leave this experimental business in the hands of the provincial governments in the east.

HON. MR. O'DONOHOE—In seconding the motion I wish to say a little more than I stated on the second reading of the Bill. This amendment omits the older provinces for the establishment in the newer ones of a college of this kind. I believe the design is a good one; anything that establishes a school of this kind for experiment deserves the best attention of Parliament, and I am very strongly convinced that the work would be more effectually done by relegating it to the provinces. If the Central Government have made up their mind to appropriate a sum of money for such a purpose, in my judgment that sum of money, if given to the provinces with the direction that an equal amount or some other sum should be granted by the Provincial Government, and until that was done the province could not avail itself of the appropriation from the Dominion—if that were done, I am convinced the money thus given would lead the local authorities to interest themselves in the institution, and that it would be much more fruitful than it will be if any such amount is expended directly by the Dominion Government. There can be no sense in asking the Central Government to take charge of a provincial institution, but there is sense and judgment in appropriating a sum of money, a bounty as it were, to a province on condition that it shall come forward with some of its own resources, and take charge of the institution. It is for that reason, and not that I am opposed to the design, that I second this amendment. I sincerely think if the hon. members of this House, not caring by whom this Bill has been introduced or who designed it, but with a single purpose of making it fruitful, would make it an institution for the people of the provinces in which it is established, they would do more good. What sense can there be in managing an institution in Quebec, Prince Edward Island or the Maritime Provinces from here, particularly an institution of this nature? I am quite sure that there is no danger that an appropriation from the Central Government might be left idle and not be taken advantage of by the Province. I am quite certain that no time would be allowed to lapse until every Province would add to it such an amount as would be deemed sufficient to make the institution a popular one in the Province in which it was established. With the expression of this general view, which impresses me very strongly in favor of this being a Provincial rather than a Dominion institution, I have seconded the amendment and not for the purpose, in any way, of throwing a difficulty in the way of the general design.

HON. MR. READ—I certainly feel prepared to accept the Bill as it is. If there is anything that this Parliament should pay attention to it is the agricultural interest of this country. We find that the agricultural exports amounted to $45,- 624,380 last year, and any trifling sum expended by the country to encourage that pursuit or to teach the farmers, will be wisely appropriated. We are all being educated from day to day. Matters that we did not understand a few years ago have been brought to our notice and have become of great interest to the country. It is only a few years ago, since Confederation, that we began to make an article in this country of which we now export $8,000,000 or $9,000,000 worth annually—an agricultural product perfectly new to the country. We cannot suppose that there is nothing more to be learned—that we have got through with everything. If the Government deserve credit for any one thing more than another it is for encouraging the industry which is the foundation of our prosperity. But the hon. gentleman opposite says we should let the provincial Governments do these things. In the part of the country from which I come, about $700 is given every year for exhibitions, and that money is worse than wasted. The Government will, under this Bill, employ the most talented professors. There will be, not only the man at the head of the institution, but eight or ten professors at each experimental station. One man cannot conduct all the operations. The experiments in butter and cheese alone will be quite enough for any one man to undertake. I do not at all agree with those who would delegate this to the provinces. This government will be responsible for the expenditure of the money and there will be one central station somewhere near Ottawa, which will be advantageous to both Ontario and Quebec. The agricultural community do not get much of the public money. They pay the revenue, as a general thing, and get little in return. In my opinion, therefore, though there should be some waste of this appropriation, it is a step in the right direction and will accomplish a good object.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—The benefit of the present arrangement will be that the tests and experiments at one farm will be known to the other farms. It will be a great advantage to them to be able to compare notes as to the results of experiments in the different institutions. The hon. gentleman from Toronto said that if this money were given to the provinces the local authorities would at once establish such institutions. That shows the necessity for them. But in the Lower Provinces we feel that we have not got more than we ought to receive from the Dominion, and the money to be appropriated is for an important purpose, in which many interests are involved. Not only the farmers, but all classes, will be benefited by this measure, because when you improve the agricultural interest you strengthen the the foundation of our prosperity. Agriculture is the basis of all other industries. This is an important measure and has not been brought in any too soon. To confine these experiments to probably the one-fiftieth part of the whole population, would be an unwise thing and almost a waste of public money.

HON. MR. DEVER—I cannot vote for this amendment. There is very strong feeling abroad in the Lower Provinces that they are not fairly treated by the Upper Provinces, especially the new provinces in the west, which are receiving large appropriations that should be spent in the Lower Provinces. Prince Edward Island, it is well known, is a very extensive agricultural province. So also is New Brunswick, and I am sure Nova Scotia is one of the most fertile lands in Canada. If the hon. gentleman from British Columbia would be kind enough to extend his amendment so as to include those lower provinces—because we have vast tracts of excellent farming land there—it would be much better. Our farming interests are looked upon as very important, and I should be happy to vote for this amendment; but inasmuch as he is anxious to confine all the good things to the western part of the Dominion, I cannot support the motion.

HON. MR. GIRARD—As the name of my province has been included in the motion of the hon. member, and perhaps some advantage might be derived from the adoption of the amendment if it is agreed to by this House, I think it my duty to make some remarks. I am always ready to do for my province the best I can; but on this occasion I would be doing an injustice by asking for Manitoba and the North-West Territories what they are not yet entitled to. If it was a practical farm it would be quite a different thing; but these experimental farms, I understand, must be established as near as possible to the seat of government. So far as I can judge the provisions in the Bill are wise and proper. There is no law, however, so perfect that objections could not be raised to it; and perhaps in this instance there may be portions of the measure which could be improved. But on the whole I consider it a good law and one which will have an important influence on the agricultural interest of the country. It is right that the first institution to be established should be near the seat of Government. The first officer of the institution, it is well understood, will be the Minister of Agriculture. It will be under his administration. I do not feel any doubt on the subject of those who will be placed at the head of those institutions, because they will be selected under rules and regulations to be adopted from time to time by the Governor-in-Council. Every provision is made to assure the public that those who are to manage these farms will be competent men, who will be subject to the regulations of the Governor-in-Council. While I thank the hon. member from Toronto for the interest he appears to take in Manitoba, I shall nevertheless vote for the Bill as it stands, thinking that it would not be for the advantage of Manitoba that this amendment should be carried.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I would not have much objection to the amendment of the hon. member from British Columbia, if it had gone a little further. He proposes to change the Bill so that the Government may establish three farms in the west, and I do not see that a majority of this Dominion are so much interested in the west that the east should have nothing at all. I would be ready, nevertheless, to vote for the amendment if it were changed in the following way: I move in amendment to the amendment that the following words be inserted after the word "Canada" in the amendment—"Provided a subsidy be given to the other different provinces to help them in establishing such a farm under their control."

HON. MR. KAULBACH.

HON. MR. McINNES—I accept the amendment.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The amendment of the hon. member contemplates the appropriation of money, and in my opinion is not in order.

THE SPEAKER—The amendment is out of order.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I think so to; but the motion which I proposed to amend is also out of order, because the Government cannot create these three farms without expending money.

THE SPEAKER—That point was not raised.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—If the amendment is in order, then the amendment to the amendment must also be in order.

HON. MR. POWER—There is this to be said of the amendment of the hon. member for British Columbia—it proposes to reduce the charge on the country.

THE SPEAKER—I think the motion is out of order. It is an attempt to interfere with a money appropriation bill which this House has not the power to do. It has not the power to amend, alter or qualify in any respect the money clauses of the Bill.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—We can vote against the Bill.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (115) "An Act respecting the representation of the North-West Territory in the Parliament of Canada." (Mr. Plumb.)

Bill (86) "An Act to incorporate the North American Telegraph Company." (Mr. Sullivan.)

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill (8) "An Act respecting the Revised Statutes of Canada." He said: This is an Act respecting the revised statutes of Canada. As the preamble states, it has been found advisable to revise, classify and consolidate the general statutes of the country. The Bill is in line with that which brought into force the Consolidated Statutes, with such improvements as experience has suggested. There is a schedule attached to it which corrects certain matters requiring correction and to do it in the proper technical way by legislation.

HON. MR. POWER—I just wish to say that I hope the hon. gentleman will at the next stage be able to produce the roll marked A, referred to in the Bill as being the authorized version of the Consolidated Statutes, because there were a good many changes reported by the committee which sat last year, and it is not very clear by the Bill, without the roll, whether those amendments have been embodied in the Consolidated Statutes or not.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The roll, marked A, I believe is a draft volume, and I presume it can be produced. The roll is in the Clerk's office.

HON. MR. SCOTT—Will the hon. gentleman inform the House whether the Bill respecting the Revised Statutes which was before the Committee of the Senate last year, has undergone any change whatever since it left the hands of the Committee—whether any alterations or additions were made to it, because, if so, it would be most important that we should know what those alterations or additions were before we committed ourselves to it; otherwise we would be adopting legislation in the dark. I, for one, would think it most unsafe legislation that we should adopt acts of Parliament without knowing what they contained. If the proposed alterations and changes were submitted in the Bill, so that we could see what they were, of course we could deal with the subject intelligently, but at present it would be unfair to expect the House to take up two huge volumes and accept them on trust as the law. Alterations might be introduced without the knowledge of the House, and that would be extremely unfair.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The Acts which are amended are in the schedule attached to the Bill. There are three of them altogether, and they are the only amendments I believe. The others are consolidations, and the amendments are to correct certain matters requiring correction. They are the only amendments of which I am advised.

HON. MR. SCOTT—I may say I have been using the Consolidated Statutes in my office, because I found it more convenient in looking up the law to refer to them than to search over the statutes for a number of years. Having had occasion the other day to look into an important case with a view to giving an opinion, I referred to the Consolidated Statutes, as submitted by the Government, and I found there the law stated in a way that I thought was not warranted by the statutes passed the preceding three or four years. It was a very important point which, perhaps, I ought to mention to the House—at some future stage I may. I found, on examining the statute of 1879 and certain amendments made to that statute in 1883 and 1884, that they had put a construction on the amendments which I felt parliament had not intended. They had themselves assumed to alter the phraseology of the law in the amendments of 1883 and 1884, making a total difference in the statute, as I myself personally know, because the subject was debated in this House and I took part in the debate and I know what the intention was and what the effect of the statute law would be with the amendments. They arrive at the result in a very short way—they took the original law and the amendments made at different periods, and drew their own conclusions. I do not hesitate to say that the conclusions at which they arrived are erroneous.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—There is a

HON. MR. SCOTT.

clause in the Bill providing for cases such as the hon. gentleman mentions.

HON. MR. SCOTT—It could not reach the case, because I took the law as consolidated.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—But this clause provides for the very case which you mention.

HON. MR. SCOTT—It could not, because I have the law as consolidated. I at once said to myself, "my recollection of the changes made in that law since 1879 is different from that set forth here." I took the statute of 1879 and the amendments passed in 1883 and 1884 and compared them with the consolidation and found that the consolidators had drawn conclusions from those amendments that the language would not bear and contrary to the intention of Parliament.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—That is provided for here in a sub-section of clause eight which is as follows:—

2. But if upon any point the provisions of the said Revised Statutes are not in effect the same as those of the repealed Acts and parts of Acts for which they are substituted, then as respects all transactions, matters and things subsequent to the time when the said revised Statutes take effect, the provisions contained in them shall prevail, but as respects all transactions, matters and things anterior to the said time, the provisions of the said repealed Acts and parts of Acts shall prevail.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I have not the Bill before me, but I would ask the hon. gentleman who has it in charge whether it includes legislation of this session, or whether it is proposed to codify the whole law and make each statute perfect—if there is an amendment to the Act, whether it is intended in the consolidation to have that amendment included, or to have the legislation of this session added to the book?

HON. MR. PLUMB—It is provided that such parts of the legislation of this session as may be considered necessary shall be incorporated. With regard to the statement of my hon. friend from Ottawa, I suppose that if the Bill now passes the second reading and it is sent to the Committee, he will state what the variation is ; it can be then discussed and I will then endeavor to have some information on it. Of course the hon. gentleman knows I was not on the Committee and I cannot deal with a book of three or four thousand pages.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—The fact of this Bill having come from the hands of the present Minister of Justice, who was so able a judge while on the bench, is a guarantee to us, at all events in my humble judgment, that the Bill is prepared with the greatest possible care and I have no doubt will be found, in most of its details, applicable to the country. I believe that men of both parties have the greatest respect for the present Minister of Justice. I have great pleasure, as one frequently raising objections to Acts of the Government, to bear my humble testimony not only to the ability but to many other good qualities possessed by the present Minister of Justice. I do not think there ought to be the slightest opposition to the second reading of this Bill and I have no doubt that when the House goes into Committee of the Whole we can discuss all matters which can be improved.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill read the second time.

INSOLVENT BANKS AND TRADING CORPORATIONS BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. OGILVIE moved the second reading of Bill (15). "An Act further to amend 'An Act respecting Insolvent Banks, Insurance Companies, Loan Companies, Building Societies and Trading Corporations.'"

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I wish to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to one feature of the Bill. In the sub-section of the first section the company can be compelled by the liquidators to discharge such duties as they may be called upon to perform. Now that is an extreme power to put in the hands of the liquidators. These clerks and bookkeepers might want to obtain other situations to earn something to support their families, and if this clause should be allowed to become law they might lose such opportunities of bettering their condition.

HON. MR. VIDAL—The hon. gentleman is looking at the Bill as it was originally introduced. All those objectionable features have been struck out of it in the House of Commons.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I cannot see the necessity of this Bill. It seems an extraordinary power to give any shareholder to apply to a judge for the winding up of a bank or insurance company in which he may have a very small interest.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—No.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—It applies to any company incorporated under the Canada Joint Stock Companies Act of 1877. It seems to me that this clause gives a dangerous power to any stockholder in the company who may wish to ruin it. The company may be perfectly solvent and yet an application of this kind can be made to any court or judge. The company may be only temporarily under financial difficulties and if this power is given, any shareholder may ruin its prospects. There must be something behind all this which I cannot understand. Such legislation must have been prompted by some motive which to me is at present incomprehensible. A small shareholder could under the operation of this clause compel the company, in protection of its own interests, to buy him out—he could go to the company and say, "You must either pay me so much or I will apply to the court for a winding up order and ruin you." Unless my hon. friend could give some reason why this clause should be adopted I shall feel obliged to vote against the Bill.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I would be glad to give the reasons asked for by the hon. gentleman from Lunenburg as to why this Bill should pass. In the first place there is, at present, no machinery by which any of those joint stock companies can be wound up, even if they wished to do it. The Imperial Act 25 and 26 Victoria, chapter 29 provides for voluntary winding up as well as compulsory winding up. The Dominion Act, known as the Act respecting Insolvent Banks &c., only deals with compulsory proceedings and makes no provision such as that in the English Act for winding up the company by means of liquidators under the control of the Court. The hon. gentleman from Lunenburg stated that you might wind up any bank, or Insurance Company or any company of that kind. If he will look at section five he will see that the provisions of subsections two, three, and four of this section shall apply to all companies now incorporated or hereafter to be incorporated under the Canada Joint Stock Companies Act 1877, but shall not apply to any other companies or corporations, so that Railways, Insurance Companies, cotton companies banks or any other Companies having private charters this Act does not apply to at all. This Act has been in force in Great Britain since 1862, and they have found it to work very well—so well that they are highly pleased with it. In fact the tendency in England today—and I do not think we do very badly when we copy them—is to leave more and more of that kind of business in the hands of judges if possible. The English Act, which is only a few lines, provides that a Company under this Act may be wound up by the Court as hereinafter defined under the following circumstances: that is to say, whenever the company has passed special legislation requiring the company to be wound up by the court: secondly, whenever the company does not commence its business one year from its incorporation, or suspends its business for the space of a whole year: third, whenever the members are reduced in number to less than seven: fourth, whenever the company is unable to pay its debts: fifth, whenever the court is of opinion that it is just and equitable that the company should be wound up. This Bill is very much the same as the Act in force in Great Britain, and it is only after applying to and getting an order from the Superior Court, if the court considers the reasons for winding up the company are satisfactory, that it can be done. I know that a great many companies would not become insolvent if they were wound up in time. They are very like private individuals in business: they try to keep the business going too long, and consequently become insolvent and cannot pay their debts. The chances are, if when they find themselves getting into difficulties they are wound up in time they will not get into insolvency. Many of those colonization companies, and other companies at the present time, if they had machinery to wind up their business would do so. But they have not, and it is only a few years since I had to get a special bill passed to enable me to wind up a company myself. This is simply to enable shareholders who may be very roughly used by being obliged to pay calls on stock when the company is doing no good, and has been doing no good for years, to wind up the business. This is what the Bill intends to provide, and I cannot for the life of me see how it will injure anyone. The last clause, which is objected to, provides that clerks or employes in a company, if in arrears for their wages, should have three months salary by privilege over other creditors. I do think they have the right to that. Any company that is being wound up should pay their employes. We know that employes of companies, as well as employes of individuals, if they find their employers hard up, do not like to press for their wages, and allow it to run on sometimes for months: so that if they are six months in arrears it is not unjust to allow them a special privilege of three months arrears of salary.

HON. MR. SCOTT—I desire to call the attention of the House to what I think is the most extraordinary bill that has ever been presented, within my experience, to either branch of the Legislature. I happen to know something about it, for it may be in the recollection of hon. gentlemen that last session I took charge of a bill which consisted of the top line of this one, and the bottom line of it. I had charge of a bill, which proposed to amend the Act respecting Insolvent Banks, Building Societies, Insurance Companies, Loan Companies, and Trade Corporations. I had also the charge of the last clause, which provides that clerks and other employes of a company shall be collocated in the dividend sheet by special privilege, etc., for a limited period. That bill passed this Chamber and went down to the other House. It did not reach consideration there before the House rose, and it was so left over. It was introduced again this year, and I have the Bill as introduced in the House of Commons. In that it provided that claims of clerks and employes should be privileged to the extent of three months for arrears of wages, and where there was a contract in the future that two months of the coming period should also be paid to them. It made that Act retro-active to relieve the companies then being wound up. The House of Commons did not like that last clause, as I see by some observations of the Minister of Justice, and it was suggested that instead of the ordinary course being taken of putting the House into committee of the whole on the Bill, that it be referred back to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. It went to that committee and the committee struck out that portion of the clause relating to clerks and employes which gave them a privilege for two months of their future salary where it was under contract. The committee considered that if the employes get three months arrears of salary for past services it ought to be sufficient. In the committee a proposition was made to introduce clauses into the Bill, relating to an entirely different subject, and which may be regarded here as the gist of this Bill. That committee, of which Mr. Abbott was chairman, and which contains representative men of both sides of the House—Sir Richard Cartwright and other leading gentlemen—would not listen to the proposition at all. They thought it was highly improper, and would not even listen to it. So the Bill was re-printed, and as amended and reported by the Select Committee on Banking and Commerce, it still contained only two clauses, the first clause being reduced by the withdrawal of the privileged two months to clerks and employes under contract; but the Bill still retained that clause allowing it to be retro-active. When it was reported to the House of Commons we find that on a motion to adopt the amendments made by the Committee on Banking and Commerce the Minister of Justice discussed the clauses, and he considered that the last clause making it retro-active should be struck out, and that the Bill, with that clause removed from it, was unobjectionable. The measure then consisted of the title and the one clause relating to clerks and other employes, and giving them a special privilege over other creditors for three months arrears of salary. The third reading was then moved, and Mr. Mackintosh moved that the clauses we now see forming the second, third, fourth and fifth be re-inserted in the Bill. Not a single member of the House of Commons seems to have had his attention called to it. He made a speech in which he, as my hon. friend from Montreal has done, called attention to many points except the one actually in view; and not a word was said in reply, and the clauses were adopted and the Bill was read the third time and passed and came to this House. I venture to say that not ten gentlemen in the other House know that these clauses are in the Bill except from information they have since received. When I told Mr. Abbott, who was chairman of the Committee, that these clauses were in the Bill, he said it was not possible, and when I showed him the Bill he was surprised. I wrote a note over just now to ascertain whether the Minister of Justice was aware of it, and I have not yet received a reply. As the Minister of Justice discussed at great length the unimportant clause relating to clerks and employes, and did not refer to the others, I assume that his attention was not called to the proposition submitted to the House by Mr. Mackintosh, after the House had adopted the changes made in the Banking Committee. The Bill as reported to the House of Commons by the Banking Committee, consisted of the title, and this little clause of six lines. Now it comes to us with some important changes which strike at the very foundation of the Joint Stock Company's Act. If it is desirable to alter the Joint Stock Company's Act, let us do it in an open and above-board way that members of Parliament will have an intimation of what is intended to be done, and not introduce these changes into a Bill which has for its title "An Act further to amend the Act respecting Insolvent banks Insurance Companies, Loan Companies, Building Societies and Trading Corporations," and which in its very first clause provides.

Whenever the Court is of opinion that it is just and equitable that the Company should be wound up, it may make an order for that purpose upon application by petition on behalf of the Company, or by any shareholder of the Company, notwithstanding that such Company is not insolvent.

Here is a bill that professes to relate wholly to insolvent banks and insurance companies, and loan companies, building societies and trading corporations, and the moment you go into you find that it does not deal with insolvent companies, but with solvent companies. Sub-sections 3 and 4 provides:—

“3. When the application is made on behalf of a shareholder such application shall be made after notice to the company in the manner hereinbefore provided, and all the other provisions of this Act, so far as applicable, shall apply to the proceedings for winding up a company under this section:

“4. Whenever the affairs of a company have been completely wound up under this Act, the court may make an order that the company be dissolved from the date of such order, and the company shall be dissolved accordingly, and such order shall be forthwith reported by the liquidator to the Secretary of State for Canada.”

It gives a shareholder power, when he desires to get out of the company, to squeeze some of the larger shareholders by threatening to bear the stock on the market by making an application to wind up the company. Amongst gentlemen who are largely interested to the amount of millions of dollars all over the country in joint stock companies there is but one opinion on the subject, as far as I am able to gather. I hold in my hand a telegram received, since the Bill passed the House of Commons, by Mr. Abbott, from Sir George Stephen. It is as follows:—

“Edgar’s amendment to the Insolvent Joint Stock Companies’ Act”—(He supposed it was Mr. Edgar who introduced the amendments)—“to give power to any shareholder to apply to a judge for a winding-up order against any such company is most dangerous, and if allowed to pass may be used by any dissatisfied shareholder to utterly ruin a company when only suffering temporary financial difficulties.

(Signed), GEORGE STEPHEN.”

That is the opinion of a gentleman largely interested in joint stock companies. There are very few gentlemen in this Chamber who are not interested in joint stock companies. Those companies are organized under a statute which defines the powers of the majority and the rights of the minority; and the principle upon which that Act is based is that the majority should govern. We are now going to disturb the Act under which this class of companies are chartered and are now working satisfactorily. If any solvent companies desired to wind up there is ample provision under the law for doing so. We have passed laws for the winding up of insolvent banks, but it is a new feature in our legislation to pass a law enabling a dissatisfied shareholder to weaken a stock company by notifying the judge that he is going to apply for an order to wind up the company against the will of the majority of the shareholders. I move that the Bill be not now read the second time, but that it be read the second time this day six months.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—Before that motion is put I would like to say one or two words in explanation. I was speaking to the Minister of Justice about this Bill myself, and he certainly saw the Bill and read it carefully and after very careful consideration approved of it.

HON. MR. SCOTT—As it is now?

HON. MR. OGILVIE—As it stands now. The reasons that he gave were the same as I have given. It may be very well for the hon. gentleman from Ottawa to ridicule the Bill, but that Bill has not been introduced for any improper motive.

HON. MR. SCOTT—Oh! oh!

HON. MR. OGILVIE—The Bill originated with the Hon. Alex. Morris of Toronto, who wrote down to Ottawa and said it was a Bill that was much needed. There are many companies now in operation in which three or four of the directors who hold a majority of the stock, enjoy good salaries, and continue the business on that account when the majority of the stockholders desire to wind up the business, but they are not able to do anything. A bill was passed in England for the same purpose as this measure. There is very little danger of any one shareholder or any number of shareholders applying to a court for an order to wind up the company if they have not solid reasons for doing so; if they do it without reason they will be obliged to pay all the costs connected with the application, and if they injure or damage the company they are liable for all the damages that may be incurred, so that they will be very careful before applying for such an order. This law has worked very well in England for 24 years, and I believe it would work well here and prevent many companies from going into insolvency that are solvent to-day. The Bill, I believe is one of the most useful measures that has been brought before Parliament for many years. I do not think hon. gentlemen can possibly believe that amendments such as are in this Bill could be introduced into it in the House of Commons and be adopted there without the knowledge of the House, notwithstanding the statement of the hon. member from Ottawa, that he was satisfied there were not ten members who knew anything about it. If the Bill was passed by the House of Commons and sent up to this House, a branch of the Legislature of which our Reform friends are so apt to speak with contempt—if they passed this Bill it is certainly a great reflection on them for a member of this House to rise and say that the Bill is a ridiculous one, that it passed the Commons without being understood, and that it should never have been brought up in the House at all. I think it only requires hon. gentlemen to look into the matter a little and see how it works on the other side of the Atlantic to know that it can do no possible harm with all the restrictions and safe guards that are included in it.

HON. MR. SCOTT.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I claim for a moment the indulgence of the House, to explain the ground on which I must vote against the amendment brought forward by the member for Ottawa. I have the misfortune of hearing with difficulty any of the remarks of hon. gentlemen opposite because of my deafness. The Bill as introduced into the House of Commons was a simple one, to provide for the payment of clerks and other persons employed in any bank or Insurance Company, or any other company at the time of its insolvency; but we find that the House of Commons, as explained by the hon. gentleman from Montreal, have introduced another important clause into the measure; and I am inclined to agree with the hon. gentleman as to the wisdom of such a clause, but not worded as it now is—not to provide that one shareholder may apply to the court for an order. There would be no wisdom in one member being allowed to go to the court. I hope the House will allow the Bill to get its second reading so that we may consider carefully this clause and amend it to provide that ten or twelve stockholders,—such representing one quarter or one-half the capital—if they feel that the bank is sinking into insolvency from corrupt managers may have the power to apply for a winding up order. How many shareholders, and how many directors have been placed in that position, in Toronto and elsewhere, who knowing the bank was sinking and that such a bill as this was in existence, would go to court for an order and stop the President and Directors from bringing the institution on to insolvency. I think it is a wise bill and I hope the House will allow it to have its second reading. If this Bill had been passed 25 years ago several institutions that I know of, would have been saved from depraved and unprincipled men. How often have we found individuals like my hon. friend from Montreal, whose capital perhaps was imperilled, who if they could have applied to the court would have had the bank wound up, while there were enough assets to prevent the shareholders from losing the whole of their capital.

HON. MR. TURNER—While I am to some extent prejudiced against the Bill, I think it would be exceedingly bad taste to allow it to go by default, or by giving it the six months' hoist. The remarks of the hon. gentleman from Ottawa have staggered me a good deal, at the same time I do not feel myself at present qualified to vote for his motion until I have an opportunity of thoroughly understanding the measure. I therefore propose to vote for the second reading.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—The Bill, as introduced into the House of Commons, is a very different bill from the measure now before us. The first draft contains two provisions. The first is that employes of these companies shall be bound to stay with the company and give the benefit of their services in winding it up. The next clause provides that if they should happen to have more than three months' wages due to them that three months shall be privileged. One of those clauses was very properly taken out of the Bill, and what we have now is an objectionable provision taken from the English law—

HON. MR. POWER—Not at all.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—It is certainly a provision that should not receive the sanction of Parliament. If a man holding stock in a joint stock company feels aggrieved he can sell out—that is the shortest way to get out of it.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—There is plenty of stock that at times could not be sold except at a very great sacrifice.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I think it is too much power to place in the hands of one shareholder of a company if a company is not insolvent. It is not in the nature of things that an individual stockholder outside of the directors or manager could possibly have such information as would lead to the conclusion that the business of the company was beyond redemption. If the company is insolvent he could apply to the court under the Insolvent Act, and therefore that question is beyond any doubt; but if this power is placed in the hands of any shareholder to apply to the court for a winding up order for a solvent company, without calling any meeting of the shareholders, without asking the president or vice-president to explain the condition of the affairs of the company, you take the power out of the hands of the directors altogether, and one cranky shareholder would have the power to throw the business of the company into confusion. There is nothing in the world easier to destroy than the credit of a company. If you say their stock is worth nothing, or that they have been selling goods to persons in doubtful circumstances, you can destroy their credit altogether. I also object to the last clause of this Bill with regard to the employes of any joint stock company. Why is it that the employes leaves his wages in the hands of a company? There may be many reasons. He may be paid monthly or quarterly for instance, or he may be aware that the company is not very flush and he dislikes to draw his money. He has rent to pay and the landlord perhaps waits for his rent, as the grocer does for his pay for his groceries, and his shoemaker, tailor and others who supply him with the necessaries of life—all waiting, expecting from time to time that the company will soon be in better circumstances, and that they will be all able to get their money. The Insolvent Act provides that all servants must be paid, and it would be an extraordinary provision to say that not more than three months' wages should be privileged. Those two clauses, in my humble judgment, are sufficient to induce me to vote for the amendment of the hon. gentleman from Ottawa.

HON. MR. POWER—I feel a little difficultly as to how I should vote on this question. The first clause of the Bill is a most obnoxious one, and it appears to have got into the Bill by something almost akin to fraud. I heard something of this matter, and I inquired of a prominent member of the House of Commons, who is generally very observant of the proceedings of that House, as to what had taken place, and he was very much surprised when he heard that this clause had been added to the Bill. He said he had noticed that the member, of whom the hon. gentleman from Ottawa spoke, was saying something, but no one appeared to pay any attention to him and the House was not generally aware of what had been done. Anybody who has sat in the gallery of the House of Commons when that House is in committee, knows that it is not difficult for a clause to be slipped through unnoticed. I think the first clause is a most pernicious one. On the other hand I think the next clause is a good one. Now that our attention has been called to the objectionable nature of the first clause we might let the Bill go to committee, where it can be amended by striking out the first clause. I am perfectly satisfied that no English law makes such a provision as that contained in the first clause—that any shareholder of the company, whether the company is solvent or not, can apply to have that company wound up. That outrages one's sense of justice.

HON. MR. HOWLAN.

No doubt, under the English law, the company itself can apply to be wound up, but no shareholder can make an application which would have the effect of ruining the company.

HON. MR. ALLAN—My attention was called to this Bill by the hon. member from Ottawa, and subsequently I received a letter from the same gentleman to whom the hon. member from Montreal has alluded—the Hon. Mr. Morris—asking me to look over the Bill, and if I thought it was a right and proper one to give it my support, and in fact he stated that the provisions of the Bill were precisely the same as those of an English Bill on the same subject. I think he stated also that there was an Ontario Act to the same effect.

HON. MR. SCOTT—Are you speaking of the Bill as it now is ?

HON. MR. ALLAN—Yes ; so that like my hon. friend on my right, I am exceedingly puzzled to know how to act. I cannot conceive that a gentleman of Mr. Morris' standing would have written as he did unless there was some merit in the Bill. At the same time I can appreciate the danger pointed out by the hon. member from Ottawa—the Bill in its present state would appear to be an exceedingly dangerous one ; but I think I should prefer not to see the extreme course taken of giving it the six months' hoist. Now that the House is in full possession of the merits and demerits of the Bill, I think it would be better to let it go to the second reading.

HON. MR. SCOTT—The clauses dealing with the Joint Stock Companies Act deal with a subject matter that has always been under the control of the Government. Amendments to the Joint Stock Companies Act have always been introduced as Government measures. Therefore I think it would be only proper, in making an amendment to that Act, that it should be in a Bill to amend the Joint Stock Companies Act, and not one relating to an entirely different subject.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I have experienced very much the same difficulty that has been felt by the hon. member from Halifax and the hon. member from Toronto. I also received a letter from the Hon Mr. Morris stating that it was very desirable that this Bill should be passed. I quite agree with by hon. friend that legislation of this kind, affecting so important a statute as the Joint Stock Companies Act—that Act having been always in the hands of the Government—that such legislation as this should certainly be introduced by the Government. At the same time, while I do not wish to commit myself to the support of the Bill, I scarcely feel inclined to vote for the six months hoist. I think that the expression of the House will justify me in voting against the six months hoist and letting the Bill go to committee. I think we can make some further enquiry—examine into it a little further. As it strikes me now, it is certainly not a Bill which commends itself to my judgment. I am afraid that mischief will grow out of it if it is passed. It may be so amended, however, as to obviate those objections, but I do not like, under the circumstances, to vote for the six months hoist.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Is my hon. friend satisfied that the Hon. Mr. Morris saw this Bill as it now appears ?

HON. MR. PLUMB—He had reference to that particular subject. Of course the first bill was one that had not this sweeping clause in it at all. It only related to the payment of men. Mr. Morris referred to the principle embodied in this Bill, that anyone could apply for an order to wind up an institution, and it was left very much at the mercy of any single shareholder who might apply and get an order from a judge. Therefore I am satisfied that he understood it.

The Senate divided on the amendment, which was rejected by the following vote :

The Bill was read the second time.

HON. MR. OGILVIE moved that the Bill be referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

HON. MR. SCOTT—This is a public bill, and must be referred to a Committee of the whole House.

THE SPEAKER—It is a public bill, and should go to a Committee of the Whole, unless the House wishes to send it to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

HON. MR. POWER—I think the Bill ought as a matter of course to go to a Committee of the Whole some time ; but with respect to this Bill we might take the course which is usually adopted in the House of Commons. Let it go to the Committee on Banking and Commerce and be discussed there, and then when it is reported back to the House it can be referred to a Committee of the Whole here, if the report of the Committee is not satisfactory.

THE SPEAKER—With that understanding it could be done.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I doubt if you can take that course as to this Bill.

HON. MR. SCOTT—Yes, with the understanding that it goes to Committee of the Whole afterwards.

THE SPEAKER—I think when a public bill is sent to any of the standing committees it should be considered as having been referred to a special committee, and afterwards it can be referred to a committee of the whole House.

The motion was agreed to.

WORKS CONSTRUCTED OVER NAVIGABLE WATERS BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill (130) "An Act respecting certain works constructed in or over navigable waters." He said: This Bill is simply a consolidation of the existing laws in some four acts. There are some slight amendments, which are in italics. Probably the most important one is the fifth section which applies to bridges which have been built without legislative authority, but which now interfere with navigation. This Bill repeals the four Acts of which it is a consolidation.

HON. MR. POWER—I am not going to object to the second reading of the Bill on the technical ground that it has not been distributed in the form in which it has come from the House of Commons, although I might take that exception, because I have ascertained that in the House of Commons the objectionable features which the Bill presented when introduced have been removed, and that it has come to us in a comparatively harmless and unobjectionable form.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I do not know how it passed there, but it affects piers and wharves, and according to the form in which I have it before me, a person will not be able even to rebuild his wharf or pier without sending plans and specifications of the work to Ottawa.

HON. MR. POWER—That has been amended in the House of Commons.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

INTEREST IN BRITISH COLUMBIA BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B. C.) moved the second reading of Bill (22) "An Act respecting interest in British Columbia." He said: This is a short Act to establish a legal rate of interest in British Columbia when there is no contract made.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—It seems to me that we should have, as far as possible, uniformity in the rate of interest all over Canada. Money may be worth more in British Columbia than it is in the east: but this Bill says that a certain rate shall prevail, whether expressed or implied. I think it should say "unless stipulated in writing to the contrary it shall be 6 per cent. The Bill provides that a party getting a judgment in the Courts can still keep the terms of the original contract up to at least 12 per cent., if the original contract was 12 per cent., or a higher rate, it seems to me that when a judgment is recovered the party should not be able to charge more than 6 per cent.; because, to a certain extent, instead of being a liberal, generous creditor, the man who charges more is rather taking the opposite course, and I do not think that a man, who may have been unfortunate enough to have a judgment against him, should be compelled to pay 12 per cent. interest.

HON. MR. MACDONALD—It has been a very common thing to charge 18 and 20 per cent. on mortgages. When a judgment is obtained in Court, the rate recovered is 12 per cent. When the Bill was introduced the promoter had it 8 per cent., but it was changed to 6. I intend to move in Committee that the rate be restored to 8 per cent. In that country money is worth that much interest, and it is no hardship at all to pay it where there is no contract.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

NORTHERN AND NORTH-WESTERN JUNCTION RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. TURNER moved the second reading of Bill (65) "An Act respecting the Northern and North-Western Junction Railway Company." He said—

This Bill is merely asking for a year's extension of time for the commencement of this road. There was a good deal of trouble in the Committee of the other House with reference to the location of the line. That, I understand, has been fully settled between the City of Hamilton and the promoters of the Bill. There are a few amendments also with regard to the internal arrangements of the Company. The last clause protects the interests of municipalities that have granted bonuses.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

At six o'clock the Speaker left the chair.

AFTER RECESS.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills passed through Committee of the Whole without amendment and were read the third time and passed:—

Bill (101) "An Act in amendment of the Consolidated Inland Revenue Act, 1883, and the Act amending the same." (Mr. Plumb.)

Bill (126) "An Act to amend the law respecting Crown cases reserved." (Mr. Plumb.)

Bill (120) "An Act to make further provision respecting the administration of public lands of Canada in British Columbia." (Mr. Plumb.)

SALARIES OF JUDGES, SUPREME COURT, ONTARIO, BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (125) "An Act to amend the law relating to the salaries of certain Judges of the Supreme Court of Judicature for Ontario."

HON. MR. MACDONALD, from the Committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the third reading of the Bill.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I do not think my hon. friend has shown the necessity of appointing another judge.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I explained it on the second reading of the Bill. Section 3 of 48 Vic., Cap. 13, of Ontario, authorized the appointment of an additional judge for the Court of Chancery. An Act of this Parliament provided that he should be given a salary of $5,000. Nothing was done in regard to this matter for some time; but the judge has been appointed, and the section which has now been submitted to the Committee is simply the re-enactment of the provision for the salary in order to make it conform to the appointment by the Ontario Legislature. It was there before, but we now propose to have the salary follow the appointment.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

LAW OF EVIDENCE BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (P) "An Act to amend the law of evidence in certain cases."

In the Committee,

HON. MR. POWER—It may be remembered that when this Bill was at its second reading I said that I proposed when we went into Committee to strike out portions of the Bill allowing persons having conscientious objections to taking an oath to make affirmation, inasmuch as provision was made in the Criminal Law for the taking of the evidence of such persons. I move that the first and second clauses be struck out.

The motion was agreed to.

HON. MR. POWER moved the adoption of the third clause.

The motion was agreed to.

HON. MR. POWER moved that the fourth clause be struck out.

The motion was agreed to.

HON. MR. POWER moved that the preamble be amended by inserting after the word "evidence" the following: "So as to render easier the proof of Provincial Statutes in certain cases."

The motion was agreed to.

HON. MR. GIRARD, from the Committee, reported the Bill with the amendments, which were concurred in.

HON. MR. POWER—Inasmuch as, at this late stage of the Session, there is some danger that this Bill may not go through if it is delayed here, I move that the Bill be now read the third time.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned at 8.25 P.M.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Wednesday, May 19th, 1886.

The Speaker took the Chair at three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THE LEADERSHIP OF THE SENATE.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—I rise to say that I wish an answer to the question which I put yesterday; otherwise I shall have to give notice of motion.

HON. MR. SMITH—Kindly put the question again.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—Whether it is the intention of the Government to have in the Senate, leading in public business, a responsible Minister of the Crown in charge of it during the balance of the present Session.

HON. MR. SMITH—It is not the intention of the Government at present to make any change, as it is hoped by all that Sir Alexander's health will be so improved as to enable him to return to his seat that he has so long occupied. He is to-day very much better, and the doctors say that he will, no doubt, be able to take his position here again as well as he has been for many years past. The Government have invited several gentlemen to aid, for the time being, in carrying on the business that they are familiar with, and they have consented to do so. I, myself, have never been able to carry on that kind of business, and have never pretended to be, therefore, I have no delicacy in saying so.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—I am extremely glad that I have put the question, in order that we should have the satisfaction of hearing, what we are all glad to hear, that there is a prospect of the leader of this House being able to return to it again in good health.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY.

MOTIONS.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General, praying His Excellency to be pleased to cause to be laid before this House a copy of a letter from the Department of Justice, Penitentiaries Branch, addressed, on or about the 18th of June, 1883, to the Warden of St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, requesting that officer to draw the attention of the Deputy Warden of that institution to certain charges brought against the latter by L'Estandard newspaper, which accused him of having unduly interfered in the elections for the County of Laval in 1883; also, a copy of the reply of the said Deputy Warden; also, a copy of a second letter of the Department of Justice, Penitentiaries Branch, to the said Warden, on the subject of a new charge brought against the latter officer by the same newspaper, which complained that Deputy Warden Ouimet made use of convicts to carry on his correspondence and particularly to prepare the reply mentioned in the first place, and requiring the Warden to demand an explanation from his Deputy on this subject, with the reply of the Deputy Warden; also, copies of all other memoranda, documents, letters, &c., which may form part of the record, whether they be dated before or after the documents herein above mentioned.

HON. MR. SMITH—There is no objection to the address.

The motion was agreed to.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE moved,

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General, praying His Excellency to be pleased to cause to be laid before this House, copies of the evidence of Jean Baptiste Desormeau, Jos. E. Durocher, and Hector Demers, formerly employees at St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary; also, copies of the evidence of Felix Lesage, guard; Leander Mazuret, steward; Noel Beauparlant, Instructor of Shoemaking; Adolphe Lefebvre, messenger; George B. Lamarche, storekeeper, and Godfroi Laviolette, warden, who were called upon to give evidence in 1884, at the time of the enquiry into the management of the aforesaid penitentiary, made by Messrs. Moylan and Bail-largé, the Commissioners appointed for that purpose.

HON. MR. PLUMB—There is no objection to bringing down the papers.

The motion was agreed to.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY TROUBLE.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE enquired

Whether, in view of the urgent need there will be, in order to proceed with the Enquiry into the difficulties which exist in the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, of the documents asked for by the Addresses which he has moved for in the Senate, since the revolt which took place in that Penitentiary, the Government intends to hasten the preparation of returns to these Addresses, in order to lay them before Parliament before the prorogation thereof?

HON. MR. PLUMB—The Government is preparing those papers and will bring them down as soon as possible.

PARLIAMENTARY RETURNS.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE enquired

When will the returns to the Addresses moved for by him on the 30th April last and the 5th May inst., be laid before this House?

HON. MR. PLUMB—These papers are being prepared.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I beg leave to say that the answers to these two addresses are only short letters that can be prepared in half an hour's time. Those letters had been looked for and could not be found ; but were found a week ago last Friday.

HON. MR. PLUMB—There is no intention to delay, but the hon. gentleman must be aware that there is an immense amount of returns asked for by both Houses, and other motions and papers have precedence.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I would ask what would become of this matter if the papers were not brought down before prorogation? How could they be got at by parties who wished to have them if an enquiry is to take place?

HON. MR. SMITH—I will attend to it to-morrow and see that they are brought down as soon as possible.

THE SHORT LINE RAILWAY.

MOTION TO POSTPONE.

The motion having been called

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General ; praying that he will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House, copies of all contracts entered into for the construction of the Short Line Railway from Montreal to St. John and Halifax.

HON. MR. POWER said : I should like to have this postponed until to-morrow, and at the same time I would ask the Minister when he will lay on the table copies of documents respecting the rebellion losses claims? He promised to do so before this, I gathered from his remarks.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I do hope the hon. gentleman will go on with his motion to-morrow, and not postpone it again.

HON. MR. SMITH—The papers to which the hon. member refers have been brought down in the other House, and it will save the expense of going over the documents again if they are sent to the Printing Committee by that House. I expect by this time they are in the hands of the Minister in the House of Commons.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE.

HON. MR. POWER—With respect to the observation made by the hon. member from Woodstock I wish to say that I am not one of his followers, and consequently I do not wish to be lectured by him as to the course I should adopt.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION BILL

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill (106) "An Act to amend and consolidate as amended the statutory provisions respecting Chinese immigration." He said :—This Bill is in the main the Bill of last year. There are some slight amendments, and as these amendments are numerous, although not particularly important, I should like to have the Bill read now the second time, and any discussion which is to take place can be had in Committee.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I think the hon. gentleman ought to explain the object and details of the Bill. We have not had time to look into it, and it has always been customary for the leader of the House to make such explanations at the second reading of a Government bill. Now we have not heard one word on the subject from the hon. gentleman who has charge of this measure.

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B. C.)—Would the hon. gentleman prefer to have the discussion take place now, or in Committee? I think it would be better to postpone the discussion until the Bill is referred to Committee of the Whole.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I spoke to the hon. gentleman on the subject before the House opened, and I thought he was quite of that opinion himself.

HON. MR. MCINNES—May I ask the leader of the Government when he proposes to bring this Bill before the notice of the Committee of the Whole—to-morrow or the day after?

HON. MR. PLUMB—Whatever time will suit the convenience of hon. gentlemen.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Then say Friday next.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Yes.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill (94) "An Act to amend the Dominion Lands Act, 1883." He said—This Bill is one which I have no doubt will commend itself to all the members on both sides. It has not been criticized in the other House except in a favorable way. All the amendments, I believe, are in the interest of the settlement and of the settlers of the North-West. They relax some provisions of the Act which were strongly objected to in this House at the time they were adopted and they otherwise change the law, as experience has suggested. Of course, in legislating for a new country, where there are no precedents, where there are constantly new cases arising, there must be always need for changes as the settlement goes on, and I think it is true wisdom to make such amendments in the Dominion Lands Act as will best conduce to the comfort of the settlers and their interests, and at the same time best further the desire of the Government, that that country should be filled up as rapidly as possible with a contented people. I believe that the personal visit of the Minister of the Interior has been productive of very excellent results. His thorough knowledge of the country, through his searching inquiries and the spirit which he brought to those inquiries, will, I have no doubt, be productive of great good. I by no means admit that there has been cause for so much hostile criticism in regard to the administration of that country. We are none of us perfect. Except in the United States, where the rules which have governed settlement are far more stringent than they are in this country, there is no precedent for the Government filling up a country like our great North-West, nothing like it in the history of the colonization of countries—nothing like it in the history of the great Empire to which we belong. We are all proud of the progress that has been made—all happy to see, notwithstanding some difficulties have occurred, that peace and harmony now prevail everywhere, and that the fears which were expressed in some quarters that there was difficulty breeding among the unfortunate Indian population of that country, seem to have passed away. I believe that there is, at this moment, nothing but contentment among the Indian tribes. Unfortunate as they are, I believe they are well cared for, and treated as well as it is possible to treat people of their class. Unhappily they have been deprived of the game upon which they formerly subsisted, and that deprivation, and the necessity of remaining on certain reserves, has, to a large extent, interfered with the roving habit which has characterized the Red race. At the same time, every effort has been made to extend to them the benefits of agriculture and induce them to cultivate the soil, but thus far I fear with very little salutary effect. I am afraid that the temper and habits of those people do not lead them to take kindly to hard work. We must remember that our position is the result of evolution, of centuries of growth and civilization. We cannot judge of those unfortunate people by any rule which we take out of our own experience. They have led a savage life; it has been the life led by their ancestors far beyond the reach of history, and it would be strange, indeed, if they could lay aside their habits in one or two generations. It is only within two or three generations that they have come in contact with civilizing influences. All honor is due to the devoted missionaries who, from the first, have endeavored to bring these men under the subjection of law; to promote in them that religious feeling which lies at the bottom of all reverence for law and order. They have not worked in vain and my hon. friend the member from Manitoba (Mr. Girard) gave us a very touching account of the ministrations of those holy missionaries of Christ to the savages who, for reasons that might have seemed to us inscrutable, were in the wise purposes of God, brought under the influences of Christianity while they were confined in the prison of Regina.

I think I am right in making the statement, and it must be gratifying to all of us. This Bill is, of course, far-reaching in its effects, relating as it does to that class of the inhabitants of the North-West, and it is very important to us to deal with them in such a way that the safety of those who settle among them may be best insured. One thing in regard to them may be stated almost in an epigram; we must either feed them or fight them, and I think the cheapest way is to feed them and to kindly endeavor to bring them under such influences as may render any danger from insurrection, or a return to their savage habits improbable, if not impossible. These remarks, which I did not intend to make when I rose, have come into my mind whilst speaking on the subject. The amendments to the Bill are, I believe, all in the right direction. The Bill is a very long one. It contains about 30 or 40 clauses, but there are only two that are other than verbal amendments. I believe it would be best to take the opportunity of discussing them when the Bill is in Committee of the Whole in order to give time to the hon. members who wish to examine the Bill, which has only now been distributed.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I do not rise to make any prolonged remarks except as to our policy with regard to the Indians. I think the policy of our Government is a very good one. The policy in the United States at one time seems to have been to starve the Indians.

HON. MR. PLUMB—A policy of annihilation.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—General Sheridan's opinion was that the only good Indian was a dead Indian, and the policy which that expression indicated, cost the United States a large amount of money. I believe that the policy of extermination has cost the American Government hundreds of millions of dollars. I think our policy is a better one; it is the more humane and Christian policy. The extinction of the Indian race is certain; it is only a question of time. With the colonization of the country and contact with white population that extinction is going on very rapidly. I believe that by educating the Indians and making them feel that they are men—giving them as far as we can the rights of white men, and making them as far as possible self-sustaining, and, in time, giving them representation, is the only true policy and will tend in the end not only to benefit them, but from an economical point of view will be an advantage to the Dominion. It is this policy that the United States at last seems to have adopted.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—It is one of the rules of this House, and it is a rule of Parliament, that when an hon. member rises to address the House, those around him shall preserve order. The venerable gentleman before me (Mr. Botsford) is transgressing the rules of this House and I call him to order. The present Government of Sir John Macdonald keep of course to their old traditions, ways and methods of governing this country and of using the Senate of the Dominion as a mere consenting body to everything. There could be no more important Bill than the measure which I now have in my hands called the Dominion Lands Act. This is a bill that ought to pass under the enlightened criticism of the Senate—because we have always a great deal of time on our hands, particularly during the first two months of every session, and instead of coming to this House with a bill of this importance in the early part of the session, it comes to us within a week or ten days of prorogation. The Government keep strictly to their traditions and old ways and methods, so that the Senate of the Dominion shall render no service to the country, but that the Acts of Parliament that Sir John Macdonald may bring in shall go on, being as imperfect in the future as they have been in the past. With regard to the management of the North-West, I must claim the indulgence of the House to relate some facts, which I am authorized to do, as a large shareholder in the Permanent Building Society of Toronto. That society sent out an agent to Manitoba, and there invested a large amount of their funds in mortgages upon homesteads in southern Manitoba and in the North-West. The amount they loaned upon each homestead was not large. The settlers had ploughed perhaps thirty or forty, or fifty acres of land, and had built on each homestead a respectable building. But what have the Permanent Loan Society found? They have found that a large number of those settlers who went to southern Manitoba and other parts of the North-West and located there, and who had broken up thirty or forty acres of land and had gone to the expense of building houses, have deserted their lands and have gone over into Dakota; and the present position of the Loan society is that they hold the lands as security for the money loaned on these homesteads. What is the cause of all this? There must be something wrong in the management of the affairs of the North-West. This has occurred in a part of the country where there is the best of soil, and Senator Reesor, who is now at the head of the room, and whom we rejoice to see in his seat so restored in health, knows that part of the country, and that what I say cannot be denied. There must be something wrong in the governmental management of the North-West when we find industrious settlers who have gone in there and expended their labor for two or three years in breaking up land and building houses, after borrowing money from the Building Society, abandoning their homes, and crossing into Dakota.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—They are returning now.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—The Government never come to this House with such a Bill as this, until the end of the session, and until there is no time to give it proper consideration. We have not had a moment to look at this Bill. It has simply been read from the Speaker's Chair one day and we are called upon to hurry it through the House the next day. I ask hon. gentlemen if this is the way to conduct the affairs of Parliament? Do the Government desire to have the North-West governed in such an imperfect manner? Could there be a body of men from all parts of the Dominion better calculated to frame laws to make the settlement of the North-West such that everybody who goes there will find life to be a blessing? But we find industrious men going in there and through the mismanagement of the department of the Interior they have been compelled to leave their lands and go to Dakota. I have not had time to examine the Bill and cannot pronounce upon one clause or another of it. I protest against this system of the present Government. They seem to desire that the Senate, if possible, shall render no service to the country. Will they not listen to any advice offered them! Do they desire to destroy the Senate? Do they desire that the North-West shall be governed in such a way that our industrious settlers will not stay there but will leave it and send information to their friends that they cannot live there? I appeal again to the present First Minister, and I appeal to the House—there is no use in appealing to the hon. gentleman from Niagara. It is simply a farce appealing to him; but I appeal to the First Minister whom I remember to have been a responsible and an able man; but I am afraid his health has failed and he has got into such peculiar ways and methods that the country must suffer. Is this Senate to be regarded as a mere servile Chamber to ratify and register every absurd motion and ratify anything known to be wrong?

HON. MR. SCHULTZ—As I entered the Chamber just now, I heard the hon. gentleman from Woodstock remark that that the policy of the Government was driving settlers from Manitoba into Dakota. All I have to say is this, that I know, of my own knowledge, that for one man who has left Manitoba to settle in Dakota, twenty have come over from Dakota to settle in Manitoba.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Ask the officials of the Permanent Loan Society.

HON. MR. ALMON—Compound interest.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I suffer as a shareholder of that company.

HON. MR. VIDAL—The hon. gentleman has made the admission that he has been speaking upon a subject that he has not looked into and knows nothing about.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Childish! Always childish—and unscrupulous!

HON. MR. VIDAL—It is quite unnecessary to answer in detail the arguments which the hon. gentleman has advanced. If he had looked into the Bill he would have discovered at once that every change that is here made, and they are very few and simple, is in the interest of the North-West, to facilitate the settlement of that country, and to provide for the settlement of disputes and the general preservation of peace and good order in that country. While I have thus ventured to pass a remark on the hon. gentleman from Woodstock, I may say that the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill has really failed to explain the nature of it to the House. A large portion of the Bill, from the 10th section down to the 21st, has nothing whatever to do with the matter which he has spoken of; in fact I may say that the whole Bill has no natural or necessary connection with the Indian question, and while it is very interesting to hear about our Indians and the policy pursued towards them and to be pursued, still it has nothing to do with this Bill to suggest a discussion to the House that would unnecessarily occupy our attention. The Bill is a very simple one. The first half makes amendments for the settlement of claims and homestead interests, etc.; the latter part entirely relates to the surveys and qualifications of surveyors, and Board of Examiners, and matters of that kind. These clauses are drawn up with very great care, and I question if any hon. gentleman in the House will be disposed to find fault with any part of the Bill. If my hon. friend had looked at it he would have seen that at least in this instance he would have been constrained to say that this Government measure is a move in the right direction, and would be obliged to give it his support. I am quite sure that when the Bill is examined in committee the amendments which have been made will commend themselves to the favorable attention of every hon. member, and that when discussed it will pass this House without any amendment, and without any difficulty.

HON. MR. GIRARD—Being deeply interested in the passing of such a bill, I think it is my duty to add a few words to what has been said. I look at this Bill as being a good one. It will do much to settle the difficulties which now exist in reference to the Dominion Lands. I am sorry to have heard expressions from the hon. gentleman from Woodstock which are calculated to lead the public to believe that the Department of Dominion Lands is administered in such a way that settlers leave their homesteads to go to Dakota, or some other part of the United States. That statement is not correct. The hon. gentleman who is making such charges, if he had better information, would not make them, as they are calculated to do harm to the whole Dominion. Instead of leaving Manitoba or the North-West to go to the United States, we see people every day coming from Dakota, or Minnesota, or some other of the neighboring States, to settle in our North-West. That is a well known fact, and I state it without hesitation, because I am sure of what I say. The Bill provides a new system by which it will be more easy to administer the Dominion lands and to carry out the work which remains to be done. The measure is a good one. I must acknowledge the compliment paid by the promoter of the Bill to the missionaries in reference to the Indian Land Policy, but it does not exactly apply to this Bill. The second clause provides that the Governor in Council may appoint an officer who shall be styled the Commissioner of Dominion Lands, an officer who shall be styled the Inspector of Dominion Land Agencies and an officer who shall be styled the Superintendent of mines. These different officers shall have such duties as are assigned to them by the Governor in Council. The Governor in Council may also establish a Dominion Land Board to investigate and settle all disputed questions arising out of the duties imposed upon the Commissioner of Dominion Lands, the Inspector of Dominion Land Agencies and the Superintendent of mines, and all other matters connected with the administration of the Dominion Lands system in Manitoba and the North-West Territory. The Bill also provides for the appointment of certain parties who will have certain work assigned to them instead of the whole administration of the Public Lands remaining with the Minister of the Interior, and that administration will be under the control of the Board. I think that there will be certainly an advantage. It will be easier to have all the little difficulties in reference to land settled there, than to have all those matters brought here before the Minister of Interior to be disposed of. I do not see any difficulty about it. The only apprehension which occurs to my mind is the extraordinary expense which it will entail. It seems to me it will be an important addition to the public expenditure, and I am naturally disposed to favor economy. I try, as much as possible, to keep that in view, but at the same time I suppose the Government is the best judge of all that is necessary for the advancement and progress of the North-West and they feel that such a provision as this is necessary. I am quite ready to give the measure my full support. I think there should not be any serious opposition to it. I am glad to see such a bill introduced and I am sure its provisions will have the effect of putting an end to all the difficulties which exist in Manitoba and the North-West Territory.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—I consider it my duty to say a few words on this subject, especially in view of the reckless charges made by the hon. gentleman from Woodstock. It is a pretty generally acknowledged fact now that we are getting, at all events, as many emigrants from Dakota as we lose, if not more. It is putting it very mildly to say so. I believe myself that we are getting more emigrants from Dakota and the North-Western States, and have been all through, than we lose. This spring I have seen accounts of numbers of them coming in from the bordering States of Dakota and Montana and I am sure that most hon. gentlemen here are aware of the fact that a number of ranchmen have been applying to get ranches on our side of the line. All these facts show that the hon. gentleman from Woodstock was very far astray in making such a statement. I do not think it necessary for me to say anything more on the Bill. It meets with my approval. I do not see anything very serious in the measure. It is all in the direction I would have it myself. It is to facilitate matters, and as to the officers that are to be appointed, it might at first sight appear as creating unnecessary offices, but I have had some experience myself of matters in dispute in the North-West Territories, as well as in my own Province, which I have been entrusted to see after here, and I consider that the principal part of my work during the session has been to look after such cases in the Department of the Interior. Therefore, I think it is certainly a step in the right direction that there should be a Board of Commissioners there, who would be able to settle all those questions without bringing them down here. Many of those claimants are not in a position to come to Ottawa to settle claims, many of which relate to very small matters. They have to entrust their cases to other parties, and the only way they can have them attended to is through members here during the session. The best feature in this Bill is that these disputed questions are to be settled within the Territories.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—The hon. gentleman from Niagara, who undertakes to pilot Government business through this House; gave us a very brief and inadequate description of the contents of this Bill. I do not know whether that hon. gentleman had found it necessary to be prepared with a speech descriptive of Indian affairs in the North-West, and that, perhaps, the speech for the Indian affairs was delivered at the wrong time and place. Possibly that may be so; if it is so, it accounts for the introduction of Indian affairs into the explanation of the Bill, which, I believe, does not contain the word "Indian" at all.

HON. MR. McINNES—I have not been able to find it.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I acknowledge the corn.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—Be that as it may, I cannot help alluding to a statement made in a previous part of this afternoon's sitting relative to the probability of our former leader being able to resume his place in the Senate. I, for one, have always admired his readiness to adapt himself to circumstances that occurred in this House. During all the time I have occupied a seat in the Senate, I recollect but one occasion on which that hon. gentleman was at a loss, and on that occasion my hon. friend from Belleville came to his rescue. It was with reference to an expression in an Inland Revenue bill. He was at a loss to understand what "malt combings" meant, until the hon. member from Belleville (Mr. Read) explained it for him. I hope the Postmaster General will soon be able to resume his place in the House; not that I wish to depreciate the services of the hon. gentleman from Niagara, as long as they are rendered in their proper place. I certainly do not feel disposed to find fault with any of his shortcomings, but I do think that so important a clause as the second one of this Bill should have met with some mention from him. It seemed to me that a clause which appoints several new Government officers in the North-West—a Commissioner of Dominion Lands, Inspector of Dominion Lands Agencies, a Superintendent of Mines, and a Dominion Lands Board—should have been fully dealt with, describing the nature of the duties and the emoluments of these officers, and everything else pertaining to the subject. I observe, for instance, that the duties which those officers have to perform from time to time shall be assigned to them by the Governor in Council. The House should have been informed of the nature of those duties. The hon. gentleman stated very little indeed about some of the principal clauses which relate to the appointment and requirements of the land surveyors. I dare say that the Bill is a necessary one in many particulars. I think what has been stated by the Senators from the Province of Manitoba will have considerable weight with the House. It is quite likely that those appointments are necessary, and if they are well bestowed they may result in saving much time and a good deal of trouble. If things can be settled on the spot in the sections in which they arise, it will be a great improvement on having them bandied back and forward between there and Ottawa, causing heart-burnings and hope deferred in the minds of those interested. I think it will be necessary for the House to be exceedingly cautious in putting this Bill through committee in consequence of the very inadequate description which has been given of its contents.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE

HON. MR. PLUMB—I am very much obliged to my hon. friends who have discussed this Bill. They will probably remember that when I moved the second reading I said it was a Bill involving a good deal of detail, and that it would be convenient, perhaps, if it was agreeable to the Senate, that the clauses should be discussed in Committee.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—That was the former Bill.

HON. MR. PLUMB—No; I beg the gentleman's pardon, it was this Bill. I had no intention of omitting any necessary explanations. I can explain this Bill clause by clause, if it is thought necessary, now; but it will take considerable time. I am quite aware that I am amenable to the criticism which the hon. gentleman and other members have made in respect to my remarks about the Indians. I spoke entirely extempore, without previous thought, and it naturally occurred to me to couple remarks of that kind with anything which relates to the North-West. The whole of that vast country was the habitat of those wandering tribes of Indians who are now placed on reservations, and I hardly think it a matter for which I ought very seriously to be called to account, if I made some allusion to those unfortunate people. When we come to consider the Bill in Committee I shall be prepared to consider the Bill section by section; but I may say to the hon. gentleman that in another place no amendment was moved to this Bill. It was discussed in Committee and adopted without any change whatever, and the third reading was ordered without the slightest discussion. Therefore, the Bill having commended itself to the other House (though it is no precedent for us) I venture to say that that fact, of itself, is a sufficient guarantee that there is nothing in this Bill of a suspicious character, or which will elicit hostile criticism when it is brought up for discussion.

HON. MR. MCINNES (B. C.)—I do not rise for the purpose of opposing or approving of this Bill, for the very good reason that I have not had time to look over its provisions. I rise to ask the leader of the Government not to be in a hurry in referring this Bill to a Committee of the Whole. It is a very important measure and one which, I take it for granted, will deal with lands within the railway belt in British Columbia, something which has been neglected too long. I hope the hon. gentleman will not ask the House to resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on this Bill before next Monday or Tuesday.

HON. MR. SMITH—Friday will do.

HON. MR. POWER—Monday will be the Queen's Birthday.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I take it for granted the Bill is a good one, but still, in order to understand it thoroughly, I think it would be better to leave it until Monday.

HON. MR. PLUMB—There will be a very great pressure of business, as the hon. gentleman must know, from this time forward. The session is drawing rapidly to a close, and I do not think it would be just to hon. gentleman here, many of whom desire to leave at the end of the week for their homes, to postpone such an important Bill until next week. I would like to meet the wishes of the hon. gentleman, but I think I am within the judgment of the House when I say that it cannot be postponed later than Friday.

HON. MR. MCINNES—It is because of the importance of the Bill that I ask for time to give it mature consideration. It is a measure which we must approach carefully. If the session is nearing its close that is no reason why we should hurry this Bill through. Parliament has been sitting now for three months and we could have given the measure careful consideration if it had been submitted to us earlier in the session.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—The hon. gentleman should bear in mind that the longer the Bill is delayed the greater will be the hurry to pass it. Our business will be increasing instead of diminishing. I am sure one day's thought over the Bill ought to enable the hon. gentleman to prepare himself for the discussion of its clauses in committee.

HON. MR. REESOR—I am deeply interested in any measure affecting the North-West. I have taken a good deal of interest in the settlement of that country, in connection with many of my friends who have gone there to live, and I have had a good deal of correspondence for the last three or four years with parties residing there, and have a pretty fair idea as to what the difficulty is that causes such dissatisfaction to many people. It is a mixed difficulty. It is not all the fault of the Government; a good deal of it, I think, is owing to the mismanagement of the Department of the Interior, and a good deal to the peculiar character of the laws, regulations and restrictions in regard to the settlement of the lands. One great difficulty that has arisen in connection with what we may term the mismanagement of the Department has been the failure of the crops. For four years in the early settlement of the country, in 1878, 1879, 1880, and 1881, the crops were good. Since that time they have been very bad; and some people are inclined to throw all the blame on the Government. That is wrong. The failure of the crops simply has given rise to this, that they find it necessary to adopt a different course of farming—to rely more on stock and less on the production of wheat. Grain was the staple that they seemed to think would never fail. The wheat succeeded for three years in succession; but since that time it has failed in most parts of Manitoba, to a large extent. There are certain portions of the country which lie high—rolling land with light, warm soil, on which grain has ripened and produced a very good yield; but a very large percentage, I think I may say three fourths, has failed to ripen, and the result has been great loss to those who have to cultivate the land. I think, under these circumstances, the settlers certainly deserve our sympathy, and if any amendment can be made in the law by which their trouble will be mitigated to some extent, it is the duty of Parliament to look into it and make those amendments. For some few years we have been endeavoring to bring about a change in one respect. The government at one time offered lands to any one who would buy them at $1 per acre, ten cents payable at the time of purchase and the balance in ten years at 6 per cent. Purchasers were not required to make any settlement or improvement whatever on their lands. I think that was done in 1878 or 1879, and perhaps some lands were sold on such terms in 1880. Large tracts of land were taken up in that way and the settlers have been allowed to take the balance. Most of those speculators took care to have surveyors examine the country and see that they got first-class lands—the best lands according to reports of the Department of the Interior were selected. When settlers went in there it often happened that the member of a family who had taken up land could not remain on it. Though the family might have made large improvements, it was necessary that the individual who had entered the land should remain to carry out the settlement conditions—cast iron regulations that he should sleep so many nights upon his land and other conditions of a like character. The entries were duly made; stock, implements, etc. were taken in, and expenditures in some cases were made very much heavier than the result warranted, because of the failure of the crops. Now these people felt it was pretty hard, after having fulfilled all the obligations of residence, made large improvements and kept their lands under cultivation, that in taking out their patents instead of getting the land at $1 an acre, the price paid by the speculator, they should have to pay $2.50 per acre, and that cash down. All this would not have been felt to be so oppressive and disagreeable had it not been for the failure of the crops; but taken in connection with the losses sustained in that way, it did seem a gross hardship that the settlers, who were making valuable the lands of speculators and the remaining government lands, should be compelled to pay 150 per cent. more for their lots than speculators had to pay for the best lands in the same neighborhood. That, taken in connection with the failure of the crops, induced many of them to borrow as much money upon their land as they could obtain and then let it go. That was done in hundreds and hundreds of cases; there is no doubt about it at all. I notice that this Bill provides that the homesteader, having made one entry, shall not be allowed to make another.

Many of those men go out there very poor, and if they could be allowed to sell out their improvements and homestead lots in other parts of the territory, I do not think any harm would be done to the public. It is said that they would then be speculating. Now, if these poor men who go up there with their little capital and give their time and labor in hunting up and settling good lands, can succeed in putting them in such a shape as to induce a more wealthy class of farmers to go in and purchase them, they ought to be allowed to make what little profit they can in that way. In Ontario that principle was acted upon and it enabled the poorer class of settlers pretty soon to get good substantial homes of their own, and they still remain as citizens of their country and cultivate more land. There is plenty of land in that country for all. There seems to be a prejudice against that class of settlers. I suppose it is because they interfere a little with the speculator. The Government are willing that men who do nothing at all for the benefit of the country shall speculate; but if a man takes up land and settles upon it, he is regarded as a speculator; but he is a speculator who pays well for the little advantage he gets. He gives his time and makes improvements upon his lands which render them desirable to people accustomed to more comfortable circumstances and who are willing to pay more for improved lands. I think it is a mistake to declare, as this Bill does, that no man shall be allowed to homestead a second time. That was the law at one time, but it was modified by the Minister of the Interior in the last Bill that came here. I think it would be well to let homesteaders enter a second time. If you do not, there are a dozen ways by which a man may evade this provision in the Bill. You may declare that he shall not sell, but he can abandon his lot and the man in whose favor it is abandoned can go and make his entry for it. By this restriction you do not prevent such transactions, and you simply drive the first settler into Dakota. I think that is a mistake. Some regulation is required by which actual settlers, who have entered on homesteads and made improvements with the intention of occupying them, but who, through misfortune are prevented from completing their improvements, should not lose their lands and have them handed over to speculators who have thousands of acres of land and make no improvements at all : such a provision I think would render the Bill more acceptable. If the hon. gentleman, who represents the Government in this House, who I know is clear-headed and possessed of good judgment, will exercise that judgment in regard to this measure, I think he will conclude that there should be some amendment to the Bill such as I have indicated.

HON. MR. PLUMB—That can be better discussed in committee. I believe it is the general opinion of those conversant with affairs in the North-West, that a second homestead is not desirable—so I understand, although, for myself, I was surprised that it was not continued. As to the matters to which the hon. gentleman has referred, we can discuss them in committee, and any suggestions he makes will be treated with the greatest respect. I desire to say that I believe I am quite within the judgment and feeling of the House in expressing my delight to see the hon. gentleman back in his place in apparently greatly improved health and that we are glad to hear his voice once more in this Chamber.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

ST. GABRIEL LEVEE AND RAILWAY BILL.

AMENDMENTS OF THE RAILWAY COMMITTEE CONCURRED IN.

HON. MR. VIDAL moved that the House concur in the amendments made by the committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbors to Bill (116) "An Act to incorporate the St. Gabriel Levee and Railway Company." He said : Hon. gentlemen will find the amendments proposed by the Committee at pages 357 and 358 of our minutes. They are mostly slight verbal alterations, such as have been made in a number of bills, in order to bring them into uniformity. There are, however, two or three amendments which require, perhaps, more particular examination. The first is at page two, at the end of the second clause. You will observe that the Committee have added that "the plans and specifications of the said works shall be subject to the approval of the City Surveyor of the City of Montreal." Then you may pass on almost to the end of the Bill—in fact to the last page of the Bill—before there is any other amendment of importance. An addition is proposed to the 21st section, which I am sure will commend itself to hon. gentlemen, and that is that the provisions of the Consolidated Railway Act shall apply both to the railway and dyke, including effective drainage by sluices or otherwise, and crossings, such crossings to give perfect access to and from the River St. Lawrence. This was to guard the rights and to protect the property of private individuals. Then, at the end of the Bill, the Committee have adopted three clauses. The first, clause A, is to guard the interest of the City of Montreal so that none of the work performed by this Company shall at all interfere with or damage the city waterworks. The next, clause B, limits the time within which the company shall begin and construct the works, and provides that if the company fail to complete the works in time, it shall be lawful for the City of Montreal to carry on or cause to be carried on the said works. It was mentioned to the Committee that the City of Montreal would be really the principal proprietor of these works, but it was thought desirable to have this provision inserted so that the city itself should have the power, for its own protection, to carry on this work. The clause provides that this Act shall not create an exclusive privilege, or prevent the City of Montreal or the Government of Canada from executing any work required for the prevention of floods from the St. Lawrence. It is merely a precaution clause that the right of this company to build the railway shall not interfere with the right of the city or the Government to construct such works as may be considered necessary to prevent the city from being visited by disastrous floods such as we have had this season.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—Although this is a private bill, it is of a public character, and with the permission of the House, although I know it is somewhat irregular,

I would like to read part of a document which represents the views of the people of Longueuil, who were not represented before the committee. I do not intend to oppose any of the provisions of the Bill, but as it is a measure of a public character, and affects the interests of the people of Longueuil, I think it is desirable that I should quote part of this document. It is in French, but I will translate it as fairly as I can. It sets forth that "public opinion, based upon the opinion of specialists is in accord in declaring that a great proportion of the damage arising from the floods at Montreal, cannot be considered as being independent of the works of man and uncontrollable. Amongst other reasons there is the fact that the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal, and the corporation of Montreal, which is represented by the Harbor Commission, persist, in spite of remonstrances that have been made, in depositing the soil that is dredged from the harbor, beyond the Island, which has the effect of obstructing the bed of the river and holding the ice in the spring thereby causing the water to rise and create the inundation. The document then sets forth some local facts. For instance it has been ascertained that since the soil from the dredges has been deposited there, the water level has increased in height in front of the town of Longueuil, and inasmuch as the Harbor Commissioners are at the present time depositing earth and stone in the same place, the town of Longueuil has protested against it. I thought it was my duty to quote from this document, and to call the attention of the House to those facts. I have been told repeatedly by men who are familiar with the navigation of the St. Lawrence, that they consider this practice, to which the people of Longueuil refer, to be one of the main causes of the floods. I recollect very well that some ten years ago a pilot, who is a very clever man, told me this repeatedly, and he said, "Mark what I tell you; for the next ten or twelve or fifteen years, the floods in Montreal will increase ever year; I have not the slightest doubt that the way in which the harbor improvements are carried out will tend to increase the floods." I know that the work of the Harbor Commissioners is not entirely under the control of Parliament, still the money is provided by Parliament for the Harbor Commission to carry on this work, and the opinion which is given in this document as to the result of the way it is done, I may say, is the opinion of a great many people. As Parliament has, to a certain extent, something to do and something to say in the matter, I thought it was my duty to call attention to this question. Of course I am not a specialist on this subject and I do not express an opinion myself, but this seems to me to be a matter of such importance that it should be carefully investigated.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I can hardly tell what the hon. member from DeSabberry is trying to get at. He is talking about the deposits of earth from the dredges of the Harbor Commission on the Longueuil shore raising the floods in Montreal. That has about as much to do with the Bill before the House as a cotton factory would have to do with it. We have the opinion of a gentleman who is looked upon as being one of the ablest engineers on the continent, Mr. Walter Shanly, who says that this levee, if constructed, could not possibly raise the water on the south shore of the river one-sixteenth of an inch. I do not see how it would be possible to raise the water at all there, by this levee. The hon. gentleman refers to the Harbor Commission as if the money came from the Government to prosecute the works done by that Commission. I only wish it did come from the Government, because it would be a great relief to the merchants of Montreal. The only thing they asked money for was the improvement of Lake St. Peter. Whenever there is a matter connected with the Harbor Commission before the House, it will be time enough to talk about that body, but they have nothing whatever to do with this Bill. The corporation of Montreal, who were almost wild about it at first, seemed to be perfectly satisfied yesterday with the amendments made in committee. The gentlemen who were here representing private owners of land in the vicinity of this proposed work, and the Village of St. Gabriel, seemed to be satisfied also. I have had letters and telegrams from the Mayor of St. Gabriel, and have written to him and telegraphed him, so that he is satisfied also, and there are no other interests that I know of at the present time which can be possibly injured by this Bill. In fact I did not think the promoters of the Bill would have accepted as many amendments as they have. So far as the south shore is concerned, this Bill has nothing to do with it. So far as protecting Montreal is concerned it has nothing to do with it; that is a work that will have to come before us yet. If the portion of the city south of Lachine Canal is protected by this levee it will wake up the people of Montreal, and they will set to work to do something to protect the whole city without injuring the south shore at all. If the south shore people want to be protected they can take hold of the matter themselves the same as we shall have to do.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—This Bill may be of great advantage to some parts of the city of Montreal, because I believe that the shareholders in the company will make money by it. It will be a source of fortune to the gentlemen who compose the company, because no doubt they have purchased property between Lachine and Montreal, where they will have their summer residences, and the railway will always be patronized by those gentlemen going to and from their offices in the city. It will be to some people of Montreal a source of enjoyment, and to many others a source of revenue; but there are some other interests that the representatives of the people have to look at. It is all very well to state that Mr. Shanley said yesterday there was no danger; but these are merely words, and supposing damage should result from the building of this levee, it may then be denied that Mr. Shanley had every given such an opinion. It is only right that such a Bill as this should not go into operation before a thorough inquiry is made into the probable effects of it. It does not require the talent, the professional experience and the engineering skill of Mr. Shanley to decide whether a river such as the St. Lawrence will increase its height in the spring when the width of the canal is decreased. If a levee is built on the north shore, the waters of the river will not be able to spread in that direction in the spring as it does at present. For the last fortnight or three weeks the St. Lawrence, which in its normal condition is about three miles wide, was five miles in width. If a levee is built on the north shore, and the St. Lawrence is forced to keep within a limit of three miles in width where is the water to go? The surplus water will have to pass somewhere through the St. Lawrence, and if it cannot spread out on the north side it must inundate the south shore, and then Longueil will suffer. According to my view of the law I do not believe that in such a case the Government would be responsible for any damage which would result from this undertaking: then I contend it is only right, if Parliament wishes to take the responsibility of granting such a privilege, they ought to add a clause to the Bill by which the Government would be responsible for any damage which may be caused by the rising of the water in consequence of the construction of this levee. The hon. gentleman from Montreal knows better than any member in this House what happened a few years when the canal and levee were built at Beauharnois. What was the result? Old Canada was for 15 years appointing commissions to investigate damages, and every year appropriations were voted to compensate property owners in that county for the damages caused by the levee to the property along the river front.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—This is not the same thing at all.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—Not the same thing for this reason, that there will be greater damage done below by this levee than was done at Beauharnois: Beauharnois is at the head of the rapid, consequently properties below at Montreal are in a worse position, and common sense would show that an inundation would be more disastrous for the city of Montreal. Beauharnois was not inundated before the canal and levee were built. I defy the hon. gentleman to show that Beauharnois county was submerged before then. But Montreal being submerged before this levee is built, how much worse will it be after the levee is constructed? I have no objection to the construction of this levee, or to giving men a chance to make money fairly; but I have objections to allowing men to make money at the risk and to the injury of others.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—One word by way of explanation : in the first place the levee the hon. gentleman speaks of at the head of Beauharnois canal was a dam right across the river. This is a levee along the bank of the river. I feel certain that there is no danger of a work of that kind making the flood any worse. Then as to the money that the hon. gentleman thinks the Company are going to make out of it, I know that I would require to have a great deal of money lying idle before I would be willing to take stock in the enterprise.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—If the hon. gentleman from Montreal had listened to what I said he would have seen in what sense I thought it my duty to place before the House the claims of the town of Longueuil. The hon. gentleman suggests that all interests were represented before the Committee. He knows very well that Longueuil is a very important town, and that it was not represented before the Committee and I explained that I felt myself in a somewhat irregular position in bringing the document to the notice of the House—that it should have been brought before the Committee. But as the town of Longueuil has not been represented before the Committee, it is only fair that their objections to this measure should be laid before the House. I explained that I did not intend to oppose the Bill. The hon. gentleman does not see how this can have anything to do with the Bill. It seems to me that if it is not a matter of public interest ; and if the House does not consider it necessary to sacrifice private interests in order to protect the City of Montreal, this charter should not be granted. I was detained before the Supreme Court, and could not attend the Committee ; but had I been before the Committee I would have represented property owners, who will by this levee be shut off from the river. They have also property on the Island with which it will be very difficult to communicate, and these properties which owe their main value to the fact that they are on the river front, will be depreciated to the extent of from 25 to 50 per cent. in value.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—Do you refer to the north shore ?

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I am trying to explain why this matter is one of public interest. I said there was a great public and private interest involved in this matter. I have the highest respect for Mr. Shanley, but he is not the only competent engineer in the country. I have heard from other gentlemen who are very competent men, and who believe that the flood is due in a great measure to the fact that the Harbor Commissioners deposit the material dredged from the harbor in the smaller channels between the Island of Boucherville and the shore. If it is true, as stated in this protest, that the flood is due to a great extent to that fact, this matter should be inquired into.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—This Bill has nothing to do with that.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—It is very clear that it has a great deal to do with it, because we are adopting this Bill as being in some measure a preventive against the flood at Montreal. Notwithstanding this protest on behalf of the people of Longueuil, the Harbor Commissioners continue to deposit the soil from the harbor beyond the Island. I tell my hon. friend that he is entirely mistaken when he says that the Government has nothing to do with the expenditure of the Harbor Commission. If the hon. gentleman will examine the Public Accounts for the last 30 years he will see that large sums have been loaned to the Harbor Commission, the claim for which has been abandoned by the Government, and an additional sum loaned to them. The principal part of the work done in the harbor has been done with money furnished by the Government. My hon. friend is perfectly correct when he says that the harbor is not maintained by the Government ; but the money was borrowed from the Government, and borrowed under such circumstances that the work would not have been done if Parliament had not voted the money. Now my hon. friend fell into another error. He has probably forgotten the fact that the jurisdiction of the Harbor Commissioners extends down to Three Rivers. The hon. gentleman would be very much embarrassed, I think, if asked to state the limit of the jurisdiction of the harbor commission. In fact, the works in front of Montreal, below the city and in Lake St. Peter, are all under the control of the harbor commissioners of Montreal, and their acts, in all these places, are the acts of the harbor commission, so that what is done below Montreal and in front of Longueuil, and between the Island of Boucherville and the shore, is all supposed to be done in the harbor of Montreal.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—In the first place the hon. gentleman says he was sorry he was not there to represent certain parties who own large strips of land in front of the river. I can only tell him that there was one of the ablest lawyers in Montreal there to represent them, and he did his duty remarkably well. Then the hon. gentleman says they are cut off so that they cannot have communication to one side or the other. That is a mistake again, because provision is made for all the crossings. Then, as to the harbor commission, I was quite as well aware as the hon. member from DeSalaberry is that the works of the harbor commission extend down to Lake St. Peter, but that is a separate account altogether, though it is under their control. I was speaking of the Harbor Commissioners' works opposite the city of Montreal. That, and that alone, is all I referred to at the time, and for that alone I say the Government have never furnished them any money, and I repeat it. The Government gave them a guarantee for certain amounts of money that the interest would be paid. That is all, and they have paid the interest ever since, and the trade of Montreal pays it now. As to the Harbor Commissioners' dredging work, certainly the promoters of the Bill have nothing whatever to do with it, any more than the Legislature of Manitoba.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—Has the hon. gentleman any objection to letting the third reading of the Bill stand until to-morrow?

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I think we can pass it as well to-day as any other time.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—My hon. friend from Montreal misunderstood me. I do not pretend that those parties were not properly represented. I explained why I was not there, and why I am obliged to give some reasons now which I did not have an opportunity to give there.

HON. MR. POWER—I hope the hon. gentleman in charge of this Bill will let the third reading stand over until to-morrow. While I am not opposed to the passage of the Bill, I think it is a measure which is not really of a private character, although it comes to us as a private bill; the works proposed to be done by the persons incorporated under this Bill are works which ought to be undertaken by the Government, or by the corporation of the city of Montreal, and while I do not suppose the gentlemen who have applied for this act of incorporation are actuated by motives which are not quite right and proper, there are many interests, public and private, which will be affected by this legislation. I hope the hon. gentleman who represents the Government in this Chamber will take occasion to lay this question before his colleagues before the third reading of the Bill. I think it is really a matter to which the Government should give a little attention before the Bill finally passes.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—If this Bill is not passed, neither the Government nor the Corporation of the city of Montreal has any power to do the work.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I agree with what has been said by the hon. member from Halifax. When the Bill came up for the second reading, I opposed it on the ground which he has mentioned, and it is only the great modification which was made in it by the Committee, by which private rights of individuals are protected, that my hostility to the measure has, to a large extent, ceased. Yet, I confess I think a matter of such vital importance, not only to Montreal but to the surrounding country, is one which should scarcely be in the hands of a private Company. It should be taken hold of by the city of Montreal or by the Government.

The motion was agreed to, and the amendments were concurred in.

REPRESENTATION OF THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES
BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill (115) "An Act respecting the representation of the North-West Territories in the Parliament of Canada." He said: I feel a particular pleasure in moving the second reading of this Bill. I take a great interest in the representation of the North-West, and I believe I took the initiative in Parliament in asking if the Government would consider the claims of the North-West, from the special character of its population, to an early recognition by giving it representation in Parliament. I look back with great pride and satisfaction to the appeal I then made to the Government, and I am sure that at the earliest moment the Government has taken that question into consideration, and the result of it is the Bill which we have before us. I suppose it is well known to the House that no authority exists under the British North America Act, or any other statute, by which representation can be granted to the territories which are under the condition of the North-West. It could only be granted by erecting them into provinces and, as such, giving them representatives. It was necessary to pass the address which has now gone to Her Gracious Majesty, asking that the Imperial Parliament would authorize the measure which this Bill embraces. It is, therefore, provided in this Bill that it shall not come into force until it is proclaimed by the Governor in Council. That is intended to provide that if permission is received prior to the meeting of another Parliament, or whenever that permission is received, this measure will be on the statute book, ready to be adopted and go into operation. The Bill provides that the districts of Saskatchewan and Alberta shall each be an electoral district and each return a member to the House of Commons. It also provides that Assiniboia shall be divided into two electoral districts, each to return one member. It then describes the limits of these east and west districts, and then a very important clause, the 4th, follows:—

Every person qualified to vote at the election of a member under this Act shall be a bona fide male resident and householder, of adult age, who is not an alien or an Indian, within the electoral district for at least twelve months immediately preceding the issue of the writ of election.

HON. MR. POWER—No Indian suffrage.

HON. MR. PLUMB—My hon. friend will see by this clause that those who claimed when the Franchise Bill was under discussion that there was to be Indian suffrage and that Strike-him-on-the-back and other Indians were to be enfranchised, were stating what was incorrect. Clause 5 provides for the issue of the writs; clause 7 shows the form of the writs; clause 8 specifies those who may not be appointed deputy returning officers, election clerks or poll clerks, and clause 9 the persons who shall not be obliged to act in any such capacity. The following sections, from the 10th to the 18th, relate to the holding of elections, and I may say that those provisions are taken from the Election Act. The provisions of the General Election Act are incorporated in this Bill, as far as they can be made applicable to the North-West. There is a provision of some importance in section 28, which is necessary on account of the sparse population. It authorizes the Governor-General to appoint enumerators to make a list of the electors in the several districts. In a country without municipal organizations I cannot conceive any other way in which those lists can be made up. The object is to give representation as soon as possible, and in as fair a way as it can be done. The following clauses, up to the 66th, have reference to the manner in which nominations shall be made, etc. The 66th clause provides that, in view of the remoteness of certain portions of the North-West Territories, the allowance for fees and disbursements provided by section 126 of the Dominion Elections Act need not apply, but the Governor-in-Council may make a tariff of fees, a copy of which is to be laid before the House of Commons at its next Session. The 67th clause provides that the sections of the Dominion Elections Act, with regard to the preservation of peace and good order and the prevention of corrupt acts, shall apply to the North-West Territories. The last clause provides that the Act shall come into force from and after such day as the Governor-General by proclamation may direct. That is necessary, because permission must be obtained from the Imperial parliament before this Bill can go into operation.

HON. MR. McCLELAN—Will the hon. gentleman explain why the usual system of taking votes by ballot is departed from?

HON. MR. PLUMB—I am unable to explain.

HON. MR. TURNER—The reason is the North-West Council adopt the plan of open voting and it was thought better to continue it until the North-West Council decide to make a change, when, no doubt, the ballot will be introduced. I quite agree with my hon. friend from Niagara that the Bill itself is not only very desirable, but that it is one which will give a great deal of satisfaction. The only point is, I think, that it does not go quite far enough. The representation should have been increased by one and I should like also that some representatives should be appointed to the Senate. The reason why I particularly wish an increase in the representation is on account of the peculiar circumstances of one of the territories! I refer to Alberta. I have already stated, on a former occasion, that that particular territory was peculiarly constituted with regard to interests. Now, the basis of this Bill is certainly not population, but the interests to be conserved by the parties who represent the particular districts. It is more the localities that are represented than population. Alberta, as I said before, is peculiarly situated and ought to be divided into two ridings, north and south. The interests of the two are entirely different. The south, having the largest population, will probably send the representative. I think the south should have a representative, because he would be the only representative of our ranching district. So under this Bill the north will be left pretty much out in the cold. Athabaska is not represented, and Edmonton is the key to Athabaska. The consequence is that a very large territory would be left without representation. Most of us think the Pacific Railway has opened up the North-West. It has done nothing of the kind. It has opened only a portion of it. The Peace River and Athabaska river districts, and all through Athabaska northwards is a larger and more fertile territory than we know of now. Then, again, there is a very valuable territory in Alberta. It is the Red Deer River and Lake district, which is perhaps the finest part of the whole North-West. I have been for a long time acting for the Saskatchewan and North Alberta territories, and under the circumstance that we are not at present to have a representative from there, I would be quite willing to continue to act for them and let it be understood that they might command me. Unfortunately, I know nothing of the country south of the railway. And I think if some other party, who was equally well acquainted with the south as I am with the north, would take a similar position, that possibly, with the members in the House of Commons when they come down from those districts, we might get along fairly well. I regret that there is no member to be appointed to the Senate, because we want his impressions; we want him to be a man who is known up there. What I would suggest is, if the junior member from Montreal would take the same position with regard to looking after the interests of the North-West south of the railway that I assume for the north, that we could get along without a representative in the Senate for a time, but the sooner we have a representative from that country in the Senate the better. I entirely approve of the Bill as far as it goes.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—No doubt representation in the Senate will come very shortly, but I think it is necessary in the first place to get representation for that country in the House of Commons. I am not capable of saying much on this Bill at present, but I think it is not going far enough in representation. It seems to me that we should have every bona fide settler, every man who goes into that country to make it his home, and who is living there for six months, or a year, a voter. The 4th clause restricts the franchise too much. It provides that a voter must be a male resident and a householder. Now, it seems to me that a man may be a resident and have a larger amount at stake in the country than a householder. He may have cultivated his land and made improvements, and yet not be a householder. He may be residing with somebody else, and yet under this clause he would not have a vote. The householder may be simply a tenant or person having little interest in the country, yet a man who may have a larger interest there, who may be doing a great deal towards improving the country, has got no vote. I think the Bill might have been extended so as to enable every bona fide settler in that country, who has made improvements there and helped to develop its resources, a voter.

HON. MR. GIRARD—As the promoter of the Bill has just said, I accept with pleasure the first concession of rights to the people of the North-West. I think that such a measure was wanted very much, and I am glad to see that the Government have decided to make some provision in favor of that population. Very likely the Bill will have to be amended before long, but it will give that distant part of the Dominion an opportunity to make its wants known. We are told, and perhaps with some reason, that if the North-West had been represented in one way or another when the trouble of last year took place, very likely we could have arrived at a better understanding by the explanations which would have been given at the time by such representatives. I think before long, under this Bill, everything will be arranged in such a way that that vast territory, which before long will very likely be the most productive portion of the Dominion, will be represented, if not in this House, at least in the House of Commons. As the hon. gentleman from Hamilton has remarked, I think it would have been very desirable if a representative could be at once appointed from that part of the Dominion to this hon. House. I do not understand why no provision has been made in that direction. When Manitoba entered the confederation in 1871, the province was given four representatives in the House of Commons and two in the Senate, and, thank God, we who were first appointed yet occupy our positions here. At that time Manitoba had a population of only 12,000. We were not entitled to such representation; we have been told so many times since. It may be that we were not entitled by our position or population to such representation in the House of Commons and the Senate. It is not only the population that has a right to be represented but the lands. We came into the Dominion with a large amount of wealth as represented by our lands and we have a right to representation which, if out of proportion to the population was, certainly not disproportionate to the amount of lands we possessed at that time. I think the Territories are entitled to more representatives than are provided for by this Bill. The population is more than double what it was in Manitoba when we entered into the Confederation. Under these circumstances, I would look upon it as being only equitable if the number of representatives of these territories had been larger because the population represents so many different nationalities and interest. I should like to make a few remarks on the provision that is made in the fourth clause as to the qualification for electors. It provides that every person qualified to vote at the election of a member under this Act shall be a bona fide male resident and householder of adult age who is not an alien or an Indian, and who has resided in the Electoral District for at least twelve months immediately preceding the election. I think it is right to exclude the Indians from voting as yet; at the same time I hope that before long some provision will be made for their representation and to give them the right of exercising the franchise. As long as they are wards of the Dominion perhaps it would not be right to allow them to vote. I think also that the required residence of twelve months for householders might be reduced. Five months' residence immediately preceding the election should give any householder in the Territories a vote. I see that the Bill provides that the vote shall be open and not by ballot. I approve of that system in this case. In Manitoba where we were better prepared to understand and to carry on elections we at first introduced the system of vote by ballot, but it was found to be a cause, of so much trouble and such confusion that we struck out from our Statute the vote by ballot, and introduced the open vote; and I think for country places throughout the Dominion the open vote can be put into operation more easily and quite as effectively as the vote by ballot. In country places there is no fear of trouble, and there is no disinclination on the part of anyone to come forward and register his vote openly for the candidate he supports. In the North-West Territories I think it would be difficult to introduce any other system of voting. I see by the eighteenth clause that no nomination paper shall be valid and acted upon by the returning officer unless it is accompanied by a deposit of $200. Money is not as plentiful in the North-West Territories as it is in the older Provinces of the Dominion, and to require a deposit of $200 with a nomination paper is certainly exacting too much. It might be better that a certain amount should be deposited by the candidate as a guarantee that his candidature is a bona fide one. We know how elections are conducted sometimes. A man has good reason to believe that he will be sustained by a majority of the people; after a time he finds that public confidence in him is withdrawn, perhaps without reason, and he would under this Bill lose his deposit. Two hundred dollars is a considerable sum to a candidate in a country like that, and I think it is too large a deposit to exact from a candidate under the circumstances. What was considered to be a good system for Manitoba twelve years ago should be a good system for the North-West Territories now entering upon their political existence. In Manitoba the candidate was required to deposit $25, and that sum was devoted towards defraying the expenses of the election. There is another principle in the Bill which I cannot admit as being a good one—that is, the abuse that arises from time to time in elections, of fictitious votes by personation and other ways. This Bill provides a fine not exceeding $600, and imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months for such an offence. I think the penalty is too great, and that a fine not exceeding $100, or imprisonment not exceeding six months would be quite sufficient punishment for any person found guilty of personation. The Bill will naturally be improved in the future, and I accept it as a measure that will produce great reforms and much benefit in the North-West Territories.

HON. MR. POWER—The general principle that there should be representation for the North-West Territories in Parliament was conceded by this House when we adopted the Address to Her Majesty to which the introducer of this Bill has already referred. It is not necessary that I should say anything about the 4th clause of this Bill. It has been referred to already and the objections to it have been pointed out by the hon. gentleman from Lunenburg, and by my hon. friend from St. Boniface. I quite concur in the opinion that it is not fair to limit the vote to householders. Where the number of electors is so small, and where we are giving four representatives to 48,000 people, the greater proportion of whom are Indians, the number of voters must be limited; and it is to be regretted that the Government have thought it necessary to limit it still further by restricting the vote to householders. It is also to be regretted that they have limited the qualification to twelve month's residence. A man who goes up from the old provinces to the North-West Territories and becomes a householder there should be allowed to vote if he has been resident there for six months immediately preceding the election. I think the better way would have been to have allowed every bona fide male resident of twenty-one years of age or over, who had been there six months, to vote, and even then the vote would be small enough. Another thing that this fourth clause suggests is that the Government, since last year, appear to have lost all their affection for the Indian. Last year the leader of the Government and his faithful followers in this House and in the other House insisted that the Indian was particularly and peculiarly entitled to vote.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—These are a different class of Indians

HON. MR. PLUMB—They are not civilized Indians.

HON. MR. POWER—Of course there is always some substantial and convincing reason—at least convincing to the hon. gentlemen opposite—to support everything the Premier suggests. If the Premier had taken the opposite course, and had suggested that the Indians in the older provinces were the wards of the Government, and were living on reserves supplied by the Government, and should not vote; and that the Indians in the North-West, who form nearly one-half of the population and who have been, until the last few years, the owners of the whole of the Territories and whose interest in the country is still very large, should be allowed to vote, then my hon. friend opposite would have pointed out with much force and effect how much more reason there was for the Indians in the North-West being allowed to vote than those Indians living down here who were in a great measure living on the bounty of the Government.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I ask the hon. gentleman whether he would not prefer to carry on this discussion when we go into committee. The general principle of the Bill is admitted, and the details can be better discussed in committee.

HON. MR. POWER—I always try to do everything I can to promote the convenience of the House, and I think the hon. gentleman from Niagara might, with better taste, have asked some of his own friends who have been talking the last hour on this Bill, to defer their remarks until the House went into committee.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Why the hon. gentleman should find fault with me on all occasions I cannot understand.

HON. MR. POWER—If the hon. gentleman will allow me to continue, I shall be done in ten minutes, and ten minutes more will be sufficient to finish the orders on the paper. This measure is objectionable inasmuch as it limits unduly the voters' list. The number of white people in those Territories is so small that each of those constituencies will be very small, and the Government should not do anything to restrict the number still further. These things indicate what the character of the elections up there must be. A very small number of persons will be allowed to vote at any rate; then under clause 28 the Governor-in-Council appoints enumerators to make the electoral lists. It just means this: that this measure proposes to give four supporters to the Government in the North-West Territories. They first exclude everyone from the franchise but householders; then in order to select from that small number they appoint officers of their own to make the lists. What is the result? Almost every man who is known not to be likely to support the Administration will find that his name is not on the list!

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Do you not think it is desirable that they should support the Government?

HON. MR. POWER—But this is supposed to be a measure to provide for representation of the North-West Territories; if the hon. gentleman's view is correct this measure ought to be entitled "a Bill to enable the North-West Territory to elect four members to represent the Governor-in-Council." Then in order to make assurance doubly sure the Ministry, who contended last year that there was nothing so desirable as uniformity, have provided that the franchise in the North-West shall be different from elsewhere, and they have provided also that the mode of election shall be different. If last year uniformity was so desirable that it was considered necessary to put the country to an annual expense of half a million of dollars to make up voters' lists on a uniform system, why should we not be uniform this year? This Bill provides for open voting, while no excuse whatever has been advanced for establishing that system up there. It limits the franchise to a few persons, and also provides that it shall be known how every man votes. When we consider that the few householders in the Territories are largely Government officials, it is perfectly clear that this provision that the voting shall be open, is a most objectionable one. The residuum of independent voters that will be left under this Bill will amount to nothing. One amendment that should be made to the Bill in this Chamber, is, that as electors up there cannot enjoy the franchise as in other portions of the country, we ought at least to provide that the Civil Servants should neither be allowed nor be obliged to vote. If the result of this measure is to be a free expression of the honest feeling of the people of the North-West Territories, the Bill needs to be very seriously modified, and I hope that this House will see that office-holders are removed from the voters' lists because it is perfectly certain that a Dominion official will practically be obliged to vote for the Government. If he does not vote, he will sin nearly as much against his employers as if he had voted against them; and if he does vote against them he is a marked man.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (25) "An Act respecting the Northern & Pacific Junction Railway Company." (Mr. Turner.)

NORTH AMERICAN TELEGRAPH BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. SULLIVAN moved the second reading of Bill (86) "An Act to incorporate the North American Telegraph Co."

He said: This Bill is to give the company necessary powers to carry on a telephone and telegraph business, and to manufacture and operate telephones and telegraphic instruments.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I do not rise for the purpose of opposing the Bill, but to call the attention of my hon. friend to the fact that this is an important measure and that there is one clause which is in all other telegraph bills hitherto passed and is not in this: it is with regard to the tariff of the company, so that the company would not have power to make their own tariff. In the Montreal Telegraph Company's Bill we find they are restricted to a rate of 25 cents for ten words. I give notice that I will move an amendment to that effect.

HON. MR. SULLIVAN—If it is customary to have such a clause, I will see that it is inserted when the Bill is before the Committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

INTEREST IN BRITISH COLUMBIA BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved into Committee of the Whole on Bill (72) "An Act respecting Interest in the Province of British Columbia."

In the Committee,

HON. MR. KAULBACH moved an amendment to provide that if the rate of interest has not been agreed upon "in writing," such rate shall be 6 per cent per annum.

The amendment was concurred in.

HON. MR. VIDAL, from the committee, reported the Bill with certain amendments, which were concurred in, and the Bill was read the third time and passed on a division.

The Senate adjourned at 6 o'clock.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, May 20th, 1886.

The Speaker took the Chair at three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

INSOLVENT BANKS AND TRADING CORPORATIONS WINDING UP BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. ALLAN, from the Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported Bill (15) "An Act further to amend the Act respecting Insolvent Banks, Insurance Companies, Loan Companies, Building Societies and Trading Corporations" with an amendment. He said: I may state to the House that the Committee, after giving the subject the fullest consideration, were unanimously of opinion that while it might be desirable to have on the statute book of the Dominion some careful and well prepared measure, providing, under special circumstances, for the winding up of Joint Stock Companies—such an Act, for instance, as is known as the English Companies Act of 1862, and the Ontario Joint Stock Companies winding up Act—the provisions contained in the Bill, as referred to them, and even an amendment suggested in Committee, were not considered by them safe or sufficient; they also considered the introduction of any such clause relating to solvent companies in a bill which, by its title, related to Insurance Companies was undesirable. They have, therefore, stricken out the first clause of the Bill altogether, with its sub-section, leaving the second clause, which relates to the case of insolvent companies and those in the interest of a class whose interests ought to be protected.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—Before that amendment is concurred in, I may say I was rather at a disadvantage in the Committee. I had not an opportunity at the time, not being a lawyer and not being as well acquainted with the Statutes as some hon. members of the Committee, to explain my views; but the hon. gentleman from Niagara made one statement there to-day in which I think he was in error. He said when I stated that the Bill was almost precisely the same as the Ontario Act, that it was not anything of the kind, or words to that effect. I have taken the trouble since to look up the Ontario Act, and I see that it contains the following provisions:—

1st. A company may be wound up when the period, if any, for the duration of the company has expired;

2nd. When the company has passed a resolution requiring the company to be wound up;

3rd. If the company, though it may be solvent, has passed an extraordinary resolution to the effect that it has been proved to their satisfaction that the company cannot, by reason of its liabilities, continue its business, and that it is advisable to wind up the same.

5th. Where no such resolution has been passed as mentioned, the court may on the application of a contributor, etc.,—one single shareholder.

I had amended the clause of this Bill, so as to make it require one-fourth of the shareholders. I do not pretend to press any amendment here, but I wish to put myself right so far as that is concerned. The Ontario Act states that one shareholder, a contributor, may obtain an order for winding up in case the court is of opinion that it is just and equitable that the company should be wound up. So that it is exactly the same, almost word for word, as this Bill stood first. I had it amended this morning so that one-fourth of the shareholders, or one-fourth of the stock must be represented in the application. The statute from which I quoted is 41 Victoria, chap. 5, if any hon. gentleman wishes to verify my statement.

The amendment was concurred in.

HON. MR. ALLAN moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

CONSOLIDATED RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

WITHDRAWN.

HON. MR. VIDAL, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbors, reported Bill (), "An Act to amend the Consolidated Railway Act, 1879," with a recommendation that the Senator in charge of the Bill have leave to withdraw the same.

HON. MR. ALLAN moved that leave be given to withdraw the Bill.

The motion was agreed to.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENI- TENTIARY.

MOTIONS.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE moved,
That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General; praying His Excellency to be pleased to cause to be laid before this House, a copy of the Report made by the Warden of St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary upon the fact of a reconciliation having taken place between that officer and his two assistants—the Deputy Warden and the Head Keeper—as ordered by the Minister of Justice, and as also mentioned in the Annual Report of the Inspector for 1884-1885, page xxv, lines 21, 22, 23, 24.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman is moving for a large number of papers, and I am instructed to say that these and others in course of preparation will be brought down as soon as possible; but with respect to some of the papers moved for, the first information we have had that any such papers were in existence was from the notices given by the hon. gentleman; the papers having been returned to the Warden and not communicated to the department. These papers will have to be examined to ascertain if they are such documents as can be laid before the Senate. I am also instructed to say that returns moved for and not brought down before prorogation are sent to the Clerk of the House. So that the hon. gentleman will consider this a reply to all his motions.

The motion was agreed to.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE moved:—

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying His Excellency to be pleased to cause to be laid before this House, a copy of the addenda to the written defence of the Warden of St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, filed at the end of the Enquiry of 1884; also, a copy of the reply of the said Warden to the answers of Deputy Warden Ouimet to the charges made against him by the Warden.

The motion was agreed to.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE moved:—

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General praying His Excellency to be pleased to cause to be laid before this House, a copy of Inspector Moylan's Report on the Enquiry made by him into the escape of one Dorion, one of the convicts then confined in St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, with copies of the evidence and of all other documents bearing upon that escape, including the decision of the Government upon the said Report.

The motion was agreed to.

SATURDAY SITTING.

MOTION WITHDRAWN.

HON. MR. WARK rose to move that when the House adjourns on Friday next, it do stand adjourned until Saturday the 22nd inst., at 3 p. m. He said: I gave notice of this motion considering that, Monday being a public holiday, it would be better for the House to sit on Saturday so that the public business would not be delayed.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I am advised that the House of Commons will not sit on Saturday or Monday. Therefore, public business will not be impeded if we adjourn over from Friday until Tuesday at three o'clock.

HON. MR. WARK—Then I shall not put my motion.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Is the motion withdrawn?

THE SPEAKER—It has not been put.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I really do think after the adjournments we have had, and knowing that Monday is the Queen's Birthday and that we cannot meet then, any reasonable man would say that we should meet on Saturday. I was glad to see the hon. gentleman's motion on the paper and if put, I believe it would be carried by the good sense of the House. I object to the motion being withdrawn.

HON. MR. PLUMB—There is no question before the House.

THE SPEAKER—Had the hon. gentleman presented his motion to the House he could not have withdrawn it without leave, but he has not offered it to the House, and therefore there is no motion before the chair.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (119) "An Act to amend the Act relating to the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway and Steamship Company." (Mr. Girard.)

Bill (87) "An Act to incorporate the Kootenay and Athabaska Railway Company." (Mr. Macdonald, B. C.)

Bill (131) "An Act further to amend the Act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway." (Mr. Plumb.)

Bill (79) "An Act respecting the Napanee, Tamworth and Quebec Railway Company." (Mr. Read.)

ST. GABRIEL* LEVEE AND RAILWAY COMPANY BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. VIDAL moved the third reading of Bill (116) "An Act to incorporate the St. Gabriel Levee and Railway Company."

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I cannot allow this Bill to pass its third reading without calling attention to an important amendment which I propose to move and which I believe the House will accept. As I stated yesterday, such works may become very injurious to the people on both sides of the St. Lawrence above the city of Montreal. If already the St. Lawrence overflows its banks at such a distance on either side, the construction of the Levee on the Montreal side and of the Levee on the south side at LaPrairie and Longueuil will certainly narrow the channel in the spring so that it will increase the volume of water in the river, and it will overflow such places as are situated above Lachine and above St. Lamberts and Longueuil. It is well known that this year Laprairie has been inundated for a distance of some miles through the overflow of the St. Lawrence. If you build a levee or dyke on the Montreal side from Lachine to Montreal, Laprairie, being on the south side, the consequence will be that the St. Lawrence will overflow to a greater distance to the south side. Beauharnois, which is above Laprairie on the south side of the St. Lawrence, was not inundated some thirty years ago, but since the construction of the levee and canal at that place, the property in the neighborhood has been inundated to such an extent that for years the old province of Canada had to pay for the damages done by the floods. The objection of the hon. gentleman from Alma yesterday was that Beauharnois was not in the same condition as Montreal, Laprairie and St. Lamberts. Certainly it is not, because the difference is against Montreal. Beauharnois stands at the head of the great rapids at Laprairie, and Montreal is at the foot of the rapids, so that the flood will be worse below the rapids than it will be above. If even above the rapids the levee at Beauharnois canal has produced so much damage I fail to see how, if a dyke is built from Lachine to Montreal, and one from Longueuil to Montreal, it will not inundate all those places along that side of the St. Lawrence to a greater depth than they have been heretofore. So if parliament in its might is willing to allow a company to construct such a work, no matter what the result may be, they cannot in justice to the people do less than give a right to property holders on both sides to seek compensation for any damage they may suffer from it. I therefore move, in amendment, that the said Bill be not read the third time, but that it be referred to a committee of the whole, with instructions to amend the Bill by adding the following clause as clause D:—

"The company shall compensate all owners of property damaged by reason of any overflow or other injury caused by the erecting or continuance of the works of the company or any part of such work.

"Sub-section 2: The provisions of the Consolidated Railway Act of 1879, and its amendments as to lands and their valuation shall apply mutatis mutandi to the estimation of damages under this section and the compensation therefor."

HON. MR. VIDAL—I think it is well to remind the House that the committee to whom this Bill was referred gave it very careful consideration, and had brought before them very fully all objections of a public or private character that I think could be urged against the Bill. The nature of the work to be constructed cannot, by any possibility, be put upon the same plane as the work at the Beauharnois Canal. In the one case there is a direct obstruction to the river by way of a dam thrown across. In the case of the Bill before us the construction is along the edge of the river and will not have any appreciable effect in raising the water of the river. The fact that the south shore of the river might be perhaps affected by the construction of this levee was brought before the Committee, and the opinion of a very competent engineer taken upon it. He had no hesitation whatever in saying, in the most decided manner, that the effect produced on the south side of the river by it would be very small indeed. He stated most distinctly that it would not have the effect of raising the water over that vast extent of flat surface more than one-tenth of an inch. He knew that this is an important question; he is perfectly familiar with the locality, and he is a man on whose opinion the Committee with great propriety relied. Then, again, it does not propose—as plainly set forth in the preamble of the Bill—to protect the city of Montreal from those floods, but only a small part of its suburbs. If it contemplated a work of that magnitude it would not be a structure of this kind, merely beginning at the Victoria bridge and running up the river to Lachine. It would necessarily be a work extending down the river all the way to Hochelaga. I am not prepared to say that if a dam of this nature was erected to that extent that it might have some appreciable effect on the other side of the river, but I very much doubt it, when we remember the flat character of that country and the vast area that is covered by the water rising a single inch. I do not think the floods are caused by obstructions of the character of a levee, but by something in the bottom of the river below Montreal. I have no doubt that the dumping of the dredges has had something to do with the rise of the water at Longueuil. If some scheme could be devised by which the ice could be removed and the mud taken out, and freer scope given for the running water below the city, it might to a great extent, be saved from these frequently recurring floods. In my opinion, however, the only real safety is in the construction of such a work as this extending to Hochelaga. When we think of the small extent of country subject to inundation that will be cut off by this work, it is preposterous to suppose that such a very slight narrowing of the river would cause floods on the other side. As hon. gentlemen know, very great damage and loss are caused every year in the neighborhood of Point St. Charles by those floods. If this scheme can be carried out, and that part of Montreal protected from them, I think a very great success will be gained. I do not care if the promoters of this Bill have a personal interest in this matter. Suppose this work does go through private property, which will thereby be enhanced in value, who objects to that, provided a great public good is accomplished in the protection of that part of the city of Montreal from the annual recurrence of these disastrous floods? My belief is that the work proposed here, if carried out, will be found to accomplish that object to a great extent, and this Bill ought, therefore, to receive the sanction of the Senate. I do not think the clause which is proposed to be added to the Bill, by my hon. friend from Delanaudiere, is at all necessary. My belief is that private rights are protected already by the Consolidated Railway Act, the provisions of which are made to apply to this work, and if it could be shown that any person sustains damage by this work he can go to the court and claim compensation for the loss sustained. I think it would be a pity to amend the Bill by incorporating such a clause, when it is most assuredly unnecessary, according to the best authorities that appeared before the Committee as to the effect which the work will have upon the south shore of the St. Lawrence.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I very often cannot agree with the hon. member from Delanaudiere; still it is not very often that he fails to be practical. Were I a lawyer, living in Montreal, I think I would certainly vote for this amendment, if I wanted to make money out of this work, because it is so worded that it could not fail to produce an abundant crop of law suits. The hon. member from Delanaudiere objects to the levee on the ground that it will damage private property. Anyone who knows the position in which the work will be placed, who has looked at the plan and knows the river, will understand quite well that it cannot possibly injure those who live on the other side at all, and if Parliament refuse to pass this measure it will be, in effect, declaring that Parliament will not empower Montreal to do anything to protect itself. I say confidently that this Bill must pass without amendment, and I say further that there will have to be another Bill. That is why I am so anxious to have this carried out, because if it is proved to the citizens of Montreal that this slight work, compared to what the other one will be, will effectually protect the city from floods (I feel certain that it will because I have watched those floods for 40 years)—if this work will effectually protect Point St. Charles, I venture to say that two years will not pass until the authorities of Montreal will be forced to take measures to have our wharves, ramps, or whatever you call them, raised to a sufficient height to protect the city. It is simply a question of spending a few thousands of dollars, and the expenditure will take place if thereby the city can be protected from inundation. The amendment of the hon. member from Delanaudiere would leave everything open to dispute, and there would be no end to the litigation it would cause. As the hon. member from Sarnia has said, there is ample provision now for the protection of private rights, in the Consolidated Railway Act, the provisions of which will apply to this levee. Under the terms of that Act the Company will be liable for any damages which may be caused by their work. I feel quite satisfied that a large majority in this House will oppose the amendment and will not stand in the way of the first effort of the people of Montreal to protect their city from those terribly devastating floods.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I am sorry that my hon. friend considers the question in this light. I do not think any inconvenience can result from the amendment. I should be very sorry to consider that it would be an impediment to the Bill; but it is an elementary principle that a community has no right to improve its condition to the detriment of another community or any of its members. It is very well for the citizens of Montreal to do their best to protect themselves. It has been remarked that this work will have the effect of enhancing the value of property. I hope it will, but does it follow that it should be done to the detriment of other parties, without giving those parties a right to protect themselves? I do not think it. It has been said that this work will not have the effect of injuring the parties alluded to by my hon. friend from Delanaudiere. To a great extent I share their opinions: I do not believe that this work will have any considerable effect in flooding those other localities. But that is merely an opinion on a point concerning which civil engineers disagree. I am prepared to admit, therefore, that I am not competent to decide such a question. The fact that a man of considerable experience, and even a high authority, has expressed the opinion that this work will not cause the water to rise half an inch, should not be considered conclusive: other authorities equally good may hold opinions to the contrary. My hon. friend, the mover of this Bill, said that there was no comparison between the localities in the vicinity of this work and the neighborhood of Beauharnois. Of course they are not exactly alike. I would remind the hon. member, however, that it was not the construction of a dam which caused the flood at Beauharnois. There was no dam there at all. It was found necessary, in the construction of that canal, to make a dyke, to bring the water of Lake St. Louis into the canal, and in this respect the position of the two localities are somewhat alike. The question arises, will damage result from this work? The hon. gentlemen who oppose the amendment say it is quite clear that there will be no damage at all. In that case, what harm can be done by this amendment? On the contrary, if damage should result from this work, is it not a matter of justice to protect the rights of the parties who sustain the damage? Nobody in this House will pretend to say that, because the parties who many suffer by this work are poor, they should not be protected. Everyone will admit that all persons in this country are on a footing of equality before Parliament, and that every man has a right to demand that his interests be protected. If the interests which are endangered by this Bill are small, then the damages which they may sustain will be small, and the company, whether it is to be the city of Montreal or a very powerful corporation, cannot be ruined or prevented carrying on a work of this magnitude because they may have to pay a few hundred dollars for damages to property. The hon. gentleman from Alma (Mr. Ogilvie) says that if he was a lawyer he would vote for this amendment. I have a better opinion of the hon. gentleman than he would lead us to entertain by his remarks. I believe he would be actuated by a desire to promote the public interest whether he was a lawyer or not, and would vote in the interests of justice. I seconded the motion because I consider, if there is no damage done, this amendment will have no effect against the Company; and if damage is sustained, then there will be a remedy for those who suffer. My hon. friend says this amendment will give rise to law suits. People are not likely to spend money unless they have good grounds for prosecuting. It is clear if all the engineers are of the opinion that there can be no damage arising from this work, there will be no use in suing. The suitor would lose his case and have to pay costs. On the other hand, if a man sustains damage, why should he be denied the right of claiming and being paid reasonable damages?

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—It is very seldom that I differ from the hon. mover and seconder of this amendment, but I am obliged from a sense of public duty to oppose their motion. This great projected embankment is a matter of the greatest importance to the largest city of the Dominion. It is not necessary to occupy the time of the House in setting forth the importance of that work; but the corporation of Montreal have undertaken, on getting this Bill, to have that work completed by the 1st of January and prevent a repetition of the dreadful disaster which overtook them this spring. It would be a great pity that Parliament should throw any obstacle in the way of their great project being undertaken. They do not ask the country to give any money towards the work. I think it would be a sad mistake if we did anything to prevent the carrying out of this necessary work. With regard to the injury to other property that might result from granting this Bill, the body of water that it is proposed to shut out is not large, though it is sufficient to do serious injury to the city. The shutting out of such cannot possibly have the effect which some hon. gentlemen anticipate. We discussed that question in committee and the opinion seemed to be there that no such damage could result from the construction of the dyke.

HON. MR. DEBOUCHERVILLE—The hon. gentleman has forgotten that the promoters of the Bill have proved that this would have nothing to do with the city of Montreal. It is stated in the preamble of the Bill that it would "tend to prevent the recurrence of such floods; in the French translation it says "it will prevent;" but it was just on this condition that it will only "tend to prevent," that the committee approved of the preamble. I think the hon. member ought to remember that. It has been asserted by the chairman of the committee and by the promoter of the Bill, that according to the opinion of a very distinguished engineer no damage will arise from the construction of this work. If there will be no damage why should we refuse to make this amendment? If no damage will result, this provision will not affect the company. Does the hon. gentleman fear to accept a clause in which the word "damage" is mentioned? It is there already in one of the amendments—"moreover the said company shall construct the said railway levee or dyke in such a manner as to cause no damage to the water works in Montreal." The engineer who was brought before the committee says that the levee will cause no damage; if so I do not see how this amendment can injure the Bill, and I cannot understand why hon. members should refuse to accept it when it will certainly show to the proprietors of lands on the south shore that this House has not neglected their interest.

HON. MR. SCOTT—I was not present during the discussion on the second reading of this Bill or in the committee; therefore the only light I have gleaned upon it is from what I have heard since I came into the Chamber and by looking at the Bill and the propositions of the members of the committee. I am sure that every gentleman in this Chamber is most anxious to facilitate the efforts of the city of Montreal, or of any Company, in doing anything that will prevent the recurrence of such floods as have visited that city this spring; but in relieving Montreal we must not seek to throw injury upon another portion of the country. This Bill is in the interest of a private company who believe that they can utilize the dyke for the purpose of railway communication. As a commercial enterprise the company profess to become responsible under all the provisions of the Consolidated Railway Act of 1879, in so far as the railway is concerned which is to be carried, as I am informed, along the top of the dyke. The question also whether consequential damages arising from the construction of the dyke shall be entertained has been a subject of consideration before the committee. I find the clause 21 provides that :—

“The Consolidated Railway Act, 1879,” and the Acts amending the same, are hereby incorporated with this Act, and shall form a part thereof and be construed therewith as forming one Act.”

