FOURTH SESSION OF THE FIFTH PARLIAMENT OF THE DOMINION OF

NINTH YEAR OF THE REIGN OF

The SPEAKER presented a communication from the Governor General's Secretary announcing that he would open the Session of the Dominion Parliament at Three o'clock.

The House was adjourned during

THE SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

The GOVERNOR GENERAL being seated on the Throne, and the House of Commons being in attendance, with their Speaker, HIS EXCELLENCY was pleased to open the Session with the following gracious speech to both Houses :—

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

On meeting you again I have the pleasing duty to perform of congratulating you on the sufficient harvest of last year and on the prosperity and substantial progress of the country.

Since the suppression of the insurrection in the North-West Territories, peace and order have been restored, and now prevail. After so serious an outbreak some disquiet and apprehension of the recurrence of those disorders may naturally be expected to linger, and it will be the duty of my Government to make such precautionary arrangements as will assure the present inhabitants, as well as intending settlers of efficient protection against all disturbance.

I warmly congratulate you on the practical completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and on the announcement that it will be open for the daily carriage of passengers and freight from ocean to ocean in the month of June next. This great work, so important alike to the Empire and the Dominion, cannot fail to increase the trade between British Columbia and the other provinces, to ensure the early development and settlement of Manitoba and the North-West, and greatly to add to the commercial prosperity of the whole country.

Should the negotiations between Her Majesty's Government and that of the United States for the appointment of a Joint Commission to adjudicate just what is known as "The Fishery Question," and to consider the best means of developing our International Commerce, fail to secure any satisfactory result, you will be asked to make provision for the protection of our Inshore Fisheries by the extension of our present system of Marine Police.

The measure submitted to you last Session for the consolidation of the Statutes and for the introduction into the North-West Territories of a more simple and economical system for the transfer of land will be again laid before you for consideration and legislative action. The Act of last Session will be found to be included in the first of those measures.

You will also be asked to consider the expediency of improving the judiciary system which obtains in those Territories.

Your attention will be invited to the propriety of amending the law relating to the business of the office of Queen's Printer and of providing for the more satisfactory working of the present system of Government and Parliamentary printing.

A numerical census of the North-West Territories has been taken and a measure based thereon for the representation of the people in Parliament will be laid before you.

Other measures will be laid before you, and among them will be found Bills for providing for a better mode of trial of claims against the Crown, for regulating Post Office Savings Banks in British Columbia and the North-West Territories, for expediting the issue of patents for Indian Lands, for the administration of the rights of the Crown in the foreshores of the Dominion, for the establishment of an Experimental Farm, and for the amendment of the Chinese Immigration Act.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

The accounts for the past year will be laid before you. You will find that the estimate of receipts has been fully realized, but I regret to say that the outbreak in the North-West has added largely to the expenditure of the country.

The Estimates for the ensuing year will be submitted to you. They have been prepared with due regard to economy and the requirements of the Public Service.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate .

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I recommend these several subjects and the others which may engage your attention to your best consideration, and I earnestly trust that the result of your deliberations may, under the Divine Blessing, conduce to the advancement and prosperity of Canada.

His Excellency, the Governor General, was pleased to retire and the House of Commons withdrew.

THE ADDRESS.

MOTION.

HON. MR. BOLDUC, moved :—

That the following Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General to offer the respectful thanks of this House to His Excellency for the gracious Speech he has been pleased to make to both Houses of Parliament: namely:—

TO HIS EXCELLENCY the Most Honorable Sir Henry Charles Keith Petty-Fitzmaurice, Marquess of Lansdowne, in the County of Somerset, Earl of Wycombe, of Chipping Wycombe, in the County of Bucks, Viscount Caln and Calnstone, in the County of Wilts, and Lord Wycombe, Baron of Chipping Wycombe, in the County of Bucks, in the Peerage of Great Britain; Earl of Kerry and Earl of Shelburne, Viscount Clanmaurice and Fitzmaurice, Baron of Kerry, Lixnaw and Dunkerron, in the Peerage of Ireland; Knight Grand Cross of the most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George; Governor General of Canada.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY :—

We, Her Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate of Canada in Parliament assembled, humbly thank Your Excellency for your gracious Speech at the opening of this Session.

We rejoice that your Excellency on meeting us again has the pleasing duty to perform of congratulating us on the sufficient harvest of last year and on the prosperity and substantial progress of the Country.

We are glad to learn from Your Excellency that since the suppression of the insurrection in the North-West Territories peace and order have been restored and now prevail. After so serious an outbreak some disquiet and apprehension of the recurrence of those disorders may naturally be expected to linger, and we respectfully concur in Your Excellency's opinion that it will be the duty of your Government to make such precautionary arrangements as will assure the present inhabitants, as well as intending settlers, of efficient protection against all disturbance.

It affords us great pleasure to receive Your Excellency's warm congratulations on the practical completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and on the announcement that it will be open for the daily carriage of passengers and freight from ocean to ocean, in the month of June next. This great work, so important alike to the Empire and the Dominion, cannot fail to increase the trade between British Columbia and the other Provinces, to ensure the early development and settlement of Manitoba and the North-West, and greatly to add to the commercial prosperity of the whole country.

We learn with much interest that should the negotiations between Her Majesty's Government and that of the United States for the appointment of a joint commission to adjust what is known as "The Fishery Question," and to consider the best means of developing our international commerce, fail to secure any satisfactory result, we shall be asked to make provision for the protection of our inshore fisheries by the extension of our present system of marine police.

We thank Your Excellency for informing us that the measures submitted to us last Session for the consolidation of the Statutes and for the introduction into the North-West Territories of a more simple and economical system for the transfer of land, will be again laid before us for consideration and legislative action, and that the Acts of last Session will be found to be included in the first of those measures.

Your Excellency having been pleased to intimate that we shall also be asked to consider the expediency of improving the judiciary system which obtains in those Territories, we beg leave to assure Your Excellency that the subject shall receive our most careful consideration.

Our attention, which Your Excellency has been pleased to say will be invited to the propriety of amending the law relating to the business of the office of Queen's Printer and of providing for the more satisfactory working of the present system of Government and Parliamentary printing, shall be cheerfully given thereto.

It affords us great satisfaction to be informed that a numerical census of the North West Territories has been taken and that a measure based thereon for the representation of the people in Parliament will be laid before us.

We also thank Your Excellency for informing us that other measures will be laid before us, and that among them will be found Bills for providing for a better mode of trial of claims against the Crown, for regulating Post Office Savings Banks in British Columbia and the North West Territories, for expediting the issue of patents for Indian Lands, for the administration of the rights of the Crown in the foreshores of the Dominion, for the establishment of an Experimental Farm, and for the amendment of the Chinese Immigration Act.

We humbly beg to assure Your Excellency that these several subjects, and the others which may engage our attention, shall receive our best consideration, and, with Your Excellency, we earnestly trust that the result of our deliberations may, under the Divine Blessing, conduce to the advancement and prosperity of Canada.

He said : Ce n'est pas sans hésitation que j'ai accepté de proposer l'adresse en réponse au discours du Trône, car quelque honorable que soit cette tâche, le sentiment de mon insuffisance à m'acquitter de cet important devoir me fait éprouver l'obligation de solliciter l'indulgence de cette honorable Chambre.

Cependant, refuser l'honneur qui m'était offert, aurait été mal comprendre mon devoir et je crois être l'écho de cette Chambre dans l'appréciation que je vais tenter de faire de la politique du gouvernement telle qu'annoncée dans le discours maintenant devant nous.

Je suis heureux de pouvoir me joindre à Son Excellence le Gouverneur-Général pour féliciter le pays de l'abondante moisson de l'année dernière et de la prospérité qui règne dans le pays. En effet, messieurs, cette abondante moisson a donné l'aisance à la classe agricole et grâce à la politique nationale adoptée par le gouvernement, il y a quelques années, le cultivateur a pu retirer des prix assez rémunérateurs de la vente de ses produits.

Aux Etats-Unis, aussi bien qu'en Europe, la crise commerciale qui sévit actuellement a paralysé la plupart des manufactures et la classe ouvrière se trouve dans un état de gêne bien voisin de la misère. Dans la mère-patrie, les ouvriers sont obligés de demander de l'ouvrage au gouvernement, et ont déjà causé des troubles assez sérieux.

Ici, messieurs, quelques fabriques ont, il est vrai, diminué temporairement le nombre d'heures de travail, mais l'activité renaît dans toutes les branches du commerce et nous devons nous féliciter du progrès réel du pays.

Le discours du Trône fait aussi mention du rétablissement de l'ordre et de la paix dans les Territoires du Nord-Ouest.

Dans le mois de mars dernier nous arrivait la nouvelle d'une insurrection dans ces territoires. Les métis et les sauvages trompés et excités à la révolte, par des personnes qui espéraient retirer des profits considérables des troubles au Nord-Ouest, se révoltaient contre l'autorité et voulaient se séparer de la Confédération. Cette révolte prenait tout le monde par surprise et on se demandait s'il serait possible de faire cesser ces troubles sans subir de nombreuses pertes de vies et sans encourir des dépenses excessivement considérables.

Aux Etats-Unis, où l'on connaît toutes les difficultés et les dangers de ces guerres indiennes, on paraissait douter de la possibilité de pouvoir rétablir l'ordre dans ces immenses territoires.

Cependant, messieurs, au premier appel, la jeunesse canadienne, sans distinction de nationalité, s'est généreusement offerte pour aller réprimer cette révolte, et grâce à l'énergie et l'activité déployées par notre habile ministre de la milice, — puissamment secondé par nos braves volontaires, — cette révolte a pu être facilement réprimée.

Nous avons subi des pertes de vies très-précieuses et encouru des dépenses considérables, mais l'ordre a été rétabli et les Canadiens ont donné la preuve qu'ils étaient capables de maintenir la paix dans les limites de la Puissance.

J'espère, messieurs, que la répression aussi énergique de cette insurrection aura l'effet d'éteindre tout esprit de révolte chez les sauvages. D'un autre côté, je crois que nous devons nos félicitations les plus sincères au Gouvernement pour la clémence dont il a fait preuve depuis quelque temps envers ces pauvres métis enfermés dans les prisons de l'Etat, et je suis convaincu que le Gouvernement ne s'arrêtera pas à mi-chemin, mais qu'il continuera à suivre cette politique sage et qu'avant longtemps tous ces malheureux, dont le plus grand crime a été de se laisser tromper, verront les portes des prisons s'ouvrir devant eux et qu'il leur sera accordé une parfaite liberté.

Cette politique de clémence fera beau coup plus pour assurer la paix dans le Nord-Ouest que l'envoi de quelques bataillons.

En même temps, afin de faire disparaître toutes les craintes des personnes qui sont déjà établies ou qui ont l'intention d'aller s'établir dans le Nord-Ouest, je crois que le Gouvernement rencontrera l'approbation unanime des Electeurs de la Puissance, en prenant toutes les mesures nécessaires pour assurer une protection efficace contre ces troubles.

Je vois aussi avec plaisir que nous sommes assurés de l'achèvement du chemin de fer du Pacifique Canadien, qui sera livré à la circulation, d'un océan à l'autre, au mois de Juin prochain.

Messieurs, la construction aussi rapide d'une immense voie ferrée comme le Pacifique Canadien fait honneur au Gouvernement qui a eu l'idée d'une entreprise, aussi gigantesque ainsi qu'à la compagnie qui a pu exécuter ces travaux d'une manière aussi rapide qu'avantageuse pour le pays.

Avant la construction de ce chemin de fer, la Colombie se trouvait complètement isolée des autres Provinces de la Confédération et il était impossible de songer à faire un pays prospère de Provinces qui n'étaient pas reliées entr'elles par des voies de communications faciles. Aujourd'hui, Messieurs, par l'achèvement du chemin de fer du Pacifique Canadien, ce problème se trouve résolu et le Canada qui, il n'y a que quelques années, ne comptait que quelques milles de chemins de fer, a une voie de communication qui s'étend de l'Atlantique au Pacifique, ainsi qu'un réseau de chemins de fer dans toutes les Provinces de la Confédération qui n'est surpassé par celui de nulle autre nation. Le pays a fait des sacrifices considérables, il est vrai, mais la construction de ces chemins de fer étaient essentiellement nécessaire au développement du pays, l'esprit et les besoins de notre époque, et avant longtemps le produit de la vente d'une partie de nos fertiles terres du Nord-Ouest aura remboursé au Gouvernement un montant plus que suffisant pour couvrir les avances que nous avons faites.

La questions "des Pêcheries" dont il est fait mention dans le discours du Trône, intéresse beaucoup les Canadiens et je vois avec plaisir tout l'intérêt que le Gouvernement y porte.

Afin de faciliter la bonne entente qui doit exister entre le Gouvernement Canadien et celui des Etats Unis, les Américains ont été laissés libres de pêcher dans les eaux canadiennes durant la dernière saison. Aussi, nous avons vu que, dans son discours au Congrès, le Président des Etats-Unis recommande la nomination d'une commission mixte pour le règlement de cette question. Il est vrai que les pêcheurs de l'Etat du Maine et de celui de Massachusetts s'opposent à la nomination de cette commission et s'ils réussissent à empêcher que cette question importante soit réglée d'une manière avantageuse aux deux pays, le Gouvernement peut compter sur l'appui nécessaire pour l'adoption de mesures propres à pourvoir à une protection effective de nos pêcheries.

Je vois aussi avec plaisir que le Gouvernement doit présenter un projet de loi pour la représentation des colons établis dans les territoires du Nord-Ouest.

Pendant les premières années, le Conseil pouvait suffire à l'administration de ces territoires ; mais, maintenant que la population a atteint un chiffre considérable, il semble juste que ces personnes soient représentées en Parlement.

Plusieurs autres projets de loi seront aussi présentés, qui, j'en suis convaincu, serviront à promouvoir les intérêts généraux du pays.

Maintenant, Messieurs, si nous examinons les progrès faits depuis l'établissement de la Confédération, je crois que nous devons nous féliciter et envisager l'avenir avec confiance. Quoique le Canada soit une colonie dépendante de l'Angleterre, nous jouissons d'institutions aussi libres que possible et nous avons une liberté complète d'administrer nos affaires de la manière qui nous paraît la plus avantageuse.

Grâce à la protection de l'Angleterre, nous retirons tous les avantages que comporte le prestige du pavillon britannique. La flotte Anglaise qui couvre toutes les mers est pour nous un appui précieux et le fait que les représentants diplomatiques Anglais sont également les nôtres, épargne au Canada de très-fortes charges.

Il est vrai que notre ciel politique a paru s'assombrir durant le cours de l'année qui vient de s'écouler. Une partie de la presse, dont la seule mission et le but à atteindre devraient être d'éclairer le peuple et conseiller la modération et l'harmonie entre les différentes races qui habitent la Puissance, a, par des écrits inflammatoires cherché à soulever des préjugés de races et de religion et par là même menacé d'exciter la révolte et allumer la guerre civile dans le pays en proférant des menaces et publiant des écrits révolutionnaires.

Heureusement que les conseils donnés par ces imprudents écrivains n'ont pas été suivis et que la population s'est montrée paisible et a fait preuve de beaucoup plus d'intelligence que ceux qui lui donnaient ces mauvais conseils. Il est regrettable que ces faits soient arrivés, car, dans un jeune pays comme le nôtre, habité par une population d'origine et de croyance religieuse différentes, nous ne formerons jamais une nation forte et puissante sans que l'harmonie règne au milieu de nous.

Pour moi, messieurs, je suis canadien-français et je suis fier d'appartenir à cette race, mais je respecte et je suis heureux de travailler au progrès de mon pays avec tout Canadien vraiment patriote quelque soit son origine ou la croyance religieuse qu'il professe.

HON. MR. CLEMOW—I highly appreciate the privilege and honor of seconding the resolutions in reply to the Speech so ably and forcibly presented to you by the hon. member from Lauzon, and only regret my inability to discharge the duty thus devolving upon me in a manner which its importance demands and decidedly merits.

Fortunately for me, though, my task on the present occasion is greatly lessened in consequence of the Speech itself being so remarkably comprehensive in its terms, the various clauses disclosing such unmistakable assurances of the prosperity and substantial progress of the country as will readily commend them to the favorable approval of hon. gentlemen without any great effort on my part to that end. All loyal and patriotic men will rejoice at the suppression of the insurrection in the North-West Territories, and will learn with intense feelings of satisfaction that peace and order now prevail in that far distant section of the Dominion. It must be likewise a source of gratification to the hon. members of this House, and to the people of this country that their fellow subjects from every province, and of every nationality and creed, evinced a patriotism and bravery worthy the past history of the races from which they spring, journeying at an inclement season of the year, and with necessarily imperfect means of communication, to a distant part of the Dominion to lay down their lives if required in the defence of law and order, and to protect the firesides of their brethren in the North-West. Such brave conduct establishes our character as a people for all future time, and make it a matter of pride for each and every one of us to declare that we are citizens of Canada.

It is to be hoped that no similar occurrence will again blot the page of Canadian history, and it must be universally conceded that the Executive have acted wisely in adopting precautionary measures to secure to the people residing in the North-West Territories, the peaceful enjoyment of all their rights and privileges as subjects of the Crown.

The practical completion of that great enterprise the Canadian Pacific Railway is a matter for the hearty congratulations of the people generally of this Dominion. This road, with its various ramifications, must ultimately prove of immense advantage in the development of Manitoba and the Great North-West, and otherwise must prove a source of incalculable benefit to the commercial prosperity of the whole country.

The construction of this gigantic undertaking has been successfully performed within a period of time unparalleled in the history of all previous railway undertakings in any country. It seems quite evident that the British Empire has been favorably impressed with the importance of this great national highway, and the people of this country are rejoiced on hearing that Her Majesty has been pleased to confer a marked honor of distinction on the person of Sir Geo. Stephen, in recognition of his services as the leading promoter of that enduring monument which will always remain as an example of what energy and determination can accomplish, when directed by capable men with patriotic motives.

It would be considered a source of deep regret if the negotiations entered into between Her Majesty's Government and the United States, in reference to the appointment of a joint commission to adjust the fishery question, together with the consideration of the best means for the development of our international commerce, should ultimately prove nugatory. Whilst the people of this Dominion are anxious and always have signified their desire that all differences between the two countries should be discussed and amicably arranged, still the vested rights of every section of the country must be zealously guarded; therefore when all fair and legitimate exertions have been exhausted without favorable result, the recourse to the extension of the marine police, as suggested, is the only alternative that can be resorted to for the protection of our rights in the territory within and under our own special jurisdiction and control.

The residents of the North-West Territories will hail with delight and satisfaction the prospect of their enjoying at an early day the benefits incidental to their representation in Parliament on the basis as lately determined from the census returns. No act will meet with greater favor by a public hitherto unrepresented, as by such means alone are they placed in a position to make known their peculiar wants and requirements, and thus render their position as a part of the Dominion every way now satisfactory, and more in accordance with the spirit of our institutions.

It must be considered highly satisfactory that the estimated receipts of revenue of the past year have been fully realized, and although the large and unforeseen extraordinary expenditure in connection with the difficulty in the North-West Territories has caused increased and exceptional expenditure, nevertheless the people of the Dominion will loyally concur in making the necessary provision for recouping the expenses thus unavoidably contracted in the best interest of the country under the most urgent and trying circumstances.

The several measures foreshadowed in the Speech other than those referred to by me are all of a practical and special character, and I have no doubt that such consideration will be extended by hon. members on their introduction in this Chamber as will ensure their, being engrossed as part of the future laws, of the country.

I have now to thank hon. gentlemen for the patient hearing of this my maiden attempt in addressing them, and trust they will overlook any defect or shortcoming in my first effort at conveying my views in reference to the subject now under consideration.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—The House may think it very strange that I should have the presumption to rise before the leader of the Opposition. I do so purposely. I do so in order to say what I have said before, that the leader of the Opposition in this House has not acted in a manner worthy of himself or his party during the last five sessions. I do not belong to the party to which the hon. gentleman belongs, but I think he should have acted differently in the parliament of a great country like this when public affairs are not managed in conformity with the views of the people.

With regard to the speeches that have fallen from the mover and seconder of the address, I am sure that the House will concur with me that we are all much gratified at the manner in which those hon. gentlemen have discharged their duties. I do not rise to consider His Excellency's speech, because it is well known that the speech from the throne in a colonial parliament is generally a very unmeaning document. It embraces in fact as little as possible of the public questions of the day. It not unfrequently dwells upon the great prosperity of the country, arising from the industry of the people, and we have no objection to hon. gentlemen taking credit for all that the industry of the people has produced. This debate at the opening of every session, appears to me to furnish a very favorable occasion for taking a cursory view of the acts and general administration of the party in power. And who are the party in power? The party in power is the first minister, the Right Hon. Sir John Macdonald. That is the party in power, and he is a very wonderful man. His counsels, and resolves, and determination guide the party—and he has had in the past a large and powerful army at his back to carry him into power and to keep him in power. Some have lately observed that the mistake he made in life was in not entering the church; because they observed that he has done much to raise the standards of honour and truth in the councils of the country! He is regarded by them with great esteem. He certainly would have been a very fitting prelate for one of the great churches. Talleyrand was a man very much of the same type: but Talleyrand commenced his career as a dignitary of his Church before entering into the field of diplomacy.

Now my purpose in rising to-day—which I do with great humility, and with great respect for the members of this House—is to enquire whether the Government of this country has been prudently and honestly administered. That is what we as the representatives of the people have to ascertain. I fear that I shall have to dwell upon a very sad record. There is staring us at this moment the sad incontrovertible evidence (which we obtain from the blue books) of the prodigal waste and recklessness of that colonial statesman. It is not denied that he has brought up the controllable expenditure of the country from $6,500,000 in 1878 to $13,000,000 in the brief period of seven years. He has added further, as the Ministerial organs all admit, $80,000,000 to the public debt, while the Government are extracting from the pockets of our industrious people a tariff ranging up to 25, 30 and 35 per cent., which is most burdensome on all classes. I have felt it myself to be burdensome. I could particularize the leading items, but I shall take another opportunity to do so. While they have taken so large a revenue from the country, we have, notwithstanding, a deficit of at least $3,000,000—some say $5,000,000. This is the fiscal management of the leader of the present party in power. Some will say that that deficit had been largely increased by the North-West rebellion. I am not going to waste the time of this House discussing that. Whatever may be said or thought, the people of this Dominion generally hold the opinion that the insurrection at Prince Albert arose from the wanton neglect of the Department of the Interior. The returns made to Parliament showing Bishop Grandin's representations respecting the grievances of those 300 poor half-breed families on the Saskatchewan place the question beyond doubt. One of the grievances of those poor people was the Government sending surveyors through the centre of their river lots, and disturbing thus their possessions—which, everyone knows, is a tender point with every farmer—and thus fomenting a rebellion that has cost us $5,000,000 and the loss of a hundred of our young citizen soldiers; and in this connection, for the first time under the Queen's rule, the Indian tribes, who have always been faithful to the Queen mother and her colonial subjects, have shown disaffection and joined in the outbreak, causing to all thoughtful minds deep anxiety that they, in the future, may give further trouble when suffering from want. Many of them are without religion, and have not very clear perceptions of the difference between mine and thine. And if the greatest care is not shewn by the Government in the management and instruction of such Indian tribes in the future, they may at any time commit depredations which may lead to bloodshed and such scenes as we had last year.

As regarding the Canadian Pacific Railway, I am sure that every man of intelligence must acknowledge the great skill and ability shown by Sir George Stephen, Mr. Van Horne and the syndicate in the construction of this road. We must all rejoice that Her Majesty has conferred the honor of a baronetcy on Sir George Stephen, to which he is fairly entitled for the great financial skill which was required to carry to completion such a colossal enterprise. But as regarding the policy of the Government in conceiving and advising the pushing of that work through with such break-neck speed, a very short time will show whether that policy was wise or unwise. It is not only with regard to the large expenditure of $80,000,000, but it remains to be seen now whether it can be run without very large assistance from the country. We cannot expect that these men who have built this road with so much credit to themselves and to the country, will throw away their daily bread in running that road. It must be run by the country: and what railway man can possibly suppose that a railway 2,900 miles long, from Montreal to Port Moody, with such a thin, sparse population in the Red River country, and along its line can find sufficient traffic for its maintenance. The annual deficit arising may not come out of this Government. It may be possible that capitalists will take stock in the road and go without interest on their money for a given time; but it is contrary to all experience that that road can be run for a length of time without loss. It is not only the ordinary running expenditure, but large amounts will be required for sidings, snow galleries, transfer arrangements, new plant and stock, and endless other wants, such as casualties. I am utterly surprised that this Parliament has allowed itself to be carried away thus: surrendering its judgment to a party leader. He knows the drawbacks of that northern latitude, and that our North-West will have to compete with the better latitude and climate of Colorado, Kansas, and other such States. He knows how much European immigration has of later years diminished; and he knows that the share that we are likely to receive must be comparatively limited; and when you connect with that the unfortunate consequences of the rebellion which took place, I do not think we can look for the masses of population anticipated. I am surprised that Parliament should have surrendered its own judgment in regard to so large a public enterprise; and I apprehend that the country will be most deeply incensed when it comes to pay the penalty of such recklessness. The position of our affairs now with the present high tariff, and large deficit, begins to appear alarming to the merchants of Toronto and other places, and there is a growing feeling that if Sir John remains a little longer in power, he will go on increasing the public burdens and create such discontent from one end of the Dominion to the other, that it may break up Confederation. We are all willing to admit his great astuteness and his large parliamentary experience, but his better judgment and principle are gone, and the Parliament of the country will be directly chargeable with entire remissness of duty if they permit him to go on longer in his present reckless ways. Then again, what a melancholy evidence of perverted judgment and unreliability as a political leader we have in the unconstitutional course he pursued with regard to the Boundary and License questions. Could anything be more unstatesmanlike than the First Minister of a country like this bringing, by his own foolish acts, a collision between the Central and Local Governments? Could anything be more calculated to break up Confederation? Could there be stronger evidence of a man's mind being off the hinge? And we may be thankful that we have the Privy Council to appeal to. That a very large proportion of the increased expenditure has been for partizan purposes has been shown by the speeches of members at meetings held lately in the country. It is known that excessive amounts have been given to large contractors so that those contractors might be able to contribute to the return of government candidates at a general election. Could there be a greater public scandal than the Government throwing away public money for such purposes. It is well known that large sums of money have been given to localities for works of doubtful requirement where disaffection to the Government appeared in order to soften down such feeling. Is that an honest expenditure of the people's money? Then again we had an Omnibus Railway Bill brought in to lead the people of different districts to enter upon railways when there could not be sufficient traffic. But the worst of all these revelations, bearing evidence of lamentable depravity, were actual facts disclosed by Parliamentary returns of coal, lands and timber limits, being given for small nominal sums to partizan followers who have rendered mere partizan services; I believe it is admitted that one party realized by selling such a timber limit, $80,000 clear gain. Could there be greater depravity in public life? I am surprised that the whole country does not rise as one man to stop such practices. Now, the question arises, what are we to do with this colonial statesman? He has formerly rendered services to the country. And that deserves consideration. We have no desire to think or act rashly with an old public servant, who in former times served the country. We are disposed to sympathize with his failings but we should not allow him to go on to destroy the country. I will throw out a suggestion that the Imperial Government should consider the propriety of transferring our Conservative chieftain to the vice royalty of Ireland. I think that he would solve a great many difficulties which Mr. Gladstone has to deal with. I do not believe Mr. Gladstone can deal with them; and I believe if he were transferred there he has certain qualifications (which I shall not name) for that peculiar position. When he landed at New York he expressed his strong admiration for Parnell as a statesman. It was a most extraordinary speech for one of the Queen's subjects to make. We all know the views of the Queen; we all know the views of the great body of the people of England. Everyone desires to see Ireland get all the liberty that could be safely given her. But we did not expect our First Minister to express such ardent admiration for Mr. Parnell. Nineteenths of the people of England of all classes dread giving Ireland her own Parliament. They have the kindest feeling towards Ireland; but they dread the evil results that would flow from their acquiescence in such a conception.

I only now in conclusion desire to observe that the Government, session after session, neglect to deal with those breaches of trust which have brought three or four of our banks to insolvency. It is known that such banks were wrecked by men of high position. Our laws are stringently framed to deal with the poor criminal, but not framed to deal with the criminal of high social position. We have found the Exchange Bank wrecked, and we have seen other banks wrecked; and we see every day men wearing the mantle of religion, even holding the position of president of bible societies and other kindred institutions, guilty of the most criminal acts—ruin the families of widows and orphans without heart or feeling—caring not what misery and suffering they may cause so long as they can continue to live in their mansions and drive in their carriages, and so long as the law cannot touch them, so long as a detective cannot tap them on the shoulder, because, perhaps, the books of the bank have been burnt. We all remember the history which cropped up last session of the sewage being allowed to run on the books, so that the fact could not be proved that such men of high position have not paid their debts.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I rise to a question of order.

THE SPEAKER—Will the hon. gentlemen state the point of order?

HON. MR. OGILVIE—The hon. gentleman from Woodstock has just spoken of the Exchange Bank being wrecked, and stated that the directors were likely to have burned the books of the bank, that they have robbed widows and orphans in order that they may ride about in their carriages. I do not know whether it is parliamentary or not to characterize such a statement in strong terms—but every word of it is as false as hell. Every gentleman here knows as well as I do that the directors of that bank always had their carriages till the bank was wrecked, and that through its failure we lost them. Many of us lost the whole of our property through it. The man who wrecked the bank is a fugitive from justice in the United States. The directors of that bank are as honest as any man in this House. We were all sufferers: I think I was the worst. We were all but totally ruined. One of my confreres, Mr. Green, who was worth three-quarters of a million before the failure of the bank, is not worth a quarter of a million to-day. It is too bad for anyone who pretends to be a gentleman to stand up and utter such falsehoods before the House. When he is prepared to make such statements about us, can you believe his statements about the Government? When he attacks the characters of private individuals, do you think he would hesitate to slander the Government? Such assertions as he been making are disgraceful to the Senate, and I know that he would not be allowed to utter such unwarranted assertions in any other deliberative body. The leader of the Government ought to be in a position to stop him, and I suppose would have done so if he were not more amused than hurt by the hon. member's utterances. When I heard the hon. member utter such gross slanders upon men who so little merited such treatment, I thought possibly there might be some here who might attach some credence to the statements. I can show a letter from the liquidators of the Exchange Bank, in which they state that after having carefully examined the books in their hands for three years, they were able to say, as the result of a close investigation, that they could not find that the directors were to blame in any respect. I hope the House will pardon me for having used strong language in characterizing the statements of the hon. member, but I felt so galled by the slander that I could bear it no longer.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman has not stated the point of order.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I am exceedingly sorry that my hon. friend, for whom I have the greatest respect, should suppose that any part of my remarks applied to the Exchange Bank. I named that bank as one which had failed, but everyone in the House knows that the latter part of my remarks related to the Bank of Upper Canada. Last Session, as hon. members will recollect, the Minister of the Interior admitted that the books had been burned, and an admission was also made that others had been injured by sewage. I am sorry that the hon. member thought my remarks applied to the Exchange Bank, when, as a matter of fact, they referred altogether to the Bank of Upper Canada. I regretted the failure of the Exchange Bank, and I know that my hon. friend who has just spoken suffered very deeply from its failure.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I do not want any sympathy from you.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER.

HON. MR. SCOTT—The mover of these resolutions is not new to public life, having had a seat in the other branch of Parliament for many years, and it was therefore to be expected of him that in addressing the House he would do so in the excellent style which he exhibited and the very moderate language which he used in supporting the address. My friend and colleague from the city of Ottawa, who seconded the resolutions, apologized for his inexperience. I think it was not necessary, because the speech itself—though I do not concur in the views he expressed—was delivered in very clear and forcible language. While my hon. friend has not been long in the Senate, he has had large experience of public affairs. Knowing the qualities he possesses, I was surprised to find that he supported every part of the policy that the Government have introduced before the country. I suppose it is incidental to public life in Canada that individual opinion is largely ignored by those supporting an administration. I am glad to think that in other countries where representative institutions prevail men do not give such unswerving support to party leaders. It seems to be the idea in Canada that a man must endorse without question every act of his party. I have noticed, as I have no doubt other hon. gentlemen have, that whether supporting the administration of Lord Salisbury or of Mr. Gladstone, a very considerable number of members in both Houses in England have thought proper on various occasions to express opinions differing from those of their leaders, and society acquiesced in the propriety of their independent conduct on such occasions. I should be glad if our public men in this country would follow in their footsteps. I think a very much better condition of things would prevail if hon. gentlemen were free to differ occasionally from the Government that they are supporting on the various questions which are from time to time presented for their consideration. Coming now to the Speech, the first paragraph of the address asks us to join in congratulating the country on the “sufficient harvest of last year, and on the prosperity and substantial progress of the country.” Now, that is a very doubtful compliment to this country, that we are able to produce sufficient for our own consumption. It has been the pride of the people of Canada that ours is one of the food-producing countries of the world—that we grew not merely sufficient for our own consumption, but that one of the great sources of our wealth was the export of food supplies to countries that were more thickly populated and not so fortunately placed as Canada. The term “sufficient harvest” seems to me to question whether the last harvest was up to the general average. The ordinary term that we find employed in the speech from the throne is “bountiful harvest,” but it seems the opinion of His Excellency’s advisers that the harvest of last year was not bountiful. It is to be regretted, no doubt, that the exports of this country have fallen off in the last year or two. One of our chief sources of export has been the products of the farm, and if I remember distinctly the speeches made in this Chamber a few years ago we were told that under the policy with which Canada is now supposed to be blessed we would have a home market and our farmers would have high prices for their products irrespective of the market outside. The experience of the last two or three years must have removed from all minds the delusion that by an act of parliament we can affect the immutable laws of supply and demand—that by any policy which we may adopt in this country we can give a fictitious value to the products of Canada. Hon. gentlemen ridiculed very much the expression of Sir Richard Cartwright that we were as powerless to affect the laws of supply and demand as a fly on a wheel is to control the movements of the wheel; but have we not here convincing evidence that Sir Richard Cartwright was perfectly right in the figure which he used in describing the measure which was then introduced? It was misleading the people to represent to them that by legislation or any other means an artificial price could be given for the products of the farm. At the present time Canada is enjoying a fair degree of prosperity, but it is not due in any sense to the policy of the Government. The chief product at the present moment which is giving us prosperity is lumber. The exports of the farm and of the fisheries have somewhat diminished but the export of the forest has kept up, and that export is entirely independent of our legislation. It has largely aided in preserving the prosperity of Canada during the times of depression which have visited this in common with other countries. With that trade, fortunately, the Parliament of Canada have nothing to do. They might possibly, if it had been under their control, have crippled it also. Any regulations affecting it belong exclusively to the Provincial Legislature, and therefore for that portion of the prosperity of this country we can claim no special credit.

In the next paragraph of the Speech we are reminded that peace and order have been restored, and now prevail in the North-West Territories. Yet notwithstanding that assurance, we are told that precautionary arrangements are yet necessary in order to ensure protection and a greater feeling of satisfaction amongst the people. What does that mean? Is it true that we are going to send a few more battalions up to the North-West that this flying column that the newspapers have discussed is to be sent through that country from one end to the other in order to terrify the Indians? It is supposed, now that the Half-breed claims are settled, that they are no longer disposed to press further grievances at Ottawa. The flying column, therefore, it is to be assumed, is to intimidate the Indians. My advice to the Government would be, that instead of spending a large sum of money in trying to frighten the Indians, it would be much safer to take better care of those wards of the Dominion, and to see that they are properly provided for, and treated more generously as to the supply of provisions; that the agents and the contractors who have to do with their well-being in that country, are men of greater honesty than the public press and the residents in that country say in the past they have been. The dissatisfaction of the Indian is, no doubt, due entirely to his treatment by the white man. Let any of us contrast the relations of the white man and the Indian in the past two hundred years up to within ten years, and what does it show? For two hundred years, up to a very recent period, peace and happiness prevailed in the North-West.

The Hudson Bay Company's employes were able to go from one end of the country to the other without being in the smallest degree alarmed at the savages; missionaries travelled all through that country, and were warmly received, even by those of the Indians who were not Christianized. Property was safe, the Hudson Bay Company's stores were never attacked, and private property was respected amongst the savages. Yet in recent years, owing to the unhappy intercourse with the white man, this position of affairs has completely changed. I say it is rather a reflection on our boasted civilization that our intercourse with the savage has led him to place less confidence in, and hold in lower estimation, his white brother than in former years. This is due largely to causes that in my judgment were avoidable. The people who have been sent up into that country the last ten or fifteen years—more particularly during the last seven or eight years—to look after the interests of the Indians have had but one motive, to make money, no matter whether out of the poor Indian, or some other source. To become suddenly rich was the moving impulse with those employes of the Government. If we are to believe the evidence of ministers, priests, bishops and laymen, the conduct of the Government agents and the Government authorities was most reprehensible. We are excessively careful in compelling the young men we employ in the offices at Ottawa to pass a special examination—to graduate, so to speak, in morality; yet of the class of men we have sent up into the North-West to look after the interest of the poor Indian, some have gone there with the lowest impulse to treat the poor savage as if he were a brute. And what has been the result? It has changed the character of the entire Indian population. It is through our maladministration in that country that the Indian is to-day what he is. I am quite aware that it is a most difficult problem, but still it is not so absolutely impossible to obtain honest, faithful servants, that any Government is justified in appointing a class of agents such as, to a large extent, were sent among the Indians. More liberal treatment, in my judgment, would be the best policy to pursue towards the savage. The sending of troops into that country will involve a large expenditure, and if that money were expended in additional provisions for the Indians, it would have a better effect. The sending of a body of troops into that country can have no lasting benefit. The existing evils can only be alleviated by a different course of treatment, and I think it is the duty of every man who prides himself in being a Canadian to see that those unfortunate wards of ours are treated in a more Christianlike, and a more humane manner in the future than they have been in the past. It is notorious that large bands of Indians have been during the last two years absolutely starving to death. The accounts that have come from different quarters are too well authenticated to be doubted, and therefore it is of the highest importance that the attention of the Government should be called to it, and that a more vigorous effort should be made to see that the money appropriated by Parliament for the support of the Indians should be fairly and honestly distributed.

Coming down to the paragraph of the address relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway, I can cordinally acquiesce in and endorse all that has been said, both by the mover and seconder of the resolution, in reference to that great enterprise. The people of Canada in 1882 approved of the policy of the Government in building that road by a body of gentlemen known as the syndicate, and the road having been given over practically to them, of course very large latitude was to be permitted as to whether the road should be finished in 1886, or at any later period. Speaking now for myself, and not as the representative of any body of gentlemen either in this House or out of it, I had always very grave doubt of the wisdom of forcing the building of that road through as an all-rail route to the Pacific at so early a period, believing that it would be very much better that the development of the North-West should have proceeded pari passu with the building of the road, and believing that very little was to be gained by its extension to the Pacific coast. I am free to confess that during the last year my views on that question have been very much modified—in fact very largely altered. It is one of the singular features of the building of a railway in any new country, that it is sure to develop sources of traffic that even the most far-seeing could not have conjectured. It must be a cause of great gratification to every Canadian that that road is now on a fair paying basis. The price at which its stock has been held in the market, having gone up some 40 per cent in the past few months, is the best testimony of the opinion of the moneyed men of the world as to the solidity of the Canadian Pacific Railway as a paying enterprise; and it must be a feeling of relief to the people of Canada that they are not to be burdened with any expense in connection with the keeping up of the road, as was a few years ago anticipated. We know that even Sir Charles Tupper himself, who was always sanguine as to the ultimate success of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and those who thought with him, believed that after the road was constructed it would require something in addition to its own earnings to keep it running from ocean to ocean. Happily the results of the last few months have removed any doubt as to the enterprise being able to take care of itself. The amount of traffic that has come over the road has been in a large measure unexpected. The fair promises of the people of England, which, I have no doubt, will be carried out, making it to some extent a highway between England, and China and Japan, will give it great support and assistance, and, perhaps another great and important source of profit which has been discussed in the press, is the circumstance that it is likely to be a powerful competitor of some of the American railways. It is a matter very well known to those who have taken an interest in the subject that the traffic from San Francisco is carried to the east by the Southern Pacific Railway, and that the relative distance over the Canadian Pacific Railway is vastly in favor of our road, and we see by the public press that it is already discussed in San Francisco that in the coming summer the Canadian Pacific Railway is likely to bid for a very considerable share of the through traffic from California to New York and the Eastern States. Therefore, I think that it is fairly a subject that we can all cheerfully congratulate the country upon, that this road is to be a paying road—one that can take care of itself. If it be a paying road, of course it will be very much better kept up than if it were not, and it will be a first-class road from the fact that it will be a profitable one.

The next question that the address deals with is that connected with the fisheries. The way in which the clause is framed would lead one to believe that some negotiations are at the present moment being carried on between the Governments at Ottawa and Washington through Great Britain for the continuance of the Washington Treaty clauses with reference to the fisheries. Those who have read the proceedings of Congress must be satisfied that very little attention indeed is given to the too-late appeal made by the Canadian Government, or the Imperial Government for Canada, for the continuance of the treaty. The Government, during the years '83 and '84 were repeatedly reminded that that treaty was about to expire; that it was in the interests of the people of Canada as well as of the United States, since it was a source of envy and bitter feeling between the two countries, that overtures and negotiations should have been commenced for a continuance of that treaty. However it was allowed, like a great many other important questions, to drift, and it was only at the eleventh hour, even after the eleventh hour, that the question was really vigorously taken up. Then Congress had risen, and under the law of the United States the president of the power that was to deal with the subject could do nothing except receive the favors that were tendered to him by the government of Canada. The government of Canada, in the most generous spirit, said, "We do not desire to annul the treaty; we hope it will continue, and as a proof of our sincerity we will allow matters to go on as they are until Congress meets." What was the effect? Congress saw that Canada had opened her three mile limit to the fishermen of the United States and that no attempt was made by us to enforce the laws of this country. We on the other hand asked that they on their side should allow the treaty to continue for the six months; but the President of the United States met our government with a distinct refusal. He had no power to continue the arrangement, and the consequence has been that it has been a one-sided treaty for the latter half of the year 1885, we paying the duty on fish going into the United States, and the American fishermen enjoying all the privileges that they have had in our waters during the past ten years. Now we are told that the Government will probably ask Parliament for a vote to raise a sort of police navy to protect our fisheries. I think it is extremely unfortunate, that if the treaty was to terminate, it was not terminated on one side as well as on the other; that this left-handed arrangement by which we are compelled to pay duty on fish going into the United States, while we give American fishermen all the privileges they have enjoyed under the treaty, has proved to be a mistake. They assume probably that Canada is not disposed to quarrel with them over this question of the defence of the three miles limit. We all know that it is a subject fraught with a great deal of trouble; that regulations of that kind are very difficult to enforce, and with the facilities that American fishermen have for reaching our bays in our fishing sections, they will constantly be encroaching upon our limit, leading no doubt to a constant irritation, an irritation that will not be favored by the people in England. The British Government will not care to be drawn into these quarrels. They have shown in the past that they are somewhat averse to being drawn into difficulties of that kind with reference to small commercial treaties.

A measure to give to the people of the North-West representation in Parliament is promised, I am very glad that the Government have even at this late period determined to give the people of that vast territory representation in Parliament. It has been rather a novel feature in the past that so large a body of British subjects should be governed in the manner they have been by orders in council, and I may say by departmental decrees. Had we had representatives in the North-West during the last two or three years in Parliament, possibly the serious trouble and the consequent loss of life and money might have been averted. It is one of the evidences at all events that the government recognize that the people should have their representatives in the parliament of Canada, because, as I said be fore, it is not recognized under our system that people shall be taxed without representation. It led to troubles of a much more serious character over one hundred years ago in the old colonies, on the other side of the line, taxing people without their consent, without being consulted, and without their having an opportunity of expressing their opinions as to the right of such taxation.

Several measures—some of them no doubt of some importance—are promised us. It is not my purpose just now to make any special reference to them. When they are presented for our consideration there will be ample opportunity for commenting on their details.

We are told, however, that though the estimate of the receipts of the revenue have been realized, yet there will be a considerable deficit, and that it is chargeable to the expenses connected with the North-West troubles. Of course in the absence of the figures we are unable to say what the receipts have been. It is, however, apparent that our expenditure, wholly apart from the abnormal outlay of last season, has been one that has been growing in a very much greater degree than the prosperity of this country or its increase in population at all warranted. In 1878 our income and expenditure were in the neighborhood of $25,000,000. In the year 1886 I presume the figures will have been increased by nearly $10,000,000. I say there has been nothing whatever, either in the increase in population or the development of the country, to warrant the enormous increase in the expenditure in a country composed of 5,000,000 of people; and it is time at all events that a halt should be made, and that the expenditures should be placed on such a basis that the people, without being unduly taxed, will be enabled to contribute to the revenue an amount at all events not to reach that figure. Sir Leonard Tilley's plea in 1878 was that we ought to remain at the figure of $25,000,000 for some time. The hon. gentleman opposite who heard the statement shakes his head, intimating that I am wrong. I may be mistaken, but I certainly am under the impression that Sir Leonard Tilley made some such announcement.

HON. MR. POWER—It was $22,000,000.

HON. MR. SCOTT—My hon. friend says that it was $22,000,000. It is likely to have been less rather than more, because at the time he came in I remember hon. gentlemen opposite found very great fault with the extravagance of the then existing government, which had run the expenditure up to $25,000,000; and, no doubt speaking for his party, the Finance Minister would have given expression to some such opinion as that—that we were running wild in those days because we had allowed the expenditure to reach that figure. However that figure is now exceeded, as I said before, by nearly $10,000,000, a sum altogether too large, and unless the volume of our import and export trade is kept up in some way that I do not at this moment see how, it will be extremely difficult, without imposing more taxes, to bring the revenue up to meet the expenditure. It is quite probable that the Finance Minister is at this moment conjuring his brains to see where he is to get it. It is said that he is to make a good deal out of tea and coffee. If he proposes it, I should hope that he will not do as some gentlemen of that same party have done in former years—take the public into his confidence and allow the importations to be made on so large a scale that the revenue, at all events for a year or two, will be considerably defrauded by anticipating the fiscal policy of the Government. I, of course, do not propose to suggest any amendment to the Address, and there are some other subjects probably that might have been adverted to, one the burning question which has excited a good deal of attention; but I think it would be very much better that on an occasion of this kind, in discussing the answer to the Speech from the Throne, a subject of that kind should not be introduced. It is one that will stand on its own merits, and I have no doubt before the end of the session will be pretty fully discussed; therefore, it is better that we should not introduce it on the present occasion.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—It is a pleasure on all occasions to reply to my hon. friend's criticisms. I am glad to notice that he finds some references in the Speech in which he can cordially concur: those about the Pacific Railway and others. I think, however, he is incorrect in the proposition in which he complained of the want of independent opinion in this country—I presume he meant amongst members of Parliament—which he contrasted unfavorably with the independence of members in Great Britain. It seemed to me that the remark was not very apropos, in view of the position of affairs in this country. Within the last few months there has been an exceedingly widespread—in one province at all events—expression of independent opinion. Had he borne that in mind, he would hardly have complained of the want of independent feeling, or of the want of independent expression of it in this country; but, I think, with reference to all the provinces, and to members of Parliament generally, there is a very adequate expression of independent opinion. Government and Opposition are so affected by what they learn to be the feeling of those who support them that it guides, so to speak, the course of both. I do not think our public men contrast unfavorably with those of England—with those whom my hon. friend quotes as having taken an independent stand in regard to certain public matters in Great Britain.

Neither is the hon. gentleman's criticism correct, I venture to think, with regard to the Indians. He thinks that the discontent of the Indians is due to their intercourse with white men. In one sense this may be the case, but not because of their treatment at the hands of the Government, and the agents of the Government. I fancy that the discontent of the Indians has arisen not from ill-treatment by the Government or agents of the Government, but from other causes, and particularly from the extinction of the buffalo. Nothing appeals to a man's feelings, or arouses his discontent more than a want of food. In the years gone by when the Indians referred to by my hon. friend as being contented and peaceable under the good and wise rule of the Hudson Bay Company, a different condition of affairs existed. The Hudson Bay Company are entitled to infinite credit for their management of and system of dealing with the Indians in that country, and I have frequently taken occasion from my place in this House to pay my humble tribute to them in that respect; but neither they nor any other power controlling the Indians could have provided against what has happened in the North-West in the last few years, as the result of opening up that country to settlement. When the immense supply of buffalo was cut off, there was a good deal of want and starvation amongst the Indians which naturally produced discontent. No matter how well they were treated by the agents of the Government; and no matter whether they were or were not subject to ill-treatment by white men, it was impossible to maintain content if they were on the verge of starvation. Now, with reference to their present position, since the supply of buffalo has failed, the Government have taken every means, I think, which reason would dictate, or which the finances of the country could afford, to supply the wants of the Indians and to keep them from starvation. Great pains has been taken, great care has been exercised, and large sums of money have been expended for the purpose; and I believe I am safe in saying that there has not been any starvation amongst the Indians, notwithstanding the statement which has been made to-day. It has been made again and again; we have heard it within the last five or six weeks, and the Government were so startled by the news that special pains were taken to find out whether the statement was accurate or not. Men connected with the service of the Government in the North-West, on whom we could thoroughly depend, were sent amongst the various tribes to ascertain whether the statements were correct, and returns reached us by letter and by telegram that they were not. Of course, Indians do not live as white men do, and when an agent says there is no starvation among them, he means literally that their wants are reasonably supplied, having reference to their mode of living. That is the return that was sent us by the various Indian agents employed during the last two months. The incident I speak of occurred a couple of months ago, during Sir John Macdonald's absence in England. The agents employed were reliable men in every way. I could readily mention the names; and I am sure if they were known to hon. gentlemen they would increase the impression which I desire to create by quoting their reports to the effect that there was no starvation amongst the Indians.

HON. MR. SCOTT—The statement was made by a member of the North-West Council in the presence of the Lieutenant-Governor.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I have no doubt it was, but similiar statements reached us from other sources entitled prima facie to great credit: and when we come to enquire into them by our own agents we found that they were not true. No doubt the Indian has suffered since the disappearance of the buffalo, but still not in the way or to the extent the hon. gentlemen apparently would desire the house to believe. The treaties which have been made with the Indians, and which have been faithfully and accurately observed ever since, show that the Indians have been supplied with what was thought by them and us essential to keep them above and beyond want. I think the efforts of the Government in that respect have not only succeeded but that we are entitled to some credit for having so earnestly and constantly persisted in them. No doubt sometimes the Government are deceived by agents, and some maladministration takes place which the Government does not hear of at the time: but we rapidly do become aware of it. There are not only agents, but there are inspectors of agencies who go round and report whether the agents are doing their duty: and these men see the chiefs and find if there are any complaints. Every effort is made commensurate with the resources of the country to prevent starvation want and suffering amongst the Indians: and I think we have succeeded in preventing these great calamities and that apart from the disappearance of the buffalo they are not suffering from want. But there are other sources of discontent—for instance, being kept away from the chase and having nothing to do. Then, again, it has turned out upon some occasions, that the character of the food which has been given them is not such as they like or desire to have. For instance, it has been found difficult to supply the Indians with fresh beef. It was attempted to remedy that by supplying them with good pork and excellent bacon. They admitted it was good of its kind, but they disliked the kind. I do not think we are remiss in respect to our treatment of the Indians. I was glad to hear my hon. friend say that he thought Canada was enjoying a fair degree of prosperity. I think it is too, but my hon. friend runs away with theories which he can never avoid discussing when prosperity is mentioned as to whether it is due to the policy of the Government or to some other cause more deep and more at the basis of national prosperity. The Government has not, in this speech, taken any credit for it. I have invariably, I think, declined, or tried to decline, discussing these questions with my hon. friend; but I think he will agree that we are quite right in trying to enjoy the prosperity and take it from whatever source it may come. I think myself—if I may be allowed to have an opinion on the subject—that it is partly owing to the Protective Policy, as well as to the deeper causes, to which my hon. friend alludes. My hon. friend finds fault with us for the delays with regard to the Fishery question, and blames us for not having stopped the Treaty rights abruptly in July last. What good could have resulted from that, supposing we had stopped the Americans from coming within our limits last July? It would only have increased ill-feeling amongst the people of the United States. Congress was not sitting, and it seems to me nothing could have been more likely to bring about disagreement with the United States than by taking the course which the hon. gentleman suggested. We said, although the Treaty ended in July, yet we will allow fishing to go on until the end of the season, with the understanding that the President of the United States will, when Congress meets, try to bring about the appointment of a commission to settle not only the Fisheries, but also all trade questions between the two countries on some liberal basis. What the hon. gentleman suggested we should have done, would have prevented any return to the relations which have been so happy and useful between the two countries. If we had taken the step which he suggests, we would have been obliged to send cruisers to those waters and stop the fishing within the three miles limit, and we might have taken possession of some of their vessels and brought them before the tribunals for the purpose of having them declared forfeited. These proceedings would have excited exceedingly bad feeling, and there would have been no possibility afterwards of obtaining a return to our old relations; but the course which we did take afforded us an opportunity for negotiations. We found perfectly friendly and good feeling on the part of those in power at Washington—even an active disposition to join us in trying to get our trade relations reconsidered by the only power that could effect anything—that is Congress. The President could not make a treaty with us about the fisheries: he could do nothing but what he said he would do and has since done, namely: recommend it to the favorable consideration of Congress. That was a valuable point to obtain, and it at all events brought the subject up in such a way as to give fair-minded men in the United States, who desire to have trade relations with us, an opportunity to discuss the subject; and it renders it possible and even probable that these trade relations will be resumed. We should have heard nothing of all that if we had taken the course the hon. gentleman suggests. It is now apparently only those who have ownership in vessels and are absolutely engaged in the fishing that desire to prevent the renewal of the treaty. The men who are more or less concerned in the fishing trade in Boston and elsewhere, and the general public along the border and up towards the west, are all interested, and have endeavored to make their feelings known with reference to the advantage to the United States of renewing these relations. Gentlemen have passed backward and forward between Washington and here who have been and are still taking a very active part in endeavoring to bring about a renewal of those relations. It seems to me to be a sensible way of dealing with the difficulty and of reviving the relations which have been so valuable to us. That is the course the Government have pursued, and I think it was the true policy to adopt and the policy most likely to prove successful. My hon. friend passes over some of the other paragraphs of the speech and tells us that he will be glad to consider the various measures promised in the speech from the Throne. Some of those measures were brought before the House this last Session. Two of them particularly were introduced and adopted in this House; and, therefore, they are being introduced this year in the other branch of Parliament. I hope and believe that the result of the Session will be advantageous to the country, and that the legislation to be adopted will be such as to commend itself to the favourable consideration of this House. I desire, before I resume my seat, to say one word in support of the ordinary usages of Parliament. There are certain customs which are binding upon all reasonable men, and which gentlemen submit to as a matter of course, because they feel that in so doing they are only acting in conformity with the general feeling of those surrounding them. The usage of Parliament, is to allow the leader of the Opposition to follow the mover and seconder of the Address; and the interruption which took place on this occasion was, I think, unparliamentary and unusual, and not made, I am persuaded, for any other purpose than to allow the member who made it, at a moment when he thought he could make himself conspicuous, an opportunity to indulge his inordinate vanity and malevolence. The idea of the hon. gentleman criticising Sir John Macdonald and his policy, is too absurd to be worthy of a reply. He desires to thrust himself on the House at times when hon. gentlemen do not want to hear him. Nothing has struck me more, since I have had a seat in the Senate, than the patience of the House on such occasions, when hon. gentlemen know that the usages of parliament are being departed from, and yet permit the person who offends to finish what he has to say. I desire to express my opinion of the course which has been pursued by the hon. member who prevented the hon. leader of the Opposition from taking the course which propriety and usage prescribe.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—(in French)—The Hon. Postmaster-General has made allusion to a parliamentary usage which I understand perfectly well. I think, however, he has departed from a well-understood custom himself. It has been from time immemorial the rule for the leader of the Government in this House to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the Address on the manner in which they discharged their duty. I presume that it arose from forgetfulness.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I did forget it. My attention was fixed on what had just been said by my hon. friend opposite, and I proceeded with my remarks in reply to my hon. friend without first referring, as I should have done, to the mover and seconder of the Address, and congratulating them on the able and eloquent manner in which they dealt with the subject.

HON. MR. TRUDEL (in French) complimented the mover and seconder of the Address on the able manner in which they had discharged the duty assigned to them. He could not help being struck with the courage which the hon. member from Lauzon (Mr. Bolduc) had displayed in congratulating the Government, not only on their general policy, but on the manner in which they had administered the affairs of the North-West Territories. The hon. gentleman seemed to be perfectly satisfied with all that they had done, because they had exercised clemency towards some of the imprisoned Indians and half-breeds who had been implicated in the outbreak. The hon. member, in the course of his remarks, had stigmatized the spontaneous movement of his compatriots in the Province of Quebec as revolutionary, and had gone so far as to assert that the press of his province had published violent articles inciting the people to disorder. If articles of an incendiary character had appeared in some of the French papers of the province, it must have been in Ministerial organs. It was a remarkable fact that the most violent of all had appeared in journals which were the recognized organs of members of the Government. For four or five days they had pursued this policy, and then, with shameless inconsistency, had taken the opposite course, and were so utterly devoid of honesty as to accuse the newspapers which advocated the national movement of the very offence of which they themselves had been guilty. At the time, he (Mr.

Trudel) had for three weeks published, in the columns of his newspaper, a challenge to any one opposed to the national movement, to point out one solitary article of a revolutionary character which had been published by the newspapers which had espoused the cause of the half-breeds. Perhaps the hon. member from Lauzon did not read his newspaper, but he could assure the hon. member that it circulated largely in the province of Quebec. He (Mr. Trudel) repeated his challenge now. Under the circumstances, it was most unfair to make such a violent and unwarranted attack upon the great mass of the people of Quebec and the press which expressed their views in connection with the North-West troubles.

HON. MR. BOLDUC (in French)—I hope the House will permit me to correct some of the statements which have been made by my hon. friend from DeSala-berry. I was very much flattered by his kindly comments on the manner in which I had spoken in moving the Address, but he has mis-interpreted a portion of my speech, and put words in my mouth which I never used. What I did say was that I offered my most sincere congratulations to the Government for having granted an amnesty to the half-breeds who had been imprisoned for having taken part in the North-West troubles, but I never said that the National party in the Province of Quebec were revolutionary. The sole accusation that I made was against a portion of the press of the Dominion—I did not allude to the press of Quebec alone. My remark was that it was to be regretted that a certain portion of the press of the country had made threats and published almost revolutionary articles, thus endangering the peace of the Dominion, arousing sectarian animosities, and almost exposing the country to the horrors of civil war. The hon. gentleman says he presumes that I have never read his paper. I admit that I have only read a few copies of it during the sessions, and it is difficult to understand how my hon. friend, who admits that I do not read his paper, can say that the press to which I alluded in my speech as having published revolutionary articles, was in the Province of Quebec. I ask the hon. gentleman what grounds he has for saying, "When you said that the press has tried to excite prejudices between the different denominations and races of the Dominion, your remarks were directed against me?" I admit that the hon. gentleman is a better judge of what he has written than I am, and if he really wrote articles such as those I have denounced, he is welcome to accept the position, and to believe that the expressions I have used were directed against him; but I challenge him to prove that I have accused my compatriots of being revolutionary in the late movement, and I defy him to point out anything in my speech which could bear any other interpretation than that which I have just given. My hon. friend was kind enough to remark that I would be isolated in this House and in my Province. I make no pretence to being a dictator in the Province of Quebec as my hon. friend pretends to be. I have a right to entertain an independent opinion, and I can assure him that I am prepared and determined to express it freely. Moreover, I am satisfied that at the general elections my hon. friend will find that the intelligent and well-meaning French-Canadians are not all on his side.

HON. MR. GIRARD—Will the hon. Postmaster-General be kind enough to inform the House whether the debate will be adjourned or continued this evening?

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—If the House desires it, I have no objection to the debate being adjourned until Monday, but it is usual to adopt the Address on the first day.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—It is not usual to hurry a division on the debate on the Address. I for one would feel I was remiss in my duty if I failed to offer some comments on the conduct of the Government during the recess.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—The only answer I have to make to my hon. friend is that I have not hurried it.

HON. MR. GIRARD moved that the debate be adjourned until Monday.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned at 6 o'clock.

HON. MR. BOLDUC.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Monday, March 1st, 1886.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY.

MOTION.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE moved that :

"An humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before this House, a copy of the protest of the Deputy Warden of St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary (Telesphore Ouimet), objecting to the evidence of Hector Demers, summoned as a witness on the 14th July, 1884, being taken before the Commission of Enquiry named to enquire into the management of the aforesaid Penitentiary in 1884."

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—There is no objection to the Address, but I may inform my hon. friend that a search has been made in the records of the trials concerning the Penitentiary without finding this document. Mr. Moylan is not in town at present. A telegram has been sent to him asking whether there is such a document in existence, and if there is where it is to be found.

The motion was agreed to.

THE ADDRESS.

DEBATE CONTINUED.

HON. MR. GIRARD—When I moved the adjournment of the debate on Friday last, it was my intention to speak in French, because the speech to which we had just listened at the time was in French; but I suppose, accustomed as I have been to rely on the indulgence of this House, it will be better for me to make my remarks in the broken English that I speak than in a language which many of the hon. gentlemen would not understand.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—It is good English.

HON. MR. GIRARD—It is a matter of great satisfaction to me to be called once a year by the supreme authority to enquire into the wants and needs of the country, and, judging from the past, to look into the future and see what is best to be done to consolidate the institutions of the country and promote the good of the people. This present session which is now opening, promises to be a very important one. Last year we were here for six long months, occupied in the great inquest of the Dominion. Accidentally a fire had originated in one of the extremities of our vast Dominion; a sufficient force was immediately dispatched to extinguish it; our sons, our brothers, and our friends were promptly on the spot; some of them fell, but others were there to take their place, not hesitating to sacrifice their lives for the maintenance of the British flag in this Dominion of ours. At the close of last session we thought that everything was over, and that the duty of members of Parliament on returning to their homes, was to restore and promote the peace and prosperity which had been interfered with. But other troubles came—troubles of such importance in some parts of the country that an agitation was created sufficient to threaten the harmony of our constitution and cause serious apprehensions of the disorganization of the Confederation. It is with great hesitation that I enter upon a question on which I think I am forced to meet my best friends on a ground where we may differ. When fifteen years ago I left them, it was for their sake that I did so. The mission that I entered upon at the time had no great charm for me. I was called upon to assist in the formation of a new country. It was a very important period for the French population. They had the best acquired rights, but they were not alone in the North-West land. It was in 1870, just at the end of the difficulty which had occurred there. At that time those troubles were justifiable, and they have since been justified; but they were naturally the cause of a feeling of animosity, which until then had not been known there. Those who endeavored to allay this feeling of animosity by mutual concessions, and doing justice to all were successful, and we were able to announce to the world that we were prospering, and to invite the emigrating multitudes of the Old World to come and share that prosperity with us. Within a short time many thousands of people have settled amongst us; towns and cities have grown up, industrious families have settled in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, and enjoying such prosperity, we remain attached to the Government that have assisted and promoted this rapid development. From time to time we represent to our rulers the wrongs of which they have been guilty, and sometimes advise them to adopt another course. It is sufficient to look at the Speech from the Throne to be convinced that our importance is recognized. The best paragraph of it—the most important legislation that is there announced—affects either Manitoba or the North-West Territories. I may be permitted to ask my hon. friend from DeSalaberry if I am not justified, when I remember all that I have obtained from the Government for Manitoba and the North-West, in telling him, and through him, the people he represents, that the agitation which has taken place in the Province of Quebec has been prejudicial to the interests of Manitoba and the North-West. There is no doubt that it has. While the people of the North-West may consider the Government at fault in some respects, and while they have come before the Government at times to seek redress in the ordinary way, we never expected that such an agitation would arise as we have witnessed lately in the Province of Quebec. I feel sorry that it has arisen, because we in Manitoba, and especially the French element of the population there, have reason to be thankful to the Province of Quebec for the deep interest they have taken in our welfare. It is not my intention to declare war against my hon. friend from DeSalaberry. I act upon the maxim “I am not disposed to fight for fear I might be fought with.” At the same time, when the truth should be proclaimed I for one shall not remain silent. I have been accustomed in the past to find my hon. friend from DeSalaberry fighting the battles of the party to which I belong, and it was with a feeling of deep regret that I saw him assume a position which I cannot share with him. I think it is the only occasion in my life that I have been obliged to differ from him on public questions. In the past I have been glad to recognize him as my leader in all that I have attempted to do in the interests of the party. I shall now refer briefly to the paragraphs in the Address in which my province is interested. With reference to the harvest of last year I am happy to say that in Manitoba and the North-West, the crops have on the whole been good. Early frosts destroyed the hopes of many who expected extraordinary crops, and some parts of the country have suffered more than others. We suffered in the vicinity of Winnipeg; but 60 miles from us, at Portage La Prairie, no damage was sustained from the frost at all. We have ample supplies of wheat not only for our own wants but also for those who require seed grain.

The next paragraph refers to the late troubles in the North-West which caused great anxiety throughout the country. They might have produced very serious consequences indeed. I know at Winnipeg fears were entertained that the city might be ruined. A disaster was averted through the promptitude with which help was sent from the Eastern Provinces, and now, since the troubles have ended, we are glad to find that the Government have come to the relief of the sufferers. Ample supplies of grain and provisions have been sent to relieve those who have been brought to want through the troubles. I hope there will be no repetition of the experience of last year. It was the work, and organization and scheme of 15 years time, and I am satisfied that people who are capable or desirous of bringing about such troubles are very few in the Dominion.

The clause with reference to the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway is one of deep interest to the people of the whole Dominion. It was my good fortune to echo the words of the Speech from the Throne in 1872. It was a pleasant duty for me, and it is equally pleasant for me now to be able to announce that that great artery will ere long be completed from ocean to ocean. It has taken some years to finish the work. There was an interruption, the consequence of which we have had to stand, but a few months hence we will see the end of the work; it will be possible in the course of next summer to proceed by continuous rail communication from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Certainly the Government which has provided the means of completing such a wonderful work deserves our credit. While there may be much in their administration which we cannot approve, we must recognize all that they have done towards the completion of that road, and the country should certainly be proud of such rulers. They should also be gratified to possess such men as those who assumed the responsibility of carrying out such a gigantic undertaking, and who have brought it to such a successful completion. They are certainly entitled to the gratitude of the country and should be recognized as the best promoters of the prosperity and greatness of the Dominion.

Allusion is made in the Address to the large expenditures incurred in the suppression of the late outbreak. It is true that the expenses have been heavy, but some good results have been obtained. Sometimes it happens that evil produces good; it has been so in this case. We know the depressed condition in which Winnipeg stood, up to last year. Business was at a standstill; but now it is admitted by everyone that the troubles in the North-West broke the jam, if I may use the expression, and business has become more active. The Government have certainly had something to do in bringing about that result; they applied the oil to the wheels, and the machinery has been moving ever since in such a way as to give satisfaction to the population in that vast country. The proposed measure to give representation in this Parliament to the North-West Territories will prove highly satisfactory to the people residing there. If it had been possible to give them such representation sooner, possibly the troubles of last year would not have arisen. Those who would have been sent here as their representatives would have explained their position to the Government, and I think it would have been easy for them to have prevented those troubles and the serious consequences which have followed them, and the large expenditures incurred. Certainly it would have been very easy to have stopped the Indians. They were incited to rise and could not have created an outbreak otherwise. I think it is possible for the Government to treat the Indians in such a manner as to make them their friends. They should send men there who will treat them with the greatest kindness. That the outbreak did not assume more alarming proportions, I think is largely due to the influence of the clergy upon the Indians, and it is the duty of the Government to protect those engaged in preaching the gospel amongst the tribes. That is the best means of spreading civilization which could be employed. Not ten days ago I visited the Manitoba Penitentiary and witnessed the baptism of 29 of the Indians incarcerated there, among them such well known chiefs as Poundmaker and Big Bear. My opinion is that before long the Government will, in their own interest and the interest of the North West, come to the conclusion to release all the imprisoned Indians. They are certainly guilty, but they did not understand what they were doing. I think they now know that they acted wrongly, and it is to our interest that they should be restored to liberty as soon as possible. When those who have recently been baptised return to their families they will be our best friends. That is certainly the best means of promoting civilization and progress, and we may rest assured that they will never again violate the peace and order of the country. Having alluded to the paragraphs of the Address which refer more particularly to Manitoba and the North West, I shall now take the liberty of replying to some remarks which were made by the hon. member for DeSalaberry.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I would ask the honourable gentleman from St. Boniface if it is a crime for the people of Quebec to create an agitation by expressing opinions differing from those of the Government. I think the honourable gentleman is falling into the same mistake, because he does not seem to approve altogether of all that the Government has done. I call his attention to the fact that it may be the means of creating an agitation in this House.

HON. MR. GIRARD—I do not think the Province of Quebec has committed a crime; but supposing they had committed what I considered to be a crime, I would not take it upon myself to denounce it; I would leave to others better qualified than I am the duty of bringing it up against the province which I love par excellence. At the same time I do not hesitate to say that I regret the agitation which has taken place in the Province of Quebec. If it was not a criminal one, it certainly was very reprehensible. It was not in the interests of the Dominion, and it went so far that one step more would have endangered the existence of the confederation. For my own part I do not hesitate to express my unqualified disapproval of the movement. I do not say it is a crime to agitate. British liberty gives to the subjects of Her Majesty very wide scope, and gives us the right to plead for our rights; at the same time I do not think we could do any more than what has been done in the Province of Quebec to create trouble and disorder in the rest of the Dominion. The honourable gentleman from DeSalaberry smiles; but I tell him that we who reside in the North-West, who were most interested in this matter, never wished for such an agitation. We remained quiet. We were in the minority there, and we understood that if we desired to advance the interests of the Dominion, of our own province, and of the North-West, we could not do it by our own unaided effort. We are in the minority, and we feel that it is the duty of the minority to go to the majority and make mutual concessions from time to time which will be in the interests of the community as a whole. That is what we have done. If we had not done it, what would have been our position to-day? It certainly would not have been possible to have advanced that country to the position in which it now stands. It was only by mutual concession that it was possible to allay the animosity that existed when I first entered that Province. Certainly had I acted as my friends in Quebec have done towards the people of Manitoba I would have been forced to seek a home in some other country. Our friends in Quebec must understand that we do not care to submit to injustice, when any injustice exists, any more than they do, and for that reason we desire to protest against the agitation that has been brought about as not being in the interests of the confederation. It is very painful for me to have to rise in my place and say we do not thank the Province of Quebec for what it has done, and ask it as a favor to let Manitoba alone. There are men there who understand the politics of the country, who know what is necessary for the Province and for the Dominion, who are ready to sacrifice everything, even their lives, if need be, in the interest of their country. They gave proof of it when they were called to arms during the late troubles. It was in the interest of the Dominion, that the people of Manitoba were the first to offer their services in the battle field, and there, without fear, to risk their lives in defence of their common country. The French and the English citizens of that country are still ready to do all in their power for the maintenance of peace and order in the Dominion, and I think that the people of the Province of Quebec will assist us in that duty. Certainly I am not, and I hope I have never been a blind follower of the Government. While I have always given them a fair support and sympathy because of the heavy responsibility they bear, and have always been ready to assist them when they are right, at the same time, I am not a blind admirer of all that they do. On the present occasion I do not see any sufficient reason to withhold from them the same support that I have given them in the past. The hon. gentleman opposite referred the other day to the victim of the 16th November last.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I never said a word about it in this House.

HON. MR. GIRARD—I did not mention the hon. gentleman's name.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I do not believe that the hon. gentleman is doing it intentionally, but he is departing from the question altogether. In the previous debate I only replied to some of the remarks of my hon. friend from Lauzon, and I did not intend to go into the merits of this question, and besides, I said that I would not go into the merits of the question because I thought it was understood that it should not be discussed on the Address. The hon. gentleman from St. Boniface speaks in English. I spoke in French. I think that he will admit that I had some reasons for speaking in French, at least in one debate during the Session. It is very painful for me to see the hon. gentleman attempting to reply to statements which I did not utter and evading the question altogether. The hon. gentleman is trying to impress on the minds of members of this House that there has been an agitation, and I suppose since he denounces it, he means an improper agitation. In my opinion an agitation which consists of the expression of loyal opinion, and the use of constitutional right, is not one which should be denounced in such terms as the hon. gentleman has used. I do not think it is fair on his part to misrepresent us in the way he does. I feel that we shall always be ready to discuss the position we have taken, and I invite the hon. gentleman to point out to this House what was wrong in what we have done in expressing our opinion. The hon. gentleman says: "I find that there was not sufficient for me to withdraw my support from the Government." That is his view; but he ought not to find fault with other parties because they hold a different opinion.

HON. MR. GIRARD—I have nothing to say against the loyal opposition of the Province of Quebec, but I remember in certain cases it has been—

HON. MR. TRUDEL—Mention facts or opinions, or sayings or something.