Now so far as the railway is concerned the damage caused by its construction would have to be paid for in the manner prescribed by the Consolidated Railway Act—by submission to arbitration. That was discussed in committee, and that that clause was not wide enough, I gather from this fact, that at the end of this clause these words were added.

“And it shall apply both to the railway and the dyke in all respects, including effective drainage by sluices or otherwise, and crossings, such crossings to give perfect access to and from the River St. Lawrence.

To that extent, at all events, the committee were of opinion that any consequential damages arising from the construction of this work should be paid for in the manner laid down in the Consolidated Railway Act; whether that is broad enough to meet the case of persons higher up the stream whose property may be inundated owing to the construction of this dyke, I am at the present moment unable to give any opinion. It is a question involving a great deal of consideration and I cannot hastily decide it; but the proposition of the hon. gentleman opposite is that the clause shall be made perfectly clear; that if in the construction of this work any damage is caused to persons on the other side of the river, above or below it, that they shall be compensated in the manner laid down by the Railway Act. That is eminently a fair proposition. It is a proposition that has been acted upon on all occasions. No private enterprise can be undertaken even if it has a semi-public ultimate result, without giving compensation to those who, though deriving an indirect benefit from the construction of the work, are to a certain extent damaged from the effect of it. If a canal being built by the Government infringes on private rights, those private rights have to be compensated; and if in order to avert those floods, from the city of Montreal, this Company divert the water over to the country south of the city, no gentleman would say for a moment that the people upon whom this flood is cast shall not be compensated—that they shall be compelled to suffer without compensation, the injury that has been removed from the city of Montreal. The proposition of the hon. gentleman is not only a reasonable one, but it is one that has been invariably acted upon by Parliament. I have no doubt that hon. gentlemen reading this Bill would fairly infer that the compensation clauses in the Consolidated Railway Act were intended to apply. Whether a court would so construe it in its present shape, I am not at this moment prepared to say; but I think it is our duty to remove all doubt as to whether a court would or would not draw that conclusion from the Bill as it now stands. The very fact of the Committee having added those words to the printed Bill would be proof to me that they had so construed it, because it says “and shall apply both to the railway and to the dyke in all respects.” Now if the amendment had stopped there and did not go on to define how it shall apply “including defective drainage by sluices or other otherwise, and crossings, such crossings to give perfect access etc.” then I would say that the Consolidated Railway Act was intended to apply in its entirety to this Bill. But this difficulty meets me again: the consequential damages that are permitted to be awarded under the Railway Act arise by direct contact—that is were you directly take the land. Here the damage is so remote from where the dyke is that it might be construed by the court as being entirely too remote—and that it was not in the contemplation of Parliament at the time that this proposition was submitted. Therefore, if hon. gentlemen are of opinion that in the construction of this dyke damage will ensue to any parties on the other side of the river, I do think it is the duty of Parliament to make it clear that those damages shall be ascertained in the manner prescribed by the Consolidated Railway Act. That damage does not expose the company to civil action at law. They can compel the company constructing the dyke to arbitrate and to give compensation, if compensation ought to be given, and only to that extent. It will not subject them to civil action beyond calling the attention of the court to the fact that they have refused to arbitrate. I shall be extremely sorry to throw any embarrassment in the way of legislation that is going to facilitate the construction of any works to relieve the city of Montreal from those inundations; but while we are doing good to the city of Montreal in that direction we surely do not propose to subject other parties to loss who are not at the present moment damaged. If the flood at the present time damages the people along that section of country at Beauharnois or elsewhere—if they are at present injured by the overflow, and the construction of the dyke in no way increases that damage or intensifies it, they can have no benefit by this amendment; but if by the construction of the dyke they are injured and are entitled to compensation I think we ought to make it clear that Parliament should give them compensation.

HON. MR. ALLAN—So far as the question was presented to the Committee, and so far as I understood it, there seemed to be two opposing parties. One was the city of Montreal, and the other represented by eminent counsel were property owners on that part of the river to be effected by this dyke. Certainly the impression made upon my mind was that those who represented the city of Montreal were satisfied with certain amendments which were being introduced into the Bill so far as that city is concerned. Then with respect to those property owners, their complaint was, as I understand it, that if this dyke was successfully built so as to keep the water from flowing over the land—if it was perfectly tight and achieved that object—it would then prevent the water accumulated on their lands in the spring by the melting snow, from draining off into the river, and it was with a view to remedy any complaint of that kind that these amendments were placed in the Bill providing for sluice gates and all other means to allow the water to escape if water did accumulate inside the dyke on the lands of those parties affected. I understood when the Committee rose that those objections had all been met, and I thought it was satisfactory to all the parties represented before the Committee that day. As for the proposed work affecting the opposite side of the river, all I can say is I was satisfied by the declaration which was made by a gentleman who is, I suppose, one of the highest standing in his profession, Mr. Walter Shanly, before the Committee, that the work could not affect the height of water. I think his expression was that it would not affect the height of water one-sixteenth of an inch, and no possible damage could result in that way.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I am surprised at the discussion that has taken place on this matter, because it is acknowledged by some hon. gentlemen that no damage will result. Then I put the question in this way: either there will be damage or there will not be damage as the result of building this levee. If there is to be no damage, there can be no objection to add the clause which we ask for—even the mover of the Bill ought to accept it, since he contends there is no danger of damage. If there is to be damage, I ask has Parliament a right, for a private object, for a company who themselves acknowledge that it is not for the public they are working, but for their own interest, to allow the people on the south shore of the river to be without protection? We are not children in this House; we are grown up men of age and experience. We know the power of water; we know that if you obstruct the current the water will rise, and if the water rises we know that it must spread out over the country. It is said the statement of Mr. Shanly is that this work will not raise the water. Every hon. member of this House has seen a bridge; he has seen bridges erected on three, four or five piers placed in the bed of the stream, and I ask if they have not remarked that the water is raised even by so small an obstruction, so that when the current is strong it will be a foot higher on the upper side of the pier than below? Hon. gentlemen may say that Mr. Shanly has given it as his opinion that in the spring when the water of the St. Lawrence overflows half a mile in width at the city of Montreal, and miles in length, that the building of this levee will not raise the water more than one-sixteenth of an inch. We are too old—we have had too much experience not to see the absurdity of such a statement. There is no doubt that if you force the water through a narrower channel than it now has when the flood is ten or fifteen feet higher than its summer level it must spread out to the south of the city. Has Parliament the right to interfere with the business of a private citizen? I say it has not. It may steal his property but it has no right to take it. If we take a man's property from him we are obliged to indemnify him for it; if it is taken from him for the public good; or if you give another man the privilege of doing something that is injurious to it, the injury should be compensated. No parliament has a right to do what is wrong; we may have the power, but might is not right. It is an abuse of power. I am only asking what is just and equitable. Supposing the work which this company proposes to do not only "tends to prevent" the recurrence of those floods, but causes damage to other properties along the St. Lawrence, I say then give the owners of such properties the right to be indemnified. The hon. gentleman from Toronto said that there was already a clause in the Act which provides for that. There is a clause, but according to the best lawyers in this House that clause is not sufficiently clear; it would open the door to such cases as the hon. gentleman from Alma has referred to—cases where the poor man has to borrow money from his neighbor to enable him to fight a wealthy company who shut their eyes and their hearts to damage they have done to his private property.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—It is a great pity that my hon. friend had not been a lawyer, for he certainly lays down a case wonderfully well. He talks of the absurdity of the statement that I made, that this levee will not raise the water on the other side of the river, and of the absurdity of Mr. Shanly's opinion. But any hon. gentleman who knows where that levee is to be built will understand just as well as I do that it can have no effect in raising the water on the opposite side of the river. This water that the hon. gentleman speaks of is not running water; it is water that is either dead or running in the opposite direction from the current of the river. The hon. gentleman from Ottawa referred to the floods at Beauharnois, and talked about the effect of this levee on Beauharnois. Beauharnois happens to be nearly twenty miles above Montreal, and this water would never get near it. It just shows how much some hon. gentlemen know about this matter. Every member, all over the country, no matter how far he may be away from this locality, seems to know a great deal more about it than the people of Montreal. I think the people of Montreal know what their own interests are, and they know that this levee will not raise the water one iota.

HON. MR. FLINT—I have had some experience of floods in my lifetime. We have had them at Belleville frequently. We had one last January which kept one hundred families out of their houses until spring. I have watched the effect of floods for many a long year, and I may say from what I know of the city of Montreal, having been there in one of the great floods some years ago, and knowing the size of the river and the distance from Montreal to the south shore, and the rise in the water there, I contend that this overflow lies dead until the river lowers and then it runs off. I am satisfied that Mr. Shanly's view of the case is about correct. If the water did not rise more than four feet over the revetment wall this spring, I am satisfied that it would not rise to the extent of half an inch higher on the south shore if this levee were built; because if we take the distance across, and divide up the overflow on the north side, as Mr. Shanly did in his calculation, it would not amount to more than half an inch, if even that, spread over the full width of the river, and that would be only for three or four days or a week at the outside, and then it would go away. The rise of water at Montreal, in my opinion, is due to obstructions from St. Helen's Island and down below, and I cannot see how these obstructions are to be removed unless by dredging the bottom of the river and removing the island. My experience is that where there is a rapid current, as soon as the ice begins to run it shoves down to where the ice is thicker and stronger and there piles and forms a dam which holds back the water and causes it to rise. That is the way it is with us in our little river at Belleville, and when I was in Montreal I found that was the case there—the ice was so much stronger below the Island than up in the vicinity of the rapids that it would not give way until it became weakened by the action of the sun and water, and Montreal was flooded in consequence. I am satisfied in my own mind that the construction of this levee will not be a source of injury to the south shore and I am prepared to vote for the Bill.

The House divided on the amendment which was lost on the following division :

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (9) "An Act respecting the Revised Statutes of Canada."

In the Committee,

HON. MR. SCOTT—At the second reading of this Bill I drew attention to the circumstance that I feared in some particulars the commissioners who were deputed to revise and consolidate the Statutes had really legislated instead of simply consolidating, and I mentioned that I might at some other stage of the Bill point out where there were inaccuracies and where the commissioners had exceeded their powers. To do so would involve a very exhaustive inquiry. We have not the laws before us: the responsibility of the revised Statutes, I assume, has been undertaken by the Government. The Minister of Justice, I believe, has had the commissioners under his control for some time and no doubt has made some inquiry as to the correctness of their report: I am not aware what action was taken by the Committee in the other House, or whether they took any action at all. Perhaps my hon. friend can say whether they did go through the Bill.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I am not sure, but I think they did.

HON. MR. SCOTT—There were several committees to whom different sections of the revised statutes were delegated, and they went through them, with the advantage of having some one member of the commission present at the time. They called attention to such inaccuracies as they discovered. I do not know that any important ones were unearthed, and I entirely acquit the commissioners of desiring to change the law in the course of consolidation. I did state that I had myself found it of very great use in referring to the laws during the past year to consult the revised draft of last session, but in some instances I thought that the interpretation put upon the statutes by the commissioners was not in all cases accurate. I do not desire to throw any cloud on the work of the commission, as I am not prepared to go into an exhaustive inquiry—in fact, it is utterly impossible to do so, because we have not the revised statutes before us, and we have not even the suggestions made by the several committees in the other chamber. They may, themselves, have made the very changes that struck me and which I thought should have been made; but at this moment, towards the end of the session, and feeling that an inquiry would result in the whole of the labors of the commission being thrown over for another year, I do not choose to take the responsibility of casting that doubt on the work that would necessarily arise if I pointed out what I thought were inaccuracies. I do not mean to say that the commissioners did not give the interpretation of the law that Parliament intended; I spoke from my own judgment, having been present when many of the enactments were adopted, and I think the commissioners were wrong in some instances: however, the courts might sustain their view of it. The subject is so large, and as the work would involve throwing over the whole work of the commissioners for another year, I will not take the responsibility; I would rather leave it with the Government. If there are glaring inaccuracies in the work; if the commissioners have departed from the law in any degree, attention will be called to it before next session.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I would direct my hon. friend's attention to the second sub-section of the 8th clause, which has reference to the construction of Statutes in case of inaccuracies such as my hon. friend has referred to.

HON. MR. SCOTT—Past transactions are governed by the law as it stands; future transactions by the revised statutes.

HON. MR. POWER—Like my hon. friend from Ottawa I had the good fortune to be one of the Joint Committee who had the report of the Consolidation Commissioners under consideration last session, and my principal regret is that the Government did not, at the close of last session, pass the Bill which is now before us, or one substantially the same. The country has been for a year deprived of the use of the consolidated statutes without, I think, any advantage to repay for the delay. What I understand has been done is this: the Parliamentary Commission, one may call it, of last year—the Joint Committee—went over the work of the commissioners appointed to consolidate the Statutes, with a good deal of care.

HON. MR. SCOTT.

They pointed out a considerable number of changes which they thought would be improvements. These changes they reported to both Houses and I think that their report was adopted. At any rate, the Government, after Parliament rose last year, referred the consolidated statutes as they had been reported by the Commissioners, together with the Acts of last year and the report of the Parliamentary committee of last year, to a number of gentlemen embracing one or two of the previous commissioners, and we have had laid on our desks this year the report made by this second commission, embodying all the recommendations of the Parliamentary committee of last year and the Acts passed during the Session of 1885. That was the position at the beginning of this Session. Then the Minister of Justice introduced this Bill in the other House; and, I do not know whether before or after introducing it, he referred the volumes which we have now on our desks to a committee of the House of Commons, and that committee went through the work—I do not know how carefully, but the amendments that they suggested are to be found in the schedule of this Bill. They are very trifling. Considering that the committee of last year was a joint committee the Government might have shown perhaps a little more courtesy to this House if they had made the committee this year a joint committee; but the work of the committee this year was not nearly so important or so extensive as that of last year, and I do not suppose that the Senate will get on its dignity this time. The alterations made since last year have been so trifling that there is no object in referring the matter to a committee. There is just one observation that I feel bound to make with regard to this whole work. It has taken a most unwarrantable length of time to do. It has been in hand now I think some five or six years. Immense sums have been paid out which were not warranted by the work done; and the whole work we have before us to day might have been done by the gentlemen who were engaged at it last year at about one-fifth of the cost which has been incurred. I hope that the revised statutes will be placed in the hands of the public almost immediately after the session; and I only regret that they were not so placed last year.

HON. MR. ALLAN, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

WORKS OVER NAVIGABLE WATERS BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a committee of the whole on Bill (130) "An Act respecting certain works constructed in or over Navigable Waters."

In the committee,

HON. MR. PLUMB—I may say, in general terms, that the Bill deals solely with structures that interfere with navigation and does not affect riparian rights. It would be impossible to put any clause in the Bill to provide compensation for riparian proprietors.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—This Bill is a very important one affecting, as it does, the navigable streams and waters of Canada. It repeals three Acts, none of which has any bearing on works already in existence. This Bill, however, refers not only to works which are to be constructed, but to all those now in existence. In the Maritime Provinces the ends of piers often catch the silt carried down streams until the water gets shallow, and as a consequence the piers have to be extended. Under this Bill no such addition could be made without the sanction of the Governor in Council. There may be some good reason for it, but it is very sweeping. I merely call attention to it as a provision which is likely to seriously interfere with the owners of wharves and piers in navigable waters of Canada.

HON. MR. POWER—I am very much surprised that a gentleman of so much experience as a parliamentarian as the hon. member from Alberton should discuss the principle of a Bill in Committee. That ought to have been done at the second reading. At any rate, if the principle of this Bill can be discussed in Committee, it should not be on the first clause which simply defines the expression "work." I think the observations of the hon. gentleman would come up more properly on subsequent clauses.

The first clause was adopted.

On the second clause,

HON. MR. POWER—There has been a very considerable improvement made in this Bill since it was introduced. It was in the first place compulsory. It obliged every man who wanted to build a small wharf to send a plan and description of the work to the Government. That was so amended in the House of Commons as to make it optional. I think it is not very necessary; still as it is left a matter of choice it is not nearly as objectionable as it was.

HON. MR. PLUMB—That is to provide for the case of a work where no sufficient sanction exists.

The clause was adopted.

On the 3rd clause,

HON. MR. PLUMB—This really applies to bridges which have been built without legislative authority and which interfere with navigation. Under this clause the owners of structures of that kind, which have not had legislative authority, can obtain such authority.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—My hon. friend will see that the word "work" there refers to all those works mentioned in the first clause. Now in the Province from which I come it has not been necessary to get liberty to build a wharf, bridge or pier, and some of our wharves, to my knowledge, have been lengthened 25 or 30 feet. Supposing that the ice running into the harbor of Charlottetown in the spring of the year carries away a portion of one of those wharves, according to this Bill it could not be repaired without the sanction of the Governor-in-Council, and before that could be obtained the work might be destroyed.

HON. MR. PLUMB—That is not required: it says that he may proceed to get the approval of the Governor in Council: it is not compulsory at all.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—The object of this clause is this: when a person puts up a structure of that kind, which may obstruct navigation, if he does not obtain authority, he erects it at his peril, and it may be taken away from him. Without the sanction of the Governor in Council he is there on sufferance. This law is an improvement on what we have had before.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The owner might be subjected to trouble, but by applying under this legislation to the Governor in Council he can put himself right.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—This would protect him in his rights. At present any one can erect almost anything he likes: he requires no water grant from the Province as long as the work does not interfere with riparian rights.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The clause which we are discussing applies to works constructed heretofore.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—As I understand, any wharf in any harbor can, under the existing law, be repaired or lengthened without the sanction or approval of the Governor in Council. Suppose a man does not obtain the sanction of the Governor in Council, to repair or lengthen his wharf, he cannot lawfully do it unless it is registered.

HON. MR. GIRARD—I think there is something which this Bill should contain. It is all very well to protect navigation, but I think some provision should be made to protect the rights of those who own property in the vicinity of a boom or other work of that character. Before the permission referred to in this Bill is given, the views of those who may be affected by the work should be consulted, and a sufficient indemnity paid; or at all events there should be some agreement between the person who constructs such a boom and his neighbors for the payment of damages resulting from such construction.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I feel quite an interest in this matter, because the Bill, as it stands, will affect many people in Prince Edward Island. The works mentioned in the first clause of the Bill have been dealt with in our province in an exceptional way and I would request the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill to ascertain, before the third reading, from the Minister of Justice, whether this Bill will interfere with the rights of owners of such works in Prince Edward Island. The Speaker of the Senate states that in Nova Scotia it has been the practice to get a grant of land in front of your property. That has not been the case in Prince Edward Island. On navigable rivers the water immediately in front of the land is owned by the owner of property to the channel. This Bill would seriously interfere with the rights and privileges of such owners. My hon. colleague from Prince Edward Island, whose land abuts on the Hillsboro river, would, before the passage of this Bill, have the right to build a wharf. After the passage of this Bill he would not have that right.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Would he have a right to build it if it would interfere with navigation?

HON. MR. HOWLAN—No.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Then this Bill does not apply to such a work.

HON. MR. McCLELAN—I am glad that the hon. member from Alberton has raised this question, because the law in Prince Edward Island to which he refers applies to New Brunswick also. A man who has a lot fronting on the river owns the shore practically—at least no one else has a right to use the frontage on the river. He has the privilege of building a wharf or any other convenience he likes, and there are wharves, consequently, on the banks of rivers in New Brunswick which have been in existence in some cases for fifty or sixty years. The question is a very proper one, and should be inquired into. We should know how far those erections will be affected by the passage of this Bill. Inferentially, at all events, they are to be considered unlawful structures. If so, supposing malicious persons were to injure them, the owners would have no redress. A number of legal questions will arise on that, and the question for us is what are the legal rights of the owners of those properties where they have been built for a long time—built before the union, many of them. The Bill also applies to aboiteaux which have been constructed for a long time for the purpose of enclosing large meadows in New Brunswick. They come in under the general interpretation clause, and the question is, are they unlawful structures inferentially, because it says in the fifth section "any lawful work may be built and repaired." They would have to be repaired; otherwise there would be an immense loss of property. Can we repair by building an aboiteaux? We can if it is a lawful work; but the Bill does not say whether it is a lawful or unlawful work, and that is the question to be determined.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I have to say that I think the third clause is intended to cover that objection; and the fifth clause says that any lawful work may be built or repaired if the interference with navigation is not increased by such rebuilding or repairing. In order to meet the objection we will allow the Bill, if the hon. gentleman will agree to it, to pass through committee, and before the third reading I will be prepared with an explanation that I trust will be satisfactory.

The clause was agreed to.

On the seventh clause,

HON. MR. POWER—I think that possibly some amendment might be made to this clause before the third reading. The clause says that

"Nothing hereinbefore contained shall apply to any work constructed under the authority of any Act of the Parliament of Canada, or of the Legislature of the late Province of Canada, or of the Legislature of any Province now forming part of Canada, passed before such province became a part thereof."

It will be seen that that clause does not mean what is intended, because clause 5 of the Bill should apply to those works. It clearly was not the intention of the Government that clause 5 should not apply to those works that were constructed before Confederation. It might be understood that that clause will remain open for amendment for the third reading.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I will get the information asked for if necessary.

The clause was agreed to.

On the 9th section,

HON. MR. POWER—Before the Committee rises, I should like to make a suggestion for the consideration of the members of the Committee. I think the difficulty which the hon. gentleman from Alberton speaks of could be got over in a great measure by providing that any work which was a legal work in the province before Confederation should be deemed to be a lawful work under this Act.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—That would remedy it to a certain extent; but it was not necessary in our province to get any Act of Parliament for it; it is lawful without.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—Not in navigable waters.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Not in navigable waters. Then as to the Government having control over those piers after they are built, we passed an Act a few days ago giving the Government power to remove all obstructions from navigation, and this is a very important matter in all the Maritime Provinces. It may interfere very seriously with private rights in the cities of Halifax, St. John and Charlottetown; and while we should protect the harbors and all new works done in them, we ought to be very careful not to interfere with vested rights.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD, from the Committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

SECOND READING.

Bill (25) "An Act respecting the Northern & Pacific Junction Railway Company" (Mr. Turner) was read the second time without debate.

The Senate adjourned at 5.40 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Friday, May 21st, 1886.

The Speaker took the chair at three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT PETITION.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I have the honor to present a petition to which I ask the attention of the House, a petition of the Synod of Toronto and Kingston of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, setting forth that they represent 214 ministers and 300 congregations and mission stations; that they regard the Canada Temperance Act as the best available means of suppressing intemperance and promoting sobriety, and they pray respectfully that there shall be no alteration made in the Canada Temperance Act, except with a view of making it more effective in suppressing the liquor traffic.

HON. MR. MCKINDSEY—A petition of this kind, unless there is the seal of some corporation attached to it should be only received as if endorsed by one person.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I am very sorry that the hon. gentleman should take such a technical objection. Does he wish to mislead the people of Canada, when it is a petition under the authority of and sent here by the direction of a large court, and when the petition itself says that it is presented by the representatives of this large body of people? The hon. gentleman cannot conceal that fact from the people of the country, and it does very small credit to him to suggest a mere technical objection, because he knows I have to yield to his objection; but surely the interests of truth and justice require that due amount of weight should be given to a petition of this kind, coming from such an influential body!

HON. MR. MCKINDSEY—I say the rule of this House does not permit a petition of that kind to be received, signed only by one person, with the statement that it represents 2,000 people. A petition of this kind may be got up by three or four persons, and they may make statements to this House and to the country that it represents a certain denomination, a certain number of people and of clergymen, but I submit that it does not represent them. I mean to say that the rule of this House does not permit a petition of this kind to be received, except as representing the petition of the one person who has signed it.

HON. MR. VIDAL—Or two persons.

DISMISSAL OF INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY EMPLOYEES.

MOTION.

HON. MR. POIRIER moved

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General; praying that His Excellency will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House, copies of all reports or correspondence relating to the dismissal of Stanislas A. Bourgue from the position of telegraph operator, at Canaan Station, on the Intercolonial Railway; and, also, all reports or correspondence relating to the dismissal of Donat Cormier from the Intercolonial Railway Office at Moncton, N.B.

He said: I have waited, before bringing this question up, to see that the Inch Arran investigation was completed. Not that it has any direct bearing on this question; but while the question was up I thought it would be better to have it sifted a little more. On the 17th December last, Mr. J. R. Bruce, traffic officer on the Intercolonial Railway offices at Moncton, wrote to his immediate superior officer, the chief accountant and treasurer on the said railroad, the following letter:—

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY, ACCOUNTING DEPT., AUDIT OFFICE, }
MONCTON, N.B., 17th Sept., 1885. }

Thos. Williams, Esq., Chief Acc't and Treasurer,

DEAR SIR—I have to inform you that Mr. D. M. Cormier left the office to-day at 10 o'clock, presumably to attend to some banking business. He had not returned up to the hour (4.30 p.m.) and I feel safe in reporting that he is under the influence of liquor, and was so when he came on duty this morning.

I am very sorry to have to make this report, because Mr. Cormier is one of my most capable clerks, and I am convinced that it will be with difficulty that another can be found to fulfil his duties with the same facility and accuracy as he himself fulfils them. By these reasons I confess that I might have been inclined to have withheld this report, but I regret to have to say that it is by no means the first time that I have heard that he has been intoxicated.

If his suspension be decided upon I should like, of course, to have some one to put into his place concurrently with his suspension.

Yours truly,

(Signed)

J. R. BRUCE,
Traffic Auditor.

Hon. gentlemen will please notice the want of positiveness—the uncertainty of the assertion—"I feel safe in reporting that he is under the influence of liquor."

"It is by no means the first time I have heard that he has been intoxicated." However, Mr. Pottinger being absent, the matter was reported to the acting superintendent, Mr. Taylor, who, knowing from whom the report came, laid it aside. When Mr. Pottinger returned he took the matter up, but refused to suspend Cormier according to the demand of Mr. Bruce; that is to say, to dismiss him before the charges of drunkenness were substantiated. In the meantime, Cormier had taken the pledge and become a teetotaler. Mr. Bruce set himself to work to find proofs of his charges; but proofs were hard to get. In fact he found none. One morning, under the guise of friendship, he approached Cormier and asked him to sign a certain paper or document which he pretended was for his benefit. That paper, which I have not—and it is principally for its production that I make this motion—while stating that Cormier had taken the pledge, etc., admitted that on one occasion he had taken rather too much liquor. Cormier hesitated to sign such a document, although presented to him by his superior officer. To lull his suspicion, Bruce told him that it was in his own interest and earnestly requested him to sign it, assuring him that it would make matters right, and that it would lead to Cormier's promotion. Cormier signed it, and he was for that unmercifully dismissed. What do my hon. colleagues think of this? We may naturally ask what was the object which Mr. Bruce had in view in procuring the dismissal of a clerk whom, as his superior officer, he admits was one of his most careful clerks, adding that it would be with difficulty that another could be found to fulfil his duties with the same accuracy and efficiency? Cormier was admitted by all to be one of the most efficient clerks in the office at Moncton. The object that Bruce had in view is apparent in the last paragraph of his letter—"If his suspension be decided upon I should like, of course, to have someone put in his place concurrently during his suspension." The object appears more clearly in another letter written shortly after the one which I have quoted: "Mr. Pitfall has not yet reported himself; if you can hurry his appearance I shall feel obliged." Therefore here is a young man, one of the most capable clerks in the office at Mon-ton, dismissed to make room for Mr. Pitfell, who happened to be a protege, a minion of Mr. Bruce, who is himself an employe of the country. Now how was his dismissal effected? By means no better than false pretenses; in fact the artifice displayed in coaxing Cormier to write down his own condemnation is something unpardonable. It was nothing short of a criminal act. If Bruce had invited him into one of the restaurants in Moncton and enticed him to drink, and then reported him on the charge of drunkenness, and had him dismissed, he would have been less guilty than he was in this case. Some few years ago agents from the United States, induced farmers in New Brunswick and other parts of Canada to sign agreements to buy farming implements. These papers turned out to be promissory notes. Which is the more criminal, to defraud farmers in that way, or to betray a subordinate and obtain his dismissal, as Mr. Bruce did? If this was a solitary occurrence I would not have troubled this House by calling attention to it; but unfortunately it is not uncommon. I cannot in the least blame the Government, who, I believe, are unaware of the facts, but I wish to make them aware of it, so that, in future they will not be repeated. There are in the employment of the Intercolonial Railway too many of those petty tyrants who manage to turn out efficient servants, put there by the Government or promoted for services duly rendered, to obtain positions for some of their proteges who may or may not be efficient, but with whom the country has nothing to do. I believe such a thing is worth calling attention to. In the office at Moncton I am sorry to say justice does not seem to be meted out to all. In the case of this personal client of mine he was persecuted because, apparently, he had no one to back him. He was not only dismissed, but in order to justify his dismissal he was brutally assaulted in the newspapers, being called from a "thief" down to a "drunken Frenchman." Of course those are only newspaper articles, but they reveal a state of things that is not at all satisfactory. They reveal a condition of things which is as objectionable to our English Protestant friends, with whom we live in perfect harmony in New Brunswick, as it is to us. It is a state of affairs that ought to be remedied. We find that certain persons, for a very small offence, are thrown out of employment, while others guilty of offences that seem to be quite as great are continued in office. I am calling the attention of the Government to this matter with a view to have equal justice meted out to all. The other part of my motion referring to the dismissal of Stanislas Bourque is similar to the other. Bourque was employed at Canaan junction as a telegraph operator. It appears that on one occasion when called upon he did not immediately respond. The reports on the matter are conflicting. The train conductor says that when he passed Bourque was on duty; but it appears that he did not answer the call immediately. I would direct attention to this fact, that the young man had passed the whole night on duty. For this fault he was dismissed. I myself and others interceded in his favor, but without avail. I can bring facts to show that under the same management, on the same road, and under the supervision of the same officers employes have been suspended once, twice or three times, for offences greater than those charged against Bourque, and not dismissed. I could give the names of some of his colleagues, Allen, Edwards, Bird, etc., who were suspended each three times before they were finally dismissed from the service. Other employes, who are still there, have been fined and suspended a great number of times; but this young man who is temperate in his habits, whose conduct is irreproachable, was dismissed on the first charge and that not proven. It is impossible for me to remain silent in the face of such facts, and if I call the attention of the Government to the matter in this hon. House, hon gentlemen will understand that I could not do it otherwise. I do not say the Government are responsible for these acts; but I believe it would be only an act of justice that such facts as I have placed before the House should be enquired into. I would like, personally, that the man who, under false pretences, obtains the dismissal of a subordinate, should not be allowed to go without reprimand. In the case of those two young men, I think they have been treated unmercifully. As to Mr. Bruce, I inquired about him, and I may say I could find no man in Moncton, or in Shediac who could tell me that he was a man who was—I will not say a tetotalter, but even a moderate drinker, to speak charitably; but in the case of Bourque there was no such charge. I believe in being strict on the question of intemperance; but I believe also in equal justice to all. Cormier, who was one of the most effective clerks in the service, had a salary of $400 per annum.

HON. MR. POWER—I think the hon. gentleman from Kent has done no more than his duty in bringing this matter before the House. If those two young men were dismissed permanently from the service of the Government for a first offence—one of them for being off duty for one day because he was, during that time, under the influence of liquor, and the other for a single failure to answer a call—I think they have received a measure of stern justice which is not generally meted out to Government employes. If the hon. gentleman, has presented a case for inquiry at least, and I hope that the Government will make the inquiry.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I am very much pleased that the hon. gentleman has brought this matter before the House, because, as he said himself, these are only two cases, but there may be many others. I do not accuse the Government of being themselves responsible for the evil; but notice is given to the Government in this House of the existence of the evil. In the case of the St. Vincent de Paul mismanagement, which resulted in revolt and death, I had year after year asked the Government to make inquiry into the management of that institution. They did not do so because they were deceived by their own officers. I say that they rely too much on their own officers; and I contend that when a member of Parliament, a man who knows his responsibility, rises in his place and says there is something wrong in this department or in that institution, the Government—no matter what their confidence in their officers may be—should make a searching inquiry into the matter. If this were done, many of the acts of injustice for which I do not hold the Government responsible personally, but for which the Government should hold their officers responsible, would not occur. In the case of the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary it is the despotism, tyranny and dishonesty of men in high standing that causes the trouble that results in ill-treatment and dismissals of subordinates. Once a subordinate is removed, it is too late to force the Government to take him on again, so that it would be only a matter of justice that the Government should not rely so implicitly on their officers. They are obliged to rely upon them, of course, to a great extent, but once their attention is called to particular cases by members of Parliament they ought to inquire into them and see whether there is anything wrong. I hope this will be another lesson to the Government, and that they will see the advisability of causing such inquiries to be made as will disclose what is at the bottom of these troubles. I said the other day that when the administration of the Department of Justice was under the Hon. James Macdonald, I went to him one day and said, "There is something wrong in the management of St. Vincent de Paul, and the cause of it is here in your office." He said, "do you believe so?" I said, "I do believe it; and I give you my word that I have good reason to believe it." He said, "What do you ask?" I said, "Cause an inquiry to be made by honest determined men." He granted that inquiry and appointed as a commission two gentlemen who were an example to all others—Mr. Tache, of the Department of Agriculture, and Mr. Miall, of the Department of the Interior. They went into the institution and inquired searchingly into the matter, and they found that there was in the Department an officer who was doing all the mischief in endeavoring to break down the institution. As a result of the investigation he was dismissed; and if a similar action were taken in this case we would not have to register such sad occurrences as have lately transpired in the Penitentiary of St. Vincent de Paul.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—There would be no objection to the Address.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman is acting for the Government.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I have already said there is no objection for the papers being brought down.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I am not referring to what the hon. gentleman from Niagara said ; but from my own point of view I consider that if any wrong has been done it should be investigated. At the same time there is no branch of the public service that requires more thorough discipline than Government railways. Every officer, every operator, and every employé should be perfectly competent for the duties he has to discharge. If we have on our railways employés in whom no confidence can be placed, damage to life and property will result. I may say that as far as possible those who have control of those railways should have large discretion to decide whether the men in these important positions are qualified or disqualified, or whether their omissions or commissions are of such a character as should call for their dismissal. If we take the authority out of these men's hands and leave them entirely under the control of the Government, we are risking the efficiency of the service: when we hold men responsible we must leave it largely in their hands to decide who should be employed and who dismissed.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I am sure that every one who knows the hon. gentleman from Acadie must know that he would not have brought this to the notice of parliament without good grounds. It shows the great disadvantage of any railway being under the control and direction of the Government. I spent a large part of last summer in New Brunswick and I had there the good fortune to meet Mr. Pottinger, the manager of that road, on different occasions, and I am sure whatever may be the merits of this case, that he would never do an act of injustice. So able a manager and so good a man could not, I am sure, be unjust to any official of the Intercolonial Railway. I think it is not in the public interests that our Dominion Government should operate any railways: if every complaint of an official is to be brought before parliament the enquiries would be endless. If I were a manager of a railway do you think I would brook parliament interfering with me if, while in the discharge of my duty, I removed any official? The effect of parliament interfering in such cases would be to destroy the efficiency of the manager. I think it is very undesirable that such cases should be brought before the House. There is no doubt that the hon. gentleman has some ground for bringing this matter before parliament, because he is under the impression that injustice has been done.

HON. MR. MCCLELAN—It may be very true, as the hon. member for Woodstock has said so well, that in the management of those large railway systems the superintendent should have unlimited power and should not be unnecessarily interfered with in the exercise of his discipline; and it may be very true that Mr. Pottinger is very efficient and the right man in the right place; yet I conceive that my hon. colleague from New Brunswick had taken a very wise, proper and useful step in the interest of the country in bringing this case before the attention of Parliament, or at all events before the notice of the country. I have before heard rumours relating to the dismissal of this very individual Cormier, and I quite understand how there may be in the best regulated systems of railways a disposition to crowd out officials—that is to say by a certain kind of conspiracy to make vacancies by which particular favorites can be promoted or certain outside men, friends of parties who are discharging their subordinates, may receive good situations. I can quite understand how that fault might prevail in the staff and as rumour has had it, such does prevail. I am inclined to think there are considerable grounds for those rumours; but whether or not there are grounds in this particular case, of course I am not aware. We are not in a position to prove them, but I think the hon. gentleman has done well in bringing this matter before Parliament. I trust the papers which he seeks will be supplied, and I am quite convinced that he has done a service in calling attention to this matter at the present time.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I have already said there is no objection to bringing down the papers, but it must be seen that it is exceedingly inconvenient to discuss questions of this kind without having the papers before us. I do not know anything about the merits of these cases, but in one of them one of the official was connected with the dispatching of trains, a telegraph operator. The duties performed by some railway officials are a great deal more important than the duties performed by others; they have human life, and property which may be wrecked, under their charge. I think we cannot lightly censure any officer who issues the most rigid instructions in respect to the services of that class of officials. The merits of this case, of course, will be inquired into. My hon. friend has made his statement. There has been no investigation; it is an ex parte statement and must necessarily be so. The hon. gentleman is quite in his right in moving for the papers and making an explanation with regard to them; but it would be premature to say that those dismissals have been unfair or that there has been any injustice done in any quarter, until we have the papers before us.

THE ACTIVE MILITIA.

MOTION.

HON. MR. WARK moved

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General; praying that His Excellency will be pleased to take into consideration the desirability of making such a change in the Militia Law as will render the force more efficient by providing for a Reserve to be composed of men who had served in the Active Militia.

He said: In looking over General Middleton's report on this question, on assuming command of the militia of this Dominion, I was forcibly struck with one remark that he made; he was referring to the very brief time allowed for instruction in the camps, only 12 days, and these could not be fully employed; and he says the consequence is that the men go back to civil life with such a faint smattering of the duties of a soldier that it fades away, and if an emergency should arise and the men were called back to service they would not be treated as recruits. That is the opinion of an experienced military man, and it is worthy of consideration. It must be admitted that our present militia system is far in advance of what it was 60 years ago, when I first entered the service. We were called out then two days annually for company drill and one day for general muster; but the whole population capable of discharging the duties of militiamen were called out every year, and they were bound to respond to the call of the roll under a severe fine or penalty. Our system was general, and it was inexpensive. Although the whole population capable of discharging the duties of militia men were called out, the whole expense at that time, I think, was including inspecting field officers (there might be three, but I think there were only two) only $800 a year for each inspecting field officer. Then each of the battalions had a salaried adjutant and sergeant-major. The adjutant was paid $60 and the sergeant-major $30. This might be said to be the whole expense. In looking to our present system it is no doubt very much more efficient than the system in those old times; but it is expensive. I do not say that the cost is more than we ought to be willing, in this important interest, to incur, but I think that we ought to have more to show for it. The system under which our militia men every three years disappear—go entirely out of sight—I think ought to be altered. I have bestowed a good deal of time, since I placed this notice on the paper, in studying the experience of other countries. I have looked over the militia systems of the great powers of Europe, which we may well look to for information. I will not trouble the House with a long list of figures, but I would just briefly begin with the United Kingdom, and I may remark that it is the only power that depends upon voluntary enlistment to keep up its army; but it does not depend upon voluntary enlistment altogether for its other forces. Its regular army consists of upwards of 200,000 men; and the army reserve, older men who have all passed through the army and served a certain number of years, amounts to something over 50,000—altogether 257,000; but behind that there is not only this comparatively small reserve but they have a force of militia who are called out and required to do duty beyond our militia considerably—28 days every year, or not less than 21 days. That body is bound to do duty like ours in any part of the United Kingdom where their services are required. It consists of 141,344 men. Then there are 14,405 yeomanry who are chiefly, I believe, cavalry; but behind that again there are 251,417 volunteers who are also drilled and disciplined; but I think they act as a local militia not bound to go all over the United Kingdom. Here, then, is a force of 654,193 men, the regular army being only 257,000. There are all these forces at the back of the regular army, as you will observe. In France, again, men are liable to conscription. Every man over 20 years of age and under 40 is liable to do military service. The number of the reserve is not fixed there but every man has to serve. There are two classes; one serves three years, in what is called the active army, and two years in the reserve; another class is only required to serve one year and then go into the reserve. The active force is about 500,000 men; but the reserve is more than double that, although there is no number exactly fixed. Austria has a regular army of about 300,000, the smallest force of any great power, but by recent legislation which I saw notice of the other day in the newspapers, called the Landstrum Bill, they have 330,000 of a Landstrum, which is something like our militia, and they have 270,000 of the Landwehr.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The Landwehr have to do duty—so they all have, in fact.

HON. MR. WARK—It makes altogether 600,000 as a reserve behind the 300,000 regular troops. In Germany, again, the Prussian law has been extended to the whole empire. Every man there is supposed to belong, and in fact legally does belong to the army. They are bound to serve in the army from the age of 20 to 28—that is, 7 years. Three years they serve with the colors, as it is stated, and four years in the reserve. The Imperial army there is about 445,000, but the war footing is 1,500,000; so that in Germany they have a very large reserve. Russia can call out under the laws every year 200,000 into the service, but they cannot afford to keep such a body of men; about half of that number is what is necessary to keep up their forces, which consist of about 550,000 of a regular army. The men are required to serve 15 years, six years in the regular army and 9 years in the reserve—much longer than Germany. Now what I think would be suited to this country would be a period of service something the length of time that the Prussian soldiers serve—three years in the active militia and then four years in the reserve militia, we might call it—it does not matter by what name it is known, but that would be understood. If we had a force of that kind we might afford to reduce the active militia considerably. We have now 36,290 active militia this year, a few hundreds less than last year, when the force was 37,000 men. I see this year General Middleton recommends that the forces should be reduced, and that the time of service should be extended, and I think very prudently. Suppose, for instance, instead of 37,000, our forces were reduced to 30,000, we would then require only 10,000 to recruit our militia every year, and I think there will be no difficulty in getting that number of volunteers. Our population, which at the last census was 4,324,000—816,136 families—increasing at the same rate that it did during the last decade, would be over 5,000,000 at the next census, and that would indicate the existence of over 1,000,000 families. Assuming that each family would have one man able to serve in the militia, 10,000 out of that number would be just one man out of every hundred. That would not be a very heavy percentage. One out of every 100 men capable of discharging militia duties, would be only one man out of 100 in the active militia, and only seven in both branches of the service. This I propose simply for the consideration of the House, and of the Government. There are a number of military men around me; I would like to hear their opinions, because I am superannuated; but I thought it would be desirable to bring this before the notice of the House to strengthen the hands of General Middleton, and I think it would meet the approval of most people who give attention to the subject. I believe that if we had our active militia reduced from 37,000 to 30,000, and had behind that a force of 40,000, it would be a far more efficient body than it is. We would then have 10,000 entering the active militia every year, and 10,000 leaving it and going into the reserve, and 10,000 leaving the reserve seven years older than they entered, and much more efficient and capable of serving their country. Before sitting down, I ought to refer to the camp which was formed at Fredericton last fall. I spent an afternoon there, and was much pleased with the efficiency of the militia. There was an infantry corps with them, belonging to the school, which was of great advantage. Col. Maunsell pointed out—and I think he referred to it in his report—the great benefit that the country militia, who came in, derived from the existence of that trained corps, because they endeavored to learn from those young men, who are very efficient in drill. Col. Maunsell is a very energetic and systematic officer, and he had that camp in a state of admirable efficiency. I have not troubled you with many figures because I know they are not very desirable, and I will not trespass longer on the time of the House now, because I want to hear from hon. gentlemen around me who hold a high rank in the militia, and whose opinions would be worth having.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—In seconding the motion of my hon. friend, I may say that I fully concur in the views he has expressed and the suggestion he has made of rendering available in a reserve force all the members of the active militia who have been drilled at considerable expense. It has often struck me that we have a very valuable force who have served in the active militia and then go out of it and have no further organization, I have no doubt that if a time arrived when we should need the services of these militia men, who have been drilled, they would come forward and be prepared to defend their country; but I agree with the hon. member who moved this address that it is very desirable indeed to have an organization of the active militia who have served their period of three years. In that way it need not be very expensive. At the same time, it might be made very efficient, inasmuch as these persons who have served for three years in the active militia, and been drilled with a good deal of care, would be in an efficient state and require no time or expense to keep up the knowledge which they have acquired in the active force; and without delaying the discussion on this question, I say that I think it would be most desirable if that system of having a reserve force could be carried into effect. They have it in England; they have in the navy something similar to the reserve force of the army. Men who have been in the service of the navy are at liberty to perform other services in active life, and at the same time they are what may be called reserve forces, when occasion requires it they are liable to be called upon. I think some such system might be adopted with our militia which would not be very expensive, but at same time would make our forces more effective.

HON. MR. DEBOUCHERVILLE—For my part I do not understand how we can have a reserve volunteer force. I understand a regular reserve. I would like to know whether there is such a thing as a reserve militia force in England—a reserve volunteer force?

HON. MR. WARK—I cannot say what the volunteers there are called. They enter the service voluntarily, and they are liable to be balloted as well as any other part of the population; but as long as they remain in the volunteer service they are not required to go into the militia, but if they retire from the volunteers they are liable to be balloted into the militia service.

HON. MR. DEBOUCHERVILLE—I was addressing myself more particularly to the hon. gentleman from Sackville, and enquiring if there was such a thing as a reserve volunteer militia force. I do not think that it could exist.

HON. MR. WARK—The militia force of England is not limited; it is just like the army—Parliament provides for a certain number of soldiers and that number may be enlisted, and no more, because there is no means of supporting them. Every year there is a parliamentary grant for the number of soldiers in the regular army, and it is the same with the militia. They make a calculation of how many men they will get, and can call out any number by ballot that the Queen orders, Parliament having granted the necessary funds to support the force required. So there is no reserve needed there, as they have the whole of the militia to fall back upon. They can ballot as many as they please.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—While we are on this question of the militia I wish to make an observation which I made in years past. I have no great confidence in our present system. The volunteer system may do very well in England, but in Canada I do not believe that it is the best. It is well known that last year, when the volunteers were called out, the different battalions were very far from taking their full force. Half the men that left for the field were new recruits enlisted a fortnight before their departure. Now I believe it is hardly right to expose those men, without previous drill, without even a knowledge of firing—some of them had never handled a rifle or a gun before—and our best soldiers and officers unnecessarily. I always thought, and I still believe, that the best system would be if men were balloted from the reserve militia. You have four classes of the reserve militia; you have the first class, young men from 18 to say 26, unmarried men. Why not ballot every three years for ten, twenty or thirty thousand men, or whatever number the Government and Minister of Militia may consider sufficient? Why not ballot amongst that class of men for the number we want and compel them to drill 16 or 18 days each year during the three years of their service? If that were done, and anything should occur that would require the services of the militia, these men would be easily prepared for active service. Even in going to the field they could improve their drill and their position in firing; but under the present system it cannot be denied (I speak more particularly of the Province of Quebec) that the men of each battalion are changed each year so that one-half or two-thirds of them are undrilled men. That system cannot work properly, and though our men have shown the stuff they are made of, they would be much more effective if properly drilled. While this matter was before the House, I thought it only right that I should make this suggestion, and I believe if it were accepted it would be found to work a great deal better than the present system.

HON. MR. WARK.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I am glad that we have had the benefit of hearing the views of the hon. gentleman from Delanaudiere. I believe that his suggestions are good, and that if possible they ought to be adopted by the country. As regarding his ideas, however, the difficulty in carrying them out is that the people strongly oppose the policy of the ballot. They have never felt the necessity for having a regular armed force in the country until such a difficulty has arisen as that experienced last spring. They never realize the fact that their country might be invaded. They say as long as you get young men to volunteer, no matter whether they volunteer permanently or for three or four years service, why ballot us? Why should we leave our farms and all our different branches of industry, when plenty of young men are to be found to volunteer for the service? I believe the principle of the ballot will in the course of time be adopted, as in the United States. It is a sound principle, and the sooner we educate the people up to it the better. We saw last spring, in connection with the insurrection of the North-West, the necessity of having a proper force ready for any emergency, and if we had not had young men of energy, endurance and patriotic spirit to volunteer on that occasion, we do not know what the result might have been. And what a small matter it was to cope with—it was only a matter of some three hundred half-breeds, and when such an encounter cost us so much money and so many lives, what would it be if a larger trouble should arise. With regard to the motion of the hon. gentleman from Fredericton, I think he might have extended it so as to have embraced the young men educated in the Military College at Kingston. We are now spending a large amount of money for that college, and educating, in a most admirable manner, under Colonel Hewitt and his staff, a number of young men, fitting them for the position of engineers and officers in the army; and it is a great pity that all that military education should be lost to the country after those young men leave the college. I think the Government should enquire into that branch of the subject, so that such training should, in many cases, not be lost to the country.

I do not see why gentlemen of wealth and position should have the privilege of sending their sons to that college and give them there a useful education at the expense of the country, if they are to be allowed to go to the United States, England or elsewhere, and never to be heard from again.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Something like the system proposed by the hon. gentleman from Delanauiere was the militia system of Nova Scotia. I remember myself rising from the ranks to the honor of commanding a regiment, and I had a large and efficient force of 900 men under my command, with a company of artillery and a brass band, subscribed for by the county. It is peculiar to that county, because the people there are of German descent, and the military instinct is largely developed in that race. They are fond of military display, and military parade, and have always turned out for camp drill. It was a good system as far as our county was concerned, and very little expense attended it. Except the accoutrements and guns, we had to provide everything ourselves, or nearly so. The suggestion of my hon. friend who has moved in this matter is, I think, a great improvement on the present system. We have established schools of military instruction, and when it was introduced I approved of that system, and it was presumed to be for the different Provinces. The nearest one we have is at Fredericton, and I do not think that many Nova Scotia or New Brunswick young men attend there, or that there are many from Prince Edward Island. In Nova Scotia we scarcely know that there is such a school there. We talk about the Battery at Quebec and know something about that; but it is all important that we should have all our non-commissioned officers in every Province under drill. If we get them thoroughly drilled we can raise a force at any time; and I do not care how unaccustomed to military movements the rank and file may be, if you have well drilled officers and non-commissioned officers they can soon be made effective. I believe three years drill is too short; in fact the twelve days allowed each year are altogether insufficient. The men do not turn out, and when they do they spend two or three days going into camp and then they shorten the time by substitutes and leave of absence. I do not think it is the most efficient way of drilling men. After three years drill many of them drop out, and we lose them entirely. If there was some new regulation by which those volunteers should have longer drill, their number might be reduced; by that means I think we could make the service more efficient as they would perfect their drill so that they would not easily forget it. Unless they are perfectly drilled, what they learn in camp they lose in a short time. With a longer drill, under efficient officers, and having a reserved force from those men thoroughly drilled and brought out every year, we would at all times have at our command a force sufficiently drilled to rely upon in a case of emergency. I do not believe that this money is wasted. I believe that it is well spent, and that it is essential in this country, if we are to become a nation, that we should be able to protect ourselves in time of trouble.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I am sure the House is under an obligation to my venerable and hon. friend who has proposed this motion, for the very interesting statement he has made. We always listen to him with the greatest pleasure, and although, as he says, he is on the retired list, he still seems to take an active interest in those affairs, and I do not think anyone could have placed the subject before us with more completeness and accuracy. The main question is one that interests us all. I do not think we can undervalue the present system, when we have had such evidence of its efficiency within the last year. I do not think there is anything on record which is more to the honor of Canada—which shows more the efficiency and spirit of our young men, than the manner in which, during an inclement season of the year, and under great disadvantages, they went to the front to meet what, although it turned out not to be a rising of the magnitude which was feared, still threatened the peace and prosperity of the North-West. All credit is due to a system which was found, in a sudden emergency, capable of being worked, as the volunteer system worked, in suppressing the North-West rebellion.

No doubt the system may be improved, and there are many things which may be advantageously changed. In speaking, as my hon. friend did, of the necessity of having trained and efficient officers, and having the nucleus of a trained force, he said what will meet with the approval of every hon. gentleman who heard him. It is well known that in the United States the West Point system has furnished all the valuable and all the efficient officers, with very slight exceptions, that have distinguished themselves in any of the battles of that country. During the prolonged war between the North and South, although there were a great many citizen appointments made, the real work was done by the men who had been thoroughly trained at West Point. All the officers that retained their positions in the army, with very few exceptions, on both sides, were West Point men. General Lee himself was superintendent of West Point for many years; General Hooker was a distinguished officer of West Point—in fact, all the men who took high positions, on both sides, were West Point graduates. It was hoped that something of that kind would be the effect of the Military College at Kingston, and I do not suppose it would have been possible to arrange that the young men who go there and pay for their training could be bound to remain in the country or to be held liable for service at any moment; but I do not think there is one of them, who, if he were in the country, would not respond instantly to the call to arms if he found the Dominion needed his services. I have had some opportunity of seeing camp drill. There is a camp held annually in the vicinity of the town in which I live, opposite my residence, on probably the finest camp ground in this province, if not elsewhere—a large reserve of 700 acres belonging to the Government, quite appropriate to the purpose, with ample range for target practice on another reserve on the Lake Shore. I can bear testimony to the fact that although 2,400 or 2,500 men are brought together suddenly to those camps from various parts of the country, they behave themselves with great propriety, and it is astonishing how little complaint of disorder there is, and it is also astonishing how soon they begin to show the effect of drill. Therefore, I can hardly believe that the 15 days which they pass together in camp, and which makes them rub shoulders together, as one might say, can be lost on the young men who come there. It is possible that the same men might be enrolled to come year after year for three years; but the system, crude as it may be, is productive of great benefit, and I may say to my hon. friend that I am instructed to remark, in reply to what he has stated and to the address, that the Government have the subject under consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

THE SHORT LINE RAILWAY.

MOTION.

HON. MR. POWER moved :

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that he will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House, copies of all contracts entered into for the construction of the Short Line Railway from Montreal to St. John and Halifax.

He said: It will probably be within the recollection of hon. gentlemen that I have, on different occasions, called the attention of the House to this matter of the Short Line Railway, and it is not necessary to go over the ground that has been travelled over more than once already. There are just a few points which I think attention should be called to again. The first is that this Short Line Railway had its origin in the lower provinces. I think that the agitation in favor of a short line from Montreal to the lower provinces began in Halifax. The object aimed at was to secure for St. John and Halifax a line from Montreal by the shortest and best practicable route: to put those cities, the great seaports of the lower provinces, in communication with Montreal, the commercial capital of the Dominion by the "shortest and best practicable route;" and those words are used in the Act granting the subsidy—this route to be selected after careful surveys by competent engineers. Hon. gentlemen will remember that when last year it was urged that the route which had been reported upon most favorably by the government engineer, Mr. Schrieber, was not the best line, or that at any rate it was not clear that it was the best line, the answer made was that the country was anxious that this road should be constructed at once, and that even though the line the Government had selected was not the best possible, still it was desirable that the work should be begun immediately, and it was not expedient to waste any more time in trying to find a better line. We were given to understand that the work was to be commenced forthwith upon the passing of the Act last year. Now what is the fact? A year has gone by, and, as far as I am aware, not a stroke of work has been done in connection with the proposed line of railway. That shows clearly that the answer which was given, and the excuse which was made for the Government's neglecting to make such surveys as would determine which was the route entitled to be selected under the terms of the subsidy Act, were not a valid and honest objection at all. It may be well to call attention to another fact with respect to this matter. It will be remembered that Mr. Schreiber's report recommended the route which has been adopted, and he recommended it apparently because according to his calculation it was just a mile shorter than another line which we think is a better one. The "combination route" which was favored by gentlemen from Quebec, and which was also preferred to the route selected by the Government by the people of Nova Scotia, has not been surveyed at all—at least the missing link between the Maine border and Lake Chesuncook has not been surveyed. This whole matter was before the Halifax Chamber of Commerce, at a meeting held on the 20th January last. At that meeting the commercial interest was very fully represented. The two members for the county and city in the other Chamber were present, as far as I remember. I know that Mr. Stairs was there and made a speech, and I think that Mr. Daly was also present. Mr. Stairs gave all the arguments in favor of the decision which the Government had arrived at. There was a very warm discussion—that is, the members present manifested a good deal of interest in what was going on—and finally the Chamber, by a large majority, adopted this resolution:—

“Resolved, that this Chamber of Commerce protest against the adoption line No. 6, or the so-called International route, for the Short Line Railway, as not fulfilling the conditions promised by Sir Charles Tupper and the Dominion Government, viz., that the 'shortest and best practicable line' should be selected after exhaustive surveys; also, that this Chamber again begs to affirm its former deliverances on the same subject.”

I have read this simply to show that the people who are most directly and deeply interested in this matter were not satisfied, and I may say, are not now satisfied with the action taken by the Government. It is possible that things have gone so far now that the Government cannot change their decision. I do not know that that is the case, but possibly it is; at any rate we ought to know what has been done, and that is the reason why I ask for a copy of the contract. What is being done? We know that up to the present time substantially nothing has been done. The Government might last season have made a survey of that portion of the combination route lying between the Etchemin River and the head of Chesuncook Lake—that is the only portion of the 'combination line' which has not been surveyed. They might have made a survey of that line to ascertain whether or not it is practicable. There is not much doubt that it is, but in order to remove doubt the survey should have been made. The country lying between Richmond and the head of Chesuncook Lake might also have been surveyed; and then the Government would have been in a position at the beginning of this session to know which was the shortest and best practicable route. But they really know nothing more about it now than they did a year ago. The people interested in the International road have had their own way; they have gone on and made surveys in the State of Maine with a view of trying to get a practicable line through there, which the surveys of last year had not found—that is a line with reasonable grades and curves. Those gentlemen do not make their doings known to Parliament, and we do not know now what the position of the matter is. I said that Mr. Schreiber's report gave the preference to route No. 6, the International route. There were two routes which connected with the International Railway: one surveyed by Mr. Duffy went north of Moosehead Lake, and the other went south of Mr. Duffy's line. Mr. Schreiber gave the preference to the southern line, ostensibly because it was a mile shorter from Montreal to St. John than that which ran north of the lake. What have we ascertained since? That the project for bridging the lake which shortened the road by several miles has been abandoned. They found it impracticable; that the lake could not be bridged, and they would have to get up to the east of the lake by surmounting very heavy grades there. They found that the lake was deeper than they had thought it was; and, as I am informed, the road is to go south of Moosehead Lake altogether. What has become of the argument in favor of this as the shortest route? Because by crossing Moosehead Lake and cutting off some ten miles of the distance, the government route was only one mile shorter than the one running north of the lake. When you add this other distance, arising from going south of the lake, it is some nine miles longer. Then it has been ascertained, which was not admitted last year, that instead of starting at the Victoria Bridge, at St. Lambert, this road is to start from the new Pacific railway bridge at Lachine, which adds some twenty miles more; so that really we have to add something like thirty miles now to Mr. Schreiber's figures to get the real length of the proposed short line; and instead of being preferable to the combination route or to the central route, on the score of length, it is far inferior to either of them. We find that these people who are going to build this road; I do not know exactly by what name they call themselves, as sometimes they are described as the International railway company, and sometimes as the Atlantic & North-Western Railway Company; but by whatever name they may be known, they propose to build the line from Lachine to St. John's, Quebec. They propose to utilize the existing line from St. John's to West Farnham, and then they propose to build again in the direction of Waterloo, until they come pretty near to that town, after which they propose to utilize the Waterloo and Magog road to get into Sherbrooke and Lennoxville. Here we have a large sum of money to be expended in building a road between Lachine and Lennoxville. That was not necessary, because there are already two lines of railway running from Montreal to Lennoxville. The people of the Lower Provinces do not want a third road there; the subsidy was not granted for that object; the subsidy was granted with the object of bridging over the portions of the route where there is no road now. However this arrangement may suit the plans of the International and Pacific railways, it does not suit the purpose for which it was originally intended, the interests of the people of the Lower Provinces, and the money, so far as they are concerned, is practically wasted. I regret to feel that, after we had apparently succeeded in getting the Government and Parliament to vote this large sum of money which was to secure to us the shortest and best line from Montreal to St. John and Halifax, we are not going to have anything of the sort. It was stated in reply to a question in the House of Commons that the section from Fredericton to Salisbury or somewhere in that neighborhood was to be built. I had been informed that in the contract which was entered into there was no provision as to that; but I am bound to suppose that the answer given in the House of Commons is correct. At any rate, it is to be regretted that so large a sum is to be expended in building additional roads where there are already sufficient roads. A whole year has been spent in trying to find a way through an almost impassable country, while the Government have not thought fit to make surveys of routes which are in every way preferable to the one selected. I say further that, when the Government considered the fact that it was a general topic of conversation amongst parties who were interested in the construction of this road, that the reason why the International road was selected was that a member of the Government, the Minister of Railways, was himself very deeply interested in the International Railway, and that his interest in that road was the cause that prevented the other routes from getting fair play, I am surprised that the Government out of respect for themselves, did not see that the proper surveys were made of those other lines, and that they received fair play. The conclusion which will be drawn by most people—I do not say whether it is a just conclusion or not—is that the Government allowed the Minister of Railways to select the route which suited his own personal interests best, a thing which I deem most lamentable for the credit of the country. Inasmuch as this information has already been moved for in the House of Commons, and as the Government have promised to bring it down there I do not know that it will be necessary to divide the House on the matter here.

THE SPEAKER—Does the hon. gentleman wish to withdraw the motion?

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I desire to observe that this is a very proper motion. It is proper that Parliament should know now, before it rises, what has really been done about the letting of the contracts upon the Short Line Railway from Montreal to the Atlantic ocean. It is not a pleasing duty, as the hon. gentleman observed, to refer to all the private scheming of members of the Government and members of Parliament in connection with such projected lines. When any new railway is about to be undertaken, one cannot fail to observe that the casual advantages of public life, under the Government of Sir John Macdonald, have become a study. Some of those parties last session pursued a very unguarded course on the floor of Parliament. They did not hesitate to malign the character of competent and distinguished engineers to serve their purposes. The people of the Province of Quebec and their public journals complained loudly of the injustice done them in this connection. Firstly, they observed that Sir John's great boast in the London clubs was that we have constructed a through line from ocean to ocean on our own territory, so that the Queen's troops at any moment could be carried from the Atlantic to the Pacific without passing through a foreign country. Now I would ask why has the Government not kept within Canadian territory? A line has been recommended by competent engineers to pass through the Province of Quebec—a line with more favorable curves, easier grades, and one which could be more cheaply built and would pass through our own territory to the sea-board. Perhaps the Government are not going on at present with the so-called short line! We do not hear of their having given out any contracts yet. I have a humble suggestion to make to this House, and I am satisfied that the House will consider it a reasonable one. Our past experience of the surveys, made by the Government, and the contracts given out by them, has been a sad and melancholy one. Do I require to remind the House that three millions of dollars were literally wasted upon the survey of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which survey was never used? What a melancholy commentary on the Government of a country like this that three millions of dollars from the consolidated revenue should be wasted on such survey, while it will be remembered that certain Ministers of the Crown were charged with having become well off from their connection with the construction of certain railways!

HON. MR. ROBITAILLE—They are not known. I never heard of it before.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—My humble suggestion—and I hope the House will act upon it—is to obtain from Sir George Stephen and Mr. Van Horne their opinion on the projected short line to Halifax and St. John and the contracts connected therewith. Those two gentlemen possess engineering skill, and have rendered services to the Dominion that can hardly be praised too highly. If the Government would submit this matter to them it might save the country one or two million of dollars. We might have some guarantee that the short line would be located properly, and not for the selfish purposes of certain parties. I do not say that this eastern extension should be built now; I cannot see why it should be constructed at an enormous cost before it is required. We have already, at a cost of $47,000,000, a road extending from Montreal to the Atlantic Ocean, and is the public treasury so full at the present time, that we can build another line which will not pass even through our own territory? That fact is inconsistent with the statement made by Sir John Macdonald in London. How could the Queen's troops ever pass through the State of Maine? Would the Colonial Minister ever dream of sending troops by such a route? I think we might postpone the construction of this line until we see some prospects of securing the Asiatic trade from Hong-Kong and Japan. There is no harm in cherishing sanguine hopes of future trade from the Asiatic ports, but let us not enter upon increased heavy obligations before such lines of railway are required.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—My hon. friend from Woodstock seems to be very erratic with regard to this matter; his thoughts and fancies take him entirely astray and he is not consistent with regard to his previous utterances on this subject. He speaks of this as if it were a project; he does not seem to know that the railway has already been commenced. He asks to have the contract referred to Sir George Stephen and Mr. VanHorne. I believe that they approved of the route long ago and they are going to extend the line to Sydney, Cape Breton. My hon. friend must have been asleep all this time and not aware of what was going on. He has not a very profound regard for the opinion of Sir George Stephen and Mr. VanHorne. Not more than a year ago he looked upon them as men who were robbing the public revenue. He said they were building something which was a quixotic affair and would end in the ruin of the country—that the Canadian Pacific Railway would be an incubus on the Dominion and would not pay for the grease required for the wheels of its trains. Now he thinks they are such intelligent and far-seeing men that this matter should be referred to them. I agree with the hon. member from Halifax that this was to be the shortest and most practicable route from Halifax and St. John to Montreal.

HON. MR. POWER—The shortest and best.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—The shortest and best, and it was to be a route entirely on Canadian soil. We complain, in the Lower Provinces, that the Grand Trunk Railway Co. have diverted our trade to the United States. We wanted an independent line, and we are getting it, and the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will be to carry trade as far as possible on their own road. Of course they cannot control the traffic, it will go by its natural channel and as parties intend it to to go; but as far as the interests of this country are concerned, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will, in their own interest, carry it as far as they can on their own line. I say with my hon. friend from Halifax that the best route has not been adopted; but I believe, on the whole, considering the position of our country, with the State of Maine extending so far north and dividing New Brunswick and Quebec, that we could not get a shorter line.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The Canadian Pacific Railway Company approve of it and are going to take it over.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Yes. With regard to the Chamber of Commerce at Halifax it is a partisan club.

HON. MR. POWER—Not at all.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—This meeting was a surprise to gentleman who were opposed to the decision at which it arrived. They claimed that it should be adjourned until the matter could come up with sufficient notice for a full discussion, but the question was sprung upon the meeting.

HON. MR. POWER—My hon. friend will excuse me, but that is a mistake.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I remember what the press said at the time. I am told by gentlemen who attended the meeting that it was sprung upon the meeting. They had met for another purpose altogether. The meeting broke up in a great deal of discord and instead of tending to benefit the Chamber of Commerce it has had the opposite effect. It is unfortunate for Halifax that little quarrels on political matters should prevent them looking at those questions in a broad, statesmanlike light and in the interest of the public. I believe this line is far more favorable to St John than to Halifax, but that cannot be helped. The geographical position of our country renders it so. Therefore, while I have no objection to the finding of the Chamber of Commerce, yet the manner in which it was done shows the hostility which that Chamber has to anything done by the Dominion government.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The contracts and papers for which the hon. gentleman inquires are brought down or about being brought down to the other House, and, as he has suggested himself, it would be unnecessary to put the motion now. However, the hon. gentleman can put it if he chooses to do so.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman from Lunenburg has undertaken to discredit the resolution of the Halifax Chamber of Commerce, which I read here, by calling that institution a partisan club. The hon. gentleman is utterly mistaken. The resolutions of the Halifax Chamber of Commerce were looked upon as very valuable expressions of opinion between 1873 and 1878, because they suited to a certain extent, the views of hon. gentlemen opposite. Now, when the same body, at meetings which are much more largely attended than the meetings held in those days, find fault with the policy adopted by the present government, they are told by gentlemen, like my hon. friend—who may perhaps be excused because he is not familiar with the facts of which he is speaking—that they are a partisan club. This question was not sprung upon the meeting. Mr. Stairs, one of the members of the county, was there, prepared to deal with the question and to make a speech upon it. He did make a speech upon it; and at a previous meeting Mr. Daly was present as well, and I think he was also present at the meeting to which I have referred. Gentlemen representing all shades of political opinion were present. The resolution which I took the liberty to read to the House was moved by the Mayor of Halifax, one of the strongest Conservatives in the Province of Nova Scotia; and it was voted for by numbers of Conservatives, but still my hon. friend who, as I say, can only be excused on the ground that he does not know the facts of the case, undertakes to tell us that this was a partisan club, and that the question was sprung on the meeting, which was all one-sided. The hon. gentleman was completely and utterly wrong, and if he has stated what he has said without having obtained the information from some other person, then I hardly know by what language to characterize the speech he has made.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I got the information from members of the Chamber of Commerce.

HON. MR. POWER—All I can say is that any member of the Chamber of Commerce who described that meeting in that way, stated what was an unmitigated untruth. I did not, as the House know, care to trouble them long on this subject to-day, but I wish to say this with respect to the so-called short line.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Senator Power was present and made a speech.

HON. MR. POWER—Yes.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—And a very decided political speech too.

HON. MR. POWER—When the members for the county were present there was no reason why I should not be there and reply. I repeat it that my views were better received than the views advanced on the other side. The feeling in the city of Halifax and of the people in that neighborhood, who were the first to originate this cry for the short line railway is that the Government, by the course which they have taken, are going to divert a large amount of business from the Intercolonial Railway—that they are going to increase very largely the yearly deficit on that railway and to do that without serving in any way the province of Nova Scotia or any point east of Moncton. I admit that this road, as about to be constructed, will make the distance from Montreal to St. John considerably shorter than it is; but the combination route would have made the distance still shorter and given St. John a good deal better line.

HON. MR. PLUMB—There is no evidence of that.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman from Niagara is very fond of making statements that he is not quite prepared to substantiate. The evidence was furnished the House last year. If the hon. gentleman will take the report of the government engineer of last year, and take into consideration the fact that the scheme for the crossing of Moosehead Lake has been abandoned, and that the railway is to start from Lachine instead of St. Lambert, he will find that this route is about thirty miles shorter than the route adopted.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—The hon. gentleman has stated that already.

HON. MR. POWER—A good thing cannot be stated too often. I was just going to say, as has been stated by the hon. gentleman who is in charge of the House just now, that this return has been moved for and the motion has been carried in the other House, and it is not necessary that I should have the papers brought down, and with the consent of the seconder I would ask leave to withdraw it.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I ask permission to make an explanation. My veracity has been brought in question and the article in the paper has been referred to. I will just read three lines of this report:—

“Mr. D. F. Power said it appeared that the matter had assumed such a clear party complexion, and the Liberals seeming to be in the majority in the meeting he had no doubt the motion would carry.”

That is the very resolution which the hon. gentleman has quoted.

HON. MR. POWER—I wish to say in reference to that, that the Mayor contradicted Mr. Power, and that the Mayor, who is as strong a Conservative as Mr. Power, moved that resolution.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—The meeting was a bear garden.

The motion was withdrawn.

AN ADJOURNMENT.

MOTION.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that when the House adjourns this day it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, the 25th inst., at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I rise to oppose this motion, and in doing so I am going to make a very humble request of Mr. Botsford, that in any remarks I make he will not, as he usually does, interrupt me by rising to points of order on every occasion, and creating disorder in the House. It is well known there is no gentleman of his name in New Brunswick, who is not in some Government office—

HON. MR. POWER.

HON. GENTLEMEN—Order, order!

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman laughs at the disorder he creates. The hon. gentleman has no right to address these personal, offensive remarks to any member. He is now in his seat and cannot resume without the leave of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

THE BRITISH COLUMBIA SECTION OF THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B. C.) inquired

Of the Government at what date the British Columbia Section of the Canadian Pacific Railway will be sufficiently completed for regular traffic?

He said: My reason for asking this question is that the work of a company in British Columbia depends upon the completion of this portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The financial agent is out from England and he wants to have an official answer from the Government so as to fix the time when this work referred to in my inquiry will be completed so that from that information the company will have a date for the completion of other works in the province.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I may say, in reply to my hon. friend, that it was contemplated to open the road through on the Queen's Birthday. There has been some slight delay, which was unexpected and unavoidable in a great work like that, and the Government is unable, I am instructed, to say when the road will be completed; but they expect it to be completed at a very early day.

HON. MR. MACDONALD—About the 1st of June?

HON. MR. PLUMB—I could not fix a date—I am not instructed.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (106) "An Act to amend and consolidate as amended the statutory provisions respecting Chinese Immigration."

In the Committee,

HON. MR. ALLAN—This is a Bill to amend and consolidate the Act relating to Chinese immigration which was passed last year. The Bill contains several new provisions, but the greater part of it is the same as the Act; but the existing law and amendments are consolidated in the Bill. The principal changes are as follows:—The first is transferring the management of this department, if I may so express it, to the officers of the Customs Department. It charges the Minister of Customs with the administration of this Act and the general superintendence of the matters to which it relates. Then there are certain exemptions from its operation, and provision is made for applying the same regulations relating to arrivals of Chinese by railway to the arrivals of Chinese by steamer. There is another provision for the passage of Chinese through the Dominion of Canada from one foreign country to another. There are also some new regulations as to registration and the manner in which it shall be done, and some new regulations as to the returns which shall be made of vital statistics. Those are the principle features of the bill which are new.

On the sixth clause,

HON. MR. POWER—Before that clause is adopted I wish to make one or two observations. It may be that this is an old clause, but it is of some consequence, and attracted a good deal of attention in the other House, where a division was taken upon it. In the Act of last year provision was made for an interpreter at a salary of not more than $3000 a year. It was alleged then that one could not state at what salary an interpreter could be got. It was admitted by the Secretary of State, who had charge of the Bill in the other House, that during the year the Government had secured an interpreter—one of the subordinate officers of the Customs Department in Victoria—at a salary of about $700 a year, and it was contended, and I think very justly and properly contended, that there was no excuse for putting in this large salary of $3000 a year, and a suspicion was very freely expressed there, which perhaps it would not be right for us to express here, where we are so much more moderate than they are in the House of Commons,—that behind this there lay an intention to provide for some friend of the Minister. We cannot change this under the ruling of his Honor the Speaker—a ruling which I am not questioning at all. We cannot touch a money vote but we can simply remark on it as I now do. I think that it should have been a salary of not more than $1000 a year instead of $3000.

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B.C.)—In the House of Commons the name of Mr. Church was mentioned in connection with this office. I am very sure that he would not look at the position. He is a man of means and is going to leave the country very soon. As far as he is concerned I do not think he would look at it at all.

HON. MR. NELSON—Mr. Church could not act as interpreter anyway.

HON. MR. ALLAN—As has been explained by the hon. member from Halifax, we cannot interfere with the clause. I can only, in reply to what the hon. gentleman has mentioned, say that it was stated in the other House that there was no intention to spend any such sum of money, so long as any person could be found to act for a lower salary.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I presume there will be nobody appointed, if there is no necessity for it. This has been on the statute book for a year or two and nobody has been appointed yet.

HON. MR. POWER—Yes, somebody has been appointed.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—No salary has been paid. It seems to me that the policy adopted by the Provincial Legislature of British Columbia is to actually starve out the Chinese. They will not permit them to have anything to do with any work under the control of the local legislature. I say that the policy adopted there, if carried out, will relieve the Government of paying such a salary before long, if the time has not already arrived.

The clause was adopted.

HON. MR. NELSON—I think there must be a mistake in sub-section C of clause 2. The expression "Chinese" means in this Bill a person born of a Chinese father. I think it would be better to have it "of a Chinese mother."

HON. MR. ALLAN—The clause excited some learned criticism in the other House; and I would not like to make any change in it without consulting the hon. gentleman who had charge of the Bill there.

HON. MR. MACDONALD—This clause is, no doubt, the result of an incident which happened last year in British Columbia. An English gentleman came to our province from China; he had married a Chinese woman and had several children; when they came to the province he had to pay a tax on these children and on his wife as well. Now, such an incident might occur again, and I think the children ought certainly to be of the father's nationality. The father in that case was an Englishman, and his children were certainly half English.

HON. MR. ALLAN—I think what was intended by this clause was to meet just such a case. It was intended to trace the genealogy on the father's side only.

HON. MR. NELSON—I think the word "parent" should be used.

On clause eight,

HON. MR. MACDONALD—I propose to move an amendment to that section and to speak at some length upon it. In dealing briefly with this Bill I propose to state a few facts bearing on the question, rather than appeal to the sympathy of hon. gentlemen and to their sense of fair play. If some of the provisions of this Act should be found oppressive and not quite British in their character, I fully exonerate the Parliament of Canada and the Government of Canada from all blame, as this legislation has been forced upon them by the province from which I come. It is well known to hon. gentlemen that all the pressure for this legislation comes entirely from British Columbia. There is a certain party there who advocate this restriction, and who accuse the Chinese of all kinds of depravity and immorality, and of being slaves. No doubt those parties fancy that by putting these restrictions on Chinese immigration and by keeping up this agitation, that they are doing a great deal of good to the community in which they reside; but I cannot reconcile the actions of those persons with that of British subjects living in a colony of the British Empire, in the nineteenth century, under the British flag, where every one under that flag is supposed to be as free as the air we breathe, and where all are supposed to stand on an equality. I believe immorality and depravity have nothing at all to do with this question; it is entirely a question of monopoly and of labor. The laborers in the country desire to keep labor scarce and wages high. That is at the bottom of the whole thing. The Chinese, no doubt, are immoral, as white people are immoral; but there is one thing they do not do: they do not flaunt their immorality in the face of the public as you see it done in civilized Europe, and in the towns of America; and unless you seek out that immorality, although it exists, you cannot and will not see it. This agitation first of all commenced in California, and such a pressure was brought to bear on the politicians and public men in that country, that the legislature of that State finally appointed a commission to inquire into and take evidence as to the charge so frequently brought against the Chinese of immorality and slavery, and having secret tribunals for the trial of offenders, and I will read brief extracts to the House, which I hope may be of some interest and will help to clear away some doubts as to the habits of those people. Colonel Bee, the Chinese Consul at San Francisco, has recently published, in a memorial to the Congress of the United States, a statement of facts. He sets forth that in 1862 the Legislature of California appointed a committee to investigate the Chinese question, which reported:—

"That after the most thorough inquiry they were satisfied that there was no system of coolieism or slavery among the Chinese of this State, and that they are as free as any person in the State."

The same charges were again brought forward in 1876, and an exhaustive inquiry was made by the Congressional Committee, of which Senator Morton was chairman, who reported that:—

"Chinese labor in California is as free as any other—they all come as free men, and are their own masters absolutely. The Chinese seeing that white miners in the gold mines of California were organized into societies for mutual protection and for charitable purposes, giving aid to new comers, and aid to the sick, did the same thing. Their organizations are simply benevolent, and the only foundation for the charge that they maintain tribunals outside our law is the fact that the presidents of the companies act as arbitrators to settle difficulties between their countrymen, although neither party is ever bound by their findings."

Before the Morton Committee, Mr. Joseph A. Goolidge, secretary and manager for ten years of the Merchants' Exchange, testified that:—

"They are intelligent, shrewd, courteous, gentlemanly and honorable in their business transactions."

Richard G. Sneath, president of a bank, and a merchant for twenty years, said on this point:—

"I have dealt a great deal with the merchants in this city, and have always found them truthful, honorable and perfectly reliable in all their business engagements. I have never had one of them fail to live up to his contracts. I never lost a dollar by them in a business amounting to several millions of dollars. We commonly accepted a Chinaman's word as good for a cargo of merchandise, while a written contract was demanded of a white man"

So much for merchants, now for labourers. Mr. Justice Hydenfeldt, associate of the Supreme Court and a resident of California for 27 years, testified that,

He considered the Chinese the best laboring class we have among us—more faithful, more reliable and more intelligent than an equal number of European immigrants. Nearly all can read and write.

Donald McLellan, manager of a woollen mill and employer of 300 Chinese, testified:

"I never found a case of theft among them. I have never seen a drunken Chinaman in my life."

Col. W. W. Hollister, one of the largest farmers in California and a long time employer of Chinamen, testified:

"As a labourer he is most submissive and kindly, ready to do what you want done with entire good will. I have found him honest and very intelligent. Who ever saw a drunken Chinaman?"

HON. MR. NELSON—I have.

HON. MR. MACDONALD—He must have had an example before his eyes of some white man. Col. Hollister continues:

"His moral condition is so good that out of the 400 Chinese population in Santa Barbara there have been but five arrests in a year. I never saw a better population in my life. If the teaching of paganism makes honest men, as I find Chinamen to be I think seriously of becoming a pagan myself."

As to their personal habits, Mr. Goolidge said:

"In cleanliness of person they are remarkable. I have observed them closely on various occasions and cannot call to mind an instance of dirty face or hands, or soiled garments.

William F. Babcock, employer of 120 Chinamen, said:

"Every night of their lives Chinamen bathe themselves from head to foot. They are in this respect different from the lower white classes."

I now give the following extract from the writings of an eminent Frenchman:

"M. Eugene Simon was French Consul in China during several years. Not content with simply discharging his duty, he has visited the towns and inspected the country districts; he has penetrated into the stores of merchants, the shops of artisans, and the cabins of the peasants—cabins that many rural laborers in France might well envy. He gained the confidence of the natives, and so has been able to study, to anatomize, their social existence. He commences—where China must be commenced—with individual and family life. That is the source of Chinese organization and vitality. The Chinese realize the principle of the 'greatest happiness of the greatest number.' They have all the liberty, justice, and security they require—or demand. They pay only three francs per head, annually, in taxes, while France, who plumes herself, according to M. Simon, on being the head of civilization, pays one hundred francs per inhabitant. The Chinese peasants, too, are better lodged and fed than those in France; have more copious and varied repasts; no meal but is followed by cakes at the dessert; and the laborers are more gay and blithesome to boot.

As to secret tribunals, the Morton Committee report:—

“There are no lawyers, no police, in China, because every family decides its own disputes and each individual is a policeman. M. Simon regards Chinese society as the ideal of perfection, because peaceful, happy and prosperous. Perhaps China resembles France between the sixth and twelfth centuries. She then vegetated and was lapped in repose.”

That, hon. gentlemen, is testimony that cannot be contradicted, I believe, and these are, the people who come to our shores, these are the people who are invited to our country by our contractors and others. Now what do we find? That our provincial government, urged on by the working classes, are forcing these men into beggary and starvation and fill up our jails, because they must live, and work they cannot get, as every contract given out by the Government contains a clause that Chinese labor cannot be employed under it. The effect of it is that these people must resort to robbery and thieving in order to live, and our jails are full of them. I am sorry that such a law should come from the country to which I belong. I express the hope that this House and the Dominion Government will not bend or yield any further to demands for legislation of this kind. I am in favor of a certain moderate restriction, for two reasons; one reason is that we do not want Chinamen to colonize our country, but we ought to treat them fairly and justly when they are here. The next reason is if they come to our country now they cannot find employment on our public works, and will have to starve, and they can do much better in their own country. I do hope that the Government will not yield any further in that direction. I propose to move an amendment to this clause.

HON. MR. ALLAN—In the Bill as it originally stood, merchants were included amongst the exemptions, and the objection was raised in the House of Commons that parties had entered the country with certificates showing that they were merchants, and who really turned out to be laborers and paupers; therefore it was considered necessary to make this restriction apply to their case as well to prevent representation and improper advantage being taken of it. I confess I think that the hon. gentleman's amendment, as it is worded, guards against all that, because it not only provides that in case a Chinaman entering Canada, who is furnished already with a certificate from the consular agent from the port from which he sails, and in the event of his having deceived that consul or the authorities by his representations, that he shall pay fifty dollars upon entry; but that if it is proved to the satisfaction of the Comptroller, after residing twelve months in the country, that he has bona fide carried on the business of a merchant during that time, that the $50 will then be returned to him. I think I might exercise discretionary power in acceding to the amendment, because it will remove a substantial objection, which may be urged against the Bill, that in seeking to keep out and exclude an objectionable class of Chinamen, whom it is considered a misfortune to allow into the country, we also prevent those men of respectability, who are engaged in trade, from establishing themselves in the Dominion.

HON. MR. DEBOUCHERVILLE—This provides for a refund of money; have we a right to make such an amendment in the Senate?

HON. MR. ALLAN—That is a question I am not prepared to answer, and I would ask the hon. gentleman from Victoria to allow his amendment to stand over until the third reading of the Bill.

HON. MR. NELSON—I must say I am rather astonished at the stand my hon. friend from Victoria has taken to day. Of course we all believe, and all people under the British flag believe, that any colony under that flag should be free to all comers, and more particularly on the continent of America. As far as that policy is concerned, the policy of freedom is a good one, and is a policy that has aided not only in the development of this country and the Republic to the south of us, but in the development of all the colonies of Great Britain; but when we find a people differing very materially from ours coming into the country as the Chinese come into the Dominion and into the United States, banding themselves together and holding themselves aloof from all other classes of the people, I think it is time for us to consider whether a people of that kind are allowed to come into the country without restriction for the general welfare of the State. It is time for us to consider whether those people are likely eventually to become part and parcel of our own people. At a very early time in the history of the United States a policy was adopted by which a certain alien class was brought into that country—I refer to the African negro. They, of course, were brought into America as slaves. They continued for many years in that country as slaves, but I am happy to say that slavery has ceased to exist on this continent. In 1800 there were about 1,000,000 of those colored people in the United States of America. In 1870 they had increased to within a fraction of 7,000,000. During the existence of slavery the growth of those people was very small indeed; but when slavery was abolished they had increased to nearly 4,000,000. From that time until 1880 they increased very rapidly in number. I ask this House to-day if a people of that kind, totally alien in feeling and sentiment to the people of the United States are not a source of great danger to the future peace of that country? We can scarcely peruse an American newspaper that is not filled with details of foul outrages committed by that class of people upon the whites and accounts of fearful retaliation upon the perpetrators of them. It only shows that the importation of a people differing in feeling, in character, in culture and manners and customs, into a country with the population of which they cannot by any possible means assimilate, is calculated to be a great source of danger to the State. I believe to-day that one of the coming troubles in the United States, a trouble that has not as yet possibly been seriously considered by the great statesmen of that country, but one of the great and growing troubles to-day is arising out of the fact of having a large colored population in that country. There are indications that a strong feeling exists amongst that class against the white races, and we may look forward at no distant day, when that population has materially increased, to a war of races in the southern states, and what may be the result of such a war is a thing we do not exactly care to contemplate. The increase in the negro population of the United States to-day, from births alone, equals in proportion the entire increase in the white population from births and immigration. We may readily understand that in such a rapid increase as that there is danger to the state. With this experience before our eyes, in opposing the Bill what are we proposing to do to-day? We propose to allow into the Dominion of Canada just such a class of people—a class who will always be in opposition to the European and American races. The hon. gentleman shakes his head, but I tell him it is so and I assure him that there can be no real fusion—no production of a mixed race between us and the Chinese.

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B. C.)—I propose nothing of the kind.

HON. MR. NELSON—There can be no real fusion between those people and ours; at the end of centuries they will stand out just as separate and distinct from our population as do the negroes of the United States of to-day, and we all know that the Chinese are just as menacing and aggressive as the negroes are where they are in the ascendant. Looking at the question from this point of view, and considering the vast numbers of those people in China, some five or six hundred millions, and the result of throwing open our doors to such an immigration as that, I think before we allow those people to come amongst us freely, every year in increasing numbers, we should pause and reflect upon what is likely to be the result of such a policy. Then with regard to the question of labor, my hon. friend says that this legislation has been brought about as a question of labor between the whites and the Chinese. I say it should be a question of labor. How do those people come amongst us? Do they come with their wives and families with the intention of settling amongst us and spending their earnings in the country? No, they come as single men; and while our workmen have their wives and families to feed, clothe and educate, these Chinamen have only themselves to support. As a consequence they can work more cheaply, and they do work for less wages; but they only work just so much cheaper as to give them the preference over the white population. I say it is against our interest; it is against the interest and the development of the country. It is against the development of our manufactures and against the future prosperity of the country to allow such an alien element to come in and tide back our working classes who have wives and families to support, and who are bringing up those families to assist in populating and developing the country. What do the Chinese live upon? They live upon rice principally, brought from their own country. What do they wear? Their clothing is of the most inexpensive description, the greater portion of which is brought from their own country. Has not my hon. friend from Victoria seen troupes of Chinamen coming out from the factories in Victoria clad in the paper-made shoes of China? As a population they leave nothing in the country, and take all they can earn out of it, and are in every respect a most undesirable class of immigrants.

THE SPEAKER—It being 6 o'clock I now leave the chair.

AFTER RECESS.

The Committee was resumed.

HON. MR. NELSON—At six o'clock I had just been mentioning that I saw a troupe of Chinamen coming out of one of the boot and shoe factories in Victoria wearing shoes with paper soles imported from China: they were not even wearing the boots and shoes that they themselves were employed to manufacture. I might ask what these people give in return for the hire that we pay them. Of course, the answer to that would be they give us their work, but that is simply a direct return. The people of our own race give us not only their work, but the amount of their wages is spent within the country in the support of their wives and families in various ways. The Chinese give us absolutely as little as they can in return for their work. Their money is hoarded up and sent out of the country. From this point of view I would draw your attention to what would be the effect of having these people employed on all our works throughout the Dominion of Canada. A very large proportion of the products of our factories in the country is consumed by the wives and children of the workmen, and the workmen themselves. But this would all be done away with and trade would soon be paralyzed if these people were largely employed in the country. The main objection to the Chinese is that they are not of our race and cannot become a part of ourselves. We cannot build up a homogeneous people in Canada with races of that description, a population totally alien to ours. The hon. gentleman from Victoria thought fit to quote certain statements in regard to the character of the Chinese; I did not exactly hear the source from which he got them. Why does he do this? Has he not had sufficient knowledge of the Chinese in British Columbia himself during the last 20 or 25 years to know their character without having to refer to statements made by British consuls in Hong Kong and other parts of the world? He has also told us that this agitation against the Chinese commenced in California. Does not the hon. gentleman and the House know that such is not the case—that the people of the colony of Victoria legislated against the Chinese many years ago—that the people of New South Wales, of Queensland and of New Zealand legislated against them long ago.

HON. MR. MACDONALD — What dates?

HON. MR. NELSON—I cannot give you the dates. These facts are known to everybody. The first legislation of the colony of Victoria, restricting Chinese immigration, was disallowed by the Imperial Government. They legislated on the subject again, and again it was disallowed, and the third time when they legislated intimation was sent home that any further disallowance would be disregarded. Our fellow colonists knew what they wanted better than the authorities in England did, and I say to this House and to the eastern provinces of Canada to-day that the people of British Columbia have not taken any new action on this matter; they have had the same experience precisely as the people of New Zealand and the Australian colonies and the people of the United States. This is no new legislation. The hon. gentleman from Victoria has spoken of the various good qualities and virtues of the Chinese. I have no desire to detract from their good name, but the hon. gentleman's statements I think are by no means correct. In the first place he has made the assertion that they are a very sober race. I believe in general they are, but when he says that no one has ever seen a Chinaman drunk I say that is entirely incorrect. I have myself seen them drunk time and again. Another remark which the hon. gentleman has made is that if they have vices they do not flaunt them. I do not know whether any change has taken place in the state of affairs which existed not long ago in San Francisco, but in the Chinese quarter of that city they flaunted their vices so openly that the local authorities had to legislate specially on the subject. A respectable person could not walk the Chinese quarter of San Francisco, and no lady would attempt to go in that direction.

HON. MR. NELSON.

HON. MR. PLUMB—There are many parts of the city of New York through which a lady could not walk.

HON. MR. MACDONALD—And of London too.

HON. MR. NELSON—I am aware of that, but the hon. gentleman has claimed that these people do not flaunt their vices—that they are almost perfection. Such is not the case. No place in London, New York, or among the European population of San Francisco can be found anything like the Chinese quarter of San Francisco. I only state this because the hon. gentleman has made statements about the Chinese which I know, from my own knowledge, to be absolutely untrue. But to my mind the whole point in this question lies in one fact—that the Chinese are not like ourselves, that they never can become part and parcel of the Canadian people. They always will be a separate nationality in the Dominion, just as much so a century hence as the negroes of the South are to-day. We have had experience with the negroes and with the aborigines of this country, and that experience tells us that no such thing as a mixed race of the Indian or negro and white races can exist. We have half-breeds, quarter-breeds and so on, but we have no homogeneous race out of materials that are so separate and distinct. The Chinese do not want to become a part of our people. They regard themselves as superior to any race on earth, and hold themselves aloof and will continue to hold themselves aloof from our population, and I submit that they are not a desirable population in our country. We do not want to create a second Chinese Empire on this continent; we have not built railways and opened up the North-West to fill it with a people of that character. I do not know that I need dwell much longer on this matter. I do not suppose that I would have said anything on the subject at all if the hon. gentleman had not provoked a discussion on the principle of the Bill, and proceeded to condemn the restriction of Chinese immigration. I say here to-day that I am in favor of that restriction. I say more, I am in favor of going further—I favor the total prohibition of that race coming into our country. It has been argued by some gentlemen again and again that England forced the Chinese to open their ports and admit our people into their country, and that we should therefore let them come to ours. It is true that Great Britain did so, but I do not think the sins of the father should be visited on the children in this matter. Canada had no share in the opening up of the Chinese ports, and I do not see why we should be compelled to receive an undesirable population in our country because of the past policy of the Imperial Government. To what extent have the Chinese opened their ports and allowed our people to land on their shores? We have never been able to penetrate into their country; we have merely established a couple of colonies like Hong Kong on the coast, and in those colonies there is but a small European population. I believe it is not increasing, that it is absolutely being driven out by the Chinese, and that a great deal of the trade in those places, of Hong Kong in particular, that was enjoyed by Europeans is being taken from them and monopolized by Chinese merchants. I submit, from my point of view, that these people are not the proper population to bring into our country. If we give them the opportunity they will enter in very large numbers, and now is the time to prevent the influx. It would be too late to talk of such legislation fifty years hence when they would be in our country in such numbers as we find the negroes in the southern part of the United States to-day.

HON. MR. MACDONALD—I am sure the hon. gentleman would not wish to attribute to me anything that I did not say. The hon. gentleman says that I would encourage these people to come to our country; on the contrary I said I would favor restrictions for two reasons—that we do not want those people to colonize our country, and that if they came we could not give them employment. I said further that I never had seen a drunken Chinaman in 25 years, in my experience; and if the hon. gentleman has seen one, it must have been in a different class of society from any that I have met. I have never seen a drunken Chinaman.

HON. MR. NELSON—I may say I have seen drunken Chinamen; but the hon. gentleman's remark is an insinuation that I have been in that class of society that he has kept away from. I have seen drunken Chinamen on steamers going up and down the river.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—It seems to me that neither the preamble nor the title of the Bill affords much insight into its objects. You find only that a series of obstructions of every sort and kind, to the last degree vexatious, are placed in the way of Chinese immigrants entering any part of the Dominion and seeking to earn an honest livelihood by labor. One is naturally led to enquire, independent of all prejudices, what can be the meaning of all this? Is it that the Dominion does not need labor? I have always considered that land and labor were the true sources of wealth in any country. There is no lack of broad acres in British Columbia, no lack of gold and other valuable minerals, which form such an important source of wealth elsewhere, no lack of fisheries or fertile lands; but what is needed is labor, the very thing that this Bill seeks to limit and exclude. It is a rather singular circumstance that in a country where labor is most necessary for the development of its resources, that very thing many of those sent here to represent that province seek to keep out. I am quite ready to admit that it would be just and proper for the Parliament of the Dominion to take any measure that may be shown to be necessary to exclude a bad class of Chinese, just as they would a bad class of European immigrants; and I very much doubt, myself, if any Chinese immigrants could be introduced into the Dominion more turbulent, seditious and dangerous to the community than those European immigrants who led the disturbance not long since in Chicago. What has fallen from hon. gentlemen in this House bears in two different directions. One gentleman from British Columbia affirms that the Chinese are evilly spoken of; another that you cannot say anything too bad about them. Not taking either of those grounds as precisely correct—

HON. MR. NELSON—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I have not attacked the character of the Chinese in any way. I simply replied to my hon. friend who said that if they had vices they did not flaunt them. I said it was a well known fact that these vices were flaunted in a bare-faced manner; but I did not charge them with being more vicious than any other people.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I think, if I remember rightly, the hon. gentleman referred to the Chinese quarter in San Francisco as being exceptionally bad.

HON. MR. NELSON—I did.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—In reply to that I say you may go to certain quarters of Liverpool, and almost any large city of Europe or America, and there you will find the refuse of all nations fully as vicious; more so, perhaps, than the Chinese themselves. I am not going to stand up here as the advocate of Chinese morality at all, but I say they possess what we want, which is labour, and we should act very unwisely if we attempted to keep them out, and the more so if we kept them out on false and vexatious grounds. Reference has been made to Australia and Australian legislation; and it has been sought to establish the fact that those provinces and colonies have entertained the same objections to the Chinese which have been urged to a certain extent in this House; but I think we must look for other causes—look for the same causes perhaps operating in British Columbia which operated in the Australian colonies. Let us enquire for a moment what these causes are. I say that this is only another phase of the labor question which is agitating the United States to-day, and will agitate all this continent, as well as the old world, much more than it has yet done. If the labouring classes are to govern their employers; and if they are to reverse the natural order of things, and place themselves in the employer's position, such legislation may naturally be accepted. The parties who really moved in Australia and elsewhere with a view to prevent or render more difficult the influx of Chinese labor are the laborers themselves, the men who earn their ten to fifteen shillings (from $2.00 to $2.50) a day wages. Such men as that naturally are very reluctant to see competition step in amongst themselves, as competent as they themselves are, and able to work for less money. This is the origin of this agitation against the Chinese. It has been the same in Australia, and yet good authorities describe to us the state of things in the Australian colonies, without raising any objection whatever to Chinese labor. A recent author, whom I have quoted in this House before on this question, tells us that he found Chinese labor employed not only in the public gardens of Australia but in the garden of the Governor of Victoria, and doing their work better than white men could; and probably had not those men been at hand the work would not have been done. He found them employed on board the mail steamer between New Zealand and San Francisco. The seamen of that ship were men from the north of Europe exclusively; but the stewards, the cook and that class of men were all Chinese. Surely in the course of a voyage an intelligent author like James Anthony Froude, having an opportunity of discussing the Chinese question, would be able to come to an intelligent conclusion upon it, and has he come from the voyage impressed against the Chinese or in favor of them? In favor, like any intelligent man who sees that all those colonies want is labor to develop their resources, and still they are excluding the labor which would make them rich. This is the cause of the agitation, and though I would be one who would be willing and glad to lend my aid towards any legislation intended to control Chinese immigration in the same way as you control any other subject, I think this legislation is against the progress of civilization and the spreading of light amongst the Chinese. A certain proportion of the Chinese who come here have an opportunity of seeing one phase of our civilization. Another class of Chinese come who see our civilization in another light, but all see that it has an improving tendency; and the consequence of the frequent return of Chinese to their native land with new light shed upon them, is that their prejudices wash out, and they themselves return better men than they went; that surely would tend to civilize the Chinese. Some one has reminded me that comparatively few miles of railway would be built in British Columbia, and in the Pacific States of America without the Chinese; I think this perfectly undeniable. The same argument might have been used 30 or 40 years ago with regard to the eastern seaboard. How many great improvements such as canals and other public works involving heavy labor would have been accomplished in the eastern portions of America without Irish labor, and yet a prejudice, just as ignorant and unwise as this prejudice which exists on the western slope against the Chinese, prevailed then in the United States against the Irish. Combinations of labor rose against them and sought in fact to prevent the access of Irish laborers. Yet they went on. Do we not know—every Englishman knows it—that the Irish did the same thing for England; they reaped the English harvests; they worked at canal digging; it was through them, I think, the name of navigators was given to that class of workmen. Without Irish labor I believe comparatively few of the great English railways and great Scotch river improvements could ever have been carried out; yet there was a great prejudice against the Irish laborers. Is it not probable that with proper precautions you could introduce a class of Chinese into this country, who would increase the production of its fields, fisheries and mines, develop all its resources and convert a country, poor at present, into a rich one.

HON. MR. NELSON—I would like to ask the hon. gentleman opposite if the laborers that come from Ireland to our shores do not join with the rest of the people and become part of the general body politic? They are white men and mix and mingle with us. They do not stand out as a distinct race like these Chinamen.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—You cannot find an exact parallel between a race of Mongolians and a race of Celts; that is not to be expected, but we know that a mixed race already inhabits the plains of the North-West. We have heard a good deal about them this Session. They are by no means an ignoble race. I have yet to learn that the half-breeds of Manitoba and the North-West are inferior in any quality of physical strength, or powers of endurance, or anything else—even in eloquence—to other people, and yet they are a mixed race.

HON. MR. NELSON—They are not a race at all.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—How can the hon. gentleman pretend to say what the future result will be from the introduction of Chinese here, provided always that they are honest, good, moral, industrious people? Those are the kind of men you want. You have a right by law to ensure that those you allow to enter your province shall be of that character. Keep those that are not so out of your country; but circumstanced as you are, and circumstanced as China is, looking back at the history of the dealings of the Imperial Government with China, I do think that we are following too much in the old bad ways in attempting to pass a Bill like this.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—With regard to the present Bill it seems to me that it bears upon the face of it marks of great looseness deserving our attention; but since the privilege is allowed of speaking on the principle of the Bill in Committee, I have a few remarks to make. It seems to me as if we were reversing the order of things in saying to any race all over the world that they should not have a part of our soil. We are told by the one hon. gentleman that those people are not a race at all. He has not enlightened us by telling us what they are.

HON. MR. NELSON—Who said so?

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—You.

HON. MR. NELSON—The hon. gentleman is mistaken. When the hon. member from Marshfield referred to the half-breeds I said they were not a race; that you have your half-breeds and quarter-breeds, but you have no really mixed race. I referred to the half-breeds, not the Mongolians, who are a distinct race.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—The question before us to-night is a large one, deserving our very best thought. It is perhaps one of the weightiest that has come before us in this House in the years that I have been a member of it. We are raising an opposition to the influx of labor into this country. Where have we got the great right that a few men scattered over British Columbia should say: "We will hold this land; we will hold it in its original state." And while thousands of people are hungry for the soil in various parts of the world, because they are a shade different from us in color, or there is some other feature in them that does not please us, we are asked to say to them that they shall not come here. Where do we get this paramount right to the soil of British Columbia and the plains, and forests of the North-West? Nature provided this soil, not for a few men to put chains round it and to keep it to themselves, but for all who want to bring forth these products for the benefit of mankind. Here are the sea, the land and the mountains, with their fish, products and minerals, and we are told that cheap labor may not be allowed to come in lest it should interfere with a few people that now inhabit that province. We know as a fact that from Europe and America armies of missionaries are sent out to the east to convert these people, and yet when the Chinese attempt to come under the genial influence of Christianity and civilization, they are told "You cannot come here; we will spend our money, we will send you missionaries to convert you, but we will not let you come under the British flag and the influence of the gospel in our land; we will keep you out." The policy, in my opinion, is a wrong one in principle. It is one that would not be tolerated in any part of Europe, and the moment that we give effect to it, that moment will the thousands of people who have gone into the east to live find themselves on uncertain ground; they may meet with retaliation to which we could not say a word. Supposing the British people who are to-day in Hong Kong or other parts of Asia or the east were told, "You must leave here; your color does not suit us; your pilfering, your robbing, your mode of carrying on commerce don't suit us; you must leave here." What answer could we make to them? Could they not say to us, "That is the way you are treating us on British soil in America." We could make no reply. This is a very serious question, and I must confess that I have not sufficiently freighted myself with the knowledge that should be brought to bear on this question; but to-night doubts I have had on the subject were almost dissipated by the report read by my hon. friend from Victoria. There we find the opinions of persons best qualified to judge—men of position, men of the legislature of San Francisco, having a knowledge of this question, of all others the best and most ample—what do we hear them say? "We say that these are thrifty, hardworking, honest, industrious people." That is what they say of the Chinese. Is that a characteristic of a people that are not desirable in a country like ours? It seems to me not. Even in sobriety they excel us. We cannot in any country, under the British flag to-day, make such a statement on behalf of the people as has been put forward for the Chinese. There are no drunkards among them. My hon. friend from Burard Inlet says he has seen some of them drunk, but he admits that they are generally sober. The exception only proves the rule. They are a sober people. We have them in the city from which I come, and there are no more orderly people in Toronto. You never see them in the Police Court; you never see them drunk or disorderly. They are industrious and thrifty. Very often they are disturbed and molested, their houses are broken into and robbed, and a hundred other offences committed against them—none by them against those who commit those offences. We should hesitate before passing this measure. In this House, where we have ample time to reflect upon its provisions, it should be no concern of ours how it originated or how it came here; we should look at the effects it is certain to produce. Is it good for this country or bad? Are a few thousand white people scattered throughout British Columbia to hold that land unproductive? If so, let it be known and let it remain there. That country has cost us a very large amount of money so far; we have had no equivalent yet for the expenditure, and the only way we could have it is by allowing free and cheap labor to go in and develop its resources. I have heard it said that although the Chinese are a powerful and numerous people in their own country, they are not acquainted with the arts of arms, and therefore that they never can resist innovations upon them. That is a point open to dispute; but we know as a fact that the weakest things in the world, if their numbers are sufficiently large, are able to overthrow that which is extremely strong. I remember seeing a cloud of grasshoppers stop a train—stopping the very ideal of power. The grasshopper is but a very small insect, still by its numbers it succeeded in stopping a train. The redundant population of China, as soon as we resist them here, may take a leaf out of our book. I see in one of the clauses of the Bill here it is laid down that

"Every Chinese person raised in Canada at the time of the coming into force of this Act shall register himself and the members of his family with the chief controller or with one of the controllers authorized to keep registers, and shall pay to such officer therefor a fee of fifty cents for each person so registered; and for willfully failing to do so before the thirty-first day of December, one thousand and eight hundred and eighty-six, he shall be liable to a penalty of fifty dollars, or to imprisonment for a term not less than three months at the discretion of the court."

Now hon. gentlemen just think of a people knowing nothing of our language, scattered through the wilds of British Columbia, called upon within a certain time to register themselves before an officer of the Government, no matter how distant they may be from the office, no matter how unable they may be to read our language, under penalty of being thrown into prison under this Act. Is it possible for a civilized people, and a representative body like this, to stand by an enactment of that sort? Those poor people that have been working on our railways, that are to-day working in the mines—who may be in parts of British Columbia, where they will not hear of this provision for years—without ever hearing of this legislation, without receiving notice or information of it, are to be seized and put into prison, or made to pay $50 for failing to register themselves in the controller's office. I have no doubt that other hon. members of this House will comment upon other portions of this Bill; but the one clause to which I have referred shows that it is a measure which demands the serious attention of this honourable body. Surely if it were intended that every man should register himself and his children they should have received some intimation of it! They have been there for years and years and this Bill is made to apply to a people who have been in British Columbia for that length of time and to children born there. Within a short period after the passage of this Bill they are required to register themselves. Surely it would not be too much to say that no Chinese resident of British Columbia should be brought under the provisions of the Act until notice was brought home to him in a language which he knew. The arrangements which I have made for tonight will not permit me to make any further remarks at present on the subject.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I do not feel, as a citizen of one of the Eastern Provinces, that I am competent to pronounce an opinion upon this Bill. If I am rightly informed, it has been introduced by a member of the Government and has arisen from representations made by the people of British Columbia to the Dominion Government requiring such legislation. It is rather an enigma to me how there should be such a difference of opinion between the hon. gentleman from Victoria and the hon. member from Burrard Inlet. If my memory is correct, there has been much excitement over the question of Chinese immigration on the Pacific Coast. Representations were sent to the Dominion Government that the people required them to come to their aid and assist them in preventing the influx of Chinese population. It was on this representation that a member of this Government visited British Columbia and has caused this Bill to be framed. I feel great delicacy in expressing any opinion on the subject. The question is this: We have a beautiful Province on the Pacific Coast; we desire to settle that Province, certainly if possible, with a civilized race, with a population from Europe or from our own Provinces. Then the question is: Do the people coming from Ontario and Europe desire to be surrounded by a Chinese population? If it is manifest that they do not desire that, then why should the Chinese be forced upon them, or why not aid them to prevent such races coming in? The Chinese have nothing in common with us; they do not inter-marry with our people; they work and receive their money, and that money is all amassed to be sent back to their own country. Is that a desirable population to have? I cannot understand any member of this House not having a proper regard for the feelings of those who have cast their lot in British Columbia. If we desire the prosperity of our Pacific Province, why then we ought to meet their views. We should be exceedingly careful not to throw out a Bill brought in by a Minister of the Crown, who went to that province and consulted the feelings of the great majority there. If any one, like the hon. member from Victoria, takes the responsibility of advising the House, let him do so; but he knows that this Bill brought in by a Minister of the Crown is in accordance with the view of a large majority of the people of British Columbia.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE.

HON. MR. ARMAND (in French)—I do not understand the dread and apprehension which some people entertain about the influx of this population. It is not long since legislation similar to this was adopted in the United States, and our intelligent and far-seeing neighbors find that in handling this question they have burnt their fingers. They find that they have lost the services of a patient, industrious and law-abiding population. In a country like ours, which has so much need of laborers to clear our forests, to work in our mines and to till the soil, one would suppose that every encouragement would be given to the laboring classes of other countries to make their homes amongst us. It should also be remembered that we have a treaty of commerce with China, forced upon them by the Empire of which we form a part, and that we have hopes of developing a trade between China and Canada. For these considerations I shall vote against this Bill and in favor of every amendment which tends to throw open our ports to these industrious people.

HON. MR. VIDAL—The hon. member from Woodstock throws out the challenge "who is there will venture to oppose a bill originated by the Government and sought for by the people of British Columbia?" I do not hesitate to say that I will oppose it; that I would do it alone if I had no support from others, and will resist with all my power a measure of this kind. It is a bill which I regard as an outrage upon humanity and a sad blemish upon Christianity, a bill calculated to lower us in the eyes of all the civilized nations of the world. Look at China, whose people are spoken of so lightly and with some contempt, and see what they are doing today? They are setting us an example we should do well to follow in this very matter. Why does not China shut her doors against us western people in the same way that we propose to shut our doors against their countrymen? Have Englishmen any more right to go into China and take possession of their ports or their trade than Chinamen have to land in Canada? By what royal right have we and our fathers crossed the ocean and taken possession of this western continent? What right had we to come here and dispossess the Indians, native proprietors of this country, and take possession of their lands? Do hon. gentlemen think we have a perfect right to come in here and dispossess the native inhabitants of their country? and not only to consider that we have a better right to it than they have, but to consider it so exclusively our own as to shut out from sharing in the advantages of this country others of God's people who have as much right to it as we have? I regard it as utterly inconsistent with our professions as Christians and with the vaunted freedom we profess to cherish as a British people. The idea of saying that we of the Caucasian race who have carried civilization to all parts of the world are not able to hold our own against a Mongolian race? Where can such a fear originate? What has been the experience of the Anglo-Saxon race in every part of the world where we have gone? Have we not carried all before us? Have we not taken possession wherever we wished to go, not because we had any special right to do so, but because we believed that where our civilization and enlightenment have been introduced we have carried with us the blessings of Christianity to the people amongst whom we have settled, wherever the English language is spoken it has carried with it the teachings of the Gospel.

HON. MR. MACDONALD—And big guns also.

HON. MR. VIDAL—And as long as our countrymen are fulfilling the purposes for which the Almighty has given them such great power, so long will they prosper; but let us once take this false step which is proposed by this Bill, and it will be the first retrograde movement. What would we think if the Chinese people thought fit to put upon their Statute book such legislation as we propose to put upon ours?

HON. MR. NELSON—She has done it for all time.

HON. MR. VIDAL—Has she not a perfect right to say we will allow no European, no Englishmen, and especially no Canadian to settle amongst us, or touch on our shores without paying a tax of $500? Has she done anything of this kind?

Has she passed any legislation against the citizens of the United States or of Canada? Has she taken any retaliatory step in that direction? No, nor is she disposed to do so; but she is setting us a better example than the Christian people of this continent. She is tolerating the introduction of western men, western thoughts, and western plans into her own country, and the least she could expect at the hands of western people is that her citizens should at all events have the right to go in and enjoy the privileges of living in our country if they wish to do so. I think it is a great mistake, a blot on our Statute book, that such legislation as this should be put upon it. I must express my great surprise that the British Government should allow such legislation. Do they not see that China might retaliate against us, and against British trade and British people? We say, "No, England is too powerful for them to do so." But is that a good argument, that because we have the power to err and are able to do wrong without suffering for it, that therefore we should do wrong? I say the reason why that power has been given to us and that success has attended us in all our efforts in foreign lands, is that we have used it with Christian effort, and with Christian objects in view in order to raise those whom we think are ignorant to a higher level, and to make them a better, a purer and a happier people. The hon. gentleman from Burrard Inlet has spoken of the impossibility of mixing the races. I do not know that it is of any consequence, or that it is desirable that they should be mixed, but I would remind the hon. gentleman that it is not such an impossibility as he seems to imagine. I dare say he may have some little acquaintance with the Missionary work that is being done in China; I will only speak of the work of the church to which I belong, and which has a missionary in the Island of Formosa who has had wonderful success in his mission. There are now thousands of those people converted to Christianity, who are more earnest, more zealous and more thoroughly consistent Christians than many who can be found amongst us. That missionary married one of his own converts, a Chinese woman. She came into Canada with him a few months ago and passed through many of our cities and towns where she met with many of our people, and wherever she went she attracted the sincere love and esteem of all with whom she came in contact. She is a most interesting woman, with all the charms and graces of education and refinement. She is doing a good work in educating the young classes of her fellow-countrymen, and she is one of the most efficient assistants to her husband in that great work in which he has been engaged so successfully for so many years. She has done more to elevate the Chinese of Formosa and to bring them to a knowledge of Christian truth than perhaps a score of Englishmen could do. I know as far as I and my friends were concerned it was delightful to meet her. She is just as accomplished and as graceful in her manner and conversation as any of our women in Canada; so that these arguments are entirely out of place and have no weight in my mind at least. I do not wish to trespass upon the patience of the House, but I wish to put upon record my protest against this Bill and my determined and unceasing hostility to any legislation of this kind.

HON. MR. McCLELAN—As several hon. gentlemen have anticipated me in the remarks which I would have made, and have said them so much better, I will not occupy the time of the House. However, I may say with regard to this legislation, there appears to be a great many striking anomalies. In the first place the Chinese Empire or Chinese people undertook a good many years ago to surround themselves by a wall of protection to keep out European civilization and the commerce of other nations. We all know very well how the great British Empire, at the expense of much treasure and much blood, compelled those very Chinese people, about whom we are talking to-night, and whom we are traducing to some extent, to open their ports and admit the commerce and trade of Great Britain. I say it is an anomaly that we here, one of the most enlightened colonies of the British Empire, should be legislating calmly and deliberately to drive those Chinese back, whom we have induced to come out—to drive them back behind their own walls, restrict them from commerce and prevent their proper intercourse with the world. We all know, too, how the effect of that intercourse has not been so much for their advancement in science and manufactures as to some extent to lead them into practices and vices which are most to be condemned. Then there is the rather singular circumstance connected with this legislation, that while we are spending half a million dollars, more or less, every year, in attempting to get immigrants from Europe to come to our eastern shore and settle in this new Dominion, many of whom are spoken of as pauper immigrants, doing more injury to the very classes of people who are getting up this feeling against the Chinese than any other—I say when we are spending so much money out of our own treasury to encourage immigration in order that this country may be settled, we are on the western shores, spending a large sum annually to keep the eastern people out of this country. We all know the expense attendant upon the commission appointed to go to British Columbia and take evidence regarding the character and habits of the Chinese people. The item of expenditure connected with that commission, appointed to gain information on which to found some such legislation as this, is of itself a very considerable sum of money. Then again, in this very Bill now under consideration, we have sections providing for very large salaries—a maximum of $3,000 for an interpreter, and smaller salaries for other officials, and these are only items connected with the expenditures which the Government of this Dominion are now proposing to make in order to exclude the Chinese from our western shores, while at the same time we are expending enormous sums by way of assisting immigration from the east, a small fraction of whom remain in the country and the larger number of whom cross over to the United States. Then another thought occurs to me: we are about completing the Pacific railway, upon which so much money has been expended, and we are about inaugurating the opening of that great work—a railway which reaches from ocean to ocean—a work that is calculated to extend our commerce to an enormous extent, to take in the trade with China, Japan and Australia, the extent of which we have heard so much and in connection with which fast running steamers, which I trust may be Imperially subsidized, are to be established. All this vast trade, glowing accounts of which we have had from time to time, which is to swell the coffers of Canada and produce so much prosperity in this Dominion is to spring from the opening up of commerce with the very people we are now legislating to keep out of this country. These are three things that present themselves to my mind as anomalies of a very singular character. Then we all know that the British Empire and British dependencies have always been recognized as the home of the free—an asylum for all nations—a land where slavery is not allowed to exist, and where a system of exclusion such as we are now putting on our Statute books could find no footing. Yet we, one of the most enlightened colonies on the face of the earth, are undertaking to do, in the face of all these principles that we have learned from infancy to admire and love, and which accord so well with our British institutions—I say we are by this legislation doing violence to all those nobler instincts which have actuated us in the past. My impression about all this is that if all the Chinese who have come in and who have by their perseverance and by their thrift secured a footing in the Dominion of Canada, had the privilege of the franchise, and had somebody to speak for them in this Parliament—somebody who would be interested in their welfare—legislation of this kind would not be so freely pressed through Parliament. But they are not allowed the privilege of voting. Even those who are settled in the country are not under our franchise law, to be allowed the privilege of voting—a privilege which ought to be extended to all classes of subjects of whom we are endeavoring to make good fellow citizens. We have failed to extend to them the privileges which other classes possess; therefore they are without spokesmen; they are without representation, and they are at the mercy of other classes of people who think perhaps that their pockets may be interfered with. From the observations made by my hon. friend from Victoria, and from the evidence which he has quoted, I discover in the character of the Chinese, that they are not only an industrious people, but that they are a thrifty people, a frugal people, and that being industrious and willing to work, it may be for the purpose of laying by for old age or for a rainy day—being willing to work every day, they can afford to work for lower wages than many who, perhaps, work one-quarter of the time and use the other three-fourths in grumbling or complaining or getting up seditious movements. As far as the usefulness of the Chinese is concerned, the hon. gentlemen, who so ably represent the western provinces, have scarcely appreciated them sufficiently. We all know that British Columbia, although not very densely populated, is a province where the climate is very salubrious, and where there is every advantage of fertile soil, valuable timber, and every facility for extended commerce, and we should look for a considerable manufacturing industry and enterprise in the white population that exist there. Although that Province has been settled for nearly half a century, it is a matter of astonishment to eastern people that with the advantages British Columbia is said to possess—and the statement of which none of us are disposed to doubt—it is surprising that the population of that province, considering it in connection with its mining as well as its other capabilities, remains so limited; and even now, with the extension of our railway, and with the facilities given for the construction of the railway on Vancouver Island, we are not informed of any particular rush of people into that country, except those very people about whom we are going to so very much expense to exclude from that province. I have been informed that operations of certain canneries in connection with the salmon fisheries of British Columbia are impeded for want of these very people; that if the Chinese had not been, by the legislation of last year, prevented from coming to that country, the business of canning salmon would be carried on now to a very much greater extent than it is—that in fact the business of canning salmon is almost stopped in that province for want of these very laborers. Then while the Local Government have provided a charter for the New Westminster branch Railway, a work of considerable importance, earnestly demanded by the people, and opens up a field for the employment of Chinese labor, the people have insisted that Chinese shall be employed on it, because it is the only practicable way of building it. British Columbia is the only province from which the complaint comes of the immigration of the Chinese people. I have listened with great pleasure to the speeches of other hon. gentlemen, especially to the speech of my hon. friend from Marshfield, and I think the expression of opinion that we have had on this Bill has not been without interest, and I trust will not be unprofitable.

HON. MR. ALLAN—It is only right that I should say a few words on the remarks which have fallen from the hon. gentlemen in the discussion in committee. The Bill was only given to me yesterday evening, and I have not had much time to make myself thoroughly acquainted with its contents; but on looking over the Bill I found it was a measure to consolidate and amend the Act of 1885, and that there were only certain clauses in it which are new clauses. It seemed to me therefore that it was a bill which the House should hardly refuse to accept if they were of opinion that the modifications and changes that were made in the existing law were satisfactory to them. I sympathize very heartily with a great deal that has been said by hon. gentlemen who spoke in opposition to this Bill, and especially with the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Sarnia; and I quite acknowledge that it is extremely difficult to argue against the theoretical view of the question as to the principles which ought to guide us in a matter of this kind and to deny altogether the proposition that seemingly, in the first instance, legislation of this kind is contrary to British principles and British practice. While I acknowledge that theoretically many of those views cannot be impugned, yet when we come down to a practical view of the question we have to put it to ourselves in this way: very great dissatisfaction exists in certain parts of the Dominion in reference to Chinese immigration. A great deal of trouble has arisen in reference to this same matter in other colonies of the Empire, especially in Australia. Speaking for myself at all events, I think the central Provinces of Canada do not feel any inconvenience from this immigration. It does not affect us; it does not touch us; but I do not know that because such is the case with us we should shut our eyes to the very strong representation made by our fellow subjects from the other side of the Dominion. Before the Act of 1885 was introduced into this House, I read, with very great interest and with a very earnest desire to inform myself of the truth of the case, the very excellent and exhaustive report made on the subject by the hon. gentleman who introduced this present Bill in the House of Commons, and the conviction left on my mind certainly was not quite of such a strong anti-Chinese type as seems to be impressed upon the mind of the hon. gentleman from Burrard Inlet; but I came to this conclusion, that undoubtedly where the Chinese came over in large numbers, and where they formed large communities of their own, that they did become, to say the least of it, a very objectionable population, and that they were in many ways injurious to the parts of the country in which they settled, and it seemed to me that in view of the strong representation made on that point by hon. gentlemen from the part of the Dominion specially affected by this immigration that some legislation was called for. While, therefore, I should feel very reluctant in any way to acquiesce in anything that looks like a know-nothing system—a desire to shut out any race from coming to this continent, we cannot shut our eyes altogether to the representations made by those who are more immediately affected. We have made certain progress on the Bill in committee; it is merely a recast of the Bill of 1885, with some few new clauses and others where slight verbal alterations are made. It seems to me, therefore, the true course for us to take is to go on with the Bill in committee and if there is any clause which hon. gentlemen think is decidedly objectionable and requires alteration, that alteration can be discussed, but there is a great deal of the Bill which may safely be allowed to pass as it is precisely the same as the old law and introduces no new matter.

The clause was agreed to.

On the fifteenth clause.

HON. MR. ALLAN—This is a new clause; it is to make regulations respecting Chinese arriving by railway the same as those applying to Chinese arriving by vessel.

HON. MR. POWER—It seems to me that it is carrying the thing pretty far, when you provide that every conductor of any railway train bringing Chinese immigrants into Canada shall be personally liable to Her Majesty for the payment of the duty imposed by this Act. Under that clause, unless there is some special provision somewhere else in the Bill, a conductor of a train coming from New York to Montreal for instance, that had Chinese on board would be liable to this fine.

HON. MR. ALLAN—I think where it says “in respect to any such immigrant,” that the clause would apply only to immigrants.

HON. MR. POWER—A Chinaman coming from New York to Montreal would be considered an immigrant. I can understand that where Chinese come in vessels from China to British Columbia the Captain should be made responsible, because they are under his control and he knows all about them, but to say that the conductor of an ordinary passenger train coming from, New York or Chicago or some other place in the United States, should be made liable to the penalty set forth in this section because a Chinese passenger happens to come on his train is really going too far altogether. It is just one of those things that is calculated to cause this country to be held up to scorn and contumely and ridicule abroad. That clause needs modification and I hope my hon. friend will let it stand over.

HON. MR. SCOTT—When this Bill was introduced last year I felt a great deal of repugnance to it and many hon. gentlemen who viewed it in the same light that I do accepted it only because it was assumed to apply solely to British Columbia. Now the the intention is to apply it to all other parts of the Dominion, and as pointed out by the hon. gentleman from Halifax, here is a clause which applies almost to our very doors. There are Chinamen in Canada going backwards and forwards continually, and are we to say that no Chinaman can come in from the United States or if he goes to the United States he cannot return to Canada without payment of this duty? I think the idea is perfectly monstrous, and I for one will test the sense of the committee before allowing it to pass. I do not propose that we should allow the whole of Canada to be placed in the humiliating position that British Columbia occupies on this subject. It is so repugnant to all that is English, and honorable or right that one can hardly discuss it in a proper frame of mind. To say that British Columbia will press us into this kind of legislation is absurd; I for one protest against it and I ask that the sense of the committee be taken on this clause. We acquiesced in the proposition as far as British Columbia is concerned, but I for one will test the sense of the Committee on this clause and I shall oppose it at every stage of the Bill.

HON. MR. ALLAN—I would not like my hon. friend to feel so much outraged at this proposition; but so far as I can understand the clause I should say it applies only to cases of immigrants coming into the country in a body. I will be very glad to allow the clause to stand over to see if it cannot be amended.

HON. MR. SCOTT—I will take the sense of the Committee on it, as every Chinaman living in Canada has occasion to go backwards and forwards between this country and the United States, and he would under this clause be classed as an immigrant.

HON. MR. POWER—I hope the hon. gentleman from Ottawa will not insist on dividing the Committee now, because the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill says that he will not press this clause and will see if it can be modified. I can understand how it can be modified so as to prevent Chinese from being brought in by railway to British Columbia and shall not apply to other provinces. If the people of British Columbia wish to prevent Chinese from going in there I am not altogether disposed to insist that the Chinese shall be allowed to go in, but I think that they should allow us to permit the Chinese to come into the eastern provinces, so long as we do not object to them. I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill to another very objectionable feature about this clause. Supposing that a single Chinese passenger from New York comes in here by an express train; under this clause, the conductor has immediately on his arrival to leave his train and report this Chinaman to the Collector of Customs. That would be putting the conductor to a very great inconvenience and trouble. It might do in British Columbia but it certainly will not suit the circumstances of the older Provinces.

HON. MR. WARK—There is a stronger objection than that: supposing a Chinaman finds his way to Nova Scotia and goes to a ticket office in Halifax and buys a ticket to travel over the government road to St. John, are you going to fine the conductor of the train on the government road for not putting that man off who has bought his ticket and paid for it to be transported from Halifax to St. John? This is bringing the matter home to ourselves.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I hope the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill will see the propriety of allowing this clause to stand over. There may be some explanation of it that we have not got.

HON. MR. SCOTT—I think it should be understood that this Bill is only to apply to British Columbia, because I see the following clauses are quite as objectionable as this one.

HON. MR. ALLAN—I hope the hon. gentleman from Ottawa will not divide the committee, but will allow the clauses 15 and 16 to stand over. I am just as anxious as the hon. gentleman to make this Bill as good a measure as it can be to commend itself to the support of the House. I am not particularly anxious to see improper clauses pass, and I will be very glad to see this clause recast to meet the views of the House. I would suggest that the clauses from 15 down to 18 shall be allowed to stand.

HON. MR. SCOTT—And clause 19 I shall insist on standing also. Clause 19 is, I think, one of the most objectionable clauses of the Bill.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The registration system prevails everywhere. There is no hardship in asking a man to register himself—at least it would be no hardship if he were not a Chinese. Why should he not register?

HON. MR. SCOTT—Because the Chinamen in British Columbia are scattered throughout the mountains in remote places where they may never hear of this Act. They are living amongst a population that are prejudiced against them, and who are prepared to incarcerate them in prison the moment they can do so under sanction of law; and I say it is entirely un-Christian-like and not in harmony with anything that is fair or right to expose those unfortunate people to be taken by the throat and put in jail for not doing a thing of which they are entirely ignorant. It would be extremely unfair for us here to put on record such legislation. I would say that no Chinaman ought to be subject to that penalty—a penalty of $50, or to imprisonment for a term not less than three months—for an offence of which he may not be wilfully guilty. I say that unless the Chinaman refuses to register after his attention has been called to it there should be no penalty. The mere fact of his failing to do it ought not to subject him to so severe a penalty. We do not punish criminals even unless they intentionally and wilfully commit crime. This is not a criminal offence of any kind whatever. These people are living in total ignorance of our present legislation, and the moment the 31st of December next arrives, these poor people in the wilds of British Columbia are liable to this penalty, or to be incarcerated in jail if they have not registered. I ask if it is reasonable, or fair or just? If they are aware of it, and their attention is called to it, and they refuse to register, then attach any penalty you please. But until they refuse with the knowledge that it is necessary with our law to register, they should not be liable.

HON. MR. NELSON—The hon. gentleman has made a statement in regard to British Columbia that cannot in any way be substantiated. The people of British Columbia are not at all of the character that the hon. gentleman has stated. They are known to treat the Chinese very well. All that the people of British Columbia ask by this Bill and by former Bills is that the coming of those people into the province shall be restricted; but as far as any improper conduct towards those who are in the country is concerned, the hon. gentleman is mistaken—he can substantiate nothing of the kind. Although the time may be a little short for a knowledge of this law to reach Chinamen, still the Chinese throughout British Columbia are in constant and continual communication with the Chinese in Victoria, and a knowledge of this law can reach almost every Chinaman in the Province.

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B. C.)—Does not the hon. gentleman know that Chinamen are continually attacked in the streets by boys, their baskets of clothes taken from them and thrown in the dirt, and their heads broken with stones. I have seen it done myself over and over again.

HON. MR. NELSON—I say that cases of that kind are occurring in every community, but as a people the Chinese are well treated in British Columbia. The statement the hon. gentleman has made here to-day in regard to the matter he would hardly care to make to any community in Victoria. Boys in every part of the world are boys. Boys commit outrages here and in all parts of the world; but as far as the treatment of the Chinese in British Columbia is concerned I say they are not improperly treated. I say it is entirely a misstatement and entirely traducing the character of the people of British Columbia to say that they ill-treat the Chinese.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I do not know that I have ever before taken part in any legislation which imposed penalties, in which there was not some element of mercy; but I look in vain for anything of the kind in this Bill. Generally, if a man offends unwittingly against a law, there are gradations of punishment provided for it; but I look in vain for anything of the precious principle of mercy in this unhappy Bill.

HON. MR. SCOTT—I would suggest that the clause should be amended so as provide that the Chinaman shall be punished only for wilfully and knowingly refusing to enroll himself.

HON. MR. ALLAN—It would seem, reading clause 19 alone, that it would be a hardship to impose a penalty on a Chinaman if he did not register himself within the time specified by the clause, as he may be entirely ignorant of the law. Of course our own fellow-subjects are supposed to take notice of the law, and no provision would be made in that respect so far as white men are concerned; but clause 20 provides that where the Chinese are scattered throughout the country the Chinaman may make that declaration for registration of himself and his family before a Judge of the Superior Court, stipendiary magistrate, a justice of the peace or the mayor of a municipality.

HON. MR. SCOTT—But he must know of it.

HON. MR. ALLAN—I do not see myself that there could be any objection to amending the clause as the hon. gentleman suggests, but I would prefer to allow the clause to stand over and consult the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill in the other House before adopting the exact phraseology.

The clause was allowed to stand.

The twenty-eighth clause was also allowed to stand over.

On the preamble of the Bill,

HON. MR. POWER—I would at this point make a suggestion to the hon. gentleman in charge of the measure: this Bill appears to be desired only by the people of British Columbia; I do not think that any desire has been expressed for such legislation from any other Province, and the suggestion I was going to make is that in the concluding clause of the Bill the Government should be given the power to put the Act in force in any Province they please by proclamation; so that if they do not think it desirable to bring it into operation in any other Province they need not do so. I think the better way would be to let the Act go into force only upon the issue of a proclamation of the Governor in Council; perhaps that would be a better way of getting over the difficulty.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I should decidedly object to that. I do not think the Maritime Provinces will accept such a clause.

HON. MR. PELLETIER—Why not limit the operation of the Bill to British Columbia alone?

HON. MR. POWER—I am not saying that I want to apply it to the Maritime Provinces; as it stands now it applies to all the Provinces, and my suggestion is that the Bill should be so worded that it shall only go into force in any Province on the issuing of a proclamation by the Governor in Council, bringing it into force only as to that Province; and I presume the Governor in Council would not bring it into operation in any Province except those who desired it. Then as to clause thirty-two I think it is exceedingly unreasonable, considering the comparatively ignorant character of Chinese immigrants, that the burden of proof should be on the immigrants that he had registered. His registration will be in the hands of the proper officer.

HON. MR. GIRARD, from the Committee, reported that they had made some progress and asked leave to sit again on Tuesday next.

SECOND READING.

Bill (87) "An Act to incorporate the Kootenay & Athabasca Railway Company." (Mr. Macdonald) was read the second time without debate.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill (131) "An Act further to amend an Act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway." He said: This is a Bill for the purpose of authorizing the Government to receive back from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company a loan amounting to nearly $20,000,000, which it will be remembered had been advanced to that road two years ago. It also authorizes, upon the payment of that $20,000,000, that the Company shall be released from a debt of $9,880,900, by permitting the Government to retain out of the land grant a sufficient quantity of lands at $1.50 an acre to cover that liability, those lands to be of the same average quality as the land already taken by the company. It also provides that the sum now held by the Government to ensure the running of the road, which is a sum of five millions of land grant bonds, shall be released to the company. These are the provisions of this Bill, with a minor provision about the issue of bonds on the Algoma branch which, in a former Act, was not clearly defined. It simply allows them to issue bonds, which shall be a first lien on the branch railway. As far as I can see, there could be no objection to that. The mode of securing mortgage bonds is such as is described in the charter of the company. They also have the power to issue land grant mortgage bonds to such an amount as they deem fit, not to exceed $2 an acre. The amount shall be approved by the Governor in Council. Then it also provides that the lien on those lands through the mortgage bonds shall be the same as in the original Act. There is no change in that. Then the surrender of the five millions bonds under the provisions of this Act—the land grant bonds—shall be made when, according to the contract, the road has been duly completed and is open for traffic, and that at that time the disqualification of the shareholders from becoming members of the Senate or House of Commons, because of being such shareholders, shall be removed and determined, because by the operation of this Act the connection between the road and the Government will be severed. One great object in this legislation is to have a final settlement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and to let them stand as any other corporation, except the control the Government has over that as over any other corporation in regulating its tariff. The two points in regard to this—of course as to the receiving back the money which we have loaned I do not suppose there can be any very serious objection—but the points to be considered are, first the taking back of the land and surrender of the debt—the cancellation of the $9,800,000.

HON. MR. DEVER—We are buying back our own lands.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The next is the surrender of the five millions of land grant bonds; the next point is the permission to the Company to issue upon their land grant, at not less than $2 an acre, an amount such as they desire to issue, having first the sanction of the Governor in Council. Another point is that those who have been heretofore disqualified from entering Parliament shall have that disqualification removed. Those are the points of the Bill. I may say in regard to the first that it does not need discussion. In regard to the second, it will probably be satisfactory to those gentlemen who have all along predicted that the road would not pay anything. It pays a substantial amount of its debt back, and the lands are taken at a valuation which certainly has been put upon those lands—in fact a much higher valuation has been put upon them. The receiving back of the lands, therefore, is to a certain extent sanctioned by the estimate which has been made of the lands by those who have discussed the Bill from time to time in the other House. As to the question of surrendering the five millions of bonds held for ensuring the running of the road, I may say that the road now has arrived at a position where it will be almost, one might say, unnecessary to hold any such security. The road is one of the most important on this continent. It will be within a very few days, as I am assured by the report of the company adopted at its last meeting, running from ocean to ocean. It is understood to be a first class road in every respect, and the stock itself is now selling in the market at 65 to 67 cents on the dollar; the bonds are selling at 104 to 106. The credit of the company is ample and it is desirable for the road that this legislation shall be obtained as quickly as possible, in order to enable them to perfect their negotiations and make their arrangements for their summer traffic. I can say that when a company like this shows us, as this company does, that they have 336 locomotives, 289 first class carriages, 7,838 freight and cattle cars and other equipment of that kind, it is very evident that they are not only prepared, but expect to do an enormous business. I may say that this equipment is larger than that of the Northern Pacific—larger than that of either the Union or the Central Pacific—and that the earnings of the Union and Central Pacific together last year were $40,000,000. I do not know that this road will ever come up to that; but I think it will be a safe, fairly paying line, and I think there are so many interests concerned that it is impossible that that line, once opened, will ever be closed, but that it will be kept open and continue to run. Its earnings are increasing. There is every encouragement for those who have anything to do with it, and the keeping back of $5,000,000 of land grant securities is almost, I will not say an insult, but something approaching it, to an undertaking like that which is, to a large extent, a national undertaking, which is the most important work for the benefit of Canada that has been made, or is likely to be made in our day. It cannot be too often repeated that this road controls by a single line under a single management, and controls with a very moderate stock account, with a very small bonded debt, a traffic from ocean to ocean, and that there is no other road on this continent that can make a price from ocean to ocean without being hampered by the demands, not only of competing lines but of connecting roads, because all the Pacific railways extend only to the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers, and take their start from there to the Pacific coast. For instance, the Union Pacific Road is only 746 miles long. The Central Pacific is 864—that is 1,610 miles altogether. This road of ours is about 2,679 miles in length. The Northern Pacific is 1,831 miles long. Therefore all the rest of the connections of those roads in the United States to get to the Atlantic seaboard must be made over half a dozen different lines. The advantage that the Canadian Pacific Railway has is that of controlling the traffic and of making a low price for through freight, having its termini at Liverpool and Hong Kong, because a line of steamers will be placed on the Pacific Ocean and another on the Atlantic to connect with both ends of the railway. Both of these are suggested and foreshadowed by the report of the directors of the company. I need not enlarge upon this. The questions to be considered are the taking back, or rather the reserving of land enough to cover the nine millions, and releasing the five millions of bonds. All the other matters are merely matters of detail to which there could be no objection, and I imagine that the House, upon hearing the statement, will be prepared to allow me to move that the Bill be now read the second time.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I desire to define my position in respect to the vote which I shall give upon this Bill. As regarding the rapid completion of the whole of this public work to Port Moody before the year 1891, my views respecting that policy of the first Minister, Sir John Macdonald, are well known. I believe the large majority of our practical commercial men, are of my opinion that it would have been more prudent to have constructed the line first as far as Regina, or Calgary, and then build the Rocky Mountain portion gradually during the next five years, with a view to the colonization and settlement of our Pacific Province British Columbia, employing no Chinese but the labour of European immigrants or Canadian citizens who may choose to go there. By such a policy our Pacific Province would have been far more benefited. The millions expended would have, during those five years, promoted the colonization of that province and many of those employed would have taken up locations around Kamloops and other fertile portions of those valleys. My feeling was that we must act upon our past experience of the ever recurring jobbery of this Colonial Government, in connection with every projected public work; and having before us the practical fact, that the capital account of the short line known as the Intercolonial Railway at the time of completion, amounting to $22,500,000 has since been swollen to $39,000,000. It was from such considerations, apprehensive that the hurried completion of such a colossal line as the Canadian Pacific Railway, 2,900 miles long, might overburden our people with taxation and create discontent. Now hon. gentlemen, if those natural apprehensions have not been realized, I naturally ask myself, whom have we to thank for the great achievement of having carried to successful completion this great public work, without embarrassing, as yet, the public finances of the Dominion? It is certainly due to the leading minds of the Canadian Pacific Railway Syndicate—namely, Sir George Stephen, the Hon. Donald A. Smith, Mr. W. H. VanHorne and Mr. Angus. We must confess that their great financial skill—their engineering talent and prudent management in the execution of this enterprise, have surprised everyone—I may say have surprised the whole world, and their success may well command the gratitude of the people of this Dominion. The manner in which they have done the work which they undertook, has relieved the public mind of much anxiety. And I would only express the hope that if these gentlemen continue to operate this great highway with the sparse population now existing, they may not personally suffer financially to such an extent as to swallow up everything they possess.

That being in my humble judgment the position, I do not think that this Parliament should act unworthy of itself and refuse to grant this Bill; I believe the sentiment of the country is that we should grant any fair and reasonable demand to sustain a road which is calculated in the course of time to rivet in indissoluble bands the western and eastern portions of the Dominion. Population has not gone into our North-West as rapidly as was expected, from several causes; one of the most prominent of those causes was the well-known neglect and mismanagement of our North-West by the Department of the Interior, leading to widespread discontent and to the fatal outbreak at Prince Albert. In dealing with the Pacific Railway syndicate in future, we must in common justice take this into consideration: that from the acknowledged partisan appointments throughout our North-West, and consequent wrongs and evils growing therefrom, which led to such a disastrous insurrection, immigration has been seriously checked, and of course the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have materially suffered. They have not, in consequence of this, been able to sell their lands, and we cannot wonder that they should come to Parliament now with the proposition set forth in this Bill. Before announcing that, upon these grounds, I shall conceive it my duty to support this Bill, I desire to take this opportunity to acknowledge that the First Minister, Sir John Macdonald, displayed unsurpassed judgment in placing this enterprise, as he did, in the hands of such men of integrity, of engineering skill, and undaunted courage as the Canadian Pacific Railway Syndicate, to enter upon such a Herculean task. I have only to express the hope that their enterprise may be crowned with success, and I most heartily support the Bill now before us.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman from Woodstock has broken out in a new place this evening. He comes before the House as a humorist. When I heard him describe the wonderful skill with which Sir John Macdonald selected the Canadian Pacific Railway syndicate, I could not help thinking that he was a perfect Mark Twain. The fact is that if there was any selection it was the Syndicate that selected Sir John Macdonald. We all know the sort of relationship that existed between Sir John and the majority of the members of the Syndicate at a comparatively recent date. We remember the closing scenes of the session of 1878 and what took place there between Sir John and a very prominent member of the Syndicate, one of the gentlemen whom the hon member from Woodstock has held up to our admiration; and it seems a highly improbable thing that he was the sort of person to whom Sir John Macdonald would have chosen to hand over a great contract if he had had his choice. The truth is that the Government were very anxious to get rid of the task of constructing the Canadian Pacific Railway. They had sneered at the manner in which their predecessors had tried to do the work; and then they tried for a year or two themselves to carry it out, and found that they were making a bad job of it, and looked around for somebody to do it, and it happened that the gentlemen who constitute the Canadian Pacific Railway Company of the present day—at least a majority of them—those who composed the Syndicate of 1880, presented themselves and indicated their capacity to go on with the work. The Government were delighted to get anyone to take it off their hands, and they handed it over to the Syndicate. I think it a huge joke, even for the hon. gentleman, to say that Sir John showed his usual skill and judgment in selecting the members of the Syndicate. I thought it was not a bad jest either to say that the Pacific Railway had cost the country a very small sum. I was under the impression that it had cost the country a very considerable amount. I have not the figures by me, but if I say that it cost $70,000,000 in cash, and at least half as much more in land—

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—The whole line will cost us about $80,000,000.

HON. MR. POWER—$80,000,000 in cash?

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—That is not correct.

HON. MR. POWER—I have not the figures before me, but I can go pretty near that amount now. The Government had spent some $35,000,000 themselves in constructing portions of the Railway before they handed the work over to the Syndicate. They gave the Syndicate what they had done. They gave them $25,000,000 in cash as a subsidy—that makes $60,000,000. Under this measure before us we are allowing them to retain a sum of about $10,000,000 which we had loaned—that makes $70,000,000, and unless I am mistaken there was another sum besides.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—We get land back.

HON. MR. POWER—They have received from this country $70,000,000 in cash. As to the lands, that is a matter to be discussed some other time. Then we gave them exclusive privileges in connection with railways in the North-West country which were of considerable value to them and involved considerable loss to the settlers of the North-West. Under these circumstances, I think my hon. friend cannot be serious when he wishes us to believe that this road cost the country only a small sum. Nor can I, with all respect to the ability of the gentlemen who make up the directorate of the company, see that there is anything so very marvellous in the way in which the work has been done.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—The whole resources of the British Empire, we were told, could not do it in the time.

HON. MR. POWER—I am not responsible for what others have said. I am only responsible for my own opinions about this matter; but my opinion is that at the present day, and with labor abundant as it is now, and with the material for railroad building exceedingly cheap, as they have been during the past few years, with unlimited means almost anything can be done, and that has been practically the position of these gentlemen. They have had all the money they wanted and when they wanted it. Under these circumstances I do not think there is anything very marvellous in the work they have done. I do not want to decry their ability. Their financial ability has been shown in other fields; and I think they got the work through very fast, but still I do not marvel at it. They deserve credit; but they are not objects of wonder by any means. As to the merits of this Bill I do not propose to say very much. I suppose it is not a bill that we could very easily vote against in toto; because it proposes to refund to the Government of Canada $20,000,000. I may say that my honest feeling, when we were loaning that money to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, was that we should never see it again; and I am very glad to find that to that extent I have been disappointed. The money has come back and we are so much better off than I expected. That fact is due to the success the Company have met with in disposing of their bonds in the London money market. The main fact of this transaction is the refunding of this $20,000,000. Then the other point, to which the hon. gentleman who is in charge of the House just now did not make much reference, is the remitting by Canada of nearly $10,000,000 to the Company on receiving back lands.

HON. MR. POWER.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I stated it clearly.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman stated it, but did not lay much stress on it. I think for all practical purposes, that is making a present to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company of $10,000,000 or thereabouts. I shall try to make it clear. Hon. gentlemen smile at this, but what are the facts. The facts are that we now have a great deal more land in the North-West than we can find takers for. Getting 10,000,000 more acres into our possession is no advantage to us, at the present time at any rate. We know that up to the present time the lands in the North-West have not paid the Government the cost of surveying and laying them out and the cost of administering them. What financial gain is it to the country, with hundreds of millions of acres on our hands, that we should get ten millions more? It is no gain at all.

HON. MR. PLUMB—It is this gain. These lands are in the vicinity of the railway. The settlement there has taken up a very large amount of the railway lands. The Railway Company itself has not sold much land, but the alternate sections have been sold to a very large extent, and in Southern Manitoba and west of Southern Manitoba the lands are to a large extent taken up and absorbed. So this is very different from taking lands in the general area of the country away from the railway, and the hon. gentleman will remember a valuation was put on these lands given to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and these are among them—higher than we took them back at.

HON. MR. POWER—I am looking at it as a business transaction to-day, and we know the Railway Company, who ought to be able to dispose of their lands better than the Government have not been able to sell much of these lands; consequently I am not far out when I say that the lands to-day are of very little practical value to the country.

HON. MR. PLUMB—They have sold very nearly $10,000,000 worth.

HON. MR. POWER—The country will not make $10,000,000 out of them. If settlers go in there that will be an advantage to the country, and the settlers would go there as quickly—probably more quickly, if that land were in the hands of the Railway Company than otherwise. I have already stated that I did not expect the company would refund the $20,000,000; that is more than I thought we should get, but I think it is only right that we should look at the true nature of the transaction; and it is practically that we are remitting to the company $10,000,000 of the money they have borrowed on our credit. There is another point that the hon. gentleman did advert to, and I think it deserves some notice. The Government hold now a security—not a large security, but a respectable security—for the operating of the road after its completion. They propose in addition to giving the company ten millions of dollars to release the security of five millions of bonds, which they hold as security for the operation of the road. Now I feel that the Government in this matter are trustees for the public, and I do not think they are justified in releasing that five millions because it may be that the Government fancy to-day and the people believe, that the road will be operated satisfactorily; but supposing we dissolve the connection between the Government and the company, and the latter find it is not to their advantage to operate the British Columbia section of the road—and I believe it will happen, that the company will not find it to their pecuniary interest to operate the British Columbia section—what lever have the Government to oblige them to carry out their contract, if we surrender this security? There is none. I do not think the Government in this matter are doing their duty in surrendering that lever. The hon. gentleman gave as a reason why we should surrender this security that it was to sever the last link which connected the Government and the Company. I think it is a very good thing that the Government and the Company should be severed; but the hon. gentleman has forgotten another very important link, that is, the restriction upon the right of the people of Manitoba to construct roads south of Canadian Pacific Railway. That monopoly it was understood was not to extend beyond the completion of the road north of Lake Superior, as regards Manitoba at least; and it is a very important link of connection between the Government and the Company; and I think that the monopoly should be surrendered before the five million dollars in bonds are surrendered. This is a very important question; but the hour is late and I do not propose to detain the House any longer. I only wish to say that a feeling seems to have got abroad that those members who take the liberty of criticizing the transactions between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were enemies to the country and enemies to the members of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company individually. Nothing of the sort is the case. The members of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company or rather of the Board of Directors are very shrewd, able, enterprising business men. They are able to look after their own interests, and it is the duty of Parliament and the duty of the Government to see that in the transactions between the company and the Government the country gets fair play; and any criticisms that have been directed at these transactions have been directed at the Government and not at the company. As a matter of business any company will try to make the best terms they can with the Government or any other body, and I think the Government in many of those transactions with the company have laid themselves open to criticism. In the present transaction the Government are open to criticism: first, because they are remitting ten millions of dollars which the company owe to the country; secondly, because they are giving up unnecessarily the security which they hold for the operating of the road, and in the next place that they allow a monopoly to continue, which is an injury to the North West.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned at 10.30 P.M.

HON. MR. POWER.

SECOND READING.

Bill (119) "An Act to amend the Act relating to the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway Steamship Company." (Mr. Girard.)

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills, reported from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbors, were read the third time and passed without debate:—

Bill (86) "An Act to incorporate the North American Telegraph Company." (Mr. Sullivan.)

Bill (87) "An Act to incorporate the Kootenay and Athabasca Railway Company." (Mr. Macdonald, B.C.)

THE RIEL QUESTION.

ENQUIRY POSTPONED.

HON. MR. TRUDEL rose to Call the attention of the House to the grave errors committed in the statements of two of the Honorable Members of the Government in two manifestoes, one of which has the character of an official document, which have been printed and publicly circulated, the one being entitled "In re Louis Riel convicted of treason and executed therefor;" and the second "The Riel Question—Letter of the Honorable J. A. Chapleau." And to inquire of the Government whether it is their intention to correct these errors, by an additional declaration upon the same subject or in any other manner?

He said: This matter is of considerable importance, and I feel some difficulty in bringing it before the attention of the House at this late period of the session. I may explain that I was ready to bring the matter up at an earlier period, but at the request of the leader of the House I postponed it until after the adjournment. After the adjournment we all had to regret the illness of the leader of the House, and

I thought proper, under the circumstances, to postpone the matter until to-day. If I go on with it now it may interfere seriously with the business of the House, and as I do not wish to impede the public business, with the consent of the House I will allow it to stand for the present.

The motion was allowed to stand.

WORKS CONSTRUCTED OVER NAVIGABLE WATERS BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the third reading of Bill (130) "An Act respecting certain works constructed in or over navigable waters."

HON. MR. POWER said: The hon. member in charge of this Bill was good enough to say the other day that if the hon. gentleman from Alberton and myself could arrange with the Minister of Justice as to certain amendments which we thought desirable, the Government would have no objection to them. I wish to say that since that time the hon. gentleman from Alberton and myself have seen the Minister of Justice and shown him the amendments which I am about to move. He said he had no objection to them; in fact he seemed to think was necessary, I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Mr. Howlan,

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole House, for the purpose of amending the same by adding the following words to the first clause: "and 'lawful work' means and includes any 'work' not contrary to the law in force at the place of the construction thereof at the time of such construction;" and also of inserting after "contained" in the first line of the seventh clause the following words: "except the provisions of the first and fifth sections."

I may say there is a reference to lawful work in the fifth clause, and lawful work is not defined. Although a court might define it, as we propose to define it by this amendment, it is not clear on the face of the Bill, and it might lead to doubt and difficulty which it was thought better to remove. Then clause seven provides,

Nothing hereinbefore contained shall apply to any work constructed under the authority of any Act of the Parliament of Canada, or of the Legislature of the late Province of Canada, or of the Legislature of any Province now forming part of Canada, passed before such Province became a part thereof.

Clause five is as follows:—

Any lawful work may be rebuilt or repaired if the interference with navigation is not increased by such rebuilding or repairing.

Of course it is necessary that the provisions of that sixth clause should apply to these works mentioned in the seventh clause as well as to the other works. The Minister of Justice saw at once that it was a necessary and desirable amendment.

The motion was agreed to and the House resolved itself into a Committee of the whole for the purpose of making the amendments.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD, from the Committee, reported the Bill as amended.

HON. MR. POWER moved that the amendments be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill, as amended, was then read the third time and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (137) "An Act respecting the Carleton, City of St. John, Branch Railroad." (Mr. Plumb.)

Bill (136) "An Act further to amend the Act respecting fishing by foreign vessels." (Mr. Plumb.)

CHINESE IMMIGRATION BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (106) "An Act to amend and consolidate as amended the statutory provisions respecting Chinese Immigration."

In the Committee,

HON. MR. ALLAN said: When the Committee rose the other night and reported progress, there were certain clauses in the Bill which were reserved for further consideration, and I propose now, with the permission of the House, to go through those clauses, and state what alterations I propose to make in them. The first is in sub-section C of the second clause. "The expression Chinese means any person born of a Chinese father." I propose to amend that by inserting the words "Offspring of a Chinese father." Then, in clause B, section eight, an amendment was suggested by the hon. gentleman from Victoria with regard to merchants. I propose to carry out that suggestion by inserting the word "Merchants" so as to read "merchants, tourists, men of science, students, etc." Then, with respect to clause fifteen, which has excited a good deal of discussion, I propose to amend it so as to make the conductor liable only when willfully contravening the law.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Supposing the company requests the conductor to carry the Chinese passengers through, he is bound to obey, as he is the company's servant.

HON. MR. ALLAN—The conductor is merely made responsible under this clause for that which he will have no difficulty in doing—to furnish the controller with the number of Chinese on board, and there is no difficulty in his making a declaration that they passed through Canada on that train or car. Clause nineteen seemed to me to be one of the harshest clauses in the Bill; it provides that every Chinese person resident in Canada at the time of the coming into force of this Act shall register himself and the members of his family with the chief controller, etc., under penalty of $50, or imprisonment for not less than three months. It was urged with great justice, and I felt the point very strongly myself, that many Chinese residents at present in the country would not be aware of the passing of this Act, and would know nothing about the provisions of this clause; it would be a very harsh measure to expose them to such a penalty if they failed, from want of knowledge, to register themselves before the 31st December. I thought it was but right, if this is to be enforced, that those to whom the carrying out of this Act is entrusted should be the parties to see that the Chinese are notified; therefore, I have amended the clause so that it will read,

"For wilfully failing to do so before the 31st December, after having been notified by the controller or person authorized to carry this law into effect."

HON. MR. HOWLAN—How are you going to notify them—in writing?

HON. MR. ALLAN—It is not provided whether they are to be notified in writing or not. Then, I propose to amend clause twenty-one so that it shall not apply to the children of Chinese who have become permanent residents in the country.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Supposing that an Englishman is married to a Chinese wife and she has children?

HON. MR. ALLAN—A case of that kind is covered by the expression "offspring of a Chinese father." Those with other trifling amendments are the alterations I propose to make in the Bill, and I think with those changes the Bill will meet with the concurrence of the House. When I spoke on this subject the other night I frankly confessed that my sympathies did not run very strongly with the Bill, and I was honestly desirous, while acceding to what was supposed to be the very strong wish, to which some respect should be paid, of the residents of a part of the Dominion that this Bill should not be made to bear with undue harshness upon this race all over the country. I think, with the amendments I have suggested, the Bill will be a fairly good measure and if it meets with the approbation of the House I would now move the adoption of the first amendment in sub-section C. of clause two by striking out the words "Born of" and substituting "Offspring of."

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I must confess the more I look into this Bill the more convinced I am that it is the most iniquitous measure that I have ever seen introduced into Parliament. Take for instance the 12th clause: What does it amount to? For $50 you can bring into this country the worst man in China: the payment of that amount condones all his offences and removes all his disabilities. The Chinaman never came to this continent unrequested. The history of Chinese immigration into America is well known to all who have paid any attention to the subject. In 1849, when labor was very dear in California, and everything was in a sort of chaos there, thoughtful intelligent men looked abroad for cheap labor for the purpose of developing the industries on the Pacific slope. The American Government selected the Hon. Anson Burlingame to proceed to China to request the Government of that country to send some of their people to the United States. What did the Chinese Government do? Did they accept the offer and promise to send their people to this continent? No. They said very properly "We will send a delegation of intelligent and competent men amongst ourselves to examine your institutions and study your habits, customs and manners and your regulations with respect to the industries of America and the labor employed in them, and if, when they report back to the Government of China, we see fit to recommend the emigration of our people to your new country we will do so." When that Chinese delegation came to the United States they were dined and wined in all the leading cities they visited: they were received in Washington, San Francisco, Chicago, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Detroit, New York, Buffalo and Boston. The papers teemed with the great blessings which were going to flow into the United States by having this cheap labor, especially in California and some of the western States, which were not at that time so much developed as they are now. Those who remember the condition of affairs in the United States at that time know that the whole of the manufacturing towns of New Hampshire, Vermont and Massachusetts were thrown into a turmoil of discontent, worse than we have at the present time in Chicago with strikes. The manufacturers of boots and shoes, hats and caps, ready made clothing, hardware of every description, cottons and woollens looked upon it as a great advantage to be able to procure this cheap labor. Between 1854 and 1859 very strong opinions were held with regard to what was termed the "foreign" population in the United States—that they were forcing what was called the Americans out of the labor field. Those ideas led to the formation of large organizations of what were then called the "Know Nothings". It was no uncommon thing to find in the railway cars in the New England States ladies and gentlemen travelling accompanied by Chinese servants; it was no uncommon thing to find five or six hundred operatives in a manufacturing industry in Lynn or other New England manufacturing towns turned out of employment to be replaced by Chinese. It was thought at that time that all avenues, social and otherwise, were open to the Mongolians. The press of the country, daily, weekly and monthly, welcomed them into this new country, and they did come in myriads. When the gold fever died out in California, many men, owing to the existence of this cheap labor in the country, launched forth into the cultivation of many products that have become more productive than even the rich gold mines of the State in their best days. Three years ago the export of wine from California was larger than the largest yield of gold in the State in any one year. Tobacco, silk, cochineal, indigo and other products have been brought to perfection through Chinese labor; the Union Pacific and Northern Pacific could not have been built without the Chinese, and I have very grave doubts if our Canadian Pacific Railway could have been constructed so rapidly but for the same race.

HON. MR. NELSON—Yes it could.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—What California was then, British Columbia may be very soon. Those who have paid attention to the present position of that Province know that the products for which its soil and climate are particularly suited cannot be produced without cheap labor. They have untold millions in valuable minerals wrapped up in the mountains; they have also along their river bottoms most productive soil which can be made exceedingly valuable by means of cheap labor. Yet here, at the very outset, when we boast that we have completed a railway 3,000 miles in length, opening up a vast area of fertile lands, we are asked to exclude the Chinese, the very people we want in this country. We have heard a good deal about the vices of the Chinese. We have heard about their prostitution, as if there were no vices and prostitution in the great cities of this country and Europe. It is questionable whether, under the high civilization of which we boast, we are any better in that respect than they are. We are told that in the United States legislation similar to this has been adopted; but it was only after having had the benefit of the labor of these people for years, and after the completion of the works to which I have adverted. Take the arid plains in the western part of this continent. Take southern California and other sections of the neighboring republic, and you will find that the Chinese have conducted more than any others to make them productive—that to them mainly is due the successful culture of the mulberry tree, and the production of silk, and yet we are asked to pass a Bill of this kind to exclude that industrious population from our country. What do we find in the United States? The most rigid laws there only exclude the Chinese after ten years; but here we exclude them at the very outset, unless they pay $50; but on payment of that amount they are entitled to all the rights of citizenship. Under this Bill the man who, by chance or accident, brings a Chinaman to the country is subject to a severe penalty. How difficult it is for any of us to draw a distinction between a Malay and a Chinaman dressed in a sailor's garb. How difficult for the master or mate of a ship to tell the difference; and yet the master or mate of a ship is subject to a very heavy fine if he allows a Chinese sailor to go ashore in this country.

HON. MR. MCINNES—You can tell by the queue.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I have seen hundreds of them without queues. I have seen them with the hair cut as close as yours or mine.

HON. MR. NELSON—Not one in 500,000.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Perhaps I have seen fewer Chinamen than the hon. gentleman from Burrard Inlet; but in opposition to his statements, I take those of the hon. member from Victoria (Mr. Macdonald). No reason has been shown why this legislation should be adopted.

HON. MR. HOWLAN.

It is iniquitous in all its provisions, and I am only sorry that the Parliament of Canada should put such an Act on the Statute book, one which is not in keeping with nineteenth century civilization. The feelings that exist in Canada to-day, and in certain portions of the United States against the Chinese are the same as those ideas and opinions that opposed the influx of the Irish into the United States in the period between 1854 and 1859.

HON. MR. NELSON—No.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I say yes. The placards which were posted then called upon the people to "Turn out the Irish population and take the Chinese; the Irish are drunken, brutal and ignorant; take the Chinese who are peaceable, intelligent and industrious"; but when the war cry sounded through the New England valleys, the Irish were valuable then, and know nothingism broke up. Gentlemen of high standing in the Catholic church, like the late Archbishop Hughes, advised their people to follow the flag which had adopted and succored them. The same prejudice existed then against the Irish that prevails to-day against the Chinese. I feel, as a member of this Parliament, disgraced to be asked to vote for such a bill—a measure so antagonistic to the views we entertain of the best mode of building up this country. There are people to-day who may hold the same views of the Irish that were held in the United States thirty years ago, but the Irish have representatives here to defend them; who have we here to defend the Chinese? Who has had sufficient experience of them to be qualified to represent their views? All I have heard of them, and all I can find about them, is to the effect that they are sober, that they save their money and send it home, and are trustworthy. That is what you are told about them; and yet, because in certain portions of Canada labor would be cheapened by the employment of those Chinese, the whole Dominion from end to end is to be subjected to this legislation. If it is the experience of members in both Houses from British Columbia that the Chinese should be restricted from entering their province, well and good; but let the restrictive legislation apply to that province only, and not to all the rest of Canada. Who says that in Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, or Prince Edward Island, there is any necessity for a law of this kind? There is not a man who holds that opinion.

HON. MR. NELSON—Yes; petitions have been sent in against Chinese immigration—petition after petition has been presented in the House of Commons against it.

HON. MR. VIDAL—Where from?

HON. MR. NELSON—From Ontario.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I heard of a man who thought he was dying of brain fever. When he said so to a friend, he replied, "No man ever died of brain fever who had not a brain." Now there are no Chinese in Ontario, and there can be no ground for petitioning against them.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Yes, there are a few Chinamen in Ontario.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Very few, if any. I say this legislation is a step in the wrong direction. You invite the Russians into this country and give 160 acres of land to each settler. On the other hand, you say to the Chinese "You are not wanted in this country unless you pay $50, and then we do not care what your character may be, you are welcome." That is not in keeping with the spirit of the age or with the views and ideas of the Canadian people, or their representatives. It is a question in my mind whether these Chinese are not superior to the Russians, so far as their cleanliness is concerned, and from reading the history of China and the accounts of missionaries who have labored in that country, I doubt whether they are not quite equal to a great many of those who are supposed to be their betters. Until we have some cogent and valid reason—something that can be relied upon—for granting such legislation as this, I say we ought to oppose it. What is the case of the Chinese to-day may be quoted as a precedent for excluding some other race in the future—some race that a few members of the House of Commons may think antagonistic to the industries of the country. There are some 16,000 white men I am told in the Province of British Columbia.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Double that number.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I wish there was a million. I do not wish to say anything disrespectful of the Province of British Columbia, and I do not wish my hon. friend to suppose that I do, but I think he will agree with me that there is plenty of room in his province for four times the population that it contains at present, and if the labour in British Columbia can be cheapened by the influx of the Chinese, surely other races may come in and reduce the prices of labour in the same way. So far as I am individually concerned, I have heard nothing to warrant this legislation—nothing to induce me, at all events, to vote for certain clauses of the Bill. There are some portions of it which are necessary. I have no doubt. The Government, I suppose, has found it necessary to make provision for the appointment of an interpreter, to give the Custom House officers control of these matters, etc. I find no fault with those parts of the Bill, but to sub-section C. and sections eight ten, and eleven, I have most decided objections. It is usually laid down by all legislators and by all authorities that the penalty must be somewhat in keeping with the crime, and here for a non-payment of $50 a man is imprisoned for twelve months. Now where is the analogy between the Act and the penalty?

HON. MR. ALLAN—The very clause to which the hon. gentleman now refers is already on the Statute Book—it is already law.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—So much the worse for the old law. The next objection I find is to clause twelve, which provides that no master of any vessel carrying Chinese immigrants shall land or disembark any such immigrant or permit any such immigrant or member of his crew being a Chinese to land or disembark, etc., etc., and the master who permits it is liable to a penalty of $100.

HON. MR. ALLAN—That is in the old Act too.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—But the old law is confined to British Columbia and to immigrants arriving in vessels.

HON. MR. ALLAN—It is word for word with this clause.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—For $500 the master of a vessel can bring in ten Chinese no matter how bad they may be. If the Chinaman comes by train and has not got his $50 he cannot be let off the train, or he may starve there on the train unless the tax is paid.

HON. MR. ALLAN—This clause is word for word as it is in the Act. The Bill does not introduce any fresh matter with respect to that, and whether these clauses now in the Statute book are wise and good is another affair. Whether we reject this Bill or not those clauses in the old Act will stand.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—If we alter them they will not stand. Another thing I may say is, while conditions of that kind might have been necessary a few years ago, now that we are extending our commerce and expecting to have a line of steamers running from Victoria to China and Japan, it will be almost impossible for masters and owners of vessels and ships not to have, at some time or other, to employ Chinese sailors, and Chinese sailors are not to be despised.

HON. MR. McINNES—I am very sorry that I was not present on Friday when the discussion on this Bill took place. Owing to my being absent on that occasion, I am laboring under a disadvantage, not knowing what has fallen from hon. gentlemen who took part in the debate. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, thinks that it is our duty to attract all classes and all nationalities, even the Chinese, to our shores in order to build up this new country. I have been a resident of British Columbia for twelve years and my experience is, that the Chinese are a very undesirable people to go to any country, especially a young country, inasmuch as they do not come with the intention of remaining and becoming citizens. They come for the sole purpose of making a few hundred or a few thousand dollars, and then returning to their native land to spend or enjoy the proceeds of their labor. They enter into few industries that have even a tendency to develop the great natural resources of our country. British Columbia would be to-day much further advanced than she is—she would have a much larger white population—were it not for the many thousand Chinese who monopolize the labor market and thereby exclude the laboring classes of our own race. While I contend that the Chinese have been an injury to the country and have retarded its material progress, yet I am free to confess there is at least one very important industry that could not be successfully prosecuted without Chinese labor. I refer to the salmon canning industry. That industry although only started a few years ago is one of the most important in the country, and can be expanded to almost any extent, but cannot thrive and prosper without Chinese labor. Their sober, steady and industrious habits peculiarly fit them for that particular industry. But with the exception of that industry I contend British Columbia would be in a much more prosperous condition if she had not one-quarter the number of Chinese she now has. My hon. friend from Alberton referred to the white population of British Columbia as being very small. It is true we have a small white population, but we have twice the number that he gave us credit for, and I can assure that hon. gentleman that one of the principal reasons why we have not a larger white population in British Columbia to-day is the very fact that there was no restriction placed upon Chinese immigration. I took the liberty of making a few remarks in reply to the Speech from the Throne, and some hon. gentlemen may possibly remember that I took the ground then in referring to this promised legislation that there was now very little necessity for any additional legislation of this kind; that the time had gone by when it was absolutely necessary—that the mischief had been done—the country had become flooded with Chinese coolies and as a consequence white people have been kept out of the country. The Canadian Pacific Railway has been completed and a very large percentage of the many millions spent in the construction of that great national highway has found its way into the pockets of the Chinese and has been sent out of the country. The representatives from British Columbia seven or eight years ago urged very strongly upon the Government—before the Canadian Pacific Railway contract was let—that a clause should be placed in the contract excluding Chinese labor from that great national undertaking. Unfortunately the advice of the representatives of British Columbia was disregarded, and a contractor imported some four or five thousand Chinese coolies—brought in almost as many Chinese as we had there in 1881. According to the census of 1882 we had under 5,000 Chinese population in British Columbia, now we have something like 20,000; but I am happy to say that instead of increasing the last year, it has decreased. Consequently, I repeat, there is very little necessity for this amendment to the Chinese restriction of last year. On the second March last when I made a few observations on this subject stating that there was very little necessity for any further legislation with respect to the Chinese, a couple of days afterwards the following letter appeared in the Ottawa Citizen which I shall read to the House :

THE CHINESE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Editor of The Citizen.

Sir,—I notice in your paper this morning that Senator McInnes is reported as having said the Chinese were not now coming into the Province of British Columbia. Sir, such a statement is incorrect, and if the Senator will take the trouble to look into the official returns he will see that he has been misled. He also states that there is no need for any further legislation on the Chinese question. Such a statement is in direct opposition to the already expressed desire of the people of British Columbia. Public meetings have been held during the past year, at which resolutions were passed praying the Government to make the Chinese Restriction Act more restrictive. But, then, Mr. Editor, it is a little excusable for the Senator to make these statements, because he is not now a resident of that Province, having taken up his abode in the city of Toronto, and hence how can he know anything about the feeling of the people or the wants of the Province.

Yours, etc.,

NOAH SHAKESPEARE, M.P.
House of Commons, March 3rd.

Although the writer of that letter states that I am reported to have said such and such things about the Chinese, he was then occupying a seat on the floor of this House, and heard every word that I uttered, and what I stated was, that after the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway in December last, thousands of Chinese were thrown out of employment and a great number of them were in a starving condition, and that Chinese immigration to British Columbia had entirely ceased. When I read this letter of Mr. Shakespeare, I at once wrote to the Mayors of the cities of New Westminster, Victoria and Nanaimo asking them if in their opinion the Chinese population had increased or decreased since the 1st of August last; and if the Chinese population had decreased, was it owing to the Chinese Restriction Act of last year, or was it in consequence of the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway? I received replies from each of those gentlemen, two of whom came out very strongly and stated it was not owing to the Chinese Restriction Act of last year, but to the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway was completed and three or four thousand Chinese laborers were thrown out of employment. I find also from a return brought down to the House of Commons a short time ago that the number of Chinese that arrived in the Province of British Columbia from the 20th of August to the 30th of January last, was 285. They paid $8,450 of a poll tax. Of these sixty-four Chinese were entered as tourists, merchants and students. During the same period 688 Chinese left the Province—in other words only 169 came to the Province for the purpose of remaining, whereas 688 left Province—or there were 519 Chinese more left the Province than came into it during that time. I also find from a statement made by the Secretary of State that during the months of February and March there was not a solitary entry—then none came to the Province at all; so that my statements were correct in every particular, notwithstanding the demagogism of Mr. Shakespeare, as the evidence I have adduced clearly shows. This being the case there is little use for this legislation; the day when it would have been of the greatest use has gone by. As I said before, there are certain industries in British Columbia that are dependent upon the Chinese to be carried on profitably, and I think this Bill, taking it as a whole, is a harsh, arbitrary and un-Christian one, especially the clauses from 18 to 24. I have always taken a moderate and I think a reasonable view of this question. I believe that after we allow any people to come in amongst us it is our duty to treat them justly and even kindly, no matter if they are Mongolians. The fault is not with those poor people, but with ourselves in allowing them to come to our country. Once they are among us I claim it is our bounden duty to treat them justly and to exercise that spirit of charity and Christianity we so loudly proclaim to the world.

HON. MR. NELSON—In speaking on this question before, I took strong grounds against Chinese immigration, and I see no reason to change my mind of the subject from anything I have since heard. My great reason for taking ground against Chinese immigration is almost entirely the question of race. I was told when I advanced that argument that it was not a question of race, but a question of labor. I admit that to a certain extent it is a question of labor as well as one of race, but I contend that the great question here to-day is the question of race—that by allowing the Chinese to come unrestricted to our country now will be just the commencement of the condition of affairs that at present exists in the Southern States in regard to the negro population. On a previous occasion I tried to illustrate my views in regard to this Chinese question by referring to the negroes of the Southern States. At that time I did not know that anything had been written on the subject, or that it had been taken up seriously by the statesmen of the United States in the manner it has been. Since then I have discovered a work on the subject which has enlightened me a great deal. The negro question is the great and burning question in the United States to-day. I propose to read a few extracts from a work on that subject which will probably give a better illustration of my views on this subject than I am able to give myself. I will first quote from an article in the Week, a Canadian journal, on this subject:—

HON. MR. MCINNES.

"No more tremendous problem was ever presented to a nation than that of the two races in the Southern States. Even the problem with which England has to deal in Ireland is less desperate. It is brought before us in its full magnitude and complexity in 'An Appeal to Cæsar,' the last work of Judge Tourgee, whose first work, 'A Fool's Errand,' threw a sudden flood of light on the situation in the South. Judge Tourgee declares the division of race to be the one dominant and all-pervading influence in Southern politics, as it is in Southern society. Instead of being obliterated by slavery, it seems to have become deeper and more hopeless than ever. Intermarriage is impossible; it is in fact more than ever banned and execrated, and without intermarriage real union can never take place. The social line has even been drawn with increased sharpness since the superiority of the dominant race has ceased, and the slave has become a pretender to equality."

By allowing the Chinese to come into our country, unrestricted, we are laying the foundation of a similar question in the future for the Dominion of Canada. I propose reading a few extracts from a work on the subject, "An Appeal to Cæsar," by Albion W. Tourgee. That writer says:—

No two races thus distinctly separated by color and by marked natural characteristics have ever yet dwelt side by side without conflict. That they should ever do so is accounted by very many as an impossibility.

The second factor in our argument is the impossibility of fusion between whites and blacks. The latter have been, and must continue to be, a distinct and alien race. The fusion of races is the resultant from social equality and intermarriage, and the barrier to this is here surmountable.

The Irish, German, French, etc., who come to these shores, readily intermarry among themselves and with the native population. Within a generation or two the sharpness of national feature disappears, and the issue is the American, whose mixed blood is the country's foremost hope. It cannot be—a fusion like this between whites and blacks. Account for it as we may, the antipathy is a palpable fact which no one fails to recognize—an antipathy not less strong among the Northern than among the Southern whites. However the former may, on the score of matters political, profess themselves special friends to the blacks, the question of intermarriage and social equality, when brought to practical test, they will not touch with the end of the little finger. Whether it be that the blacks, because of their former condition of servitude, are regarded as a permanently degraded class; whether it be that the whites, from their historic eminence, are possessed with a conscious superiority which spurns alliance—the fact that fusion is impossible no one in his senses can deny.

Certain it is that the influences now existent will render his words as true a hundred years from now as they are to-day.

Gradually, and not so slowly either, the colored man is driving the white man out of many of the avenues to self-support in the South. The white blacksmith is becoming a more and more infrequent object even in the upland regions of the South. Masons, carpenters, even contractors for the plainer sorts of mechanical work, are so common that they have ceased to be at all noticeable among the colored people of the South.

A gentleman from one of these states called upon the writer not long since, on his way westward with his family. We had known him for years as a successful planter, a man of moderate means, of large and exceptional intelligence for one of his class. We were curious to know why he was going to Kansas, and asked the reason.

"Wal," was his reply, "you see I have a big family of children—nine of them now—and when I look things squarely in the face it don't seem to me that the South is going to be just the pleasantest place for white folks, not over an' above rich, to live in. You see the niggers are free now. I don't object to that—never owned but two, and they were mighty poor ones. I've nothing against them, free nor slave, but they are getting a mighty strong hold all through that country, and somehow I've a notion my gals and boys will have a little better chance out West, where there isn't but one sort of folks. I don't suppose I'll ever find a place where I'll make a better living or make it more comfortably than I did on the old plantation; but we've lived through one pretty rough time that lasted for four years. I was in the army, and the wife and babies at home. That war was all about the niggers. There's no use denying it North or South. They were at the bottom of it, though it wasn't none of their doings that brought it on. That was slavery, of course. That's what everybody said, and what everybody don't know ain't worth anybody's finding out, they say. So now everybody says there can't be no more trouble just because there ain't any more slavery. As if that was the only thing human beings ever fell out about, and came to blows over! Of course, I don't know as ever there will be any more trouble—I hope there won't. But it does seem to me that its going to be a hard matter to keep out of difficulty where there's just about as many niggers as there is white folks, or perhaps a few more, and one is just as free as t'other. In a way, there's a heap more bad blood atween 'em now than most people takes any note on, and me and the old woman just agreed we'd better sell out, seein' as we had a good chance, and take the boys and gals out West where there would be no likelihood of of such trouble, whatever else there might be."

"The fact is," he continued, "I don't see what's a-comin' when the niggers git a little better off, and a little more education, and are really able to take care of themselves. They'll out-vote the white man, outokr him, and I don't see why they shouldn't out-grow and out-rule him—unless they're killed off or kept down."

As I stated before we are just laying the foundation for this state of things in Canada, because if we allow the Chinaman to come into British Columbia the white man will be kept out. My hon. friend from New Westminster says that the Chinese have been leaving British Columbia lately in greater numbers than they are coming into it, but I ask him what is the reason for it? It is simply because they could not come eastward, in consequence of the Canadian Pacific Railway not having been finished. If the Chinese had had the opportunity of crossing the Rocky Mountains and getting into the North-West, they would have come east. Their reason for leaving the Province was, a great work had been inaugurated in British Columbia requiring a large amount of labor, and that work having been finished, and the Chinese laborers having no inclination to settle themselves down to other pursuits had to leave the Province. Had the Canadian Pacific Railway been opened up these people would not only have found their way into the North-West Territories and have obtained a foothold there, but other Chinese would have followed in their footsteps and would have done the same thing.

HON. MR. MCINNIS—Why do they not come east on the Union Pacific Railway?

HON. MR. NELSON—The reason why they do not do so in greater numbers at the present time in the United States is because the law there is almost prohibitory. My hon. friend has referred to the value of Chinese labor in establishing industries in California; but it is the people of California who have brought about the present law in the United States. They do not believe in Chinese immigration.

HON. MR. MCINNES—A certain number of them do not, it is true.

HON. MR. NELSON—A large proportion of them do not. There can be no doubt if we allow those people to come into this country unrestricted they will come in ever increasing numbers; they will remain a distinct and separate race from ours, and as they increase in numbers and power they will be an opposing race—they will be a more opposing race when they are in greater numbers than the negroes of the South are to-day. I say that now is the proper time to restrict Chinese immigration if we do not want to have trouble in the future

HON. MR. MCINNES—Seven or eight years ago was the proper time to have done it.

HON. MR. NELSON—It is not too late yet. Speaking of the introduction of European labor into this country, it is a totally different matter altogether. The Irish and all European people who come into this country retain their nationality for one generation; the next generation become American, and part and parcel of the people amongst whom they are settled. The Chinese never can become a part of our people; they will forever stand out distinct and separate and hostile, and as they increase in power they will become a danger to the country. I want to point out the rapid growth of the negro population in the South.

HON. MR. DEVER—There is no analogy between the Chinese and the negro of the South. The negro was forced to this continent—brought here as a slave.

HON. MR. NELSON—It makes no difference how they come; once implanted on the soil they have increased in numbers and they have increased more rapidly since they have become free men, though it was at one time believed that when slavery was abolished in the United States the negroes would die off absolutely from the face of the earth. On the contrary, however, their increase has been unprecedented, and the people of the United States are beginning to realize that they are a source of danger. At the present rate of increase it is calculated that in 100 years from now there will not be less than 190,000,000 of colored people in the United States.

HON. MR. PLUMB—And how many whites?

HON. MR. NELSON—Over 300,000,000 of whites. In the latter case all the immigration is taken into account; and it is naturally concluded that after the United States has to a certain extent become filled up—all its wild lands settled—that immigration will not continue, and that then there will be a greater proportionate increase in the black population than in the white.

HON. MR. MCINNES—How much will the proportionate increase be among the blacks?

HON. MR. NELSON—The blacks double their population in less than 25 years, whereas the white population double their number in 37 years. This is a calculation made from recent statistics. There is another fact which is well worthy of our consideration here and that is, not only the increase of these people, but their effect upon the white population as well.

HON. MR. POWER—That is all right; we shall take that for granted.

HON. MR. NELSON—The effect is to degrade the white population.

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B. C.)—Dispense!

HON. MR. NELSON—Not at all, I propose to read it. This is a subject of the greatest importance to the country, and should not be treated lightly. The extract which I propose to read is as follows:—

The North has thirty millions of a population and a million and a half of illiterates.

The South has eighteen millions of population and five millions of illiterates.

Five and three-tenths per cent. of the people of the North cannot read and write.

Thirty-six and a half per cent. of the people of the South cannot read and write.

Five and two-tenths per cent. of the white people of the North cannot read and write.

Nineteen per cent. of the white people of the South cannot read and write.

When we take into consideration the fact that among the Northern population only five and two-tenths per cent. cannot read and write, while nineteen per cent. of the white people of the South cannot read and write, we must feel and know that that state of ignorance is brought upon the people of South by their contact with the negro race. I can foresee that there is great danger in the future if we admit the Chinese. I am sorry that hon. gentlemen are not able to see it in the same light as I do. I have given a great deal of attention to the subject and I see in the future serious danger from the influx of a people which cannot become a part of our population. There are five hundred millions of people in China within easy reach of us, and if we admit them they will come to our country. To-day there are probably three hundred thousand of them on the Pacific Coast; if we do not restrict their immigration you will find in ten years they will have increased to a million, and in ten years more to three millions, until they over-run the country. That is the history of the negro race in the South, we will repeat that history in Canada unless we exclude the Chinese to-day. I feel strongly on this question. I feel that the people in Eastern Canada, not having had the Chinese among them, as they are on the Pacific coast, are not aroused to the danger. The same indifference was manifested in the North some time ago, when there were only eight or ten black men in every thousand of the population: but it was a very different matter with the South where the negroes were as numerous as the whites. In British Columbia to-day the Chinese are almost as numerous as the whites: there are twenty thousand Chinese while the whites number between twenty-five and thirty thousand. I know that the people in the eastern part of this country do not appreciate the importance of this question yet, but the time will come when they will recognize the fact that the admission of the Chinese to the country is a mistake.

HON. MR. ALLAN—I am afraid that if we go on debating the principle of the Bill, as we are doing just now, we shall occupy the whole time of the House probably until 6 o'clock. I have tried honestly to put this Bill into as good a shape as possible by the amendment which I read when the House was moved again into committee of the whole; but there are many difficulties which surround the subject and one especially in reference to our powers to deal with any fine or tax, or any sums of money mentioned in the Bill—for instance, to reduce a fine, to increase it, etc. I think it would be better, as the feeling of the House pretty generally is certainly not in favor of the Bill as it now stands, that I should move that the Committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again to-morrow. That will give me an opportunity of consulting with the Government on the subject, and perhaps it may result in the Bill being withdrawn altogether.

HON. MR. GIRARD, from the Committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—I have an amendment to propose. I wish to move that the chairman leave the chair.

HON. MR. SCOTT—You will have an opportunity of moving it to-morrow.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (94) "An Act further to amend the Dominion Lands Act, 1883."

In the Committee,

On the second clause,

HON. MR. POWER—Perhaps the Minister pro tem will tell us what the effect of this clause is—what changes it makes in the existing law.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The changes made in the Bill are that it repeals sub-clauses 3 and 4 of clause 2 of the Dominion Lands Act. It alters the appointment of certain officers. As I stated at the second reading of the Bill, it was received very favourably in the House of Commons; no amendment was moved to it, and it passed the third reading without discussion.

The clause was adopted.

On the third clause,

HON. MR. POWER—This is a very extensive power to give to the Government, to alter all those forms which have been solemnly agreed to by Parliament. These are the forms used by parties applying for lands. It gives the Governor in Council power to alter the whole of them. I am not objecting to it, only I think we ought to know why this extensive power is given.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I am told that the reason is that it is intended to give greater facility for homestead entries. It will work practically in favour of the settlers who intend to make homestead entries.

The clause was adopted.

On the fifth clause,

HON. MR. POWER—I understood that the hon. member from Kings (Mr. Reesor) has an amendment to move to this clause.

HON. MR. REESOR—I have had a pretty long interview with the Minister of the Interior and he seems to agree with me in regard to the principle that would be involved in the amendment which I wished to introduce, but he thinks it preferable not to have it statutory, but to leave it for a departmental order. As he expressed himself freely and confidently to be disposed to carry out the principle I urge, I am not disposed to press the amendment.

HON. MR. SCOTT—The opinion I have always entertained of this legislation has been that it is too much of a cast iron character. Having had some experience myself in the administration of public lands, provincial and federal, I have felt that much discretion should be allowed to the person administering the affairs of the Department. It is utterly impossible to prescribe by Act of Parliament for the numerous cases which will crop up, in the administration of these lands. The amendment which the hon. gentleman proposed to bring under the notice of the House I thought was in the right direction—it was to give the Minister discretion, where all the conditions but one had been fulfilled, to sell the land to the settler at $1 per acre. I go further than that—I say where there are eight conditions and seven of them have been complied with, it would be hard to apply the law rigorously because the settler has failed in one of the conditions. The hon. gentleman says that the head of the Department proposes, where a contingency of that kind arises, to deal liberally with the settler. That is all we desire to do. It may be remembered when the other Bill was before the house, Sir David Macpherson was in charge of it, and the desire was manifested on all sides that unbounded liberality should be exercised towards actual settlers. Suppose the speculator does eat up four or five per cent. of the lands of that country, are the settlers to be punished? You cannot defeat the speculator in all cases, and you may so hedge round the details of the management of the Department that it is impossible for the Minister, or whoever is charged with the administration of the lands, to meet the cases which arise. I have felt it myself in administering the public lands, more particularly in the provincial department, and I have at times violated acts of Parliament. I did not hesitate to do so, or to tell the House that I did so, because I felt that the utmost liberality should be exercised in dealing with the settler. If you make a lot of cast-iron rules you cannot carry out the administration of the department. Cases will arise in which they would operate harshly. We have had more legislation on the land department of the North-West than any other subject, simply to meet numbers of cases which arise. I say, give the land department the widest possible liberty to do the best they can. Let the impression go abroad that it is the desire of the people of Canada that the land department of the North-West shall be conducted in the widest and most liberal spirit. I have always laid down the principle that when a man went on land he had a right to it, and that no one could take it from him without paying for his improvements, and if the Commissioner should in any case make a mistake, the occupant at all times should have the land. To-day you cannot locate a lot in Ontario unless you swear positively that no one is in possession or has made a dollar's worth of improvements upon it. No man can file a claim or has the right of pre-emption or purchase without making such an affidavit and if he files his affidavit and it is found that he has taken advantage of an unfortunate man who has not reported himself to the Department, the Minister has the right to cancel the patent. The same right ought to exist here. That is the broad principle which ought to be laid down as the fundamental basis of the administration of land in the North-West—that the man who puts labor on the ground is not to be deprived of it until he has an opportunity of purchasing or rejecting the terms which are given to everybody. Therefore I have always advocated the greatest latitude in the administration of the Department. You cannot meet all possible cases that arise; and if you hedge them around with all manner of stipulations and conditions you will only interfere with the settlement of the country.

HON. MR. PLUMB,

HON. MR. TURNER—I congratulate the leader of the Opposition on his broad and statesmanlike speech. The more latitude that is left to the Minister, the better for the country. It is impossible, at the great distance at which we are from the North-West, to have everything done just right and according to rule, and if there is any clause introduced into this Bill giving the Minister wide discretion, having confidence in the Minister as we all have, I say let it be done.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman from Kings (Mr. Reesor) spoke of amending sub-clause D of clause 5, which is as follows:—

“(d) That he erected a habitable house upon his homestead before the expiration of the second year after his homestead entry, and has bona fide resided therein and has cultivated the land for three years next prior to the date of his application for his patent.”

It is one of the several conditions under which the patent is granted. Now, I think that the great object in view is that the land should be cultivated: that is provided for in the previous paragraphs. It is provided that a habitable house shall be erected on the homestead; but it may be that the applicant is not able to establish that he has fulfilled this condition of bona fide residence for three years next prior to the date of his application. But he must have some one living on the land, because he builds his house and his land is cultivated, and the country gets the benefit of the work; and it does not seem to me that it is reasonable to require that he should have resided on the land himself for three years prior to the application for his patent. I was happy to hear that the present Minister of the Interior intends to administer the law in a liberal spirit, but I think we ought to so word the statute that he could do that without violating the law. When law and justice collide one may be excused for setting the law to one side; but the Minister should not be placed in such a position that he should be obliged either to be unjust or to violate the law. In order to give a Minister the discretion that he ought to have, this paragraph should be amended in that direction. As it stands now, the Minister cannot do what he is apparently willing to do, without violating the law.

HON. MR. REESOR—I will just read the amendment that I had intended to propose, but if there is any want of unanimity on the subject I shall not press it:—

“Provided also that any person claiming a patent under a homestead entry or under a homestead pre-emption entry who shall have complied with all the other conditions, but the personal residence, for the full period required, shall be entitled to his patent on the payment of $1 per acre.”

I think it would be a very good provision, and would have a wholesome effect. It would make farmers feel safe that they would not be liable, in the event of their not being able to fulfil entirely the condition of residence, that they would not lose all they had invested and all their improvements. In a conversation that I had with the Minister of the Interior, he gave me to understand that the Department were really acting upon the principle that I am urging in cases that have hitherto come before them. With that assurance I do not feel like pressing the amendment, but I think it would be better if the House should consent to it, that it should be adopted.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I think the hon. gentleman will see that the whole of these sections are in favor of the homesteader. As my hon. friend from Ottawa has said, these are all tentative matters; we are trying to get at this thing as well as we can. The experience of the Minister has led him to make those changes in favor of the settler. There is no antagonism on his part, and it is to give him support in every way to carry out the settlement principle, and to assure that the man who goes on to the land will do something with it. I think we are safe in trusting to the examination and large experience which the Minister has had, because he approached the matter in a right spirit when he made his extended tour through the North-West. This Bill is a relaxation in every particular of the provisions of the first land Act. It has been improved as far as it seemed possible to do so in favor of the settler. Any further concession which will promote the great object which this country has in view, the rapid settlement of the North-West, will be adopted from time to time. I trust hon. gentlemen will pardon me for not being as fully conversant with the details of the department as I would be if I had been the Minister there or a member of the Council who have had this Bill under consideration. It is a complicated Bill, and it would be very easy for a hypercritical gentleman to embarrass me by asking questions which would require me to look at the original record. I can find out if necessary, but it would cause delay. I may say also that every one of these clauses met with full approval in another place when they were proposed and were received with great cordiality.

The clause was agreed to.

On the ninth clause,

HON. MR. PLUMB—By an error when this Act was under consideration in the other House there was an omission of a very important section which I wish to insert here, and I will explain it in a very few words. I wish it to be inserted between sections eight and nine and to become section nine. It is a provision to the effect that the Act as it now stands shall be changed in regard to the lien for advances on homesteads. Under the law, in case a settler should lose his claim before he became entitled to a patent, there was a loss of the lien—there was nothing by which it could be enforced. Practically only some 8 or 10 per cent up to this time have lost their liens but the fact that such may be the effect of the law is a disability upon the settler in obtaining advances. Of course that has not been very generally the case, but now it is proposed to enable the person making the advances to put on another settler, in order to secure him, in the place of the settler who has left the land and given it up, and complete the settlement duties, in which case the patent covers and carries the lien with it. In the event of the settler not being replaced the party advancing can get the patent, but is bound to sell the land at any time within two years if the purchaser offers the sum which has been advanced and the expenses. The limit of the amount which may be advanced is also increased by this amendment from $500 to $600. The object of that is a very simple one, and I think will commend itself to the approval of every gentleman in this House. It is for the purpose of preventing the lender of the money from coming down upon the settler for the interest of the first two years. The Act restrains him from proceeding against the settler if there is no payment of interest for two years, and in order to provide for that the lien is raised from $500 to $600, so that the accrued interest for the two years may be added to the lien. It is certainly a step in the right direction, for we want to facilitate the operations of the poor settler in every way. The rate of interest is also raised from 6 per cent. to the privilege of charging 8 per cent. if necessary. The rate of interest in that country generally is from 8 to 10 per cent., and it has been found that the rate of interest being only 6 per cent. very often cuts off the settler from obtaining money at all; and it was supposed it would benefit him by allowing interest at 8 per cent. on advances made to him. The clause I propose is this:—

HON. MR. REESOR.

Clause A of the Dominion Lands Act, with the sub-reactions therof, is hereby repealed, and the following section with the sub-sections thereof substituted therefor:

38. If any person or company shall be desirous of assisting by advances in money intending settlers to place themselves on homestead lands in Manitoba or the North-West Territories, and of securing such advances, such person or company may make application to the Minister of the Interior, stating the plan or project intended to be acted upon, the steps to be taken in furtherance thereof, and the amount to be advanced to such settlers, and the Minister of the Interior may sanction and authorize such plan or project, or refuse his sanction and authority thereto.

(a) If such plan or project be so sanctioned, and such person or company shall thereupon place any settler upon a homestead, a statement of the expense incurred by such person or company in paying the actual bona fide cost of the passage and of providing for the subsistence of such settler and his family, of erecting buildings on his homestead (to which purpose at least one-half of the advance made shall be devoted) and of providing horses, cattle, farm implements and seed grain for him, together with an amount in money sufficient to cover the interest on the amount advanced for a time to be agreed upon, to enable such settler to obtain a return from the cultivation of such homestead, shall be furnished to him, and upon his approval thereof, shall be submitted with proper vouchers in support thereof to the local agent, who shall examine and verify the same both by such vouchers and by an examination of such settler, and of such person or company, or their representative; and shall certify the result of such verification by a writing upon such statement signed by him, and thereupon such settler may make and execute an acknowledgment in writing of the amount so advanced to him, and may by such writing create a charge upon such homestead for the amount of such advance, not exceeding the sum of six hundred dollars, and for the interest thereon, at a rate not exceeding eight per cent. per annum.

(b) Such acknowledgment and charge shall be in the form of Schedule Q, hereto appended, and a duplicate thereof shall be deposited with the local agent, and thereafter the holder of such charge shall have the right to enforce payment of the amount so advanced and of the interest thereon by ordinary legal proceedings. Provided always, that the time to be fixed for the payment of the first instalment of interest upon such advance shall not be earlier than the first day of November in any year, nor shall it be within less than two years from the establishment of such settler upon such homestead. And provided also, that such settler shall not be bound to pay the capital of such advance or any part thereof within a less period than five years from the date of his establishment upon such homestead.

(c) Upon such acknowledgment and charge being duly executed and duly registered in the Registry Office for the Territorial Division in which such homestead shall be situated, the same shall constitute and be and remain a first charge upon such homestead after the issue of the patent or certificate of patent for such homestead, until duly satisfied and extinguished according to law.

(d) If such settler shall not perform the conditions of settlement required to entitle him to a patent for such homestead within the time and in the manner provided by the Dominion Lands Act, and shall thereby forfeit his right to obtain a patent, the holder of the charge created thereon may apply to the Minister of the Interior for a patent of such homestead and upon establishing the facts to the satisfaction of the Minister shall receive a patent in his name therefor, and such patentee shall be bound to place a bona fide settler on such homestead by the sale thereof to such settler or otherwise within two years from the date of such patent, and in default of so doing within the said period shall be bound and obliged on demand to sell the said homestead to any person willing to become a bona fide settler thereon for such sum of money as shall be sufficient to pay the amount of such charge and interest, and the expenses incurred by the patentee in obtaining such patent and in retaining the homestead, on pain, in case of refusal, of an absolute forfeiture of the said property and of all claims thereon and of the patent or other title thereto. But if the settler has acquired a right to receive a patent for the land so charged and does not apply for the issue of the same, the holder of such charge may obtain such patent, or certificate for patent, in the name of the person entitled to receive the same or of his legal representatives, and thereafter the said charge become a statutory mortgage on such homestead.

Section 5 of the Act 43 Victoria, chapter 42, intituled: “An Act relating to interest on Moneys secured by Mortgage on Real Estate,” and all amendments to the said clause, shall apply to all charges created under the provisions of this Act.

FORM Q.

Acknowledgment and Charge.

I, the undersigned, A.B., holding as a homestead the N.W. quarter of Section _____ Township _____ Range West of _____ meridian, hereby acknowledge to have received from C.D. as an advance, under the provisions of the Dominion Lands Act and the amendments thereto, in aid of my establishment upon the said homestead, the sum of _____ dollars, as shown by the statement thereof, as hereto annexed, certified by the Local Land Agent of the Dominion Government, which sum of money I undertake to pay to the said C.D., his representatives or assigns, within _____ years from the date hereof, with interest thereon at the rate of per cent. per annum, payable half-yearly, on the first days of and in each year, the first instalment whereof will become due on the day of next, and as security for such payments, I hereby create a first mortgage and charge upon the said homestead according to the provisions of the said Act and amendments.

And I, E.F., the wife of the said A.B., hereby bar and relinquish my right of dower upon the said homestead in favor of the said C.D.

In witness whereof, the parties hereto have executed these presents in duplicate this day of , 188 .

HON. MR. REESOR—Is the object of this clause to authorize parties occupying unpatented land, and for which they have not yet earned the patent, to borrow money on the land?

HON. MR. PLUMB—Yes, the object is to facilitate the borrowing of money by the settler, and to secure the persons who advanced the money.

The clause was agreed to.

On the 13th clause,

HON. MR. POWER—Perhaps the hon. gentleman will be good enough to tell us the general effect of these alterations as to the examinations of Dominion Land Surveyors. There are a number of clauses repealed and others substituted.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The change in sub-section five is for the benefit of Canadian candidates. It provides that one member of the Board will hold examinations for commissions as Dominion Land Surveyors, and it saves expense and trouble. It does not require them to come to Ottawa, or to any central point for examination.

The clause was agreed to.

HON. MR. VIDAL, from the Committee, reported the Bill with certain amendments.

The amendments were concurred in and the Bill was then read the third time and passed.

THE SPEAKER—It being six o'clock I now leave the Chair.

HON. MR. PLUMB.

AFTER RECESS.

REPRESENTATION OF NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (115) "An Act respecting the Representation of the North-West Territories in the Parliament of Canada."

In the Committee.

HON. MR. POWER—I propose to move an amendment to the fourth clause, which as follows:—

4. Every person qualified to vote at the election of a member under this Act shall be a bonâ fide male resident and householder, of adult age, who is not an alien or an Indian, within the electoral district, and who has resided in such electoral district for at least twelve months immediately preceding the issue of the writ of election.

I find that the qualification is substantially the same as the qualification of voters for members of the North-West Council. I shall just read the provision in the Act of 1880 on that subject:—

"The persons qualified to vote at such election shall be the bonâ fide male residents and householders of adult age, not being aliens or unenfranchised Indians, within the electoral district and shall have respectively resided in such electoral district for at least twelve months immediately preceding the issue of the said writ."

You see they give the Indians some chance. The amendment that I propose is to say that the persons qualified to vote for the election of members under this Act shall be persons entitled to vote at the election of members to serve in the Council of the North-West Territories. The result will be substantially the same and the expense of appointing Government enumerators and of working the electoral machinery provided in this Bill will be got rid of. There is nothing gained by having a second list of electors made up in that country. A list is now made up for the elections of members in the North-West Council; that is quite sufficient. While I presume that possibly there may be some ground to suspect unfairness in both cases, still there is less risk of unfairness if we take the franchise for the North-West Council.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I am somewhat surprised that my hon. friend, who is desirous of extending the electoral franchise as far as he can, and who, I know, does not want to hamper this Bill, should propose such an amendment and say that it is in conformity with the Act of the North-West Council. The hon. gentleman must know very well that in an enormous district, such as the North-West Territories, to which we are now giving representation, it would be utterly impossible to ascertain who has the right and privilege of voting without having some means of reaching the people who are to be voters. I think it would be very well to say, in connection with this—although I have no idea that such a motion will carry here—that the appointment of enumerators is one of the questions in this Bill. There is no other way that I can see to ascertain who shall have the right to vote. The hon. gentleman knows that it is carefully guarded by providing that any person who is not on the list can come to the polls and make the necessary declaration under oath and be entitled to vote. I cannot conceive anything that would be more restrictive, and more objectionable in the way of hampering voters, than to go back to the proposition which the hon. gentleman makes here. The amendment, so far as I can see, would be objectionable in every way, and certainly I shall be obliged to vote against it.

HON. MR. SCOTT—I am sorry that I cannot support my hon. friend. We are now, and have been for some time past, quarrelling with the Government for making up lists. I think my hon. friend would be subjecting us to that of which we complain. I think the proposition to give universal suffrage with a year's residence there is safer. All parties will be on an equal plane. If the Government have practically the control of the lists, they may not make them up more satisfactorily than the lists in the older provinces, and therefore I should much prefer the clause as it stands.

HON. MR. POWER—I cannot understand the reasoning of the hon. member from Ottawa. The difference between the two propositions is this: I propose that we shall take the lists which are made up for elections in the North-West Council, and that are now made up in the North-West Territories.

HON. MR. SCOTT—Which are subject to the influence of the Government.

HON. MR. POWER—I admit that. The hon. gentlemen says he prefers to that a new list which shall be made up by officers of the Government.

HON. MR. SCOTT—Everybody is entitled to vote under this clause.

HON. MR. POWER—The qualifications are exactly the same. I prefer to take the list made up for the North-West Council to taking the list made up by enumerators appointed by the Dominion Government. I think it is choosing the less of two evils.

The amendment was declared lost.

HON. MR. POWER—I move to strike out the words "and householder" in the second line of the clause. It is quite sufficient, considering that the immigrants going into that country in four cases out of five are men who have come up from the older provinces and who are settled and residing there. I think the fact that a man is a resident is a sufficient qualification, if he has been a resident there for a certain time. I think perhaps the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill will be ready to accept that amendment. For the older provinces a man does not require to be a householder to be a voter. This is a more restricted franchise for the country where the population is small than that which has been adopted for the older provinces where the population is larger. At best the vote there will be a small one, and we should endeavor to make it as large as we can, so that the members who come from these new districts shall be as far as possible representatives of the country.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—There is no qualification specified, except this one of being a householder. I think we should retain some qualification.

The amendment was declared lost.

HON. MR. POWER—I give notice that I will move these amendments on the third reading of the Bill when they can be placed on record.

The clause was adopted.

On the seventh clause,

HON. MR. POWER—I think an amendment ought to be made in the twenty-eighth line. It has happened quite recently in the Province of New Brunswick in the local election in the County of Albert that two candidates who would probably have been elected were disqualified on account of some slight clerical error in the nomination papers, and up in the North-West Territories things are likely to be done in a somewhat rough-and-ready way. I think the people ought to be protected against an accident of that kind happening, and I presume there can be no objection to inserting after the word "Act" the following: "or to the like effect."

HON. MR. PLUMB—The general election law prescribes that in the schedules, particularly that relating to the nomination paper—the claim of a nominee shall not be invalidated on account of any technical error.

HON. MR. POWER—If my hon. friend can show me that a particular section of the general election Act makes that provision applicable to these elections I shall admit that it is enough.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The election law generally applies to this Bill.

HON. MR. POWER—There are certain sections of the Dominion Elections Act made applicable, and my hon. friend should be in a position to state whether that clause is one which is to be applied. If so, the amendment will not be necessary.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—I would suggest to look into the matter, and move an amendment at the third reading.

HON. MR. SCOTT—It states "according to Form F"—that is very definite and absolute, and as the hon. member from Halifax has observed, if there was a deviation of one word it would be sufficient to set aside the nomination paper, which would be highly improper. There can be no objection to putting in "to the like effect." In a country where forms are not easily procured and where people are not so particular, if the spirit of the nomination paper is preserved, it should be received. If the section is allowed to remain as it is the error of a single word in a form would warrant a partisan returning officer in throwing the nomination out, and that would be very unfortunate. The forms ought to be given simply as a direction to the people and not as an arbitrary rule.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I am quite in accord with the hon. gentleman, and if I find I am not correct as to what I stated about the General Election Act, I approve of some such amendment.

On the nineteenth clause,

HON. MR. POWER—There was a question raised by the hon. member from St. Boniface as to the amount of deposit—that the amount specified here was rather too large for a new country.

HON. MR. GIRARD—I explained the other day that the sum was too large, but at this late period of the session I do not propose to offer any amendment. I should prefer to have the Bill as it now stands to having its passage imperilled by any amendment.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I do not think the people in the North-West are so poor as to require a special provision to be made in their favor.

The clause was adopted.

On the twentieth clause,

HON. MR. POWER—If it is found that the general election law does not apply to this clause, the same amendment which I suggested just now will be required in the fifteenth line so as to prevent a man being defeated from his affidavit not being in the regular form.

HON. MR. PLUMB—It is hardly probable that a man who is fit to be a candidate there will be without a copy of the Election Act, and it is not likely that any mistake will occur.

HON. MR. POWER—My hon. friend has run two or three elections and must know that clerical errors are of frequent occurrence, and I have mentioned the fact that in the Province of New Brunswick, where there are plenty of lawyers at hand and where lawyers were actually employed, mistakes were made by which good candidates were shut out.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—Perhaps that was the reason—that they did employ lawyers.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman from Niagara says it is absurd to suppose that a man would be a candidate who would not have the forms at his fingers' ends. The hon. gentleman himself does not show such familiarity with the Bill as one would expect from the way in which speaks now.

THE SPEAKER—Perhaps the difficulty could be obviated by inserting the clause of the Dominion Act if it is found not to be made applicable.

HON. MR. POWER—Yes, that would be the better way.

HON. MR. PLUMB—That would be satisfactory.

The clause was adopted.

On the twenty-sixth clause,

HON. MR. MCINNES—I would move that the two last words be struck out and the word "ballot" substituted. I see no reason why open voting should prevail in the North-West Territories, when we vote by ballot for the elections of members of the House of Commons and members of the local legislatures throughout the Dominion. I do not see why this anomaly should exist, or rather be created, and I therefore move to strike out the two last words—"open voting"—at the end of the clause, and to substitute in lieu thereof, "ballot."

HON. MR. GIRARD—I think open voting would be preferable to any other system in that country. The population is scattered and the people do not understand voting by ballot. We had this provision in the Province of Manitoba, and when an attempt was made to change the law it was found very difficult or nearly impossible to bring the ballot system into operation with the half-breed population. They are as intelligent as any people, but the system of voting by ballot is new to them and not as satisfactory as open voting. I am sure it will be the same in the North-West Territories, when for the first time they are called upon to vote by ballot. I think open voting is more in accord with what the people of that country want. Perhaps in large cities such as Winnipeg, the ballot would be preferable but there are no towns in the North-West, and for a rural population open voting is preferable to any other system. I see no necessity for the proposed change.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. I know the first voting by ballot in British Columbia took place in 1878. I happened to be a candidate for the House of Commons at that election myself. Of 900 or 1000 votes cast there were only some twelve or fifteen rejected or bad ballots. I have been in Manitoba and the North West Territories and certainly the great bulk of the population there are not natives of that country, but are people who have exercised the ballot in the eastern provinces and are as competent to use the ballot as any people in the Dominion. I think in point of intelligence and in the exercise of the ballot they are quite equal to most of the people in the Eastern Provinces. They are young men, intelligent men who have gone out there, and I think there will be no difficulty, or hardship or inconvenience in allowing them to vote by ballot instead of by open voting. There is also the objection that three or four candidates may be in the field, and their very names, and their presence may enable the Government or their officers up there to elect those men, and the settlers dare not come out and vote against them. I contend that these men, in point of intelligence, are quite as capable of voting by ballot as the people of the Eastern Provinces; and to do away with any doubt or any suggestion of improper influence, I think the ballot is the proper mode of voting for the people of those territories.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—Under ordinary circumstances, whatever may be the relative merits or demerits of the ballot system, as compared with open voting, in this particular case I think open voting is preferable. These electoral districts must necessarily be divided into a great many polling divisions, and it may not be so easy in the North-West to find competent individuals to run polling booths. It requires persons of expertness as well as experience in such work, and able to write and figure properly; it requires persons of considerable experience in public work, and it may not be very easy to find a sufficient number of men with those qualifications to conduct the polling booths over each district. For that reason, whatever opinions I may hold as to the best means of polling in a general way, I think perhaps in this instance open voting is preferable.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The adoption of the hon. gentleman's amendment would be of no use whatever. There are 25 sections that are necessary to insert in this Bill to provide for the operation of the ballot. We cannot by merely saying that the ballot is the system adopted, introduce that system into this Bill. This is merely tentative, and it is time enough when there is a larger population in those Territories to provide for the ballot, and I have no doubt that at no distant date the whole of the elections of the country will be brought into harmony with the ballot system.

HON. MR. POWER—I think the hon. gentleman is quite wrong, and I am surprised at the position taken by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield. Our ballot law is not the very complicated one that the hon. gentleman from Marshfield has suggested. We should not require any more deputy returning officers under the ballot system than by open voting, and the man who is competent to act as deputy returning officer under the system of open voting will be quite competent to seal up a ballot box and make the necessary return. There is not any force in the objections of the hon. gentleman from Niagara either; because all the House has to do in order to get over the difficulty that he speaks of is simply to insert a clause to the effect that the ballot should be taken in the manner prescribed by the general election law. I think that the ballot is peculiarly necessary in the North-West Territories, where the number of voters is so small, and the number of Dominion officials and of men who are dependent upon the Government in that country is disproportionately large and need to be protected. Out of 150 voters at the election of a member to serve in the House of Commons, perhaps fifty are men who are directly under the control of the Government.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—Oh! oh! oh!

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman may say "Oh!" and shake his head, but there are a great many Dominion officials in that country.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—There is no such proportion as that.

HON. MR. POWER—There are probably fifty out of every one hundred and fifty householders in those Territories who are more or less dependent upon the Government, and who cannot go up and poll an open, independent vote under the eye of a government officer. It is not much use appealing to the Government on any ground of principle. Last year almost the only reason given for introducing a system of electoral machinery which is going to do no good, but which is going to cost the country half a million of dollars a year, and to put everyone connected with elections to a great deal of trouble and expense, was that we should have one uniform system from British Columbia to Nova Scotia. In the face of this we are departing from that uniformity without any reason whatever; and, in a case where there is the strongest reason for preserving uniformity, in this matter of the ballot we depart from it. If there is any place in the whole country where secret voting is necessary it is in the North-West. If we are going to establish open voting out there under the conditions set out in this measure, a simple way would be to pass a bill with one clause to provide that the Governor in Council are hereby authorized to appoint four persons, who will be supposed to represent the North-West Territories. That would save a great deal of trouble and expense.

HON. MR. MCINNIS—We have three electoral districts on the mainland of British Columbia, each of which is about 200 miles wide and 600 miles long, and certainly if the objection of a sparse population will hold good with respect to the North-West Territories, it will certainly hold good in the case of British Columbia; yet we have never had any inconvenience there in connection with the ballot. The district I have had the honor of representing and also the one formerly represented by my hon. friend from Burrard Inlet, extends from Washington Territory on the south to Alaska on the north. The district of Yale is about as large and so is the district of Cariboo, and I never heard any complaint of hardship or inconvenience there under the ballot system.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—I cannot vote for the Bill as it stands. I see no reason advanced for changing the uniform system that has prevailed to the system here proposed. One of the strongest reasons for introducing the ballot was its uniformity. I cannot sustain this Bill on the reason advanced by the gentleman in charge of it, that the people out in the North-West are less able to exercise the ballot with discretion than the people of the older Provinces. As against the same number of people in any part of the older Provinces, I take it that the people of the North-West are as fully able to exercise it with discretion. The very enterprise that induced them to leave the old settled districts and their family ties to go into that new country is of itself evidence that they are men of intelligence to exercise the ballot. The sluggard is not there. It is the enterprising, active, energetic and intelligent man who is there. He is therefore able to exercise the franchise in the manner in which it was exercised by him before he went there. The people who are there are very largely from the older provinces of Canada, where they had exercised the franchise under the ballot, and it would be a novelty to them now to vote otherwise than by the ballot. Open voting is an innovation that should not be introduced into our system without better reasons for it than have yet been advanced. There is a great deal of force in what has been said as to the circumstances that will influence the electors there, such as are not found in the older provinces. The freehold in the older provinces is independent of the Government. There is nothing to influence the freeholder in the older provinces such as there is in the North-West. They are there immediately dealing with the Government of the day, no matter what that Government may be—and I do not say a word for one Government more than for another; but where a man is getting his 160 acres from the Government, and perhaps the 160 acres adjoining it to settle his family around him, he is more or less involved with the Government, and is not as free to exercise an open vote as a man down here would be with no Government relations. If the proportion of Government officials is as large as we have been told, then in order to prevent any possible question of suspicion upon the Government, they ought not to change the present system—they ought not to adopt the ballot in one district and open voting in another. Uniformity was urged as a great reason for the ballot, and there is no reason now why that uniformity should be departed from; and I think the amendment of my hon. friend from New Westminster is a very proper one. Although hon. gentlemen may think there is an advantage to their friends in the open vote, and it may help them to secure a majority, they still should not sacrifice the ballot system, a system for which we contended so long, and secured with so much effort. They should not jeopardise or interfere with that system for any paltry gain which they may have in the elections in the North-West Territories.

HON. MR. DEVER—I am thoroughly opposed to the open voting system. I can look back with horror to the day when we had the open vote in the lower provinces. We hardly had an election in those days at which there was not bloodshed and disorder in every sense of the word—in fact we had not that system of voting which enabled the people to select the candidates of their choice. It was then a time of pressure and coercion, when men were compelled to go to the polling places and cast their votes against their will. Since that system was changed we have had peace, order and comfort at elections, and generally speaking the best candidates are selected. I cannot see for the life of me why my hon. friend from Marshfield should wish to go back to the old system of open voting. Surely he has not forgotten the old days of rotten boroughs in England, when men were brought to the polling booths like sheep to market. Instead of going back to an old system like that we ought to progress, instead of depriving the people of the North-West, who are not probably as far advanced as the people in the eastern provinces, of the power of voting without restriction or control, we ought to extend to them the vote by ballot.

The Committee divided on the amendment which was lost; Contents 16, Non-contents 20.

HON. MR. MCINNES gave notice that on the third reading of the Bill he would again move his amendment.

On the twenty-seventh clause,

HON. MR. PLUMB—I stated to the hon. gentleman from Halifax that there was a provision in the Dominion Elections Act of 1874, that no mistake or mere technicality would vitiate any of the provisions of this Act. The eightieth section provides as follows:

“No election shall be declared invalid by reason of a non-compliance with the rules contained in this Act as to the taking of the poll or the counting of the votes or by reason of any want of qualification in the persons signing a nomination paper received by the Returning Officer under the provisions of this Act, or of any mistake in the use of the forms contained in the Schedules to this Act, if it appears to the tribunal having cognizance of the question that the election was conducted in accordance with the principles laid down in this Act, and that such non-compliance or mistake did not affect the result of the election.”

Clause agreed to.

HON. MR. DEVER.

On the twenty-ninth clause,

HON. MR. POWER—I wish to again call the attention of the Committee to the very objectionable character of this measure. The twenty-ninth clause provides:—

29. Each such enumerator, immediately after the nomination day, if a poll is granted, shall carefully compile a list of the persons qualified as electors to vote at the election then pending, for the polling divisions for which he has been appointed; and he shall make three plainly written copies of the same, with the names of the voters alphabetically arranged, giving the occupation and residence of each voter, in the form K in the schedule to this Act.

Every one knows that in the heat of an election contest correct lists cannot be made up by a partizan officer, whether his sympathies are with the Government or with the Opposition. I contend that after nomination day, when the election excitement is up, you cannot get an officer who will make up a list fairly. Why not provide that the lists shall be made up some time previous to the election, as is done everywhere else? There is scarcely a clause in this Bill which is not objectionable; but this provision that the lists shall only be made up after nomination day is a guarantee that the lists cannot under any circumstances be fairly and honestly made. It does not seem to be any use to ask to have this measure amended in any way. Members of this House have boasted on many occasions of the magnificent burst of independence they showed in the case of Prince Edward Island several years ago, when amongst others, the hon. gentleman from Marshfield opposed the Government of which he was generally a supporter; but now we find that same hon. gentleman supporting a Government of which he is generally an opponent on a measure which is infinitely worse in every way than the measure which was then proposed to be applied to his own Province.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—Because the measure is a good one.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman's taste is peculiar, that is all I can say. Any man who can say that a measure which contains a clause like this 29th clause is a good one, has views of what constitutes a good election law which are peculiar. I can imagine, if any such measure as this had been brought into this House when a Liberal Government had control of Parliament, we should have heard a different story, and the measure would be considerably amended before it left the Chamber.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The clause is word for word the same as the clause of the Act passed by the late Government for the administration of the North-West Territories.

HON. MR. POWER—The elections for the North-West Council are practically municipal elections, and are very different from elections for the House of Commons, where party politics come in, and where there is every inducement to the enumerators to make up the lists in a partizan manner.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman has said that if a Liberal Government had brought in such a Bill as this it would have been amended in this House. If the hon. gentleman looks at the ordinance respecting elections in the North-West Territories passed during the regime of the Mackenzie Government he will find that the 18th section of that ordinance is word for word the same as the 29th section of this Bill.

HON. MR. POWER—That was practically a municipal election.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I leave my hon. friend to get out of the dilemma as best he can.

HON. MR. SCOTT—I do not think it is fair for the hon. gentleman from Halifax to criticize by name a gentleman who has had large experience in legislation, and who stands high in the estimation of this House—a gentleman who graduated in politics long before the hon. gentleman from Halifax was born. I do not recognize it as proper that any gentleman should rise and lecture another member of this House by name, particularly a member who has had the long experience of the hon. gentleman on my right. The reason why I took the ground I did a few minutes ago is that I do not regard the list as worth much, because if a voter's name is not on the list he is not precluded from voting. Any man may vote who has the qualification, and it is for that reason I do not care for the list—in fact I would rather not trust the Government with a list. The householder has the right to vote whether his name is on the list or not; but if an absolute list were made up, from which the name of a householder were excluded and he would on that account be precluded from voting, I could see some force in the objection; but under this clause no man who is entitled to vote is cut off from voting because his name is not on the list.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I propose taking a different view as to the duty of a Senator, to that held by my hon. friend from Halifax. I conceive that it is not my duty to oppose every measure and every clause of a measure which the Government brings down; and if my experience, which extends over a very long period—because I can recollect distinctly the attachment of the first voters' list under the Reform Bill of 1832 to the church doors—if I can recollect, as a public man, that which occurred before the hon. gentleman from Halifax was born, I may venture to think that my experience is not without some use in this House.

The clause was agreed to.

On the thirty-fourth clause,

HON. MR. POWER—I had not observed the provisions to which the hon. gentleman from Ottawa referred to a few minutes ago. It seems to me that what has been shown to the committee, now is the most substantial reason for doing away with all this unnecessary machinery for getting the names on the list, when there is no necessity for it at all, as a voter can come up to the poll and swear that he has the proper qualification, and is entitled to his vote. I think the better way would be to strike all other clauses relating to the voters' lists out of the Bill.

The clause was agreed to.

HON. MR. ODELL, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a committee of the whole on Bill (131) "An Act further to amend the Act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway."

In the committee.

On the fourth clause,

HON. MR. POWER—Perhaps the hon. gentleman from Niagara will explain this clause.

HON. MR. PLUMB—This fourth section provides that the company may issue mortgage bonds based as a security upon the lands which remain in the company's hands. It provides that those securities shall not exceed $2 per acre, and that the amount which they shall issue, and the price at which the lands shall be put in security, shall be decided by the Governor in Council, and that the outstanding land grant bonds shall be called in and cancelled; but that nothing that provides for the issue of the present land grant bonds shall affect the rights of those who hold the land grant bonds outstanding. I think there are three millions of outstanding bonds, and it is intended to call those in and have a uniform issue.

The clause was adopted.

On the fifth clause,

HON. MR. POWER—I think the Committee ought to strike out this clause. It provides that the only security with the Government hold for the satisfactory operation of the Canadian Pacific Railway shall be given over by the Government. The security is a small enough one—five millions of dollars in bonds. I think that that clause embodies a most objectionable provision. The construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway was a very important work, but I think its operation is of just as much consequence; and, as I said when the Bill was being read the second time, it is the duty of the Government, who are trustees for the public, to see that the people, for whom they act as trustees do not suffer. We know a little about the condition of the Railway west of the Rocky Mountains—we do not know a great deal about it. We know that Onderdonk who had the contract for the construction of a large section of the Canadian Pacific Railway in British Columbia did not perform his contract in such a way as to justify the Government in taking the road off his hands. I have been informed and I believe correctly, that at the present time Onderdonk is operating the British Columbia section of the Canadian Pacific Railway on behalf of the Government—that the Government have entered into some arrangement with him by which he operates that part of the road. We have been informed that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have refused to take over the road built by Onderdonk on the ground that it is not such a road as they properly expected to get, and it is alleged that it will require an expenditure of two millions of dollars to make that portion of the road built by Onderdonk such a line as the Canadian Pacific Railway will accept from the Government. I think that that circumstance alone is sufficient to make us careful about handing over the last lever which gives us any influence over the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Then we know that the passes through the mountains are not of such a character as the country requires or as the contract calls for. I am not going to speak about the permanent grades which are 116 feet to the mile, whereas the original contract required they should be only 52 feet to the mile; but there are so-called temporary grades of considerably over 200 feet to the mile.

HON. MR. MCINNES—250 feet.

HON. MR. POWER—I think that to ask Parliament to let the Company go free, so that we shall have no control whatever over them, while that state of things exists west of the Rocky Mountains, is asking a little too much. I think the least we can do in self-defence is to retain at all events this small security of $5,000,000 worth of bonds. Suppose we abandon this security, and the time comes for the transfer of the British Columbia section of the road to the Company, and the Company allege that that road requires to have $2,000,000 spent on it before they can accept it. The Government are placed in that position that they have either to retain and operate the road, which would be done at a very great loss, or have to give way to the demands of the company, and make them a present of another considerable sum of money to complete that road in British Columbia. It is not at all improbable that this may happen. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company must know, as every business man knows, that the road from Calgary to the Pacific Ocean will not pay for a time, at all events. And the Company will make the condition of this road of Onderdonk's a pretext for not operating that portion of the line. What leverage have the Government to compel them to operate it? None whatever. I must say that I think it is a most unwise and unbusinesslike thing on the part of the Government to give up that small security for the efficient operation of the road. I think there are at least such circumstances as would make any prudent business man decline, if he were in the position of the Government, to do what we are asked to do by this clause; and for that reason I shall vote against it, and I hope to divide the House upon the subject at the third reading.

The clause was agreed to on a division.

On the seventh clause,

HON. MR. POWER—This is another objectionable clause. When the Bill was at its second reading I had not adverted to the probable effect of this clause. The thing that occurred to me was that it was the directors only whose disqualification was removed, and I should not have very much objected to the directors of the Company sitting in Parliament; because if they were allowed to sit they could not probably exercise much greater influence inside of Parliament than they do outside of it at present. Of course, their influence in Parliament would be increased by their being allowed to come in and sit here; but to my mind the strongest objection to this clause is that the Company can secure the allegiance of members of Parliament by making these members shareholders in the Company; and I think that is a most objectionable provision. The hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill said that this measure severs the last link which connects the Government and the company. If that were true—I do not mean to say that the hon. gentleman stated what he did not believe to be true—but if that were true for a fact everyone would be charmed to let these gentlemen come in here and occupy seats in the Parliament; but it is not so. I have already pointed out two or three circumstances which show that we shall have probably to deal next Session with further demands of the company. Our experience has been that since the Session of 1880-1881 when the first of the Acts respecting this company was passed to the present time there have been applications made to Parliament on behalf of the company every Session except one. The company as it is now, with none of its members in either House, has always got what it asked for. There is not an instance where anything has been refused. How is it going to be when numbers of shareholders of this company occupy seats in Parliament? Anything they wish to get through they probably will get through; and gradually this company acquiring more and more railroads throughout the country will possess overshadowing influence. Every member knows—none better than the hon. gentleman from Niagara—how some legislatures in the United States are completely controlled by the great railway corporations.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I do not know anything of the kind.

HON. MR. POWER—I am sorry for the hon. gentleman's ignorance. If he is as familiar with affairs in the United States as he sometimes gives us to understand he is, he must know that in the best American papers, such as the New York Nation, you see statements of that kind made.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I have not the honor of reading the New York Nation.

HON. MR. POWER—The legislatures of some of the States are altogether controlled by the great railway corporations.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I do not believe everything I see in the papers.

HON. MR. POWER—I am speaking of a paper which is careful in its statements. We know that in Congress, as a rule, anything the great railway corporations want they manage to get. I feel that one of the great dangers of the future of this country is this, that we shall probably have an amalgamation of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway, and they will practically own and control and run the whole country. This clause is a very large step towards that consummation, and for that reason I am opposed to it. As I said before, I do not wish to be understood as being actuated by any unfriendly feelings towards the Canadian Pacific Railway. I hope they may be successful to the utmost of their expectations; but I do think that in the interests of Canada, Parliament should be protected from their undue influence.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I am quite surprised that at this late time of the day my hon. friend should have anything to say to the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is pretty well admitted throughout the length and breadth of Canada that a great service has been done through the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and when my hon. friend says that the company is coming for legislation next year he tells us something for which he has no foundation.

HON. MR. POWER—I said I expected so.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—The hon. gentleman has no foundation for saying so. We were told when this arrangement was first made that the enterprise would not be carried out. From the very inception of this great work we have had the same views and opinions expressed. If the gentlemen composing the company were of that class of men that the hon. gentleman tells us they are, they would not have returned these twenty millions of dollars. They would have come to the Government and said, "We find although we promised to return you so much money, yet in the practical working of this railway the money cannot be refunded." That would have been the course taken if they had been the class of men that the hon. gentleman claims they are, and now, at the completion of the work, when ten millions of dollars has been paid over, he casts a doubt on the re-payment of the other ten millions. Then, as to the value of the lands, we have had doubts expressed—nothing but doubt after doubt. The legislation we have had before us to-day—the last three Acts—taken one after another in succession, shows what a wonderful advance has been made.

HON. MR. MCINNES — Even the Chinese Bill.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—The Dominion Lands Act relaxes the regulations dealing with the settlement of lands. The next gives representation to the North-West Territories in the House of Commons; and now we have a Bill before us by which the country is to be refunded a large portion of the loan advanced to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and yet the hon. gentleman doubts if the western section of the road will be operated. He tells us if the bond holders of that Company are allowed to hold seats in Parliament, they will exercise a controlling influence. But he also says that they will have no more influence in Parliament than they have outside of it—then by all means let us take them in.

HON. MR. POWER—I never said anything of the kind.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—The hon. gentleman said that they exercised as much influence outside of Parliament as they would exercise in it.

HON. MR. POWER—I said the directors, not the bondholders.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Take the directors—he said that they have so much influence outside of Parliament that they have been able to get all they wanted and nothing has been refused them. If that is the case, what harm will it do to take them in? On the contrary, I think if we have no control over them outside we would be able to control them inside, and therefore the hon. gentleman's argument falls to pieces when it is investigated. I am only surprised, at this stage of the history of the building of our great national highway, which everyone feels proud of, and which has raised Canada in the respect of the world—that my hon. friend should express sentiments so unworthy of him—that he should say that the gentlemen who had the large-mindedness, the ability and the enterprise to originate and carry to its conclusion such a gigantic work, should not be admitted into Parliament. I think they should be welcomed rather than excluded. I am sorry the hon. gentleman has taken such a ground, because I consider it unworthy of his position as a member of this House.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—In a little different speech we have the same complaints to-night from the senior member from Halifax that we have had for the last three or four years from some of the gentlemen of his way of thinking. In the first place, when the contract was given out for the construction of the road in ten years, I was told fifty times by members of both Houses that it could not be built in fifteen years—that the road north of Lake Superior never would be built. Then we were told that certainly the road would never be run, and the hon. member from Halifax seems to entertain the same doubts to-night. When the first assistance was given to the Company by the Government, we were told that we never would get any portion of that loan back. The truth of the matter is the hon. gentleman from Halifax and many others feel hurt and annoyed that the Canadian Pacific Railway has been such a great success, because they expected to have their predictions realized. Many of them, I quite believe, were as anxious as ourselves that the road should be completed, but they expected to get into office and have all the credit of carrying out the great undertaking themselves. I have no doubt the hon. member from Halifax does feel annoyed to think that such a large amount of money was paid in the other day by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman has no right to use such language. I expressed my gratification that they had paid in the money; and I do not feel sorry, and he has no right to attribute such sentiments to me.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—As I said the other day, when called to order, if I am not in order now, I have heard the same hon. gentlemen travel a good deal further from the point at issue than I have done to-day. I repeat I have not the slightest doubt that the Opposition are annoyed, not at the success of the road, but that the road has been so successful under the present administration, and that, because of its great success, we are having this large amount of money paid back to the Government, as I predicted all along it would do. Does the hon. member from Halifax think for one moment that gentlemen who are putting almost their entire private fortunes into these roads they are acquiring in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway are not going to continue to operate that line? I do not think there is any danger on that point. The truth is, the road has been a great success, and those who have tried to help the undertaking have been well recompensed by the country for the manner in which they have carried out their agreement. The company have had the intelligence, ability and capital to carry them through, and the trouble is that they have done it only too well—that is the real ground of the hostility shown to them. Why should not the stockholders of that company have a right to sit in Parliament just the same as the stockholders of any other company, after they pay their debt to the Dominion? A man may own stock in a newspaper company and still hold a seat in Parliament, and why should the stockholders in this company be excluded? I do hope that nothing will occur to mar the continued success of this great enterprise, and I think if our Government deserve support and credit for anything in the world more than another, it is for the brave, manly and courageous way in which they have carried out that undertaking. Very few men would have had the pluck, under the circumstances, to persevere in the enterprise as they have done; and they deserve the thanks not only of their supporters but of every man in the Dominion for what they have done in connection with this great railway project.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—The discussion has diverged somewhat from the question raised by the hon. member from Halifax, and has taken the form of laudations of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I wish to say that the hon. member called attention to what may become a very serious danger, the interference of stockholders in this great undertaking with the independence of Parliament. That would be a real and serious danger, but it seems to me that the remedy which the hon. gentleman proposes is one which would operate very unjustly on bona fide stockholders. Men may invest their savings in stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, but surely such an investment as that ought not to prevent them from becoming members of Parliament. The danger is a real danger, but it seems to me it would not have been incurred if proper attention had been paid to the arguments of those who, when the Company was incorporated, called attention to the possibility of this corporation becoming so powerful that they would over-ride governments, parliaments and people. I think many gentlemen on this side of the House, in debating this question, pointed to the very fact alluded to this evening as to the action of similar corporations in the United States. I remember doing so myself and showing how the people of those States had applied to their local legislatures to protect them from the evils of those great monopolies, and when the local legislatures could not serve them any longer, they appealed to Congress. That shows there is danger of those great corporations becoming too powerful. In the course of our Parliamentary history in the old country we have at times experienced a similar danger, though not from the same cause. There are pages of English history which point to a time when the independence of Parliament was endangered by the presence of numerous placemen, and laws were passed to limit the number of placemen in the House of Commons and prevent persons holding offices under the Government from being elected to Parliament. It was to obviate a danger of that kind that the hon. member from Halifax called attention to this matter and I should be inclined to support his proposition if it were not for the fact that in supporting a remedy for a possible future danger, we would be committing injustice to the bona fide shareholders of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I do not propose to enter into any discussion or make remarks upon the wonderful work which has been accomplished by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, so ably set forth by the hon. member from Montreal. I think it is worth while to revert to the section before us under consideration; and one very important feature suggests itself to me, which has not been touched upon at all, with reference to objections made by the hon. member from Halifax. I can quite well appreciate his making attacks on the shareholders and directors, and in fact anybody connected officially with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman should not attribute to me what I have not done.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I have not attributed anything.

HON. MR. POWER—I said nothing against the Company or against the shareholders or the directors.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I did not say the hon. gentleman did. I said I would not be surprised at any attacks made upon persons occupying high positions in connection with this work, because certain things would lead to that very naturally, but I am surprised that one standing forth as the advocate of the people's rights, one who is jealous of any encroachment on the rights of the electors of the Dominion, should be desirous of limiting their choice of representatives. Has he no confidence in the elector's knowledge of those who hold shares in the Canadian Pacific Railway Company? Are the people not able to judge whether that should be a disqualification for anyone who desires to represent them in Parliament? Surely he ought to be willing to leave it to the people to form their own judgment on a question of this kind, and if so, why insert in an Act of Parliament a clause which will prevent them from selecting someone who, in their opinion, will be best qualified to represent them and to promote the interests of the country? I think it may safely be left to the people to settle this question for themselves. They will know who are the shareholders of this Company, and if, knowing that fact, they see fit to send a shareholder of the company to represent them in Parliament, is the hon. member from Halifax the man who would say that they should not exercise that choice? That is what it would amount to if he wishes to keep up this disqualification to prevent the supposed evils which he thinks might result from too large a number of these shareholders getting into Parliament. I have no fears on that score myself. My belief is, that as soon as any evil can be shown to result from the presence of those shareholders in the House of Commons, just so soon would they be left at home by the electors of the country who have a very great capacity for knowing who would best promote their interests.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I can hardly allow this vote to be taken without saying a word in reply to the objections which have been raised. My hon. friend, the senior member from Halifax, with that amiability and courtesy which characterize all his utterances, and which he evinces more particularly to-night than ever before, has made a statement that this road is not likely to be open for through traffic at present, on account of a difficulty with the contractors on the Pacific end of the line. The company, at a meeting not long ago, published their annual report, and there is no reference whatever to any cause of delay in that direction. On the contrary, there is a statement made in the most solemn manner that the road will be very soon open for traffic from sea-board to sea-board—that arrangements are made for steamships to run across the Pacific in connection with the road and a line of steamers on the Atlantic to connect the eastern terminus of the road with Liverpool. The hon. gentleman is very much alarmed lest the road will not be operated. He says we ought to hold security to insure the operation of the line. As I said the other night—I abstained from making a speech for I believe the road will take care of itself—that it is almost childish to hold five millions of land grant bonds of the road to insure its running when it has a larger equipment for business than either the Union or Central Pacific. Its equipment altogether, for the business which we were going to hold five millions of bonds to insure its carrying on, amounts in value to $9,344,000. They evidently, unless they are madmen, suppose that they are going to have business and intend to keep their road up. Another thing by which they are pledged to the public by every possible consideration—their road would not be good for anything if it were not a through line. I say, and say it advisedly, that the great strength of their line is that it extends from ocean to ocean, for which they can make one price, and it is under one management. I am somewhat surprised that at this last stage of the proceedings the same old story should be told us over and over again.

Is there any reason why a great public enterprise like the Pacific Railway, having, as I said again, severed its interest with the public by settling and squaring up its accounts with the Government, should have its stock tabooed, so that no gentleman would dare to own a share of that stock, which is public stock in the market, because forsooth he would be deprived of the privilege of being sent to Parliament or holding any office of trust under the Government? It argues a very low estimate of the morality of the public men or the best men of this country; but it accords with the general position adopted by the hon. gentleman in criticizing those measures. There is, however, one consolation in regard to it, we all know that he does not mean it; that it is a perfunctory operation; that he feels in the discharge of his duty, while on the other side of the House, he must oppose those measures, and we take it for what it is worth. This discussion might have been closed long ago, because we have no right to amend this clause; it is a money matter over which we have no control. This House has no right to deal with that section any more than it has to deal with any other fiscal question which is within the province and purview the House of Commons. I will simply conclude what I have to say with this remark, which ought to go home to the mind of every hon. gentleman in this House. It is the concluding paragraph of the report of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at their last annual meeting:

"The Railway now practically in operation throughout, and the Company beyond the reach of the political or other motives which have prompted many persons at home and abroad to decry the country traversed by the line, and their statements having proved false as to the lands by the result of agriculture, and as to the railway by the results of its operation, it is hoped that we may henceforth escape the malice which in the past has done so much to embarrass the Company and to retard the settlement of the country."

That is all I wish to say on this subject, and I am very glad to have this opportunity to make these few remarks, because from the beginning to the end I have been a consistent advocate of this scheme, in which I never had one sixpence worth of interest except the interest which every Canadian must feel in carrying through that great enterprise. I move the adoption of the clause.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman from Niagara has raised a question of order as to the right of this House to amend this clause. I have taken the trouble to consult the authorities on this subject, and according to my interpretation, neither our rule, nor the British North America Act, nor Bourinot goes to show that there is any reason why the Senate should not amend a measure which happens to deal, amongst other things, with money matters. Bills imposing taxation or in connection with taxation we cannot amend; but a Bill of this sort in which the money question is one of the incidents, we can deal with; and certainly this clause has nothing to do with money at all.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; I was referring to the fifth clause.

HON. MR. POWER—I wish to make another remark on the language the hon. gentleman has used about myself. He said that we all knew why I speak as I do—that I speak only in a perfunctory way in the discharge of what I conceive to be a duty.

HON. MR. PLUMB—That was badinage.

HON. MR. POWER—I think the hon. gentleman is not quite correct. There have been cases in which I have not taken the same line as the great bulk of the party to which I belong, because I thought they were wrong on certain points. That was my humble opinion; and I do not propose now to take a line which I think to be wrong simply because the majority of the party with which I am connected take that view. Further, I think it is unfair of the hon. gentleman to try to adopt the line which has been adopted in this House, that a member who ventures to criticize any arrangement made by the Government with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is therefore an enemy of the country, of the railway, and a personal enemy of the directors of the company. There is nothing of the sort. This is a matter of business. The country and the railway company are making a bargain, and we are asked to ratify the bargain, and we ought to deal with it as business men would with any business arrangement. I have contended, and I still contend, that we are making a mistake in giving up the security that has been spoken of. I may be allowed to say a word or two more in reply to the hon. gentleman from Niagara, although his remarks referred to the fifth clause of the Bill rather than to the one now under discussion. The hon. gentleman spoke as though I had said that the road would not be open from ocean to ocean.

HON. MR. PLUMB—No, I did not say that.

HON. MR. POWER—What I said was this: that a portion of the road constructed by Onderdonk, had not been accepted by the Government because it was not up to the specification, and that it was now being operated by Onderdonk under some arrangement with the Dominion Government, and that the Company would not take that section over unless a further large sum of money was spent on it. The hon. gentleman did not say whether that was correct or not. That was the point of my observation—that we were not done with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company yet, as they would not take over that section until we have spent a large sum of money to bring the road up to the standard which they think it ought to reach, or until some other arrangement is made with them. Talking about the through line, it was admitted by the leader of the Government in this House at the beginning of the session that when he was in San Francisco he had ascertained that the ocean borne traffic of the American trans-continental railways amounted to very little. Now, what is to make the British Columbia end of this road pay? If the ocean borne traffic amounts to very little on the American roads, it cannot amount to very much on this one. One cannot tell what is going to come from the Pacific ocean. Supposing that the 20,000 people of British Columbia are the most energetic and enterprising people in the world, 20,000 people cannot give employment to a road of this kind.