HON. MR. GIRARD—At a convenient time I will mention, as well as I can, my impression of the circumstances the hon. gentleman refers to. I shall refer to the remarks of the hon. gentleman from De Salaberry; I will try to answer him as completely as possible, and if in my expression there is anything which I should not have said, he may be sure it is more from want of capacity than will on my part. I have looked upon the hon. gentleman as one of the pillars of the Conservative party. For over a quarter of a century he has been fighting for the good cause, and I was glad to serve under him. But when I see all this agitation in Quebec about Manitoba affairs, I, as a humble representative of Manitoba, so much interested in its destinies, hope he will not be offended if I tell him and the Province of Quebec, through him, we thank you for your sympathies, but we do not look for any change. Although the Government was in fault on some important points, there was nothing to justify the insurrection, and we do not want to put down the present government, because they have done great things in their day; they have introduced many reforms, and we have nothing better to expect from a change of administration. The hon. gentleman in his speech refers to the expiatory victim of the 16th of November last. I think we all regret what happened at the time. For my part, I would prefer to see that victim living to-day. If he were alive we would not have much difficulty in appreciating him at his true value; but dead he is everywhere. The only question is whether he had any sufficient reason to justify the course which he adopted. I think it would have been possible for the Government to have acted another way; but he was certainly not justified in plunging the North-West into an insurrection, and bringing upon his fellow-citizens the trouble and loss which they sustained, and which we all so much regret. We know that for years he laid his schemes in that new country through which he hoped to preside over a new world. He did not succeed. If he had succeeded, perhaps it would have been quite different; but he failed and had to suffer the penalty of the law. We all regret it; but at the same time I do not think there is sufficient cause for ill feeling against the Government for what has taken place. That man had certainly caused a great deal of suffering amongst the settlers of the North-West. The Government to-day are repairing as much as in their power lies, the wrongs that have been done; but it will take many years before the people are placed in the same position they held before the rebellion. I think that to-day the people are satisfied. They seek redress in a legal and constitutional way. They claim their rights as British subjects are entitled to do. I find in to-day's Gazette a dispatch from Winnipeg, which shows exactly the position in which affairs now stand in those parts of the North-West Territories where the troubles occurred last year.

With the permission of the House I shall read it:—

WINNIPEG, Man., February 27.—The half-breeds held a public meeting to-day at St. Laurent, when leading men from all the French parishes were present. Resolutions were adopted thanking the Government in warm terms for the humane manner in which the half-breeds had been treated since last spring. It was decided the half-breeds should ask the Government for a free grant of their lands, basing the claim on being the original possessors. They will also ask that an industrial school for half-breed children be established in the district, that the amnesty be extended to the half-breeds in the prison and across the border, that naturalization be made more accessible, and that electoral districts be erected in the French settlements. Riel's name was not mentioned.

I shall now take the liberty to read some extracts from letters which I hold in my hand as giving the opinion of some of our public men in the province of Manitoba and the North West. As far as Manitoba is concerned, I would direct the attention of hon. gentlemen to the manifesto of the Archbishop of St. Boniface, which has been recently published in Quebec:—

"Everything which affects Quebec, everything which affects Manitoba and the North-West Territories, touches me keenly, and, therefore, in view of an agitation which cannot fail to be attended with danger, I take the liberty, as respectful as affectionate, to say to my friends not to let themselves be drawn into a movement which may be most prejudicial to themselves, and to the cause which they have embraced with so much generosity.

"Amid all that has been said and written in the past three weeks, I have admired the noble promptings of a generous patriotism. Now, to be sincere, I should declare that I have deeply deplored impulses which, in my humble opinion, are not the echo of that sentiment, or do not in the least exhibit that extreme prudence which the true patriot imposes on himself in the crisis which occur in the history of a nation.

"Quarrels of race and above all of religion, are instruments most dangerous to handle, above all in a country where men of different creeds and origins are in daily relations with one another. Between different nationalities there is something of the spirit displayed between political parties. Each contents itself with seeing its own good aspirations, without taking into account those of others; just as it closes its eyes to its own defects, only to open them excessively to those of the other side."

I shall now read to the House the letters to which I have referred. One of them is written from St. Albert where the troubles began, and the other is written from Edmonton in the North-West Territories. The gentleman who writes to me is a half-breed, a young man of education who draws a parallel between the position of his country as it was some years ago, and its position to-day. He says :

"It was a sad blow, and one which has thrown us a long way behind. What disorganization in our French parishes! I can truly say that it is as if fire or war had passed over them. I have been there but once since the troubles, and I can assure you that they present a sad spectacle. What a contrast they furnish to their former condition!"

This other letter, coming from a French-Canadian gentleman established at Edmonton, is from an independent source, and this is what he writes to me :—

"I see that the Province of Quebec is still agitated over the hanging of Riel. The announcement of his execution is received by the Metis very coolly. If I might venture to express an opinion, I would say that this agitation does us more harm than good. We have nothing to gain by it. On the contrary, it is arousing race prejudices. If the people of the Province of Quebec knew what a train of evils that agitation is preparing for us—for us who are but a handful of French-Canadians lost in this vast North-West—I believe they would have sufficient patriotism not to try to destroy us completely.

I give those extracts just to let hon. gentlemen know the position in which not only Manitoba but the whole North-West Territory stands in reference to these troubles. I will not go any further than to recite the words of the hon. member from DeSalaberry—that it is not easy to impart life to what has no life in it. It is possible, however, by our patriotism, and kindness, and forbearance to restore the progress and prosperity of our country. It is for that purpose we are here ; for my own part I am quite decided to do my best to advance, as far as lies in my power, the true interest, the peace and prosperity of this Dominion.

HON. MR. POWER—I hope I may be pardoned if before referring to the Speech from the Throne I allude briefly to another matter. It will be remembered that towards the close of the last Session it was generally understood that we were to lose from this Chamber the gentleman who has so long and so ably led it ; and

I hope I shall not be considered as disloyal to my party if I take the first opportunity of expressing my sincere gratification that that hon. gentleman still remains amongst us.

HON. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

HON. MR. POWER—I do not mean to say that the hon. gentleman feels happy about it himself ; but if his remaining here is his loss, it is our gain ; and I only hope that we shall have him with us for a long time to come. Having said so much of the leader of the House I may be allowed to sympathize with another hon. gentleman as to whose promotion some of us have been disappointed ; and I only hope that in due time the strenuous exertions of that gentleman in the cause of his party, may meet with the promotion to which they are entitled.

Now, a few words as to the Speech. His Excellency begins by congratulating us on the sufficient harvest of last year, and on the prosperity and substantial progress of the country. I am glad to know that throughout the Dominion as a whole the harvest has been fairly good ; but I regret to say that coming from the portion of the Dominion which I do, I cannot concur in the sentiments expressed in the latter part of the first paragraph of the Speech. Speaking only for the Province of Nova Scotia, as to which I think I can fairly speak, I believe we have no reason to be congratulated on the prosperity and substantial progress of that part of the Dominion. Taking the city of Halifax for instance, we find that one most important establishment which it was boasted had been the result of the introduction of the National Policy, has come utterly to grief—the Nova Scotia Sugar Refinery—and in that manufactory there has been sunk nearly half a million of dollars, which money has been completely lost to the shareholders ; and the institution is now closed up with little prospect of being re-opened.

Then, the West India business, which it was supposed would be promoted by the change in the sugar tariff, is suffering almost as badly as the sugar refinery. The West India business of our Atlantic ports is at the present moment in a worse position than it has been for a great many years ; and, unless some change is made in the tariff, there seems to be no probability that the West India trade, a most important one to us, will recover. Honourable gentlemen may think that the West India trade, and the sugar business may be exceptions to the general rule in the province of Nova Scotia, but there are other criteria of the prosperity of the country of which that cannot be said—they are criteria which are almost infallible. There is no better criterion of the prosperity of any city, county or district than the value of land. The value of land in the Province of Nova Scotia at large, and especially in the city of Halifax, has gone down very materially during the last few years. At the present day the value of property in Halifax is not more than two-thirds of what it was ten years ago. The process of depreciation in the value of land in that city has continued almost steadily since 1877.

HON. MR. CARVELL—Are you not glad of it ?

HON. MR. POWER—I am not glad of it ; I am very sorry, as I have reason to be. There is another criterion of the state of business in a country, that is the condition of the banks. Now the banks in Nova Scotia are worse off to-day than they have been, I should say, for 25 or 30 years. I have in my desk a petition from a bank which has been doing business there for some thirty years, asking for a reduction of its capital to one-half. The dividends of the banks have been largely reduced ; and we had not long ago in the Halifax Chamber of Commerce, the manager of the largest local bank in Nova Scotia declaring that business generally was depressed, that the condition of the banking business was most unsatisfactory, and that there was very little prospect of its improvement. Probably that is enough to say on such an occasion as this with respect to that particular matter. I may be pardoned if I make one more remark on the subject. The hon. gentleman from Lauzon, in the admirable speech in which he moved the Address in reply to His Excellency's Speech, spoke of the progress that we have made since 1867. Now, whatever progress may have been made in the Province of Quebec or other provinces, in Nova Scotia it has been largely of a retrograde character, and the Province does not stand as well to day as it stood in 1867.

The second paragraph of His Excellency's Speech deals with the question of the recent disturbances in the North-West Territories. I am happy to be able to join with the hon. gentleman from Lauzon in speaking in terms of warm praise of the conduct of our volunteers. They conducted themselves on the whole in a way that would have done credit to regular soldiers ; and I think that the Militia Department deserves the greatest credit for the manner in which it contrived to put so large a body of troops on so distant a field of action in so short a time and with so little loss, and in getting their supplies there. I regret to notice, from the tone of this paragraph of His Excellency's Speech, that there appears to be some foundation for the rumors of a threatened Indian uprising in the North West. He says : "it will be the duty of my Government to make such precautionary arrangements as will assure the present inhabitants as well as intending settlers of efficient protection against all disturbance." Considering that there are already two batteries out there, this intimation that more troops are to be sent to the North West would seem to indicate that the Government feel that there is a danger of a further rising.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—There is no specific reason for the apprehension. We have no direct evidence to indicate in any way that there is any difficulty to be apprehended there ; it is simply a precautionary measure.

HON. MR. POWER—I am happy to hear that, and I regret that the Government think it necessary to send additional forces to the North West. We must admit that while the recent disturbance was a loss to the country at large, to a number of people in the North West, it was a great gain ; and I presume no one is more alive, than the leader of this House is, to the fact that parties pecuniarily interested in that way are likely to contrive to create an impression that there is danger in order that more money may be spent in that country. I think these stories of probable Indian rising ought to be somewhat discounted. The suggestion has been made before, and I think possibly there was some reason in it that the Indians at the close of the recent disturbance should have been at least partially disarmed. I also feel, as I felt at the time the disturbance broke out, that it would have been wiser for the Government to entrust the defence of that country to the local forces, the people on the spot. They are more directly interested in preventing any armed outbreak than we are; and if local volunteer corps were organized in the dangerous districts they would, with comparatively little expense to the rest of the country, prevent any risk of outbreak.

The third paragraph of the speech congratulates us on the practical completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway. In that congratulation I can most heartily concur; and the reason why I do so is this—so long as that railway was in an incomplete condition we were never sure that a Session would pass without bringing the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to our doors asking for more money. I do not feel very sanguine yet that we shall not have another application; but I am happy to think that the time for these applications is nearly over.

HON. MR. PLUMB—We have not lost anything.

HON. MR. POWER—More than one hon. gentleman has dwelt with a good deal of feeling on the energy and wonderful enterprise shown by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in the construction of the work which they had on hand. The hon. gentleman who seconded the address was one of them, and I think the hon. leader of the Opposition was another. It does not seem to me that, when the country supplies all the money that is required and a great deal more than is absolutely necessary, and supplies it with a ready and lavish hand, the people who spend the money deserve a great deal of praise for displaying energy. With abundant labor and means at hand to carry out such an undertaking it is not difficult to prosecute it rapidly. I venture, now that the work is nearly completed, to doubt the wisdom of the haste with which it has been carried over the mountains by what I consider to be a bad route, and of the speed of its construction north of Lake Superior. However, this is not the time to discuss this question, and I do not propose to go into the reasons pro and con. I think, with respect to the reports and statements which we have as to the earnings of the road, that they should be regarded with a certain amount of doubt. I may be mistaken; but I believe that in these statements we get the earnings of the leased lines as well as the earnings of the main line, and I should be very much surprised to learn that the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway is paying its working expenses. There is one reason why as a British subject one cannot but feel pleased that the road is practically completed, and that is in case of difficulty between England and Russia, or some other country, this Canadian Pacific Railway will be available for Imperial purposes. That suggests another consideration. If this road is built, as it has turned out to be, largely for Imperial purposes, the Mother Country should to some extent contribute towards the cost of its construction, and not leave the whole burden upon her colony. I do not know how my hon. colleagues from Nova Scotia feel, but I could not help thinking, when listening to this paragraph in the Speech and to the congratulatory comments made upon it, that down in Nova Scotia we had very little reason to congratulate ourselves upon the completion of the road. We were given to understand that that road would be brought to us—that we should be connected with its present terminus by the shortest and best practicable line. That hope has been disappointed, and on that point we have had expressions of opinion from bodies authorized to speak for the mercantile community of Nova Scotia. Then, while the 20,000 people of British Columbia have connection by the Canadian Pacific Railway with the centres of population, the great island of Cape Breton, with a population five times as large as that of British Columbia, and which has been a portion of the Dominion for several years longer than the Pacific Province, instead of having a railway has still to be contented with a survey and with promises. I hope that now that the Government have built their road as far as they can to the west, they will see that it is completed at an early date at the east end too.

HON. MR. MCINNES (B. C.)—I hope the hon. gentleman will allow me to correct an error into which he has fallen. He states that the population of British Columbia is only 20,000. If he will look at the census of 1881 he will find that the population is very much larger.

HON. MR. POWER—The white population.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I am not speaking of the white population; neither do I think, when the population of Nova Scotia or any other province is mentioned, that any distinction is made between white, black and red. The population of British Columbia is nearer 75,000 than 20,000.

HON. MR. POWER—Perhaps I overstated the number of whites and understated the number of Indians. I do not think the Indians are likely to give much trade to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Yes they do.

HON. MR. POWER—In case of an outbreak perhaps they will, but not otherwise. Coming from one of the Maritime provinces which is largely interested in the fisheries question—more largely than any other province of the Dominion—I must confess to a feeling of disappointment at the tone of the paragraph which deals with that question. It is evident that the Government do not feel hopeful of a successful end to the negotiations for the renewal of the Washington Treaty, and they speak of making provision for the protection of our inshore fisheries, by the extension of our present system of marine police. I presume the English of that paragraph is that the fishery clauses of the Washington Treaty will not be renewed, and that there will be nothing to take their place, of a general character like the former reciprocity treaty. Now, why are we in this position? It may be that that position is an unavoidable one; but I must say that I think the course of the Government in connection with this matter has not been one which we should approve of. It has been practically to do nothing whatever; and the reason that they gave for doing nothing was that if they were to attempt anything it would manifest an anxiety for the renewal of the treaty, which would lead the Americans to think that we valued it very highly and that therefore they should not give it to us. I think, to begin with, that it is absurd to suppose that a business-like people like the Americans would be governed by considerations of that sort. If it is clear to the American Government and people that the Washington Treaty or a wider treaty—a reciprocity treaty—would be beneficial to themselves as well as to us, I do not think they are so silly as to refuse to negotiate such a treaty because we would share the benefits derived from it. Here we have the same government which year after year excused their doing nothing towards getting a renewal of the Washington Treaty or of the reciprocity treaty on the ground which I have just mentioned, giving away at the close of the treaty the whole season of fishing to the Americans for no consideration whatever. Now what greater proof could we give of our anxiety for a renewal of the treaty and our fear of offending the American people or their government than to give them for nothing all the benefits which they enjoyed under the treaty? What has been the practical result of this? The fishermen of Massachusetts have interpreted this action of our government as an indication of weakness, and probably as an indication that our government did not believe that the fishing rights which the Americans enjoyed under the treaty were of any great value; and, having got them for nothing, they are able to speak of them as being valueless and to use that as a strong argument against a renewal of the treaty. If the Government, which had two years notice of the proposed abrogation of this treaty, instead of folding their arms and doing nothing, had made preparations to deal in a summary and vigorous way with the American fishermen when the treaty did terminate, and if in addition to that they had taken pains to secure such statistics as would have shown that the Washington Treaty and the previous Reciprocity Treaty had been of the greatest benefit to the United States, then we would have been in an infinitely better position to deal with the United States Government than we are to-day. I think the conduct of the Government on this one point is sufficient to condemn them, at any rate in the estimation of the people of the lower provinces. I know already it has had very great effect indeed in changing the opinions of the fishing population as to the merits of the present Government. It is now very late in the day to begin to do anything. It does not seem that anything has been done yet; and I do hope that the Government will make up by prompt and vigorous action now for their neglect in the past—that they will take steps to secure the statistics which they ought to have got before, and that they will vigorously and energetically protect our rights in our inshore waters. I trust that they have taken steps already to secure the assistance of the Imperial navy in protecting our fisheries. Supposing the Imperial Government have no right to contribute towards the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, I think the least they can do, seeing that we have done so much for them in furnishing them with such a magnificent military road as the Canadian Pacific Railway, will be to allow us to utilize their navy to protect our fisheries.

As to the next two or three paragraphs of the Address I do not propose to say anything. They refer to matters that I think must meet with the approval of every hon. gentleman. It is desirable that the Consolidated Statutes should get into use as soon as possible. I am glad to see that the consolidation is now about completed and ready for submission to parliament; and undoubtedly it is a desirable thing to improve the judiciary system that obtains in the North-West.

The fifth paragraph speaks of the taking of the census in the North-West Territories, and indicates that it is proposed to introduce a measure for the representation of the people of the North-West in Parliament. I am glad that it is so; and I agree with the hon. gentleman who spoke before me in thinking that if the people of the North-West had been represented in Parliament during the past few years the recent disturbance might not have taken place at all. One thing struck me as being singular—that, while so many petitions were undoubtedly sent from the North-West to the Government, so few of them found their way before Parliament. If that country had been represented in the House of Commons and in this body, undoubtedly we should have had years ago petitions giving us information which, as things have turned out, was unfortunately only in the hands of the Government, and, as it appears, in very bad hands indeed. When I say the Government, I do not mean to say the blame is to be borne equally by all the members of the Government. It is generally understood that the leader of the Ministry has had North-West affairs under his special control; and that even when the hon. gentleman whom we regret not to see amongst us now was Minister of the Interior he was guided and controlled by his leader.

I am glad to learn from the 6th paragraph of the speech that a measure will be laid before us to provide for a better mode of the trial of claims against the Crown. I think there was room for improvement in that way. There is one subject referred to in the 6th paragraph of the speech which I cannot help feeling some apprehension about. His Excellency tells us that a measure will be laid before us for the administration of the rights of the Crown in the fore-shores of the Dominion. I am afraid that, in introducing a measure of that kind, we are about entering upon a course of difficulty such as we got into by our interference with the license question. I think the intention of the framers of the constitution clearly was, and the practice of all the Provinces since the Union has been, that the grants of water or of land covered with water should be made by the provincial governments. I am sorry to see an intimation here that it is the intention of the Government to take this matter into their own hands. I think before any measure of that sort is introduced the government should have the opinion of the Privy Council on the question of right. I have always felt, and I should not speak so positively if I had only my own opinion, but I know numbers of gentlemen of sound legal learning who believe that the decision on which this measure is to be based was an erroneous one.

The 7th paragraph, which is addressed more particularly to the House of Commons, tells us that the estimates of receipts has been fully realized. We will all be glad to hear that, no doubt; as we must all share in His Excellency's regret that the outbreak in the North-West has added largely to the expenditure of the country. I think, as to that last passage, that the substance of it is, we have a very large deficit this year, the largest we have had since Confederation; and the Government say the cause of it is the outbreak in the North-West. I regret that the hon. gentleman to whom I referred just now is not here; because, when I said last year that the period of deficits was approaching, that hon. gentlemen said it had not come so far, and was not likely to come—that I was a false prophet. It has come now. But it does seem to me that, to excuse the existence of the deficit as has been done by those who have spoken on behalf of the Government by attributing it to the difficulties in the North-West, is an attempt on the part of the Government to take advantage of their own wrong doing. Our information as to the causes of the difficulty in the North-West is not as full as it might be, but still we have enough information to show that the Government are responsible. We have the admission of the hon. gentleman—a warm supporter of the Government—who has just spoken, that if the North-West had been represented in the House of Commons and in this House, the outbreak would not have occurred. If Parliament had had the information which the Government possessed, the rebellion would not have taken place. Clearly the Government were responsible for the insurrection, because they did not do what they would have done under the pressure of the members of the two Houses. The Government themselves admitted at an early stage in the outbreak—in fact just as it began—by the issuing of a Commission on the half-breed claims, that they had been negligent of their duty before. We have information to show that there was a great deal of discontent amongst the whites as well as amongst the half-breeds in the North-West; and it is not to be wondered at when it was very often a matter of several years' effort to get a patent for lands in the North-West. I have heard of one instance where the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Territories, Mr. Dewdney, sent an urgent dispatch to the Government here stating in his dispatch that it was a matter that required to be attended to at once. That dispatch was answered a year afterwards to the effect that the matter would be considered, and nothing, I believe, has been done about it since. One can understand, in a free country like this, when the well-founded complaints of people are treated in that way by the Ministry, that if the people break out in revolt the Ministry are to blame. Then in addition to these half-breed claims and the difficulties about patents, and the delay in doing things generally, and the dissatisfaction as to the manner in which the surveys were made where the half-breeds were settled, there was the character of the appointments made by the Government in the North-West. The dispatch which the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface read to us just now shows that the people of St. Laurent have still to complain of the delay and neglect of the Government. It is clear that it was the misdeeds and the neglect of duty of the Government which made Riel's rebellion possible. If there had been no misconduct and no neglect of duty on the part of the Government there could have been no outbreak. I do not wish to be understood at all as justifying the rebellion. I should be very sorry to have any hon. gentleman understand that I assume such a position. Things have to go a very long way before open rebellion is justifiable; but the outbreak would not have taken place if it had not been for the Government's neglect and misdoings. I do not pretend either to say that the Government were wrong in allowing the law to take its course in the case of Riel. If, instead of executing Riel, they had executed, for instance, such a man as Gabriel Dumont, I think their conduct might have been found fault with. But Riel's case was different. Looking over the evidence there are certain circumstances which are calculated to prevent a man of unbiased mind from sympathising deeply with him. When you find a patriot who on different occasions professes his readiness to sacrifice his patriotism for $35,000, I think he is hardly a man who deserves a very great deal of sympathy. So I do not quarrel with the Government—that is, as far as our information goes—over the execution of Riel. It may be that the report of the Medical Commissioners who were sent out to investigate Riel's mental condition would show some cause for clemency. I regret that the document does not appear amongst the papers laid before us; but I feel bound to suppose that their report was to the effect that he was not insane; and then I do not think we have any reason to find fault with the Government for his execution; but it does not seem like even-handed justice that a man of comparatively narrow mind and small ideas—who was guilty, no doubt—should expiate his crime on the scaffold, while another man who was in a greater degree the cause of the outbreak, remains at the head of the Government. There is this further thing to be said, that, although the Government may have done right in allowing the law to take its course, right things are sometimes done from wrong motives; and it is possible that before the end of the session we may have an opportunity of ascertaining the motives which led to the law being allowed to take its course in the case of Riel.

I may say that during the last summer the Lower Provinces were visited by a gentleman of distinguished position and great ability, whose connection with the leader of the Government is a very intimate one, and who went about lecturing in different important centres in the Lower Provinces, apparently preparing the minds of the people for a commutation of Riel's sentence. That that gentleman should have done so without an understanding with the head of the Government, seems to me highly improbable.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL — Who is he?

HON. MR. POWER—Rev. Principal Grant.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL — I never heard of it. He is not in the confidence of the Government, any way.

HON. MR. POWER—I have said all that I propose to say as to the paragraphs in the Speech from the throne. I shall now call attention to some omissions from that Speech. In the first place, it makes no reference whatever to the question which is looked upon in the Lower Provinces, as the most important of all the questions which can engage the attention of the Government and Parliament—that is the question of reciprocity. Hon. gentlemen in the Upper Provinces cannot realize how strong the feeling on that subject is with us, and they cannot realize how great will be the disappointment of the people in the Maritime Provinces, when they find that the reciprocity question is kept resolutely in the back ground; and I think their disappointment is justifiable, because amongst other reasons, the present leader of the Government when in opposition moved on one occasion a resolution in which he spoke about moving through reciprocity of tariffs to a reciprocity of trade. We have moved a very long way in the direction of reciprocity of tariffs, but we seem to be farther off than ever from reciprocity of trade. The natural market of the lower provinces is in the United States. The market of Nova Scotia is almost exclusively there. They have a market in England to a certain extent, but the United States constitute the principal market for a great many productions of Nova Scotia, and the people down there must feel bitterly disappointed to find that there is no prospect of an early opening of that market to them.

There is another subject which we might have expected to see noticed in the Speech, after the eloquent and patriotic speech made by the leader of the Government at St. George's Club in London. The Speech does not say a word about imperial federation. Upon reading the right hon. gentleman's remarks, one would naturally suppose that that subject would occupy a prominent place in the Speech from the Throne.

There is another significant omission from the Speech of this year, the omission of any reference to the Intercolonial Railway. For a number of years after the change of Government, we had triumphant references to the fact, first, that we were equalizing the expenditure and the income; and then for two or three years that there was a considerable excess of income over expenditure. This year there is no reference to that road, because there is an unprecedented deficit in the Intercolonial Railway revenue. I regret to notice that the Government, instead of taking what might be regarded as statesmanlike steps towards improving the condition of things on that railway, has been dismissing old and trusted employes at the very worst season of the year, in midwinter, when it is almost impossible to get employment elsewhere. We do not find in the Speech any reference to the license law. That was a matter that occupied our attention for two or three years. It has now been happily disposed of. I am surprised that the Government do not congratulate the country upon the fact that this burning question has been completely extinguished by the last decision of the Privy Council. Probably if the leader of this House were still Minister of Justice, he would have seen that a paragraph was put in the Speech with reference to that matter. There are other decisions of the Privy Council that we do not hear anything about either.

There is just one remark I should like to make as to something that dropped from the hon. leader of the Government in reply to what was said by the leader of the Opposition. The leader of the Government said that there was no want at all in this country of independent expression of opinion, and he referred to the present agitation in the Province of Quebec. The leader of the Opposition was perfectly right in expressing his regret at the absence in this country of an independent political sentiment, and I think the leader of the Government need not have gone back very far to recall cases where that independent feeling was effectually crushed out. The hon. gentleman cannot help remembering how it was that the opposition to the last vote of $30,000,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway was disposed of—how the independent opinion opposed to that grant was got rid of. The hon. gentleman must remember also that last session a measure was introduced into Parliament which was opposed, I believe, by three-quarters of the Conservative members of the House of Commons; and that independent opinion was got rid of in some way or other; and, look at the course now taken by the Government and their friends—friend is justified in standing up here and abusing so large a majority of the other branch of parliament.

HON. MR. POWER—I am not abusing them; I am only pointing out how very accessible to reason the majority of them were.

HON. MR. CARVELL—Traducing them.

HON. MR. POWER—No; I am not traducing them. If my hon. friend can induce some of his friends to reveal the secrets of "No. 8," hon. gentlemen will see whether I am traducing them or not. I think the circumstances which accompany one great expression of independent opinion are enough to show how true the words of the leader of the Opposition were. We have had recently an independent expression of opinion in the Province of Quebec; and how has it been met? Has it been met in a reasonable way? Was not this expression of opinion, which may have been rather extreme, but was kept within constitutional bounds, met at the very outset by the organ of the Government in Toronto with the threat to do away with the constitutional rights and privileges of the people of Quebec, guaranteed by the treaty of 1763? That fact just shows how little the people who govern this country can understand or appreciate independent expression of opinion. I hope that as we grow older we shall grow wiser and grow more like England. I think it is very much in the interests of this country that we should have much more frequent and general expressions of independent political opinion; and I only hope that before we get through this session we shall not have striking evidence of the large price that the country shall be called upon to pay in order to get rid of the recent and present expression of opinion in the Province of Quebec.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I do not rise to prolong this debate, and probably I should not have risen at all but for some few remarks of my hon. friend on my right. Now, as regards reciprocity, my hon. friend would lead the House to believe that the Government is opposed to trade with the United States. He must remember well, however, our failure to secure it in 1874, when a then distinguished member of this body went to Washington to negotiate a reciprocity treaty, and the conditions which he and his party were willing to give, although they were considered too large and not in the interests of this country.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—They would not be approved of, even to-day, by the Dominion.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—True, we have become self-reliant. Even after all the negotiations, we failed—entirely failed—and we had it then from the leader of that party in the other House, that we had humiliated ourselves enough; that we should not again put ourselves in a false position; that he should never consent to our humbling ourselves any more and asking concessions from the United States in the manner we had done. That was the condition of affairs at that time, and since then has there been any reason why we should approach the United States and ask for reciprocity, even in the natural products of the country? When this country adopted our present system of protection eight years ago, what did we do? By Act of Parliament we provided that whenever the United States were willing to abolish or reduce the duties on natural products of the country, our Government should do the same. That inducement has been held out to the United States for the last eight years—a standing invitation to extend the commercial relations of the two countries, and they have failed to accept it. Can the Government of Canada be reproached, or can it be said that the Government are hostile to reciprocal trade in the natural products of the two countries? I say no, because the country knows well that Parliament has given that authority: and that policy has not been challenged, but has been endorsed on two occasions by the people; therefore my hon. friend does not state the case fairly. He would impress upon the country a view which is not sustained by the facts when he would lead the people to believe that this Government is opposed to a reciprocity treaty. I probably should not have risen at all on this occasion, but when statements were promulgated by my hon. friend which have a tendency to mislead the minds of the people, and make them believe as facts things that do not exist, I felt myself bound to expose such falacies. I do not intend to follow the whole discussion of my hon. friend. It seems to me that although there is prosperity and substantial progress in the country my hon. friend from Halifax sees nothing but adversity and black ruin everywhere. As regards the harvest he has very little to say, or as to the prosperity that prevails amongst the farmers. I know that that prosperity is widespread throughout the Dominion, and it is admitted that agriculture is the basis of all our industries—our very existence depends upon it. The manufacturers have to depend largely on the raw products of the farm, and although we have had a good harvest, my hon. friend had not a word of encouragement on that subject, but says that the prosperity of the Maritime Provinces is diminished. I fail to see it. He refers to the lands in Nova Scotia as having depreciated in value. It may be the case in Halifax, but the prosperity of Halifax is not the prosperity of the whole Province. Halifax at one time had a monopoly of the trade of Nova Scotia; the whole Province came to trade with Halifax; but now each little town imports direct from the Old Country instead of buying from Halifax merchants, and can sell cheaper than the Halifax merchants.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—And small villages are rising everywhere?

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Yes, and they are flourishing. I say that the prosperity of Lunenburg never was greater than it is at the present day, although money is scarce and in demand. Property in Lunenburg which ten years ago was not worth $1 is to-day worth $10. Our fisheries have been very productive; but the trouble is we have had poor markets for our fish in consequence of the abrogation of the Fishery Clauses of the Washington Treaty by the United States, and depression of trade—and sugars in the West Indies. I believe however that the time will come when the United States will have to crave of us the privilege of resorting to our fishing grounds.

HON. MR. KAULBACH.

The American dealers will soon find that they cannot in their own waters catch sufficient to supply their own markets, and the American people will find that they have to pay too high a price for their fish. We will then be able to send our fish into the United States in the face of their high protective duty, and compete successfully with the American fishermen in the markets of their own country. In addition to that we are opening up a large trade with the people of Western Canada. We find that we can send our fish up this far, and soon we will send them very much further into the interior of the country. Our great North-West will find also that instead of allowing United States fish dealers to be the middle men to pack and sell the fish of the Lower Provinces we can do it ourselves, and send it to other markets. We, of necessity, are becoming alive to the importance of encouraging that industry and opening up new markets, and I believe that in the end, instead of having to go to Washington and humble ourselves there by asking the United States authorities to continue the Fishery Treaty, that they will find it in their own interest to come to us for the right of free fishing in our waters in exchange for free markets in the United States. I differ from my hon. friend when he says that this Government did wrong in allowing United States fishermen to fish in our waters after the abrogation of the Treaty. I am deeply interested in fisheries myself. The people of the County of Lunenburg, from which I come, catch half the fish that is exported from the Province of Nova Scotia, and I am directly and indirectly largely interested in that branch of industry. The feeling there was that if we had protected our fisheries and routed the United States fishermen after the lapse of the Treaty, we would not be in a fair position to negotiate for a continuance of the Treaty. We felt that if we granted that concession last year it would be a step towards not only a renewal of the fisheries Treaty, but also towards securing reciprocity on a larger scale. We felt that the Government had done their duty; that instead of provoking the hostility of the people of the United States, and incurring enormous expense to fit out a marine police, they have done better by extending the olive branch and showing a disposition to meet the American Government half way. I hope that our neighbors will yet have a better mind on this subject. I believe the vast majority of the people of United States, have not yet looked into the matter. The fishing people in Gloucester and Cape Ann, and along the shores of the Eastern States have been aggressive on this question, but the time is coming when the whole of the people of the United States will become alive to the importance of this matter, and will see that they are being heavily taxed to put money in the pockets of a few fishermen in the Eastern States. In this connection I hope that the Washington Government will be generous enough to return to us the moneys they have taken from us unfairly in the shape of duties on fish, since the abrogation of the treaty, and I draw the attention of the Government to that point. Our fisheries this year have been prosperous; the catch was large, but in consequence of a want of good markets the fishermen are no better off than they were at an earlier period of the fishing season. The country must see that we are not now and have not been for the last year, in a position to ask the United States to continue the treaty. The late administration in the United States, we know, was adverse to the Fishery Treaty. Both branches of Congress had given notice that they intended to terminate the treaty. We could not approach them and ask them to stultify their own action. We knew better than that; we knew that a general election was coming off in the United States; that there was a hostile feeling in certain quarters against everything British, and both of the great political parties felt that they could not take up this important question. Party lines were drawn so closely it was felt that if they touched any one industry or prejudiced any particular class in the United States it might prejudice the elections, and we could not ask anything from them. But when the new President of the United States said he would recommend to Congress not only free fishing and free markets, but a general extension of reciprocal trade between the two countries—I say when we had such a suggestion from the new President of the United States, who had the support of a large and influential party in Congress, this Government would have been recreant to the great fishing interests of the country had they made themselves hostile to the people of the United States, and disregarded these manifestations of better feeling on the part of the United States Government. I think our Government have acted wisely and well, although it has resulted in a temporary injury to our fishermen. The fishermen themselves feel that the Government have acted wisely, and in the interests of that great and important branch of the industries of the lower provinces. Our fishermen maintain a spirit of self reliance; they hold of right waters teeming with fish along 1,200 miles of coast. Half of the fish taken by the Americans have been within our lines. Hampered as the fishermen of the neighboring country will be for want of bait and supplies, they cannot for long hold a monopoly of their own fish market. Fifty millions of people will not for long consent to pay the increased price that the duty imposes on them, and ere long they will be asking, possibly in vain, for the concessions that they now refuse; and if we cannot now obtain by amicable means, and mutual concessions, mutual benefits—if our neighbors object to a continuance of the treaty, the greatest loss will be theirs, and our fishermen will, I trust, reap a harvest in the sale of their fish at enhanced prices. One thing at least is certain, our fishermen will not be robbed of their birthright. They have representatives here and in the other branch of Parliament who are alive to their interests. They are assured in the Speech before us, as well as by the action of this Government in the past, that their rights and interests will be firmly and efficiently protected.

With regard to the falling off in the trade with the West Indies, we know that it has been caused by the competition of beet-root sugar with the product of the West India Islands. When the people there could not sell their sugars, of course they could not buy our fish, and our trade suffered as the natural result. Other branches of trade, however, are fairly prosperous. Money is plentiful at low rates—in fact there is too much money at present throughout the Dominion at too low interest to please the banks. Discounts are low, and, consequently, the banks complain of poor times; but when the banks complain it is not always a sign that the country is not prospering. My hon. friend complains that the condition of the Maritime Provinces is retrograding. For my part I do not believe it. If he compares the progress and the condition of the Lower Provinces to-day with the condition of the provinces before Confederation, he will find that there is no unfavorable comparison. The most sanguine expectations of the people of eighteen years ago have been surpassed. Take Nova Scotia for instance. At that time we had no communication with this continent except by water; we had no railways; we had no communication with the Western Provinces, and had to depend entirely on the United States and West Indies for a market. We then felt that without trade with the United States we could not exist. Happily—with Confederation—all this has changed.

As regards the Pacific Railway, my hon. friend, the would be leader of the Opposition here, has very little to say. He was one of the pessimists from the first; he decried everything; he contended that all the money we loaned to the Pacific Railway Co. was so much given to them. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, I believe are now able and ready to repay their loan. The completion of that road has produced a new and mighty era in this country, fraught with benefits yet beyond our realization. My hon. friend alongside of me said that we went too fast and should not have built the road around Lake Superior. Contemplate, hon. gentlemen, what would have been the position of the North-West and Manitoba last spring if it had not been for the completion of the Pacific Railway round the north of Lake Superior. The necessity for that railroad was demonstrated when we had the trouble in the North-West. Had it not been for that railway what would have become of the settlers throughout the Territories? Had we followed the policy of the late Government with regard to the Pacific Railway it would not have been completed for many years to come. In fact, the Government had no confidence in themselves, in their country or in their party, and what they sought to do one year, they undid the next. Their railway scheme, half land and half water, certainly would not have been a success, and we must feel that by the completion of the Pacific Railway the Dominion as a whole has been consolidated, and new life has been infused into it from ocean to ocean. We feel now that Canada is a country that it never would have been without the trans-continental railway; we feel that the civilized world has been awakened to our importance, and has been talking about the great enterprise which has been so successfully carried through, and ere long we will find that the Province of British Columbia will stand as high in the estimation of the Dominion as well as of the Empire at large, as any of the older provinces.

The hon. gentleman from Halifax spoke of the Intercolonial Railway, the deficits in the receipts, and the discharging of some of the employes. Not more than a year ago the hon. gentleman denounced the Government for not carrying on the business of that railway on commercial principles, and contended that it should be treated like any other commercial enterprise. When the Government has done that, and has attempted to cut down some of the expenditure, he complains and says it is unwise and improper to discharge laborers whose services were not necessary. My hon. friend is not the gentleman who should complain of the railway being run on commercial principles. I may remark that the Intercolonial Railway should be run as nearly as possible on commercial principles, but first and foremost as a highway for the trade and commerce of the whole Dominion. I believe it is essential to us that it should be operated efficiently no matter what its cost, and no matter what the deficit may be. The people of the Maritime Provinces are always complaining of the rates being too high, although the Government has reduced them below the actual cost of carrying freight from one Province to another. I should not have spoken to-day, only I considered that my hon. friend, when he has nothing else to say, should not have run down our country and its institutions and led us to believe that there was danger of another rising in the North-West or that otherwise troops would not be sent to the North West at a large expense. Although it is the right of the Opposition to adversely criticize everything that may possibly be prejudicial to the interests of the country, it should be guided first and above party by feelings of true patriotism. When the hon. gentleman tells us that there is danger of another rebellion in the North-West, otherwise we would not send out troops, he must see that it is only right and proper that the country should be prepared for such an event. We had a lesson last year that has cost us a good deal of money—millions of dollars. It cost us a great deal that we treasure more than money, and now having been forewarned, although we do not believe the whispers of alarm, and the Government do not anticipate any trouble, yet it is necessary that we should be on our guard, and in a position to preserve the peace of the country. It will show that we are cautious and watchful, that we possess the power to enforce the protection of life, property and civil rights everywhere throughout the Dominion. It is not fair when we expect such a large influx of immigration in this country, and when we should be in a position to satisfy people who come here that their lives and property are safe, that any such cries and alarms should be promulgated. I am at least glad to hear my hon. friend from Halifax endorse some remarks which fell from the hon. member from Winnipeg. We always listen to that hon. member with great pleasure when he speaks. To-day his remarks gave me more than usual pleasure, because of the cool and calm manner in which he stated the case of the North-West. He is himself a resident and a representative of that country and by race and religion, in heart and soul, with that people; he knows the wants of the people there and what is best for them, and I am sure the counsel which he has given us cannot fail to have a good effect not only on this House, but on a portion of the population of the Province of Quebec, violently excited as they have been at the administration of justice. During last summer they expressed themselves against the Government for administering justice impartially and allowing the law to take its course. We hear no more the cry of French domination. The hon. member from Manitoba has shown the people of the Province of Quebec that the course pursued by the Government in that matter has been impartial, wise and judicious, and necessary to the peace, order and general benefit of the country.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—This debate has certainly taken a very wide range, and I think I perceive a feeling of weariness on the part of the House and a desire to bring it to a close. I certainly shall not extend it if I can avoid doing so. It seems to me to have brought forward some features which are agreeable and some of a contrary character. Amongst the former I may allude with pleasure and satisfaction to the reference made by the hon. gentleman from Manitoba, to the baptism in the penitentiary there, a scene most graphically described by him, and one which, it occurs to me, might afford a subject for a painter or a poet, and a subject of gratification for Christian men of all countries. There was another pleasing episode in this debate—an allusion made by the hon. member from Halifax to the presence amongst us to-day of the leader of the Government. I myself have often had occasion to recognize the courtesy with which my complaints are listened to; and so far as that hon. gentleman is able, they have been attended to; but we know that one minister does not run the whole Government. I am sure my honourable friend will readily remedy any grievance brought to his notice by the representatives of the province from which I come, I hope that better times for my province may not be so far off as they seemed to be some time ago. Coming to the different paragraphs of the Address, I think the common custom of congratulating Parliament and the public upon the harvest is one which requires to be carefully handled. It is but rare in a country of such extent as this Dominion of ours, that the harvest is universally abundant. I have myself before now smarted under similar treatment. Perhaps in Ontario or the western portion of Canada the harvest has been everything the agriculturist could desire, while with us we have had a sunless summer, poor wheat, inferior grain and potatoes. Under these circumstances, to be congratulated on the excellent harvest is rather trying to one's patriotism. On this occasion however, I may safely say that the harvest in Prince Edward Island was unusually good last year. The season was a favorable one from end to end, and the consequence was that we had good wheat, barley and potatoes—perhaps the best wheat and potatoes we have had for a number of years; but it seems to me there is a slight incongruity in the terms of the clause to which I have referred. It is scarcely ground for congratulating an agricultural country like Canada that it has merely a sufficient harvest. The farmers of Canada are, I take it, to a great extent still wheat growers, and to grow only what is sufficient for home consumption would certainly not be encouraging to them. They look to the sales of wheat and other grains for their returns, and if their harvest is barely sufficient, and prices are as at the present time very low, there are very slight grounds for congratulation on that account. Then again, as regards the agricultural interests, we know, besides poor markets for corn, cattle bring very low prices at present, and they barely remunerate those who undertake to transport them to European market for sale. The inference at the close of this paragraph is, I think, questionable indeed—that prosperity and substantial progress abound. It does seem to me that prosperity and tangible progress in the country naturally lead to the conclusion that contentment and satisfaction prevail with its Government, but I do not think that can be said to be of universal application, or even very partial application at this time in the Dominion. We know for instance that the Province of Quebec is not in the happiest mood possible. We know in Ontario, there are many causes of discontent between the Government and the people, and we can hardly say that the result has been prosperity and progress in these instances. Referring to my own province, I can say the same; I say that contentment with the Government and its measures does not exist there; on the contrary, discontent is rife. If I made this statement on my own authority merely, or on the authority of the party press of the country, hon. gentlemen might naturally challenge my statement; but I make it upon authority which I think no member of this House will question—on the authority of the Local Government and the Local Legislature. The Local Government and the majority of the Local Legislature are of the same political stripe as the Government of the day at Ottawa, and consequently they are certainly not disposed to take a very hard view of things. Yet, what do we find? Not many weeks since a deputation of the Local Government passed through this city on their way to England to lay their grievances at the foot of the Throne. Having tried in the Local Legislature and in the Dominion Parliament, through their representatives, to secure a fulfilment of the terms of Confederation, or the nearest approach thereto possible under present circumstances, without effect, they have taken the last step to carry their complaints to the foot of the Throne. If that indicates contentment with the Government of the day it is a very strange sort of contentment indeed. For my part, I hope that, as I hinted just now, the beginning of the end of these difficulties is nearer at hand than we once anticipated, and therefore I do not care to follow up this question at present more in detail, especially as I have given notice of a motion to day which will enable me to allude to it more at large in a very short time.

As to the second paragraph, which refers to the late insurrection in the North-West, it cannot be otherwise than a matter of congratulation to every right-thinking man that the insurrection has been put down. At the same time there is a little discordance between the first portion of the second clause and the final part of it. That the insurrection has been put down is undoubtedly a fit subject for congratulation, and it is equally certain that it is the duty of the Government to adopt such precautionary arrangements as will assure the present inhabitants, as well as intending settlers, of efficient protection against all disturbance. The duties which are so clearly laid down in this clause as necessary to be performed now should have been discharged years ago and had these precautions been in force before last year, it is likely there would have been no insurrection, or if any had taken place it would probably have been of a less difficult character to deal with and resulted in less loss of life and property and probably less expense to the Dominion than was the case. I see also in other clauses of this Address further reason to take this ground. For instance I see several measures suggested, some not for the first time, others which are necessary no doubt and some which should have been adopted before, rather than after the occasion which has given rise to them—I allude to the proposed amendment to the judiciary system. We all know what the opinion of the French element in the Dominion was respecting the court which tried an unfortunate man to whom I scarcely care to allude at the present time. That amendment is desirable now, but if it had been made two or three years ago, it is quite probable that we should not have seen those painful reprieves which I think were one of the hardest additions to the sentence of the court which that unfortunate man finally underwent.

I can cordially concur in all that has been said on this side of the House with reference to the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I never was one of those who objected to the carrying of that road round the north shore of Lake Superior. I saw that if that road was to be of any real service to us on an occasion such as that of last year when our very existence as a Dominion might depend upon the speedy and safe transport of military armaments to the North-West, it must be an all-rail route through Canadian territory. Our very existence as a Dominion might have been annihilated had we no means of transporting men through our own territory. I remember the occasion of the former outbreak in the North-West, when difficulties occurred as to the transport of our men and military stores at Sault Ste. Marie.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Will my honourable friend permit me to interrupt him for a moment to make an explanation about the reprieve granted to Riel? I think it would be regrettable if an erroneous impression were to go abroad on that subject. The first reprieve was to enable him to appeal to the Privy Council, and ample time was given, as we supposed, to carry his case to the foot of the Throne. It turned out that the papers which were necessary had not been sent by his counsel, and the second reprieve was granted to enable him to send the papers to England. That also was granted at the instance of his counsel. The third reprieve was granted because it was desired by many persons that there should be a medical examination of the prisoner before the execution; so that all the reprieves were granted, not at the instance of the Crown, but at the request of the prisoner's counsel.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I regret having alluded to the question at all, but it always has occupied a prominent position in my mind that in addition to undergoing the sentence of death he underwent all the anticipatory horrors of it. We know in holy writ that that has been pointed out to us, the bitterness of death—that man underwent it three times over.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—It is very regrettable, but if we had refused it, what would have been the case then?

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I expressed my regret that I was led to allude to the subject at all under the circumstances, not because its effect is in any way weakened in my mind, but because I do not feel myself in a position to go fully into the question and discuss the point as to how far the Government of the day were in a position to come to a proper decision upon Ric's case.

I was speaking of the Canadian Pacific Railway and saying that I thought it was a subject for congratulation that it runs its whole course through our own territory; that we are not likely to incur any future danger by inability to transmit military stores or anything of that kind. That I think is a subject of very great importance. I felt, myself, though I could not always concur in the modes adopted by the Government in granting contracts and finding funds for that great work, that still it was a thing which every Canadian, particularly men advanced in life like myself, would be glad to live to see completed; and I do think it is a matter of congratulation for us all, young and old—that the young will have before them during the coming years the means of easy and rapid transport across the continent, and the old that they have seen what was regarded almost as a dream become a reality.

I must say a few words, at the risk of wearying the House, about this Fisheries question. I do so because it intimately concerns the prosperity of many of my constituents and many of my immediate neighbors. I do so because the last two winters just previous to the opening of Parliament I had been called on to attend meetings of the fishermen and farmers in my neighborhood and to obtain their sentiments on these points. I recollect not many weeks ago I was at such a meeting. On this occasion the discussion did not refer to a renewal of the treaty with the United States, because it was understood at that time that good hopes prevailed that the negotiations would lead to a desirable result; but on the previous year that point was fully discussed, and the men present there, fishermen and farmers, and others, expressed the opinion very clearly that they would prefer a renewal of the old reciprocity treaty to any other arrangement that could be made; but if that could not be obtained they would prefer a renewal of the arrangement abrogated last year, which gave rise to the concessions made by the Government of the day to the Americans. Then followed the question—What alternative do you suggest in case neither can be obtained? In that case they said “There is no alternative except to exclude the Americans of the United States outside of the Three Miles limit. There were present on that occasion some warm supporters of the Government, one gentleman particularly, who had just been returned for the county in the Government interest. I rose to my feet on this being stated, and pointed out to those present that at this time—and it is still the case—a most friendly state of feeling exists between the United States and the British Empire; and that it was most important that this desirable feeling should not be disturbed if possible by any action of ours. This renders, of course, the treatment of the Fisheries question the more difficult, because we know, however valuable and important our fisheries are, it is still more important that a good understanding should be maintained between Great Britain, Canada and the United States. We are able, I believe, to appreciate the very difficult position that the Government occupy to-day; still I cannot acquit them of want of timely attention to this subject, and of abandoning our interests too hastily last year, because I think there was another course still open to them. I heard, not many hours ago, in another place, that the Dominion of Canada could not demean itself and humble itself to ask the United States to renew a treaty or an arrangement which they had decided in their Congress should be abrogated. Was that necessary? Could not the Government of Canada have said to the Government of the United States: "You have decided to abrogate that arrangement which has been in operation so many years. Now we do not ask you to renew what you have said you will not renew, but we call upon you in consequence to propose an alternative measure. It rests with you now to propose a measure which will prevent unpleasant and dangerous collisions between your fishermen and the marine police which we must establish to preserve our fisheries and to keep sacred to the use of our fishermen the three mile line which we have always claimed."

That was the course which I think was fairly open to the Government, and had we placed the United States in that position I think we should have been relieved of the expense which we have to incur now. It would have shown a willingness on our part to adopt another course, though it might not be as much to the liking of the fishermen of the Lower Provinces as that which they had before. Speaking of these fishermen neighbors of mine—for I reside within a few miles of some of them—I shall not just now touch upon another grievance of theirs, because later in the session I shall probably take occasion to give a notice of motion upon it.

I have cursorily touched upon certain measures which are mentioned in the succeeding paragraphs, and there remains very little which I think it necessary to mention; but there is one subject which is not alluded to in this Address, and concerning which I regret no notice has been taken. It is not a very pleasant subject, but it is a very important one, and the people of my province have learned to their cost in lost lives, money and business how important it is. I allude to a sanitary subject—the spread of small-pox in this Dominion—and I regret that the Government have not seen fit to mention that subject or announce that they are prepared to deal with it as a Dominion measure, and take such precautions as will in future prevent the spread of the disease.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—It is not a Dominion subject; we have not the power to deal with it.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I am quite aware of that doctrine. I once brought that subject up on a former occasion when our province suffered severely, and I felt it my duty to call the attention of the House to the subject. I was answered then that it was ultra vires, but a member of the then existing Government, and a medical man himself, I was clearly informed, held different views as to its being ultra vires. And supposing it is ultra vires, is it not necessary that application should be made to the proper quarter in order to put it within the power of this Dominion to enact uniform laws for the preservation of the health of its subjects? I would just ask the hon. gentlemen who I know is candid and competent to form a decision upon it, of what use is it to any province to have suitable sanitary arrangements, good laws with regard to the prevention of disease and to arrest it when unhappily it does appear, if such a disease as small-pox is actually propagated in an adjoining province? Nothing except a law of universal application such as prevails in Great Britain, and which has had the result of nearly stamping out that once fatal and disgusting disease, will suffice. In our province we took vigorous measures on its appearance—a little late perhaps—but even so we lost many valuable lives. Our business matters were arrested at a most important season of the year and finally we incurred a vast deal of expense, all of which might have been prevented had there existed a Dominion law which would have made the spread of small-pox a matter of impossibility. I think that it is a subject well worthy the attention of the Government. The local sanitary precautions which are taken will be useless so long as there exists a nidus for the propagation of disease. I regret that the member of the medical profession who supported me on a former occasion when I brought this subject to the notice of the House is no longer with us. He was carried to his rest. He was highly respected and held views similar to those which I have expressed to-day on this subject. Should such a precautionary measure prove to be absolutely beyond the powers of Parliament I do think, in the interests of all the Provinces, it is well worth the attention of the Government that power should be sought to deal with those diseases in the same way that they are dealt with in Great Britain. I would just make one more allusion to this; the bills of mortality in the metropolis of England frequently show perhaps one and sometimes not a single case of small-pox amongst the 4,000,000 of people in that great city; yet it is accessible to all the world; but whenever a case of small-pox does occur there instead of leaving it to fructify, as it unhappily does in some instances amongst ourselves, it is immediately isolated. I have mentioned this subject because I think it is one of great public importance—all important certainly to our Province because we have smarted from its infliction on several occasions. I have perhaps intruded too long on the House, observing as I did when I rose an apparent desire for a cessation of the debate, and thanking you for your kind attention I will close my address.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE moved that the debate be adjourned until to-morrow.

THE ADDRESS.

The order of the day having been called,—Resuming adjourned debate on the motion of the Hon. Mr. Bolduc, for an address to His Excellency the Governor General, in answer to His Excellency's Speech in opening the Fourth Session of the Fifth Parliament,—

HON. MR. BELLEROSE said:—When I heard the words which fell from the lips of His Excellency the Governor-General at the opening of the Session, I decided to take no part in the debate on the Address beyond registering my protest against the conduct of the administration which has continued from year to year during the past eight years, to systematically deprive the French minority of this Dominion of their constitutional right to have on the Treasury Benches in each of the two Chambers a Minister speaking their language. But the debate which has since taken place renders it necessary that I should speak. Last year the resolutions in reply to the Speech from the Throne were proposed in the House of Commons, as well as in the Senate, by gentlemen speaking the English language, in contravention of an arrangement made at the time of Confederation, and also contrary to the spirit of the constitution, which recognizes two official languages. This year the Government have found in the Senate one of my compatriots ready to defend its policy, but in the Commons I am well pleased to observe that the Government, has not been able to find a solitary member prepared to assume the responsibility of endorsing the present administration of the affairs of the country. In fact it ought to be difficult to find a Catholic, either French or Irish—to find even a patriotic English or Scotch Protestant, devoted to his country and possessed of that spirit of fair play which characterizes these powerful races—who would consent to share the burden which weighs so heavily on the shoulders of the Government of the day, and to wear the livery of the First Minister, who has become a traitor towards his old friends and towards the Conservative flag, which he has destroyed and scattered to the four winds of heaven. Gentlemen may think that I am rather severe in using such expressions towards the leader of the so-called Conservative party. My excuse for so doing is the fact that I have borrowed this language from a speech of the hon. Premier himself delivered in the Commons during the time I had a seat there some thirteen or fourteen years ago, when having been abandoned by some of his friends from Ontario he had to resign. Sir John had then no good reason to so ill-treat friends who thought they could not honestly follow him. But I have good reason to use this language to-day when I recall the support which he received from Lower Canada before Confederation, and when I find him now, when he thinks he can do without our support, endeavoring to destroy our influence and to realize what was attempted once before at the suggestion of Lord Durham. That attempt failed through the patriotism of Baldwin and others who joined with Lafontaine and aided him in his patriotic efforts to avert the evil. I now come to the subject with which I propose to deal, and I will show how Sir John has treated us.

Before Confederation Sir John Macdonald was in a minority in Upper Canada, and he was obliged to rely upon Lower Canada for his majority. He did rely upon us, and we have always been faithful to him. With disinterested devotion we sustained him. In fact we made him what he is. How has he displayed his gratitude? Let us examine that important question in the light which is furnished us by public documents. The project of confederation of the Provinces of Canada, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia had scarcely been understood, and the proportion of the population speaking the English language had not yet been fully ascertained when the hatred which Sir John Macdonald had displayed against us Catholics and Frenchmen in 1849, and which he had allowed to slumber afterwards, became aroused. His plans were arrested. He masked his batteries. In 1865 our political chiefs having decided to unite the provinces to which I have referred, met and adopted the basis of Confederation in the form of certain resolutions. In submitting them to the Legislature of Canada for their consideration, Sir John and his colleagues in the Cabinet declared that these resolutions could not be amended, and that they must either be adopted or rejected in toto. Some of these resolutions in particular aroused the suspicion of Catholics and French-Canadians, and were only adopted after the most solemn promises had been made on the honor of ministers. In confirmation of this, I would refer you to the official report of the Confederation Debates. The Imperial Act was passed and our delegates returned to this country and proceeded to organize the new system of government. It was convenient, in order to conform to the spirit of the constitution and the state of our society, that the Executive should be composed of thirteen ministers—five from Ontario, four from Quebec, and four from the Maritime Provinces. Three of the ministers from Quebec should be of French origin, and one of them should be in the Senate. In 1871, in reference to the New Brunswick School Act, an iniquitous law directed against Catholics, Sir John, in his capacity as Minister of Justice, made a report to the Governor General, recommending that the disallowance of that law, demanded by the Catholics, should not take place, because, as he said, the law, though oppressive to the majority in the province, was constitutional, as New Brunswick had not, before the Union, any law which recognized separate schools. Sir John added on that occasion that he was opposed to any intervention in the legislation of the provinces, unless it was ultra vires or prejudicial to the general interests of the Dominion. Our Catholic fellow-citizens of New Brunswick found it hard to stand such a rude blow. On the 20th May, 1872, Mr. Costigan demanded in the House of Commons the repeal of that law, and on that occasion I rose and said, amongst other things, the following :

“Sir John Macdonald having reached England, mocked the Catholics and trampled under his feet his promises, his agreements and his honor. . . . He dared to change the 43rd resolution, which provided that the legislatures of the two Canadas should not have the right to deprive minorities of the rights or privileges which they possessed at the time of the union. His Grace Mgr. Connolly, Archbishop of Halifax, having gone to England, pointed out, with reason, that the advantages conferred on the minorities in Upper and Lower Canada by the 43rd resolution should be extended also to the minorities in the other provinces. Knowing that Nova Scotia and New Brunswick had no law which recognized separate schools, and that in those provinces they had only certain usages or customs, Sir John, in acceding to the demand of the Archbishop, took care to add these words: 'Guaranteed or imposed by law,' after the words 'rights and privileges,' thus rendering illusory the favor which he pretended to grant to this Prince of our Church. And it is after having thus acted, that the first Minister (Sir John) recommends that the New Brunswick school acts be not disallowed, because, as he says, there was not in that province prior to the union any law on that subject."

Some time afterwards the Government disallowed an act passed by the Legislature of Ontario known as the "Streams Act;" it was a law which was in point of fact constitutional, and which contained nothing detrimental to the general interests of the Dominion, but which had the misfortune to interfere with the private interests of certain political friends of Sir John in Ontario. (Vide the Journals of the House of Commons.) In this last instance Sir John, to serve the material and personal interests of certain of his friends, did that which he had previously refused to do to render justice to 50,000 Catholics in New Brunswick, even when it was demanded by a million and a-half of their co-religionists.

In the Confederation Debates in 1865 the Catholic members of the Legislature of Canada frequently manifested their fears and apprehensions as to the position which they would occupy under the new constitution, with regard to a question so important in their eyes as that of marriage. Sir John and his colleagues made the most solemn promises and pledged their honor—they even guaranteed in writing that they would take care to leave to the local legislature the entire jurisdiction over this important subject. As a matter of fact we find at page 388 of the English edition of the Confederation Debates, that the Government of Sir John speaking through the Hon. H. L. Langevin, said:—

"The hon. member asks the Government what they mean by the word 'marriage' placed in the constitution."

I will reply to the hon. member as categorically as possible. The word marriage has been placed in the constitutional measure to give the Federal Parliament the right to declare what shall be marriages which shall be considered as valid throughout the extent of the Confederation, without touching for that purpose, to the least extent in the world, upon the dogmas or rites of the denominations to which the contracting parties belong. The fact is that it all consists in this: the central parliament will have power to decide that all marriages contracted in Upper Canada, in conformity with the laws of the country in which they are contracted, shall be considered as valid in lower Canada in case the married couple shall go there to live."

In 1882 a measure entitled a bill concerning marriage with a deceased wife's sister was submitted to the Federal Parliament for its consideration. Objections were taken to the constitutional right of this parliament to legislate on the subject of marriage. The attention of Sir John and his colleagues in the Cabinet was called to the solemn engagements which they had undertaken in 1865 on this question, and they were shown the written pledge to which I have referred. The Government replied, through the Minister of Justice, as follows:—

"The day when we made these promises, or when we undertook those engagements, is gone by; we have to-day to act, not according to what we wished to do then, but according to what we have to do now. (Senate Debates of 1882.) In other words, he says: "You Catholics intended to put in safe hands (the Catholic government of the province of Quebec) the important question of marriage; and we (Sir John, Sir Alex. Campbell and our colleagues) have so arranged the constitutional act that we, the Protestant government at Ottawa, will have the right to regulate it. It is useless for you to protest; that is the law. It is necessary that should you submit."

They have been guilty of another great fault. In the Senate we have no minister who speaks the French language. We have here ministers who speak only the English language and reply in English to questions put by French members, who are obliged to go from seat to seat to inquire what the responses are. In 1880 the Senators from the Province of Quebec, having renewed their protest against this state of things, the hon. Minister of Justice, Sir Alexander Campbell, replied:—

"Well I admit that the fact of having no minister in the Senate who speaks the French language may be in controvention of the spirit of the constitutional act; nevertheless a Government cannot always execute the law as logically as the hon. member desires."—(Vide Senate Debates 1880-81, page 37).

It is proper to remark that this state of things has lasted for eight years, and has already reached the stage of a precedent. Every year we have pressed upon Sir John Macdonald to repair this infringement upon our rights, but he has not acceded to our request. This violation of the constitution has already borne its fruit. We have to-day the sad spectacle of our three French Ministers invoking, as an excuse for their grievous offence—their adherence to the execution of Riel—"if we should resign on that question Sir John would replace us by three English members." That is to say, in other words, "Sir John could do in the Commons that which he has done in the Senate with our approbation; he could deprive us of the constitutional right of having French ministers. It was therefore better to sacrifice Riel and to keep our portfolios." Will the French-Canadian people accept that excuse? And the English-speaking population generally, so attached to the charter of their liberties, will they have nothing to say when they see the constitution trampled under foot? To-day it is we who suffer; to-morrow it may be their turn.

In 1881 a French member of Parliament desiring to ascertain how each nationality fared in the distribution of the public patronage, called for a return showing the number of public employes in the Dominion, their salaries, their nationality, religion, etc. The Government, through the Minister of Justice, grossly refused to comply with that request. Other Conservative members replied sharply and placed the government in such a false position that the motion passed. A year passed by but the report was not submitted. At the end of eighteen months there was still no sign of the return which had been asked for. At length after two years of waiting and interrogations, the Minister of Justice presented the return and said that it showed that the French-Canadians had received more than their share of the public patronage. Nobody dared to contradict that statement without an opportunity to make a close examination of the return, which had been prepared in a manner which necessitated a great deal of labor to arrive at a conclusion. However, it was found that the Minister who had brought down the report had deceived the Chamber, that the French Canadians had not received their share of the public patronage, that instead of holding one-third of the official positions, to which their numerical strength gave them a right, they had only one-sixth, that is to say, about one-half of what they were entitled to. The same remark applies to the amount of salaries which they received; they have but one-sixth. The total population of the Dominion at the last census was 4,421,810. The French race numbered 1,298,929 souls. We French Canadians have then a right to at least 22 French Senators of the 77 members who compose the Senate, whereas we have but 19. Let us now take the Province of Quebec alone. It has a population of all origins of 1,359,027 souls, and of these the French number 1,073,020, which would give it a right to 19 senators of our nationality, whereas we have but 17. The Speakers of the two Houses of Parliament speak no language but English. (See Senate Debates of 1884, page 113.) Shall I speak to you of the law passed at the last session of the Dominion Parliament—a law based on the radical and revolutionary principle of universal suffrage, and which has, moreover, the rate merit of excluding the educated farmer from the position of reviser—a position which he is more competent to fill than professional men generally are. (See chap. 40, section 14, of the Statutes of 1885.) Shall I mention the License Act, by means of which Sir John hoped to break up the Confederation and to bring about a legislative union, his dream for years? No. I have said enough to open the eyes of those who wish to study the question in good faith, of those who will not allow themselves to be blinded by party spirit or by other motives still less defensible. I have said enough to satisfy those who sincerely desire to clearly understand this important question of our rights and our privileges.

We now come to the scaffold of Regina of the 16th of November last. "The Province of Quebec was drifting rapidly to the brink of ruin," says L'Impartial. "God has allowed the melancholy event of the 16th November last to burst upon us with a view to arresting our attention, to opening our eyes, and to lead us to reunite all our forces to fight the common enemy. It is probably the last chance of safety which will be given us."

It is not, therefore, the execution of Riel alone which has produced the great national movement in the Province of Quebec. The murder of the 16th November was the last act of a tragic drama which has been played for twenty years to the detriment of Catholics and French-Canadians. You must have observed for several years past the uneasiness which has existed in the ministerial party. Members of Parliament have with difficulty been able to support their leaders. It has been necessary constantly to enforce party discipline. The representatives of the people were obliged to submit to that discipline if they did not want to be insulted and calumniated by a servile press. At length the bad and culpable administration of affairs in the North-West by our rulers filled the measure and it overflowed. This was war, war with its horrors and ruin; war with its millions of expenses and its victims. The blood of those who are devoted to their country and their compatriots has always possessed a magic power. It rarely flows without producing great results. In this instance it killed party spirit and awoke a patriotic sentiment, throughout Canada, the United States and even across the Atlantic. The eyes of the people were opened. They found out at last what Sir John was. They were given to understand that in supporting the present Premier, they were strengthening the hands of one of their worst enemies. They paused, and after due consideration, they came to the conclusion that they could not continue their allegiance to such a leader. I have now gone over the political history of the Dominion as regards Sir John Macdonald on one side and the Catholics and the French population of the Dominion on the other. I have shown how he acknowledged the devotion of our people towards himself during over thirty years. I have shown his conduct during the last twenty years, and his hostile acts when an opportunity occurred to show his gratitude both to Catholics and French Canadians for the hearty support they had given him during the critical period when he was rejected by his own province.

The proposition I laid down at the beginning I have now fully proven by facts. Facts are stubborn things, and I need therefore add no comment. They speak for themselves. But I cannot omit stating that Sir John's character was perfectly well understood for some years by the great patriot of Lower Canada, Sir G. E. Cartier, who was in a position to appreciate him, discover his motives, and find out the end he aimed at.

So far back as 1872 the great Conservative leader of lower Canada had lost all confidence in the present leader of the Government by whom he had been deceived over and over again.

Let me read here the report of the last conversation a late minister of the Crown had with Cartier in 1872 before he left for England, believing as he did that he could never come back, but would die abroad. That conversation is reported by the ex-minister (whose name will be made public in due time) in the following letter which was published in L'Etendard of the 4th February, 1886:—

"I declare, then, that during the Session held at Ottawa in 1872, Sir George E. Cartier, having asked me to sit beside him at his place in the Chamber, said to me, and repeated to me at different times during that Session, that he had had a good deal to complain of in regard to the conduct of Sir John A. Macdonald, on his own account and on account of Lower Canada, when he endeavored to secure the passage in England of the Imperial Act establishing the confederation of the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. He asked me if I remembered the causes and motives which had given rise to the demand for that confederation. 'You know,' said he to me, 'that the political leaders of each of these provinces met at Quebec in 1865 and came to an understanding as to the resolutions which should form the basis of the Imperial Act to be asked for and passed for that purpose. These resolutions were submitted to each one of the provincial legislatures with the understanding that they should be adopted in toto without any amendment, because they were to form the basis of an Imperial Act. This was said and repeated by Sir John Macdonald and his colleagues in the Chamber when these resolutions were discussed and adopted.

"Subsequently ministers from each of the provinces were sent as delegates to England to ask for and to supervise the Imperial Act which should bring about the confederation of the four Provinces for which they acted. John A. Macdonald, Cartier, Langevin, Galt and others took part in it. On arriving in England Sir John no longer wished for a confederation of the four provinces, with a local legislature for each of them, such as the resolutions provided for, but simply a legislative union of these four provinces. Sir John persisted nearly a month in this pretension. Cartier and Langevin found themselves alone, as representatives of the Province of Quebec, and repelled such a pretension, 'for Galt,' said Cartier to me, 'shared the opinion of Sir John A. Macdonald.' Cartier told me that he was indignant at the conduct of the latter, he who had risen to power in 1875 and had been kept there ever since solely through his majority in Lower Canada, for the majority of the representatives from Upper Canada were hostile to him. It showed on his part a lack of heart and loyalty for Lower Canada, to attempt to destroy himself (Cartier) politically speaking and to place the Province of Quebec at the mercy and under the control of other Provinces from which it differed as much in its civil and religious institutions as in its laws, its language and its customs. Sir John's object in striking this treacherous blow was to annihilate the the Province of Quebec and to make of it an English instead of a French Province. Then our laws and our civil and religious institutions would have disappeared little by little to give place to institutions created according to the views and at the will of English gentlemen who disliked, as he knew, the French Canadians and Catholics with all their hearts.

"Cartier told me that seeing the bad faith of Sir John he wrote at once to Sir N. F. Belleau, who happily was then First Minister, to inform him of the misery and embarrassment stirred up by Sir John, and telling him that if he received from him a telegram conveying such information he should resign at once with a view to breaking up everything. Finally, after a month of efforts to bring Sir George E. Cartier to his opinion, Sir John put again the question—'Shall we have a Legislative Union?' Cartier, being asked to give his opinion, replied by a 'No' short enough to give Sir John to understand that it was useless to push the question any further. Then the Imperial Act was passed.

"Cartier told me that from that time he had lost all confidence in Sir John, that he had never pardoned his treacherous act, and never would pardon it. So much was this the case that he said he had interviewed Mr. Mackenzie, then chief of the Opposition, and told him not to imitate George Brown, who, in his journal the Globe, had without ceasing insulted, villified and injured the civil and religious institutions of Lower Canada, and who by so doing had rendered a union with him impossible; giving Mr. Mackenzie to understand that there would possibly be a means of arriving at an agreement with him.

This is exactly what Cartier said to me relative to the conduct of Sir John, and this declaration I am able, if necessary, to affirm under oath. I may add that the evening, or the evening before the departure of Cartier for England, where he had to go for the benefit of his health, I went to see him at his residence at Montreal. There he told me, amongst other things, that he left for England in ill-health, and that he thought he should never see Canada again, because the doctors here had told him that his malady was incurable. He begged of me to recall that which he had told me during the preceding session with regard to Sir John Macdonald, and added—"Have no confidence in him; he does not like the French-Canadians, he detests them. That is a warning which I give you by which you should profit."

Such were the last words which fell from the lips of the great French-Canadian leader, on the eve of his departure from Canada—never to return again.

Such was the parting advice given by our dying chieftain to an intimate friend of his, to a gentleman who had then and has now the confidence of his compatriots and who held before, and has since held, the high position of an adviser of the Crown.

Hon. gentlemen should not lose sight of the fact that the writer of this important letter refers to an old politician, Sir N. F. Belleau, Premier of Canada at the time of Confederation, stating that he knows the whole story. This precious document was published about four weeks ago and has never been contradicted.

If all these statements be true (and they cannot be contradicted) have I not a right to infer that the present constitutional agitation was foreshadowed by Sir George E. Cartier, and that it is in conformity with the views he expressed before his death?

The movement is not, then (as has often been stated by the Government themselves and by their paid organs) due to the fact that Riel was a French half-breed. No, as I have already said, the death of Riel was merely the last act of a tragic drama begun in England in 1867, and ending at Regina in 1885. The present agitation is somewhat like that of 1841. A legislative union of Upper and Lower Canada having been sanctioned by the Imperial Parliament, we had to submit, but we used all constitutional means to avert the danger which menaced us. We had then as our leader Lafontaine. He, like many others, patriotic men, thought that a people however small in numbers, ought not, and cannot submit to oppression without having first used all constitutional means to defend and preserve their rights. Lafontaine set to work and was not long left alone with the Catholic party. Brave men, true Canadians, sincere patriots, amongst English, Scotch and Irish, rallied around him—Lafontaine and Baldwin fought the battles of their country; the great cause of justice and liberty triumphed in spite of John A. Macdonald, now (through the support we gave him in the past) Sir John A. Macdonald. Lafontaine and Baldwin were called upon to form an administration. With much difficulty they succeeded. The Opposition, of which the present Premier was a member, caused much trouble. A great agitation arose; the Parliament buildings were burned down while the House was in session; Lafontaine was menaced and even besieged in his own private residence; the Governor was publicly insulted, and other outrages were perpetrated, but fanaticism failed. The mass of the people, English, Scotch and Irish, united with the French against those unpatriotic men. Peace was restored; Justitia et pax oscula-tae sunt; each nationality in Canada had its fair share of influence; our people were quite satisfied with their lot and found at last that they could work hand in hand with their fellow citizens of all other nationalities. Then our country prospered.