HON. MR. PLUMB.

HON. MR. NELSON—There are more than 40,000 or 50,000 people in British Columbia, but they are not all whites.

HON. MR. POWER—No, not of white people.

HON. MR. NELSON—The hon. gentleman forgets that there are Chinese and Indians.

HON. MR. POWER—I am talking about the people who are likely to afford business to this road. Granted that the 20,000 white people are the most energetic and enterprising people in the world, a population of only that number cannot give employment to a road of this kind. Then if there be little local business, and little through business, what is going to induce the company to operate the road from the Rocky Mountains west to the Pacific? Why should the company operate it, if it does not pay them to do so? Hon. gentlemen have alleged that I have found a great deal of fault in different ways with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I have not done so; but I shall now make one remark suggested by an observation of the hon. gentleman from Alma, which I think deserves a little attention. The hon. gentleman spoke with that emphasis which we all like to hear, and which points his argument so well, of the value of the Canadian Pacific Railway. This reflection occurred to me when the hon. gentleman said that—that there were certain points of view from which it was not altogether a Canadian Pacific Railway. If any hon. gentleman will take up a list of the officers of the Canadian Pacific Railway he will find that from the general manager down until he gets to those officers who are supposed not to be worth very much, three-fourths of the important offices on that road are filled by men who are not Canadians.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—I would like to ask the Chairman what section is now under discussion?

HON. MR. POWER—Section seven is under discussion.

THE CHAIRMAN — Section eight is the section under discussion. I declared section seven carried half an hour ago.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Even if the hon. gentleman is discussing the seventh section he is entirely out of order in discussing the general principle of the Bill; but I should dislike very much to stop such an agreeable discourse.

HON. MR. POWER—I contend that the point of order is not well taken. We are discussing the question as to whether the shareholders of this Company should be allowed to be members of parliament, and the argument I have just used is perfectly relevant; because if these gentlemen appoint to all the important offices, or nearly all the important offices in their company men who are not Canadians, what sort of policy may we expect from them when they get into Parliament?

THE CHAIRMAN—The hon. gentleman is clearly out of order; he is discussing the whole of the Pacific Railway policy on the seventh clause of this Bill.

HON. MR. MACDONALD, from the Committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the third reading of the Bill presently.

HON. MR. McINNES—I would ask the hon. gentleman to allow the third reading to stand over until to-morrow, as I wish to say a few words on the question, and I am not well enough to do so to-night.

Ordered that the Bill be read the third time to-morrow.

The Senate adjourned at 10 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Wednesday, May 26th, 1886.

The Speaker took the Chair at three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

NORTHERN AND NORTH-WESTERN JUNCTION RAILWAY BILL.

BILL WITHDRAWN.

HON. MR. VIDAL—From the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, reported Bill (65) "An Act respecting the Northern and North-Western Junction Railway," recommending that the Bill be withdrawn.

HON. MR. TURNER moved that the Report of the Committee be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was withdrawn.

TITLES TO LAND IN MANITOBA.

MOTION WITHDRAWN.

The notice of motion having been called

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying His Excellency to be pleased to cause to be laid before this House, copies of all correspondence which has taken place between the Department of the Interior and any person or persons on the subject of the sale or possession under title of Lot No. 133, in the Parish of Ste. Agathe, Manitoba.

HON. MR. GUÉVREMONT said (in French)—In company with the hon. member from St. Boniface I had an interview with a member of the Government on this question, and the reply which he gave to my hon. colleague I will now ask him to explain.

HON. MR. GIRARD—According to the information which is in the possession of my hon. friend from Richelieu, I can only say that this is certainly a very bad case. The property in question was bought by a French Canadian for $1,700, and he has expended upon it upwards of a thousand dollars. Finally it was claimed by some other person, who, in my humble judgment, had no lawful right to it. Nevertheless the patent has been given to him, notwithstanding the fact that the French Canadian had expended so large a sum of money upon the land. I heard yesterday that the hon. member who represents the Government in this House was ready to give an answer to the question, and I will await that reply. At the same time I must say to my hon. friend that the information which I have received induces me to believe that efforts will be made by the Government to do justice in that case. The information I have received is that an enquiry will soon be made and when the facts are brought to light justice will be done—I am satisfied that any error which has been committed will be rectified. It is a case certainly of very great importance. I rely on the promise which has been made to me, and I am glad to be in a position to give this information to the House.

HON. MR. GUÉVREMONT—(In French)—Now that the House is in possession of the information which my hon. friend has received from the Minister, I ask permission to drop the motion.

The motion was dropped.

LOST REGISTERED LETTERS.

MOTION.

HON. MR. GUÉVREMONT moved

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General; praying His Excellency to be pleased to cause to be laid before this House, a copy of the correspondence that has taken place between the Post Office Department and Mr. H. Lavallée, on the subject of a registered letter posted at the Sorel Post Office on the 31st July, 1884, addressed to Joseph Theo. Cartier, Abenakis Springs, which has been lost.

He said: (In French) This letter was lost between two Post-Offices situated not far from each other. I regret that this individual, who has sustained the loss, has not received any tidings of the missing letter. It contained some $50, which is a large amount to the loser. This is not the first time that members of this House have been obliged to call attention to the fact that registered letters have been lost. I believe that the Government ought to bestow some attention on this subject with a view of providing a remedy, so that if a registered letter which goes astray is not recovered the sender may not lose the amount it contains. There is little use in paying for the registration of a letter if the sender is no better off than if it were not registered. I believe that every possible means should be employed to trace up the missing registered letter, and if it cannot be found that the party should be indemnified for his loss.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER — Before making one or two observations on this motion I cannot help observing that habits and practices of a most extraordinary character are creeping into this House. The other day when the senior member from Halifax brought in a motion, one or two hon. gentlemen shouted out "Withdraw, withdraw," and to-day if I had not risen, the hon. gentleman from Sorel would have been almost crowded down so that he would not have proceeded with his motion. I think it is most irregular and most disrespectful to the House, and I hope such conduct will not be repeated.

THE SPEAKER—I beg to interrupt the hon. gentleman. The only member out of order after the hon. member from Sorel resumed his seat was the hon. gentleman from Woodstock, himself, who did not allow me to put the question from the Chair.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I proceed to observe with regard to the motion that it is most deeply to be regretted that the necessity should have arisen for this motion at all. Every one that knows my hon. friend from Sorel must be aware that from his general bearing and character he would not give a notice of motion of this sort, requiring information from the Government, if the necessity for it had not arisen. While it is utterly to be regretted that the Department of the Interior cannot manage their transactions—

HON. MEMBERS—Order, order!

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman from Woodstock is speaking to the wrong motion; he is evidently speaking to the first motion and that has been withdrawn. It is the second motion that is before the House.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER — I have not the good fortune to hear half of what falls from the Chair, owing to a defect in my hearing.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—A good deal of what is said from the Chair is lost to my hon. friend on account of his loss of hearing, and when he did not hear an opportunity should be given to him to ask for information.

THE SPEAKER—With regard to the first notice, the hon. member from Toronto will be pleased to observe that there was no motion put to the House; that the hon. member from Sorel did not even move his motion, and any speaking that was done after he had withdrawn that motion was done with the permission and favor of the House. I am sorry if the deafness of the hon. member from Woodstock prevents him from hearing me on any occasion, and if my attention is called to it at the time I will endeavor to speak more loudly.

HON. MR. PLUMB—There is no objection to the motion, as I am instructed to say it is not covered by the inspector's report.

RETURNS.

HON. MR. POWER—Before the orders of the day are called I would ask the hon. gentleman from Niagara, who was good enough to say the other day that he had some correspondence asked for by me with respect to an importation of dynamite into Halifax, ready to lay on the table, if the Government would have any objection to laying on the table at the same time some other correspondence respecting an importation into Montreal, which was so connected with the importation into Halifax that one matter could not be well understood without the other.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I have to say to the hon. gentleman that I have no instruction with respect to the Montreal correspondence, but I will make the inquiry and communicate the result to the hon. gentleman.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

HON. MR. NELSON—Before the orders of the day are called I would draw the attention of the House to a statement in the Citizen. The report of the debate of yesterday in the Citizen represents me as asking that the Committee rise and report progress "in order to give me an opportunity of consulting the Government which might be induced to withdraw the Bill." It is hardly necessary for me to say that I never made any such request at all; that I have been generally in favor of the Bill throughout.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—Before the orders of the day are called I desire to ask the Minister if the Government have come to a decision as to when the present session shall end. The House I am quite sure is prepared to hear the determination of the Government if they come to any upon that point.

HON. MR. SMITH—The Government has not come to a final understanding when the House shall be prorogued; when it does it will be communicated as soon as possible.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—We will know it ourselves then.

HON. MR. MCINNES—As my hon. friend from Burrard Inlet has called the attention of the House to something misreported in the Citizen of this morning, I have also to call the attention of the House to the last sentence of what I said yesterday as reported in the Citizen:

HON. MR. POWER.

In conclusion he urged the advisability of cutting off the grievances of all Chinese prisoners, an act which he claimed would have a very deterrent effect upon crime.

I do not think I made use of the word "grievances." I meant, and I think I said, and the House understood me as saying, "queues."

REPRESENTATION IN THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the third reading of Bill (115), "An Act respecting representation in the North-West Territories in the Parliament of Canada.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Before the Bill is read the third time I propose offering an amendment to the 26th clause. The more I look over it the more I am convinced that the Government have made a mistake in asking that the elections in the North-West Territories should take place by open voting. It would appear that the Government are afraid to bring on an election in these Territories in the usual way and in the manner that prevails all over the Dominion. We are all aware of the charges that have been made against the Government with reference to the mismanagement in the North-West Territories, and I am forced to believe, very reluctantly though, that the Government are afraid to bring on the election there by ballot, for fear that their policy with respect to that country will be denounced and condemned; that the people out there, if they are allowed to exercise the privilege of the franchise in the same way as their brother voters do in the other Provinces, will return Opposition members and thereby mark with disapprobation the policy that has been pursued towards that country. The only arguments, if they can be called arguments, adduced last evening against the ballot being exercised in the North-West Territories, was that population there is yet sparse, and

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY
BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the third reading of Bill (131) "An Act further to amend the Act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway."

HON. MR. POWER—I beg now to move the amendment of which I gave notice in committee:—

"That the said Bill be not now read the third time but that it be amendment by striking out the seventh clause which provides that upon the completion of the Canada Pacific Railway and upon its being duly open for traffic, the shareholders of the Company shall become eligible as members of the Senate and House of Commons."

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—While I am, in principle, of the opinion expressed in this amendment, I am not disposed to make an exception of the gentlemen who are members of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. If a Bill were proposed to exclude members of all railway companies or other institutions which may be at the mercy of the Government, in one way or another, I should be ready to support it, because I believe the time has come when some such legislation is necessary. What we witness every day in this Parliament shows us that if there were more of these exceptions the independence of Parliament would be less frequently violated. It may not flatter the ears of some gentlemen, but I think it must be apparent to all that there is no independence in this Parliament. I have been long enough in public life to know whereof I speak, and I believe that the welfare of the public is concerned in having Parliament independent and prepared to condemn the Government when they are wrong. But to make an exception of the gentlemen who belong to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company when so many others who should be excluded on the same grounds are permitted to hold seats here, is something I am not prepared to do. I shall vote against the amendment, at the same time stating that I am quite ready to vote for a bill embodying the principle stated in this amendment.

that the people are not sufficiently acquainted with the use of the ballot to exercise it properly. I have only to say, in reply, that I believe, taking the population of the North-West Territories as a whole, you will not find a more intelligent class of people in the Dominion of Canada. They know perfectly well the use of the ballot, and they can exercise it with as much discretion and intelligence as any other people to be found elsewhere in the Dominion. To say that they are not sufficiently posted or well informed to use the franchise by ballot, I consider is a gross and gratuitous insult to the people of that country, and one that they, no doubt, will resent whenever an opportunity offers. I move in amendment to the 26th clause that the said Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to a committee of the whole House for the purpose of being so amended as to provide that the voting thereunder shall be by ballot instead of open voting.

The Senate divided on the amendment which was declared lost on the following division.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed on the same division.

HON. MR. SCOTT—Of course it is a very important question whether gentlemen who hold shares in public companies subsidized by the Government should occupy seats in Parliament. It is a broad question, and one which is broached for the first time in reference to this particular enterprise. I see no reason why the Pacific Railway Company should be singled out, once their connection with the Government ceases. We have passed a bill for the Ontario Pacific Junction Railway Company. It is a matter of notoriety that members of that company, holding high positions on its board, are members of this Parliament. Yet the Ontario Pacific Junction R'y Company has been granted a subsidy per mile as great as the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has received—$12,000 per mile. The Grand Trunk Railway Company in past years received subsidies from time to time, yet its President sat in Parliament, in the Legislative Council. In my experience it has been the exception when people who occupy prominent positions on railway boards have not been in Parliament. I am not prepared to defend the rule, but certainly I do not propose to make an exception of any one particular case. While the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were receiving subsidies from the Dominion Government there was good reason for excluding them, but when a perfect divorce takes place between the Government and the Company it should be in the same position as all the other railway companies in the country. We have on our table to-day a long list of railways to which the Government propose to give subsidies—a list just published this morning—and the same principle applies to every one of those roads. What difference is there between the case of any one of those companies and the Canadian Pacific Railway? Probably if some of the shareholders of those companies had not been in Parliament no subsidies would have been granted to them; but there is no reason why the Canadian Pacific Railway Co., having done the greatest amount of work in the shortest time, should be singled out for exclusion of this kind. I am quite ready to consider the broad question that a railway company receiving subsidies from the Government should not be represented in Parliament, but until we lay down that proposition I see no reason for singling out the company and I shall vote against the amendment.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I may call attention to the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has sixty-five millions of stock. When this arrangement is completed the separation between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Government will be nearly complete. My hon. friend has remarked that there are some questions yet to be settled with respect to taking over the road in British Columbia. That is merely a temporary matter, but this disqualification is a permanent one. If any gentleman who has confidence in the Canadian Pacific Railway buys stock of the company, having had no previous connection with the road, or having loaned money on stock of the company and repayment of it not having been made has to take over that stock, is to be disqualified, it seems to me we will exclude from Parliament in that way many prominent capitalists and business men of the country. As the hon. member from Ottawa has said, if such a rule is to be established it should be of a general character. Then you will succeed probably in driving out of public life almost all the active and enterprising men of the country. If the Parliament of Canada chooses to do that it cannot be helped; but I object to this particular road, in the position it now occupies, with this enormous amount of stock on the market, and having from 1,500 to 2,000 shareholders scattered all over the country everywhere, being treated in this exceptional way. The stock of the Company will be a favorite investment. It will be a safe and, I trust, a paying investment, and we can scarcely consent in this House placing such a restriction on the stockholders of the Company.

HON. MR. POWER—I could see the force of the argument used by the hon. members from DeLanauiere and Ottawa, if the motion before the House was to begin to make an exception of the Canadian Pacific Railway; but what is the fact? The fact is that when this Company was incorporated, the Government thought it was necessary in the public interest that the shareholders should not be allowed to sit in Parliament; and we are not asked to legislate against the shareholders of the company now; we are simply asked to allow the law to remain as it is, as Parliament in its wisdom in 1881 thought it should be. That is a different thing from singling out one company for exceptional legislation. The special legislation exists already, and there has been a good deal of special legislation since.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—The hon. gentleman must not lose sight of this fact: at the time the Pacific Railway Company were building the road they were coming here almost every year for money, or some arrangement, so that it was only right that they should not have representatives in the body from which they were receiving favors. But to-day, when the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are repaying the loan and are in the same position as the Grand Trunk Railway Company, I cannot see on what ground they should be excluded.

HON. MR. MCINNES—What guarantee have you that they will not be here every year for favors as they have been hitherto?

HON. MR. POWER—My hon. friend from DeLanauiere has just anticipated what I was going to say. If we are to allow the directors and shareholders of different large railway corporations to occupy seats in Parliament, we ought at any rate to wait until in the case of this particular corporation its direct transactions with the Government have ceased. We have no guarantee whatever that those transactions have ceased. I do not care to go over the ground that I went over last evening, but I laid before the House facts enough in connection with the western section of this road to show that it is almost certain that the company will be asking the Government for further concessions after a little time; and after they have gone on for a year or two without any of those concessions being asked for, it will be time enough to remove the restriction which now hinders the shareholders of the company from sitting in Parliament. But I am disposed to take the same view of the general question as the hon. gentleman from DeLanauiere.

I think that already railway companies have too much influence in Parliament. If the present state of things is allowed to go on increasing, in a little while Parliament instead of representing the people of the country will simply represent a number of large corporations. That being the state of the case, I am surprised that the hon. gentleman from DeLanauiere instead of taking steps to ensure that a measure will be introduced to keep that objectionable element out of Parliament, proposes to let in the most dangerous of all those corporations. I do not hesitate to say that the Pacific Railway Company alone has more influence than probably all the other railway corporations in Canada put together; and if it is necessary that a change be made in the existing law to keep out railway corporations from Parliament, the worst step we can take is to let in the most influential of all those companies. My plan is to let the law remain as it is for the present, and next year to introduce such a measure as may be thought desirable to protect the independence of Parliament, which is now more threatened by the influence of railway corporations than it has ever been threatened in our days by the influence of the Government.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—If I understand properly the effect of the amendment introduced by the hon. gentleman from Halifax it will imply that no member of the House of Commons or of the Senate could remain a member if he purchased shares of the Pacific Railway Company.

HON. MR. SCOTT—That is the effect of it; he cannot be a shareholder.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—That if any member of this House or a member of the House of Commons should have sanguine expectations of the Pacific railway stock becoming a good investment, and should be inclined to invest $10,000 or $15,000 in that stock and did so, he would have to resign his position in Parliament?

HON. MR. PLUMB—That is the proposition.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Then I am not prepared to go as far as that. I am prepared to acquiesce this far—that in future the name of no member of Parliament should appear among the list of promoters of any railway bill before Parliament.

HON. MR. DEVER—I am certainly in sympathy with the hon. gentleman from Halifax in his desire to purify Parliament, but I certainly cannot see that his amendment will have that effect. I cannot see why the stockholders of this railway company should be excluded from Parliament after their transactions with the Government cease, any more than the stockholders of any other stock company in the country; therefore I must vote against his amendment.

The Senate divided on the amendment, which was lost on the following division:—

THE SPEAKER—The motion is now on the third reading of the Bill.

HON. MR. McINNES—I am sorry that I was not in a condition last night to make the few remarks I propose to make now. I do not propose to discuss all the clauses in the Bill, but will confine my remarks to two of the most objectionable provisions, namely, the fifth and seventh clauses, and will do so as briefly as possible. The most objectionable feature I find in this Bill is in the fifth section. That section provides that the $5,000,000 of bonds that the Government in 1881 thought prudent to retain as a guarantee that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would build the road from the Atlantic to the Pacific and maintain, equip and operate the road for ten years after it was completed—is, according to this clause, to be handed over to the company before a single train has gone over the entire road—in fact before the road is completed. I think that that is a very unwise and unjust proposition to make, and one this House should not approve of. The proposition to give up the $5,000,000 bonds to the company before a train, with the exception of one, has gone over the road from ocean to ocean is unwarrantable, and should not be entertained by Parliament: to give up the only guarantee the Government and people have that the road will be operated according to the contract and in the interest of the country, is a proposition I am sure the taxpayers of this country, who provided every dollar for the building of this road, will not endorse or approve of.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—Is not that for the House of Commons to deal with? The Senate cannot deal with it.

HON. MR. McINNES—I am aware that the House of Commons has dealt with it, and this House can also deal with it; but I might tell my hon. friend the influences that are brought to bear in the House of Commons to influence members there, are not of a very pure or honorable character. I am only sorry that the amendment which has just been voted down was not in force. Were it in force there would be a brighter outlook for this country. I am afraid the Canadian Pacific Railway company has too many hirelings in the Commons as well as in this House.

HON. MR. SCOTT—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has not only stated that there were hirelings in the House of Commons, but he says there are hirelings in this Chamber. I ask the Speaker if that is proper language for a Senator to apply, as the hon. member has done, to members of this House? I think the least he can do is to apologize for such improper and disrespectful remarks.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER.

THE SPEAKER—The language of the non. gentleman from New Westminster is not only highly improper but is grossly unparliamentary as applied to members of this House, or of the House of Commons, and especially to members of this Chamber in which the hon. gentleman has a seat. The hon. gentleman is out of order and he cannot proceed without the permission of the House.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I withdraw the word "hiring" as far as this House is concerned.

HON. MEMBERS—Order! order!

THE SPEAKER—I presume that the hon. gentleman having apologized and withdrawn his unparliamentary expression, that it is the sense of the House he shall be allowed to proceed.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I think if members in this House were not interrupted in the way that they are there would be less occasion to raise points of order.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman is again out of order. He was grossly out of order and was properly called to order, and the remark he has just made is a reflection on the conduct of the House and of the Chair.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—I move that the hon. gentleman be not allowed to proceed in consequence of being called to order the second time.

HON. MEMBERS—Oh! Oh! Oh!

THE SPEAKER—It is the sense of the House, I think, that the hon. member be allowed to proceed.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I have several reasons for thinking that the Government is not warranted in handing over to the company the $5,000,000 bonds. In the first place, every year, with the exception of 1883, that company have come to Parliament asking for aid and assistance in one way and another. In 1882, scarcely a year after the incorporation of the company, they came with a bill asking that the route through the Rocky and Selkirk ranges of mountains be changed. They went ahead on the prairie section west of Winnipeg at a high rate of speed—rushed madly on until they found themselves confronted by the Rocky Mountains, and not knowing whether they could find a practicable pass through those mountains or not, had to halt for a short time. After a few months' delay in exploring the mountains, they succeeded in finding a pass where it was possible to build a railway, namely the Kicking Horse Pass. This pass or route through the mountains is much inferior in every sense of the word to the Yellow Head Pass. The latter pass was recommended by all our eminent engineers, and approved by both the Mackenzie and Macdonald Governments. The contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway provided that the road should be built by this pass. But the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, knowing the character of the men with whom they had to deal, violated the terms of the contract. By the adoption of the Kicking Horse Pass they have to a very great extent ruined the commercial value of the road, because it is well known that any road with such gradients as the Pacific railway has through the Rocky Mountains and the Selkirk range is of very little commercial value. The gradients are from four to five times greater on the route adopted than on the Yellow Head route. In 1884 the company came before us asking for a loan of $30,000,000, and we were assured then that that would be the last application for money that would be made by the company; that $30,000,000 would enable them not only to complete the road but to equip it in such a manner as no other road on this continent is equipped. We granted the $30,000,000. Last year they came again asking for a further loan of $5,000,000, and we were assured for a third time that that would be the last application that would be made. Now this year we have a bill before us actually asking this Parliament to make the company a present of $15,000,000 of the $30,000,000 that we loaned them two years ago.

HON. GENTLEMEN—No, no!

HON. MR. MCINNES—What is the proposition? It is that we shall take back from them 6,000,000 acres of land at $1.50 an acre, which is not actually worth one cent an acre, inasmuch as it never cost them one cent, and inasmuch as the Government have over 200,000,000 acres of equally good land in that country, that they cannot give away to actual settlers; consequently I say it is actually making the company a present of $10,000,000 by taking that land over from them. That is the view I take of the transaction, and I think it is a view that the sensible and disinterested people of this country will take of it. Then these $5,000,000 of bonds are to be handed over to them, which makes $15,000,000, so that actually they want to wipe out the $30,000,000 loaned them two years ago by paying fifty cents on the dollar. We are asked to hand this over before a train has run from the Atlantic to the Pacific over this road, when we have no guarantee in the world that they are not to be here next year, or certainly not later than two years from now, asking for two or three millions of dollars to run that road, and if that modest request is not granted, like all the other audacious demands they have made, they will doubtless tell the Government they will not continue any longer to operate the road at a very heavy loss. That is almost certain to occur, and we are asked to give up the only guarantee we have against immediate loss.

HON. MR. MCMILLAN—We will take it.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Before such a thing occurs I think it would be only proper to keep the five millions of dollars we have in our possession.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—And the company had better keep the twenty millions they have in their possession.

HON. MR. MCINNES—No, they think it will be much better for the company to get rid of every claim the Government have on them. They can go on the markets of Europe and gamble with their stock and do anything they please with it.

They are getting rid of their lands in the North-West as fast as they can. When I was in the House of Commons I supported the Canadian Pacific Railway contract bill, and one of the most redeeming features of that bill was that the company were to take 25,000,000 acres of land as part of their subsidy; I thought that by giving them such a large landed interest in that country, they would make every effort to settle that country, but alas! they have done nothing. For the last two or three years they have been gradually getting rid of it by giving it back to the Government. I find that the receipts of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, according to Poor's Railway Manual of last year, amounted to $12,603,575; the expenditure amounted to $7,177,754 and the length of that road is 2,532 miles. The earnings per mile amounted to $5,404; and the expense per mile amounted to $3,076. The net earnings amounted to $43 per mile, which gives a surplus of $5,425,820. That may be urged as evidence that the Canadian Pacific Railway will pay from the start. Hon. gentlemen will perhaps take a different view of the situation when they consider that that road from Duluth to its western terminus at Tacoma, Puget Sound, passes through States and Territories with an aggregate population of over two millions. What population have we along our line of railway? From the time we leave the head of Lake Superior, including the whole of Keewatin, Manitoba North-West Territories and British Columbia, we have not over one quarter of a million of population. There is, orly one-eighth of the population as compared with that of the States and Territories through which their rival line to the south runs. And what is the condition of the country between the head of Lake Superior eastward for some two or three hundred miles? A barren waste, a desert, from which that road cannot reasonably expect to draw anything for its support. Again let us take the Intercolonial Railway. That road, as we all know, does not pay running expenses. I believe that two years ago there was a small surplus of a few thousand dollars; but the annual reports show deficits varying from $150,000 to $650,000 or an annual deficit of a quarter million dollars. Yet that is a road that passes through a country which has been settled from 25 to 200 years, and has the monopoly of the carrying trade between the Maritime Provinces and Quebec and Ontario for a large portion of the year—that portion when navigation is practically closed. For these reasons I certainly think that the Government are not warranted in asking that the $5,000,000 of bonds should be handed back to the company, because there is no guarantee that the Canadian Pacific Railway is going to pay running expenses for very many years to come, and there is no guarantee that the company will not be back here asking for assistance and threatening to throw up the main line altogether. It is too true, as stated by the leader of the House some time ago, that the great trade that we expected to come from the far east was a myth? We have undoubted evidence that there are no goods, no merchandize, no material that the Asiatics have to export, or that will bear transshipment on the Pacific coast and then on the Atlantic coast after crossing the continent by rail, with the exception of a few high grades of tea, silks, some medicines and dye stuffs; as I stated some time ago the Panama canal is almost certain to be completed in less than three years and whatever trade we might reasonably expect to obtain from the east will be diverted through that channel. If the company is in the highly satisfactory financial condition that they claim, why should they be urging the Government, giving them no peace night or day until the $5,000,000 of bonds are delivered to them? Surely they can afford to wait for two or three years. This is a direct violation of the contract entered into when the company was formed, that the bonds should not only be kept in reserve until the road was completed, but for ten years after the completion of the road. Still we are asked to hand them over before the road is open for traffic? I think we are doing an injustice to ourselves and an injustice to the people of the country who have shouldered all the burdens and responsibilities of that road. It is true that it is stated here every few weeks or months that the earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railroad are so much over the expenses. But I would ask what is the portion of the Canadian Pacific Railroad that pays? Is it the Canadian Pacific Railroad proper? No, the drain on the resources of that company will not begin to be felt until they operate the main line. The branches through Ontario and Quebec are improperly called portions of the Pacific Railway, but they cannot be considered feeders and do not and will not contribute to the main line. They are paying roads. But we did not grant a charter in 1881 for the company to build all those branch lines through Ontario and Quebec. We granted them a charter, and we subsidized them more liberally than any company in the world was ever subsidized, to build the Canadian Pacific Railway line from ocean to ocean, and not to build branches. Whatever earnings they have, of any consequence, they get from the Ontario and Quebec branches, and not from the main line; I asked the leader of the House last session when this question was under discussion, and when he was showing the highly prosperous condition that the road was in and the bright outlook that the road had, what portion of the road contributed the earnings that he quoted, but he could not tell me. It appears that the earnings of the branches and main line are thrown into a pool and they will not inform the public whether they come from the branches in Ontario and Quebec or from the main line. I think these meagre statements are highly misleading, and that some of the foreign shareholders, before they are very much older will find they have been deceived by the one-sided statements of the Company.

HON. MR. McMILLAN — You are bearing the market.

HON. MR. McINNES—I am stating facts. I do not believe in deceiving capitalists in foreign countries. I do not believe in deceiving the taxpayers and electorate of this country. I believe it is our duty to sound the warning note so that the unwary may be prepared. This Company have had the Government and the whole of the finances of this country at their back for the last five years. I do not deny that it was quite proper that the Government should aid and sustain them in every reasonable way, but I claim that that road cost from ten to twenty per cent.

more than it would otherwise have cost if they had adhered to the terms of the contract of 1881, and the Government is responsible for this extra cost. There was no necessity for rushing the building of that road and completing it in five years instead of ten years as the contract provided. It would be entirely different if there was a very large population and trade awaiting the completion of that road, but there is not, I am sorry to say. I therefore move that the Bill be not now read the third time but that it be referred back to a committee of the whole House, for the purpose of striking out the 5th clause.

THE SPEAKER—That amendment cannot be put.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The amendment is out of order: it is not even dealing with a subject with which we have a right to deal.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I do not ask for a division of the House.

THE SPEAKER—The section is:

5. If after the said Canadian Pacific Railway shall have been constructed and duly placed in operation to its terminus on the seaboard in the Province of British Columbia, it shall be established to the satisfaction of the Governor-in-Council that the retention of the amount of five million dollars in bonds under the provisions of the construction contract, as security for the operation of the railway, is no longer necessary in the public interest, the Governor-in-Council may order that the said bonds be released and delivered to the company.

This is a clause which certainly could not originate in this House and therefore cannot be amended or struck out here. It is a clause of the Bill which deals with a large asset of the country, and the amendment is therefore clearly out of order. I suggested that it could not be put because I did not wish it to go on our journals that an amendment so clearly out of order should be allowed to be put.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—That is what I said when the hon. gentleman was making his speech.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I move that the following be added to clause No. 8—“Also a list of the names of all Senators and members of the House of Commons, who received half-fare tickets and passes over roads or portions of roads owned or operated by the Company.” I might say in connection with this that a number of the papers have misconstrued and misapplied my remarks which I made in bringing this question before the House some time ago. I never asked the Canadian Pacific Railway or any other company for a half-fare or free pass or any favor.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I call the hon. gentleman to order; this amendment is not germane to the Bill; it has nothing to do with the Bill and cannot be moved.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I respectfully submit that I am in order.

THE SPEAKER—I consider that the amendment which the hon. gentleman proposes is not germane to that Bill or to that clause. An amendment cannot be proposed which is not germane to the Bill.

HON. MR. POWER—I do not rise for the purpose of disputing the ruling of the Chair, but I think we ought to be very careful of the sort of precedent which we establish by a ruling of this character. It would strike the ordinary observer that the amendment proposed by the hon. member from New Westminster was to a certain extent germane to the clause. The eighth clause is as follows:—

8. The company shall lay before the House of Commons within the first fifteen days of the meeting of Parliament a list of all lands sold by them during the year ending on the first day of October in each year, together with the names of the purchasers.

The object of that clause is to give the House of Commons and, through the House of Commons, the people of this country an account of the business transactions of the Company during the year. I think the amendment of the hon. member simply proposes to amplify the information—to say in addition to that, the company shall give other information.

HON. MR. PLUMB—What other information?

HON. MR. MCINNES.

HON. MR. POWER—The amendment describes the information.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—Does the hon. gentleman appeal from the decision of the Chair?

HON. MR. POWER—I shall state so when I do.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman is not in order.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I call the hon. gentleman, to order: he is out of order in making this statement unless he intends to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

HON. MR. POWER—As a rule a member concludes with a motion of some kind; my intentions are strictly honorable, and I think a member has a right to discuss a question of order.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—The hon. gentleman has no right to speak unless he appeals for the decision of the chair.

HON. MR. CARVELL—The hon. gentleman prefaced his remarks by saying he did not intend to question the ruling of the chair.

THE SPEAKER—I certainly think this motion cannot be amended in the manner proposed. I never gave a ruling from this chair on which I have had a clearer opinion than I have on this occasion.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I am not going to criticize the ruling of the chair, which is always right, but I desire to explain to the House why I offered this amendment. In the House of Commons Mr. Trow moved a similar motion—

HON. MR. PLUMB—I call the hon. gentleman to order.

THE SPEAKER—I trust the House will permit the hon. member to make a personal explanation.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I was simply going to state that a similar amendment was moved by a private member in the House of Commons to this very same Bill, and the leader of the Government in that House accepted it, and I thought if he had power there to do that I had the same power here. That was my reason for moving the amendment. However, I do not find any fault with the ruling of the chair, but I do find fault with the frequent and unseemly interruptions indulged in by several members of this House.

THE SPEAKER—Of course we have to take the statement of the hon. gentleman with regard to what has been done in the House of Commons; the hon. member says the amendment was accepted there. The question of order having been raised here I am clearly of opinion that the amendment is not germane to the clause or the Bill.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

THE SPEAKER—I should like to ask the hon. member if the motion made in the other House was an amendment or an independent clause?

HON. MR. MCINNES—It was an independent clause.

THE SPEAKER—That was not done here.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—Would I have a right to ask for information, although there is nothing before the chair, as the amendment was found to be out of order and ruled by the chair to be so a few moments ago? As the speech of the hon. gentleman from New Westmins' was running down the country—

HON. MR. MCINNES—I call the member to order.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. member is out of order.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I want to have it expunged.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman has no right to speak after having been called to order.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (140) "An Act respecting the improvement of the Harbour of Quebec." (Mr. Plumb.)

Bill (139) "An Act respecting tolls over the Dunville dam and bridge connecting works constructed over the Grand River." (Mr. Plumb.)

NAPANEE, TAMWORTH AND QUEBEC RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING

HON. MR. READ moved the second reading of Bill (79) "An Act respecting the Napanee, Tamworth and Quebec Railway." He said: This Bill gives the Railway Company authority to construct other lines in connection with it—to extend their line.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

INSURANCE BILL.

CONSIDERATION OF COMMONS AMENDMENTS POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day having been called—"Consideration of amendments made by the House of Commons to Bill (G) Insurance Bill."

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that the Order of the Day be discharged, and that the said amendments be taken into consideration to-morrow.

HON. MR. SCOTT—I was not present when this Bill was read at its previous stages and I desire to call the attention of the House to a gross outrage on the rights of individuals. I think it is proper that the House should know that there is a most objectionable clause in the Bill.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Would it not be better to wait until the question comes up regularly?

HON. MR. SCOTT—I wish to give notice that I will oppose a certain clause of this Bill which prevents anybody doing business for an Insurance company in this country that has not despoised security and taken out a license in Canada. If I want to insure in a company in England, the United States or elsewhere, unless that company chooses to take out a license and do business in Canada I could be brought before a magistrate and punished for sending the amount of my premium to such a company. The clause to which I object is the twenty-second, which is as follows:

20. Every company incorporated elsewhere than in Canada, and at present licensed or hereafter licensed under this Act, and every company which is subject to the provisions of this Act, shall make annual statements of its condition and affairs under the oath of its chief agent, and shall furnish the same to the minister at the same time as Canadian companies; and the form and manner of making of such statements shall, as to the Canada business of such company, be the same (so far as applicable) as is required of Canadian companies,—and as to its general business, shall be in such form and to such date as such company is required by law to furnish to the Government of the country in which its head office is situate, in a separate schedule attached. The blank forms of the statements of the Canada business shall be furnished in duplicate by the Superintendent.

I call the attention of the House to it with a view of having it struck out.

THE SPEAKER—This Bill originated in this House and has passed through the House of Commons, and we have merely to deal with the amendments made to it by that House.

HON. MR. PLUMB—We can consider the question to-morrow.

HON. MR. POWER—I do not think the clause is open to the objection which has been taken to it.

HON. MR. SCOTT—I simply call attention to it.

HON. MR. POWER—I call attention to the further fact that this applies to a person who delivers a policy of insurance or collects a premium or transacts business on behalf of a company; it does not apply to a person who sends a premium of his own to a foreign country.

HON. MR. PLUMB—It would be much better to discuss the matter when the amendments are under consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

CARLETON BRANCH RAILWAY BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill (137) "An Act respecting the Carleton, City of Saint John, Branch Railroad." He said:—The Parliament of Canada appropriated $85,000 to purchase this road, with a frontage on the harbor and other property, and it is proposed to declare it a work for the general advantage of Canada.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—When I looked at this Bill this morning I naturally asked myself the question "Why should the Government relieve those parties of their liabilities?" Can the leader of the House show any reason why the Government should step in and purchase a road that is of no value to any parties simply because it is near the city of St. John, New Brunswick? If they resolve to push this Bill, I would ask them to come to the relief of different municipalities in the Province of Ontario who have embarrassed themselves by railway construction, and ask them to assume those liabilities to a heavy extent. This is nothing more or less than voting a large amount of public money to influence the next elections. We have had several bills within the last fortnight which should have been thrown out, brought in by the Government just before the elections. All such measures are left till the end of the session, and when a number of members have gone and there is a thin House. The action of the Government must excite great indignation and almost imperil the safety of this House if we do not check those bills. I appeal to the House to stop this continuous waste of public money. The present leader (Mr. Plumb) is just the member of this House to take the responsibility of bringing in such Bills. No responsible leader of the House would ever have the perversity of mind to bring in such Bills as this before the Senate, and I hope the House will reject it.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION BILL.

BILL REJECTED.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (106), "An Act to amend and consolidate as amended the statutory provisions respecting Chinese Immigration."

In the Committee,

HON. MR. ALLAN—Since the Committee reported yesterday I communicated with the Government on the subject of this measure, and they considered that the withdrawing of the Bill would be breaking faith with those in the other House who supported it there. Therefore I have no alternative left but to proceed with it. When the Committee rose yesterday I had already gone through the Bill and explained the different amendments which I proposed to make and their object and character. The first of those amendments which was to clause C of section 2, was to substitute the words "offspring of" instead "born of" a Chinese father. That amendment was adopted and also an amendment in subsection B of clause 6, adding the word "merchant," so that it will read "merchants, tourists, men of science, students, etc." That amendment was also adopted. The next amendment I have to propose is to the 15th clause. That in fact assimilated for all the purposes of this Act a railway train to a vessel. On consideration of that clause it was deemed to be an unreasonable proposition to expect that Chinese immigrants coming in by a railway train could be dealt with in the same manner as when they come by vessels where the captain has ample time to comply with all the formalities on arriving in port; and in the second place making the conductor liable. I have therefore altered the clause, in the first place so as to make the railway company liable instead of the conductor of the train, and, in the second place to provide that the report in writing which is to be made on the arrival of the train at the port or place of arrival shall not be as described at present in the clause, which would be the same as in the case of the arrival of the vessel ; all that is required of the conductor is to report the number of Chinese persons arriving on board his train. I think hon. gentlemen will agree with me that there will be no difficulty in the way of such a report being made, while there would be a great difficulty, and it would be very unreasonable to expect that a report such as is required to be made by the master of the vessel in respect to Chinese arriving by that vessel, should be furnished by a railway conductor.

HON. MR. VIDAL—You still propose to retain the responsibility of the conductor to pay $50 ?

HON. MR. SCOTT—It is the company instead of the conductor. The objection is not in any way minimized that this is practically going to stop Chinamen who are now living in other portions of the Dominion than British Columbia from travelling—many of them in a fair business, who go backwards and forwards in the way of trade to the United States. If they go down to New York or Chicago they cannot return to Canada, and it seems a gross violation of personal independence that those men will not be permitted to travel—because that is the effect of it. The railway companies are not going to carry out this law in a way to encourage Chinamen to travel. The first thing that a Chinaman will be asked to do by a railway company on coming into Canada is to put up $50 with his ticket. He protests, "I am doing business in Canada ; I am not an immigrant." The company says : "That is not a question for us ; that is a question for the Customs House Officer," and we know there is no class of men so strictly against the people as Customs officers. The Customs officer considers he is the most powerful man in the country. He makes seizures as he pleases, and there is no law or power by which you can question his assumption of authority. Therefore, I say, it is most unfair and most unjust that we should place those unfortunate Chinese, who are residents of the country, at the mercy of the Customs authorities. We do not allow them to be represented in Parliament ; they have not any opportunity afforded them of protesting against this legislation. Supposing they adopted similar legislation in China we would at once send a fleet there and bombard their cities and forts on the plea that the law of nations is not interpreted by them as the Anglo-Saxon people interpret it. But then when the law of nations is to be applied to Chinese coming into Canada, we take these unfortunate people by the throat and say, "you must comply with all those restrictions and regulations which we think fit to impose upon you." "It is an outrage on civilization ! A most humiliating position in which to place this country. It is not a question that really one can discuss calmly, because it is so entirely foreign to all the principles under which we have been educated. We know very well that for years and years past we have been representing ourselves as holding most broad, most liberal and most generous views with regard to foreigners who come amongst us ; that we do not discriminate as to color or race, and here because a few laborers in British Columbia dictate to their representatives in Parliament about the competition of Chinese labor, the whole Dominion is to be subjected to the indignity and injustice of adopting this legislation. I protest against it as a Canadian ! I protest against it in the name of the Dominion ! I protest against it as a member of the British Empire ! Is there a member in the British House of Commons who would dare to propose a measure like this ? Not one either in the House of Commons or in the House of Lords. No gentleman could be found to stand up there and advocate a measure which is such a gross violation of the law of nations, the comity of nations, a law which we ourselves have been endeavoring to hold forth as being the true principle on which the nations of the world should trade. We took a century to educate the Chinese into the belief that they had no right to shut out foreigners from their country. They were at first reluctant to deal with us ; they did not believe we held proper religious views. Finally they admitted us to trade at Hong Kong and at five ports named. Then they would not give us other privileges that were demanded and because Englishmen were liable to be hauled up for infringement of the regulations we sent out an army and a fleet there and bombarded their ports and we taught them what the law of nations was by means of shot and shell, and they have by this means been so educated up to our level that they have come abroad to learn our ways ; but what do we do? When they come to our shores we allow them to be brutally treated on our western coast, and have subjected them to every indignity, and we are now tolerating legislation that is a disgrace to our boasted civilization.

HON. MR. NELSON—I would like to ask the hon. gentleman—

HON. MEMBERS—Order, order.

HON. MR. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman has no right to interrupt me. A little tyranny may be practiced over in British Columbia on the poor Chinamen ; but I hope the Chinaman, like the negro, will have some friends to speak for him.

HON. MR. NELSON—I say that the people of British Columbia do not treat the Chinese badly ! It is a slander on the people to say so !!

HON. MR. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman had better keep his temper.

HON. MR. NELSON—The hon. gentleman has stated what is not true when he says the people of British Columbia ill-treat the Chinese !

HON. MR. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman had better keep his temper. The little tail that wags over in British Columbia on the Pacific Coast is not going to control the whole Dominion—a fragment of the population not the size of the city of Ottawa—that you could hide away in one of the wards of this city—is not going to dictate to the 4,000,000 of this Dominion, and dictate to them on a subject that touches us in a tender part, our national honor as citizens of a free country. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman feels it keenly. I am quite prepared to see the hon. gentleman from Burrard Inlet fret under this, because he feels that the Province of British Columbia has put itself in an undignified position simply to gratify the cupidity of a few laborers over there who want to secure to themselves a monopoly of labor and $2 instead of $1 a day as the standard of wages. We are not going to be governed by any such motives, and I say that the Senate of Canada has now an opportunity of rising to a higher level and showing its independence of such influences by stamping out this Bill. We have a law on our statute book already that we all know is hard enough, and it ought not to be made harder. Cannot this measure stand over for another year and can we not in the interval consider the question? Probably British Columbia will be then more temperate. We will thereby be doing service to the empire. Delicate questions are arising between the foreign office and China and we all know, by public report, that the British Minister at Washington feels that we are stepping on very tender ground, that it is embarrassing to the British Government, our dealing in the manner we are doing with this Chinese question : therefore I think we will be doing a service to the empire if we allow this question to stand over for another year. There is already a stringent Act on the statute book respecting Chinese immigration, and if hon. gentlemen take the trouble to read it they will feel that it is strong enough—too strong to be there. I do not know how we ever permitted it to pass this House. We have passed it, however, and let it stand where it is for another year until passion calms down and this question can be looked at more quietly and from a better standpoint. Then if it is found absolutely necessary to enact more stringent legislation let the Government bring down a better considered measure. In the meantime I think this House ought to throw out this Bill and make no change in a law which is already very obnoxious.

HON. MR. ALLAN—I think it would be well if this Bill could be discussed in a little better temper. I am surprised at the tone and manner of my hon. friend, the member from Ottawa. I had talked over with him, and he knows that I have no special leaning towards this Chinese legislation, and I certainly, from the conversation I had with him, thought he quite appreciated the fact that, so far as this particular Bill is concerned, we are endeavoring to shape it so as to meet the objections which had been urged against it by hon. members, and as far as possible to remove any objectionable feature which the Bill might possess. Now the hon. gentleman has very eloquently and I have no right to object to that, spoken again in committee against the principle of the Bill; but it seems to me he is a little wide of the mark. His strongest point was the imposing of a tax on the Chinese coming to this country. That tax already exists.

HON. MR. SCOTT—On immigrants coming by sea only?

HON. MR. ALLAN—If we throw this Bill out, the tax would still remain.

HON. MR. SCOTT—It would only affect British Columbia then.

HON. MR. ALLAN—If this Bill is thrown out the old duty remains. The main object of this Bill, in the first place, was to transfer the care of everything connected with the Chinese and Chinese immigration to the Customs Department, and to make certain other regulations with a view to the better working of the whole matter. But with respect to this particular clause, which I supposed was the matter before the Committee just now, there is, I submit with all deference, nothing in that clause as I have amended it which is in the slightest degree unreasonable. It simply requires a Railway Company bringing Chinese immigrants into Canada, when they have arrived at the place of debarkation, to give to the comptroller a list stating the number of Chinese who are in that train, and not to allow them to leave the cars until the comptroller receives the fee which has to be paid for them. That is the whole thing, and so far as the Railway Company or their officers are concerned there is nothing unjust or unfair or improper in it. Whether it may be desirable that that tax should be imposed is another question, but quo ad the mode of carrying it out, through the railway officials, I think it is not an unjust clause. I therefore move the clause as amended.

HON. MR. SCOTT—I move in amendment that the clause be expunged.

HON. MR. ALLAN.

HON. MR. WARK—I think we are imposing a very serious responsibility on railway companies by passing this clause. Any one who stands at the window of a ticket office, and sees how rapidly tickets are handed out without looking at the party who is getting them, must know that those who buy tickets go on board the train without the railway company knowing who they are; and I suppose there is not one out of five conductors who can tell a Chinaman from any other foreigner. A foreigner may be in the cars, and may be suspected of being a Chinaman, is the conductor going to ask the man if he is a Chinese and take his word for it; and if he says he is not and is not reported under this Bill is the company liable to a penalty? We have been told that there are not many Chinese now coming into the Dominion, and that there are more leaving Canada than are coming in. It is to be regretted that they came to the country heathens and are going back heathens, for there are a great many persons both in the Mother country and in this country who think the way to receive those people would be to treat them kindly and to endeavor to convert them to the Christian religion. We send missionaries all the way to China for this purpose, but when the Chinese come to our shores we treat them as dogs. I have read an incident which shows a remarkable contrast in the way the Chinese treat us in their country from the way we treat them in Canada. My hon. friend from Sarnia referred yesterday to Dr. McKay. When the French bombarded the port of the country where Dr. McKay had his mission, the heathen were roused, and said that the white people were all foreigners and they tore down the mission schools and churches and destroyed them. As soon as the bombardment was over Dr. McKay applied for redress to the Chinese authorities. The officer in command, a general in the Chinese army authorized to settle those losses, did not even doubt Dr. McKay's word. He asked him how much the mission had lost. He said $10,000, and it was handed over to him without a word. This is the way the Chinese treat us. Dr. McKay was a Canadian and bore so high a character amongst the Chinese that his word was not doubted, and the money was handed over without an investigation. Now when those people come to our country we subject them to treatment that ought not to be extended to any human creature.

HON. MR. POWER—It is now almost six o'clock, and this Bill promises to lead to a somewhat prolonged discussion; I would therefore suggest, as a matter of convenience, to take the sense of the Committee as to the desirability of proceeding with the Bill by moving the six months' hoist. If the sense of the Committee is against proceeding with the Bill we might as well ascertain it now as later on and save time.

HON. MR. SCOTT—It is a very good suggestion. Perhaps the Chairman would allow me to change my proposition and to move that it be considered this day six months.

THE SPEAKER—You cannot do that. All you can do is to move that the Chairman leave the chair. A practice has grown up in this House of moving that the committee do rise. There is no authority for that. I think the practice has arisen by following the small manual compiled by Mr. Lemoine. The 88th Rule of the Senate is as follows:—

“The rules of the Senate are observed in a Committee of the Whole, except the rules limiting the time of speaking; and no motion for the previous question, or for an adjournment can be received, but a Senator may at any time move that the Chairman leave the Chair, or report progress, or ask leave to sit again.”

HON. MR. SCOTT—“Leave the Chair”—that is tantamount to a motion that the Committee rise.

THE SPEAKER—But it is not the correct form. It has been the custom here to move that the Committee rise. It is not the formal way of making the motion, to which I wish to call the attention of the Committee, because it is well that we should act according to our rules.

HON. MR. SCOTT—My motion then should be that the Chairman do now leave the chair.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I object to the shape that this matter is taking. If the motion that the Chairman leave the chair carries I presume that we will hear nothing more about it—that the matter is closed. I think it is highly desirable that a matter of this importance should be decided with the Speaker in the chair so that the vote may be recorded. I would therefore prefer that the Chairman rise and report that the Committee has made some progress.

HON. MR. ALLAN—I have no objection to that.

HON. MR. POWER—The Bill was referred to the Committee of the whole House and the Committee can make any reasonable recommendation to the House, and is there any rule to prevent the Committee from recommending to the House that the further consideration of the Bill be deferred for six months?

THE SPEAKER—The rule is clear. The only motion that could be made is under the 88th rule of this House, by which a Senator may at any time move that the chairman leave the chair, or report progress or ask leave to sit again. A Committee of the Whole House has no power to adjourn for a single day. It has nothing to do with fixing the time of its next sitting. That can only be done by the House—on motion put by the Speaker in the chair.

HON. MR. ALLAN—If hon. gentlemen are content to put it in that form that the Committee rise and report progress and then take a vote on the six months hoist, with the Speaker in the chair I have no objection.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I think it is the better way to do it.

HON. MR. NELSON—Before this Committee rises I must make my protest.

HON. MR. SCOTT—You will have an opportunity when the Speaker is in the chair.

HON. MR. NELSON—I will speak now. Do not interrupt me again! The hon. gentleman from Ottawa has made the statement again and again that the Chinese have been inhumanly treated in British Columbia. I ask the hon. gentleman to point out one single instance of inhuman treatment of Chinese out there?

HON. MR. SCOTT—The Legislature of British Columbia made a stipulation recently that no Chinese shall be allowed to work on the Island Railway, although there were thousands of them out of employment there.

HON. MR. NELSON—That is not a question of inhumanity; it is a question of races with the people of British Columbia, whether the Chinese should be employed on railways there, and allowed to compete with white labor. The hon. gentleman has made a statement which I say is absolutely untrue. I say that the Chinese in British Columbia are treated as well as any other portion of the population, and I defy him to point to any instance where the people of British Columbia have in any way treated the Chinese inhumanely. The hon. gentleman has made the statement, and I say that the hon. gentleman has deliberately and falsely made statements—

HON. MEMBERS—Oh! oh! oh! Order! order!

THE SPEAKER—I wish to say with regard to the point of order raised by the hon. member from Halifax, that it must be self evident to the hon. gentleman, if he considers for a moment, that the effect of a motion in committee that the consideration of the Bill should be postponed until this day six months, would be to dispose of the Bill finally, which the committee has no power to do.

HON. MR. GIRARD, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress.

THE SPEAKER—Shall the Committee have leave to sit again?

HON. MR. ALLAN—I move that the Committee have leave to sit again to-morrow.

HON. MR. NELSON.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I move in amendment that the Committee do not have leave to sit again to-morrow, but that it have leave to sit again this day six months.

The Senate divided on the amendment which was carried on the following division:—

AFTER RECESS.

THE EXECUTION OF LOUIS RIEL.

INQUIRY.

The Order of the Day having been called.

Calling the attention of this Honorable House to the grave errors committed in the statements of two of the Honorable members of the Government in two manifestoes, one of which has the character of an official document, which have been printed and publicly circulated, the one being entitled "In re Louis Riel, convicted of treason and executed therefor;" and the second "The Riel Question—Letter of the Hon. J. A. Chapleau."

And he will inquire of the Government whether it is their intention to correct these errors, by an additional declaration upon the same subject or in any other manner?

HON. MR. PLUMB said :—Before the hon. gentleman addresses this House I beg to call attention to the fact that this is a question which is entirely out of order. It alleges as a matter of fact that errors have been committed in the statement referred to. Now the rule in respect to questions of this kind is that no inquiry can involve any matter of opinion, inference, or argument, or a statement of any disputed fact. This question of the hon. gentleman includes every one of those objections, any one of which would be enough to put him out of order. As a matter of friendly feeling and kindness I went to the hon. gentleman personally a few moments ago and told him that I should be constrained to point out to the House that this question was entirely out of order and could not be proceeded with. I then suggested to him that he should put his question in order and that no objection would be interposed. The hon. member stated to me that he did not ask any favors. I suppose he misunderstood my object : I went with the best intention in the world, and if the hon. member does not accept the suggestion which I made to him of course I have no alternative except to say that the question cannot be entertained and therefore cannot be discussed. I appeal to the Chair as to whether my position is borne out by the rules of the House : but I wish to say again that I desire to facilitate the hon. gentleman's wish upon this important subject, and that he should accept in all the kindness with which it was offered to him the suggestion that I made to bring this inquiry within the rule. If the hon. gentleman objects to that it is no fault of mine and I appeal to the House to judge whether I have not, in proposing this, held out to him every opportunity to do that which he desires to accomplish.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I would remind the hon. gentleman that this is not a common proceeding, in my humble judgment, to which the ordinary authorities apply : but still at this late period of the session we have something else to do than discuss useless questions of order. To avoid objections being raised, I yesterday amended my inquiry in order to meet any possible contingency. I intended, without any suggestion from the hon. gentleman, to propose an amendment myself. Before the recess I met the hon. gentleman and showed him my amendments : they were made in the orders of the day yesterday and repeated to-day, and I called his attention to the fact that to avoid discussion I intended to propose myself the change which he pretends he has suggested to me. That is the reason why I told the hon. member a moment ago that I would not ask for any favor. I stated yesterday the reason why this matter has been postponed to such a late period of the session. I did not require to be informed of the question of order : it had been kindly suggested to me by a friend three or four days ago, and I at once decided to make the amendment, and to avoid troubling the House by giving another notice of motion. I thought I could rely upon the kindness of hon. members to make the changes when the matter was called. That is the way the question stands. I am very sorry, but I thought, under the circumstances, I could not thank my hon. friend for a suggestion which I had made known to him myself some time before. Now, of course, if the House rule my question out of order I will give another notice and proceed at a future day as I might have done yesterday. The House knows why I did not proceed then. The amendment which I propose to make is to strike out the words "grave errors committed in the" and in the second paragraph to strike out the words "to correct these errors" and to make it read "Whether it is their intention to make any additional declaration, etc."

THE SPEAKER—That would be the proper way.

HON. MR. SCOTT—Give a new notice.

THE SPEAKER—The House I am sure will permit the hon. gentleman to make the amendment which he has suggested under which the motion will read as follows :—

"That he will call the attention of this hon. House to the statements of two of the hon. members of the Government in two manifestoes, one of which has the character of an official document, which have been printed and publicly circulated, the one being entitled 'in re Louis Riel convicted of treason and executed therefor and the second 'The Riel question—letter of the Hon. J. A. Chapleau', and he will inquire of the Government whether it is their intention to make an additional declaration upon the same subject or in any other manner."

That alteration will bring the motion within the rules of the House.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman must get leave to make that amendment.

THE SPEAKER — I presume the House will permit it.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I went to the hon. gentleman in all kindness and he says I pretended to make a suggestion to him. The hon. gentleman, I presume is quite aware of the effect of the English language when he makes that statement. The hon. gentleman had never made such a statement to the House; he had marked out certain changes with which we were not seized. I could not, therefore, converse with the hon. gentleman on the subject of those changes, but in order to relieve him of any difficulties I came to him and said that I would like to have those changes made because the motion, as it appeared, was out of order. The hon. gentleman is a Senator of some fifteen or sixteen years standing and he certainly cannot suppose that any question can arise in this House which is not governed by its rules. I went to the hon. gentleman in kindness and friendship and proposed to him to put himself in a position to address the House, and instead of thanking me for that, he says I pretended to make a suggestion. The hon. gentleman has put himself in a position which certainly, if he comprehends the effect of what he has said, leads me to think that with the kindness and goodness of heart which characterize him he will not let me rest under that imputation.

THE SPEAKER—I beg to say that the matter does not stand exactly in the position the hon. gentleman supposes. The hon. member from DeSalaberry asked leave to make certain changes in his motion. I read the changes to the House and I submitted to the House whether the hon. gentleman had leave to proceed or not. I presumed that he had leave, no objection having been made. Now there is a very marked difference between getting leave of the House and taking a vote. Leave means unanimous consent. That is very often taken in this House in the way I have taken it now. Of course it is not a question to be decided on a vote of the House, but it is done by leave of the House—leave in it parliamentary sense.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I beg to thank the House very much for the courtesy with which this permission has been granted to me. I may say that it is not without hesitation that I approach this matter, and I will tell the House why the matter alluded to in my notice has been, as is well known, extensively discussed in the whole country, both from a political party point of view, and from a national point of view. If I should have to discuss the matter on either of those grounds, I would not have troubled the House at this late hour, but I believe above our party divisions and national interests there is something still more important—justice and the interest of the country at large. I do not know if I am under a wrong impression, but it seems to me, as far as I can judge, from a great many conversations which I have had with several hon. gentlemen of the Senate and from what I have heard and read outside of this House of the different opinions entertained in the country on this question, that whatever solution it may receive politically, I think there is great uneasiness in the country, and that it is our duty to investigate the question more carefully than it has been examined elsewhere, and that something should be done by this hon. House to remove, if possible, the cause of the uneasiness which prevails in the Dominion. It is my opinion that the feeling which exists may even imperil our existence as a confederation. I really believe that it would not require more than two other occurrences of the same character to destroy the future of Canada, and it is my belief that there should not be any real cause of difficulty between the different races which inhabit this Dominion. The statement to which I have alluded, in the letter written by the Hon. Secretary of State, I translate as follows:—

THE SPEAKER.

"Louis Riel was not last winter, at the beginning, in the way of high treason. Everybody remembers his revolt in 1869, the useless murder of Scott, whom he had caused to be executed when that unfortunate man was not in a position to do him any harm."

I find in a document which has been circulated through the country, and which is signed by our worthy leader in the Senate, the ex-Minister of Justice, Sir Alexander Campbell, the following :—

"Whether rebellion alone should be punished with death is a question upon which opinions may differ. Treason will probably ever remain, what it always has been among civilized nations, the highest of all crimes; but each conviction for that offence must be treated and disposed of by the Executive Government upon its own merits, and with a full consideration of all the attendant circumstances. In this particular instance, it was a second offence and, as on the first occasion; accompanied by bloodshed under the direct and immediate order of the prisoner, and by the atrocity of attempting to incite an Indian warfare, the possible results of which the prisoner could and did thoroughly appreciate."

These are documents in which it is stated that the half-breeds of the North-West alluded to, committed in 1869 crimes of high treason and murder. Not only at the time alluded to, but since then, a large section of our community sympathized with the accused and considered and treated him as an honest man, deserving of sympathy and all possible help. This sympathy has been felt, not only at the moment of the commission of this pretended crime, but has lasted for years, ever since this class of the community have been in possession of the facts; so that if it be true that this man was at the time guilty of a double crime of such a hideous character as that mentioned, it would naturally follow that there is a large class of our population who cannot discriminate between what is right and wrong, between what is lawful and justifiable and a crime. I state frankly that I cannot see the possibility of peace or union between the different sections of the community if one were so wanting in a sense of justice and discrimination between right and wrong, as not to be able to draw a distinction between crime of the worst character and an action not deserving of condemnation. Most members of the community being under this impression, which I believe to be a wrong one, it is a serious cause of difficulty, and the reason why I believe it my duty to propose to this House to examine carefully, calmly and attentively the question in order to see whether this is right or wrong. After an investigation of the question there will be several conclusions to be drawn. I know that it will take some of your time, and I may perhaps be under a wrong impression, but amongst those with whom I have had the honor of speaking on the subject I have not found one of the English speaking population who can see the question as the French element view it. I think there is not one of them who has seen, or remembers the documents sufficiently, to come to the conclusion that there was no crime, no high treason committed in 1869. If I am not altogether mistaken, that is an important question to be examined and decided. It may be treated from a party point of view, or from a national point of view, or from the point of view of justice and the merits of the case. It is from this last that I intend to consider it, and I shall carefully avoid anything which may have the effect of raising improper feelings or preventing the members of this House examining the question calmly; because, I may say, that those who believe that the French population, especially of the Province of Quebec, have made of this a question of nationality to the extent of defending any of their race, however guilty he may be, have committed a very great mistake. Thank God, we know what we owe to our country; we understand our duty and we know when crime is committed under circumstances which deserve punishment. But it is necessary to go back to the question and ask was there crime, especially of the character mentioned in these two documents to which I have alluded. I ask hon. gentlemen to remember that when Canada acquired the North-West Territories, they did not come under the authority of the Dominion until the first of July 1870; prior to that date the Canadian Government had not the slightest power or authority in the North-West—no more authority there than the first Chinaman coming into this country has here. If this be true how can it be pretended that the crimes of high treason and revolt were committed against an authority which did not exist in 1869? It will be seen at first sight that this is a striking feature of the question. It was on the tenth July, 1869, that the Canadian Government sent one of its officers to begin the surveys in the North-West. We have first to examine the authority which the Government had to take that step, and secondly whether the Government of Canada had obtained formal permission from the existing authority in the North-West to begin those surveys. The documents show that in the first place the Canadian Government had not the slightest authority to begin work there; and in the second place they had not obtained the permission of the authorities in the North-West, because we cannot forget that there was in that country a regularly constituted government, a proper and legitimate authority which was the only one in the land. On this question I find in the sessional papers, Nos. 12 to 31, in vol. 3 of 1870, in a message dated Downing Street, 30th Nov. 1869, and signed by Lord Granville, then Colonial Minister, the following:—

“This being the state of the case the Canadian Government, in anticipation of the transfer, now agreed on by all parties, undertook certain operations in respect of lands, subject in the first instance to a faint protest from the Company.”

Lord Granville is speaking of the Hudson Bay Company, which had in its hands the government of the North-West, so that if I understand properly the meaning of these words, it is that the Hudson Bay Company, whose president was the governor of the North-West, not only did not give permission to the Canadian Government to survey lands in that country, but protested—protested feebly, if you like, but still protested—against this action of the Canadian authorities, so that the only legitimate government of the land did not give its consent to that work. I find in the same document an application from the Surveyor-General to the governor of the North-West. He says:—

August 21st, 1869.

With regard to the records of lands granted by the Company, he said he hardly felt justified in giving them fully over to me, but I should have full access to them for the purpose of obtaining copies. I shall, therefore, take immediate steps to have them copied. I regret to say that there exists great confusion and irregularity in the surveys and descriptions of these grants, and much care and skill will be required in reconciling difficulties in the way of clashing descriptions, and disputed occupations of lands.

I propose, with your approval, as regards these particular lands,—

First. To obtain an accurate survey and map thereof;

Second. Upon these, to endeavor, as far as possible, to reconcile the facts on the ground, with the lots as described in the grant, and having done so, mark the boundaries definitely, and have the survey and map confirmed by an Act of the Legislature.

It will probably be necessary, in many instances, to compensate parties for deficiencies of area, which may be done by giving them a piece of land in rear.

I find that a considerable degree of irritation exists among the native population in view of surveys and settlements being made without the Indian title having been first extinguished.

You will, no doubt, have become aware that the half-breeds lately, in a public meeting, called the Company here to account in the matter of the money paid for the transfer to Canada.

Whatever may have been the views of the Government as to the character of the title to be conveyed by the deed of transfer, whether the expense may or may not be fairly chargeable to the Company, I am satisfied that the Government will, in the first place, have to undertake and effect the extinction of the Indian title.

This question must be regarded as of the very greatest importance.

In connection therewith, I would reiterate to you my conviction, as expressed while at Ottawa, that no time should be lost. The necessity for prompt action is more apparent to me now that it seemed even then.

Supposing the transfer from the Company to have been complete, it is possible that the object may be carried out yet, this fall.

There can be no question as to the prejudicial effects in retarding the settlement on the country, should the half-breeds and Indians assume a position of hostility to any extent whatever, towards the incoming settlers, or towards the Government.

The difficulties of the position may be much enhanced by giving the discontented parties the winter to brood over, and to concert measures in opposition to the views of the Government.

In the meantime, the French half-breeds, who constitute about one-fourth or one-fifth (say 3,000 souls) of the settlement, are likely to prove a turbulent element. This class have gone so far as to threaten violence should surveys be attempted to be made.

So that we see at the very beginning they had not the sanction of the local authorities to proceed with the surveys. Of course it would be necessary to read whole pages of these documents to show the character of the difficulty, but the quotations which I am making will enable the House to see that the governor of the Hudson Bay Company, who was the head of the Assiniboia Government, was not at all satisfied with the action of the Canadian Government, and though he did not directly make any energetic opposition to the action of the Canadian Government, he still showed unwillingness and want of consent to allow them to proceed as they did. I now come to the second question, which is the one at the beginning of the whole trouble. Those surveyors proceeded to work in a foreign country, where they had no more power than we would have in China, France or Russia, until they were stopped, by whom? By the legitimate owners of the land. I will not look elsewhere than in the public documents to find what was the real character of their action. At page seven of the same document the officer makes a report upon the first difficulty when the survey was stopped, and he says one of his men, Mr. Webb, was stopped by a party of eighteen men and he adds.

"No arms were seen with the party, but by standing on the chain and using threats of violence if the survey was persisted in, it became evident that to go on with the survey would probably have led to a collision."

I call your attention to the following words:

"And Mr. Webb, in accordance with written instructions which had previously given him to provide for any such contingency, discontinued his work and as the half-breeds would not allow him to remain encamped where he was, moved his camp out to the main road on the Red River, waiting for orders, having sent off in the meantime, Mr. Fraser, as above stated.

"I at once waited on Dr. Cowan, the chief magistrate in the settlement, and laying the facts of the case before him, requested that he would consult with the Governor, or such other magistrate as he might think desirable to call in, and take such further steps with regard to this outrage, as he and they might think called for under the circumstances."

I find on page five of the next document a special return, number twelve, written on the 21st August 1869, that is nearly two months prior to the occurrence to which I have just alluded—the first surveyors were stopped on the 11th October—Colonel Dennis says:

"I find that a considerable degree of irritation exists amongst the native population in view of surveys and settlements being made without the Indian title having been first extinguished.

You will, no doubt, have become aware that the half-breeds lately, in a public meeting, called the company here to account in the matter of the money paid for the transfer to Canada.

Whatever may have been the views of the Government as to the character of the title to be conveyed by the deed of transfer, whether the expense may or may not be fairly chargeable to the company. I am satisfied that the Government will, in the first place, have to undertake and effect the extinction of the Indian title.

This question must be regarded as of the very greatest importance.

In connection therewith, I would reiterate to you my conviction, as expressed while at Ottawa, that no time should be lost. The necessity for prompt action is more apparent to me now than it seemed even then.

Supposing the transfer from the company to have been complete, it is possible that the object may be carried out yet this fall.

There can be no question as to the prejudicial effects in retarding the settlement of the country, should the half-breeds and Indians assume a position of hostility to any extent whatever, towards the incoming settlers, or towards the Government.

The difficulties of the position may be much enhanced by giving the discontented parties the winter to brood over, and to concert measures in opposition to the views of the Government.

In the meantime the French half-breeds who constitute about one-fourth or one-fifth (say 3,000 souls), of the settlement, are likely to prove a turbulent element. This class have gone so far as to threaten violence should surveys be attempted to be made."

So that the position is this: A party of foreign surveyors go into a country where they have not the slightest power, and undertake, in spite of the protest of the legitimate authority of the land, to survey the properties of the inhabitants; they learn that there is a good deal of trouble and excitement amongst the people, and yet proceed with their work, surveying the lands of the inhabitants, although two months before they had had such warning as that of a resolution passed at a public meeting prohibiting them from trespassing on the properties of the people. Now, that was not all. It appears that those who were surveying did not forget the reason why they went there to survey those properties. In the immediate neighborhood even of Winnipeg some of them went so far as to take not less than five miles square of land for themselves, and this statement I make, not upon my own authority, but upon the authority of public documents. I begin by citing the words of Colonel Dennis himself. Of course he pretends that all was for the best, but he cannot avoid saying, in a deposition which he made on the 21st of May, 1874, before a committee of the House of Commons on the subject :

"I am not aware of any Canadians or others attempting to take up lands improperly, beyond the following:—I was told by Dr. Schultz that a short time previous to my arrival in the country that he and Mr. Snow had staked out and bought from the Indians, lands at St. Annes Point de Chene, a mile square, which the French half-breeds laid claim to in some way. I do not know whether these lands were settled upon.

There were claims also staked out by Canadians and others on the common in the vicinity of Winnipeg, claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company, and in the rear of the Village of Winnipeg on the prairie.

Dr. Schultz asked me if I thought the lands thus acquired at St. Anne's Point de Chene would be recognized by the Canadian Government, and I told him it was not a transaction the Government would recognize, and discontenanced any further proceedings in the matter."

In the deposition of James Hargrave, he gives the immediate causes of the trouble. The first he mentions is this :—

"The country had from time to time, since 1863, been in a very disturbed position. Jail breakings had occurred, and to this day nothing has been done to punish the guilty parties. There were a number of emigrants from Canada settled among the half-breeds, forming a floating population which used language towards the half-breeds highly calculated to disquiet them, leading them to understand that their time in the territory was at an end.

"They objected to the whole survey. There were also many irregular acts on the part of those engaged on the works, and these evoked much feeling. Some persons laid claim, and attempted to take possession by ploughing round them, of large tracts of land claimed by the old settlers."

Hon. gentlemen will remark that I give in preference the sworn evidence of witnesses who were not friendly to the half-breeds. It will be seen also that they are English speaking witnesses, most of them sympathizing with the opponents of the half-breeds. I will now quote from the evidence of Mr. Bannatyne, a merchant of considerable importance in Winnipeg. He says :—

"These officials sent from Canada commenced purchasing land from the Indians, paying for it with provisions and spirits."

It is well known that one of the most stringent laws in the North-West was that prohibiting the sale of liquor to the Indians ; yet we have our Government, one year before they had the slightest authority in that country, through their officials, buying lands which in reality were occupied and cultivated by the half-breeds—pretending to buy them from the Indians for spirits. He continues :—

The land they were purchasing was already partly numbered or claimed by settlers who complained to the Local Government. Matters began to look serious. One of these officials was summoned to appear at the court for selling liquor to the Indians and was fined $50. Matters were explained to these officials by Governor McTavish, and they then desisted, and matters calmed down for the time. The explanation was, I understood, that Mr. McTavish assumed that it was not right that these lands should be purchased, as they had been surveyed and partly settled before. Some of these officials wrote to papers in Canada and misrepresented the actions of the Local Government, stating that they would soon have another government there, and then they would teach the Government and the people in the Territories about law."

I shall now quote from the deposition of Mr. Spence, who says :—

"In 1868 Mr. Snow was sent from Canada to construct roads, and the half-breeds at Point du Chene were very much dissatisfied at his purchase of a block of land, some five miles square, from the Indians, the half-breeds considering that they were themselves entitled to the land as a settlement. Mr. Snow, finding that difficulty would arise out of this, agreed not to insist upon the purchase."

Another occurrence took place some months afterwards, which I will quote, because I have it before me, and hon. members will see how the poor people in the North-West had been treated. The evidence I will quote is that of Lieutenant-Governor Archibald, who, reporting upon facts which he had ascertained, says :—

"With some (I cannot say how many) of the volunteers who went up, a desire to avenge the murder of Scott was one of the inducements to enlist. Some of them openly stated that they had taken a vow before leaving home to pay off all scores by shooting down any Frenchmen that was in any way connected with that event. The great bulk of the French population having been one way or other connected in the troubles, the feeling gradually grew to be one of intense dislike towards the whole race, which was heartily reciprocated by the French.

When the volunteers came to be disbanded, and were thus freed from all restraint, the hatred of the two classes exhibited itself more and more. Some of the immigrants from Ontario shared the feelings of the disbanded volunteers, and acted in concert with them. A body of French half-breeds had made a selection of a tract of land at Riviere aux Islets de Bois; some of them had made farms, or at all events enclosures at that place."

Everybody knows that in the North-West fences are very scarce, and at this time there was no title to lands in the way that we know it in this part of the country. There were no deeds. It was only a choice made of a part of the country which was fenced and cultivated and it was called a claim.

There was abundance of land elsewhere equally good, but the new-comers preferred this spot. They entered on the ground and staked it off; put up huts, and declared they would hold it against all comers. To give character to their occupation they discarded the name by which the river had been known, and called it the Boyne. Of course the half-breeds were enraged, they thought it bad enough to lose land they believed to be theirs, but in the new name they saw something worse—an insult to their religion. They seemed to think that property, race and creed were all to be trodden under foot, unless they took care of themselves. They met in their parishes on the Assiniboine and Red River, and determined to march to the settlement and drive off the intruders. Fortunately I heard of their intentions.

The hon. gentleman will probably take some interest in knowing how the Canadian authorities were acting. Those very new comers, emigrants from Ontario, were properly called by the Lieutenant Governor. "intruders," and he remarked that just in the immediate neighborhood of the farms of those poor half-breeds there were other lands equally as good, but those new comers chose to take the farms of the half-breeds. Now we will see how the governor acts towards those whom he called intruders, and how he acts towards the true owners of the property. He says:—

"I sent for some leading men amongst them, and warned them if they lifted a hand or struck a blow it was all over with them."

So that those poor half-breeds were not even allowed to save their own property. The moment it is seen that they are going to defend their rights they are told, "if you lift a hand you are lost. You are not the owners of the property and you have to submit to the spoliation of your farms by those intruders." That is what the public document says at page 114, of this same Appendix. We can easily imagine what feelings that course of spoliation may have aroused in the hearts of those poor people. We find in this document another very extraordinary fact: early in 1869, more than a year before the acquisition of the Territory, the commissioner of public works, here in Ottawa, sent Colonel Dennis to begin the surveys. He had not even the consent of the governor of the North-West, yet the government here gave orders, and what orders? These are the instructions dated the tenth July 1869 as they appear in the public documents:—

OTTAWA, July 10th, 1869.

"SIR,—Referring to the subject discussed at our interview yesterday, I now request you to proceed, without delay, to Fort Garry, Red River, for the purpose, as explained to you, of selecting the most suitable localities for the survey of townships for immediate settlement."

"You will report to this Department the plan of survey you propose to adopt (with a rough map) as soon as you shall have determined upon it; but, in the meantime, until you have received notice of its approval or modification, you will proceed with such surveying operations at Oak Point and the vicinity of Red River, as may appear to you to be necessary in any event."

This Government who proposed to acquire about 250,000,000 of acres of land in the North-West, one year before acquiring the property might have sent an officer with these instructions, "you go out there; there are 250,000,000 acres of land; look at that immense territory and see what we can do with it." But no, special instructions are given to go to Oak Point and Red River and survey those districts for immediate settlement. There is a very important fact in connection with this; it is that Oak Point and Red River were the two sections of the country already settled by the French half-breeds, and although there were 250,000,000 acres of land waiting for settlement, the instruction to the Surveyor-General was to go to the lands of those poor people and survey them for immediate settlement. I do not want to quote any further from this document, but there is a part of it which says, "and you will report immediately here to Ottawa." It may have been with the best motives in the world. I do not deny that; but when this fact is coupled with other facts which I shall shortly mention, it opens the door to the very legitimate supposition that it was intended that those lands should be surveyed immediately, the plans should be sent to Ottawa, and titles to these properties granted and registered in favor of some parties here, as those poor half-breeds had no notarial deeds and no register. What did those poor half-breeds do to save their property? It might be said it was all right, they could go west and take other property; but that land which they claimed was fertile and improved, and they had every reason to believe that they would lose it, that they were to be dispossessed. In the quotation which I give of the letter of Mr. Dennis, dated 11th October, 1869, what do we find? We find that Mr. Dennis knew that those parties were opposing the survey through their properties. He knew so well that his men were working on properties which belonged to actual settlers that he says he had taken care to give written orders to Mr. Webb not to fight against the half-breeds in case they should undertake to stop the survey. This man was very prudent, but that prudence shows that he had foreseen the difficulty, since he says, "Mr. Webb, in accordance with the written instructions, which I had given previously to him, provided for any such contingency." He knew beforehand that he was about surveying properties which belonged to occupants, yet he goes on to survey them. When you couple this fact with the other fact of the special instructions from Ottawa to go and survey those very lands claimed by the half-breeds, it seems to me it has some signification. Before the Parliamentary Committee of 1875, Mr. Bunn was heard. He was secretary of the first government of Assiniboia, and afterwards secretary to the Provisional Government of the North-West. Mr. Bunn, who was an English half-breed, says:—

It is not to my knowledge that the English Metis claim that right. They did not claim the right because there was no action by the surveyors in the neighborhood of the territory which they occupied. I have no doubt that if the surveyors had gone there some action would have been taken by the English half-breeds."

August 21st, 1869.

"With regard to the records of lands granted by the Company, he said he hardly felt justified in giving them fully over to me, but I should have felt access to them for the purpose of obtaining copies."

"I find that a considerable degree of irritation exists among the native population in view of surveys and settlements being made without the Indian title having been first extinguished.

You will no doubt, have become aware that the half-breeds lately, in a public meeting, called the Company here to account in the matter of the money paid for the transfer to Canada."

"The difficulties of the position may be much enhanced by giving the discontented parties the winter to brood over, and to concert measures in opposition to the views of the Government.

In the meantime the French half-breeds, who constitute about one-fourth or one-fifth (say 3,000 souls,) of the settlement, are likely to prove a turbulent element. This class have gone so far as to threaten violence should surveys be attempted to be made."

So that at the very beginning of September Colonel Dennis finds that the half-breeds look very troublesome. This English half-breed, Mr. Bunn, says, "I have no doubt that if the surveyors had come to survey in our neighborhood the English half-breeds would have done the same as the French half-breeds did," and it is quite natural to suppose that they would. These facts are of some importance, but I would be quite ready to recognize that they had very little meaning, that it was the result of a misunderstanding, if it had not been for something much more serious. In the inquiry of 1874 before a committee of the House of Commons, His Lordship Archbishop Taché was called, and gave under oath what he had already given either by letters or other documents. He narrates the causes of the troubles:—

I have some information with regard to the causes which gave rise to the troubles in the North-West some of them are more or less remote, and some more directly within my knowledge. Among the more remote causes, I will state the formation in former days of a party in the Province of Assiniboia which took the title of the 'Canad'ian party.' This Canadian party at first met with the sympathy of the natives of the country, because at one time all the population were desirous of being united with Canada. This party subsequently caused a certain amount of ill-feeling amongst the population from its resistance to the laws. Amongst this party were those who broke into the prisons and subsequently threatened the half-breeds with expulsion from the country. The number of this party was perhaps ten Canadians, and a few half-breeds who joined with them. The first jail breaking was on the 20th April, 1863, and the next on 21st April following. The third was in 1867 or 1868. Subsequent to these disturbances, the population began to entertain fears with regard to their union with Canada. This was some four or five years before 1869. It came on gradually. In a few words, this is what I know of the remote cause of the trouble.

This more remote cause was followed by one which was more direct, and this may be said to have commenced with the arrival of the first surveyor who came into the colony of Assiniboia. It was in the autumn of 1868. In the country at that time universal distress prevailed. A surveyor arrived, who stated he was going to carry on works in the name of the Canadian Government, and that the workmen would be paid with Canadian money. The works were commenced, but to the great surprise of the inhabitants, some action was taken by the surveyor which gave rise to considerable suspicion.

"As soon as the news was received that Hon. Mr. Macdougall, with arms and ammunition, was on his way, it is need less to say the excitement became still greater and this the more so because there was a certain number of young Canadians there who stated (falsely, it is true, but still stated) that they were already enrolled and would, on the arrival of Mr. Macdougall, take up arms and drive out the half-breeds. It was thought in the colony that all these young Canadians were cadets of the military schools, some of them even had their uniforms in their portemanteau's, and on one occasion it was reported that they were to appear at a meeting in their uniforms and commence a species of war against the half breeds.—Doc. de 1874, Appendix 6 p. 12, Dep. Archbishop Taché."

So that one year before the acquisition of the Territory, different parties of men, wearing military uniforms and giving themselves out as military men, said to those poor people "we come here to drive out the half-breeds," and Archbishop Taché says "of course it was not true that they were military men or that they came for that purpose." We will now see from the official documents if it was true or not. It is very strange that immediately after Colonel Dennis's surveyors were stopped, he notifies the Government of that fact. He admits that those men who interfered contented themselves by saying "you are on our lands, and you must not trespass." They only stepped on the surveyors' chain. They had no arms; yet Col. Dennis writes to the Government and calls those people "insurgents, delinquents, guilty parties." Of course, if those terms had been used three or four months afterwards, after the troubles had been raised, we could understand it; but immediately after the surveyors had been stopped on the very lands of those poor people, in the official documents they are styled insurgents, criminals and delinquents. I invite hon. gentlemen to find since that date, the beginning of October, in the whole official correspondence, if these people have not always been referred to as "insurgents," "rebels" and "criminals." How is it that men opposing a survey made by strangers, even against the will of their local government, opposing a survey on their own property could be termed criminals, insurgents and rebels? They were termed rebels, and treated as rebels, because soldiers were sent to drive them out of the country. When Archbishop Taché says that they boasted that they were soldiers, but he did not believe they were, I find a document in the correspondence in the Sessional papers of 1870, a letter dated the 2nd of September, 1869, from Mr. Dennis, who makes a report of his proceedings, and says:—

I find Major Boulton of great service, and have called in Mr. Hart's party, with a view to using himself and other members of his party, who are all cadets, in drilling and otherwise assisting.

I have ordered twenty fat cattle, which will be ready for use, by Monday next, and will have no difficulty in procuring other necessary supplies.

I have sent Mr. Webb, who is surveying up the Assiniboine, who is a volunteer officer, of very considerable experience, full instructions to proceed to the Portage without delay, and their to organize four companies of fifty men each, equip and provision them, and then report to me, drilling them in the meantime industriously. The other gentlemen in his party including Mr. Newcomb, are all cadets of the military schools, and I have, therefore, directed him to take them up to assist him in drilling and organizing the companies. I shall fortunately, have a military school man to command each of the companies in the whole force. The other and subordinate officers, I will let the men select from among themselves.

The companies will be thrown into one battalion, of which I shall take the immediate command, with Major Boulton as second.

It is then perfectly clear from the public documents that all the members of those two surveying parties were, without a single exception, graduates of the Military schools. We find also by the documents that each party was composed of 28 men. How can you account for this fact? Can you say that that is all due to chance and not the effect of a plot? These are the men who received orders from Hon. Mr. Macdougall. First, bear in mind the fact that several months before these young men went to the North-West: they were not laborers—they were engaged in the surveying parties, but were not laborers but military men, who said they were there to drive out the half-breeds. They say “when the country is transferred to Canada Mr. Macdougall will come in, and then we will have superior officers who will command us and who will drive out the French half-breeds,” and it turned out that after Mr. Macdougall came he happened to give orders—to whom? To one Mr. Dennis who is left in command. As I have just shown, Mr. Dennis had under him Major Boulton, and he had captains of great experience, Mr. Hart and Mr. Webb, and all those men of the two parties, without a single exception, were graduates of the military schools—those men who some few months before boasted they were military men and showed their uniforms and said they were coming to drive out the French half-breeds. Mr. Dennis says “I have men and officers to make a force of 800 men provided the English half-breeds consent to enroll. I have graduates of the military schools for every company.” He subsequently declares that he is disgusted with the English half-breeds, because they say “We will not enroll to go and fight against our brothers.” And the whole scheme fell to the ground. Who will dare to say in presence of those facts:—first, the order coming from the department, in July, saying, “Go to Point Duchene and Red River,” two half-breed settlements, “and survey and afterwards report to the Department here.” Then, immediately after, that a survey by Mr. Webb, who received directions as to what he should do in the event of the half-breeds stopping the survey; afterwards, those young men who called themselves military men and showed their uniforms, saying they had come to drive out the half-breeds, and a couple of months afterwards it happened, by an extraordinary coincidence, that they are found organized as a military force, with a colonel, major and two captains, and all graduates of the military schools! Who will dare to say, in the presence of those facts that it is merely the result of chance? Who will believe it? I cannot believe it. Perhaps it will be of some interest to read to the House the commission given by Hon. Mr. Macdougall to Colonel Dennis, which is as follows:—

“Know you that reposing trust and confidence in your courage, loyalty, fidelity, discretion and ability, and under and in virtue of the authority in me vested, I have nominated and appointed, and, by these presents, do nominate and appoint you the said John Stoughton Dennis, to be my lieutenant and a Conservator of the Peace, in and for the North-West Territories, and do hereby authorize and empower you as such to raise, organize, arm, equip and provision a sufficient force within the said Territories, and with the said force to attack, arrest, disarm or disperse the said armed men so unlawfully assembled and disturbing the public peace; and for that purpose aforesaid, to assault, fire upon, pull down or break into any fort, house, stronghold, or other place in which the said armed men may be found; and I hereby authorize you as such lieutenant and Conservator of the Peace, to hire, purchase, impress, and take all necessary clothing, arms, ammunition and supplies, and all cattle, horses waggons, sleighs, or other vehicles, which may be required for the use of the force to be raised as aforesaid; and I further authorize you to appoint as many officers and deputies under you, and to give them such instructions from time to time, as may be found necessary for the due performance of the services herein required of you, reporting to me the said appointments and orders, as you shall find opportunity, for confirmation or otherwise; and I hereby give you full power and authority to call upon all magistrates and peace officers to aid and assist you, and to order all or any of the inhabitants of the North-West Territories, in the name of Her Majesty the Queen, to support and assist you in protecting the lives and properties of Her Majesty’s loyal subjects, and in preserving the public peace, and for that purpose to seize, disperse, or overcome by force, the said armed men, and all others who may be found aiding or abetting them in their unlawful acts;

“An the said persons so called upon in Her Majesty’s name, are hereby ordered and enjoined, at their peril, to obey your orders and directions in that behalf; and this shall be sufficient warrant for what you or they do in the premises, so long as this commission remains in force.”

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—What is the date of that commission?

HON. MR. TRUDEL—It is dated 1st of December, 1869—more than eight months before the acquisition of that Territory by Canada. These are the sanguinary orders which were given by a man who had no more authority in the North-West than I had, perhaps less, because I am a member of this House, which has something to do with the North-West. These orders are significant, in the face of the fact that five or six months before those young men, already in the North-West, said, “when Mr. Macdougall comes we will receive orders from our superior officers and we will be able to drive out the French half-breeds.” Hon. gentlemen can consider all these facts, and draw their own conclusions. Now, there is another document which is not less striking. It is well known that in 1869 Archbishop Taché left the North-West, in July, I think, to go to Rome to attend the Council of the Vatican. He passed through Canada, and when in Ottawa or Montreal, he received a letter from Gov. McTavish, the only proper authority in the North-West, who tells him that everything is going wrong, and that the Canadians there put at defiance the authority of the land, and are making trouble. On receipt of this letter, Archbishop Taché thought it his duty to give a warning to the Government here. What do they do? Do they try to put a stop to the illegal actions of their officers in the North-West? No. Immediately an order is given to send 300 rifles and 30,000 cartridges to the North-West. So that hon. gentlemen can see that the whole scheme was to reduce those people by force of arms, whether right or wrong. Now what did the authorities in England and Canada think of this action? I am no doubt trespassing upon the patience of the House; there are many hon. members who know all those facts, but perhaps there are some who do not remember them, and there may be others who do not know them, and I do not think it is improper, when only one side of the case is known—when it is generally assumed that all the guilt was on one side—and it may not be without interest to look at both sides of the question. Here is a letter written by Lord Granville to the Governor-General, dated the 26th January, 1870, giving his appreciation of the actions of Mr. Macdougall and Colonel Dennis:—

“I much more seriously regret the proclamation put forth by Mr. Macdougall, and the commission issued by him to Colonel Dennis.”

“The proclamation recited that Her Majesty has transferred Rupert’s Land to Canada, which has not been done; assumes the authority of Lieutenant-Governor, which did not legally belong to him; and purported to extinguish the powers belonging to Mr. McTavish, who is in fact the only legal Governor of the territory. A subsequent commission empowered Colonel Dennis to arm those adhering to him, to attack, arrest, disarm and disperse armed men, disturbing the public peace, and to assault, fire upon and break into houses in which these armed men were to be found. If Colonel Dennis had acted on this the most disastrous consequences might have ensued. As it is, Governor McTavish must suppose his authority extinguished, none other being substituted for it, and the discovery that the statements made in the proclamation are unfounded in fact, must detract from the weight of any subsequent proclamations. Those proceedings do not render Her Majesty’s Government less desirous of the restoration of tranquility under the authority of the Dominion; but they have certainly enhanced the responsibility of the Canadian Government.”

HON. MR. PLUMB—Is that a document emanating from the Governor-General?

HON. MR. TRUDEL—It is a letter to the Governor-General to be found in the Sessional Papers; but I have also another document which is an equally good authority. It is the letter of Mr. Joseph Howe, Secretary of State at the time. It will be found in Vol. 3, No. 5 of the Sessional Papers, and it is dated 24th December, 1869. Mr. Howe wrote to Mr. Macdougall and says:—

“As it would appear from these documents that you have used the Queen’s name without her authority—attributed to Her Majesty acts which she has not yet performed—and organized an armed force within the Territory of the Hudson’s Bay Company, without warrant or instructions, I am commanded to assure you that the grave occurrences which you report have occasioned here great anxiety.

“The exertion of military force against the misguided people now in arms, even if under the sanction of law, was not to be hastily risked, considering the fearful consequences which might ensue, were the Indians, many of them but recently in contact with the white inhabitants of the neighboring States, drawn into the conflict. But as the organization and use of such a force by you was, under the circumstances, entirely illegal, the Governor-General and Council cannot disguise from you the weight of responsibility you have incurred.”

It is the Secretary of State for Canada, Mr. Joseph Howe, who tells Mr. Macdougall that all he has done in the North-West is without authority, and that he has used Her Majesty's name without even the semblance of right.

HON. MR. PLUMB—In the Hudson Bay Company's Territory, not the Indian Territory.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—Mr. Howe goes on to say :—

“Had the inhabitants of Rupert's land, on the breaking out of the disturbances, risen and put an end to them, or had Governor McTavish organized a force to occupy his Forts, and maintain his authority, all would have been well, and Riel and his people would have been responsible for any bloodshed or property destroyed. But Colonel Dennis, with no legal authority, proceeds to seize the fort, then in possession, not of the insurgents, but of the Hudson Bay's Company, and to garrison it with a mixed force of Whites and Indians, and proposes to give battle to the insurgents, should a junction be formed, with some forces which he has ordered to be drilled on the Assiniboine. He appears never to have thought that the moment war commenced all the white inhabitants would be at the mercy of the Indians, by whom they are largely outnumbered, and divided as they would be, might be easily overpowered.

“It is impossible to read the Colonel's account of his attempt to persuade Judge Black to aid him in proclaiming martial law, without strong feelings of regret that you should have been represented in the settlements by a person with so little discretion. It is no wonder that Judge Black was ‘frightened’ at the proposal, as he must have known that Colonel Denis would have to answer at the Bar of Justice for every life lost by such an assumption of authority, and that the illegal seizure of an American citizen would at once provoke interference in the quarrel, and lead to very serious complications.”

I have already stated, and I repeat,—that if I quote all this it is not with the intention of accusing anybody. I am only showing that those acts were illegal ; that in presence of such illegal acts and such an argument, with the avowed purpose of driving those people from their homes, it is not surprising that they should feel some fear and take means to protect themselves. I now come to another point which is probably the most important of all. The people of the North-West found themselves in this extraordinary position ; just in the middle of those difficulties, as they were called by the Governor-General and the Secretary of State, the only legitimate authority in the land, Governor McTavish and the Government of Assiniboia, came to an end. As the Governor-General says, this illegal proclamation of Mr. Macdougall's would certainly have the effect of destroying the only legitimate authority in the country, and it happened as predicted. Mr. McTavish, believing that his authority was at an end, declined to use it, and I call special attention to this fact, that the country was left without any authority at all. The Government of Assiniboia had disbanded, and Governor McTavish declines to act, and it is on the suggestion of Governor McTavish himself that the Provisional Government was created. I allude to those facts to show that the position which I have taken, that the French element in this community has taken, is not after all so disreputable as many persons seem to believe ; that the public documents show the matter in such a light that we cannot be condemned for having no little sympathy with those people who were treated as I have shown. This may have been the effect of a misunderstanding altogether. I accuse nobody ; but I say these are facts ; and in the face of those facts whatever may have been the cause, misunderstanding, prejudice or any other cause, I ask, were not the people justified in doing something to protect themselves ? I will call the attention of the House to the fact that the North-West was without any Government at all. The only legitimate authority had reason to believe that its jurisdiction was destroyed by Governor Macdougall's proclamation, which declared that they had no authority, and Governor McTavish advised the people themselves to form a Government. Were the people of the North-West entitled to form a Government ? I submit that under the law of nations and in common sense they had such a right, as I will show by high authorities. I think the legal gentlemen of the House will admit that the greatest authorities on natural law and the law of nations are Grotius and Taparelli. I have here only the French version of the one which I consider the greatest. He says :

“The legitimacy of a government exists also when a nation, abandoned by its legiti-mate leaders, gives even to a usurper an authority of which the nation has become legitimately the depositor. The Government de facto also have the right to command in the civil order in virtue of social necessity and by the effect of the material preponderance. We see by that that legitimate authority differs very much from violence, one having the right to obedience when it commands for the public good; the other has no such right. The Government de facto possesses also though unjustly."

HON. MR. TRUDEL.

The author goes so far as to consider even the case of a usurper, and he says, the moment there is a regular organization and the authority has been obtained in an illegal way, but sanctioned by the consent of the people, the rule of a usurper even becomes legitimate by that very fact. It will be admitted by everybody that authority is as essential to a nation as food to a man; a community cannot live without government. It would be probably useless to mention all that, but I think there is no harm in reminding the House of those authorities. I will now quote what Lord Granville wrote on the 26th January, 1870, in the name of the Imperial Government:—

"The proclamation recited that Her Majesty has transferred Rupert's Land to Canada, which has not been done; assumes the authority of Lieutenant-Governor, which did not legally belong to him, and purported to extinguish the powers belonging to Mr. McTavish, who is in fact the only legal Governor of the territory."

We see Lord Granville, in his letter to the Canadian Government, made exactly the same remark as the Governor-General and the Secretary of State made to Mr. Macdougall, so that the authority of Mr. McTavish was the only legitimate authority. There is a witness now who was one of the first members of the North-West. His name is Mr. Pagé. I had decided not to quote any French depositions, but these are so well substantiated by the evidence of English witnesses that I suppose there is no harm in reading his statement. He was asked

"Q. Did you form one of the convention of 1870?"

"A. Yes; and I represented the Electoral Division of St. Francois Xavier east."

"Q. Were you delegated to interview Governor McTavish and for what purpose?"

"A. Before constituting a provisional Government and electing a president, the English members fearing to compromise themselves proposed to consult Governor McTavish himself. The idea was well received by all and they confided this mission to four of us, Messrs. John Sutherland, John Frazer, A. Lepine and myself. We proceeded immediately to the residence of the Governor and after having exchanged greetings, Mr. Sutherland explained the object of our visit. He at once asked if the Government of Assiniboia still existed. To this question Mr. McTavish replied in the negative; and "What are your powers?" added Mr. Sutherland. "Don't trouble yourself any more about these," replied Mr. McTavish; "I am as a dead man; work in the interests of peace." Finally Mr. Sutherland asked him if it would not be advisable to organize a Provisional Government, and Mr. McTavish replied "Not only is it opportune, but for goodness sake do it, for without it we will never have peace in the country."

These declarations were so explicit that when the convention was informed of them they adopted our report on which the Provisional Government was established and Louis Riel elected as President.

This is from the report of La Miner in 1874. I will show in a moment that there had been a regular legal election according to lists which were made, as I understand, for the election of members to the Assiniboia Government, and the elections were presided over by the two highest English authorities, Archbishop McLean and Justice Black. Forty members were returned, twenty English and twenty French, and it is this convention of forty members, regularly elected, who sent a deputation to Mr. McTavish to ask him whether he had still some authority. It was to the four delegates of this convention that Mr. McTavish said: "For God's sake form a Government!" It was on the report of those four delegates that the forty members elected the officers. Now did they only elect Louis Riel president? No, they elected, if I remember right, seven members of a provisional government; Mr. Louis Riel, President; Mr. Ross, Chief Justice, or Minister of Justice; Mr. Bruce, Commissioner of Public Works; Mr. Bannatyne, Postmaster General; Mr. Thomas Bunn, Secretary of State, and Mr. Lepine, Adjutant General, commander of the military forces. This is the act of the forty delegates to whom I have alluded. I have quoted Mr. Page's evidence; I now come to the evidence of Mr. Sutherland, one of our colleagues here, who, I regret to see, is not present this evening. He is asked by the present Secretary of State for Canada, Mr. Chapleau, who was the advocate of Lepine,

"Q. Were you one of the delegates to the convention of January, 1870?

"A. Yes, I was.

"Q. Were you one of the deputation sent to Mr. McTavish?

"A. Yes, with Mr. William Fraser and others.

"Q. What was the object of the deputation?

"A. We desired to know if Mr. McTavish considered himself still as Governor, and if he intended to exercise his powers in that capacity. The English members of the convention or assembly were anxious to be enlightened on this point before recognizing Riel as President. The object was to ascertain whether the Hudson Bay Company had abandoned the government of the North-West. The question was put directly by me or by Mr. Fraser to Governor McTavish, who answered, 'Form a government for God's sake, because I have no power to order anything.'

It has been stated that the Hudson Bay Company's stores were pillaged by the half-breeds, I have here a letter written, immediately after Riel was elected President, by Mr. McTavish himself, who at that time considered himself as having no longer power as Governor of the North-West Territories; but he was still the highest official of the Hudson Bay Company in that country. He wrote himself to the President offering him money, and loaned him $12,000 to carry on the business of the company. There is something very striking in connection with this. Riel did not answer at first, and Mr. McTavish was afraid that because Riel was President and McTavish had taken upon himself to write to Riel to come and see him, that he had been guilty of a breach of etiquette and that it was his duty to go to Riel, he being the Governor of the country. He therefore wrote to the Archbishop to know whether Riel was offended by this apparent want of courtesy towards him, and I have here his letter dated the 18th March, 1870, which I will read:—

MY LORD,—I have not seen President Riel yet, and am anxious to know whether he is keeping off till I write him, or is just waiting till he has time to see me. Should I write to him and beg him to come and see me, as I have long made up my mind, on the point he and I last spoke. I know I have before given him offense by asking him to come to me, and I don't want to do that. At the same time no feeling of ill-timed vanity has interfered with my asking him now. A mere hint for me to open communication with him or not will suffice. But I would prefer agreeing to the loan personally, as thought in the first instance, and I would like at the same time to speak to him about his communications for Fort Ellice and other posts. I am afraid you will have difficulty in reading this scrawl.

Hoping you will excuse my troubling you to-day, and all days, believe me, with very sincere feelings of gratitude,

Yours very gratefully, (S'g'd.) W. MCTAVISH.

The Right Reverend,
The Lord Bishop of St. Boniface,
St. Boniface."

In this volume of 1875, from which I have been quoting, the whole correspondence of the Governor-General with the Imperial authorities will be found. There is a despatch from Lord Dufferin dated the 10th December 1875, in which the Governor makes the following reference to the facts to which I have already alluded:—

"On the other hand we ought to observe that when the proposition to constitute a provisional Government was placed before the Convention a certain number of the English representatives refused to take part in the deliberations without being satisfied whether Governor McTavish represented legal authority in the territory 'considering that he was yet vested with authority.' The deputation was then named etc.

In response to the demand of the deputation Governor McTavish "declared that he had seen the proclamation of Mr. Macdougall; that it had put an end to his jurisdiction, that he was as a dead man, and that it would be better for them to constitute a Government capable of maintaining the peace in the country."

So that not only were those facts given under oath by the witnesses Pagé and Sutherland, from whose evidence I have quoted, but the Governor-General himself writes to the Secretary of the Colonies that in answer to the demands of the deputation Governor McTavish declared that he had seen a proclamation of Mr. Macdougall which had put an end to his jurisdiction, and that he was a "dead man," and that it would be better to constitute a government capable of maintaining peace in the country. Now what was the character of this national convention. His Excellency says:—

"I believe it is but fair to the persons who share that opinion to state to your lordship the fact that the convention by which was established the Provisional Government which made Riel its chief, was composed of French and English delegates duly elected by the people, that highly respectable persons formed part of it and took part in its deliberations. That Donald Smith, the Canadian Commissioner who had received instructions to put himself at the head of the Government in the North-West in the name of the Hudson Bay Company, in case of sickness preventing Governor McTavish from exercising his functions, appeared before the Commission to explain the views of the Canadian Government, and that the delegates chosen by the Convention were duly recognized as authorized to treat with the Federal Executive in the name of the population of the people of the North-West."

So that His Excellency recognized that this convention was duly elected by the people and composed of respectable men, and, as I have shown by the very strongest evidence, after the Provisional Government was established Governor McTavish, the only man who had any right to claim greater authority than they exercised, offered to lend money to the popular government.

I will now refer to the evidence of Mr. Bannatyne in the suit against Lépine. He is asked:—

"Q. You are aware, no doubt, that there existed a council of Assiniboia?"

"A. Yes; for I was one of the members.

"Q. Were you not also one of the delegates and a member of the Provisional Government?"

"A. I was one of the convention of forty in my capacity as delegate for the Electoral divisions of St. John and Winnipeg, and the tenth of February 1870 I was named Postmaster-General under the Provisional Government.

"Q. Are you not a relation of Governor McTavish?"

"A. Yes, his brother-in-law."

After having explained that the English and French populations received with discontent the news of the transfer of the territory to the Canadian Government. He continues—

"A meeting of delegates from the different parishes was held to discuss the situation, Colonel Dennis went through the parishes to persuade the people to give a good reception to Mr. McDougall. After having done so Colonel Dennis made a report to the Council of Assiniboia that it was not possible to induce the old settlers to favor the coming of Mr. Macdougall. That report was received by the Council. The assembly of the sixteenth November 1869, took place after that which I am about to explain, and adopted a series of articles known under the name of Bill of rights. This was a protest in the name of the majority of the people. On their side Colonel Dennis, Dr. Schultz and a number of other strangers in the country, or had only been there a short time, organized a counter movement. At the beginning of the agitation the latter party was peaceable, but it became before long more menacing. They armed themselves and attempted to attack the position of lower Fort Garry where they raised a troop of Indians; finally the party in question met at Winnipeg at the residence of Dr. Schultz under the pretext of protecting property which was not at that time at all menaced. This movement had never been authorized or approved of by Governor McTavish nor by the Council of Assiniboia

On the 7th December Col. Dennis issued a proclamation soliciting all loyal subjects of Her Majesty to aid Mr. Macdougall by all possible means to burn the houses of those who should be hostile to his entrance and to take up arms against the rebels. In the evening of the same day the house of Dr. Schultz was surrounded by Riel's followers, and those who were found to enter there were taken. As soon as the proclamation of Governor Macdougall had been published Mr. McTavish and the Council of Assiniboia considered themselves as deprived of all authority in the North-West.

Q. Who then possessed the power?

A. The Provisional Government only in my opinion exercised authority. On the 19th January, 1870, a mass meeting was called by the Commissioners of the Canadian Government. It was resolved to form a National Convention composed of twenty English delegates and twenty French delegates. Donald Smith, the Canadian delegate, took a seat in the Convention. After the elections throughout the country, the delegates met at Winnipeg on the 25th January and sat several days—Judge Black acted in the capacity of President of that Assembly at first before Louis Riel was elected as his successor. In the interval which occurred between the 19th and 23rd February, 1870, new general elections were held, and the reports were transmitted to the President, Louis Riel.

The witness produced the report of his election which is as follows:—

ST. JOHN'S PARISH, }
R.R.S., FEBY. 23, '70. }

LOUIS RIEL,

President Provisional Government,

SIR,—I have the honor to inform you that a public meeting of the inhabitants of St. John's Parish and the Town of Winnipeg was held to-day, in St. John's School, having Archdeacon McLean in the chair.

After hearing M. James Ross, the delegate from St. John's Parish, in reference to the proceedings of the recent Anglo-French convention, the meeting accorded their thanks for his labours, approved his course, agreed to send a member to serve at the Council Board of the new Provisional Government.

M. James Ross and Colin Inkster having declined election, M. J. J. B. Bannatyne, of the town of Winnipeg, was chosen representative of the joint constituency by the unanimous vote.

I am, sir,
Yours respectfully,
A. COLDWELL,
Secretary of the meeting.

Q. Who presided at the meeting of electors at which you were elected?

A. The Rev. Mr. Lean, present Bishop of Saskatchewan and Mr. Coldwell was the secretary.

Q. Were there regular lists of voters in the parishes?

A. Yes, and votes were recorded throughout wherever there was more than one candidate.

Q. Who governed the country at this period?

A. The government of which Riel was president and the Chamber of Representatives elected by the people. We passed laws on all matters of public interest. For example I can show you at this moment two Bills adopted on the 9th March, one concerning the administration of justice and the other intitled "Rules for the management of idiots." It would be easy for me to produce several. These laws were put in operation.

Q. You have insinuated that during the troubles you recognized no other authority than that of the Provisional Government. Is it not true, though that Governor McTavish still represented the legal power in the country.

The authority which Mr. McTavish possessed had been paralyzed by the proclamation of Mr. Macdougall. We were without any law and we believed it to be our duty to constitute a Government which would fill pro tem. this gap created as I have already stated by the proclamation of Mr. Macdougall. The entire people supported the Provisional organization and His Honor Judge Black himself took part in the deliberation of the convention of the 25th January in the capacity of a delegate.

There are many people who are under the impression that all the troubles in the North-West were originated by what I call the legitimate action of those people of the North-West; yet there are facts stated here, under oath, before the Committee of 1874, which seem to show the state of the North-West, not only before 1869, but before Riel went back to the North-West, as being far from undisturbed; and, strange to say, it is those people who called themselves loyal who were all the time at the bottom of the troubles. His Lordship Archbishop Tache is asked as a witness under oath to state the causes which gave rise to the troubles in the North-West and he says:—

"Among the more remote causes I will state the formation, in former days, of a party in the Province of Assiniboia which took the title of the Canadian party. This Canadian party at first met with the sympathy of the natives of the country, because at one time all the population were desirous of being united with Canada. This party subsequently caused a certain amount of ill feeling amongst the population from its resistance to the laws. Amongst this party were those who broke into the prisons and subsequently threatened the half-breeds with expulsion from the country. The number of this party was perhaps ten Canadians and a few half-breeds who joined with them. The first jail breaking was on the 29th April, 1863 &c.

That first jail breaking was by those "loyal" men of the North-West, and it is proved by sworn documents that at that time, 1863, Riel was at college in Montreal, so that he cannot be accused of being the cause of the commencement of the trouble. Those loyalists went on with a further display of their loyalty, and the next jail breaking was on the 21st of April following. The third was in 1867 or 1868, and Archbishop Taché says that "subsequent to these disturbances the population entertained fears with regard to their union with Canada."

As I stated before, in July or August Archbishop Taché was passing through Canada on his way from the North-West to the Vatican, and Governor McTavish wrote to him this letter, which is found in the appendix of the sessional papers of 1874:

"I have had a more than ordinarily busy summer, with rather above the average of contretemps in the way of business. Besides this, you no doubt have heard that there has been, and is still, a good deal of agitation here. Unfortunately every Canadian official, as he comes in, falls into Dr. Schultz's hands and evidently continues in good accord with him. Our friends, the Canadian half-breeds, shrewdly suspect that no good can come to them from such an alliance, and are in consequence rapidly becoming more decidedly opposed to Canada. If the Hon. William Macdougall, when he comes here, shows the same leaning, there will be trouble here; and in any case, in the interests of your people, I will take the liberty to say that I think it would be of the utmost importance to them, as well as to all concerned, that you should be here when the new order of things is instituted."

"But some days ago his party went out with their horses, which were poor, and it is said, to employ their time, commenced marking out claims for themselves, on which the half-breeds ordered them off, and they came in post haste."

Hon. gentlemen will see that at the very beginning, before the stopping of the surveys, according to the only legitimate authority of the country, Mr. McTavish himself, he was complaining of those Canadians who were there without authority and who were causing trouble in the country. On receipt of that letter, Archbishop Taché himself says that after coming to Ottawa he gave a copy of that letter to a friend, with a view to sending it to Sir George Cartier at Ottawa. He says :

"I gave it to him and he copied it, and two days afterwards told me he had received a reply from Sir George, and that the reply was "We know all about it and we have made provision respecting matters," and the next day the Ottawa papers announced that a certain number of rifles and a certain quantity of ammunition would be sent to Fort Garry with Mr. Macdougall."

This is how the half-breeds were treated. They were ill-treated in the North-West, and the Government here was sending out ammunition and rifles to those who were oppressing them. I have shown that there were elements of disorder even before Riel was in the country; that people were setting at defiance the legitimate authority of the Government of the country. Hon. gentlemen will find at great length a description in the public documents of such facts as these: Some of the friends of those Canadians had been guilty of crime, they were committed for trial and sent to jail. Those Canadians broke in the door of the jail and rescued their friends, and this is corroborated by the evidence of Archbishop Taché and half a dozen English Protestant witnesses. Archbishop Taché says that after a certain time the authority of the Government of the country was so much ridiculed and set at defiance that they would not order any more of those men to be sent to jail, because the moment they were put in jail their friends broke in the jail doors and took them out. It is said to be a great crime that Riel and his friends, two Frenchmen and five Englishmen, constituted a provisional government where no other government existed; but what did the loyalists do? It is certainly an interesting piece of history. One day they decided to form a republic, and this is how Mr. W. R. Bown describes it.

HON. MR. PLUMB—What year was this?

HON. MR. TRUDEL—It was in 1868.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I thought you had got up to 1874.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I am going to quote from the evidence of W. R. Bown, taken before the commission, (P. 114, Doc's of 1874, Appendix 6) and Mr. Bown, as shown by his deposition, was far from being friendly to the half-breeds:

"Previous to any talk of the transfer there was dissatisfaction on the part of the English settlers and the newcomers from Canada, with the arbitrary rule of the Hudson's Bay Company. I remember there was a little Republic established at the Portage some years before. There were some twenty or thirty people there. They felt that their lives and properties were not properly protected.

HON. MR. SCOTT—We are not likely to get through this debate to-night because there are other gentlemen who are desirous of speaking on it and I would suggest to the hon. gentleman to move the adjournment of the debate.

HON. MR. TRUDEL moved the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned at 11 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, May 27th, 1886.

The Speaker took the chair at three o'clock.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills, reported from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbors without amendment, were read the third time and passed:—

Bill (119) "An Act to amend the Act relating to the Winnipeg & Hudson Bay Railway & Steamship Company." (Mr. Girard.)

Bill (79) "An Act respecting the Napanee, Tamworth & Quebec Railway." (Mr. Read.)

GOVERNMENT SAVINGS BANKS IN THE LOWER PROVINCES.

MOTION POSTPONED.

HON. MR. POWER rose to Call attention to the exceedingly large sums deposited in the Government Savings Banks in the Lower Provinces, and ask the Government what steps, if any, they propose to take in order to prevent the injurious effects of the existing system upon the business community generally, and the chartered Banks in particular, in the said Provinces, and the injustice of taxing the whole population, chiefly for the benefit of the depositors of comparatively large sums in the said Savings Banks.

He said:—My attention has been called to the fact that the notice which I gave is one as to which, perhaps, a question of order might be raised, as it embodies matter which might be the subject of argument. For that reason I propose not to proceed with it to-day, but to amend it and make the inquiry to-morrow.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I am very glad that the hon. gentleman has discovered that his motion is out of order.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to rise to a question of privilege—a question which affects my personal character. I fear that I shall not be within the judgment of many of my friends in this House in what I am about to say because I shall take notice of a matter which the larger portion of them have assured me is utterly unworthy of my attention; but every man has his own honor and character in his own keeping, as every woman has her own virtue, and in such cases must judge and decide for himself. A few days ago a member of this House, who is by courtesy called honorable, addressed to me personally in a grossly offensive manner a question which, under the rules of the House, was wholly out of order, and before he had time to complete his question he was called to order by others, not by myself. I wish to say that the hon. gentleman's remarks, as they appear in the official report, are not what I understood them to be at the time. When I came to look at the official report several days afterwards I found that it contained an imputation on my personal honor and character by insinuation and inuendo. The hon. gentleman stated after a preamble in regard to the purity of those who were members of this House, and particularly those who were entrusted with confidence by the Government, that he wished to put a simple question before the House and Parliament and the country—he wished to put a question to the hon. gentleman from Niagara, and he continued, "I call upon him now, with regard to certain rumors which have been existing for many years respecting him, affecting his honor—I call upon him now to put us in a position to deny those rumors." Very anxious the hon. gentleman was (of course in the generosity of his amiable heart) to deny those rumors. He continued:—"Those rumors were to the effect that he left Albany."—he was then called to order. Owing to absence for a few days, and a pressure of work since that time—for it was only at the moment when I was leaving Ottawa last Friday night, that I found the report as it now appears in the Debates—I have not had an earlier opportunity of calling the attention of the House to the remarks of the hon. member, which contains malevolent insinuations, as I said before, against my personal honor and integrity. The hon. gentleman was out of order, and he probably knew that he was, for he makes a boast of constantly violating the rules of order in this House, and when he is put down he acknowledges and exults in the fact that he has done so. I did not myself wish to interrupt the hon. gentleman, nor was he interrupted at my instance, nor did I seek to shield myself behind the rules of the House. He was not stopped at my instigation, and I now propose to show that I did not intend to shield myself behind the rules of the House. The hon. gentleman, as I learn has not hesitated to state elsewhere in public, at street corners to whoever would listen to the foul slander, the accusations which he intended to insinuate in his question—accusations which, if true, would render me unworthy the association of the members of this hon. body with whom I am proud to be in friendly intercourse and whose esteem and confidence I highly prize, and it would render me an improper person to hold a seat among them. I assure this hon. House that there is not a shadow of foundation for the infamously malicious charges insinuated by the hon. gentleman, and I now challenge him to ask his question, I beg that he may be permitted to do so, and when he does I shall request the House to grant me a committee to be selected by the representative of the Government in this House and by the hon. leader of the Opposition in this House, and I shall seek at their hands the most searching investigation into whatever the hon. gentleman may formulate.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I assume that the hon. gentleman from Niagara refers to myself as an humble member of this House.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I do refer to you.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I have only to say that having heard for many years rumours affecting the honour and character of the hon. member—

HON. MR. PLUMB—I call the hon. gentleman to order. I asked him to formulate his question but I do not think he has a right to make any preliminary statements. I know that he can only put his question with the permission of the House. I am desirous that he should do so, but I do not desire to hear a preliminary speech from him on the subject.

THE SPEAKER—I think the hon. gentleman ought to be allowed to make any preliminary remarks which he may consider necessary.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I rose respectfully to put a question to the hon. gentleman from Niagara. I asked him respectfully, being desirous to maintain the honour of this House, whether he would authorize us to deny those rumours. As usual I was called to order when I asked him to authorize me to contradict those rumours.

HON. MR. PLUMB—My honor is not in your keeping.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I was called to order by the hon. gentleman from Sackville, who always interrupts me. I cannot rise here in the interests of the people and in defence of the honor of the House, without being called to order; but there is nothing that he can say, or that any other office-seeker can say, that will prevent me raising my voice while I occupy a place in this House, to save it from being dragged through the mire, as it has been for the last three or four years.

HON. MEMBERS—Is that all?

THE SPEAKER—I hope this matter will not proceed any further. I think the hon. member from Niagara has put himself in a position that every member must approve of; he has now placed it in the power of the hon. member from Woodstock to formulate his charges or to leave himself in the unenviable position which he occupies.

FISHING BY FOREIGN VESSELS BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. ALLAN moved the second reading of Bill (136) "An Act further to amend the Act respecting fishing by foreign vessels." He said: The amendments are in the direction which the experience of the past few years has shown to be highly necessary for the preservation of our sea coast fisheries and are such as will I am sure commend themselves to hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House. Hon. members are of course aware that the convention of 1818 between Great Britain and the United States of America is the basis of all our legislation for the protection of our sea coast fisheries. By it the United States forever renounced the right to take dry or cure fish on or within three miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks or harbors of His Majesty's dominions in America, with the exception of certain parts of Labrador, Newfoundland and the Magdalen Islands, where they were permitted to fish and land for the purpose of curing and drying fish. With these special exceptions, however, they also renounced the right forever to enter any one of our bays or harbors except for four purposes—for shelter, repairing damages, buying wood or obtaining water, and these privileges were only to be exercised subject to such restriction as might be necessary to prevent the abuse of any one of them. On the basis of the articles of this convention the Imperial Act 59, of George III., cap. 38, was framed, and Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island also enacted laws in reference to the fisheries on their own coasts framed upon the Imperial Act and enforced them previous to Confederation. After Confederation, Canada in 1868, passed an Act based also on the Imperial Statute and containing all the essential points in the Acts of the other provinces. The various phases which the fisheries questions subsequently passed through during the continuance of the Reciprocity Treaty and subsequently also under the treaty of Washington, are well known to all hon. gentlemen, and I need not detain the House any further by alluding to them now. The point that we are now more immediately concerned with is this—that the termination of the Treaty of Washington has relegated the question of the fisheries to the position in which it originally stood under the convention of 1818, the Imperial Act based upon the articles of the Convention and our own statute laws framed upon the provisions of the Imperial Act. Now by the Dominion statute which I have before me any vessel found fishing, having fished or preparing to fish within the three-mile limit is liable to forfeiture, but for violating the other provisions of the treaty of 1818, that is frequenting our harbors except for the four purposes mentioned, there is no penalty provided except what the court may adjudge against the master of the vessel as guilty of a misdemeanour in violating our laws. Hon. gentlemen will see that even if a vessel is found entering our harbour and buying bait for the undoubted purpose of fishing, unless it could be proved that the intention was to fish, or in the words of the statute “preparing to fish” within the three-mile limit—which of course it would be sometimes very difficult to establish—it would be impossible to secure the infraction of any sufficient penalty for what might be a deliberate and intentional violation of the fishery laws. Now this Bill proposes to cure that defect in this way. It sets forth that the section substituted by the first section of the Act 33rd Vic., chap. 15, for the third section of the Act of 1868 is by this Bill repealed, and the following (section 3) is substituted in lieu thereof. The new section is word for word the same as the section which it repeals down to within the two last lines of the clause. I will read it to where the alteration begins.

It is as follows:—

“3. Any one of the officers or persons hereinbefore mentioned may bring any ship, vessel or boat, being within any harbor in Canada, or hovering in British waters within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks or harbors in Canada, into port, and search her cargo, and may also examine the master upon oath touching the cargo and voyage; and if the master or person in command does not truly answer the questions put to him in such examination, he shall incur a penalty of four hundred dollars; and if such ship, vessel or boat is foreign, or not navigated according to the laws of the United Kingdom or of Canada, and (a) has been found fishing or preparing to fish, or to have been fishing in British waters within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of Canada, not included within the above mentioned limits, without a license, or after the expiration of the term named in the last license granted to such ship, vessel or boat, under the first section of this Act.

Then comes in the amendment:

“or (b) has entered such waters for any purpose not permitted by the law of nations, or contrary to treaty or convention, or to any law of the United Kingdom or of Canada for the time being in force.”

I may say that I propose to strike out the words “by the law of nations, or contrary,” and it will read “has entered such waters for any purpose not permitted by treaty or convention, or by any law of the United Kingdom or of Canada for the time being in force,” then follow the same words as in the old clause, “such ship, vessel or boat and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores and cargo thereof shall be forfeited.” Now, hon. gentlemen will see that the effect of this amendment will be this: If an American vessel comes into one of our harbors, bays or creeks, and purchases bait, it will, under this enactment, be liable to forfeiture in the same way as if the vessel was found fishing or preparing to fish within the three mile limit. It removes the difficulty of having to prove that a vessel buying bait is "preparing to fish" within the three mile limit, and prevents vessels entering our harbors except for the four purposes mentioned in the treaty of 1818. Of course hon. gentlemen know that this is a very large and interesting subject on which it would be easy to enlarge more than I propose to do, but I think the House will agree with me that it is also under existing circumstances an exceedingly delicate one, and that we should do well to follow the example of the other House when this Bill was before them, and avoid any unnecessary discussion upon it which might possibly give rise to any misapprehensions or add to the feeling of irritation already existing elsewhere upon this important question. I think I have fully explained the object of the Bill, and how, by this enactment, it will entirely meet the cases which it is desired to reach, and I shall content myself now with moving the second reading of the Bill.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I regret exceedingly that the state of affairs between the United States and Great Britain renders it necessary to pass an Act of this kind. The question has been pretty thoroughly explained by the hon. gentleman who introduced this Bill, with one exception, and that is the addition to the clause of 1870. At that time Prince Edward Island was not a part of the Dominion, yet I see that the Act under which the fisheries of that Island were governed is now repealed. The difficulty that this clause provides for, amongst others, is the ordinary one with regard to merchant vessels—that no vessel can lie twenty-four hours in the harbor of the Dominion without reporting to the Customs authorities. The difficulty of interpretation that remains between the United States and Great Britain is with regard to the treaty of 1818. Whilst England holds that the interpretation of that treaty with regard to the three mile limit is a line drawn from headland to headland, the United States contend that it is only from the coast itself. It makes a great difference which interpretation is correct. Take, for instance, the Bay of Chaleur. The three mile limit, according to the British interpretation, would be from headland to headland leaving that large bay, which is quite a haunt for fishermen during the season, entirely and exclusively to Canada. Under the American interpretation the line would be drawn along the coast only, and fishing vessels would have a right to enter the bay for a considerable distance. The great source of irritation at the present time is the question of bait. The time was when the American fishermen had abundance of bait which they now find it difficult to obtain on their own shores. There was as great an abundance of bait on their coast some years ago, as there is now on ours, but over-fishing and fishing out of season, which ought to be forbidden, completely destroyed the inshore fisheries of that country so that they had to resort to our shores to procure bait. This question of improper fishing has occupied the attention of the Legislatures of Massachusetts and Maine for many years, but those who are in favor of preserving the fisheries were opposed by those who thought that fisheries were only to be used and abused so far as their own individual idea of what was right was concerned. But it was soon found that the use of bag nets, seines, traps and pound nets had completely destroyed the shore fisheries along the American coast. But those who favored that mode of destruction, also entertained the view that there was an abundance of fish to be found along the coast of the Maritime Provinces which could be always had for the buying. This question of bait was a serious one, and exhaustive reports were made upon it by Professor Speedwell, and the question also formed one of the most intricate subjects which the Fisheries Commission had to deal with. The United States Government have been of late years restocking their waters with fish taken from our waters, and they thought that they would be able in that way to provide sufficient bait for their own fishermen. It appears, however, that they have not been successful, and the question of bait and the ice to preserve the bait, to-day forms one of the most important questions which they have to consider in connection with their fisheries. Immense quantities of this bait, which is herring, are to be found at certain seasons of the year along the coast of Nova Scotia and the Magdalen Islands. As an article of trade it is of very little importance, for the spring herring put up in the Maritime Provinces very seldom pay for the barrels and salt. But as an article of bait for the deep sea fishing which is pursued very largely by fishermen from Maine and Massachusetts it is one of the most important elements in that industry. While American fishermen could come freely to our shores and procure supplies of bait and ice for their fishing vessels, it did not become a very important question with them; and when overtures were made about the renewal of the treaty, and to discuss this question on its merits, the matter of bait was repudiated and was said to form no element in the question as the inshore fisheries of Canada were of no great importance. One thing has always struck me with regard to this subject of bait and it is this: that unless we permitted the same sort of exhaustive fishing, machine fishing as we might term it, as the people of the United States did, there would be no question of bait. It is true that the Government of Canada have taken the power to license, and to forbid, as the case may be, the catching of fish by traps, bag nets, seines and other destructive means which have proved so disastrous with the American inshore fisheries. While they have the power to do that, the difficulty that has arisen about bait has suggested to me that if the Government would forbid the use of all traps, seines, bag nets &c. in catching that kind of bait, this question would soon settle itself. Unless the large fishing vessels can come in and get their bait fresh by this "machine fishing" it will be impossible for them to get it by the ordinary means; and while spring herring is of no commercial value to us as an article of commerce (for beyond the few sent to the English and French Indies, we have no market for them) it is true we have recently built up another branch of the inshore fisheries, the lobster fisheries which creates a demand for this kind of bait. It is not necessary however, for the lobster fisheries that this bait should be fresh. It may be salted and packed away, and is as good a couple of years after as when it is fresh; but for deep sea cod fishing it is absolutely necessary to have fresh bait, and without bait no successful fishing can be done. It is easily seen then the value of this kind of bait. For instance if the required supply of codfish for the United States should be 100,000 quintels, and for want of bait the American catch is decreased to 50,000 quintels, it must necessarily create a demand for Canadian fish and raise the price of what we have to sell. Such is the position of this question as it appears to me; and my only regret is that circumstances are such that we are called upon to adopt what may be properly called retaliatory measures. During my short experience as a public man we have been called upon before to take the best means to preserve our inshore fisheries. In 1868-69 when the Government of Canada thought proper to seize foreign vessels within the three mile limit, the Government of Prince Edward Island did not do so. She pursued a different course; threw open her ports for the time being. One thing is agreed upon by all persons who have looked into this question; it is that from the formation of the coasts and bays of the Maritime Provinces and the New England States, American fishermen must have access to our waters to carry on their fisheries successfully. Whether it will be given to them or not is a question which will hereafter be settled. So far as the Act which this Bill is repealing is concerned we were willing that they should have access to our waters on payment of a small license of fifty cents a ton. While we own those bait fisheries, and while they are of value to us, we are not so strict with our neighbors and friends as to say "We will not prevent you from coming in if you pay a small tonnage fee for the privilege." That arrangement went on for a time, and after that came the commission at Halifax. It has been stated in Congress and in the press of the United States, that our construction of the treaty is an improper one, and their construction is a proper one. It is not too much to assume, however, that the framers of those treaties certainly were as capable of judging, as regards the right and wrong of them, as the editors of the press of the United States who now find fault with them. The Government of the United States finding an antagonistic feeling in both branches of Congress have necessarily referred this matter to the Secretary of State and through the Secretary of State to the British Minister at Washington, who has transmitted it to the Imperial Government and the question is likely to be discussed and settled on its merits. It is only left for Canada to exercise her privileges and protect her rights and I do hope in the exercise of those rights and privileges that men of cool, calm courage and experience will be placed in command of those schooners and steamers which are now to guard our coasts as Marine Police. The powers given by this Bill are very great. I have had some experience as an onlooker at the time marine police patrolled our coasts. Wherever there was a prudent and wise commander there was very little difficulty; so I take it in this case that wisdom should be the governing principle; that no men but men of coolness and prudence should be selected as captains of these marine patrol vessels. If that is the case, in a short time the fishermen will soon come down to the fact that we cannot do otherwise than protect our own property and preserve it from encroachment; and that we do not want to interfere with them in any other way. I hope the matter will, in the course of time, be referred to a commission before which all those questions will be discussed on their own merits, and will be decided by gentlemen who are capable of coming to a just decision as to the merits and demerits of the treaty of 1818.

HON. MR. SCOTT—This Bill proposes to make changes in the law as it exists. The proposed changes are to enable the Government of this country to enforce the provisions of the treaty of 1818. Here I may say that on all disputed points in that question, where different views may be taken by different nations as to the true interpretation of the treaty, it is highly important that the public men of this country, and I would like to say the public men of the United States, should not prejudice the case, but leave it entirely to the commissioners, who must ultimately be appointed, to decide the interpretation of that treaty, or to make such new treaties between the two countries as the interests of both demand. Speaking for myself, and I should hope the sentiment is largely echoed throughout the country, I was extremely glad to see that, last year when the treaty expired, we did not insist upon our rights; that we left it still open for American fishermen to fish in our waters. I think it was a very prudent and proper course, and I believe that the action of the Government at the present time is not in the direction of insisting upon our absolute rights. We do not choose to insist upon our absolute rights; we regard the American people with too much favor, and the interests of the two peoples are too intimately and closely connected to be jeopardized by hasty action on this fisheries question. But in justice to the view entertained both on one side and on the other, they must necessarily feel that ultimately, and the sooner the better, a fair tribunal, such a tribunal as two nations on such friendly terms as we are can decide upon, should be appointed to settle this matter in a most satisfactory spirit. I think it is unwise that any of us should pronounce upon the interpretation of the treaty of 1818, or prejudice the case in the slightest degree. It will be all very well, at the proper time, to discuss this question before any commission that may be appointed; and whatever the result of that commission or tribunal may be, I trust it will be hailed with satisfaction by the people of this country, as a finality upon that delicate and difficult subject. It is, of course, an embarrassing question, because necessarily intrusions occur on one side and the other, and we all know that where difficulties of that kind arise it is extremely impossible to control impulsive people. I trust there will be no reprisals, on one side or on the other, and that our Government in exercising the powers which Parliament now gives them will not exercise them to the fullest extent, and that in their interpretation of those powers they will not enter upon what might in any degree be a debatable point. I trust that they will so far set an example of impartiality and friendship to the people of the United States as will convince that people that there is but one sentiment entertained by the people of this country on this irritating subject, and that is to remove it as far as possible as a subject of discussion between the two people. We have both entire confidence in the ultimate good faith of each other, and the sooner that time will arrive the better it will be for both countries.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I am sure that every member in both branches of the Dominion Legislature will approach this subject with the full consideration that it is of moment that we should maintain the friendly relations that now exist between the United States and this Dominion. We are fully impressed with the importance of maintaining those friendly relations which have existed between the republic and this Dominion. We desire to approach this subject in that spirit and I am sure that to-day in discussing this Bill brought forward by the member from York we shall be governed by such considerations. We are a kindred race. We have confidence in the intelligence of the people of the United States from one end of the republic to the other. We feel that they have no desire to do anything except what is right with regard to this fisheries question.

HON. MR. POWER—They have a queer way of showing it.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—It is to be regretted that the Premier of this country, a man of talent, a man of large Parliamentary experience, when the treaty expired on the 1st of July 1885, should have allowed so long a time to elapse before he took the first action with regard to the rights of the Dominion in this fishery question. Can any man say calmly that that was a wise course to pursue on the part of the leader of this rising country? What was he afraid of? Why could he not have approached the Washington Government before the expiration of the treaty, and said to them, "Come now, let us see how we can arrange this matter of fishing in each other's waters and come to a definite understanding upon that point." But what did our First Minister do? He did nothing. He took that course of action which almost fixes upon us the charge of pusillanimity when he took no action whatever. The Government of the United States immediately when the treaty expired enacted that our fish going into their markets should be subject to certain duties. Did we reciprocate any action with regard to them?

HON. MR. CARVELL—What has that to do with the Bill?

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—We have no power to make treaties.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—If we have no power to protect our own waters we should dispense with our Parliament.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—We have power to protect our own waters, but no power to make treaties.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—If the object of this Bill is to protect our waters, why was not this action taken nine months ago? Our Government have allowed fishermen of the States of Maine and Massachusetts to come into our waters and may create trouble between the two countries. I may say with regard to the London Times, they often proclaim publicly that we must have peace at any expense; that we cannot afford to run the risk of any ruffled feelings between the United States and Great Britain. That is not the course pursued by statesmen of the last generation. They always pursued a moderate course with firmness. But our First Minister's health is in such a condition now that he is no longer a responsible man.

HON. MEMBERS — Order! order! order!

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I am not out of order in saying that the First Minister's health is affected.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I call the gentleman to order. He says that owing to the state of the First Minister's health he is no longer a responsible man.

THE SPEAKER—A habit has prevailed for some time in this House in a certain quarter of referring disrespectfully and ironically to members of the other House. I have often been surprised that they have not been called to order. It is certainly unparliamentary to refer ironically or disrespectfully to members of the other Chamber.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I regret—

HON. MR. PLUMB—I call the hon. gentleman to order. I appeal to the House to say if the hon. gentleman after having been ruled out of order can go on with his speech without the leave of the House.

HON. MR. POWER—The usual practice has been that, where a member has been out of order and admits that he has been out of order and withdraws the expression, he is allowed to go on.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I withdraw the expression and I apologize to the House for having used it. I was going to remark—

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman cannot proceed without the consent of the House.

THE SPEAKER—I do not think the offence of the hon. gentleman has been so serious that the House would desire to punish him by preventing him from going on with his remarks. The hon. gentleman has used an unparliamentary expression and has withdrawn it and apologized.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—I rise to a point of order.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Will the hon. gentleman sit down.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—I would certainly concur in the propriety of allowing the hon. gentleman to proceed if it were not a matter of daily occurrence—that he is continually—

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Order, order! The Speaker has decided.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—I am speaking to a point of order. The rule is clearly laid down that when a member is pronounced to be out of order, and the ruling of the Speaker is confirmed by the House, he cannot proceed with his speech without the leave of the House. What I wish to call the attention of the House to, is that the hon. member from Woodstock is perpetually out of order, and the time of this Senate is taken up by calling the hon. gentleman to order. I think, under the circumstances, the House ought to take that into consideration, and if the hon. gentleman persists in that course when he is ruled out of order, he ought not to be allowed to proceed.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I believe we are going too far in this matter, and that we will make this House ridiculous.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—It is ridiculous now.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—According to the practice laid down for years past, whenever a question of order is brought before the House, the gentleman who is called to order has to sit down, the point of order is stated and the Speaker decides, and when that decision is given the member who had the floor, and who has been called to order, either retracts the offensive words or he asks the leave of the House to go on. The gentleman from Woodstock retracted the words he made use of, and that is a sufficient apology, and I believe that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Botsford) in rising after that is himself out of order.

THE SPEAKER—I wish to call the attention of the House to the language of the rule under which the hon. gentleman has been called to order. It is the twenty-fifth rule, and it is one which has a far reaching effect—more so, perhaps, than hon. gentlemen are aware of:

Under that rule when any member is called to order he is obliged to sit down and no matter what he does, whether he apologizes or not, he cannot proceed without the leave of the House. I need not say to the House that the parliamentary meaning of the word “leave” is the unanimous sense of the House and any one member can prevent the gentleman who is ruled out of order from going on. Such good feeling has hitherto prevailed that this rule has never been enforced against any member with one or two exceptions and perhaps in framing the rule and adopting it the framers of it or the House, did not intend to go as far as it really does. However that may be, I think it would be well that the usual practice of the House should be continued until it has been forfeited by glaring and persistent disorder. Therefore I trust the hon. gentleman will be allowed to proceed.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—While I quite agree with the decision of the Speaker I do not at all agree with the statement that one member can prevent another, who is ruled out of order, from speaking. The "leave of the House" clearly means the majority of the House and not one member. That is my opinion.

THE SPEAKER—I cannot prevent the hon. member from holding his own opinion on the matter.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I regret if any expression has fallen from me which is contrary to the rule of parliament, and I am always willing to retract any such expression. I assume with regard to this Bill that our present respected Minister of Justice has closely examined all the provisions of the former treaties and that this Bill has been framed in perfect accordance with those treaties and that we are proceeding safely. If I did not believe so I would not advocate the passing of this Bill. Therefore I am prepared to vote for it. I agree with the hon. member from Alberton and I think the House is deeply indebted to him for the information he has given to the Senate. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that the captains placed in command of those police steamers ought to be appointed with the greatest care and judgment. They ought to be men who will carry out the orders of the Government with great prudence because upon the carrying out of those orders great irritation and great provocation may be given; and it may lead to temporary irritation. The great body of the people of the United States do not wish to encroach upon our rights. They say "We have a territory ten-fold larger than yours."

HON. MR. SMITH—It is not as large.

THE SPEAKER.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I speak with reference to population and wealth. If our laws are properly framed, and if the captains of our vessels are properly appointed, we need not be alarmed in any way, and I hope the Bill will pass and will not be thrown out, as the Chinese Immigration Bill was, last night, through the mismanagement, and the past record of the hon. gentleman who had charge of it.

HON. GENTLEMEN—Order! order! order!

HON. MR. POWER—I regret that the advice of the hon. gentleman from York given to the House when he introduced this measure has not been taken. I think that, whatever our views might be as to the policy of the Government on this matter, when it comes to be a question between Canada, as a portion of the British Empire, and the United States, a question of maintaining our rights, and very important rights, then we should all be at one; and I regret that the hon. gentleman who is just leaving the Chamber should have thought necessary on an occasion of this kind to have introduced party feeling. I may say that I regret that a gentleman occupying the position of the hon. member from Ottawa should have made the remarks which he did. I feel that it is due to myself, having at an earlier period of the session expressed opinions altogether different from what that hon. gentleman has expressed to-day, to say a few words in reply to what he has said. I stated—in the beginning of the session, in the debate on the Address in reply to His Excellency's Speech—that I thought the Government had made a mistake in giving up to the Government of the United States a season's fishing for nothing. I suppose the Government did that for the best motives.

HON. MR. SCOTT—I spoke for myself.

HON. MR. POWER—And I am speak for myself in the same way! On an occasion of this sort on an international question, gentlemen do not speak for themselves alone, for their remarks are reported elsewhere, and are sometimes given a weight that they were not intended to have. I have no doubt that the surrender of a season's fishing was made with the best intentions. It was made with the idea of keeping the American people and the American Government in good humor, so that they would be prepared at the end of the season to negotiate in a friendly spirit. While it is true that the American Government have approached this question in a friendly and proper spirit, the same cannot be said of a large section of the American population and several prominent politicians. As I have before stated, those people looked upon the action of this Government in giving up a season's fishing gratuitously as an admission of weakness and as an admission that the fisheries were not worth much; and I believe the action they have taken since we have begun to enforce our rights is due in a great measure to the too friendly attitude assumed by our government in the first instance. It is all very well to talk about being friendly with the United States; we are friendly with the United States, and I hope we shall always continue to be so; but it does not follow that, because you are friendly with your neighbor, you will allow him to appropriate your land or your personal property. If we wish to have our rights respected by other people, we must respect them ourselves and insist upon having them respected; and I think any expression or any speech which goes to minimize our claim with respect to the fisheries is calculated to do damage in two ways—to impress the American people with the idea that we are not unanimous that our full rights should be enforced, and to leave the impression on the Government of England, who have to deal with the United States, that after all the people of Canada really do not care a great deal about those fisheries. That would be a most unfortunate result; and I regret that anything should be said here which would be calculated in any way to favor an impression of that sort.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—The hon. gentleman did not mean to say "our claim," but our "rights."

HON. MR. POWER—Well our rights. I may offer a criticism on the remark of the hon. gentleman from Alberton as to the language of this clause covering certain disputed questions. I am quite aware that the Americans have disputed our claim as to bays which are more than six miles wide at the mouth; but whatever they might have done in the past, I do not think they can do that now, because the Americans themselves, including their highest tribunal have laid down positively the doctrine that bays like Chesapeake Bay and Delaware Bay are parts of the United States Territory. They are to-day claiming that the sea which lies outside of Alaska, I think it is generally called Behring Sea, a sea which covers several thousand square miles, is all American territory and have undertaken to forbid the people of British Columbia going there to look after seals at a long distance from land, and will try to prevent our vessels from going there on the ground that that large sea is a portion of their territory. Then it is perfectly absurd for us to listen for a moment to any contention that bays like Baie des Chaleurs is not part of our own territory. I think that the territory described in this clause is just as much the property of Canada as the soil on which we walk, and I hope that the Government, having found that they made a mistake in the first instance in being too lenient in enforcing our rights, will insist upon all our rights, not in a petulant or unfriendly way, but in an independent and manly spirit; and I only trust that the Government of this country will be properly backed up by the Imperial authorities. I am very sorry that I should be obliged to say anything that reflects in any way upon what has been said by a member of this House; but I really thought it was my duty not to let the matter go without putting my protest upon record.

THE SPEAKER—Perhaps hon. gentlemen will permit me to draw attention to the matter on which there has been a difference of opinion between the hon. member from Alberton and myself. I have here Brand's decisions, a recent eminent speaker of the House of Commons, who is now a member of the House of Lords. He says:

"The understanding with reference to the leave of the House is that it involves unanimity on the part of the House. Whenever the question is put from the chair—'Is it your pleasure that so-and-so be done?'—if there is a single dissenting voice, the leave of the House is not given."—Braud's decisions, 1884.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I still dispute the decision of the Speaker with all due deference to him. A question of privilege is not a matter for the House: If I am a member of the House, I have all the rights and privileges of the House, and nothing is dearer to a member than his privilege, and it cannot be taken from him by the objection of any one member of the House.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—When the hon. gentleman comes to reflect that we cannot dispense with a rule or one of our standing orders without giving notice that we intend to do so if one member objects to it, that carries out the ruling of the Speaker.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—That is with regard to that special thing.

THE SPEAKER—The question is whether the rule has been put on our books with a full knowledge of its effect and scope, and whether it should remain there or not.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I believe the rule was placed there by gentlemen who knew what they were about, but I believe also that that rule, or any other rule, may sometimes receive an interpretation, and that interpretation was given by His Honor the Speaker a minute ago, when he said that it had been the practice of the House to understand the rule in such a way—that is to say, in the case of the hon. member from Woodstock permission was given by unanimous consent, no one objecting to it.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The consent was not unanimous, inasmuch as I called the hon. member to order; but I do not think, except in cases of habitual and wilful violation—exulting violation of the rules of order—it would be desirable to enforce the rule, and it has practically remained in desuetude, but when we have the spectacle of habitual violation of the rules we should enforce them.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I wish to say—

HON. MR. SCOTT—I do think after the Speaker has ruled we should all acquiesce. If the hon. gentleman has a right to speak, I think I have. If the hon. gentleman wishes to speak on the subject let him give notice in the regular way. Nothing is to be gained by these desultory discussions.

HON. MR. MCINNES—All I have to say is this, that if the interpretation of the rule as given by the Speaker is to be enforced when a gentleman is called to order—if he has not the privilege of proceeding then I submit every person who interrupts that speaker ought to be called to order and debarred from speaking that day, for it is those frequent and unseemly interruptions that aggravate members to such an extent that they often say things they do not intend to say, and the consequence is they are called to order.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Nobody in the House interrupts other members more frequently than the hon. member from New Westminster himself.

HON. MR. MCINNES—No, but you are the quintessence of interruptions.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I cannot at all agree with my hon. friend from Halifax with reference to the motive or suspected motive of the Government in the delay which he says so improperly took place after the expiration of the treaty.

HON. MR. POWER—I said I had no doubt their motives were good.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I cannot agree with the hon. member as to the judgment he formed as to the expediency or propriety of the course they adopted. I quite agree with the hon. member from Ottawa who, with his usual candor, did not withhold that proper meed of approval from the Government that they deserve in this instance. The hon. gentleman from Halifax put it as if the Government were influenced by too strong a desire to maintain friendly relations with the United States at the expense of our own rights and dignity. Now that is not the case; does not the hon. gentleman know that it was utterly impossible for any arrangement to be made until Congress assembled?

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. member misapprehends my speech altogether. My idea is that we should strengthen the hands of the Government in every way.

HON. MR. VIDAL—And the hon. gentleman strengthens them by expressing strong disapproval of the course they have been pursuing.

HON. MR. POWER—That was at the beginning of the session, not now.

HON. MR. VIDAL—We find that the Government at the earliest moment approached the United States Government through our Minister at Washington; that the American Government recognized the propriety of settling this question in an amicable way by the appointment of a commission, and went the length of recommending that course to Congress. I hold that the President of the United States, having thus intimated that he desired to have the question settled in that way, it would have been an outrage of the worst description to insist upon our rights at that time and create a difficulty. I hold that the Government did what was right in endeavoring to secure what we all desire, and that not a shade of blame is attached to them of having neglected the interests of Canada because they permitted that delay to take place. Quite unexpectedly, Congress did not acquiesce in the recommendation of the President. But we are going very far astray in discussing the question now upon the merits or meaning of the Treaty, or how it should be interpreted. This Bill has nothing to do with that; it does not place any interpretation on the Treaty. It simply provides that if a vessel enters any of our harbors under certain circumstances a penalty shall be imposed. It does not change the question at all; it leaves all that to be decided by the proper courts, and in that case we are, of course, guarding our rights quite sufficiently when we say that any vessel entering our waters contrary to the provisions of the Treaty is to be subject to a certain penalty which has been standing on our Statute books against other violations of our rights in the former part of the clause. It certainly would have been much better if we had passed this Bill without discussion and it had gone forth that we were unanimous in strengthening the hands of the Government in carrying out the terms of the Treaty. It would have been better if we had taken such a course, that our neighbors might see that we do not allow our political differences to prevent us defending the rights of our country. We should forget that we belong to different political parties and remember only that we are Canadians, and that we have our rights and the rights of our children to guard and that we are doing so by this legislation. As to the mode of protecting our rights there may be divergences of opinion, but those differences may exist without necessitating the use of strong language such as has been indulged in during this discussion. Hon. gentlemen will perceive that the latter part of the Bill—it has been alluded to by one of the speakers but not by the hon. gentleman having charge of the measure—the second clause mentions that the Acts referred to in the schedule are repealed. The necessity of this is at once obvious, and the expediency of it apparent. There exist on the statute books of the Maritime Provinces laws relating to this subject, and they are in full force and effect until repealed by a statute of this Parliament, and consequently it will greatly facilitate the investigation into any alleged violations of the law when we have but one statute which is held to be the law of Canada, that it will not be necessary, when investigating those cases, to hunt up the statutes of the different Provinces to find special provisions contained in them. Consequently we find in the exercise of the power given to this Parliament that the statutes of those Provinces on the subject are repealed, and we have now one law which can be easily referred to, and under which proceedings shall be taken. I do think the Bill ought to pass in the shape suggested by the introducer of the measure, and that it should pass the House without any division upon it at all.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I wish to say a few words before any action is taken in regard to this Bill. I am very glad indeed that this measure has been introduced by the Government, and that it has been generally received in this House in the spirit which ought to prevail here. A very serious complication has arisen; we cannot shut our eyes to the fact. It is a complication which requires the exercise of the utmost judgement and intelligence and the most perfect command of temper to deal with. There have been provocations, without doubt, which might lead to expressions in this country which would be regretted. I cannot regard any of the hostile "tall" talk in the United States as in any way reflecting the opinions of the people of that country. A few gentlemen in the United States may choose to indulge in that sort of bravado, but the general feeling of the level headed people amongst the population of over 50,000,000 is not in accordance with that kind of Fourth of July fireworks, but quite to the contrary. Every man in the United States of sober, temperate judgment understands perfectly well that this is a question of law—a question of international law, and one of rights which cannot be decided by explosive orations or by the heated utterances of any newspaper editor. On the contrary, I believe that we of Canada have a right to stand with firmness and dignity upon the treaties which define what our rights are, and I am very glad to see that within a few days there has been an utterance in the House of Commons in England, which will reassure us as to the feeling which exists in the Mother country. Mr. Osborne Morgan, Under Secretary of State, on the 24th of this month, said in the House that the question which is agitating the country in regard to the fisheries "will be considered in a friendly spirit with due regard to the complete maintenance of the fishing rights of our fellow subjects in Canada." That is the proper kind of utterance and it will over-balance a great many of the "hi falutin'" speeches of certain Senators in the United States. It would not be proper to go into any long argument to show what our position is. I believe it to be a perfectly tenable one in respect to the treaty of 1818 as bearing upon and abrogating the treaty of 1783, which was of course set aside by the war of 1812. The new convention was perfectly explicit in its terms; any variations from that have been made on temporary considerations, not affecting the general rights of this country, and nothing can be more definite than the fact that one of the greatest contentions in respect to the rights of the United States—the right to enter into our waters and purchase bait—particularly the bait question, was discussed—was proposed by the United States Commission in 1818, was objected to on the part of the British authorities, and was withdrawn. It was decided against the contention of the United States. If it had been left open there would have been some reason for claiming that it was not under discussion, but it was absolutely discussed, in so many words, and it was attached to the general right to enter for the four purposes which are laid down specifically in the treaty. Some stress has been laid upon the laches, so alleged, of Canada in respect to the fisheries question. I do not know of anything that redounds more to the statesmanship of the First Minister of the Crown (whose conduct has been referred to in language that ought never to be used on the floor of this House) than the suggestion which was made in the House of Commons that rather than embarrass the fishermen who were then in the midst of the fishing season last July, and in order to show the friendly spirit which Canada has towards the United States and the fishing interest of that country, no seizure would be made of those then engaged in fishing under the terms of the treaty which had just expired. It was perfectly obvious, as the hon. member from Sarnia has explained, that there could be no negotiations for a renewal of that treaty at the time it expired, because Congress was not in session. The question was one which did not belong to the Executive, but to the Senate, with whom it was hoped that the recommendations of the President would prevail. It was understood that there would be consent on the part of the United States authorities to form a commission which would settle these questions, but unfortunately, as sometimes happens in that country where politics get very complicated at times, and where under a system which prevails of non-responsible government in contradistinction to our system of responsible government, the President of the United States and his Cabinet are often in direct hostility to the representatives of the people and to the Senate of the country—it so happens that the United States Senate at the present time is in direct antagonism to the President and his Cabinet. It is an anomaly which many statesmen of the neighboring country have long ago seen to work with great inconvenience and I have no doubt they would be glad to get rid of it, but under the institutions of that country it is impossible to adopt that which I consider the much better system of having a responsible government, sitting in both Houses, which prevails in this country, in England, and in every part of the Queen's dominions, where governments are established. That left the question practically out of the power of the President of the United States. The present complications, which, so far as I know anything about them from the newspapers, seem to be almost a wanton aggression upon us, an attempt to see how far we will bear interference with our rights, and to try the temper of Canada, will probably bring about the result of having negotiations entered into for the purpose of establishing a further treaty. I cannot suppose that the thoughtful people of the United States, with their vast mercantile and financial interests, all of which can be affected by a breath which looks like a disturbance with other countries, has any other policy before it than a policy of peace. That country is emphatically one which grows and thrives by that policy; it is not a war country. It has no standing army and no intention, I think, of infringing on the rights of other nations, and I believe the sober thought of the people of the United States will compel a proper settlement of this question, and they will very soon see that such a settlement cannot long be delayed. In the meantime I think it is perfectly in accord with the policy of this country that the Bill before us should pass both Houses, and I believe that it will pass the Senate without a single dissenting voice. I have no doubt that the people of the United States generally are as out of harmony with those who have attempted to make a cause of trouble of this question as we are ourselves. The expressions of the influential press throughout the United States indicate that the agitation, which seems to have been got up for the purpose of effecting some political object which we cannot perhaps understand, has been confined to the small district in which that agitation was likely to produce some political results. I may say, also, that some stress has been laid upon the inactivity of the Government in procuring a reciprocity treaty with the United States, because it was considered that a treaty of that kind would include the fisheries claims. I believe that I am not violating any confidence when I say—and I say it with the highest authority that can be given on that subject—that there has been no time since the reciprocity treaty expired when we could have got a renewal of the treaty without making sacrifices which would not be consonant with the feelings of the people of this country, and I may also say that I believe there has been a constant attention paid by Her Majesty's representative at Washington to that fact, and that while it has been claimed that under the presidency of President Arthur, we might have had an opportunity of renewing negotiations for a treaty of reciprocity, I may say that is a mistake—that there was no more favorable opportunity at that time than exists at the present moment, and that when the people of the United States who are a sensible people, who know their business—

HON. MR. POWER—I rise to a question of order: the speech which the hon. gentleman is making now has no relevancy to the question before the House.

HON. MR. PLUMB—It has reference to the fisheries question. If the hon. gentleman always sticks as close to his text as I adhere to mine he will not take up the time of the House, as he very often does, with irrelevant discussions. I have only to say in conclusion that, in my judgment, the Government has done everything in its power in the way of settling this fishery question; that there could be nothing done except by a convention; that I trust that a convention will be held, and I trust and know that the sober, second thought of the United States people, whether of Gloucester or any other place, will lead them to approach this subject with that feeling of kindness which I believe lies at the bottom of the great heart of the people of that country.

HON. MR. ALLAN—I will only add to what I have already said when I moved the second reading of the Bill—that while I entirely concur in the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Ottawa, so far as the expression of his hope that both this legislation and all matters connected with this important question, shall be so conducted as to preserve as far as possible the most cordial relations with our neighbors of the United States, and while I think we all desire that all that may be done under this legislation may be carried out in a considerate and friendly spirit, I at the same time beg to affirm that I am equally persuaded that there is no one feeling which is more entirely shared in by the whole of the people of Canada than the earnest desire that our just rights in the matter of those fisheries should be preserved, and having regard to the enormous source of wealth which they are and must always continue to be to our fellow subjects in the Maritime Provinces, that their interests should not only not be sacrificed, but most carefully guarded and maintained.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time and referred to a committee of the whole House.

In the Committee,

HON. MR. ALLAN moved to strike out of the 32nd line the words "the law of nations or contrary to," and in the following line to strike out "to" and substitute for it "by."

The motion was agreed to.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD, from the Committee, reported the Bill as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

HON. MR. ALLAN moved that the Bill be read the third time to-morrow.

HON. MR. VIDAL—Why not now?

HON. MR. POWER—It would be better to postpone it until to-morrow. Some of the Acts repealed by this Bill were passed before Prince Edward Island became a portion of the Dominion, and there is some doubt as to whether they apply to that Province, and if not it is very important that they should.

HON. MR. PLUMB.

The motion was agreed to.

NORTHERN AND PACIFIC JUNCTION RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. TURNER moved concurrence in the amendments proposed by the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbors to Bill (25) "An Act respecting the Northern and Pacific Junction Railway Company."

HON. MR. POWER—I wish to rise to a question of order on this amendment. I do not know whether the Speaker has had it under consideration or not; but I think the amendment is clearly out of order. The agreement which is inserted in the schedule of this Bill I may as well read a portion of.

"6. For the purpose of ensuring free interchange of traffic coming or going from the railway so to be constructed between the lessees' railways and the railways connecting therewith, so far as such interchange shall be under the control of the lessees, the said lease shall also contain a provision that in the event of the Parliament of Canada being at any time hereafter of opinion that the traffic of the railway system of the lessees coming from or going to the projected railway, and interchanged with lines connected with the lessees' system of railways is not so interchanged without preference or prejudice as between such connections then being of such opinion the Parliament of Canada may, if it sees fit, cancel the said lease and take over the said railway free from encumbrance upon assumption of the bond or debenture debts of the lessor company to the amount of eight thousand dollars per mile of the railway, and upon payment of such further sum of money beyond the said bond debts of eight thousand dollars per mile and the said subsidy, as the said railway may then be worth, the value thereof to be ascertained in the manner provided by the contract."

Then the seventh clause of this agreement provides:

7. In consideration of the premises and upon the terms and conditions hereinbefore mentioned, Her Majesty agrees to grant and does hereby grant to the Northern and Pacific Junction Railway Company, a subsidy of twelve thousand dollars per mile of the said railway so to be constructed, but not exceeding in the whole one million three hundred and twenty thousand dollars.

That was the action of the Government acting under a charter from Parliament in 1884. Then the House of Commons, to whose attention the matter was brought directly, when this Bill was going through inserted at the end of the first clause this proviso :

“ Provided, that this enactment is without prejudice to the agreement between the Government of Canada and the Company, bearing date the twelfth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, respecting the assumption by the Parliament of Canada of the portion of the said line of railway between Gravenhurst and Callander, which said contract is set forth in Schedule B to this Act.”

The House will see, and his Honor the Speaker will see, as to this question of order, that first the Government under authority of Parliament entered into this agreement and then the House of Commons having their attention called to the matter the other day added this proviso to the Bill. It provided that only this $8,000 could come in before the Government claim, if the Government proposed to take the road over. Now the amendment proposed to be made to the Bill is in direct conflict with that provision which was added in the House of Commons, and it provides not that $8,000 shall come in but that $20,000 shall come in ; so that if the Government shall assume the road instead of paying $8,000 on the bonded debt they will be obliged to pay $20,000. Looking at the fact that the House of Commons has so directly legislated on this financial question the Senate will have no right to amend that provision in the Bill, particularly as that amendment is to increase the burden of the country if the Government choose hereafter to take over the road.

HON. MR. TURNER—I think the member for Halifax entirely mistakes the position of the Bill with regard to the $8,000. That has nothing to do with this measure, and is merely put in for the purpose of showing what was done on a former occasion. It appears to me that this is a peculiarly suspicious time to bring up this objection. My hon. friend from Dorchester suggested yesterday that there was a possibility of there being a “ nigger in the fence ” ; so far as the railway is concerned the nigger seemingly has got to the other side now. This clause has already been considered as to its being a money bill, and the consequent restriction of our powers ; the best lawyers in Canada came to the conclusion that there was no trouble about that. Why then bring it up at this last moment. I am informed to-day by one of the Ministers that there is a possibility of Parliament proroguing on Tuesday, so the apparent object of this objection is to throw out the Bill to-night so that we cannot get it through the other House this Session. Is it right and fair to do so ? I put it off yesterday in consideration of my hon. friend from Ottawa, and why did he not until this moment raise this objection, so that I might have an opportunity to hunt for evidence and facts to submit to the House ? At this moment the apparent object is to postpone the consideration of the Bill with a view of killing it for the Session. This is a very serious matter, not only for the railway company but for the contractors and banks.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman is not speaking to the question of order.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman must confine himself to the question of order.

HON. MR. TURNER—If my hon. friend had given me the slightest hint I would have got authorities and been prepared to state the case to the House as although satisfied myself from the discussion which took place in reference to this point, I am not a lawyer and am not now in a position to give the necessary information.

HON. MR. SCOTT—I was not present on the Committee yesterday and therefore had no opportunity of discussing this question. It was practically discussed the day before, and I suggested some additional words to make it more clear. However, my proposition was not accepted. When I came into the Chamber to-day and looked over the clause, I saw that it was beyond the power of this body to make the proposed amendment, and I immediately gave my hon. friend notice, and I brought the matter under the notice of the Speaker, that if no other gentleman would bring the subject up I should certainly feel it my duty to do so. I may say here that this is an entirely new amendment. It is an amendment to a Bill in this chamber at nearly its last stage. The main ground of exception is that our legislation varies an agreement entered into by the Government of Canada in 1884 with this particular railway that is now seeking this amendment, without any intimation from either of the parties to the contract.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—Does it affect it pecuniarily?

HON. MR. SCOTT—It does. The clause to be considered most in connection with it is one that the Parliament of Canada, in the case of other railways of the country, felt it necessary to introduce in order to keep down the tariff to such a basis as would enable other railways to receive freight from it at such a figure as would give reasonable rates to the people of the country; the Government insisted, when they gave this money, that they should have the right to take over the road for $8,000 per mile, and so much more as it would be worth.

THE SPEAKER—Not the Government, but the Parliament of Canada.

HON. MR. SCOTT—The contract was made with the Government of Canada. The Parliament of Canada ratified that contract and we are now ratifying that contract again.

THE SPEAKER—The Government had not the power to take over the railway; the Parliament of Canada had the power.

HON. MR. SCOTT—Of course the Parliament of Canada had the right to take over this road on paying $8,000 a mile and as much more as the road was worth. The Parliament of Canada passed that legislation on the agreement entered into by the Government of Canada with this railway; and it is rather anomalous that we provide that this legislation and that this amendment that is proposed shall in no way violate this agreement. It is wholly inconsistent. We are violating the agreement without knowing that the Government of Canada consent to that violation. In the other Chamber it would have been a proper amendment. The Finance Minister could represent that the Governor-in-Council empowered him to consent to it; but there is no such power in this Chamber. The enactment here is that it is without prejudice to the contract made in 1884. I say that the effect of this legislation is to violate a provision in this Bill, and it also violates the only existing contract between this company and the Government of the country. Until the Government of the country say they are willing to depart from that contract, and put it on record, I cannot see that we are able to do so. We have no power to alter the contract, it would be highly improper if we did. The Government can alter the contract, or make a new contract, and we can do our share of it and leave the Government to assume the responsibility. I do not see that this House has the power to say that the Government shall pay $20,000 instead of $8,000 until the Government have acquiesced it in the usual way. Certainly this Chamber has no right to impose the additional $12,000 per mile on the people of this country.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The question that has been raised by the hon. member from Halifax that the Senate has no right to increase the burden on the people, I think may be argued. I do not see that there is any increase, or that it is proposed to make any increase under any circumstances, except upon certain conditions. The original charter, as well as the contract between the Government and the company, contains a certain provision. It was estimated that the road would cost $20,000 a mile. The Government granted a subsidy of $12,000 a mile, and also provided that in case the Government wanted to take over the road that $12,000 a mile should be considered, and if the company issued bonds, that $8,000 a mile of those bonds should be taken up. In the course of construction it was found that this road could not be built for the sum estimated. It proved to be a formidable work. It was a granite formation over which the line passed, granite boulders cropping out of the ground, and quicksand, which ran like water, when it was used for ballast.

HON. MR. SCOTT.

HON. MR. POWER—That is not the question of order.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I want to show there has been a misunderstanding as to the cost of the road. The cost of the road has been increased until, in the last report of Mr. Collingwood Schreiber, the Government Engineer, it is estimated that it will be $30,000 a mile when it is finished that made it necessary to assist the company by—

HON. MR. POWER—I rise to a question of order. If this question is decided adversely to the Bill, then there is no more to be said. If the question of order is decided in favor of the Bill, then the argument that the hon. gentleman is addressing the House will be an argument for the House to pass the measure.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I was going to answer the hon. gentleman's contention.

HON. MR. POWER—Life is too short to wait until the hon. gentleman gets to the point.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I do not know that the hon. gentleman regards that very much—particularly when he wants to make a speech. I have only to say that the Government have authorized this clause. I am instructed to say that the clause was provided, and drawn up under the authority of the Government, and that I was asked by the Government—and the very words which were used I will state—I was asked by the Government, represented by the Minister of Railways, to have put in the Northern Pacific Junction Railway Bill as it passed through the Senate the amendment which I have proposed. That answers my hon. friend and the hon. member for Ottawa so far as the right of the Senate to deal with this question is concerned.

HON. MR. SCOTT—It is quite competent for the Government to pass a short bill and run it through. That is the true way to do it. There is no difficulty about doing it if they chose to do it in the House of Commons.

THE SPEAKER—If we were not at so late a period of the Session I would ask the House to postpone this question and allow me a little time to consider it; but as we are now in the last days of the Session, when any delay may prove fatal to the Bill, I feel called upon to give my decision at once. I may say that when my attention was first directed to the question of order by the hon. gentleman from Ottawa. I rather coincided with his view that this was a matter amending a money clause of a bill originating in the other House which could not be introduced in this House, but on reading the clause and the proposed amendment carefully, I have no doubt the amendment is quite in order. I shall read to the House the clause:—

6. For the purpose of ensuring free interchange of traffic coming to or going from the railway so to be constructed between the lessees' railways and the railways connecting therewith, so far as such interchange shall be under the control of the lessees, the said lease shall also contain a provision that in the event of the Parliament of Canada being at any time hereafter of opinion that the traffic of the railway system of the lessees coming from or going to the projected railway, and interchanged with lines connecting with the lessees' system of railways is not so interchanged without preference or prejudice as between such connections.

The House will pay particular attention to what follows then being of such opinion the Parliament of Canada may, if it see fit, cancel the said lease and take over the said railway free from encumbrance upon assumption of the bond or debenture debts of the lessor company to the amount of eight thousand dollars per mile of the railway.

Now the amendment is in a few words simply a change to this clause by substituting 20 for 8. If this amendment entailed any direct charge upon the country I should certainly agree with the hon. gentleman who has raised the objection that it could not be initiated in this House; but it does nothing of the kind. It merely regulates the conditions under which the Parliament—not the Government of Canada—may obtain possession of this railway, should Parliament desire to do so. The amendment to this Bill imposes no burden upon the country. It is not made a charge on the country. It merely changes the conditions under which—not the Government but the Parliament of Canada may exercise a privilege reserved to it by the Bill. In order to make the country responsible for any change under this amendment, a message will have to come from His Excellency the Governor-General to the House of Commons when all the proceedings connected with the initiation of money bills in that House will have to be adopted and a bill sent up to this House and approved before that $20,000 a mile can become a charge upon the people of this country. Therefore it is such an amendment as in my opinion it is perfectly competent for this House to make to the Bill.

HON. MR. SCOTT—The subject matter that forms the substance of this amendment was very fully discussed in the House of Commons, if hon. gentlemen will take trouble to look up the Commons Debates of May 17th; but it does seem to me very extraordinary that the amendment that is now considered of so great importance, should, on the 27th May, only ten days ago, not have been thought of such consequence as to be inserted in the Bill in the proper place. The President of the company occupies a seat in Parliament, and took part, I notice in the debates, both in the Committee and in the House, and the proposition to increase the amount that the Government would have to pay under certain circumstances was fully discussed in that Chamber. If I read the debates aright, the sentiment expressed there was so general that this amendment had no possible chance of being adopted. I find that the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) discussed it and drew attention to the fact that it might be important, and in the interests of the people of this country, to take over this railway if it were found that the freight rates were being unduly increased. It was of the greatest importance that the sum paid on taking over the railway should not be unduly increased. In addition to the sum of $8,000 there was the subsidy of $12,000 a mile, and Parliament in its wisdom thought that that might not be sufficient to build the road, and therefore the Bill contained these additional words, "And any such further additional sum as the said railway may then be worth," and fixed the tribunal that was to arrive at the value of the road, that is the contract entered into by this company and by the Government of Canada, which contract was ratified by Parliament. Now we say we change the contract by which this company were willing, in the event of the Government taking over this road, to accept this $8,000 a mile and such further sum as the road was worth, which ought to mean its full value. Of course if they pay away any bogus money that should not be recouped. I do not throw out any insinuation at all, but it does seem to me so extraordinary that where there is that full provision in the event of the road being taken over, that the company could not lose anything—it is extraordinary that at the last moment this proposition should be submitted to us, when, I think, if ten days ago it were fully understood it was necessary it ought to have been submitted in another place. My point is this; is this proposal made at the instance of the company? Is it made at the instance of the president of the company? The president used those words in answer to the accusation that the sum to be paid was being unduly increased. Mr. McCarthy said:

The company do not, in the slightest degree, desire to affect its contract with the Government by a side wind, but understands that Parliament, should the company not do its duty by the public, may at some future time come in and redeem the bonds, and the bondholders will buy on that chance. It was perfectly understood more bonds would have to be issued, and that perhaps application would have to be made to Parliament for relief in that regard. That is the explanation, and I hope the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) will find it satisfactory.

Ten days ago they were to buy with a full knowledge that the Parliament of Canada were only bound in taking over this road to pay this $8,000 per mile, and as much more as it might be worth, and the bondholders were to obtain their bonds with that full knowledge. Now I want to know if that is all to be changed?

HON. MR. POWER—That is the effect of the amendment at any rate.

HON. MR. SCOTT—Now here, in this Chamber, certainly if we had the power (and I assume that we have) it is more germane to the subject matter that the proposition should have been submitted in the other Chamber, where all bills affecting the financial affairs of the country have to take their origin; but I desire to know now whether the company themselves are prepared to admit that they do alter the contract with the Government, and that they depart from the proposition laid down in the other Chamber by the president—that Parliament in buying this road now buys it on a different basis from that set forth in the contract of 1884?

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman has made a very strong argument against the adoption of this amendment, and he bases it very largely on the fact that the Government has not authorized it, and on the fact that it was discussed in the House of Commons and that the $8,000 clause was there consented to in some form by the president of a company.

HON. MR. SCOTT—The president of the company. There were two other companies mentioned, but it was only this company.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I wish the House to understand that the question is not one with the railway to which the hon. gentleman has been referring. That railway is leased in perpetuity to two railway companies who have assumed to run that road, to see that it is kept in running order, and who are responsible for the interest on the bonds which this Company is to issue. It was estimated at the time that this agreement to which the hon. gentleman refers was entered into, that the road could be constructed for $20,000 a mile. It was provided that the Government subsidy of $12,000 and $8,000 of the bonds should be taken into consideration by the Government if on account of any laches on the part of this Company, on account of not fulfilling the agreements in respect to interchange of traffic, on account of not being able to run the road as it ought to be, they assumed that road and they were to count in the subsidy which had already been paid, assume the $8,000 of bonds of the $20,000 which the Company was authorized to issue, and take over the road at such further valuation as should be made in the manner provided for in these contracts. Nothing can be plainer than that. It was found, and it is shown by the report which I hold in my hand made by the Government engineer, Mr. Collingwood Schreiber, that the road had now cost nearly $30,000 a mile. As I stated before, owing to the fact that the engineers were deceived in the character of the country through which the road passes, it cost more than was anticipated. Those who have had much experience of railway construction will agree with me that the estimates of engineers of the cost of constructing a railway in a new country cannot always be relied upon. They cannot foresee every contingency; they cannot see into the ground. The company have issued already and paid to their contractors $18,000 a mile of bonds. That with the subsidy makes $30,000 a mile expended. Those bonds are in the possession of the Bank of Montreal which has advanced money on them, and part of them are in possession of the Canada Life Company. It is found that this $18,000 restriction, although practically it does not amount to much—because if the Government take over the road it must be for what it is worth—acts as a blot on the sale of those bonds. They cannot be sold except at a loss with that upon them; indeed I do not know if they can be negotiated at all. That has been found to be the case lately. In the interest of the province and of the country, every facility which is proper and right should be given to this company to enable them to negotiate their bonds. I appeal to any financial gentleman here if those bonds will not be more valuable if that $8,000 clause is taken out and $20,000 is substituted instead, stating that if the valuation of the road in the remote event of the Government taking it over—I do not think there is the slightest chance of it—it is proper that they should pay what it is worth. Now, as long as they are to do so, it is certainly right that they should in every way try to facilitate the negotiation of those bonds, and by mentioning the $8,000 as being the first consideration, if this road is to be taken by the Government, they have thrown a cloud over the securities in such a way that I am advised by a gentleman, in whom I have a very great deal of confidence, and I may say who is not the president of the railway mentioned by the hon. gentleman with a view to create a prejudice against the railway—that the bonds are practically unsaleable unless this alteration is made. I have here a statement that the outlay on the road already is nearly $30,000 a mile. The company has still to build its station houses and telegraph lines, to put on its equipment and to prepare the road in a proper way for traffic, which is looked upon as the most important that will be carried on any railway in Ontario. It is the connecting link between the Pacific Railway at Callandar and the Ontario system of railways, and there is not a business man in this Province but desires it to be a first-class line. I expect in a few years to see it double tracked, and how can that be done with this blot upon it? If it is not a first-class road, such as the people of the Province expected it would be, then Ontario would lose a considerable business that it expected to receive from the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is a matter for the Province—a public matter—and I am astonished that my hon. friend from Ottawa should not have dealt with it in the large and liberal spirit which he usually displays. He must have some personal prejudice against the Bill; in fact I can see from his quotation from the debates in another place, that he is prejudiced.

HON. MR. POWER—I call the hon. gentleman to order: he has no right to attribute unworthy motives to other members of the House.

THE SPEAKER—I did not understand that the hon. member from Niagara was attributing improper motives to anyone.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman is attributing to the hon. member from Ottawa, and others who are opposed to this Bill, that they are influenced by personal motives.

HON. MR. PLUMB.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman said that there was some personal prejudice at the bottom of the hon. gentleman who opposed this Bill; he did not attribute to anyone personal motives.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I know too much about parliamentary practice to attribute personal motives. We saw in the committee the extraordinary spectacle of a member of Parliament brought in specially to be called upon to oppose this Bill. I do not attribute any improper motive to him, but I certainly learned that he had an arrangement with one of those Companies for special rates, and when it was found that those rates—

HON. MR. POWER—Order, order! This is out of order; it has nothing to do with the question before the House.

THE SPEAKER—If the member of Parliament who came before the committee had a special rate the hon. gentleman has a right to state it.

HON. MR. PLUMB—It was stated that he had a special rate and he found he had not; consequently we must take the statements of that gentleman in connection with that fact. I have a perfect right to state that, because that gentleman may have prejudiced the feelings of the committee, and I wish to remove any wrong impression from the minds of hon. members in respect to this undertaking. I have also to say this, that the amendment is not a finality in this House: it has to go to the other House, if it is adopted here. Hon. gentlemen who suppose that there is a great objection and prejudice there against the amendment and that the $8,000 a mile fixed there was the final judgement of that House, need have no hesitation in trusting it to that House which, in its wisdom, will deal with it, I have also to say that there is a stringent provision in this contract that the road shall be held to an agreement by which traffic arrangements shall be kept open, and fair rates shall be adopted by it. As I have already stated, it is a most important link in the railway system of Ontario and it is our duty to treat this in the spirit with which the commercial community of Ontario would deal with it. If it were referred to the boards of trade of Ontario, and it were known that the Bill stands as it does now, I believe there is not one of them in the Province but would desire this amendment to pass. I repeat that I have the full sanction of the Government represented by the Minister of Railways—and that is the very term that he used, that he represented the Government—to offer this amendment and to say that it has been agreed upon and prepared by the Government, and it came to me with exactly the same papers which I hold in my hand. I trust that the House will allow the Bill to be amended and sent down to the other Chamber without further discussion.

HON. MR. POWER—An amendment which is of so much consequence that the hon. gentleman takes the trouble to arm himself with all the papers which he laid before the Committee and which he has referred to here, and which calls for so much eloquence and argument on his part deserves certainly a little attention from the other side of the House. We should consider not what they may do with this amendment in the other House, but what our duty is; and I contend it has not been shown that there is any reason why we should set aside the existing arrangements. The people who undertook to build this road entered in 1884 into a solemn agreement under seal with the Government. These gentlemen were not fools; they were men of experience in railway building and they were familiar with the country between Gravenhurst and Callander, and entered into this arrangement with their eyes open. What is the unreasonable feature of that arrangement? I fail to see any. If this agreement provided that they were only to get $8,000 then I could understand the arrangement was an unreasonable one, because the road clearly cost over $20,000 a mile; but the agreement provides that they are to get $8,000 a mile and so much more as they can show the road to be worth, upon a settlement by arbitration. Is there anything unreasonable or unjust about that agreement? I think it is eminently fair. There is this feature about that agreement: under it there was no opportunity for such transactions in railway bonds as we have heard a good deal about recently. If we accept the amendment that is now proposed there will be such an opportunity; and I think that is just a reason why we should not adopt the amendment. In the next place we have this spectacle: the hon. gentleman talked about the extraordinary spectacle in the railway committee: I think the most extraordinary spectacle was the hon. member from Niagara coming there with certain semi-official documents, and at one side of him the president of one of the roads leasing this line and on the other side of him a director of another company leasing the line. That was a somewhat extraordinary spectacle. Was it anything extraordinary that a member of the House of Commons, who was familiar with this whole transaction, and familiar with what had taken place in the House of Commons and all the transactions which had occurred in connection with the road, should be asked to come in and give information to the committee? He did so, and he did it in a quiet and satisfactory way. I contend that is no extraordinary spectacle at all. Time after time we have had before the Railway Committee members of the other House giving information. It is very usual and not in the slightest degree improper. There is another singular fact; we found that in the House of Commons where this measure was thoroughly understood and discussed, the president of the company, one of the first lawyers in Ontario, and a man necessarily familiar with all the transactions connected with this company, stated that it was not intended by this Bill in any way to prejudice the Government rights under the existing agreement. We find that gentleman himself prepared and moved the following proviso:

“ Provided, that this enactment is without prejudice to the agreement between the Government of Canada and the Company, bearing date the twelfth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, respecting the assumption by the Parliament of Canada of the portion of the said line of railway between Gravenhurst and Callander, which said contract is set forth in Schedule B to this Act.”

Now, I think it is an extraordinary spectacle, when the president of the company and promoter of the Bill makes that proposition in the House of Commons, that we should have a gentleman who is not connected with the company except through companionship, coming in here and proposing an amendment which practically over-rides and destroys that proviso. There are other interests to be considered besides those of the bondholders of this company. The company have their railway: the country is not going to lose it—it is there, and if it is taken over the company will be paid all that it is worth. The hon. gentleman adverted to the important character of this road. I think one of the reasons why we should not pass this amendment is because the road is so important. It has received a large subsidy from the Government—$12,000 a mile. The Government and Parliament at that time were not dealing with any particular corporation; there were provisions inserted to protect the public interest. It was not desirable that this most important link in the railway system which gave Toronto and the country around it connection with the Pacific Railway, should get into the hands of monopolists or that it should become practically a monopoly, and these provisions were inserted by Parliament with a view to protecting the interests of the people of Ontario. If we pass this legislation it will be quite impossible for the Government to take the road over without paying a very large sum—at the very lowest figure $32,000 a mile—for that road. I may say that this change from $8,000 a mile to $20,000 a mile will involve in that case a possible increased charge on the treasury of $1,320,000. That is a very serious matter. I do not propose to enter into the motives of gentlemen in connection with this matter, but I have been informed that these corporations, which now control this most important line, are not regarded in Ontario with any very special favor, and that if the catastrophe to which the hon. gentleman referred were to take place there would not be any great lamentation in the province. My information leads me to think that if the hon. gentleman were to apply to the Boards of Trade in the cities of Ontario he would not find that there was any very strong desire that this most important link should remain in the hands in which it is now. There is one other point which I think deserves to be noted. I doubt the entire propriety of discussing in this House what takes place in its committees. I think when a Committee make their report—

HON. MR. POWER.

HON. MR. TURNER—That the House ought to carry it through.

HON. MR. POWER—No, I do not think anything of the sort. The House has a right to deal with the report of the Committee without going into details and talking about the prejudices of gentlemen who appear before the Committee. The sanction of the Government has been spoken about. The Government as represented in the other House, which deals with those questions, sanctioned the proviso which this amendment proposes to destroy. The hon. gentleman from Niagara undertook, when the matter was before the Committee, to state that he appeared for the Government—that he represented the Government. I took the liberty of saying that I doubted that fact, and when I informed the hon. gentleman that I had learned that the matter had never been before the Government he was not in a position to contradict me. It may have been before the Government since then, but I doubt it. I do not think it is a legitimate argument to use in this House, with a view of influencing the decision of the Senate, that the Government is for or against a measure of this sort. The Speaker has ruled that this is a private Bill, and it does not require the consent of the Government to make this amendment. I hope that this House instead of considering the interests these bondholders, who are pretty well able to take care of themselves in any case, should consider the interests of the people of Ontario; and here is a possibility—this road is a most important link in the railway system of Ontario. There is already complaint in the Province that the Canadian Pacific Railway instead of sending there freight by this route are making arrangements to send it over their own road by Smith's Falls.

It being 6 o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

HON. MR. POWER—The probabilities are that the interests of the people of Toronto and that part of Ontario, and the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway also will before long demand that the Canadian Pacific Railway shall find a direct line from Lake Nipissing or its neighborhood to Toronto. Then the question will come, whether the Canadian Pacific Railway Company shall be obliged to build a new line, or whether they shall be allowed to utilize this line and the lines connected with it which are already built. I think it is to be desired in the interests of the country that no unnecessary road should be built, and the probabilities are that in a little while the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will apply to the Government, or at any rate the Government will be called upon in the public interest to take over this road between Callandar and Gravenhurst, for the purpose of handing it over to the Canadian Pacific Railway under equitable conditions. When that happens the iniquity of this amendment that is now before us will make itself felt. If we do not pass this amendment, the Government will be obliged to pay for only $8,000 worth of bonds per mile and such further sum as the Company may be able to establish that road is worth. The $8,000 and $12,000 make $20,000 per mile; and then, if the Company is able to establish that the road cost them $25,000 a mile, they will be entitled to $5,000 per mile additional. If we accept this amendment and it passes the other House, it will be different. If the Parliament on behalf of the country think it desirable to take over this road, the Government will be obliged in the first instance to pay over $20,000 per mile, making with the $12,000 given as a bonus, $32,000 per mile to that Company; and the Government will have to pay so large a sum of money that it may hinder this very desirable transaction from taking place. It appears to me that no substantial reason has been shown why we should make an amendment here which directly reverses the policy of the amendment made in the House of Commons, and directly reverses the policy which the Government and Parliament adopted in connection with this undertaking some two years ago.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Coming as I do from the western part of Ontario, perhaps the House will permit me to lay before it the position of this railway which has been constructed during the past season. This is a bill relating to the link, or railway line, which connects Callandar with the city of Toronto, the city of Hamilton, and the whole of the western peninsula of Ontario. I cannot help saying that I was surprised during the past season to find that the contractors, or those who had undertaken to construct that line, had used such expedition in carrying out the work, and I have asked many of the leading merchants of Toronto how the promoters of that road had obtained the means of constructing the line with such expedition and in such a satisfactory manner. As I understand, the Government have contributed $12,000 a mile to the road. The company could never have built it for less than $30,000 per mile. It rests now with the Parliament of the country to say whether we are to act fairly and liberally towards a railway company which has been laboring to enable the Province of Ontario to obtain a fair share of the traffic which may come from the great North-West. The Canadian Pacific Railway has been constructed from Montreal to Ottawa, and from Ottawa to connect in the most satisfactory manner with Callandar; and the line has been completed from Callandar to the Pacific coast, and will Parliament say to a company which has succeeded in securing the Ontario link of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that we shall not give them the reasonable terms which they ask? We have simply given them aid to the extent of $12,000 a mile. They do not ask for any more. The argument which the hon. gentleman from Halifax has set forth is that the Government may be called upon to take over that road, but I contend that they will never be called upon to do so. The road has been constructed, as I am informed on good authority, in a most efficient manner, in order to bring the traffic of the North-West to Toronto and all Western Ontario. What could be more reasonable than that the parties interested in the construction of that road should come to Parliament and ask for authority to enable them to float their bonds in such a way as to pay for the work they have done? The work they have done exceeds the estimated cost, and the company have emulated the example of Sir George Stephens' company in the expedition with which they have pushed the construction of the road ; and how can Parliament now turn the cold shoulder when they ask for this amendment to their charter? I ask the hon. gentleman from Halifax to look at the bills brought before us last year by which we were called upon to assume the debts of a small line near St. John? Look at the large amount we have given towards the marine railway across the isthmus? Look at what we have done for the second road to Pictou, and the large amount we are giving to the Maritime Provinces, and I ask how can any member from the Lower Provinces turn on us and say that we should not receive fair and equal justice? Why should those contractors who built that line with such commendable enterprise to serve their country, be ruined? The country does not want to do an injustice to anyone. Surely it is to our interest to protect the large Province which is contributing so largely to the revenue of the country! Surely Parliament cannot turn its back on that Province and say they will allow the contractors to lose everything because they have expended more money than the vote which they got from Parliament!

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I would ask some hon. members who are familiar with this question to inform the House what is the purport of the amendment we are asked to concur in. According to the hon. gentleman from Halifax it would seem that the amendment is in direct opposition to what has been done in the other House. I do not see exactly how an amendment of this character can deserve the support of the Senate. It may be that an error was committed in the other House; but the Senate ought to be made aware of that error if it exists, and it ought to be shown that the best legislation under the circumstances is the amendment asked for.

HON. MR. McCLELAN—The hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat has inquired what bearing the proposed amendment has on the Bill and as I was a member of the committee to whom the Bill was referred, and tried to inform myself as far as I could by listening to the discussion, there—I will try to inform the hon. gentleman as to the nature of this measure and the proposed amendment. Under a contract made with the Government, after Parliament voted $12,000, a mile—which I may say in answer to the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Woodstock is a larger subsidy than I remember as having been given by the Government in aid of any railway in the Maritime Province—this subsidy was given with the understanding and agreement that the company should have bonding powers to any extent they chose, but that the Government should reserve the power to take the road back subject to a debenture mortgage of $8,000 per mile only—that is to say $12,000 per mile already paid as subsidy, and $8,000 of debentures. That is the agreement which now exists between this Company and the Government; $20,000 was to be the basis of the calculation under the original agreement. That was the contract signed and sealed between the Government of Canada and the Company. The amendment inserted in this Bill in another place is in these words:

Provided, that this enactment is without prejudice to the agreement between the Government of Canada and the Company, bearing date the twelfth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, respecting the assumption by the Parliament of Canada of the portion of the said line of railway between Gravenhurst and Callander, which said contract is set forth in Schedule B to this Act.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—Is that the whole line, or part of the line?

HON. MR. McCLELAN—It is part of the line which becomes incorporated in this Bill. The amendment recommended by the Committee on Railways goes on to say:

Be it therefore enacted, that the said contract or agreement shall hereafter be read and construed as if the words "to the amount of eight thousand dollars," wherever the same occur therein, had been "on the said section not exceeding twenty thousand dollars," and that the said contract or agreement is in all other respects hereby ratified and confirmed.

So that if it becomes a necessity for the Government of Canada to take back this road from the company upon the basis of the original agreement they can do so—not on the same terms, however, if this passes, because instead of $8,000 and $12,000, being $20,000 a mile, they will have to take $20,000 and $12,000, or $32,000 a mile, as the basis of calculation. That is to say, $32,000 a mile will be the minimum rate on which the bargain can be made for the transfer of this road. That is the effect of this proposed amendment. The amendment in another place restricted the operation of the law to the original agreement; that is to say, the company had the power to issue as many bonds as they pleased—and have had from the beginning as many bonds as they could float on the market—but the Government retained the right of resuming the ownership of the road by paying $8,000 a mile in addition to the $12,000 a mile given as a subsidy. The argument, as I understand hon. gentlemen who favor the amendment, is, that in the first place the company are in straitened circumstances. To prove that they are in straitened circumstances we have ex parte statements made before the committee, nothing else. It is true we have had a report of Mr. Collingwood Schreiber presented, but he states nothing from his own actual measurements or knowledge.

HON. MR. PLUMB—He is not supposed to measure the railways of the country himself.

HON. MR. McCLELAN—He states what he is informed on the matter.

HON. MR. TURNER—The Government engineer goes over the road, and has to examine the work every time any money is paid by the Government. The Government engineer understood all about it.

HON. MR. McCLELAN—I think Mr. Schreiber takes the contract price to begin with.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Suppose he does, is it not that which governs it?

HON. MR. McCLELAN—We had a discussion in the committee with reference to how the contracts were let, but the information was not such as should justify us in basing any argument on it. Besides that, my hon. friend from Niagara says the company are in a dilemma, and the hon. gentleman from Woodstock agrees with him, and both make a very strong and pathetic appeal to the sympathies of this Chamber in favor of the company.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I have made no such appeal.

HON. MR. McCLELAN—Now, if rumor is correct, the salaries paid to the officials connected with this road do not indicate a low financial condition. I am told that the president of the company is in receipt of a salary of $3,000 a year, and then we have two directors in some way connected with this road, who have the honor of seats in this Chamber, and who, I think, occupied seats on the Committee the other day. I do not know what their salaries may be; but they could not be directors unless they were shareholders. The result of the passing of this Act will be to raise the value of the shares, and I can quite understand how the hon. gentlemen, if they were not Senators, might be influenced by mercenary motives. Being Senators, of course they cannot be actuated in that way, and it is not for me to impute anything of the kind; if they were not Senators their statements might be calculated to mislead the minds of simpler people. We have a right to assume that those hon. gentlemen are not influenced in the remotest degree in the passage of this amendment, inserted in contravention of the action of the House of Commons. I have very little to say further on this subject, inasmuch as the ground has been pretty well gone over by the hon. gentleman from Halifax and other gentlemen. I may say, however, in reply to the remark made by the hon. gentleman who leads the Government in this House, and who took such a very prominent part in the management of this Bill when before the Committee of Railways, when he spoke of the spectacle of a member being brought over from the other House to assist in defeating this amendment, I think it is due to myself, and to that gentlemen, to make some observations on that question, because the responsibility of his addressing the Committee rests largely on my shoulders. Mr. Mulock happened to enter the committee room, and after having heard the explanation given very properly by the manager of one of the roads, Mr. Barker, at considerable length, there were some points which I did not feel altogether clear about, and I asked Mr. Mulock, who happened to be sitting near me, if he understood it and if so if he would explain it. He said that if I wished and the committee would allow him he would do so, and that is the whole history of what the hon. leader of the House has chosen to stigmatize "an unseemly spectacle." I did not suppose there was anything unseemly in it. I did not suppose there was anything unseemly in the fact of myself, a member of the committee, wishing for further information after hearing only one side of the question, and after hearing statements made by a gentleman who is largely interested in the Bill; a gentleman who is no doubt paid, and very properly paid for his duties—after hearing those statements I thought it would not be improper for me to ask a gentleman in the committee room to make a statement, and this reference to a member of the House of Commons and the way that reference has been made by the hon. member from Niagara is rather objectionable. I am only glad that I have the opportunity of entering my solemn protest against this description of legislation and to record my vote in opposition to the proposed amendment.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I preface the observations which I am about to make, and which may be called criticisms of the Bill before us, by the statement that I very cordially agree with what the promoters of this Bill desire to accomplish. I have been fully satisfied with the explanations made in committee, especially by Mr. Barker, and I think it would be wise and proper that the company should have granted to them this extension of their issue of bonds, but I must say that I do not and cannot agree with the mode in which the Bill enacts that that end is to be accomplished. I ask hon. gentlemen to look into the Bill with me and judge whether my criticisms are not really just and worthy of attention—and let it be remembered that I am in favor of the principle of the Bill. I speak as a friend of the Bill, desiring to secure the object which the promoters have in view, but I do not think that it is being accomplished in the right manner. For instance, notice the manner in which the amendment is proposed to be inserted, and observe the inconsistencies. It reads:

"Be it therefore enacted, that the said contract or agreement shall hereafter be read and construed as if the words 'to the amount of $8,000,' wherever the same occur therein had been 'on the said section not exceeding $20,000.'"

Now, what does that mean? We take a document which is presented to us merely for our information under the signature and seal of the contracting parties, and we assume the responsibility and the power of altering that agreement. I contend that no Act of Parliament ought to contain such a clause in it. It is not in our power to vary the terms of a solemn agreement entered into by two contracting parties, unless both the parties signify to us their desire that the change should be made. Is not that a just and fair criticism? Can any hon. gentleman point to any law on our statute books where such a thing has been done as to interfere with the terms of a document signed and sealed and merely given to Parliament for information? Such a thing has never been done, and it is a new feature altogether to introduce into our legislation. Entertaining that view I do not think the words added to the first section of the Bill are at all appropriate, where it says, "and varied by section three of this Act." We there set forth again deliberately the fact that we are varying the terms of the contract made by other parties. I contend it is entirely wrong, and that the object of the promoters would be far better achieved by striking out the whole of the words "which said contract is set forth in Schedule B to this Act." If they were struck out it would not impair in any way the efficiency of the Bill. Then this clause "A," proposed to be inserted should also be changed, and instead of saying "be it therefore enacted that the said contract or agreement shall be changed," let us give the contracting parties the power to make the alteration. I should say that the clause ought to be "be it therefore enacted that the parties to the said contract may alter the terms thereof to the extent desired." This we have the power to do, as it is only authorizing those parties to make a new contract or alter the old contract to this extent; but I hold that we cannot change the contract without their consent, and no official intimation of such consent has been presented. If hon. gentlemen look a little further on they will see the utter absurdity of the amendment, and the very awkward position its adoption will place us in before the other House and before the country. The latter part of the amendment reads:

"Provided, however, that in no case shall the amount of the bonds or debentures to be assumed be greater than the amount thereof consented to by the lessees in terms of the said lease of the twenty-fourth day of June, 1885."

What is this contract of the 24th June, 1885? Not the contract already spoken of between the Government and the company. This is a contract between the different railway companies that is referred to, and do not hon. gentlemen see that this amendment provides that it is not to be interfered with? Turn for a moment to the Bill before you, on page 8, and what do we find:

"The Parliament of Canada may, if it see fit, cancel the said lease and take over the said railway, free from incumbrance, upon assumption of the bonds or debenture debts of the lessor company to the amount of $8,000 per mile of railway."

You will observe that this is to remain in force by the very clause which is proposed to be added to the Bill, because it is provided that in no case shall the amount of bonds or debentures to be assumed be greater than the amount thereof consented to by the lessees in terms of the said lease of the 24th day of June, 1885. Is not that a direct, and obvious and indisputable contradiction—one part of the Act saying that it shall be raised to $20,000, and another part saying that in no case shall it go beyond the $8,000? The friends of the Bill will see that I am not opposing it by pointing out its inconsistencies, and endeavoring that the Bill shall leave this House in such a shape that it shall not make us a laughing stock. Those blunders will be pointed out, and will tend to the formation of a very low estimate of the care and attention given by the Senate to measures of this kind. I think regard to our own credit should lead us to be careful and see that a measure going to the other House should be made consistent and that it is expressed in terms that will indicate clearly the object in view in passing such legislation. I hope the friends of the Bill will accept my suggestion, and will bring into proper shape at the third reading.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I am thankful to the hon. gentleman for the explanation which he has given before I vote on the Bill. I found this amendment so monstrous that I never thought the Committee would have reported the Bill in such a shape. That is the reason why I asked for the explanation. It is true that one or two gentlemen from Ontario have stated that the parties who have built the road have been ruined by their enterprise, and that it would be only right for the Government to come to their assistance; but, if I am correct, there was a time when the Province of Quebec built a road which cost her $14,000,000, and which she had to sell for $8,000,000, and when assistance was asked from the Federal Government, Quebec did not even receive that proportion of the money which she had a right to, because the North Shore, and the Quebec, Montreal & Occidental Roads having been sold to the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Province of Quebec was entitled to receive for those roads as forming part of the Canadian Pacific Railway, $20,000 per mile. It will be remembered that Quebec was granted only $12,000 per mile for the section of the road between Ottawa and Montreal, and $6,000 per mile for the section between Montreal and Quebec, so that she did not receive what she was entitled to receive. Now we are asked not only to give to this company what they have no right to have, but we are asked to consider the claims of the contractors who have built the road, and who cannot be paid because the company will not issue more bonds. Before a man is generous he should at least be just when he is dealing with the public money. He must first decide what is right and what is wrong. Parliament has no right to grant this money. Parliament may steal—if they vote money which is not theirs I say they are stealing, because according to the natural law of every country they are responsible for the public money, and they have no right to vote it away illegally. They are administrators of the public funds, and they have to administer them according to justice and equity, and this has all to be considered before hon. members can vote money to this company. There is something extraordinary in this Bill; there seems to be jobbery behind it. I do not know where it is, but there are parties here who are, by intrigues which I have seen in the lobbies and in the Committee Rooms of both Houses, jobbers!—living on the public money and asking public men to steal from the treasury to help them to a living! I believe this is a case in point. The way the Bill has been conducted shows it to be so. I have no doubt that the promoters of the Bill are not in those secrets, and like other members of Parliament they have taken charge of this Bill as it was offered to them, and believing that it is all right, are using every effort to have it passed. But whoever may be the promoters of it, it is the duty of every hon. member in Parliament to search to the bottom of this matter and see what is right and what is wrong. As far as I can see, this scheme is bad from the beginning. Even if it were not so bad as I have just stated, no good reason has been shown why so large a sum of the public money as $32,000 a mile should be given to this company in case the Government should take over the road. I say that no good reason has yet been adduced to justify Parliament in putting its hand into the public treasury and handing the public money over to save some contractors or some other gentlemen who have risked their money in building this road. No doubt the railway is an advantage to Ontario; but Ontario is no worse position than Quebec was. It is well known that the Canadian Pacific Railway, according to the original contract, was to be a line from Callander station to the Pacific coast. The Eastern terminus at Callander was a great distance from Quebec. That Province did not complain, however, and does not yet complain, although she hopes the present Government will see their way to do justice to Quebec, and vote them the $6,000 per mile to which she is entitled from the Federal Treasury in consideration of the building of the North Shore road. Before Parliament is generous to those railway contractors or promoters of this road in Ontario, we should be just to Quebec. The Bill as it stands shows that there is something wrong, and I would suggest that it be postponed for another year that we may consider what is the best course to take in the matter.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Before the question in put, I think it is due to myself as having proposed the amendment to this Bill to say a few words. We have drifted very far away from the question. The House has been, by the eloquent addresses of certain gentlemen on the opposite side, made to believe that there is some gigantic fraud connected with this Bill.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I believe so. I do not say there is, but it looks like it.

HON. MR. McCLELAN—I rise to a point of order the hon. gentleman from Niagara has already spoken on this motion, and he is not in order to make a second speech.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Then I move the adjournment of the House.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman cannot make any motion; he has already spoken.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—You are done for to-day.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—It seems to me that the origin of this Bill is pretty well concealed from us. We have not even the advantage of knowing the source of its paternity. Some hon. gentleman speak of those contractors who are concerned in this work as being ruined. No contractor has ever applied to this House or to Parliament on any such subject. The contractors would repudiate any allegation made against their ability to construct this road. This Bill is here, and nobody can tell how it came here except we judge of it by the company it keeps. The simple fact in this contract is this: the Government offered a bonus of $12,000 a mile for the construction of a road from Gravenhurst to Callandar, a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway. That is one of the largest bonuses that has ever been given to any road in Canada. That is a simple proposition of itself, as far as the Government were concerned. The Government might well say, and the country might well believe the Government, that when they offered that bonus they were done with the responsibility. They say "let a company go into existence that will construct that road, and in proportion as they go on with the work this $12,000 per mile will be paid out." Beyond that the Government says to such a company "you can bond the road to the extent $8,000 a mile on the security of $12,000 bonus, and there will be no difficulty in your borrowing $8,000 more anywhere." That is the provision in this contract with the Government of Canada. The Government have no more obligation in the matter except that the company constructing the road may say "we are not able to go on with it; we cannot finish it," then the Government are in the position to say "if you cannot go on with it we will take it off your hands and finish it, because we are in a position to do so. We never gave you $12,000 a mile to allow you to do just what you pleased with it, and to give us any account you like about it." That is the state of of the matter. What is said of it in the other House? If you read the official report of the debate you will find that the Premier states to the president of this road that it is a job of blackmailing. I will read you his words:

It was no fault of the House and no fault of the Canadian Pacific Railway that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) did not bring this matter before the House two months ago, and the reason why it was not brought down before, I have no hesitation in saying, is that it is for the purpose of putting the screw to the railway, because they happened to come and make a reasonable proposition to this House. They say: You shall not have what by resolution we declared the other day was right. This Bill is founded on certain resolutions. Those resolutions were considered in committee in full. They were discussed upon their merits, and upon their merits it was decided that a Bill should be founded upon them, and at the last moment the hon. gentleman says: I know we have no right to do it, but we will force the Canadian Pacific Railway by putting the screw to them. I think it is unfair. I have no hesitation in saying it is unfair. It is done in a sort of blackmailing system by the Northern Railway in a way I do not like, and there is no necessity for it in the world.

HON. MR TURNER—Be kind enough to read the recantation of it.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—I am only stating that as the fact; you may give it what weight you please. I have read the sentence as it is reported here, not one syllable more or less. I do not say that it was right or that it was wrong, or that the term used was such a term as should have been used. At all events the gentleman who is president of this road, a member of Parliament, had charge of the Bill, and the amendment that he carried in that House came down to us. But the friends of the Bill in this House, not satisfied with the amendment made in the Commons, thought it would be better to get a larger bonding power than they had even by Mr. McCarthy's amendment passed some eight or ten days ago. Why is that? Who in this House had such an interest in this Bill as to ask to amend it to that extent? We see something that could not occur in England. We know that when members of Parliament in England are pecuniarily interested in a bill they do not vote—they cannot vote in committee or out of it—and it is a rule that should be insisted upon, and if we desire to preserve the dignity of this House the more it is insisted upon here the better. It is not seemly to see a Minister of the Crown drawing money from this institution, the president of the Northern Railway, a director in this—it is not seemly to find him in committee pressing this measure through and calling out "carried" before there is even time to read the Bill. That is not a seemly position for the hon. Minister from Toronto, I mean the Hon. Frank Smith. With the assistance of the gentleman who is acting for him in almost every capacity here, the hon. member from Niagara, he does not occupy a seemly position. Then I find another director in the member from Hamilton. His activity is noticeable in like manner in connection with this Bill. That is not seemly, and the sooner it is stopped the better, because we all know if we speak out our minds on the subject that a Minister of the Crown carries a certain amount of influence about him, and that he can carry measures through Parliament which, without that influence cannot be carried? I will read from May for the satisfaction of the House and in justification of the statement I have made, what the practice is in England :

"The votes of members interested in Private Bills, have frequently been disallowed. On the 20th May, 1825, notice was taken that a member who had voted with the yeas on the report of the Leith Docks' Bill, had a direct pecuniary interest in passing the Bill. He was heard in his place; and having allowed that he had a direct pecuniary interest in passing the Bill; that on that account he had not voted in the Committee on the Bill; and that he had voted, in this instance, through inadvertence, his vote was ordered to be disallowed."

* * * * *

"In 1796, a general resolution was proposed in the Lords, 'That no peers shall vote who are interested in a question;' but it was not adopted. It is presumed, however, that such a resolution was deemed unnecessary; and that it was held that the personal honour of a peer will prevent him from forwarding his own peculiar interest by his votes in Parliament. By Standing Order No. 178, lords are exempted from serving on the Committee on any Private Bill, wherein they shall have any interest."

* * * * *

"On the 27th June, three different propositions were submitted to the consideration of the House, in answer to the question suggested by the Committee, which, after a debate; were all ultimately withdrawn; when the House agreed to an instruction to the Committee, 'that the rule of this House relating to the vote, upon any question in the House, of a member having an interest in the matter upon which the vote is given, applies likewise to any vote of a member so interested in a Committee.' Since that time, Committees on opposed Private Bills have been constituted so as to exclude members locally or personally interested; and in Committees on unopposed Bills, such members are not entitled to vote. And a member of a Committee on an opposed Private Bill, or group of Bills, will be discharged from any further attendance, if it be discovered after his appointment that he has a direct pecuniary interest in the Bills, or one of them."

Now what are we asked to do here? We are asked, under the influences to which I have referred, to increase the bonding power of this Company from $8,000 to $20,000 a mile. Has any reason for this been shown? It is said that the Government Engineer made a statement as to the cost of the road. Who in this House can tell a word about that statement? The statement is simply that from certain data such results would appear. What knowledge have we of that? We have no knowledge of it; yet we are asked to go it blind. We are asked to put our hands into the public purse; we are asked to fill up a few men's pockets out of the public funds. That is what we are asked to do. My hon. friend from Delanaudiere spoke of this as a case of jobbery; I have no hesitation in saying with him that it is just as black a case of jobbery as ever came before this House at any period of its history. Where is our right to do a thing of this sort? If those people made a contract to build the road, why not leave them to their contract? Have they made out a case before us for the rescision of the contract made between the Government and the company and those several railroads? Yet if this amendment should pass, it will act as a rescision of that contract. The thing is perfectly monstrous, such as I never before heard of. The letting of the contract for this road was done in a very peculiar manner. The company went through the form of calling for tenders. We had an account of the number of tenders, from the manager, in committee. A large number came in, some of them were only for sections of the road. They were rejected, although the application for tenders mentioned that tenders would be taken for sections of the road. Then the number of tenders came down to a few, and from that they fell down to one. Shortly afterwards there was a company organized and the work was let without tender. It was let at so much per yard, and the measurement was, as a matter of course, to be thereafter ascertained. It was let without tender, and let to whom? Let to the company of which Mr. Hendrie of Hamilton is the chief monied man, and who was President of one of the roads, and I believe he is Director of this. I am not sure of that exactly. Then he did not become the contractor himself, but his son became the monied man in the contract. Look at that connection? Look at that contract, let without a tender, and then ask yourselves if a high price is charged against it why is it so? If that contract had been let bona fide to the highest tender for its construction, who would say that this contract would have cost as much as is charged? On these grounds, and believing that this is a job, and a dark job, one that this House should be above countenancing, I shall have great pleasure in voting against this in every phase.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—It is very extraordinary when people see through different spectacles how differently things appear. The hon. gentleman from Toronto has just treated us to the statement, although he sat in the committee as well as I did, that this contract was let without a tender, when he is perfectly well aware of the fact that his statement is totally wrong. It was tendered for, and it was not Mr. Hendrie who took it at all.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—Was not Mr. Hendrie in the contract?

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I say that Mr. Hendrie was not in the contract. The contract was taken by one firm. We all know that private individuals, as well as public companies, do not always take the lowest tender. I have myself erected buildings and have given $4,000 more for stone work than another man offered to do it for, but I wanted to have the work done in time. Mr. Hendrie did not get the contract: another firm got it and later on found it to their advantage to take Mr. Hendrie in, not on his tender, but on their own. Again we find the assertion made by the hon. member from Toronto that this is a dark job. He criticises the action of the hon. member from Hamilton and the hon. member from Niagara; he looks through a different shade of spectacles now to what he did twelve months ago. At that time you would not have found him criticising, as he does to-day, those matters most unfairly. He has made assertions about this road in support of which he brings no proof. We have no evidence that any of those contracts were given out unfairly or improperly. The work was done by contract and given to the best men that would take it. Again, he states that we are asking to put our hands into the public purse; I do not know that he said we were stealing the money, but it was almost that—that we were taking the money out of the public treasury. The amendment to this Bill does not ask us to take out any money at all, if I understand it. It asks for leave to issue bonds to the extent of $20,000 a mile. That does not oblige the Government, should they ever take the road over, to pay any more than its value. They do not guarantee those bonds. They are issued by the railroad company, and those who choose to buy them take the railway, and not Parliament, as guarantee for those bonds. That, at least, is the way I understand it, and that being the case all this talk that we have heard around the House about putting our hands in the public purse and abstracting so much money is simply talk for talk's sake; any sensible man knows it is not the case. The hon. gentleman from Delandiere made some assertions that I think are open to correction. He tells you about a certain railway that cost $14,000,000 and sold for $8,000,000. He ought to know very well that the statement is wrong, that the railway cost nothing of the kind.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—How much did it cost?

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I simply state that his assertion is wrong and he knows it.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—It has cost all that, and the figures are there to prove the correctness of my statement.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—The assertion is incorrect; the railway cost no such a price.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—There is no use in denying it: facts are stubborn things.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I repeat, notwithstanding what you say—

HON. MR. WARK—I call the hon. gentleman to order: these gentlemen should sit down until we see if they can carry on a discussion across the floor.

THE SPEAKER—It is quite out of order to carry on a discussion across the floor of the House.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I hope I was not out of order. I simply wished to correct a statement that was wrong. I did that, and that is all I desire to do. I did not want to discuss the subject of the roads of Quebec and would not have referred to it had it not been brought into this debate, but I say no fair minded man, who does not come here prejudiced against this Bill, can object to the amendment. I can quite understand an objection like that made by the hon. member from Sarnia, that there may be a clerical error in it, but as far as the principle of the amendment is concerned, it is not taking one dollar of the money of Canada, and it will facilitate the opening of a valuable road that I think should be in operation and kept open and equipped with better stock than it possesses at the present time. It would be better for Montreal probably that that road should not be in first-class running order; but I hope we are not so jealous of the success of other provinces and cities that we should not be willing to grant everything that is required to facilitate the commerce of the country.

HON. MR. WARK—I think the statement of the hon. member who has just sat down is not carried out by the statement of the mover of this Bill. He said it was necessary to pass this Bill because the bonds were lying in the Bank of Montreal and not negotiable. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken says this will not affect the value of the bonds in the slightest degree. There is one point connected with this which no one has explained—why the Government put a provision into this Bill that they do not generally, that is the right of taking over the road. I remember when this line was first subsidized, the subsidy was $6,000 a mile, and they came back a second time and it was increased to $12,000. The reason assigned for the increase was that it was to be a road for the benefit of a number of railways which wished to connect with the Canadian Pacific Railway. It was understood that all other roads that wanted access to the Canadian Pacific Railway, no matter what cities they were connected with, should have fair running privileges over this road, and it was intended when that clause was inserted in the contract that unless the company gave them all equal rights and privileges the Government would assume the control and take it out of the company's hands. A time may come when Parliament will have to take this road back, and therefore we would be entirely wrong to saddle it with any additional expense. I think that when they got $20,000 a mile, if they had handled the money judiciously they could have built the road for that amount. There are such things as construction companies, by which a road can be made to cost anything you please. The way to do with this would be to strike out the amendment and send it back to the House of Commons just as it came, and in taking that course we would be doing nothing more than our duty.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I did not intend to weary this House, but merely to correct a statement of the hon. member from Toronto with regard to something said by the Premier in the House of Commons. I find him reported in the Citizen of the 16th instant, as follows:—

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he wished, before the orders of the day was called, to refer to the unfair use that was being made of his language in the discussion on the Bill for the relief of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It was alleged by the Opposition press that in that debate he had charged his honourable friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) with having black-mailed Parliament and the Government. Such a charge would have been very unjust to his hon. friend, and he had no hesitation in saying that it would also have been untrue. He did not say so. The language he used was with reference to the application of the Northern railway, and with respect to that application he had perhaps, under the heat of debate, spoken too strongly, because that railway, like any other institution, had a right to press its interests upon the attention of Parliament. It was true that his hon. friend from North Simcoe was connected with the Northern road, but he had taken great care, both in his amendment and in his argument, to sever himself from his interest in that road. The hon. gentleman had stated that he had received an amendment—presumably from the executive of the Northern—to be moved in the House, but thinking the amendment went too far and was more in the direction of the railway's interest than in the interest of the country, he had declined to introduce it in the House, and had introduced an amendment of his own, which he thought was altogether based upon what he had considered to be the interest of the trade and commerce of Ontario. His whole line of argument was based upon that principle. He (Sir John) differed from the hon. gentleman in that regard, as he then thought and still thought, that the railway and transport business of Ontario would be fully protected by the law as it stood at present. He was exceedingly sorry that any language used by him in the heat of debate should have caused any misapprehension, and he had no doubt it had given his hon. friend great pain.

That was the explanation. Now with regard to the Bill, as I understand, it comes before the House in this shape: the road was estimated to be built for $20,000 a mile; $12,000 was given by the Government of Canada and $8,000 was supposed to be raised on the bonds of the company. When that work was undertaken the line had not been so thoroughly examined as subsequently, but when it was examined it was found that it would cost $32,000 a mile. The twenty thousand dollars was simply for the road itself, without including the equipment. The Government sent their Chief Engineer to examine and report upon the line. Mr. Schreiber is a man who is not known to throw away much money. His reputation is that he looks pretty well after it. He states in his report, after going over all the items which the contractors have paid and estimating the work to be done:—

In explanation of this I may say that the original estimate of $20,000 per mile did not include rolling stock, as it was said that the road was to be operated with the stock of the Northern and Northwestern Railway, neither did it cover the length in excess of 110 miles, there being a mile and a quarter additional length. There appears to be no doubt that the works which were originally covered by the estimate of $2,200,000 will, when completed, cost a sum of not less than $2,900,000, the country traversed being very much tougher and heavier than it was believed to be when the original estimate was made, and the bridging being of a much more durable and costly character than was specified. If the rolling stock is to be provided, the cost will no doubt reach $3,200,000."

That would be $32,000 a mile. As I understand, when this road was first arranged for by the Government a clause was inserted in the Act, such as is put in many English railway charters, that the Government could take possession of the road.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Merely to hold a check on rates; they had no idea of buying it.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—They very properly put this clause in the Bill. If the Government have any idea of taking over the road they should surely pay what it cost. They took the only course open to them; they sent their Chief Engineer to see what it cost. This company has a right to raise $20,000 per mile by bond on this road, and if the Government took it over it must be on the certificate of their Chief Engineer. I do not see any other course that the Government could take under the circumstances. I do not see any course that any bank which was going to advance the money, or any other corporation could take than to obtain the opinion of the chief officer of the Government. So far as this is concerned, therefore, I do not see that they are going to steal any money by it. On the contrary, it is not to be expected, now that the road is leased in perpetuity, that they will do so, but if they take it over they will take it at what the railway cost.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—There was something said by the hon. gentleman from Montreal which requires explanation. There was a contest about the cost of the North Shore Railway. The hon. gentleman from DeLanaudiere said the cost was $15,000,000. The statement was denied by my hon. friend from Montreal. Those contradictory statements having been made, I asked the hon. gentleman from Montreal to say how much, in his opinion, that road really had cost. As a matter of fact, I think we may say that the precise cost of the road has never been ascertained, because all the documents up to a certain date were burned at Quebec, and at another time a part of the documents were burned in Hochelaga. There has been a good deal of discussion about the real cost of the road: if I remember right the Quebec Government itself admitted that the cost of the Railway was about $15,000,000. and the Opposition at the time claimed that it was $19,000,000. It is well known that when the road was sold it was so difficult to ascertain the precise amount of the cost that after it was sold, not less than $600,000 was expended by the Government to complete some portions of it, and put it in the condition in which it should be to deliver it to the purchasers. Therefore I think the statement of the hon. gentleman from DeLanaudiere did not warrant a contradiction. On the merits of the question, another assertion has been made to which I wish to allude. It has been stated that the Government will be perfectly at liberty not to take the road, and therefore this amendment does not amount to taking money from the treasury of the country. That is true in a certain sense. It is very true that by this amendment we do not force the Government to give money—that it will require other legislation before the Government can incur any expense in connection with that road. But there is this point: If I understand the matter right, the Government has stipulated in the public interest, that at any date they have the right to take the railway by re-imbursing a certain sum to the present owners. This is a right which belonged to the country, and now, if this amendment is carried, in what position will the country be placed? It will not be able to use this road or acquire it except by re-imbursing to the owners $12,000 a mile more than they had agreed to before.

HON. MR. TURNER—No, that is not it.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—They will reimburse $12,000 a mile more because the road will have cost so much more. If the Government, in the interests of the public, choose to take back this railway from the present owners, I agree that it is but fair and equitable that they should be reimbursed for the sum expended upon it; but the point to which I object is this, that we, the Senate, in advance of this action, in which it seems to me the Government in the House of Commons should take the initiative—we, the Senate, lay down the principle that the country will not be in a position to maintain its right to take back this road unless the country pays $12,000 a mile more.

HON. MR. TURNER—We cannot get one cent more for the road than it cost. If out of this bonded debt of $20,000 a mile we only spend $15,000 a mile, we could not get more than $15,000.

HON. MR. SCOTT—You could under this Bill.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—It is nevertheless true that according to this stipulation I do not believe it would be fair for the Government to take advantage of the contract and give the country the benefit of the $12,000 a mile at the expense of the proprietors of the railway; but in the meantime it is not the less true that we are virtually laying down the principle that this which I have mentioned shall be done.

HON. MR. TRUDEL.

HON. MR. TURNER—We have the particulars of the cost there now.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I am not discussing the question of the cost—that is the figures. I only say this, that the amendment is tantamount to deciding that we lay down the principle that the Government, to maintain the rights acquired by the contract, will be obliged to buy it at a cost of $12,000 more per mile. By public money we do not mean merely the cash in the treasury of the country, but we mean all the rights and property of the Dominion. This is a right which the country has now—the right to take this road by reimbursing the owners $8,000 a mile.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Does the gentleman wish the Government to take this road for less than it actually costs?

HON. MR. TRUDEL—Not at all. What I wish to say is, first, that we should not lay down a wrong principle, and secondly, what I want to do is not to allow such a statement as the one which has been made here—that this Bill does not change the position of the Government—to go uncontradicted. As a matter of fact I say it does change the position of the Government. We, the Senate of Canada, tell the Government: up to the present time you have had a right to take this railway by re-imbursing $8,000 per mile; we make an amendment by which to-morrow if this Bill is passed, in case you the Government want to exercise the right which you possess under this contract, will be obliged to pay $12,000 per mile. That is the position in which you are placing the country. It is a proposition which is perfectly distinct from the other one—should the Government consent to give $12,000 per mile—is it fair or equitable that it should be done? That is quite another proposition and I am ready to decide it in the negative. I do not think that such legislation should be initiated in our House and that we should take the responsibility of it.

The Senate divided on the motion which was agreed to by the following vote:—

HON. MR. TURNER moved the third reading of the Bill.

HON. MR. SCOTT—It cannot take the final stage to-day. If hon. gentlemen on the Committee had not been so arbitrary about changes, this Bill might have gone through; but they would not hear a single word. The hon. gentleman from Sarnia pointed out where it was irregular and inconsistent, but they would not listen to him.

HON. MR. TURNER—The whole object of the opposition is to gain time with a view to having the Bill thrown out in the House of Commons.

HON. MR. POWER—As I understand the question has been raised as to whether it can be read the third time.

THE SPEAKER—I think under our rules, as the Bill has not taken a stage to-day, it can be read the third time. Had we not dealt with the question under our rules, I should have had some doubt on the point, but I think dealing with the subject by our own rule sets the matter at rest, and the only restriction with regard to reading the Bill is that each reading shall be on a separate day. Of course concurrence on the amendments is not a stage in that sense of the term, and if the hon. gentleman insists on his motion it can be put.

HON. MR. POWER—I rise for the purpose of proposing an amendment :

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that the following words be added to Clause A: "And provided that, in the event of Parliament of Canada deciding to take over the said Railway under provision of the contract set forth in Schedule B, the sum to be paid for the said railway shall in no case exceed $20,000 a mile, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in this Act or in the said contract."

That amendment, or one like it, was proposed in the Committee by the hon. gentleman from Ottawa when this Bill was first before it, and I understood then that it seemed to meet with the concurrence of the majority of the members of the Committee. I wish to point out one or two reasons why this amendment should be accepted. It is desirable, no doubt, that if the Government take over this road, they shall not be obliged to pay an unfair price for it. It has been alleged here to-day that the Government engineer certifies that that road when completed fully will cost about $32,000 a mile. I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that this amendment covers just that sum. The Government have already paid $12,000 a mile.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—What is the good of putting that amendment?

HON. MR. POWER—If my hon. friend will keep cool I shall let him know. Under this amendment the Government will pay $20,000. They have already paid $12,000. That is the outside estimate of the cost of the road. This House cannot find any excuse for not adopting the amendment. With regard to the suggestion made by the hon. member from Alberton, I may say this: that hon. gentleman I think has been long enough in public life and knows enough about railway business to understand that when a company have a railway to sell, it is not a difficult thing to make it appear by figures that that road has cost a great deal more than the cash which has been actually put into it, and this amendment is simply to protect the public interests. It takes the statement now put forward by the promoters of the Bill, and says the country shall not be obliged, if they take over this road, to pay any more than the promoters now say that the line is going to cost. I think that is a perfectly reasonable and proper amendment, and I hope the promoter of the Bill will accept it.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The promoter of the Bill is unable to accept any such amendment.

HON. MR. POWER—The promoter of the Bill is the hon. gentleman behind me.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I have a right to speak on the subject, and I propose to do so, and the hon. gentleman has no right to designate who shall speak on it.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman has not the right to speak for any member who is present and has not asked him to do so. I simply ask the hon. gentleman whether he has any objection to accept the amendment.

HON. MR. TURNER—Decidedly I have.

HON. MR. SCOTT—This proposition seemed so manifestly fair and reasonable to the Committee—I was not there the first day that it met—that it was generally acquiesced in. The promoter of the Bill himself was disposed to accept it; but as the amendment has been drawn up by a gentleman outside of the Committee, it was stated that it was desirable that they should be consulted before the promoters would commit themselves to the acceptance of this proposition. No one advocating the Bill for one moment contended that it was proposed to increase the expenditure beyond the $32,000. On the contrary, it was stated by gentlemen there who had a right to know, being connected with the road, that the amount to be issued in bonds would not be $20,000, and that the object was to keep down the bonded debt. I said "Now name an outside sum that you would like to put in the Bill," and this outside sum was mentioned as one which would meet all difficulties; however, it was pointed out by myself that in the original Bill the Government had the option of taking over the road by paying $8,000 and such further sum as the arbitrators might think it was fairly worth. The Government are bound under any circumstances—and here I desire to correct several mis-statements which have been made—to pay the value of this road, assuming it cost more than the $20,000 or $25,000, whatever its value might be. Now the alteration makes the Government pay, not the value of the road, but what it cost. You may unduly swell the cost of a road. I think it is not unfair that we should lay down a limit and say that the Government, if they have to take over the road, need not necessarily pay what the company choose to expend upon it. This House is laying down the proposition that it is not what the thing itself is worth, or what it would actually cost under proper administration, that is to be the criterion, but what has been expended upon it. The original Bill fixed the limit at $8,000 and such further sum as the road might be worth. As it is now amended the Government are not to do that, but they are to take it at what the owners of the road say they have spent on it. They say it is not going to cost more than $20,000 in addition to what has been already expended. Then I say put the limit at $20,000, does not that seem to be a reasonable proposition? It is not pretended that the expenditure now contemplated, assuming that all that has been laid out has been judiciously and prudently spent, will exceed that. The promoters of the road have endeavored to make out a case that the road cannot cost up to the $32,000—that that is an excessive sum. Then I say lay that down as the limit. We know that that is an outside figure. Is it not fair, then, to say that the sum they have to pay shall not exceed $20,000? If you do not say that, you make $20,000 the starting point and such further sum as the company may have expended.

HON. MR. POWER.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—How are you going to ascertain the value of the road?

HON. MR. TURNER—By arbitration.

HON. MR. SCOTT—The words of the arbitration clause read in this way :

Parliament of Canada may, if it see fit, cancel the said lease and take over the said railway free from encumbrance upon assumption of the bond or debenture debts of the lessor company to the amount of eight thousand dollars per mile of the railway, and upon payment of such further sum of money beyond the said bond debts of eight thousand dollars per mile and the said subsidy, as the said railway may then be worth, the value thereof to be ascertained, in case the Government and the company cannot agree by arbitration.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—How can the public be robbed by this?

HON. MR. SCOTT—We are changing all that now.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—The value has been fixed by the report of the Chief Engineer.

HON. MR. SCOTT—We have no evidence of that kind. We have an ex parte statement. I say we are nullifying that clause. I state that as a lawyer and a Senator—we are nullifying that. We are laying down a proposition that the Government, if the company choose to issue bonds to the extent of $20,000 a mile, will have to pay that.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—If they take the road.

HON. MR. SCOTT—Yes, if they take the road.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—But they will only do so on the valuation of their Chief Engineer.

HON. MR. SCOTT—Instead of taking it on the value of the road, we take it on the cost.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—No, no.

HON. MR. SCOTT—Of course the hon. gentleman can have his reading of it : I have mine.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—The Government acts on the report of their Chief Engineer. If the hon. gentleman was the Minister of Railways he could do no more.

HON. MR. SCOTT—Does the hon. gentleman tell me that an ex parte statement is to govern us.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—It is not an ex parte statement.

HON. MR. VIDAL moved

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be amended as follows :

That all the third section of clause A after the word "enacted" in the first line thereof be left out and the following substituted therefor : "That the parties to the said contract may alter the terms thereof to the effect that an amount not exceeding $20,000 per mile may be substituted for the amount of $8,000 per mile, as the limit to which the assumption of the bond or debenture debt by Parliament may extend."

He said : I shall not occupy the attention of the House, as I have already stated this evening my reasons for wishing to have such an amendment made.

HON. MR. PLUMB—It is precisely the same thing we have voted down.

HON. MR. SCOTT—No, there is a misconception as to that.

HON. GENTLEMEN—Lost, lost !

HON. MR. POWER—I do not see why hon. gentlemen should say that it is lost. I do not think they understand the effect of the amendment.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Of course not ; we are very obtuse—it is the very same principle.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I believe it is pretty well shown that there were good reasons for opposing concurrence in the amendments to the Bill before the House. The last amendments which were voted down I supported because I thought it was the best way to see whether the promoters of the Bill intended themselves that the door should be left open to anyone who wished to make a job of it. It has been stated three or four times to-day that the amount the railway would cost would be $32,000 per mile. By both of the first amendments it was proposed to give that money, but the House refused that because they thought it was better to leave it to arbitrators to say how much the road cost the company. It was stated in committee to-day that the cost was not as much as $32,000. If the House was willing to do what was right, and to give the parties what they are entitled to, that is justice, even at the expense of the Government, they would have accepted the amendment, and I favored the amendment in order to show to the public what was aimed at by the present Bill.

The Bill was then read the third time, as amended, and passed.

QUEBEC HARBOR IMPROVEMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill 140, "An Act respecting the Improvement of the Harbor of Quebec." He said: This is a Bill respecting the improvement of the Harbor of Quebec by which it is proposed that in addition to the sum already advanced for the purpose of improving that harbor, the Governor in Council may raise by the issue of debentures, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding four per cent., a further sum of $750,000 to enable them to complete their wet and tidal docks now in course of construction.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

DUNVILLE DAM AND BRIDGE TOLLS BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill (139) "An Act respecting tolls over the Dunville Dam and Bridge connecting works constructed over the Grand River." He said:—The preamble of this Bill recites that the public convenience shall be greatly advanced if the tolls shall be abolished on this bridge. There is but one section in the Bill, and I move the second reading.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

CARLETON CITY OF ST. JOHN RAILROAD BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Bill (137) "An Act respecting the Carleton City of St. John Branch Railroad," was reported from Committee without amendment.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES LAW AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill (133) "An Act further to amend the law respecting the North-West Territories." He said: This Bill is to provide for the appointment of judges and to establish a supreme court of record and of original and appellate jurisdiction in the North-West.

HON. MR. POWER—I think this is a Bill of so much consequence, that the gentleman in charge should give a little information on the subject at the second reading. It has the effect, among other things, of establishing a Court up in the North-West Territories which is to cost the country at the rate of about $1 a head for the whole population of the North-West. We have at present a system there which I think is good enough and expensive enough for the Territories; and when we are making so important a change, at any rate the Minister or Minister pro tem or quasi Minister in charge of the Bill should explain to the House why the measure is necessary.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I wish to explain to the hon. gentleman that the salaries of those judges although amounting to $1 a head of the population is not to be paid by the people of the North-West. The provisions of the Bill are perfectly simple and I will explain them in Committee.

HON. MR. POWER—It is unusual that a gentleman in charge of a Bill, when asked to explain it, should refuse to do so.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The Bill is perfectly simple and easily explained. The hon. gentleman supposes that because I do not happen to be of the legal profession that I am not able to explain the provisions of so simple a Bill as this.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—The Bill explains itself.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I will explain it, to satisfy the hon. gentleman from Halifax.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—He is very unreasonable to ask for an explanation of so simple a bill—it is merely to detain the House that he asks it.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

THE SPEAKER—It is understood that the seventh order goes to the foot of the orders on the list for to-morrow.

The Senate adjourned at 10:25 p.m.

THE SENATE

Ottawa, Friday, May 28th, 1886.

THE Speaker took the Chair at three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THE LATE JOHN GRAY.

MOTION.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE moved

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying His Excellency to be pleased to cause to be laid before this House, a copy of the Minute of the Treasury Board and Order-in-Council appointing the late John Gray Deputy Collector of Inland Revenue at Prescott, and also a copy of the Order-in-Council or other Order cancelling said appointment, with their respective dates.

HON. MR. SMITH—I will just say a word by way of explanation before I speak of the papers that are asked for. There came a vacancy in the collectorship of Customs at Prescott in consequence of the Collector having been superannuated. It was the desire of the Government and of the Minister of Inland Revenue to do something for the late John Gray. They found, however, that owing to the state of his health he would not be able to take charge of that office as Collector. In talking with him they decided not to appoint him Collector at Prescott, but to appoint him Deputy Collector for Stratford. They did so appoint him and he went to Stratford, and staid there some ten days or a couple of weeks. His health became so bad that he then applied for leave of absence in order to go down to Prescott and take some rest and see if he could not get better. Leave of absence was granted to him and he returned to Prescott, and he was never able, after going home, to return to his duties. He was attended by his medical adviser, and he was unable to return to Stratford. The Government therefore allowed Mr. Gray's pay to continue until his death, and after his death they allowed two months salary, which was all they could allow, to his widow and family. The papers that the hon. gentleman has called for will be brought down as soon as they can be prepared.

The motion was agreed to.

LOT 66, ST. ANN'S, MANITOBA.

MOTION.

HON. MR. MCINNES moved

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before this House, copies of all applications, declarations and affidavits in connection with claim to Lot Number Sixty-six and the Hay privilege, St. Ann's, Lorette River, Manitoba.

HON. MR. PLUMB—With reference to this motion, I am instructed to say that the patent for lot 66 was issued to Auguste Harrison on the 9th April, 1886. Scrip in commutation of the outer two miles appurtenant to this lot has not yet been issued, the evidence on file not specifically showing to whom it is due. There is no objection to the address.

The motion was agreed to

PORT MOODY WHARF.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. MCINNES (B.C.) inquired

Has the Minister of Railways or any Member of the Government given instructions to have the Iron Piles and other material for the Port Moody Wharf landed at Victoria, B.C.? If so, the reasons for so doing?

HON. MR. PLUMB—I am instructed to say that no such instructions have been given.

ORDNANCE LANDS AT SOREL.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. GUÉVREMONT inquired

Le gouvernement a-t-il l'intention de vendre les propriétés qu'il possède dans la seigneurie de Sorel, et dont les baux sont expirés le ou avant le 1er mai courant? Quand ces propriétés seront-elles mises en vente?

HON. MR. PLUMB—In reply to the hon. gentleman's inquiry I am instructed to say that it is the intention of the Government to deal with the ordnance lands at Sorel in the manner prescribed in the Ordnance Lands Act. An officer of the Department will be detailed to report upon each of the properties, the leases of which expired on the 1st inst.; and such of them as the Minister of the Interior decides, upon this report, to dispose of will be sold in the manner prescribed in the Act.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—En Français!

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman himself is too great a master of the English language to require me to reply in French.

The motion was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT SAVINGS BANKS IN THE MARITIME PROVINCES.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. POWER rose to call attention

To the exceedingly large sums deposited in the Government Savings Banks in the Maritime Provinces, and to ask the Government what steps, if any, they propose to take in order to prevent the continuance of the diminution of the deposits in the chartered Banks of the said Provinces, and the rapid increase of deposits in the said Savings Banks.

He said—I had intended to call attention to this matter earlier in the session; but, like a very distinguished member of the Government, I have an unfortunate habit of putting things off, so that I am proceeding much later in the session than I should.

HON. MR. PELLETIER—You would make a good minister.

HON. MR. POWER—Perhaps I would. There is one reason why I need not regret this; for I see that pretty nearly all I had intended to say on this subject has been better said by a writer in the Montreal Herald who signs himself "Lower Provinces." If I thought that that newspaper was one that was carefully read by members of the Government, I should not think it necessary to call their attention to the matter in this House; but I have some little doubt as to whether all the members in the Government carefully read the Herald, and being in a state of doubt I think it well to bring the matter before the Government and this House in a more official way than a newspaper does, and with a view to finding out what policy the Government have on this important subject, or whether they have any policy. At the same time, I shall not hesitate to avail myself of the statistics given by the writer in the Montreal Herald, because he is a gentleman perfectly familiar with the business of banking and finance generally, and his figures are taken from the official record of the Government. The first thing I have to do is to establish the fact that exceedingly large sums are deposited in the savings banks. When I say Savings Banks, I do not mean the Post Office Savings Banks, but the ordinary Government Savings Banks, as we have them in the Maritime Provinces. I find that the writer to whom I have referred says this about them:—

"There are just fifty of them altogether, and of the whole number no less than forty-five are situated in the Lower Provinces. Of the remainder there is one in Ontario, one in Manitoba, three in British Columbia, but not one in the Province of Quebec. And of the total amount collected by them is drawn from the—

Lower Provinces	$15,269,695
Ontario	854,752
Manitoba	841,639
British Columbia.....	2,165,579
Quebec	000,000

HON. MR. ALLAN—What difference does the hon. gentleman make between Government Savings Banks and Post Office Savings Banks?

HON. MR. POWER—I make the distinction in this way: The Savings Banks which we have in the Lower Provinces are those which are controlled by the Finance Department and generally denominated Government Savings Banks. In our Province they have very few but these. The form the Savings Banks assume in the Upper Provinces is that of Post Office Banks chiefly. There is this practical difference: In the Government Savings Banks a depositor can deposit $3,000; in the Postal Banks he can deposit only $1,000; and I may say further that there are facilities for withdrawing money from Government Savings Banks which do not exist as to Post Office Savings Banks. The depositor can go in without any notice whatever to the Government Savings Banks and withdraw the whole of his deposit. In Post Office Savings Banks a notice I believe has to be sent to the Postmaster General before the deposit can be withdrawn. As I said, the amount deposited in the Lower Provinces was $15,269,695.

HON. MR. MACDONALD—In the three Provinces?

HON. MR. POWER—Yes. The following figures show the growth of the deposits in the Government Savings Banks in the several Provinces:—

JUNE 30, 1868.
Nova Scotia.....	669,637
New Brunswick.....	813,581
	1,483,218

British Columbia.....	2,165,579
	19,131,665

Making altogether on the 29th February 1886, $19,131,665. It is unnecessary to call attention to the enormous growth of those deposits. If the deposits in the Government Savings Banks were of the same character as the deposits in similar banks in other countries—if they represented the savings of poor men, this exhibit would be very gratifying, but it has been made clear from returns submitted to the other House, and everyone who knows anything about the mode in which business is prosecuted in the Lower Provinces knows it is true, that these deposits are not of that character at all. The Government limit of $3,000 is a very high one to begin with. The number of laboring men or mechanics who are able to lay by $3,000 at the present time, is very limited; but that is not all. The limit of $3,000 is really not any limit at all. It is quite a common thing for a man to deposit in the Government Savings Banks $3,000 in his own name, and another $3,000 in the name of his son or his wife, and $3,000 more in the name of some other member of his family, and so on.

HON. MR. SMITH—That might be dangerous.

HON. MR. POWER—In the Lower Provinces there is greater confidence existing amongst members of the same family than is perhaps to be found elsewhere.

HON. MR. PLUMB—More than my hon. friend seems to have in people generally.

HON. MR. POWER—There are the facts then, that enormous sums of money are deposited in the Government Savings Banks, and that the greater proportion of this money, as has been shown by returns and as we know from experience, is money invested by people who are well off—largely by capitalists.

The next question is what the Government are paying for money. The Government are paying to depositors 4 per cent. Then we have to add to this the cost of management. In England, where the country is small and the population dense, the rate of cost of management of these Savings banks is 1.40 per cent. Now suppose we take the English rate—and I am quite confident that our rate is larger—we find that the country is paying for this amount nearly $20,000,000 at the rate of 5.40 per cent a year.

HON. MR. PLUMB—How does that make 5.40 per cent.

HON. MR. POWER—The Government pay 4 per cent to depositors, and the management costs 1.40 in England, and I take the same rate for this country.

HON. MR. PLUMB—You mean that the management is one-fortieth of one per cent.

HON. MR. POWER—No, one per cent and decimal 40 per cent.

HON. MR. PLUMB—For the management? The hon. gentleman is quite astray.

HON. MR. SMITH—It is not a quarter per cent.

HON. MR. POWER—I may be in error; if I am, the writer of whom I have spoken, who is very familiar with those things, is also in error.

HON. MR. PLUMB—My hon. friend must be aware that the rate of interest in that country is only 2 per cent, and even less than that.

HON. MR. POWER—Granting that this is a mistake, and that the cost is exaggerated, let us say it is four and a half per cent.

HON. MR. PLUMB—No, nothing like it.

HON. MR. SMITH—Not a beginning to it.

HON. MR. POWER—Well, we shall take it at 4 per cent.; it weakens the argument but does not destroy it at all—the country pays something over 4 per cent. for this money. At the present time the Dominion can borrow money at a lower rate than that in England. I think the last 4 per cent. loan brought a premium of 8 or 9 per cent., and the Government could borrow this money in England at a less rate than it is paying for it here, and would in that way bring a large sum of money into Canada without injuriously affecting any interest whatever, and I think that would be much the more advantageous course. The cost of the present system to the country, at the lowest figure, must be something like $200,000 a year—I mean that the Government are paying something like $200,000 a year more for this money than they would have to pay for it if they had borrowed it in England. Now this sum is levied upon the whole population of the country chiefly for the benefit of a few persons who choose to invest their money in the savings banks—that is, persons who are well off. I am not objecting to giving 4 per cent. interest to the class for whom the savings banks are intended; but this tax is levied on the whole population principally for the benefit of comparatively wealthy investors who ought to find some other place to invest their money. Even if no special injury was inflicted on any class of the community, this course of the Government would not, I think, be justifiable—this plan of taxing all for the benefit chiefly of persons who do not need such assistance. I wish it to be understood that I am not reflecting on the present Government. I am not calling attention to this matter as an indication that they are to any extent to blame. The system was adopted long ago; it prevailed under Mr. Mackenzie's administration; and it continues now. There is no party object to be gained in calling attention to it: I simply do it in the interest, as I conceive, of the Maritime Provinces.

HON. MR. MACDONALD—It prevailed before Confederation: we had savings banks in our province before it became a part of the Dominion.

HON. MR. POWER—And we had them in Nova Scotia too. There is this point to which the attention of this House and the Government ought to be called—that while four per cent. was an exceedingly low rate even ten years ago, it is now a high rate. Hon. gentlemen know that the value of money is to-day at least one and a-half per cent. less than it was at any rate in 1868—that it is as easy to get money at five per cent. now in most places as it was to get it at seven per cent. then; and consequently in former years, going back ten years or so, the four per cent. interest which was given by the savings banks did not offer any special inducements to the class of investors of whom I have spoken; to-day four per cent. does offer that inducement, and I think that, for investors of that class at any rate, the rate to-day should not be more than three per cent. Three per cent. is now as high a rate, if not higher than four per cent. was ten years ago.