We ask for no more to-day. Give us that to which we are entitled—equal rights, equal justice. Then will we have peace and, with peace, prosperity.

It is in the face of all these facts and in view of the parting advice of the great friend of Canada, Sir G. E. Cartier, going to his rest, that the hon. Senators from Lauzon (Mr. Bolduc) and Manitoba (Mr. Girard) have assumed the responsibility of criticising those independent and patriotic men who, after having been true to Sir George during his lifetime, are now following his parting advice, setting aside all personal interests, and undertaking to avert from their compatriots the many dangers which Cartier made known to them.

True the hon. senator from Manitoba has told us that the agitation would injure him personally, that it would do more harm than good to the part of the country in which he lives, and where he has the greatest part of his property. But this only shows how private interests may blind a man, and induce him to narrow the great and most important question of religious and political liberty to the small limits of the material interest of a section of the country in which he is interested.

The hon. senator's speech showed throughout that his lips did not speak the sentiments of his heart—that his patriotism inspired him one way while his personal interest prompted him to speak in the other direction. Did he not acknowledge that the Government had been the cause of the trouble? But he claimed that this could not justify the rebellion. That is quite true, but circumstances tend to condone the offence. No doubt both Divine and human laws make the taking up of arms against legitimate authority a very serious crime. But the same laws make it also an equally grave sin to provoke by injustice another to commit a crime. How then could he draw the conclusion that he does not see any sufficient reason to refuse to support and have confidence in the government of the day who are the parties, according to his own admission and many public documents, who forced those people into rebellion? If that is so, by what logical argument can the hon. gentleman show that the Government, having the power of mercy and not having exercised it, are anything short of murderers of Riel, and responsible for over 200 lives lost during these troubles?

Then the hon. gentleman from Manitoba read two or three letters from parties in the West. What do they show? The weakness of the case of the Government and nothing else. In one of those letters the writer charges the agitators with excusing the rebellion. I defy the hon. gentleman to name a single speaker who has done so. I defy him to name a single newspaper on our side which has published anything of the kind. They said that the rebels were wrong; that both the law of God and the law of man make it a crime to rise in arms against constituted authority; but they also said, as they say now, that the authors of the rebellion were those who, by their unjust dealings with those people, brought about the troubles, and that the Government are no less criminal than those who rose in arms. To the other parts of those letters I have already answered or will answer in the course of my remarks. For the present I shall only allude to one of the letters from which he read. It is a pity that the hon. Senator did not read the whole of that letter. It contains the most complete condemnation of the course which the hon. gentleman is now pursuing. I will read it in its place :—

“The troubles could and should have been prevented. Why was the warning not listened to when given by those who foresaw the same troubles and who brought them to the notice of the authorities? Our statesmen have my respect, but as ‘no man is wise at all times’ I trust they will permit a friendly voice to tell them that they were mistaken. But it is only justice to say that they were not alone in fault. The Ministerial seats number 13, but the Parliamentary seats number nearly 300. It is undoubtedly painful and humiliating to know that Ministers of the Crown should have officially affirmed that no steps had been taken in favor of the Metis, either by themselves or by their friends; but, on the other hand, it is also to be deplored that the isolated voices raised in both Houses of the Legislature did not command the support sufficient to determine an earnest search into the situation, and the means of remedying what was defective in it. It is sad to think that nothing short of bloodshed and expenditure of millions could bring those who have the management of public affairs in one or another capacity to comprehend that the North-West is not only a vast tract of country, but, moreover, that there are vast social questions which are far from having obtained a satisfactory solution.”

Then as to the hon. senator who moved the resolutions (Mr. Bolduc), I was not at all surprised at the stand he took—Il n’y a que le premier pas qui coute dans la voie du mal. The hon. gentleman having been one of the causes of the rebellion he thought it was better to continue the course he had begun.

On the 27th March, 1884, a motion having been made in the Commons asking the House to take into consideration the complaints of the half-breeds, the hon. senator and the majority of the House of Commons voted down the resolution. The House could have nothing to do with the half-breeds; let them die of hunger; let them leave the country, they are French half-breeds; we have enough of that race in the country. The moment the news of this vote reached the far west a meeting of the half-breeds was held. They decided that Riel should be asked to join them. A deputation was sent to Montana, where Riel was residing, to bring him home with them. Riel hesitated but his patriotism triumphed, and he came to the Canadian side in June 1884, and from that day till the beginning of 1885 he used all constitutional means to force the Government to do justice to his people. Finally war broke out. I regret that the honorable gentleman has persevered in the evil way. It is certainly more worthy of a man when he has been wrong, to acknowledge his error, change his course and do what is right. A good many of those who voted down this resolution to which I have referred, deceived as they were by the Government acknowledged it and changed their allegiance. Had we not again some few days ago a proof of what Sir John is? If his party is small, his majority thin, he is humble to his friends. Is he strong, the majority at his back powerful, he cares no more about his most devoted friends but persists in having his own way, and should he find any of them in his way he does not hesitate to sacrifice them. Take for instance the case of the hon. member from Toronto (Mr. O’Donohoe); was it not a shame to treat an old and devoted follower as he did that gentleman? Could he have treated in a more insulting manner, I will not say a friend, but even an adversary? Here are the words he is reported to have used in the House of Commons last Friday, the 26th ult: “Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman went on at some length to discuss the reconstruction of the Government and the hon. gentleman talks about Mr. O’Donohoe. Well, Mr. O’Donohoe is a very good man and is now a Senator. He was very near being in the Government. But I will say this for Mr. O’Donohoe, that he did not desire to be a weakness to the Government, and at the time he might have claimed a seat in the Cabinet he found that such was the hostile feeling towards him that instead of being a strength to the Government he would be a weakness; he admitted the fact, and he took a seat in the Senate where he now is.”

I cannot resume my seat without giving an answer to a rumour which has spread over the country and which has been encouraged by Government organs and even by ministers. It is insinuated that this agitation was due to the fact that Riel was a Frenchman. There was no foundation for such a rumour. The case of the Government must be a very bad one indeed in their own estimation and that of their friends when they have to use such means to defend it. The most important immediate reasons of the beginning of the present movement are :—

1st. That according to moral laws, any party who may be the cause of why a crime is committed is himself a criminal, and consequently that the Government of the day having, by their bad administration of the North-West Territories during past eight years, provoked the people of that country by starving them, and otherwise, they are responsible for the rebellion, and as a logical consequence of such a responsibility, having, as they have, the power to do so, they were bound to use all possible clemency towards Riel and his people

2nd. That the jury, though composed of men adverse to Riel and his people, having declared upon their oath that Riel deserved mercy, the Government, responsible as they are for the rise of this quiet people, were in duty bound to grant such mercy.

3rd. That considering the whole evidence as it now stands before the public, the least that can be inferred is that there is a strong doubt as to Riel's mental capacity, and it being a general and well known principle that the accused party has a right to have the benefit of any doubt which may exist, he could not be put to death.

4th. That the Government, during last session and during the troubles, having refused to alter the old laws of the North-West Territories and make them somewhat uniform with the laws of the provinces, have shown a determination to deal unjustly with those people.

5th. That the memorandum of the late Minister of Justice, Sir Alexander Campbell, is such that any honest man after having read it over and compared every part of it with the facts as they really are, cannot help coming to the conclusion that the Government had no good reasons to act as they did. That Riel was sacrificed to a cry of hatred and of vengeance, and consequently that the Government is responsible for the death of the half-breed chief and of all the other victims of the troubles of last year.

Such are some of the immediate causes of the agitation which has spread not only in the Province of Quebec, but also throughout the American continent, and even across the Atlantic. This movement may be stronger in our province than it is in other parts of the Dominion, but this would only show, if true, that our people have faith in responsible government, and that they understand their responsibility for the good or bad administration of the affairs of the country by their representatives in Parliament and by the advisers of the Crown. Where, then, is the question of nationality so far as this part of the question goes? Is not the agitation a movement in favor of justice and humanity, and what has to do with it the nationality to which may belong the party who was sentenced to death and executed? Whether he be a Scotchman, an Englishman, an Irishman or a Frenchman, does not change the issue. Why, then, should the Government have tried to stir up such feelings of races? Was it not sufficient for dishonest newspapers, generally well paid for doing such dirty work, to raise such a cry? Is the case of the Government so bad in their own estimation that they believe they could not defend it if they should use honest means?

The hon. Postmaster-General has tried to excuse the policy pursued towards the Indians by stating that the Government have done all in their power to prevent them from starving, adding that the treaties with the tribes demonstrate the justice and liberality with which they have been treated. In answer to the hon. gentleman's statement, I will read some extracts from a letter written by a gentleman of high standing in the North-West, where he has passed the greater part of his life amongst the Indians. He is consequently better able to judge of the efficacy of the measures adopted by the Government in dealing with the Indians than the hon. gentleman is. He says :—

“ When beginning to speak of the Metis I was happy to invoke the testimony of Lord Dufferin in their favor. In alluding to the Indians, I am equally pleased to be able to quote the words of another representative of our Gracious Sovereign. The Marquis of Lansdowne visited the Indians. He spoke and listened to them, and here are the noble words the conversations inspired:—

‘It is impossible to meet these poor people and to listen to their statements without the deepest feeling of sympathy for their present condition. They are the aboriginal inhabitants of this continent. They regard themselves, and not without reason, as the legitimate occupants of the soil. We can scarcely be surprised, if now that the buffalo, upon which they have subsisted for so many years past, has become almost completely extinct, their hearts occasionally sink within them when they see, as they express it themselves, that the white man is getting rich and the red man poorer with every year that passes. It is quite unnecessary to discuss the question of their so-called title to the land of the North-West. The strength of their title, if they have one, is not in its legal aspect, but in the moral claim which they have to the most considerate treatment at the hands of those who have brought into the country that irresistible tide of civilization, before whose advance the native races have dwindled and receded.’

“These words were pronounced by the Governor-General in Winnipeg on the 22nd October last: I had the pleasure of hearing them. His Excellency’s voice betrayed his emotion, his sympathetic expressions were loudly applauded. There appeared the intelligent mind which had seized the importance of a question and a kind heart taken with a generous sympathy for human beings, that civilization so loudly boasted drives out of its way, pending destruction. The Indians took a part in the troubles. In some cases by cruel massacres, of which nothing can palliate the horror; in others by a regrettable attitude, no doubt, but nevertheless, from another standpoint full of important lessons for those who reflect and feel. The Indians of the North-West there is a class of men but little understood by the Canadian people in general, and who will never be entirely comprehended except by those who speak their language, who have lived among them, and who have given them their sympathy. Canada will never know the ordeal in which it has placed the proud children of the prairie by packing them on reserves, there to suffer the pangs of hunger, and to brook the struggles of a semi-capture. One must have seen the undaunted Indian, erect in the midst of the immense prairie, complacently draping himself in his semi-nudity, his flashing eye scouring the boundless horizon, inhaling an atmosphere of liberty not to be found elsewhere, glorying in a sort of royalty which had neither the embarrassments of riches nor the responsibility of dignity. One must have seen the indefatigable huntsman raising to a sort of religious enthusiasm the excitement and the chances or success of a chase without parallel. One must have seen the idler needing not to toil for the abundance he enjoyed and led only by caprice to vary his unbusy course. Yes, one must have seen all this. And then look at the Indian of to-day, dragging his misery, deprived of his incomparable independence, reduced to want and semi-starvation, and having added to his vices the loathsome consequences of the immorality of the whites. One must have seen all this, and seen it under the impulse of sympathy, to form an idea of what the Indians suffer at the present time.

It is useless to speak of treaties as a compensation for the change. These treaties were not understood by the untutored Indian. He listened to the form but did not detect the meaning, and therefore did not accept the consequences. I go still further and say that the Government and those who have made treaties on its behalf, never perfectly conceived their object, at least inasmuch as they were not all aware of the unacceptable position they were preparing for the Indian in many cases. Truly can I repeat with His Excellency the Governor General: ‘Their hearts occasionally sink within them.’ The greatest stoic will agree that they have a ‘moral claim to the most considerate treatment.’ Now is the time more than ever to be mindful of the blunders committed in their regard. They have been left a prey to the seductions of men revolting immoral, and when this was pointed out the friends of humanity had another regret to register. As a consequence the Indians felt that they could but profoundly despise people whose conduct should have been such as to command respect.

“In other cases the Indians were deprived of the pittance assigned to them, or it was given them ‘as if they were dogs.’ They were too often deceived. The Indian, who is far more intelligent than most people seem to think, was not the dupe of what was going on, and he felt his contempt increasing.

“It is among the Indians more than elsewhere that it is important to make a judicious choice in appointments. I am happy to say that the choice is what it should be in many places, and as a consequence the Indians in those localities are satisfied, and the Government has also reason to be so.”

I am afraid that some of our public men in the Province of Quebec are illustrating by their conduct that Lord Durham knew too well what he was about when he made his report to the Imperial authorities, and spoke so disparagingly of our French politicians and public men. But I hope that the time is not far distant when our people will unite and force the majority to respect their rights and do justice to the minority. Let us imitate the example set us by the Irish people, and we will have our fair share of influence in the Government of the country. While the Irish were disunited they were treated with injustice by the Imperial Parliament, but now that they have learned that union is strength, they can make and unmake governments, and even the haughty peers of England are obliged to seek their assistance if they wish to hold power. I hope the time will soon come when our public men will see the necessity of uniting as the Irish have done in defence of their rights and privileges, and will prove equal to the responsibility which is cast upon them.

I have enumerated some of the rights and privileges guaranteed to us which have been set aside, and I have endeavored to show that it is time for us to organize with a view to receiving better treatment. I ask the hon. gentlemen who are in the majority here, to put themselves in our place; I ask them to imagine how they would feel if the Premier for twenty years past had been a French-Canadian and a Catholic, and had treated the Protestant minority as we have been treated on the subject of marriage. What would their feelings be? What would they think of a man who, for five weeks, pledged his honor that a certain course would be pursued, and yet, when he arrived in England, violated that solemn pledge; and now when we remind him of it, informs us "I have got you into the Union; I do not care about my pledge now; I have my majority behind me and you must submit." I challenge any one of you to say that you would tamely submit to such injustice and continue your allegiance to such a leader. I do not ask the House for favors on behalf of those I represent. We are strong enough to demand our rights, because, as I said before, I believe there are amongst the majority who speak the English language in this Chamber, enough men of honor with a sense of right, to aid us in our appeal for justice; but if the majority continue to trample upon our rights and privileges as they have been doing, some day you will witness in the Province of Quebec something similar to what has taken place in Ireland—a union of our race, which will exercise the same influence in the Parliament of Canada that the Parnellites wield to-day in the Parliament of Great Britain.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE.

HON. MR. MCINNES (B.C.)—This debate has been rather protracted, having extended over three days, therefore I do not wish to take up very much of the time of the House. But from the fact that every province has been heard from with the exception of British Columbia, it will be taken as a sign that its representatives in this House at least acquiesce in all that is stated in the Speech from the Throne, and as there are some things in that Speech that I cannot endorse, I feel it my duty to ask the attention of honorable members for a few moments, while I state them.

The first paragraph in the Speech refers to the prosperity and substantial progress of the Dominion. I regret very much indeed that that cannot be said with regard to the province of British Columbia, for there is a greater commercial and general depression prevailing in that province to-day than there has been at any time for the last twelve years. As an evidence of the depression existing there, I will refer to the coal trade which is one of the most important industries of our province. The two great coal mining companies in British Columbia, the Wellington and the Vancouver, are only worked to about one-fourth of their capacity. One of these companies, at the beginning of this month, discharged no less than 40 of their miners, and each company has very large quantities of coal on its wharves, from 40,000 to 50,000 tons ready for market, and for which no market is to be found.

The laboring classes in particular are in a most pitiable condition in that province, and I cannot altogether exonerate the Government from blame for that state of affairs, and for this reason, when the first contract was let for the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, in our province, a number of years ago, known as the Onderdonk section, extending from Port Moody into the interior some 225 miles, the representatives of British Columbia in both Houses of Parliament urged upon the Government time and again, in fact for two or three years in succession, to place a clause in the railway contract, excluding Chinese labor. Our warning was not heeded, and the consequence was that thousands of Chinese navvies or coolies were imported by the contractor, direct from China into British Columbia. According to the census of 1881 we find that the entire Chinese population of the Dominion at that time was only a very little over 4,000. To-day in British Columbia alone there are between 18,000 and 20,000 Chinese. The most of those were attracted to British Columbia by the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and when that gigantic work was completed, or nearly completed, last fall, thousands of those poor helpless creatures were thrown out of employment late in the season, and it is a fact that I am sorry to announce on the floor of this Parliament, that they are in a starving condition—not only starving, but I am credibly informed that a number of them have actually died of starvation. Notwithstanding the strong feeling antagonistic to Chinese, in British Columbia, the corporations of Victoria and New Westminster have had under consideration the raising of funds to supply them with the actual necessaries of life, and thereby keep them from starvation. There is also a project on foot just now to ship a great many out of the country. As I stated a moment ago, I cannot exonerate the Government from responsibility for this state of affairs in British Columbia, especially amongst the laboring classes. I believe that if they had taken the advice of the representatives of that province, given in the Commons and in the Senate, from 1878 to 1882, that such a state of affairs would not now exist in British Columbia. The Chinese were the means of excluding thousands of white men that would otherwise have been attracted by the construction of the railway and the dry-dock, and other important works in British Columbia; but when they found that they had to compete with Chinamen, who could live cheaper than white men could possibly do, many of them who went to the Pacific province wrote back to their friends warning them not to come to that province, as they would have to compete with Chinese labor. Now, I claim that if a proper course had been taken at that time, and the legislation that was adopted last year, when the Pacific Railway was about completed, had been enacted sooner it would have been better for the country. The policy of procrastination on this question as well as on many other questions has had a tendency to bring misfortune on the Dominion of Canada. I say if that had been done from 1878 to 1882, the present state of affairs would not exist in British Columbia. Thousands of white laborers are idle in British Columbia to-day; they can get nothing to do, and are in actual want in consequence of the large importations of Chinese during the railway construction, and the labor market is overstocked. I see in the ninth paragraph in the Speech from the Throne that we are promised a wonderful piece of legislation—promised no less than that the Chinese Act of 1885 is to be amended. There is no necessity for having it amended at all; in fact there is very little necessity for having it on the statute book, because the country is now flooded with Chinese—the evil is done—there are more than can find profitable employment. There are none coming from China; in fact, they are going back. There is an old adage, and a true one, about locking the stable door after the horse is stolen, and that is true as applied to the Chinese question. I may also say about this policy of inaction; I see in one paragraph, and am happy to see it, that the North-West Territories are to have representation in Parliament. That has been urged year after year, and I venture to say here, without the least danger of contradiction, that if the North-West Territories had had representation in the Commons and in this House, and if Manitoba and British Columbia had had representatives in the Cabinet, as they are entitled to, and must have before long, notwithstanding the influence of race and sect, and other little quibbles, so prevalent in political warfare here in the East, that the North-West rebellion would never have occurred, and hundreds of thousands, if not millions of dollars, would have been saved to the Dominion treasury in connection with the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway in British Columbia. I believe that the peace and harmony of the North-West would have remained undisturbed to this day if representation had been given in the Cabinet, to Manitoba and the Territories, in the Commons and the Senate. We are warmly congratulated, or it was placed in the mouth of the Governor General to state to this House and the country that the Pacific Railway was completed. I am conscientiously bound to take a different view on that subject from the Government and the Opposition in both Houses of Parliament. I believe that the country is not to be so warmly congratulated on the completion of that road, and I shall tell you presently why. If I stand alone on the question, I am honest in my convictions, and if I give my reasons I think some who hear me will be reasonable enough to say there is something in them. I believe that a great mistake was made in the construction of that railway in the manner in which the forces were employed. I believe that instead of beginning at Winnipeg and working west from that point, they ought to have begun here at Pembroke or somewhere in the east and built at as early a day as possible round the head of Lake Superior, and from Winnipeg built eastward, until all rail connection with the prairie country was secured, and thereby give easy access for immigrants through our country, instead of sending them by a circuitous route by Chicago and St. Paul. I believe that in British Columbia they should have gone as they did—begin at the coast and work east through the Cascade Mountains to the Selkirk range, but I believe beyond that the Government ought not to have encouraged the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to go on and build the road through the Rockies at the unprecedented rate they have done. I believe that if they had completed the road inside of ten years according to contract, it would have been infinitely better for this country. The building went on at such an unparalleled rate, such a break-neck pace, that the people of the Dominion of Canada, especially those in the Western Provinces and Territories, were not in a position to take advantage of the enormous expenditure of money, and the consequence was, in order to supply the labor demand, they had to send to China, to California and Oregon, and bring in a sufficient amount of labor to complete the road in one-half the contract time. I believe that if the Chinese had not been employed on that work, and if the building of the road had been extended over five years more, a great number of white people would have come into the Province of British Columbia; many would have worked on the road for a time, saved their money, and settled in the country and become citizens of Canada and revenue producers. Instead of that, three-fourths of the many millions of dollars that have been expended on the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway in British Columbia and the North-West Territories has found its way out of Canada, which, under a different policy, would have remained in the country, and would have materially assisted in tiding over this unusual depression in the labor and commercial markets of Canada. This is the reason why I say that I do not think that this country should be congratulated so very warmly as stated in the Speech from the Throne. I believe that it would have been in the true interests of the country and every practical purpose would have been served had the Rocky Mountain section not been completed before 1891—the contract time. There is reference made also to the fisheries. I will not enter into a general discussion on that question to-day; but I would say with respect to that paragraph that if negotiations are entered into and a new Treaty made with the United States, I sincerely trust that the Government will not be as guilty of dereliction of duty as they were when the Washington Treaty was negotiated. Although British Columbia at that time was to all intents and purposes part and parcel of the Dominion—the proclamation declaring British Columbia a Province of the Dominion having been issued a few weeks after the treaty was negotiated, she was excluded from the advantages that accrued from that Treaty. An invidious distinction was made against our province in that respect. It certainly was a very great hardship that we in British Columbia, a fish-producing province, should have been deprived of the markets of the United States and of the advantages and benefits that the people of the Maritime Provinces enjoyed from that treaty. I certainly hope that if a new treaty is entered into that British Columbia will not be again treated as not being a part of the Dominion of Canada.

As it is nearly six o'clock I shall not trespass any more on your time at present. There are several matters in the Speech from the throne that are likely to be brought before the notice of this House during the Session, and I will therefore reserve any remarks I have to make upon them until another opportunity arises.

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I am very much surprised at the remarks of my hon. friend respecting the trade of British Columbia. I have just come from there, and it is news for me to hear anything of this kind. I have taken occasion to inquire into the condition of trade in my Province, and I have heard nothing of the depression in business or suffering or want amongst the laboring classes. On the contrary, trade is in a very fair condition. Indeed there is more building going on in the towns of that Province than usual; saw mills are running day and night to cut lumber to supply the demand of the building trade, and my observation leads me to the conclusion that on the whole, there is more prosperity in British Columbia to-day than we have had for years.

HON. MR. MCINNES (B.C.)—I wish to say that my principal informant was an hon. member, as truthful and respectable a man as comes from British Columbia in the Commons, a strong supporter of the Government, and that is Mr. Gordon, of Nanaimo.

HON. MR. ALMON—Does not the hon. gentleman from New Westminster live in British Columbia himself?

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Everyone knows that for the last three or four years large sums of money have been expended in British Columbia in the construction of the railway, and it is but natural to suppose that we should have some men thrown out of employment after the work was finished, but there is no want amongst the laboring classes and no depression in trade? With regard to the coal mines of Nanaimo, that industry does not depend at all on the commerce of British Columbia, but on a foreign market; and as there has been a glut in the coal markets of California for some time past, and that is where the Nanaimo coal goes to, it is but natural that that trade should be somewhat depressed. As regards the Chinaman, there are always a number of idle Chinese, and some of them are in want, but when the Municipality of Westminster undertook in a very handsome way to help these men, the Chinese merchants of Victoria came forward in a still more handsome way and said "we will take no help from the white men; we will feed our own poor;" and they taxed themselves so much per month to raise a fund to feed their indigent fellow countrymen.

HON. MR. MCINNES (B.C.)—Who induced them to do so?

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Their own sense of honor.

HON. MR. MCINNES (B.C.)—It was the new Mayor of Victoria.

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B.C.)—With regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway, I congratulate the House and the country on the completion of this great work, and I think that any man who cannot do that after considering all the circumstances must be blind. The man who cannot see the benefits it has secured to this country cannot see anything. The work might have been proceeded with more slowly, but the road is now built; it is a gigantic work, a lasting monument to the industry and enterprise of this country.

REPRESENTATION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA IN THE CABINET.

NOTICE OF MOTION.

HON. MR. MCINNES gave notice

Whereas, only four provinces of the Dominion, embracing only one-sixteenth of its area, and all lying to the eastward of its centre, are represented in the Cabinet; and

Whereas, the absence from the Cabinet of any representative of the central or prairie section of the Dominion, contributed largely to the line of conduct on the part of the Government which led to the North-West insurrection of 1885; and

Whereas, the absence from the Cabinet of any representative of the Pacific Province, caused the Government to withdraw all their lands in that Province from sale and pre-emption for the space of nine years, and to adopt in other matters a policy calculated to retard its settlement and lessen its material prosperity; therefore

Resolved, that in the opinion of this House, justice and expediency both demand that the central or prairie section and the western or Pacific section of the Dominion should each be represented in the Queen's Privy Council of Canada.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman should not forget that Sir John Macdonald represented British Columbia in the Cabinet for five years.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Yes, for seven years.

HON. MR. MCINNES—But we want to grow our own Cabinet Ministers.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman himself is not now a representative of British Columbia.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I may take this opportunity, since the question has been raised, of giving that statement a most emphatic denial, and any person who, from this out, repeats the statement is simply telling an untruth. I am as much a representative of the Province of British Columbia to-day as I ever was, and as much as any member of this or the other House from British Columbia, and it is a piece of malicious vindictiveness on the part of some would-be representatives of that province—a piece of petty spite and malice on the part of certain politicians and newspapers for my independent course that I am singled out as a representative who has abandoned his province, and am, therefore, not in a position to represent the views of its people. Both of my colleagues in this House have been absent much longer from their province than I have been, and not only absent from the province but absent from the Dominion. I simply left there last year for the Session and did not return, in consequence of an effort to give my two sons the benefit of a university education—something that I am sorry to say cannot yet be done in my Province. My absence is only temporary; I intend to go back to British Columbia next year, and I intend to work for that Province and her interests as faithfully as if I had never been an hour absent, notwithstanding anything that quibbling politicians or their organs may say to the contrary, and I repeat it that any person in this House or out of this House who charges me again with having abandoned my Province and says that I am not a true representative of that Province is simply stating that which is not true.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—It may not be out of order at this stage of the proceedings of the House to say a word in explanation of my inability to bring down papers in reply to an address moved by my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Belle-rose). He asked for a copy of a protest of the Deputy Warden of St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, Telesphore Ouimet, objecting to the evidence of Hector Demers summoned as a witness on the 14th of July, 1884, being taken before a commission appointed to inquire into the management of the penitentiary in 1884. The protest was laid upon the table by the Deputy Warden of the Penitentiary and my hon. friend wanted to have a copy of it. I said in agreeing that the address might pass, that I had made inquiries in the Department of Justice and was informed that no such paper was there, but that they had telegraphed to Mr. Moylan, the inspector, who was at the moment at St. Vincent de Paul, if there was such a paper in existence. The answer which came back was the following telegram:—

"St. Vincent de Paul, March 1st, 1886.

Deputy Warden Ouimet showed a written protest to Mr. Baillargeon and self, afterwards took it from table; it is now in his brother's hands.

(Sgd), J. G. MOYLAN."

It is manifest that we cannot produce a paper which we have not got in our possession. If a copy of it is not to be had, I cannot bring down any return that will be satisfactory to my hon. friend.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I am sure that the Postmaster-General has done everything in his power to bring down that paper, but I may say that I will be obliged to ask for an enquiry into the administration of St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary by the Inspector. I say, from my place here, that the paper I moved for was handed in; action was taken upon it and judgment was given in that enquiry, and the paper has not been stolen, but given away. In the same way I state that four or five prisoners in that institution have escaped, and had the Inspector been willing to do his duty he would have found that they were aided in their escape by parties inside of the penitentiary who are there still. I state it here from my place, and if an enquiry is granted I will try to show that that institution w never work satisfactorily as it is administered now. The evil is in the Department of Justice. Let the Government do their duty; let the Minister of Justice order an enquiry, let him bring under oath those who are able to give information and to show what is going on, and then he will discover and believe as I do. The late Minister of Justice was ready to do all in his power for the good of the institution; and I believe, though I do not know him, that the present Minister of Justice is ready to do everything that he can to ensure its proper management. I have made a charge publicly. Give us a good commission of honest men who will not force witnesses to perjure themselves as was done during the last enquiry, and then the hon. Minister of Justice will see whether I am right. I hope the Government will adopt my suggestion.

WINTER COMMUNICATION WITH PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE rose to Call the attention of the House to the means provided for the transport of passengers between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, and the charges demanded therefor—and ask the leader of the Government in this House, whether any tariff of charges has been published, and if so, whether a copy thereof can be laid on the table.

He said: I regret that it has become necessary for me once more to trouble the House upon questions having reference to grievances which I have so often, during previous Sessions, ventilated from my place here. All I can undertake to say at the present time is that I shall occupy the time of the House no longer than is absolutely necessary, and I take this opportunity to disclaim once and for all anything like factious intentions in this matter. My object is to secure good and safe transport for the mails and passengers of my Province at the most reasonable rates at which they can be provided, and that these rates should not be varied capriciously at the option of any department of the Government of Canada. The House may perhaps have perceived that the motion on the paper refers exclusively to passengers this year; I have said nothing in it about mails. The reason is that since the closing of ordinary navigation the mails to and from Prince Edward Island, up to, I may say, a fortnight ago at all events, have been carried with unusual punctuality. There is, under existing circumstances, but little to complain of in that behalf, but I regret to say that although there has been at the disposal of the Government improved means of communication, the full benefit which might have been derived by passengers from the improved means has not been invariably reaped by them. For example, last Session or the Session before, the hon. minister opposite (Sir Alex. Campbell) engaged on behalf of the Government that for one thing the Northern Light steamship (which hon. members will bear in mind was built specially for this service) would be put in a thorough state of repair, and the Government intended to build a vessel capable of performing a similar service, to be available in case of necessity. That the Northern Light has undergone very substantial repairs is quite apparent from the fact that she weathered one of the most serious storms that have taken place on the shores of the Maritime Provinces for many years. A day or two after Christmas that vessel was exposed to a storm of extreme severity, yet she weathered it safely, and though obliged to return to port, the delay occasioned by repairing the damages was not more than two days. We have every reason, therefore, to be satisfied with the performance of the Northern Light. She made her trips from Georgetown to Pictou and return daily. But suddenly, from no apparent reason that I have heard of, or any individual in Prince Edward Island could divine, the special mail train which was kept in attendance on this steamer in order that the public might reap the full benefit of the passage through in one day, was discontinued, and though mails and passengers were delivered on the island, they could go no farther than Georgetown unless the ordinary express train happened to be available to carry them, until the next day. This was found to be so serious a grievance, and one so utterly unnecessary and uncalled for in every way, that public opinion declared itself strongly against the Government, and they had to recognize that there was a feeling in the Province to which they must yield. The grievance was redressed and the special mail train was replaced on the route. I only allude to this to show what occurred on one occasion there on a Saturday evening. The Northern Light had that day made the trip to and from Pictou, but instead of finding the special train, as usual, awaiting the arrival of the steamer, the passengers and mails were detained forty hours in Georgetown before they were moved. That, as I have explained, was altered because public opinion was a little too strong even for the Government. We all thought in Prince Edward Island that such an unusually fine season as we were enjoying would enable the Government to keep the steamer on the route to a late date. There was a total absence of severe frost and heavy snow storms, yet the vessel was suddenly removed and taken to Souris. Some of us were in hopes that an experiment was to be tried on a route which has found favor with not a few experienced mariners—that she would be put on the route between Souris and Cape George. My hon. friend from Pictou can confirm what I say, that the harbor of Pictou remained open for several weeks afterwards—was open until a week ago at all events—while the Northern Light remained snugly at her mooring in Souris Harbor. I have heard since leaving my home, that she had been ordered out again; what the result will be I cannot say. Thus it seems that the Government have been slow to take advantage even of the means of conveyance which they had at their disposal in this case. Leaving that branch of the subject, I recur now to the alternative route which the people of Prince Edward Island are able to avail themselves of in winter—that is between Capes Traverse and Tormentine, a distance of about eight miles, which is passed over by means of very small ice-boats. The Government were advised by a committee of the House of Commons which sat on this question, and by others, myself amongst them, that this service should no longer be left in private hands—that it should be taken in hand by the Government and run as a public service; and after many hard struggles the Government were induced to do so. I recollect, myself, coming to my place in this House two or three sessions ago, having attended a short time previously an indignation meeting, where the people expressed their sense of the inadequacy of the accommodation provided there, and made use of certain expressions with regard to our connection with the Dominion which certainly were not complimentary, and which I, for one, regretted very much to hear; because it seems to me that a contented people without grievances is a much easier one to govern than a people less favorably situated. I regret, therefore, to hear men complaining that they have grievances unredressed by the Government, and that their ordinary talk when they meet together for the discussion of public affairs, is "Give us our terms, or cut us adrift and let us shift for ourselves." Such expressions grieve every patriotic man. This service across the Straits, after many a struggle, was taken in charge by the Government. I myself recommended that they should send down there a live man with some talent for organization, and give him carte blanche. The Commons Committee adopted a similar recommendation. I do not remember that they advised that the Government Commissioners should give their superintendent carte blanche, but they recommended that the service should be taken under Government superintendence. The two ice-boat houses have been built, and the benefits resulting from them are very apparent. They are exceedingly useful. The Government superintendent has been appointed, a certain Captain McElhinny, from the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I do not on any account attempt to raise the slightest prejudice against that gentleman. I think he had a very difficult task to perform when he was sent down there to organize this service. There are aged men, who have spent a lifetime at that occupation, and who, not unnaturally, felt that their services entitled them to some consideration, and probably felt that the appointment ought to have gone their way. I do not question at all the propriety of the appointment that has been made, and I am quite ready to admit that this superintendent has acted with good judgment and organized the service very well. He started running his boats immediately after the Northern Light was, as I have explained just now, sent to Souris; and the people of Prince Edward Island, and especially of Charlottetown, found that their mails were delivered with great punctuality, aided by one of the branch lines on the island, and one on the opposite shore, which now reaches half the distance that used to be covered by sleighs. It is found that the mails from all parts of the Dominion and foreign mails often arrive at Charlottetown by three in the afternoon, a great advantage. I felt the improvement myself, and I hope that the other parts of the service were equally well managed. Certainly, a fortnight ago yesterday I went down to the Capes well disposed to be pleased and satisfied with everything I found there. I hoped to find the rest of the service as well organized as the delivery of the mails. I met with some old hands about there, who used their eloquence to induce me to go with them across the Straits, hoping that old associations would prevail. I said "no it is my duty to go by the Government boats and see for myself how the service is managed." Accordingly, the next day I made Mr. McElhinney's acquaintance at breakfast at the hotel, and congratulated him on the success which had attended his efforts. I fully intended to have crossed the Straits with him. I proceeded down to the boat-house to make some inquiries as to what the fares and what the regulations were, and found to my surprise that they were altogether so extraordinary that I for one would not submit to them. In the first place, every passenger was called upon to subscribe to a document which would release the Government from all responsibility for damages in case of loss or damage to his luggage or injury to his person. That alone seemed to be a most arbitrary proceeding on the part of the Government. In this case they stood in the position of a powerful monopoly and the traveller in the position of one with little means of taking care of himself, having no option but to take their offer. I raised strong objections to that; but when I found in addition that the charge which would be made for the privilege of occupying a seat in one of those boats would be $7, and that for every pound of luggage which I possessed over 30 pounds I should be required to pay three cents a pound, I felt that it was something to which I could not submit, and I turned to one of the old experienced hands whom I had been accustomed to travel with in other times, and asked what he would take me for; he said $2. That is the price that we used to pay. I do not wish to argue this as a personal question. I would rather a good deal, instead of stating my own experience, give the case of an ordinary traveller—not an imaginary one, but a real one—which occurred this day fortnight past. Take the case of a gentleman who had been connected with the press of Charlottetown and who was leaving the Island to assume a position in another place. He was, I suppose, getting near middle age and had been accustomed to sedentary pursuits, and was not very able to take a strap on his shoulder and run over the ice, rough and smooth, as I sometimes do myself; but the rate would be the same for him, $7, for the passage, and the privilege of using the strap, and $3 per 100 pounds of luggage in excess of 30 pounds—a very heavy charge. We are not now considering the case of wealthy men who can afford to spread their dollars broadcast amongst the crew, but of people in ordinary circumstances, such as the great mass of those who have to cross the Straits in winter. Those are the cases in which real hardship occurs. The result in this case was that this gentleman, like myself, refused to go with the Government boats. In taking this step we did the very thing which it was always sought to prevent if possible. The local Government, 17 years ago, having to re-let that contract, abstained from putting it up to public tender, simply for the reason that they did not regard it as a service which ought to be subjected to tender, but as one which required great care and experience, and in order to insure the safety and efficiency of the service renewed the old contract. I remember the fact well from this circumstance, that one of my colleagues on that occasion lost the support of the settlement where it was hoped the contract would go. The voters of that settlement pretty generally went against him and he lost his election. The same disposition was manifested in the Commons committee—the safety of the mails and the Queen's subjects was the most important question to be considered, the pecuniary results were of secondary importance. Now to compare the charges made a fortnight ago in some cases and actually paid, and demanded in others and refused, with those formerly demanded and paid under the old regime, will just show how extravagant the demands of the Government are in this case. Formerly, on the last two occasions when I came over with the old contractors, I was handed a ticket in the form of a railway ticket at Cape Traverse for which I was charged $5; for this amount I could have an inside seat in the boat if I was not disposed to walk, or have a strap outside if I wished to warm myself up by the exercise. Any reasonable quantity of ordinary luggage was taken by the contractors for the same sum, and after all that you were carried a distance of 38 miles in sleighs to the junction of the Intercolonial Railway at Amherst. You had all this for less money than the Government charged a fortnight ago for an inside seat in a boat. Now look on this picture and on that and tell me which is the one that ought to continue?

And further with regard to that demand made by the Government for indemnity against any claim of a passenger for loss or damage to his luggage or to his person, I say that that is a thing which really ought to be abandoned. I believe that it has been the custom in framing Acts of Parliament, where the interests of powerful monopolies stand on one side, and the interests of comparatively feeble individuals on the other, that Parliament in the Old Country has stepped in and decided that the feeble man shall be protected against the monopolist, and any demand made upon him to sign away his rights shall be null and void, and of no effect. That, if my memory serves me, was a condition of the Land Act of 1882 in Ireland, where it was feared that the benefit of the Act might be signed away owing to the power and wealth of the proprietor and the feebleness of the tenant. Here we have people, not precisely in the same condition, but people who must accept the Government conditions or stay at home, and that certainly is not desirable. I found, myself, an outside irresponsible boatman and crew, willing to take me across for the old rates. That is true; but it is equally true that I might come some day and not find him there. He might be on the other side, or might not find it to his advantage to carry on this unprofitable trade owing to the competition of the Government, because the Government take away a great deal of his business, and my only alternative would be to accept the Government conditions or return home. I ask any impartial gentleman in this House if that is a state of things to be tolerated and rendered permanent as between the Island Province and the mainland? I would also call attention to the fact that this is not a question belonging exclusively to my province. For every man that writes a letter from there or sends a newspaper, there must be some other man outside to receive it or transact business connected with it. It is the same with passengers. Some of them are Prince Edward Islanders, and some are from all parts of the world; and the question interests them as much as us. This is so true that we, who saw the importance of improved means of communication in winter, before coming into Confederation, suggested terms, which we hoped would remedy the evils we experienced, by combining the power and resources of the Dominion to grapple with difficulties hitherto beyond our powers. It may be urged that such charges as are made are justifiable on the ground that the service is an expensive and a dangerous one, and that the rates paid are in conformity with the service. I have to say, in reply, that the Government have this advantage: Their superintendent is at the place; if there appears any probability of danger, he has the alternative of keeping the boats from going out. He can say, "This is not safe weather to go out in; you will remain at home," and he can recommend the passengers to wait until the weather changes; so that as a matter of fact the dangers are less in reality than they may appear to some. Just in the same way with the Northern Light. The fares on the Northern Light are very high indeed, as compared with the services performed. A cabin passage in the Northern Light costs $3, though the distance is under fifty miles, and is often performed to and fro in one day. It is obvious to those who are accustomed to travel by steamer that this is an extraordinary charge. I may be told that that service is one of extreme danger, and requires a specially constructed vessel, and a crew of more than ordinary capacity and skill. I answer that would be true if you really did what it was at first intended should be done, and what really was done during the earlier years in which the Northern Light was on the service; but I am in a position to show that for the last three years that vessel has always been withdrawn when the period of hard ice came on, so that in point of fact the danger she incurs is really no greater than any strongly built screw steamer could fairly encounter with success and safety. I have here the Senate Debates, containing a report of a discussion which took place last year on this subject. It will be in the recollection of the House that I once called the attention of the Government to what I consider a danger in connection with that service. The decks of the Northern Light, in the spring of the year, were crowded with passengers, and a collision with hard ice, which might be expected, would naturally throw the passengers standing on her decks off their feet. What is the consequence of an accident of that sort? We know the danger there is when a vessel's cargo shifts and when it is a human cargo the danger is greater than if it were wheat or salt, because human beings become scared, and cling to each other, and fall over to leeward, and the vessel is apt to go on her beam ends immediately. I warned the government of that, but it was not seen in that light. A statement in reply to my motion was brought down showing the number of days that the Northern Light had been stopped for 6 years past. According to that statement, which no doubt is literally correct, I find that during the first three years of her service she was only laid up in port for 91 days during which she could not run; and that in the three succeeding years, which comprised 1881, 1882 and 1883, she was stopped for 202 days. The only conclusion we can draw from that is that as soon as there came to be any real difficulty or danger in the gulf, the vessel was withdrawn; so that nothing can be made from the argument that the service being a dangerous one, the fares of the passengers ought to be higher; it amounts to nothing. The danger is not real, for as soon as danger is anticipated, the vessel during those three latter years is sent into Georgetown until it is over. I have heard it stated that all this cry about extra fares is a mistake—that the high charges arise out of some unhappy misunderstanding, and that refunds have been made to passengers in some instances. If that is the case I am very glad to hear that it is only the result of a mistake and not of deliberation. If the Government intended it, I should be sorry to think that they know so little of the service they had undertaken to control. If it is a mistake, I can only say that it is a very unbecoming one, and does not lead to the conclusion that the management of the service is in a very good position. I hope that the Government will take the subject into consideration, and order a tariff of fares to be established there that will be in the interests of the ordinary and the poor travellers—the men who cannot afford to spend more money than is actually necessary. Last year I took occasion to tell the hon. gentlemen opposite that many of the passengers who came across that season in the Northern Light were exceedingly poor, men of the laboring class, and some of them had been actually obliged to find jobs in Pictou to provide means of living until the Northern Light made her appearance in the harbor. To allow such fares as those recently demanded to be collected from poor men is equivalent to compelling them to stay at home. I can point to evidence in the report of the Commons Committee to show that the ordinary charge made by the old contractors was two dollars, and for that sum a passenger was allowed to take a seat inside the boat if he chose, and that many poor persons were carried across free, being unable to pay their fares. I hold this up as an instance of liberality on the part of the old contractors, and I say to the Government, “Go and do likewise.”

HON. MR. MONTGOMERY—This is a question which has been brought before the House every session for a number of years, and it appears to be an annual grievance. We all have our annual grievances. The hon. gentleman from De-Lanauidiere has his; the Prince Edward Island representatives have theirs, in the difficulties attending the crossing of the Straits of Northumberland. As far as that service is concerned, I think this year it is greatly improved. The Government have taken upon themselves the service previously performed by contractors, and I think the business is very well managed there at present. The only cause of complaint that I have heard is that the charges are rather more than we have hitherto been in the habit of paying. I have crossed there myself frequently, and I never was asked by the contractors for more than $2 for crossing the Straits, and if I chose to be taken over in the boat without assisting the crew, the contractors made no charge, though I always considered that I was bound to pay the men who performed the labor which I should have done. In coming across this time I was asked if I desired to be hauled over. I said that I did, as I am getting up in years now, and am not as active to take hold of the strap as I was 50 years ago. When I asked how much the charge would be, they told me it would be $7 for myself and so much for my luggage, in all $8.50, which I paid. I may say that the service now is very different from what it was three years ago. When I left home three years ago to come here, I went to Georgetown and was detained there five days. Then I had to return to the Cape and was detained there several days before I could get across. The hon. gentleman beside me left Paris the day after I left home, and I found on my arrival here that he had reached here before me. When I went down on the board ice on that occasion and inquired for the boats, I could see none. A person pointed out to me what I supposed were two snow drifts, but which I found were the ice-boats covered up with snow. Hon. gentlemen can imagine the comfort of getting into one of those boats after the snow and ice were shovelled out, and sitting there for six hours while crossing the Straits. We have now got a good boat-house, and when I came down this year the boats were there quite dry. The passenger is provided with a good seat—in fact I felt as comfortable, with the exception of the jolting from the roughness of the ice, as if I were seated in a chair in my own parlor. The crew had everything comfortable, and there was a capital fur robe to throw around me. I did not begrudge the payment of a little more for the additional comfort I had in crossing. The Northern Light was laid up, I think, some time sooner than she ought to have been this season. The Straits remained open, in fact, until I left home, and she might have been plying every day up to that time. She did very good service while she was running. She made a trip every day backwards and forwards. The mails this winter, since they have been sent by Cape Tormentine, have been very regular. The morning I left there, the mail arrived before I started—that was about 10 o'clock—and I think the people generally are very well satisfied with the present arrangement at the Cape, with the exception of the charges, concerning which there is a little complaint, but I believe that the management there have made some mistake, and charged a little more than the authorized rates. I am in hopes that the time of crossing the Straits on the ice will soon disappear. When we obtain a sub-way—that is being agitated for by my hon. friend from Alberton—I hope in a few years that instead of crossing over the ice we will be able to cross beneath it with greater speed and safety. I would like to say, with reference to the old contractors, that Captain Muttart has been a long time in the service, and has been very inadequately paid. He was very kind to passengers, and every person who had much to do with him thought very highly of him. If the Government could see their way to do it, I think the country will be very much pleased if some little remuneration is granted to him and to Captain Irving in recognition of their services. Captain Irving is a much younger man than Captain Muttart, and neither of them has been adequately paid for the work they have done. Sometimes after crossing the Straits, they have been detained for several days, unable to return, and could not save one cent for themselves after paying their own expenses and those of their men. The crossing on the ice-boats now in use is very much improved. When a passenger gets there he finds a warm room to wait in; the boats are thoroughly dry when taken out, and the service is prompt and well performed. I have never crossed the Straits with as great comfort as I did this time. We had a heavy snow storm for an hour and a half or two hours after we started, and when it cleared off we found that we were going as straight for our landing as if we had seen it all the time ahead of us. As far as I can learn, every one that has crossed under the new system has been perfectly satisfied, so far as the comfort and convenience of crossing are concerned.

HON. MR. ALMON—How many men does it require to man an ice-boat?

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—Five men.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—What is the usual charge in summer for crossing the Straits?

HON. MR. MONTGOMERY—Two dollars.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—The first complaint which my hon. friend made was not with reference to anything which is referred to in his notice of motion, but related to the withdrawal of the special train between Georgetown and Charlottetown, which used to leave Georgetown on the arrival of the Northern Light from Pictou, a grievance which he afterwards, before two minutes had elapsed, admitted to have been redressed. I think my hon. friend might have saved himself the trouble of making that complaint. But he asked why the mail train was withdrawn. The special train was withdrawn because of the great expense of running it. The special train only carried the mail to Charlottetown a few hours, I believe, in advance of the ordinary train, which leaves Georgetown once a day for Charlottetown. But the Northern Light does not arrive there immediately before the departure of the ordinary train, therefore a special train was put on, and it was some convenience to the Province. Complaint having been made that its withdrawal was an inconvenience to the public, I was glad to restore it. But my hon. friend must bear in mind that there should be some proportion between the expenditure and the receipts connected with this service. There was nothing in the facts that would justify the government in putting on and continuing this special train. It would not have been done in any other part of the Dominion. With the exception of the special train which leaves Halifax or Rimouski with the English mails, I do not think in the Dominion there is another instance of a special train leaving on the arrival of a steamer with mails, or going so short a distance as from Georgetown to Charlottetown, and my hon. friend from Marshfield will be surprised to learn that that special train service cost from $9,000 to $10,000.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—It only runs for a few weeks.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Yes, but during that time the cost is from six to eight thousand dollars, which is a considerable item for a mail service not bringing in much revenue. There was a good deal of feeling excited about the withdrawal of the train; and as the railway was a public railway and we were anxious to meet the wishes of the people of Prince Edward Island as far as possible, so as to prevent any complaint or give any cause for grievance on the part of the population of the Island, and feeling that the population, though small, were entitled to everything we could do in reason to make the mail service efficient, we replaced the train, although it involved considerable expense, and it is now running again. My hon. friend should bear in mind what the government has done for the purpose of increasing and improving the facilities for crossing between the island and the mainland. We have spent for the purpose of connecting Cape Traverse with the Island Railway, $156,000, and for the purpose of connecting Cape Tormentine with the Intercolonial Railway, we have guaranteed to a private company, who are now constructing the branch, the sum of $113,000. These are large items in the public expenditure, made for the very purpose of increasing and improving the connection between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. In addition to this, if he adds the large sums paid for the Northern Light, the money expended annually for that vessel and for the new service between the Capes and for the summer service, and the additional sums which have been from time to time expended in endeavoring to improve the facilities upon the Island, and also the loss on running the Island Railway, my hon. friend will see that the postal revenue from the Island bears no proportion at all to the amount of money expended for improving the facilities for transport and mail service. We expend the money there, because the duty is imposed upon us by the terms of the Union, and with a sincere desire to carry out those terms, and from no expectation of obtaining a revenue from it. If the hon. gentleman had looked seriously into the matter he would have seen that the Government have done a great deal towards meeting the wishes of the people of the Island. We have done a great deal latterly by subsidizing the branch on the mainland; we have done a great deal by constructing the branch on the Island, and we have done a great deal by taking the ice-boat service between those two points into our own hands. At first it was in the hands of the Post Office Department, and then it was placed in the hands of the Marine Department; everything in reason has been done, and I must say more than could have been expected at the hands of the Government for increasing and improving the service between the Island and the mainland. My hon. friend suggests that we have done very little.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—No, I give you credit for all you have done; but I say you mar it all by the rates you charge.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—My hon. friend referred on a previous occasion to the report of the Special Committee of the other branch of the Legislature on this subject. That report recommended that instead of being let by contract to private individuals, the service at the Capes should in future be a Government service. We did that. We took it out of private hands, and made it a Government service. The second recommendation was that a larger number of boats and an increased number of men be employed, sufficient to enable daily trips to be made in both directions whenever crossing is practicable. We have done that. There is a larger service, there are more boats and more boatmen, and we have made it a daily service. The third recommendation was that boat-houses be constructed on both sides of the Straits for protecting and repairing the boats and for accommodating the men. Boat-houses have been constructed—my hon. friend near me (Mr. Montgomery) says comfortable houses—and facilities for keeping the boats dry, and making the crews and passengers as comfortable as can be. The fourth recommendation was that stations for observation and signal service be adopted for the guidance of the boats while crossing. I do not know whether that has been done or not, but an officer was sent down there for the purpose of seeing that everything was done that was practicable to make the crossing safe. The fifth recommendation was that good sized row boats be provided to assist or relieve the ice-boats in open water stretches. The officer in command is charged to do everything in his judgment necessary to meet any difficulty or danger, and I dare say he has done that. The sixth recommendation was that a small screw steamer should be used during a considerable portion of the winter in connection with the ice-boats, and could be safely docked in the bord ice when not at work. That has not been done, but that will follow if it is found to be necessary and useful for the security of life. The seventh recommendation is “In reference to the summer communication, that in connection with the railway to Cape Traverse and the branch now in course of construction on the main land, piers should be constructed at both Capes, and a steam ferry established for the conveyance of the mail and passengers in the summer season, in accordance with the report of Mr. McLeod, Civil Engineer.” The railway on the mainland has not yet got down to the water; it is within two or three miles of it, and when it gets down it will be time to consider the matter. So that my hon. friend will see that out of seven recommendations made by the Committee of the Lower House one is not yet possible, and of the other six we have complied with five of those recommended, and endorsed by my hon. friend. That is doing a good deal towards meeting the views of the people of Prince Edward Island. Then my hon. friend says his complaint is with reference to the tariff of charges. The tariff of charges may be too high. I am not in a position to pronounce on that, but it is a tariff capable of being revised at any time and made reasonable.

But what the hon. gentleman says was demanded of him for crossing does not seem to me to be a large sum for the service. Looking back to the time when Parliament sat at Quebec, and when we had to cross the St. Lawrence, less than a mile (whereas the crossing between the Straits is eight miles) I, and many hon. gentlemen round me, constantly paid from $4 to $5 for being crossed in a canoe over the floating ice. We had four or five men pulling a wooden canoe, with great labor, requiring considerable dexterity and a good knowledge of the navigation to keep us away from or to cross the floes of ice, and I do not know that any member of Parliament thought four or five dollars too large a sum for the service. If there are many poor people who cross the Straits of Northumberland in the winter season, perhaps the tariff should be revised. The memorandum which has been handed to me in reference to this matter is as follows:—

“The steamer Northern Light runs between Georgetown and Pictou, when the condition of the ice in the Straits of Northumberland permit her doing so.

“The Passenger tariff by this route is $3.00 each; Berth, $1 each; Breakfast, 40 cents; Dinner, 50 cents; Supper, 40 cents.

“When it is found impossible to keep up continual communication by the Northern Light, the Mails are transported by ice-boats from Cape Traverse, in Prince Edward Island, to Cape Tormentine, in New Brunswick, and vice versa.

“The charge for Passengers crossing by this route is $2 each, when they have a strap and travel outside the boats. When passengers desire to be hauled in one of the three usual mail boats the charge is $4 for each passenger; but if extra boats are hired for the purpose of hauling passengers, then the charge is $7 each. The cost of hiring an extra boat and crew for the round trip is $25.

"Department of Marine and Fisheries,

HON. SIR. ALEX. CAMPBELL.

The following extract, from a letter from Mr. Richard Sloggett Lloyds, Surveyor, Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, dated 22nd February, 1886, to Mr. Smith, Deputy Minister of Marine, relative to the ice-boat service, will show his opinion of the manner in which that service has been conducted between Cape Tormentine and Cape Traverse:—

"I have very much pleasure in stating that your representative down here, Captain McElhinney, is doing his work admirably. The mails arrive almost daily, and generally early in the day. The arrangements are excellent, and I hear every person speak in the highest terms of the Captain. I have not been up myself, but many of my friends have paid a visit to the Capes to see and inspect for themselves, and have heard only one opinion expressed."

I think, hon. gentlemen, we have done a good deal, the expenditure and the revenue considered, and persons who are reasonable about those things will believe that a very efficient service has been established by the Government, and that we are endeavouring in every way in our power to fulfil and carry out the terms on which Prince Edward Island entered the Union. I have omitted to mention the large expenditure on the Island where we had to purchase a pier from a private party, so that my hon. friend, if he would only be reasonable about it—he is generally reasonable and I beg his pardon for thinking that he is not so now—would see that we have expended a good deal of money, and have done everything that the experience of the representatives from the Island has suggested to make this service effective and complete; and I hope and believe, even in the face of loss from the Island railway, and in face of the difficulties that exist in making connection with the mainland, that my hon. friend will always find the present Government, and, I hope, any future Government, ready and anxious to do everything in their power, in reason, to carry out the terms of Union, and make effective the service between the Island and the mainland. My hon. friend from Park Corner speaks of Captain Muttart who has been long in the service. He must mean that he was long a contractor; he has never been in the public service. I would be very glad indeed if anything could be suggested that would meet my hon. friend's wishes in that respect; but I am afraid I cannot hold out any promise. If Captain Muttart has had bad times, he is like all of us who are in the pursuit of private business and private gains. I am afraid the Government can hardly do anything for him.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—The hon. gentleman has not mentioned the conditions which the Government imposes upon passengers crossing in the ice boats. Surely he will not undertake to defend that?

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I regret that I do not know anything about it. I will undertake to enquire about it; I never heard of it before. I do not know what conditions are imposed or by what authority, but I will inquire and take another occasion to refer to the matter.

HON. MR. CARVELL—Reference having been made in the papers read by the leader of the Government to myself, gives me an opportunity of following him, which perhaps I would not have had the courage to do but for that reference. I feel that a few remarks from me are necessary, from the fact that recently I have been forced to publish a letter in connection with this question. I crossed the Straits about a week, I think, before my hon. friend from Marshfield, and shortly afterwards I observed in a Montreal newspaper, an editorial attacking the arrangements for this season rather severely, and giving as authority for it my hon. friend from Marshfield, my hon friend from Park Corner, and myself sandwiched between the two, and as the views sought to be conveyed by that article were entirely at variance with that version of it, I thought it was due to myself, to say nothing of what is due to the Government, to contradict it over my own signature, which I did in the Montreal Herald. Since doing so, in talking with the hon. mover of this motion, he has endorsed all that was in that letter, the gist of which is that the condition of things between Cape Traverse and Cape Tormentine this winter is very much better than it ever was before; that the boat-houses are a very great boon; that the arrangements made by Captain McElhinney in securing the services of the men, and his management of them is a very great improvement; that one of the greatest dangers of the whole crossing is removed by the fact of having a warm house into which the boats may be taken to be cleaned, and when they go out in the morning they are free from ice and water. It has happened to me on previous occasions, while crossing with a boat apparently tight when we started, that after being twenty minutes in the water a great hole could be found in it, this hole being closed up by ice which the water soon melted, and we had difficulty in keeping her afloat. I know that I have myself baled for hours while the men were working along with me. The men now have comfortable quarters in which to wait until the proper time has arrived for them to start. I may say that before leaving Cape Traverse I was in the boat-house for an hour mingling with the men, with nearly all of whom I am well acquainted, having crossed some forty times in the last five or six years. They were all satisfied with the arrangements, and said they were the best they had ever had. These men, instead of having to take the boat at the shore, or near it, and haul it to the bord ice, are put in comfortable sleighs and hauled out by teams as passengers, so that when they get to the bord ice they have not exhausted a portion of their strength in hauling the boat over a mile and a half of rough ice. On the other side, having crossed they are put into a sleigh and driven to another comfortable house where they get warmed and can change their clothes and sleep if they like until the return voyage commences. The boats are well equipped with oars and boat hooks. No intoxicating liquors are allowed around the place. I know that in former years when men have been detained for three or four days by adverse circumstances, when the time arrived that they could cross, they were not worth half as much because of the lives they led in the meantime. That is now a thing of the past. Capt. McElhinney has done wonders for the time he has been there; and so far there has been a very great improvement, all of which, I think, the mover of this motion will endorse publicly, as he has done to me privately. But hon. gentlemen, this is a very small portion of the service. The hon. leader of the Government has said they have done a good deal, and so they have ; but we were a long time in the Union before we got these improvements. The boat-houses were talked about a good many years and I am glad that they have come at last. What we want now more than anything else is small steamers, one to be kept on either side, as auxiliaries ; sometimes they may not be used at all, and sometimes they may be indispensable. I have had a good deal of experience, waiting for an opportunity to cross. I was detained there one week, in weather as fine as to-day has been. The only difficulty was four or five miles of open water in the middle of the Strait, over which it would have been dangerous for small boats to pass. Now, if we had a couple of small steamers to run across these open spaces, not only would the time of the passage be shortened but the danger would be minimized. The last time I crossed, about three weeks ago, five-eighths of the voyage could have been completed in half an hour, and there would have been little or no danger or hardship. The leader of the Government in this House understands very well what my idea on this subject is. Further, we ought to have a boat with supplies of necessary and useful articles, in case of accidents like the one that occurred last winter.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Do you mean a supply boat to go with the others ?

HON. MR. CARVELL—Yes ; there should never be less than three boats together at one time, and one of these should be a supply boat.

HON. MR. DICKEY—Not all going out together ?

HON. MR. CARVELL—Yes, all going out together ; that is the arrangement this winter. They never start with less than three boats. But they do not take supplies. Supposing these boats were overtaken in a storm and were kept out all night, as unfortunately happened last winter, the supplies required would readily suggest themselves—rubber covers, fuel, and food which could be put in a condensed form—and should always be kept on hand. We who come from Prince Edward Island who are accustomed to cross the Straits might talk from now until doomsday and could not convey any idea of the uncertainty and often hardship of crossing the Straits in winter. No one can tell in starting how long he will be in the boats. I remember on one occasion I had to wait for five days for an opportunity to cross. I was urged by the boatmen to go with them one day, but refused. They told me I could get across in five hours, but I persisted in my refusal. I hired a horse and sleigh and drove home and I afterwards learned that the men were out thirteen hours and in the end were obliged to return to the place from which they had started. That occurred in the month of February. The hardship of crossing the Straits in winter is always great and there is more or less risk attending the passage. My hon. friend from Marshfield spoke of a suggestion having been made that the Northern Light should be put on the route from Souris to Cape George. If she succeeded in getting over, it might be said of the passengers that their last state was worse than the first ; fancy passengers landed at Cape George—they might almost as well be landed at Cape Breton ! It would be better for them to remain at home until they got a chance to cross than to be landed at Cape George. As to the document which passengers are required to sign, I have no hesitation in saying that if I were injured in crossing the Straits I would make a claim for compensation. Suppose my hon. friend, while pulling on the strap, should get his foot between two clumps of ice and break his leg I doubt if he would have a fair claim for damages against the Government. I do not approve of the system of requiring passengers to sign such a document, though my own opinion is they might as well sign it as not ; they are as likely to get paid one way as the other. I have a lot of claims against the Government and I cannot get any of them settled. Reference has been made to the old tariff. I am getting a little light on the subject and it appears to me that I have been a victim. My hon. friend tells me that for $5 he could get a ticket which would entitle him to be taken across the

HON. MR. CARVELL.

Strait in one of the boats and conveyed to Amherst.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—Yes.

HON. MR. CARVELL—I crossed myself, as a strap man, for many years, but circumstances have prevented me from continuing it, and for some time past I have been obliged to take a cabin passage, for which, as I have said over my own signature in the press, I have never paid less than $15—for which I have repeatedly paid $16, and sometimes $20. If my hon. friend has been carried over in that cheap way, I must have been a victim. I never, with one exception, hesitated to give the men—and there are five of them—a gratuity of $1 each, and as my hon. friend from Sarnia is not present, I may add, a bottle of something to warm them on landing on the bord ice.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—Was the amount which the hon. gentleman mentioned paid to the contractors, or did it include the bonus which he paid to the men?

HON. MR. CARVELL—I never paid less than $15 to the contractors I have repeatedly paid $16 and sometimes $20, and in addition I have paid the men $1 each and given them a bottle of something to warm them on landing. I never grudged it, and I did not think it was too much. I was therefore agreeably surprised, on coming to Cape Traverse this year, to find that, including my luggage, the usual amount I carry, I was charged only $10, and now I find that by a mistake in reading his instructions Capt. McElhinney charged me $3 more than he was directed to demand. Under this tariff I paid $7 instead of from $15 to $20. I have therefore no grievance on that score.

About the veterans, I think one of these men is entirely out of court. Mr. Irving made an arrangement with Capt. McElhinney and signed a contract, and the understanding was that not only should he give his services but also his best efforts and good-will in carrying out the service. He immediately went to the boatmen and said to them, "You stick to me and I will stick to you; and the first time the mail comes we will get more money." This coming to McElhinney's ears, he immediately dismissed him, and very properly. As to the other, Muttart, a respectable man in every way, he was well satisfied with the change. I was round the boat-houses with him the other day, and he said the service was ever so much better than he had ever seen it before, and all he wanted was that Capt. McElhinney should purchase two of his boats. The Captain thought he would take one of them, and I hope he will. That is all that is wrong with Muttart. He is in comfortable circumstances, and only wants to get rid of his boats. He is perfectly satisfied, and so are most of the people in the neighborhood. Most of those who cross the Straits say that they were never so well treated before. At the same time, I admit that the Northern Light might be a good deal better than she is, and there are a great many other things that might be better done.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I did not intend to take any part in this debate for reasons which I will shortly state. I thought that on another occasion an opportunity would be afforded me to speak on this question. But there is one statement which has fallen from the leader of the Government in this House which requires an explanation at my hands. It has been bandied about in the newspapers and stated in this House that Prince Edward Island contributes less revenue to the Dominion Treasury than she receives from it. To that statement I take particular exception.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I did not make that statement. I said the Post Office revenue was smaller than the expenditure.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I am very glad to hear the hon. member's explanation. It is continually dinned into the ears of the Prince Edward Islanders that the Dominion is giving us more than we pay. I say that is not a fact. I say it cannot be substantiated. You do not in the Public Accounts get at the revenue which is contributed by Prince Edward Island. When we were a separate colony, we had a direct tariff and a direct revenue, and it could be seen at a glance what the amount of our revenue was. I assert, and I challenge contradiction, that 88 per cent of the importations into Prince Edward Island are bought directly from travellers who are the representatives of firms in London, Hamilton, Montreal, Quebec, Halifax and St. John. That is a fact which every business man who understands the question will substantiate. Therefore, when you take from the Public Accounts of this country the statement of revenue derived directly from Customs and Inland Revenue, I say it does not show the amount that Prince Edward Island contributes. I assert that Prince Edward Island pays more into the Treasury of the Dominion than she gets from it. However, that is beside the question. Whether we pay more or pay less has nothing to do with the question before the House. The Island is now a province of the Confederation. It was admitted on certain terms and conditions which have not been carried out. I say that Prince Edward Island has not been properly treated. We are told that changes have been made in the mail service ; that boat houses have been erected and that certain other things have been done and, as a consequence, that there is greater security to life and property and Her Majesty's mails. This is proof, if proof were needed, that until recently the service was neither safe nor satisfactory. It is the duty of the Government to make the mail service efficient because it is of extreme importance to the whole country that it should be so. The question has been asked—how many people cross the Straits in winter? Whatever the number may be, one thing is certain—no man crosses there unless he is compelled to do so ; but if you take the summer season, when there is open navigation, you will find that the travel between the Island and the mainland is as great as between any other two Provinces of the Dominion. I should be very glad if a record were kept of the number of persons crossing and the places to which they belong. I venture to say that it would be found that more people from Ontario and Quebec cross the Straits in the winter than from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

HON. MR. HOWLAN.

HON. MR. CARVELL—Many times more.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Therefore I say it is as important for Ontario and Quebec as for Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, that the improved means of communication which we seek should be furnished. The people of Prince Edward Island are dissatisfied with the existing state of affairs and are determined to have better means of communication with the main land. Hon. gentlemen who have not crossed the Straits can hardly realize the difficulties under which we labor. They can hardly understand what it is to be kept twelve or thirteen days at the Straits, waiting for an opportunity to cross, and during this time perhaps their bills are protested at the bank, while they have the money in their pockets ready to pay them. I say, as one of those who assisted in bringing about the Union of the Island with the Dominion, that one of the principal inducements to enter the Confederation was that we should have continuous communication winter and summer with the mainland. I say we have not been given that which was promised us at the time, and this is why we bring our grievances before the Parliament of the Dominion, the proper place to discuss them. We are told that the special mail train was stopped because it cost $6,000 a year.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—More than that. I do not wish to speak rashly about it, but I think it was $26,000 a year, and for the time that the train ran it cost $6,000.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Let me take issue with my hon. friend on that.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Do not take issue with me, because I am not certain of the figures.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I think my hon. friend is mistaken, because the railway staff is kept on continuously and the only extra expense would be the coal consumed and the wear and tear. It is very important to the whole Dominion that the mail service should be efficient, and it is absurd to expect that the postal revenue shall equal the expenditure. The postal service of the Dominion does not pay—it is not looked upon as a source of revenue. It is maintained for the indirect benefit it confers on the country.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—We always expect the revenue to nearly equal the expenditure.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Is that the case in the North-West and British Columbia?

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—In the North-West it is pretty good.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I think if you compare the returns for the North-West and Prince Edward Island you will find that I am not very wide of the mark when I say that the service in our Province pays better than theirs. With regard to Capt. Irving, he is one of the best boatmen that ever crossed the Gulf. I say so with a full knowledge of what I assert, having crossed the Gulf 32 times, and I am only sorry that he was not made head of the Department this year. I hope the cloud which is over him will pass away. I will not enter into any of the disagreements which some of my colleagues may have had with him; I only say I am sorry that circumstances prevented him being at the head. When a man has successfully conducted that service for 40 years, during which time he has never lost a life or a mail bag, his long services ought to be recognized. Though he was guilty of imprudence, the least that should have been done was to have considered his past record and thrown the mantle of silence over his conduct and not taken a harsh course. It is as well that we should look all the facts in the face. I do not wish to say one word against Capt. McElhinney. On the contrary, I think he acted with as much prudence as could have been expected from him under the circumstances. He was placed in a difficult position for a stranger, and I am only sorry that some one representing Prince Edward Island was not with him to give him advice at the time. The Department made an arrangement to hire a crew, paying $45 a month to the men, $50 to the coxswains, and $60 to the masters. Those who were employed thought the remuneration was not sufficient, and I concur in their opinion. I know I could not hire a crew to do the work for such wages. I believe the captains of the boats ought to receive $100 each at least; that the coxswain should receive $75, and the men $60 each. It is a very arduous duty and one exceedingly difficult to perform successfully. So far there has been no loss of life, but without speaking disparagingly of Capt. McElhinney, I, for one, if I had to cross the Straits to-morrow, would prefer to go with the more experienced boatmen. Captain Irving and the crew talked the matter of their pay over, and thought the remuneration was not sufficient. The two captains of the boats, Irving and Muttart, came to the conclusion that they would take the wages for a time, and subsequently, when they found the Government in a difficult position, demand more. I admit that Captain Irving was guilty of an indiscretion, which I do not attempt to defend. After a while Capt. Muttart made known to the department what the arrangement was and Irving was dismissed and Muttart kept on. Now is Muttart in a better position than Irving? If he is I fail to see it. So far as Muttart, Sr., is concerned I do not think a better man could be found for the service. He has crossed the Straits for many years successfully; I have no doubt that he is a good judge of these matters, and that he is well satisfied with the arrangement. His son, a very good man, is in charge of one of the boats and he has other sons employed also, but it does seem hard that Capt. Irving should be overlooked and placed in a false position. Captain Irving's reputation as a boatman in Prince Edward Island is second to none in that country; all classes of the community speak of him in the highest terms. I am now 51, and I have known Captain Irving since I was 17 years old, and I know nothing whatever against his character.