HON. MR. MACDONALD—Not in British Columbia.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—Not in Manitoba either.

HON. MR. POWER—The present system, it is apparent without further argument, which takes over $15,000,000 out of a community of some 900,000 people —that is about the population of the Maritime Provinces—must be a very serious injury to the business of that part of the country. The money is taken away from their business resources and locked up in the Government coffers—or is supposed to be; it is really expended by the Government in other places, some of it possibly in the Lower Provinces, and for various purposes. If it were not for the fact that this large sum is taken up by the Government Savings Banks in the Lower Provinces a very large portion of it would be in the chartered banks and aiding the business of the community, and money for business purposes would be much cheaper than it is now.

HON. MR. PLUMB—What is the rate there now?

HON. MR. POWER—The rate varies according to the customer.

HON. MR. PLUMB—But there must be some general rule?

HON. MR. POWER—Some of the banks will not take deposits at all.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Then they cannot be much injured by the savings banks.

HON. MR. POWER—No bank in the Maritime Provinces pays more than three per cent. now. Some time ago the rate was four per cent., but now no bank that I know of, in Halifax at any rate, will pay more than three per cent.

HON. MR. PLUMB—That does not show a scarcity of money!

HON. MR. POWER—I do not think it needs any argument to show that the subtraction of so immense a sum from the business of a comparatively small community like the Maritime Provinces must have an injurious effect on that community. This writer gives some statements as to the amounts deposited at interest in the chartered banks of the Lower Provinces.

“At the end of 1883 the deposits at interest in the chartered banks of the Lower Provinces were $7,117,976. By the last government statement (made probably in April) they were $5,941,205. Showing a reduction in a little over two years of $1,176,771 or sixteen and a half per cent. During the same period the Government savings banks deposits in the Lower Provinces increased from $10,846,348 to $15,269,695.”

HON. MR. POWER.

HON. MR. PLUMB—What are the figures for the Province of Nova Scotia?

HON. MR. POWER—I did not separate them. I find, however, that in 1883 the deposits in the savings banks in Nova Scotia were $5,790,633 and in 1885 they had increased to $8,045,621; and the deposits in the chartered banks in Nova Scotia in 1883 were $5,981,264, and in 1885 $5,169,324, a falling off of over $800,000 in two years. This writer to whom I have referred says this about the effect on business:

We are taxed to an inordinate extent to support a great variety of unprofitable undertakings, the most expensive of which are outside of the lower provinces. The National Policy was certainly not conceived in our interest. Our wholesale merchants complain that our provinces are used as a slaughter market for Ontario and Quebec. And when we are struggling along as best we can with our largely unnecessary load, striving hard to believe that it is still a great privilege to be able to call ourselves Canadians, the Government, that the last straw may not be wanting, establish a system, unknown in any other part of the Dominion, or in any other country in the civilized world, by which these provinces are nearly denuded of their floating capital and our industry is burdened with an artificial and excessive rate of interest. Surely, in times like these, when all our industries are so depressed, and we are carrying such a heavy burden of taxation, largely for the benefit of the western provinces, the least we might expect from our Government is equal justice and equal laws; and that at any rate our productive powers should not be threatened with paralysis while Ontario and Quebec are left unhindered.”

Now, in order to show that that view is not peculiar to the Maritime Provinces, I may be permitted to give two or three extracts from the Monetary Times, a paper which is not suspected of being hostile to the Government or to the Upper Provinces. I quote from the first issue of this year as follows—

“The comparative high rate which the Government continues to pay for deposits still forms a subject of discussion. We have no hesitation in saying that at least three-fourths of the money deposited with the Government in the so-called “Savings Bank” is of the amount and class which would properly find its way to the chartered banks.”

It is sometimes rejoined that the banks have already as much money as they can employ legitimately, and that any further increase of deposits would only burden them with money which they could not employ. But a large increase in the deposits of the banks, especially such an increase as would approximate to the figures of the Australian colonies, as quoted in last week's issue, would introduce many and important changes in the modes by which bankers employ the money committed to them. For example, it is almost certain that in such a case the banks would become large holders of government securities. They might carry thirty or more millions. Canada would then become a centre of monetary operations in a way that is not possible to present. Many loans that are now negotiated abroad would then be managed in our own market. Railway loans, loans of the Provinces, loans of Towns and Municipalities, might be, in that case, managed here with ease."

I quote next from the issue of the Monetary Times of the 8th January, the following from a correspondent. He is referring to the article which I have just read from, and he summarizes the bad results of the present system of conducting the Government Savings Banks as follows:—

1st. It brings the Government into contact directly with the banks as a keen competitor for business—in fact the rate paid amounts to a positive canvassing and bid for money. The Government have already taken the circulation of $1, $2 and $4 bills from the banks, they bid against them for deposits and comparatively speaking they might as well take the remainder of the business for all the profits left in it.

2nd. It is notorious that the banks as a rule cannot afford to pay more than 3 per cent. for deposits, the prevailing rates prevent it. Now, I think the well-known rule in finance in England is, that the Government rate shall be one per cent. below, or certainly shall not exceed, the minimum rate of the bank. In this country we have the spectacle of the Government actually paying one per cent. more for deposits than its own banker (the Bank of Montreal) can afford to pay. In fact we may go further and probably see in the recent reduction of the Canadian Bank of Commerce dividend an indirect result of abnormal Government competition—in this way: it is probable the bank in question had to reduce its rate for deposits and consequently depositors withdrew largely, because they could get more from the Government.

3rd. I have shown that the Government has directly entered the market as a competitor against the banks; why not go further and open a large co-operate store, for dry goods, groceries, hardware, boots and shoes, etc.? It would be quite as legitimate.

4th. Beyond all this, however, there is a more serious aspect to the question. Speaking from memory, we have a population of 4,500,000 or 5,000,000 in the Dominion. Adjoining, divided for the most part by an imaginary line only, there is a Republic, with a population of 55,000,000. The vastness of its territory, the much greater possibilities to be arrived at there than here, naturally attract emigration to our detriment. But when we add to this that money is much dearer here than there, it is entirely likely that it must seriously interfere with our manufactures, even with a wall of protection dividing us. If manufacturers there can get money from 2 to 4 per cent. and must pay 7 for it here, it makes a vast difference to the cost of production (leaving out of sight that their market is unlimited and ours the reverse) hence those there can come across and sell here, at least upon equal terms."

I simply give that quotation: I do not undertake to say that all those statements are accurate.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I should say not.

HON. MR. POWER—I simply give it as the opinion of a business man.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Other business men have a different opinion—men who have had some experience too.

HON. MR. POWER—I now quote from an editorial article in the Monetary Times of the 29th January last:—

"We have already pointed out that a still further lowering of the rate of discount would be feasible, if it were not for the heavy drain of deposits from banking channels, owing to the peculiar manner in which the Savings' banks of the Government are conducted. The mercantile community is deeply interested in bringing about a practical reform in this matter. It is a grave mistake to suppose that this is a question for bankers only. The mercantile community is far more interested in it than the banks are. And the Government itself, if it would only take a prudent forecast of the position, is more interested than either.

"Three steps in the way of reform are undoubtedly necessary. The first would be to limit the total amount that could be deposited by one person and so ensure that the Government Savings' Bank shall answer the purpose for which it was created, namely:—To afford a safe and convenient place of deposit for the savings of the poorer classes of the community. The second would be to provide the reserve spoken of. The third reform is of no less consequence than the other two, namely:—to lower the rate of interest. It is nothing less than an absurdity for the Government of a country like this to be paying more for the temporary use of money than the banks do.

"The country is losing hundreds of thousands of dollars yearly by this foolish absurdity. These considerations might be pressed by the mercantile community, and in time they must surely prevail. Abuses which have been grafted on to a well intentioned system cannot permanently attain it."

The last of these quotations is from the Monetary Times of the 5th February, and the article is headed "Cheaper money for our Manufacturers and Merchants"—

"We have several times referred to the rate of interest allowed by the Government and the competition it is keeping up with the chartered banks. It is asserted, and with force, that Canadian banks as a whole have far too much capital paid up. It is capital, not deposit money, that is in excess. Deposits are cheap, but capital is the dearest money banks can use.

The English and Scottish banks make their handsome profits out of deposit money, the price of which fluctuates, not being, as in Canada, a fixed rate, and that too high. It is a fact which is too apt to be forgotten that many Canadian banks, during the past year or more, have not been getting over one per cent. for large amounts lent in New York and London. Although the three per cent. paid by the large banks here is too high, the Government pays a still higher rate."

HON. MR. PLUMB—But they are already lending it at one per cent in New York.

HON. MR. POWER—Yes.

HON. MR. PLUMB—It is a slight contradiction.

HON. MR. POWER—Such is the statement.

"Not only does the Government pay more than it need do, but the rate mentioned compels the banks to pay more than they can afford. Yet, on account of having a good deal of surplus money lent at under 3 per cent. the banks cannot voluntarily reduce their discount rate to manufacturers and merchants. The surplus capital is seen in the street rates charged in Toronto and Montreal: 2½ to 4 per cent., varying according to security or the strength of the borrower. The eastern banks are worse off than the western; the latter, having their business scattered in small places, can get better rates than can be charged in the older cities."

To the manufacturer and the wholesale merchant a reduction of interest would be a boon. It would give them about the only profit they could get, where now, at the best, they can only about make ends meet.

If, therefore, the banks could get cheaper money they could lend more cheaply, and thus a little encouragement could be held out to the great borrowing classes. The late Finance Minister used to speak of an increase of deposits as "revenue" which could be used—or fixed. In such shapes it will not be likely to breed; but put this money at a cheap rate in manufactures and in trade, and there will be an increase."

HON. MR. POWER.

I have been trying to show that the effect of the present system on the business community in the Lower Provinces was injurious, and, incidentally, those quotations I have given go to show its effect on the chartered banks as well as on the business community at large. I have therefore already to a certain extent indicated what I believe to be its effect on the banking community; and I have some figures here which go to show that this writer who signs himself "Lower Provinces" is correct in his view. He says:

It is, I believe, a canon in banking science, that to make the business even moderately successful, deposits must bear a very large proportion to capital. With a small amount of deposits successful banking is all but an impossibility. This is well illustrated by the following figures.

BANKS IN		DEPOSITS.		Per cent. of rest of capital.		Average deposits for each Bank.....
Scotland.....	10	$45,260,000	$415,195,680	917	$12.65	$63.80	$41,519,568
Australia and New Zealand..	18	64,975,000	405,000,000	623	12.62	42.70	22,500,000
Ontario and Quebec.....	27	53,798,825	89,637,818	166	7.01	30.44	3,319,919
Lower Provinces.....	16	6,757,646		128	6.14	17.95	590,702
Number.....		Paid up Capital in Dollars		Percentage of deposits to capital.....		Dividends per cent.....

"These figures show only too clearly that our banks are small and poverty stricken compared with those of Scotland and Australia where the system of banking is similar, and are even markedly poorer than those of the Upper Provinces. When the Government are giving four per cent. for money, practically in any quantity, while the market rate for deposits is three per cent. and under, the result need not be wondered at. The direct effect is to dwarf the banks and limit their usefulness. In the whole of Scotland there are only ten banks with an average of $41,519,568 of deposits for each. In Australia and New Zealand the average for eighteen banks is $22,500,000 each, in Ontario and Quebec with twenty-seven banks the average is $3,319,919, while in the Lower Provinces with fifteen banks the miserable average is only $580,702. The contrast is as great in the matter of dividends and rest as in deposits, as the above statistics unmistakably show. That the Government competition for deposits is largely responsible for the unfortunate results here visible there can be no doubt whatever. The very life-blood of the banks is deposits, and the Government like some huge vampire has fastened itself on those unfortunate institutions and is fast draining the life from them."

But this is not all. The Government is not only draining from the banks their means of living, but they use the banks themselves as a most efficient aid to their own destruction. A banking friend thus describes the process: "Wherever there happens to be a chartered bank agency there is usually a Government savings bank almost next door. If the chartered bank happens to be a strong, reputable concern, it will at the present time be paying only 3 per cent. for deposits. The Government savings bank offers 4 per cent. The security of no joint stock bank can be better than that of the Government, and the latter's rate being 1 per cent. higher, they, of course, get the bulk of the deposits. How do they dispose of the money? They do not keep expensive safes and vaults at their numerous country offices as the chartered banks are compelled to do. They simply deposit the money with the agency of the chartered bank in the neighborhood to the credit of the Assistant Receiver-General. That bank has to remit the money at its own expense to Halifax or St. John. By and by the party, probably a trader, who deposited the money in a Government savings bank, wants a draft on Halifax or St. John to pay a bill. He goes to the agent of the savings bank and gets a cheque on the Assistant Receiver-General at Halifax or St. John free of expense. Or he may want a draft on Yarmouth or Pictou, or Truro or Moncton, or Fredericton or Campbellton, or any other town in the province where there is an agency of a chartered bank. He does not go to the chartered bank in his neighborhood for his draft, for he would have to pay them a small commission for it, and that is out of the question. A parental Government has rendered that unnecessary. He gets from the Government savings bank agent a cheque as before on the Assistant-Receiver-General, which the chartered banks have to pay at par at any of their agencies. In fact he is furnished with a travelling credit on any bank in the province, for which he pays nothing.

"The situation may be summed up thus:—The Government first steals the deposits from the banks. Then they compel the banks to transmit those deposits for them to Halifax at their own expense. Then the banks must keep funds at every one of their agencies—not for their own use, but for the Government to draw on."

Is it any wonder that banking does not pay and is not successful in the Lower Provinces, or that we have a crowd of miserably attenuated banking institutions living a hand-to-mouth existence on the verge of starvation? It is safe to say that there is no other civilized country in the world whose government has taken such pains as ours has to strangle its banks and paralyze its industries.

That is a statement, by a man who knows what he is talking about, of the effect on the banks of the lower provinces. We have had evidence during the present session that that view is the correct one, because we have within the past few weeks passed through this House not less than three Bills for reducing the capital of banks in the lower provinces. If the banks were very prosperous I do not think it would be necessary to do that. This system which I have endeavored to set before the House is an unusual system. I do not think there is a similar system to be found in any other country in the world. It involves a considerable annual loss to the taxpayers of the country; it injures the business of the Maritime Provinces, by drawing away funds which ought to be employed in business, and it seriously cripples the chartered banks of the country who deserve to have fair play. I have further information on the subject; but I have probably detained the House long enough, and I shall not do any more than briefly advert to the possible remedies. I do not pretend to know much about finance or banking, but I know that remedies have been suggested by some of the persons from whom I have quoted and from whom the information comes; but I do not know that I should go as far as some of them do. In the first place there is this change that might be made. I think that the Postal Savings Banks, which cost nothing for management, and which are the usual savings banks in the Upper Provinces, might be largely substituted in the Lower Provinces for the existing government savings banks. In that way the country would be saved the cost of keeping up agencies in the numerous towns in the Lower Provinces ; and under the rules of the Postal Savings Banks no depositor is allowed to have more than $1,000 on deposit, and he is not allowed to deposit in any one year more than $300. I think that if the postal system was made to take the place of the other system to a large extent, that would be a beneficial measure. It would save the country the cost of management, and would not interfere so much with the legitimate business of the Maritime Provinces. Then as to the savings banks generally, as it is a very desirable thing to encourage poor people to save their earnings, the Government might allow a rate of 4 per cent. on sums up to $1,000 ; but no depositor should be allowed to have in a government savings bank, either directly or indirectly, more than $1,000. When a man has more than that amount of money put by he ought, I think, to invest the surplus as people do in the Upper Provinces in other banks or in other securities. I do not think the public at large should be taxed to pay him a higher rate than the money is worth. That change might be made as to the future—that Government savings banks should not take from any one depositor directly or indirectly more than $1,000, and I do not think they should take more than $300 from any depositor in one year. As to existing deposits it would be fair and reasonable to allow after a given time—after giving the depositors fair notice—4 per cent. on deposits up to $1,000, and only 3 per cent. on any sum beyond that amount. The effect of those changes would be to considerably reduce the cost to the country of those institutions, and to do away to a considerable extent with the injury which the present system is doing to general business, and particularly to the chartered banks in the Maritime Provinces.

HON. MR. READ—I was very sorry to hear my hon. friend from Halifax give such a gloomy account of the banking business in the Lower Provinces. I am sorry to hear that there is either lack of opportunity or lack of enterprise for the people of Nova Scotia to employ their money in the manner that people in other parts of the country are employing it. I simply wish to refer to one statement that he has made, and that is, that the money in the savings banks is costing the country more than we are paying to foreign lenders. I will not speak from my own calculations, I will speak from the calculations made by the Department. For the last ten years we have borrowed a large amount of money and it is fair to calculate what that amount of money is costing the country at the present time for interest-

HON. MR. POWER—No, no !

HON. MR. READ—I will admit that to-day money is cheaper than it has ever been in the history of this country. I have been borrowing money for 50 years, and I say that to-day I can borrow it cheaper than I could at any time, so far as my recollection is concerned, during that period.

HON. MR. SMITH—That is so.

HON. MR. READ—Thanks to the National Policy we are increasing in wealth and have the money to lend, and while we have more money, we can lend it at a lower rate of interest and still have a good income. From calculations made of the interest we have paid on the money we have borrowed for the last ten years, it has cost as nearly as possible four and a half per cent.

HON. MR. POWER—That is not a fair way to do.

HON. MR. READ—Many of the statements that the hon. gentleman has read to-day are not fair ; but I am stating what the money is costing the Government now. On the money that is loaned to the Post Office Savings Bank, the interest and expenses amount to four and four-tenths per cent. In the Finance Department the average is 4.22 per cent. Putting them both together it is costing the country an average of 4.16 per cent ; while the money that we have borrowed from foreign lenders is costing fifteen one hundredths more, so that we are paying less to Canadians for the money that we have borrowed at home, than we are paying on foreign loans, including cost of management. It seems to me we ought to give our own people the same opportunity of lending to the Government, as we give to foreigners.

HON. MR. POWER.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—There are a great many widows and orphans in Canada who are depositors in the Government savings banks.

HON. MR. READ—Yes, a great many who do not know how to invest their money any other way or what to do with it. I urged upon the Government years ago the importance of establishing in this country some system by which investors and trustees could invest their savings in Government securities. It is only lately that the people could get hold of Dominion debentures. I am happy to say that the Government in their wisdom have arranged so that trustees or other investors can purchase Government debentures. It is only a day or two ago that I saw a gentleman in this House, whose name I do not care to mention, have a number of cheques for interest on his investments in Government debenture stock. I was proud to see it. I wish I had some of it myself. While money borrowed in this way by the Government is costing the country less than foreign loans surely it is no cause of complaint. I think the hon. gentleman from Halifax might have found some other matter which he could complain of more than this. When we see that in October last in the Post Office Savings Bank alone there was $15,509,000 of deposits, and in those savings banks they do not take more than $1,000 of any one man's money and the deposits average from $50 up to $100 or $200, it will be admitted that it is a benefit to the working classes. There is no doubt that if the people had not the opportunity right at their doors to deposit their money they would spend it in extravagance, and in their old age they would have no savings to fall back upon. It has been stated that we are paying a higher rate of interest in those banks than is paid in other countries. The States of New York, Massachusetts and Maine are paying five per cent. on similar deposits. In England the Government pay on such deposits a much higher rate of interest than the ordinary banks do, and while we do not pay any more, it is certainly satisfactory that the Government are borrowing from our own people at a lower rate of interest than they are obliged to give to others. I merely wish to say that for a number of years past we have been paying 15/100ths less per cent. for the money we have borrowed from our own people than we are to the foreign lenders.

HON. MR. WARK—I read the article that the hon. gentleman from Halifax has quoted from the Montreal Herald, and all the others he has quoted belong to the same family. They are all written in the interests of the bankers, every one of them—not one in favor of that large class of our working people who have been encouraged since I have been in the country to save their earnings by giving them facilities to deposit them in Government banks. We had a savings bank in the city of St. John which was managed by private gentlemen who had no profit in it whatever, and they managed it for a number of years. They gave 5 per cent. to depositors, and the province paid them 6 per cent. for the money. The balance lay, with the exception of what was necessary to pay one officer to manage its affairs, until they had sufficient accumulated to build a very handsome free-stone building. Recently a change was made. The hon. gentleman speaks of agents being appointed to manage these Maritime Province banks. The agents were what we formerly called the deputy treasurers. We did not call the head of our financial department the Collector of Customs, because there was a collector under the Imperial Act called the Collector of the Customs, and we therefore called the head of our department the Provincial Treasurer, and his deputies were deputy treasurers; but they were the persons who were authorized to receive deposits from the working classes throughout the country. Now it is a mistake so say that the Government are not stringent with regard to those deposits. I think they are, with respect to depositors, rather too stringent. For instance, if a man is at work all winter and draws his wages on the first of May and deposits it on the second or third, and if he has to draw it out towards the latter end of October, he gets no interest for the month of May or for the month of October. He draws only four months' interest. I think that is too stringent, because if a man deposits in one of the chartered banks he gets a deposit receipt and his deposit draws interest from the day it is placed in the bank until he withdraws it. The Finance Minister of the late Government gave greater favors to depositors. He introduced certificates of stock, and if a man had an amount of $50 deposited as his savings and did not require it immediately, he got a certificate of stock at 5 per cent. Now the object of these articles which the hon. gentleman has quoted from is to force people to withdraw their funds from the Government savings bank and deposit them at 3 per cent., and perhaps not more than 2 per cent., in the banking institutions—these large and wealthy corporations. They complain now that they have too much capital. They are paying it back. The hon. gentleman has referred to three banks which have had their capital reduced, and the stockholders have had to take their money back and invest it as best they can. If they turn round and ask to deposit it in those banks again they would not perhaps get 3 per cent. for their money. But there is another question: on the money borrowed by the Government in this way the interest is payable half-yearly to people who turn round and expend it in the country. The money that is borrowed in a foreign country, or in England, if the Government have not money to pay the interest deposited in one of the banks there, they have to withdraw it at least a month before it is due in England, and buy exchange at whatever rate they may have to pay for it. These things are all against the borrowing of money abroad. For my part, so far from finding fault with the Government for receiving money in the savings' bank, I think if they were to establish a system of annuities where the annuities would be paid in the country and spent in the country they would be doing good service to the people. I brought this question to the notice of the late administration on one occasion, and I am still in favor of it. If the Government continue to borrow money from our own people I would like to see the system of annuities introduced, by which men could purchase annuities for themselves or members of their families, and when those annuities expired so much of the public debt would be paid. I altogether disagree with my hon. friend from Halifax in his pleadings in the interests of the banks, as being opposed to the best interests of the working classes of this country.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I do not know how this question may be regarded in the cities of Halifax and St. John, but I am quite sure that I am expressing very correctly the feeling that prevails through the Province of Ontario when I say that I quite agree with the views expressed by the hon. gentleman from Belleville, and most respectfully differ from the views expressed by the hon. gentleman from Halifax. I am of the number who have always maintained that when we require to borrow money, the more we can borrow from our own people in the Dominion the better for the country. The interest does not then go out of the country. Now with regard to the rate of interest we can scarcely blame the Government for giving the rate of four per cent. in the savings banks. I do not think that money obtained at four per cent. from the depositors in the Dominion costs us any more than money borrowed in England when we take into account what we have to pay our financial agents for their commissions. We have to pay commissions on the sale of our debentures and we have also to pay them upon the payment of interest, which must be remitted through the financial agents. We have to pay an annual charge upon the payment of interest which must be transmitted through the financial agents. I am quite sure that I express the opinion of the people of Ontario when I say that the Government are not deserving of censure on this particular point. There is this to be said however, that the Government is so reckless and extravagant that the more money they get the more extravagant they become. If they got less money it would prevent them being so reckless and extravagant as they have been.

HON. MR. McCLELAN—As far as I have been able to discover the rate of interest which the Government have to pay for money borrowed abroad, as stated by the Finance Minister lately—and the statement I believe has not been controverted in any way—within a period of 10 years back has averaged four and a third per cent.

HON. MR. READ—Four and a half.

HON. MR. McCLELAN—I make the statement on the authority of the Finance Minister. His statement is as follows:—

Taking the several loans, from 1874 to 1885, I find we have borrowed \$124,796,598. Upon that sum there was a discount, to which I referred in the early part of my observations to the House, of \$5,965,040. So while we have borrowed \$124,000,000 odd, and we owe for that and are paying interest upon it, and some time we shall have to pay the capital, we did not receive that much money, nearly \$6,000,000 less, so that the annual interest on the gross amount of those loans is \$4,991,863. Then take one-half of 1 per cent. added as commission for paying interest, and it makes the total amount per annum to interest, \$5,016,823, and an actuarial calculation shows that including charges the rate which the Government pays on these loans is nearly $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. Now, the returns of the working of the post office savings banks show that the cost, including interest and expenses, is $4\frac{1}{10}$ per cent.

HON. MR. READ—In the first edition of the official report of the debate of the House of Commons, it is four and a-half per cent.

HON. MR. McCLELAN—By the same calculation, if we are to place dependence on the published speech, the interest paid by the Savings Banks is four and one-tenth per cent.—that is to say, the money which is used by the Government of the country, taken from deposits in the Savings Banks, costs that rate, which is less than the Government had to pay on foreign capital, and although I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks which have fallen from my hon. friend from Halifax, yet I am disposed to agree with the hon. gentleman who followed him in this matter that he has been unable to convince me that it is expedient for the Government of this or any other country to pay more interest for money obtained abroad than they pay to their own subjects.

The object of the Savings Banks, I take it, is a very good one: it is to place facilities within the reach of the poorer classes for depositing their savings, by which they will be encouraged and induced to lay by from time to time a portion of their earnings to provide against a day of misfortune or "a rainy day," as it is called. If the Government can encourage that sort of investment it is an exceedingly good thing to do. It strikes me that if greater encouragement could be given in some way for the depositing of these earnings, particularly of the wage earners, that it would be of great advantage to the country: it would indicate a degree of thrift far greater, perhaps, that we possess now. He says it is true there is no way of distinguishing the proportion between the deposits of those for whom the banks were originally intended and the wealthy class. I am convinced that a very large proportion of the deposits lying in the savings banks in the Lower Provinces have been placed there by the wealthy classes, but looking to the rate of interest which the country has to pay for loans of large sums I see no particular objection to that whatever. The reason of it is quite apparent: I think that has been indicated very properly by my hon. friend, that there is such a perfect lack of confidence in the country at the present time, owing to the unfortunate operation of the National Policy in the Provinces down by the sea, that there is no sort of investment in which prudent safe-going people can place their money, and hence they take four per cent in the saving banks. It is not quite four per cent, as the hon. member from Fredericton has explained, because the month in which the deposit is made and the month in which it is taken out, are not reckoned in the interest, and of course in some other respects many people in the country districts are subjected to expenses in making their deposits. It is not always practicable to furnish the facilities of savings' banks in all parts of the country. It is not surprising, therefore, that so much money should be found to be deposited in these institutions. Those who have been foolish enough to be led away by the boom which was promoted by the papers, particularly those supporting the Government, showing the large gains which would come from taking stock in sugar refineries, cotton factories and different other industries which have been promoted and worked up, have in many cases unfortunately lost their money—at least up to this time they have not been able to receive any gain equal at all to their anticipation, and therefore that shows a sufficient investment of capital has taken place in that direction. Any more would only increase the competition and reduce the returns. Hence it is quite natural that careful-going, prudent people would seek other investments. We all know that real estate, shipping, and almost every description of property in the Lower Provinces have suffered a very great and fearful depression. The consequence is that the people are uncertain as to the end of it. They are looking for a change—hoping for some improvement—but the improvement does not come, and therefore it is a natural result that they should lack confidence in all the ordinary investments of the country and rush to these institutions, which are supposed to be perfectly safe, having the Government at their back, and place their surplus earnings there. With reference to the remarks which fell from my hon. friend regarding the impropriety of the Government of the country establishing savings banks as rival institutions to the chartered banks—

HON. MR. POWER—I quoted that.

HON. MR. McCLELAN—The observation was that wherever a chartered bank was in existence the Government were pretty sure to establish next to it a savings bank. That was not fairly put, because I think the saving banks had the ground first, and therefore the establishment of a chartered bank was subsequent and the Government certainly should not be blamed for starting a Savings Bank under the circumstances. Another point to which the hon. gentleman from Halifax alluded, is a comparison between the advantages possessed by investors in Canada and in other countries, and the statement was made that in the United States money was cheaper, I hardly see how he could establish by that statement that the 4 per cent. given in Canada is too great, because—and I do not know but it has already been alluded to by my hon. friend from Belleville—so far as some of the States are concerned, the rate paid on Savings Banks' deposits there is greater than in Canada. I think that in New York, Massachusetts and other States, the rate paid on deposits in the Savings Banks is 5 per cent., and hence I do not see how the statement that he made about money being cheaper in the United States can be any argument in the case. The same observation might apply to other countries. I think that in England and several other countries the Government Savings Banks pay a higher rate of interest than is usually given by other monetary institutions.

HON. MR. POWER—They are strictly Savings Banks ; I do not object to that.

HON. MR. McCLELAN—My hon. friend from Halifax makes a suggestion with reference to a proposed change limiting the amount to $1,000 and the deposit at any one time to not more than $300. I have already replied to that observation, if the money is cheaper, if it cost the country less than we have to pay for loans obtained abroad, as the country needs money and can hardly get from their own people these deposits at a lower rate, I do not see any possible advantage in reducing the rate or limiting the amount of deposits. The only point that I see in the argument made by my hon. friend, who has certainly taken a great deal of pains in dealing with this subject, and perhaps we are indebted to him for bringing it up—is the effect of the Government Savings Banks on chartered institutions, and whether they are, under the circumstances, as profitable to the shareholders as they would be if the savings institutions did not exist; but if it did I do not see that that is a matter about which we need very much concern ourselves. It strikes me that the chartered banks and those connected with them are not in such a state of destitution as my hon. friend represents, and they are, as a rule, abundantly able to take care of themselves. As far as the Government are concerned, it is their duty to look after the people generally who require to make these deposits.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—The subject to which the attention of the House is called by the hon. member from Halifax is really a very important one, and has given rise to a very interesting discussion. Having read the article in the Montreal paper to which the hon. gentleman alluded, I am very much impressed by the important fact that such large deposits should be made in the savings banks of the Maritime Provinces, and that those amounts should be withdrawn from the commerce of the country and placed in the Dominion Treasury. All thoughtful persons must come to the conclusion that there is something amiss in those provinces if the earnings of the people do not find a ready investment there. In the ship-building and lumbering provinces the solution, or partial solution, of the difficulty readily occurs, because it is pretty well known in those provinces that in former times persons of all classes were in the habit of investing their savings in shipping—domestic servants and wage-earners of all classes were in the habit of investing their savings in ships on the stocks. If I am in error in this statement the hon. gentleman from Hopewell is able to correct me. Now it is well known that large portions of the capital which some few years ago were invested in these enterprises have been lost, or remain idle or have found their way to the savings banks. I do not propose to discuss this question at any length as regard the other Maritime Provinces, but in my own Province the deposits are very large in proportion to the population and my impression is that this is partly owing to the fact that one of the island banks has broken down completely, another was for several years in existence without paying dividends, and the third formed a union with the Bank of Nova Scotia. These circumstances, of course, caused great losses in the Province and tended to destroy confidence in the banks. It was not infrequent, a few years ago, if any of the shares of the three Charlottetown banks was offered for sale by auction, to see about as keen competition for those shares as hon. gentlemen have seen in larger cities for much better known stocks. I have myself seen them run up to 35 per cent. premium and it is a fact that the stock of the Bank of Charlottetown, which has recently been wound up, has been sold at auction in that city at 75 per cent. premium, but in consequence of the public losing confidence in those banks, wage earners and others who had money to invest had to seek some other means, and the Savings Banks afforded them that opportunity; it has happened also that persons of larger means than those for whose special benefit the Savings Banks were instituted have taken advantage of the Savings Banks and deposited considerable amounts in them. That I have reason to know myself, but the wage earners have also done so. I have in the course of my experience quite a number of times opened accounts in the Savings Banks for servants in my own employ who were earning more wages than they could spend. I have always endeavored to induce such persons to deposit their savings and I know personally that a considerable proportion of the deposits in the Savings Banks in Prince Edward Island belong to people of that class. It is a fact well known to everybody who has attended Parliament this session, that several Savings Banks have sought to have their capital reduced—three the hon. gentleman from Halifax mentioned. Now, it is rather a singular fact that three of the banks in the Maritime Province, should have applied to have their capital reduced. I do not think we heard anything of that kind at the time the ship building business was brisk. That fact, taken in connection with the large amount in the Savings Banks, seems to me to afford a clue to this important fact which has been brought to the notice of the House.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—The price of lumber, as well as ship-building, has declined.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—The depression in ship-building and the lumber trade has rendered it impossible for the banks to find employment for all the capital they used to employ in those branches of business. Just in the same way the want of confidence in the chartered banks in Prince Edward Island has induced the people in that province to deposit in the savings banks money which would otherwise have been deposited in the banks or otherwise invested. And that is a point which I think is really well worthy of consideration. If this subject had been brought forward in the early part of the session it would have been a wise thing to have submitted the whole question of the savings' banks in the Maritime Provinces to the consideration of a committee of gentlemen of this House well versed in those questions, of which there are many here ; but I think it would not be wise for the Government to suddenly make a material difference in the rate paid to depositors, because it would not be easy for parties holding say $2,000 or $3,000 in the Government Savings' Banks to find another suitable investment. Those who place such sums there are careful persons, who are making provision, perhaps, for old age, or providing for others, or depositing the money temporarily for some purpose, and cutting down the rate should be done carefully, and only after full investigation and consideration of the whole question.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I regret that I must take up the attention of the House for a few minutes when there is so much other business pressing, but I can scarcely allow the inquiry of the hon. gentleman to pass without a remark. The hon. gentleman has given us a very extraordinary disquisition on the question of savings bank deposits. I do not question the hon. gentleman's intelligence on all subjects he brings before us, but during the whole time I have been privileged to sit in this House I have frequently heard the hon. gentleman, and never heard him approach any subject with so entirely unbiased a mind as he has in regard to this, for he evidently does not know much about it. He tells us that great injury is being done to the commercial interests of the country by the high rate of interest paid on deposits in the savings banks which the Government have established through the country. That interest is nominally 4 per cent. It is really, considering the terms upon which the deposits are received, 3·85 per cent. It is obvious to every reflecting mind that it is most desirable to afford the community a perfectly safe means of depositing their savings—a perfectly safe means of placing, for the time being, the money which they may not want to use immediately—a perfectly safe means for those who are not acquainted with the investments of the country, who are ignorant and liable, if they cannot invest their money in any better way, to fall into the hands of designing men who are always on the watch for people of that kind. I say it is the duty of the Government, so far as they can, to protect such savings from speculators or unprincipled persons, or, more than that, to afford to those who have not the ability to manage the moneys entrusted to them, though they may be perfectly honest, a secure place in which to deposit them. There are many risks run by investors. The hon. gentleman argues that wherever there is a bank established, the Government very improperly places a savings bank alongside of it.

HON. MR. POWER—If the hon. gentleman will allow me to explain, I gave a rather long quotation from a correspondent and that passage occurred in the quotation.

HON. MR. PLUMB—When the hon. gentleman brings a quotation of that kind in support of his argument he is responsible for it. It is part of his argument. His argument is made up altogether from newspaper scraps, all tending in one direction of endeavoring to compel the depositors to take there money out of the hands of the Government and place it in the chartered banks. The hon. gentleman is inconsistent in another way : he argues one instant that the banks are depleted by this system, that they are not able to carry on their business in consequence of it and they are losing there profit, and he tells us the next moment that they are reducing their capital because they cannot lend their money. There is no use for their money we are told : then what would they do if they had to pay interest on the large sum deposited in the savings bank ? They would not be any better able to lend it. I wish the hon. gentleman to understand that there ought to be no complaint on the part of the banks. The banks are very largely favoured with deposits. The banks have got $49,000,000 on deposit without interest, and they have about $57,000,000 on deposit with interest. I do not pretend to state the exact figures however.

HON. MR. POWER—Not in the Lower Provinces.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman must take the system together. I do not intend to separate it.

HON. MR. POWER—I did.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Would the hon. gentleman be kind enough not to interrupt me. I do not know any man in this House who complains of interruptions so petulantly as the hon. gentleman.

HON. MR. POWER—Hear, hear.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The bank deposits altogether are $107,876,000 upon a paid-up capital of about $49,000,000. That is a very respectable proportion, and it is well known that the banks are not able to use the money in Canada for commercial business; they are lending it in New York at low rates, sometimes as low as two per cent. a year. The interest paid by the Government to depositors is four per cent., as the hon. gentleman states. The Government Savings Banks do not interfere specially with the banking business of the country, although I hear bankers constantly complaining; but until the bankers can show that they have not capital and deposits and circulating notes enough to supply their customers at a fair rate of interest then there is no occasion for the hon. gentleman from Halifax to make such an argument as he has made in the House to-day, and no grievance has been shown or pretended to be shown. The banks in Canada have constantly large sums of money lying at their credit, in New York where they can lend their money on call, and it is lent at very low rates of interest. We must understand that if any system of this kind is to be at all workable—if it is to do what it is intended to do by the Government—to give the people an opportunity of lending the Government small sums—for that is practically what it amounts to, a permanent rate of interest must be fixed. It would be exceedingly inconvenient if because 3 per cent. only should be paid for a while by the banks that interest on those deposits should also be reduced to 3 per cent. The Bank of England itself last year during the Russian alarm raised the rate of interest higher than 4 per cent. I have frequently known the rate of interest of the Bank of England to be 8 per cent. for short periods of money stringency. I have known it to be at 7 per cent. for some time and to range between 2 and 10 per cent. within my banking experience. The Savings Banks system of this country could not follow any such fluctuations. The object is to provide a safe repository for the savings of wage earners and others who are ignorant of other means of keeping their money except by hoarding and the hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken when he states that the head of a family may deposit up to the limit in his own name, and as much more in other names and in that way a large sum beyond the limit may be deposited by one individual. It cannot be done. There is a restriction which I can show the hon. gentleman in regard to that matter.

HON. MR. POWER—Whether there is or not, they do it.

HON. MR. PLUMB—It cannot be done.

HON. MR. POWER—It can be done and is done.

HON. MR. PLUMB—What possible objection can there be to the Government borrowing money from the people of Canada at four per cent. when we pay four per cent. to capitalists of other countries? Where is the harm? What reason is there why we should not borrow money at home and pay the interest at home to those who are willing to lend us at four per cent.? I am in favor of doing so, and I am glad to have the opportunity to bring out in the course of this discussion evidence of the thrift of the people, and especially of those of the province in which the hon. gentleman from DeSalaberry, who sits near me, now resides. Of the 38,000 depositors in the savings banks of the Dominion in 1883, more than one-third were residents of the Province of Quebec. Yet the hon. gentleman wants to force out of the hands of the Government the savings of our careful, thrifty working people and have them deposited in the chartered banks of the country; and for what purpose? For the avowed purpose of enhancing the profits of the shareholders of those banks, if the hon. gentleman's argument is of any force. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman should have made an argument of that kind—an entirely selfish argument. The whole discussion is a perfectly gratuitous one. Taking the returns made in 1883 as a basis, it may be assumed that there are over 50,000 depositors in the Government Savings Banks. This vast amount of money which my hon. friend complains is taken away from the chartered banks amounts to exactly $338 to each depositor, taking the calculation made in 1883 and taking the same proportion as applied to the $19,000,000 which is now deposited in the savings banks of the country. No greater disaster could befall this country than to drive those depositors into the chartered banks; I say it advisedly, and I say also that I am glad it has been the general policy of this Government not to favor the establishment of private savings' banks. No greater disaster could befall the country than the failure of a savings' bank in which the poorer classes have deposited their money. It would be deeply injurious to public confidence, and would create in the minds of those poor people the feeling that their money had been squandered, and that they had no redress or remedy. I have seen the effect of a panic in a run upon a perfectly solvent savings' bank, when the bank was kept open until twelve o'clock at night to satisfy depositors, that there was no danger and that they were ready to pay. The crowd was immense even at that hour, the excitement was incontrollable, deposits were drawn out by frightened depositors. In many cases the people who drew out their money were robbed before they reached home with it. I understand from the hon. gentleman that the rate of interest is even lower than I have stated at which the banks have been compelled to lend their money during the present plethora. He has told us that they loaned it at one per cent.

HON. MR. POWER—No.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I have taken it down.

HON. MR. POWER—I cannot help that.

HON. MR. PLUMB.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman is keeping up a running commentary during my remarks, and I am compelled to request him to desist.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman puts words in my mouth which I did not use, and when I say I did not use them, he talks of my keeping up a running commentary on his speech.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman is a little touchy, and there is good reason for his being so to-day. I think the banks whom the hon. gentleman seems to have taken under his protection will not thank him when they read the report of his remarks for the manner in which he has spoken of the decline of their business and of the depression in the value of their shares. I think it is one of those cases where they can truly say "save us from our friend."

HON. MR. POWER—The same as the Government in this House.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman told us that he intended to conduct his discussion without reference to party.

HON. MR. POWER—Certainly.

HON. MR. PLUMB—We know how he has carried that out. Now I will show to the hon. gentleman who are the depositors in those savings' banks. In 1883 a classification was made, and from that return it will be seen that they are not the bloated class of capitalists which the hon. gentleman would lead us to believe. They are:—

Farmers—14,000.
 Mechanics—7,850.
 Trust accounts for young children—5,500.
 Laborers, including sailors—4,270.
 Clerks—3,000.
 Tradesmen—1,600.
 Farm and other male servants—1,470.
 Professional persons—1,572.
 Miscellaneous—1,680.
 Married women—12,000.
 Single women—10,500.
 Widows—3,240.

Those are the persons who would be affected by the hon. gentleman's suggestion that the Government should reduce interest on savings' banks deposits for the benefit of the chartered banks of this country for whom he complains, because the Government have taken from them the privilege of circulating bills under $5, and by that means are injuring their business and reducing their profits. If I remember correctly, when that privilege was taken from them, under the Finance Ministership of Sir Francis Hincks, they were at the same time relieved from taxation. The hon. gentleman says the cost of managing savings' banks in England is one-fourth of one per cent a year on the aggregate deposits. We will not dispute that proportion. I will show the hon. gentleman that the cost of managing the system in Canada is one-fourth of 1 per cent. The hon. gentleman said that the cost was one per cent. and forty hundredths, nearly one and a half per cent., which shows the familiar acquaintance and intimacy which the hon. gentleman had with the figures—he did not even know their value. The average rate of interest is 3.85 per cent., and the reason the interest is brought under 4 per cent., which is the regular rate, is that the deposits draw interest from specified periods, and when drawn out interest is lost for a short time, so that the average rate is 3.85 per cent., and the expense of management is one-quarter per cent. The deposit amounts to about $19,000,000, the total expense of management would be therefore about $47,000. That is the enormous burden under which the country is groaning, as the hon. gentleman has very pathetically told us. I believe that if the hon. gentleman looks into the Public Accounts, and sees the amount paid Government Agents in England for the management of the public debt he will find that the sum I speak of compares very favorably, on the score of economy, with the amount paid to our financial agents in London. The transactions, though small, are numerous, and it costs as much time to make an entry of a small amount as a large one, and if it were twice as much as it is I should lift up my voice always, as long as I have any public position in the country, against any such proposition as the hon. gentleman has urged. The hon. gentleman of course endeavored to show that the cost of management in this country was far greater than it was in England, and in more than one way. I have a comparison in my hand of the clerical force which is employed in conducting the savings bank system in this country, and in England. The clerical force in the Canadian department is in proportion one to every 3,200 depositors, and I wish the House to understand, as I have just now stated, that it costs as much to make an entry of £5 as to make an entry of £500; therefore it is fair to take the number of savings bank depositors and the number of transactions in paying in and drawing out their money. There is one clerk to every 7,900 transactions in a year. It is believed that in the British Savings Bank Department the force is in the proportion of one clerk to every 3,100 accounts; whereas in Canada it is one clerk to every 3,200 accounts; therefore the difference is in favor of the management of the Canadian Savings Banks. I quite agree with the hon. gentlemen who have spoken before me, my hon. friend from New Brunswick and the hon. gentleman from Belleville especially, that it is desirable that we should in every way endeavor to avail ourselves of the capital that may be at our disposal in this country. I do not think however that it is desirable to divert that capital from the commercial transactions of the country by paying too high a rate for it. Nor is it particularly desirable to those who are making small deposits to be paid a high rate of interest. The first thing to be considered is that their money shall be secure beyond peradventure. We have known even the largest and best managed banks standing in the highest credit, within the last few years—even within a very short time, suddenly becoming bankrupt. Supposing they had a portion of this $19,000,000 that the hon. gentleman wants to force the people to deposit in the chartered banks, what would have been the consequence? What would have been the result to the small depositor of $100 to $500 if he found his deposit was delayed month after month until he might be forced to make heavy sacrifices in order to raise money? He forgets that the Government in providing a fair rate of interest for depositors is doing the working classes the greatest possible financial service that can be done for them, encouraging them in thrift and industry, and teaching them to save their earnings and place them where they earn as high a rate of interest as the country can afford to pay. That is the policy I have always advocated, and I shall never consent to any change which will reduce the rate of interest in such a way as to induce depositors to take their money out of the hands of the Government and place it in the banks. I have no antipathy to the banks; on the contrary I desire in every possible way to encourage the banking system; but there are large numbers of deposits which are not legitimate banking deposits. The banking deposits should not be deposits on interest except in special cases. They should be principally deposits connected with and growing out of commercial men leave thousands of dollars day after day on deposit without interest in the ordinary transaction of business. The trading class of people do not deposit in the Savings Bank. They use their money day by day in their business, and the Savings Bank system does not reach them at all; and why the hon. gentleman from Halifax desires to put the class to whom the Government depositories are a convenience and a safe means of keeping their money to the inconvenience and hazard of finding some other place for it, where he intends that they shall have less safety and get a lower rate of interest, I cannot understand. He says the banks cannot afford to pay 4 per cent. The whole scope of the hon. gentleman's argument is to prevent the industrious working classes, who have accumulated a little money, from obtaining a fair rate of interest for it, and to induce them to withdraw their money from the hands of the Government and deposit it with the chartered banks at a smaller rate of interest. If the Government to-day should say they would not pay interest on deposits, or only 3 per cent. there would be a competition among the banks to seize upon this money. The whole course of the Monetary Times for the last year has been in the interests of the banks who desire to clutch this $19,000,000, which is less than one-fifth of the vast amount they hold themselves. They have so much money already—they are glutted with money—that the rate of interest rules exceptionally low, and they cannot loan it here but have to send it to New York and lend it at the rate of 1 or 2 per cent. in Wall street. That is a state of things the hon. gentleman has been unconsciously exhibiting. It shows, and I wish to do credit to the hon. gentleman's kindness of heart, that he has been entirely misled in the argument which he has adduced before the House. He has not understood at all the effect of the proposition which he has made here—I will do him the justice of saying so, because I do not think if the hon. gentleman understood the position he would have attempted to sustain the argument that the earnings of the people shall be withdrawn from the Government Savings Banks by reading extracts from newspapers in the banking interest. The hon. gentleman says that in his own Province, so far as the banks are concerned, there is a stagnation of business. We have been accustomed to hear the hon. gentleman, and another hon. gentleman who did not back him up to-day, but usually does, depicting the country as in a state of prostration. That is the hon. gentleman's stock in trade. We are perfectly willing that he should use that stock in trade. He has not, and his party has not very much benefitted by it up to the present time. I do not think the public put much confidence in those statements that are constantly dinned into their ears, that the industries of the country are languishing, that the banks cannot make reasonable profits for their shareholders and that the business of the country is prostrate and not likely to revive until the hon. gentleman and his friends have an opportunity of again showing their skill in the management of affairs. There are many points that could be touched upon in regard to the banking question. The subject is full of interest and importance; but it is a recondite subject; it is one with which those cannot very well deal who are not familiar with the operations to which the hon. gentleman has referred. It is a special study, one which he seems not to have made with care, and even with the most careful study there is large difference of opinion among those who deal in fiscal affairs as well as those who write upon fiscal questions. I can only say to the hon. gentleman that his enquiry can be answered in this way: Speaking without authority or instructions, I may say that as a rule I should consider it would be best to let commercial events take care of themselves, and that the less any government meddles with those affairs the better for the community. That is my view. I may be mistaken, but I think commercial events will take care of themselves in spite of any interference of the Government or in spite of any but those who are interested in them. The public will put their money where they choose; they will make such use of their money as they choose—always within the limits of prudence, it is to be hoped. I am instructed to say to the hon. gentleman that in December, 1887, during the period of another Administration, the amount which could be received on deposit from a depositor was limited to $10,000. The present Government in 1880 made a reduction and limited the amount to $3,000. The Government have now under consideration the propriety of reducing the limit still further.

HON. MR. POWER—Hear, hear.

HON. MR. PLUMB—That is as much information as I can give to the hon. gentleman on that subject.

HON. MR. POWER—I wish to make a few remarks in reply to what has fallen from the hon. gentleman.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I beg to call the attention of the House to the fact that the hon. gentleman has already made his statement, and under the rule of the House he cannot reply except by way of explanation.

HON. MR. POWER—I think it is the first time I have known in this House a member who had brought a matter of this sort to the notice of the Senate being refused the courtesy of being allowed to make some remarks in reply.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I shall put it as a question of order.

THE SPEAKER—If the question of order is submitted I shall rule that the hon. gentleman having made his statement has not the right to speak again.

HON. MR. ALLAN—I would suggest that as the hon. gentleman from Niagara questioned something which the hon. gentleman from Halifax had stated, he should have an opportunity of explaining.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I have no objection to the hon. gentleman making an explanation if he has one to make.

HON. MR. POWER—I think the hon. gentleman leading the House will do well in some respects to follow the example of his predecessor, and he will probably find that it would conduce to his success as leader more than the course which he seems inclined to adopt.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I wish I could follow his example.

HON. MR. POWER—I think it but right, I should explain my position. A number of gentlemen seem to misapprehend that position. I did not advocate the abolition of the Savings Banks. I did not advocate the taking away from poor people the facilities which are now offered them to make investments; I simply spoke of the system which prevails in the Maritime Provinces. I called attention to the fact that there were over $15,000,000 deposited in the Savings Banks of the Maritime Provinces; to the fact that the deposits in the chartered banks had fallen off to less than $6,000,000, and to the fact that the increase in the Savings Banks and the falling off in the chartered banks were continuing. The proposal which I made was one, after all the hon. gentleman has said, and after the way he has denounced my supposed desires and wishes and argument, that the Government themselves according to the statement of their recognized representative in this House are thinking of adopting. The practical suggestion that I wound up with was that the limit of the amount to be deposited by any one depositor should be reduced from $3,000 to $1,000.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I must interrupt the hon. gentleman for one moment. He is not stating correctly the answer that I gave. I did not state that there was any intention on the part of the Government to fix the limit below $3,000; or that they were going to change that limit ; but that they had it under consideration.

HON. MR. POWER—When it is stated that the Government have the matter under consideration, it is to be presumed that they are thinking of making the change. If my proposition was so ridiculous, so absurd and so unpatriotic as the hon. gentleman stated it was, how is it that the Government have that very proposition under consideration? I wish to say simply this—that no perverted ingenuity could distort any argument of mine into an argument in favor of depriving the laborers and mechanics of the privilege of investing their money at a fair rate of interest. I called attention chiefly to the abuse of the savings banks system in the Lower Provinces where those banks are made use of as banks of deposit by wealthy people ; and I am glad to have heard from the hon. gentleman from Niagara that the Government have under consideration the propriety of reducing the amount that can be deposited in those savings banks. The hon. gentleman, with that courtesy which so distinguishes him, was kind enough to refer on two or three occasions to my entire ignorance of this subject. Inasmuch as the statements which he has attributed to me were quotations from one of the most experienced bank managers in the Maritime Provinces, it will be seen that the hon. gentleman's charge of ignorance on my part does not hurt me a great deal. He said that the bankers, whom he presumed I represent—which is not the case at all, I represent the people at large—might well say "save us from our friends." I say this, and I say it in the judgment of this House, that if the bankers, from my failure to advocate their claims properly, had any reason to be asked to be saved from their friends, the Government and the conservative party have every reason to ask to be saved from the advocacy of the hon. gentleman.

HON. MR. DEVER—After the debate I have listened to for the last half hour, perhaps it is unnecessary for me to say much ; still I do not think I can allow this opportunity to pass without saying a few words on the subject. I think political economy is a science which is not so well understood as it should be amongst men who speak on financial questions. For my own part I must admit that I know very little about it ; but, I think, I do know some commercial laws that are of benefit in a discussion of a question of this kind. There is one point in this debate which I wish to point out and it is this ; I do not agree with those gentlemen who claim that it is a sign of prosperity when large amounts of money are found on deposit in the savings banks. I look on it in the contrary light. I consider that when moneys are placed in the savings banks to a large amount it is a sign of dull times, of depression of business and of a deficiency of commercial activity that holds out no inducement to invest in commercial pursuits. But whilst I hold this view I am not opposed to these savings banks. On the contrary I think they are beneficent institutions. I would be very glad to see the Government borrow more money from our own people—borrow money on the French plan, instead of sending abroad to borrow and then sending the interest for that money out of the country. I should prefer to see it kept at home. I believe this country is in such a condition that a very large amount of money might be had from our own people. It would enable us to dispense with large loans which we now obtain abroad, and retain the interest we have to send out of the country annually. I wish also to say in reply to the hon. gentleman from Belleville that whilst it is a pleasing matter for gentlemen of Ontario who appear to take pride in their prosperity under the National Policy, which I do not envy them in the slightest degree, I cannot as a representative from the Maritime Provinces agree with them. I think it is my duty to say that the contrary is, in my opinion, the fact in the Maritime Provinces. Whatever prosperity may arise out of the National Policy it certainly does not prevail in those Provinces to the extent that commercial men had a right to expect. Many branches of trade in the Maritime Provinces that were prosperous when they had free and unrestricted trade are to-day, owing to our restricted relations, by which we are compelled to purchase in markets which certainly do not suit us, are in a depressed condition. As I mentioned a moment ago I do not say this in a spirit of hostility by any means, but as a matter of fact, so that if there are rejoicings in one part of the country it should be remembered there is another portion which is suffering from a depression that operates extensively on the real estate in that part of Canada. I say, and say it advisedly, that real estate to-day is not worth one-third of the value it held ten or fifteen years ago. I am aware of cases where money was loaned some seven or eight years ago to the extent of $12,000 on property which was considered good security then, but which subsequently was sold at public auction under a foreclosure of that mortgage for $5,000, and was bought in by one of the parties interested.

HON. MR. MCKAY—What has that to do with the savings banks?

HON. MR. DEVER—If the hon. gentleman knew anything of political economy he would understand that it had something to do with the question; but if he has not brains to understand it I cannot give them to him. This is a serious subject: it is not well for gentlemen in Ontario, engaged in manufacturing enterprises, to jeer, and laugh, and sneer at those who do not share their prosperity; they must not fancy because they are prosperous that all the rest of the country is satisfied. I know other instances where property which was valued at $30,000 a few years ago would not bring to-day $7,000. I also know wharf property that was worth $10,000 some time ago, which to-day would not bring $5,000. I also know that trade is reduced exceedingly.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—Is that in consequence of the deposits in the savings banks?

HON. MR. DEVER—I think it has a very striking connection with deposits in the savings banks. It shows that the money cannot be utilized in commerce, in real estate or general business, and hence people are compelled to deposit in savings banks the money which should be in circulation in the commerce of the country. I wish it to be understood that I have no ill-feeling towards the chartered banks. I have many friends in them but I never saw that they were of much use or profit in the country. They do not grow fields of wheat or build ships: they advance their money for the largest profit they can get. In fact they are shaving shops, and on that account I have no particular sympathy with them, and I felt it my duty to make these statements to you to show that the feeling that prosperity prevails throughout the Dominion at the present time is not general. I am very sorry that a depression exists. There is no man in the Dominion who would go further than I am prepared to go to bring about prosperity, and I think it behooves a government, the financial portion of it at any rate, to see that the financial matters are evenly balanced, so that in this new country we shall have the prosperity and freedom of trade which should prevail.

SATURDAY'S SITTING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that when the House adjourns this day it do stand adjourned until the following day at three p.m. He said: There has been some conversation in the House in regard to sitting to-morrow. It was thought at one time that possibly the sitting could be dispensed with, but the state of the public business is such, so far as I understand, that it is absolutely necessary that the House should sit to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Before the orders of the day are called I rise to a question of privilege. It is very distasteful to me and to a large number of members of this House to be obliged to refer to the reports of our debates which are published in the Ottawa Citizen, but the report in yesterday's Citizen is so unfair and one-sided as to affect the dignity of this House. The report gives some remarks made by the hon. Senator from Niagara and which make him charge me with preferring malicious charges and then afterwards pronouncing them to be slander, and the reporter of that paper contents himself by saying that I supposed it refers to me and made no additional remark. He makes the Speaker of this House to say that the member for Woodstock has now the liberty to formulate his charges or to leave himself in an unenviable position. The House will remark the expression "unenviable." Was ever a member of this House used as I am when I try to discharge a very simple duty? I simply rose on a former occasion to put a respectful question to the member from Niagara asking him if he would authorize us to deny certain rumours, and when I did so I was stopped, as usual, by the hon. gentleman from Sackville (Mr. Botsford). If the hon. Senator from Niagara had simply replied "I do authorize you to deny these statements," the whole matter would have been at an end. What sort of treatment is it when a member of this House rises to discharge an important duty according to the rules of Parliament and is called a malicious slanderer while the proprietors of the newspaper have been inspired to omit his reply? I do not believe that the gentleman who represents the Citizen would ever have done this, if he had not been inspired from some improper quarter to thus mutilate the report, to as to make it appear that there was no truth in the rumor respecting the hon. gentleman from Niagara.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I call the hon. gentleman to order.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman is wandering from the question of privilege. No attack can be made on another member under the cover of a question of privilege. These remarks about the hon. member do not come within the scope of the hon. gentleman's privilege.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I do not make any attack on this question of privilege: I merely explain that I put a question and was called to order before a reply could be given.

THE SPEAKER—I may say with regard to the report in the Citizen newspaper that I did not see it this morning: it escaped my notice. For the first time I hear the expression of my own remarks on the occasion of the subject being brought before the House by the hon. member from Niagara yesterday. I have nothing to complain of in regard to the report of my own observation on that occasion. I made that remark and used the word to which exception has been taken by the hon. gentleman, and used it advisedly, and I now see no reason to withdraw it. My reason for doing so was this, that I believe, in common with every member of the House, that on the occasion when the hon. member was called to order he was not making a friendly inquiry of the hon. gentleman from Niagara, but deliberately attacking his character—not, it is true, in a manly and open way, but by inuendo and insinuation, which is sometimes more offensive and painful to an honorable mind. It was because I considered that having been challenged to formulate his charges, if he did not do so he would occupy an unenviable position.

FISHING BY FOREIGN VESSELS BILL.

THIRD READING.

The Order of the Day having been called for the third reading of Bill (136) "An Act further to amend the Act respecting fishing by foreign vessels," as amended,

HON. MR. ALLAN said:—Before the Bill is read the third time, I desire to refer it back to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of striking out the last clause in the schedule of the Act. The point involved is the one to which my attention was called by the hon. member from Halifax yesterday, that inasmuch as Prince Edward Island did not come into the Confederation until after the Dominion Statute respecting fishing by foreign vessels had been passed, that it might happen in that way, if this Act was not shown to apply to Prince Edward Island, that it might be outside of the legislation on the subject. I consulted the hon. Minister of Fisheries and the Minister of Justice in reference to it, since the House met last night, and they said that, as a matter of course, this Act would be included in the Consolidated Statutes this year, but that in order to preserve the continuity and to prevent the possibility of danger, until the Consolidated

HON. MR. ALEXANDER.

Statutes had received the Royal assent and this became a part and parcel of the Consolidated Statutes and applicable to the whole Dominion, Prince Edward Island amongst the rest, it might be as well to strike out the clause which does away with the Prince Edward Island statute.

The motion was agreed to.

In the Committee,

HON. MR. ALLAN moved that the last clause in the schedule be struck out.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—If I understood the hon. gentleman aright it was to substitute the operation of the clause he is now moving, for any legislation of the Province of Prince Edward Island—am I right?

HON. MR. ALLAN—No. The objection was that inasmuch as Prince Edward Island came into the Confederation subsequent to the enactment of the Dominion Statutes relating to fishing by foreign vessels, of which this Act is an amendment, and as this Act is intended to apply to the whole Dominion and so does away with all the Acts enumerated in this schedule, that perhaps in that way Prince Edward Island might drop out, and therefore it is proposed to continue the Prince Edward Island Act until this becomes part of the Consolidated Statutes, which will be assented to at the close of the present session.

The motion was agreed to.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD, from the Committee, reported the Bill with the amendment, which was concurred in.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

ST. JOHN BRANCH RAILROAD BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the third reading of Bill (137) "An Act respecting the Carleton, City of St. John, Branch Railroad.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (10) "An Act respecting Real Property in the Territories.
(Mr. Plumb.)

At 6 o'clock the Speaker left the Chair

AFTER RECESS.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills, reported from Committee of the Whole, without amendment, were read the third time and passed:—

Bill (140) "An Act respecting the Improvement of the Harbor of Quebec."
(Mr. Plumb.)

Bill (139) "An Act respecting Tolls over the Dunnville Dam and Bridge, connecting works constructed over the Grand River."
(Mr. Plumb.)

Bill (133) "An Act further to amend the law respecting the North-West Territories."
(Mr. Plumb.)

THE EXECUTION OF LOUIS RIEL.

DEBATE CONCLUDED.

The Order of the day having been called

Resuming Debate on the honorable Mr. Trudel's motion:—Calling the attention of this Honorable House to the statements of two of the Honorable members of the Government in two manifestoes, one of which has the character of an official document, which have been printed and publicly circulated, the one being entitled "In re Louis Riel convicted of treason and executed therefor;" and the second, "The Riel Question—Letter of the Honorable J. A. Chapleau."

And inquiring of the Government whether it is their intention to have an additional declaration upon the same subject, or in any other manner?

HON. MR. TRUDEL said:—When the House adjourned the other night I was going to discuss the relations between the Hudson Bay Company and the population of the North-West. I had occasion to call attention first to this striking fact, that while the circumstances alluded to in the motion occurred in the year 1869, still the Government of Canada only acquired their right to the North-West on the 1st of July, 1870. Secondly, I went on to show that it has been formally recognized, first by the Colonial Office, and secondly by the Secretary of State for Canada, that the pretended Acts of authority in the North-West had been exercised without any real authority—that is, that those who pretended to act for and in the name of the Government had not and could not have authority in the North-West, for the good reason that Canada had no jurisdiction in the North-West, because the transfer had not then taken place. I showed by the depositions of such gentlemen as Gov. McTavish, Col. Dennis, Mr. Hargrave, Mr. Bannatyne, Mr. Spence and Lieut.-Governor Archibald, that a serious spoliation of property had taken place—that tracts of land several miles square had been surveyed with the intention of being taken possession of by new comers who were not citizens of the country and who had no possible title to those lands, and that all this was done to the detriment of the half-breeds of that country. I called attention to the extraordinary occurrences which, in my humble opinion, cannot be interpreted otherwise than meaning that a kind of conspiracy had been organized against the people of the North-West to deprive them of their rights, and more particularly of their property. I called attention specially to this succession of facts: First, orders given by one of the departments of the Government at Ottawa to their officer to go to the North-West with special instructions to survey the lands at Oak Point and on the banks of the Red River, the two places where the French half-breeds had settled. Secondly, that according to the report of Col. Dennis he had foreseen that his surveyor would be stopped by the half-breeds and that he had given written orders as to what should be done in the event of such an occurrence, and that he was surveying on the property claimed by the half-breeds. That several months before this several young men had arrived in the North-West and had boasted that they were not common laborers although engaged with the surveying party, but that they were soldiers, that they had come to the North-West to drive out the half-breeds, and that, later on, when the transfer of the country would be made to Canada, their superior officers would come to command them, and that they would drive out the half-breeds. That several months after, by the report of Col. Dennis, there was practically a military organization ready, exactly as those young men had predicted several months previous. Of this military organization Col. Dennis was in command, he had under him Major Boulton, Capts. Webb and Hart, and all the members of the surveying parties who were graduates of the military schools. I mentioned all these facts, and the further fact that at the very first, when the surveyors were stopped by the half-breeds and were told that they were trespassing on their lands, the latter had no arms in their hands and did not use any violence to the surveyors except by putting their feet on the surveyor's chain. Still from that moment the half-breeds were called insurgents, rebels, delinquents, and treated as criminals. I called attention to all those facts and asked if it was possible that all this was merely the result of chance or if it was not rather the result of a plot concocted elsewhere by somebody. Then I had the honor to point out from official documents that the Provisional Government had been organized regularly; that all the members of that Provisional Government had been chosen by a convention of 40 delegates duly elected by the people—in most cases unanimously—and that this organization fully represented the will of the people and was the legitimate authority in the country. I have also quoted from the highest authorities on national law to show that when a people are abandoned by their legitimate government—when the legitimate government ceases to act, the people have the right to constitute a government themselves. This is the law of nations, and I showed from official documents that before organizing such a government this convention sent four of their delegates to Mr. McTavish whom the Governor-General and the then Secretary of State, and in fact everybody, recognized as the only legitimate authority at the time, and Mr. McTavish declared solemnly to those four delegates that he considered that the Government of Assiniboia had been abolished by Mr. Maccougall's proclamation; and not only did he not oppose the formation of a new government but he pressed upon the delegates the necessity of organizing a regular government.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—In what month did that occur?

HON. MR. TRUDEL—This took place, I think, in January 1870.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—That was some months after the half-breeds had taken up arms.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—Yes. There had been a first organization. I am very glad that the hon. gentleman is in his place to-night, because the other day I had the honor to cite the evidence he gave in the Lepine suit, and before the Commission of 1874. I called the attention of the House to the authorities on public law, which I quoted, who go so far as to say that supposing there has been a government which at first would have been a usurpation, that the consent of the nation is sufficient to legalize that Government.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—I can tell the hon. gentleman that one-half of the population never recognized the Government—never.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I hope the hon. gentleman will remember the circumstances that he was himself one of the delegates, and that it was stated by not less than seven or eight witnesses that the members of the Government had been elected by the Convention.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—They were not elected at all; they were merely nominated.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I may possibly use an expression which is not correct; but the hon. gentleman will please remark this, that I am summing up what I proved the other night by official documents which I quoted. I have no objection to repeating the particulars, but I think it would be unjust to those who have already heard them, and who thought they were detained long enough listening to me for three hours speaking and reading documents. My argument may be taken for what it is worth, and of course the hon. member is perfectly in his right to question any of those documents or meet them by the production of other documents. I was not present there and I cannot do better than take the depositions which were given under the oath of such men as Archbishop Taché, Mr. Bunn, who was the secretary of the Council of Assiniboia, the evidence under oath of the hon. gentleman himself, the evidence of Mr. Bannatyne, of Mr. Cowan, and all those whose statements I quoted the other day. The hon. gentleman will not deny, I suppose, that before nominating the members of the Provisional Government he himself, with Mr. Frazer and two other men, I think Mr. Pagé was one, went to Governor McTavish who advised them to form a Government—at least the hon. gentleman stated so under oath. I quoted the report of Lord Dufferin to the Imperial authorities in which he stated that the Provisional Government had been duly nominated by representatives of the people and duly elected and that all those men were of high respectability and had been sent there by the people.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—I think I will correct some of the hon. gentleman's statements as he proceeds. I do not wish to go into the matter but with his permission I will correct him when I find that he is in error.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I have no objection. I will now call your special attention to some of the occurrences which took place between the people of the North-West and the Provisional Government and the Hudson Bay Company.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—Does the hon. gentleman know why that loan was made?

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I know it from the documents I read.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—I can tell the hon. gentleman the reason why it was made. It was merely to allow the Hudson Bay Company to go on with their trade—for that alone.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—The hon. gentleman will, I suppose, take the documents which are published in the blue books.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—I know what I am stating of my own knowledge.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—The letter reads as follows:—

I have not seen President Riel yet, and am anxious to know whether he is keeping off till I write him, or is just waiting till he has time to see me. Should I write to him and beg him to come and see me, as I have long made up my mind, on the point he and I last spoke? I know I have before given him offence by asking to come to me, and I don't want to do that. At the same time no feeling of ill-timed vanity has interfered with my asking him now. A mere hint for me to open communication with him or not will suffice. But I would prefer agreeing to the loan personally, as thought in the first instance, and I would like at the same time to speak to him about his communications for Fort Ellice and other posts. I am afraid you will have difficulty in reading this scrawl.

Hoping you will excuse my troubling you to-day and all days, believe me, with very sincere feelings of gratitude,

Yours very faithfully,

(Signed) W. MCTAVISH.

We see that the Ex-Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West, who was still the head of the Hudson Bay Company, wanted to see the President to complete a loan spoken of before, and to speak about communications with Fort Ellice and other posts, probably the matter to which the hon. gentleman has alluded. On page 55 of the documents of 1870 I read this, in another letter of Governor McTavish, speaking of the members of the Provisional Government having taken possession of Fort Garry:—

“On coming into the Fort they earnestly disclaimed all intention of injuring either person or property within it, and it must be allowed that in that respect they have kept their word.”

So that His Excellency the Governor, who was at the head of the Hudson Bay Company, declared that they had injured neither person nor property.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—What date was that?

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—The letter was dated 9th November.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—I thought so.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I come now to the deposition of Mr. Bannatyne, at page 124 of the documents of 1874. In this deposition Mr. Bannatyne says:

“Colonel Dennis commenced trying to arm the people in opposition to the French; took possession of the Lower Fort Garry; enlisted a number of Indians with their chiefs; failed to get the old settlers to join him, and left in disgust; and then found out at Pembina, or somewhere else, that he had no authority for acting as he had been doing. While at the Lower Fort he sent up and enrolled a number of strangers, who had just come in, and who were called the Canadian party; the men were requested by Colonel Dennis to return to their homes, and remain quiet until he asked for them; instead of which they gathered in the house of Dr. Schultz with their arms, at Winnipeg, for the reason, as they stated, that they were protecting private property of Dr. Schultz and of the Dominion Government, although neither kind of property had been interfered with at that time of my knowledge.”

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—What is the date of that?

HON. MR. TRUDEL—Mr. Bannatyne gave his evidence before the Committee in 1874. He does not give the precise date when those troops came back from lower Fort Garry and occupied the house of Dr. Schultz; but hon. gentlemen may see by the fact that it was after Mr. Dennis' failure to organize an army, and after having gone back to Pembina to Mr. Macdougall, where he found that all he had done previously was wrong. The hon. gentleman knows this was done after the proclamation of Mr. Macdougall, which was dated 1st December, 1869, and he remembers that these efforts to organize a military force took at least one month, so that Mr. Bannatyne must refer to the beginning of January or February, 1870. It cannot be otherwise, according to the facts and dates which we have in the public documents.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—That occurred before the 1st of January—it must have occurred somewhere in December, because very shortly after that the property was taken from Dr. Schultz's place, every bit of it—there was nothing left. All depends on the dates.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—This is entirely out of order.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I have no objection to these interruptions. I am very glad that the hon. gentleman is here to give us information. I know he was in that country at the time of those occurrences. The House will be good enough to remember my declaration at the beginning of my remarks. I do not examine this question from a political point of view. I say we, the Senate of Canada, ought to take a higher ground, and try if we cannot succeed in removing misunderstandings which exist, unfortunately, between two races, and which, in my humble opinion, to a certain extent at least, endanger, or at all events injure, the interests of the Dominion. I do not come here to try and put this Honorable House in error. All I want to do is to invite hon. gentlemen to do what I have taken about six months to do, that is, to read the public documents carefully, compare them, and try to find what is the truth in all these matters, and see the share of responsibility of everybody, without seeking to make any persons bear the burden even of their own responsibility. Suppose I should come to the conclusion from the documents that there are citizens who do not appear very advantageously in these matters, I do not desire to find fault with them. If the hon. gentleman had been here the day before yesterday he would have seen that whenever I met with the name of somebody who might be injured, not by my own opinion of him, but by the statements contained in the documents themselves, I omitted to mention it. For instance, I was referring to a time before the half-breeds were thought of, when there was a good deal of trouble in that country, when jails were broken into and prisoners taken out of them, and at the time the legitimate government of the country could not find a single man amongst the English speaking population to sustain them—at least the document says so. Governor McTavish complained of it, and some Canadians, who were not more than 20 or 40 in number, began to display an ill feeling towards the French half-breeds because they were sustaining the authority of the legitimate government. At that time the loyalists, as they called themselves, were organizing a Republic at Portage la Prairie. I think it is Mr. Cowan who testifies to that fact. I stated this the day before yesterday, taking my information from evidence given under oath. I have here a document, which is of considerable force, but I will not read it, and I will tell you why. It is the deposition under oath, and based on official documents, of Father Richot. His evidence will be found in the documents of 1874 beginning at page 86. The hon. gentleman will find there not only what this man says under oath, but what he is proving by letter and documents which he filed at the enquiry; but of course he is a Catholic priest and I shall not read his evidence! I have already given more than is sufficient. I will supplement what I have just stated by the evidence of a man who was certainly not a friend of the half-breeds, Mr. William Cowen. Speaking of this jail-breaking and of the great difficulty arising from the trial of a young man for a criminal offence in the settlement, for which he was convicted, he says:—

“ The next great difficulty after that was in the Spring of 1863, arising from the trial of an Englishman for a criminal offence in the settlement, for which he was convicted. He had been a rather prominent opponent of the company politically, and on that ground a strong feeling was created in the settlement in his favor among the English. During the first months of his confinement there were frequent threats of taking him out of gaol by force, and at the end of two months a petition was presented to Governor Dallas for his release. But the Governor referred it to the judge and magistrate, who recommended that it should not be granted, and it was not granted. The friends of the prisoner soon after assembled at a session of the Petty Court, and when the court was over they broke the gaol and released the prisoner. The following day one of the gaol breakers was arrested and imprisoned, and an application was made for his release, which was refused by the Governor, and his friends came there armed and in broad day took him out of the prison. The Sheriff had endeavored to raise a force among the English to defend the gaol, and could not, and the French then came forward and offered themselves to the Governor for that purpose; the Governor refused this on the ground that he did not wish to set one portion of the people against the other. A strong memorial arising out of the matter was sent by the magistrate to the Imperial authorities for assistance, but no answer to it was ever received. This added to the dissatisfaction; one or two minor matters afterwards occurred. No assistance came from England. The Hudson's Bay Government grew continually weaker, until finally the out-break took place."

The hon. gentleman will see that this resembles my own statements. I read from the sworn evidence of a man who certainly is a reliable witness. I do not profess to know personally what took place in the North-West, but I am trying to elucidate the question as well as I can by studying the public documents. It would have been very easy to make a case by taking the evidence of the friends of those of my race; but you will see that I generally give the evidence of the other side, so that there may be no dispute as to the facts I am bringing before the Senate. At page 154, I find that Governor Archibald, after the trouble was over, thus speaks of the French half-breeds:

"The difficulty is not among the people of the country, but among the small band of lawless men, idlers and roughs who infest the taverns of Winnipeg. These men have no influence except for mischief, but they might light a flame it would be hard to extinguish. For a few days I felt the danger was extreme. The only possible way to avoid a serious out-break was to get rid of the two men whose presence in the country formed the pretext for the action of the roughs at Winnipeg."

The hon. gentleman knows the two men. They were Riel and Lepine. I find in the same document something very strange, to which I call special attention; the Canadian party, who as I proved the other day by documents, publicly set at defiance the legitimate authority of the Government of Assiniboia—that loyal group of Canadians who said that when the country would be under the authority of Canada they would drive out the French half-breeds and show the authorities of the North-West how to govern and what is the law, went so far as to accuse the half-breeds of being rebels—why? Because the were sustaining only the legitimate Government of the country. This is very hard to believe; but I will establish it by the documents. At page 31 of the Reports of 1870 there is a letter sent by the loyalists of Winnipeg to Mr. William Macdougall; it is not dated, but I see that the following document bears date the 7th November. I will read the letter:—

"We as friends would advise you by the bearer, who is a reliable man, as to the position of affairs here. The insurgents have taken possession of Fort Garry, and established sentries at the gates. No opposition offered by the officers of the Company, although informed that such events would take place twelve hours before. The Town is also occupied by the rebels; so far no disturbance has occurred. Considerable wavering among the half-breeds of Riel's party, on account of Mr. Provencher not being allowed to address them in public, and many would be glad to go quietly to their homes. The rebels call a general meeting about Monday next, and will then demand an expression of the whole settlement, which we will take care to have present, and have no doubt that a large majority will be in your favor, and advise you strongly to await the result at Pembina.

The Hudson's Bay Company are evidently with the rebels, and their present role is to prevent your having any official intercourse with them. It is said that the rebels will support the Government of the Hudson Bay Company as it now exists. All the subordinates in the party say that, if you have a commission from Her Majesty to enter here as Governor, they will lay down their arms."

So that it will be seen that the only legitimate authority in the land, according to this letter, was evidently with the rebels. Then, against whom were they rebels? Was it against the authority of the Canadian Government to occupy a country of which they did not get possession until the following year? I do not believe it. And those rebels were not such bad rebels after all, since it is admitted by their enemies that their desire was to maintain the Government of the Hudson's Bay Company, and that they were willing to lay down their arms when the country was transferred to anyone holding a commission from Her Majesty. You recollect that Lord Granville, Secretary of the Colonies, in the name of Her Majesty, said that the only legitimate authority in the land was that of the Hudson Bay Company. Mr. Howe wrote to Mr. Macdougall, "You know very well you had no power there, that the only legitimate authority was that of Governor McTavish, and it is too bad that you should have given that commission to a man of so little discretion as Mr. Dennis. You know all these warlike preparations are against the law, and he will be responsible in justice for every life that may be lost." Was not this substantially the document sent by the Secretary of State which I read to you the other day? These men are accused of sustaining the legitimate government of the country; and that is the reason why they are called rebels. But that is not all; Mr. Macdougall had his commission in his pocket, and of course it was not very pleasant to be a Governor on the American territory and have no authority. It was not the fault of the half-breeds. It was the fault of those who had sent him there before the territory was transferred to the Canadian Government. He wrote as follows on the 20th Nov., 1869, to the Secretary of State:

"I have felt it my duty to mention these circumstances, to enable His Excellency to understand the difficulty that meets me in attempting to organize, in connection with the authorities, any resistance to the conspiracy which has already made such head in the settlement. The confirmed belief of every person I have seen, or whose testimony has reached me (whether in the confidence of the rebels or friendly to Canada) is that the Hudson Bay Company's employees, with scarcely an exception, are either actively or tacitly encouraging the insurrection. It was the prevalence of this belief that determined me to force the authorities into a public declaration of some kind that would dispel this illusion—if such it should prove to be—or compel them to shew their hand as abettors of the insurrection."

This is the statement of Mr. Macdougall, who had no more authority in the Red River country than the Emperor of China has in Canada, that he wanted to see whether the legitimate authority of the country was not an abettor of the insurrection.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I would like to know whether the hon. gentleman recognized the Governor and Council of Assiniboia as a legitimate Government?

HON. MR. TRUDEL—Certainly.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I find on the 25th October 1869, Judge Black was acting in the place of Mr. McTavish on account of his serious illness, and he held a council at which there was a statement made that there was dissatisfaction among the Metis. The Council stated that Mr. Riel just before, early on the morning of the 23rd November, had gone to Mr.

John McTavish, and he demanded the public accounts—had taken the public accounts, and compelled them by force to give them up. Then at this meeting Judge Black who presided stated that there had been a strong force, an insurgent force, of armed bodies of half-breeds who had placed themselves on the road between Pembina and Fort Garry:—

"The Council unanimously expressed their indignant reprobation, of the outrageous proceedings referred to by the President, but feeling strongly impressed with the idea that the parties concerned in them must be acting in utter forgetfulness, or even, perhaps, ignorance of the highly criminal character of their actions, and of the very serious consequences they involved; it was thought by calm reasoning and advice they might be induced to abandon their dangerous schemes, before they had irretrievably committed themselves. Mr. Riel and Mr. Bruce, who are known to hold leading positions in the party opposed to Mr. Macdougall, had been invited to be present at this meeting of the Council, and on being questioned by the Council as to the motives and intentions of the party they represented. M. Riel, who alone addressed the Council on the occasion, substantially said, in the course of a long and somewhat irregular discussion, that his party were perfectly satisfied with the present Government, and wanted no other; that they objected to any governor coming to Canada without their being consulted in the matter; that they would never admit any Governor no matter by whom he might be appointed, if not by the Hudson Bay Company, unless delegates were previously sent, with whom they might negotiate as to the terms and condition under which they would acknowledge him; that they were uneducated and only half civilized, and felt if a large immigration were to take place they would probably be crowded out of a country which they claimed as their own; that they knew that they were, in a sense, poor and insignificant, but that it was just because they were aware of their insignificance that they had felt so much at being treated as if they were more insignificant than they in reality were; that their existence, or, at least, their wishes had been entirely ignored; that if Mr. Macdougall were once here, most probably the English-speaking population would allow him to be installed in office as Governor, and then he would be "our Master or King, as he says," and that therefore they intended to send him back; that they consider that they are acting not only for their own good, but for the good of the whole settlement, that they did not feel that they were breaking any law, but were simply acting in defence of their own liberty, and that they were determined to prevent Mr. Macdougall from coming into the settlement at all hazards. The Council endeavored to convince Mr. Riel of the erroneous nature of the views held by himself and the party he represented; explained the highly criminal character of their proceedings, and pointed out the very disastrous consequences which might accrue, not only to themselves, but to the settlement generally, if they persisted in their present course. He was earnestly advised to exercise his influence with his party in dissuading them from attempting to molest Mr. Macdougall in any way, and inducing them to return peaceably to their homes, assuring him that, sooner or later, heavy retribution would fall upon them, if they carried their plans into execution.

Mr. Riel, however, refused to adopt the views of the Council.

I think at that time Riel was a young man of about 21 or 22.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—22 or 23.

HON. MR. PLUMB—He was a young man having the concentration of all the wisdom of the country, and knowing the constitutional rights on which Governments are formed. Riel, the self-appointed leader of this party, was the leader of the 18 men who stood on the chain when the surveyors were trying to survey, but my hon. friend did not mention his name as being the leader.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—No, I did not.

HON. MR. PLUMB—But you knew that he was one of the men?

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I knew that he was, but I was not going to add anything that was not in the document.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The report continues;—

“Riel, however, refused to adopt the views of the Council, and obstinately persisted in expressing his determination to oppose Mr. Macdougall's entrance into the settlement, declining even to press the reasoning and advice of the Council upon his party, although, he reluctantly promised to repeat to them what he had just heard, and inform Gov. McTavish of the result by Thursday at eleven o'clock.

“Mr. Riel and Mr. Bruce having retired, the Council resumed the consideration of the subject before them, and the expediency of calling out an armed force to meet and protect Mr. Macdougall was suggested, but as it was seen that it would be from the English speaking part of the community that such a force, if forthcoming at all, would be chiefly drawn, the result would evidently be, to bring into armed collision, sections of the people, who, although they have hitherto lived together in comparative harmony, yet differed from each other so widely in point of race, of language and religion, as well as general habits, that the commencement of hostilities between them would probably involve not only themselves, but the surrounding Indians in a sanguinary and protracted struggle; and the Council therefore felt that without a regular military force to fall back upon, they could hardly be held justified under almost any circumstances, in resorting to an experiment so full of possible mischief to the whole country.

“The Council, at length, having heard that a number of the more intelligent and influential among the French were not implicated in the hostile movement against Mr. Macdougall, adopted the following resolution, which was moved by Mr. Bannantyne and seconded by Mr. McBeath:—

“That Messrs. Dease and Goulet be appointed immediately to collect as many of the more respectable of the French community as they could, and with them proceed to the camp of the party who intend to intercept Governor Macdougall, and endeavor to procure their peaceable dispersion, and that Mr. Dease report to Mr. McTavish, on or before Thursday next, as to their success, or otherwise.”

The hon. gentleman will observe that the placidity of the white population was based on a desire to prevent an outbreak which might lead to bloodshed and serious loss of life. Does the hon. gentleman say that because those gentlemen wisely and thoughtfully, knowing the result which would ensue from a conflict of races, took that course, that by so doing they waived their right to govern the country and to represent the Dominion of Canada or the British Government which had the authority?

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I am very glad the hon. gentleman has brought up this matter. I hope he will go further on, and he will find in the report of Colonel Dennis, alluding to this meeting of the Council, that he says at the last Mr. Riel succeeded in showing the members of the Council that he was right and they were wrong. Mere words do not make the criminality of an act. Supposing I should say to a man who is crossing a street “My dear sir, you have committed a great crime” it does not follow that the crossing of the street is a great crime. What was considered a great crime was to prevent Mr. Macdougall exercising the powers of a Lieutenant-Governor when he had no authority whatever to do so. Mr. Macdougall, having issued a proclamation, these gentlemen could not imagine that he had not the authority to do so. They found that the transfer was to be made, or something of that kind, and that Mr. Macdougall had some authority; but there is something after that—the letter of Lord Granville, speaking in the name of Her Majesty, and the letter of Mr. Howe, Secretary of State, who says to Mr. Macgall. “You have no authority there at all.” Now is it a crime to prevent a man from exercising authority improperly? As I stated before, I am trying to throw some light on the matter. I do not pretend that all that the half-breeds did is perfectly right and regular from every point of view. The hon. gentleman must have slept part of the time while I was quoting documents the other day, or he would have understood that I mentioned myself this very fact that there was something irregular, but I quoted Grotius and Taparelli to establish that even the authority of the usurper becomes legitimate when it is made so by the people; and this is so in a case where the legitimate authority has abandoned the country. Now, I know it was very humiliating to those gentlemen—I understand they did not like at all to see a poor French half-breed playing an important role in the whole matter; but how did it happen? The hon. gentleman quoted the words of Justice Black. If Judge Black had considered that these proceedings were so criminal, how is it that he presided himself at the first meeting of the convention? The two first days he presided. That was before the election of Riel, who was a member of the Council like all the others. Justice Black presided, and Mr. Bunn, the Secretary of the Council of Assiniboia, was the secretary of the convention. He subsequently accepted the position of Secretary of the Provisional Government. I read Mr. Bunn’s deposition, showing that he had gone to the convention on the invitation of Governor McTavish himself. When those facts occurred in January, 1870, does that not cover what happened in November, 1869? And, as a high authority has stated, we ought to take all those acts as a whole. Suppose in a case of war a house is destroyed to make way for the construction of a fortification, or something of the kind. If I were to come to the Senate and say “Gentlemen, I was the owner of a house, and Mr. So-and-so came one day and demolished it: was he not a criminal?” The Senate would say yes; but when we add that it was done in a time of war, when the country was threatened by the enemy, and it was necessary to make a fortification there, and that was why the house was destroyed, all the authorities would say that under the circumstances it was all right. The hon. gentleman will find another document to which I will call his attention immediately—a proclamation of Governor McTavish. After the French half-breeds had entered the fort and taken possession of it, he issued a proclamation to condemn that act, but that did not prevent him afterwards writing, himself, letters to his friends to invite them to join the Provisional Government because it was the salvation of the country. It was very clear there were two parties in that country; the English element had taken possession of Lower Fort Garry, and the French element of Upper Fort Garry. Now which of these two acts was the more criminal? Those men believed sincerely, I think, that they were defending their homes; how could it be a crime for them to do so when they saw, as I stated before, men without any authority whatever there with the proclamation of Mr. Macdougall, telling them to fire upon, to kill, to break into, to destroy, and to do everything of that kind.

HON. MR. PLUMB.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Did anybody fire, shoot, or destroy? Who hit anybody? Was anybody killed?

HON. MR. TRUDEL—Yes.

HON. MR. PLUMB—How many?

HON. MR. TRUDEL—Well Messier was one.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Who else?

HON. MR. TRUDEL—And Parisien was another.

HON. MR. PLUMB—And who else?

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I do not recollect all the names, but there were three or five.

HON. MR. PLUMB—By whom?

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I do not know, I was not there. It was a time of war. Parisien was wounded, and received thirteen bullets by a party commanded by Major Boulton, of whom Scott was one.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—Twelve falsehoods, he got one bullet in the thigh.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—The hon. gentleman did not cover the whole Territory.

HON. MR. PLUMB—But all the fighting was concentrated in a small portion of it.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that there were two parties; he knows that those parties at Portage la Prairie and Kildonan organized to destroy the Provisional Government.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—No, no.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) is a living evidence that they did not.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I do not think the evidence we have under oath is to be despised either.

HON. MR. PLUMB—But I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) who is alive and lived in the country at the time, should know what he is speaking about.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I am willing to meet the hon. gentleman and take his own declaration on this matter. I have the greatest respect for the high character and the high standing of the hon. gentleman in the country; but he knows that all that Governor McTavish and Mr. Bannatyne and Mr. Bunn have declared under oath cannot be false. He cannot pretend that he is the only man who is correct.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—Does the hon. gentleman know that all those men he has quoted were branded as rebels?

HON. MR. TRUDEL—That is, the hon. gentleman belonged to one party who called themselves "loyalists," and, of course, all the members of the other party were "rebels." I suppose the hon. gentleman is perfectly sincere in his statement and in his feelings but he ought not to consider that all the other men who have given evidence in this matter were not reliable.

HON. MR. PELLETIER—Of course they perjured themselves.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—The hon. gentleman knows very well that when the Provisional Government was organized, they were elected by a convention of which he himself was a member. Mr. Ross was appointed Chief Justice, Mr. Bannatyne was nominated Postmaster General, Mr. Bunn was nominated Provincial Secretary—the hon. gentleman knows that.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—The trouble was all over then.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—The hon. gentleman knows that Bannatyne and Bunn have declared under oath before the Commission, or in the Lepine suit, I do not recollect which, that these were members of the Government; that they were elected by the convention of the 14th and that out of the forty delegates Riel was elected President by a vote of 37. Of the remaining three who did not vote for him, Boyd voted against him, and the other two were Englishmen who were absent and did not vote. This is what Bunn says under oath, and of course I take the evidence as I find it. I was reading the letter of Mr. Macdougall, in which he says:

"I have felt it my duty to mention these circumstances, to enable His Excellency to understand the difficulty that meets me in attempting to organize, in connection with the authorities, any resistance of the conspiracy which has already made such head in the settlement. The confirmed belief of every person I have seen, or whose testimony has reached me (whether in the confidence of the rebels, or friendly to Canada) is, that the Hudson's Bay Company's employes, with scarcely an exception, are either actively or tacitly encouraging the insurrection. It was the prevalence of this belief that determined me to force the authorities into a public declaration of some kind that would dispel this illusion—if such it should prove to be—or compel them to shew their hand as abettors of the insurrection. The “appeal” of the loyal inhabitants (see page C), who had previously opened correspondence with me, was the last screw applied, and seems to have accomplished the purpose, notwithstanding the “peculiar circumstances,” so strongly insisted upon in the inclosed letter to show that the issue of such a proclamation “might affect injuriously the future as well as the present Government.”

HON. MR. TRUDEL.

This is how the authority was speaking. In the absence of Governor McTavish, a few weeks afterwards, we find the majority of those men who were in the Council of Assiniboia declaring that what Riel and his party were doing was high treason, taking part in the proceedings and even becoming members of the new Government and taking part in their councils. We see that while they were declaring that the French half-breeds did not act properly, the only legitimate authority—Governor McTavish—“raged furiously against them,” and asked what business had Mr. Macdougall to come into the country and try to impose his authority on them. In all cases Mr. McTavish suspected that Mr. Macdougall had no authority, and it is only natural that afterwards, when they found it was perfectly established that he had no authority, the tone of their remarks changed.

HON. MR. PLUMB—May I ask the hon. gentleman if the Hon. William Macdougall was not regularly appointed, Lieutenant-Governor?

HON. MR. TRUDEL—He was regularly appointed and his commission said his authority should begin after the transfer of the Territory should be made.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—It could not have been otherwise.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I do not know for whom the hon. gentleman from Niagara speaks here? After all, we may be supposed to have a little common sense. What authority could this man have as bearer of a commission from the Government of Canada? What could be his authority in a country which at the time did not belong to Canada?

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—How was it that his authority was not acknowledged on the first of December, 1869? What was the reason?

HON. MR. TRUDEL—The reason was that at first it was no authority at all.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—An armed resistance was the reason.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—The hon. gentleman ought to know that supposing everybody in Canada had placed Mr. Macdougall on a golden throne in the North-West it would not have changed his position—he would have been no more governor of that territory on that account. His authority at the time was practically none, because his commission said “your authority shall begin only when the transfer will have been made.”

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—His authority was not recognized even after the transfer was made.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I rise to a question of order. We cannot be sitting here day and night. The hon. gentleman has had to go over this ground three times already on account of interruptions. If hon. gentlemen would allow him to proceed without interruption they have their chance to reply. How could the Government of Canada have given authority to a man to exercise power in a territory which they did not then own, and which they did not get the title to for some months afterwards?

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman from DeSalaberry had better be allowed to proceed.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I do not object to the interruptions of the hon. gentleman. I receive them in a friendly spirit. I take it that it is a means of elucidating the question, and as I am ready to answer any question that he can raise, I invite interruption. If the hon. gentleman will listen while I read the commission appointing

Mr. Macdougall, he will see the force of my argument.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—I have not the slightest intention of interrupting; only there are certain of the hon. gentleman's statements that are so wide of the mark that I merely mention the fact. I have no intention of going into the debate now, because I cannot see any good that will arise out of the discussion of a dead issue.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—But the hon. gentleman will agree with me that he cannot destroy the official record. I hold in my hand a copy of the report of the Privy Council, dated 20th November, 1869. It reads as follows:—

“To the Honorable the Secretary of State for the Provinces, Ottawa:—

“On the recommendation of the Honorable Minister of Justice, the Committee advise that the Honorable William Macdougall, C.B. be appointed Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Territories, and that a Commission under the Great Seal do issue, to take effect from and after the day on which such Territories are transferred by Her Majesty to the Dominion of Canada.”

Mark the words “to take effect from and after the day on which such Territories are transferred by Her Majesty to the Dominion of Canada.”

HON. MEMBERS—Hear, hear.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—Now take the Commission, which is published on the following page of the blue book, and you will see that it is in the very same words as the Order in Council. Now, will anybody deny that this transfer by Her Majesty took place only on the 1st of July 1870; and if that is not denied, is it not as clear as daylight that in October, November or December 1869 Mr. Macdougall had no more power in the North-West than I had myself? It is no use repeating and repeating matters that are as clear as daylight.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—It is common sense.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I think I have said enough on this point. In my humble opinion the greatest cause of trouble, and which more than anything else created the unfortunate difficulty between the two different nationalities in this country, was the execution of a man named Thomas Scott. This was, I readily admit, an act much to be regretted; but I think it can be shown very easily that this act was not of the atrocious character which it is supposed to be by a certain portion of the population. I always proceed in the same way, to prove my case by official documents. Now what are the facts! If I am not mistaken; if the highest authorities on public law are not mistaken, Lord Dufferin and all those who testify as to the regularity of the organization of the Provisional Government in the North-West are not wrong. Whatever irregularities may have been committed in October, or November or December of 1869—and there were many irregularities—they did not come from the place whence it is supposed they came. But supposing there were half-breed irregularities, according to the best authorities this provisional government was a legitimate government, but the hon. gentleman opposite says no. Will he then explain why it was that the Government of Canada treated with the delegates of this provisional government? How will he explain the action of Lord Granville, who ordered the Government here to receive those delegates and treat with them? How will he interpret the action of Lord Granville who, when informed by telegram that those delegates had been arrested here, telegraphed immediately that it was against the law of nations that those men should be arrested, and demanded that they should be immediately released? Perhaps Lord Granville's action was influenced by the fact that he knew something about governments. Not only did the Government treat with those delegates, but I will show, I am sure to the extreme surprise of hon. gentlemen, that when the delegates were received, one of them had orders from their President, the unfortunate Riel, to tell the authorities here that he wanted to be relieved of the responsibility of governing the North-West, and the answer of the Government of Canada was, “Tell Mr. Riel to continue the government of the country until we send out a new governor.” And they did more than that. They inquired from the delegates whether President Riel would require a regular document transferring his authority to his successor, and the delegates said "No, it is not necessary, because our President understands that his government is only a provisional government, and of course he does not want that his authority shall be transferred to his successor." That is in the public documents, a declaration upon oath of one of the delegates.

HON. MR. TRUDEL.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—Oh, he swore falsely to please the hon. gentleman.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—If it is true that there was a legitimate government, and that according to the authority of that government the unfortunate man Scott was executed, it may be called a judicial murder ; it may be called a very improper action ; it may be called an error of judgment, or anything you like, but it cannot be termed a personal murder—because personally Riel had nothing to do with the matter in this sense : he was not a party to the council of war who condemned Scott to be executed. Those are facts which deserve some consideration. I believe it is the duty of the members of this Chamber to endeavor to work for the public welfare without being governed by public prejudice ; but, unfortunately, on this question there has been a great deal of public prejudice. I quoted yesterday from Governor Archibald, who said that unfortunately some prejudiced men went to the North-West sworn to kill all who had been connected with the execution of Scott. Governor Archibald did not look upon that execution as the personal act of an individual, because he adds, "almost all the population had been party to this deed, because it was the act of the Government, and it was found that those threats against the Government were against all the half-breeds." It is well known that we cannot find a record of the trial of Scott as easily as we can find the record of a suit which took place—in Montreal for instance ; but if we were to condemn as murderers all the captains in the army who had sentenced soldiers to execution by court martial because they could not produce a written record of the proceedings of the Council of war who authorized the execution, I suppose we might find as many murderers as there were officers ordering such executions. The theory of those half-breeds was this : those who were in authority in the North-West had received that authority directly from the general convention—Mr. Bunn, Mr. Bannatyne and several others swore to that fact. Then it follows that Mr. Lepine, who was the Adjutant-General, did not receive his authority from President Riel, but received it directly from the convention ; so that in the exercise of that authority he had no orders to receive, no veto to receive from anybody. Mr. Bunn on being asked in the suit of Lepine "had Riel any authority to stop the acts of Lepine?" replied "No." Archbishop McLean is called as a witness, and he says that he went to the prison and saw the President, and did his best to save Scott ; but he said when he asked for a reprieve, Riel replied "it is not in my power to grant it ; that power belongs to the Adjutant-General," and he sent for the Adjutant-General. The Adjutant-General came, and Archbishop McLean says "they spoke in French and I cannot testify as to what was said between them, but I saw by the movement of Lepine's head, who, after some conversation, got up and left the room, that he had refused to pardon Scott. There were two men who had been condemned to death—Boulton and Scott ; and Archbishop McLean says : "I did not believe that Riel was sincere, but after a time I happened to hear him in another room, and he did not know that I was on the other side, and I heard him praying to somebody to try and settle the difficulties existing between the French and English, and saying, 'if you cannot succeed in settling this difficulty we cannot save the lives of those men,' " and Mr. McLean says that subsequently he met Riel and he had tears in his eyes. This is the man who is represented as being as ferocious and brutal as a wild beast. Now, as to the character of Scott. If we refer to the sessional papers of 1870 we will find a report of Mr. Snow, one of the leaders of the surveying party. Mr. Snow testifies that one day he was nearly assassinated by Scott. He says :

The discontented men (amongst whom was Scott), referred to in my letter, had previously to the date of that letter struck for higher wages, and forced all the hands to remain idle for a day and a half. Upon my promise to write you they resumed work, and continued up to the 29th of September, at noon, when they again stopped work. On the 30th I sent Mr. Hamilton to the camp with your letter, which was read to them and explained, also a letter from myself, desiring all hands that were dissatisfied to come immediately to the depot, receive their pay, and leave the works. On the 1st of October they all, with the exception of three or four, came to the depot and were paid off for all the days they had worked, as returned by the foreman. And I supposed that the disaffected Canadians and American deserters would go quietly away, but instead of doing so, they suddenly returned to the office in a mass, and demanded payment for the three days they had lost on account of the two strikes.

This demand of course I refused, and was determined not to pay. I told them that they should all have been charged with their board during the strikes, but I had not done so, and endeavored to reason with them, but to no purpose. They then suddenly seized me and dragged me violently from the house towards the River Seine, in which they declared they would drown me unless I paid their unjust demand. After being dragged near the stream, upon the solicitation of my assistant, Mr. Hamilton, I paid their demand, but obliged them at the same time to sign their names opposite the sums they respectively forced me to pay. The same evening I proceeded to Fort Garry, and laid information against five of the leaders in this robbery, and four of them were apprehended on their arrival and lodged in jail. The examination before the magistrates came off on Tuesday, the 5th instant (the reporter for the North-West only being included), when they were committed for trial before the general court, only for violent assault. The prisoners have since been liberated on bail, their surety being a saloon keeper."

At page 47 of this report hon. gentlemen will find a letter from Lieutenant-Governor McTavish, dated 7th October, 1869, in which he relates the same fact, with other circumstances:—

"I am sorry to say that Mr. Snow, the Superintendent on the Canadian road to the Lake of the Woods, has had a serious disturbance with the people employed on the road, the most of whom are, however, strangers in the settlement. The men complain bitterly of their treatment, but are, no doubt, in the wrong, as they used considerable violence in dragging Mr. Snow to a creek, into which they threatened to throw him if he did not pay them some few days wages which they claimed, but which Mr. Snow considered not to be due them. The sum in question he eventually paid them under protest. Mr. Snow laid a charge of robbery against the men, but the magistrates did not consider that the facts justified such a charge, and committed the men for trial at the November Quarterly Court for assault."

Hon. gentlemen will say that the fact that Scott had made such an attempt was no reason why he should have been condemned to execution by Riel. That is true, but it shows at least that Scott was not a man of such unblemished character that we ought to suppose all possible evidence is against those who condemned him, and that all the facts were in this man's favor. The fact is there was a good deal of reason why he was executed, though I am not ready to say his execution was perfectly justifiable. At all events that execution is not of the character that is generally given to it. Amongst other things which I find in the sessional papers of 1874 is the following from the report of the committee of the House of Commons:

"Amongst the prisoners was one Scott, &c. The very man who, having been brought from Canada by Mr. Snow, all but murdered him at Pointe des Chenes. Passing through Winnipeg on the night of the 13th and 14th, Scott entered the house of one Couter, a relative of Mr. Riel's, and to which the latter often resorted. He enquired whether the president was there, with the intention, as stated by some, of killing him or of taking him as a hostage according to other accounts. Scott, when taken prisoner, exasperated the authorities, and I am grieved to tell you that the unfortunate man was sentenced to death by a court-martial and shot on the 4th inst."

This is from the letter which Archbishop Taché quotes in his deposition, and which at the time he had written to the Secretary of State, on the 11th November, 1870; so that this shows that Scott was tried for two crimes. First, he was accused of having attempted to assassinate the President of the Government; secondly, he was accused of having struck the guards. He was a prisoner for the second time. He had been released once and had been found in arms a second time against the Government which those men considered to be the legitimate authority of the country; and he was again arrested and he struck his guard. He was a prisoner of war, and he struck one of the captains of the guard in the face. It is hardly necessary to say that according to military regulations, even in time of peace, if a soldier strikes his officer it is a very serious offence. It is hardly necessary to explain what is the law when a man who is a prisoner of war strikes his guard, and more particularly if it is the officer of the guard. This man was a prisoner. He annoyed and insulted in the most revolting language those half-breed soldiers, and above all the officers by telling them they were nothing but cowards and calling them names which I shall not repeat to the House, but I will invite hon. gentlemen to look at the documents from which I quote. It happened one day that those soldiers and officers, especially three of the officers who had been slapped in the face by the prisoner said to the Adjutant-General: "If you have no authority to put a stop to this we will not serve any more under you. If you have any authority we want to be respected, and there must be an end put to this conduct." They assembled a council of war at which the Adjutant-General presided, and they condemned the unfortunate Scott to death. I have here the report of the trial of Ambrose Lepine in 1874—the very man who was condemned in the west because he had been the Adjutant-General under whose authority Scott was condemned and executed. Joseph Nolin, who acted as secretary of the council of war, is examined as follows:—

Q. Did Scott have a trial before his execution? A. Yes, before the council of war, on the evening of the 3rd of March, 1870.

Q. Who were those who composed this council of war?

A. The members of the council of war were Janvier Richot, André Nault, Elzear Goulet, Elzear Lagimoniere, Jean Baptiste Lepine, Joseph Delorme and Ambrose D. Lepine.

You see that Riel was not there.

Q. Who was the president of this council of war?

A. Ambrose Lepine.

Q. And you?

A. I acted as Secretary.

Q. What was the accusation against Scott?

A. For having taken arms against the Provisional Government and struck the captains of the guard.

Q. Were witnesses heard?

A. Yes.

Q. Who were the witnesses?

A. Riel, Joseph Delorme and Edward Turner.

Q. By whom were they examined?

A. By the captains constituting the council.

Q. Was their evidence given under oath?

A. Yes, it was I who administered the oath.

Now I come to the evidence of Rev. Mr. Young who interfered on behalf of Scott:—

"Riel had what he called a council of War. He spoke to me also of his officers, and of the Adjutant-General and of his Captains. The deceased told me that they had subjected him to a sort of trial and that he had been condemned to be shot. He had protested against that trial, because it was conducted in the French language which he did not understand. I went to Riel and asked him if it was true that Scott had been condemned, and if it was their intention to put the sentence into execution. He replied that in fact Scott had been condemned, and that their intention was to carry the sentence into execution. I begged him to delay the execution for twenty-four hours. He replied that he would ask the Adjutant-General about it. He added that Scott had been condemned by the council who, with the exception of one voice had been unanimous in the decision; but still he would submit the prayer of my petition to the Adjutant-General. From what I understood, the Adjutant-General was the President of the council of war. Riel had the Adjutant-General summoned into the room where we were. That officer was called Lepine, now the prisoner. Lepine took a seat and both of them entered into a conversation. I asked again that the execution of Scott should be delayed for twenty-four hours or more. Riel asked Lepine, and after consultation the latter rose shaking his head as a sign of refusal and left the apartment. Riel declared to me then that my demand was rejected."

I will now quote from the deposition of Mr. Bunn:—

"Were the powers of Riel defined? I do not know. Q.—Had he the right of veto or sanction? A. No, he was recognized as the President of the Assembly."

Strange to say the national convention was sitting at the time, and although the witnesses swear that the convention were informed that Scott was to be executed, they did not interfere. I think that is sufficient to show that they did not believe Scott worthy of any sympathy. I will now quote from the evidence of Bishop McLean, who was examined by the Hon. Mr. Chapleau:

Q.—Where were you in 1869-70? A.—Here. Q.—Is it true that you assisted in the election of Mr. D. A. Smith in February 1870? A.—Yes, and I will explain. Captain Boulton having been condemned to death, I received a letter from him one day announcing to me that he was to be executed that very evening at midnight, and praying me to come and see him. I went to the Fort and saw the captain in prison, in irons, and lying on a buffalo robe. After a short conversation I asked to be conducted to Riel, who declared to me that Boulton was condemned to be executed. I went back to the cell of the condemned, and I told him that I did not think I could succeed in having his life spared, and I gave him religious consolation to prepare for his end, which I believed to be near. With permission of Riel I administered to him the communion. The captain told me all concerning the movement at the Portage in which he had been mixed up; and I then again went to implore Riel, who told me that the execution would be postponed until the next day. Being so assured I left the prisoner, to come back at an early hour the next morning. In the interval several persons of distinction having learned the fact, came in their turn to solicit mercy for the condemned men and to obtain delay for the execution. I was about to go, and I was speaking with Capt. Boulton when Riel entered with tears in his eyes to inform me that he could not succeed in preventing the execution and then he left me alone. Sometime after I heard a conversation between Riel and Mr. D. A. Smith. The former (Riel) implored Mr. Smith to hasten the election of the English representatives, for otherwise he said he could not answer that he could succeed in saving the life of the prisoner. This conversation made upon me a very profound impression, and sometime later Riel entered the second time into the prison and called me into the square and informed me that Boulton would not be shot."

Everybody understands the way that those trials take place, but I think those documents do not show Riel in the light which he is generally represented. Mr. Bunn who was Secretary of the provisional government was examined by Mr. Chapleau who was defending Lepine, as follows:—

"Q—You said that the assembly was in session after the election? A—Yes, and it lasted several days. (By the Court)—Did the meeting know that Scott was to be shot? A—Yes, they said so. Q—Did it occupy their attention? A—No. Q—Why? A—I cannot say. Q—Had Riel the right of veto? A—No."

A moment ago I cited a memo. of the Imperial Government. The Acting Minister of Justice sent a memo. which is published at page 171 of the documents of the 8th volume of 1874. I quote from it the following:

"It is to some extent pretended that in that report by Riel and his followers, that the shooting of Scott was ordered as a necessary thing for the preservation of the peace of the inhabitants of the settlement; that Scott was a dangerous character, and a disturber of the peace; that he had been twice caught in arms, and twice pardoned by the Provisional Government; that he was a violent man; and even if he had been the ringleader in a rising against Mr. Snow, when in charge of a party employed by the Canadian Government in making a road some time previous.

With regard to the fact of Mr. Scott having been one of the working party employed by Mr. Snow in road-making, the undersigned would refer Your Excellency to an account and receipt filed by Mr. Snow with the Government as a voucher, in which Mr. Snow states that he was forced, under threats and grievous bodily harm, to pay to Scott and others of the working party, the sums opposite their respective names. It is probably to that circumstance that Riel alluded in his remarks to Mr. Smith about Scott before the latter was shot."

We see all those documents confirm each other. Now I took as the basis of my argument what was stated by the present Secretary of State of Canada, who does not hesitate to say that Riel was for the second time a murderer and guilty of high treason. It seems to me that is a rather strong argument, but I shall now refer to another expression of opinion by Mr. Chapleau, under other circumstances. In 1874 he was a member of the Legislative Assembly of Quebec. At the same time the hon. member from DeLanaudiere and myself had the honor of holding seats in the same body. One day Mr. Chapleau came to me and asked me to second a motion concerning those North-West affairs, which I did. That motion, which was written by Mr. Chapleau himself, and adopted unanimously by the House of Assembly of Quebec, was as follows:—

"That the leaders of this movement constituted themselves a government and committed an act to be regretted."

I may say I tried to find in the Library an English copy of the Journals of the House of Assembly of Quebec for 1874, but there is not a single copy of it there, and that is why I have to translate from the French copy as best I can:—

"An act to be regretted accomplished under the authority of that Government was the execution of a subject of Her Majesty; that after the execution representatives of the North-West were received officially by the Government of the Dominion who negotiated with them the conditions of the admission of the North-West Territories into the Union with Canada, and that the Federal Act sanctioned their demand; that this population has seen with surprise and sorrow that prosecutions have been directed against some persons (that is Riel, Lepine, Nault and O'Donohoe) implicated in these troubles attributing to them the personal responsibility, and going so far as to call it a crime of wilful murder for acts which proceeded from the authority of the Government created under those circumstances."

Mr. Chapleau gave as a reason for supporting this resolution that "This act was so mixed up with the political events of that unfortunate epoch that it is impossible to compare it with acts of felony which the law ordinarily punishes."

This is what the present Secretary of State proposed and what was adopted by the Assembly at Quebec unanimously. The least we can do, since the recent statement of the Secretary of State is circulated all over the country—a document which asserts absolutely the contrary—is to bring the other expression of opinion of the same gentleman before the public. There is a document which I have before me called "the amnesty," written by Archbishop Taché. I do not care to quote the evidence of those who are supposed to be favourable to the half-breeds, but as Archbishop Taché is such a high authority I think the House will permit me to read what he says. It will be found at page 27 of this book:—

"The Red River troubles which occurred between the month of October, 1869, and the month of September, 1870, form a political whole of which the parts ought not to be dis-united. We ought not to punish more those who occupied the lower Fort Garry (that is French half-breeds) than those who occupied the upper Fort Garry) that is the soldiers of Mr. Macdougall) not more those who caused the death of Scott than those who caused the death of Parisien. It is not necessary to say that the death of Scott pained and afflicted me very much. It has caused such deep regret to me, as well as to those who know anything of it, that in spite of the sorrow which I feel and the risk which I run of receiving fresh insults, I do not hesitate to say that I am sure that the execution took place, those who ordered it believed they had a right to do so, and it was to prevent greater misfortunes, and if they acted wrongly it is not necessarily before those who had possessed the power had neither the experience nor the cruelty which follows such an infamous profession. The act was attended with far less barbarity than the imagination of some people has invented. The half-breeds of the Red River are very far from being influenced by the barbarous and cruel feelings which are attributed to them, much less than those who, after calm reflection have sought to excite hatred and evil passions."

There is another point to which I shall briefly refer, and which I consider of great importance. In those documents which are referred to in my notice of motion, it is stated on the evidence of Charles Nolin that Riel was actuated in the recent disturbances by sordid motives—that he wanted to get $100,000. I will show that there can be no possible doubt that at the time the unfortunate man was insane. I think there is not the slightest difficulty in proving that; but as the alleged act is an isolated one, and the document which quoted the evidence of Nolin took good care not to cite the whole deposition, or parts of it which to my mind are essential, I will add something further. Charles Nolin was an enemy of Riel; he stated that Riel asked for $100,000, and afterwards offered to accept $35,000, or something of that kind, but the document does not state that Riel said if got that money it would be for the purpose of establishing a newspaper in the United States to advocate the cause of his countrymen. That fact changes somewhat the character of the act. In the whole career of Riel, the most disinterested man in that country, is it just or fair to take an isolated act or a solitary deposition, and judge him by it? Should we not rather take the anterior acts of the man and show what he did under other circumstances? I will now refer to the documents of 1874, page 55. It happened that in 1871 a leading statesman of this country, Sir George Cartier, had been defeated in Montreal, and his friends were very anxious to procure a seat for him. Telegrams were sent to the North-West asking if Riel, who was a candidate for the county of Provencher, would consent to retire and permit Sir George Cartier to be elected in his place. A man actuated by sordid motives would have tried to take advantage of this circumstance to extort money. There are many people who perhaps would not hesitate to proclaim very loudly that Riel was a sordid man who, perhaps, if their lives were closely investigated, might be found to have thought it not contrary to honor to receive some little compensation for having abandoned their just rights in their counties. It was very well known that Riel would be elected by acclamation, as he actually was after the death of George Cartier. Sir John Macdonald wrote to Lieutenant-Governor

Archibald to know whether Riel could be induced to retire. The Lieutenant-Governor called on His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface to ascertain if it could be done, and here is what he says :—

“Riel also strongly objected in the same sense, and besides he said: ‘You know my disposition! I am sure I am killing myself in the estimation of my friends if I do leave, because they would say that I have been bought, and I am not in the market. Besides I have no means to hand, and will accept no favor from the Canadian Government until all our difficulties are settled.’

“I insisted, showing the difficulties for the country involved in their presence, and using all the arguments I could. They were together, and asked me to give them time to think over the matter.”

Sir John Macdonald had sent $1,000 to pay the expenses of those men to leave the country, because they were exciting the population, and Sir John and Sir George thought that serious difficulties would be created unless this was done. Sir George Cartier was elected in Riel's place. Archbishop Taché says it was very clear that Riel was the only support of his mother and sisters, and that he supported them by the daily work of his hands—that he could not leave the country without providing some support for those dependent upon him. I quote the statement which appears in the sessional papers:—

A few days later they came to me, and said that they would leave the matter altogether to my decision, but on certain expressed conditions, namely: First, that I would give them a letter, under my own signature, stating that it was at my request that they determined to leave; Secondly, that they would be furnished sufficient means to travel, and something to be given their families during their absence. I said I had $1,000 at my disposal, and as it had been given only for one that I would add something from my own pocket to help them. Riel said “No, I will not consent that you spend one cent in this business. You have done too much already both for myself and my family. Besides, we leave at the request of members of the Ottawa Cabinet, it is but fair they should pay the expenses. We have enough of the trouble and the risk for ourselves, and I wish it to be understood that all the expenses are to be paid by the Canadian Government, because I consider that we are going away on their behalf, and we would consider ourselves as under pay in their services, otherwise we would not accept one cent from them.”

Lieutenant-Governor Archibald's account of the negotiations between himself and Archbishop Taché will be found at pages 55 and 59 of this same volume. He says:—

“I saw Riel and advised him to retire, giving him the same reasons, and also other reasons on behalf of his country. He told me that personally he would have no hesitation, that he understood perfectly well it would be for the advantage of Manitoba to have a representative in the Cabinet, but that he was not quite sure his friends would view the matter in the same light and that in order to satisfy them he must have some guarantee that the interests of the half-breeds would not be overlooked. He gave me, in writing, his conditions of withdrawal in favor of Sir George. I returned to Mr. Archibald, and stated the conditions, and myself wrote at his desk a translation made by himself, and which he was to have telegraphed to Sir George. I produce a copy of what was so translated, made by myself in Mr. Archibald's presence; I added my signature to the copy Mr. Archibald retained.”

Now this is the man who is supposed to have been capable of betraying his country for money. When he was asked to retire from the representation of his county, let us see what he asks; here are his conditions:—

“That the settlers shall be continued in the exercise of their rights, etc., they have been accustomed to enjoy in respect of the lands on the rear of their lots, and no sales or entries there shall be permitted till the question of their rights shall be settled and adjusted under the agreements with the delegates.

“That no person shall be allowed to enter in the townships laid aside for the half-breeds, from the date of the selection; and any person entered after that date to be removed by the Government authority.

“Mr. Archibald, as he told me, telegraphed to Sir John, instead of Sir George, and on the 10th September I received from Mr. Archibald a letter.”

This man does not even ask what generally all those retiring candidates demand—the amount of the expenses incurred in the election. His only anxiety is to stipulate as the price of his withdrawal the recognition of the rights of his countrymen. It seems to me that this ought to count for something. I beg now to call the attention of the Government especially to a letter which I find at page 41 of appendix 6 of the Documents in volume 8 of 1874; it is a letter from Archbishop Taché to His Excellency the Governor-General, dated Hamilton, 23rd July, 1870, in which it is first explained that after much ill-treatment endured by the half-breeds they were solicited by the Fenians to join them and sever the North-West from the Crown of England. His Lordship says :—

“ The Fenians, as a body, only met refusal or silence when they offered their co-operation. Outside of the Fenian associations, the Provisional Government of Red River has repudiated offers that might have seduced its members had the sentiment of allegiance not prevailed; sums of money amounting to more than four millions of dollars (4,000,000) men and arms, had been offered, and the whole was refused by those ‘rebels,’ whom it is proposed to get hanged by the expedition, after they had refused the help offered to determine them to attack it.”

This statement in the letter of the Archbishop was confirmed under oath by his Grace before the Commission in 1875. Hon. gentlemen may take it for what it is worth, but it seems to me that it is quite as good, at the very least, as anything Charles Nolin may have thought. I hold here a letter which was written to a newspaper in St. Paul, Minnesota, by a priest whom I know. He does not give his name, but I know him, and in case an enquiry should take place he is ready to affirm on oath what he states here. He says :—

“ When the first rising of the half-breeds had come to an end, the friends of Riel, before his departure for exile, requested him to take a sum of $4,000 which had been obtained as a tax on the property of the Hudson Bay Company. Riel would not consent.”