HON. MR. CARVELL—I quite agree with the hon. gentleman on the subject of the remuneration which should be given those men. The service is of a difficult character. I think those who perform it are entitled to higher wages than they receive—$90 or $100 a month would not be too much for the leaders and $60 for the men.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I am just going to point out that I contested none of these points to which so much prominence has been given by the hon. leader of the Government, and my hon. friend from Charlottetown. I commenced what I had to say by admitting that great improvement had taken place; my complaint had reference to a different subject altogether. Admitting that Captain McElhinney had succeeded in organizing a new service under very difficult circumstances, and that the service, as far as I could judge now from present experience, was superior to what it used to be, that does not affect the charges made. The hon. gentleman opposite makes light of the charges, but I ask why on earth should they be so greatly in excess of what they were before? There can be no doubt about the figures. I know when I crossed on a former occasion I was handed, for $5, a ticket which entitled me to a passage across the Straits, and thence to Amherst, 38 miles, by sleigh. Now we learn from what has fallen from my hon. friend from Park Corner, that he could not cross the other day for less than $7, and an extra charge for luggage. The hon. Postmaster-General has instituted a comparison between the crossing of the St. Lawrence and the crossing of the Straits. The two are wholly different. In our case it is the sole means of communication between the two provinces; in the other the trip is one that could be taken or not at pleasure.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—The hon. gentleman is quite mistaken. I was describing no pleasure trip. I was describing the means by which members from this part of the country got down to Quebec when Parliament was sitting there. We had to cross the river in canoes.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—Parliament does not sit there now and there are other means of crossing the river besides boats.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I mentioned that as an analogous case, and as to the tariff of fees of which my hon. friend complains, I showed that at Quebec, where we had to go every winter, we had to pay so much to cross the St. Lawrence where it is only three-quarters of a mile wide.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I cannot see any analogy between the two cases any more than I could last year when the hon. gentleman spoke of boats on the Rhine, the Hudson and other rivers.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—That was with reference to another point.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—In this case it is certain that besides members of Parliament, whom I put out of the question altogether, there are many others, and your ordinary traveller has no surplus of dollars which he can squander away in paying for his passage now, three or four times as much as he had to pay formerly. Speaking of the charges for crossing the Straits, I refer to the actual amount paid to the contractors without making any allowance for gratuities which passengers might feel inclined to give to the crew. I find in the Appendix to the Report of the House of Commons Committee a statement by Mr. McLeod, who was sent down to the Straits to make enquiries and was furnished when he went with a series of questions prepared, I suppose, by the Department, 41 in all. One is, "what is the fare?" It was answered by five different witnesses, all of whom said that it was $2. Therefore, there can be no doubt what the old charge was for a passage, and Muttart and Irving add that they frequently put men across free when they saw that they were not in a position to pay anything. Contrast that with the case mentioned by my hon. friend the other day. Let us take the case of a poor man unable or unwilling to run the risk of broken limbs or getting himself wet to the middle; if he is unable to run those risks he must take a seat inside the boat and for that he is charged $5 extra. My hon. friend says there was a mistake made about this, but I would just point to the invidious position of the Government service if one of the numerous strangers who, my hon. friend says, form the majority of the passengers, should be charged more than the regular rate. He would come to the conclusion that the Dominion Government was not above making extortionate charges. Let us have the tariff of charges.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I have put it on the table now.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—Let the public see what the charges are now and contrast them with the old rates. I quite admit the improvement of the service and it would be nothing less than shameful if there were not improvements. Have we not year after year contended for the building of these boat-houses? How often have we been promised them, and how often have those promises been broken? How many years have elapsed since we became a part of the Dominion without the terms on which we entered the Confederation being fulfilled—how few bona fide attempts have been made to fulfil them? This I say with feeling, because I was one of those who helped to bring about the union. I listened with pleasure to the remarks of my hon. friend from Alberton? He is master of the financial aspect of the question and quite prepared to deal with those groundless assertions that Prince Edward Island contributes but little to the Dominion treasury. The fact of the matter is the public accounts are kept in such a way that it is impossible for anybody to form a correct estimate of what our province contributes to the public revenue, or what quantity of dutiable goods is consumed by each individual of our province. The subject which I have brought before the House this evening is not one of general interest to hon. gentlemen, but I felt urged by a sense of duty to my people, having myself refused to submit to what I could not choose but regard as an extortionate charge, to bring this matter before the House. Contrary to his usual custom my hon. friend, with all his urbanity has not given a satisfactory answer to the complaint I have made.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I did not understand what the hon. gentleman meant by terms. I thought he meant the tariff and I have brought down the tariff. I did not understand, until he explained it, that passengers were obliged to sign a document, but I will take care that a copy of it is laid upon the table.

HON. MR. CARVELL—I hope the amount of luggage which each passenger is allowed to take without charge will be increased. I consider the amount altogether too small.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Of course I will mention it to the proper department. We want to make the service effective and the charges reasonable.

That the Hon. Messrs. Bolduc, DeBoucherville, Haythorne, Howlan, Macfarlane, Plumb, Schultz, Scott, Thibeaudeau, Trudel, and Vidal, be appointed a Committee to enquire into the best means to be adopted to obtain correct Reports of the Debates and Proceedings of the Senate, and for the publication of the same, and to report from time to time their views to the House.

THE SENATE DEBATES.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER called attention to the fact that only 40 copies of the daily issue of the Senate's debates were sent to the public journals throughout the country. There were many of the counties in the different Provinces in which the official reports of the debates were never seen. He considered that they certainly should be circulated more widely than they are to be of any benefit to the country. He hoped that the Committee on the reporting of the debates would look into this matter.

The motion was agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS.

THE TIME FOR RECEIVING PETITIONS EXTENDED.

SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL moved that the time limited for receiving petitions for private bills be extended to the 25th inst.

HON. MR. POWER—I understand that a resolution similar to this has been presented in the other House by the Committee on Standing Orders, and that in their report they embody a recommendation that instead of allowing the time to be extended again this Session, they propose that there shall be no extension after the 25th of March. If that is the case, I hope the hon. Postmaster-General will let us understand here that the 25th of March is to be positively the last day for receiving Petitions for Private Bills.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I thought it better that I should not embody that in the motion—that the recommendation should come from the Committee, and, as they have not assembled yet, I have merely moved that the time be extended to the 25th instant.

The motion was agreed to.

CONTINGENT ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

FIRST REPORT.

HON. MR. HOWLAN, from the Committee on the Contingent Account of the Senate, presented their first report.

HON. MR. SCOTT—I was not present at the meeting of the Committee, not expecting that any other subject would be taken up than that of reducing the quorum, and the selection of the Chairman; but I understood last year that we made some promise to a lad to be placed on the list of pages—one named Wilson.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—There were three names before the Committee. Those three names were ballotted for, and Fitzgerald was the lucky boy.

The Report was agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (E), "An Act to amend the several Acts relating to the Board of Trade of the City of Toronto." (Mr. Allan.)

INTERPRETATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL moved the 2nd reading of Bill (C), "An Act further to amend the Interpretation Act." He said:—In the vicissitudes of Government it occasionally happens that a member of the Government is asked to do duty for his colleagues who may be absent, and it is also sometimes the case that an office of the Government is not filled up, and then some other member of the Cabinet discharges the duties of that office until an appointment is made. Attention was drawn to the possible irregularity of this proceeding in the other House sometime ago, and it was resolved by the Government that a Bill should be introduced this Session to remedy whatever irregularity there was. This Bill enacts that hereafter any member of the Cabinet may discharge the duty of another member during his absence and also ratifies acts done perhaps irregularly in the past. The enacting clause is that

"Words directing or empowering a Minister of the Crown to do any act or thing, or otherwise applying to him by his name of office, shall include a Minister acting for, or, if the office is vacant, in the place of such Minister, and also his successors in such office, and his or their lawful deputy; and any other words directing or empowering a public officer or functionary to do any act or thing, or otherwise applying to him by his name of office, include his successors in such office, and his or their lawful deputy."

That was in before; it is just to remedy a doubt which has arisen in reference to actions done, under the circumstances I have mentioned, on behalf of those gentlemen who may have been absent, or possibly before an appointment is made.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the 2nd time.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT
BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL moved the 2nd reading of Bill (D), "An Act further to amend the Post Office Act, 1875." He said:—The Post Office Act of 1875, drawn at a time when the Dominion was not quite so large as it is now, enacted that the deposit book should be sent here to headquarters to be verified within ten days after the deposit was made. In view of the extension of the Post Office Savings Bank system to British Columbia it has been found necessary to make that period longer, and this Bill proposes to extend it to eighteen days.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned at 3:40 p. m.

RAILWAY SURVEYS IN CAPE BRETON.

MOTION.

HON. MR. McDONALD (Cape Breton) moved:—

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that he will cause to be laid before this House, copies of the reports and plans of the surveys, made by Engineers under the direction of the Government, of lines of Railway in the Island of Cape Breton, from Port Hawkesbury to Sydney and Louisburg, together with a statement of the distance in miles of each route surveyed, and the estimated cost of each line; also, a statement of the height of summit level and the average grade, per mile of each route.

He said:—Perhaps some honorable gentlemen will remember that in 1883 a subsidy was voted by Parliament for a railway from Oxford, Nova Scotia, to Louisburg in Cape Breton. That vote was supplemented by Parliament in 1884, but for some reason or other the road was not proceeded with, and that vote is yet unexpended. Last year, however, Parliament voted a further sum of money to make surveys in Cape Breton on Government account. A survey was made last year and my motion covers the reports of the engineers on that survey. Now that the Government have undertaken to make surveys for railways in the Island of Cape Breton the expectations of the people have been raised, and they fully hope and expect that the Government will follow up that survey and build the road as a public work, and as an extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Louisburg. They have been for a great many years contributing towards the construction of railways and other works in all parts of the Dominion, yet no expenditure has been made to this day for a railway on the Island, although it is one of the oldest settled portions of the Dominion. I may say also to hon. gentlemen that Cape Breton contains about one-fiftieth of the population of the whole Dominion. It was stated a few days ago by the Minister of Finance in the other House that the gross debt of the Dominion amounts to-day to $281,000,000 yet there is no railway or other public work in Cape Breton representing that debt with the exception of St. Peter's Canal, and that only amounts to some half a million of dollars. An equitable distribution of this $281,000,000 of public debt would give to the Island of Cape Breton a sum representing $5,600,000 in public works. Hon. gentlemen will see from this the justice of the claim of the people of Cape Breton on the Government to build this railway through the Island to Louisburg as a Government work. As to the advantages which Louisburg would be to the railway system of Canada as an ocean port, the nearest in the Dominion to Europe, I will say nothing. Enough has been said on that question before in this House and in the other House by hon. members and by the gentleman who now presides with so much ability over the Senate. I may say to the leader of the Government in this House, and also to the leader of the Government in the other House that there is great discontent in the Island of Cape Breton on this subject. Although I am sure they may rely upon the Government to do what is right on the question, I may say candidly that the discontent in Cape Breton is deep and universal, and the opinion throughout the Island is that the Government should without delay build that railway through the Island as a portion of the Intercolonial Railway. With these few observations, I trust that the papers will be laid on the table of the House at as early a period in the session as possible, and that the Government will take such step as are necessary to meet the wishes of the people of the Island of Cape Breton.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—There is no objection to the address passing, but I learn from the Department of Railways, and I mention it for the information of the hon. member from Cape Breton, that the plans, profiles and reports of the several routes are not yet completed, the staff in the field not having yet reported to Ottawa, but the moment they arrive here they will be presented to the House. I desire also to express my sympathy with the hon. gentleman in the remarks he has made as to the non-completion of the railway extension under the circumstances he has mentioned. I am not prepared to say anything about the railway as I did not think that the hon. gentleman would expect any observations from a member of the Government on the subject now; but I assure him of my sympathy. I feel that the claims of the Island of Cape Breton are very strong indeed. As soon as the papers come down my hon. friend will have the opportunity of examining them at his leisure.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I wish at the very outset of the Session to call the attention of the House to a statement which is injurious to the credit of this country. The hon. member says that the debt of the Dominion is $281,000,000; it has been stated all over the country by the Opposition press that we have a ruinous debt of $300,000,000. It has always been customary, ever since I have had anything to do with Parliamentary proceedings, in stating the debt of the country, to reduce it by the amount of the assets in hand. Now, there are in the hands of the Government $72,000,000, every dollar of which will be paid, which reduces the debt to $209,000,000. It is well to state those figures, and also that the cash on hand bears an interest of nearly 4 per cent. Therefore the assets themselves bear as large a proportionate interest as the public debt.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I rise to a point of order. I wish to ask what is the question before the House.

THE SPEAKER—I think the hon. gentleman is quite in order, considering the remarks which have fallen from the hon. member from Cape Breton.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The assets consist very largely of a sinking fund of some $15,000,000 or $16,000,000; harbor bonds and securities held by the Government to the amount of $20,000,000; $8,000,000 or $9,000,000 in deposits, and a portion of the debt of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, $20,000,000, which is secured by bonds which are saleable in the European markets at five per cent. par. This must all be taken in mitigation of the debt, and it should be the interest of everybody who has any regard for the credit of the country to take pains not to exaggerate the public burden. We all feel that we ought to sustain our public credit, and I take the first opportunity that presents itself of correcting a statement which has already done us injury, and which will do us more injury if it is allowed to pass unchallenged and uncontradicted. I know my hon. friend never intended, in making that statement, to create a wrong impression, but it has been circulated industriously throughout the country during the recess of Parliament, and I intended to take the very first opportunity that occurred to correct an erroneous impression. I have not the exact figures before me now, but those which I have given are correct. We have $72,000,000 of assets, all as good as the public debt itself, and all of which will fall due before the public debt matures. This should all be deducted and we should then have the net debt, which is always the way it has been stated. The Finance Minister of the late administration never stated the public debt without deducting the assets from it. In the United States the same course is pursued; they take out the moneys they have on hand, and securities, which go to pay the public debt, and in that way they reduce it by some four or five hundred millions of dollars. What would be thought of a member of Congress who would attempt to show the debt of the United States as the gross debt without deducting from it the funds which are applicable to its payment?

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I have no desire to waste the time of the Senate discussing a question on which, as we all know, there are so many conflicting opinions. With regard to the statement of the hon. member from Cape Breton, I believe he is much nearer the truth than the hon. senator from Niagara. We all know that in addition to the total debt there are subsidies guaranteed by the Dominion Government to different railways, and with regard to the repayment of loans by the Canadian Pacific Railway, we have no right to assume that the debt which they owe is as good as cash, or will ever be repaid. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman should have wasted our time in discussing a question which is not relevant to the subject before the House.

HON. MR. POWER—I do not think the hon. member from Cape Breton was open to the criticism which has just been made by the hon. member from Niagara. He did not undertake to deal with the assets; he was simply pointing out how much money had been expended by this country, and he quoted as his authority a statement made by the present Finance Minister in his place in the other Chamber. It is perhaps to be regretted that another gentleman than the one who now occupies the position was not made Finance Minister, but still the best authority on the subject is the official representative of the Government—the existing Finance Minister—and his statement of the debt is as has been stated by the hon. member from Cape Breton. The point made by my hon. friend is that while there has been expended in this country some $281,000,000, the island of Cape Breton, which was entitled to onefiftieth of that amount, has got something less than one-five-hundredth, and I thought the point was well taken. I am glad to learn, from what the Postmaster-General has stated, that there is some hope that this injustice to Cape Breton will be remedied in the near future. I trust, however, that we shall have something more than mere expressions of good will from the Postmaster-General; because, if my memory serves me, we have had these expressions of good-will for many years, and it is to be hoped that something more substantial will come later on. I would respectfully suggest to the hon. member from Cape Breton that he should urge the Minister, when laying the papers which have been asked for before the House, to state the intention of the Government as to what they will do, and not merely what they are prepared to promise.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I think the hon. member for Cape Breton has rather lessened the force of his argument by basing it on the public debt, because that is not the way in which these matters should be determined. The county from which I come has large claims also, if you consider the amount of revenue contributed, and the amount of the public debt; but that is not the ground on which to base it. This is a matter of a public nature, of importance to the whole Dominion. I believe the town of Louisburg must be reached and must become the terminus on the Atlantic of the Intercolonial Railway system, but when my hon. friend bases the claims of that Island on the amount of the public debt, and the proportion of it incurred for improvements in Cape Breton, I think he is entirely wrong. An argument of that kind should not be brought up in this House. It seems to be sectional and invidious. We in Lunenburg would have as good a right to demand a subsidy large enough to finish the Nictaux and Atlantic Railway. I am fully with my hon. friend from Cape Breton and have always been so, even before the confederation of the provinces. I favor very strongly the project which he advocates as a matter affecting the whole Dominion. I believe we should have the railway extended to Louisburg, but I am sorry that the hon. gentleman should base the claims of that Island on the amount of the public debt of the Dominion.

HON. MR. PLUMB.

The motion was agreed to.

THE HARBOR OF TRACADIE.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE rose to Call the attention of the House to the silting up of Tracadie Harbor, in Prince Edward Island, and ask the Leader of this House, whether any attempt will be made during the ensuing summer to restore its former usefulness?

He said:—It will be in the recollection of hon. members that I called for a statement on the subject of this motion a year ago. The terms of the motion which is to-day on the paper differ a little from those of the former one. I now ask whether any attempt will be made during the coming summer to restore the harbor of Tracadie to its former usefulness. My reason for adopting a different phraseography on the present occasion is that I am to-day possessed of more complete information as to the former position and usefulness of the harbor than I was a year ago. I was then aware that the harbor had greatly deteriorated from its former usefulness, but I was not possessed of the specific information which I have to-day. Some six weeks ago I attended a meeting of the inhabitants where this subject was brought prominently forward and if the House will allow me to read some of the minutes of the discussion of that meeting it may tend to put them in possession of the facts which I wish to bring forward more clearly and succinctly than I could by word of mouth. The meeting was held at a point the most convenient to the place concerning which the discussion arose. From notes taken at a meeting of the inhabitants of the district surrounding Tracadie Harbor and others, I find that Mr. Hugh Campbell stated that their harbor, naturally a good one, had been ruined by accumulations of sand settling in the entrance, thus forming a bar and rendering the harbor inaccessible to vessels of such draught as formerly frequented it. Formerly there was a depth of twelve feet of water at the entrance, and Mr. Campbell, confirmed by others present, had seen during the period of reciprocity seventy sail of United States fishing schooners in harbor at one time. Now it is often difficult to pass in or out of the harbor with good sized boats; moreover the difficulty was generally greatest during "good fishing weather"—that is with fresh northwest winds. The inhabitants had noticed that in seasons when heavy ice lay grounded in certain positions, an outward scour was produced, especially during the spring freshets, with the effect of adding materially to the depth of water on the bar for the following season. This naturally suggested that the favorable position for producing an outward scour occasionally occupied by ice, should be permanently occupied by a suitable breakwater. Plans and estimates had been prepared—one by Engineer McLaughlin—which seemed to meet general approval, and had, so it was stated, once been intialled for adoption by the Deputy Minister of Finance, Mr. Courtney. As to the former importance and utility of Tracadie harbor it was said in addition to the facts stated as to the American fishing vessels, that in years preceding reciprocity—about 1850—Her Majesty's gunboats, employed in the protection of the fisheries, had coal depots there, and entered for supplies of coal, etc., at short intervals; also at the time of a great storm, when few vessels embayed between the north and east capes escaped destruction, involving also the loss of many lives, one American vessel happening to have some Tracadie men amongst her crew, rap for that harbor and was saved. Such a feat would be impossible now, because there was barely sufficient water to float the boat. Mr. Campbell further stated that he had known a vessel to clear for Boston with 688 barrels of mackerel, worth possibly from twelve to sixteen dollars per barrel. Another vessel, it was stated, had cleared with 811 barrels aboard. I do not wish it to be understood that this large amount of mackerel was the fruit of the successful efforts of the fishermen of that harbor. That would be a misapprehension. These vessels had come in partially loaded, and had completed their cargo there, because their owners were aware that the harbor at that time had a deeper and better entrance and outlet than either of the adjoining ones, although that harbor is now silted up so that there is not sufficient channel to float a vessel with a full cargo. Some other speakers said that re-opening the harbor would undoubtedly lead to general imports, and especially to the introduction of limestone and coal. The two latter were much needed. Limestone was requisite for building purposes and as a fertilizer; coal was fast becoming a necessary in consequence of the scarcity of firewood fit for fuel.

I shall make but very few remarks in addition to those I have read to the House. I may say, as regards expense, that the people of Tracadie district naturally consider that expense ought not to be considered as a great obstacle in the way of improving their port, for the reason that the excellence of their fisheries—the mackerel fisheries of the north shore of Prince Edward Island—contributed very largely to the success of the Halifax convention by which five and a-half millions of dollars were awarded to the British Government for their share of the colonial fisheries; and I, myself, have always held from the day that that award was made public, the doctrine that the fisheries having gained that amount for the Dominion the fisheries ought to be the principal industry to benefit by it. This is quite apart from any special claim that my Province might have on that award; I think it is a sound general principle that the fisheries having gained that amount, the fisheries ought to reap the principal advantage of it. The people of my Province engaged in that industry, are pretty much of that opinion, and that the money could be well and properly expended in the improvement of their harbours and increasing the facilities for carrying on the fishing industry. There are one or two other remarks I might make, in which I am pretty sure the Minister opposite will concur. There can be no doubt, I think, after the statement I have made to the House, which may be confirmed from other sources, that this harbor was formerly one of very great importance. The adjoining settlements are very old. Even before the final struggle, which resulted in the taking of Quebec, these very settlers along the north shore of Prince Edward Island had been accustomed to sell their produce, their beef and their fish, to assist the French garrison of Quebec, and the hon. minister may see, by reference to the map which I have placed in his hands that the surrounding country is densely populated, and every facility is there for the conducting of a prosperous and useful fishery—every advantage but one. That one was formerly enjoyed, and may be enjoyed again, if a small and judicious outlay of money is made in deepening the outlet for this harbor. I have alluded to the fact that the people of Prince Edward Island have their own ideas as to how this difficulty should be treated. Let me inform the House that these very men, before we entered Confederation, were in the habit of dealing with such questions as this and their plan was to open a subscription list; men would engage to subscribe so many days' work in the winter of themselves and their teams, and somebody would of course be appointed as general manager. This force would collect immense amounts of brush, whole trees with their branches on; others brought large loads of stone or other weighty substances for ballast to be placed on these vast mounds of brush, and in that way they diverted currents to an extent that has actually astonished engineers who have had an opportunity of seeing them. It is just such work as their experience teaches them to do that is required at the mouth of this harbor. It is not a very expensive one, but it is one that will produce an outward scour such as is made by the ice. They say, "Let us construct a work that will produce an effect of the same kind, and then the former utility of our harbor will be restored to us." I think these are very good grounds to induce the Government to take up this question; but I have one or two other grounds, and they are that the harbors on either side of this particular one have been improved by the Government. Those works have been successful, and I ask why should the inhabitants of this particular settlement be subjected to inconveniences and disadvantages to which the neighboring settlements are not exposed? This is obviously an injustice when it can be remedied at a comparatively small expense. The inhabitants were very much disappointed last year that their expectations were not fulfilled with regard to this proposed work; and I may say that it would afford me the greatest pleasure if I were able to assure them that their case would be taken candidly into consideration this year, and that if their representations were well grounded the Government would order the improvements which were so often called for, and which they allege were once almost promised them, before another season would be allowed to pass.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I am sorry that I cannot give my hon. friend the complete satisfaction which he desires, and which I would like to give him if it were possible to do so. I am quite prepared to believe that Tracadie harbor was once of considerable importance; but I understand that of late years it has been less frequented. Perhaps that is attributable partially to the harbor being filled up with sand, but I understand that even if the sand were removed from the channel, there is no sufficient prospective business to pay for the expense of removing it and making the harbor as it once was. Mr. Perley, the engineer of the Public Works Department, was sent down at one time to examine and report upon this harbor as to what it would cost to restore it to its former condition; and he reported to the Government that it would cost $40,000 to make it such a harbor as my hon. friend has just described. This amount is so large, in view of the prospective business of the harbor, that the Government did not feel justified in undertaking the expenditure. I am very sorry to have to inform my hon. friend that the Government has not any present intention of expending this sum of money for the purpose of restoring this harbor to its former position. If the work could be accomplished for a small sum it might be done; but the Government are not prepared to expend the amount of money which the engineer says it would require.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I think the estimate which the hon. gentleman has mentioned is perhaps unnecessarily large. I know that the opinion of the inhabitants is that the estimate of engineer McLaughlin, $7,000, which they say was once initialled by the Deputy Minister of Finance (Mr. Courtney) is well suited to the necessities of the case. But I wish the hon. gentlemen would bear in mind that this passing generation received a naturally good harbor with its twelve feet of water. It is now, by neglect and mismanagement, almost useless; in a few years, if the same state of things continues, it will become perfectly closed. Will not that be a great reproach upon the enterprise of the Dominion Government, and upon the present generation when they have passed over to the great majority, that their successors may upbraid their memories that they had allowed what they, as young men, found to be a good and useful harbor to become useless—because when the entrance of Tracadie Harbor becomes silted up the harbor itself will become a stagnant unwholesome lake instead of what it was in our younger days, a useful and profitable harbor where vessels could lie in safety, where Her Majesty's vessels have coaled, and where cargoes have been loaded to the extent which I described before I sat down.

THE ADJOURNMENT.

MOTION.

HON. MR. BOLDUC moved—

That when the House adjourns this day, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, the 23rd of March instant, at 8 o'clock, p.m.

I have proposed an adjournment for two weeks, because those gentlemen who wish to visit their homes, and who live at a distance from here, have asked that the adjournment should be for a fortnight. There is not much on the Order Paper, and I do not think the adjournment for the time proposed will lengthen the session.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I strongly object to this adjournment. This motion is introduced by a senator for whom we have great respect and regard: one of the most recently appointed members of this august body. But when we are aware of that and other circumstances which have transpired to-day, it is too self-evident from what quarter the inspiration has come. The House will not require me to express my opinion. I would ask hon. members is it seemly or proper that we should permit the great objects for which the parliament of a free people has been convened to be frustrated by such adjournments continued on until the end of a session? I ask this House, which I do with great respect, are there no great questions connected with the past and future of this rising country that we should at this moment discuss? I ask this House, have we not other business to transact beyond the little peddling legislation of an Interpretation Act, or Post Office Amendment Act? Is it possible that the leader of the House could possibly be a party to this adjournment. This is a grave matter. The public affairs of the Dominion at this moment demand the most careful attention of Parliament. I may ask the House is it not our duty to endeavor by patient investigation to find what cause or provocation led 300 half-breed families last year to take up arms and occasion so much bloodshed—the loss of so many of our young citizen soldiers, bringing, as I need not say, sorrow to a hundred families throughout the Dominion and causing an expenditure of upwards of four millions of the public money. A further evil result must be the checking of the natural influx of population into our North-West Territory. Secondly is it not our duty to ascertain how those $4,000,000 have been spent, and what portion thereof has been wasted among partisan followers of the Government?

Thirdly, is it not obligatory upon us to make a most searching inquiry how the $1,000,000 voted annually for the support of the Indian tribes is actually spent? The public journals contain so many rumors of improper food, bad pork and other things instead of wholesome food, being given to these Indian tribes—such arising from the appointment of improper persons in the shape of partisan followers by the present administration, simply to reward them for past political services.

Fourthly, should we not investigate by committees of the House what steps should be taken respecting the timber limits improperly given away, without advertising for tenders, to political partisans in the disputed territory which now, under the ruling of the Privy Council, is a part and portion of the province of Ontario. How dreadful to think of the First Minister, while the question was unsettled, giving away to his followers timber limits and other leases of great value, which will now bring a complication of interests.

Fifthly, should we not make the most searching inquiry respecting certain timber limits and coal land leases which, it is charged, were stealthily given away in the same manner for work done at the elections? I may safely say that two or three millions' worth of the country's assets have been most unscrupulously distributed among partisan followers.

Sixthly, what an important subject for profitable discussion, with advantage to the state, is the question how we can build up in the Maritime provinces that great interest of our sea coast fisheries. We ought to discuss how such are to be fostered and the fishermen aided by bounties or other means to extend that important trade of the export of our fish to foreign countries.

Seventhly, could we not render important service to the country by investigating by a committee of the House the many wasteful expenditures of this prodigal Government, the numerous grants of public money made for unworthy objects, and thereby stop and prevent a continuation of such practices?

Eighthly, should we not discuss the propriety of approaching the Imperial Government upon the subject of widening the provisions of the Extradition Treaty with the United States so as to embrace breaches of trust?

Ninthly, are there not many experiences of the present Customs tariff which would make it necessary for us to ascertain whether we have not brought excessive competition and ruin upon some of our most enterprising citizens, such as the Hall's, of Oshawa, by a tariff extending to thirty and thirty-five per cent? It is surely dreadful to think that the leader of the House, with all those questions before us, could be a party to this adjournment and could have inspired it. From my standpoint I can only regard an adjournment at this moment as an act that cannot be justified, which will damage the reputation of the Senate still more and more in public estimation. But it is only a continuation of the ways and methods which the party in power have used since 1878 in the government of this Chamber. I conclude by referring, which I do very reluctantly, to some recent utterances of the leader of the House which certainly do not raise him in public estimation.

He observed that it was absurd for an humble member like myself to criticise the policy and acts of Sir John Macdonald. I should like to know why my conduct was absurd?

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has been out of order ever since he commenced to address the House. This is not a motion to adjourn. It is a motion that when the House adjourns for a certain time it stand adjourned for a number of days. I did not call him to order sooner because it is less trouble to listen than to interrupt him. He is now, however, referring to a former debate.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman from Woodstock cannot refer to a previous debate.

HON. MR. READ—The hon. member from Woodstock remarked in the commencement of his speech that the gentlemen who moved and seconded this motion are of recent appointment. There are many of us here who have been members of this House a long time, and our experience teaches us that in the early part of the Session we have very little to do. If the public service would be at all injured by the proposed adjournment I would not support the motion; but I do not consider that any of our adjournments has ever been detrimental to the public interests. Some of us go home and learn the views of the people we represent on public questions. It is a decided benefit to many of us to be able to go home for a few days, and we are not all like the hon. gentleman from Woodstock, who covers his home with his hat. The hon. gentleman says that the public money has been wasted during the last year: well, money is generally wasted where there are war expenditures. We cannot guard such expenditures as carefully as is desirable. I wish to say, though I risk being called to order by the House, that I entirely deny the hon. member's statement with regard to the treatment of the Indians by the Government. I have looked into that matter a great deal, and I am quite prepared to say that there are thousands of poor people in this country who are not as well fed and taken care of as our Indians. We have only to look at the public accounts to see how the moneys voted by Parliament have been expended, and how much more we have given them than we ever agreed to give. I have before me what was said at the making of the treaties at Fort Carleton and Fort Pitt, a quotation from which may be of some interest to the House:—

“A spokesman, the Poundmaker then addressed me, and asked assistance when they settled on the land, and further help as they advanced in civilization.

“I replied that they had their own means of living, and that we could not feed the Indians, but only assist them to settle down. The Badger, Sob-ah-moos, and several other Indians, all asked help when they settled, and also in case of troubles unforeseen in the future. I explained that we could not assume the charge of their every day life, but in a time of great national calamity, they could trust to the generosity of the Queen.

“The Hon. James McKay also addressed them, saying that their demands would be understood by a white man as asking for daily food, and could not be granted, and explained our objects, speaking with effect in the Cree tongue.

“At length the Indians informed me that they did not wish to be fed every day, but to be helped when they commenced to settle because of their ignorance how to commence, and also in case of general famine; Ah-tuk-uk-koop winding up the debate by stating that they wanted food in the spring when they commenced to farm, and proportionate help as they advanced in civilization, and then asking for a further adjournment to consider our offers.”

Now, we have been feeding those people every day, and still continue to feed them, and I am satisfied that we are treating them in a most liberal and Christian-like manner. If it were otherwise, I should be very sorry to rise in my place and defend any government that would be guilty of treating unjustly those who should be regarded as children rather than as people able to take care of themselves. If the hon. member from Woodstock, instead of making broad statements to the House, formulated some specific charge, I for one would assist him in obtaining an investigation; but when he makes nothing but general charges of corruption and extravagance, I cannot support him. As to whether the country is well governed or not, the people will decide at the next elections. I have great pleasure in sustaining the motion before the House.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I have always been opposed to these adjournments, and I am opposed to this one for very clear and easily-understood reasons, quite apart from general politics. It seems to me that an inequitable spirit prevails in attempting to carry a resolution which favors those hon. gentlemen who reside within an easy distance of Ottawa, and is perfectly useless to those who reside at a distance. For instance, I myself, if I wanted to take advantage of this adjournment in the way that some hon. gentlemen no doubt will, by returning to my home for eight or ten days, would have to travel for a very long distance, and tempt the dangers of the formidable Straits which we heard of the other day, and I might be compelled to take passage in the Government boats, which I should not like to do. Although I might allow ample time to return to my duties here, I might find myself shut out after all. It is manifest that there is no equity in the motion. Some hon. gentlemen, on their way to the Capital at this time, may be detained by ill-health or other unavoidable causes. Those gentlemen might arrive here the day after the adjournment and find themselves unable to take their seats for ten or twelve days afterwards. That is not reasonable or equitable. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman who has proposed this motion had any unfair or unjust intention in his mind. Perhaps the question had never presented itself to him in the same light as it appears to me and to others. I am opposed to these adjournments for the reasons stated by the hon. member from Woodstock at the commencement of his speech—I think he said that it did not conduce to the dignity of the Senate to lead the public to suppose they had so little to do that they could take long adjournments of eleven or twelve days at a time. I am well aware that there is a season approaching which is sacred to most of us and on some of the days included in the period covered by this adjournment there would be no meeting of the House. That might be a reason for an adjournment till after the 17th March, which is a day regarded with some reverence by some members of this House, but of course these matters are very much in the hands of the leader of the Government, and the House I am sure will be disposed to concur in whatever view he takes of it. I hope he will set his face against it.

HON. MR. VIDAL—We may form our individual opinions as to the business before us by a glance at the order paper; but we cannot say what the intentions of the Government may be within the next few days. Before we can come to an intelligent judgment on this question it would be desirable now if the Postmaster-General would state whether, in his opinion, the public interests will in the least degree suffer by this adjournment, because if they would I should decidedly oppose the motion. I quite concur with the hon. member from Quinte division that the public interest and convenience are first to be considered, and that our own personal convenience is a matter of secondary importance.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I do not think the adjournment, as proposed even, would in the least interfere with the progress of the public business in this House. I should oppose it myself if I thought there was any reason to suppose that it would. Whether the adjournment should be to the 23rd or the 18th is in the hands of the House. I think it is a matter of indifference to the public interest whether it is to one date or the other. The hon. member from Prince Edward Island suggests that we should adjourn only until the 18th. I am told the objection is that the 18th is near the end of the week, and it is therefore better to adjourn over until the following week; but whether we meet on the 18th or 23rd I am satisfied we shall be able to dispose of all the business before us in time for the prorogation at the end of the session.

The motion was agreed to on a division.

THE BIRRELL DIVORCE CASE.

PETITION READ.

HON. MR. PLUMB presented the affidavit of service of notice on W. H. Birrell, and exemplification of judgment in the court, and moved that the petition of Flora Bell praying for the passage of an Act to dissolve her marriage with William Henry Birrell, be now read and received.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I think it is usual that all those motions if carried, are considered carried on a division.

The motion was agreed to, and the petition was read and received on a division.

PAWNBROKERS BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day having been called for the 2nd reading of Bill (B), "An Act to make further provision respecting Pawnbrokers."

HON. MR. GOWAN said: This Bill was introduced by me with the intention that it should be pressed only on certain contingencies which I hope will not arise. I would therefore move that the Order of the Day be discharged, and that the 2nd reading of the Bill be postponed until Monday the 19th April.

The motion was agreed to, and the Order of the Day was discharged.

INTERPRETATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (C), "An Act further to amend the Interpretation Act."

In the Committee; on the 2nd clause,

HON. MR. POWER said he thought the language of the clause was too sweeping. The House did not know what acts they might be ratifying if they sanctioned all acts done by Ministers for other Ministers. He thought it would be sufficient to ratify only such acts as were legally done.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—We can say "all lawful acts."

HON. MR. POWER said if they were already lawful, there was no necessity to legalize them.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL explained the object of the clause by giving an illustration. Certain contracts with the Department of Railways and Canals require to be executed by the Minister. Sir Charles Tupper, the Minister, is not there, and Mr. Pope, who is acting for him, signs the contract. Now, that is irregular; it is not legally signed. It was intended by this clause to provide that all such contracts should be considered properly signed. Why should not such acts be confirmed? The only object of the amendment was to make these acts bindings on the Crown, for the protection of subjects who may be affected by them.

HON. MR. POWER suggested that the third reading of the Bill might be allowed to stand over for further consideration.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE, from the Committee, reported the bill without amendment.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (D) "An Act further to amend the Post Office Act, 1875."

In the Committee,

HON. MR. POWER asked what evidence there was of a demand being made by the depositor?

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL explained that the course of proceeding was this: a man goes to an office, say in the North-West, and deposits his money. The receipt of that money is entered in his book. That is good evidence for 18 days; at the end of 18 days, unless there is a letter from Ottawa saying it is all right, he could not withdraw his money; and he can get the time enlarged if there is any necessity for it.

HON. MR. POWER—I quite understand that, but I am now asking the hon. Minister what is the value of his demand within the 10 or 18 days respectively. It does not seem that there is any entry to be made of his demand.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL — Yes, the entry is the letter from Ottawa, saying that the book had been transmitted and it is conclusive evidence against the Crown that the money has been received.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. Minister will see at line 40 of the 1st page of the Bill that the depositor has to get in addition to the entry made in the book, an acknowledgement from the Postmaster General at Ottawa; and as I understand this Bill, the object is to extend the period during which he can wait for this acknowledgement. It is extended to 18 days in British Columbia and the North-West Territories, which is a very proper thing; but then the Bill goes on if before or upon the expiring of these 18 days he has not got the acknowledgment, and he demands one, then the entry in his book shall be conclusive evidence of title during another term of 10 or 18 days. The hon. Minister must see that there must be some way by which the fact that the depositor has made a demand is evidenced. I presume the way that he would make the demand is to go to the Post Office where he had deposited the money, and ask if the book had come.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL — The intention is that he should rather address himself to the Postmaster General, that there could be no doubt or difficulty in it; and if he does not get his acknowledgment within the 18 days, he ought to be on the qui vive, and endeavor to find out what is the cause of the delay in not getting the book. He would, therefore write to the Postmaster General.

HON. MR. GIRARD, from the Committee, reported the Bill without any amendment.

PRIVATE BILLS.

HON. MR. LACOSTE, from the Committee on Standing Orders and Private Bills, presented their Fifth Report, recommending that the time for the introduction of Private Bills be extended to the 3rd of April next; and moved its adoption.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bill (G), "An Act respecting Insurance." (Sir Alex. Campbell).

Bill (H), "An Act to consolidate the borrowing powers of the Canada Permanent Loan and Savings Company, and to authorize the said Company to issue debenture stock." (Mr. Plumb).

Bill (J), "An Act for the relief of Flora Birrell." (Mr. Plumb).

HON. MR. PLUMB moved,

That the said Bill be read a second time on Thursday, the eighth day of April next, and that notice thereof be affixed on the doors of this House, and the Senators summoned; and that the said Flora Birrell may be heard by her counsel at the second reading to make out the truth of the allegations of the said Bill, and that William Henry Birrell may have a copy of the said Bill, and that notice be given to him of the said second reading, or sufficient proof adduced of the impossibility of so doing, and that he be at liberty to be heard by counsel what he may have to offer against the said Bill, at the same time; that the said Flora Birrell do attend this House on the said eighth day of April next in order to her being examined on the second reading of the said Bill, if the House shall think fit, whether there has or has not been any collusion, directly or indirectly, on her part, relative to any act of adultery that may have been committed by her husband to obtain such separation, or whether there be any collusion, directly or indirectly, between her and her husband, or any other person or persons, touching the said Bill of Divorce, or touching any action at law which may have been brought by her against any person for criminal conversation with him, the said husband of the said Flora Birrell, and also whether, at the time of the adultery of which she complains, he was by deed or otherwise by her consent living separately and apart from and released by her, as far as in her lay, from his conjugal duty, or whether she was, at the time of such adultery, cohabiting with him as her husband.

The motion was agreed to.

GRAZING RANCHES, COAL LANDS AND TIMBER LIMITS IN THE NORTH-WEST.

MOTION.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER moved,

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a list of all the parties to whom grazing ranches have been leased, and coal lands and timber limits have been sold or leased in our North-West Territory, up to the 1st January, 1886, setting forth the terms upon which such leases or limits have been accorded.

This House will perhaps permit me to preface the remarks which I shall make upon this motion, by observing that there is no duty more distasteful to a public man, who like myself desires to live in cordial amity with all my colleagues I say no duty more distasteful, than to have to criticize the public acts of any Government of a questionable character. The House knows that for many sessions past while endeavoring to do my duty, I have shown the greatest forbearance, when interrupted as I am constantly, in an unseemly and unparliamentary manner by five or six troublesome members, who may be designated the band of patriots of the House. But notwithstanding all scenes and disturbance which they by their interruptions have created, I believe that I have to-day the honor and happiness to possess the friendship and esteem of all our members, except those five. Of course our good nature must have a limit and must not prevent our discharging our duty as representatives of the people.

Upon our meeting this session we find a dark list of acts of the present administration sadly reprehensible,—acts of wrong doing which no man living can justify. But of all public wrongs which have been done,—of all the revelations which have yet been made, that showing the greatest depravity of purpose is the distribution which has taken place privately, without tenders, without the public knowing anything about it, amongst parties and supporters in Parliament and out of Parliament, of valuable timber limits, and coal land leases in our North-West Territory, at small nominal considerations. It has never been denied up to this moment that one partizan supporter re-sold a timber limit thus obtained pocketing the clear gain of $80,000. And probably limits to the amount of $2,000,000 have gone in the same direction. Do I require to remind you who are well versed in British history, that for conduct much less censurable, Sir Robert Walpole was impeached, —expelled the Commons and imprisoned in the Tower during the pleasure of the House in 1715 in the reign of George II.

HON. MR. PLUMB—In 1815 he had been dead 70 years.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—The hon. gentleman has no right to interrupt me in that boorish manner. We do not want American boors to come here and interrupt members of this House. We do not want to be interrupted by men who have been rejected by the people of this country, and who have been appointed here because they could not be elected—

HON. GENTLEMEN—Order! Order!

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—The hon. gentleman is out of order, and should resume his seat.

THE SPEAKER—I certainly think that the hon. member from Woodstock has been grossly out of order in using the language which he has just now applied to the hon. gentleman from Niagara.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—If the House and the country understood this subject of disposing of such limits in its entirety they would hold my opinion that nothing could be more censurable than the Government selling any of those timber limits at all. Let me illustrate. The head of a family takes up 1,000 acres in the North-West, and discovers after he has made his improvements that the timber on his land does not belong to him,—that third parties will come under those timber licenses and claim all the timber which should properly belong to him. What right has the Government to sell that timber? Could anything be more calculated to create discontent and lead people, who have sought homes in the North-West Territories to abandon a country whose Government is capable of such acts? The Government do it to bribe members of the House of Commons and corrupt the majority of Parliament.

HON. GENTLEMEN—Order! Order!

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I rise to a question of order. The hon. gentleman has no right to make charges against the House of Commons. He says that those timber limits have been used to bribe members of the House of Commons, and his language is calculated to disturb the harmony between the Senate and the other House.

THE SPEAKER—It is equally out of order with the remark which the hon. member made and for which I called him to order.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I was quite aware that I was out of order.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I think this is a case in which the House should take decided action. The hon. member says he knew that he was out of order. He has done that which he knew he ought not to have done, and which is very reprehensible on the part of any member of the House.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Could there be any act of the Government more calculated to lead to disaffection a breach of the law and even insurrection in those distant parts. Let me now refer to the irresponsible act of the Conservative chieftain having actually given away or sold timber limits on the disputed territory, which every good constitutional lawyer has all along known, belong to the Province of Ontario. And we all know that the Privy Council have made that decision. How unscrupulous and reckless must be a Minister who could thus dispose of property not appertaining to the Dominion. Supposing any one of you sold a farm which did not belong to you, would you not be said to be wanting in common honor and honesty? Perhaps the hon. Postmaster-General will be good enough in his reply to state whether it is true that his own brother, Mr. C. J. Campbell, obtained one of such limits and whether Mr. J. S. Aikins, son of the present Governor of Manitoba, as well as Mr. John Shields and others, also got such limits. Is it not dreadful to think how the Conservative chieftain, Sir John Macdonald, and his faithful follower, the Postmaster-General, have sunk the standards of truth and honor in their public life. I can only, in conclusion, say, hon. gentlemen, that if this Government is permitted to go on much longer we must not be surprised at the disaffection which their acts will certainly create, leading perhaps to the disturbance of our federated Union.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I am obliged to ask the House to negative this motion. The hon. member asks for a return of all parties to whom grazing ranches have been leased and coal lands and timber limits have been sold. A return of coal lands and timber limits which have been sold has already been made, in reply to an address of the House of Commons, and has been laid upon the table in that House. A list of the grazing ranches which have been leased has been asked for by a member of the House of Commons, and is being prepared. The list of coal lands and timber limits is one which it takes some time to prepare, and involves a good deal of expense. There is no object in having a second copy of the return prepared for this House, when one has already been laid before the House of Commons.

All the papers asked for have either been sent down or are being prepared for transmission to the House of Commons, and will be distributed in both Houses at the same time.

HON. MR. POWER—I think it only right to explain my position on this matter. I had a sort of impression that the information asked for by the hon. member from Woodstock had already been called for in the House of Commons, but I was not sure about it, and if a seconder was necessary I thought, as the information asked for was of a kind which ought to be laid before Parliament, I was only doing my duty as a member of the Senate in having the matter properly brought before the House. After the explanation of the Postmaster General, I think the wisest course for my hon. friend from Woodstock to pursue is to ask leave to withdraw his motion. There is no object in calling for another copy of a return which has already been laid before the House of Commons.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—Did I understand the Minister to say that the list of names will be included?

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—The first return about limits and coal lands has been sent down already, and the other about grazing ranches is being prepared.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—Then it will come before the Joint Committee on Printing?

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Yes.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Of course if the information is to be furnished to the House of Commons I do not wish to have duplicate copies prepared. Perhaps the House will allow the motion to stand for a few days.

HON. GENTLEMEN—Withdraw!

The motion was withdrawn.

REBELLION LOSSES.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER inquired

What is the total amount of the claims which have been already acknowledged by the Government, for losses sustained by the Hudson Bay Company and private parties, arising out of the North-West Rebellion up to 1st March, 1886, giving the names and amounts?

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—This is an extraordinary question which I think no member of the Senate except the hon. member from Woodstock would have asked. The names and amounts would occupy a number of pages—probably quires of paper, for anything I know, and I am not here for the purpose of charging myself with the duty of memorizing a long list of names and amounts.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—That is an extraordinary answer.

HON. MR. POWER—I suppose—

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Order! there is nothing before the House.

HON. MR. POWER—I am prepared to discuss the question of order. In the House of Commons no discussion is allowed on an inquiry, but I am within the judgment and recollection of the House if we have not had debates, extending over a considerable time, on questions. The rule is never enforced so rigorously here as in the House of Commons. As a member of the Senate I have to express my regret at the answer given by the Postmaster General.

THE SPEAKER—With regard to the rule, the hon. member from Halifax is perfectly right in alleging that more free and ample discussion is allowed on these inquiries in the Senate than in the House of Commons, but the objection made was to the hon. member from Woodstock speaking a second time on what was not even a regular motion.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I desire to answer the remark made by the hon. member from Halifax. I could not charge my memory with giving the names and amounts of all the persons paid since the rebellion. How could I? If the hon. member from Woodstock had asked the total amount I could probably have found it out, but to ask a member of the Government to mention the names and amounts, where the list is so long as to cover quires of paper, is asking what is impossible.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—When a notice of motion is given, a member of the Government has three days in which to obtain the information in writing from the proper department, and members of the Government in the other House always come prepared to answer inquiries of this kind.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I will not attempt to charge my memory with such detailed information.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—It is a ridiculous reply.

THE EXTRADITION TREATY.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER inquired

Whether any and what steps have been taken to induce the Imperial Government to negotiate an extension of the provisions of the Extradition Treaty now existing with the United States, so as to embrace breaches of trust?

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Since 1882 we have been doing all we could to get an Extradition Treaty covering a large list of offences, but we have never discussed the details, except in respect of a draft treaty which was sent out to us confidentially from the Colonial Office.

THE FISHERIES.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER inquired

Whether any and what steps have been taken to prevent at once any foreign fisherman trespassing within the limits of our fishing grounds on the coast of the Dominion.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—It will be in the recollection of the House.—I dare say the hon. member does not know it—that $50,000 was voted last session for the purpose of protecting the fisheries. Tenders for the charter of six swift sailing schooners have been called for by the Government to be received up to Thursday next (to-morrow); which vessels it is proposed to use in conjunction with Government steamers as Marine Police for the purpose of enforcing the articles of the Convention of 1818 as regards fishing by foreign vessels on the coasts of the Dominion of Canada. The steamer Lansdowne has already been equipped for this service, and sailed from St. John on the 20th instant, under command of Captain P. A. Scott, R. N., to cruise in the Bay of Fundy and the adjacent waters.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—Perhaps the hon. minister may be in a position to add to the information already given to the House, something with respect to the limits. I understand that the contention of the Government of the United States is that the limits comprise only three miles from the shore, measured by the straightest line; but that the contention of the British Government, with reference to the treaty of 1818, has always been that the three mile lines should be measured from headland to headland, and it makes a very important difference to those who prosecute the fisheries, as to which contention the Government intend to support. I know not whether the Minister is in a position to inform the House on that point at present.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I am not in a position to inform the House. The question is too delicate to discuss without great care. It might involve us in disputes with the United States, but the instructions will be to enforce the treaty of 1818; what construction would be placed on that treaty it would not be convenient, I think, for me to state to the House.

HON. MR. POWER—I think the answer of the Minister is not a satisfactory one, because he says he does not propose to put a construction on the treaty; apparently he proposes to allow the commanders of those schooners and steamers to construe the treaty themselves.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—No, I do not say that. The instructions may be brought down, but I do not know what they are.

HON. MR. POWER—I may say on that point, while agreeing with the hon. member from Marshfield as to the importance of the question, that during the sittings of the Fisheries Commission I understood that the question was practically settled in favor of our contention; there is no doubt that the United States Government have always held that the large bays on the coast of the United States were within the territorial limits of the Republic, and in a very recent case decided by the Supreme Court of the United States the same things has been held. I hope that the Government of this country has taken care to put the matter forcibly before the Imperial Government so as to ensure the due protection of our rights in those waters.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I can only assure my hon. friend that the Government has not given up anything, and has not lost sight of anything.

HON. MR. POWER—I am very glad to hear it.

SALE OF GOVERNMENT PROPERTY IN SOREL.

MOTION.

HON. MR. GUÉVREMONT moved, That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General, praying that His Excellency will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House, copies of all Correspondence, Petitions and Addresses to the Government relating to the sale of Government property in the Seigniori of Sorel.

He said (in French):—I take the liberty of saying a few words on the subject of this motion in order to explain my motive for calling for these papers. I do so because I am desirous of justifying my conduct and preserving the honor of the body to which I belong and of myself as a representative of the people. Certain charges of a malicious character have been made against me—charges which, if true, would unfit me to occupy a seat in an honorable body like this. The charges are of such a character that I am obliged to occupy your time to-day in referring to them, in order that the facts may be placed before the members of this House, and my constituents. Le Monde, of Montreal, of the 25th of February last, published the following:—

“The Army of the ‘Salut National’ will make its triumphal entry into the Capital to-day, with banners waving in the wind and to the noise of resounding drums and trumpets. It is known that the army moves now under the command of General Bellerose since the desertion of the able commanders Mercier and Laurier. But it appears that the responsibility of the campaign begins to frighten General Bellerose, who proposes to relieve himself of it by passing over the command to Lieut. Guevremont. If this should happen it is quite probable that the general, “little Baptiste,” will evacuate the capital, which he will leave to be pillaged by Conservatives, and that he will take up his winter quarters at Ile Ronde, at the entrance of Lake St. Peter. That island occupies an important military position, of which “little Baptiste” wishes to take advantage, to mask his batteries. Trumpets of Jericho sound! Armée du Salut, advance.”

“Are the organs of the army in a position to declare the name of the commander-in-chief of the National Armée du Salut? Is it Mr. Blake, or Mr. Bellerose, or Mr. Guevremont who is the defender of the French language in the Senate? We await explanation on the subject.”

There are two assertions in the articles which I have quoted. The object of one of them is to throw ridicule on me; to that I merely reply that if the author of the article has qualities which I do not possess, on the other hand at the first election he may find that I have courage enough to meet him in the field. But the other charge is more important, because it attacks my reputation as a public man, and it is desirable that the House may know all the facts connected with the case. To show you that this is not the first time that this accusation has been made in the locality where I reside, I may read a petition which was presented by certain persons there, amongst whom is the brother of the author of the articles which I have quoted, Mr. Vanasse, the editor of Le Monde, the member for Yamaska. The petition is as follows:—

"The humble petition of the undersigned inhabitants of the town of Sorel and its neighborhood respectfully sheweth to your Excellency.

"That the Dominion of Canada possesses several lands and properties in the town of Sorel and several islands in the neighborhood of Lake St. Peter, among others Ile Ronde, Ile au Cochons, and the eastern and western ends of the Ile de Grâce.

"That these several properties are unoccupied, unprofitable and in a state of complete deterioration.

"That in the interests of agriculture, commerce and industry, it would be most advantageous to derive from these different properties all the revenue that they can produce, which can only be done by granting and selling them to parties who will cultivate them.

"That the amount realized by the sale of these properties should form a permanent fund the interest of which would serve to maintain lighthouses and jetties which the Government possess in this part of the St. Lawrence river.

"That the undersigned inhabitants of the town of Sorel and neighborhood respectfully pray your Excellency and your Hon. Council to grant and sell by public auction these different properties on such conditions as it may please your Excellency and your Hon. Council to establish."

This petition is signed by a number of persons, and the first name on the list is that of Mr. P. X. Vanasse, brother of the member for Yamaska. In this petition they ask the Government to sell this property either by auction or private sale. If the prayer of that petition had been granted it would have afforded private parties an opportunity to speculate in these lands. I, on the contrary, asked that the properties be sold in such a manner that everyone would be placed on an equal footing. I explained the position of affairs to the Government, particularly to the Postmaster General, when he was Minister of Justice. He told me that he was convinced, on referring to documents in the Department, that different persons held, under the Government, leases of those lands. Ile Ronde had been leased by officers of the British Government for about forty years. A man named Thériault, had occupied the Island for some time and had disappeared. My brother ascertained that the property had been held under lease by this man Thériault, who was unable to pay the rent, and there were arrears due to the Government amounting to about $400. Mr.

Coffin, having arrived in Sorel early one morning, and finding that the tenant had disappeared, regarded him as an irresponsible party, and offered my brother the Island. To my personal knowledge, Mr. Coffin asked my brother if he would accept the place and occupy it at the price and on the conditions mentioned in the lease to Thériault. This is the position of the matter, and these are the circumstances under which my brother became possessed of the Island. He continued to occupy it for ten years; he cultivates it, and I am in a position to say that under his management the property has been greatly improved and increased in value. Ile aux Cochons was rented to me by the Government, and I have been in possession of it for 25 years. I know it has been a good deal sought after by the present member for Berthier, Mr. Cuthbert, because it is greatly frequented by duck and is a capital place for shooting. Ile de Grâce has been occupied by me since it was abandoned by Thériault. Mr. Coffin offered it to me on the same terms that Thériault had agreed to pay. I took it, but I have never occupied it nor cultivated it for the reason that I have had too much land in the same position, and it is used more by others than by myself. Last year, for the second time, the Government decided to sell the property in question, and had it valued by one of their agents. Ile de Grace, a portion of which I owned, and Ile Ronde, which my brother owns to this day, were valued at $16 per acre. The brother of Mr. Vanasse, to whom I have referred, bought, and is now in possession of a portion of Ile de Grace adjoining that which I owned. The highest value that had ever been placed on these lands before was $4 per acre; nevertheless my brother got his property at the value fixed, $16 per acre. Then came a second opposition on the part of the hon. gentleman to whom I have referred. He said that the property had been sacrificed, and that he would have paid much more for it if he had been given a chance. I hope the hon. Minister of Justice recollects what I told him at the time. I said that I did not believe for an instant that the Government had fixed a lower price than could have been obtained for the property, but if they wished to sell it again they were at liberty to do so. When I saw the opposition which Mr. Vanasse's brother made to my acquiring a portion of the Island, I at once abandoned my claim, believing that Mr. Vanasse had good reason to ask for it because it was better for him to own it, he being in possession of the neighboring property; and I can say that I have personally nothing to do with that property and never have had anything to do with it further than I have explained—that I have never asked a favor from the Government, either for myself or for my brother. The western part of Ile de Grace is occupied by a man named La Traverse. Although I gave up my claim to the portion of Ile de Grace to which I have alluded in order that Mr. Vanasse might acquire it at the price which I was willing to pay, he did not avail himself of the opportunity, and the land is to this day in possession of the Government, and unoccupied. This I affirm, and I call upon the leader of the House, who was then Minister of Justice, to say if the statement is not strictly correct. I used no influence to bring about the sale of those properties. My brother leased Ile Ronde at the rent fixed by the Government, $141 per annum, whereas if he had bought it he would have been obliged to pay, at 6 per cent. interest on the purchase money, $200 a year. This is sufficient to show that my brother has no object to gain by purchasing it, since he saves money by leasing it. I believe I have succeeded in proving that these assertions in the petition in question here, and in the articles I have quoted from Le Monde, are untrue, and I hope that this is the last of these accusations. I do not know why this attempt is made to destroy my character as a public man. In the first election which Mr. Vanasse contested in the County of Yamaska, I worked and voted for him; and I do not understand why he should now publish such attacks as those I quoted. Perhaps his object is to punish me for having refused to attend a meeting on the Riel question to help him. That meeting was called for the purpose of condemning the Government which Mr. Vanasse supported on the Riel question. I believe I have stated enough to convince my honorable colleagues, and I hope my constituents also, of the perfect disinterestedness of my conduct. These are not the only charges made; it has been stated that I have been for some time attending public meetings with the hope of making something by speaking at them. I say the assertion is untrue. I have never accepted 25 cents from any person for working in elections. Some of you may recollect the famous contest which took place in the County of St. Hyacinthe, in 1863, I think. Mr. Sicotte having been made a judge, a new election took place during the session which was then being held at Quebec. I spent 13 days aiding my friends in that county, and I not only never accepted anything from those for whom I worked, but I lost a portion of my sessional indemnity. I doubt if Mr. Vanasse can say as much—I doubt if he can say that he has not drawn his indemnity of late years for times when he was absent from the House. I thought it proper to make these few remarks in asking for the papers referred to in my motion.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—There is no objection to the address being passed, but I think it due to my hon. friend, in view of my long acquaintance with him, that I should respond to his allusions to myself by stating, so far as I remember, the transactions that took place but with which I had no official connection. My hon. friend came to me on several occasions and related to me the facts which he has just mentioned about the islands in the St. Lawrence. The statement, I believe, is perfectly accurate, because it is the same that he has made to me several times. The islands to which he has referred formed part of the public domain. They were obtained from the Imperial Government, I think as part of the ordnance lands. The rule with reference to these ordnance lands is this: if they are occupied they can be sold to the occupants, at a valuation, by the officers of the department; but if they are not occupied they must be sold at public auction. The question was whether these properties were occupied or not. My hon. friend stated the circumstances to me and I came to the conclusion that all of them were occupied—both the islands and the land in Sorel. However a doubt might be raised, because, I believe, upon one or two of the islands no one lived. There were three islands, on one of which there was a residence. There was none on either of the others, but still one can occupy land on which he does not reside and it was shown that the hon. gentleman's brother and his auteur had paid rent for a good many years for these islands, so there is no doubt in my mind that he was entitled to the privilege which the law gave, that the land should be sold to him and those mentioned at a valuation. I expressed that opinion to the Department of the Interior at the time. There was no reference to me officially, but I was, as I am now, on terms of intimate friendship with the hon. gentleman, and I was glad to assist in putting the matter right for him. I expected that my hon. friend would have been now the owner of the land to which he has alluded, and that he would have his patent. What difficulties arose afterwards I do not know. There were other parties who wished to get those islands who asserted that he and his auteurs had not been in possession. What merit there may have been in those assertions I do not know, but I do remember, and I have pleasure in saying, that at the interviews which my hon. friend and myself had, he did seem to me to establish that he and his auteurs had been in possession for a long time of those islands, and were entitled to the privilege of buying them at a valuation, and a valuation was made. What happened afterwards I do not know, but I take this occasion to bear my testimony to the accuracy of what my hon. friend has said. I have no doubt whatever as to its correctness.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERPRETATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING POSTPONED.

The order of the day having been called for the third reading of Bill (C) "An Act further to amend the Interpretation Act,"

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL said—It has been suggested to me by one of the law officers of the other House that opportunity might be taken, when this Bill was going through, to add another clause to it with reference to the number of printed copies of a Private Bill which those interested in it should furnish for distribution. The Interpretation Act now says that the number shall be 150; he suggests that it should be altered to 500 in one language and 250 in the other. With a view to enabling the House to consider whether such an amendment should be made, I move that the order of the day be discharged and that this Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole House on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

POST OFFICE AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The order of the day having been called for the third reading of Bill (D) "An Act further to amend the Post Office Act of 1875."

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL said: When this Bill was up for a second reading the honorable member from Halifax suggested that it did not appear in the second section of the 61st clause how the demand spoken of there should be made. The language of the Bill as presented to the House was, reading from the 40th line, "and before or upon the expiry thereof he demands such acknowledgment from the Postmaster General." It did not appear how he was to make the demand, whether by letter or not, or to whom. To meet my hon. friend's difficulty, which I acknowledge is one that ought to be met, I propose after the words "Postmaster General" to add "by registered letter addressed to him at Ottawa." That will make it beyond doubt to whom it is to go and how it is to be addressed. I move that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be amended in the manner I have described.

HON. MR. POWER—That removes my objection.

The motion was agreed to.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL moved the third reading of the Bill as amended.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS BEFORE JUSTICES BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. GOWAN moved the second reading of Bill (A) "An Act to make further provision respecting summary proceedings before Justices and Magistrates." He said: A similar Bill to the one before you was submitted last session and met the approval of this hon. House in the form in which it is now presented. It was very fully debated at the time, but I may be pardoned if I briefly remind hon. gentlemen of its leading features and the principle upon which it is based. It proposes to deal with one branch of the Criminal Law—that in relation to Summary Jurisdiction—by giving the Judges of the Superior Courts in the several provinces ample powers to prevent a failure of justice in cases where guilt is established, but technical exactness is not found in the history, so to speak, of what has passed before the court of first instance. In a word, to confer upon these judges the like full powers they are now invested with in regard to more serious offences as well as in civil cases.

The authority to hear and determine summarily in respect to offences of a minor character has, of necessity, been delegated to convenient tribunals accessible to all, and is now very extensive, embracing a multitude of subjects, and is exercised by a very numerous class—the Justices of the Peace throughout the Dominion.

Their decisions are subject to review—first, upon the ordinary appeal to the Court of General Sessions of the Peace; second, upon appeal to the Judges of the Superior Courts before whom the proceedings may be brought by writ of certiorari; the former, the appeal to the Sessions, is not a matter of common right, but must be given by express enactment—the latter is not a qualified right, like the appeal to the Sessions, but lies of course, as a matter of common law unless expressly taken away by statute.

The general enactment respecting appeals to the sessions is found in the Acts of 1869, cap. 31, sec. 65, and secs. 67 and 68 enable a decision on the merits notwithstanding some defect in the form of the conviction or order; and if the person charged or complained against is found guilty the conviction or order shall be affirmed, and the court shall amend the same if necessary, and any conviction or order so affirmed or affirmed and amended shall be enforced in the manner provided by law.

Thus local tribunals have very full power to prevent a failure of justice upon appeal lodged before them, but the judges of the superior courts have no such powers in respect to summary convictions, but are compelled to deal with the subject in a strictly technical way.

It is different when a case comes before them from an inferior court of record. Everything is presumed in favor of the regularity of the proceedings of a court of Record; the presumption is the other way in respect to proceedings before Justices of the Peace, and the only mode in which their proceedings can be reviewed by the superior courts is when brought up on a writ of certiorari.

Also in matters of civil concern the judges of the Superior Courts have power to amend an error or defect and give judgment according to the very right and justice of the case.

Moreover, in indictable offences the Dominion Procedure Act of 1869 makes full provision for curing defects in form.

Thus the anomaly exists that the Court of Sessions, an inferior court, has larger powers for preventing a miscarriage of justice in this particular than have the judges of the Superior Courts. That while not merely in civil cases but in the graver criminal—cases indictable offences—these judges are properly invested with extensive power to guard against a miscarriage of justice, such powers are denied then when they come to pass upon cases of summary conviction, cases where the power is more necessary, because the original proceeding is not before regularly trained men. Hon. gentleman will see in this an evil, and the object of this Bill is to bring this branch of administration more into harmony with modern ideas, here and at home, which aim at securing substantial justice, notwithstanding purely technical objections not touching the very merits of a case.

Every member of the legal profession who hears me will know that the defective power in respect to summary conviction when under review by the judge upon certiorari, is not over stated; but I may refer to a few of the cases to give some idea to others of the extreme exactness in form required under the law as it exists, and how the judges are crippled, handicapped, I may say, in their desire to prevent miscarriage of justice—to prevent the law being set at nought.

Some hon. gentlemen here may not be familiar with decisions which have been rendered from time to time. I have collected a few cases that may serve to illustrate the difficulty that I indicate. All the cases which comes before the courts are not published. Some of them are merely going over the same ground again, and involve no new principle; but a number of cases are reported, and from these, as they appear in the books, I have collected some which will show what extreme particularity is required. The first case which I will cite was one in which a conviction was had before a magistrate, and a fine of $5.20 was imposed. The magistrate is required, after dealing with the case, to make a minute, which afterwards takes a shape of the conviction. In this case the guilt of the party offending was clearly established; the magistrates imposed the fine of $5.20, but unfortunately when he came to formulate his conviction he made it $5.27. So because it was seven cents too much the conviction was held to be bad, and was quashed, notwithstanding the guilt of the party had been clearly proved. Had the case been reversed, and the amount stated been seven cents too little, the result would have been the same. Another case, with which perhaps my hon. friend from the Quinte division (Mr. Read) who gave us some very interesting information last year with regard to cheese factories, may be familiar, occurred I think in his locality. After cheese factories had been running for some time in the country, it was found that a great many frauds were committed upon them, and milk was sold which was found to be impure. Though the parties could always be brought before the Superior Courts on indictment, it would involve very considerable trouble, and an Act was passed making it an offence punishable by summary conviction. One of the customers of a cheese factory, who considered that he was not making enough at the price for which he sold, endeavored to increase his profits by skimming the milk. This was proved before a magistrate, and he was fined. But unfortunately the magistrate, in formulating the conviction, put it in a way that would not hold water, and the guilty party escaped. The charge was "Did on or about the month of June, 1880, and on various occasions, fraudulently sell to the proprietor of a cheese factory a large quantity of milk from which the cream had been removed." As every lawyer knows, that form of conviction was bad, because it technically charged two offenses, and it was so held. In another case a conviction was against the party for fraudulently removing goods to evade distress. Under an Imperial Act the Justice of the Peace is authorized to impose a penalty of double the value of the goods removed. In this case the value of the goods was $100, and the justice imposed a penalty of $100. The conviction was held to be bad on that ground, and also because the justice had failed to state in the conviction what the actual value was.

In another case a person was charged with being a frequenter of a house of ill-fame. The statute enacts that persons habitually frequenting such places shall be liable to a certain punishment, and the magistrate finding that it came fairly within the scope of the statute convicted him; but unfortunately in formulating his charge it was put that he was an unlawful frequenter, instead of an habitual frequenter. The conviction was held to be bad, and the judges were obliged to quash it.

In another case a man was convicted of unlawfully selling and disposing of intoxicating liquor to Indians. The justice of the peace, instead of saying that the defendant was convicted before him, stated that he was charged before him. The judge considered it so clear a case that it was useless to bring the proceedings up.

The bill is not intended nor does it confer any new or additional power upon justices of the peace. The new power is given to the judges of the Superior Courts and I am sure hon. gentlemen will agree with me that with them it may be safely reposed.

I believe that the measure if it becomes law will meet very general approval; since the bill before you was in print I have solicited the opinion of some leading jurists and I may read you some extracts from letters I received in reply.

Sir William Richards, whom all know as a consummate lawyer and learned jurist, who lately occupied the highest position in the judiciary of Ontario and afterwards in the like position in the Supreme Court of Canada "thinks the bill accords with the spirit of modern legislation viz., that technicalities shall not be allowed to interfere with the proper administration of justice."

Mr. Justice Taschereau, of the Supreme Court, has also kindly expressed an opinion of the bill; he says:—"I entirely and unhesitatingly agree with its provisions," and has for a long time "been of opinion that such a statute had become necessary," &c. "I wish I had time," he continues, "and could enlarge upon the merit of such a law. I really cannot do it now. I can only say that I hope the bill will become law."

I think hon. gentlemen will agree with me that this is strong testimony in favor of the measure, for the learned judge is known all over the Dominion for his accurate and critical knowledge of criminal jurisprudence, and his work on the criminal law is in the hands of every judge and every lawyer in Canada—a valuable vade mecum in the courts.

Mr. Justice Gwynne, well known in Ontario as a distinguished judge before his appointment to the Supreme Court, a man of broad and enlightened views, has also written me,—"I am glad," he is good enough to say, "that you are, as a legislator, utilizing the experience you have acquired in your long career by removing some of the obstructions which still remain to impede the course of the stream of justice. The bill is a move in the right direction as enabling the superior courts, in some measure to correct the evil consequences attending the carelessness or ignorance of inefficient or inexperienced magistrates."

Mr. Justice Cross, a distinguished judge of the Lower Canada bench, has been good enough also to examine the bill and to favor me with his views. He says:—"I hope it will pass the necessary ordeals.

Its object is one very desirable of accomplishment. Much good may, and I believe will, result from it, and it is at all events well worthy the experiment."

These are the opinions of very eminent men touching the principle of the Bill, and entitled to great weight both here and elsewhere, and, if I may so say, I venture to think that, knowing something of the subject, and with a longer experience than that of any judge of any court in the Dominion, my testimony in favor of the measure is not without some value. I think I have fairly made out a case for the second reading not to speak of the fact that the Bill was finally passed last session by the House.

What I have been speaking to relates to the first eight clauses in the Bill; the others are merely formal, intended to facilitate procedure and save needless expense, and some of the sections are to enlarge the time for making appeals; for it was found too short in some outlying districts. I shall have an opportunity to speak to the several clauses of the Bill when it is in committee. I may say generally that with the exception of two or three words, and the transposition of one clause, the Bill is in the identical shape in which it finally passed the Senate.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

TORONTO BOARD OF TRADE BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. ALLAN moved the second reading of Bill (E) "An Act to amend the several Acts relating to the Board of Trade of the City of Toronto." He said: This is a Bill to amend the several Acts relating to the Board of Trade of the City of Toronto in the particulars which have been set forth in the petition presented on behalf of that body to this House, and which are also stated in this Bill. One of the first is in relation to the Board of Examiners. At present, under the existing Act, members of the Board of Trade are not eligible to be examiners. In the judgment of the Board, the best men are likely to be found amongst themselves to perform that duty, and they ask that that section of the Act may be repealed. The next clause is to enable the corporation to hold lands of greater value than they are now permitted to hold by the existing Act, and also to enable them to borrow money and to issue debentures. The most important clause, perhaps, is that which asks to empower them to pass by-laws to create a gratuity fund whereby provision may be made for assisting the representatives of a deceased member; and they ask for power to assess the members of the corporation from time to time for such sum as may be necessary to create and keep up such a gratuity fund. They ask also power to pass certain by-laws to regulate those assessments. Those are the principal features of the Bill. If the second reading is assented to, I propose to move that the Bill be referred to the Committee on Banking & Commerce.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned at 5:05 p.m.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (K), "An Act relating to Druggists." (Mr. Macmillan).

THE INSURRECTION IN THE NORTH-WEST.

MOTION.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER moved

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General; praying that he will cause to be laid before this House, all reports which were rendered to any member of the Government or to any Department of the Government, by Lieutenant-Governor Edgar Dewdney, respecting alleged grievances or disaffection of the settlers around Fort Carlton or elsewhere, between the 1st July, 1884, and the 1st March, 1885.

He said—If a member wishes to retain his influence in such a representative body as this, he will take care not to trespass too frequently upon their patient and kind indulgence. I try to make this my special study. The House knows, that notwithstanding the unseemly and unparliamentary interruptions of four or five members, I always endeavor to do my duty, and I never address the Chamber without having important questions of Dominion interest to discuss. I never trifle with the patience of the House, because I have always experienced at their hands the greatest kindness and courtesy, except from five hon. gentlemen. We all know, with regard to this resolution, what parties are chiefly chargeable, by their carelessness and inattention to the representations to those half-breed families, with causing the insurrection at Prince Albert; but the House will agree with me that while I do not recur to those causes, that after the more or less severe strictures of a certain portion of the press of the country concerning Lieutenant-Governor Dewdney, (who is a gentleman very much respected in the Dominion) we owe it to him, to Parliament, and to the country to investigate the subject, that we may form a correct judgment as to how far his conduct may be censurable. The Government say there was no cause for the insurrection, and I am sure they will, with the greatest possible pleasure, cause the report of Lieutenant-Governor Dewdney, that I now ask for to be laid on this table.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I made special inquiry whether there were any such papers as those asked for in this motion, because if there had been any such papers I should have been very glad to let the address go, but I understand from the various Departments, dealing with matters relating to the North-West—and I have made it my business to inquire specially—that there are no letters from Lieutenant-Governor Edgar Dewdney respecting alleged grievances or disaffection amongst the settlers referred to in this motion, addressed to any Department of the Government. I must therefore oppose the passage of this address.

HON. MR. ALLAN.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I can only say that after an insurrection of such proportions as that which took place at Prince Albert, it is a most extraordinary circumstance that the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Territory should not have communicated what was occurring for months previous to that outbreak; but this statement of the Postmaster-General only corresponds with a statement made upon a previous occasion by another Minister with reference to reports sent by Bishop Grandin. He denied that any had been received, and two days afterwards he confessed that Bishop Grandin had made representations.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Who confessed I should like to know?