Hon. gentlemen will recollect that I have established that they had borrowed a sum of money from the Hudson Bay Company. Riel, who had governed the country as is well known never received a cent; his friends advised him that there was still $4,000 in the public chest it was advisable that he should take it, but he refused.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Governors do not often take the money from the public chest to pay themselves.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I know perfectly well that nobody is allowed to do so, but I may add that I do not think there are many Ministers of the Crown or Governors who would do as the hon. gentleman himself does here—serve their country for nothing.

HON. MR. PLUMB—They do not help themselves.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I think perhaps some more clever man would have found a way to pass an Order-in-Council and say “ We have governed the country for several months, and we allow to each of ourselves a couple of thousand dollars.” But no; they do not take a single cent, and this shows, in my opinion, that this man, while he may have committed errors of judgment and done wrong under certain circumstances, was not the blackguard and sordid character that he has been represented—not a man who would betray his countrymen for money as he has been represented to be by Ministers of the Crown. This letter goes on to say:—

“ Not long ago, in 1885, the Canadian Government, through the instrumentality of Mr. Macdonald and another person, whom I shall be ashamed to name, made several attempts to corrupt Riel and induce him to abandon his friends. They offered him a position of $2,000 a year, and he refused it.”

It is true this is not signed but I give it as I have it, and I will add that should a committee on the question be appointed—which I do not much expect—I pledge myself that the author of this letter will be there to testify to the fact he has stated. I have here another letter which was written to me and which I published at the time, in which the writer says he knows that Riel declared to him that he had tried to get some money to establish a paper, because he considered that it was the only way to secure justice for his countrymen. This letter was written to me by a missionary who is well known personally by both of my hon. friends from Manitoba, and if the name should be given to the public they will not question his standing and character. I will now quote from page 121 of the Sessional Papers of 1874. The hon. gentleman opposite who was a member of the convention of the North-West will be pleased perhaps to be reminded of it. It is a resolution passed by the convention on the 1st of March 1870, and it reads as follows :—

“ That notwithstanding the insults and sufferings borne by the people of the North-West heretofore, and the sufferings which they still endure, the loyalty of the people of the North-West towards the Crown of England remains the same. Provided their rights, properties, usages and customs be respected—feeling assured that as British subjects, such rights, properties, usages and customs will be respected.

It seems to me that that is not exactly the language of rebels. I will now quote the opinion of a public man whom many hon. gentlemen in this House considers the highest legal authority. It is a report of Sir John Macdonald, in which he says that he recognizes the fact that there was no feeling against the Crown of England in the acts of the half-breeds but that they had been led to do as they had done by the actions of the officers of the Canadian Government :—

“The people have been led to suppose that they have been sold to Canada, with an utter disregard of their rights and position.

When Governor McTavish visited Canada in June last, he was in communication with the Canadian Government, and he never intimated that he had even a suspicion of discontent existing, nor did he make any suggestions as to the best mode of effecting the proposed change, with the assent of the inhabitants.

Lord Granville states “That throughout these negotiations, it has never been hinted that the Company is to be bound to hand over its territory in a state of tranquility, and the dangers resulting from that inability to the neighboring colony, is taken for granted as a reason why its responsibilities should be adopted by Canada.” Now the obvious reason why no express stipulation to that effect made was, that it was assumed by all parties that the Company had both the right and the power to hand over the territory. It was in a state of tranquility, and no suggestion was made of the possibility of such tranquility being disturbed. Canada did not allege, nor did the Company admit any inability on the part of the latter to secure the tranquility of the country in its present condition.

The resistance of these misguided people is evidently not against the sovereignty of Her Majesty or the government of the Hudson Bay Company, but to the assumption of the government by Canada.”

I will now quote from a deposition of Lieutenant-Governor Archibald an extract which will perhaps astonish some hon. members. He declares :

“I believe that the action of the half-breeds at the time of the Fenian raid was attributable to the negotiation with their leaders which I have described, and if the half-breeds had taken a different course I do not believe the Province would now be in our possession.”

So that it will be seen that His Excellency recognized what was due to those men. It seems to me that it is a pretty strong testimonial, and if those half-breeds are entitled to it, they ought to have it. The Lieutenant-Governor describes the circumstances on which he bases this declaration. Hon gentlemen will remember that in the previous part of my speech I quoted from the depositions of Lieutenant-Governor Archibald, in which he describes the odious spoliation which took place at the Rivière aux Islets de Bois. Hon gentlemen will remember that His Excellency says that the half-breeds had their farms fenced on the banks of the river, that some emigrants from Ontario came and decided to settle on those lands ; that there were plenty of other lands at least as good as those occupied by the half-breeds, and in order that the latter should not be mistaken about the meaning of the action of those men who robbed them of their property, they changed the name of the river and called it “The Boyne.” His Excellency describes it in this way :

“Some of the immigrants from Ontario shared the feelings of the disbanded volunteers, and acted in concert with them. A body of French half-breeds had made a selection of a tract of land at Riviere aux Islets de Bois ; some of them had made farms, or at all events enclosures, at that place. There was abundance of land elsewhere equally good, but the new comers preferred this spot. They entered on the ground and staked it off ; put up huts, and declared they would hold it against all comers. To give character to their occupation, they discarded the name by which the river had been known, and called it the Boyne. Of course the half-breeds were enraged, they thought it bad enough to lose land they believed to be theirs, but in the new name they saw something worse—an insult to their religion. They seemed to think that property, race and creed were all to be trodden under foot, unless they took care of themselves. They met in their parishes on the Assiniboine and Red River, and determined to march to the settlement and drive off the intruders. Fortunately I heard of their intentions.

I sent for some leading men among them, and warned them that if they lifted a hand or struck a blow it was all over with them.

The collision was arrested, but not without great risk. Had blood been shed on that occasion we should have had a civil war in which every French half-breed would have been an active participator ; while from the English half-breeds, in accord on the question property with the French, neutrality was the utmost that could have been counted on, and at this moment we had a garrison of only 80 men to defend all our military stores at Fort Garry, and to preserve the peace of half a continent besides.

The danger was over for the moment, but the feelings of sullen discontent remained. This was in July. In October came the raid. It was predicted on the discontents known to prevail among the French half-breeds.

The leader of the raid had been a member of the Provisional Government; the other members of that Government were in the Province outlawed for their offences, abused by one press and thrown over by the other, and yet exercising a large influence among the population of their own race and creed. Under these circumstances chances were that the French would join the enemy. I had a tough battle to fight.

For a fortnight I labored unremittingly with the French clergy and with the representatives of the French parishes in the Assembly. I pointed out, as well as I could, the advantages in one line, the danger and ruin in the other.

At last my remonstrances and persuasion began to take effect. The clergy assisted me in the movement. The colleagues of O'Donohoe in the Provisional Government, on whom he had counted, began to come out against him. Riel went into the Flemish Settlement and used his influence against O'Donohoe. These two men are said never to have been very friendly.

O'Donohoe was always a Fenian, an annexationist; Riel was neither—his feelings were those of a Frenchman and a Catholic. He could see a chance for his race and creed in the Dominion where a large part of the population is French. The clergy, who were of the same race, naturally shared his feelings in this respect; and they felt more inclined to side with Riel, one of themselves, than with O'Donohoe, who differed from them in race, and, as a Fenian, was not necessarily a good Catholic.

With these influences operating on the French side, their sullenness and resentment were gradually overcome, and they were brought to take a stand in favor of the Crown. My letter of the 13th October, at the close of the raid, addressed to the people of Manitoba, details the progress of events.

It was after that His Excellency added the words which I quoted a moment ago, "I believe the action of the Fenians at the time was attributable to the actions of their leaders which I have described, and if the half-breeds had taken a different course I do not believe the province would now be in our possession."

Riel and Lepine called their men and led them to the Lieutenant-Governor. They had with them a gentleman who was one of the members of this House. As the document is official, I suppose he will not deny it. This is the evidence before the commission (page 180.)

"I informed the Lieutenant-Governor of their arrival, at the request of Mr. Royal, then Speaker of the Assembly.

I told him that the Metis wanted to meet him either in the fort or on the other side of the river. I told him that Riel and his friends were there. He consulted me whether it would be better to meet them in the fort or on the river. I recommended him to see them at the river. He agreed. We crossed the river; I in a rowboat; the Governor in a scow on horseback; accompanied by Captain Macdonald I think. We came close to them, and I then said to the Governor that these men were ready to go to the front to defend their country; thereupon the Governor spoke to them saying, that he received their offer and had much satisfaction in meeting them.

Afterwards there was a sort of salute fired, and cheerings on both sides of the river."

Afterwards he went with me among the crowd at the river and I, Royal and Debuc, introduced him to the prominent men, amongst whom was Riel. I introduced Riel as the man whom the half-breeds had chosen for their chief for the occasion. I thought it would be better not to give the name of Riel to the Governor. This had occurred to my own mind on the way across the river. It had not in any way been discussed.

I suppose he understood it was Riel.

Governor Archibald shook hands with Riel in the way I have described.

Mr. Debuc introduced Ambroise Lepine by his name as a prominent man, and the Governor also shook hands with him.

Parinteau was also introduced by name, and the Governor shook hand with him

Riel was the first introduced.

After the introduction, Riel addressed the Governor publicly, saying that he was there with his friends to offer their services in defence of the country against all enemies, and asking the Government to accept their services. The Governor thanked him very warmly for that offer of service, and told him it was received with much pleasure.

Afterwards those men marched against the enemy, and have been rewarded—as everybody knows. It is in these terms that the Hon. Senator from Manitoba (Mr. Girard) related those circumstances. The Lieutenant Governor seeing that in spite of the services rendered by these half-breeds, who, according to him have preserved to the Crown of England that enormous territory of the North-West of which we are so proud to-day, proceedings were taken against them, he wrote to the Secretary of State the following letter of the 20th January, 1872. After having explained that whatever might have been done before 1872, and whatever might have been the opinion of the Minister of the Crown as to merits of the acts of establishing a provisional government and executing Scott and all that, he said it was absurd to continue to persecute those men, and he gives his opinion as follows:—

“It seems to me that the people here must be allowed to be judges of how to manage their own affairs.

At all events this must be so till they cease to possess representative institutions. If they are to be responsible to the people of another province the members should be elected there. At all events one thing is clear, they should not be elected by the men to whom Parliament has given the franchise.

If the other doctrine is sound it should be your business in dealing with these men, to erect not hustings but gallows.

You allow the electors to choose members you allow the members to make and unmake ministers, but electors and members are to exercise their functions with ropes around their necks. Was there ever before a responsible Ministry resting on a House, of whose constituents more than half were liable to be hanged or sent to the penitentiary? To hang all, or to hang a few to whom the rest are blindly devoted is much the same thing so far as a responsible Ministry is concerned.

If then you cannot punish without recalling constitutional government, what use is there in keeping up the pretence of calling these people outlaws. In my view you have to choose between revoking responsible government and admitting that you cannot go back to inflict punishment for offences in which half the population were implicated, committed before responsible government was conceded.

Still I may be wrong. I have no wish that my opinions should go for more than they are worth.

I can give you no better proof of that than I did in offering to remove any obstacle to the adoption to a different view. What I said in substance to you in my last, I afterwards put into formal shape and sent to the Premier.

I did not act under any feeling of irritation. I had no motive other than the desire to have the Government free to take whatever line they thought best.

If, therefore, the Government think it wise to adopt another policy, there is nothing to prevent them from entirely repudiating my actions.

I am quite content to await the time when a healthier public opinion will take the place of the feverish excitement lately prevailing in some parts of the Dominion. Meanwhile, let a different experiment be tried. At the end of a year of such a regime, it will be seen whether as proud a chronicle can be given of peace and progress as the one we have just recorded.

I trust in God it may be so, but it seems to me that unless you expect to ‘gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles,’ you can hardly hope to carry on responsible government by inflicting death penalties on the leaders of a majority of the electors.

“I have, etc.,
“(Sgd.) A. G. ARCHIBALD.”

Hon. gentleman will remember this assurance given by the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West, that the provisional government respected persons and property, and this is a refutation of some letters written by people who wrote from hearsay that when the half-breeds took possession of Fort Garry the stores and treasury of the Hudson Bay Company were plundered. When it was decided that Riel and Lepine should leave the country, and the sum of $1,000 was sent by Sir John Macdonald to those two men on which to leave their homes to travel round the world for several years, it was on a letter of Lieutenant-Governor Archibald who proposed such a course. He speaking of Riel especially said this man, considering his talents and his abilities should be sent to Paris, France, to complete his education and to qualify him to render services in the high position which his countrymen reserve for him. I have another letter from one of the hon. Senators of Manitoba which gives a similar opinion of Riel. One day Riel called upon the Hon. Mr. Girard, who was at the time Premier of the Government of Manitoba, and in conversation with that gentleman Mr. Girard says “he asked me to tell him as a Minister of the Crown if he was excluded or not by the proclamation just referred to. I told him officially, no, you are not excluded, and I would like to have a sufficient force to protect you,” said the Prime Minister of Manitoba, “but for the sake of your country and of your friends absent yourself from the country for a time, and be sure as soon as the Government is strong enough to protect you we will recall you that you may take the place to which you are entitled.” And the Prime Minister added “I meant his place there as Minister or representative in the Government of this country.” This was said by the hon. gentleman before the commission of 1874, alluding to a conversation which took place between Riel and himself in 1872. It was said in this memorial of the Secretary of State that the “scoundrel” who had received money to leave the country, and with a promise not to return, had "dared" to come back again on Canadian soil. I have shown by the conversation of Lieutenant-Governor Archibald as reported by himself, and letters from Sir John Macdonald, the reason for Riel absenting himself for a time, while the excitement was continuing, and only for a while, and according to the official documents, Sir George Cartier and Sir John Macdonald said that it was not to preserve the peace in Manitoba that they required Lepine and Riel to absent themselves, but to preserve the peace in Ontario, and to save the Government from trouble which might arise from the agitation, that was aroused in the Province of Ontario. It was for that reason that those two men were advised to abandon their country and to exile themselves, and this is the letter which the Archbishop, the gentleman who was acting for Sir John Macdonald, wrote to the men to explain the reason and under what circumstances they were to leave the country. It shows whether they left the country as "scoundrels." The letter is published in the 8th volume of the Sessional Papers of 1874, page 56, Appendix No. 6, and it is as follows:—

MANITOBA, 16th February, 1872.

GENTLEMEN—In the conversation we had together yesterday you decided to leave to my judgment the decision to be taken in relation to the difficulties which threatened to arise, owing to fanaticism. Were it not for your well known patriotism and disinterestedness I should not even venture to express the opinion I have formed.

I know a motive of fear or the near desire of personal safety would not influence you; hence I have given hardly a moment's consideration to the chances in that direction. Surrounded by your friends, protected by their devotedness and zeal, you are as safe here as elsewhere, and perhaps more so than you would be travelling; nor is this the question to be considered.

I know that the line of conduct you have marked out for yourselves is rightly dear to your hearts and that you are determined not to deviate in any way from the principles by which you are guided, much less to yield to unjust influences, how urgent soever they may be.

Your fellow-citizens love and respect you, and the influence you enjoy amongst them enables you to do them good and be useful to them. Your presence is a bond of union amongst them. Your departure would be a trial as well as a sacrifice. I know all this, gentlemen; I know it all the better from the fact for a long time past these matters have occupied my mind and my heart daily; despite that knowledge, I take it upon me to utter the painful and delicate word "go," disappear for a time. Do not leave even a pretext to those who are assailing you so unjustly. They want to accomplish evil ends, to disturb the country, to ruin it if possible, and with that view offer this fresh sacrifice on the altar of your country; you know by experience as well as by principle that it befits for good citizens to place the public welfare above the most legitimate individual aspirations. Show once again that your patriotism is not confined within the narrow straits of personal advantages, but that, on the contrary, you are capable of forgetting self when good is to be done.

I feel, gentlemen, that magnitude and the extent of the sacrifice I ask of you. I have seen many sincere and devoted friends who think as I do. Few, no doubt, will take upon themselves the painful task of begging you to go away. My friendship and my confidence in you have nerved me to do so. I have declared myself your best friend; this has caused me to be insulted by those who hate you, who would treat me with the same contempt they would you. Well, let them insult me again, for I am ready to repeat, and I do repeat, that I consider myself your best friend, and as such I venture to take the liberty of giving advice of so painful a nature. I know how painful it must be to you to go forth to expiate in a foreign land the crime of having so deeply loved the country of your birth. I know the affection you leave behind. If my friendship counsels for your departure, it will also inspire me with compassion, and I shall not fail to offer a meed of consolation to those who must shed bitter tears during the days of your absence. Farewell, gentlemen; I bless you, and, awaiting your return, I pray to God to keep you and to bring you back safe and sound.

Yours, etc.,

ALEXANDER,

Archbishop of St. Boniface.

I think I have proved that those men acted with the Government; that they may have committed an error of judgment, that they may have committed an act of excessive rigour, but we have all the circumstances before us as given in the public documents under oath, which prove that they did not act as criminals. There are other documents that I have not quoted, because they are not official. About two months ago I was listening to a speech of an emigrant lawyer in Montreal, Mr. Champagne, who was at the time of these troubles in the North-West one of the officers of the provisional government. He happened to be in Fort Garry when Scott was executed, and he told me repeatedly, and he told it in presence of thousands of people in Montreal and elsewhere, and was ready to certify to it under oath, that after the council of war had condemned Scott, Riel did his best to save him; that he succeeded to a certain extent, and that Lepine had consented to pardon him. They said to Scott "You have been taken twice in arms against our government; you have struck the captain of the guard; you have tried to assassinate the President; you have been condemned to death, will you consent to leave the country if you are released? We will send a guard with you to Pembina, and there a sum of money will be given you to take you as far as Toronto," and Scott replied laughing—"You are a lot of scoundrels! You are a lot of cowards! You are playing a trick on me to get me out of the country, and the first use I will make of my liberty is to kill that man." It was then that the Adjutant-General said "This man is my prisoner. It is I who have power over him, and he must die;" and he was afterwards shot. This is what Mr. Champagne declared in my presence. Of course it may be said that was a lawyer's speech; but the second time I heard the statement I wrote to Winnipeg to a gentleman whom I know personally, and who is known very well to the two hon. gentlemen from Manitoba who are listening to me now, and I related to him the facts stated by Mr. Champagne, and asked him whether he could give me information about them. I have his letter before me. His reply was "All that you have said I heard from Lepine and Riel themselves the day after the execution, exactly as it was told to you by Mr. Champagne." And he adds "I am ready, although I do not like to have my name come before the public, to testify to this under oath at any time I am called upon to do it." This is a gentleman who holds a high position in the North-West. I do not give this as evidence, because I give as evidence only what was stated under oath by witnesses, and I do not want to depart from that rule. I say, however, that under the circumstances this information amounts to something. If it is true, those men were exercising an authority committed to them by the people. Rev. Father Ritchot, in his evidence at page 79 of vol. 8 of the report of the Committee of 1874, says:—

I had some conversation with Sir George

Cartier in presence of Mr. Scott (one of the delegates) as to what I should do on my arrival in Manitoba. I do not remember whether Sir John was present or not. This was when we were discussing the Manitoba Bill. I then asked Sir George who was to govern the country pending the arrival of the Lieutenant-Governor, and if he was to name somebody to do so: "No, let Riel continue to maintain order and govern the country as he has done up to the present moment."

Sir John was sick at the time, and Sir George Cartier was acting as Minister of Justice, and in fact was acting as Prime Minister of Canada. Father Ritchot continues as follows:

"He asked me if I thought that Riel was sufficiently powerful to maintain order. I said I thought he was. Then he answered, 'Let him continue till the Governor arrives.' He also inquired whether Riel would require that the Governor should take authority as his successor. I answered that he would not; that his government was only a provisional one, and that he would immediately withdraw when the representative of Her Majesty arrived. 'Very well,' said Sir George, 'let him be at the head of his people to receive the Governor.'" Before my departure on the 28th also, he recommended me to tell Riel and the people that they had nothing to fear. He even told me that it would be desirable if the half-breeds would meet the troops and serve as guides."

And what did happen? It happened according to the evidence of Archbishop Taché that the half-breeds sent guides; but it did not suit the purpose of those great military men who were going to conquer the North-West; and although letters were sent to them that Fort Garry was evacuated; that Riel and a dozen of his men were there only to receive them as recommended by the Prime Minister, they put their army in order of battle and Fort Garry was taken—empty and the doors open, and Riel and his friends were informed about half an hour or an hour after by those men coming in the name of Canada, having no other power than the powers given to them by the Government of Canada that the first thing to be done was to arrest those poor half-breeds who were preparing to meet them in a friendly spirit; that they were to be put in jail, and something worse might happen, and they had to fly. This is the way Canada has acted towards those men all the time; and in spite of this treatment, two years afterwards we have seen them, when they were able to put 1200 men under arms and the Lieutenant-Governor had only 80 men under his command, after receiving the most extraordinary insult a nation can receive—after having been robbed of their property openly, we have seen them, because they were loyal to the Crown, taking up arms and going to fight the Fenians who were coming across the border. Those men, according to the testimony of Governor Archibald have saved and kept the North-West for the Crown of England, and their reward for their devotion is the treatment I have described. I have nearly completed my task. I undertook to call the attention of hon. gentlemen to those official documents referred to in my motion in which those men were charged with being guilty of high treason in 1879 and guilty of wilful murder. If it is true that those men acted as the public documents show ; if it is true that they have saved the North-West to the Crown of England ; if it is true that they were not after all “scoundrels,” though they may have committed faults, and it is very seldom under such trials men do not commit faults—if it is true that they were good, honest men, and that they have been not only ignominiously condemned as criminals and deprived of their little piece of ground which the law gives to all the half-breeds, but were obliged to exile themselves from home and friends in a foreign land, is it surprising that when the difficulties of 1874 occurred that those men were inclined to perhaps exaggerate somewhat as to the treatment which they had received from the Canadian Government ? I do not wish to introduce politics into this question ; but it is admitted by everybody and the Ministers themselves have recognized the fact that justice has not been rendered to those unfortunate men. It will be recollected that about a year ago the worthy leader of this House recognized that up to a certain time the agitation which had been going on in the the North-West was not by Riel, because it had not been commenced by French half-breeds, but first of all by English half-breeds, and delegates had been appointed to form a sub-committee to communicate with the French half-breeds to see if they would not join the movement, before Riel was mixed up in it at all. Afterwards there was another meeting at which it was decided that delegates should be sent to the United States to get Riel to put him at the head of the movement. All those circumstances showed that there was not an intention to reverse the authority of the Queen. We have the admission of our leader here that up to a certain date the movement was constitutional, and while it was admitted that the movement was constitutional, and while a Minister of the Crown has declared that those half-breeds have never made complaint, and never sent petitions, I have myself published 78 petitions coming from those people containing complaints and asking for justice. Still we were told here that there was not a single petition—not a complaint ; and the Secretary of State in a letter published in the country stated that there was not a single complaint. And what was done ? The Government admitted that the agitation was constitutional. They thought the best thing they could do was to garrison Fort Garry, which meant this : “You agitate for justice ; we will shut your mouth with bayonets.” I stated at the beginning that the greater part of those unfortunate events were the result, not of malice, but of a misunderstanding. One of the members of the other House, the Hon. Mr. Royal, stated in his speech on the same question some time ago that one day when, in his opinion, the agitation was legal and constitutional, a man of high standing in that country, whom I do not know, the Hon. Mr. Laurence Clark, told the half-breeds “You expect justice from the Canadian Government : instead of sending you your titles they will send bullets for yourselves and chains and iron for your leaders.” Then they began to arm themselves. They were a population of hunters who seldom go out without their rifles. They believed that it was only prudent to organize in self-defence. I do not attempt to defend the occurrences of last year. My proposition at the outset was this : There is a part of this population who profoundly sympathise with the half-breeds and whose feelings have been deeply wounded, not merely because the Metis are of their race, but because they sincerely believe that they have been treated unjustly, or at the very least harshly dealt with. I do not accuse the Government : I have no such strong feeling as would lead me to do so. I merely ask you to look at all those documents and see whether the French population, after all, is not justified in feeling as we do and whether we deserve the censure with which we have been visited. I have made these observations always presuming that Riel was sane. I would not pretend to justify him or his friends, or even to wholly excuse them, but I shall now read the last of the documents which I propose to submit to the House. For my own part I do not entertain the slightest doubt that Riel was completely insane. I know much of his insanity in 1876 and 1877. In 1874 when he came from the North-West I had him with me in my house for about six weeks; and I declare here solemnly, my belief was then that this man could not long sustain the grief which he felt without losing his reason. One day he seemed to be taciturn and gloomy, and I asked him what was the matter. He said, "it is very strange, but there is an idea which haunts me. I always see the point of a dagger directed against me. I am not afraid of anybody; I can meet any person face to face, but I know there are many people who believe it to be their duty to kill me, and of course I am not master of this idea. I always see that dagger pointed against me." I thought at the time that this could not last long. The theory of those who are averse to our pretension is that this man Riel simulated insanity in order to hide himself in an asylum. Now that could not possibly be the case. I have here the deposition of Riel's uncle, a highly respectable man, and an alderman of the city of Montreal. It is as follows:

I, John Lee, contractor, of the City of Montreal, and one of the Aldermen of the city, declare solemnly as follows:

I am sixty years of age. I am an alderman of Montreal for the St. Jean Baptiste Ward of it. I had been a Municipal Councillor for fourteen years before its annexation to the city of Montreal.

I am an uncle of Louis Riel, who was executed at Regina 16th November last, having married Lucie Riel, sister of the father of the said Louis Riel.

I perceived for the first time certain signs of mental alienation in the deceased in 1863 or 1864; that is to say, about the time of the death of his father, of which I do not recollect exactly the date. The death of his father caused him extraordinary grief. He was then at the College of Montreal, and my wife and I went to him to offer him consolation.

The death of his father so wounded his heart that he was inconsolable. I then perceived that this profound grief affected his brain, and that he was stricken down. This was manifested by his exaggerations and his religious eccentricities, for he was thrown then into excesses of piety and used language on religious affairs which I found unreasonable. My wife also remarked the same thing, for she told me of it. After that he remained in profound melancholy. I observed that that lasted about a year or a year and a half, after which he was restored to his former condition.

In the summer and autumn of 1875 he visited my place several weeks, and afterwards went to Washington, where he informed me he had several interviews with General Grant. So far as I could judge, so much was he excited in political matters that his mind was deranged. He returned from the first trip and afterwards returned towards the end of the autumn.

Towards the commencement of January 1876, I received from the Rev. Mr. Barnabé, curé of Keesville, in the United States a telegram summoning me in great haste. I went there. Mr. Barnabé was one of the most intimate friends of Riel who had been accustomed to spend considerable periods of time with him. That gentleman met me at the cars with his carriage. As we hastily entered the carriage I asked him "What is the matter?" He replied to me "Poor Riel is so insane that he will have to be confined." He recounted to me that Riel had become insane at Washington; that his friend Major Mallett of Washington seeing him in that state had sent him to their mutual friends at Worcester. I believe that they were the French Canadian priests in charge of the Canadian church at Worcester, and that the latter had sent him to Mr. Barnabé under the care of a guardian from Worcester. After having described to me the character of his insanity, he said that Riel had become furious, that he did not sleep and passed the nights in crying and wished to escape; that the guardian who had accompanied him from Worcester and himself were barely able to take care of him, and that above all he had with him at his house his aged mother and his sister, who had a mortal terror of him and could not continue to live in this constant state of anxiety. The evening and the night of my arrival at the residence of the curé of Keesville he did not sleep, but cried all through the night. I decided at once to take him to my house at Montreal, and we took the opportunity to return by a train which passed Keesville about four o'clock in the morning. The guardian from Worcester accompanied me to Montreal. All the preceding nights his cries were an imitation of a sort of bellowing, or roaring.

He continued to cry in the cars. I said to the passengers that he was a poor madman, to excuse his conduct. All through the journey, as soon as he saw anyone speaking or laughing in the cars; he said to them in a menacing way "be quiet" or "don't laugh; I am an apostle; I am a prophet." Seeing him in that state I telegraphed to Mr. Dumaine to send me a close carriage to St. Lambert with a view to avoiding the crowd at the Bonaventure station. The carriage was waiting for me at St. Lambert, and was driven by a man of the name of Pierre Lauzon, a confidential man of Mr. Dumaine. We crossed on the ice and left by Bonsecour street. In passing near the Bonsecour Church he sought to throw himself forcibly from the carriage to enter the church. It was only on promising him to return there after breakfast that I succeeded in calming him a little. All the time after leaving St. Lambert and in passing through the city, until he arrived at my house, in the village of St. Jean Baptiste, he did not cease his cries. We arrived in Montreal about half-past ten or eleven in the morning.

The following day I dismissed the guardian who had come with me from Worcester, and for two or three months my wife, myself, and a servant, Henri Flégoille, in my employ, took care of him day and night. During the five or six days and nights following our arrival here he did not close his eyes, and he continued to cry, imitating during the night that sort of bellowing or roaring which I had heard at Keesville. He said without ceasing that he was a prophet, that he had a mission to fulfil.

As to this I recollect when I visited him at Longue Point that he told me that he often made that kind of noise and he said to me the reason why he did so was that all the great creatures of God—the Prophets, the sea, the forest, the wind—all these were roaring, and as he was a prophet himself he spent his day in roaring; so it is very easy to see the character of his insanity at the time. Mr. Lee continues:

He was unceasingly excited and crying. He had contortions like a man in a fit of anger. After six days he commenced to calm down; but he sought without ceasing to escape and also to throw himself against the windows, saying that he wished to go to the Church. Nevertheless he calmed down insensibly. A Mr. Gervais, lime burner, one of my neighbors whom I had taken into my confidence, came to assist us in taking care of him, and passed part of the days or evenings in playing draughts with him. At the end of four or five weeks he appeared a good deal better, and begged of me without ceasing to allow him to go to the church. One Sunday morning he appeared so well that I consented that he should go on the promise that he would be prudent. He appeared at mass at eight o'clock, and seated himself in my pew. In the midst of the mass someone brought him to my house and told me that during the sermon (I believe it was Monsieur le Curé Menard who preached) Riel rose in his seat and apostrophized the preacher to contradict him. I am not able to recall exactly that which he stated then. I believe that he wished to state that which was the word of God on the subject of the sermon.

A person who was in his neighborhood went to him and made him go out of the church. The church was full, there being at least 2,000 persons present. The incident created a good deal of excitement, and a number of people rose. The preacher commanded silence, saying, "this is nothing; this is a poor madman." Riel allowed himself to be taken out of the church without resistance. I did not wish any more, naturally, after that incident to allow him to go out alone; but nearly every day we went out in a carriage, which he liked very much.

Some time afterwards his insanity increased. He sometimes went to his bedchamber, locked himself in, and proceeded to tear all his clothes—his underclothing and linen, as well as his outside clothing—and stripped himself completely naked. He tore also all the clothes, quilts and blankets, on his bed. He tore into small pieces all his clothing and all his bedding three times. When I asked him why he acted in that way he did not reply. We gave him other clothing and clad him ourselves, and he allowed us to do so like a little child. Often also he tried to throw himself out of the window saying that he wanted to go to the church. Sometimes when he committed his greatest excesses I reproached him for his insane conduct. He replied to me, "No, I am not foolish, never say that I am foolish; I have a mission to fulfil and I am a prophet. Say rather that you do not understand me; I am sent by God," etc. His madness had always the character of inspiration and religious exaltation. At the end of a couple of months his madness increased, and finally when I saw that he had a mania for tearing all his clothing, and that my wife, my servant and myself were exhausted with fatigue, I proceeded to speak to Dr. LaChappelle, whom I knew to be one of his friends, to ask him if he would not find some means to obtain his admission to an asylum. Dr. LaChappelle approved of my project, and charged himself with taking the necessary steps to obtain his admission to an asylum.

When the permission was obtained, I went myself to take him to Longue Pointe. I had never spoken to him of our project of confining him in an asylum, and no one else had spoken to him of it. He had not the slightest thought that I was taking him to an asylum. We started out under a pretext of going to take a trip in the carriage as we had been accustomed to do. He did not doubt that was the object, until we arrived in front of the asylum at Longue Pointe, when I left main road to go into the asylum. He said to me then, "I understand where you are taking me." When we arrived at the asylum I told him that I intended to leave him there; that his friend Dr. LaChappelle would come to join him, and that he would remain to rest himself there.

I promised to return the following day; he appeared perfectly indifferent to the matter. It was Dr. Howard who received him. He commenced to examine him, telling him to walk, to stop, etc., and Riel obeyed without saying anything, all that Dr. Howard ordered him to do.

I went to see him twice at St. Jean-de-Dieu. On seeing me arrive he appeared content and asked after his aunt, his cousins and all my family. Subsequently he appeared perfectly indifferent, but he did not show any sign of madness before me. The second time that I went there they told me at the asylum that his madness had increased, and that he had become a good deal more furious—that he tore his clothes, etc. Some time afterwards, I learned that they had decided to send him to the asylum at Beauport. As he had torn all his clothes I sent him a completely new suit. He left Longue Pointe for Beauport towards the end of May, 1876, going by steamer.

The guardians who conducted him were under the direction of Dr. LaChappelle. I was kept a distance from the wharf in order that he should not see me, for I believe that if he had seen me he would have been considerably excited. When he arrived at the wharf the guardians had the greatest possible trouble with him. He did nothing but cry and struggle and did not wish to embark in the steamer. He was taken on board by force, crying all the time. His clothes were in disorder. He had I suppose, destroyed the hat which I had sent him, and had only a straw hat. He was a pitiable object. He remained at Beauport, I believe, a little more than eighteen months. I went there to see him three times and found him indiffereent and taciturn. After having said to me "Good day" he turned his back and proceeded to promenade in the corridors or the parterres without further noticing me. That astonished me, the more so because when in his senses he was exceedingly affectionate and attached to his relations and to us in particular. At Beauport I found him more melancholy than at Longue Pointe. From all that I know from his friends in the United States he was formerly very good natured while he remained at their house, all the time that he was with them, for he appeared to like them before his madness and to be with them. I am certain that if they had not been convinced that he was mad they would not have tried to send him away.

As to myself, I was attached to this young man, and I liked him very much to stop at my place. I have considerable means, and the money which he obliged me to expend was of no consequence to me. Had he been in a state of sanity, so that we could keep him with us, I would have been very happy, and I would, with great pleasure, have incurred all the necessary expenses, as well to calm him and conceal him from his enemies, as to send him to the United States and furnish him with the means of existence if he had needed assistance. It was myself that decided to get him into an asylum, without any consent on his part and without his having ever spoken on the subject before.

It is absolutely ridiculous to believe, to say or suppose that he was put in an asylum to hide him. His madness, so far from being the means of hiding him from his enemies, was, on the contrary, the most likely way of discovering him, as he was uncontrollable, and in view of his course of life and the eccentricities which he committed.

It is equally absurd to say that he was not insane. As for myself, I never had the least doubt of his insanity; nothing was more evident, and I consider as absolutely ridiculous the pretension that he feigned insanity. I am unable to conceive why he should pretend to be a fool.

When in 1885, I learned of his eccentricities in the North-West, his role of prophet and the rest of it, I knew what would follow by the statements in the newspapers as to the character of his foolish acts, such as I had observed under the circumstances above related, and I had not the slightest doubt then that the unfortunate man had again become completely insane, as he had been before in 1875 and 1876. I was all the more convinced of this from what Dr. Roy had told me at Beauport on one time—that he had never been completely cured. I anticipated what would follow as soon as I learned that he was playing the role of a politician in the Autumn of 1884 and the Winter of 1885, that his insanity would return, and when the events confirmed my anticipations, I was not in the least astonished.

To sum up, from all that I know I affirm solemnly that I have never entertained the least doubt that the unfortunate Louis Riel was insane in the Winter and Spring of 1885, and not responsible for his acts; that it is very probable that he became insane in the Autumn of 1884, that all his political acts during all the troubles in the North-West, dating from the moment when his great excitement commenced, were the acts of a lunatic.

Knowing so well his religious sentiments, his great piety and his extraordinary devotion to his religion, I have not the least doubt that all that he did in the North-West in the way of revolt and apostacy, all the troubles caused to the priests and missionaries, etc., is the result of his lunacy.

I am equally sure and certain, without entertaining the least doubt on the point, that the Government, in ordering that Louis Riel be executed on the 16th of November last, at Regina, ordered the execution of a lunatic.

I have no political interest to serve in thus speaking. On the contrary, I have always belonged to the Conservative party, and I have always been animated by a strong devotion to the Conservative chiefs whom I sought, with all my power, to sustain all my life. It is to me a great humiliation and sacrifice to remember the deplorable fault which they committed in hanging a madman.

In making this declaration, I am not animated by any sentiment of relationship because of the fact that Riel was the nephew of my wife.

That consideration does not influence at all, and it is only the truth of the facts which has induced me to make the foregoing declaration.

Neither have I any interest to oppose the Government of the day; on the contrary, everything induces me to desire to see them remain in power, and I will gain absolutely nothing by their defeat. The above named Henri Flageolle, to whom I have referred, lives now, I believe, in Chicago; the Rev Mr. Barnabe is dead.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true, and in virtue of the Act passed in the 37th year of the reign of Her Majesty, intituled "An Act for the suppression of voluntary and extrajudicial oaths," and I have signed.

Solemnly declared before me } at Montreal this twenty-second } day of April, 1886. }

JOHN LEE.

C. A. LEVEILLE,
Commissioner for receiving affidavits. }

This is what is solemnly affirmed on the responsibility of an oath, because the law treats such a declaration as evidence under oath. Riel became insane in the United States. He was put in an asylum without knowing where he was going. What becomes of this pretension, then, that he had simulated insanity? I have spoken a great length, but I thought it my duty to show to those who had the patience to listen to me that, after all, the position which was taken in our province was not so absurd and revolutionary as some persons represent it to be. I wish to call the attention of the Government to this point that these facts were known to our population, who believed sincerely that not only he, but all those poor half-breeds in the North-West, had for fifteen years been treated in such a way as to drive them to despair; that when they heard a man of such high standing as Mr. Lawrence Clarke telling them that the Government were sending 500 men to kill them and put their leaders in chains, while it was not true, they were perfectly justified in believing it, and when the whole population had been ill-treated and persecuted in the way described, for instance, by Lieutenant-Governor Archibald, it is quite natural that they should listen to these evil rumors. They rose in self-defence. I invite you hon. gentlemen to look at the documents, and I will be very glad to be corrected on any point on which I have been misled. I have stated only what I believe to be the truth. If you are annoyed it is not, perhaps, altogether our fault. We are two populations, one speaking French, the other English. The least you can admit is that there are two sides to this question. My impression is that the hon. gentlemen speaking the English language have seen only one side of the question; and I think that if the two sides have not been seen it is because French is not generally read or spoken amongst the English population. I expected that some one who speaks the English language would have undertaken the work which I have done and it was only when I saw that it was not done, at least to any great extent, I thought it my duty, even at the risk of boring you and murdering the Queen's English, to try and put this question before you in the English language. I am very grateful to the House for the patient manner in which they have listened to my remarks.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—I have no desire to make a speech in reply to what has fallen from the hon. gentleman, even if I were as able and eloquent as he is. I merely wish to make a few remarks. Of course I would be willing to postpone them until another time.

HON. GENTLEMEN—Go on, go on!

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—I have no desire at all to interfere in the matter. I merely wish to refer to some points on which the hon. gentleman is entirely astray. I merely wish to state the facts. The hon. gentleman has spoken about nationality and race prejudices. I think if he would consider or examine my career through that former rebellion he would have had no occasion to say that I had displayed national feeling in the matter.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—On the contrary I was very much pleased that the hon. gentleman put questions to me, because I always understood that he was a high-minded man, actuated by sentiments of justice. What I said was that there was a difficulty between two races, that he belongs to one and the accused belongs to another.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—I did not understand at first what the hon. gentleman was referring to; but I finally came to the conclusion that he was making a strong attempt to justify the rebellion of 1869-70. Now, I must differ from the hon. gentleman so far as that is concerned. Some hon. gentlemen may not be aware that I was a member of the old Council of Assiniboia, and that I saw with my own eyes a great deal of what the hon. gentleman has been speaking of—learned it from my own observation. I was deputed from that council, myself and another member, to go and see Riel at Rivière Sale. This was a few days after they had taken up arms there and blocked the highway and stopped the mails. I was sent to find out what was the matter with those people—what they wanted. I was sent up, I suppose, specially because I understood a little French—at least I thought that was the principal object. I met Riel and his supposed council, which I did not recognize, and I must say just here that Riel twitted me that I did not show them the respect which I should have done. He told me about his objects and his rights. I wanted him to define his rights, but he would not do so. They said the country was theirs and they would have it. I asked him then if he was going to allow Mr. Macdougall to come in. “No,” said he, “I am not going to allow him to come in.” I asked why; he would not say exactly why. “Well,” I said, “you have taken up arms.” “Yes,” he said he had. I said, “you will never get the English people to join you; the English people will not take up arms; they expect to get all the rights they are entitled to in a constitutional way. Now you are taking up arms and we will be divided, and the probabilities are you will get nothing.” I need not give any further explanation, so far as that is concerned. We returned and reported. The third day after that they came into Fort Garry and took possession of the Fort. The hon. gentleman has said a great deal about Governor McTavish; he was under restraint; he was guarded. I was there on two or three occasions when I could not get into the house with the armed guards about it. I knew those armed men; I suppose there were not a dozen men in all his army, if you call it so, that I did not know by name. I found them there, and any gentleman can easily understand what Mr. McTavish might expect if he did not agree to everything these people wanted. When I went to the Fort first, those men would come to me and ask “are we doing right? Is this thing right?” Prior to that I had heard that several of these men were forced at the point of the bayonet to come in. There is no doubt about it, because several of the men told me so—that they were forced to come in. There is how the thing started. I believe the hon. gentleman said that it must be a legitimate government because the people were all joined in support of it. I deny it, and you will find every English speaking man who was there at the time agree with me, that they never gave their assent. They merely gave a quasi assent to keep the peace in the meantime until matters could be arranged. Then the hon. gentlemen said that Mr. Macdougall had no authority under the circumstances, but what was the reason of that? He was sent there, as I understand, to take possession on the first of December, the date on which, according to the agreement between the two Governments, the transfer was to take place, but on account of this armed resistance it did not take place, and the hon. gentleman must remember that at that time it would take from fifteen to twenty days before we could get a mail; so we could not know what was going on here or in England. I am not sure but it was a monthly mail we had at that time, and consequently hon. gentlemen can easily see how those things could occur, and that we did not know anything about them. I admit at once that it would not have been legal for Mr. Macdougall to assume the Government, under the circumstances, when the transfer had not been made; but why had not the transfer been made? That is the point. Then the hon. gentleman went on to say that the English people approved of Riel's government. I want to show him and the House that the English people never agreed to it. Why was it that on the 15th

March the whole English people gathered together? What was the object? It was not to go and fight the French half-breeds. The object was to take out those prisoners who were badly used, and who had been confined in jail so long for no reason, and especially as we could not see that it was justifiable under any circumstances. I do not see how the hon. gentleman, or any legal or other man, could justify anything of that kind or say that it was a legitimate government when at least one half of the people did not approve of it. I may say that a number of the half-breeds, some sixty of them, were out and out opposed to it—more opposed than the English people to this movement at the start. A great many of those people were brought in by force; but a few of them never did join it, and I could name them. I do not see how the hon. gentleman can make so much of his statement that it was a legitimate government. That was really the only point I intended to refer to, except one other, and that was that in this case when the French half-breeds took Fort Garry they had possession of all the available arms in the country. They had about 300 or 400 Enfield rifles, sixteen pieces of cannon, and stone walls round them, and what could the people outside do? Some few had shot guns, and there were perhaps a dozen rifles among the whole outside population. The English speaking people were not hunters; they were farmers, but of course some of them had shot guns—perhaps in a house where there were three or four young men capable of bearing arms there would be a shot gun. At the time they were going to take the prisoners out, some of them had only clubs. I and several other prominent men endeavoured to negotiate between the parties and we did everything we could to prevent trouble. I may say that all through there was a party there that stood between them. If it had not been for that I do not know what the consequences would have been. The hon. gentleman said that later on the half-breeds saved the country to the Crown.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—It was Governor Archibald said so.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—That is all very well. Governor Archibald may have thought so at the time; but when all the circumstances are known the assertion is ridiculous. As the hon gentleman says, I think there were 150 volunteers there at the time. Then he says there were 1,200 half-breeds; they could not muster 1,200 at any time; they never could muster more than 600. They could not muster more than that, even at that time when they mustered all they could get, when our English people came to take out those prisoners. I must state the reason why our people did not go for them. They came within four miles of Fort Garry and stopped there all night. Unfortunately there were two persons, this Parisien and his son, who had some difficulty with Riel, and they escaped down the river. Those people took them as spies and seized the son and kept him all night. In the morning they were ready to go up to Fort Garry.

Unfortunately my son had occasion to go down that way and this Parisien who, had made his escape in the bustle and got hold of a shot gun loaded with bullets, met my son and shot him down. I think if the hon. gentleman from DeSalaberry had such a case as that, his feelings would be different here to-night. From his manner he seems considerable excited, but I think he would feel a little more excited if he stood in my position.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—Will the hon. gentleman allow me to state a fact? Our hon. confrere here had the misfortune to lose his son, and in spite of that, there is evidence in these documents that he came forward and asked for clemency for those men whom he had a right to consider as his enemies, to establish peace in the country; and there is not, perhaps, a man in the Dominion to whom Lieutenant-Governor Archibald rendered a grander homage than to our hon. friend here for the way he acted under those trying circumstances.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—I was well acquainted with all those French half breeds, and I never had anything to say against them. I believe that they were just as good and just as kind as the English half-breeds, and I never looked upon them as anything different; but I know that these men were forced (the bulk of them I am certain were forced) into it; if they had not been they would never have gone into this trouble of their own accord. Who the party is who urged them to it I am not going to state. There is a great deal more I could say, but I do not wish to discuss dead issues. I do not know that there are half a dozen out there who knew more about the facts of this trouble than I do, because I had occasion, in my endeavors to make peace, to visit their camp probably two or three times a week, and I had every opportunity to know what was going on. As far as Riel is concerned, he is dead and gone now, and I have nothing to say about him; but there is one thing that struck me very forcibly, and that is the fact of the hon. gentleman supporting Riel so strongly. I cannot understand what his object is. Of course I can make due allowance for nationality and all that sort of thing; but I believe that if Scott deserved to die, Riel deserved to be executed.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—The hon. gentleman says that he does not understand how it is that the hon. gentleman from DeSalaberry has tried to find an excuse for a rebellion. I believe the hon. gentleman did not understand him, because the hon. gentleman from DeSalaberry did not try to excuse the rebellion. On the contrary, he said that rebellion was not allowable; but what he said is there was no rebellion by the French half-breeds in 1869 and 1870 that the rebels were those who called themselves loyalists. The rebels were only those gentlemen who spoke English and came from other provinces, one of whom sits with him on the left side of the House. The rebels were those who in 1867-68 and at the beginning of '69 had agitated public opinion against the peace of Her Majesty. The rebels were those who had organized a republic in opposition to the Government of the Hudson Bay Company. Those were the rebels, but Riel and the provisional government were the men who stood by the North-West and who tried to put down intruders and other who, having been imprisoned, had broken jail and were at open war against Lieutenant-Governor McTavish and the established government of Her Majesty in the North-West, the Government of Assiniboia. That is what those gentlemen tried to do, and what they would have succeeded in doing, and if the hon. gentleman had not been asleep in bed at the time the evidence was quoted the other day he could have understood it. The blue books show that the first time Riel became connected with the difficulties in the North-West was on the 11th October, 1869, whereas the troubles had begun long before—in 1868, and even earlier, when the leaders of the French half-breeds were Pascal Breland, Jos. Tenton and W. Hallet, our blue books show that Dr. Schultz busied himself exciting the Chipewas and Souix Indians against the half-breeds, for which mischief he was rewarded with a Senatorship and received an indemnity of $71,000.

The Rev. Mr. Ritchot swears before the Committee of the House of Commons, on the 20th April:

"The troubles were increased in the autumn of 1868 by the arrival of a party of Canadian employes. Difficulties commenced in the course of the winter. The principal cause of the difficulty then was the rumor that these employes had made a treaty with the Indians for a certain tract of land, part of which the people of the country had claimed for themselves. I became aware of this through evidence in the Court, at the sitting of which I was present, in a case against Mr. Snow. On the occasion of that suit, the witnesses stated that on such a day Mr. Snow treated with the Indians, and gave them flour, pork and drink in exchange for the lands."

"From and after the month of June, until the autumn, there were repeated difficulties with reference to the surveyors. The inhabitants demanded of the surveyors on what authority they came to survey the lands of the country."

"Contrary to what usually happens this movement originated with the people themselves—the agricultural classes."

The Very Rev. Archbishop Taché says:

"Having entered upon that course which I cannot qualify otherwise than as false and audacious, Le Canada continues: "On the 10th, 1869, the Hon. Minister of Crown Lands sent Col. Dennis instructions to proceed without delay to the Red River, with a view to selecting the most convenient localities to survey townships for immediate settlement.

Joseph Hargrave, a clerk in the employ of the Hudson Bay Company and a Protestant, swears before the committee:—

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND.

"Several reprehensible acts were committed by those who were employed to make the survey, acts which created a good deal of discontent."

Governor McTavish wrote on the 4th September 1869 (blue book 1870) as follows:—

"Unfortunately each official of the Federal Government on arriving went to Dr. Schultz.

"Our friends the Canadian French half-breeds doubted with reason that this alliance could have any good result for them

"It was evident that they intended no good on their arrival. * * * These people (of Mr. Dennis) came with their horses and they said that in order to pass the time they would commence to select for themselves lots of land on which the Metis being afraid of them would retire." * * * If the Hon. William Macdougall on arriving here shows "the same weakness that he has shown in trouble at all times."

If Hon. William Macdougall had no authority there, the hon. gentleman says it was on account of the French rebels. There again the hon. gentleman cannot understand; if Mr. Macdougall had no authority in the North-West it was because the Government had not acquired a transfer of the land when Mr. Macdougall issued his proclamation. Does the hon. gentleman not know that that proclamation was issued at the end of 1869, and does he not also know that the agreement and the transfer of the Territories took place only in 1870? If so, how could Mr. Macdougall or any government in the world give authority to any man to act as Lieutenant-Governor in a foreign country? Surely it is not only an elementary principal of national law but common sense that no government or power on earth has a right to send an officer as Lieutenant-Governor into a foreign country with power to kill, make prisoners, break open doors, seize and destroy, as Colonel Dennis had power to do, under the instructions of Mr. Macdougall. If there had been trouble, it was Mr. Macdougall and Colonel Dennis, Mr. Boulton and others, who are the rebels. It was those men who, against every law, went out to rule in the North-West. It is Colonel Dennis and other officials of the Canadian Government, some of whom were taken from the military schools, who told the people that they had been sent there with the surveyors, and that the moment Canada would have power there they would turn the half-breeds out of the country—those are the rebels. That is what the hon. gentleman from DeSalaberry has shown. The hon. gentleman from Kildonan says that Lieutenant-Governor Archibald was very wrong if he said that Riel and his people had saved the country. I say if the hon. gentleman knew what he was talking about he would not say so. Does he deny that even a republic had been established in the North-West by these men? Does he deny that?

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—Where was it established?

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—At Portage. Walter R. Bown, successor to Dr. Schultz, as proprietor and editor of the North-Wester, a journal whose atrocious calumnies against French Catholic half-breeds has made it conspicuous, swears as follows before the committee of the House of Commons:—

"I was absent from the country at the time of the escape from the prison which has been described to the committee. That was the act of the English half-breeds; the French settlers were opposed to it. They wished to sustain the Company. Before there was any question of transfer (to Canada) there was discontent amongst the English settlers and the new arrivals from Canada because of the arbitrary rule of the Hudson Bay Company.

I remember that a little Republic was established at Portage several years before. There were some twenty or thirty persons in it. They found that their lives and properties were not sufficiently protected."

Archbishop Taché says:

"Some months before the commencement of the troubles a petition was prepared by the so-called Canadian party after the break into the prison, which had in view the rescue of Dr. Schultz."

Does the hon. gentleman deny that Riel and his friends volunteered their services to repel a Fenian invasion from the United States? If so I beg to quote the following statement made by Lieutenant-Governor Archibald:—

"The invasion (Fenian) occurred in the month of October. It was founded upon the discontent of the French half-breeds. The Fenian leader had been one of the Provisional Government, the other members of which were in the Province. * * * O'Donohoe's former colleagues he had counted declared against him. Riel visited the French inhabitants and used his influence against O'Donohoe."

If the hon. gentleman cannot deny all these facts, if he cannot even deny that some of his own countrymen, amongst whom was Dr. Schultz, were confined in the prisons of the Hudson's Bay Company for their conduct towards that company, and that the doors of the prisons were even forced, can he not understand why Lieutenant-Governor Archibald, who wrote the history of the troubles in the North-West, said that Riel and his people saved the North-West from foreign invaders and from those rebels who at the time called themselves loyalists, and who have received (and, I say it with much regret, with the assistance of my vote because I was misled by my leaders at the time) $71,000 of indemnity after they had brought upon the country all those sad occurrences which we had not then heard of? Then the hon. gentleman says that the majority of those French half-breeds were forced into the rebellion of 1885. They were not forced into the rebellion, as facts show, but they fought for their rights, they fought in self defense, they fought in defense of their properties, as citations I will make show. No doubt they were wrong, but the guilt of the Government was far greater than theirs, so that their acts were excusable, more so than those of the Government whom Parliament excused. If we could forget, as I said some time ago, that there are French, English, Scotch and Irish in this country we would agree. If we could only recollect what are the true principles of justice, and practice those principles, the whole Dominion would be at peace, as Quebec is to-day. I challenge any party in Quebec to say they are not well treated by the majority of that Province? And why? Because they receive justice at the hands of the majority; and if in a country like ours the minority is to be made to suffer I may tell hon. gentlemen that I have never yet suffered without putting myself on my defence and that it shall be so to the end. Even in this case of the North-West, had there been more loyal men in this country; had there been more men attached to their Queen and their country, these events in the North-West would have passed over without any widespread agitation. But the moment the French Canadians protested against the scaffold at Regina, what was the cry raised by the organ of the Government and other newspapers in Ontario and Quebec? The cry was "a war of races." I say they are lies. The hon. gentleman from DeSalaberry has proved the facts from public documents, and when many of our population shall have read those documents they will be astonished at the difference in the case as made out by the hon. gentleman and the case as represented by the journals which pretend to inspire the public and to enlighten them as to the truth of the matter. They will be surprised, because until to-day it has been generally supposed that we have raised a national cry, so much so that some of those journals went so far so as to say "do you contend that because a man is a Frenchman he may kill and not die?" Might I not retort and say, because a man is a Frenchman do you pretend he must die for the sins of others? I would ask who is so stupid as to put such a question? Has there not been French-Canadians hanged before to-day, and where was the cry? But there is a cry to-day because the hanging of Riel was a murder. There is a cry to-day because after having thoroughly examined the documents and the whole case we could not help, in justice, and in conscience, if we do not wish to share the responsibility of this murder, to disapprove of the act. That was the issue we took, and as the hon. gentleman from DeSalaberry said at the very beginning, that was his only motive, to establish the facts, and to explain why it was that we took that position. Hon. gentlemen, if we were bound to take that position; if the cry of our conscience impelled us to work it out and know what our duty was, it was also the duty of the majority to look into the case and not to prejudge it, but judge it on its own merits. It was their duty, before coming to a conclusion to know whether it was a crime or not and then approve or condemn it. Many have done so unwittingly. It was done through ignorance, but it was an ignorance for which there is no excuse, because there were public documents under their hand to show them the facts, and there are laws older than the laws of nations to show them the true principles we are to be governed by. There were laws of nations to show them when a provisional government may and when it may not be organized. So that they might have ascertained the facts and have judged for themselves and they would have occupied a better position than that which they hold to-day. I could not help making those observations, after the remarks of the hon. member who preceded me though I should have thought that the good taste of every member of this House would have indicated to him that it would be better to let the matter drop after the moderate manner in which the hon. gentleman from DeSalaberry had placed the matter before the House to see on which side was justice, equity and humanity. Such has not been the case, however, and I have felt it my duty to make these few remarks in answer to the remarks of the hon. Senator from Kildonan (Mr. Sutherland.)

The subject was then dropped.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (132) "An Act respecting the Department of Public Printing and Stationery." (Mr. Smith)

The Senate adjourned at 12:45 a.m.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Saturday, May 29th, 1886.

The Speaker took the chair at three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

REAL PROPERTY IN THE TERRITORIES BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill (10) "An Act respecting Real Property in the Territories."

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Might I ask the hon. gentleman if he will consent to postpone the second reading of this Bill until Monday? We have not had an opportunity of seeing it yet.

HON. MR. POWER—I understand that this Bill has not yet been distributed, but I do not think anyone will be disposed to raise that technical objection. It is substantially the same Bill that passed this House last year and was sent down to the House of Commons.

HON. MR. PLUMB—This is a Bill referring to the transfer of real property in the North-West Territories. It is based on the principle of the Torrens Act which, as hon. gentlemen are aware, is a large departure from the law governing real estate as it has heretofore been known in this country. The principal departures are that real estate is to be known and held upon a different tenure from what it has been held before—it is to be considered a chattel real—it is to be transferred in a manner which has never been known in this country before. There are certain provisions in connection with it which tend to facilitate the transfer of property and can be made applicable to a new country like the North-West and it has been deemed advisable to make the experiment there. It is known to most hon. gentlemen, no doubt, that the Torrens system has been for years in operation in Australia. I confess that when the Bill of which this is substantially a duplicate, was introduced here last year, I, in common with many of my friends, saw serious objections to it. It is a departure from our traditions, if I may use that expression, in respect to the transfer of real property, which seems at first sight a violent one, particularly those clauses in relation to the right of dower, to establishing any trust and encumbering any real estate with trusts—clauses which have reference to the fact that the husband may make a valid transfer to the wife and the wife to the husband—that there are no words of limitation necessary, no devise and especially no trust can be created on what we have always considered the most permanent form of security. I think however, when we come to consider the circumstances of the new country for which we are legislating, and the necessity of making the transfer of land as simple and inexpensive as possible, making the title certain in the last possessor when it passes to another, which entirely obviates the necessity of searching the register and other matters of that kind, which I need hardly go into on a motion for the second reading of the Bill—when all these facts are taken into consideration, I have no doubt that the Bill will commend itself to the consideration of the House now, as it did last year when a similar measure in its main features was adopted by the Senate, and when it was presented with such eloquence and ability by the leader of the House, whose absence we lament. I shall not attempt in any way, not being a lawyer, to follow the eloquent argument that the hon. gentleman used in presenting the Bill to the House. As my hon. friend has suggested, although the Bill, which is a very bulky one, relating mainly to details, has not been distributed, I think the principle having been adopted last year, I may venture to ask the House, for the purpose of facilitating the public business, as we are now drawing near the close of the session, to permit the Bill to be read the second time.

HON. MR. SCOTT—I do not propose to go into a discussion of this question, which was very fully gone into last Session. My own views are well known with regard to the propriety of introducing the Torrens system in the North-West. I may say that I opposed it, and the grounds of my opposition were very definitely set forth when I had the pleasure of addressing the House when the Bill came before us last year. I have not had an opportunity of examining whether the changes that were made in the Senate at that time appear in this Bill. Some gentlemen were not prepared to go quite as far in the details as the original Bill was presented to us, and I cannot say whether any change has been made, in conformity with the suggestions and amendments which were offered in this House, whether this is the Bill as introduced to us or the amended Bill, or whether amendments have been made in the House of Commons. I am therefore quite unable to express an opinion whether the Bill is less or more objectionable than it was last year.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I think the Bill has been changed to conform to the general opinion expressed here and elsewhere.

HON. MR. PLUMB.

HON. MR. SCOTT—Is dower absolutely done away with? That was one of my objections to the Bill. Another was its great facility for enabling parties to mortgage their property. I take exception to it on that ground. I think the facilities are quite wide enough at the present time.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman will find in the 8th Section there is a limitation to the question of dower.

HON. MR. SCOTT—When the Bill comes before the Committee of the whole we can discuss its clauses.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—Last year, when this measure was submitted to us, I expressed my opinion upon it. I shall not weary the House with repeating the reasons which I gave at length at that time. I still entertain the same objections—I may say that they are stronger now than they were last year, because since then I have had not only occasion to think over the matter, but even to consult men of great ability in the law, and all this has brought me to the conclusion that it is a most unfortunate piece of legislation. I will only call the attention of members of this House to two features of the Bill. There is what is known as a system of registration which is called here the Torrens system; but to establish this Torrens system in the North-West it was found necessary—and I never could understand why—to lay down principles of legislation which tend to destroy many things which I consider to be amongst the bases of social order. It destroys, in my opinion, the authority of the husband over his wife and family and the principle of paternal authority. It has the effect of assimilating real estate to movables, where as it is the opinion of many of the highest authorities in jurisprudence and legal matters the only countries which have saved the patrimony of the families and have attained great prosperity are those which have immobilized the patrimony of the family in order that it might not change hands so readily as is proposed by this measure. I recollect very well that the leader of the House last year shared to a great extent, our apprehensions of the working of this law. I cannot understand why such important legislation as this should be submitted to us, without even having the Bill itself before us, at the very end of the Session—a measure which requires weeks and months of careful study, and yet we are called upon to vote on the second reading of this Bill without even having an opportunity of seeing it.

HON. MR. MACDONALD—(B.C.) The Bill has been down for two months.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—It is well known that members of this House do not read the bills as they appear in the House of Commons. Not long ago one of the leading lawyers in Montreal spoke to me about this legislation. He had a copy of the Senate Debates in his hand, and he asked me how it was that men so distinguished as many of the members of the Senate are—men of such high legal ability—could have adopted such a principle as this. I told him I was very glad to listen to his observations because his education is English, and he was able to compare the different systems of legislation, having studied both the French and the English systems, as we are obliged to do in our province. He told me that he could hardly understand how his fellow-countrymen should vote for such legislation. If I refer to the opinion of this gentleman it is not because I contend that lawyers, even those eminent in their profession outside of this House, have more authority than members of the Senate, but it is to illustrate what I have so often called attention to—that we do not give perhaps sufficient attention to those matters here, and do not compare the legislation of different countries with our own in order to see what is considered the best for the people in the different countries of Europe. My impression is that such a Bill as this would not be passed in England to-day. I think the great majority of the leading men of the legal profession in that country would be opposed to it, so that I regret very much that the question is not stated in the sense which I have the honor to indicate. I merely wish to express my objection to this legislation.

HON. MR. VIDAL—This matter was brought before us last year; it was even discussed briefly prior to that on a motion which I had the honor of introducing in the Senate. When we remember that it has been really very fully discussed and the principle of it was adopted by the Senate last year, I think that should do away in a great measure with the objection which is now brought, of our not being familiar with the contents of the Bill before us. Again, attention has been drawn to the fact that the Bill has been two months on our table. It was brought here the first week in March; and one would suppose that any gentleman interested in this matter would certainly, in these two months, with the ample time and leisure we have had, take the opportunity to acquaint himself with the provisions of the Bill; so I do not think the mere fact of its coming before us at this late period of the session can be advanced as a reason why the Bill should not receive at our hands courteous consideration, and even great indulgence. This Bill does not propose to interfere with the tenure of land in the older provinces; Quebec has its own system. This merely deals with tracts of land the control of which is under the Dominion Government. I cannot see why the representatives of any province should object to a system which has already proved itself to be an admirable one, and which has answered fully the expectations of those who have introduced it. The system has been for twenty-five or thirty years in successful operation in the Australian colonies; why then we should be debarred from giving to our fellow countrymen in the North-West Territories the opportunity of availing themselves of the advantages which it offers, I cannot understand. It is already in operation to some extent in British Columbia, where it has answered the purpose very well.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Admirably.

HON. MR. VIDAL—It has been in operation in Ontario for one year. Perhaps it will have a good deal of weight with hon. members, if I remind them that when I first called the attention of the Government to the subject in 1884 our honored friend, Sir Alexander Campbell, was certainly not disposed to look upon it with favor. He shared the prejudices of the hon. gentlemen who have just spoken, but in the course of the year, and before we met again in Parliament, his attention was directed more closely to the subject; he examined into it, and in spite of the prejudices which had already been formed in his mind, he came to the conclusion that it was a desirable species of legislation; that it would be in the interest of our North-West Territories, rapidly forming into Provinces, that they should begin with a system which offers, as this does, such great advantages. I can easily understand that, without any thought of it in their own minds, legal gentlemen would not favor a measure of this kind—which reduces very materially legal fees. (Oh, oh.) I am not saying that hon. gentlemen would be consciously influenced: but we laymen can understand that under the system we have in this country, and still more so in England, it is enormously expensive to investigate a title; that if a piece of land is cut into two or three hundred lots, and there happens to be some document fifty years ago, the title of every one of those lots has to be investigated, and a very heavy bill of costs attends such investigation in each case. Under this Bill there is no possibility of that. The simple registration puts an end to all such questions.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—Has the attention of the hon. gentleman been called to this point: that in the Province of Quebec the best feature in the Torrens system, the registration of title, is just as simple, easy and cheap—in fact cheaper than in the Bill proposed, and that it is completely useless to lay down a different principle of legislation. It is not necessary to change the whole legislation of the country.

HON. MR. VIDAL—The hon. gentleman seems to misapprehend the character of the Bill altogether. It does not change the character of the legislation of the country. It does not change the legislation in Quebec one iota.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—The point is this; of course it is establishing a new system for a country which is almost uninhabited as yet. It is creating for the people who are to go there—including the people of Quebec, who have just as good a right to settle there as any other population—a system which we believe to be inferior to our own. Our people who go there should be subject to a system which is demoralizing to a certain extent. It is in that sense that we consider it improper to establish the system there. I understand quite well that it does not change the law in the Province of Quebec.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I presume that people of English, Irish and Scotch descent are just as careful in matters of morality as our brethren of French origin, and when we see that a system of this kind has been in successful operation in British colonies for 25 years, I cannot understand why the hon. gentleman should say that it is something new. It is a system which has been in successful operation for years; it is growing in public favor continually, even in England, although it would be difficult to introduce it there in consequence of the way titles are encumbered. The system is favored wherever it has been tried. Seeing that we have already admitted the principle of the Bill it does appear to me that it would be judicious and proper to allow it to go to the second reading, and then if any specific clauses are to be amended the Senate can do so. It would be a great saving of our time and further our work to allow the Bill to be read at once the second time.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time on a division.

PRINTING BUREAU BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill (132) "An Act respecting the Department of Public Printing and Stationery." He said: This is a Bill which has only been put into my hands within a very short time. It comes from the other House, and was passed there yesterday. It is intended by this Bill that the Government shall take over to itself, under its own management, the public printing, and shall adopt the American system as soon as possible. It also provides, as to the stationery arrangements, that the English system shall be adopted as nearly as the circumstances of the case admit. The tendency in England has been to assimilate its system with that of the United States and the system that prevails all over Europe and it is sought by this Bill to provide something, as far as we can, similar to that system. Of course it is tentative, and is a very complicated system altogether. While the first experiment in it may not be perfect, of course if we once adopt the principle and the system, which I think will be one of great convenience and economy to the country, any further improvements that may be found necessary from time to time, as experience dictates, in the system and its workings, will necessarily commend themselves to the attention of the Government, and I have no doubt to the approbation of Parliament. The cheapest and most perfect system which has yet been adopted is that of Germany, where it has been worked out, and has been found to be productive of great economy and great thoroughness in the public service. The details of the Bill are somewhat complex and technical. I do not pretend, in the short time the Bill has been in my hands, to have mastered them altogether, because I should be obliged to read the Bill with an expert in order to make myself as familiar with its details before bringing it to the House, as I certainly would have done if it had not been so late in the session. I desire to have the Bill advanced a stage to-day, because I have intimations that we are approaching rapidly that desirable crisis which may be called the close of the session.

HON. MR. VIDAL.

HON. MR. SCOTT—The object of this Bill is to change our system of governmental printing. For many years—in fact since I can recollect—in the old Parliament of Canada we had a printing bureau, and the printing of Parliament and of the Departments was performed by the Queen's Printer, strictly speaking—that is, it was done in a Government office, and was a Government service. That led to a good many abuses, and it was thought a more economical system would be inaugurated by putting up the public printing to competition, and so, for the last fifteen years, that system has been in operation. I think the bureau system continued a couple of years after Confederation—I believe Mr. Desbarats followed Desbarats & Cameron, in the character of superintendent—a position very much the same as it is proposed to create under this Bill. The period is so far distant now that I am unable to say why the system was abolished, but I presume it was because it was thought we could get the work done more cheaply and efficiently by offering it to competition. I quite understand that if a government bureau is properly conducted, with a view to economy and efficiency alone, this system may have its advantages, but with the tendency of the present Government to extravagance and a lavish expenditure of money, I believe the system which is now in vogue, offering the printing to public competition, might perhaps be superior. I have given this Bill a hasty consideration, but the design is to make an independent department of the Government to be called the Bureau of Printing, and this bureau is to have charge, not only of the printing, but also of supplying the stationery for the House of Commons and the Senate. If prudently and economically carried out, the Bill may have its advantages.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I recollect very well the times under the old Province of Canada, when the printing was done by government printers. It was admitted at the time that the system was a good deal more expensive than we thought the contract system would be. The great objection at the time to the change was that it was thought that private printers could not do their work with sufficient promptitude to meet the wants of both Houses. That was the main argument for adhering to the system of having the work done through the Queen's printer. At that time, as is well known, the Queen's printer realized great wealth, and the system was found to be very expensive. I have not had occasion to study the Bill to see how this new system is to be worked. At first sight, it seems to me not to be the best system. I wish to ask the leader of the House if the Government have any figures by which we might make a comparison between the two systems? I consider that this is to a certain extent a money matter, and that the House of Commons having passed the Bill is, of course, a great recommendation for us, but in the meantime it would have been more satisfactory for us if the leader of the Government in the Senate had stated that, according to the old system, it cost so much and according to the new system it is estimated that it will cost so much. As to delays I do not think there has been any serious complaint on that score for some years. About ten years ago the House will remember the great complaint of the Opposition was that the measures were not brought in in time and the answer invariably was that it was the printer's fault. We have not heard much of that sort of complaint for some three or four years.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—The House will observe that much of the legislation lately introduced by the present Government is designed to enable the executive government to usurp the whole power, patronage and control over everything in the Dominion. The question rests with this House to say whether we are prepared to give up all our influence, power and control over everything to the executive of this country? Is our experience of the present Government during the last five years such that Parliament can have any confidence in them? Have they used the power that Parliament has given them in a manner to satisfy Parliament or the people of this country.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—That is the opinion.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Have we not seen the Government trying to usurp the power over the whole of the railways of the country, taking away from the provinces almost all the local railways so that they may have the whole patronage, and put their hands into the public exchequer, giving large amounts of money, chiefly to influence the elections? Have they not used the power given them for political purposes? And again we remember the miserable effort made by the Dominion Government, after the Provinces had, under the Constitution, the power to deal with the franchise, to appoint franchise commissioners in each province. Can we forget the audacity with which Sir John brought in a measure to bring about that collision between the Dominion and Provincial Governments? Could anything be more calculated to produce widespread discontent? What are all these efforts but an attempt to try to extend their patronage and keep themselves in power? Many men will say that I am a pessimist. I think it would be for the public interest that there should be a few more pessimists in Parliament to raise their voices when they see the way the executive power has been used in the past. The Privy Council of Eng'and, fortunately for the Dominion, has checked the Prime Minister on this question of the respective powers of the Federal and Local Governments and prevents the further employment of a number of hungry lawyers in the courts living upon the fruits of the industry of our people. They cannot even let the experimental farms alone. We all desire to establish experimental farms, but we do not desire to see the executive government using experimental farms as a means of distributing patronage that they may have a little longer of lease power.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—I rise to a question of order.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Will the hon. gentleman sit down. Will the Speaker keep him in order? He is simply a nuisance in the House—a man whose whole family is in the public service.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—This is outrageous.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—An office seeker for himself and his family.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—The hon. gentleman from Woodstock is out of order. he is not addressing himself to the question before the House.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I have only to say—

THE SPEAKER—I think the hon. gentleman was not exceeding the general latitude allowed to gentlemen in discussing a question of this kind. He was going to show, in connection with this Bill, that the policy of the Government generally was to assume all patronage for the purpose of keeping themselves in power. That was an argument, a fair argument on a measure of this kind. I am very sorry, however, that I cannot resume my seat without expressing my deep regret that the hon. gentleman could not, when he was called to order, have sat down and not indulged in the personal recrimination which he did.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—If I sometimes transgress the rules of this House it is because a man would require to have the patience and disposition of an angel to bear with the interruptions of the hon. gentleman from Sackville, who is simply an office seeker.

HON. MEMBERS — Order, order, order!

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman from Woodstock is clearly out of order in making those personal allusions.

HON. MR. MONTGOMERY—I appeal to the House to have the hon. gentleman's words taken down and to have the Sergeant-at-Arms put him outside of the bar of the Senate.

THE SPEAKER—I think the hon. member from Sackville occupies that position in this House that he can afford to stand those remarks in silence.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I would say—

HON. MEMBERS—Sit down! Sit down! You cannot proceed.

THE SPEAKER—I think the hon. gentleman should be allowed to proceed.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—With regard to this Bill for the establishment of a department of public printing and stationery, if it were the Government of Germany under Bismarck, under the upright Empire of Germany, or any other European power, one would willingly give them the power to establish such a department, because when we examine the practical working of those absolute governments, we find that the money of the people is spent with honesty and economy. It is sad to see responsible Government, which was introduced by the honest and upright Robert Baldwin, simply being used for party advantage. This Government has simply made good institutions to be, in practice, the madness of the many for the gain of the few. We all desire that the Government printing should be done economically, but I think we should postpone this measure until we get a better government, and let everything by contract. I am quite sure that this chamber will not consent to many of the provisions of this Bill.

HON. MR. POWER—We are placed in a somewhat awkward position with respect to this measure. It has only just now been distributed, and members of this House have had no sufficient opportunity to acquaint themselves with the details of the Bill, or to consider the principle of it. The delay in bringing forward this important measure until this late period of the session is altogether indefensible, because this is one of the measures which was promised in the Speech from the Throne at the opening of the session. It is not a new thing. It is not something which has just come up and been forced on the Government by the revelations which have been made during the session, but something which they had apparently intended to proceed with when Parliament opened, and their conduct in bringing this measure into this House within two or three days of prorogation is altogether indefensible and inexcusable. If we have not time to consider the measure and to satisfy ourselves that it is a decided improvement upon the present system, our duty to ourselves and to the country is to throw out the Bill. There is no great urgency for this measure. We have got along for a number of years in a fairly satisfactory way. We could have got along in a much more satisfactory way, if the contract system had been honestly carried out, and we understand—it may be that those rumours are not well founded—that there were serious differences of opinion amongst members of the Government as to the advisability of introducing this measure; consequently I do not think that any great evil could result should we decline to accept it now. We have not had time to consider the matter as we should ; but it may be worth while to refer to something the hon. gentleman from Niagara said with regard to the American system. He said we were adopting the American system, which had been found satisfactory. In 1884 the Government appointed a commission composed of practical men, Mr. Brown Chamberlin and Mr. Blackburn. They went to Washington and various State capitols in the United States, and made pretty full and thorough enquiry into the working of the system there, which is the same as it is proposed by this Bill to introduce here. Those gentlemen, after they came back, reported adversely to the establishment of this printing bureau. I think the report of those practical men who had made enquiry into the working of this system in other places, ought to carry quite as much weight as the recommendation of the Secretary of State in the other House. I do not see from the Debates that the other Ministers, as a rule, took any active part in the discussion on the Bill. In addition to the argument which is fairly to be drawn from the late stage of the session at which this Bill has come to us, the fact that the Commissioners reported adversely to the system, is a strong argument and one that ought to have great weight with us. The Minister who introduced this measure into the other House, gave as a reason for its introduction that it would be productive of economy, and he concluded that some $40,000 or $50,000 a year would be saved by it. We have had some experience of those measures which the Ministry thought would result in saving to the country before now, and I think that in almost every instance, when put into actual operation, those experiments have resulted in an increase in cost to the country. I find that Mr. Chamberlain says in his report that the plant at Washington cost $600,000, and that over $3,000,000 is expended each year in keeping up that plant and producing the required work ; in Paris the plant cost $800,000, and in Berlin $500,000. The calculation that the Secretary of State has made is that the establishing of this bureau will cost about $200,000. I cannot help agreeing, however, with the practical printers in the other House, one in particular who referred a good deal to this report, Mr. Innis, who considered that if it cost such large sums to establish printing bureaus at Washington, Paris and Berlin, it would be found to cost more than $200,000 to establish it here. It must be remembered that the $200,000 which the establishment of the bureau will cost has to be considered independently of any expenditure that will be made every year. Supposing $40,000 a year was saved in the printing, it would take five or six years' savings to make up for the unnecessary cost of the establishment in the beginning. I believe that if the contract system is carried out fairly and honestly it is a cheaper and better system in every way than the system of a Government printing bureau. Not having any practical acquaintance with the printing business, I cannot speak, of course, of the practical difficulties that would have to be encountered by the Government in carrying on the printing business ; but if hon. gentlemen will turn to the Debates in the other House and the report of the commissioners who went to the United States, they will find that very serious difficulties have been experienced there. There is one difficulty which will occur to every hon. gentleman. If we establish a printing bureau, there are certain times of the year, particularly during the session, when there will be a great pressure of work. If we are to maintain for the whole year the staff which will be necessary for the session, this bureau will cost a very large amount. If we do not do that, if we employ during the whole year a staff which is only adapted to the ordinary work of the recess, how are we to get the additional staff necessary to do the extra amount of work during the session? I think there will be found serious difficulty in that way. The number of hands that would be required to be called in before the beginning of the session would be very large, and it would be impossible for the Government to get the best class of workmen at that time. The consequence would be that the Government would be obliged to keep up during the whole year a staff which would be necessary only during the time the press of work was going on. As to the matter of politics, I do not think that that enters into the question in dealing with this measure. As it now is, the printing of the country is given away very largely—to a most indefensible and improper extent—to the proprietors of certain favored newspapers, who charge prices, in some cases, as much as four or five times the price charged by the Government contractors; and the passing of this measure would probably deprive those favorites of the Government of the large profits which they make off that work now. My own inclination is to regard it as one of those measures that would bear a little more discussion, and it would be better for us to not pass it this session.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I have served on the Joint Committee on Printing ever since I came to this House, and have attended its meetings pretty regularly. I think the origin of this proposition is to be found in the fact that it was exceedingly inconvenient to have periodically to call for tenders for the public printing. Every 4 or 5 years we had to put the public printing up to contract. The consequence was the contractors, whether they had given satisfaction or not, were exposed periodically to great inconvenience and loss; they had either to throw up their business or enter into competition with any individuals in the Dominion, or out of the Dominion, who were willing to put in a lower tender than themselves. Hon. gentlemen are aware of the evils of that system when a contract has to be taken periodically into consideration. The description of plant which is necessary for the public printing does not resemble that commonly used in the trade; consequently contractors have to supply themselves with a special description of plant and stock for the purpose. If those men are compelled to tender for the work and take their contracts every five years at a sacrifice, it is obvious that they have either to abandon their plant and dispose of it at an unremunerative price, or to get rid in some way or other of competitors who offer at a lower price than they do. This is evidently an undesirable state of things; and it struck the members of the Committee that the system of public printing would be preferable to it. Accordingly, a special committee was struck for the purpose of enquiring into the matter. I think two such committees were struck, and their enquiries spread over two sessions. I served on those committees myself and to my care was deputed one particular branch of the subject. I was assisted by the hon. member of the House who occupied a seat on my right, who was also a member of the joint Committees on printing, and who is now deceased. With his assistance I got up the French case, and our researches were attended with considerable interest. We found that the system had prevailed in France since the days of Louis the XIV, and had given entire satisfaction there; but it must be remembered that the system of Government prevailing there was entirely different from ours. There was no people's Parliament there to hold the Government in check if they did wrong. It was a despotic Government, under a general system of espionage which made it exceedingly useful to the Government to have a private printing office which they could make absolutely secret, and the operation of which should not be known abroad. This bureau printed, but it did not publish or circulate. This system suited France very well, and it has existed, strange to say, throughout all the changes of Government that have occurred there. It went through the old monarchy, through all the changes of the revolution, through the republic, through the empire and continues to-day, and one would be disposed to say that it is a striking demonstration of its utility. However, it is no demonstration at all of its fitness for our purpose, I think we should find an illustration in the enquiries which were made in regard to the printing department at Washington, the results of which were by no means satisfactory; and so with regard to the enquiries in the separate states of the Union the accounts received of the working of this system were not satisfactory at all. Still, there remains that great objection to the present system, that we have to put up our printing periodically to tender. It is well known that we have retained the power to intimate to the contractors that the Government require an extension of their contract for another year, and I believe at this moment notice has been given to the contractors that the extension was required for two years—evidently with the intention of preparing for the system proposed in this Bill. I may say, myself, that I agree very much with the sentiment uttered on this occasion by the hon. gentleman from Woodstock. It has been put by him in a very forcible way, and I think his general objections to the system were well taken, contrasting what might be the result of this system, if hastily adopted, to this House, and in those objections to the measure I entirely concur. Like another bill we passed a few days ago, its utility and satisfactory working depend to a great extent upon the employes into whose hands the carrying on of that business will fall. It may become a useful institution, and it may become the receptacle of all the incompetent persons found in this trade, as well as other trades who prefer steady employment and fixed pay to fighting for all they can earn in competition with other men. I think this system of government bureaus has rather a debasing tendency. Men of that class who get into government employ, feeling sure of their salaries, are not inclined to put forth any extra exertion, and the printing business is one that requires extraordinary exertions. It consists largely of work which must be done under pressure, and government employes under fixed pay are not so likely to exert themselves as men under the stimulus of high wages and piece work. It has been mentioned by the hon. gentleman from Halifax that some difficulties would occur in such a bureau in maintaining an adequate staff to perform the work of the Department during the session, when there is an unusual pressure of work and find employment for them at other times when the business of the Department would be slack. That may be an objection, and I think it is, to a certain extent; but it must be remembered that the same objection holds good with all other printing establishments, and the present system is equally open to it. But under a public Department, I suppose those conversant with the subject would be able to explain that advantage may be taken of the slack time to get things done a little ahead of business. I myself feel that if this House would take into consideration all the facts of the case, and the danger of establishing a bureau of that description in our country which may give rise to such abuses as have been pointed out, if we were to advise a withdrawal of this Bill for the present we would act very wisely under the circumstances. With such a bureau as this Bill proposes to establish, once a suitable building is erected for it, and filled with expensive and elaborate machinery—machinery not specially adapted for other trades, the Government would find it exceedingly difficult to get out of such a business if it should be found obviously impossible to work it to advantage, and if we had to dispose of it we should perhaps find it an incubus on our hands. Under those circumstances, I think it would be wise to consider carefully before we decide definitely on the establishment of this bureau.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I am not probably in a position to say that I thoroughly understand the question which is before the House; nevertheless I have to take my share of the responsibility in passing this measure. In my opinion the principle of the Bill is good, seeing what is done every day—seeing the patronage which is extended by the Government in sending the printing of Parliament from one end of the country to the other to be done at enormous prices—the report of the Chinese Commission for instance. I believe that if Parliament took entire control of that work it might be done at a lower rate than under contract; but if attention is given to the way in which those things are administered in our day, it cannot be expected that this system will be conducted in such a way as to save money. The hon. gentleman from Halifax considered that the establishment of this bureau would do away with those institutions, which the Government had to patronize, and which received large sums of money for the printing of public documents. That may be true, but the hon. gentleman must bear in mind that it will be no saving; because those people will have to get their living from the Government, and while this work may be taken from them, they will have to be given something else. They are generally institutions which are rotten to the bottom, and which are supported by Government patronage to serve the Government in the most servile manner.

I know some of them. I have myself received hints from them to give notice to the Ministers that if they did not receive proper aid from the Government they would do so and so. Under the circumstances I do not consider this would be any saving. I have had a little experience of public printing myself. At the beginning of Confederation, in my own Province, I was asked over and over again to take the Chairmanship of the Contingent Committee. At that time the Contingent Committee in Quebec was charged with the settling of the accounts for the public printing, so that I obtained a little experience, and with that experience I am in a position to say that I believe there is great doubt that this proposed system will be any saving to the country. I agree with the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island, that if it is adopted and found to be unsatisfactory, it will be very difficult to drop it and to return to the old contract system. It is true, there is one objection to the present system. We have to pay more for the printing than we ought to in consequence of the short term for which the contract is let, and the contractor has to go to a very large expense to prepare for the work which he undertakes to do. This difficulty might be obviated to a large extent by letting the contract for a longer term of years—if it were increased to ten years it might lead to a reduction in the cost. Parliament ought to take time to consider the question before passing this measure, and entering upon an expense of over a quarter of a million of dollars, to satisfy themselves that the proposed system will be an advantage to the Dominion.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I was asked by the hon. gentleman from DeSalaberry whether any estimate was made with regard to the cost of the proposed system. I may say to him that this is the estimate: under the new system the expenditure, apart from staff, wages and plant, will be probably $68,000; stationery branch, printing and binding, $220,000; making $288,000. It is estimated that there will be a saving of about fifteen per cent. upon the printing, and a saving of about five per cent. on the stationery—a total saving of about $40,000 a year. That would pay the interest upon the plant which is necessary, and something more. Of course these are approximate estimates which hon. gentlemen will be able to put their own value upon. There is one point which was made by the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island, which I think is a very important one; and that is, the great inconvenience of the renewal of the contract system. Every time a contract expires we are practically at the mercy of a few persons. Only a few would enter upon this work who have the capital and can compete for this enormous service. That has been well illustrated by the hon. gentleman from Halifax, who says that this system involves the employment of a large staff, and although he is not, perhaps, quite correct in saying that the employment of that large staff necessitates the keeping of them over a session and through the year, still it is a very large item in the expense, and it has got to be paid for, and unless the parties tendering this contract are men of large means as well as great practical experience, they cannot bid for this work. Practically the work has fallen into the hands of a few people; everyone who is acquainted with the history of Parliamentary printing knows that a monopoly of it almost has been established. I do not speak in any invidious sense of the gentlemen who are engaged in that business; they are enterprising and competent, and they have done the work; but that it is public work which is really open to general competition, is not the fact. The hon. gentleman from Halifax says that it will be necessary to keep on a very large and permanent staff. As far as the practical work is concerned, the hon. gentleman knows that there is no body of men so transitory as printers. You can get them when you want them, and you are not obliged to keep them when you do not want them. The great bulk of them are fond of change, and will only remain on short engagement. It is a very great consideration that two of the most practical countries in the world have adopted this method as being the one best calculated to secure them from the kind of jobbery which has been referred to here—to secure the Government from the necessity which presses upon public men to give out patronage in every direc-

HON. MR. POWER—The report of the Commissioners does not say so.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Although the system is a cumbrous one in the United States and has its objections, still there is a larger field there, and more people who are competent to compete for the work there than in almost any other country. Both parties in politics have adopted and adhered to the bureau system. Also that eminently practical, economical and thorough people, the Germans, have adopted it, and have found it to be the most economical in proportion to the amount of work done. I do not know that any one can demonstrate mathematically what the annual cost of such an establishment or the working of it would be; but there is evidence here in the report of a commission which examined into the question in New Zealand which bears upon the case. It was only last year that New Zealand had this matter under consideration, and the practical gentleman who was called in to give evidence recommended such a system as is proposed to be adopted here. I do not wish to weary the House by speaking upon a subject upon which practically there is scarcely anyone among us who has had large experience. The nearest approach to an authority must be the hon. gentleman from DeSalaberry, who is at the head of a newspaper establishment as the editor, and probably interested in it; but I think that hon. gentleman will not consider me as unduly pressing the matter upon the House when I ask that the Bill be now read the second time, as those who have read the debate of the other House will see that the measure was subjected to a very close examination there.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—By a partizan majority.

HON. MR. PLUMB—It was criticized by some practical men in the other House who have given very critical and not very friendly attention to the subject, as far as the Government is concerned, ever since they have been members of the House. Therefore we have the benefit of all that criticism and there will perhaps be an opportunity of looking that over. With these explanations I trust the House will allow the Bill to be read the second time.

HON. MR. READ—It may be well for this House to consider whether they are prepared to give up their privilege that they have held on certain matters connected with the stationery department. That will be a matter for our consideration in committee, but I merely throw out the hint that if we allow one inroad on our privileges another will take place next year and so on until in the end we shall be guided by Orders-in-Council or even departmental orders.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I would just ask the hon. gentleman whether the estimate he has made comprises a special building, or whether it is intended to rent a building, or how one is to be provided?

HON. MR. PLUMB—A building is to be erected at a cost of about $40,000. It will be much better to build than to rent.

The Senate divided on the amendment which was agreed to by the following vote:—

LAND GRANTS TO THE ACTIVE MILITIA FORCE IN THE NORTH-WEST.

SECOND READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (142) "An Act to make further provisions respecting grants of land to members of the militia force on active service in the North-West."

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that the Bill be read the first time.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the first time.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that the 41st rule be dispensed with, and that the said Bill be now read the second time.

HON. MR. POWER—With the understanding, of course, that if there is any objection to the principle of the Bill, it can be considered in committee.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Certainly.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that the House do now adjourn.

HON. M. POIRIER—Honorables Messieurs: Le sujet que je vais traiter est délicat. Je l'aborde avec défiance, presque avec crainte; mais il est de mon devoir de l'aborder. Il s'agit de rétablir certains faits erronément avancés à la Chambre des Communes. Voici ces faits. Durant le cours du débat sur la question Riel, le député de Jacques-Cartier (M. Girouard), parlant des Acadiens et des circonstances difficiles où ils se trouvent encore, en ce qui concerne la conservation de leur nationalité, déclara que, par exemple, le collège Saint-Louis, au Nouveau-Brunswick, avait été fermé à cause de la langue française qui y était enseignée. Le député de Gloucester (M. Burns) affirma, en réponse, à M. Girouard, que le collège n'avait nullement été fermé pour cette cause. Or, voici le dilemme qui se pose.

Ou le collège Saint-Louis a été fermé par l'Ordinaire du diocèse de Chatham, sous la juridiction duquel il se trouve, ou il a été fermé par son fondateur, M. l'abbé M. F. Richard. Si l'affirmation de M. Burns, faite en plein parlement fédéral, déclaration non contredite jusqu'ici, est basée sur la vérité, ceux qui rejettent sur M. Richard la faute de la fermeture de son collège, disent vrai, et le grand patriote acadien, après avoir vu son œuvre d'éducation démolie, devient, aux yeux d'un certain public, l'auteur de cette même démolition. Or, M. Richard a fondé et construit le collège Saint-Louis, mais ce n'est pas lui qui l'a fermé. Telle est la vérité vraie.

Il ne s'agit pas ici de sympathies, il s'agit de faits, faits excessivement graves pour les Acadiens; et, comme représentant les Acadiens au Sénat, il devient de mon devoir de rétablir les faits selon la vérité. Non pas que M. Burns ait voulu rien dire ou rien faire d'injuste contre M. l'abbé Richard, ni contre les Acadiens, envers lesquels je le crois très bien disposé; mais ne connaissant pas les faits, ne s'imaginant probablement pas qu'on eût pu fermer un collège florissant parce que la langue de Bossuet et de Saint Vincent-de-Paul y était enseignée, il a dit ce qu'il croyait raisonnable, il a exprimé les sentiments de son cœur. Au reste, il ne s'est pas dit autorisé par qui que ce soit à faire la déclaration qu'il a faite.

J'étais présent à la séance de distribution des prix où se décida du sort du collège Saint-Louis. C'était en juillet 1882. Sa Grandeur, le Premier Pasteur du diocèse de Chatham, était présente, ainsi qu'une grande partie des curés du diocèse, les paroissiens de Saint-Louis et un certain nombre d'étrangers. Avant la séance, de vagues rumeurs circulaient que le collège allait être fermé. Le directeur, M. l'abbé E. Biron, prêtre venu de France pour consacrer sa vie, ses biens de famille et les offrandes de ses amis de Paris à l'éducation chrétienne et française des pauvres Acadiens, me fit demander à sa chambre. Il semblait consterné. J'appris de lui que les sombres rumeurs entendues n'étaient pas sans fondement; qu'à lui-même l'Autorité avait laissé comprendre qu'il lui fallait abandonner son cher collège. Pour quelles raisons? il n'en savait rien. Personne n'en savait rien positivement. Mais il espérait que lui parti, puisqu'il était l'obstacle, l'institution trouverait grâce, ne serait pas condamnée. Néanmoins, sous l'empire de ces lugubres pressentiments, il fit venir les six élèves appartenant à la classe la plus avancée, me les présenta tous—il y en avait de Saint-Louis même, d'autres, du Madawaska et un de la Baie Sainte-Marie, à la Nouvelle-Ecosse. "C'est pour que vous vous connaissiez les uns les autres, nous dit-il. Quant à moi, je m'en vais. S'il faut ainsi que le troupeau soit dispersé, souvenez-vous toujours que vous êtes catholiques et Français, et ne vous perdez jamais de vue. Vous êtes jeunes. Votre tour de travailler à l'œuvre nationale viendra ; et alors vous aiderez à M. Richard à reprendre l'œuvre interrompue." Sa voix était pleine de larmes, mais il ne pleurait pas. C'était nous qui pleurions !

La séance eut lieu. Après la distribution des prix, Sa Grandeur se leva, et après avoir touché quelques autres questions, Elle manifesta longuement et en termes formels sa désapprobation de voir que l'enseignement du français occupait une si large place dans le programme des études du collège.

M. Richard, prenant la parole à son tour, voulut justifier le cours d'études donné dans son collège. Il déclara qu'il éprouvait une vive douleur d'avoir encouru le déplaisir de son évêque, mais qu'il l'avait fait sans intention et sans le savoir ; que c'était la première fois que Sa Grandeur lui manifestait son mécontentement sur ce sujet-là ; que pour lui, Acadien-français et fils d'ancêtres Acadiens-français, il n'avait pas cru mal faire en enseignant à ses compatriotes la langue de leurs pères. Répondant aux reproches que Sa Grandeur venait de lui faire, de ce que un élève irlandais avait déclamé, avec une bonne prononciation du français, une poésie française, il lui demanda de ne pas condamner son collège, parce que certains élèves y avaient fait rapidement de grands progrès dans la langue française. Comme compensation, il nomma cinq ou six élèves acadiens qui venaient de lire et déclamer en anglais, avec une parfaite prononciation de la langue de Shakespeare. Il prouva que les deux langues, anglaise et française, y étaient enseignées avec soin, et que toutes les nationalités y étaient sur un pied de parfaite égalité.

Sa Grandeur se leva de nouveau, sous l'empire d'une grande excitation visible, et termina ses remarques en répétant que le français était trop enseigné au collège Saint-Louis, et que à moins qu'il y eut un changement, il retirerait et retirait, en effet, son patronage du collège.

Ce qui se passa, pendant les vacances scolaires, entre Sa Grandeur et M. Richard, je l'ignore. Je sais seulement que M. l'abbé E. Biron, directeur du collège, dût reprendre le chemin de la France.

S'appuyant sur je ne sais quelle autorisation et quelles promesses de son évêque—mais promesses et autorisation il y eut—M. Richard ouvrit son collège, comme d'habitude, dans l'automne de la même année, à l'expiration des vacances. Mais Sa Grandeur ne lui donna finalement pas de directeur. Il dût, en conséquence, renvoyer les élèves, congédier les professeurs, et fermer les portes du collège, qui n'ont pas été ouvertes depuis.

Tels sont les faits généraux et publics. Je ne les relate pas pour accuser, ni pour blâmer qui que ce soit. Sa Grandeur a ses secrets que j'ignore, et ses raisons que je veux respecter. Je ne fais simplement que reproduire sur une plus grande scène, et répéter devant un public plus nombreux, ce qui a été dit et ce qui a été fait publiquement, en juin 1882, à Saint-Louis.

Si la chose est juste en elle-même et véridiquement racontée, personne ne pourra trouver à redire à ce que je la relate ici. Quand le bon Dieu envoie un fléau, ou fait tomber son tonnerre, ce n'est pas lui manquer de respect ni de soumission que de raconter le fait.

Le collège Saint-Louis avait été fondé en 1871 par M. l'abbé Richard, enfant de Saint-Louis, qui, pour faire ses études, avait été contraint d'aller dans une province étrangère, l'Île du Prince Edouard, attendu qu'il n'y avait alors aucun collège catholique au Nouveau-Brunswick. Le collège Saint-Joseph de Memramcook ne fut ouvert qu'à l'automne de l'année 1864. Voyant le désavantage où se trouvait la population catholique du Nouveau-Brunswick en ce qui concerne l'éducation, il jeta les fondations de son collège, avec l'autorisation de son évêque, mais sans aucun aide matériel de sa part. Il avait été nommé, quelques années auparavant, curé de Saint-Louis ; et c'est avec les revenus de sa cure, ses ressources de famille et l'aide des amis de l'éducation chrétienne et française qu'il entretenait son collège, étant responsable à son évêque de la bonne gestion de son institution. Le collège ne recevait non plus aucune allocation du gouvernement, ce qui le soustrayait à l'inspection du bureau des écoles aussi bien qu'à l'ingérence municipale laïque. La paroisse étant prospère et pleine de zèle, le collège était en voie de devenir prospère; et ce qui prouve bien qu'il était en moyen de se soutenir matériellement et pécuniairement, c'est que deux ans après sa fermeture, Sa Grandeur ayant fait appel d'argent à son diocèse, la paroisse française de Saint-Louis seule lui envoya $700 à $800. J'y étais encore. Ce sont toujours des faits publics que je raconte. Quant au cours d'études donné, c'était à peu près celui des collèges du Bas-Canada, cours de français et d'anglais—plus d'anglais qu'il ne s'en enseigne dans le Bas-Canada—et un cours classique latin que l'on venait d'inaugurer. M. Richard était supérieur et M. Biron directeur de l'institution. Saint-Louis est une paroisse toute française, située dans un comté aux deux tiers français.

Ainsi, au point de vue matériel, le collège n'était aucune charge pour l'évêché, n'imposait aucun sacrifice à l'évêché, et ne diminuait en rien ses revenus, même ceux tirés de la paroisse de Saint-Louis. Au point de vue disciplinaire, il en relevait, n'ayant pas sa raison d'exister ou de continuer son existence, sans l'autorisation de l'évêque. Nous venons de voir comment il fut fermé, et comment il lui fut impossible de continuer, même avec le nombre ordinaire d'élèves à la rentrée des classes, en l'automne 1882. M. Richard, ses paroissiens, les amis de l'éducation, et tous les Acadiens en eurent l'âme brisée de douleur. Mais M. Richard et les siens se sont tous soumis, dans le silence morne du respect. Si j'élève la voix dans cette honorable enceinte, messieurs, c'est qu'on vient en plein parlement fédéral, de déclarer—ou ce qui revient au même—que c'est M. Richard qui a détruit l'œuvre de sa vie, le rêve ardent de son âme patriotique et chrétienne. Je devais au fondateur du collège Saint-Louis, à mes compatriotes de l'Acadie et à la vérité, de rétablir les faits.

Cette question incidente a pour les Français des Provinces Maritimes une portée plus générale. Elle touche à la vitalité, à l'existence de toute la race acadienne:

Au nombre des reproches qu'on nous fait, et que l'Histoire, cette grande menteuse, s'arrange pour nous faire bientôt, est le reproche, l'injure, que les Acadiens oublient leur langue française, abandonnent leurs traditions du passé, renient, en un mot, leur nationalité sainte. Cela est, jusqu'à un certain point, vrai pour quelques endroits de la Nouvelle-Ecosse et de l'Île du Prince-Edouard. Cela deviendra vrai au Nouveau-Brunswick, si l'on réussit à supprimer les maisons d'éducation française. C'est à cause de l'absence ou de la suppression de l'éducation française, que mes compatriotes de la Nouvelle-Ecosse sont aujourd'hui dans une position inférieure à celle qu'ils auraient, s'ils avaient pu s'instruire dans leur langue. Pour qu'un Français apprenne bien l'anglais, il faut qu'il commence par l'étude de sa langue maternelle; autrement, l'aridité abstraite d'une grammaire étrangère le fatigue vite et l'éloigne bientôt de toute étude. Et puis le découragement, quelquefois la honte de se voir foulé aux pieds et méprisé, advenant, le sentiment national décroît. C'est ce qui est arrivé à la Nouvelle-Ecosse, où des faits semblables à ceux de Saint-Louis, et peut-être plus graves encore, se sont passés depuis un demi-siècle. La Nouvelle-Ecosse a eu son abbé Richard dans la personne de M. l'abbé Girroir, l'apôtre des Acadiens dans sa terre natale. M. Girroir est mort, découragé, il y a trois ans, dans sa cure de Havre-à-Boucher, à la Nouvelle-Ecosse. Sa vie, son énergie, son immense charité, se sont épuisées, mais en vain, à fonder des institutions d'éducation française. Pourquoi n'a-t-il pas réussi? L'Histoire va dire, sans doute, que son insuccès est dû à l'apathie, etc., des Acadiens? Ecoutez ce que vient de me raconter un de mes honorables collègues, ici présent, le représentant du district de Repentigny (l'honorable M. Armand). On m'avait cent fois dit ces choses, ou des choses semblables, à la Baie de Sainte-Marie, au Cap-Breton, et même chez moi, au Nouveau-Brunswick. Je n'avais jamais osé y croire, tant la chose me paraissait grave, et, naïf que j'étais, invraisemblable.

“ Nous nous trouvions réunis, en 1866, me dit l'honorable M. Armand, l'honorable sénateur du district de Lanaudière, (M.

Bellerose,) feu l'honorable M. Bureau et moi, à l'archevêché d'Halifax, en compagnie des prêtres du diocèse venus pour leur retraite. Nous étions à Halifax, nous, en qualité de délégués de l'Union des Canadas. Sa Grandeur Monseigneur Connolly, (décédé en 1876,) a dit à ses prêtres, en notre présence, qu'il ne voulait pas de deux langues dans son archidiocèse, que le français était inutile, était de trop ; qu'il fallait supprimer partout l'enseignement du français ; et que, pour sa part, il désirait ne plus entendre les accents de cette langue à sa prochaine tournée épiscopale."

Sans en dire davantage,—je ne le pourrais sans manquer au respect dû à un haut dignitaire de l'Eglise, tant je sens de mouvements étranges s'agiter dans mon âme,—ceci explique suffisamment pourquoi l'œuvre du saint, du zélé apôtre acadien, M. Girroir, a échoué. L'échec du collège Saint-Louis n'a été que la répétition d'un même drame, amenée par les mêmes causes.

Qu'on me comprenne bien. Je n'empêcherai pas de mauvais motifs à Sa Grandeur Mgr Connolly. Il devait croire la suppression du français chose bonne et désirable, puisqu'il la recommandait et l'effectuait jusqu'à un point considérable. Peut-être assimilait-il la position des Acadiens, fondateurs, évangélistes et défricheurs de la Nouvelle-Ecosse, puis martyrs pour leur foi et leur nationalité, en 1755, et ayant certains droits nationaux concédés par les traités, à celle des races gaéliques—noble races, dont j'apprécie les hautes qualités et les belles vertus—venues plus tard.

Quoiqu'il en soit, l'intensité de cette tradition qui voulait l'abolition du français dans la Nouvelle-Ecosse, décroît, diminue chez les hautes autorités ecclésiastiques ; et c'est surtout à l'illustre prélat que Sa Sainteté Léon XIII a choisi tout particulièrement pour présider à l'Eglise des Provinces Maritimes, que nous le devons. L'archevêque actuel d'Halifax, dont la grande érudition et l'esprit de justice se font justement remarquer, n'a mis, jusqu'ici, aucune entrave au développement de l'éducation française et nationale des Acadiens.

Que Dieu l'en récompense ! Il reste le passé à réparer. Espérons qu'il n'est pas absolument irréparable. Mais c'est afin que, en autant qu'il est en mon pouvoir d'y remédier, les choses du passé ne se renouvellent plus, qu'à la suite de la discussion qui s'est faite à la Chambre des Communes sur ce sujet, j'ai cru de mon devoir de rétablir les faits selon que je les connais de visu et auditu. L'Histoire enregistre les effets : il est utile de connaître les causes. Les Acadiens, qui ont été cédés à l'Angleterre en 1713, puis écrasés et dispersés en 1755, à cause de leur attachement, légitime—puisqu'il est reconnu et accepté dans le traité de cession—à leur foi et à leur nationalité française, demeurent toujours dans les mêmes sentiments d'amour pour leurs traditions et leur langue nationales. Ce qui ne les empêche pas d'être au nombre des plus loyaux sujets de Sa Majesté britannique. Nul n'a le droit de les empêcher d'être ce qu'ils sont, ni de leur ravir ce qu'ils ont, que cela soit écrit sur des parchemins ou dans leur cœur. Les conditions de la lutte qu'ils font pour maintenir leur place ou la conquérir dans la société, sont toutes à leur désavantage : ils sont inférieurs par le nombre, moins influents auprès des gouvernants, privés des ressources matérielles dont leurs concitoyens sont amplement pourvus. Si vous leur ôtez l'éducation, ce grand levier d'Archimède, comment voulez-vous qu'ils soutiennent la concurrence ?

Que d'autres, pour arriver plus vite ou monter plus haut, abandonnent les traditions glorieuses de leurs pères, comme un soldat jette ses armes pour gagner du terrain dans la déroute, c'est leur affaire. Nous, Acadiens, nous ne voulons pas nous séparer de ce qui a causé nos malheurs et fait notre gloire dans le passé, notre foi, notre langue, nos traditions et notre nationalité. Nous atteindrons la destinée que Dieu nous réserve, ou bien nous tomberons en route, couverts de toute notre armure.

Il nous reste un collège national, un seul, le collège Saint-Joseph de Memramcook, au Nouveau-Brunswick. Ce que cette institution, mon alma mater aimée, a fait de bien parmi toutes les nationalités dont se composent les Provinces Maritimes, mais surtout pour la population acadienne, est incalculable. Ce collège est un gage, un garant du succès définitif de nos efforts. Aussi, en attendant qu'il nous soit permis de rouvrir ceux qui ont été fermés, ou d'en fonder de nouveaux, car le champ de la moisson est vaste, l'espoir ne cessera point de luire au fond de nos âmes.

Avant de terminer, honorables messieurs, je tiens à déclarer que je suis seul responsable des remarques que je viens de faire, n'ayant reçu le mot d'ordre, ni l'inspiration de personne. Si je me suis trompé, si j'ai fait erreur de jugement, et si quelqu'un doit souffrir pour les faits énoncés, que ce soit moi seul, puisque je suis le seul coupable.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE (in French)—I congratulate the hon. gentleman on his courage and patriotism in bringing this matter before the House, as he was justified in doing. Since there has been a discussion on the subject, and contradictory statements have been made elsewhere, it is only right, he being a representative of the Acadian people himself, that he should put matters right, though I regret that such a question should have been raised in Parliament with respect to the clergy of that place. We have been accustomed to those difficulties about our nationality, not only in New Brunswick but in other parts of Canada. In the Senate for years past the minority have had cause of complaint of the way their rights and privileges have been infringed upon. We would succeed in securing a recognition of our rights if we were only united throughout the whole Dominion. Being a people numbering 1,500,000 we might maintain our ground as our forefathers did when they were only 60,000 strong against all the power of Great Britain.

HON. MR. POWER—I should like to say one or two words on this matter. The hon. gentleman has perhaps done right in bringing the matter up. With the little difficulty which he says occurred in New Brunswick I have nothing to do. But he has made some remarks about the Province of Nova Scotia which call for some notice from me. The hon. gentleman said that the Acadians in the Province of Nova Scotia occupied a position inferior to that which they occupied in other provinces.

HON. MR. POIRIER—In point of education.

HON. MR. POWER—He attributes that to the fact that they had gradually ceased to speak their own language.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—We were speaking of the question of education.

HON. MR. POWER—I was referring to what the hon. gentleman from Kent said. I understood him to say that, because education was not imparted in French in the Province of Nova Scotia, unfortunately Acadians there did not occupy the position to which they were entitled. I think it would be a misfortune and discredit to the Province of Nova Scotia, and to the people of Acadian descent in that province, if that impression should go abroad. I say that the facts are just the other way. I do not think there is any Province in the Dominion in which the people of French origin stand better than they do in Nova Scotia. From time immemorial I was going to say, but certainly almost from the initiation of responsible government in Nova Scotia, the Acadian element has been represented in the House of Assembly and the Legislative Council, and for some time has been represented in the Executive of the Province. The Acadians are not looked upon as being in any way inferior to their English speaking neighbors—to their neighbors of different origin—and they are just as well off and comfortable as their neighbors are; and I have never heard that the Acadians of Nova Scotia have made any complaint themselves that they were not fairly and properly treated. I do not think it is fair that the hon. gentleman, who, from his position here, may possibly claim to be entitled, to a certain extent, to speak for the Acadians of the lower provinces, should make a speech calculated to create the impression that his fellow-countrymen in Nova Scotia were dissatisfied or occupied a position inferior to that which they actually do hold. It is true that in Nova Scotia the strongly marked distinction between the two races has not been kept up as in other Provinces. I think that fact is to the credit of Nova Scotia. The people of French origin in Nova Scotia mix up with their English-speaking neighbours. As a rule, they learn and speak the English language and they are Nova Scotians rather than French or Acadians. They are just in the same position as the Highland population in Nova Scotia and Cape Breton. The Highland population in our Province is about as numerous, or more so, than the French. These people spoke Gaelic, and do so still; but they do not ask to have the Gaelic taught in their schools; they do not wish to be treated as a separate class or section of the community; and I think that the French people in Nova Scotia show wisdom in following their example. But the hon. gentleman was incorrect as to the facts. I happen to know this—a thing which is hardly done in any of the other of the provinces—the school books which are authorized by the Department of Public Instruction in Nova Scotia, those which are to be used in the French districts, are printed in both languages. Take up the Maritime Reader or the Royal Reader used in the district of Claire, for instance, where the population of French origin is large, and you will find that one side is in English and the other is the same thing in French. I regret to be obliged to interfere in this matter; but I did not think it was fair to the province from which I come to let the hon. gentleman's statement go abroad unquestioned, as it was calculated to create a wrong impression.

The motion was agreed to, and the House adjourned at 5:30 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Monday, May 31st, 1886.

THE SPEAKER took the Chair at three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

RAILWAY WHARF AT PORT MOODY.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. MCINNES (B.C.) inquired:

Is it the intention of the Government to build, this summer, the Iron Railway Wharf at Port Moody, B.C., as promised last Session?

He said:—I might say, before the hon.

HON. MR. POWER.

leader of the Government makes his reply, that last February tenders were invited for the iron piles, caps and other material necessary for the construction of the Port Moody Railway wharf, and early in May a year ago the contract was let to an English firm, the name of which I do not at present remember. Those piles and all the other iron material necessary for the wharf were to be delivered last September at Port Moody and the wharf built during the fall or early winter of 1886. For some reason which I am not prepared to give, those iron piles did not arrive in British Columbia until the latter part of last month, and I understand now, from a very reliable source, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are endeavoring to get the Government to hand over those iron piles to them for the purpose of building wharves out of them down at English Bay, or Vancouver. I desire now to know whether the Government are going to hand over this material, contrary to the promises and pledges made to the people of British Columbia, and especially of Port Moody, to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or going to build the wharf at Port Moody as promised.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I am instructed to say, in reply to this question as to whether it is the intention of the Government to build, this summer, the iron railway wharf at Port Moody, B.C., that they do intend to build such wharf at Port Moody this season.

ST. SULPICE CHANNEL.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. PAQUET inquired

Est-il à la connaissance du gouvernement que le chenal de St. Sulpice, dans le fleuve St. Laurent, est dans un état qui requiert son attention immédiate en vue du danger d'accidents à peu près certains auxquels il expose la navigation?

HON. MR. PLUMB—In reply to the hon. gentleman's inquiry I am instructed to say that this matter rests entirely with the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal, under whose control the channel is. There is no correspondence on the subject in the Department.

SUBSIDIES TO QUEBEC RAILWAYS.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. PAQUET inquired

Si les octrois accordés aux différents chemins de fer de la province de Québec sont faits sous condition ; si les intéressés peuvent avec ces octrois faire avancer ces travaux sans le secours de municipalités ou autre secours, leur en promettant indirectement l'achèvement par autre octrois provenant de même source plus tard ?

HON. MR. PLUMB—In reply to the hon. gentleman's inquiry I am instructed to say that these subsidies to which he refers are granted conditionally upon the showing of the company to the Government that they can provide sufficient means to give a reasonable probability that the road in question will be completed, and that there is no promise directly or indirectly for further subsidy.

THE SITTINGS OF THE HOUSE.

MOTION.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved

That on this day, Monday, the 31st instant, and every sitting day thereafter during this Session, there be two distinct sittings of the House, one from three to six o'clock p.m., unless the House be sooner adjourned, and another at half-past seven o'clock p.m.

HON. MR. POWER—It is not usual to make this motion until very near the close of the Session. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will be good enough to tell us at what time he expects Parliament will be prorogued.

HON. MR. PLUMB—It is intended to press the business as rapidly as possible, and it is impossible to specify the time when the House will be prorogued. It is the desire of the Government and, I presume, of the House that the business shall be expedited as fast as possible.

HON. MR. POWER—I presume the hon. gentleman has no objection to say whether the Government expect to prorogue this week?

HON. MR. PLUMB—It is impossible for me to give the hon. gentleman a more definite answer than I have given, as I have no instructions on the subject.

HON. MR. POWER—If there is no reasonable expectation of proroguing this week I do not think the Government should ask for such power as this. It is usual to take this power only within one or two days before prorogation, and it will be very awkward if the House is to be in session for a week longer to have this rule in operation all that time.

HON. MR. PLUMB—There is nothing in the motion which is different from the ordinary practice of the House.

HON. MR. SCOTT—Say Wednesday.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The Government will endeavor if possible to have prorogation take place on Wednesday evening; but I am not to be understood as speaking with authority.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERPRETATION OF THE 25th RULE.

THE SPEAKER — Before proceeding to the orders of the day I desire to place before the House a more formal expression of my opinion in regard to the interpretation of the 25th Rule of the Senate, than I had an opportunity of doing on Thursday last, as the construction to be applied to that Rule may at any moment have an important bearing on our debates.

The language of the Rule in question is as follows :—

"25. Any Senator called to order shall sit down, and shall not proceed without leave of the Senate."

I stated on the occasion referred to, that the words "leave of the Senate" in this rule meant the assent of the whole Senate, and are simply the parliamentary phraseology for the unanimous consent of the House. I stated further that, according to my interpretation of the rule, such leave could not be obtained, if it were opposed by even one dissenting voice.

The hon. Senator from Alberta, (Mr. Howlan) took exception to the construction I then placed upon the rule, and declared it to be his opinion, that "the leave of the Senate," mentioned therein, meant the leave—not of the whole House, but of a majority of the House. Further on, when I attempted, by a reference to authorities, to support my opinion, the hon. gentleman very emphatically told the House, that these authorities did not apply to the point in controversy. He said that while he admitted that the words "leave of the House" meant the unanimous consent of the House when applied to the withdrawal of Bills, or Motions, or to proceedings of a similar nature in connection with legislation or the general business of the House, they had that meaning only when applied to such occasions and proceedings. He contended that such an interpretation could not be put upon these words in the 25th rule of the Senate, because they could not properly be so construed in relation to the personal rights and privileges of hon. members—especially the freedom of debate—a subject which the rule was, under certain circumstances, intended to regulate.

There is no difference of opinion anywhere, I presume, as to the meaning of the words "leave of the House," when uttered in relation to questions regarding bills, motions or other like business proceedings requiring unanimous consent. On all such occasions it is not disputed that these words mean the consent of every member of the House.

I believe it will not be difficult to show on clear and conclusive authority that the words in question, whenever and wherever they are used in a parliamentary sense, mean unanimous consent; as well when they relate to the rights and privileges of hon. members, as when they are used in connexion with occasions and proceedings of any other description. The authority I intend to cite is completely in point in the present inquiry. It is a case in which the meaning of these very words in a rule of the House of Commons was authoritatively declared; a rule dealing with the identical subject that the 25th rule of the Senate relates to, viz: the regulation of the debates of the House.

On the introduction of the new rules of procedure in the Imperial House of Commons, in 1882, it was considered by the Government that the right of members to move the adjournment of the House, was too frequently abused, and often resulted in long and irrelevant debate, causing great loss of valuable time. It has frequently been the unpleasant duty of the Speaker to rebuke members for the abuse of this highly prized privilege of debate; for among all the rules and precedents which secure untrammelled freedom of speech in legislative bodies guided by British principles and precedents, perhaps none is more conducive to that end than the right I have just mentioned. However, the Government thought it was necessary to put some check upon its improper use, and accordingly Mr. Gladstone submitted to the House the following as the 2nd rule of the new rules of procedure:

"That no motion for the adjournment of the House shall be made before the Orders of the Day, or notices of motions have been entered upon, except by leave of the House; the granting of such leave, if disputed, being determined or question put forthwith; but no division shall be taken unless demanded by forty members rising in their places, nor until after the questions on the notice paper have been disposed of."—(Hans. 274, p. 1329.)

No one can, I think, deny that the subject of this rule is the same as that involved in the 25th rule of the Senate. These rules are on all fours, as far as the point I am considering is concerned. They both are intended to restrain or regulate the privileges of debate.

Now, what is the meaning of the words in the English rule, "the leave of the House"? Do they mean a majority of the House, or do they imply the unanimous consent of the House? And when the question of granting leave is put from the chair, as prescribed by the rule, does it require a unanimous vote to secure leave, or is a majority of the House sufficient for that purpose?

Mr. Speaker Brand who occupied the Chair of the House of Commons at the period alluded to, and who is well known as a Parliamentarian of the highest repute, decided, upon the specific request of Lord Randolph Churchill for an authoritative decision on these points, (1st), that leave of the House in the said Rule meant the unanimous consent of the House, and (2nd), that upon question being put from the Chair, one dissenting vote would prevent leave being granted.

Passing over several other members who referred to these points in the course of this discussion on the 2nd rule, I will only quote briefly from Lord Randolph Churchill, who very squarely placed the whole subject before the Chair, when he said :—

“It would be useful in connection with the amendment (an amendment had been previously moved to the Rule) if they could have an authoritative declaration from the Chair of what was meant by ‘leave of the House.’ Did it mean a unanimous leave, or the leave of a majority?”

“Mr. Speaker: I may say in answer to the noble lord’s question, that the understanding with reference to ‘the leave of the House,’ is, that it involves unanimity on the part of the House. (Lord Randolph Churchill: Unanimity.) Whenever the question is put—‘Is it your pleasure that so-and-so be done?’—if there is a single dissentient voice, the leave of the House is not given.”

I may here direct attention to the fact that the English rule enabled the Speaker to give his decision, not only on the meaning of the words “leave of the House,” in the resolution, but also his opinion of the necessity of unanimity, when, if such leave is disputed, a question is put from the Chair—one hostile vote being sufficient to frustrate the motion.