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—The late Minister of the Interior.

HON. MR. PLUMB—He did no such thing.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I refer to the official report of the Debates.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Sir David Macpherson may have made some statement which he afterwards found, on further investigation, to be incorrect, though I do not remember anything about it; but I have not to answer for the late Minister of the Interior. I answer for myself, and I say that there are no such dispatches as those mentioned in this paper.

The motion was declared lost.

The Senate adjourned at 3:40 p. m.

THE SEA COAST FISHERIES OF THE DOMINION.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER rose

“To call the attention of the House to the importance of our now studying to foster the Sea Coast Fishery interests of the Dominion, as one of its most important industries, and ask what further steps the Government propose taking to accomplish that desirable object.”

He said—In rising to present this motion for the consideration of this hon. House, I desire to say that I am deeply conscious of my inability to deal with so important a subject. There is, perhaps, no public question at this moment demanding so urgently the best consideration of Parliament. I regret that I am not possessed of sufficiently full information to present it in its most important bearing. I simply profess by my motion to bring it to your consideration, trusting that the hon. gentlemen from the Maritime Provinces who have had long experience in this Chamber, and who are directly and specially more interested in that question than we can be, will treat the more important points of the subject. The prevailing opinion of the country is that this great and important interest has been most unworthily trifled with, and neglected, as have been many other subjects of public import, by the First Minister, whose time appears to be chiefly engrossed with other matters which I shall not name. It is a sad spectacle, a spectacle which we must all deplore, to witness the great public interests of such a country as this so evidently neglected. With regard to the Fishery Question, there is a great commercial depression in the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and along their coasts, where a busy activity and the employment of many more thousands might be effected if a wise and vigorous policy were adopted. Of course every one laments, as I do, the sad state into which the First Minister of the Crown has fallen. I fear that the right honorable gentleman has become incapacitated mentally and bodily for the important duties which he has to discharge.

HON. MR. READ—Not a bit of it.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—It is unnecessary for me to remind the House that before the International Treaty expired on the 1st of July, 1885, a full and perfect understanding should have been arrived at between the two Governments, and it could have been easily accomplished if the leader of the political party which now rules the country had been alive to his duty. We all know that never at any previous period have such cordial feelings of amity existed between that great Republic to the south of us and the Dominion of Canada, of which we are all proud. So strong are the friendly relations between the two countries, that there is no danger of these being disturbed by any action on our part to establish our well understood legal rights. The Great Republic is second to no other country, regarding their general enlightenment and those graces of courtesy which adorn life. It is true that one member of the Senate at Washington, the Hon. Senator Fry, on the 18th January last, used language somewhat ambiguous to the world generally, but not ambiguous to me, and I have read his words most carefully. He prefaces his other remarks by the words "we desire to send no boats into their waters." Could words be more clear though the subsequent remarks which he made, might be a little alarming to us.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—What State is he from?

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I think he is from Maine; I quote from the report of his speech in the Congressional Record, and I can only add, if Senator Fry's remarks on the 18th January, were made to convey a different meaning, that I know enough of the people of the New England States, of New York State, and the other parts of the Union, to assert here, that they do not reflect the sentiments of the higher cultured population of that country. If his views could be construed into having a different meaning from the interpretation which I put upon them, he would not be sustained by the population of the United States generally, who, I am sure, would with their present enlightenment and high principles, scorn to entertain such thoughts that because they are fifty millions of people to our four millions and a half, that therefore they can infringe with impunity, upon our undoubted legal rights. I desire to refrain at this moment from any harsh criticism of the course pursued by our own government under the circumstances of Sir John Macdonald's bad health; but it has virtually given rise to the impression that our Government and people were afraid on the first of July last to assert their undoubted rights, and the conduct of our Government in this connection has almost fastened upon us the charge of pusillanimity that will be echoed and re-echoed by the press of the world—because a great Dominion such as we are, so powerful in numbers and intelligence, with our railway extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific, should never have allowed a whole season to pass and permit American fishermen to come into our waters and catch as much of our fish as they choose, while the American Government collected duty on all Canadian fish going into the American markets. Now the first consideration which governs the Imperial Parliament and the British people, is to uphold the honor and dignity of the country; and such ought to be the first consideration with our Parliament and Government. But alas, with Sir John's general idiosyncracies and policy of delay,—policy of "to-morrow" in everything, is bringing disaster after disaster upon the country. I dwell upon this, because all this mal-administration arises from this idol worship of the first Minister. The majority of Parliament appear to have surrendered their judgment to him upon everything, and thus, I may add, to one bodily and mentally incapacitated to deal with certain questions. His late speeches breathe more of romance than practical public life. They are almost ludicrous. The standards of honor and truth have unfortunately been sunk. I appeal to the Senate of this rising country. Let us bring together all right thinking men to raise once more those standards of right and truth within those walls. Let me now proceed to state in my imperfect way what course the Government should pursue, according to my judgment, in order to do justice to this great interest so as to bring prosperity to the Maritime Provinces.

Firstly—We ought to increase the force of the Marine Police. There ought to be at least three or four steamers with seven fast schooners.

Secondly—We ought during the present Session to pass a Statute to prevent our fishermen selling bait to the American fishing class. Every means should be concentrated and adopted to build up our own fishery interests.

Thirdly—As regarding the bounties they should at once be increased to at least the interest of the five million five hundred thousand dollars which we obtained under the Arbitration. The gentlemen from the Maritime Provinces will add to those suggestions a number of others calculated to accomplish the object in view. The Governments of Great Britain and France attach great importance to their sea-coast fisheries, not merely for the sustenance of a large fishing population and the wealth that such a large industry will create, but they attach a special value to their training up of a large fleet of seiners,—namely, a strong Maritime fishing population which from year to year they find indispensable to man naval armaments of their two respective kingdoms. I have only now in conclusion to express my thanks to hon. members for the indulgent hearing which they have given me, while I have endeavored to bring this important subject before the House.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I thought from the notice on the paper that we would have been treated this afternoon to a very able exposition upon the cultivation of our sea coast fisheries. Knowing the ability of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, I thought he would have added some information of an important character to the history of our fisheries, but he does not seem to know the first thing about those of our own sea coast. He does not even seem to know the value of them. He says they have a value, but what it is he has not deigned to inform us, and I doubt if he has deigned to inform himself. I doubt if he knows to-day the value of the export of fish of the Dominion. I am led to that conclusion from the course of his remarks and the line of his argument. He accused the Government of neglecting to protect the fisheries of the Maritime Provinces. If he would ask the Marine and Fisheries Department for a copy of the laws regarding our fisheries, he would find in them ample food for reflection, and he would see how closely and with what great attention our Government have fostered and encouraged our sea coast fisheries. Had he read those laws carefully before coming here to-day he would not have ventured to assert that the Government have been derelict in their duty in watching over our fisheries. He says the prevailing opinion of this country is that the fisheries have been neglected. I take issue with him on that point. I do not think that his opinion will be endorsed by public men from the Maritime Provinces, on either side of politics, in this House or out of it. He stated also that the great depression which prevails in the fishing industry of the Maritime Provinces has in some way been due to the neglect of the Government. Any one conversant with the fishing industry of the Maritime Provinces knows that so far from the catch of fish being small, there is no year in the history of the Maritime Provinces when so many fish of the different kinds that congregate on our coasts have been taken as during the last year. If he would take the trouble to look further into the question he would find that the depression which exists in the fishing industry is not due to want of fish, but to want of markets. The fish usually sent to the Mediterranean have been shut out owing to contagious diseases prevailing in that part of the world, and that is why depression exists in certain branches of the fishing industry. He has also stated that the Government have not done their duty in their dealings with the United States. He contends that they should have had some understanding with the Washington Government before the treaty expired. He did not tell us how, or why, or by what means such an arrangement was to be made with the Government of the United States. He is, as a learned gentleman, no doubt, conversant with the constitution of the United States, and knows the powers which the different branches of the Government of that country possess with regard to the making of treaties. Yet the hon. gentleman has not stated, in a way that any member of this House could draw an intelligent opinion from, how our Government have been derelict in their duty. We could not take the Government of the United States by the throat and force them to make a treaty. We know that certain political changes have taken place in the United States, and that the party which governed that country since 1860 has recently lost power; we know another party is now in office, and while those changes were taking place the fisheries clauses of the treaty expired. It was impossible for our Government to do more than they did do—bring the matter to the notice of the United States Government through the British Minister at Washington. We have been on good terms with our neighbors for the last ten years under the Washington Treaty. During that time the intercourse between the two countries, commercial and otherwise, has been very pleasant. But it happens that there is a disturbance in the political family at Washington just now, and we were willing to let them have the use of our fisheries until the meeting of Congress, when they would be able to decide whether the Treaty should be renewed or not. The Government had good reason to believe that due consideration would be given to the question, but it so happens that while the House of representatives is Democratic the Senate is Republican, and it would be impossible, even though the House favored a renewal of the Treaty, to have it sanctioned by the Senate. I was in Washington about six weeks ago and visited both Houses very frequently, and I know the difficulty of the situation. Our Government did all that they could; they exercised the best wisdom they possessed until they found negotiations unavailing, and now they have concluded to protect our fisheries. As soon as it became apparent that the Treaty would not be renewed, they are fitting out six sailing vessels and one steamer. Now let me enlighten my hon. friend from Woodstock with regard to the use of steamers for the protection of our fisheries. If the hon. gentleman was at all well informed on the subject he would not assert that steamers should be used for the purpose. Fishermen are wary fellows and can see the smoke of a steamer a long way off, whereas schooners of their own style cannot be so easily watched. Therefore, while it is well to have one steamer for important purposes, the best class of vessels to serve as Marine Police is the kind advertised for by the Government—schooners of about 90 tons. The hon. gentleman seems to think that we should be in a position to make a Treaty whether the American Government like it or not, and he quotes the views, ideas and opinions of Senator Fry, but he does not know whether Senator Fry is from Maine or New Hampshire; however, it makes very little difference, so far as renewing the Treaty is concerned. I have reason to believe that the United States' Government would be willing to consider this question on its merits if they saw any course open to them to meet the views of the Canadian Government, but that being impossible, we have to protect our fisheries, and I have no doubt that the Government are taking proper steps for that purpose. But the hon. gentleman says that we ought to pass a special Act to prevent to sale of bait to the United States' fishermen. We have already an Act on that subject. The Treaty of 1818 prevents American fishing vessels from entering our harbors except for wood and water.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—And refuge.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—And then they can only remain for 24 hours. Having had something to do with this industry in Prince Edward Island I have some practical knowledge on the subject. The hon. gentleman says that the sums paid for the protection of the fisheries, and the amounts given from time to time to our fishermen in the way of bonuses and premiums, have been lost. If the hon. gentleman would go down to the County of Lunenburg he would find there as fine a class of fishing vessels as can be found on salt water, the result of the assistance given by this Government to the fishing industry.

HON. MR. POWER—No, no.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I venture to make this statement, and I think I am as good a judge of that class of vessels as my hon. friend from Halifax. I had occasion to pass through the Straits of Canso within the last two years and I was quite surprised to see, lying side by side with the finest class of vessels from Gloucester, our own vessels from Lunenburg equally good. They are really a credit to the Dominion, and to the Port of Lunenburg from which they come. I say more, that the assistance given by this Government to the fisheries of the Maritime Provinces has produced excellent results, and if we wish to find what they are in a monetary way we have only to take the exports of the different classes of fish from the Maritime Province and thus reach a very intelligent conclusion. My hon. friend, usually well informed as he is on public questions, has not given proper attention to this subject. Coming as I do from a Province largely interested in the fisheries, and having some experience of the industry myself, I am in a position to say that the Government have fully and ably done their duty. I do not think they can be accused of having in any way failed to protect and assist, either the deep sea or the in-shore fisheries, and that is the opinion expressed by a majority of the fishermen of the Maritime Provinces.

HON. MR. HOWLAN.

HON. MR. POWER—I hardly expected to say anything on this subject, but two or three remarks have fallen from the hon. member from Alberton which seem to call for notice. I was surprised to hear him state broadly that the present condition of the Lunenburg fishing fleet was due to the protection and assistance afforded them by this Government. The hon. gentleman could not go down to Lunenburg and make such a statement as that in any place where fishermen are assembled, because everyone knows that the statement is altogether unfounded.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—It is quite correct.

HON. MR. POWER—I do not know as much about fishing probably as the hon. gentleman from Alberton, but still I happen to know a little about it in a non-professional way, and so far from the statement which he made about the Lunenburg fleet being well founded, I know that 20 years ago and more the firm of which my father was a member fitted out about 100 sail of Lunenburg vessels for the fisheries. That was before Confederation.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—What was the size of those vessels?

HON. MR. POWER—They were a good size.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—One of these modern vessels is as large as three of them.

HON. MR. POWER—My hon. friend no doubt knows a good deal, but he does not know everything, and I can tell him that we had a fishing fleet in Nova Scotia before the adoption of this policy of protection in 1882, just before the election took place. If the hon. gentleman says that the paltry bounty given at that time—given almost purely for electioneering purposes—has had anything to do with the substantial increase of the fishing fleet, I say it is absurd. Any merchant or any man who professes to understand the subject practically, would hardly undertake to make such a statement as that in the fishing districts. I am proud to to say that the vessels of the County of Lunenburg have been able for many years to hold their own both in the way of catching fish and fast sailing with those of Gloucester. The industry, the energy, and the native talent of Lunenburg, are not to be repressed even by the sort of legislation and administration that we have now. The hon. gentleman talked in general terms of what the Government here has done for the fisheries, but he did not go on to tell us in detail what they had done. He spoke of the lamentable ignorance displayed by the hon. member from Woodstock, but he did not himself enlighten us any more. Now, if a gentleman who knows so much about the fisheries as the hon. member from Alberton does, was unable to point out what the Government had done, the natural presumption is that they had done nothing, and that is really about the fact, beyond this petty fishing bounty which they have given. There was a good deal of force in what was said by the hon. member from Woodstock as to the line that the Government should have adopted. In the first place, there was a great deal of force in what he said as to the impropriety and the unwisdom of the Government's giving over to the Americans a whole season's fishing gratis. The natural effect of that was that the American people would suppose one of two things—either that the privileges which they enjoyed under the Fisheries Clauses of the Washington Treaty were of comparatively little value when they were given away for nothing, or that the Canadian Government and the Imperial authorities were afraid to maintain their rights in the fishing grounds.

HON. MR. ALMON—Hear, hear.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentlemen may laugh, but that is the construction which has actually been put upon it.

HON. GENTLEMEN—No, no!

HON. MR. POWER—I beg the hon. gentlemen's pardon, that statement has been made on behalf of the Gloucester fishermen in the United States, and the construction is a very natural one. The Government did what they should not have done; they gave away a season's fishing for nothing, with the result which I have indicated. What they should have done they neglected to do; they should have done as their predecessors did when preparations were being made for the meeting of the commission which sat at Halifax in 1877. They should have taken, after they got notice that the fisheries' clauses of the treaty were to terminate, the necessary steps to collect statistics relative to the fisheries:

HON. MR. HOWLAN—How do you know that they have not done so?

HON. MR. POWER—They do not say so, and as a general rule when the Government do anything that they should do, they let us know about it. The statistics have not appeared at any rate. The Government should have set their officers at work to collect statistics. I believe the effect of those statistics would have been the same as in the case of the Fisheries Commission; they would have established that the Fisheries Treaty was at least as beneficial to the people of the United States as it was to the people of Canada. That was the point. An impression prevails very largely throughout the United States that the Fisheries clauses of that Treaty were almost of no benefit to the United States and that they were of very great benefit to Canada. If our Government had done their duty, the friends of the Treaty would have been in a position to make it clear that the benefits of the Treaty were not at all one-sided, but extended to the United States as much as to Canada. The fact has been this, that while the Gloucester fishermen, represented by Mr. Frye and other persons, have been able to produce statistics which, on the face of them, seem to show that the Treaty was of comparatively little benefit or value to the United States; the merchants of Boston and other places who take the opposite view have not had the statistics at command which they should have possessed, and which should have been supplied by this Government. I think in that respect the Government have failed seriously in their duty.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—If you had seen the report of the Boston Fisheries Bureau, you would not say so.

HON. MR. POWER—I have not seen the report of which my hon. friend speaks. This anxiety that the Government showed for a continuation of the Treaty, and this anxiety not to give offence is the more striking, because the leader of the Government has declared upon a great many occasions, both in Parliament and out of Parliament, when it has been suggested that the Government should take some steps towards a renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty, that it was unwise, because it would not do for us to show our anxiety to have the Treaty renewed. Now how could that anxiety be more shown than by giving away for nothing a season's fishing? The conduct of the Government has been self-contradictory in the extreme. There is one point on which I think there is still room for action on the part of the Government. They ought now as a matter of course to do the things which they neglected in the way of collecting information. It will be remembered by hon. gentlemen that when the duties on flour and corn meal were imposed some years ago, it was declared that the object was to give our own market to our own people—that Canadian farmers or millers were to supply the home demand for corn meal and flour, and that the foreign articles were to be shut out. Now what is shown by the Trade Returns? It is shown that instead of the result having been what was anti-pated at that time, it has been just the reverse—that the importations of corn meal and flour have very largely increased. Those importations have been chiefly into the Maritime Provinces. And there is no class of our population which has consumed more United States flour and corn meal than our fishermen. The consequence has been that these poor people, whose business is in a very bad condition just now, while they see a duty put on their fish going into the United States, which largely interferes with their profits, are at the same time obliged to pay enormous sums into the Dominion Treasury on the absolute necessities of life. Now I think that one of the steps that the Government should take, seeing that the practical working of this duty on bread stuffs has not been what they expected, and that the fishermen, almost the poorest class of our population, are paying a very heavy tax on the necessities of life, is to remove now the duty on bread stuffs.

HON. MR. POWER.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—How much corn meal do the fishermen use?

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—It seems that the fishermen do not use corn meal.

HON. MR. ALMON—Hear, hear.

HON. MR. POWER—But they do use corn meal.

HON. MR. ALMON—I should like you to go down to the fishermen and try to persuade them to eat corn meal.

HON. MR. POWER—Well, there is no doubt that corn meal is largely used in the Lower Provinces. I do not say that it is used exclusively by the fishermen there.

HON. MR. ALMON—Hear, hear.

HON. MR. POWER—I have not alleged that they use a larger proportion than other classes of the population, but they do use a considerable quantity.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—They use it for feeding cattle.

HON. MR. POWER—My hon. friend has just called to my mind the fact that the fishermen of his county, who farm as well as fish, use it for feeding their cattle; and if you put a tax on the food of their cattle it is just as burdensome as if you put it on their own food.

HON. MR. ALMON—How many cattle do fishermen have?

HON. MR. POWER—As to that question I will refer my hon. friend to the hon. member for Lunenburg for an answer. I know in the County of Lunenburg they accomplish what is rarely done anywhere else—that is, they combine farming and fishing, and do both well.

I may say this with respect to the speech from the hon. member from Woodstock, that I think it is to be regretted that in a speech in which there was so much good sense, he should have interpolated certain personal references which tend to hinder other members of the House from giving to his speech that fair and unbiassed hearing which it would otherwise deserve. I think the personal references to the Premier would have been left out with advantage to the speech itself, and that it would then have received greater attention. I notice that my hon. friend from Woodstock also spoke of the great interest that the British Government showed in our fisheries, and the paternal care with which they foster them. I am afraid that I cannot altogether agree with my hon. friend; our fisheries are English fisheries, and one of the most important, and probably one of the most difficult duties that the Government will have to discharge will be to induce the Imperial authorities to be as energetic in protecting the fisheries as they ought to be.

As I said before, in the debate on the Address, I think that the Government of this country would be perfectly justified in pressing upon the Imperial Government as a reason why they should protect our fisheries, the fact that we have spent so many millions of dollars in building a railway which will be used largely for Imperial purposes. I believe that this is an argument that the Imperial Government would find it difficult to get over. If Canada has spent so many millions of dollars to make an Imperial highway across this continent, surely the British Government would be only doing its duty in protecting our fisheries. Then, as to the question of selling bait, I notice that the matter has been brought before the Minister of Justice, and I suppose that the Government will come to a decision on the matter at an early date. I quite recognize that there may be strong objections to selling bait to Americans in our harbors ; but I can hardly see how the Government of Canada can forbid our fishermen from taking bait beyond our three mile limit and selling it as they might sell it in Gloucester or any other American port. Probably some difficulty will be found in preventing that, though the Government may have power to do it. I regret that I did not prepare myself to address the House on this subject, which is one of very great consequence ; and I should not have troubled this House at all only for the turn which the debate has taken.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I may say, with my hon. friend who has just taken his seat, that I am not prepared at this moment to show the marvellous progress of our mighty and wealthy heritage, our great cod, mackerel and herring fishing industries, to which the advancement of the wealth and commerce of the Maritime Provinces is mainly due. Had I observed the notice of motion on the order paper sooner, I should probably come better prepared, and the remarks which I now make are only prompted by the statements of my hon. friend. When I read the notice that the hon. gentlemen from Woodstock would call the attention of the House to the importance of our now studying to foster the seacoast fishery interests of the Dominion, as one of its most important industries, I felt delighted that in the far west, thousands of miles from the sea coast and fisheries, we had an hon. gentleman in this House who felt the vast importance of that industry, though one who is not supposed to know very much about it ; I felt therefore the greater curiosity to know what he would propose—I suppose he hardly knows a codfish from a hake. At the same time the hon. gentleman might have suggested to us something which would have been of some benefit to the fisheries. I must say, however, that I listened to him with great attention, hoping that some new light would be thrown on the subject, that our fishermen would be more largely encouraged by the remarks of an hon. gentleman from the west ; but in that he has failed he trifled with the subject, because it was patent throughout his remarks that his object was merely to attack the Government or members of the Government without much apparent ability or desire to benefit the great fisheries industry. I do not know anything that my hon. friend has said, that is particularly worthy of remark : he did not apply the light of science to the treasures of our sea shores. He talks about a vigorous policy on the part of the Government, but all he suggests to my mind is that instead of six schooners we ought to have seven, and instead of one or two steamers we should have three to protect our fishermen. I presume that if the Government finds it necessary to have a larger police force on the coast, the number will be increased ; but I feel, with my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island, that steamers, except in catching vessels, are less desirable police on the coast, for the reasons my hon. friend has given. The hon. gentleman from Woodstock has said that the Americans are not desirous of sending their boats into our waters ; that they are not desirous of interfering with our fisheries ; that Senator Fry has said they have but little interest in them—that the field is not of sufficient importance to poach upon. Yet we know that already this spring the American fishermen have been trespassers, poaching on our waters, and have been doing acts inconsistent with the Treaty of 1818 even to the extent of coming into our ports and endeavoring to take our fishermen to man their fishing fleets. Already they have shown a desire to take not only our fish but our fishermen also. The people of the Maritime Provinces, those who are largely interested in the fisheries, and the men themselves who catch the fish, although they have suffered materially by having to pay duty on their fish going to the United States, believe that the action of the Government on the termination of the treaty was a wise and farseeing policy. Had the Government not continued the provisions of the treaty, but put on a pro-protective police on our coast and routed the Americans, which would have been the natural consequence of it, we would occupy no better position than we are in now—no free fish and no free markets. It would have been said that instead of agreeing to come to terms by granting concessions to the United States, we had renounced all such overtures from the other side, and we had brought upon ourselves that which has happened—not only the loss of our fish, but the loss of the market in the United States. No doubt the question of bait is one of great importance. Whether we can protect it from the encroachments of the American fishermen is a matter to which the Government, no doubt, has given great consideration. I hope we can protect our bait, without which the Americans cannot efficiently pursue their calling on our coasts, and I hope, notwithstanding the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Halifax, that we will be able to find means to prevent even our own fishermen from taking and disposing to the Americans of bait outside of the three mile limit. I hear from different fishing districts, that notwithstanding the fact that our men know the direct profit there is in selling bait to the Americans, they have combined together and say "It is to our own interest that our bait should be protected. That we must retain it for our own use. That the quantity as well as the quality of our fish depends on the food supply—the bait on our coasts; if the bait is exhausted, our fisheries are destroyed; if we supply bait to the Americans, it will not only increase their catch and injure our fisheries, but will lower the demand and consequently the value of our fish in the American market." I hope the Government will go to the extremity of the law in their endeavor to protect our bait, which is the entire support of our fisheries. My hon. friend from Woodstock suggests that the bounties should be increased. Coming, as I do, from Lunenburg, a county which catches more fish than the whole of the rest of the province—I say I should be very glad, in the interest of our plucky and enterprising fishermen, if the bounties could be increased; but my hon. friend from Halifax says it is a wretched system, that it is a wretched bounty, and that it has had no effect upon the fishing industry.

HON. MR. POWER—No material effect.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I should like to see the bounties increased. My friend is opposed to bounties, and would do away with them altogether. The fisheries have been benefited in a marked degree, in more ways than one, by the bounties. There is a bounty not only on the fish, but on the tonnage, to supplies in the fisheries, and to every yard of canvas, every line and twine used in the fisheries, and the salt to cure the fish.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Lines and twines are free.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Yes; there is scarcely anything that is used in and for fisheries that is not free. I am deeply interested in this matter, and I say there is no industry in the Dominion of Canada that has been so well, so ably, so paternally protected and fostered as the fishing industry; and the people of the Maritime Provinces know it and acknowledge, notwithstanding the assertion of the hon. gentleman from Halifax, that all this protection these benefits and advantages, have had a beneficial effect on that industry. I tell the hon. gentleman he is mistaken, and but for the bounty given in the building of vessels, and the bounties on the fish caught and the exemption from duty, our fleet would not be half the size it is in the County of Lunenburg to-day.

HON. MR. POWER—Oh, yes.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I know whereof I speak, and I know every branch of the fishing industry. The hon. gentleman talks of the fisheries of twenty-five years ago. The mackerel fishery was then a failure. Where did the vessels then engaged in the fisheries—some fifty in all—pursue their trade? Down along the coast of Labrador, and in the Gulf of St. Lawrence; they were fit for nothing else. True it is that at that time every vessel had to fit out with salt and provisions at Halifax. Now we fit out our own vessels;

we buy our supplies where we can get them cheapest, and equip our vessels in our own ports. That is what the Halifax merchants complain of; it is what has depressed the trade of Halifax, and as I said before the cause of that depression in Halifax means the prosperity of the whole of Nova Scotia. When the hon. gentleman talks about our vessels, he ought to know that this bounty, which he says was an electioneering kite for the year 1882, is a part of the National Policy. We know that the Opposition has been opposed to that bounty though it has proved of very great benefit to that important industry which is the wealth, the greatness, and bulwark of the Maritime Provinces. He would deprive our hardy fishermen, who pursue their calling on the roughest, the coldest and most dangerous coasts in the most inclement seasons, of what naturally and properly belongs to them—a bounty on their vessels, and the bounty on their fish. His prejudices against our Government has blinded him in our fishermen's rights. The hon. gentleman must come down to the county of Lunenburg to know something about fishermen and their wishes and aspirations, and if he does so—if he comes down and pays me a visit, I will convince him—we have the fish and fishermen to convince him, that he is entirely astray as to the fisheries, their rights and interests, and as to what he thinks is the general benefit of the fishermen. He talks about Government statistics. We have had statistics enough; there were cart-loads of statistics before the fishery Commission at Halifax, to show that the American catch in our territorial waters was worth from 20 to 25 millions of dollars a year.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—And they are of record to this day.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Yes, and yet we are told that the Americans do not know the value of our fisheries that we should have instructed them. They know it too well; their fishermen know so well the value of our fishing grounds and the great supply of fish we have there, that they have combined together, and through the United States Senators express their views on this question, but they say very little upon this point, that it is necessary to keep Canadian fish out of the United States so as to increase the price of their own fish in the American market. Now as regards reciprocity with the United States, the Maritime Provinces have been and I believe still are desirous of renewing reciprocal trade relations with our neighbours, and the Government of this country are desirous of having every facility given to reciprocity.

HON. MR. POWER—No.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I say yes, the hon. gentleman is mistaken; he shuts his eyes to that fact, but we have gone as far as we could possibly go, yes and even farther than we should have gone, to bring it about. Had we gone any further we would have placed ourselves in a false and abject position.

HON. MR. POWER—What have you done?

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Everything that honor and honesty to ourselves would permit. In adopting the National Policy, which has been a benefit to the whole country, we put on record at the same time a resolution that we were open to a reciprocity of trade in the natural products of the soil, and have held out that inducement year by year to the United States and standing offer for America to come in and meet us on that ground. What did the party of my hon. friend from Halifax do in 1874, when the late Senator Brown went over to Washington, and when, with all the influence he had at his back and the great temptations he offered, he could only get such a proposal as our own people would not and could not have accepted in the interests of Canada, and especially the Maritime Provinces, who were asked to yield up their best rights?—and yet even those terms were actually thrown out by the Americans themselves. They in effect told us that they were unwilling to negotiate on any terms—and we were left humiliated.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—Treated with contempt by the United States Senate.

HON. MR. KAULBACH.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Yes, and we have heard the then leader of the Government, Mr. Mackenzie, say it was the last effort we should make, his last overtures, to seek a treaty from the United States; that we had humiliated ourselves enough, and if any other overtures were necessary or to be made they should come from the other side of the border. Therefore the present Government, in adopting the National Policy, have unfurled their flag and said, "we are prepared to treat with you on fair terms, but we have adopted the policy of our predecessors this far, that we will never go begging to the United States again and ask for reciprocity. The hon. gentleman will ~~say~~ to convince this House and the country that the present Government is inimical and has been opposed to reciprocity. We have done everything we could do, in honor, to secure reciprocal trade, and it is impossible for us to go to the United States, and on our knees sue in forma pauperis for a reciprocity treaty, saying otherwise and without it we cannot exist as a nation. That is not the way to succeed; let us build up our industries in our own country, and let the Americans see that we can exist without their market, and that we can be independent of them so far as their trade is concerned. With regard to the Maritime Provinces the enterprise of our people down there has been remarkable. Notwithstanding the depression in the prices for fish, we find the people of Lunenburg continuing to-day building their vessels and equipping them more extensively than they ever did before. Every vessel of 100 tons we now equip with provisions on board, ready for the fisheries, is worth about $10,000. We have at present nearly 200 vessels in the county of Lunenburg engaged in that industry.

HON. MR. HOWLAN — And fine vessels too.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Yes, we can match the best of the American fleets. During the last three months 25 of our vessels have been sent off to foreign ports—the West Indies and even to the Mediterranean. The average of each vessel with its cargo is worth something like $20,000, and nine-tenths of the cargo is fish. By this you will perceive the value of our fishing industry, and I say that without the paternal care given to those fisheries by this Government, in direct opposition to the policy of the Grit Government and hon. gentlemen on that side of this House, who say the bounty system is a wretched thing and has a demoralizing effect on the fishermen—I say it has done wonders for our fisheries and is one of the fishermen's rights. France not only pays a bounty on the fish caught, but an export bounty on all fish exported, and in consequence of that and her commercial relations and treaties with Spain we cannot compete with the French in the Mediterranean and along the Spanish coast. Although there is a duty of $2 a barrel on Canadian mackerel, Lunenburg is receiving that industry. We have three times as many vessels fitted out this spring in the county from which I come for the mackerel fishing as we had had before, because our fishermen have faith in the earnestness of the Government, and they believe that they have representatives in Parliament who will see that their rights are protected. The people are self-reliant and persevering, and they believe that with the fostering care of this Government the fishing industry must be successful, and I say sad will be the day to Canada when the fisheries are lost to the Maritime Provinces. They extend thousands of miles on the shores of the Atlantic, and the three mile limit, or three miles from headland to headland, is given by the convention of 1818, and the common law has decided that inside of these waters Americans cannot enter except for shelter, repairs, wood and water. These rights Canada has determined to maintain. What is outside the limits we can largely control by our bait supply and upon that the wealth of our fisheries mainly depends. The Americans must be the sufferers by refusing our offer of reciprocity in catch and sale of fish. We in the Maritime Provinces have some assurance that with our Government taking a firm hold and control of and fostering our fishing rights, those rights as well as our internal trade must go on developing and extending, and our foreign trade will be built up and a mighty marine through our hardy and industrious fishermen who will always be ready not only to aid in maintaining their rights, but all Canada's rights on our coasts and fisheries. I regret that I am not prepared to meet this question with more statistics. I am much pleased, however, that the subject has been brought before the House, even though it is done by an hon. gentleman who is not familiar with the subject, who has never studied the matter as it should be studied, and does not know a codfish from a hake, and that it nevertheless is considered by the House of sufficient importance to discuss it.

HON. MR. POWER—My hon. friend on my left seems to think that I said there were only 100 sail of fishing vessels fitted out altogether in Halifax in one season; my statement was that one firm had fitted out some twenty-four years ago 100 sail from the County of Lunenburg alone.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I venture to say that the time 24 years ago there was not 100 sail fitted out for the whole County of Lunenburg.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I was somewhat reluctant to take any part in this debate, but as I am supposed to represent a district where large fisheries are established in my province, I might be considered remiss in my duty if I failed to do so. I may say that I think it was very desirable that this subject should be brought before this House and debated. I cannot for my part, however, agree with many of the propositions which have been brought forward. As a general rule, an industry such as the fisheries gets along best when it is least interfered with by the Government. What the Government's role is in such a case as this is to remove natural and artificial obstacles wherever they are found; improve the smaller harbors of our province, and remove all such duties and impositions as lay unnecessary burdens upon the individuals embarked in it. I freely admit that, as far as my province is concerned, much has been done for the improvement of the harbors, and I only regret that the Government held their hands a little too soon. Had they gone on, these observations of mine might not have been necessary, because I took an opportunity not very long since to call special attention to a harbor which some of my constituents were keenly interested in, and it is not necessary for me to say anything further on that subject at present. I made representations, to the effect that I am now going to remark, years ago—before this Government came into power—that one essential thing for the progress and prosperity of the fisheries is that the natural history of the fish should be studied, and where close seasons are necessary, means should be taken to discover what those close seasons are, and order the regulations concerning them to be observed. It is pretty certain that under the existing system our fisheries show an increase. I have before me a statement which I took from the report of the Halifax Commission with regard to the fisheries, showing their progress during the period between 1869 and 1875, and it is a very remarkable one. During that period there was a steady annual increase in the value of the fisheries, up to 1875, when, from some cause with which I am not acquainted, there was a decrease again. Commencing with 1869, the value of the fisheries in Canada was $6,186,323; in 1870 it increased to $6,312,409. From that onward they increased in value a million of dollars or more annually until 1875.

Now I myself believe that that increase is, to a certain extent, owing to an improved method of keeping the statistics. We now take considerable pains to ascertain the value of all the fish taken, and consequently it is quite likely that the total value is somewhat inflated thereby. The whole value of the Canadian fisheries between 1869 and 1875, as stated by the Halifax Fisheries Commission, was $58,568,014. It is certainly a very important branch, as the hon. member from Woodstock describes it, of our national industries. In some descriptions of our fisheries there is a very considerable fluctuation. That is especially the case with regard to the catch of mackerel. I have before me a pamphlet which has already been referred to in the course of this debate, the annual report of the Boston Fish Bureau. By that I see that during the years between 1861 and 1885 the value of mackerel fluctuated in the most extraordinary manner. The highest rate at which No-

1 mackerel was sold during that period was $30. For two years it sold at $23 a barrel for No. 1, and the lowest figure to which it ever fell during that time was $8.25, in 1862. I suppose the demand does not fluctuate very considerably, but no doubt the supply does. In fact anyone who is at all conversant with the fisheries—the mackerel fishery especially—knows that it is very uncertain both as to the numbers of the fish and their quality. Some years No. 1 fish are very scarce; in other years there is abundance of No. 1 fish and comparative scarcity of inferior kinds. I think the best thing the Government could do with reference to the fisheries is to take pains to see that they are not injured by the taking of fish at improper periods, and the presence of an expert in this business in the Marine Department is very desirable. Allusion has been made to the existing relations between Canada and the United States with reference to the preservation of the Canadian fisheries and the protection of our rights to the exclusive use of the waters within the three mile line. I think it would be a thing very much to be regretted that the present good feeling between the United States and Great Britain and her colonies should be disturbed by any hasty act on our part. Of course it is our duty to see to it that our rights are carefully preserved, but at the same time I do hope that the Government will give such instructions to the commanders of their vessels as will show that while they are determined to preserve our rights they will also do it in a temperate and friendly manner. Such a course I think is more likely to produce a good effect on our powerful neighbors than any extreme acts which may be had recourse to in claiming and sustaining our rights. Something has been said with reference to the bounties paid to the fishermen. I do not think that these payments come under the usual category of bounties. They seem to be a somewhat late and reluctant admission that up to that time the fishermen of the Maritime provinces had been shabbily treated in withholding from them a sum of money which had been awarded by the Halifax Commission to the fisheries of Canada. It seems like a tardy and late admission that this money originally belonged to them and should have been at once handed over to them for their use and benefit. I believe that that sum could have been most advantageously expended for the benefit of the fishermen without the intervention of the Government. It would have assisted to improve and connect the harbors with the interior means of communication, thereby incidentally improving the agricultural and other interests of the country by making the communications with their shores more perfect, opening up new branches of railway and such undertakings as that. It certainly seems to me that these so-called bounties are a too late recognition that the Government had laid violent hands on that sum of money which the fisheries had gained and which, it is clear, the fisheries ought to have retained. To claim credit for the Government in having allowed drawbacks to the fishing interest upon the canvas which they use for their sails, and on the twine which they use in their business, is a very far-fetched argument indeed. A paternal Government should not at first tax the articles essential to carrying on their business and then claim credit for the drawbacks when they see, perhaps a little late in the day, that a mistake had been made. The hon. gentleman from Lunenburg congratulated himself and his Province on the great increase of their mackerel fleet, I should be very proud to see the Lunenburg private signal flying on the vessels frequenting our shores. No doubt they would find it to their advantage to frequent our coast in pursuit of the mackerel, but I think there are other causes to account for that increase besides those mentioned by the hon. gentleman. He says that they have been increased by the bounty given by the Government, and on account of the liberal drawbacks offered. I am inclined to think that the increase has occurred in consequence of the unhappy decay of our maritime interests in other respects. No longer does it pay to equip and sail those fine vessels which formed a merchant marine not to be surpassed in any part of the world; no longer do our seamen, masters and mates find employment as they formerly did in navigating such vessels, and a large part of the capital and a large number of those who were formerly employed in building, equipping and sailing those splendid vessels have taken refuge in the Port of Lunenburg. I have no doubt that he and his Province will give them a hearty reception there, and I do hope that their industry will be handsomely rewarded. As for my own Province we no doubt feel that we contributed much more largely towards the gaining of that award of the Halifax Commission, considering the extent of our seaboard and the numbers of our population engaged in the fisheries, than almost any other part of the Dominion, and for that reason if you talk to the Prince Edward Island fishermen they will undoubtedly tell you, and tell you truly, that they claim as their interest in that award at least $1,000,000; and when you hand them over, dole out to them these broken fragments and call them bounties, they accept them certainly but they do not feel that their interests have been faithfully dealt with by the present Government of the Dominion.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I do not intend to take up the time of the House for more than four or five minutes, but I cannot refrain from saying a word or two on the subject before us. I am something in the condition of the hon. gentleman who moved this motion—that is to say, I am like the Oxford professor who was said to be perfectly capable of filling the position because he brought an entirely unbiased mind to it—he did not know anything about it. It is perfectly evident that the hon. member who makes this enquiry was only intent on attacking the Government in the manner which has distinguished his action in this House for several sessions, ever since I have had the honor of being a member of the Senate. He has evidently not studied this subject—not brought any knowledge to bear upon it—made no statement which has enlightened the House in any way, but he has made a series of assertions which might be mischievous if they were of any weight whatever in the House, or could have any effect upon the public mind. Fortunately they are of no weight here, and outside they probably have quite a little weight. Up to this time many members of this House have utterly refrained from answering him. They have refrained from a feeling of pity, rather than anything else, considering the mental condition which he exhibits in the House. They have felt that it was hardly proper to take notice of his utterances or to answer them as if they came from a person who was fully responsible for his actions. Therefore, as far as his speech is concerned, the only point which I shall take notice of is this: He kindly assures us that the United States Government had no idea of interfering, and that the United States fishermen had no idea of interfering with the fishery rights of Canada, and at the same moment he asks that the Government shall increase the fleet which is employed for the protection of our fisheries. I want to know why he demands that the fleet be increased if he believes there is no danger of infringement upon our rights. He is not worth wasting words upon; but I was very sorry to hear a member of the Chamber of Commerce from the City of Halifax, who speaks here with a double responsibility, endeavoring to make a point against the Government in regard to its not having shut out the United States fishermen from our grounds on the 1st of July last. If the Government at that time had attempted to do so in the midst of the fishing season, irritation would have been created which probably would have prevented us from having any possible chance of renewing the Treaty, and then that hon. gentleman, I venture to say, would have been one of the very first in this House to propose a vote of censure on the Government for taking the course which he now recommends. It is well known that the Government of the United States was favorable to a renewal of the Treaty. But it is also well known that the power of treaty making, or even of negotiation, does not rest with the Executive. It was well known that Congress was not in session, and it was the part of wisdom and prudence, under those circumstances, for our Government to say, "We leave you in the enjoyment of your privileges until the time comes when we can meet and have an amicable negotiation;" and if any disposition had been shown to interfere with the fishermen of the United States at that moment, no one would have been quicker to censure the Government than the hon. gentleman himself and those with whom he acts. I think it is perfectly safe to say that the reception of his remarks in Halifax, if they are reported there as they are spoken in this House, speaking of losing half a season's fishing by not interfering with the United States fishermen, will not be favorable—they will not be responded to by any cheers on the part of the commercial body of which he is a member.

HON. MR. POWER—I did make a similar statement in the Chamber of Commerce, and it was received with approval. We had a discussion on the subject there.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman has several times referred to the position of the Government with regard to the reciprocity treaty. I do not intend to dwell upon it at any great length, but I will say this—an attempt was made in 1874 to negotiate a treaty, by which, in the anxiety of the gentleman who was a self-appointed Commissioner, everything was conceded to the United States except Canada itself. A draft treaty was made which was published in the Globe of 24th November, 1874. There the hon. gentleman will find the particulars of it, and he will see there that such concessions were made at that time as would not be tolerated for a moment now. It was proposed to surrender the fishery claims, to receive free of duty nearly every manufacture of the United States, whereas they had been heretofore charging us very high duties on everything we took to them; that it was intended to build the Caughnawaga Canal, to cost $10,000,000, with 14 feet of water on the mitre sills, on the Lake Champlain route, and no way was provided for vessels to get through to New York when they reached the foot of the lake; we were to finish the St. Lawrence canals in a very short period, and other concessions were made which bound us over hand and foot to the United States, and after getting the hon. gentleman's best offer, the United States Government said "we will not make a treaty, but we will keep your offer." They have that offer yet before them. Does anyone suppose that we can go to the United States, when they have the offer of 1874, in their archives, and propose to negotiate treaty on less favorable terms? If they want a treaty they will not hesitate to ask for it. They have in the Tariff Act of 1879 a recognition on our part of a desire to exchange the products of the soil whenever they are ready to meet us. We are handicapped, and have been since 1874, by the hon. gentleman's leader in former times, a commissioner that was appointed by himself and spent six months at Washington endeavoring to persuade Mr. Fish, the Secretary of State, to accede to his proposals. As far as the fisheries are concerned, I have no doubt the Government will protect our honor. They understand perfectly well what our rights are, but I think it is premature and always impolitic, if not improper, to force such discussions as this at a time when there is some hope and chance of arriving at an amicable settlement. The Government have not been remiss; everyone knows that prior to the last treaty our rights were vigorously enforced, that the contention that we possess a right to the three miles limit from headland to headland was constantly maintained. Hon. members know that nearly 100 ships were brought into our ports to be condemned for infringing the treaty. Our interests are safe in the hands of the Government and we may very well rest in that security, and trust delicate matters of negotiation like this to the executive, until we know the grounds on which the discussions have been had and until we understand perfectly well what the actual condition of the question is. I think it is safest to leave it in that position. The discussion which has been started here has resulted in eliciting useful information, but it was not started for that purpose, but simply for the purpose of making a covert attack on the Government.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I thought I would take advantage of the opportunity afforded by this question to draw the attention of the Senate to some statistics relative to the growth of the fishing industry, tending to show that all proper steps have been taken by the Government, so far as they are concerned, to enable this growth to be accomplished. The total number of vessels engaged in the sea fisheries in 1870 was 639; the total number in 1885 was 1,120; the total value of the sea fisheries in 1869, was $4,186,323, and in 1885, $15,302,243, showing that the fisheries have thriven. Certainly these figures furnish no evidence of neglect on the part of the Government. I agree with the hon. member from Prince Edward Island that perhaps the best thing to be done with the fisheries is to give them free scope and not to interfere with them in any way except so far as to protect them during the close season, which has been done, and the contribution which has been made by the fish hatcheries, which the Government keep up. All that has been attended to. When the Confederation took place the fisheries laws which existed in Canada proper placed the subject under the control of the Commissioner of Crown Lands, an office which I filled at that time, and had occupied for some years before. It was then, for the first time, that close attention was given to the fisheries, and hatcheries were established, and we stood in a better position in that respect in old Canada than the Maritime Provinces occupied. The system was extended to the Maritime Provinces shortly after Confederation and the legislation which has been attended with such good results was extended to the whole Dominion. Up to that time they had no such system, I believe, in the Lower Provinces. They had some legislation in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and probably Prince Edward Island, but it was of a general character. It was haphazard; there was no systemized legislation and no system of protection such as could be given by the establishment of a fisheries department. The Department of Fisheries was created and a number of officers were employed to assist in the protection of the fisheries both in old Canada and in the lower provinces. The establishment of that department is some evidence of the care which was taken by the Government for the protection of the fisheries. The number of fishery officers employed in the Maritime Provinces in 1868 was 150, and in 1885 it was 427. The expenditure in connection with the protection of the sea-coast fisheries in 1869 was $19,363, and in 1885 it was $63,589. Showing not only by the number of vessels and the value of the fisheries from year to year, but by the creation of a department charged with the special duty of furthering this industry and by the extension of its operations, the number of officers employed and the amount of expenditure incurred in all these respects, that the Government has from time to time, and in every way in its power, given attention to this industry, the value of which we all understand, and which the gentlemen from the Maritime Provinces, speaking with a knowledge which the hon. gentleman which started this inquiry might envy, and which he should strive to emulate and study before he ventures to make an explanation on the subject, have fully stated to the House. Then the hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Haythorne) threw some discredit, as I thought, upon the exemption of the nets and seines and lines of fishermen from duties. I do not see why he should discredit that, or why he thinks it is a slight matter. It shows that the Government is desirous of removing all obstacles from the way of the fishermen in reference to duties on articles necessary for their calling. The hon. gentleman from Halifax tries to establish that we have imposed duties on articles that the fishermen use for food, but it turns out that those articles referred to are not used by the fishermen to any extent for food.

HON. MR. POWER—They use flour:

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—So that in the way of legislation of a character to encourage the fisheries—by the establishment of fish hatcheries; by the opening up new markets as far as we could, and in every way, everything has been done that is possible to be done for the encouragement and prosperity of this great industry. I wish very much that this question had either not been presented at all, or, if presented, had been introduced by somebody who knows something about it.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION WITH THE NORTH-WEST.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. GIRARD rose to inquire

If any arrangement has been entered into between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway, by which Telegraph Messages may be transmitted from Manitoba and the North-West to any part of the Dominion at the same rate at present charged by the other Canadian line, and when the Canadian

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL.

Pacific Railway will be in a position to transmit public messages, as at present the people of Manitoba are dependent upon American lines, and extortionate charges.

He said—After the important debate which has just closed it would come with bad grace from me to detain the House with a long discussion. Nevertheless, I propose to make a few observations with regard to this enquiry. When, in 1870, for the first time we saw telegraphic communication established from St. Paul in the United States across our vast prairies to Winnipeg, by the Great Northwest Telegraph Company, it was naturally a cause of great joy to us all to have the means of sending our messages rapidly. At the same time, the telegraphic posts themselves were a source of consolation to travellers over the prairies during stormy nights, when there was nothing else to indicate where the road lay before them. Hitherto the telegraphic service has been performed by the Great Northwestern Company most satisfactorily, except in one particular, and that is our complaint to-day,—their tariff of charges is too high. The object of my inquiry is to ask the Government if it would not be possible, in some way or another, to give us cheaper telegraphic communication with the east. The rate was, at the beginning, $2.50 for ten words—a charge of 25 cents a word. It was as high a rate as on cable messages sent from here to the Old Country. We have paid that rate rather than be without telegraphic communication; at the same time we consider that it is the duty of the Government to relieve us somewhat from such a heavy tariff. It seems to me that there is a certain identity between a message sent by telegraph, and a message sent by post. It is true that we receive our telegraphic messages through the United States, and I suppose it would not have been easy for the Government to assist us in any way except by paying the expense of the message from the United States. It seems to me, however, that if messages by post are sent on easy terms between the two countries, it would be equally possible to make a similar arrangement for telegraphic messages. In 1873 or 1874 the Government took power to establish telegraphic communication between this Province and the far west, but they did not succeed. There was a large sum of money expended in that attempt, in places where, I am sorry to say, with many other expenditures made at the same time, it was of no profit to the Dominion.

HON. MR. DICKEY—In the muskets.

HON. MR. GIRARD—The telegraph poles that were set up could only remain standing during the winter; in the spring when the thaw came on they went down. There is now an opportunity for the Government to do something in our interest. The Pacific Railway Company have completed their organization; before long the railway will be in operation from ocean to ocean, as we have been proud of saying on many occasions, and will afford means of communication between the east and the west. At present the telegraphic communication is used only for the working of the road; the public has no access to it. However, so much of the public money has been expended under the agreement between the Dominion Government and the company, who are now the owners of the railway, that I think it would be easy for the Government to make some arrangement by which we could have telegraphic communication on as easy terms as the rest of the Dominion. The rate by the the Great North-Western of $2.50 for ten words has been reduced to $1; but one dollar is too much, when in other provinces of the Dominion the people have the same service for 25 cents. Under those circumstances my idea was to ask the hon. gentleman representing the Government in this House, if it would not be possible to put us in a better condition as regards telegraphic communication in the future.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—In reply to the question of my hon. friend, I wish very much I could say that we were about to put the North-West in a better position with regard to telegraphic communication. Of course it would be possible to do so, but it would be at a considerable expense. We have not yet made any arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company with regard to the transmission of messages over their line. Then my hon. friend asks in the second part of his enquiry, whether the Pacific Railway Company will soon be in a position to transmit public messages without going through the United States. In reply to that part of the hon. gentleman's inquiry I beg to say that the Pacific Railway Company (so I am informed by their officers) will very shortly be in a position to send messages from Manitoba entirely through Canada proper to the rest of the world. The Government has not interfered in any way; the line will be a private line belonging to the Pacific Railway Company, and the messages from Manitoba will have to take the same chance as messages from any one part of Canada to another. No doubt they will make a reduction on present charges, because messages have now to go to the United States. They will soon be taken all the way over their own line, and they will be able to do it cheaper than it is now done; still it will be a matter of private arrangement between the people of Manitoba and the company. The Government do not propose to interfere in any way to make a special tariff for that province, or to interfere with the contract the company would make. It would not do for the government to interfere with such contracts; because my hon. friend will see that if we gave any subsidy to the company to send messages to Manitoba at a lower rate than they otherwise would, we would have to do the same for other provinces, and it is something that we could not undertake to do. The line will shortly be opened, and after it is opened the people of Manitoba will have to make their own bargain.

LONDON AND ONTARIO INVESTMENT COYS. BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. MCKINDSEY moved the second reading of Bill (F) "An Act respecting the London and Ontario Investment Company, limited."

He said—By this bill it is proposed to amend the Act incorporating the London and Ontario Investment Company. It is a loan company and a borrowing company as well, with its chief office in the city of Toronto. It has been found, for the issue of bonds, debentures and other securities, that they are principally sold and disposed of to capitalists and other parties in Great Britain. It has been ascertained, in cases of transmission by will or by intestacy, that doubts have arisen as to the proof of the transfer of those shares sold in Great Britain; and it is proposed by this bill to establish an office in some central place in Great Britain for the purpose of issuing those bonds, and for the transfer of them also whenever it may become necessary under certain proofs. The bonds, as issued by the central office in Toronto, are under Canadian currency issue. These bonds in England are in a currency which is not generally understood by the people there and it is proposed also to amend this Act so as to enable an office in England to issue bonds in sterling currency, and to lift and exchange shares issued in currency of Canada for sterling currency, at the amount of value of £50 11s. sterling. This bill asks for powers, in the first place, to establish an office there for the purpose of keeping books for the transfer of shares which have been issued, and in the second place, for power to settle what proof may be necessary when shares will require to be transferred, excepting as to bearer.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

INTERPRETATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (C) "An Act further to amend the Interpretation Act."

In the Committee,

SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL proposed to add a new section as follows:

"3. Section 15 of the said Act is hereby repealed, and the following substituted therefor:

"15. Every person who obtains an Act of a private or personal character, shall pay to the Queen's Printer the cost of printing five hundred copies of such Act in the English language and two hundred and fifty copies in the French language."

He said that after those private bills became Acts of Parliament, 3,000 copies of these private Acts were printed, and it was to make each person who obtained a private Act contribute something towards the general cost of printing them. It was a very small portion indeed of the total expense of the 3,000 copies that are published, because each individual only paid for 500 copies of his own private Act though there were 3,000 copies of it published.

The clause was adopted.

HON. MR. POWER said before the committee rose he wished to express his gratification that the Minister had seen fit to make certain amendments in the Bill, one or two of which had been suggested in this House. The meaning of the Bill was made more clear, and the Minister himself had an opportunity to introduce this new clause which was one of consequence. Some hon. gentlemen seem to think that any time taken in this House in discussing the wording of a Bill was time thrown away, but it was a mistaken view of the matter altogether. It was better that a Bill introduced in the Senate should be amended in the Senate rather than go down to the other House and be amended there.

An amendment there is a reflection on the capacity of the Senate for legislation, and further, the principal business of the Upper House is to look after legislation. The members of the Senate have the leisure and the disposition perhaps to do so to a great extent than the members of the Commons whose time is more occupied in things of a political character. He thought that it would be well to amend the clause in the 11th line so as to remove ambiguity. As it stood there was some doubt as to its meaning. The word "his" there applied to the word "Minister" at the beginning of the 10th line.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL thought not, and did not consider any amendment necessary.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE, from the Committee, reported the Bill with amendments which were concurred in.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—Before the House adjourns may I ask the hon. Postmaster-General if the protest of the Deputy Warden of St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary against the reception of the evidence of Demers, asked for on the 21st inst., will be laid before the House. The Minister is, no doubt, aware that the document, or rather a copy of it, which could not be found when I brought the matter before the House, has since been discovered. As it is a very short document which could be copied in half an hour, I should like to have it laid before the House as soon as possible.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—The copy is ready and I intended to have brought it down to-day, but I forgot it.

The Senate adjourned at 5:30 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Tuesday, March 30th, 1886.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine proceedings.

THE PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT.

SECOND REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

HON. MR. READ, from the Joint Committee on the Printing of Parliament, presented their second report. He said: I beg to move that the report be now adopted. I may say that it is intended to take the same course in the other House, as the report shows that the money has been held for the tenders for some time.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERPRETATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL moved the third reading of Bill (C) "An Act further to amend the Interpretation Act."

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

CANADA PERMANENT LOAN AND SAVINGS COMPANY BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill (H) "An Act to consolidate the borrowing powers of the Canada Permanent Loan and Savings Company, and to authorize the said company to issue debenture stock." He said: This Bill is to consolidate the borrowing powers of the company, and to authorize them to issue debenture stock. It is provided that the liabilities of the company shall never exceed double the paid up capital, and a further amount upon which not less than 20% has been paid; but in no case shall the total liabilities of the company to the public at any time exceed three times the amount actually paid up in respect of fixed and permanent capital, or shares in such company, nor shall they at any time exceed the amount of principal remaining unpaid on the mortgages at such time held by the company, all loans or advances made to shareholders upon the security of their stock to be deducted. The company ask for an alteration in the Act under which they are created, by which they may be permitted to issue debentures of not less than $100 each, subject to the above limitation, and they also ask to be permitted to issue debenture stock as part of the regular debenture debt, to rank equally with the debentures. They also provide that they shall not by any legislation contained in this bill be exempted from the effect of any alterations which may be made in the general acts respecting loan companies carrying on business in Ontario. The company is known to be a leading institution of that kind in this country and its stock is quoted at 115 premium. I do not think there is anything in the bill which is in any way objectionable.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the second time.

SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS BEFORE JUSTICES BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE

The House resolved itself into a committee of the whole on Bill (A) "An Act to make further provisions respecting summary proceedings before Justices and other Magistrates."

In the committee, on the 1st clause,

HON. MR. GOWAN said: I wish to refer to a communication which I have received since the second reading of this Bill from a gentleman well known to many hon. members of this House, the Chief Justice of Manitoba. He writes to me, concerning the measure, as follows:—

"I am much pleased with it and feel that there is an actual necessity for it. Every practitioner has felt that necessity, and judges have been compelled to give effect to objections in which they felt there was little or no merit. Every one who has anything to do with the administration of law will feel thankful to you for your efforts to improve this branch of the law. I am afraid motions to quash are more frequently made upon something such as is and ought to be cured by your Bill than when merits are relied upon."

I missed seeing before the second reading of this Bill an article which appeared in a French newspaper published in Montreal, or I should have then referred to it. A single extract I will venture to read. It really goes to the essence of the measure and is expressed more clearly and pointedly than I was able to present it. The paragraph is as follows:—

"Car il est absurde de continuer à faire dépendre la validité des décisions des juges de paix de simples subtilités légales sur lesquelles se divisent les avocats d'expérience et même les juges, et qui, par conséquent, ne peuvent raisonnablement être de la compétence d'un simple juge de paix." (A laugh).

I do not see that I have done wrong in attempting to quote this extract in the language in which it is printed. I am anxious for the success of this measure and I desire that those gentlemen who do not understand English should at least hear one point of the opinion expressed by a leading journal of great ability. Whatever one may think of its politics, it is conducted by an able and skilful writer. The French language is spoken as of right in this House, and so long as that is the case I do not think that I am doing wrong in attempting to quote from a French newspaper, and to say a few words in the same language.

Hon. messieurs—Je vous exprime mon grand chagrin parce que je ne puis pas expliquer en français la raison d'être de cette mesure est en détail. Hélas, ce n'est pas possible pour moi à présent, mais je ne suis pas trop âgé pour apprendre la langue française, et je vive dans l'espérance de l'acquérir et de parler à quelque autre temps, toujours imparfaitement, je crains, mais parlant en français dans cette Chambre.

I beg to move the adoption of the first clause, the simple object of which is to include Police Magistrates and other officers.

HON. MR. DICKEY—It will be in the recollection of the House that I felt it to be my duty last session to take considerable exception to this Bill in reference to very many of its details. It was then most effectually threshed out, in every respect, and after making no less than seven amendments to the Bill in Committee, after its second reading, I feel that I ought to say to the House that the measure having been well considered last session, unless it contains some provision which has escaped my notice, the House should be disposed to let it pass. So far as I am concerned I shall make no further objection to it as it stands. I am prepared to let it go to another place where it will be subject to the investigation of the Minister of Justice and other gentlemen who may be disposed to consider the question more in detail. I trust that the House will allow my hon. friend to carry through his Bill, because I understand, from his explanation, and I have ascertained from comparing the Bill before us with the one which passed through the House last year, that it is to a large extent the same measure.

The 1st clause was adopted.

On the 2nd clause,

HON. MR. GOWAN said—In moving the adoption of the 2nd section I take the opportunity to thank my hon. friend opposite for the kind aid he has given me on this and on the former occasion. The only alteration that is made in the Bill is a transposition of one of the clauses, and some slight change in the language of section 2. The words "upon affidavit" have been struck out. It was considered here and elsewhere that they might induce a certain laxity in the administration of justice on the part of magistrates, and therefore I thought it better to omit them.

The clause was adopted.

On the third clause,

HON. MR. POWER said: I think it would make this clause so clear that he who runs might read and understand it, if my hon. friend would insert "amongst others" after the word "matters." The impression made on me last year, and upon a first reading of the Bill this year was that the matters enumerated in the succeeding portion of the clause were the only matters to which the preceding sections applied. I know there is a proviso at the end of the paragraph 4, which removes the doubt, but I think it would be as well to insert the words which I have suggested.

HON. MR. GOWAN—I see no necessity for these words, but there is no harm in inserting them, and I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to and the clause as amended was adopted.

On the fifth clause,

HON. MR. MACDONALD called attention to the fifth line of the section which proposed to protect justices of the peace from actions for improper convictions. That would be offering a premium to Justices to make loose convictions. He knew a case in British Columbia, where a Justice of the Peace was being sued by some Indians for a false conviction, and it would be a great injustice to those Indians if they were subjected to expense for nothing.

HON. MR. GOWAN said that the whole matter was vested in the judges, and it would be only in very clear cases that they would make such an order. If the clause proposed to cure every conviction and disable parties from bringing an action, he would not for a moment have proposed it, but the judges were merely given discretion to make such an order if they saw good reasons to do so.

HON. MR. MACDONALD did not like the clause, knowing that magistrates frequently make very loose and careless convictions. This clause would be likely to make them still more careless.

HON. MR. GOWAN did not think so. The language of the clause was not imperative; the judge must exercise his judicial discretion, and no judge in the Dominion would use that discretion to cure improper conduct on the part of a Justice of the Peace.

The clause was adopted.

On the 6th clause,

HON. MR. GOWAN said—My hon. friend from Halifax made a suggestion which I think may possibly be desirable; it is as to fixing the amount. He seems to think that as the language now reads it might be considered too arbitrary, and that might lead to a fixed sum being applied to all cases alike. The hon. gentleman has shown me an amendment which he proposes to make, and to which I can see no objection if he wishes to move it.

HON. MR. POWER—The clause provides that the party shall enter into a recognizance; that might be construed as limiting the power of the court to one sum for all cases, which would be manifestly unfair. The amendment which I propose, and which I submitted to the hon. introducer of the bill, was to strike out at the beginning of the line the words "sums to be fixed" and inserting at the end "such as may be prescribed"—giving the court power to fix a larger or smaller sum for the amount of the recognizance.

HON. MR. GOWAN—I agree to that amendment.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Is it intended that the judges shall fix a specific sum for all cases, or that they shall vary that sum in proportion to the magnitude or importance of each case?

HON. MR. GOWAN.

HON. MR. GOWAN—To vary the sum according to the magnitude and importance of the case. In a trifling case the sum would be merely nominal; in an important case the sum would be large. Under the existing Act the amount is £50 sterling in all cases.

HON. MR. VIDAL—You intend to cure that?

HON. MR. GOWAN—Yes. This clause alters the law in that particular and enables the Judge to fix the amount according to the importance of the case.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Then the amendment of the hon. member from Halifax is not necessary. It is a mere change of words which does not alter the meaning.

HON. MR. POIRIER—I believe the Judge has sufficient latitude under the clause as it stands; he can fix a greater or smaller sum at his discretion.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—It seems to me that the sum is fixed by a general order of the court; therefore I think it is necessary that discretion should be left with the Judge to fix the amount according to the nature of the offence and the ability of the parties to give security. These matters should be left to the discretion of the court in all cases; otherwise great injustice might be done. My impression is that the amendment proposed by the hon. member from Halifax will be necessary in order to give the Judge discretion to fix the amount of the security.

HON. MR. GOWAN—I do not at all object to it. I think perhaps it would make it more clear. At the same time I think that the clause, if fairly construed, is as he desires to have it.

HON. GENTLEMEN—Carried!

HON. MR. POWER—It is rather unusual, when a member who has given a bill a good deal of study proposes an amendment which is accepted by the mover and meets with the approval of the Law Clerk of the House, that it should be objected to by gentlemen who have not given much attention to the measure and whose professional training has not led them to inquire into subjects of this kind. To say the least it is an unusual proceeding.

HON. MR. PLUMB—There are gentlemen here who have had a professional training who object to the amendment.

The amendment was declared lost on a division.

The clause was adopted.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD, from the Committee, reported the bill with an amendment which was concurred in.

HON. MR. GOWAN moved the 3rd reading of the bill.

HON. MR. POWER—I think as a general thing, in legislative bodies even less dignified than this, when one or two members at this stage of this session ask that a measure stand over for a day, it is not customary to refuse. I do not think I have ever known a request of that sort to be refused, and I regret that the usual courtesy is not extended in this case.

HON. MR. GOWAN—As there are objections to the Bill being read the third time to-day, I move that it be read the third time to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill () "An Act to incorporate the Northumberland Straits Railway Company (Mr. Howlan).

REPRESENTATION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA AND MANTOBA IN THE CABINET.

HON. MR. McINNES (B. C.) moved

That, in the opinion of this House, justice and expediency both demand that the Central or Prairie Section and the Western or Pacific Section of the Dominion should each be represented in the Queen's Privy Council of Canada.

He said—This is substantially the same motion of which I gave notice last July. I would have proceeded at that time to discuss the subject and ask an expression of opinion as to the desirability or feasibility of having each Province or rather each of the three great natural divisions of the Dominion represented in the Cabinet, were it not that the session was nearing its close. A large number of the members of this House had gone home, and those who remained were becoming somewhat restive, owing to the unusual length of the session. Consequently I feared that the subject would not receive that calm and deliberate consideration to which, in my humble judgment, its importance entitled it. I propose avoiding making a similar mistake this session, and shall, therefore, at once proceed with my resolution while the session is yet young and vigorous, and while there is a pretty full attendance from all the Provinces present. I shall proceed to discuss the resolution and ask the indulgence of the House while I, as briefly as possible, endeavor to make some practical suggestions and observations on this important subject of representation in the Cabinet of the three great natural sections into which this Dominion is divided. In establishing my position I will require to make a number of comparisons between the different Provinces as to their area, population and revenues, and in doing so I shall endeavor to make as fair and honest comparisons as possible under the circumstances. By so doing, I hope that I shall have the support of the majority in this House; and I confidently expect that the resolution will not only be received and discussed in a non-sectional and non-partizan spirit, but that it will be discussed with the sole object in view of furthering the best interests of our common country.

But before I attempt to speak to the resolution I feel that I owe it to this House and to myself to say that I have not and never have had any aspirations of becoming a Cabinet Minister. Had I ever entertained such an idea my strictures, my criticisms and my exposures of a few of what I conceive to be the wrong-doings of the Government during the last two or three years would have forever precluded or destroyed any such possibility, especially with a Government that had, and has still, such a very large majority at its back in both Houses. Consequently, in approaching the discussion of the subject I do so perfectly untrammelled and unbiased, having no ulterior object in view, save the best interests of my province and of the Dominion generally. I might say here, before proceeding further, that I am perfectly satisfied that the humblest and least qualified representative from British Columbia or Manitoba, in the House of Commons and the Senate, is fit to be taken into the Cabinet, and would be an improvement upon and serve the interests of those Provinces better than the ablest man that we could have from the Eastern Provinces. We want men who are identified with those great sections, who live there and have the confidence and sympathy of the people, and are not simply nominal representatives.

I find according to the census of 1881, that the population of the Dominion was 4,324,810, and according to the most reliable data I can procure, that population was very thinly spread over no less an area than 3,610,392 square miles. The mighty republic to the south of us has an area of 2,933,589 square miles, exclusive of Alaska. Even including Alaska with its 577,390 square miles we have yet nearly 100,000 square miles more than that great country. And if we include the island of Newfoundland, with her 37,000 square miles—and I think it is only reasonable to assume that ere long that colony will become a province of our Dominion—we have 136,404 square miles of territory more than the United States. Even the great continent of Europe with its 325,000,000 of population has only 153,000 square miles more than we possess in Canada. I find that of the 3,610,000 square miles in the Dominion, that only 805,140, or considerably less than one-fourth, is comprised in the seven provinces. The remaining 2,665,254 square miles in the five North-West Territories, namely, Alberta, Assiniboia, Athabasca, Saskatchewan—and for convenience sake I will include Keewatin, although I believe Keewatin has been acknowledged recently to belong to the Province of Ontario—

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Only a small part of Keewatin.

HON. MR. MCINNES—That will only assist my argument by still maintaining it as one of the Territories. The Dominion is divided politically into seven provinces, and in order to show the great disparity and injustice territorially, numerically, and financially that has been done, and is being done to important sections of our country—sections that will, I believe, in the near future become the most prosperous and important of the Dominion, provided they are not misgoverned in the future as unfortunately they have been for a number of years past, and provided an enlightened, progressive and generous policy is followed in the future to this great North West and British Columbia, and that each of those two great natural divisions of our Dominion is represented in the Cabinet. I propose to prove my proposition by comparing the area, population and revenue of the different provinces; and that my comparisons may be fair and just in every sense of the word, I will omit the Territories, as their revenue is not given, and confine my observations almost exclusively to the provinces. I propose to deal with each province separately, and will begin in the extreme east, the birthplace of so much knowledge and wisdom, and take each province as it occurs westward until I reach the Pacific.

I find that the area of Prince Edward Island is 2,133 square miles, or less than 1/377th of the seven provinces. According to the census of 1881 she had in round numbers a population of 108,000 or one fortieth of the entire population of the Dominion. I also find from the official returns that during the last five years Prince Edward Island has contributed in customs duties to the Dominion Treasury, $991,494, or the 1/98th part of the entire customs revenue of the Dominion.

ion. Two of her representatives have been honored with seats in the Cabinet, namely the Hon. David Laird, from 1873 to 1876 and the late lamented Mr. Pope from 1878 to 1882. It will, therefore, be seen that Prince Edward Island has been represented in the Cabinet seven out of the 14 years she has been a member of the Confederation, and I contend, ought to have a representative now, and doubtless will have one whenever the just and reasonable principle of having each province represented in the Cabinet is recognized and acknowledged; and I believe that the day is much nearer at hand than some members in this House are disposed to believe, when public sentiment will compel its recognition and enforcement.

I find that Nova Scotia has an area of 20,907 square miles, or a little under the thirty-ninth part of the seven provinces. In 1881 she had a population of 440,572, or a little over one-tenth of the entire population of the whole Dominion. During the last five years she has paid in customs duties $8,218,084 or one-twelfth of the Dominion. Since Confederation she has been continuously represented by two members in the Cabinet.

I find that New Brunswick has a area of 27,174 square miles, or one twenty-ninth of the seven provinces. In 1881 she had a population of 321,233, or less than one-fifteenth part of the whole. During the last five years she has paid in customs duties $6,458,663, or one-fifteenth of the whole customs revenue. Since Confederation she has been continuously represented in the Cabinet by two members.

I find that Quebec has an area of 188,688 square miles, or less than one-fourth the area of the seven provinces. In 1881 she had a population of 1,359,027, or a little more than one-third the population of the Dominion. During the last five years she has paid in customs duties $40,598,535, or nearly one-half of the whole customs revenue. Since Confederation she has been continuously represented in the Cabinet by four ministers.

I find that Ontario, exclusive of Keewatin, or that portion of it that is now acknowledged to belong to her, has an area—(I may say that I have been unable to ascertain what the area of Keewatin is, or that portion belonging to Ontario)—of 1,101,733 square miles, or about one-seventh of the total area of the seven provinces. In 1881 she had a population of 1,923,228, or about two-fifths of the total population of the Dominion. During the last five years she has paid in customs duties $33,432,230, or a little over one-third of the entire customs revenue. Ever since Confederation she has been continuously represented in the Cabinet by four, and a portion of the time by five, members.

I find that Manitoba has an area of 123,200 square miles, or about one-sixteenth the area of the seven provinces. In 1881 she had a population of 65,954. In 1871 her population was only 18,995. It will therefore be seen that she increased in population in the ten years 46,959, or 247%. If she has increased in anything like the same ratio during the last five years, her present population must be, in round numbers, about 150,000, and for convenience sake I will take the population at 150,000. Indeed any one who has watched the rapid strides made in population and wealth in that country will readily agree with the estimate I have made. During the last five years I find that she has paid in customs duties $4,218,789, or one twenty-third part of the whole customs revenue of the Dominion. She has no representatives in the Cabinet, and never had one, although a member of the Confederation for the last sixteen years. As I have already stated, she has paid into the Federal treasury during the last five years $4,218,789, consequently, financially speaking, she is entitled to four Cabinet Ministers for every one to which Prince Edward Island is entitled; she is entitled to one for every two to which Nova Scotia is entitled. Nova Scotia has two representatives in the Cabinet.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Quebec would be entitled to ten representatives in the Cabinet on the same principle.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I am coming to that. Manitoba is entitled to two representatives for every three to which New Brunswick is entitled. New Brunswick has two; Manitoba has none. She is entitled to one, or a little more than one for nine to which Quebec is entitled. Quebec has four. She is entitled to one for eight to which Ontario is entitled; Ontario has five, and she is a little more than entitled to one as compared with British Columbia. Territorially, Manitoba is entitled to 57 representatives in the Cabinet to one for Prince Edward Island, yet the island Province has had a representative in the Cabinet for one-half of the time during which she has been a member of the Confederation. Manitoba is entitled to five for every one to which Nova Scotia is entitled; to four for every one to which New Brunswick is entitled; and almost equally to one to which Quebec is entitled. She is entitled to one for every one to which Ontario is entitled, and to one for three to which British Columbia is entitled. Manitoba according to population is equally entitled to a Cabinet Minister with Prince Edward Island.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Hear, hear.

HON. MR. McINNES—My hon. friend from Alberton says "hear, hear." I have just stated the population she had in 1881, and I think I am giving a very low estimate of her present population, and not only is the population of Manitoba to be taken into consideration but also that of the North-West Territories, as any Cabinet Minister from Manitoba would be looked upon, and justly so, as the representative not only of that Province but of the four territories west of it; and I repeat, that Manitoba according to population is better entitled to a representative in the Cabinet than Prince Edward Island. If you take the population of the North-West Territories and Manitoba together I think you will find that it is quite beyond that of Prince Edward Island. I am only sorry that Prince Edward Island has not a larger population.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—It is the quality not the quantity we look at.

HON. MR. McINNES—Manitoba, according to population, is entitled to one for three to which Nova Scotia is entitled. Nova Scotia has two. Manitoba is entitled to one for every two to which New Brunswick is entitled; New Brunswick has two.

HON. MR. McINNES.

She is equally entitled to one for eight to which Quebec is entitled; Quebec has always had four. Manitoba is entitled to one for twelve to which Ontario is entitled; Ontario has had four and most of the time five representatives in the Cabinet. She is entitled to two for one to which British Columbia is entitled. British Columbia is in the same position as Manitoba—she has no representative, and never had one in the Cabinet.

HON. MR. POWER—Yes, she had one.

HON. MR. McINNES—She never had one in the true sense of the word; it is true that Sir John Macdonald was a representative of British Columbia in the Cabinet for four years. He was elected for Victoria—I will not say how, or under what circumstances; hon. gentlemen all know. He was elected, and was nominally a representative of that province for four years. It is equally true that the late Sir Francis Hincks, after he was defeated for a constituency in Ontario, had to find a resting place in British Columbia. It is equally true that Sir Hector Langevin, the present Minister of Public Works, after he met with a downfall in Quebec, had to seek refuge in Manitoba. But that is not the sense in which I want to see a representative of British Columbia in the Cabinet. We want a member from the province who has identified himself with its interests, and who can be approached by our people; who enters into their feelings and interests, and is in the true sense of the term their representative. That is why I say that we have never had a Minister in the Cabinet from British Columbia or Manitoba. However, as far as Manitoba is concerned, I will leave the hon. gentleman who seconds this motion to speak for his own province. British Columbia has an area of 341,341 square miles, or considerably more than two-fifths of the whole area of the seven provinces. In 1881 its population was 49,458.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—White people?

HON. MR. McINNES—No, they are not all white. They are of different shades.

of color, the same as they are to be found even in the Maritime Provinces in the east, and I think it is unfair for my hon. friend from Lunenburg and other members of the Senate, and more particularly the members in the other branch of Parliament, when they refer to our small population in British Columbia and the North-West Territories, always to add that only a certain percentage of that population is white.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—My hon. friend would exclude the Chinese, and surely he does not want them represented !

HON. MR. MCINNES—If you had a few of those Chinese down in Nova Scotia nobody would be more inclined to boast of the increase in population than the hon. member from Lunenburg. Whenever the population of any of the eastern provinces is given, no reference is made to the origin of the people of whom it is composed. When we divide up the people into different races in estimating the population, it will be time enough to draw such a distinction. I will show the hon. gentleman from Lunenburg and this House before I get through that although a very large percentage of our population consists of Chinese and Indians, we pay per capita three or four times as much taxes as any Province in the Dominion. I think that is a sufficient answer to the hon. gentleman who takes that view of the matter. Our Indian is different from the Indian of the east. He dons the clothing and adopts the habits of Europeans ; he is engaged in farming and other civilized pursuits. We employ Indians extensively in growing grain, in stock raising, in our sawmills, factories, dairies, etc., and they are large revenue producers ; so that it is not fair to class our Indians with the savages of the east, some of whom are now enfranchised. In 1871 our population was 36,247, and the increase during the following decade was 13,212, or more than 36 per cent.

HON. MR. POWER—Chiefly Chinese.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I will come to the Chinese presently. I find that the increase of population in the five eastern provinces during the same period was only 14 per cent. It was nearly three times as much in British Columbia as in the eastern provinces. Assuming that the increase during the last five years in British Columbia was at the same rate, it would give us a population at the present time of 60,000. But it is well known that owing to the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway and other public works the rate of increase has been twice as great. I will give one well authenticated case to prove the correctness of what I have just stated. I find in the census of 1881 that the entire Chinese population of the Dominion of Canada was only 4,383, principally in British Columbia. To-day, according to the best data obtainable, we have from eighteen to twenty thousand of that obnoxious and highly undesirable class of people in British Columbia. If it is true that the Chinese population has increased about 12,000 during those five years it is equally true that the white population has also increased. I am inclined to think that the increase of whites has been between fifty and seventy-five per cent. of the Chinese. While I state this about the Chinese, I have only to repeat what I said in the few remarks which I made in the debate on the Address in reply to the speech from the Throne—the people of British Columbia have reason to regret that the timely warnings given the Government by the hon. Mr. DeCosmos (who, certainly worked earnestly, faithfully and I believe conscientiously for his Province) to place some restriction on the immigration of Chinese into that country—I say if his advice and the advice of his colleagues had been taken before the Canadian Pacific Railway was begun in British Columbia, we would not now be burdened with the Chinese, and the white population would certainly have increased much faster than it has done. Taking that view of it, I think I am within the mark when I place the population of British Columbia to-day at 75,000. It will therefore be seen that, even according to population, British Columbia is nearly as much entitled to a representative in the Cabinet as Prince Edward Island ; that she is entitled to one for every five that Nova Scotia should have ; to one for every four of New Brunswick, one for eighteen of Quebec, one for twenty-six of Ontario, and one for every two of Manitoba. The Prairie province like British Columbia, unfortunately, has no representative in the Cabinet.

I will now make a comparison of the amounts contributed by the several provinces to the public revenue, and I need not state that we are now living in an age when, to use a vulgar expression, the almighty dollar tells; it is a very substantial and powerful argument to use in more ways than one. During the last five years British Columbia has paid into the Dominion treasury in customs duties no less a sum than $3,521,849, or one-thirtieth part of the whole, while Prince Edward Island during the same period paid but $991,442.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend, but I may as well say to him now that the figures taken from the Public Accounts showing the amount of revenue collected in Prince Edward Island, are not at all reliable, for the reason which I stated the other day.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Am I to understand that we are to pay no attention to the official returns?

HON. MR. HOWLAN—What I stated the other day was that the amount of customs duties collected in Prince Edward Island cannot be judged from the receipts at the customs house, inasmuch as 88% of the manufactured goods sold and used in Prince Edward Island are bought from wholesale merchants in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Montreal, Quebec, Halifax and St. John.

HON. MR. PLUMB—It is so with the custom duties in Ontario.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I quite agree with the hon. member from Prince Edward Island in what he has stated. I know that a large percentage of the duties is paid in Quebec, and that is why such an amount is credited to that Province; but is it not equally the case with Manitoba, that a very large percentage of the goods imported into that Province come from the east, where the duty on them has been collected? Is it not equally the case with British Columbia?

HON. MR. PLUMB—No, not with British Columbia, because they could not be taken across the continent yet.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I claim to know something of British Columbia and its affairs, and I know that a very large percentage of the goods shipped to British Columbia for the last five or six years, especially the last two years, since the opening of the Northern Pacific Railway, has come from Ontario and Quebec. I will satisfy the hon. gentleman; I will take British Columbia after a time and let its revenue stand singly and alone against the custom duties collected in all the other provinces east of the Rocky Mountains and he will find that we make a very good showing indeed. As I was saying when my hon. friend interjected his remarks, we have paid in the last five years in customs duties alone over $3,521,000.

HON. MR. NELSON—More than that; a little over $4,000,000

HON. MR. MCINNES—Perhaps my hon. friend has figures down to a later date. The years I have referred to are from 1880 to 1884 inclusive. I have not got the official report for 1885.

HON. MR. NELSON—You will find the figures in the Trade and Navigation Returns. The amount is a little over $4,000,000 in the last five years.

HON. MR. MCINNES—So much the better. I am taking the figures that I find in the Public Accounts; perhaps my hon. friend includes excise duties?

HON. MR. NELSON—No, the customs duties alone.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Well, in round numbers, say $4,000,000. Prince Edward Island in that time contributed less than $1,000,000—less than one-fourth the amount contributed by British Columbia. Consequently, British Columbia should have, according to the amount of customs duties paid, four representatives for every one that Prince Edward Island is entitled to.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Judging from that.

HON. MR. McINNES—Yes, judging from this. British Columbia is entitled to one representative for two from Nova Scotia, two for New Brunswick, eleven for Quebec, and nine for Ontario, and is entitled equally to one with Manitoba. I find according to area that British Columbia is entitled to 160 members in the Cabinet for every one that Prince Edward Island should have (hear, hear and laughter) a pretty large Cabinet, I admit, and a pretty hard one to control.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Entitled how?

HON. MR. McINNES—I am speaking of area now.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I rise to a question of order. I call the attention of the House to the inconvenience of the hon. member from Niagara interrupting my hon. friend as he has been doing.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Order! There are two members standing.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—The leader of the House should not interrupt me in that boorish manner. Would it not be more dignified to let the hon. member from British Columbia make his statement in the way it is done in the House of Lords, without interruption, but there are some members of the Senate, like the hon.

member from Niagara, who bring the House into ridicule by their conduct.

HON. MR. McINNES—I have no objection at all to being interrupted by any member who wishes to ask a proper question, but I must confess that I do object to gestures and ironical noises intended only to interrupt. The statement of the representation to which British Columbia would be entitled by area is as follows: Nova Scotia has an area of 20,907 square miles and would be entitled to one representative for every 16 of British Columbia; New Brunswick, with 27,427 square miles, to one for every 13 in British Columbia; Quebec, with an area of 188,688 square miles, to one for every two in British Columbia; Ontario, with an area of 101,733 square miles, one representative for every three from British Columbia; Manitoba, with an area of 123,200 square miles, to one representative for every three in British Columbia; Manitoba, like despised British Columbia and Prince Edward Island, has no representative in the Cabinet. I have taken the Provinces separately; I will now combine Manitoba and British Columbia. I find that they have paid one-thirteenth of the entire customs revenue of the Dominion. I find that they have paid in customs duties eight times as much as Prince Edward Island.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—You are wrong again.

HON. MR. McINNES—If so, the returns are wrong. I have prepared a tabulated statement which is as follows:—

HON. MR. CARVEL—I have no desire to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but the statement about the small amount which Prince Edward Island pays into the revenue of the country has been so repeatedly made and contradicted, that I am surprised my hon. friend should to-day reiterate it. We pay per capita more than any other Province of the Dominion. We do not pay it directly, because we buy our dutiable goods mostly in Montreal, Quebec, Toronto, Hamilton, and other cities. I am prepared to demonstrate, when the proper time comes, that we pay more per capita than any Province of the Dominion. It is a mistake to put Prince Edward Island down as contributing only what appears in the customs returns. I feel it due to the province from which I come to enter my protest against the statement which the hon. gentleman has made.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I do not wish my hon. friend to understand for a moment that I am belittling Prince Edward Island in the least. I am dealing with the several Provinces as I find the returns in the blue book.

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B. C.)—As a matter of comparison.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Certainly, as a matter of comparison. I have other statements which show about the same proportion, but I do not wish to weary the House by going into them. I shall now refer to the imports and exports of the different provinces. No doubt I will be met with the remark “well, you are paying a very large amount of duty, but what are your exports? You do not export much and you are not of as much consequence to the Dominion as you think.” I shall now read a statement which is as follows:

IMPORTS.	1880.	1881.	1882.	1883.	1884.	TOTALS.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Prince Edwards Island imports about $4,000,000 worth a year.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I have only the blue books for my authority. I shall now for a short time call the attention of the House to the expense entailed upon the Dominion for a few pleasure trips taken by members of the Cabinet to British Columbia.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Many, many thousands of dollars.

HON. MR. MCINNES—The first Canadian Minister that ever honored us with a visit was the Hon. Sir Hector Langevin. He paid a visit to British Columbia in 1872, and the expense of his trip to the country was $1,946.50. The next visit, or the next expense to which British Columbia was put from not having a Minister in the Cabinet, was a visit paid by Mr. Edgar in 1874, for which he was paid $5,000. The following year he was paid $1,000 more, making $6,000 for going over there and endeavoring to negotiate with the Local Government to relax in some respects the terms of Union, especially that portion having reference to the building of the Pacific Railway. I find that in 1879 Sir Charles Tupper paid a visit to British Columbia, which cost the Dominion $2,443.33.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—Well invested money.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I will show the hon. gentleman presently how well invested it was. In 1882 I find an extraordinary charge made against the Province of British Columbia, that is for Sir John Macdonald's trip to England, and strange to say, it was charged to the construction of the Pacific Railway in British Columbia, though what connection it can have with the construction of the Pacific Railway in that province I am unable to understand. I find that British Columbia is charged with $2,334 for that trip. In 1881 Sir Charles Tupper paid us a visit, which cost $1,946.66.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—That was cheaper than Mr. Edgar's visit.

HON. MR. MCINNES—In 1882 Sir Charles Tupper paid another visit to our province, which cost $2,100. The Postmaster General visited us in 1884, and his trip cost $1,946.09.

HON. MR. POWER—That brought you a good deal in return.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I will refer to that presently; it brought us something I am afraid we will not get rid of in a hurry. In 1885 the Hon. J. A. Chapleau went out there on the Chinese Commission, for which he was paid $2,680.13. Judge Grey, who is a resident of the province was paid $2,535 as commissioner, and there is another gentleman, N. F. Davin, who went out there as secretary—I do not know exactly what his duties were, who was paid $3,099.57, making a grand total of $27,011.65 that those, to a great extent unnecessary trips, cost the Dominion of Canada. Now, I wish to draw the attention of the House to three of those charges. Sir Hector Langevin's trip cost $1,946.50; the Postmaster-General's trip in 1884 cost $1,946.09, or forty one cents less than Sir Hector's. It was very cheap. I find that Sir Charles Tupper's trip in 1881 cost $1,946.66, or sixteen cents more than Sir Hector Langevin's, and fifty-five cents more than the Postmaster-General's. There is a wonderful similarity in those three charges. It appears that they must have taken the cost of Sir Hector Langevin's trip as a standard, with the same number of miles, with the same number of extras, cigars, and all that sort of thing; and there are a great many items in connection with those trips that I have been unable to find out and it will require a much smarter man than myself outside of the Government to ascertain where they are charged. I believe that the only honest and above-board statement that has been made of the cost of these trips to British Columbia was that of Mr. Edgar. It cost $6,000, and I know the expense of a trip to British Columbia and back; and I may say, to travel there as Minister of the Crown, no matter whether you go in a private car or not, certainly must cost more than $1,946. It is unreasonable to suppose that all those trips came within a few dollars of each other, when the one made by Mr. Edgar cost so much. It must be charged to some other account that I have been unable to lay my hands on. I do not know that extravagance in the expenditure of money is confined to Criticism any more than to Toryism, I think there is a little weakness on both sides on that point.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow me to explain that when Mr. Edgar went to British Columbia he went there as a representative of the Government; he was not a member of the Government, and the $6,000 was not all travelling expenses, but included compensation to himself for his services.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I am very glad the Postmaster General has made that explanation; but it does not weaken the force of my argument. What I want to show is that if there had been a representative in the Cabinet for British Columbia it would have been unnecessary to send Mr. Edgar over there at an expense of $6,000. I have now to refer to another matter, and in alluding to it and to the gentleman whose name I have to bring before the notice of the country, I wish to say that I have every respect for that gentleman. He is a man of undoubted ability, a man of integrity, and in many other respects as good a man as the Government could possibly get to occupy the position he fills. I do not attack him, and I do not wish to be understood as saying one word against him, but I do attack the position. I do find fault with the Government in creating the office of private and confidential agent in British Columbia. The appointment of the Hon. Jos. W. Trutch I have always looked upon as something that ought not to have been done—or the appointment of any person else as private and confidential agent of the Government, thereby disregarding the functions of the people's representatives in the House of Commons and in this House. It is the only Province in Canada that is treated in that way, and that of itself ought to have been a sufficient reason for the Government to have given representation to British Columbia in the Cabinet. It would have cost but very little more, and would have been more in accordance with the spirit of responsible government. It is true that the Hon. Mr. Trutch was drawing $2,595.60 per annum as a pension, and I know the excuse that was given—because I consider it nothing else but an excuse—was that they should give him two or three thousand dollars more and utilize his services in connection with the construction of the Pacific Railway, he being an engineer. As far as his appointment in connection with the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway is concerned, I have never found any fault; that was perfectly right. He was a competent man. But I did find fault when he was consulted in important matters connected with the province of British Columbia at the expense of her representatives. I remember when I occupied a seat in the other House that the Hon. Mr. DeCosmos moved for a number of papers, correspondence that took place relative to some squatters that went in on the railway lands in Vancouver Island. The reply given by the government was that the correspondence was of a private and confidential nature with their agent out there, Mr. Trutch, and that they were not forthcoming. That, I considered was wrong. I do not say it was wrong in Mr. Trutch; he was the servant of the government, and any of us would have done the same under the circumstances; but I claim that the government had no right to place a man in a responsible position, giving him everything but the responsibility of a Cabinet Minister, without being responsible to the people. The people of British Columbia could not deal with him the same as they could with a member of the government, and no other province in the Dominion has had such an officer appointed over the representatives of the people. We find that in 1880 for a half year's salary he drew $1,404.54 as land agent. In connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway his salary was $3,404.54, making a total of $4,809.08 for that year. In 1881 he was paid, in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, $2,499.96. As agent of public works out there he received $1,690.90. As Dominion Lands agent he received $2,499.96 making a total that year of $6,690.82. In 1882 he was paid as land agent $2,499.96. In connection with public works he was paid $2,195.84. In connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway he was paid $2,499.96 or a total of $7,195.76. In 1883 he was paid as public works agent $600; as Dominion Lands agent $2,499.96; in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway $2,499.96—a total of $5,599.92. In 1884 he was paid as Dominion Lands agent $2,500; as agent of public works $600; in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway he was paid $2,500; making a total of $5,600. In 1885 he was paid as Dominion Lands agent $2,500; in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway $2,500; making for that year a total of $5,000. During those five years he was paid $34,895.18, and adding that to the trips of Ministers to British Columbia makes the nice little sum of $61,907.19. I have endeavored to find out what the trips of the Ministers to Manitoba and the North-West have cost. I have been unable to ascertain it, but we all know that they have been visiting that country quite frequently for a number of years. Now, I contend that if British Columbia and Manitoba had representation in the Cabinet, a very large portion of this money that has been in some instances worse than thrown away, would have been saved to the Dominion Treasury. The next thing that I wish to call your attention to, in connection with this subject, is the railway lands in British Columbia. Nearly ten years ago a railway belt extending from the Pacific to the eastern boundary of the Province, 40 miles wide was reserved for railway purposes. The proceeds of that, it was understood, were to go towards recouping the outlay for constructing the Pacific Railway. A reserve was placed on it, and from that day to the present that reserve has never been withdrawn. As I mentioned two years ago connection with this subject, hundreds of as good settlers as ever entered any new country, men of experience and capital, went in on this railway belt, which includes all the best agricultural lands in the province; and when they found that they could not get a title to lands, they turned away in disgust and went to swell the population of the country south of us. With the permission of the House I will read from the columns of the British Columbian, a paper published in my city, an article referring to those lands. It is dated the 20th February, 1886. It commences by saying:—

HON. MR. MCINNES.

RAILWAY LANDS.

Now that the Dominion Parliament is about to open, and the representatives of the province are gathering about the federal capital, attention may be directed again to the very unsatisfactory position of lands lying within the railway belt. Among the most serious obstacles in the way of agricultural development in this district have been the want of titles to railway lands and the absence of good road. These two things depend to some extent upon each other, or, rather, the unsatisfactory position of land titles within the railway belt is in a degree responsible for the badness of the roads. A great deal of this land is held by squatters. These squatters have a promise that their rights will be respected when the land comes into market, but until a title has been obtained they pay no taxes, and thus escape without contributing their share towards the cost of making roads. The railway lands which still remain unoccupied are also free from taxation. If they had been open to pre-emption or purchase, many of them would have been taken up long ago, and would now have been paying, like other lands, towards local improvements. It happens that the lands included in these two non-taxable classes comprise a considerable portion of the lands of this district, and this large area contributes nothing at all to the revenue; and lands for which titles have been issued are assessed extra to cover the cost of making roads to lands which pay no taxes at all. This is most unfair. But the worst feature of the railway land grievance is not its freedom from taxation. If people could be persuaded that the promise of final adjustment was a sufficient guarantee for final justice, they would not decline to take up railway lands because of being exempt from taxation. But although there seems to be no reasonable doubt that squatters who have taken up lands for agricultural purposes will eventually be confirmed in possession of their holdings, when they have complied with the conditions of the law, there is in the public mind sufficient doubt to operate as a serious bar to the settlement of these lands. We are informed by persons in the municipality of Surrey that quite a number of immigrants intending to take up lands there have gone south to Washington Territory for the sole reason that a title to lands in the railway belt could not be obtained. It is much to be regretted that this grievance, so long existing and so disastrous, has not been removed. We hope our representatives will insist upon its prompt adjustment as a condition of their continued support of the Government. These lands have been locked up for nearly ten years, and people going in there now are justly afraid that if they squat on these lands their rights will not be respected, and that they will not be confirmed in their locations from the fact that quite a number have gone on lands there during the last few years, and especially in that portion that has been re-conveyed to the Local Government, and they have been very unjustly, in my opinion, ejected. Not only does the reservation on those lands militate materially against the agricultural prosperity and settlement of British Columbia, but it applies also to the mining industries. I will read a letter that I received a short time ago from the Minister of the Interior in reply to a letter that I received from Mr. Chadsey in British Columbia, who had discovered a coal mine and wished to acquire it. He wrote to me and wished me to intercede for him, and forward his application to the proper quarter. I did so, and this is the reply that I got:—

“OTTAWA, Feb. 3, 1886.

SIR,—I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 18th ultimo, enclosing a communication from Mr. James L. Chadsey, of Chillinback, to you, in which he asks for certain information with respect to coal lands in British Columbia.

In reply I am to say no regulations for the disposal of coal lands within the railway belt in British Columbia have yet been framed.

When such regulations have been framed and adopted and they are issued for public distribution, a copy thereof will be sent you.

I have, &c.,

(Signed) P. B. DOUGLASS,
Assistant Secretary.

Hon. T. K. McINNES,
30 Aven. Road, Toronto.”

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Was that from the Local Government?

HON. MR. McINNES—From the Department here. The Local Government and the people of British Columbia up to a short time ago believed that they owned, and I believe their contention is right that they do own, the minerals in these lands; but the Government here is claiming the minerals in the railway belt, and the consequence is that Mr. Chadsey and others who may discover coal mines or gold-bearing quartz or other minerals can get no title, and the development of the mining and agricultural interests of that country is interfered with in consequence of this reserve. Two years ago, after the Postmaster-General paid a visit to British Columbia, he introduced a bill here called the Settlement Bill (it is generally known by that name) which was to do away with all the existing differences between British Columbia and the Dominion, it was thought it was going to be a panacea and heal every difficulty. We were told that the lands were to be surveyed and thrown on the market right away. Unfortunately for us those pledges and promises are unfulfilled and as much a dead letter to-day as they were when made. It is true that Mr. Wilmot, a son of the Ex-Governor of New Brunswick, went out there and had charge of a surveying party. He remained in the field for a short time, but from some cause—what it was I have been unable to ascertain—he was deposed, and another gentleman was sent out from here—I forget his name. From that time to the present I believe that this gentleman, a fresh arrival from the east sent out by the Government, only surveyed a few sections of the district of Westminster—in fact, I was told that he was only out a few weeks, although over a year in the Province. He withdrew his men, and I believe he and his men are enjoying themselves very comfortably indeed in the city of Victoria—and, of course, they are drawing their salaries. Mr. Wilmot came over here for a short time, and was then placed in a position—I really do not know what it is or what to call it. I do not suppose that he knows himself; however, it is in connection with the Island railway; but it appears that he draws $2,400 a year as a salary. He receives $200 a month, and I believe, spends about three-fourths of his time in Victoria, having a good time of it. I do not blame the young man at all; but the surveys of the farming districts, instead of being made according to the promises and pledges given when the Settlement Bill was before the House, remain practically untouched, and this militates materially against the permanent prosperity of our province. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Almon) mentioned a little while ago that the visit of the Postmaster-General to British Columbia conferred a great benefit upon the Province. I will take the liberty of reading a sort of extract from an article by W. A. Baillie Graham, published in the Fortnightly Review for January last, to show what benefits the visit was to British Columbia and the Dominion. This gentleman, it appears, has paid a couple of visits to British Columbia. I have never had the pleasure of meeting him, and consequently have not given him any of my ideas.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—What a loss!

HON. MR. MCINNES—The hon. Postmaster-General thinks it was a loss. I think it will not be long before the people of this country learn that they have sustained a great and irreparable loss through the refusal of the Government to take the advice of myself and colleagues who recognized the gross wrong that would be done the Province, Dominion and Empire if the so-called Settlement Bill became law. That transaction will be looked upon as something worthy of the dark ages.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—What position does the hon. gentleman refer to?

HON. MR. MCINNES—The position which I took in connection with that Settlement Bill, and when I am through reading this extract the Postmaster-General will have a better idea than he has at present of the view which is taken by outsiders of that measure. The extract which I wish to read is as follows:—

“The fact that British Columbia is our only colonial possession on the American Pacific, on which the commerce of the world is rapidly centreing itself, lends gravity to a possible future danger to the Imperial interests of Great Britain, arising from the colony’s geographical position. It needs but a brief retrospective glance at the genesis of the United States to show what a wonderful expansion of its southern and western boundaries has been brought about by a peculiarly insidious process, which, for want of a better name, one might term Americanization—a bloodless but very effectual method of annexation, absorbing vast countries, not at the point of the bayonet, but by the commercial enterprise of its citizens. Most of the western territories—Texas, California, and portions of Oregon and Washington Territory, as well as Alaska—have all in their turn been thus Americanized. Mexico, Cuba, and some of the Central American States, are now undergoing that process uninterrupted by meddling European intervention. By the acquisition of Alaska and the Aleutian Islands, the United States has pushed its empire, as it were, to the very door of Japan and China, and the only missing link, the only possible rival to exclusive trade in the Pacific, is British Columbia with its splendid harbors, its inexhaustible coal fields and unrivalled forests, in both of which latter resources her wealth is superior to that of any district south of it. The American of the Pacific coast, we need hardly be told, is a peculiarly energetic and enterprising individual, and he never tires of telling you that British Columbia wedged in between American countries, Alaska as a top-weight pressing downwards, meeting the upward expansion of Washington, Idaho, and Montana Territories, will be unable to resist Americanization. This process may be expected to commence when British Columbia promises to become a dangerous rival, a now not remote contingency.

“The cry of secession revived in Canada from time to time, has never found popular favor in British Columbia, which has been one of the most loyal colonial possessions of Great Britain. Whether it will continue so depends to a very great extent upon the districts from which it will receive the bulk of immigration in the next years; whether from the eastern province of the Dominion and old country, or whether from those neighboring districts that are not separated from it by great mountain chains or thousands of miles of sea. Already Californian capital is arriving, millions of Yankee dollars, invested in vast stretches of coal fields, silver mines, forest land, and the construction of short lines of railways—capital that, shame to say, was not forthcoming from any other part of the world, and which, coming at this early stage, must necessarily be considered only the vanguard of other millions where the shrewd business man of the Pacific coast has invested his dollars, there, too, he will make his home. Startling as it may sound, it is yet absolute truth that to-day capital from San Francisco, employed in building the only railway line on Vancouver Island controls the vast coal fields of British Columbia on Vancouver Island. The English man-of-war loading coal at the only naval and coaling station Great Britain possesses on the entire Pacific littoral of North and South America, will have to buy its fuel from San Francisco’s millionaires, adepts at “corners.” Under these circumstances it will not take many years to bring to an issue the question whether the Queen’s Birthday or the 4th of July will be the fete day of the dominant race. To-day these two representative holidays are kept with equal impressiveness in British Columbia. Indeed I saw more flags flying on the latter, on my last visit to Victoria at that season of the year, than were exhibited on the preceding fete day of Englishmen; a show of bunting, hoisted, it is true, by peaceful citizens of two countries dwelling together in perfect harmony, but yet not unsuggestive of future danger to Great Britain’s vital interests in the new world. Geography is anything but a favorite study in good old England, but even the Eton boy, who actually gives half an hour every week to that science, will be able to realize the strategic importance of being able to convey troops, arms and harbor defences to the shores of the Pacific within ten or eleven days from the time the transport weighs anchor at Plymouth.”

HON. MR. MCINNES.

HON. MR. ALMON—I rise to a point of order. I wish to know whether all this writing in favor of annexation has anything to do with whether British Columbia should have a Cabinet Minister or not? If the hon. gentlemen thinks British Columbia is going to be annexed to the United States I should like to know why he considers a Cabinet Minister necessary for that Province.

THE SPEAKER—In debating an abstract resolution of this kind it is very hard to say where the line should be drawn. I think, myself, that the hon. gentlemen is hardly within the scope of his resolution in the latter part of his remarks. I do not think it was anticipated by the House, nor is it relevant to the subject, that the hon. gentlemen would discuss the policy of the Government either with regard to the coal fields of British Columbia or its general policy, on a resolution of which the following is the wording:—

Resolved, That in the opinion of this House justice and expediency both demand that the central or prairie section and the Western or Pacific Section of the Dominion should each be represented in the Queen's Privy Council of Canada.

HON. MR. BOSTFORD—The point of order is well taken.

HON. MR. McINNES—Am I to understand that I am out of order?

HON. GENTLEMEN—Yes

HON. MR. POWER—I rise to a question of order. I did not so understand the Speaker's decision. The hon. member is trying to show that British Columbia should have a representative in the Cabinet, and I think the most natural and direct way to establish that is to show the evil results that have followed from the absence of such representation. I think the quotation of the hon. gentlemen is directly in point. He shows that a certain line of action was followed towards British Columbia which would not have been adopted had that Province been represented in the Cabinet. The hon. member is now reading what an independent English writer says on the subject; I think nothing could be more pertinent to the question before the House.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. member from Halifax misunderstood my ruling. I certainly think that it is not within the scope of the resolution to discuss the general policy of the Government, as the hon. gentleman has been doing, for the last quarter of an hour. I think the House had no notice as to the scope the hon. gentleman's remarks have taken, the Government or anybody else. As I said just now although it is difficult to say where the line should be drawn in debates on abstract resolutions, still the line should be drawn somewhere, and while I am disposed to allow the greatest latitude possible to the hon. gentleman, I think he has wandered and has been wandering for the last quarter of an hour, beyond the legitimate scope of his resolution.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—We have nothing before the House to-day except the subject brought by the hon. gentleman, and as he is producing a great deal of interesting matter it rests with the House to say whether he should be allowed to proceed or not, and I am prepared to move that he be allowed to proceed.

THE SPEAKER—While I feel bound to rule as I have done, the point having been raised, it is the right of the House to decide whether the hon. gentleman shall be permitted to continue the discussion in the line on which he was proceeding. If any hon. gentleman wishes to move in that direction it is for the House to decide what shall be done, and I do not say that I am prepared to vote against it myself.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I move that the hon. gentleman be allowed to read the extract which he was quoting.

HON. MR. McINNES—I must confess that I am very much taken by surprise at the objection which has been raised. I gave notice in the early part of this month that I would move a certain resolution, and there was a preamble to it which was as follows:—

Whereas, only four provinces of the Dominion, embracing only one sixteenth of its area, and all lying to the eastward of its centre, are represented in the Cabinet; and

Whereas, the absence from the Cabinet of any representative of the central or Prairie Section of the Dominion, contributed largely to the line of conduct on the part of the Government which led to the North-West Insurrection of 1885; and

Whereas, the absence from the Cabinet of any representative of the Pacific Province, caused the Government to withdraw all their lands in that Province from sale and pre-emption for the space of nine years, and to adopt in other matters a policy calculated to retard its settlement and lessen its material prosperity; therefore

HON. MR. KAULBACH—That is not the motion before the House.

HON. MR. MCINNES—That was the preamble, and I changed the notice simply because I found that the 15th rule of this House forbade the reception of a resolution which had a preamble. This House was therefore perfectly aware of the line I was going to adopt, and if I am to be choked off as some hon. gentlemen propose, it is simply an act of injustice to Manitoba and British Columbia and the North-West Territories. It will be an act of injustice if I am not allowed to show, as I was proceeding to show, the view taken by a prominent writer for one of the best periodicals published in England—if I am not allowed to read that, I think it is very arbitrary. I do not say that I approve of all the sentiments expressed by the writer; on the contrary I differ from him on some points. At the same time I was about to show, and I think I can conclusively prove that if British Columbia had possessed a representative in the Cabinet that iniquitous law would never have been placed on the statute book and the British empire would not have lost control of those valuable coal lands, and British interests would not have been unnecessarily imperilled on the Pacific. I shall be ashamed of this House if it takes the position of refusing me permission to read an extract from a leading English magazine in support of my argument. I believe I am strictly within the rules of the House, notwithstanding the expressions of opinion to the contrary.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—My hon. friend must see this, that when he reads an article of that kind he to a certain extent endorses it, especially as he brings it forward in support of his argument.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I have no interest in this matter, but I am interested in maintaining the dignity of the Senate. The hon. member has thought proper to say that the Speaker has choked him off, and that the decision is arbitrary. I hold that that is not language which should be used to the head of this House, and the hon. gentleman is clearly out of order.

HON. MR. MCINNES.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—The five members!

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I think the remark of the hon. member from British Columbia was that if he was not permitted to read an extract in support of his argument it would be an act of injustice, and that he did not use the language attributed to him by my hon. friend from Amherst.

HON. MR. POWER—The question before the House, as I understand it, is the motion made by the hon. member from Woodstock, that the hon. gentleman from New Westminster be allowed to proceed. If it is necessary that that motion should be seconded, I shall be very glad to do so, especially as his honor the Speaker has intimated that he has no objection to it, and that he did not know but that he would vote for it himself. I think in a House like this, where we are not overburdened with work, and where the rule has been, at all events for the last nine years, to allow the utmost latitude of discussion, that, when one of the very small minority of this House is speaking (I believe the hon. member from New Westminster is one of that minority) it is not desirable that he should be held too closely to strict rule, or be prevented discussing a question at whatever length he may choose. The hon. member has not troubled us often.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Yes, the hon. member may as well proceed, but I hope he will try to make it shorter.

THE SPEAKER—It is moved by the Hon. Mr. Alexander, seconded by Hon. Mr. Power, that the hon. gentleman be allowed to proceed with his remarks.

The motion was agreed to.

HON. MR. ALMON—I wish to have the yeas and nays taken.

THE SPEAKER—It is too late.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I call for the yeas and nays.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I hope the hon. gentleman from Lunenburg will accept the decision of the House. He will have ample opportunity to answer any remarks that I may make. I did not wish to state anything in this House which could be considered unparliamentary; I was merely reading an article to show that the writer took precisely the same view that I had taken two years before when this subject was under discussion, and I am very much surprised that the hon. member from Lunenburg, who supported me on that occasion, should oppose it now and think that my views are treasonable.

HON. MR. MACDONALD—That question is gone now: there is another matter before the House.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—My objection was to the hon. gentleman's reading an article which he admits contains expressions that he cannot endorse himself.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I said there was a portion of it that met with my approval, and that portion I have read. One great reason why I claim that British Columbia and Manitoba should have representatives in the Cabinet—

HON. MR. KAULBACH—You mean British Columbia.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I include Manitoba, because this country is divided into three great natural sections, the eastern, central and western. In the two latter, greater changes take place in one month than in the older provinces in a year. The general legislating necessary for the eastern section is more of a routine nature, and if there is any portion of the Dominion that ought to have a live and active member to represent it in the Cabinet, it is the Provinces of Manitoba and British Columbia. I say, with all respect to the gentleman who fills the position of Minister of the Interior, that his portfolio should belong to a representative of Manitoba. The Interior Department is, in my opinion the most important one in the Government, and the Minister who presides over it ought to be thoroughly acquainted with the North-West and its people. The same remark applies to British Columbia. Many changes are occurring there which are unknown to the eastern provinces. The latter are, speaking comparatively, finished provinces, whereas everything is in a state of transition in the west, and is likely to be so for many years to come. My proposition is this—some hon. gentlemen may consider it absurd—that each province, or certainly each of those three divisions that I have mentioned, ought to have a representative in the Cabinet. It is the duty of anyone who is called upon to form a government, to select first of all a representative from each of those three great divisions, or from each of the provinces, and then for the balance of the Cabinet select the best men, irrespective of the sections from which they come. If that were done, and less attention paid to the origin or creed of men, I think the interests of the country would be served a great deal better. I was really amused at a ridiculous statement made by the Toronto Mail shortly after Professor Foster was appointed to the Cabinet. I do not wish to say anything against Mr. Foster, who is, I believe, a friend of mine, and a man whom I respect, but one of the qualifications which he possessed, in the opinion of the Mail, for holding a portfolio was that he happened to be a Baptist, and the Baptists were an influential portion of the population. I think if less attention were paid to denominations, and if there were less sectionalism displayed in the choice of representatives, the country would be much better governed. I claim, with all deference and respect for those who are members of the Cabinet to-day, that any local representative of Manitoba or British Columbia would serve the interests of those provinces better than the most eminent public man from any of the older sections. It is absurd to suppose that men who never saw those provinces, and who very often have to rely for information upon their subordinates, who will tell them nothing that would be unpleasant, or calculated to prevent their own advancement—it is absurd to suppose that such Ministers can frame laws and regulations for those vast districts lying thousands of miles away from the capital and surrounded by circumstances so totally different from everything in the east. We must bear in mind that we are living in a different age from that in which the men who are now holding portfolios were brought up. The west is making more progress in one year than the older provinces in half a dozen years. Only those possessed of pluck, energy and perseverance find their way there, and all the drones remain at home.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—That is where you have stayed.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I have lived in many portions of the Dominion, and I am not ashamed to return to any portion of it.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—That is a good thing.

HON. MR. MCINNES—It is a good thing. To my esteemed friend and colleague, from Manitoba, Hon. Dr. Schultz, I believe, is due the credit of first officially or constitutionally bringing this important question before the notice of Parliament and the country, and I can assure that hon. gentleman that whatever credit or thanks he has received or may receive from the people of the four provinces that first constituted the Dominion and who appear to have a monopoly of all the portfolios, he certainly has won the lasting gratitude of the people of the two western and unrepresented provinces in the Cabinet, as well as those of the adjoining territories, who have not even a representative in either branch of the Legislature to make known their wants and plead their cause. All who listened to the pathetic and patriotic remarks of the hon. gentleman last year when he enquired if it was the intention of the Government to give that portion of the Dominion extending from Lake of the Woods to the Pacific representation in the Cabinet, together with the reading of that prophetic speech he delivered some 14 years ago in the House of Commons, a speech every sentence of which was replete with unmistakable evidence of coming trouble and timely warnings that unfortunately were unheeded by those who were entrusted with the government of the country—I say all who heard that capital speech must have been convinced that a great and irreparable injury was done to the country by not having a Cabinet Minister from Manitoba to guard and protect the interests of the North-West and to counsel and assist in framing laws suitable for the speedy development of the enormous natural resources of the country. No one who listened to that admirable speech, but must have been convinced that it was the convictions of a gentleman who was not only master of his subject, but had made himself thoroughly acquainted with all classes and the various wants and necessities of the people he so ably represented—and was therefore in a position to prescribe intelligently not only for their existing but for their future wants. That speech was delivered over 14 years ago and viewing it in the light of subsequent experience, it can be considered little less than a prophecy. That speech warned the Government, warned them in unmistakable language, that if they persisted in pursuing their ungenerous and short-sighted policy towards the nomadic Indians and halfbreeds, the laws of the land would be violated, if not entirely ignored—yes, that possibly a fearful massacre would occur similar to that which took place in Minnesota, in 1863. I will refrain from reading, as I had intended to do, a few extracts from that memorable speech. On that occasion the Hon. D. A. Smith, who occupied a position at that time in the House of Commons, also endorsed the statements made by the Hon. Dr. Schultz with respect to the course that ought to be pursued towards the Indians in the North-West Territory. Both those hon. gentlemen gave the Government valuable information and advice—information and advice that no one could have given save those who lived for many years in the great lone land, as it was called in those days. Those gentlemen mingled with and studied the peculiarities of its people, its native and mixed population, and therefore knew precisely how they should be treated and governed. I ask how was that budget of valuable information, timely warning and advice, received by the Government? If received favorably, they do not appear to have benefited by it, as none, or very little of the advice or suggestions offered, appears to have been taken or put into practical operation. We are forced to believe that they were practically unheeded, and, alas, their predictions and fears were too well founded as the sad events of last year plainly show. The piteous complaints of the poor Metis were ignored; the Government disregarded the petitions of every authority as to the justice and expediency of giving the half-breeds what they claimed.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—No, no.

HON. MR. MCINNES—They heaped new grievances upon those wronged people by disputing even their titles to their actual holdings—giving their hamlets and their farms to whom? To a number of political speculators.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I rise to a question of order. Is the hon. gentleman now speaking to the question before the House?

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman is proceeding under the permission of the House.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—Well, I do not know that the hon. gentleman has permission to go on and read page after page, as he has done, of matter that is totally foreign to the resolution before the House.

HON. MR. MCINNES—That is only your opinion.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—Exactly, and I lay my opinion before the House and the Speaker, because I know that our hon. and honored leader is too modest, I am sorry to say, to call hon. gentlemen to order when I think he ought to do it. I do think, however, that the hon. gentleman from New Westminster is totally out of order when he goes on reading page after page the whole afternoon, of matter totally foreign to the subject before the House.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentlemen has not stated the question of order. After the remark I have just made it is unnecessary for me to say anything more.

While the hon. gentleman from New Westminster has the permission of the House he should be allowed to proceed; but the permission may be withdrawn at any moment.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—Has the hon. gentleman the permission of the House?

HON. MR. PLUMB—It may be withdrawn; he has not a permanent permission.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—Certainly not to read yards of paper.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I am very sorry indeed that my hon. friend from Montreal and other hon. members think what I am saying is so distasteful. I have only to say this: if I am not allowed to go on now I will bring up these matters separately, and I think it would be much better for the House to allow me to proceed, as perhaps it will be occupy less time in the end.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—For my part I would not stay and listen to the hon. gentleman.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I do not know that the House will sustain a great loss if you do not. The spring of 1885 will long be remembered in many a home throughout our beloved land as the darkest and saddest that the Dominion has ever seen, and, let us sincerely hope, ever will see—hundreds of our bravest sons slain on the battlefield in suppressing a miserable rebellion that could have been easily prevented—hundreds of graves wherein lie buried the pride of fond parents and the joy of many a happy home. Hundreds who survived the battlefield will, doubtless, die from the effects of exposure and fatigue incident to such an ordeal as our brave citizen soldiers underwent last year in the North-West. Dozens of wives and aged and infirm parents and helpless children deprived of those who at least protected and supplied them with the actual necessities of life. Over five millions added to our large and fast-increasing debt.

HON. MR. ALMON—I must rise again to a question of order. The hon. gentleman is entirely out of order, and I call for the rulling of the chair. The hon. gentleman's remarks are totally irrelevant to the subject before the House. He is giving a story of the late rebellion, which I have no objection to have brought before the House and fairly discussed at another time, but not by a side wind—since it is not his own even but is read from newspapers and manuscript.

THE SPEAKER—If I were in a position to rule I might be disposed to say that the remarks of the hon. member from New Westminster are irrelevant to the subject under discussion: but the hon. gentleman has received the formal permission of the House to go on, and until that permission is withdrawn I do not feel inclined to rule against him.

HON. MR. ALMON—I ask that the sense of the House be taken on that point?

HON. MR. PLUMB—You can move that the permission be withdrawn.

HON. MR. ALMON—I move that the permission be withdrawn unless the hon. gentleman confines himself to the matter before the House.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I think the hon. gentleman from New Westminster had better be allowed to proceed and make his statement; there is nothing but what can be answered.

HON. MR. ALMON—After the House has been wearied for hours and hours listening to the hon. gentleman, will hon. members be prepared to wait and hear a reply?

HON. MR. POWER—I shall be very glad to listen to my hon. colleague as long as he wishes to speak, if he desires to reply.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I must confess I am considerably surprised at this interruption; if the hon. member from Halifax and the hon. gentleman from Montreal had not the privilege of replying to me then I would sit down and not attempt for one moment to occupy the time of the House; but hon. gentlemen have the right to reply, and the question is open for free discussion.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Do go on.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—We are not afraid to discuss the question; nobody is afraid, but we are tired.

HON. MR. ALMON—Those papers have been read over and over again; in reality our familiarity with them produces contempt and not fear.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I call the hon. member from Halifax to order.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Oh go on. Do go on. The House is delighted to hear you.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I was proceeding to say that over five millions of dollars have been added to our large and fast increasing debt in consequence of this rebellion.

HON. MR. PLUMB—No, it is paid out of income.

HON. MR. MCINNES—The settlement of our North-West, the future hope of our country, retarded at least for a decade. All this deplorable loss of life, millions of money worse than thrown away, the irreparable injury done the country, all can be plainly traced to the inaction and gross neglect—the criminal neglect of the government and their officials in not granting the just and reasonable demand of the poor half-breeds and others in that country what they demand and were entitled to. Was the government not warned for years by one archbishop, by the bishops of at least two churches, and by the clergymen of four different denominations of the impending danger? Where they not warned by the North-West Council, or at least advised by some of the members of the North West Council,—by at least some of the members of the House of Commons from Manitoba and other reliable parties living in that country to abandon their suicidal North West policy and grant the humble prayers of the Metis, and thereby avert a second insurrection? Was their kindly and disinterested advice taken? Unfortunately, not until a large amount of precious blood had consecrated the virgin soil of the North West: not until millions of treasure was wasted—not until then were the seven years of unavailing prayers granted—after provoking a rebellion the Government granted their request and even more than they asked for or demanded. In order to show that I have not overstated the causes which led to this cruel rebellion, I will read a short editorial from the Toronto Mail, the recognized and I believe acknowledged organ of the government, which will more than sustain what I have stated:

“It has never been denied by the Mail that the Metis had good ground for grievances.

“By the passage of the Manitoba Act of 1870 old Canada had formally and frankly recognized the rights of the half-breeds of that province to share in the Indian title, and it follows as a matter of course that if they had rights in the soil of Manitoba, those of them dwelling in the region beyond had rights in the soil there.

“This admitted of no dispute.
“It must have been quite well understood by Parliament in 1870; at all events the records show that the Government of the day recognized the point, though a settlement was not then asked for.

“In spite of this recognition, however, and of the manifest and unanswerable logic of the half-breed case, the Department for years and years steadily refused to move in the matter.

“It was a tangled question; it would involve the appointment of a commission and no end of trouble; St. Albert and St. Laurent were far distant dependencies without political influence; it was a claim that would be none the worse for bluemoulding in the pigeon-holes.

“This was the way in which the officials treated the just demand of the Metis, and we agree with Mr. Blake, that their negligence was gross and inexcusable, and contributed to bring about the insurrection.

“Had they had votes, like white men, or it, like the Indians they had been numerous enough to command respect and overawe red tape, without doubt the wheels of the office would have revolved for them; but being only half-breeds, they were put off with an eternal promise, until patience ceased to be a virtue.

“We repeat again that the departmental system under which such callous and cruel neglect of the rights of a portion of the community was possible was wrong, and should be censured.”

I respectfully submit that if Manitoba had been represented in the Cabinet, the chances are ten to one that the rebellion of 1885 with all its deplorable consequences never would have occurred.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—What is your proof of that?

HON. MR. MCINNES—I have this proof, that if the people of Manitoba had had a representative in the Cabinet, their protestations would have poured in so thick and fast that their representative in the Cabinet would have had no alternative but to see that their prayer was granted, or be denounced by the people and asked to resign.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I do not know whether the hon. gentleman has nearly finished his speech or not; if he has not, I think he had better adjourn the debate.

HON. MR. MCINNES—If you allow me ten minutes I will finish. If Manitoba and the North-West had had a representative in the Cabinet, that country would be to-day as happy and prosperous as it was before the rebellion. What was the reply made by the leader of the Government in this House last year to the inquiry, “Did the Government intend at an early date to give representation in the Cabinet to greater Canada, comprising the two provinces and four territories lying between the Lake of the Woods and the Pacific Ocean, which contains our greatest forests, richest mines and largest wheat belt?” The reply of the hon. gentleman was, in substance, no: that he did not believe in the principle that each province should be represented in the Cabinet, but that the time might come when that country would be represented. It was an understanding, when Confederation was entered into by the four provinces then comprising the Dominion, that each section—the Maritime section, and Quebec and Ontario, should have a certain number of representatives in the Cabinet: but since Confederation an area nearly sixteen times as great has been added to the Dominion, and are we, who are living in that portion of the Confederation, going to be excluded from representation in the Cabinet for all time to come? I have shown conclusively, I think, that as regards revenue, population and area we are entitled to representation in the Cabinet. As I stated in my opening remarks, the area of this Dominion of ours is considerably larger than that of the great republic to the south of us, with its population of nearly 60,000,000. The population of that mighty country has nearly doubled within the last quarter of a century: its growth has been such as to excite the wonder and envy of the world. If that country continues for the next 50 years to make the same marvellous progress as it has shown during the last half century, and there is every probability that it will, it will undoubtedly eclipse anything that the world has ever seen. During the last century, the emigration from Europe to that country has been over 11,000,000. That immense immigration came principally from Great Britain and Ireland, Germany, Scandinavia, Denmark, Norway and Sweden. Those millions found their way to the United States without costing the Government of that country, or any of her States or Territories, one dollar. The United States has never assisted immigration, and I believe the policy to be a sound one. As a general thing, assisted immigration, in these days, brings to our shores a very unsuitable and undesirable class—a class that is brought into direct competition with our own mechanics, artisans and laborers, who now more than supply the labor demand. Let us adopt the policy of the United States, and abandon the expensive folly of assisting immigrants to this country. Let us welcome all who come among us without aid; but it is our duty to withdraw all Government aid and discourage a class that invariably go to swell our pauper population and become a burden on our citizens. If the United States has increased so marvellously during the last century, I see no good reason why our country, similarly situated in many respects, cannot prosper and progress in the same ratio if the laws are as liberal, and every inducement is held out to those who come to settle amongst us. We have nearly as great an area as the entire continent of Europe with a population of over 325,000,000. The Dominion of Canada comprises nearly the fifteenth part of the entire land area of the globe. So vast is this area that it is difficult for the ordinary intellect to grasp or comprehend its extent. Who, amongst us can reflect on this glorious heritage which we possess without becoming inspired with the pride of being a Canadian—to be a citizen of such a country? What grand possibilities this mighty heritage must suggest to the reflective mind—a heritage that comprises within its almost boundless limits all the essential elements to make it one of the greatest empires of the world—one of the greatest of ancient or modern times: a country with a constitutional form of government confessedly the best and freest ever devised; a country inhabited by an intelligent, industrious and progressive people—a people possessed of all those noble attributes which made their illustrious ancestors famous for centuries as the disseminators of light, liberty, civilization, and all the blessing that flow in their wake. Though possessed of this glorious heritage and all the inestimable blessings thereto belonging, it largely depends upon us who, for the time being, are enacting laws for the future government of this country—in fact, who are directing its destiny—whether those cherished hopes of greatness shall be realized, or the prosperity, peace and stability of the Confederation shall be endangered or eventually destroyed. Let the Government of this country take warning from the selfish and stupid policy pursued by the Government of the Mother Country towards her colonies a little over a century ago—a policy that cost them the loss of the best portion of this continent. Let the Government remember that it was the arbitrary policy and gross abuse of power that brought about the rebellion of 1837. The ignoring of the rights and wishes of the people of Manitoba and the North-West, when the inhabitants of that country were taken possession of and dealt with like so many chattels, caused the rebellion of 1869-70. All who have watched the gallant struggle which the oppressed and wronged Irish are making for the privilege of controlling and managing their own local affairs, must rejoice to know that their righteous cause is about to triumph—that by granting Home Rule to Ireland, something that ought never to have been denied her, that country may yet become reconciled and prove a tower of strength to the empire instead of a source of weakness as she has been for a very considerable length of time. Three years ago this House felt it to be its duty in the interests of freedom, of good government and of the empire to pass resolutions expressing sympathy for the oppressed and distressed Irish, and a strong recommendation to the Imperial Government to grant Home Rule to Ireland. It is true, the tenor of the polite reply was "Mind your own business: we are quite capable of attending to and managing ours." Although those resolutions were looked upon by Her Majesty's advisers as a piece of undue or unwarrantable interference in a matter in which we were only indirectly interested, and over which we had no control, I believe those recommendations and expressions of sympathy have done good—have strengthened the hands of those who were manfully battling for equal rights and privileges and against class legislation, and have contributed to bring about the present political crisis in England which must result in Ireland getting Home Rule. Now if it were right and proper for us to take up the question of Home Rule for Ireland in this distant part of the empire, I ask how much more so is it our duty to deal with the resolution before the House, a matter affecting directly as it does all but the one-seventeenth part of the Dominion?

If there are any captious enough to oppose the resolution on the pretext that it may hamper the Government they will I hope consider it a sufficient answer—if I refer them to the Home rule resolutions we passed three years ago, and I ask them to consult the division list on that occasion.

The general diffusion of knowledge is fast undermining Autocracy and Toryism which have so long imposed upon and retarded the general progress and welfare of the great masses of the people in the Mother Country—as well as this. The day is near at hand when a majority of the people of this country will rule and govern despite the cowardly and consequently un-British gerrymander of five years ago, and the equally cowardly and expensive Franchise Act of last session. A Government, that is compelled to have recourse to such disreputable and expensive measures in order to retain power is unworthy of confidence and such measures are unerring indications of weakness, decay and early dissolution. The harsh and unjust policy pursued by the Government, towards "Greater Canada" is very similar to that which preceded the rebellions of 37-69-70 and 85, and I fear may bring about a similar state of affairs unless at once abandoned.

In order to prevent the recurrence of such calamities or even the possibility of such calamities, I respectfully submit that the North-West Territories should be represented in the Commons and Senate, and that Manitoba and British Columbia should each have at least one representative in the Cabinet. These two unrepresented Provinces in the Cabinet comprise considerably more than half of the area of the seven Provinces of the Dominion. Of the 3,610,392 square miles in the Dominion, only one-seventeenth are represented in the Cabinet. The future hope of this country largely depends upon the speedy settlement and development of those two Western Provinces and adjoining Territories, and if Canada ever becomes that great country we all hope and believe it will, it is these Provinces and Territories that will make it so. I therefore say it is the bounden duty of the Government to at once give representation to the Territories in the Commons and Senate, and representation to each Province in the Cabinet. I ask that those Provinces be represented in the Cabinet, not as a favor, but as a right. I ask it not only in the interests of those Provinces but of the Dominion.

THE SPEAKER—It being six o'clock I now leave the chair.

AFTER RECESS.

HON. MR. ALMON—I would ask the question did the leave given to the hon. gentleman to read his irrelevant extracts expire at recess?

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—The hon. gentleman is done; he will not speak any more.

HON. MR. MCINNES—In reply to my hon. friend who has just spoken, I may say that I am not the only member of this House who reads extracts, and I do not see why an exception should be made in my case. I only ask for fair play—common British fair play—and that I intend to have in spite of the captious and cowardly conduct of the junior member from Halifax.

HON. MR. GIRARD—I rise to second the motion, because I promised the hon. gentleman that I would do so, but I do not hesitate to say that I did not expect the hon. gentleman would, on this simple motion, cover so much ground. It appears now that his intention was to make out a case against the Government. If I had known that he intended to do so I would have hesitated before promising to second his resolution; because, while I have often had occasion to ask the Government to redress grievances, I have not found them deserving of censure. I approve of the motion itself, and I concur in the the hon. gentleman's remarks that we have been for 15 years in the Confederation without having a representative in the Cabinet. In my opinion, if any sections of the Dominion are entitled to such representation, they are the smaller provinces, because they have to receive their political education and require someone to instruct them how best to promote their progress and prosperity. I agree with the hon. gentleman that we have made sufficient progress—at all events that the two provinces in the west have gained sufficiently in population to entitle them to such representation, and perhaps the time is not far distant when it will be found practicable to adopt the principle established in the British North America Act in the constitution of this hon. body. We know that the Senators were, in the first place, appointed in this way—24 from Ontario, 24 from Quebec, and 24 from the Maritime Provinces. Notwithstanding the difference in population the representation of these three sections was equal in this House. The hon. gentleman from British Columbia has shown that by our population, which is increasing, and the vast area of the western and central districts, we are entitled—or very soon will be entitled—to representation in the Cabinet. It is not unreasonable to expect that before many years the North-West and British Columbia will be the most powerful divisions in the Dominion. I have seen enough of their progress to feel safe in making that assertion. During the past fifteen years two public men, holding portfolios, came to those western provinces to be elected when they could not find constituencies to return them in their own provinces. One of them, I regret to say, is absent from his place in the House of Commons through illness, but I hope that before many days he will be restored to health and able to lead a phalanx of good and loyal men in furnishing needed legislation for the advancement of the country's prosperity. The other statesman to whom I referred has gone to his rest, but though we miss his presence his memory is with us yet, inspiring us with lofty ideas of patriotism which I hope will have the effect of healing the divisions which exist amongst the representatives of Quebec to-day. My hon. friend from British Columbia, in my opinion, adopted a wrong course in attacking the Government as he has done. My impression was, from the tone of his remarks, that he had a quarrel with them. I think if he had approached the subject in a better spirit, he would have found the Government willing, as far as in their power lay, to meet his wishes, because I am happy to say that they have never refused to give the representatives of Manitoba any concessions which they could grant. We have never met with a positive "no," and our requests have always been courteously listened to. In my opinion we are entitled to representation in the Cabinet; I do not say so to censure the Government for their course in the past, but merely to advise them as to what they should do in the future. I am sure that on the first occasion that presents itself they will endeavor to give us the representation which we desire and to which we believe we are entitled.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—My hon. friend from Manitoba has approached this question in what seems to me a very proper spirit. It is quite open to hon. members from Manitoba and British Columbia to urge, as they have done this afternoon, that the Cabinet should be so constituted as to include representatives from these provinces. That is one aspect of the case, and it is quite right and proper that it should be presented. It is quite another aspect of the case to urge, as the hon. member from British Columbia has done, that this House should come to a definite resolution that the Cabinet should be composed in a certain way. Nothing could be more contrary to the interest and convenience of this House than to arrive at such a resolution. It proposes a scheme which would render almost impossible the constitution of the Government. It proposes a scheme unknown to British precedent, and unknown, I believe, to any constitutional government. It is unknown, so far as I am aware, in Great Britain, the United States, France or Italy. How could a government be constituted if such a cast-iron rule were laid down? The gentlemen who sit in the Cabinet from Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces hold their places, not in consequence of any resolution come to by Parliament, or in consequence of any clause contained in the Constitutional Act, but by virtue of the exercise of the prerogative of the Crown. They are called to advise the Crown with reference to the government of the country. No doubt, hereafter, when British Columbia, Manitoba, and the North-West Territories reach that position which they seem likely to attain, which their resources lead one to believe they will reach, they will be represented as the hon. gentleman desires. I do not quarrel with the hon. member from British Columbia for enlarging on the resources of his Province and telling us about the population, area and wealth and seeking to aggrandize his Province and the North-West. That is all quite proper and I hope and believe that in the future at some time or other British Columbia and Manitoba will be represented in the Cabinet. Undoubtedly they will have members in the Government when they arrive at that stage of population and influence which will give them the same position in the country that is now occupied by the older Provinces. When they reach that position, representation will not be granted them as a favor, but they will force their way into the cabinet. It is folly to talk of any fixed cast-iron rule by which the Government must shape their Cabinet in the future. It is difficult enough, as any one who has been concerned in the Government of the country knows, to form a cabinet at all, but if you are to establish a fixed rule and say, "you, must have one man from one place, another from another place and a third from another," you will never be able to constitute a government. If such a rule were laid down in Great Britain how would a government ever be formed there. In what position would London be with its 4,000,000 of people? In what position would Liverpool and other great cities stand—what representation would they have in the Cabinet? Such a rule is unknown there.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Or in the United States.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Take Scotland as an instance? What representation would it have in the Cabinet? Take the case of Ireland—what would its representation be? No Government is constituted on such a principle; it would be impossible to do so. It is a rule which is unknown in England or the United States; it is one which it would not be reasonable or proper to attempt to adopt in this country, or if we did adopt it, one which would fail. What would be the consequence of placing it on record? The resolution of this House would not be imperative upon the Government. No doubt they would desire—I of all others would desire—to pay respect to the resolution of this House, but it would not be imperative or binding upon them. Then we would have a resolution passed which could be of no weight. It would be an attempt to impose upon future premiers an impossible rule and prevent anyone from forming a government at all. I am sure the House will never arrive at such a conclusion as the hon. gentleman desires and which he urged at such length in a speech to which the House has listened, notwithstanding some interruptions, with considerable patience. The hon. gentleman's remarks were beside the real question. The question is not the resources, area and population of British Columbia, but, in the words of the Duke of Wellington, how Her Majesty's government is to be carried on—whether it is to be carried on by the exercise of those constitutional rights that belong to each branch of Parliament, and amongst which none is more deserving of being preserved, none more deserving of respect than the right of the Crown to choose its officers and make them responsible for the management of public affairs, they being obliged to secure a majority in either House of Parliament, and certainly a majority in the House of Commons. These are the proper principles and if we depart from them we have nothing on which to fasten ourselves. If we adhere to them we know that we are pursuing a system which has preserved peace and order amongst our forefathers generation after generation and helped to make Great Britain what she is to-day. If we depart from those principles we establish novel rules the end of which no one can see. The hon. member from British Columbia says that the Premier should first select seven representatives, one from each Province, and afterwards fill up his government from the best men. That is very Utopian; nobody can do that. When the Premier forms a government he is obliged to consider those who constitute its chief support—to consider the party as represented in the House of Commons, and what will secure for his Government the majority in that House. Everything else follows, and the representation which my hon. friend desires for British Columbia, will follow, as everything else will, when the Province attains the influence which every one expects it will warrant it, and no one can safely go in advance of that position. Whenever British Columbia exercises that influence in the affairs of the Dominion at large, which, it is sure to exercise sooner or later, then it will have its representation in the Government, and the same thing may be said of Manitoba and the North-West Territories. These things come by degrees. You cannot safely lay down such a rule as the hon. gentleman proposes; you must allow the Government to be constituted in such a way as to enable it to command a majority in the House of Commons. You cannot lay down any other principle but that, and you will find that no government has ever attempted to establish any different rule. The hon. gentleman thinks apparently that there might be a great many members of the Government. I suppose 160 was only mentioned to show the proportion which British Columbia would be entitled to if area alone were considered, but everyone knows that the Government must be limited in numbers. You cannot increase the Government ad libitum. Look at the Government of the United States which consists of the President and seven members of the Cabinet.

HON. MR. PLUMB—And not appointed with reference to localities at all.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Look at the Government of England which consists of 16 members, and of those I think there is but one from Scotland.

HON. MR. MCINNIS—How many Under Secretaries are there?

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—There is a possibility there, of course; some future Premier might very likely adopt that idea. I myself give my assent to it so far as it goes, and so far as one can consider a question which has not taken a practical shape—that there might be under secretaries and the Government might consist of even fewer members than it does now; because those who have had experience in the government of the country doubt the advantage of having so many ministers. I am sure if my hon. friends on either side of me were in the Government they would feel that it was a source of weakness to have as many in the Government even as there are now. It is impossible for fourteen men always to consult together. In this House we do not consult together; we make speeches to one another. I believe it would be better if there were fewer members of the Cabinet than we have at present; the hon. gentleman's scheme would make the number larger. If we had under secretaries, having seats in either House of Parliament, I believe it would be a useful scheme and one which might hereafter be adopted. I see no objection to it, but to seek to fasten the hands of the Premier for the time being, and say that he must do this and that, is an idea unknown anywhere, not practised anywhere, and which could be attended with nothing but evil and inconvenience, and have no effect except to make more difficult a task which is already sufficiently hard. It would remove from our hands—I speak not of this House particularly, but of members of Parliament generally—the very best and safest and closest control that we can possibly have over the Government, that is, it would take away from us the necessity of the Government having a majority in the House of Commons. There is the real control: the people, through their representatives in Parliament, exercise control over the Government and impose on the Premier no other duty than that, providing such a Ministry as will obtain the approval of the Governor-General and secure the confidence of Parliament, of the House of Commons particularly. These are the cardinal rules, and if you depart from them you enter upon a sea of which you will never see the boundaries. It would be impossible afterwards to exercise any control, and I regret to find a feeling amongst some members of Parliament that you can guide those things by a sort of general representation—that is, representation by numbers, or something else, and that you have no other criterion, no other rule to guide you except what was known in old Canada as representation by population, and that that should extend into the government of the country—that because a certain part of the country has so many inhabitants, therefore it should have a member. How can you get to the end of that? Suppose you were to apply that to Ontario, the first thing you would have would be a division of the province into three sections, the western, central and eastern, and each should be represented. That would never do; the old successful and tried rule is the one to which we should adhere. Under that rule the Empire has become what it is; under that rule Canada is enjoying prosperity; let us not adopt new rules the effect of which we cannot foresee, but adhere to a principle which has been found successful and not seek to change in any way the constitution under which we have lived so happily. I trust that my hon. friend, having given utterance to his views, having told the House what he thinks should be done, will withdraw his motion altogether and not ask the House to vote upon it at all. I think that would be the wiser plan. The House should not be made a debating society of; we are not here to pass abstract resolutions which can have no effect. Suppose the hon. gentleman's resolution were to pass, would the Government follow the rule laid down? It would not, and what would be the effect? Simply this, the authority of this House would be brought more or less into contempt. Now that should not be the case; we should never adopt anything here which the House has good reason to believe will not be followed. To pass such a resolution is to weaken the power of the House and I hope my hon. friend having stated what he thinks is necessary in the interests of his Province and having given the public the benefit of his views, will not press his motion but withdraw it; but if he insists upon pressing it I do trust that the House will reject it.

HON. MR. NELSON—In the near future I may possibly be as anxious to see British Columbia represented in the Cabinet as my hon. colleague from New Westminster. This is a question which you may say was brought before the members from British Columbia at a very early stage after we became a part of the Confederation. I remember (I think it was in 1872 or 1873) a very prominent member from British Columbia bringing this matter up. At that time I, from certain causes, objected to giving British Columbia representation in the Cabinet. At that particular time the one great and burning question in British Columbia was the route for the Pacific Railway through the province. The representatives from Victoria took the ground that the line should be by way of Bute Inlet; the people of the mainland, on the other hand, stood out resolutely for having it built by way of Fraser River. A gentleman who at that time, I think, had an idea that he would be selected as a representative from British Columbia, and probably would have been the man to represent us in the Cabinet had one been chosen, from his great ability, was in favor of the line being built by way of Bute Inlet; but had he been sent as a representative, the people of the mainland would have been very much dissatisfied indeed. Other questions of this kind have come up—the settlement and other questions on which the two important portions of British Columbia were completely divided, and so long as those divisions existed, just so long would the mainland have objected to a representative in the Cabinet from the Island, and the people of Vancouver Island to a representative in the Cabinet from the mainland. I may state to the House that that condition of affairs is exactly the same to-day as it was then. But to my mind there is a still more serious objection to making a cast iron rule of provinces being represented in the Cabinet. It would be subversive of the true principles of responsible government. The Parliament and the people look to the First Minister for the selection of his colleagues, and hold him accountable for their acts; and under such circumstances a cast iron rule, such as my hon. friend attempts to put before the House, would totally destroy that principle of responsible government. The First Minister of the Crown would certainly be no longer responsible for the acts of his Government, if the selection of his colleagues did not rest entirely with himself.

HON. MR. McINNES—Why would he not be responsible?

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Because you lay down the rule for him.

HON. MR. NELSON—You lay down the rule that there shall be so many representatives from Manitoba and so many from British Columbia. Say, for instance, the Premier wants a new Minister of Justice, as was the case not long ago. The Province of British Columbia in that case might have said "You must, appoint a Minister of the Crown from amongst us." I do not think that any representative from British Columbia could fairly occupy the position of Minister of Justice. The same argument would apply to Manitoba if a Minister of Justice had to be selected from the representatives of that province. Another late appointment was that of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Would it be right or proper to have appointed a gentleman from the interior—from Manitoba or the North-West—who, perhaps, never saw a ship on the ocean in his life? I do not think such would be a proper appointment.

HON. MR. McINNES—But there are thirteen portfolios in the Cabinet.

HON. MR. NELSON—Certainly, but if you had to appoint a Minister of Justice or a Minister of Marine and Fisheries from either of those provinces, you would have to make a place for him by removing some other minister. Then the question would arise, not of the efficiency of the man for the position, but the representation of the province. I believe that British Columbia sends as good men to Parliament perhaps as any other province; but I think it lies distinctly with the First Minister of the Crown to select his colleagues, and it would be totally destructive of the principles of responsible government if such were not the case.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I have very little to say on this subject now, because the most of what I intended to say has been more ably stated to the House by our honored and honorable leader: but I suppose there would be no impropriety in my criticising the speech of the hon. member from New Westminster. He certainly kept us very well occupied all afternoon. Well occupied—I do not know that that is the proper expression, but fully occupied and I do not know that he improved his position very much by what he said, because until to-day I certainly thought that we had a very able man in the hon. gentleman from New Westminster. I certainly have had a good deal of reason to form a different opinion of him this afternoon. I do not know whether other hon. members of this House have done so or not. The Dominion of Canada is no longer a baby in swaddling clothes: it has now grown to manhood, and is able to take care of itself: and while I attach a great deal of importance to what was said by our much respected confrere, the hon. member from St. Boniface, who always speaks well on any subject that he discusses in this House—a gentleman for whom every member in this House would do anything he could—I think this is the first time that I have ever had to cast a vote against a motion of which he is the seconder. I doubt very much, had he known of the speech that was coming from our hon. friend from British Columbia, if he would have seconded the motion at all. Before our leader gave us the objections that he held against the representation of provinces in the Cabinet I saw the difficulty that would arise. I saw it years ago, long before I had the honor of having a seat in this House. The Dominion of Canada is now in such a position that the Premier of the day, if he can possibly arrange his Cabinet so as to have every province represented, should do so, but that he should be tied down to select his colleagues from particular divisions or particular provinces is highly improper. I think there are very few men in this House or in the House of Commons who are better acquainted with the resources of Manitoba and the North-West than myself. You will excuse me if I appear egotistical in saying so. I have gone through the finest grazing country out there that exists in the world. I say so though I am interested elsewhere, in Texas, which is nothing like so good a cattle country as we have in our North-West. I believe that in a few years we will have a great wheat country there also: and I recommend every one who has gone there to go into mixed farming. I quite appreciate the value of British Columbia, although I have not yet had the pleasure of visiting that province, but expect to do so next summer. I think it would be a great mistake, when a government has to be formed, whether by our opponents or ourselves (though I hope our opponents will not have anything to do with it for some time to come) that the Premier should be tied down to selecting so many colleagues from each province. I think the best men should be selected irrespective of the locality they represent. The hon. gentleman from New Westminster has spoken of the expense of the few visits that were made by ministers of the government to the western provinces. I really thought that he never would have got down quite so low as to make that speech.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I rise to a question of order. I ask the Speaker to decide whether it is parliamentary or not that an hon. member should say I go down so low.

THE SPEAKER—I do not think that the hon. gentlemen from Montreal is out of order in using that language.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I contend that not only should we be glad to pay the expenses those ministers to go out there, but we should be glad to have more of them visit the western provinces. I have for three or four years personally urged our Minister of Railways to visit British Columbia, and I have talked to our hon. Premier about it, and have told him that he ought to go out and see that country. While we have ministers who go there for the benefit of the country, I would like to know if there is a member of this House or a member of the House of Commons who would expect them to go at their own expense while they are trying to work for the benefit of the Dominion? The thing is absurd. I think that one of the greatest mistakes ever made by any member of this House has been made by the hon. member from New Westminster this afternoon. I am sorry to have to say so, but I believe it, and I think that the resolution that he has proposed if adopted and carried out would ruin any government that would be formed under it. I would be delighted to see the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface in the Government. He is a man that every one likes and respects. I would be glad to see a member from British Columbia in the Cabinet also, and if it were in the interest of the country to have such representation, any government that would be formed would have brains enough and judgment enough themselves if they could get the best men there to select them. I am sorry for having taken up the time of the House, but I feel very strongly on this subject, and I never was more proud of our hon. leader, than I was on hearing his remarks this afternoon, even if he did take the wind out of my sails.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—It is with considerable reluctance that I take any part in this debate, as I have been obliged to trespass already too often upon the kind indulgence of the House. Notwithstanding all that has been said, the country is much indebted to the Senator from New Westminster for the motion which he has brought under discussion, and which cannot fail to do good. I think it was in bad taste and very disrespectful to this House to use the word "foolish" towards the member from British Columbia.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I rise to a question of order. I have not used the word "foolish" in any way that I know of that would be disrespectful either to the House or to any member of it.