If the words “the granting of such leave, etc.,” contained in Mr. Gladstone’s rule, were added to the 25th rule of the Senate, thus altering it to read as follows: “Any Senator called to order shall sit down and shall not proceed without leave of the Senate”—the granting of such leave, if disputed, being determined upon question put forthwith—it would certainly be more likely to lead hon. members to place the construction on it, which it has received from the hon. Senator from Alberton; but even with that addition, according to the ruling of Mr. Speaker Brand, it would still be capable of no other construction, than that which I gave it when I first brought the subject before the House.

I therefore respectfully inform the House that whenever I shall be called upon to construe the 25th rule of the Senate, I shall feel it my duty to do so conformably to the decision of the high authority I have just quoted. Whether the operation of the rule proves satisfactory to the Senate or otherwise, cannot influence me in placing upon it what I consider to be its proper construction. If the rule should prove to be unsatisfactory to hon. senators, under this construction, I can only add, that the House has the power, whenever it is thought necessary, to alter or modify any of its rules.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Is it permitted to any member of the House to offer any observations with regard to the statement of the Speaker.

HON. MEMBERS—No, no.

HON. MR. PLUMB—With the leave of the House.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Does the House give permission to make one or two observations.

HON. MR. POWER—Go on.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I think the House will agree with me that the first consideration on the floor of a Colonial Parliament or the Parliament of Great Britain is freedom of debate, in conformity with the rules of Parliament. The rules of Parliament have been framed of course to maintain order; but I may state that the object of Parliament is to stop wrong doing and to endeavor to prevent wrong legislation. I mistake greatly the rules of Parliament if they are to be used to prevent the representatives of the people from correcting wrong doing. Now, with regard to the moving the adjournment of the House, all the authorities agree that such a privilege is granted to enable members who find that under any special notice or any special Bill they cannot touch certain subjects which are of vital moment to check acts of maladministration. I think the House will agree with me that this privilege granted to members of Parliament is a very wise one. I grant that it may be abused; we know that it has often been abused by men to make personal attacks upon the Government and private members.

HON. MR. POWER—Hear, hear.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—But we must distinguish, hon. gentlemen, between those who come here in a patriotic spirit to do their duty fearlessly, and when they rise to adjourn the House in order to obtain a hearing upon certain subjects.

THE SPEAKER—I think the hon. gentleman must have misunderstood the paper I read. If he will take the trouble to peruse it he will see that it does not attempt to interfere with the right of moving the adjournment of the House, I was merely alluding to the resolution proposed in the British House of Commons as illustrating my argument.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I do not dissent at all from the views expressed by the learned Speaker of the House. I am in perfect accord with his views; but I take this opportunity of making an explanation because I have been frequently interrupted when I have been striving to accomplish better government. We know that Colonial Parliaments are not like the Parliament of Great Britain, not like the House of Lords or the House of Commons of Great Britain where a high sense of honor always prevails. What did Sir Robert Torrens say with regard to this? He observed with regard to South Australia, that there was no artifice that his political opponents would not have recourse to; no departure from principle that they would not adopt; and we cannot safely apply to a Colonial Parliament the rules which apply to the Parliament of England; you cannot apply such rules to the Parliament of Australia or of the Dominion. The political history of this country presents a lamentable picture to the people who are distinguished for their industry and their honor in all their relations of life.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I rise to a question of order. If the House wishes to hear the discussion I have no desire to stop it; but I would remind the House that we have a good deal of business before us; the discussion is irrelevant, and no motion is before the Chair.

HON. MR. SCOTT—I might be permitted to make one observation. I do not propose to go into the question of the rights of a popular assembly, or the Senate, to discuss these questions. It is simply in reference to the paper which the Speaker has laid upon the table and whether we think it expedient in the future or not to make such an alteration as some hon. gentleman indicated in our rules for the future. It is at least gratifying that the off hand opinion given by the Speaker on the spur of the moment is so fully sustained by the authorities.

HON. MEMBERS—Hear, hear.

HON. MR. SCOTT—I think the authorities are undoubted, and until our rule is changed by the Senate itself, no other interpretation can be put upon that rule.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—There is no hon. gentleman who will bow with more respect to the decision of the Chair than myself; no one who would go further to preserve the privileges of a member of this House than myself; and when I took occasion to make that statement the other day I made it believing I was correct, and I have not altered my opinion on it yet. It will be remembered that the British North America Act states that the Senate shall have all privileges of the House of Commons of England. The next thing we find in our rules is that, where we have no rules to the contrary, the rules of the House of Lords shall be our rules. Then we have also the British rule that has just been read by the Speaker. If the rules of the House of Lords govern us, no decision of Mr. Speaker or the Speaker of the House of Commons can have any weight with us. The hon. gentleman takes exception to that. Let me put this question. I may be wrong; but if I am wrong I think I may fairly quote the views and opinions put forward by Sir Randolph Churchill, the distinguished member of the House of Commons. He seems to have had some misgivings on that particular point. The matter, practically worked, would be this: if the hon. gentleman who at the present time occupies the distinguished position of the leader of this House should, in the course of this debate, make use of words to which my hon. friend sitting alongside of me might take exception, then the matter would have to go to the Speaker; and if the Speaker, for the time being, happened to rule in favor of this hon. gentleman, look at the result. If for instance I, for mischief, rose and called the hon. gentleman to order, he would have to sit down until the point was settled, and if the Speaker viewed the matter through the same spectacles as I saw it, the hon. gentleman would be stopped from speaking until he obtained the consent of the House. In my judgment, that would be robbing a member of parliament of his powers, authorities and privileges. At the present it is competent for me to move a standing order, without the consent of the House, without any power from the House, on account of my individual position and prerogative as a member of the Senate. I might find some particular gentleman who is objectionable to me sitting in the gallery, or on the benches below the bar, and if I am mischievous enough to act in accordance with my personal feelings I may move in my place in Parliament that strangers withdraw and all strangers have to go out.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER.

THE SPEAKER—On a vote of the House.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—No; I have the privilege of moving in my place in Parliament that strangers withdraw.

THE SPEAKER—But you have to get the consent of the House.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Precisely so, but I get the majority of the House on the use of my privilege. What is the privilege of a member of Parliament? He must have privileges of some kind. Turn to May on Parliament, page 121, where we find this laid down with regard to the House of Lords :—

“It shall be lawful for the Lords to debate together in this present Parliament, and in every other for time to come, in the king’s absence, concerning the condition of the kingdom and the remedies necessary for it; and in like manner it shall be lawful for the Commons, on their part, to debate together concerning the said condition and remedies; provided always that neither the Lords on their part nor the Commons on their part, do make any report to our lord the king of any grant granted by the Commons, and agreed to by the Lords, nor of the communications of the said grant, before the said Lords and Commons are of one accord and agreement in the said matter.”

But, notwithstanding the repeated recognition of this privilege, the Crown and the Commons were not always agreed upon its limits. I reply to the usual petition of the Speaker, Sir Edward Coke, in 1593, the lord keeper, said, “Liberty of speech is granted you, but you must know what privilege you have: not to speak every one what he listeth, or what cometh in his brain to utter; but your privilege is ‘aye’ or ‘no.’”

Then at page 390 you will find :

“In the enforcement of all these rules for maintaining order, the Speaker of the House of Lords has no more authority than any other peer, except in so far as his own personal weight, and the dignity of his office, may give effect to his opinions, and secure the concurrence of the House. The result of his imperfect powers is, that a peer who is disorderly is called to order by another peer, perhaps of an opposite party; and that an irregular argument is liable to ensue, in which each speaker imputes disorder to the last, and recrimination takes the place of orderly debate. There is no impartial authority to whom an appeal can be made, and the debate upon a question of order generally ends with satisfaction to neither party, and without any decision upon the matter to which exception had been taken.”

HON. MR. SCOTT—Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him one question. If it is not intended to appeal from the Speaker’s decision, it would be highly improper that we should argue it except with a view of taking the sense of the House as to the wisdom of the ruling and whether the Speaker is justified by the authorities in his ruling. I do not think it would be quite fair to argue the case at this period of the session unless with a view to take the sense of the House.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—The majority of the House can always establish a rule, and unless the hon. gentleman is prepared to submit an amendment himself he should not interrupt me in my speech until he sees what I am going to do.

HON. MR. SCOTT—Is it seemly to have a debate of this kind unless it is with a view of getting the opinion of the Senate on the ruling of the Speaker?

HON. MR. HOWLAN—The majority of the Senate would not alter a rule of the Parliament unless they did it in a proper way. His Honor the Speaker has thought proper to carefully look up the authorities on this subject and submit a ruling ; but holding the views I do on this question, as a member of the Senate I have a right to express them. I do not wish to enforce my opinion, but I wish to state my views on the matter, and as the Speaker has very properly taken occasion to put his ruling in writing, I may at some future time submit my view of it to the House. I may say, with all due respect to His Honor the Speaker, and with all due respect to the House, I would not submit my own opinion to that of the House until I am thoroughly and tully satisfied that I am wrong.

THE PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT.

REPORTS OF THE COMMITTEE ADOPTED.

HON. MR. READ moved the adoption of the seventh, eighth, ninth and tenth reports of the Joint Committee on the Printing of Parliament.

The motions were agreed to and the reports were adopted without debate.

THE LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ADOPTED.

HON. MR. ALLAN moved the adoption of the report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Library of Parliament. He said: This report has been before the House in the minutes for the last week or two, and therefore I presume that hon. gentlemen are thoroughly acquainted with its contents. Since the last postponement, in reference to the recommendation for an additional grant to Mr. Todd, as to his full salary, I may say that the amount recommended has been placed in the estimates, so that I need only ask the House to concur in the report.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I understand this to be the adoption of the report of the Joint Committee on the Library of Parliament. I am going to move, in regard to this report, an amendment which I endeavored to-day to induce the Committee on the Library of Parliament to adopt:

That the said Report be not now adopted, but that it be referred back to the said Committee, with a recommendation to add the following clause:—

That in consideration of the valuable services rendered to Canada by the late Mr. Todd, Librarian of Parliament, as a distinguished authority upon all questions of constitutional law, and as an authority on works upon that subject, a portrait of him be ordered, at a cost not to exceed two hundred dollars, to be placed within the precincts of the Dominion House of Parliament.

I have a number of precedents to place before the House in regard to this motion. Mr. Hume was known to be a very useful member of the House of Commons, and after he died, the House ordered, on account of the distinguished services that he had rendered to Parliament, that some memorial should be erected to his memory. When we look at the value of a gentleman, such as Mr. Todd was, to the country—what an advantage he was to every member of Parliament whenever questions of constitutional law came up—we cannot refuse this slight token of regard to his memory. His value could not be estimated, and while he lived, the salary that was paid him was not adequate to the services he rendered to Parliament. He was a man beloved by all who knew him. His work upon constitutional law, and other works of a kindred character establish his name as adding very much to our reputation as a Dominion. Then how can Parliament refuse for a moment to appropriate the paltry amount of $200. towards having a suitable painting placed within the precincts of the Legislature? I cannot understand for one moment Parliament hesitating to vote such a small sum to honor the memory of one of Canada's sons of whom we are so proud. Gentlemen such as the late Mr. Todd, and Mr. Bourinot, the present clerk of the House of Commons, whose names have appeared in the reviews of Great Britain, and whose reputation is widespread, have done good service to the country, and how can Parliament hesitate for a moment to vote a small sum for the object I have named—as a memento of the great services the late Mr. Todd rendered during his lifetime to Parliament.

The report may be sent back to the committee to be adopted. Of course our decision is not final, because it requires the approval of the House of Commons. It ought to have emanated from a committee of Parliament, but I could not, in my humble way, get the Committee to adopt it. There can be no harm in this House expressing an opinion, and of course it would be for the House of Commons afterwards to say whether they would agree to it. I might move that the report be sent back to the Committee with the expression of an opinion that it would be desirable to incorporate in the report a clause to this effect.

HON. MR. HOWLAN.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I submit that that is not a resolution which can be adopted by this House; it involves a grant of money.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I merely ask the House to express an opinion; it is not a proposal to vote money at all.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I appeal to the Speaker to say whether the motion is in order or not?

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I beg leave to call attention to another point; I doubt whether the House has the power to send such a report to a committee over whom we have no authority, because it is a joint committee.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—I object to the motion on the ground that we have no power to initiate any resolution involving the expenditure of money; it would not be consistent with the character of the Senate to pass a motion like this.

THE SPEAKER—The way the resolution is framed it is certainly out of order. I think it would be better for the hon. gentleman to withdraw it and if he thinks proper to put it in the shape of a recommendation, it would be better.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—With the permission of the House I will withdraw the motion.

The motion was withdrawn and the report was adopted.

THE SANITARY CONDITION OF THE SENATE.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ADOPTED.

HON. MR SCOTT moved the adoption of the report of the Select Committee appointed to investigate the Sanitary condition of the Senate Chamber. He said: The suggestions made by the Sanitary Committee are contained in the printed minutes before us. I may briefly say that we made a very thorough examination of the air chamber, where the air is warmed for this room, the manner in which it is conveyed to this Chamber, and the way the foul air is carried off. We found the system a very excellent one. Hon. gentlemen complain that in many instances the air is oppressive. It was believed that that was due to its dryness, and a suggestion has been made to remedy that. Other suggestions are made to which I need not refer; most of them will involve very little expenditure of money. The architect, Mr. Fuller, attended the committee and rather approved of many of the simple suggestions made with regard to the ventilation of the closets, and more particularly the removal of some from objectionable places.

REAL PROPERTY IN THE TERRITORIES BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of Whole on Bill (10) "An Act respecting real property in the Territories."

In the Committee,

HON. MR. PLUMB—As I explained at the second reading, a bill similar to this was introduced in the Senate last year and adopted. The principle of the Bill is the adoption, with some modifications, of what is known as the Torrens system.

On the 5th clause,

HON. MR. PLUMB—This clause changes the character of real estate and makes it a chattel real. The Ontario Legislature, at its last session, passed an Act by which lands go to the personal representative, thus really abolishing the heir at law.

HON. MR. POWER—I wish to call attention to the fact that this is one of the clauses struck out last year. I do not wish to argue the matter now; but the Senate last year thought it was too radical a change to provide that land should be treated simply as a chattel and they struck out the clause.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I am instructed that in this clause lies the gist of the whole Bill, and it is essential to the carrying out of the principle of this legislation.

The clause was adopted.

On the 8th clause,

HON. MR. MCINNES (B. C.)—Is there any change in that?

HON. MR. PLUMB—No, but clause 13 modifies this clause very considerably by giving certain rights to married women.

HON. MR. SCOTT—We so fully discussed this Bill last year that I do not propose to go into a general discussion of the several clauses at the present time. I took a very active part in it last year, believing that the important changes which it made were not desirable. I objected to it because it enabled a man to mortgage his land too readily—because it gave the head of the House, though he might not have been the principal one in creating the property, absolute power to dispose of it without consulting his wife. I thought that was a very dangerous power to give and would lead to recklessness in encumbering property. We know that loan companies are seeking investments in the North-West, and the more facilities we give people to borrow money the more will be borrowed. Those were, briefly, the reasons why I thought last year this legislation was unwise, and I have seen nothing since to change my mind on the subject. With that view, to test the sense of the House, I shall move at the third reading to strike out the 8th clause.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Though the widow is not entitled to dower in the real property of her deceased husband, she has the same right in it as if it were personal property. I think under the Homestead law which was passed in the session of 1877 or 1878 the homestead is secured to the family, and I believe that statute is in no way affected by this provision. If that is the case, it would obviate very largely the objection of my hon. friend.

HON. MR. POWER—If my memory serves me, I voted against the proposal to strike out this clause last year, and the reason now is much stronger than it was last year, because having adopted the 5th clause which declares that all lands shall be dealt with as personal property, it would be inconsistent to say that the widow should continue to have dower in the property. The object of the Bill is to place lands in the same condition as ships are under the Merchant's Shipping Act; and as we have struck out the limitations which the Senate made last year to the change in the way in which the law used to regard land, I think the argument against allowing the widow's dower is much stronger than it was last year. I cannot see myself, when we provide as we do by the 11th clause, that a man may make a valid conveyance to his wife, and a woman to her husband, what object there is in preserving dower, because it does not protect either the man or the woman. They are made by this Act separate, distinct and independent persons altogether, the husband and wife.

HON. MR. MCINNES (B.C.)—Before this clause is passed I desire to say that I consider it one of the very best in the Bill. In British Columbia we have no dower, and I think the law works there very satisfactorily indeed. I have never known any particular hardship to arise from the fact that there is no dower. This law is intended for a country where a large percentage of the population are unmarried men, and men who go there without their families to settle. If there was a dower, it would interfere very materially with the transfer of property and deteriorate its value. A person wishing to buy property in that country would have to ascertain whether the owner is married or not, and if he chose to say that he was not, it might happen a year or two afterwards that his wife would put in an appearance and place the purchaser at a disadvantage. Therefore, I consider this clause, which does away with dower, is one of the best features in the Bill, as I think it is one of the best in the law we have in force in British Columbia.

HON. MR. POWER.

HON. MR. REESOR—I would like to say a word with respect to this clause. In the Province of Manitoba the principle recognized by the Bill has been acted upon for some years, and it has been found to work uncommonly well. So far as I have been able to ascertain—and I have had a great deal of communication with that Province—the people are decidedly opposed to having dower introduced, as it would be likely to interfere with so many transactions such as referred to by my hon. friend who has just resumed his seat. A great many people go there to remain a year or two without taking their families. They may find at the end of that period that they would rather not remain; and probably they would like to sell their property. If you make it incumbent upon them to give evidence that they have no wives; or, if they have, that the wives shall sign off their dower, it will interfere very seriously with the convenience of transactions in that country, and I hope my hon. friend will not press this amendment.

The clause was adopted.

On the 9th clause,

HON. MR. PLUMB—It will be seen in the 9th clause that the husband is deprived of any estate by courtesy, which is rather an offset to the doing away with dower.

The clause was adopted.

On the 11th clause,

HON. MR. POWER—I think the eleventh clause out to be struck out. It is a clause allowing a man to make a valid deed to his wife, and the wife to her husband, without any third person intervening. I think that the operation of that clause cannot be otherwise than mischievous.

HON. MR. SCOTT—It can be done now by passing it through a third person.

HON. MR. POWER—That is a great restraint. If a man wishes his wife to make a deed which may be injurious to her interests under this law, he can get her to do it directly, without giving her the opportunity to consult a third person. Under the existing law it can be done only by the intervention of trustees; third parties are necessarily called in, and the wife is not so likely to make an improvident deed. We can readily imagine that under this Act the husband may force his wife to execute a deed; and there is nothing in the Act, so far as I can see, to protect the wife against the undue influence of her husband. I think that this clause really ought to be struck out in the interest of family life in the North-West Territory.

HON. MR. REESOR—The common law protects the wife.

HON. MR. POWER—The common law is good so long as there is no statute to the contrary; but this statute expressly provides that the man may make a conveyance to his wife, and the wife may make it to her husband without the intervention of a trustee; and no common law will stand in the way of that.

HON. MR. VIDAL—My hon. friend admits the principle of the Bill, which makes land a chattel. I do not see how he can go back on that consistently. It appears to me to be in the same position as ordinary chattels. It could be transferred in the same way that the wife could transfer bank stock to her husband.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Or a horse.

The clause was adopted.

On the 12th clause,

HON. MR. POWER—I find that last year we struck out of the 12th clause these words, "But the land, whatever form of words is used in any instrument or transfer or transmission or dealing, shall be and remain an absolute estate in the owner for the time being." I do not propose to move to strike out those words, because I see the Senate has decided not to stand by the position it assumed last session. I think, however, that needs a little amendment. There is a subsequent provision that in certain cases, where the words "no survivorship" are inserted, the party shall be understood to hold as a trustee; and the amendment that I would propose is after the word "shall" in the 23rd line, to insert the following:—"Except as hereinafter otherwise provided," so as to avoid an inconsistency between this clause and a later one, the number of which I do not at the present moment recollect. I ask the hon. leader of the House for the sake of consistency, so that this clause shall not be inconsistent with a later one, to let it stand till we get to the other one.

The clause was allowed to stand.

On the 18th clause,

HON. MR. PLUMB—This clause relates to the districts of Assiniboia and Alberta; and they are known as the land registration districts. This group of clauses, from the 18th down to the 33rd, all have reference to the provision for registry offices connected with the working of the Bill. I move their adoption.

HON. MR. POWER—I find that last year we made an amendment to the 26th clause by adding these words:—

"Provided, nevertheless, that the obligation of any guarantee company approved by the Governor-in-Council to the like effect may be substituted for such bond."

It is with regard to the security to be given by the registrar or deputy registrar. It is clear that the guarantee bond of a good company is a better security than the bond of the registrar and his sureties in a great many cases, and that that is a desirable amendment; and it would appear that the Commons had intended accepting this guarantee, because if the hon. gentleman will look at line 46, page 5, he will find this language:—

"And the said bond shall be in the form B, in the said schedule, or to the like effect, and with the guarantee shall be subject to the approval of the Governor-in-Council."

I think we should insert the clause inserted last year.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I think the word "sureties" includes guarantee companies.

HON. MR. POWER.

HON. MR. SCOTT—Oh yes.

HON. MR. POWER—I appeal to any legal gentleman in the House on this point. The section reads:—

22. Before any registrar appointed under this Act is sworn into office, he, and two or more sufficient sureties, shall enter into a joint and several bond in duplicate under their hands and seals to Her Majesty, in a penal sum to be fixed at not less than _____ for the true and faithful performance by the said registrar or his deputy, of his duty.

Evidently that does not include the bond of a guarantee company. That is really a desirable amendment. We made it last year, and there is no objection to it at all. I would propose to insert after the word "behalf" in the 23rd line of the 26th clause the following:—

"Provided nevertheless that the obligation of any guarantee company approved of by the Governor in Council to the like effect may be substituted for such bond."

HON. MR. PLUMB—I do not think there is any objection to that if it is necessary; but it seems to me the word "sureties"—and I leave it to the legal gentleman here—includes any surety which the Government may choose to take. However, I accept the amendment.

On clause 36.

HON. MR. POWER—This clause, as we have it here, says the Registrar may require the owner of any land within his registration district requiring to transfer or otherwise to deal with the same under the provisions of this Act, to deposit with the Registrar a map or plan of such land, with the several measurements marked thereon, certified by a licensed surveyor, and upon one of the following scales. We amended it last year so as to read as follows:

"When the owner of the land proposes to subdivide his land for the purpose of selling it, or otherwise dealing therewith in subdivisions:—"

Hon. gentlemen will see that there is no reason why the owner should furnish a plan if he is not subdividing the land, because he is simply selling under the original plan under which he bought it. Then there are some consequent amendments. If the man is simply selling his land en bloc he is not obliged to go to the unnecessary expense of having an additional survey made; and the Minister of Justice made that amendment last year that when the owner of the land proposed to subdivide it for the purpose of dealing with it in subdivisions he should file a plan; and these words are inserted at the beginning of the clause.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I do not see any objection to it.

HON. MR. POWER—I move that those amendments I have suggested be made in that clause.

HON. MR. PLUMB—That is allowing the owner of the land, if he sells all his land, to do it without having a new plan made?

HON. MR. POWER—Yes.

HON. MR. McINNES—I think it would be desirable to amend that clause relating to the qualification of the barrister who is to be appointed registrar to provide that he shall be a barrister of five years standing instead of three. A great deal of the success of the Act will depend upon the efficiency of the barrister who acts as registrar. I think at one time, when the system was introduced in British Columbia it was required that the barrister should be a man of ten years standing in his profession. I will move that the qualifications shall be five years standing in one of the provinces, instead of three.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I have no objection to that. We do not desire to restrict it in any way.

HON. MR. McINNES—I claim that a barrister who has been in practice for five or ten years has a better knowledge of law than one of three.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Hear hear.

The clause was adopted with the amendment.

On clause 70.

HON. MR. POWER—I have an amendment to propose to clause 70, which provides that:

When any land under the provisions of this Act is intended to be leased or demised for a life or lives, or for a term of three or more years, the owner shall execute a lease in the form H.

We altered it last year so as to make it a term exceeding three years.

HON. MR. PLUMB—There is no objection to it.

The clause was adopted.

On the 91st clause,

HON. MR. POWER—Last year we struck out in this clause the words “leaving a will,” so that whether the owner left a will or not the land should vest in the personal representative.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The statute makes provision for a man who dies without making a will.

HON. MR. POWER—There is the difference between a man who dies leaving a will and a man dying intestate. The object of the Bill is to treat the matter in the same way in both cases. It seems to me that there is no object in retaining the words which we struck out last year “leaving a will.” I move that we strike those words out as we did last year.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I think the hon. gentleman’s criticism is wrong this time. If he will remember the character of the Bill, it is necessary that there should be some individual who shall from time to time make the transfers. When a man makes a will in our provinces, the will operates like a deed; but in this case it requires some individual to make a transfer, even when there is a will.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman misapprehends my argument.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I certainly do if there is any argument at all in it.

HON. MR. POWER—That is a question. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman is the man in the House best calculated to tell whether there is or not. Evidently the Minister of Justice who sat in this House and who had perhaps nearly as much skill in judging of those things as the hon. gentleman from Sarnia thought there was something in it and made the alteration. I propose that the words "leaving a will" shall be struck out, so that no matter whether a man leaves a will or dies intestate, the same thing shall happen. It might be gathered from the wording of this clause, that if the man died intestate the land should be treated differently. Well the object is to treat all land the same whether there is a will made or not.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I think the hon. gentleman will see that the intention here is that under a will, which might not provide that there should be a transmission of the land, it being necessary that the land shall pass, immediately the owner dies, the land must pass into the hands of some person who can give a title to it. If he dies intestate this provision applies. It provides that if he dies having made a will, and not having made such provision, that there shall be a representative in whom the land shall vest; it requires that in all wills made in the previous part of the Act the land shall pass directly, not to the family, having no reference to the minor heirs, no reference to any other considerations, but shall pass directly to a person who can deal with it; and I think this section seems to be in that spirit. I am greatly indebted to the hon. gentleman for having made a careful study of this Act, and he has had some advantages in making that study which I have not had, because the emendations, changes and explanations in the Act which he laid upon my table, after he came in, had been in his hands for some time, and I had not seen it; but, at the same time, I trust hon. gentlemen will allow it to pass as it is, and if it should be found necessary, I pledge myself that the Act shall be amended at a future time.

HON. MR. POWER—It is just as well to be consistent. The object of the Bill is to treat all land in the same way, and to provide that as soon as the owner of the land dies the land subject to the provisions of this Act shall pass to his personal representative. Why should we put in the the words "leaving a will," because it may raise doubts in a case where the owner of the land dies intestate? If we strike out the words "leaving a will" it applies to everybody; and if hon. gentlemen read the remainder of the clause with reference to letters of administration and the executor and administrator and all that, they will find that it all points to the fact that it is intended to apply to a case of intestacy as well as to the case where a man makes a will. I think it is better to make the amendment; and if the Commons think it is not necessary they need not concur. We made the amendment last year, and I fail to see any reason why we should not make it now. It seems to be a necessary amendment and I think it should be made.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—I think the section should be passed; and the leader of the Government can ask the Minister of Justice if it is necessary and it can afterwards be made.

The clause was allowed to stand.

On clause 100.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The subsections of this clause have reference to caveats. You can make no trusts upon the land as to this Act, but a caveat can be filed, and it is a notice which those who deal in land can take cognizance of; and there is a provision that people can give notice in regard to any cloud on the title or anything of that sort which it is desirable the purchaser should know of. As I understand the tenor of the Bill—my hon. friend will correct me if I am wrong—you cannot fix any trust upon the land? Am I right in that?

HON. MR. POWER—That is right.

HON. MR. PLUMB—That being the case, there are technical forms here in respect to the filing of caveats, but the registrar is not bound in any way by them. He is only to receive them and place them on record.

HON. MR. VIDAL—He must not allow any transfer when a caveat is filed.

HON. MR. POWER.

HON. MR. PLUMB—But he is not bound to see the execution.

The clause was adopted.

On the 128th clause.

HON. MR. POWER—The suggestion I made with respect to the twelfth clause would seem to be borne out by this clause 128 :

128. Upon the transfer of any land, estate or interest under the provisions of this Act, to two or more persons as joint owners, to be held by them as trustees, it shall be lawful for the transferrer to insert in the memorandum of transfer or other instrument the words "no survivorship;" and the registrar, shall in such case, include such words in the memorial of such instrument to be entered by him in the register as hereinbefore directed; and shall also enter the said words upon any certificate of title issued to such joint owners pursuant to such memorandum of transfer; and any two or more persons registered as joint owners of any land, estate or interest, under this Act, held by them as trustees, may, by writing under their hand, authorize the registrar to enter the words "no survivorship" upon the certificate of title or other instrument evidencing their title to such estate or interest, and also upon the duplicate of such instrument in the register or filed in his office; and after such entry has been made and signed by the registrar in either such case as aforesaid, it shall not be lawful for any less number of joint proprietors than the number then registered to transfer or otherwise deal with the said land, estate or interest, without obtaining the sanction of a court or a judge thereof, by an order on motion or petition.

If the hon. gentleman will look at the twelfth clause, he will find at line 23, page 4, it is provided that "Any instrument of transfer or transmission or dealing, shall be and remain an absolute estate in the owner for the time being."

This provides in this particular case that it shall not. Perhaps the leader of the House had better consult the Minister of Justice about that.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I do not see anything inconsistent in this clause with the provisions in the 12th clause.

HON. MR. POWER—It is difficult to undertake to deal with a measure of this kind where the number of legal men in the House is so very small. I do not set myself up as being much of a lawyer, but I do think my opinion is worth as much as that of some of the non-professional gentlemen. Here we have in the 128th clause a provision that in certain cases it shall not be lawful for the joint proprietors to transfer or otherwise deal with the said land without obtaining the sanction of the court or judge; and in the 12th clause we are told that it shall be and remain an absolute estate. This qualifies in a certain way that provision. If the hon. gentleman will be good enough to say that he will see the Minister of Justice about that 12th clause I shall be quite satisfied with that.

HON. MR. PLUMB—If you give me a memorandum of the point you take and give me your legal opinion, I will show it to the Minister of Justice. The hon. gentleman is insinuating that laymen are not in a position to judge of these matters.

HON. MR. POWER—I was referring to the hon. gentleman from Alma.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I think the 12th clause refers to an entirely different matter from that referred to in the 128th clause. It refers to the transfer of a fee simple whereas the 128th clause is one in trust; that is the difference.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I do not wish to take up the time of the House, but I wish to say a word in reply to the hon. gentleman from Halifax, I am not a professional man; but it is not necessary that a man should be a lawyer to have a little common sense. I say that clause twelve most distinctly—if I am able to read and understand English—has nothing in the most remote degree to do with clause 128, one way or the other; and in my opinion, non-professional though it is, it is quite unnecessary to take any opinion but the opinion of the House upon that question.

HON. MR. POWER—I simply suggest in order to be quite sure we are safe, that the hon. gentleman should take the opinion of the Minister of Justice.

HON. MR. PLUMB—If you will give me a memorandum I will show it to him.

HON. MR. POWER—Very well.

The clause was adopted.

HON. MR. ALLAN from the committee reported the Bill with amendments, which were concurred in.

PRINTING BUREAU BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (132) "An Act respecting the department of public printing and stationery."

In the Committee,

On the 3rd clause,

HON. MR. READ said: When this Bill was at its second reading I stated that I would, in Committee of the Whole, bring up the question whether this bill does not abridge some of our privileges. To my mind this clause does. Are we not capable of procuring our own supplies of stationery without having it supplied to us by others? I am extremely jealous of the privileges of this House and I am not prepared to abandon any of them. Heretofore we have been in the habit of managing the affairs of our own House, but this Bill proposes to get somebody else to do it. I would therefore suggest that this third clause be amended in such a way as to maintain our privileges.

HON. MR. PLUMB—In order to meet the objection which the hon. gentleman has raised I had a conversation with the Secretary of State, and I am authorized by him to make a change which, I think, will meet the objection of my hon. friend. I can assure the House that no one is more desirous than I am of protecting the privileges of the Senate. The Secretary of State has proposed to amend the 13th clause by striking out of the eighth and ninth lines these words "which may be increased or varied from time to time." We are all desirous, I am sure, to see the administration of both Houses carried out in an economical way, consistent with our rights and privileges.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman's amendment would make the Bill worse.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The appointment is to be made by the Governor in Council; of course it cannot be made otherwise, but after we ask for a proper apportionment, by the amendment which I have suggested, it cannot be varied by any other authority.

HON. MR. WARK—As this is a Bill which involves the expenditure of money and comes from the House of Commons, I think we had better let it go back without amendment. I do not think there is any danger that the Senate will not get all the stationery it requires, and I think it would be objectionable to send back the Bill with an amendment, especially one of the kind proposed, at this late stage of the session.

HON. MR. POWER—It is very well to look at the matter in that way, but I think we have already too much Government by Order in Council, and this Bill will take away from the House of Parliament the right to order a dollar's worth of stationery. It can only be done through the Governor in Council, and it will probably result in very serious inconvenience. The amendment which the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill has suggested would simply make it worse, because, if that amendment were adopted and these words were struck out then there would be no possibility, if we had a session of six months for instance of getting an additional dollar's worth of any thing; because we could not vary the order made by the Governor-in-Council, an order being once made, it would last forever unless altered by law. This amendment, instead of improving matters, would make them worse. If hon. gentlemen will look at the thirteenth clause they will see that the Bill goes into such minute matters as the disposal of the waste paper of both Houses of Parliament. I believe in economy, but I think that to say that the employes of the Secretary of State's office are to come to this House to remove the waste paper which has been a sort of perquisite to some subordinate officers of the Senate, is undesirable. This House ought to be our own, and any papers that have ceased to be of use can be disposed of as this House pleases. If this Bill passes in its present shape it will be found exceedingly disagreeable and annoying in its operation to the members of the Senate. The tendency of these Departments outside is always to assert their authority and influence, and as soon as the session closes, what will be the practical result with regard to the provision for waste paper? We shall have officials from the Secretary of State's Department rushing into the House and seizing all these papers which are lying over, and using them for their own purposes. The same thing happens already with regard to other things which come under the control of the Department of Public Works, a good deal of property which ought to be in this end of the building is not here, because it has been removed by the employes of the Public Works Department during the recess. It is very easy to give away the rights of the House, but not so easy to get them back, and hon. gentlemen may very well hesitate a little before they pass this third clause, which practically provides that we cannot order our own stationery. Under this third clause if it was found necessary to secure copies of certain Statutes for instance, we could not order them: everything has to be done through an officer of the Department of the Secretary of State. The House should consider just where they are going to land themselves.

HON. MR. LACOSTE—If we are to be deprived of any of our privileges, the Bill ought not be accepted, but I can see no objection to this measure. It provides for obtaining supplies through one establishment: everything will be bought by the Secretary of State. As to the stationery, the quantity and quality to be furnished shall be subject to the order and regulation of the Senate. The Governor in Council will have to put in the estimate the amount required for the Senate, and that amount is to be the amount which we ask for.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—It is quite easy to ask for enough. If we have more than we require it will be in stock, and I can see nothing wrong with the Bill.

HON. MR. POWER—I think it would be a very strange Bill coming from the Government when the hon. gentleman would see anything wrong with it. The Governor in Council are not bound to take our estimate or act upon our recommendation.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—But the Superintendent is.

HON. MR. POWER—You see by the 13th clause, it is left to the discretion of the Governor in Council.

HON. MR. LACOSTE—Not at all. There is a separate item for each Department and House, and the appointment must be made by the Governor-in-Council, and with the amendment proposed he cannot vary it.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I have no doubt that is the effect of the clause.

HON. MR. POWER—That does not apply to the provisions of the third section. As I read it the Senate could not order the purchase of a book for the use of one of its clerks except through this new officer. Suppose the Clerk of the House thought it necessary to get a copy of the latest English work on Parliamentary Law or procedure, I want my hon. friend to point out how he could get it under this Bill without a great deal of red tape?

HON. MR. LACOSTE—Under clause twelve he can ask for it.

HON. MR. POWER—There is where the red tape comes in.

HON. MR. LACOSTE—I do not see anything in clause three that can be considered as destroying any of our privileges. It is merely stating that the purchase shall be subject to the superintendence and audit of the proper officer—that is to say the superintendent shall see that the orders of the Senate are carried out.

HON. MR. PLUMB—It merely directs that the officer shall superintend—

HON. MR. POWER—He superintends and executes.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Yes, both.

HON. MR. POWER—Under that clause an officer of this House could not buy the simplest thing, the cheapest book that might be necessary for the use of this House.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—Instead of trying to extend the purchase of books and the distributing of them to the extent that we do, I think we should try to restrict the number, because, if I am correctly informed, we distribute more books and printed matter in this country than they do on the other side of the line where they have a population of over 50,000,000. I believe we distribute more books to Justices' of the Peace in Canada than they do in Great Britain. Any books which may be required by the House can be got by request.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I have often appealed to Parliament on this subject. As an old member, I have often pointed out the unnecessary number of sessional papers that are distributed through the country at a very large cost to the public. In Woodstock, where I lived for so long a period, when those blue books came I had latterly difficulty in finding public institutions who cared to have them; their shelves were filled with such volumes. If we could ascertain where those volumes were wanted, and where they would be likely to be used, it would be well to supply them, but we spend forty or fifty thousand dollars thus and encumber the mails with such blue books. I ask members of this House whether they have not had the same experience?

HON. MR. MONTGOMERY—What has that to do with it?

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I am replying to the hon. gentleman from Alma.

HON. MR. GIRARD—It seems to me that the public will derive a good deal of benefit by the passage of this Bill. Every department of this new Bureau will be under the management of a man of long experience. The Queen's Printer will have control of the Stationery Department, and he must be an officer who has had ten years experience. The Printing Committee is, for the most part, composed of good and efficient men, but they have not the experience of such men as are to be appointed under this Bill, and who will be responsible to both Houses. The Printing Committee will continue to exist, and to that Committee will be submitted all the work done by the Bureau during the year. The work of the Committee will be lighter, owing to the fact that the Bureau will be under the supervision and control of the Minister whose subordinates will be men possessing a thorough knowledge of the work to be done. I have no fear that our privileges will be interfered with, and under the circumstances I shall support the Bill.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I cannot see how this Bill interferes with our privileges. At present we have to make a requisition for our stationery, as we will have to do under this Bill. After this we will know exactly what we get. The Contingent Committee will continue to exist and make its recommendations, as it does now. Some two years ago the Committee adopted a resolution that each member should submit in writing to an officer of the Senate a demand for whatever stationery he required, and we have a sort of form sent to us which we fill up when making an application. I presume the object is to ascertain at the end of the session how much more paper some gentlemen use than others. I am as anxious to preserve our privileges as any member of the House, but I do not see that this Bill interferes with them in any way. If this provision in the 12th clause were not in the Bill, there might be room for doubt, but in any event, if we find that our privileges are abridged, we can soon provide a remedy.

HON. MR. PLUMB—No doubt of it, and this is in the direction of economy. I believe it will result in a large saving and greatly promote the convenience of both Houses. The system is adopted in Germany and many other countries, and in England they are proceeding in the direction which has been adopted in the United States.

HON. MR. READ—I do not see where they have adopted it in the United States.

HON. MR. PLUMB—In order that there shall be no question as to the position of the Senate in this matter, I propose to make an amendment to the 13th section which will meet the views of the House, by adding after the word “year” the following—“as may be required and ordered by either House of Parliament.” Will that suit hon. gentlemen’s views?

HON. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear! That will do.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Then I will move it when we come to that section.

HON. MR. O’DONOHUE—The measure before the House proposes to make a very important change. I did not think it proper to let it pass without expressing an opinion which I entertain on this proposition at a time when the House is almost empty and the most experienced members have gone to their homes—in a measure involving on the face of it, upon the statement of the Secretary of State himself, an expenditure of something approaching half a million of dollars. Now, why should a Bill of this character be introduced at a time when many members have gone to their homes and those who are here, instead of being engaged in studying this measure are, in fact, packing their trunks and preparing to leave the capital? Is this a time to introduce such a Bill? Is it not a strange commentary on the legislation of Canada that the most important measures are kept back so that they can be run through when most of the members are away? Everyone can see that the important measures brought in here are in the hands of a gentleman who is unable to explain them in a satisfactory manner to the House, and we are left, for the the most part of this session, since the accomplished leader of this House has absented himself through illness, without any satisfactory explanation of any of the Bills presented to us. Measures are run through this House, by the gentleman who is leading it, without any explanation of them—by a gentleman who is acting for a Minister who is unable to say one word to us of what the views of the Government are in the matter. Is that a system of legislation that the people of Canada can uphold? We are asked now to pass this measure, the like of which has never been adopted in England. The mother country has never had an institution such as this.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—It has one very like it.

HON. MR. O’DONOHUE—There is none in England. There is a principle involved in this Bill that never would be accepted in England, and it is this—that the Government of that country will never go into a trading policy—will not set machinery in motion that will interfere with the trade and commerce of her own people. If a high price is paid for anything, as long as it is paid after fair and honest competition, it is given to the artisans and helps the trade and commerce on which the nation depends. I say the principle involved in this measure is reprehensible and should not be sanctioned at this time of the session. What will our colleagues who are absent say to the change that is here proposed?

HON. MR. MACDONALD—They ought to be here attending to the public business.

HON. MR. O’DONOHUE—As soon as they come here next year and find that this measure has been passed by a mere quorum of the Senate, what will they think? What will the country think? Nothing brings more odium upon the Senate, nothing is so strongly protested against by the press and people of Canada, as the introduction of measures of great importance in the very last days of the session. I, at all events, think it my duty to enter my protest against this system of legislation. We have neither the time nor the disposition to give the Bill that calm consideration which a measure of its importance deserves. If we start on this principle of setting a trade machine in motion where will we stop? If we undertake the printing why not manufacture the paper, and so on, throughout, and take into the hands of the Government the manufacturing of everything that is needed in the public service. It is well known, beyond all question, that the Government is not the most economical machinery by which to have anything done that the House needs. The experience of everybody must convince them of that fact. It does seem to me that in the absence of our colleagues and the most experienced members of the House, at the closing days of the session, it would be much better to allow this Bill to stand until we meet again.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I must confess that I have been surprised at the remarks which have fallen from the hon. Senator from Alberton, a gentleman who was long a member of his own local Government, and I rather think the Premier of the Government of Prince Edward Island at one time. He observed that if we find that we have surrendered power to the executive, we can withdraw it. That has not been the experience in the local Legislatures or in the Parliament of the Dominion. We know if the House gives up its power to the executive, it is almost impossible to revoke it. This House is the turnpike gate to prevent mal-administration: and the people look to us to see that we do not let anything pass through that is not in the public interest. As the hon. member from Toronto (Mr. O'Donohoe) has said, if we surrender our power with regard to the purchase of stationery, why not permit the Government to engage in the manufacture of paper? It would be unwise to give such power to a Government who have been connected with so much jobbery in everything they touch. Is this Government worthy of being trusted with such power and privilege? I cannot suppose that there are many members like my hon. friend on my left (Mr. Montgomery) who has one son in the service and would place more. There are very few Senators who would send their sons into the public service; they are not prepared to sell their country as some four or five members have done, who have got petty offices for their families, like the hon. gentleman from Sackville.

HON. GENTLEMEN—Order, order!

HON. MR. PLUMB—I call the hon. gentleman to order. The hon. member is deplorably out of order.

HON. MR. O'DONOHOE.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—It is truly deplorable!

HON. MR. PLUMB—I wish to say to the hon. gentleman from Toronto that so far from this being a measure which would not be approved of in England, it is already in effect there. I have been shown a minute of the House of Lords which states that they have adopted the same system, and they speak in the very highest terms of the manner in which it has operated there. If the hon. gentleman wishes I will read him the paragraph to which I refer.

HON. MR. POWER—Read, read.

HON. MR. PLUMB—It is too long to read now.

HON. MR. POWER—I think when the hon. member is asked to read an extract to which he refers he should not answer in the way he has done. This Senate is not a bear garden, I wish the hon. gentleman to understand, although since the House has been under the leadership of the hon. member it has shown a lamentable tendency to degenerate into one.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman has made an imputation against me which, considering the way I have endeavored to treat him and every member of the Senate, is unworthy of him. If the hon. gentleman thinks the House is becoming a bear garden he knows perfectly well who are the bears that occupy the cage.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—Will the hon. gentleman read the passage to which he has referred?

HON. MR. PLUMB—With pleasure. This is the report of a committee appointed to inquire into the expenditure and practice of the Government Department in regard to the stationery and printing and the Treasury minute thereon, dated March 1885. The portion to which I have referred is this:—

“My Lords would call the special attention of the civil service to the general remarks with which the committee close their report. They fully concur in the opinion expressed with reference to the authority of the stationery office, and agree that the decisions of that department as regards quality of supplies, style of printing, preparation of copy for the press, &c., should be accepted.

HON. MR. POWER—That does not show anything of the sort claimed.

HON. MR. O'DONOHOE—That does not confirm the hon. gentleman's statements.

HON. MR. VIDAL, from the Committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill and asked leave to sit again at the next sitting of the House.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (143) "An Act to authorize the construction of a railway from the Straits of Canso to Louisburg or Sydney, as a public work." (Mr. Plumb.)

Bill (144) "An Act respecting certain subsidies for a line of railway from Metapedia, on the Intercolonial Railway, to Paspébiac." (Mr. Plumb.)

The Senate adjourned at 6 o'clock.

SECOND SITTING.

The Speaker took the Chair at 7-30 p.m.

Routine proceedings.

PRINTING BUREAU BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed, in committee of the whole, consideration of Bill (132) "An Act respecting the Department of Public Printing and Stationery."

IN COMMITTEE.

On the 4th section.

HON. MR. O'DONOHOE—When the House rose at 6 o'clock I was pointing out that such an institution as the printing establishment proposed by this Bill did not exist in England. My hon. friend the proleader of the Government, the Hon. Member from Niagara, stated that that was not the case and that he had authority to show it was not. Now I ask the hon. gentleman to produce his authority.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Does the hon. gentleman assert that it is not?

HON. MR. O'DONOHOE—I do, and my hon. friend says it is.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I do not. I say that it is so stated in a document which I have before me.

HON. MR. O'DONOHOE—A gentleman who represents the Government in this House should not make haphazard statements; we want as the leader of the Senate a man who is sensible of the responsibility of his position. I await my hon. friend's reply to my request for his authority.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman remarked in the beginning of his address, in the first place, that my leadership of the House was entirely unsatisfactory. He made statements which I think were hardly fair, under all the circumstances. He knows perfectly well that I have taken a position which is not an agreeable one to me, but which I have consented to assume for the purpose of doing as much as I can to assist the gentleman who formerly led the Senate.

HON. MR. O'DONOHOE—I rise to a point of order. The question is not what I stated, nor is it a question for a reply to my remarks: the hon. gentleman is simply given an opportunity to support this denial of the statement which I made.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I do not think the hon. member can teach me the rules of the House. It is all the same debate, and I am speaking of what the hon. gentleman referred to when he rose to speak on this Bill. I am endeavoring, in a very lame and imperfect way, to do something towards promoting the business of this House, to assist an hon. gentleman whose absence we all regret, and whose place I do not profess for one moment even to aspire to take. The hon. member ought not, therefore, to criticize my actions: I am in the hands of the House: I have never assumed any dictatorial tone in the Senate, and it is unfair for the hon. gentleman to attack me personally, as he has done to-day; but I wish to call attention to this fact, that the hon. member is like all knew converts. A convert coming into a new faith, usually signalizes it by a zeal which its older and more sober adherents who have professed the faith for a long time do not consider themselves bound to assume.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—Hear, hear.

HON. MR. PLUMB—He says "hear, hear": he has discovered to-day, for the first time that the Government bring in important bills at a late period of the session, a course which he considers most reprehensible. To my knowledge the hon. gentleman has sat in this House for four sessions, and never until now have I heard him condemn the Government for bringing down important measures too late in the session. I congratulate him on having the scales fall from his eyes, though it may be at the 11th or even the 12th hour. The hon. gentleman's criticisms will be taken by this House and by the country, knowing all the circumstances, for exactly what they are worth. I will now proceed to show the authority on which I denied the correctness of his statement. I find in the Treasury Minute, from which I quoted before, the following:—

"There has been a large and rapid increase on the stationery—

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—I was speaking of the printing.

HON. MR. PLUMB—No, we were speaking of the stationery.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—Nothing of the kind. What I stated was that such a printing institution as the one contemplated here was never established in England. There is no getting away from that.

HON. MR. PLUMB—We were talking about the stationery and I was discussing the question with my hon. friend from Belleville and other members in this House.

HON. MR. McMILLAN—Were you not discussing the third clause?

HON. MR. PLUMB.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Yes.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—We were discussing the general principle of the Bill.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The general principle of a bill is not discussed in a committee of the whole. As the hon. gentleman insists that I was discussing the printing question, I decline to give the information I was about to read.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—The hon. gentleman cannot contradict the statement I made. Now allow me to formulate my statement, and then the hon. gentleman and myself will occupy our proper positions before the House. In submitting this Bill to the House of Commons the Hon. Secretary of State remarked:

"I think England, that hot-bed of traditional conservatism, where good things are to be found, but when once obtained are with great difficulty reformed and changed, is the only country where a government printing office is now in existence."

HON. MR. POWER—I think the word "books" in the thirty third line of this clause should be struck out, so that it will read:

"The proper officer of the Department shall also superintend and execute the purchase and distribution of all paper, and all other articles of stationery of whatsoever kind."

The word "books" is not necessary and is likely to be inconvenient.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Perhaps the hon. gentleman means to say we cannot buy any books.

HON. MR. POWER—It is not buying.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Or distributing. It says the purchase, sale and distribution.

HON. MR. POWER—Well, then, if it is thought objectionable to strike out the word "books," we can get over the difficulty by inserting certain words at the end of the sixth line of the next page after the words "Except the books which are procured for addition to the Library of Parliament, which may be procured as before the passing of this Act." I would propose to insert after the word "Parliament"—"Or for the use of the officers of either House."

HON. MR. PLUMB—There is no practical objection to the Bill as it stands.

HON. MR. POWER—The principle of this Bill has been established ; we are not fighting against that now. I thought the Bill should not have been passed at this stage of the Session : but it has been decided to pass it. I think we should try and get it into a form as little objectionable as possible. I made the statement—and I adhere to it—that under this Bill if we wished to furnish the Clerk of the House with a book of precedents in Parliament law we could not get it unless by an application to the superintendent of stationery and after a deal of red tape. Now the amendment I move is simply for the purpose of providing that any books of that kind which may be needed for the officers of the House may be got as before the passing of this Act. I think hon. gentlemen must see that that is a perfectly reasonable proposition. A practical inconvenience will arise if we have not that power. I move that after the word “Parliament” be inserted the words “Or for the use of both Houses.”

The Committee divided on the amendment which was rejected by the following vote : Contents 8 ; Non-contents 19.

The clause was adopted.

On the 13th clause,

HON. MR. PLUMB—I move that after the word “year” in the fifth line of the 13th clause the following be inserted : “as may be required or ordered by either House of Parliament.” So that the paragraph will read :

“The Ministers shall report to the Governor in Council the total probable amount in quantities, qualities and value required for the stationery, printing and binding for the departments of the Civil Service and for the two Houses of Parliament for such year as may be required or ordered by either Houses of Parliament, and a requisite sum, etc.”

HON. MR. POWER—The amendment which the hon. gentleman proposes is one which was, I presume, suggested to the Minister during the course of this debate, and it bears indications on its face of having been hurriedly drawn. If hon. gentlemen will look at the 12th clause they will see that this amendment really does not vary the effect of the Bill at all. The thirteenth clause goes on to say :—

The Minister shall report to the Governor in Council, the total probable amount, in quantities, qualities and value, required for the stationery, printing and binding for the departments of the civil service and for the two Houses of Parliament for such year, and a requisite sum therefor shall be placed in the estimates as a separate item.

I think that we all have the same object in view just now ; and that is to provide that this particular item shall be the same as is recommended by the Clerk of the House under the direction of the House : and the amendment we should make is one to prevent any change in it ; and I think that if after the word “year” were inserted the words “according to the estimates furnished by the Clerks of the said Houses.”

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—The Clerk is the agent of the Senate. The Senate order it, and the Clerk carries out its order.

HON. MR. POWER—I think after the word “year” in the fifth line of the thirteenth clause something might be inserted to provide that the estimate of the Clerk of the House shall be the estimate which the Government shall act upon ; and say “according to the estimate furnished by the clerks of the said Houses.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—The Clerk acts under the control of the Senate.

HON. MR. POWER—We want to provide that the Government shall supply what the Clerk, acting under the directions of the House, orders ; and that they shall not alter the estimate he makes. That amendment is reasonable.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I beg the hon. gentlemen's pardon for differing slightly from him. I should say this amendment which I propose is broader and covers the whole question. It is proposed to insert after the word “year” these words—“Such as may be required and ordered by either House of Parliament.” Does the hon. gentleman propose to make the order of the Clerk superior to that of either House of Parliament? I can hardly think so. At any rate, if he is willing to do so, with all due respect to the excellent officers named, I think the Houses of Parliament will control their own orders. In a previous section of this Bill it is provided that the Deputy Head shall furnish an estimate of the amount, and Parliament carries it out by ordering it; and does the hon. gentlemen propose that this Parliament shall be irrevocably bound by an order made by an officer of the House? I can hardly think so. I have the greatest confidence in the officers of the House; but they will act, as they are bound to do, under the order of the House.

HON. MR. POWER—No one is objecting to that but my objection to that amendment was that it provided according to the order of either House. It must be according to the order of the said House. We do not want the House of Commons to order for us.

THE SPEAKER—Each House acts on its own responsibility.

HON. MR. LACOSTE—I would like to call the attention of the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill to this point; I am afraid the amendment will apply to the Departments as well as to the House.

HON. MR. POWER—I think so too.

HON. MR. LACOSTE—If it does, I think it ought to be drafted differently.

HON. MR. ALLAN—I fail to see the real value of that amendment. Practically, so far as the probable quantity and variety of all articles of stationery, etc., are concerned, I presume that as it is done now, that would be given by the Clerks of the two Houses; and I do not know in what way the order would come from either House of Parliament.

THE SPEAKER—I think the amendment meets the case.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The object of the amendment is to meet an objection made in this House that in passing this Bill the Senate was to a certain extent abrogating its rights. It was intended to show there was no intention in this Bill to affect the rights of the Senate to control and furnish their own stationery, and to determine its description and quality; and I am authorized to say that the Government has consented to an amendment in the words I have mentioned. It was intended to meet the objection of my hon. friend from Belleville, and other members of the House, which was a reasonable one; and the question now is on the amendment proposed by the hon. member from Halifax, by which he proposes to tie up the Senate by the Clerk of the House.

HON. MR. POWER—No.

HON. MR. LACOSTE—The amendment must mean something. I am ready to vote for the amendment, or pass the clause as it stands, because I think it is of very little importance; but by section 12 the Deputy Head of each Department, the Clerk of the House of Commons, and the Clerk of the Senate are to furnish an estimate of the probable quantity, quality, and variety of all articles of stationery and the probable amount in value of printing and binding which may be required. By section 13 of this Bill the total amount of these estimates furnished by the deputy heads of the departments and the Clerks of the Commons and Senate is sent to the Governor in Council, without any details; and the apportionment is made by the Governor in Council. Now the amendment you want to add after the word "year"—"As may be required and ordered by either House of Parliament" applies to the total amount; and this total amount comprises not only what has been ordered by the House of Commons or by the Senate, but what has been ordered also by the different departments.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I do not think that is so.

HON. MR. LACOSTE—I have no objection to the amendment because I think it is not required. I think the rights and privileges of the House are safe. But the amendment should be drafted in another way.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I think the hon. gentleman will see that there is a distinction made. In the first four lines of section thirteen it is provided that the quantities, qualities and values and so forth, for the Departments of the Civil Service—that is one part—and the next is for the two Houses of Parliament. They are entirely separate. There should be a comma between the two to show the sense. This amendment refers, not to the Civil Service, but to either House of Parliament. I do not think it is important that it should be made, but I make it in deference to a feeling in this House on the part of some hon. gentlemen which I think we should respect, that in some way this clause affects the independence of this House to procure its own supplies; and in order to make it perfectly clear that it does not, this amendment is offered. It is perfectly harmless, and provides for the objection of the hon. gentlemen who think such an amendment is necessary; and I therefore propose to admit it.

HON. MR. PLUMB.

HON. MR. LACOSTE—The amendment, it is true, does no harm; but as it appears there, it has no sense at all, because the Governor-in-Council has before him not the amount ordered by the Senate or the House of Commons; he has only the total amount according to clause thirteen. The Minister reports to the Governor-in-Council the total amount required; not simply the amount required by the Senate or House of Commons, but also the amount required by the Departments; and no details are submitted to the Governor-in-Council; so that the amendment as it reads would be embarrassing to the Governor-in-Council.

HON. MR. READ—If the amendment would not do any harm I would like to see it inserted.

HON. MR. POWER—I think the hon. gentleman might have listened to the counsel given him by the hon. gentleman on my left. The effect of this will be that every deputy head of the Departments can send in an estimate for what he pleases, and the Governor-in-Council cannot modify that.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The amendment has no reference whatever, if I know the English language, to the deputy heads of the Departments.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman says he knows the English language. No one is questioning that; but this happens to be rather a nice case of the legal construction of a clause of a bill, and the hon. gentleman on my left (Mr. Lacoste) is one of the best authorities in Canada on that subject; and I think that the hon. gentleman from Niagara will probably not undertake to set himself up as being a better authority in the construing of a law than the hon. gentleman beside me, the hon. gentleman from DeLorimier. I think I heard the hon. gentleman say something about approaching this subject in all humility. I should like to see a little humility. I do not profess to be as good an authority as the hon. gentleman from DeLorimier; but I have had a little experience in the construing of bills, and I say the construction of the hon. gentleman alongside me is correct; and it is the construction which will be put upon the language by the Court.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I bow with all humility to any decision of my hon. friend from DeLorimier; but he has not proposed amending the clause in any way; he has simply made a suggestion; so I think my hon. friend from Halifax has been superserviceable.

The Committee divided on the amendment which was adopted. Contents, 20; Non-Contents, 12.

The clause as amended was adopted.

HON. MR. VIDAL, from the Committee, reported the Bill with amendments.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that the House concur in the amendments.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I do not think the House ought to adopt the report of the committee. When we come to consider the whole course of the executive government—

HON. MR. PLUMB—The question is on concurrence in the amendments.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Will the hon. gentleman remain quiet. It is dreadful to think that the Government should appoint a leader who is always disturbing the House. The reason why I object to this Bill is that I see the Government are determined to usurp the whole power of the Parliament of this country. I have already, in the remarks which I have ventured to address to this House, endeavored to appeal to hon. members to save its reputation. I have been a member of this House since 1858, and when Confederation was accomplished the present First Minister, and in fact the leaders of both parties led the country to suppose that the Senate of the Dominion would be a check upon all maladministration, no matter from what party it came. The people desire the Senate to be a check on the Government and the Commons. But what is the use of the Senate, if they are simply to register everything that comes from the Commons? Can we say that we are discharging our duty to the people of Canada when we permit the fruits of the people's industry to be squandered? It is dreadful to think of the amount of public money that has been voted for partizan purposes. It is painful to me as a member of this House to have to recur to this subject—to have to address a body of gentlemen such as I see around me so often upon those matters. What does the press of the country say? It says that the Senate has failed to fulfil its mission. I simply appeal to this Chamber to remember that we live but a few years; and why should any of our members have any other motive than to serve their country? What do all the poor office seekers of either Chamber gain by the paltry offices they obtain? In a very short time, some of us will have departed this life, and perhaps some may never appear here again; and I daily ask myself this solemn question: why do we think of anything but what is in the interests of the people? What can induce the members of this Chamber to serve the interests of one man? Why do they give up their individuality and ratify measure after measure, throwing away millions of the public money, simply to gratify the desires of one man that he may keep himself in power? Is that a memory that we wish to carry with us to our graves? When we approach our latter end, do we wish to carry such reflections to our death-bed scene? I am asked every day on the street by poor men who come up to me, how comes it that the Senate is not an independent body? They are nominated for life; nothing can supplant them. Why is it they should not act for the interests of the people? The only thing that can bring permanent prosperity to an individual, family or nation, is to act fearlessly and faithfully in an upright way, guided by correct principles, in the interests of the country. What a contrast with such a course do the measures present, that are brought before us! If my appeal to principle on the floor of Parliament is not going to prevail, I want to know what is the use of our coming to Parliament at all? This Bill is nothing more or less than an effort of the Executive Government to usurp power so that they may place some of their supporters in office.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I call the hon. gentleman to order. He has told us that he has been more than twenty years in public life, and he knows it is unparliamentary—

HON. MR. POWER—I rise to a question of order. The hon. gentleman from Niagara can state a point of order, but he has no right to lecture another hon. member for being out of order.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER — The younger men in this body will see a complete change in the constitution of the Senate, if it is not abolished altogether, if they continue to accept the bills of one party without any discrimination, and they will have no one to blame for it but themselves. I regret it exceedingly. I have raised my voice in your interest hon. gentlemen. I know what the feeling of the people is, and I have merely discharged my duty in endeavoring to raise the Senate to its proper position in the country.

The motion was agreed to.

REAL PROPERTY IN THE TERRITORIES BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the third reading of Bill (10) "An Act respecting Real Property in the Territories."

HON. MR. ALEXANDER.

HON. MR. POWER—It will be remembered that we made one or two amendments to this Bill, and there were two or three others under consideration which were left over to be submitted to the Minister of Justice. Immediately after we rose at six o'clock, the Minister and Deputy Minister of Justice looked at the amendments which had been made, and at those suggested and which stood over for consideration. As to the one amendment which had been agreed to, the Deputy expressed strong objection to its adoption. The other two small amendments which had been suggested the Minister of Justice thought should be adopted; and I understood the motion was to go into Committee but we can do so now.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of making the amendments.

The motion was agreed to

HON. MR. ALLAN, from the Committee, reported the Bill with certain amendments, which were concurred in.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

LAND GRANTS TO ACTIVE MILITIA IN THE NORTH-WEST.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (142), "An Act to make further provision respecting grants of land to members of the Militia Force on active service in the North-West."

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I am sure this Bill meets with the acceptance of every hon. gentleman in this House, and I therefore move that it be now read the third time.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

ISLAND OF CAPE BRETON RAILWAY BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill (143) "An Act to authorize the construction of a railway from the Straits of Canso to Louisburg or Sydney, as a Public Work."

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I am very glad the Government have come to a decision to do their duty by a most important part of the Dominion. To think of the Government having constructed railways in every other direction and to have postponed to this moment the building of a railway through that most important part of the Dominion! I am very glad that the Government have come to their senses at last.

HON. MR. POWER—Although I was unable to agree with the hon. member from Woodstock a while ago, I cordially concur in his expression of opinion now. We can all join in congratulating Nova Scotia, and Cape Breton in particular, on having at last got what Cape Breton ought to have obtained several years ago. There are one or two features of this matter worthy of comment. It may seem ungracious to look a gift horse in the mouth, but there are two or three circumstances about this measure which I desire to be noted at any rate. One is this, that the legislation which is now before us is the result of the action of the local government of Nova Scotia in transferring the Eastern Extension Railway, the line from New Glasgow to the Strait of Canso, to the Dominion Government. A great many people found fault with the local government at the time they took that step, but I felt that they were right—that they were hardly able to operate that road satisfactorily themselves; and they were quite unable to extend it; and that therefore they did right to hand it over to the Dominion Government, which had the means to operate the existing road, and whose duty it was also to extend the line to its legitimate terminus at Sydney. The other fact which I think deserves to be noted is this; it is a somewhat singular thing that while the protestations and remonstrances of Conservative members from the island of Cape Breton failed in getting such a measure as we have now before us, the passing of the repeal resolutions by the House of Assembly of Nova Scotia has apparently done what the action of friends of the Government could not bring about; for it is rather remarkable that the introduction of this measure followed almost immediately on the adoption of the repeal resolutions by the Local Legislature of Nova Scotia. I am happy to see that in the supplementary estimates which have been laid on the tables of both Houses there are a couple of other railway items which are also due to the introduction of those repeal resolutions; and I cannot help feeling that, whatever may be the result of the attempt of the people of Nova Scotia to get repeal, already the passage of those resolutions has had some very beneficial effects, and I hope the beneficial effects of the resolutions adopted by the Local Assembly will continue—that we have not seen the last of them. My hon. friend from Charlottetown does not seem to quite agree with me; but I think there is hardly any doubt as to the truth of what I say. There is one fact which people here do not realize that Nova Scotia is not very unreasonable in being dissatisfied with the existing financial arrangements between herself and the Dominion. Nova Scotia has not troubled this Parliament a great deal. The Local Government at the instance of Parliament applied for certain improvements in the financial terms granted to the province, and not getting them, the Local Government have gone to the people on the question of Repeal. I wish just to say this as to the reasonableness of the complaint of the people of Nova Scotia.

HON. MR. CARVELL—What has that to do with it?

HON. MR. POWER—If my hon. friend will allow me I shall be done in a moment. It is not unreasonable, if hon. gentlemen will consider the fact that the province of Nova Scotia with a population of about 100,000 more than New Brunswick, receives annually from the Dominion Government about $100,000 less than New Brunswick does. Evidently there is some ground for complaint. I again express my gratification that this long-hoped for Cape Breton Railway appears now about to become a fact.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I think the facts are almost the reverse of those stated by my hon. friend. The fact is that the movement in Nova Scotia for repeal is strenuously opposed by Cape Breton, and my hon. friend, I have no doubt, can be made aware of that fact if he does not know it now. I can also say that the difficulties in regard to this legislation have not arisen in the Parliament of Canada, but elsewhere, as my hon. friend knows. I have no doubt the whole House will hail with satisfaction the bringing in of this Bill. It is a matter of justice to a very important portion of Canada. I have no doubt but for the sectional opposition in other quarters, we would have had justice done to Cape Breton before now.

HON. MR. POWER—No, no; there was no opposition.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—There was no opposition from any quarter to that.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I think there are members of this House who are sufficiently interested in Cape Breton not to let the hon. gentleman's remarks pass unchallenged.

HON. MR. McDONALD (C. B.)—I have to thank my hon. friend from Halifax for his kindly references to Cape Breton; but I deny that the Local Government of Nova Scotia is entitled to any credit for this measure. The Dominion Government showed its good will to Cape Breton two or three years ago. When Sir Charles Tupper adopted the policy of subsidizing local railways he did not forget the Island of Cape Breton. In 1883 the first subsidy towards building a road through the island was adopted in the House of Commons, but that was found to be insufficient. It was supplemented in 1884, and this year, I am glad to see that the Government has come down with a policy of building the line through Cape Breton as part of the Intercolonial Railway. I do not think it is fair for the hon. member from Halifax to claim any credit for the Government of

HON. MR. POWER.

Nova Scotia, for this. I do not believe the action of that Government had anything to do with it. As for the repeal resolutions, I may say that when they were announced by telegraph the council of the County of Cape Breton was in session; and immediately they answered them, so far as the Local Government was concerned, by unanimously passing a resolution asking for the separation of Cape Breton from Nova Scotia; and that was on the ground that they had never received that justice from the Province of Nova Scotia to which they were entitled. For that reason, I do not think my hon. friend should claim any credit for the Local Government in connection with this Bill.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD— I should like to have heard something from the hon. gentleman from Halifax with respect to this question of repeal in his province, what the object of it was, and why such resolutions were passed. It would be satisfactory to the House, and perhaps to the Dominion, if he had given us some information with respect to this movement in his own province. I think it is very unfortunate for the interests of Nova Scotia itself, and I must say I should be pleased to hear the opinion of the hon. gentleman as regards the propriety of the course which the local Government is taking with respect to the Bill.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman who is a very high authority on Parliament procedure knows the way in which he can get my opinion.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE— I think we may fairly congratulate the people of the Island of Cape Breton on the approach of the railway era in their country. I, for one, did not despair when some time ago we were discussing the question of connection with the Intercolonial Railway in the adjoining county of Pictou—I did not despair that perhaps before the end of the Session a vote would be taken for a railway in Cape Breton. But with reference to the remarks which fell from the hon. member from Halifax, if I could see more clearly than I do the connection between cause and effect, as he alleges—that the good feeling towards Cape Breton occurred about the same time some repeal resolutions were carried in the House of Assembly of Nova Scotia—if I could see cause and effect more clearly than I do, I might suggest to some of my hon. friends in the Local Legislature of Prince Edward Island that it would be well for them to pass repeal resolutions. Then, perhaps the Northumberland Straits tunnel would come in for a share of the good things which appear to be distributed so lavishly through Parliament; but I am afraid the case which the hon. member from Halifax stated has not been clearly made out, and that my hon. friends in the Island might compromise themselves without getting any good for it, and so, perhaps, it is better to let well alone.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time at length at the table.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that the 41st rule be suspended and that the said Bill be read the third time presently.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

METAPEDIA AND PASPEBIAC RAILWAY BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the third reading of Bill (144) "An Act respecting certain subsidies for a railway from Metapedia on the Intercolonial Railway to Paspebiac." He said: This is a Bill which re-arranges the subsidies for a railway from the Intercolonial Railway to Paspebiac. The Bill consists of a clause arranging that the subsidy which is provided by the Government shall be made applicable in a way to agree with the contract which has been made between Her Majesty's Government and the corporators of this road. It is entirely a matter of money, and I do not know that the House has any control over it, particularly in the way of amending the Bill.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the contract is made?

HON. MR. PLUMB—Yes. This merely re-arranges the subsidies. I move that the Bill be now read the second time at length at the table.

HON. MR. POWER—I think before the Bill is read the second time the hon. gentleman might explain its effects. We have had two or three measures already in connection with this railway, and as this is a matter of figures I think it requires some little explanation from the hon. gentleman to show what the effect there is.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—The preamble explains it.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The preamble of the Bill explains it as far as it can be explained.

HON. MR. POWER—No; the preamble of the Bill gives a little history of what has happened. It does not say what the financial effect of this measure will be.

HON. MR. PLUMB—If the hon. gentleman will read the preamble he will get the explanation, and I propose to have the preamble read here that the House may be made aware of the provisions of the first section.

HON. MR. POWER—This is a measure which is of some considerable consequence. As far as I can make out, it proposes to expend about $620,000 on a road from Metapedia to Paspebiac; and I believe that the Province of Quebec has granted something also towards this road.

HON. MR. PLUMB—It shows that it is a railway of merit.

HON. MR. POWER—Not necessarily. It shows there are pretty influential men behind the Bill. That is what those bills mean now-a-days.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—That is the way it should be.

HON. MR. POWER—The company which proposes to build this road is the one of which the hon. gentleman from the Gulf division is a director. I made a mistake about that the other day; and I think it only right to call the attention of the House to the fact that this is the company which I had in my mind; and there are one or two members of the House of Commons also directors of this company. I suppose that fact will account for the very liberal terms granted to the road. To my mind this is purely a local road, and the subsidy granted is very much larger than is usually given to such enterprises. I have heard it rumoured that one of the Ministers who represents the Province of Quebec in the Government, whose present seat is looked upon as being very insecure is likely to take refuge in the county of Bonaventure, where this $620,000 is to be spent by the Dominion Government; I do not know whether that is correct or not, but such is the rumour, and the hon. gentleman from the Gulf might inform us whether there is any truth in it or not. First this company got $3,200 per mile for 100 miles, and then a little later on $300,000 was voted for a branch of the Intercolonial Railway of twenty miles, and I understand that this Bill provides to give $6,400 a mile for a second twenty miles, and then to give $3,200 for the remaining sixty miles. I presume the Government will build the twenty miles, and next year we shall have another arrangement by which the Government will go on and build some more of the road, and the company will own it; and at the end the Government will have built the whole of this road and it will belong to the company. I think that is likely the sort of thing that will happen. I may be in error, but I do not think the country where this road is to run is likely to afford traffic enough to make the road a profitable one. Of course if the company do not pay anything for building, they do not want a very large business to make it profitable.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—If the hon. gentleman had travelled over that country his opinion of it would be different. It is a very extensive district, well settled, and one which has never received any aid for railways, while the other parts of the Dominion have received appropriations which have enabled them to construct their roads. I presume, from my knowledge of the district and the engineering difficulties on the line, that it is an enterprise which requires a larger subsidy than many other lines which have been aided by the Government. I happen to know a good deal about that part of the country. It is along the beautiful Baie de Chaleurs; and it is to give railway facilities to a class of people who deserve them. They pay their taxes for railways constructed in other parts of the country, while they themselves are isolated, especially in the winter. I think there is no question at all but that it is a deserving work; and this arrangement will enable the contractors to complete the road and will be of great benefit to a very large district containing a large population.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The real explanation is this. There is the first section of twenty miles which gets $300,000. The $3,200 which would alone have been applicable to the second section of twenty miles eastward from Metapedia is added. It is intended by this Bill to give the whole road a subsidy of $6,400 per mile. My hon. friend has stated that railway communication is greatly needed in that part of the country. The subsidy is not a large one. It has been granted to railways in the North-West and elsewhere, and to roads both in Ontario and Quebec. The hon. gentleman has already said that there is not a prospect of local traffic sufficient to make the road a profitable one, and therefore it is to be aided in this way. The hon. member has afforded me the strongest argument in favour of advancing this subsidy. It is not an excessive one. It has been the policy of the Government where it is necessary to open up railway communication through the country, to give subsidies, on the ground that the money belongs to the people, and if it can be returned to the people in that way to promote the traffic of the country, it is desirable to do so. Hon. gentlemen may say that at the present time the expenditures are large; but whatever depression there may be, is, I believe, a temporary one, and if hon. gentlemen take the financial statement of the country from the time the present Government came into power until now—if they take the surpluses and the deficits together, they will find there is a very large balance in favor of the Government. I do not intend to enter into a discussion on that subject. I think it is proper to state that the whole amount of subsidy given by the Dominion to this company is $6,400 per mile; and that is what is intended by this Bill.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time at length.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that the forty-first rule of the House be suspended so far as it relates to this Bill, and that the Bill be read the third time presently.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—Will the hon. gentleman state whether the payments are to be made on certificates or not?

HON. MR. PLUMB—All payments are made on certificates. I made a mistake in saying that for the last section the subsidy is only $3,200 per mile.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned at 9:50 p.m.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—Before the orders of the day are called I rise to a question of privilege. I find in the Government organ published here at the Capital, the Ottawa Citizen, in the report of the proceedings of the House of Commons of yesterday, the following remarks attributed to the Minister of Justice when speaking of the item for the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary:—

Mr. Thompson (Antigonish) said the Government had not interfered, but allowed the warden to appoint all his own guards. There might be politics to the extent that some persons had prophesied evil against the penitentiary and had done everything they could to make their predictions come true. He felt it his duty not to comment upon the case in view of the fact that an investigation would be had as to the cause of the trouble when the warden had sufficiently recovered.

Now this is not only a charge, but it is a declaration and a judgment that "Those who had prophesied had done everything they could to make their predictions come true"

As I am the only member to whom these words can apply, I may remind the House that on the 5th of last month I alluded to the revolt which had taken place in the Penitentiary of St. Vincent de Paul some few days previously, in the following words:—

"It is only a few weeks ago since I renewed my appeal to the Government to intervene before it was too late. Now that the evil predicted has taken place, now that one of the convicts has been shot dead, &c., &c."

I am surprised that the hon. minister, who is to be the judge in this matter, should have felt himself at liberty to pass judgment upon one who is not in any way connected with these troubles. I can only account for it by supposing that some officer of his department has calumniated me, and I may say that, if it is the case, it is not the first time that I have been so traduced. I regret this the more because of the fact that I have had occasion to hear of his honesty, his honorable, straightforward character, and his reputation as a man determined at all times and under all circumstances to do what is right. I had entertained the hope that the investigation, which is to take place, into the recent trouble at St. Vincent de Paul would be a thorough and impartial one. I cannot believe that I have been misled as to the hon. gentleman's character by those who have described his good qualities to me, and I therefore conclude that the words of the hon. minister, which I have just quoted, were spoken in the heat of debate, without due consideration of their effect. The hon. gentleman having but lately entered upon his duties as Minister of Justice, cannot know much of the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, except by hearsay; yet how decidedly he has expressed an opinion upon the present case, before the inquiry has taken place. This shews how easily even a minister of the Crown can be prejudiced by reports or conversations to which he listens. I hope the hon. gentleman will reserve his judgment upon any of the parties accused until the whole case is laid before him. I regret that the Hon. Minister has already shown himself to be laboring under such prejudices. Nevertheless, under the circumstances which I have mentioned, and in view of the fact that the hon. gentleman has reiterated his promise that an investigation will shortly be made into the troubles at the Penitentiary, I feel bound to say no more on the subject, further than to solemnly affirm that the insinuation conveyed in the words of the Hon. Minister is not warranted by the facts, and that the cause of these troubles, will be found to come from another quarter. I only ask that this enquiry shall be an impartial one: surely that is not asking too much of the hon. gentleman who has the matter in his hands. I merely ask for justice to all.

RETURNS TO ADDRESSES.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Before the Orders of the Day are called I desire to ask the leader of the Government when those papers that I moved for on the 28th will be brought down. The following is the address I moved:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before this House, copies of all applications, declarations and affidavits in connection with claim to lot number sixty-six and the bay privilege, Ste. Ann's, Lorette River, Manitoba.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I gave the hon. gentleman the answer that the information would be brought down. I handed him the paper given me. I have not got the answer here.

HON. MR. MCINNES—No reply was given. I received a memorandum, but it did not touch the question. The address was carried and I understood that the correspondence would be brought down, and I desire now to know when it will be brought down, because in all probability, the House will adjourn in a day or two, and I desire the information asked for before prorogation.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I gave the hon. gentleman the answer I was instructed to give. If the answer is insufficient the hon. gentleman will probably have to move again; and if he does so I will see that the information is furnished.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I respectfully submit that that is a most unusual course. I moved for copies of certain documents which I have reason to believe are in the Department of the Interior, and I received an answer totally different from what the resolution demanded. The memorandum had not the slightest bearing on the information I desire to get, or the question I put. Now, after that address has been carried, at the eleventh hour of the Session am I to be asked to put another notice on the paper when the hon. gentleman knows full well there will be no time to get the answer this Session? It is merely putting it off for another year, in order to shield certain parties.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I gave the hon. gentleman the paper I had in my hands. I have no other means of conveying information to the hon. gentleman than through the Department. If that answer does not suit him, I have only to say that that answer cannot be amended. I asked him to say wherein it was defective and he declined to do so. He under-scored four or five lines, but did not state wherein it was defective. He holds the paper in his desk, I presume, for I handed him the document. He wanted to see it, and I gave it to him.

HON. MR. MCINNES—At the request of the hon. gentleman I underlined some words in the reply to show where it was defective, and I handed it to the member of the Government in this House, the Hon. Mr. Smith, and he has it; I have not got it. It is three or four days since I gave it to him. The reason why I call the attention of the House to this matter is that I spoke privately to the member of the Government here and he told me I would have to give notice again in order to get the correspondence I desire.

HON. MR. SMITH—I was handed the paper underlined, as the hon. gentleman says, and I took it to the Minister and he said, "will the hon. gentleman please to make a new application and I will then get him all it is possible to obtain," and I have told the hon. gentleman that. I cannot take this paper with the interlineation and underlining to the Minister and explain what is wanted and have it altered. It must go through the proper form if the hon. gentleman wants to get any more information. The officer of the Department cannot do any more for him. If there were ten answers given perhaps the hon. gentleman would say none of them suited him. Let him apply in the proper way and he will obtain the information he requires.

HON. MR. MCINNES—With all due respect to what has been said by the leader of the Government I say that I put it in the regular form and in a constitutional way; and that the answer I received—what purported to be an answer—had no bearing whatever on it; and there is no necessity for me to move again, the House having already passed the resolution and ordered that the Government bring down the documents I asked for.

THE SPEAKER—Was it a question or a motion?

HON. MR. MCINNES—It was an address calling for certain papers.

THE SPEAKER—Did it pass?

HON. MR. MCINNES—Yes.

THE SPEAKER—Then the papers would be brought down according to the motion; the only question would be when the Government would be able to produce them.

HON. MR. MCINNES—But the member for the Government says I will require to put a new notice on the paper to bring them down.

HON. MR. POWER—This is certainly a very extraordinary thing. The Governor in Council have taken upon themselves a great many powers; and now they seem to take to themselves the power of deciding what common English shall mean—that it shall not mean what it does mean to the minds of ordinary people.

THE SPEAKER—I think the hon. gentleman was under the impression it was a question instead of a motion. An address carried by the House speaks for itself. The question is whether the Government will be able to comply with it.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The Government were asked that an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General, praying that His Excellency would cause to be laid before this House copies of all applications, declarations and affidavits in connection with claim to lot No. 66 and the hay privilege, St. Ann's, Lorette River, Manitoba. I gave the hon. gentleman the information that had been furnished. He said that the paper was not satisfactory. I asked him to state in what way it was not satisfactory and I put it in his hands. The address was passed; consequently those papers, if there are any, that are not brought down will be brought down under the address. The hon. gentleman can hardly complain if a notice which was only given on Friday last could not be complied with today, if it involved any amount of departmental work.

HON. MR. McINNES—I gave the notice on Wednesday last.

HON. MR. PLUMB—On Friday the 28th May the address was carried. The hon. gentleman does not think that because he gave notice on Wednesday the Government should commence preparing papers before the address was carried.

HON. MR. McINNES—What I complain of is this that the only reply I got to that address was simply that a Crown grant had been issued sometime last month to a certain individual; but it did not touch upon the copy of the application or the declaration or affidavits in connection with the lot at all. That is what I wanted, I did not ask for the information which the hon. gentleman volunteered; and what I ask for now is that that correspondence will be brought down. It can be brought down without delay; it is in the Department of the Interior, and can be brought down at any moment if they so desire

THE SPEAKER—This discussion is entirely irregular. There is no doubt the motion having been passed if such papers are in the possession of the Government they must be brought down. If the Government had any objections to producing the papers they should have said so before the address was carried; but the address having been presented to the Government the papers should have been brought down.

HON. MR. SMITH—There was no objection to the address and the answer was brought down but the hon. gentleman was not satisfied with it.

HON. MR. McINNES—The answer was not brought down. The Government thought proper to bring down something not asked for and totally irrelevant.

HON. MR. SMITH—The hon. gentleman complained of the answer and I then spoke to the head of the Department and he said it was a reply; he also said, if the hon. gentleman wanted any more information he should apply again and he would furnish all the papers asked for. But I could not have him underscore line after line and keep in my memory what the hon. gentleman wanted and then take that back to the Department and explain it to them.

HON. MR. McINNES—All I ask is that the leader of the Government here bring a copy of the memorandum or the memorandum itself at half past seven tonight and I will ask the House to say whether it is relevant to the question or not.

HON. MR. SMITH—If I have the paper I will bring it. I think it is upstairs in my papers.

HON. MR. POWER—Perhaps the hon. gentleman in charge of the House would say when the papers, in respect to the seizure of dynamite in Halifax, will be laid on the table. I understood he had them ready ten days ago.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I can say to the hon. gentleman that that paper and the other papers to which he refers were in my hands several days ago. They were taken from my hands to the Department from which those reports are sent to the House; I have not heard of them since but I will take care to make inquiry to-morrow morning.

HON. MR. POWER—Did the hon. gentleman ask to have the papers with respect to the seizure of dynamite in Montreal brought down?

HON. MR. PLUMB—I think they will be brought down also. They wish to look over the papers to see if there are any private letters among them before they are brought down.

PRINTING BUREAU BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the third reading of Bill (132) "An Act respecting the Department of Public Printing and Stationery."

The motion was agreed to, the Bill was read the third time and passed on a division.

THE RULES OF THE SENATE.

REPORT OF THE STANDING ORDERS' COMMITTEE ADOPTED

HON. MR. LACOSTE moved the adoption of the fifteenth report of the Committee on Standing Orders and Private Bills. He said—The members of this House have seen the nature of the alterations to be made to the fifty-first rule and the seventy-second rule. They are in the Minutes and Proceedings of yesterday's sittings of this House. The report merely recommends an alteration of these rules so that notices of applications for Private Bills and Divorce Bills, shall apply to the North-West Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned at 3.50 p.m.

SECOND SITTING.

The Speaker took the Chair at 8 p.m.

Routine proceedings.

CONTINGENT ACCOUNTS OF THE SENATE.

FOURTH REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ADOPTED.

HON. MR. HOWLAN moved the adoption of the Fourth Report of the Select Committee on the Contingent Accounts of the Senate. He said: This report is a very satisfactory one, so far as the accounts are concerned. They appear to have been kept in a very satisfactory manner. There is one item to which the report refers; that is with reference to the disposal of the fees for Private Bills and Bills of Divorce. It has been usual for the Clerk to take all fees arising from Private Bills and Bills of Divorce and send them to the Receiver General; but the expenses for the printing of these Bills, and the stenographer's fees for reporting the evidence in Divorce Bills, are charged against us, while we get no credit for the fees; and this report empowers the Clerk to retain the fees which are received from these sources, paying out of them all expenses which are occasioned thereby, and handing the balance to the Receiver General. The fees last year were $1,882.71, for which we get no credit, while the expenses on Private Bills was $491.34, and the evidence in divorce cases $471.81, both of which sums are charged against us, making a very considerable addition in the amount of expenditure of the Senate. The report recommends that for the future the expenses of printing Bills and for taking the evidence in divorce cases shall be deducted from the amount of the fees, and the balance handed to the Receiver General. The next item provides for the supply of stationery for the present year. The Report empowers the clerk to procure for the use of the Chamber, the rooms and offices, some inexpensive paper, that paper to be got where it can be purchased cheapest, whether in Canada or the United States; and that all portions of the stationery necessary to send to England for shall be purchased from S. King & Co. The next item recommends that the salary of Mr. C. P. Gibbs be increased to $1,000 per annum, dating from the 1st July, 1886; and the next is an expenditure for certain Statutes required to complete the sets for the Senate Chamber and offices.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—What is the present salary of Mr. Gibbs?

HON. MR. HOWLAN—About $950. It is increased $50. It will be remembered that two years ago Mr. Gibbs started at $800, to be increased $50 a year. It is now $950 and this report recommends that it be increased to $1,000.

The motion was agreed to.

RETURNS TO ADDRESSES

HON. MR. PLUMB—We have been so anxious to meet the wishes of the hon. member for New Westminster that during the recess of the House my hon. friend, the Minister, has procured from the Department a paper in further explanation of the answer which was given to the hon. gentleman the other day. It will be understood by the House that it is impossible for the Department to invent papers. Gentlemen may have an idea that there are papers; but of course when there are none, it is impossible to bring them down. It will be also remembered by the House that I handed the hon. gentleman the answer without taking a copy of it, and when I spoke this afternoon I did not know that he had handed it back to my hon. friend. We have not got the answer which we furnished him; but in substance, although condensed, it will be found to be very much what I am about to read. This is a letter from the Deputy Minister of the department, as follows:—

“In regard to the subject of our interview this afternoon I beg to state as follows:

Lot 66, in the parish of St. Anne, was awarded by the land board in favor of Auguste Harrison. This award was in ratification of a former decision by the late Chief Justice Wood, given in his capacity as Commissioner for the settlement of disputed claims and it was made under the provisions of the Manitoba Act. Accordingly a patent issued to Harrison on the 9th April, 1886. Appurtenant to the lot is a grant of scrip for $200, in commutation of the hay and common privilege; but this scrip has not yet issued, owing to the fact that Mr. Auguste Harrison claims this lot through Thomas Harrison, and in the conveyance from the latter no mention is made of the scrip; consequently it is assumed the right to it was not conveyed, and acting under the decision of the Department of Justice that assignments made subsequent to the date of the order-in-Council recognizing the right to the outer two miles must specifically include this right; otherwise it must be held to be excluded; the scrip has not issued. The assignment from Thos. Harrison to Auguste Harrison bears date 28th October, 1885.”

HON. MR. MCINNES—I am sorry I have not here a copy of the notice of motion I gave a week ago calling for certain papers in connection with the lot in question. What I asked for this afternoon was copies of applications, declarations and affidavits in connection with this lot, and not for the name of the person who owns it. Now I did not ask for the information the hon. gentleman has deigned to give. I did not ask for any letter from the Deputy Minister of Justice philosophizing on the manner by which this Harrison came into possession of the lot. I simply asked for certain documents that were in the Department of the Interior, the applications for the lot, the declarations that were made in connection with it, and everything that was necessary in order to obtain a crown grant or patent for the lot. I have not got any of them. This answer is no answer at all, and I think that the order of this House ought to be respected and not dealt with in the trivial way in which this Government has here dealt with this matter. If there was any objection to bringing down those papers it was the duty of the Government to object to the motion; but there was no objection made; the order went forth that the Governor-in-Council was to bring down these papers. They have not been brought down, and it must be quite apparent to every hon. gentleman present that they do not desire to bring them down.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Hear, hear.

HON. MR. MCINNES—In fact, I say more than that. They dare not bring them down because it may involve some high officials, and I fear near relations of some Ministers. It would be very apt to place them beyond or behind the bars if they got their deserts. The Government are in a position—I fearlessly state here, and I have the best evidence for saying it—they are in a position to produce these papers. I repeat it, all the papers I have asked for are in the possession of those in charge of the office of the Interior, and they can bring them down if they only desire to do so.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I do not think that the intemperate address my hon. friend has made calls for any argument from me at all. I have already shown him that this lot was awarded by the late Chief Justice Wood.

HON. MR. McINNES—I never asked how it was awarded.

HON. MR. PLUMB—And the hon. gentleman must see that if there was any claim to this lot it is in the courts of Manitoba; all the papers must be in the courts there; and although the hon. gentleman has gone out of his way to charge the members of this Government with some act of corruption in connection with it, I will not ask this hon. House to consider whether the statement made by the hon. gentleman is at all warranted.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—It is.

HON. MR. McINNES—The hon. gentleman will excuse me; what I asked for—

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman can have his say after I get through. I do not intend the hon. gentleman shall be the minister of interruptions as I have been termed.

HON. MR. McINNES—I would not deprive my hon. friend of that title for the world, it is so appropriate.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The only information I can give the hon. gentleman is what I have endeavored to procure for him and what I have already given him. Throughout this matter I have endeavored to act in a spirit which is very different from that of the hon. gentleman towards those whom I represent. I have endeavored to treat him with the utmost courtesy. I gave him the former statement which I procured. I know nothing about what the hon. gentleman had behind his application. I now state that this lot which he speaks of has been awarded by the decision of the Court of Manitoba, by the late Chief Justice Wood, who was no friend of this Government, to Auguste

Harrison. I also give him to understand that under that decision and under the direction of the Minister of Justice certain papers have been prepared and issued and certain titles have been given, that the hay lot of which he speaks has been reserved, because it was not carried under the decision of the Court, and the Minister of Justice, and was not considered to be carried under the conveyance. I presume that the information is all that can be given to the hon. gentleman; at any rate it is all I am instructed to give.

HON. MR. McINNES—That may be! The Government will only give what suits them.

HON. MR. PLUMB—And if the hon. gentleman chooses to draw inferences he can do so. My hon. friend and myself have been anxious to further the views of the hon. gentleman. My hon. friend went out of his way to ask the Department what information there was on the subject; and I have given it. The hon. gentleman will be no better off, in my judgment—and I believe in the judgment of this House—if he pursues this inquiry further than he has now done. However, there is nothing to prevent him pursuing it. I have given him all the information in my power, and all I can give him.

HON. MR. McINNES—I have just to draw the attention of the House to one thing. The leader of the House informs us that this lot was awarded to a certain person by the late Chief Justice Wood. Now I do not question his statement at all in that respect; but I would like to know if that lot was awarded to any individual without an application being made for it? How did it come to be in litigation? Was the lot awarded to any person without declarations and affidavits being made in order to comply with the Lands Act, and thereby obtain a patent? The thing is perfectly absurd; it carries an absurdity on the very face of it. I am not asking who owns the lot, but I am asking for the documents that were placed in the hands of the Minister or the Deputy Minister of the Interior before the patent issued. That is what I am asking for;

that is what I want; that is what this House ordered should be brought down, and I shall hold the Government responsible if they do not comply with the order of this House.

The House was adjourned during pleasure.

After some time the House was resumed.

FRANCHISE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that they had passed Bill (138) "An Act to amend the Act respecting the Electoral Franchise and the Dominion Elections' Act 1874."

The Bill was read the first time.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that the 41st Rule be suspended and that the Bill be read the second time presently.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

HON. MR. VIDAL, from the Committee reported the Bill without amendment.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that the Bill be read the third time presently.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE — There seems no necessity for pressing this Bill through to-night; the House is to meet to-morrow.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I think it would be desirable in order to stimulate the other House to get through with the work, and I ask the hon. gentleman if he will waive his objection and permit the Bill to be read the third time presently.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—No.

HON. MR. PAQUET—(In French)—I hope that the third reading of the Bill will be postponed until to-morrow. I want to see it in French and ascertain whether it may be necessary to move certain amendments. I hope the hon. gentleman will not press his motion.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I think the hon. gentleman is too reasonable and sensible to delay the business of the Session; and I am sure if he had the French version of the Bill before him he would not have the slightest objection to it.

HON. MR. POWER—I hope the hon. gentleman from Lavallière will not press his objection. It may be that the Bill is not perfect; I do not think it is myself; but then it is perhaps as good as we are likely to get this Session; and there is no particular objection to deferring its passage. Supposing the amendments of which the hon. gentleman speaks could be carried in this Chamber—which I think is not probable—they certainly would not be carried in the other House; and the effect would be simply to delay the closing of Parliament without any advantage accruing from the delay. As I said just now, the Bill is not perfect. I regret to notice that one very important matter has not been dealt with—one which causes much dissatisfaction with the Franchise Bill—which has been found of great practical inconvenience—that there has been no uniformity of procedure. Each Revising officer—I speak of the Lower Provinces—is a law unto himself; and it is to be regretted that when the Government introduced this measure amending the Franchise Act, they did not provide for uniform procedure in the Courts held by these Revising officers. To show what I mean: some of the Revising Officers agree to accept the declaration of one person on behalf of a number of others, the declaration being under the Act of 1874, as being sufficient prima facie evidence to justify him in putting the persons named in the declaration on the preliminary list and leaving them there until the final revision. Other revising officers have thought it necessary that there should be a declaration from each individual whose name is asked to be put on the list, while other revising officers—and this was the case with the officer of the county of Halifax, I know—insist that they will not put any name on the list unless evidence such as would be satisfactory in a Court of Justice on a trial is placed before them. Now I think it is to be regretted that when the law was being amended the Government did not provide for uniformity in this respect. However, I think that, as far as one can gather from hearing the Bill read at the table, as a general thing the changes it makes are improvements; and as we are not likely to get any other Bill this year, I think we have nothing to do but accept the measure. There is this practical objection to our delaying this Bill here; there was a sort of whisper abroad that certain amendments were likely to be moved in this House which had been abandoned in the House of Commons; and I think that probably the passing of the estimates through the other House will be considerably accelerated by the third reading of this Bill this evening; and I am sure that all the members of both parties are anxious to get away to their homes.

HON. MR. PAQUET (In French)—Before proceeding with the third reading of the Bill, I ask permission to make some remarks. I do not wish to be behind my hon. friend from Alma in expressing my sincere thanks for the esteem which he entertains for me. I hope this House will readily understand that I have not offered a factious opposition to any measure, and I am willing to pay him the same compliment. But I desire to offer two amendments to this Bill. It is objected that if we amend it we will retard the session and postpone prorogation. How could that be? Is it not true that the House of Commons has sent us a Bill which we have only heard read at the table this moment, which has not been before us, and which we have had no time to study properly? Would not the Commons be disposed to reciprocate and adopt, or reject the amendments which we may have to propose without waiting to have them printed? The following are the amendments which I should like to have made in the Bill. It seems strange to me that we require artisans and professional men to be in receipt of $300 of annual income to have a vote, when we give the franchise to a lessee of a property who pays $20 rent per annum. Would it not be better to reduce the amount at least one-half, and fix it at not more than $150? The object of the Bill is to extend the suffrage, and I regard the fixing of a limit of $300 as contrary to the principle and spirit of the Bill. My second proposition is one which will be considered equally reasonable; it is to place on the footing of a co-proprietor, a person who has transferred his property to his son or sons, without demanding that he shall derive from the property an income of $100 in money, or equivalent value. We do not demand anything of the kind in the case of a co-proprietor of a property valued at $150. Many of these parents transfer their properties to their families while they themselves are yet comparatively young, and why should we not give the Franchise to men who would exercise it intelligently, especially when, in many cases, we would be perpetrating a great injustice in relegating them to obscurity? Nothing could afford greater pleasure to those old men than to feel that they are regarded as being still of some importance in the community. It would rejuvenate them to feel that they would be in a position to vote in elections. We give the Franchise to a tenant who pays but $20 rent per annum, and would it not be right and proper, and consistent with justice and fair play, to give a similar right to a class who, as a rule, are quite as intelligent and capable of using the Franchise properly? We know that they would exercise their right as good citizens in the interests of the country. I remember that in 1874 when the Liberal party decided to grant a pension to the veterans of the war of 1812, I called on some of the old men myself who were given this paltry sum of $20 by the Government, and I can never forget the joy, the extreme pleasure and gratification, which they felt on finding that they had not been forgotten by their country. I am satisfied that the amendments which I have suggested, to preserve to them their right to vote, will be equally well received, and I believe that the Government would be doing a wise act in legislating to preserve to these veterans of electoral contests their rights as electors. These are the observations which I desire to make, and I beg the House to believe that I have no other desire in view in suggesting these amendments than to preserve to these good citizens, these patriots, a right which they would so much appreciate, and of which they would be so proud. Nothing else has led me to take part in this discussion under the circumstances. I do not think that the amendments which I have suggested would cause any delay: I think they would meet with unanimous approval in both Houses; but even if they should cause the session to last a day or two longer, I think they are of sufficient importance to warrant the delay.

HON. MR. GIRARD—(In French)—I think my hon. friend will find that it is too late to amend this Bill and I hope that he will not persist in his objections. He must be aware that the measure was well received on both sides of the House in the other Chamber; it comes to us with the approval of the body which is directly interested in its passage. I think it would be an act of injustice to the members of the House of Commons to delay the prorogation of Parliament for the purpose of making amendments to a Bill which has for its object the regulation of the manner in which their own elections shall be held, and which, as the hon. gentleman will see, guards the rights of the electors. It is quite possible that the Bill is susceptible of improvement in some respects, but my hon. friend should remember that there is nothing perfect in this life, and I trust that he will accept the Bill as it stands, and not persist in pressing amendments which can have no other effect than to delay the prorogation of Parliament. It is not wise to open an old sore. If we provoke a discussion in the other Chamber on this Bill, it is quite probable that the session will be prolonged for a few days more, when, as we all know, the work of the session is almost completed. For all these reasons, I trust that the hon. gentleman will withdraw his objection and allow the Bill to pass.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—I suppose the object of the hon. member in delaying the third reading of the Bill would be with the expectation of having it amended. If that could be accomplished without prolonging the session, or if, in fact, the amendment was of such an important character that a majority of this House would be disposed to adopt it, then the delay, of course, would be reasonable; but taking all the circumstances into consideration, as both parties seem to be agreed that this Bill is a good one, and as it is one which is peculiar to the powers that belong to the House of Commons, I do not think that the delay would accomplish the object which the hon. gentleman has in view. In saying so I do not intend to assert for one moment that we have not the right to amend the Bill, but under the circumstances I hope that he will not press his objections.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned at 9:25 p.m.

THE SENATE,

Ottawa, Wednesday, June 2nd, 1886.

The Speaker took the chair at 3 o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THE FORTY-FIRST RULE OF THE HOUSE SUSPENDED.

HON. MR. SMITH moved that the forty-first rule of the House be suspended for the remainder of the session.

The motion was agreed to.

PROHIBITION OF SUBSTITUTES FOR BUTTER BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (149), "An Act to prohibit the manufacture and sale of certain substitutes for butter."

The Bill was read the first time.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that the Bill be read the second time at length at the table.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the third reading of the Bill.

HON. MR. PAQUET.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I hope the hon. gentleman is in a position to give us some information about this Bill. I have read a little on the subject myself, and the result of my reading is that good oleomargarine is better than bad butter. When it is good of its kind, it is a cheap article which poor families would prefer to inferior butter. Has the hon. gentleman any information to give us on the subject?

HON. MR. PLUMB—I only know what the general traditions are of the manufacture of oleomargarine; but it is rather an unsavory subject to discuss. There may be very good oleomargarine and very bad butter, neither of which I would recommend for the hon. gentleman's own use, or for use in his kitchen. There can be but one feeling in regard to the prohibition of this nefarious article—I use the term advisedly. It has been proved that it is made of the most wretched offal—the fat of over-heated and diseased animals, and it has been found impossible to distinguish these materials, owing to the manner in which they have been blended. Its manufacture must be either prohibited altogether or the public must be poisoned by the use of a material which is not only detrimental to the health of those who use it, but seriously injures the farming interests, which I am sure my hon. friend is as desirous of promoting as anybody in this House.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

BOUNTY ON PIG IRON BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (150) "An Act respecting the bounty on pig iron manufactured in Canada from Canadian ore."

The Bill was read the first time.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that the Bill be read the second time at length at the Table.

HON. MR. POWER—Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain how this becomes necessary. When the bounty on pig iron was introduced some years ago we were given to understand that this was one of those industries which only needed a little encouragement at the start and that it was to be very prosperous. We find now, after a lapse of some four or five years, that it is not thriving and needs the props still.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentlemen's own province is more interested in this measure than any other portion of the Dominion. I have not familiarized myself with the working of the pig iron industry; but I understand it has been represented to the Government and proved to their satisfaction, that in order to prevent that industry being closed up, which I presume the hon. gentleman would not care to advocate, it is necessary to extend this bounty for three years longer.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time at length.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the third reading of the Bill.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—Can the hon. gentleman state to the House on what quantity of pig iron the bounty has been paid up to this period?

HON. MR. PLUMB—I regret to say that I can not furnish the information. The Bill has only been placed in my hands to-day, but I presume the hon. member will find the information that he desires in the debates of the House of Commons on the subject.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

THE TARIFF BILL AMENDMENT.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (143) "An Act further to amend the Act relating to duties on customs and the importation or exportation of goods into or from Canada."

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the first, second and third times and passed on a division.

SUBSIDIES IN AID OF RAILWAYS
BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (146) "An Act to authorize the granting of certain subsidies for and in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned.

The Bill was read the first time.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that the Bill be read the second time.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—When we come to look at a measure like this, giving such large subsidies to a number of railways from end to end of the Dominion, and find that time is not given us to even read the Bill—I can only say that if the Senate submits to the humiliating position in which this Government places it, session after session, bringing before it bills of such importance when it is no longer possible to examine them, I only hope that the people may not judge them very severely.

HON. MR. POWER—I think the hon. gentleman from Woodstock is quite right. This abuse has been in existence, I believe, almost since Confederation, but it has been getting worse with each succeeding year. At the end of every session when the Government are attacked for sending important measures up to this Chamber at the very end of the Session when there is no opportunity to discuss them, there has been a half promise from the leader of the Government that they will try to do better next time: but instead of doing better they keep on doing worse each succeeding year. I cannot help noticing that this abuse exists to a greater extent this session than ever before. It has been true in other sessions that, as to one or two Bills which were detained for a long time in the House of Commons and over which there has been a great deal of discussion, we have not had printed copies here, but this is the first session I know of in which we have had to take a whole succession of Bills, copies of which were not before us, and which we have had no opportunity to consider. This is a Bill containing votes of money, and we cannot alter it; consequently it is of no use opposing it unless we wish to reject it, but still we ought at least to have an opportunity to know what it contains. I believe this Bill has been distributed, but two or three of the Bills which have passed to-day have never been distributed here. If the Senate wishes to be respected throughout the country, and respected by the other branches of Parliament it will have to assert its dignity by rejecting some Government measure introduced, as this has been, at a time when it is too late to give it any consideration. I have not been many years in the Senate, but since I have come here I have observed that this House has continually gone down in public estimation and influence, as one of the branches of Parliament.

HON. MR. ROBATAILLE—Hear, hear.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman from Gulf Division is very ready to laugh because I have said something that might be misconstrued. I was not vain enough to suppose that my appearance in the Senate was calculated either to raise or lower the Senate in public estimation, but I submit to the judgment of the country and of Parliament, whether the kind of legislation which has been passed through this House during this session for the benefit of the hon. gentleman and his relatives and connections, is not calculated to lower the House and Parliament generally in the estimation of the country more than anything I have done. The hon. gentleman is the last member of the House who should laugh at the degradation of the Senate. I was about to say, when I was interrupted, that there were three members of the Government in this House when I came in here: some time before that there had been four.

HON. MR. WARK—Five.

HON. MR. POWER—And at an earlier date I believe there had been five. The number has gradually decreased until last year we had, at the close of the session, only one member of the Government, a departmental officer, here. Now we have no departmental officer in the Senate, and I presume if things go on in the same way for another year we shall have no member of the Government in this House at all. The truth is, this Government which professes, or at any rate is supposed, to be in an especial way the friend of the Senate as at present constituted, is doing its best to degrade the Senate in the eyes of the public and to diminish its value as one of the branches of Parliament. I tell hon. gentlemen, without the slightest hesitation, that the conduct of the Government and of the Conservative party is paving the way for the abolition of this House. I am beginning to think now that probably that would not be a great catastrophe, but there are other gentlemen who think differently, and I cannot help feeling, and people outside, who are familiar with the state of public feeling on this question, and who are not very directly interested themselves, do feel that the prospect of the abolition of this House, or its reconstruction, is growing every day. I regret that the Senate does not resent the way in which it is treated. It seems to be taken for granted that no matter how contemptuously the Government treat us, we are bound to accept all these things and be thankful because the indignity comes from the hands of the Premier.

HON. MR. ROBITAILLE—I hardly expected to receive such a castigation at the hands of the hon. gentleman from Halifax because I laughed when he said that from the time he entered the Senate it had begun to go down and become degraded. I certainly never intended to insinuate that he was in earnest in using that expression; but he took it in a serious way, and then began to try to cast some reflection on my presence here and on the Baie de Chaleur Railway Company. I said nothing the other day when the hon. gentleman thought proper to make statements here which were absolutely incorrect and unfounded—statements which had been made in another place and which he repeated here. Under the circumstances, I think it is nothing but right to say a few words concerning this matter. We have not time to go over the whole history of that transaction; however, we can find it all in a speech that was made the other day in another place. The fact is this, that the company had been organized and subsidized by the Government and parliament. The contract was entered into between the company and the Government in order to carry out the vote that had been made by parliament. The subsidy for the 100 miles of railway amounts altogether to $620,000—that is $6,200 per mile. Out of that it has been stated that the company are going to make huge profits—a fortune out of it for every one of its members—namely, three or four hundred thousand dollars out of this subsidy of $620,000. I think it is not necessary to answer such figures; they speak for themselves. The dishonesty of the speeches made in another place and in this chamber is evident; they cannot have been intended in the interest of the road or of the public, but to serve the interest of a leading member in the other House who usurped the position he occupies, who has no platform of his own, and who finds himself obliged to go to the electors on a policy of slander and mud-throwing.

HON. MR. POWER—I rise to a question of order. The hon. gentleman has no right to make such references to a member of the House of Commons. The hon. gentleman spoke as though I had been representing what had been stated by another person. The fact is, at the time I spoke on the subject, I had not seen the speech made by the leader of the Opposition with respect to the railway bill which has been referred to. After I had spoken a gentleman showed me the Globe containing a report of the speech made by the hon. member for West Durham in another place. I may mention, as bearing on the value of the hon. gentleman's statements, that although there were two or three members in the House of Commons who were interested with the hon. gentleman from the Gulf division in that railway, none of them rose to controvert or dispute any of the statements made by the leader of the Opposition.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—Can the hon. gentleman who conducts the Government business in this House inform us what is the total amount granted in subsidies by this Bill?

HON. MR. PLUMB—It is about $2,324,665; it is granted to thirty-one different railways and the average grant is about $80,000. If the hon. gentleman will look at the Bill, he will see that it is intended to aid a great many small connecting links of railway. There are only one or two large subsidies in the Bill at all; the rest are small subsidies, some of them as low as $11,000.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

SUBSIDIES IN LAND TO RAILWAYS BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (147) "An Act to authorize the grant of certain subsidies in land for the construction of the railways therein mentioned."

The Bill was read the first time.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that the Bill be read the second time at length.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—We cannot fail to perceive that the bills which are now presented within 48 hours of the end of the session are the most important measures before Parliament. Can anything equal the contempt shown for this Chamber? They treat us simply as a mere pocket borough of the First Minister, who probably thinks he has placed us here to do his will only and not to do our duty to the public. He as much as says, "Sirs, draw your $1000 a year and ratify and register everything the Government chooses to bring in." If there is anything that can sink the First Minister in public estimation more than another, it is the manner in which he treats the Senate of the Dominion. If the people demand a change in the constitution of the Senate we owe it to Sir John Macdonald's gross treatment, selfishly using the Senate for his own partizan purposes.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—These bills which we are passing in a hurried manner are money bills which this House cannot amend. They dispose of public money and public lands in the way in which the House of Commons choose to vote. We certainly have the right to reject such bills, but we all know that we do not wish to do so; and therefore the observations of the hon. gentleman with respect to these bills are of no avail at all.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the third reading of the Bill.

HON. MR. SCOTT—I do not rise for the purpose of resisting the third reading of the Bill, but I think there should be no objection to the expression of a little honest indignation when these Bills are brought down so late in the session and it is assumed that we will pass them without discussion. The Bill under consideration is one that might fairly be discussed, from many of the circumstances connected with it. It is one which in the main I favor, but it is quite proper that Senators should be given an opportunity to criticize measures of that kind, and therefore the Government should not find fault with any member who chooses to complain that such measures are brought into this Chamber at too late a period of the session to receive proper consideration. I know that this kind of protest has been made session after session in the Senate for the last ten or fifteen years. I know it was made, under different circumstances, when I was on the other side of the House. These are measures which any Government must necessarily bring into the Senate at a very late period. At the same time, when that does occur it is clearly not the province of the Government to check free debate, which is only reasonable and proper, on a measure of such importance. I do not hesitate to say that I favor this measure. I have always advocated the granting of lands to railways in the North-West. I think it is a wise policy, and one which I hope to see enlarged in the future instead of diminished. Those are my own views, but, at the same time, they may not be shared by other hon. gentlemen, and therefore it is quite within their province, and fair and reasonable, if they complain that a Bill of this importance comes to us at so late a period in the session.

HON. MR. PLUMB.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I have no doubt my hon. friend from Sackville was moved very largely in what he said by the violeent tone in which the hon. gentleman from Woodstock attacked the Government. The hon. member from Ottawa checks himself somewhat in his criticism by remembering that the fault, if fault there be, is one with which both parties are chargeable. When the hon. member was the leader of the Government in this House many instances occurred in which Bills of the greatest importance were brought to the Senate at the last moment, when there was no time to discuss them. I do not remind him of it in the way of recrimination but to show that these things are almost unavoidable in the nature of the two Houses.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Not at all, not at all.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I shall not notice the hon. member's unseemly interruptions.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—It is ridiculous—ridiculous!

HON. MR. PLUMB—I would remind the hon. member from Ottawa that one of the most important measures ever introduced into the Parliament of Canada originated in the House of Commons upon a resolution introduced, I think, on the 10th day of May, that it was ordered to a second reading on either the 15th or 17th of May, two or three days before the prorogation of Parliament and only two days before it was sent up to the Senate. That Bill, which has affected this country perhaps more than any other measure ever passed in Parliament, was introduced in this House at the very last day, in the afternoon, if one may say so. I am not blaming any one for it. No doubt it was a necessity. Bills of that character are necessarily delayed in their passing through the House of Commons. As they deal with matters of money we must either reject them utterly or take them as they are. The House of Commons has the granting power in all matters of this kind, and subsidies in land are exactly of the same nature as subsidies of money. But the Pacific Railway Bill of 1874 was not one of that sort. It was a measure which this House had a right to deal with in many of its particulars. The tu quoque argument is not one that I care to use, but hon. gentlemen in this House must be sensible of the fact—and I have often expressed my views on that subject—that a good deal of this legislation comes to us in this way. The Government are making every effort to procure prorogation to-day for the purpose of avoiding keeping members here over the holiday, and many of the Maritime province members are anxious to leave to-day, because otherwise they will be delayed on their journey a considerable time, and every effort is being made to facilitate their departure. The House of Commons sat until five o'clock this morning, and members were in their places at eleven o'clock again. Everything has been done to facilitate the business of the Session, and if we are thrown into this dilemma I assure hon. gentlemen that no one regrets it more than my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Smith) and myself, and I trust that with this explanation hon. gentlemen will see that we are doing as well as we can.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned at four o'clock.

SECOND SITTING.

The Speaker took the chair at 7.30 p.m.

THE SUPPLY BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (145) "An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service for the financial years ending respectively the 30th of June 1886, and the 30th of June 1887, and for other purposes relating to the public service."

The Bill was read the first time.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of the Bill.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER — Every session for many years, the Senate has protested against the ways and methods of the First Minister of the Dominion, especially the way in which he demands a servile acquiescence in everything he does. Sir John Macdonald would make the impress upon the public mind that the Senate is of no utility whatever. That must be the effect of our passing such Bills without examination. No one can come to any other conclusion. Since three o'clock this afternoon we have had bills involving the expenditure of many millions of the public money brought before us, and at last we have this Supply Bill, with all the supplementary estimates, involving probably some $38,000,000, and we are only to have five minutes to consider it before His Excellency the Governor-General comes to prorogue Parliament. Could there be a greater insult to this Chamber? Could anything be more calculated to impress the people of this country that the Senate is of no utility whatever and that it might as well be abolished? I have a suggestion to make to the hon. members of this House, which I do with all respect. The great body of our people are becoming alarmed and very justly alarmed. The merchants of Toronto, Montreal and all other cities are becoming alarmed that the present Government now without any check are increasing the public debt to such an extent that it must lead to wide spread discontent throughout the Dominion and may break up the Confederation. Party spirit and the struggle for party ascendancy I do not hesitate to say are becoming the curse of this Dominion. The system of responsible Government as introduced by the great Robert Baldwin if carried out in its integrity would prove the best in the world, but worked as it has been by the present First Minister it has become the madness of the many for the gain of the few—for the gain of the few who hold portfolios and the members with whom they surround themselves, that they may retain power and spend millions of the public money. There is no time to show how large a portion of this Bill is to be spent for party purposes. There is not time to show how money is recklessly voted for the construction of a ship marine railway, which if built, can never be of practical utility, but the money has to be spent there, so that the voters in that part of Canada may support the party in power when the next general election takes place. There is no time to refer to the unnecessary construction of a second branch of the Intercolonial Railway to Pictou, or to the omnibus railway bill, which was brought in here so shamelessly to-day without giving us one moment to consider it. Need I refer to the sum of $80,000 in the Supplementary Estimate, which we are asked to vote for the purpose of refunding license money exacted by the Commissioners named by Sir John Macdonald under an unconstitutional act? The provinces had the right to issue licenses and appoint the Commissioners, but the First Minister of the Dominion, for party purposes and with the view of injuring the Ontario Government, named Dominion commissioners and collected large sums of money, which the Government are now obliged to refund. Could there be more striking evidence of the Government's ignorance of constitutional law? Could there be any evidence more conclusive either that the present First Minister has cerebral softening or that his principle is all gone?

HON. GENTLEMEN—Order, order!

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I say that it is melancholy to witness such administration. I find in the Supplementary Estimates the sum of $11,000 voted to pay lawyers like Mr. Dalton McCarthy, a Conservative supporter of the Government, for defending such illegal and unconstitutional acts of the Dominion Government. Now we have the unseemly act of the Dominion Government sustaining the St. Catharines Lumber Company, who obtained timber limits from Sir John Macdonald, by a large money vote of $11,000 to pay that Conservative lawyer, Mr. Dalton McCarthy. Who can justify such expenditures in the courts of justice rewarding partizan lawyers? I only desire to add, because I know His Excellency will be here in a very few moments, that if this Government remains in power it will go on with its illegal, careless and abandoned acts until it produces wide spread discontent, that may break up the Confederation. What could be more insulting to this House than that Sir John Macdonald should appoint as leader of this House the hon. gentleman from Niagara?

HON. MR. SMITH—Order order.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman has been out of order several times since he commenced to address the House and I can only compliment the gentlemen on the treasury benches on their forbearance in permitting him to proceed as he has been doing.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Oh nobody minds what he says.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

HON. MR. PLUMB move the third reading of the Bill

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

The House was adjourned during pleasure.

At eight o'clock p.m. the House was resumed THE GOVERNOR GENERAL proceeded in state to the Senate Chamber and took his seat upon the Throne. "In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excellency the following Bill :—

'An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the Public Service, for the financial years ending respectively the 30th June, 1886, and the 30th June, 1887, and for other purposes relating to the Public Service.' To which Bill I humbly request Your Excellency's assent

To this Bill the Royal assent was signified in the following words :—

"In Her Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor-General thanks Her Loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this Bill."

After which His Excellency the Governor-General was pleased to close the FOURTH SESSION of the FIFTH PARLIAMENT of the DOMINION with the following

SPEECH :

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I desire to convey to you my best thanks for the earnestness and assiduity with which you have performed your important duties.

The legislation of the Session has been of an eminently practical character, and cannot fail to aid in the promotion of the material progress of the country.

The grant of representation in the House of Commons to the North-West Territories will, if sanctioned by the Imperial Parliament (of which there is no reason to doubt), give the people of that vast region an interest and voice in the affairs of the Dominion, and enable them to lay the wants and requirements of their young country, with authority, before the great council of the nation.

You have at the same time conferred upon them boons of an efficient judicial system and a speedy and inexpensive mode for the transfer of property in land.

The measure for the establishment of a Central Experimental Farm, with auxiliary stations for the Provinces, will be greatly appreciated by our agricultural population.

I congratulate you heartily on the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and on the repayment in money and land of the advances made in its aid from the public Treasury.

The future prosperity of this great enterprise and the consequent advantage to the best interests of the Dominion I now consider as fully assured.

The appropriations in aid of various railways will tend largely to increase the trade and develop the resources of the districts traversed by them, and I am especially pleased to know that by the provision made for the construction of a Railway through Cape Breton, that historical Island will at last be brought into connection with the Railway System of Canada.

Among the many useful measures you have passed may especially be noticed the amendments of the Franchise Act, rendering its working more simple and less expensive; the Consolidation of the Statutes; the arrangement for the organization of a better and more economical system of Parliamentary and Departmental Printing; and the amendment of the Dominion Lands Act.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I thank you in Her Majesty's name for the supplies you have granted for the public service.

Honorable Gentlemen and Gentlemen :

In bidding you farewell until next year I rejoice to be able to congratulate you on the general prosperity of the country and the good promise of a plentiful harvest.

The SPEAKER of the Senate then said :—

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate and Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

It is HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S will and pleasure, that this Parliament be prorogued until Monday, the twelfth day of July next, to be here held, and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued until Monday, the twelfth day of July next.