THE SPEAKER—I would take this opportunity of calling the attention of hon. gentlemen to the fact that when a member rises to a question of order, it is the duty of any member having the floor to immediately take his seat.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—As regarding this question, the art, or science, of Cabinet-making is one surrounded with great difficulties and embarrassments, and we are all willing to admit that we have never had, and I suppose never will have again a Cabinet-maker who has such a profound knowledge of this art and of men as our present First Minister, Sir John A. Macdonald. He is a model Cabinet-maker. If there is any particular talent that he possesses more than any other man on this earth, it is a talent for manipulating men and framing a Cabinet so as to keep his party in power. The leader of the Government, by his interruptions, sets a very bad example to this House. One would suppose that he had been educated and trained in some lower sphere of society. As I said Sir John is no doubt a model Cabinet-maker. No one disputes that point. He has a mind of such elastic power as to embrace the whole Dominion with one grasp,—a mind that appears to be capable at the same moment of flashing all interests and every interest which can give his government strength, and to form his Cabinet so as to deal with those interests in such a manner, if not by humbug, at all events to keep himself in power. Many hon. gentlemen have remarked that if Her Majesty ever really confers any other title on Sir John it ought to be "Prince of Humbugs." In forming his Cabinet, his chief aim and motive for the last 25 years, has been to know how he could keep his government in power, and not how he should govern for the welfare and prosperity of the country. It is not how he can enhance the prosperity of the Province of Quebec or the Maritime Provinces. If I were not infringing the rules of Parliament I could show how injuries have been done to different parts of the Dominion, but I will not transgress the rules by departing from the subject before us. Every Government requires to possess the element of strength. Of course without strength a Government can do nothing, and we should give Sir John Macdonald every credit for using all fair means for forming his Government upon such principles as will give him strength, if he does not do it at the sacrifice of the true interests of the country, and at the sacrifice of honor and justice. One chief object with Sir John has been how to keep on his side the Church of Rome in all its grandeur, its power, and its strength.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I rise to a question of order. The hon. gentleman is not speaking to the question before the House.

THE SPEAKER—I am inclined to think that the hon. member from Woodstock is not going beyond the rule. The question before the House is representation of the provinces in the Cabinet, and he is now dealing with the policy of the Premier in the formation of former Governments.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I may say that that highly respected and powerful church properly demands that her institutions are not interfered with, and we respect and honor that church, as we respect and honor every church who see that their institutions, which they feel are for the welfare and happiness of mankind, are not interfered with by any government. Now, we all expected that a kind, upright and talented member of this House, whom we all respect very deeply, was to have been offered a portfolio, and the press of the country has expressed its surprise that he has not been appointed. Perhaps the leader of the House will explain why his nomination was cancelled. I suppose it is because the hon. gentleman does not possess wealth. They must have in their Cabinet men who have wealth, for their purposes. My hon. friend has that however which is better than wealth; he has honor, honesty and self-respect, and he could not be induced under any consideration to do that as I member of the Cabinet which he would not do as a private member. Perhaps the leader of the House will say why after an order in Council was passed with respect to that appointment—why it was not carried out? In my time we have known extraordinary appointments to the Privy Council; we have known one unfortunate individual elevated to a position in the Privy Council, who, from his neglect of his duties, brought much disaster upon the country—from his incapacity, from his sad neglect of duty, arising from habits of luxury, ease and indulgence, brought rebellion on the country. That member, as we know—as the public press have stated it—was called to the Privy Council because he went round with the hat and got up a large testimonial to the First Minister of the Crown. What a strange reason for a First Minister, exercising the prerogative which he in his position has, to appoint a person to the Privy Council simply because he gets him up a testimonial of $80,000. Good God, what is the country coming to? We know it to be true, and that unfortunate man, after getting his position in the Privy Council, bothers Sir John and bothers Lord Derby's Government until they force the Queen to bestow upon him a knighthood.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—This is entirely imaginary.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—It is not imaginary: I know of my own knowledge from the household of Her Majesty that for two years they urged Lord Derby to press the appointment, when Her Majesty knew it was not an appointment that was seemly or becoming.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Then Her Majesty's servants were betraying the Household secrets to the hon. gentleman from Woodstock.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I call it a prostitution of the power and prerogative of the first Minister to have the order of knighthood conferred upon a man for such a service.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I must again contradict the hon. gentleman and call him to order for stating what is not true. The conferring of the order of knighthood on Senator Macpherson (the hon. gentleman to whom he alludes) was not in contemplation two years before it was given. The hon. gentleman from Woodstock says that efforts were made for two years with Her Majesty's household: what connection he has with Her Majesty's household it is difficult to understand. His assertion is altogether without foundation. Mr. Macpherson's appointment as K.M.G. was not contemplated more than two months before it took place.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I am quite aware that the leader of this House will use such language and such arguments as will persuade, as he never fails to persuade this hon. House that all appointments to the Privy Council have been wisely and properly made. I am not surprised that he should do so, but I am surprised that he should exhibit such boorish conduct on the floor of this House. The hon. gentleman's powers of persuasion are such—

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has used an expression with reference to me that he ought to withdraw if he has any respect for the House or anybody else. He has spoken of my conduct as being boorish, and I desire him to withdraw it.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I withdraw the expression: I am only going to add—

HON. MR. POWER—I rise to a question of order. No doubt the speech of the hon. gentleman from Woodstock, the representative of the Independent third party is exceedingly interesting and amusing; but I hold that the personal habits of the ministers, and their personal characteristics have not the faintest connection with the resolution which has been moved by the hon. gentleman from New Westminster. The question before the House is whether or not the central, that is the prairie section of this country, and the Pacific section should be represented in the Cabinet. Now, the personal qualities or habits of the members of the present ministry have not the faintest possible connection with that, and I think it is desirable that the hon. gentleman should keep to the text.

THE SPEAKER—The point of order is well taken by the hon. gentleman from Halifax, and I desire the hon. gentleman from Woodstock to confine himself to the question before the House.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—In conclusion, I can entertain no doubt that the leader of this House will persuade the members of the Senate that all appointments to the Privy Council have been wisely and properly made. His powers of persuasion generally prevail here, as according to public rumour, they generally prevail with the fair sex.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—The hon. gentleman from Woodstock has gone contrary to the ruling of the Speaker as reported to the House. That is an offence against this House; it is treating the Senate with contempt. The hon. gentleman goes on reflecting on the decision of the Speaker, because the Speaker has already decided that it improper for him to travel beyond the resolution before this House.

THE SPEAKER—I may say that my power in this chair is limited; my functions are merely the functions of an independent member of this House, and I am not expected to exercise those functions unless I am moved thereto by the request of the House. Consequently it is not in my power, as I would very often desire it to be, to enforce that order and decorum, and that respect for the rules of the House which I think is necessary to its dignity and position. On several occasions the hon. member from Woodstock has, I think, contemptuously disregarded the rules of this House—contemptuously disregarded the ruling of the Chair, and I can only say to hon. gentlemen, if the spectacles which we have witnessed in consequence of the conduct of the hon. gentlemen are to be persisted in, this House will be obliged to take some steps, by the revision of its rules, to protect its own dignity and authority. The whole question is in the hands of the House. If it were in mine I should take steps to assert the dignity of the House, and maintain its just order and decorum.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I rise to a question of order.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Will the hon. gentleman keep his seat? What a boor.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman has been called upon to apologize for insulting remarks made to the leader of this House, and I appeal to hon. gentlemen as to whether he should persistently hold the floor while he occupies that position? I move that the hon. gentleman be no longer heard until he apologizes to this House for the insult that he has put upon it by his remarks against one of the members of the Senate. I ask that the sense of the House be taken upon that question, and I ask his honor the Speaker to rule.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—When I rose to apologize to the House for the words I used in badinage, the irrepressible member from Niagara on my left would not allow me to open my mouth.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Apologize!

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—What an irrepressible boor. When I rose respectfully to apologize to the House for what I said in badinage—simply in badinage—

HON. MR. OGILVIE—That badinage is all reported and printed though.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I rose to apologize, and the hon. gentleman from Niagara who is continually interrupting the House—I wonder that the House does not put him down—

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to apologize for the expression he used towards me?

HON. MR. PLUMB—Apologize!

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I of course apologize for the badinage I used. With regard to the question of British Columbia and the North-West having a representative in the Privy Council, nothing could be more natural. If there had been a member from the North-West Territory in the Privy Council before the insurrection, that insurrection would not have taken place. It is a fact established by the press of the country, and my hon. friend here is right and deserves the credit of the House for calling the attention of the government to the fact that such representation is needed. It appears to me necessary that very important changes should be made to prevent the present reckless and abandoned government wasting in such a wholesale way the resources of the country. We have vast interests to develop in British Columbia, and, as my hon. friend very properly explained, the Ministers of the Crown, going over there with their private secretaries and returning, knew little more when they came back than when they left. Nothing could be more natural than the suggestion of my hon. friend here, who is a lover of his country and a worthy representative of British Columbia. Nothing could be more natural than that he should assert his opinion in the face of this hon. body, whom the leader of the House seems in some way or other, through his persuasive influence, to bring to his opinion. When we look at the position of British Columbia and the North-West Territory, I should like to know what reason the leader of the Government has for refusing them a representative? Do they not give New Brunswick and Nova Scotia two Ministers each, and why not give one to these distant provinces? I do not say that I go as far as the hon. gentleman who moved the resolution, and suggest that we should establish representation by population and increase the number of Ministers.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I did not say that.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—That was my impression, but some hon. members stated that you did make such a remark. What do we want with more Ministers? If 60,000,000 of people can be governed by six Ministers, why should this country, with only 4,500,000, require 13 ministers?

They are simply consuming the fruits of the people's industry, and pursuing their own ways and methods of keeping themselves in power. It is readful to think that our country, which produces such a revenue, should have it scattered by a reckless Government, who care not how much they may throw away so long as they can keep themselves in power.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I do not wish to prolong this debate longer than is necessary to correct some statements which have been made by the hon. member from British Columbia in regard to the province which I have the honor to represent here. He states that he gathers from the Public Accounts that the imports into Prince Edward Island in five years amounted to $4,000,000. My hon. friend is entirely mistaken; wherever he got his data they are wrong, and if the foundation is bad the superstructure is of no value. In 1861 the total imports into Prince Edward Island amounted to $1,021,629. The last year before she entered the Confederation, in 1872, they amounted to $2,740,000. If you apply the rate of increase from 1861 to 1872 to the period between 1872 and 1884-5, you will find the increase has been about 138 per cent., or equal to about $4,000,000. Now it is hardly credible that in the 13 years between 1872 and 1885 the Province has gone behind, or in other words, that for five years ending in 1885 her exports have not been equal to what they were in two years fourteen years ago. I really do not know where my hon. friend got his figures.

HON. MR. MCINNES—From the Public Accounts.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—He will find that figures are like edged tools, not to be handled carelessly by inexperienced people. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that the Province of Prince Edward Island contributes as much to the revenue in one year as British Columbia has contributed in five years.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Show me the documentary evidence.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I will take the exports and imports of the United States,

Canada, and Great Britain and apply the same rules to each that I do to the exports and imports of Prince Edward Island for the years we had them under our own Government, and I will prove to him that the ratio of increase has been as great in Prince Edward Island as in any part of the Dominion. Nay, I will prove it to him in another way; I will give him the benefit of the last census, and will show the House that they may well doubt, as I do, the correctness of his figures. While I do not dissent from his ideas as to the desirability of having a representative of the prairie and western sections of the country in the Cabinet, and whilst he has a just right as a representative man in this Parliament to advance those views and ideas, still I do think, while he enunciates those opinions, he does not believe them himself; and though he states that he believes the Government would not have committed the mistakes with regard to those provinces, which it seems in his opinion they have committed, nevertheless, when you find other representatives of those provinces supporting the Government, you must come to the conclusion either that they represent their people correctly or that he does not. He told us in the course of his remarks that the Government had by their treatment of the people of the North-West Territories, and by their criminal neglect, retarded the advance of this country for a decade. I take issue with him on that point, as I do with the hon. member from Halifax. I say that the effect of that uprising, not only in America but in Europe, and wherever the press of this country reaches, has been to prove beyond any reasonable doubt that Canada is a country able to protect the property of its citizens and to carry out the laws upon its Statute books. That alone will be the means of attracting to our shores a considerable number of people who will feel that they will be more completely protected in this country, where law and order are maintained, than they would be in the United States which has been for many years past subject to frequent Indian wars. But, passing from that, I wish to say a few words in reply to some remarks which were made by the hon. member from Woodstock. I did give him credit for being a high toned gentleman, even if sometimes his judgment was defective, but I did not think that he would have been guilty of attacking a gentleman who is now absent from the Senate—a gentleman that he once attacked in this House by virtue of his position as a member of Parliament. On that occasion he made his charges in this House and when he was challenged to prove them he was unable to do so and was unanimously condemned by the House.

HON. MR. PLUMB—He never got a vote for his resolution.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—The resolution was not placed on the annals of the House out of consideration for the condition of the hon. gentleman, who fancied that he had been wronged and suffered from oppression. The matter was then fully sifted and the most satisfactory explanations were given, and it was hardly in keeping with the high gentlemanly instincts which the hon. gentleman professes to be guided by, that he should insult the memory of a gentleman who is now 6,000 miles away from here. When the matter was before the House on a former occasion, he met those assaults as became a gentleman, and I am satisfied that he was not guilty of what was laid to his charge. So far as that hon. gentleman is concerned, his name at all events should have been left out of this discussion. No unkind references should have been made to him, especially by one who had been for the greater part of his life his personal friend.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I did not refer to the charges which I once brought against Sir David Macpherson concerning the Bank of Upper Canada matter.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—No, you did not do that, because you were ashamed.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER — Oh, ashamed! Afraid I suppose?'

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Yes, ashamed and I dare say afraid too. The condemnation of the House was sufficiently strong on the former occasion, and the hon. gentleman did not venture to make the attack in the same way again.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I do not care.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I suppose the hon. gentleman does not care, but the House will take good care not to permit a repetition of the offence. The hon. gentleman from Woodstock says that Sir John Macdonald has been the cause of all the troubles which occurred in the North-West Territories.

HON. MR. POWER—If the hon. gentleman from Woodstock was out of order in referring to those things, surely the hon. member from Alberton in referring to them now is still more out of order, because he has not the excuse which the other hon. gentleman had.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I am quite in order.

HON. MR. POWER—I ask for the Speaker's ruling!

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I did not come here to learn the rules of Parliament.

HON. MR. POWER—I am not discussing that; I am asking for the Speaker's decision!

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman from Alberton is not now referring to the language for which the hon. member for Woodstock was called to order.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I may say to my hon. friend, the leader of the third party in this House, that he should have studied the rules more carefully. I was remarking, when I was interrupted, that the hon. gentleman from Woodstock had for 30 years of his life been a faithful supporter of this "Prince of Humbugs." I remember when I first became a member of this House hearing him speak in warm terms of admiration of Sir John Macdonald. I would remind him that this is hardly a proper time to attack his former leader when he is lying in a sick room—it is hardly proper to indulge even in what he is pleased to term "badinage" under the circumstances. I think the hon. member will agree with me in that.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Yes I agree with you there.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—For many years the hon. member was a supporter of Sir John Macdonald and praised him at every opportunity, as the records of the House will show. It is, to say the least, inconsistent for him now to denounce the Premier as a Prince of Humbugs. I will pass over his reference to the Church of Rome as I think it hardly calls for a reply.

However much there may be in the views advanced by the hon. gentleman from British Columbia with regard to representation in the Cabinet for his Province, he must I think agree with me that so far as the present Government are concerned if there is one portion of Canada more than another that they have always treated with the utmost consideration, it is the Province of British Columbia. We can all remember when, a few years ago, resolutions were brought before Parliament for the building of the great Canadian Pacific Railway, a certain number of gentlemen, who, may be ranked amongst the hon. member's friends at the present time, ridiculed the idea of expending the revenues of Canada, and pledging the resources of the country to construct a great railway for such a small number of people. I think his memory will, at all events, reach back far enough to recall the stand taken by Sir David Macpherson and other members of the Government, when they pledged the resources of this country (as they had a right to do) to carry out the arrangements made with British Columbia; and if we have to-day a railway running from the Atlantic to the Pacific we may thank the hon. gentleman, who has been called to-day the Prince of Humbugs, for it. Therefore, practically speaking, whatever Province has a right to find fault with the Government, it does not come with a good grace from any representative of British Columbia to show by a series of ill-prepared statistics that his Province has been unfairly or ungenerously treated because it has had no representative in the Dominion Cabinet. Perhaps the best arrangement that could be made would be to have at least one representative from each Province of the Dominion in the Cabinet; but, as the leader of the House has remarked, anyone who has been a member of the Government knows full well how difficult it is from a majority to choose Ministers and how often, from a variety of reasons, a Premier is obliged to take men into his Government that he would not otherwise select.

HON. MR. POWER—Hear, hear.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—My hon. friend laughs; I would remind him of the difficulty that Mr. Mackenzie experienced when he formed his Cabinet. I wonder if the representatives of Nova Scotia were men of his choice, or whether they were forced upon him. How much did his Minister of Militia know about military affairs? I doubt if he had ever even learned the goose step. I wonder if the gentleman from Yarmouth was the choice of the Premier? I think not. It is very well in theory to lay down such rules, but I do not think in practice it would tend to promote the best interests of the country to bind the premier by any such cast iron regulation.

HON. MR. POWER—I think it is to be regretted that this question has been discussed in the way it has. The hon. gentlemen from British Columbia brought before the House a matter of very considerable consequence and one which ought not to have involved any personal issues or any very heated discussion. The warm element has been imported too largely into the debate. Perhaps we have one reason to rejoice: in addition to the very valuable information which the mover of the resolution gave us, it has elicited from the leader of the House a speech which we were all very glad to hear. It manifested more of the fire of youth than speeches of the hon. leader have usually shown of late. This much can be said about the resolution before us. One criticism by the hon. Postmaster General is I think sound and applies to the resolution, and that is that you could not undertake to bind the Government down by any express rule set forth in a resolution or in a statute. I think that would be quite impracticable. While it is perfectly true, that it would be an unusual and un-British thing to tie a government down in that way, still there is, as the Minister has said, an unwritten law which governs the formation of ministries, and we have that law in the Dominion. The hon. leader of the Government knows that, while theoretically the gentlemen who if entrusted with the duty of forming a government is at liberty to choose his colleagues all from the Provinces if he pleases, or all from two provinces if he wishes, practically that is not so. There is an unwritten law which obliges him to take into his Cabinet representatives of different sections of the population, different nationalities, different denominations and different localities. Would any hon. gentleman entrusted by the Governor-General with the duty of forming a government in this country venture do so without taking in any representative from the Maritime Provinces? The thing could not be done; and we see that the rule which was laid down by the leader of the House, although true, perhaps, as an abstract proposition, is not true when it comes to be applied. That general, unlimited power of the first minister is controlled by this unwritten law. I think that if the hon. member from New Westminster had put his resolution in a somewhat different form it might have been better. Reading the resolution, I see that after all it does not say that such shall be the law, but that justice and expediency demand that such a rule shall be adopted. I think, perhaps, if it had expressed regret that heretofore those sections of the Dominion had not been represented in the Cabinet, it might have been in a better form. I think that there is a good deal of force in the argument of the hon. member from New Westminster. I am not going into his statistics; nor shall I follow the hon. gentleman from Alberton, who undertook to set up his logical deductions against the statements of the blue books, and who rather surprised me by stating that our rebellion in the North-West was calculated to attract immigrants to that country. The fact that we have shown that we have in this country Indian wars and rebellions is, in his opinion, calculated to attract peaceable people from the United Kingdom and Germany.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I did not say anything of the kind, and the hon. gentleman knows it full well.

HON. MR. HOWLAN.

HON. MR. POWER—I do not think I could be expected to argue with a gentleman who takes such a line. The leader of the House said that in the United States, in the formation of a cabinet, no regard was paid to the sections of the country.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I said there was no law.

HON. MR. POWER—I am not contending that there should be any law; but there is the unwritten law, as the Minister called it. It will be a long time before we see a Cabinet in the United States in which there is not a representative of the South and of the West. I think care has always been taken since the country settled down after the great war, to have a representative of the South; and there is always a representative of the West in the Cabinet.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Does not my hon. friend see that that is the case without any act of Congress, and it only argues that this resolution is unnecessary.

HON. MR. POWER—I do not wish to be understood as saying that I think this resolution necessary. I am simply pointing out that there is nothing so out of the way or unparliamentary in calling attention to this matter. I have already said that I think perhaps the resolution might have been put in a better form, as expressing regret that the Government had not seen fit to recognize the claims of the central and Pacific sections of the country. I agree with the leader of the Government in thinking that the interests of this country would probably be served if the number of members of the Cabinet were largely reduced. I cannot understand why less than 5,000,000 of people should require 13 or 14 Ministers when half the number are able to do the business of 55,000,000. The argument of the leader of the House with respect to the time when British Columbia and Manitoba should get representation in the Cabinet is unsound. The hon. gentleman says when British Columbia has such a population and such weight that she can force herself into the Cabinet, then she can come, and the same thing practically as to Manitoba. Now it seems to me that that is not a correct principle.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I did not say that. I said that the time would come when the population of British Columbia would so increase that she would force herself into the Cabinet.

HON. MR. POWER—It amounts to the same thing.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—No, not the same thing; when her influence was so great that the gentleman called upon to form an administration would find it to his interests to have a representative from that Province in the Cabinet.

HON. MR. POWER—That is a distinction without very much difference. It is very nearly what I said; but I stand corrected. I do not look at it in that way at all. I am looking at the thing now, not from the point of view of a gentleman who is forming a Cabinet, but from the point of view of one who is considering the interests of the whole country. I think it is perfectly safe to say that the interests of Quebec are not in any great danger of being seriously interfered with or neglected by the Government; because the Province of Quebec has so large a representation in the House of Commons that it is able to ensure that its interests will be guarded. The same thing may be said of Ontario. If Ontario were being treated with gross injustice, even if it had not a single representative in the Cabinet, its numerous representatives in the House of Commons, would defeat any Government which undertook to treat the Province with marked injustice. How different is the case of a province like British Columbia or Manitoba? These sections of the Dominion because they have not a large representation in the House of Commons, to protect their interests are entitled—they are not strictly entitled, but they have a stronger claim to representation in the Cabinet in one sense than the other provinces have. We know that although a great deal has been done for British Columbia, I think probably too much, still it has not been done in the way it would have been done if there had been in the Government a man who represented the people of British Columbia, and looked at things from their point of view. The action of the Government would have been more in the interests of the people of that province than it has been. I quite agree with what has been said by the mover of the resolution, and by the hon. gentleman from Woodstock, that if Manitoba had had a representative in the Cabinet, the probabilities are— if he were a man of independent character, such a man as ought to represent that country—the recent outbreak would not have taken place: because a man living on the spot and judging for himself with his eyes open would have seen what was coming. At the same time there is this to be said—and I may be pardoned now if I am guilty of what the hon. gentleman from Woodstock was guilty of a few minutes ago—that with such a ministry as we have now, with an evident disposition to procrastinate, perhaps a minister from Manitoba even would not have been able to induce speedy action so as to prevent the outbreak. While the expression of opinion we have had here this evening is a very good thing, on the whole it would be advisable that the hon. gentleman from New Westminster should withdraw his resolution, because perhaps if adopted in its present form it might be calculated to put the House in a false position.

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The hon. gentleman from Halifax has stated that the action of the Government did not meet the views of the people of British Columbia. I entirely differ from him on that point. The last question before the House here about British Columbia was passed upon by the provincial assembly, and was adopted there by a large majority: and the action of Parliament here was only to give effect to the bargain made by the Province of British Columbia.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Will the hon. gentleman inform the House how the representatives of British Columbia stood on that question, both in this House and in the Commons?

HON. MR. MACDONALD—I forget the relative numbers now: but there was a large majority from the mainland, and a majority from the island.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Will the hon. gentleman—

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman has already spoken.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I hope the Minister of Interruptions will allow me to proceed. I know that my colleague (Mr. Macdonald) does not wish to mislead the House. All the representatives of British Columbia, except those from Victoria, opposed that measure both in this House and in the House of Commons.

HON. MR. MACDONALD—My recollection is that it was quite the other way. The principle of this resolution meets with my approval, but I regret to say that it has been brought forward in such a way that I cannot support it. I do not think it was brought in the interest of the province, but merely as a cloak for an attack on the Government. The mantle of the hon. gentleman from Woodstock seems to have fallen upon the shoulders of the hon. gentleman from New Westminster. He has followed on his line, and in his footsteps. In presenting the matter to the House he has gone into irrelevant questions, mystified the subject, and made it offensive to every member of the House. While I fully agree with the principle of representation in no other way but by provinces in the Cabinet, and it will have to come to that sooner or later, and the Postmaster General gives us a hope in his speech that it will be accomplished some day, how soon we cannot tell—while these are my views, I am proud to confess it, there is hardly any, or no grievance now standing unredressed in British Columbia.

HON. MR. MCINNES—What about the lands?

HON. MR. MACDONALD—They have been dealt with in the fairest manner throughout. Our views have been met on every single question. There are one or two questions standing in abeyance between the two governments which will be settled in a very short time—something to do with the minerals in the railway belt, and the surveys. With regard to the railway belt I may say that the rights of the squatters will be protected if they are properly on their lands, and within proper lines. I do not wish to discuss this motion at all because it has been brought forward in such a very offensive way; it has taken the House by surprise, and questions have been gone into that cannot now be answered. The hon. gentleman has discussed affairs in the North-West and Home Rule in Ireland, and has wandered down through the states of America. There is no occasion to do anything of the kind in presenting this subject as a fair and square issue before the House. I would just ask hon. gentlemen what the natural consequence would be if all the provinces now forming the Dominion of Canada had been for the first time considering the conditions of the union of the provinces? Is it not natural that they would be stipulating and agreeing that each province should have representation not only in the Parliament but in the Cabinet as well; and would they not have come into the Confederation only on a footing equal in every respect? I fancy that although there is nothing in the British North America Act about representation of provinces in the Cabinet, it was discussed in the conference, and I daresay a tacit understanding was arrived at. Now, with respect to Ministers visiting British Columbia, I think those visits have been very beneficial. The people of the province received those Ministers with the greatest pleasure, and their presence has done a great deal of good; but the very fact that those gentlemen had to come over to the Province as a matter of business shows the necessity of there being a responsible Minister in the Cabinet to deal intelligently with the affairs of the country.

HON. SIR. ALEX. CAMPBELL—I wish to say a word with reference to a statement of the hon. gentleman from New Westminster who accused, as I understood him, the Government of the Dominion of having given away the coal lands in British Columbia. This Government here gave away no coal lands whatever; the coal lands were given away by the Province of British Columbia. The legislature of that province not only once, but twice passed bills placing in the hands of the Government some of the coal lands upon Vancouver Island between Nanaimo and Esquimalt for the purpose of constructing this road, and during my errand there it struck me that it was a somewhat lavish offer of the Government, and I expressed that opinion: but in British Columbia the people had made up their minds that they would give these coal lands to any one who would build the road, and they did give them. All that the Dominion gave was $750,000 in money, but the land was given by the people of British Columbia through their Legislature, by laws passed on two separate occasions with an interval of two years between.

HON. MR. INNES—What was the amount of the consideration?

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—For constructing the railway the money given by the Dominion was $750,000.

HON. MR. MCINNES—And how much for taking over the dry dock and completing and operating it?

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I do not remember; I cannot keep those things in my mind. It rested with the Province of British Columbia to say whether they should give the land or withhold it; they could do just as they pleased about it, and in the exercise of their own discretion they gave it.

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Those coal lands were there for years offered to anyone who would build the railway and wish to take them.

HON. MR. PLUMB—It is almost too late for any member to rise and address the House on this subject, but I feel that I would scarcely be doing my duty to myself or to the House if I did not offer a few remarks. In 1884 I brought forward a question as to the representation of the North-West in the Cabinet. I did not hear my hon. friend at that time support me with particular strength or with any enthusiasm. I informed the House as well as I could what was the condition of the several territories in the United States: what forms of Government had been established for them, and I then expressed the hope that the time would not be far distant when some arrangement might be made by which the great North-West would be represented both in this House and in the House of Commons. A gentleman in the House of Commons, whose name I will not mention, after my notice was put upon the order paper here, took the opportunity of making a similar motion and speech in other House: and although I have not read his speech, I am informed that it was largely a quotation from my own. I was told at that time, and I have been told since, that owing to the difficulty of establishing Municipal Government, and municipal divisions, there would be at this time a very great objection to attempting to give parliamentary representation to the North-West. The municipalities which have been organized are scattered. The people there do not like to go to the expense of Municipal Government, and until they are ready themselves to manage elections, and prepare the necessary preliminaries, it is quite out of the question for any legislation here to be effective in providing for their representation. We are informed by the hon. member from Halifax that the hon. mover of this resolution should not have introduced into it anything in the way of personal invective or personal remark. I think the hon. member must feel that this criticism of a gentleman who has shown him very good will in supporting him or in endeavoring to support him when points of order were raised, was a rebuke, if he has any feeling in that direction.

HON. MR. POWER—My remarks did not refer to the mover of the resolution.

HON. MR. PLUMB—We took them for what they were worth. The speech of the hon. gentleman from New Westminster was made the vehicle of a virulent attack upon the Government. The hon. gentleman wandered from Home Rule in Ireland to the North-West rebellion, to the extravagance of the Government, and to the general mismanagement of the affairs of the country. I do not see exactly what all that had to do with the matter under discussion: a calm and temperate appeal to this House for the North-West, for Manitoba and for British Columbia would have been in very much better taste, and would have had a better effect than the speech made by the hon. gentleman. He poses as an independent member of this House. I remember looking not long ago at the Parliamentary Companion which contains the record of representatives in both Houses, and I was somewhat surprised to find the hon. gentleman's political complexion designated as a thorough independent. I saw him afterwards, and I said "I thought you came into the House under the recommendation of the Conservative Government?" He said "Of course I put my name down as independent; but there is no more faithful follower of the Conservative Government than I am."

HON. MR. MCINNES—I rise to a question of order. I would just simply say that the statement made by the hon. gentleman is false—Is false—I repeat it.

HON. GENTLEMEN—Order, order, order!

HON. MR. MCINNES—In the Parliamentary Record for the Commons I put myself down as independent, as I was, and when I became a member of this House I did the same and hon. gentlemen know that my course has not been that of a slavish supporter of the Government. By consulting the division list during the five years I was member of that House, you will find I voted nearly as often against the Government as I did for them.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman did tell me that, and I dare him to deny it, and I will give the very place where the conversation took place.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I say it is false.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I do not say that the hon. gentleman intentionally states a falsehood.

HON. MR. MCINNES—It is false, and if the hon. gentleman persists in making that statement after my denial, I say he intentionally states a falsehood.

HON. MR. PLUMB.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I think that the hon. gentleman has forgotten that about that time there was some idea that there might be a change in the administration of British Columbia; and I fancy the hon. gentleman had his ambition, and I suppose he did not care to have it known that the term “independent” should be applied to him.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I say that is another falsehood.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I ask the hon. gentleman to keep silence and not interrupt me. That was the conversation between the hon. gentleman and myself; and I believe I am sufficiently well known in this House to have a positive and deliberate statement of that kind which I make accepted, notwithstanding the very discourteous and very improper manner in which the hon. gentleman has interrupted me.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I say it is false, and you know you are stating what is not true.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman may say that as much as he pleases; I dare say he is hit pretty hard. The hon. gentleman may claim that the North-West and British Columbia are not fairly represented. I remember when the party to which the hon. gentleman now leans made a most malignant attack upon the administration of the day because the Province of British Columbia was so largely represented in both Houses. They complained that a province with only ten or twelve thousand white inhabitants had six members in the Commons and three in the Senate. I defended the position of the province. I said that British Columbia, when admitted to Confederation, had already its provincial autonomy; that it had been accepted with that provincial autonomy. If it had come into the confederation at its inception, very likely this representation would have been cut down; but it was very unfair after taking the province in with that representation to now attempt to restrict its numbers. The hon. gentleman, when he was in the House of Commons will remember that it was a subject of attack in the press, on the platform and in parliament, on the government of the day. Now, as regards the provinces of Manitoba, it has six members in the House of Commons and three Senators in this House. The time will come, as my hon. friend the leader of this House has said—and it will come in such a way that the claims of those provinces cannot be disregarded—where they will assert themselves. No anticipatory clap-trap like my hon. friend has given us here to-day will accelerate that time a single moment. The hon. gentlemen, I am pained to believe, did not make that speech in the interests of the province whose cause he attempted to champion. I believe he made that speech for the purpose of a covert attack upon the Government. The hon. gentleman lugged into that speech matters which it is not convenient to reply to here. He accused the Government of being guilty of such remissness to the people of the North-West, that they were responsible for the rebellion. He said that the government had increased the public debt by $5,000,000 in that way, while the hon. gentlemen knows, if he knows anything about public affairs, that the expenditure was charged into the current expenditure of the year, and did not go to swell the public debt one cent. The hon. gentleman complains that he is interrupted while he speaks. He has kept up a running fire of interruptions while I have been speaking, and the hon. gentleman should remember that a physician should heal himself. There is not a member in this House, or in the Parliament of the Dominion who is not desirous to do ample justice to British Columbia, the North-West Territories and Manitoba. It must be remembered that the great interests in connection with those territories and provinces—their great growth—have been comparatively of a day. They have only begun lately to attract much public attention. The communication through the great North-West has only been opened within the last year or two, and it has been opened, I beg to remind my hon. friend, by the Conservative Government against the most virulent, most persistent opposition that has ever been offered to a great public measure. It is now, and will be in the future, the care of the Government, after it has overborne the opposition which threatened at one time to destroy the great project of building the Pacific Railway (and the hon. gentleman himself has shown some disposition to obstruct that work within the last year), relieved as it has been by the proposal of the Pacific Railway Company to pay back the $20,000,000 which it was said we were sinking as we had sunk money loaned to the Grand Trunk Railway—it will be in a position to do something for these outlying territories, but that time cannot be hurried. I must express my surprise at the hon. gentleman's arguments. He tried to impress on this House that those vast solitudes in the North-West—those vast fertile solitudes which are waiting to be peopled with thousands of settlers—should have representation, not by population, but by acreage, because they are enormous in extent, and that they should exercise an influence which has not been accorded before to territories of that kind. On that principle the City of London, probably having not over ten thousand or fifteen thousand acres altogether, with a population of 4,500,000 should stand in no better position as regards representation, than the same number of acres say in an uncultivated part of Scotland or Ireland. Such a proposition as that does not do great credit certainly to the hon. gentleman's logic or his judgment.

HON. MR. MCINNES—What about her revenues? Didn't I compare her revenues and population as well?

HON. MR. PLUMB—Yes, you did.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Give that to the House as well.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman has given it to the House, and the House has had enough of it. We have been informed by the hon. gentleman who preceded me that we should give extra protection and extra advantages to those small provinces because they cannot take care of themselves. He says that Quebec has so large a representation that we cannot trifle with her. That is to say that we should take away from Quebec perhaps a part of her representation in the Cabinet because she has so large a parliamentary representation that she cannot be trifled with. That kind of argument is one which I am not astonished to hear from the hon. gentleman from Halifax. He says Quebec cannot be treated with marked injustice. No province can be treated with marked injustice; we are all proud of the Confederation and the sooner it is impressed upon the public mind by the actions of the deliberative assemblies which represent the public, that we are one Confederation having one interest—not separate provincial jealous interests, but one interest bound together—the sooner that is understood the more happy we shall be, and the greater will be the prosperity of this Dominion. Then we are told that what has been done for British Columbia has not been in accordance with its wishes. That is most extraordinary. We have six members from British Columbia in the House of Commons and three in the Senate. Yet we are told that we do not act according to the wishes of British Columbia. Those gentlemen who come here do not object, and they are returned by the people, and they enjoy the confidence of the people of British Columbia. The hon. gentleman propounds a most extraordinary doctrine. I have never heard anything so preposterous as a remark of that kind. We are told by an hon. gentleman that the recent outbreak in the North-West—for we have had everything discussed in this debate—would tend to the advantage of the North-West and stimulate immigration. He never said a truer thing in his life.

HON. MR. POWER—Hear, hear.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. member from Halifax says "hear, hear," but I have better information, perhaps, than the hon. gentleman, and I may tell him that the Pacific Railway is selling its lands, the North-West Company is selling its lands, and large preparations are made for immigration this season. And why? Because the Conservative Government took the rebellion by the throat and showed that no matter what might happen up there the rights of the settler should be respected, and they should be protected in their lives and property. There were whisps in the Opposition press.

HON. MR. PLUMB.

that settlers would not be safe in the North-West: that there would be Indian rising and disquiet there: but when it was found that the Government was ready to protect the people—ready on the moment to do what was never done before with equal promptitude in any civilized community, people on the other side of the Atlantic began to have confidence in our North-West, and to disbelieve the aspersions that have been made by an unpatriotic Opposition press. This discussion, I think, is upon the whole a salutary one. The hon. gentleman from New Westminster has discharged his artillery, and I think it has proved perfectly harmless. I expected to hear that the hon. gentleman had been disappointed in a private speculation.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I rise to a question of order. The hon. gentleman states that my motive in bringing forward this resolution was private speculations of mine.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I said what every body knows in this House who heard the hon. gentleman's speech last year, that he has been sorely disappointed in a private speculation.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Whether disappointed in business or not, is none of your business. If I speculated I did so with my own money and not the money of others.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Having been disappointed he lugs in his private grief before us.

HON. MR. POWER—I rise to a question of order.

THE SPEAKER—I think the hon. gentleman from Niagara is going a little too far.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I said nothing about the hon. gentleman's motives: he chose to take us into his confidence in a very long and bitter speech last year. We have a right to notice that speech, a perfect right to refer to it, and every hon. gentleman who heard that speech will concur with me in the remarks I have made in reply to it to-day.

HON. MR. POWER—No, no.

HON. MR. PLUMB—There can be no difference at all about it. The senior member from Halifax knows it just as well as I do. The hon. gentleman has his grievances, but the public as a rule do not sympathize with people who have attempted to make speculations and have failed.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has no business whatever to make such an insinuation, and every person must know that he is out of order when he attributes such improper motives to me. I say it is contemptible to use a subterfuge.

THE SPEAKER—I do not think that it is within the privilege of the hon. gentleman to say that the hon. member is influenced by improper motives.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Then we will not use that subterfuge—to quote the language of the hon. gentleman—any longer. But I can only say his attack upon the Government, the general tone of his speech, certainly warrants the use of warm language. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would not know the language he has used if he hadn't it carefully written down. He read it from a manuscript and so far was he from exactly knowing what he was going to say that he very often missed the text, and had great difficulty in finding it, following it with his finger when he was speaking. The language, manner and tone of the hon. gentleman's ally, who sat next to him and was cheering and encouraging him on, is something that I refer to with the greatest possible reluctance. We have had specimens in this House, day after day, of a kind of behavior which, I think, we owe to ourselves in some way or other to see if there may not be rules made to check. There have been scenes here which are disgraceful to this body. I say it with pain and regret, because I believe the gentleman, by courtesy called "honorable" in this House, who uses the language habitually used by the hon. member from Woodstock, insults the Senate and the representative institutions of this country. He is not in the Chamber at present, because he always gets out of the way when he has made an attack or violent speech of any kind. He has not the courage to remain and hear a reply, and therefore we have to deal with the matter as it stands. I trust that the House will see, for the protection of its own dignity, that it will be necessary, as the hon. Speaker has suggested, that some new and more stringent rules of order should be adopted, and I hope the leader of the House will at a suitable time propose that there shall be a committee to revise the rules of order and see whether the House cannot have the control of its own decorum and the control of those who habitually violate it.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—After the long debate which has taken place on this motion I do not wish to keep the House for more than a few minutes to make two or three remarks. Coming from one of the Provinces to which so much reference has been made I think it is my duty to make a few remarks, and I may say that I would have seconded the motion, when requested to do so by the mover of it, had it not appeared to me to go somewhat further than, at all events, my views would lead me. I know that the people of Manitoba would be quite elated if they were given a Minister in the Dominion Cabinet, and there is no doubt a great many people in that country believe that they have certain rights in that direction. I suppose they are somewhat vague, but at all events there is something to be said in support of their claim. A new province such as ours, where so many changes are taking place, requires special representation. It is almost impossible for a Government here to arrive at the truth in many cases; they are dependent upon reports from their employes and also, no doubt, the statements of prominent residents there. Those reports in many instances conflict, and it places the Government in a very awkward position, as no doubt the Government are more bound to accept the reports of their employes than the statements of outsiders. I do not know that those reports are at all times the most reliable. As far as that is concerned, although it is not exactly pertinent to the question, I think it has a certain bearing upon it. From the manner in which the Cabinet has hitherto been constructed, seeing so many representatives from the large provinces and a less number from the smaller ones, and Manitoba being exceedingly ambitious, no doubt many of our people expect that any Government being formed would give their claims due consideration. I merely mention these things to show that I sympathize in some degree with the motion of the hon. gentleman from British Columbia, but I could not see my way to go far enough to second the motion. nor yet to sustain it, especially after his, I must say, unwarranted attack upon the Government. From my personal knowledge of many of the parties that were concerned in the rebellion, and from previous knowledge of almost every man of them, I can see no ground whatever on which the Government can be accused of criminal neglect in the matter. There might have been some delay, but I do not think that it could be called criminal, and I have never yet found one point that could be brought against the Government to show that the action taken by the settlers in the rebellion was justifiable. I have heard a good many persons making those vague statements, but I have never yet heard any one individual particularize any special point, and I have frequently asked those who made such charges to do so. There was one point, the principal one on which I believe the half-breeds themselves thought they had a grievance, and that was the delay in getting their patents, and the surveyors drawing lines through lands they had taken up. Other parties said that those half-breeds had gone there prior to Confederation. Now I have made particular inquiries, and it is doubtful whether any one of them was settled there prior to Confederation, and even if it had been the case, every hon. member knows very well that they could not prevent their lands being surveyed. It was an absolute necessity that their lands should be surveyed according to law, but that did not indicate that the Government were going to take their lands from them. As far as I have been able to learn from close enquiry there is not a man who can say that a foot of land has been taken from any settler in that district.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Hear, hear; neither was there.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—Therefore I say it is improper for any member to assert that the Government were criminal in any sense of the term. There might have been, as I have said, some delays in issuing patents, and probably the Government could show good ground for those delays. My chief object in rising was to ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw his motion. Perhaps by bringing it up in another shape at some future time it might receive a much more favorable reception, and if I should then be a member of the Senate I would be able to give it a more hearty support.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I share cordially the concluding remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat. It would give me great pleasure if an intimation came from the hon. member from British Columbia that he was disposed to withdraw his motion. I should not have troubled the House at all this evening, perhaps, had it not been that the question of representation in the Cabinet is one which has created a good deal of attention in the province to which I belong. At the time of Confederation with us, an undertaking was given that, under certain circumstances with regard to the election that was then pending, it was probable that a seat in the Cabinet would be offered to one of the members from Prince Edward Island, and I have no doubt myself that had the Government which was then in power remained in office, that pledge— for it amounted nearly to that—would have been fulfilled; but events happened which caused a change of Government, and led to the appointment of one of the newly elected members from Prince Edward Island to the office of Minister of the Interior. That gentleman held the office for two or three years I think, and he was then removed or promoted, I scarcely know which to call it, to the governorship of the North-West Territories, a position which he held I think with credit to himself and with advantage to the Dominion. In that way the seat which the representative of Prince Edward Island occupied in the Council of Canada was vacated, and the seat which had been held by the representative of Queen's County was lost to the party to which he belonged. Until a change of Government occurred, our province was without representation in the Cabinet. After the election which resulted in the present Government assuming office, another gentleman from Prince Edward Island was appointed, this time to the position of Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and I myself believe that had that hon. gentleman's health and pristine vigor been vouchsafed to him, that quite likely before this time many of the complaints that our province has had to make for inattention to the wants and desires of our people would not have arisen.

I must make a few remarks upon the grounds on which I decline to support the motion of the hon. gentleman who introduced this subject. I cannot agree with him that it is just or expedient that the prairie section or the western section of the Dominion should be represented in the Cabinet of Canada while my province remains unrepresented. I myself thought, and I am well aware of the fact, that many of my fellow-colonists thought, that some of their members who supported the Government should be offered some vacancy which occurred since the last session of Parliament. No doubt they were greatly disappointed that that was not the case, and these gentlemen being supporters of the Government, I can speak of them with the greater freedom. There certainly was great disappointment felt in our province that none of these gentlemen, so far as we know, has been offered a seat in the Cabinet. I myself have generally held this ground that the surest and most convenient way of obtaining a seat in the Government, when the people of a province set their hearts on such an object, is to be careful in the selection of their candidates for representation. If they, in their discretion, send a man to Parliament of such pre-eminent capacity and ability as to make his services essentially necessary to the Government, they may be pretty sure that the Government will not be slow to avail themselves of the talent of such a man. To leave a member of that description out of the Cabinet will very likely result in his making it patent, to whatever Chamber he occupies, that he himself is a more competent man to occupy a seat in the Cabinet than some who are there already, and I think it is one of the difficulties connected with the proposition of the hon. gentleman that it would tend to force inferior men—I do not say it is necessarily so—into the Cabinet while men of superior abilities are left outside. That is not a consummation devoutly to be wished.

I wish to say a few words in reply to some remarks which fell from the hon. mover. I myself consider that the basis upon which his resolution was founded was not a sound one. He took three different foundations for his motion—the basis of area, of population and of revenue. Now certainly if we take area first, I think his calculations were completely erroneous. It would be absurd, in my opinion, to assert that the waste lands of his province, the mountains tops covered with perpetual snow could be contrasted with the fertile area of our smaller province which is cultivated almost like a garden. I have had occasion myself in this House, with a view of demonstrating this point, to bring the topographical atlas of our province to show the Government that every spot in several townships is densely populated. There is not a vacant space there. To compare a country like that with British Columbia, where the population is sparse and where the greater part of the area of the country consists of land which can never be made use of, seems to me not a very sound proposition. It is hardly necessary for me to refer to the question of revenue to which the hon. gentleman alluded, although I must say I do not think he did himself or my province justice when he persisted in his statements with regard to the amount of our revenue. I am perfectly aware that he took his figures from what ought to be an authentic source, but he had been told by the hon. member from Alberton that he was in error. The same mistake had been made, no doubt inadvertently, by the leader of the Government not many days ago, and the hon. member from Alberton made the same statement substantially on that occasion that he has made this evening. It is not necessary for me now, particularly at this late hour, to explain how these circumstances have arisen. On a proper occasion I will no doubt do so, but I think the statement of my hon. friend from Alberton, confirmed by another representative from the Island, the hon. gentleman from Charlottetown, ought to be sufficient to convince the House that the statements of the hon. member from New Westminster, with regard to the revenue of Prince Edward Island, are incorrect. I admit that I was quite surprised that a gentleman of culture and academic honors, such as the hon. member who made this motion, should have enlarged to such an extent as he did in contrasting the comparatively small area of the Province of Prince Edward Island with the extensive one of the prairie sections, and British Columbia with which he is more directly connected. I should have thought that the hon. gentleman's knowledge of the history of the world would have reminded him at once that many exceedingly small countries have made a very large figure in the world. I am not going to proceed far in this direction, but I can tell him this much, that the present generation in Prince Edward Island have accomplished, I think, as much in their walk of life as any men in the Dominion of Canada. They have taken their province under very unfavorable circumstances, having absentee and foreign landlords, a country heavily timbered, and they have converted it into a land of fertile fields and almost garden-like cultivation, as many hon. gentlemen who have spent some weeks during the summer season there well know. It can be said with perfect truth of the present generation in Prince Edward Island and their fathers, that a more honest, industrious and law abiding race of men, and on the whole a more successful race of farmers does not exist in Canada. As regards the coming generation, I maintain this for them, that they are educated in a manner which, if it was becoming in me, and time and opportunity were afforded me, I should endeavor to convince the House is not surpassed in any part of America. I can confirm this by the fact that many members of both sexes who have gone abroad to seek their fortunes elsewhere, have been eminently successful, and yet the hon. gentleman wishes to contrast an old settled country, under such circumstances as that, with his own sparsely settled province. I do not begrudge British Columbia her representation when the proper time comes for it, but I must say that I think the hon. leader of the Government in this House put the case in very direct and statesmanlike manner for us.

One word with regard to a statement which fell from the hon. member from Niagara. He was congratulating himself upon the results of the late campaign in the North-West, and alluded triumphantly to the excellent advertisement which it afforded the world of the promptness with which the Dominion could deal with rebellion. I am not going to disparage in the slightest degree the promptitude and success with which the rebellion was put down, but it was suppressed at a considerable expense of the lives of valuable citizens and treasure of this Dominion which, whether it be charged to capital or taken from the consolidated fund, makes no difference to those who have to pay for it. I cannot join with the hon. gentleman in that congratulatory tone which he adopted with reference to the rebellion. I must repeat, before I resume my seat, that I for one should feel very great gratification in hearing the hon. gentleman who made this motion state that he was disposed to ask the leave of the House to withdraw it.

HON. MR. POWER—Perhaps the House will allow me to correct a statement made by the hon. gentleman from Victoria; and I make this correction on behalf of the hon. gentleman from St. John; I do not wish to take the credit to myself. The hon. gentleman from Victoria said that the mantle of the hon. member from Woodstock had fallen on the hon. member from New Westminster. My hon. friend from St. John says that that is not the case because the hon. gentleman for Woodstock still wears the mantle wrapped tightly round himself.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I wish to correct a statement made by the hon. member from New Westminster. He said that on the vote on the Settlement Bill no member from the mainland voted for it.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Yes.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I find that when the vote was taken on the 9th of May 16 members voted for it, and of these 8 were from the mainland. My hon. friend said that none of the members from the mainland voted for it.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I say so still. It was not the local vote that was under discussion at the time, but the vote of the representation of the Province in the Federal Parliament. It was the vote taken here that was under discussion at the time and which I had reference to.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I thought the hon. member's reference was to the vote in the Local Legislature.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I expected that the hon. mover of the resolution would withdraw his motion, but since he does not propose to do so I wish to explain the vote that I have to give. There is a good deal in his motion and it is rather difficult to vote against, for the reason that while it is true there is no written law prescribing that any particular part of the Dominion should be represented in the Privy Council, still it is so well understood that, in practice, as a matter of fact, there is such a rule in operation. It is well known, for instance, that at the beginning of the Confederation it was understood that the Dominion should be divided for the purpose of forming an administration into three different groups. Since that time the rule has not been departed from, and it seems quite natural that the representatives of other parts of the Dominion should come and claim the right of representation in the Privy Council. In the meantime I do not think this motion comes logically in its place: some other steps should be taken before coming to the merits of this question. I am sure it does not enter into the mind of any hon. gentleman to ask for representation for his province in the Privy Council at the expense of another province. I do not believe that the hon. gentleman from New Westminster would, for instance, have in his mind what is supposed to be the idea of the hon. gentleman from Halifax—to take from Quebec, for instance, a portfolio to be given to a member from British Columbia.

HON. MR. PLUMB—He said that the whole number of representatives should be reduced.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I never said anything of the kind.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I say then the first step that should be taken is the examination of the question, not merely to assert that British Columbia or Manitoba has such a right, or that it is expedient that these provinces should be represented in the Cabinet. I think the resolution should have a broader scope, and it should provide that every province of the Dominion should be represented in the Cabinet. Then before asserting such a proposition we should examine how far, according to our constitution, it partakes of the character of Confederation, and how far it is necessary that every province should be represented in the Government. Because if we come to the conclusion that every province constitutes a distinct country with its autonomy, then the Cabinet is nothing but a kind of house of representatives or a committee of the whole Dominion, where every province of the Dominion should be represented. I think this question should first be examined into and decided. It is hardly necessary for me to say that this question has not been cleverly presented, or fairly examined or discussed if we do not first decide this point. How can the hon. gentleman contend that we could fairly affirm his proposition without endangering the interests of other parts of the Dominion? Supposing we should affirm as a principle that every province in the Dominion should be represented in the Cabinet, we could never lay down a strict rule that each province should have so many ministers, but we could have some understanding on this subject. There is so much to say on this question that the hon. gentleman must see at once that it is not in his own interest to press the resolution. For my part I am not ready to say that I have as yet formed an opinion on the subject, and it would be for me a difficult matter either to negative or affirm this proposition. Although it has been said in this debate that the Province of Quebec has so large a representation in the other House that it is sufficient to preserve the rights of that Province, to which I belong, I am not ready to say that such is the case: I think we require, as much as any other Province, a fair representation in the Cabinet, so that I am inclined to side with what we may call the smaller provinces. I have not had the advantage of hearing all that the hon. gentleman has said on this motion, but as far as I am able to judge of his proposition I sympathize with him, and it is a reason why I should be sorry to be obliged to vote against him, because I consider the purport of my vote might be misrepresented. I think it is against the interest of the cause which he supports here to press his resolution, because if it is negatived it will be considered before the country that it has been decided by this House that it is not in the interests of the Dominion at large that those provinces should be represented in the Cabinet. I may say that it is with some degree of hesitation I touch this question. An hon. gentleman from the North-West reminded me not long ago that we should not interfere with local interests, we were told "Leave us alone; while we are thankful for your sympathy we do not want you to interfere." I should like my vote not to have the effect of interfering improperly, for instance with the interest of Manitoba, by affirming the resolution which is before the House.

HON. MEMBERS—Withdraw, withdraw.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I ask the hon. gentleman if he intends to withdraw his motion; for if he does not I shall have to explain my reasons for the vote I shall give?

HON. MR. MCINNES—If the hon. gentleman will allow me to make a few remarks in reply I shall withdraw my resolution. In the first place, in reply to the hon. gentleman from Niagara, every hon. member must regret the untimely, uncalled for, impertinent, and grossly insulting personal remark that that gentleman made in reply to me. No one having the instincts of a gentleman would ever think of retailing private conversation, even if true, without first getting permission to do so. I ask, if a person guilty of such gross impropriety is worthy of respect and confidence?

HON. MR. PLUMB—That is very parliamentary.

HON. MR. MCINNES—After stating distinctly that I never uttered what he charges and alleges that I uttered with respect to being a thick and thin or an unswerving supporter of the Government, it was his duty as a gentleman and a member of this House, to have accepted my denial. I remember that occurrence perfectly well. It was in the cloak room, and he had evidently been looking into and reading the Parliamentary Companion. Said he "Is it possible you are an Independent? I find it so stated in the Parliamentary Companion?" I said "Yes, but I have given my support—I gave almost an undivided support to the Government until about three years ago." I supported them in their Pacific Railway policy. I supported them in their fiscal policy, and I am not ashamed to acknowledge that I did so. Under similar circumstances I would do the same to-day; but that I was an unconditional supporter of the Government, that I was to follow the Government whether they were right or wrong and support all their measures contrary to my own conviction, I emphatically deny. I never said so, and I am sorry that any gentleman within those walls should be such a slavish follower of a government as to pursue that course. My hon. friend and colleague, my sympathetic friend from Victoria, is always surprised at anything that I state, especially if it does not accord with the feeling and with the general policy of the Government. There is a story generally told of an Irishman who came to this country, and when questioned as to what his politics were asked "Have ye a government?" And on being told that there was replied, "Sure I'm agin the government anyway." The hon. gentleman from Victoria, has taken a different position from the son of the Emerald Isle: he is always with the Government—no matter what policy may be pursued—and there is probably something in the future, ever before his eye, that he hopes to soar to some of those days—some bright star. He is always a faithful and brilliant supporter of the Government of the day, no matter what that Government may be, Tory or Grit. Why has this motion been so offensive to the ears of the hon. gentlemen? Simply because I stood up in my place to advocate the interests of my province instead of party. Am I to be condemned for having the courage of my convictions and, in the face of the majority the government has here, disagreeing with them on certain lines of policy? Is that any reason why 'the hon. gentleman from Victoria should be surprised at the offensiveness of my resolutions? Everything that is contrary to the well-known, the expressed wish of the government, appears to be offensive to that hon. gentleman, and, I regret, to some other hon. gentlemen also within those walls. He also made the unwarranted statement that I have used this resolution as a cloak under which to attack the Government. I deny it, and if the hon. gentleman will look at the preamble of the resolution of which I first gave notice, he would see there that I distinctly stated, and he and every other hon. gentleman in this House knew the line of argument I was to pursue, because it was indicated there as plainly as possible. I could have said a good deal more than I did in support of my resolution, but I wish to be as lenient and considerate as possible under the circumstances. In the future I may perhaps throw light on some transactions that will possibly be a little more distasteful than those I referred to to-day. I have reasons for not giving them at the present time. The hon. gentleman states that all the visits paid by the Ministers to British Columbia have conferred great benefits on that Province.

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B. C.)—I say so still.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I do not know where the benefits are. It is rather unfortunate that when Ministers of the Crown visited British Columbia they were only flying visits, and while there they were surrounded by the Local Government and their officials, and by Federal officials, and it is very difficult for any person outside of that particular ring to gain the ear of the Minister. I think it would be very much better, and a great deal more good would accrue from these visits, if Ministers, when there, did not associate so much with those officials. If they devoted a little more time in mingling with the mass of the people, and getting their views on matters in general, greater benefits would undoubtedly edly accrue to the province from their visits. My hon. friend does not think so; unfortunately he is like a few others—he thinks that anything which contributes to the welfare of Victoria, and Victoria alone, contributes to the welfare of the whole Province.

HON. MR. MACDONALD—So it does.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I was told when a boy that a Parisian when he spoke of Paris imagined he was speaking of France. Unfortunately that has been too much the case with British Columbia—my hon. friend lives in Victoria, and he and others from that section think that anything and everything that exclusively benefits Victoria must necessarily benefit the whole province.

HON. MR. MACDONALD—So it does.

HON. MR. MCINNES—It may to a small extent. I like Victoria. It is a pleasant place—fine views, fine drives, and as hospitable people as you will find on the continent of America; but if they were manifested of a little less selfishness and more liberality towards the rest of the province, British Columbia, as a whole, would stand better in the eyes of the Dominion.

HON. MR. MACDONALD—Charity begins at home.

HON. MR. MCINNES—My hon. friend from Albert challenges the accuracy of the figures I gave to the House to-day. He did not produce any figures to show that mine were wrong, and I wish to state that I have taken a good deal of pains in compiling the statement I have submitted to the House. I was not speaking at random or from hearsay: I went to the only reliable and authentic source I could find—the blue books—and I am inclined to think, although I have every respect for the opinions and statements of my hon. friend, I must accept the figures given in the blue book in preference to his unsupported statement.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—This statement has been so often made within those walls that it must be put an end to. I have quoted from the Journals of Prince Edward Island. I did not come to this House to learn the rules of Parliament, and I say this, that from the Journals of the Prince Edward Island Legislature, the imports of that province thirteen years ago amounted to $2,740,000.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I am not disposed to dispute the statement of the hon. gentleman, but, as I said before, I had only the blue books to go by, and no person can charge me with making an unfair or unfounded statement. If the blue books are wrong, or if a large amount of the imports of Prince Edward Island come in in an indirect way and the province is not credited with it I cannot help that. My hon. colleague from Burrard Inlet said that he did not quite approve of my resolution. I have differed in opinion from that hon. gentleman on several occasions and on different questions. He thinks it would be wrong to pass a resolution by which one man would have to be taken from the representatives of British Columbia, no matter whether that man was qualified for a portfolio or not.

HON. MR. NELSON—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, I made no such statement. What I said was this, that by making a cast iron rule that the First Minister should select his colleagues from each of the provinces, it would limit his power to select the very best men for his Cabinet.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I accept the hon. gentleman's explanation; I had misunderstood his remarks. However, it appears that it is not necessary to look amongst the members in the House of Commons or in this House for a man qualified to be a Cabinet Minister. All that the Premier has to do is to go to the Bench. We have precedents for doing so. If none of the present representatives from British Columbia are qualified for a portfolio, the Government can go to the Bench and ignore the parliamentary representatives altogether. With respect to the reply of the Postmaster General, I have only to say that notwithstanding his able, and to a great extent, logical speech, I am yet of the opinion that the three great natural divisions into which this Dominion is divided, should be represented in the Cabinet. He says that such a thing does not exist in the United States. I am rather inclined to think that the south, and the west and the east are represented in the Cabinet of the United States. He also states that such a thing could not prevail in England. Circumstances are different in England. England is a compact country. Here we have a domain extending thousands of miles, in which the condition of affairs is as different as possible. I was happy to hear the Postmaster-General adopt the suggestion that I made about the appointment of under secretaries. I stated to a number of members of this House years ago, as well as some of the members of the Government, that if the Government did not see fit, or could not see their way clearly to give a portfolio to British Columbia, and one to Manitoba, they should certainly take a member into the Cabinet without a portfolio so that they would be consulted on all matters pertaining to their province, if on no other question. If that were done there would be no additional expense to the country, and the Cabinet would have the benefit of the advice and experience of representatives from those provinces. Failing that, why cannot each of those provinces have an under secretary as they have in the Mother Country? It is not the portfolio that I contend for, though I think each of those provinces is entitled to it. I think I have succeeded in showing that according to population and to revenue we are equally entitled to representation in the Cabinet as others of the provinces represented in the Government to-day.

HON. GENTLEMEN — Withdraw, withdraw!

HON. MR. McINNES—Under the circumstances, and with the prevailing opinion that I should withdraw this resolution I will do so for the present, but if I am spared I shall bring this matter up time and again until justice is done. I claim that this Dominion of ours will never succeed or prosper as it should prosper—Confederation will not be a success—the provinces will never become contented and united as they should be, unless each and every section of our great country is represented in the Cabinet. The sooner the eastern people, who have everything in their own hands, recognize the necessity of at an early day granting us what I believe we are fully entitled to—representation in the Cabinet—the better for the whole country. With the permission of the House I beg to withdraw my resolution.

The resolution was withdrawn.

The Senate adjourned at 11 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, April 1st, 1886.

THE SPEAKER took the chair at 3 o'clock.

THIRD READING.

Bill (E) "An Act to amend the several Acts relating to the Board of Trade of the City of Toronto," reported from the Committee on Banking and Commerce without amendment, was read the third time and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (L), "An Act to consolidate the borrowing powers of the Freehold Loan and Savings Company, and to authorize the said Company to issue debenture stock." (Mr. Allan.)

Bill (M) "An Act to consolidate the borrowing powers of the Western Canada Loan and Savings Company, and to authorize the said Company to issue debenture stock." (Mr. Allan.)

SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS BEFORE JUSTICES BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. GOWAN moved the third reading of Bill (A) "An Act to make further provision respecting summary proceedings before justices and other magistrates."

HON. MR. POWER—It will be remembered that after the report of the Committee on this Bill had been adopted, the third reading was deferred at my suggestion, and I wish to trouble the House for a few minutes while I try to show why I think the bill should be amended in the direction which I have indicated, and I propose at the end to move an amendment. If hon. gentlemen will turn to the sixth clause of the bill, on the second page, they will find that the recognizance which the defendant is obliged to enter into shall be in a sum fixed by general order of the court having authority to quash the conviction, order or other proceeding, and that the deposit is to be of the same character, a sum to be fixed in like manner. Hon. gentlemen will bear in mind that under the existing law, under the English Statute, the sum was fixed at £50; and I think the very natural construction—I do not say that it is the only construction—of this clause would be that the court shall have power only to fix one sum which shall be the same in every instance where a defendant wishes to have his case taken up by certiorari. Now that is not the object of the learned and hon. promoter of the bill, and as far as I can gather the sense of the House the other day, it is not the object of the House either. The object of the promoter of the bill and of the House is to leave a discretion in the hands of the court, and that is evidently a very fair and reasonable thing. In the first place this bill when it becomes law will have to be administered all over the country from British Columbia to Nova Scotia and the value of money in different places varies. There are some places where $100, is quite as much as $200 in others, and that is a reason why the amount of the recognizance should not be fixed by the Statute, and then the amount would naturally depend on the circumstances of the parties and upon the gravity of the offence for which the accused had been convicted. For all these reasons I think it must be clear that it is desirable that the Court should have some discretion as to the amount of the recognizance. The amendment which I propose is the beginning of the 29th line, to strike out the words “in a sum to be fixed,” and substitute “such as may be prescribed.” That will only give the court power by order to fix a maximum and a minimum sum above and below which the recognizance shall not extend, but it will also enable the court to make such other provisions as to recognizances as may be deemed desirable for the Provinces in which the court has jurisdiction. In the same way, at the end of the 31st line instead of saying that he shall make “a deposit of the sum to be fixed,” I propose to say that he shall make such deposit as may be prescribed by the court in the same way. It gives the court the discretion which I think it ought to have and which the House intended that it should have, and which I know the hon. promoter of the bill did intend it to have. The hon. gentleman who introduced the bill is of opinion that as the bill stands now the court would have that discretion. I submit, however, that that is not perfectly clear, and in a Statute of this kind there should be no room for doubt. There should be no ambiguity; and other gentlemen think that the bill as it stands is ambiguous and that the ambiguity should be removed. I beg to move, seconded by the hon. member from Lunenburg:—

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be recommitted to a committee of the whole House, for the purpose of amending the same by striking out the words “in a sum to be fixed,” in the twenty-ninth line of the second page, and inserting instead thereof the words “such as may be prescribed,” and also by striking out the words “of a sum to be fixed,” in the thirty-first line of said page, and inserting instead thereof the words “to be prescribed.”

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—You leave out the word “sum” altogether?

HON. MR. POWER—I am very glad the hon. gentleman mentioned that. I did so deliberately. You give the court the discretion to fix everything as to the amount and general character of the recognizance. In the second place the defendant is to make a deposit which is to be prescribed by the court; that allows the court to prescribe everything, the sum and all about it.

HON. MR. ALMON—I have always been opposed to tinkering with the laws. I think the rule which says that no money vote should originate except from the Ministry also provides that any alteration of this kind should come from the Minister of Justice. However, I have no objection to the bill, because it reminds me of a story which I heard down in Nova Scotia. There was a lawyer who was a candidate in an election contest in one of the counties in that province. He appealed to a farmer to vote for him. The farmer replied "no, I cannot vote for you because you are a lawyer." The candidate said "do not let that stand in the way I am not much of a lawyer." In the same way I can vote for the bill, because it is "not much of a bill."

HON. MR. DICKEY—The House will recollect that the Bill, as it originally was introduced last year, contained a provision that the recognizance should be a fixed amount of $200, and my hon. friend who had charge of the Bill, in support of that, stated that there was a Statute of George II which was in force in this country, requiring in all such cases security to the amount of £50 sterling, and he added that that Statute had been acted upon in Ontario. It has since occurred to me that I do not think our consideration of this particular section should be in any way affected by the statement which was made on a former occasion, and which has been referred to this afternoon, of the existence of such a Statute in England. It should not in any way affect our decision on this question because I am not prepared to hold with my hon. and learned friend who originated this Bill that that Statute does extend to this country at all. As I understand it, only Statutes which affect general matters are carried with us to the colony in which we live, and Statutes affecting mere matters of practice, such as the consideration of what should be the amount to be given or secured on issuing a writ of certiorari, is a mere matter of practice and is not such a Statute as is in force in Canada. At all events the Courts in Nova Scotia, and I believe in New Brunswick, have acted on the principle that it is not so in force. Because in my own Province, at the present moment, an assessment in a county can be removed by a writ of certiorari upon merely giving security in recognizance before a commissioner to the amount of $40, and the amounts and the modes of computing the amounts vary in other cases. That is a matter of legislation, legislation which has been on our Statute books for years. When the Bill was before us on a former occasion my hon. friend yielded that point and he consented that the section should be modified, and then the question came in what shape should it be modified. The hon. Minister of Justice (now the Postmaster-General) suggested that instead of saying a fixed inelastic sum of $200 the amount should be named by the Court from which the certiorari was directed. That sentiment seemed to agree with the feeling of the House and although my hon. friend who brought in the Bill was so close attached to his bantling that he rather resisted any amendments at first, yet I am bound to say, in justice to him, when we arrived at this stage of the Bill he showed no disposition whatever to interfere with the feeling which prevailed in the House that some such provision as had been suggested by the then Minister of Justice should be adopted. He stated "I am willing to go this far, that the security should be given not exceeding $100." I think that was a very fair step towards yielding to the feeling of the House and my hon. friend deserves credit for it. When the Bill went to the third reading, my hon. friend seemed to have got some more light on it, and he then suggested the provision which is incorporated in this Bill that instead of being a sum to be fixed by the Court which was to issue the certiorari, it was to be a sum fixed by a general order of the Court. There was a difficulty about that, because one can see that it was very difficult for any Court to make an order which would apply to every particular case, and as the principle was to regulate the amount of the recognizance according to the character of the case, it seemed to me that it would be better to leave that matter in some such shape as had been suggested by the Minister of Justice—that is, that it should be any sum you choose, not exceeding a certain maximum, and I would prefer it still. However, I am not disposed to suggest any amendment which would affect the passage of this Bill. We now come to the amendment which has been moved by the hon. member from Halifax, and, as I understand his explanation, it is this: he objects to the wording of this clause as it stands on the ground that it ties down the court of record, that is to make these rules as to the amount of recognizance, to a fixed sum. On looking at the clause I quite admit that the language is susceptible of that interpretation, because it only states that it is in a sum to be fixed, and therefore it gives no room for elasticity whatever, and he proposes to provide for that by saying "in a sum prescribed by the court."

HON. MR. POWER—No.

HON. MR. DICKEY—No, he does not say "a sum," I do not see why he should not put that in. If it is a sum to be prescribed by the court it may be any sum less or more according to the circumstances of the case. Still I cannot see exactly how that can be done by a general order. But, yielding that, I think the amendment makes the clause more acceptable than the language it contains at present, and therefore I, for one, am disposed to support the amendment unless the hon. member who has charge of the Bill thinks that it will in any way imperil the measure. If he thinks, as I do, that it will make his clause work better and be less oppressive to poor men, who may not be prepared to give security for a fixed sum in a small case, which might be very properly applicable to a case of greater gravity, I think he would perhaps be prepared to accept this. But upon that I will make no observation until I hear what my learned friend says. Under the circumstances I should be quite willing to support an amendment in this direction, and possibly it might remove the difficulty that I feel as to a general order if the word "general" were struck out altogether, leaving it in the bald fashion of an order and not a general order applicable to all cases. As it stands he makes it still worse, because it is not only a fixed sum, but a general order applicable to all cases. Under those circumstances I hope my hon. friend who has charge of the Bill will not object to that with the additional modification which I suggest, that the word "general" should be struck out.

HON. MR. GOWAN—I can assure the hon. gentleman that I have no other wish than to have the Bill made as perfect as possible and put in that shape which will most effectually remedy the evil that now exists, an evil recognized by practitioners and judges alike. With regard to the Statute of George II. being force; we adopted the laws of England as they stood at a certain date. I understood, in speaking to a gentleman from the Maritime Provinces, that it was considered to be in force there. I know that it is in force in Ontario: it was clearly recognized in a case which was decided there. No doubt in certain cases where a prisoner is in custody under a special act relating to habeas corpus a judge can order, without any security whatever, the conviction to be brought up; but there it is brought up for the assistance of the court. There is no doubt whatever that the Statute is in force in Ontario, and, as I was informed, in force elsewhere. If it is not in force there must be some special act regulating the particular security to be given. I have been looking over the Statutes of the several provinces and I do not find in them any such enactment: it may, however, have escaped my attention.

With regard to the amendment proposed by my hon. friend from Halifax, I feel indebted to him, as I feel equally indebted to every hon. gentleman conversant with the subject, for assistance given to make the measure as perfect as possible. I am not wedded to "my bantling," nor am I desirous of having it passed in a shape that would leave any single point open to doubt. I confess I have not been able to see as clearly as my hon. friends opposite that it would be an objection to have and retain the clause in its present form. At the same time I admit this: I regard it perhaps from one standpoint, they perhaps from another. I look at it in the way I think it would be construed by the judges; but I may be mistaken, and without feeling pressed by the objection, I can see a good deal in what has been urged by my hon. friends from Halifax and Lunenburg and I think I could not do otherwise than to meet their views by accepting the amendment, which I do with all kindness.

With regard to the difficulty of making a general order, I fail to see that there could be any difficulty in making a general order which would accomplish justice in every case. The judges in dealing with that clause, would probably say that in certain small cases where the fines would not be over so much, or imprisonment over so much, a very small sum would be required and could so frame their order to meet that particular case. Then in cases of greater importance, where the fines were larger and the imprisonment was longer, they would require a larger sum, so that although an order could be general it might meet particular cases and suit the nature and character of the conviction to be dealt with.

It is quite true I recognize the fact referred to by my hon. friend from Halifax that the value of money is not the same in the different provinces, and while a larger sum might be easily obtained as security in one province, it might not be so hard to obtain it in another, and that adds greatly to the force of the remarks made by my hon. friends opposite, and by my hon. friend from Amherst. I am quite willing to adopt the amendment that is proposed. I repeat, that I have no wish further than to discharge to some extent the duty that every man owes to his profession. I have seen and known this defect for years, and I was glad to have an opportunity to bring it before those who may know of the existence of the defect as well as I do, but who may not have had the opportunities of seeing the evil that it is designed to remedy that I have. So far as I am concerned, I withdraw all objections to the amendment that is proposed.

HON. MR. POIRIER—I cannot see any objection to having a fixed sum for all cases, as we are all aware that cases that come before those inferior courts involve very small sums of money, varying from one dollar to $80. I cannot see, therefore, any objection to having a general rule which would save trouble to litigants and lawyers. If the Bill is to be interpreted as the hon. gentleman from Halifax says it is, I fail to see any objection to it; but if it is to be amended I also fail to see how the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from Halifax will accomplish his object. I cannot see how an act worded as it is here "or before the Judge of the Court of Record in a sum to be fixed by general order of the Court"—I cannot see what difference there is between this wording, and the other wording "such as may be prescribed." I believe that the interpretation will be the same both ways, and that the amendment, as worded, will fail to carry out its object. If the idea conveyed in the amendment is to be adopted by the House I would rather see the amendment worded in this way "in a sum to be fixed in each case by the court." I think the idea would be more clearly conveyed in that way. I certainly object to the amendment as it is worded by the senior member from Halifax.

HON. MR. GOWAN—If the House would permit me to say to my hon. friend who has just spoken that a sum to be fixed in each case would involve a special application to the court, and would consequently increase the expense. But by the alteration proposed by the hon. gentleman from Halifax it would not be necessary to apply to the court in each case: but once and for all, by general order, it would be fixed. I trust my hon. friend will not press his amendment, but will accept the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from Halifax.

HON. MR. POIRIER—In that case I would prefer to see the bill stand as it is. I believe it is clearer and conveys the idea in a better way than if amended as proposed by the hon. gentleman.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—As seconder of this motion, and having approved of the amendment, I would like to say a few words. I think my hon friend who has just spoken has not conceived the force of this amendment, and the reply of the mover has fully answered him. As far as this discretion should be in the hands of the court, by this Bill it is discretionary with the court, even in case of appeal: and in framing a rule of this kind to prescribe the sum, I think it is fairly left with the court. In fact the whole case goes up de novo, The less we interfere with the criminal law the better, except under the advice and with the consent of the Minister of Justice. As regards certiorari, I know from my own experience that I have exercised that power under the common law in more than one case in Nova Scotia, and I have often found—when those cases went up purely on technicalities and informalities—that accused persons were acquitted in the upper court who would, if the matter were not re-considered, have been found guilty. I consider that the suggestion of my hon. friend is a good one, to leave the entire discretion of prescribing the amount of deposit on an appeal in the hands of the court.

The motion was agreed to.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD, from the Committee, reported the bill with amendments, which were concurred in.

HON. MR. GOWAN moved that the bill be now read a third time.

HON. MR. POIRIER—Before this bill is read the third time, I would like to call the attention of the House to the amendment that was inserted in this Bill the other day at the suggestion of the senior member for Halifax. I believe in amending our laws, provided they are amended in a proper manner, and in such a way as not to render them obscure, or to open the way to unlimited litigation. Clause three reads in this way:—

“The following matters shall be held to be within the provisions of the next preceding section:—”

It then goes on to enumerate three causes which were to be deemed to invalidate any judgment rendered by any magistrate. According to the general rule of law when exceptions are given, if the law opens the door to other exceptions that are not specified, it is better to have no exception at all. If, for example, the law providing punishment by death, should state among other felonies, murder, high treason, or rape, in certain cases should be punishable by death, that would leave the judge in doubt as to which of the other felonies should be punishable by death. If the wording of the law was “amongst other felonies,” the judges would not know which of the other felonies were so punishable. In this case the very same objection arises as the Bill is worded. The hon. gentleman from Barrie has given close attention to his subject. He is a gentleman of great experience, and I remember that the hon. gentleman from Halifax told us the other day that none but those who had great experience in the administering of the laws should interfere with them. The hon. gentleman from Barrie has made his Bill very clear and concise, and the judges and lawyers will know at once what are the flaws that would invalidate a judgment: but the way it is now amended opens the door for any extent of litigation. I would therefore move that the bill be not read the third time but that it be referred back to committee of the whole to strike out the amendments, and leave it as it formerly stood, that is, page 1 line 22 after “matters” leave out the words “amongst others.”

HON. MR. GOWAN—Although I do not think the words “amongst others,” are essential, seeing that the latter part of the clause, as I think, covers it sufficiently, still my hon. friend from Halifax considered it necessary, and in order to avoid all possible doubt I assented to it and I trust that my hon. friend will be satisfied with that explanation. I hope that hon. gentleman will not press his motion, as I think the clause is very well as it now stands.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—There is a great deal of force in the observations made upon these words “amongst others” by the mover of this amendment. I think the Bill was entirely better without those words. The particular subjects related to are clearly stated in the Bill; but the subjects to which the words “amongst others” refer are left to arise; it will be, in my humble judgment, a matter of great doubt as to what subjects those words may refer, and I think it should not be left in doubt. I think with my hon. friend who has suggested the removal of those words that the Bill is entirely better without them. It says “the following matters, amongst others, shall be held to be within the provisions of the next preceding section.” Then the subjects are given; but when you say “amongst others,” to what others do you refer? Who can tell here what the other subjects are? Are we to place the judges, who are called upon to deal with this Act, in a position to say what the other subjects are? Should that not be defined? The author of this Bill has clearly placed his subject; but the words "amongst others" are indefinite. They point to nothing. They point, I suppose, to kindred subjects which may arise; but to my mind it will be found very embarrassing in the administration of the Act. I therefore think it will be much better to strike those words out of the Bill.

HON. MR. POWER—If anything was necessary to show the wisdom of inserting those words, I have had evidence furnished by the two hon. gentlemen who have supported this amendment. The object of the enumeration in the third clause of the Bill was not to limit the application of the second clause. The second clause is to apply to all convictions and orders, and none of them are to be invalid because of informalities. Then in the third clause the Bill goes on to indicate certain things which, amongst others, shall be included in the operation of the second clause: and I admitted when I moved the amendment, that it was not a necessary one, because one who glanced at the Bill hurriedly, and who does not read this third clause carefully through, might think that the second clause applied only to the cases enumerated in subsections A, B and C of section 3. The very thing that I thought might happen one who did not read carefully has happened to the hon. gentlemen who have spoken. If those hon. gentlemen had taken the trouble to read the whole of the clause, they would have seen that the clause itself had already contradicted them and shown them to be wrong. The words I inserted were simply to provide for the case of gentlemen who read the clause carelessly as those hon. gentlemen seem to have done.

The amendment was declared lost on a division.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

DRUGGISTS' BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. McMILLAN moved the second reading of Bill (J) "An Act relating to Druggists." He said:—Hon. gentlemen will recollect that this measure was before the Senate last session, and it became a part of a Bill that had for its object the amendment of the Canada Temperance Act. That Bill, however, was defeated in the House of Commons, and the consequence was that this measure went down with it. The object of this Bill is simply to protect druggists who are carrying on business in counties where the Canada Temperance Act is in force. Hon. gentlemen are aware that perhaps ninety per cent. of the articles in which druggists deal contain a large proportion of alcohol. They must necessarily contain that ingredient in order to be of the proper pharmaceutical strength. Doubt has arisen as to whether druggists can carry on their business legitimately, and they sought an opinion from legal gentlemen the result of which was to bring forth this Bill. They require that all doubt be removed, and that they be at liberty to carry on their trade without infringing on the law. They are a respectable body in the Dominion, numbering over 1,200, and contribute a large amount of revenue to the exchequer—something in the neighborhood of $600,000 or $700,000 annually. This Bill does not seek to interfere with the Canada Temperance Act at all: it simply stands on its own merits, and the druggists ask this House to protect them from any persecution while carrying on their legitimate business. I have no doubt hon. gentlemen will support it, because it asks for nothing that is objectionable.

HON. MR. POWER—I do not think the House is in a position to read this Bill the second time because the hon. gentleman has not explained its provisions or shown its necessity. A public Bill of this character, which is one that is to have a very considerable effect on the social life of the counties where the Scott Act has been adopted, should be explained and its effect made clear to the House before we are called upon to adopt it. I wish to call attention to some of the effects the passing of this Bill will have. The second paragraph of the first clause provides that:

(2) Physicians' prescriptions consisting of or containing spirituous liquors, if sold in quantities of not more than eight ounces at any one time.

Eight ounces are about half a pint. This will allow every druggist throughout the country, and every man who has ever been qualified as a physician, to sell, under prescription, liquor in quantities not exceeding half a pint. If the hon. gentleman will turn to the present law—the Canada Temperance Act—in the form in which it appears in the Consolidated Statutes, they will see that under that Statute the sale of intoxicating liquors for exclusively medicinal purposes may be made by certain licensed druggists or vendors in quantities of not less than one pint. Now we shall have this state of things:—

HON. MR. DICKEY—It will be reducing the amount.

HON. MR. POWER—It does not repeal or affect the existing law at all; that stands. A man can go to one of these agents and buy liquor in very large quantities. He can get ten gallons at once if he wishes under a prescription; but if he only wants a little for the occasion, he goes to any druggist with a prescription, and gets any amount not exceeding a half pint. He can get a glass, and from that up to four glasses. Some reasons should have been shown for making such a change as this. The better way to proceed would be to repeal the Scott Act. That is the respectable way of dealing with the matter. It would, I believe, be in the interests of temperance and morality throughout the country if the Scott Act were repealed. But I do not think that this Bill is in the interest of either temperance, morality or health. As it is now, liquor is sold in the Scott Act Counties by agents, and I presume is taken home by the purchasers and consumed on their own premises. This Bill, if it passes, proposes to open the way to a very objectionable form of drinking—going into a drug store and drinking as in a bar-room. As it is now there is a good deal of liquor sold in the Scott Act Counties even in small quantities. And this Bill if it passes will simply render the sale of liquor more general in counties where people have voted that it shall not be sold. I wish to call the attention of the House to an objection which I heard mentioned by my hon. colleague from Halifax, and which from his professional standing deserves attention. It is that if you by statute authorize druggists to sell liquor in the Scott Act Counties, what guarantee have you that the druggists' clerks who have the liquor under their hands almost without control, and who have to dispense liquor to several persons each day, will not tittle: and if the druggists' clerks do tittle, what guarantee have the public then for the way in which prescriptions will be put up? Is it not likely that the cases of poisoning from mistakes of druggists' clerks will become more common than they are now? I think this Bill is a most pernicious one. The proper persons to sell liquor are those who are licensed to sell liquor as a business. Druggists' shops are not the place for the indiscriminate sale of liquor, and I think that in the interests of public morality and health, and in the interests of druggists themselves, it is not desirable that this Bill should pass. Why should it be limited to places where the Scott Act is in force? It would be an exceedingly unfair thing, in counties where the Scott Act is not in operation, that men who are engaged in the liquor traffic and pay high licenses should have druggists coming in to compete with them. I think the best way is to repeal the Scott Act and allow the several provinces to substitute for it stringent license acts. I think the passing of this Bill would be a most regrettable and unfortunate thing.

HON. MR. VIDAL—Without accepting the suggestion which has just been made to get rid of the difficulty, I fully agree with the arguments which the hon. member from Halifax has been advancing, showing the impropriety of introducing or carrying a measure of this kind, but in addition to the arguments which he has brought before the House I have others, and my first objection is one which I think should decide the fate of the Bill—that is, that it is entirely unnecessary. The Act against which it is chiefly levelled, as has been intimated in the remarks made by the hon. gentlemen who introduced it, has been in operation for eight years. Can that hon. member show that during these eight years there has been one single case of any inconvenience, or loss or wrong to any chemist through violating the provisions of the Act? Is there a single case on record in any of the courts? I believe there is not. Where then is the necessity for this measure? In fact, I think I ought to have the support of the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Almon) on this occasion, because he has stated to-day that he does not believe in tinkering with the laws. Here is a Bill which is unnecessary, inasmuch as the provisions of the Act against which it is directed do make allowance for the legitimate and proper sale of alcoholic liquors by chemists. There is no interference with their business; so long as they act honestly and observe the provisions of the law they may do under it all that this Bill empowers them to do. That being the case, where is the necessity of bringing in a special measure to enable them to sell liquor as medicine? Then, again, have we any request from the public for such a Bill? Is there a single petition presented in either branch of Parliament for it? Does not the absence of petitions prove that in the eight years' experience we have had of the Scott Act no necessity has arisen for this legislation? Why should we, at the suggestion of a few individuals, take it upon ourselves to pass such a measure? I have still another and stronger objection to this Bill; I consider it is very questionable whether our undertaking to pass it will not revive the difficult question as to the constitutional power of this Parliament to interfere with the regulation of the sale of liquor. Will not that, under the recent decision of the Privy Council, come more particularly under the control and management of the Provincial Legislatures? They have the power of issuing licenses, and having that power they fix conditions and impose penalties for the violation of those conditions; they have, in my opinion, the entire management of the details set forth in the Bill now offered to us for adoption. On these grounds, and on the grounds shown by the senior member for Halifax, I think it would be exceedingly undesirable that the House should commit itself to the principle of this Bill. I do trust on consideration of these points that it will be found desirable even by the hon. gentleman himself to withdraw the Bill.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I am with the hon. member from Halifax as regards the propriety of doing away with the Scott Act, but I am not with him in the other regard. I think doctors and druggists should all be qualified alike. I am not with my hon. friend from Sarnia in this matter; there is no necessity for petitions. Common sense and the feeling of the country are in favor of this Bill and that is better than all the petitions you can bring before this House. My hon. friend is a member of an organization which has every facility for preparing and presenting petitions in opposition to the Bill. I am satisfied that the public are in favor of this measure, and would desire to see all druggists and physicians stand on an equal footing. I do not agree with the hon. member from Halifax that those professional men are in favor of restricting the sale of intoxicating liquors; under this Bill the liquor must be sold for medicinal purposes. The possession of a license by a druggist is in itself no guarantee that the liquor will be properly dispensed; all doctors and druggists should be equally qualified to exercise their professional rights, and I do not think that it is fair that certain persons amongst them should be selected to dispense those liquors to the exclusion of others. It puts them in a false position. It compels the public to deal with certain druggists when perhaps they would prefer others. I do not believe in such discrimination. I think that all physicians should be on an equal footing; as a body they are in favor of temperance and morality and desirous of promoting the health of the people. Why then should any such distinction be made? If they should violate the law, or attempt to sell liquors for other than medicinal purposes, they would, under the terms of this Bill, be liable to a penalty; if they sell for medicinal purposes only they should all be treated alike.

HON. MR. GOWAN—I am exceedingly sorry to differ from my hon. friend from Sarnia and the senior member from Halifax in respect to this Bill. When I read its provisions its struck me that what is asked for here, speaking in a general way, is perfectly reasonable. It may be that some of the clauses are open to objection, but there will be an opportunity to set them right when the matter comes to be more fully discussed. But at this stage

I think my hon. friend near me (Mr. McMillan) has given sufficient reasons why the bill should receive its second reading. The main point that my hon. friend from Sarnia referred to was the constitutional power. Well, the framer of the bill has been very particular in guarding against any possible difficulty in respect to that point. The language of the first section is: "Nothing contained in any Act of Parliament of Canada shall be held to interfere with the purchase or sale, etc." That especially guards against any interference with provincial rights, and puts it on a proper and constitutional footing. With regard to the fact that no petitions have been presented in this House in favor of the measure, I may say that I know something of the mode of getting up petitions. I have seen petitions got up in a very rapid manner, and have had to deal with some such cases in the courts in my long experience, and I must say I am one of those who do not place any great weight on petitions, particularly where there is an organized effort to secure them. I know as a fact there has been a very large and influential deputation of druggists here in order to promote this measure—men engaged in the wholesale as well as in the retail branches of the business—and I know that they are exceedingly anxious to have this Bill passed, because they believe that they stand upon very perilous ground. I am not prepared to say that their belief is not well founded. Supposing my hon. friend entered a chemist's shop and asked for a little tincture of ginger. Anyone who knows anything of those tinctures is aware of the fact that they contain a very large proportion of alcohol. If the druggist sells it I am not prepared to say that an intelligent officer administering the law would hold that it came within the scope of the statute; but it may be a question of fact, and it is a matter at all events open to argument, that it might come within the prohibitory clause of the law. And what these gentlemen ask is not to be allowed to sell liquor as liquor, but simply to sell it under the prescriptions of a properly qualified physician. I know a great many chemists and druggists in the portion of Ontario from which I come, and I believe them to be as a class thoroughly respectable and honest men, and I know that the physicians of the country are pre-eminent in respect of character and moral standing. There are two principles on which people may act, one is trust and the other distrust. I believe in trusting them; I believe that when men occupy respectable positions in society that they will not seek to evade the law. If we examine the clauses of the bill we will find that there is nothing objectionable in the principle of the measure. The opposition to the Bill amounts to this—that you will not relieve the chemists and druggists of the country, who contribute largely to the revenue and are educated men, and men occupying respectable positions, you will not relieve them of the peril of unconsciously violating the law, or the danger arising from an incorrect inference of fact. Nearly every article that enters into the prescriptions of physicians, certainly every tincture contains alcohol; every liniment that is made contains more or less alcohol; in fact it is necessary not merely for its medicinal effects but for preservative purposes. If at this time a physician prescribes what he considers a suitable and proper remedy for a disease, and that prescription contains alcohol, the person who has paid for that may be liable (I do not say that he would be) to a fine. The Bill particularizes what a druggist may sell:

(1) The official preparations of authorized pharmacopœias when made of full medicinal strength and sold for medicinal purposes.

Not sold for purposes of beverage, because that is distinctly excepted in another clause, but sold for medicinal purposes. The chemists and druggists of the country are engaged in a lawful trade and one which is most important to every member of the community, and they should not be made to feel that in exercising their calling they take every step at their peril. In the next paragraph they are allowed to sell prescriptions containing spirituous liquors in quantities of not more than 8 ounces at a time. An 8 ounce mixture, if used for one purpose may seem pretty large, but if used for external application it is not large; twelve ounce mixtures are very often sold. In cases where a counter irritant is required, or where it is necessary to excite the circulation, if I understand, alcohol necessarily enters into it. The next clause is

(3) Any patent medicine, unless such patent medicine is known to the vendor to be capable of being used as a beverage;

I believe that men would be much wiser if they avoid patent medicines altogether, and confine themselves to remedies which are known and proved, but still 19 out of every 20 of the people; particularly the rural population, are very glad to get anything that may help them even though it be a patent medicine, and there is a very large trade in patent medicines in most country places. In many parts of the country where people cannot have access to regular physicians and cannot be treated in the regular way, they rely altogether on patent medicines. The Bill makes it quite safe by providing that such medicine shall only be sold when "not known to the vendor to be capable of being used as a beverage." I pity a man who would use patent medicine as a beverage. I do not use alcoholic beverages myself, but if I did I should not begin on patent medicines. I believe Radway's Ready Relief has been used in the North-West for purposes of intoxication. The next clause says:

(4) Eau de cologne, bay rum, or other articles of perfumery, lotions, extracts, varnishes, tinctures or other pharmaceutical preparations containing alcohol, but not intended for use as beverages;

Surely no member of this House would object to the sale of all these things, articles of the toilet or articles of luxury, that are used by a great many people; and extracts and varnishes are certainly of very considerable importance and largely sold by chemists throughout the country. The last paragraph is as follows:—

(5) Alcohol of sixty-five over proof by Sykes' hydrometer, or methylated spirits made in bonded factories, if sold for pharmaceutical, chemical or mechanical purposes only;

I do not know about that; it may be all right, but possibly on further discussion of the matter it may be satisfactorily explained. The bill appears to me as a whole to be sound in principle. It permits men to engage without the peril of prosecution in a trade that everyone recognizes as an important one for the whole community. I, perhaps, would be disposed to agree with my hon. friend the senior member for Halifax, upon a question which is not of the essence of this Bill, but a kindred measure, I mean the Scott Act. I could not myself, with the views that I entertain, support that measure. I do not think in saying that I am at all acting inconsistently with the course which I took on the last occasion in giving all the aid I could to the hon. member from Sarnia in promoting a measure which he had at that time. So long as that law remains on the Statute book I thought, and still think we are bound to give it all the aid we can: but if the question came up directly (and I guarded myself at the time my hon. friend's bill was before the House by saying that I did not approve of the principle upon which the Scott Act was based) I could not support such a measure. The House will I hope adopt the principle of this Bill which relates to a very important branch of business, one which is very largely conducted throughout the whole country.

HON. MR. DICKEY—My object in rising is this: I think we would save time if we allowed this Bill to go to Committee. The objection which has been raised is only to the second sub-section of the Bill. That is a matter which can be properly dealt with in Committee. I do not know that there is anything in the objection itself which would prevent my hon. friend assenting to the second reading of the Bill. I was struck with the objection which my hon. friend from Sarnia made that this Bill was an interference with the powers of the Local Legislatures. Had it been open to that objection I should most certainly have gone with him, because I have always held that in the Local Legislatures and in them alone, lay the power of regulating the sale of liquors. That opinion has been pretty well upheld; but the objection that is taken on that score is disposed of by the obvious answer that the Bill itself does not propose to interfere with the powers of the Local Legislatures. It expressly states that all it proposes to deal with is in the Scott Act passed by the Dominion Parliament. It is an ungracious proceeding at any time to give the three month's hoist to a Bill brought in as this had been: therefore I think the best course to take with it would be to read it the second time. There is a good deal in what has been said by the senior member from Halifax, in regard to the second section, and I do not say what course I should take on it myself in Committee, but it is a matter entirely to be dealt with by a Committee of the Whole. Let it go to the Committee and it would still be in the power of the House to reject the Bill if it does not command the support of a majority of the House.

HON. MR. ALMON—The hon. member from Sarnia has asked me what is my opinion of this Bill. I am not very much enamoured with it: as my hon. friend knows I generally take the bull by the horns and do not attack it by side issues. I think if this Bill were confined to counties where the Scott Act is in force it would do no harm. In such counties people will drink Radway's Ready Relief, Perry Davis' Painkiller, and other patent medicines, which, as we all know, contain for the most part Yankee rum; but where the Scott Act does not prevail I do not think people will resort to such beverages when they can get ale, porter, wine, cider, and those mild beverages which both the Bible and our own experience tell us are very beneficial. If the hon. member will move that this Bill shall not have effect except in Scott Act counties I am not at all certain that I will not agree with him on that question. I was very glad indeed to hear him say that he thought this whole thing was ultra vires. Now let us abandon the Scott Act altogether; it has proved an entire failure wherever it has been adopted. Let us put that aside and I will join him—and I think all the members who have acted with me will join him—in bringing in a Bill that will put down drunkenness. We cannot put down drinking, because it is permitted by the laws of God and the common sense of man. One would think to hear the advocates of the Scott Act talk that we who oppose it are in favor of drunkenness. I can conscientiously say that I am not. I can say that if those clergymen who enter their pulpits and denounce the opponents of the Scott Act, can point to as many drunkards reclaimed by their sermons as I can show reclaimed by my advice, their work will be very much better appreciated and will gain a higher score above than by abusing those people who cast out the devil in a way that does not please them. I will vote again this Bill if the hon. member from Sarnia will join me in framing a measure to put down drunkenness.

HON. MR. DICKEY.

HON. MR. PLUMB—An hon. member who has paid great attention to this subject, who is a professional man of eminence, well known throughout the Province and throughout the Dominion, has introduced a Bill which he tells us he considers necessary for the protection of druggists and necessary in the interests of the community. He has given a good deal of attention to this Bill, studied it closely, and I, for one, am willing to so far accept his judgment and opinion as to vote for its second reading. I think it is very unfair at the outset to stifle discussion on a subject of this kind because there is a law on our statute book which is repugnant to a great number in this House and in the country. I, for one, trust that the House will read the words of wisdom of my hon. friend from Barrie, who certainly is not prejudiced in favor of any legislation of that kind, and shows that he has studied the character of this bill. I, if I had not examined it at all, would be very willing, in a matter of that kind, to take his mature judgment and the calm judicial opinion that he has given on this subject.

HON. MR. POWER—I should like to hear, before the question is put, what the opinion of the Government on this questions.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—It is not a Government bill.

HON. MR. POWER—But it is a public Bill, and the Government to that extent are responsible.

The motion was agreed to on a division and the bill was read the second time.

THE DEBATES COMMITTEE.

FIRST REPORT.

HON. MR. DEBOUCHERVILLE, from the Committee on Reporting and Publishing the Debates of the Senate, presented their first report. He said:—As this report merely recommends a reduction of the quorum of five members, I ask the permission of the House that it be now adopted.

The motion was agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (N) “An act to amend the Act respecting offences against the person. (Mr. Gowan.)

EXTENSION OF THE EXTRADITION TREATY.

MOTION.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER moved:—

“That this House desire now to express the opinion, that more urgent steps be taken by the Government of the Dominion, to induce the Imperial Government to negotiate an extension of the provisions of the Extradition Treaty now existing with the United States, so as to embrace breaches of trust.”

He said:—Before proceeding to explain the reasons for my placing this motion upon the notice paper, I would respectfully implore the leader of this House not to interrupt me in such a manner as to affect the dignity and honor of this Chamber. When I rise to address the House I always do so with the most profound respect, and endeavor according to the best of my judgment, to keep within the rules. As regarding this question, I have humbly endeavored during the last ten years again and again, to bring the Dominion Government to feel the necessity and wisdom of urging the powers at home, to obtain an extension of the Extradition Treaty so as to embrace breaches of trust. Every session we have received from the Government the same reply, that they have done their best—that they have not been able to carry out their desires in respect to that object. I may say to the House that I have the highest authority for stating that the Government and the press of the United States have desired for a long time, and now desire to extend the provisions of that treaty in the direction referred to. Nothing can be more gratifying to us northern people than to behold the progress of the United States onwards and upwards. While they progress in population, in civilization and in enterprise, we are proud as northern people to feel that we have to our south a nation becoming ennobled by emulating the highest interests of humanity. Their president and legislatures all desire that the nation should become distinguished not only for their enterprise but for the predominance of high principles. The postponement of this provision in question, as the House knows, is simply encouraging fraud and crime. Will the leader of the House tell us that the taking of $50,000 of your money is not a greater crime than stealing your watch or taking a little of your silver plate? Our criminal laws, as I have often observed in this House, are stringently framed to punish the poor man, who perhaps from hunger and want has taken a loaf of bread, or from the lack of necessary clothing has been driven to steal a coat; but how is it with the man living in a costly mansion, who has perhaps taken your all to support that costly mansion? Picture him as he generally struts the street, full of conceit, vanity and pride; with his mansion, his self-importance, and his own greatness, his chief thought in life, and he hesitates not to take the money of the poor, to keep up this, upon which he has set his heart. He is a vulture clothed in fine plumes and costly raiment, all this maintained and sustained by money taken from the poor. His great card is to attend regularly all religious meetings and establish a reputation for piety, to get himself talked of as the pious, holy Mr. ———. With such a reputation he goes into monied institutions. Of course every one trusts him. This is the dangerous man who can easily wreck any institution from the confidence placed in him. I hope there are no members in the Dominion of Parliament, who have ever what is termed, skipped the boundary line. I hope that we have in the Dominion Parliament no men of high position who, wearing the mantle of religion, have plundered the means of poor shareholders. That allwise and all seeing protector above who knows everything and sees everything sometimes metes out to us terrible retribution. It is certainly not the duty of Parliament to protect men of that class ; it is not the duty of Parliament to leave the door open to them to walk at any moment coolly out of the Dominion, and take up their abode in New York, Buffalo or Chicago and laugh at the poor victims of their deliberate breach of trust. I call upon the House to sustain this motion upon every ground of right and justice and for the more effectual protection of our property and our families.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—It is very sad that the House should be obliged to listen to the remarks of the hon. gentleman. Whether he is beside himself or not I do not know, but it is very embarrassing to be obliged to listen from time to time to the useless and absurd rhodomontades in which he indulges. Nobody knows what he has in his mind or why he should use the kind of language which he does. It is pure nonsense of the worst description, and why he should go on as he does from day to day, unless on the supposition I refer to, I cannot understand. I do trust that the time is coming when some measure will be taken to protect the House against the absurd proceedings of the hon. gentlemen. He commenced on this occasion by expressing the hope that I would not interrupt him. Why should he presuppose something that is offensive? If anyone interrupts him improperly he would transgress the rules of the House. What object therefore can he have in per supposing that I intended to interrupt him? He does it for the purpose of being disagreeable and offensive to me. I do not care much about him and am quite willing to put up with that ; but some steps should be taken by which the respect which every hon. gentleman ought to pay to the House should be maintained, and by which we shall not be obliged to listen from day to day to the remarks of the hon. gentleman—half-silly and wholly malignant—by which he desires to wound the feelings of some one. He uses general phrases, but he intends them to apply to some person or other, and he does it in order to inflict pain. He can have no other motive in making these remarks.

Now about his motion itself it is my duty to answer it. I am sorry I have to answer his observations ; they do not deserve at any time to be answered, but it is my duty to reply. The delay in the negotiation of this treaty does not rest in any way whatever with the Government of the Dominion. The United States have been anxious for a long time to negotiate a new treaty with the Government of Great Britain. They were so anxious, as I am informed, occasion was taken to bring the matter before the notice of the British Government by an officer of the United States Government whose accidental visit to England enabled them to represent the necessity and advantage of having a new and enlarged treaty. A list of certain offences, much larger than those now in the treaty with the United States, was agreed upon by an official acting on behalf of the British Government and this gentleman acting on behalf of the United States Government. The draft of a treaty based on their arrangement was sent out to Canada, to us, with a special request that we should consider it as confidential and secret. That was done because it was not thought that it would tend to a favorable result if the exact character and extent of the list of offences were to become known. That treaty was carefully examined by myself, as Minister of Justice, and assented to in its entirety, and I thought and reported that it covered all the offences as to which it was desirable that there should be extradition arrangements between this country and the United States. My report approving of that treaty, strongly recommending its adoption, went to England immediately after. That was probably a year ago. What the cause of the delay is I do not precisely know, but I believe the cause to be this, that there is an old feeling on the part of the Government of Great Britain that extradition should not be allowed unless between Governments who will agree that the person extradited shall be tried only for the offence for which he is extradited. That feeling which obtains strongly in England and has been communicated to the Government of the United States is not participated by the latter. They desire to try a person who has been extradited, for any offence of which he may be guilty whether extradited for that offence or not. That might be very inconvenient if a person who had taken refuge in England, say for some political offence, should be extradited for say some minor offence such as stealing; and in this way, having been taken from his place of refuge, he should be tried for the political offence. A jealousy of that kind I believe to be the reason why this Treaty has not been gone on with. The contention of the United States is that a person who has been extradited should be tried for any offence of which he is guilty. Great Britain having been a place of refuge for political offenders is not willing that a person should be extradited unless the country by which he is to be extradited will agree to try him only for the extraditable offence. Although I do not give that as an absolute assertion on my part, I believe that to be the reason why no progress has been made. No delay whatever is attributable to the Canadian Government. On the contrary they have endeavored from time to time in every way in their power to secure a Treaty between the United States and Great Britain to affect a much larger list of offences than that which is affected by the present agreement between them.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—If no one else is to say a word on a matter of such importance (which astonishes me) I would merely remark that the leader of the House has advanced a very shallow explanation with regard to such reasons existing between the Government of the United States and the Government of Great Britain. It is simply an excuse for having neglected to press the matter vigorously on the British Government before Lord Derby went out of power. The motion was declared lost.

COLUMBIA VALLEY RAILWAY COMPANY.

PETITION PRESENTED.

HON. MR. GIRARD presented a petition from C. W. Moberly and others, praying to be allowed to present a petition for their incorporation as the Columbia Valley Railway Company. He said:—The petition comes from the Rocky Mountains and was accompanied by some papers, but they have been lost on the road. I ask leave now to present the petition.

The petition was referred to the Committee on Standing Orders and Private Bills.

THE PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT.

THIRD REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ADOPTED.

HON. MR. READ moved the adoption of the third report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the printing of Parliament. He explained that it recommended the printing of certain documents, a list of which appeared in the votes and proceedings.

The motion was agreed to.

FREEHOLD LOAN AND SAVINGS COMPANY BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. ALLAN moved the second reading of Bill (L) "An Act to consolidate the Borrowing Powers of the Freehold Loan and Savings Company and to authorize the said Company to issue debenture stock." He said:—The provisions of this Bill are precisely similar to those of a bill which was introduced in the House the other day by the hon. member from Niagara, in relation to the Canada Permanent Loan and Savings Society. The object of the Bill is, in the first place, to enable the Company to take power to create debenture stock, which stock shall be treated and considered as part of the regular debenture debts of the company, in such amounts and manner, on such terms, and bearing such rate of interest, as the directors from time to time think proper, but subject to limitations, so that the amount received as money deposits and borrowed on the security of debentures or debenture stock shall not in the whole exceed the aggregate amounts fixed by this Act as the authorized limit of the borrowing powers of the company. The other portion of the Bill is to consolidate all the borrowing powers of this Company in one Bill, as it has been found a matter of convenience to have them in that shape when they are going to England to borrow money, to be able to show to the investor the whole of the powers which they possess, drawn and presented to them in one Act.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

WESTERN CANADA LOAN AND SAVINGS COMPANY.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. ALLAN moved the second reading of Bill (M) "An Act to consolidate the borrowing powers of the Western Canada Loan and Savings Company, and to authorize the said Company to issue debenture stock." He said—This is precisely the same as the Bill which has just been read the second time. These three companies all desire to have the same legislation, and I propose in the same way to refer this Bill to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

INSURANCE BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL moved the second reading of Bill (G) "An Act respecting Insurance." He said—This is a Bill to consolidate the laws respecting insurance. The chief additional provision, I am told, is one to enable the penalties which the Act imposes for breaches of its terms to be recovered more easily than can be done now. Instead of requiring proceedings to be taken by the Attorney General, this Bill proposes that the proceedings may be taken before a magistrate. That is the principal change I understand. Some of the other changes result from the action of the Joint Committee of both Houses to whom the Consolidated Statutes were referred last Session. The Committee suggested certain changes which it was afterwards thought were hardly such changes as should be introduced by the Commission. It was thought there should be a special enactment. I think some of the changes have been taken in, but not many of them. It seems to me that as it is chiefly nine-tenths or more a consolidation, the easier way to deal with it would be to let the Bill be read now and consider the changes in the Committee.

HON. MR. POWER—I am sorry that the Government have thought proper to take the course that they have followed with respect to this measure. The Bill has only been laid on our desks to-day and there has not been an opportunity to examine it to see how far it differs from the chapter in the Consolidated Statutes on Insurance. I gather from what the Minister said and from what investigation I have been able to make that the changes proposed by this Bill in the law as it is set out in the Consolidated Statutes, could all be embraced in four or five sections. It is very much to be regretted, under these circumstances, that the Government have gone to the expense of having a voluminous Bill like this printed, rendering useless to a certain extent the work done by the Commissioners who revised and consolidated the Statutes. I do not think that the change made by the Parliamentary Committee to which the Minister has referred rendered any legislation necessary, because their recommendations do not become law until they have been adopted by Parliament, and Parliament has yet to deal with the report of those commissioners. If the few slight changes which the commissioners have made in the insurance law do not meet with the approval of Parliament, then those changes will be simply struck out of their report. I cannot help repeating the expression of my regret that so much expense should be gone to in having this Bill drafted and printed and that the time of Parliament should be devoted to going over a measure which is quite unnecessary. All that is necessary could be put into an exceedingly short bill which might be disposed of in half an hour.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—When I first saw the Bill I was somewhat of the same impression, but upon inquiry I find that it is considered by the Commissioners—two of them at all events I have seen myself—that this is the more convenient way of dealing with it—that to take what is the real law now, as reported by the Commissioners for the consolida-ton of the Statutes, and to add to it as the Committee recommended, to add the new provision which the Bill contains about the mode of recovering penalties, would be a complicated affair and the result would be to leave upon the Consolidated Statutes two laws relative to this subject, one the present law and the other the new one containing these amendments. It is more convenient, they think, and will be attended with the advantage of simplicity to adopt the course which we have taken, which is a little more laborious certainly, and put on the statute book to-day the law relating to insurance as it stands. Then when Parliament shall have decided upon that, and this Bill passes in some way or other, it will contain the whole law relative to insurance, and then it can be transferred at little expense to the Consolidated Statutes en bloc. I was at first of the opinion expressed by the hon. gentleman, but upon hearing what the Commissioners had to say I acquiesced in their conclusion that this is the more convenient way of dealing with it.

HON. MR. ALLAN.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned at 4 p.m.

THE SENATE.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I rise to a question of privilege.

THE SPEAKER—You can bring it up before the Orders of the Day are called.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—If the House will permit me, I think I can show that a question of privilege can be brought up at any time.

THE SPEAKER—It is customary to bring up such matters immediately before the Orders of the Day are called.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I think I can produce an authority to show that a question of privilege can be brought up whenever a member chooses to do so. Can I go on?

THE SPEAKER—If the House will permit.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I rise to call attention to an article which affects the character, reputation and standing of a member of the Senate. I refer to an editorial in the Ottawa Citizen of Saturday, the 3rd of April, and also to a subsequent one in the Citizen of this morning, both of which I shall, with the permission of the House, read. The first article is headed "The Degradation of the Senate," and is as follows:—

THE DEGRADATION OF THE SENATE.

We have no hesitation in saying that the abuse poured day after day upon members of the Government by Mr. Alexander in the Senate is disgraceful in the extreme, and should not be tolerated. The viciousness of that gentleman's course would indicate that personal animus rather than public interests prompts his attacks. The scenes which have taken place in the Senate since the commencement of the present session would disgrace the House of Representatives at Washington. If Mr. Alexander imagines that his present course in the Senate will tend to raise him in the public estimation, or is in any way creditable to him, he is laboring under an hallucination, and the sooner it is dispelled the better; and if he imagines that the dignity of his position is enhanced by the course he takes outside of the House to impress every Tom, Dick and Harry whom he meets with his individual importance or that Ministers and others whom he maliciously slanders behind their backs will suffer by his abuse, he is hugging a delusion to his heart. If Senator Alexander's desertion of the Conservative party had been prompted by an honest conviction that its policy was not in the interests of the country, and if in the Senate he were to act in accordance with these convictions, any Conservative could respect him and give him credit for sincerity; but the extraordinary course he has thought fit to adopt in the Senate and out of it must convince even the most pronounced opponents of the Government that behind his attacks there is a propelling motive which no man in the possession of his senses would define as patriotism and innate love of purity of administration. It is time the Senate asserted its dignity, and prevented its further degradation by the repetition of such humiliating scenes for which Mr. Alexander's performances have for some time past made it notorious.

The second article is as follows :

The brief article in the Citizen of Saturday, commenting upon the degradation to which the Senate has suffered, in consequence of Mr. Alexander's outrageous personal attacks upon Ministers and upon some of his brother Senators, has excited the ire of the local organ of the party with which that gentleman some time ago became associated. We were not surprised when we read the organ's endorsement of Mr. Alexander's utterly inexcusable conduct. Indeed we should have been surprised if it had protested against it. The Citizen does not object to the severest possible criticism of the Government's policy and official acts by Mr. Alexander or anyone else, but when legitimate criticism is departed from and gross personal abuse is resorted to, the offender should be made to understand that he cannot fling about his SLANDERS, prompted by vindictive motives, as freely as it may suit his pleasure. As far as we are aware Mr. Alexander's course is not endorsed by any Liberal Senator. No gentleman could do so—no respectable newspaper would encourage him.

Now I would not have noticed it if I had believed it to be an honest expression of one of the gentlemen of the press. This article has appeared in a very mysterious way—I may say without the knowledge of the respected proprietor of that journal, and it is self-evident from what quarter the inspiration came, or I might say by whom it was actually written. The House will admit that every member should be protected in discharging faithfully his duty to the country without being held up to derision and obloquy for performing that duty. No honest or honorable mind would ever have premeditated such an unfair method of attack upon a member of Parliament. I do not believe that there is one member of the press, if he were not specially inspired, would think of writing such a criticism. I could name twenty members of this Chamber who have used much stronger language than I have upon the floor of this House with less provocation. This article is almost verbatim the same language and style of attack as appeared in the Toronto Mail in 1882, when I humbly called attention to an irregularity in drawing sessional indemnity, and I am not aware that I have done anything to merit such unfair criticism. I ask you, hon. gentlemen, if any of you had been nearly ruined and the prospects of your families destroyed, while 100 of your friends had suffered in the same way, would you not in the public interests esteem it your duty to check the person who chiefly caused your losses? If, as an error of judgment, I have used words which can be regarded as too strong, need I remind the House that other members of the House have erred in the same direction? I have honestly and humbly had the simple desire to stop wrong doing. As regarding the Government, let the leader of the House point to one word in my criticisms of their public acts which the country regards as too strong. As regarding the slight personal attack made, en badinage, upon two members of this House, such as I was provoked to make by the rough treatment I received at their hands, I punished them as they deserved. They brought it upon themselves and I now give them notice that I will not in the future brook unseemly and unparliamentary interruptions and thus have all my utterances destroyed and rendered useless. But as regards all the other members of this House, except those five, I have never received anything but the greatest courtesy, kindness and respect at their hands and it is a matter of pride and pleasure to me to feel that the cordial relations between me and them have never been disturbed. Many of my utterances in the Senate are finding their way through the press of the different provinces of the Dominion, and those utterances will testify that in this instance I have been unfairly criticised.

REBELLION LOSSES CLAIMS.

MOTION.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER moved —

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that he will cause to be laid before this House, a return setting forth the total amount of the claims, which have been already acknowledged by the Government for losses sustained by the Hudson Bay Company and private parties, arising out of the North-West Rebellion, up to the 1st of March, 1886, giving the names and amounts.

He said—As there are three motions on the paper following this, and as I hope the Government will bring down the papers for which I now ask, I will merely make the motion without any observation.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—There is no objection to the Address.

The motion was agreed to.

CHURCH HOLIDAYS.

MOTION.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER moved—

To Resolve:—That it is not according to the general wish of members of Parliament, and is not in the public interest that so many church holidays should be observed by the Dominion Parliament; but that the following, viz: Ash Wednesday, Good Friday and Christmas day shall be the only church holidays observed; Dominion Day and Queen's Birthday the only other holidays observed by the Parliament of the Dominion.

He said—If the House will permit me I shall merely make this motion and when I hear the views of the Government on the subject I will reply.

HON. MR. PLUMB—It is evidently not in accordance with the wishes of the House, as there is no seconder to the motion.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL — I have nothing to say on the subject.

HON. MR. ALMON—If the hon. gentleman will leave out all the days mentioned in his motion and substitute Thanksgiving Day I will support it. The other holidays are fixed by the Church and by Parliament, but the holiday which we call Thanksgiving Day is imported from the New England States. We are asked to give thanks whether the harvest is good or bad; whether the fisheries have been plentiful or have failed, and we all know that it was got up just because the governments of the New England States had done away with Christmas, Easter and other days, which we hold as days of thanksgiving to God for all his mercies. It is giving to the Government instead of the Church the power to ordain the day on which we should give thanks. Now, to what is that day devoted? To eating turkeys and gluttony. If, instead of that, we had the wassail bowl and the geniality which accompanies it, I could overlook it; but where the day is devoted to gluttony by order of the Governor-in-Council, and put on an equality with the days which the Church has set aside from time immemorial for giving thanks, I am thoroughly opposed to it. At what time of the year is it generally fixed? At the close of the year, when the laboring classes have a long winter before them. They are deprived of the opportunity of earning the dollar or dollar and a quarter which they would get if they were allowed to work on that day, and which would help them to purchase their Christmas dinner. But no, they are obliged to spend the day in idleness by order of the Governor-in-Council. If the hon. member from Woodstock will strike out the days included in his motion, and insert in it only Thanksgiving Day, although I do not often support him, I will second his motion.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Thanksgiving Day is not a statutory holiday, but one proclaimed by the Governor-in-Council, and we could not take notice of it by anticipatory action.

HON. MR. SCOTT—I am not aware that the public interests have in any way suffered by the observance of holidays by Parliament. If the public interests warranted it, I assume that Parliament might meet on many of the days that we are now accustomed to adjourn over.

THE SPEAKER—It requires a special motion to adjourn over any holiday.

HON. MR. SCOTT—If on any occasion the House should feel that the public interests demand it, we can sit every day. We have precedents for it both in England and America: but where it is not shown that the public interests have been in any way damaged by this House adjourning over any particular day, it is premature for any gentleman to suggest or to move that any of the customary holidays should not be observed.

THE SPEAKER—Under the parliamentary rules a statutory holiday does not necessitate an adjournment, of itself: a special motion for adjournment is required even over a statutory holiday. Our rules govern the whole subject, and they make provision only for an adjournment from day to day, except from Friday evening until Monday. It requires a special motion to adjourn even over a statutory holiday.

The motion was declared lost.

THE RULES OF THE SENATE.

MOTION.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL moved

That a Special Committee be appointed to consider and revise or add to the Rules, Orders and Forms of proceeding to the Senate, and that such Committee consist of the Honorable Messieurs Botsford, de Boucherville, Dickey, Howlan, Pelletier, Odell, Scott and the mover, and report forthwith to the Senate.

He said—It has occurred to me, and I dare say to other members of the House, that some improvement might be made in the rules and proceedings of the House: and in view of having that question considered I gave notice of the motion which is now before us for consideration. The only change I desire to make in the motion is to add the name of Mr. Power to the Committee.

HON. MR. SCOTT—I have not heard what the intention of the hon. leader of the House is in formulating this proposition, and in the absence of that information I am unable to express any opinion as to the wisdom of adopting the proposition for the appointment of a select committee. It may be that our rules can be improved, and I should reserve to myself the greatest freedom in accepting a position on the committee, as to whether it would be advisable to make alterations, and in what direction, as I really know nothing of the intention of the mover of this motion.

HON. MR. POWER—It occurs to me that it is somewhat unusual to make a motion of this sort at this stage of the Session without informing the House as to the reason for the proposed change. I think that our rules are susceptible of improvement, and that they need revision:

but it seems to me that the House ought to be informed by the leader as to the reasons which make this committee desirable at the present time.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I would ask the permission of the House to move an amendment that the names of Messrs. O'Donohoe and McClelan be added to this committee, and if the House will permit me to state that I quite agree with my hon. friend who has just taken his seat, that I cannot quite see what the leader of the House is driving at. We all understand the rules of the House to be drafted very much in imitation of the rules which govern the House of Lords at home, and the rules which govern the House of Lords are different in many respects from those governing the House of Commons. It is easy to explain why they are different. I never prejudge any one's purposes: it is not right to do so. They may be wicked or otherwise. The leader of the House has evinced a somewhat wicked disposition of late.

HON. GENTLEMEN—Order, order.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman is using language that is not parliamentary.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I have known him during 28 years' experience to ask for one or two committees.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman should withdraw the expression for which he was called to order. The rule, I may state for the information of hon. members is that when an hon. member is called to order he sits down, and he cannot proceed again without the permission of the House.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I withdraw the word "wicked." I have known the hon. gentleman for 28 years, and I have known him to move for one or two very strange committees—committees which were certainly fraught with evil, and if the hon. gentleman desires me to name the committees I am quite prepared to do so. I have no desire to now drag into the discussion the result of one committee which he named, and which was really fraught with very great evil.

warn the leader of the House, and I conceive it my duty to sound a warning voice to members of this august body, that the leader of this House in moving in the direction that he is now doing is treading on exceedingly dangerous ground, although he may not perhaps see it. If he thinks that during the past any humble member of this House, under the rules, has been able to address any improper language to the Senate, or make any improper statements—if he thinks to narrow that constitutional power of a member by handing over to the Speaker of this House, without any motion, or without any expression from the members of this House, the power to stop all discussion, I warn him and I warn this House that it is a most dangerous move that may imperil the existence of the Senate with the people of this country. The people are not satisfied with the nominative principal: they are not satisfied that the first Minister should have named the largest number of the members of this House. Naturally they all admire him—they have the highest opinion of him, and we can hardly expect that the members who have been placed here by Sir John Macdonald within the last eight or ten years will criticize his acts. If the leader proposes now to vest the whole power in the Speaker of the House contrary to the rules of the House of Lords, it may lead to serious consequences. Why is it that the Speaker of this House, has not had the power in the past, to interpose, without a motion of some member of the House? It is simply because the Speaker is not elected by us: he is a nominee of the Crown, whereas the Speaker of the House of Commons is elected by the people's representatives, and he is there clothed with larger powers to keep the House in order: whereas our Speaker is the nominee of the Government who have nominated more than three-fourths of the members of this House from the same party.

HON. MR. MONTGOMERY—I think the hon. gentleman is out of order. He is anticipating what the report of the committee is to be—what I or no other gentleman except himself would attempt to do. It is time enough to discuss the report of committee when it comes before us.

THE SPEAKER—The remarks of the hon. gentleman from Woodstock may not be quite relevant to the motion, but I think he is not out of order in the remarks he has been making.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I owe it to the Speaker to make the remarks I am now making, because it is really, with regard to his position, a most critical point. The people regard us as their representatives, although a large body of the House are the nominees of Sir John Macdonald: but if it once gets into the minds of the people that the power of the House has passed into the hands of the Speaker, and if in the future the Speaker should rule me down while doing my duty to the people, it might cause wide-spread excitement amongst the press of the country and cause an agitation to wipe out the Senate altogether. The leader of the House is not satisfied with having the rules of the House of Lords, but he wishes to usurp the power and place it in one individual, the honored, able and respected Speaker of this House to do exactly as he thinks proper. I am sure that hon. gentlemen who desire to see the Senate, as it is, perpetuated, should be exceedingly careful not to allow any infringements on their rights as private members. I do not believe that the present Speaker, with his clear judgment, would be likely to commit an error in ruling and put anyone down unless he were sustained by the ordinary rules of the House, but the future Speakers may not be men of the same character. I implore the leader of the House, and tell him that he is on most dangerous ground, and the press is ready to take hold of this, because they say the hon. gentleman's object is to gag the House.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I call the hon. gentleman to order. He says the object of the mover of this resolution is to gag the House, and I put it to the Senate if such language as that is permissible without calling the hon. gentleman to order?

THE SPEAKER—I did not so understand the hon. member from Woodstock. The hon. gentleman did not say it was the object of the leader of the Government to gag this House; he said it was the press who said it.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—If the hon. gentleman from Niagara goes on much longer we will have to place him in the hands of Big Bear or Poundmaker or some other Indian Chief because he has lost his reason.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I call the hon. gentleman to order, and I appeal to the House to say whether the statement I made before is not a correct one! I also appeal to this House whether any member should be charged as the hon. gentleman has charged me, without incurring the censure of the House.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman from Niagara is out of order in reflecting on the decision of the Chair. I distinctly heard the language that fell from the hon. gentleman from Woodstock; he said that the press of this country alleged that the object of this motion was to gag this House—he did not say that it was the object of the leader of the House.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I cannot accept the amendment of the hon. gentleman from Woodstock. The committee as it is now constituted includes a full representation of the party to which Mr. McClelan belongs, and a full representation of the party to which Mr. O'Donohoe belongs. Upon the Committee which is named are the names of Messrs. Scott, Pelletier and Power: and I think that is as strong a representation as the Opposition would desire to have. The reason I did not enlarge at all upon the idea which I had in giving the notice was that I thought it was not desirable at this stage of the proceeding to do so. When this Committee reports, the nature of their report will have to be considered in the House, and will no doubt be considered at length, and then will be the proper opportunity to discuss the reasonableness or otherwise of the suggestions that the Committee may make.

The amendment was declared lost.
The motion was agreed to.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

HON. MR. ALMON—I propose to call the attention of this House to the Official Report of the Debate which took place in this House on Wednesday last. In the speech of the hon. gentleman from British Columbia, residing at present in the city of Toronto, he is reported to have said, in alluding to my conduct, that it was "captious and cowardly." The word "cowardly" did not strike my ear: and as I have not been in the habit of being called a coward, it is not likely that he could have done so without my replying to it. If that word was used by the hon. gentleman it did not catch my ear. I do not regret not having done so, because I would not have asked the hon. member to apologize, though if I had, I think the House would have supported me. I care as little for the charge that I am a coward, coming from the source it did, as for the apology, as both would be perfectly trivial in my mind. The word "coward," if it had been used at the beginning of this century under such circumstances could have had only one result, but I doubt if it would lead to that result now, or that it would even in those days, because if I am allowed to paraphrase the words of Burns:—

"The king may make a belted knight,
A Senator and a' that;
A gentleman's aboon his might—!
Good faith he munna fa' that."

Therefore I do not think it would apply in this case. I ask hon. gentlemen whether the word "coward" struck their ears: it did not strike mine? If it did not I think it ought to be expunged: if the hon. gentleman did use it it may be left to stand for what it is worth.

The subject was dropped.

DRUGGISTS' BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a committee of the whole on Bill (J), "An Act relating to druggists."

HON. MR. McMILLAN—moved the adoption of the 1st clause.

HON. MR. DE BOUCHERVILLE—I hope the hon. member will have no objection to making a small amendment. His intention probably is to provide that nothing contained in any Act of Parliament since Confederation shall be held to interfere with the sale of liquor under the circumstances mentioned in the Bill. Before Confederation there were Acts of the Parliament of Canada some of which are in force to this day in the Province of Quebec, which under the language of this clause would be affected by the Bill. I therefore move to insert after the word Canada the words "since Confederation."

The motion was agreed to and the clause as amended was adopted.

HON. MR. McMILLAN—moved the adoption of the 1st sub-section.

HON. MR. POWER—When this Bill was at its second reading I think it was the leader of the House who suggested that we might let it pass without debate, and it could be discussed in committee. The hon. member from Alexandria has failed to show a sufficient reason for our passing this Bill. I have not seen any petition asking for this legislation, and the hon. member at the second reading gave no reason why the Bill should pass. He was not prepared to point to any case where abuse or inconvenience had arisen from the existing condition of the law. The law on the Statute Book makes provision which has proved by experience to be ample for the case of physicians' prescriptions, and under the circumstances the House would not be justified in going any further with this Bill unless some good cause is shown for our adopting it.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—It is strange that my hon. friend should repeat now the same objections, if not exactly in the same language, that he raised at the second reading. The House thought that the principle of the Bill was sound at the time, and there is no good reason to renew the discussion upon it now.

HON. MR. McMILLAN—This matter originated in the first place at a meeting of the College of Pharmacy, at which the following resolution, which, in my opinion, carries much more weight than any number of petitions, was adopted.

Moved by Mr. Elliot, second by Mr. Saunders,—That the Committee on By-laws and Legislation be authorized to obtain a legal opinion, if they think it necessary, in regard to the operation of the several Acts, viz: Scott, McCarthy, and Crooks, as affecting druggists in the sale of spirits in Scott Act counties.—Carried.

"The opinion of legal gentlemen was obtained with the following result:—

(1) No druggist is privileged to sell, expose for sale, barter, or for any property consideration gave away liquor for medicinal, or any other purposes, unless he is licensed under the Scott Act.

(2) Intoxication liquor for exclusively medicinal purposes, in quantities of not less than a pint, and only on the certificate of a legally qualified physician not interested in the sale.

(3) The legal opinion of the Solicitors of the College in regard to the spirituous compounds prepared by druggists is to the effect that all such come within the general meaning of the Act, but whether any particular tincture, or spirituous medicinal compound, can be so classed is not a question of law but a matter of fact, to be determined in each particular case.

The hon. member from Halifax said there was a law on the statute book by which druggists are protected. I should like him to point it out to me. It is not likely that the druggists of Canada would be seeking for this legislation if there was an Act on the statute book which protected them. A committee was struck for the purpose of obtaining this legal opinion, and they submitted their report to the college as follows:—

During the period which has elapsed since we last met, efforts have been made by the members of the Council residing in or near Scott Act counties, to obtain the opinion of the druggists carrying on business in those counties, as to the working of the Act, and how far its provisions have been found to affect their legitimate business. In reply to letters issued, a considerable number of communications have been received from druggists residing in the counties of Simcoe, Bruce, Dufferin, Huron and Oxford, some of whom hold the Dominion license. The general sentiment expressed is decidedly adverse to the Act, and it is evident that, when literally interpreted, it bears most unjustly and arbitrarily on the legitimate business of the druggist, so much so that it becomes almost impossible for one to carry on his business without constantly violating the provisions of the Act.

Under these circumstances your committee would strongly urge on this Council to use their influence in endeavoring to secure the passage of amendments, similar to those presented last year, which were adopted by the Senate, and, with the exception of one clause, concurred in by the House of Commons, but were prevented from becoming law for the reason that they became associated with other amendments on which the two Houses could not agree.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman has read the report of the Committee; what was the decision of that body on that. Was it adopted?

HON. MR. McMILLAN—Yes.

HON. MR. VIDAL—It appears to me to be out of order to discuss the principle of the Bill at this stage. I think we had better go on with the details and leave any discussion of the principle of the Bill until the third reading.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The House is in Committee, and there is large liberty allowed in the discussion of the clauses of a Bill in Committee.

The first sub-section was adopted.

On the 2nd sub-section—"Physicians' prescriptions consisting of or containing spirituous liquors, if sold in quantities of not more than eight ounces at any one time"—

HON. MR. POWER—The law now authorizes the sale of liquor under physicians' prescriptions in quantities not less than one pint. If we pass this sub-section we shall be authorizing druggists in all the Scott Act counties to sell liquor in any quantity whatever.

HON. MR. McMILLAN—Under physicians' prescriptions.

HON. MR. POWER—We know what physicians' prescriptions are and what physicians sometimes prescribe. We have had reports of the working of the Scott Act in counties where it has been in force, and we find that physicians prescribe enormous quantities of liquor, which could not possibly be required for the ailments of their patients, and the presumption is that in the same way the average man will be able to get a standing prescription, from a good many doctors at any rate, authorizing him to get eight ounces of liquor per day. Now I do not think that it is a desirable thing that we should have all the men in a neighborhood, who are fond of liquor, running into drug stores and buying liquor in such quantities.

HON. MR. McMILLAN—All that can be done now, only the quantities are larger.

HON. MR. POWER—I think the way to deal with this is to attack the Scott Act in front. If the hon. member will introduce a measure to repeal the Scott Act I shall support it, but I cannot approve of a Bill like this which I look upon simply as an attempt to render the Scott Act nugatory by a sort of attack in the rear.

HON. MR. SULLIVAN—I must repel the insinuation which the hon. gentleman has made, without any reason, that physicians would lend themselves to any such deception as to prescribe eight ounces of liquor to patients indiscriminately. I do not think he has any foundation for it; and I do not think he should make such a charge against a learned body, like the physicians of Canada, without foundation. To show the absurdity of the statement he has made, he has no objection to a prescription of a pint, but he has objections to a prescription of half a pint. This clause refers only to physicians' prescriptions. The principal evil that I see under the Scott Act is, that certain druggists are licensed. Other druggists cannot sell preparations of alcohol, and I think it is an unfair discrimination against them. It is a well known fact that most powerful resins cannot be eliminated except by alcohol, and it is absolutely necessary, in the present state of medical science, that these prescriptions should be made up with alcohol for the benefit of the community. I cannot therefore see why this should fail to be regarded as a simple act of justice to the druggists. The average prescriptions are eight ounces, and it is seldom that a prescription is for a larger amount.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—That is about half a pint?

HON. MR. SULLIVAN—Yes.

HON. MR. McMILLAN.

HON. MR. DEVER—I do not think there is any gentleman in this House who would doubt the honor of physicians in a case of this kind, but I see in the first section there are three classes included, physicians, druggists and chemists. Now we know that the druggists generally deal in many classes of goods, and from my experience I feel that there would be a very wide range given to them under the 3rd sub-section of this clause to dispose of alcohol. Under that sub-section the vendor is to decide whether patent medicines are capable of being used as a beverage. It would be a very easy matter for druggists, under such a clause, to sell large quantities of alcohol. I have known cases in which alcohol merely tinged with a little oil of lemon has been sold by druggists to be used as a beverage. I know of my own knowledge of over 150 puncheons of liquor having been sold in St. John in that way, and the revenue thereby defrauded to that extent. I therefore take exception to that section.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—When liberty runs hand in hand with intelligence, all evils of that kind will cure themselves rapidly. We cannot expect the physicians would lend themselves to any such abuses as the hon. member from St. John points out—that they would prescribe liquor flavoured with orange or lemon peel. This Bill is in the direction of temperance, because it reduces the quantity that a druggist may sell to one-half what is permitted by the Scott Act. The quantity under this Bill is half a pint, and it can only be sold under the prescription of a doctor. Although there may be dishonest physicians as there are dishonest members of all professions, I think it is unfair to brand the whole medical fraternity as untrustworthy. It is an unmerited stigma upon one of our best and noblest professions, those to whom we must trust ourselves when we fail in health. I hope that this clause will be allowed to pass.

HON. MR. GOWAN—I venture to think that my hon. friend, the senior member from Halifax, has not shown his usual logical perception of things in speaking against this sub-section. He argues from the abuse against the use. Now this clause merely relates to the use of certain preparations under prescription of a medical man. I cannot agree with the hon. member from Halifax that the physicians of this country—and I can speak for those in a very large district, with whom I am familiar—would lend themselves to those who would improperly abuse the privileges which this bill would confer. But if they do they are liable to punishment; if, instead of prescribing medicine for a patient, they furnish him with drink to gratify his vicious appetite, they will suffer for it, especially in public opinion. I cannot believe that any honorable man would be guilty of such despicable conduct. My hon. friend's argument is that this sub-section is likely to be abused, therefore druggists should be prevented from selling medicines prescribed in the proper way by a physician. I disagree with that line of argument; I do not believe that physicians, throughout Ontario at all events, are likely to abuse the privileges granted them by this Bill.

HON. MR. McMILLAN moved the adoption of the third sub-section.

HON. MR. DEVER—I wish to move an amendment that the clause be struck out. I do not think it is wise in the public interest to give such power to the druggists.

The sub-section was adopted.

On the title of the Bill,

HON. MR. POWER said:—It is a general rule that the title of a bill should in some way indicate what its character is. Now the title of this Bill fails to do so. The object of the Bill is to allow druggists to sell alcohol in various forms, but the title does not indicate in the slightest degree that that is its object. I really think that the hon. gentleman ought to entitle the bill "An Act to authorize the unlimited sale of alcohol by druggists."

HON. MR. GOWAN—The consolidators, in determining what would be the best and most convenient title of an Act, thought that the form used in this Bill would be the best—"in relation to"—

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman misapprehends the nature of my objection. It is not that the words “in relation to” are used, but that the title does not indicate the character of the Bill. I think it should be “An Act relating to the sale of alcohol by druggists.”

HON. MR. PLUMB—But it is not such an Act.

HON. MR. POWER—My hon. friend from Niagara might contrive to differ from a member of the House in a more indirect way. If he would say “in my humble judgment it is not such an Act”, it would not be so objectionable. If he will point out to me what there is in this Bill that does not relate to the sale of alcohol I shall be obliged to him.

HON. MR. DEVER—At the third reading I propose to move an amendment to strike out the 3rd sub-section of the 1st clause, HON. MR. BOYD, from the Committee, reported the Bill with amendments which were concurred in.

The Senate adjourned at 4-40 P. M.

PRIVATE BILLS.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL moved that the time allowed for receiving reports from the Select Committee on Standing Orders and Private Bills be extended from the 8th to the 22nd instant.

The motion was agreed to.

REPRESENTATION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA IN THE CABINET.

AN EXPLANATION.

HON. MR. NELSON—Before the Senate adjourns I rise to make an explanation in connection with the motion of my hon. friend from New Westminster, which was before this House on Wednesday last. I find from the report of the Debate on that occasion, that it might be taken from my remarks, whether those remarks were plain or otherwise, that I was opposed to the representation of British Columbia in the Cabinet. I want to state here now that not only am I not opposed to it, but that I am strongly in favor of the representation of British Columbia in the Government—that I think it would be a new era almost in the existence of the province if it could secure proper representation in the Cabinet. I state this because, as I have already explained, my remarks may be misinterpreted. I know that the hon. member who made the motion, from one of his remarks, did misinterpret them. I certainly did not intend to convey the idea that I did not desire the province to be represented in the Cabinet. What I did intend to convey, and what I thought I had conveyed to the House was that I was opposed to establishing anything like a cast iron rule that all the Provinces should be represented in the Cabinet, and I gave my reasons for the views I held on that question. In making these remarks I do so less for the Senate here than for the purpose of having my position known in British Columbia. I really believe that I was understood by the House.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Yes, quite understood.

HON. MR. NELSON—I really believe that I was understood as not being opposed to the representation of British Columbia in the Cabinet, but to having a cast iron rule that all the provinces should be represented in the Cabinet. I may add that in opposing my hon. friend's motion, I had good and sufficient reasons in addition to those which I give on that occasion. I would have stated them at the time but for the fact that it was late in the evening and the debate had extended over a considerable time and I did not wish to weary the House. But if there could be any greater reason than I did advance, I think it is illustrated by the fact that while Mr. Mackenzie was in power there was but one single member returned from British Columbia to support his Government. It would have been exceedingly hard for Mr. Mackenzie to form his administration if he had been bound by such a rule as the one which my hon. friend wishes us to adopt. There could have been but one man selected. If Mr. Mackenzie had thought proper to take him into the Cabinet, he would have been obliged to return to British Columbia for re-election and the chances were that he would have been defeated. With such a cast iron rule as my hon. friend wishes to establish, Mr. Mackenzie's position would have been an exceedingly difficult one. Under all these circumstances—

HON. MR. MCINNES—I rise to a question of order. I desire to know if I will be allowed to reply to my hon. friend's remarks. He is making a second speech on my resolution of Wednesday last, nearly a week ago, which would have been very well and timely if made when it was before the House. If I am not allowed to reply to him I think it is scarcely fair to allow him to proceed, and it will lead to my raising a question of privilege at another time and making whatever criticisms I deem necessary.

THE SPEAKER—The question put by the hon. member can only be answered by the House. I must say that although the hon. member from Burrard Inlet commenced with a question of privilege, he has rather gone beyond what the rule of the House would permit and on that account the House perhaps would be disposed to let the hon. gentleman reply.

HON. GENTLEMEN—Oh no, drop, drop!

HON. MR. NELSON—I of course bow to the decision of the chair in this matter, but I thought it due to myself to make this explanation. I am sorry if, in making it and giving further reasons which I had not an opportunity of adducing at the time, they hit hard at my hon. friend, so hard that he has to rise and prevent me speaking on the subject. I thought, as I do not often trouble the House or take up its time, that possibly under the peculiar circumstances of the case, the House would have allowed me to finish my remarks. However, as I have been ruled against I have nothing further to say.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (37) "An Act to naturalize Girolamo Cosentini, commonly called Baron Girolamo Cosentini." (Mr. Plumb.)

Bill (38) "An Act respecting the Niagara Grand Island Bridge Company." (Mr. Plumb.)

Bill (40) "An Act relating to the Canada Southern Bridge Company." (Mr. Plumb.)

THE SENATE DEBATES.

HON. MR. POIRIER—I have received several letters from newspapers in the Lower Provinces asking me that the debates of this House should be sent to them. I have tried to have their request complied with but I find that it is against the rule of the Debates Committee. The newspaper gentlemen who have written to me are the editors of the Moniteur Acadien and Le Courier des Provinces Maritimes. They are weekly papers and I find that the reports of our debates are only sent to daily newspapers. I think it is to be regretted that weekly newspapers such as those I have referred to, and many others in the Lower Provinces, cannot get the reports of the debates of this House as the daily newspapers do. Our official report is for the purpose of letting the public know what we are doing. The papers to which I have referred have a large circulation and their editors would like to bring what is being done in the Senate before their readers. Of course I cannot remedy the difficulty, but I call the attention of hon. gentlemen, especially the members of the Debates Committee, to the matter to see whether means cannot be adopted by which the reports of our debates can be furnished to the weekly press, or to such as are desirous of procuring them.

HON. MR. DE BOUCHERVILLE—I think there are only 12 copies of the Debates remaining after the distribution takes place. The rule is to send copies only to the daily papers. If we were to send to the weekly papers it would largely increase the number of copies required, and it is simply a question of expense. The hon. member did not, to my knowledge, speak to the Committee on the subject.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Similar applications have been made to me and I have had to reply that I thought it would involve a very large increase in the number of copies sent out, as the tri-weekly and weekly newspapers largely exceed in number the dailies published in the Maritime Provinces. I should be very glad, if this privilege is granted to the newspapers mentioned by my hon. friend, to have it extended to other newspapers as well.

HON. MR. VIDAL—As a member of the Debates Committee I may say to the hon. gentleman that I do not think he can see the great inconvenience that would result from complying with his request. It would involve our supplying all the weekly newspapers throughout the Dominion with copies of our debates. The hon. gentleman himself receives six copies, and surely he and other members from his province might manage to supply such newspapers as desire to be furnished with our debates. I think it is hardly right to disturb the existing arrangement for supplying the daily papers. It would open the door for a very heavy demand on us—a larger demand than we can supply.

The Senate adjourned at 4:35 p.m.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills, reported from the Committee on Banking and Commerce without amendment, were read the third time and passed :—

Bill (F) "An Act respecting the London & Ontario Investment Co." (Mr. McKindsey.)

Bill (H) "An Act to consolidate the borrowing powers of the Canada Permanent Loan and Savings Company, and to authorize the said Company to issue Debenture Stock." (Mr. Plumb.)

REBELLION LOSSES CLAIMS.

MOTION.

HON. MR. POWER moved

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General; praying that he will cause to be laid before this House, copies of the Commission or Commissions, and instructions issued to the Commissioners appointed to enquire into and report upon the losses sustained in the North-West Territories during the recent Rebellion.

He said: It will be seen that the subject of the motion is a somewhat important one, and I regret that it has not fallen into better hands, and that I am not better prepared to deal with it. The general principle which governs losses of the category in which those sustained by parties in the North-West owing to the rebellion fall, is, that where the loss falls in the first instance, there it remains. We find this principle running through different walks of life. We find that, in marine insurance for instance, the acts of God and of the Queen's enemies are excepted from the operation of policies—there is no compensation in those cases,—that where, owing to the visitation of Providence in the shape of floods, forest fires and other calamities of that kind, losses take place, the parties who suffer loss are not entitled to look to the Government or to the public for compensation. If the public, either the small community in which those calamities take place or the larger community, the Province or the Dominion do undertake to relieve in any degree the sufferers in those cases, it is done not by way of compensation but by way of free gift or charity. It is not the general rule that the sufferers by war are relieved. I do not think that as a rule the persons in the United States who suffered through the civil war were compensated by the public. It is true that those who suffered from the Confederate cruisers were compensated, but the compensation was not from the United States but from Great Britain, which paid a very large sum for the alleged damages by the Confederate cruisers. I think that these claims for damages during the late rebellion in the North-West call for special vigilance on the part of the Government; and I propose to ask for the instructions given to the Commissioners, partly for the purpose of seeing whether the Government have taken the pains which they should have taken to protect the public interest. The first precedent to which I shall refer hon. members is one almost exactly in point, it is the case of the great Indian Mutiny of 1857-58, and I propose to read to the House a portion of the despatch embodying the final decision of the Imperial Government with respect to the compensation for damages sustained during that mutiny. That case, I think, is very like our own. An outbreak took place in a great British possession, and the natives of the country were those who were exclusively in that case concerned in it. In our case the half-breeds, who may be considered to occupy, to a certain extent, the position of the natives of India, together with the Indians who are undoubtedly the natives, are the parties who were concerned in getting up the rebellion. The people who made the claims in the case of the Indian Mutiny were largely Europeans: but there were also loyal natives; and I presume that in this case claims have been made by whites and loyal half-breeds. No doubt the amount of loss suffered in the Indian Mutiny was many times greater than that suffered in ours, because the outbreak was much more serious, and the country was much wealthier and the population infinitely greater. Having said so much I will read what I consider the essential portion of the despatch embodying the final decision of the Imperial Government on the claims for compensation for damages arising out of the Indian Mutiny. The despatch I am going to read is one to the Governor General, and the third paragraph is as follows:—

“Her Majesty’s government cannot admit that there is any ground for the claims put forward, by firms or individuals, for losses of profits which, but for the mutiny, might have been realised, or by insurance offices for loss of premiums through the death of persons whose lives have been assured.”

That paragraph disposes of a number of claims for consequential damages at once. The 5th paragraph says:—

“After full consideration of the subject, Her Majesty’s Government are of the opinion that, in granting compensation, a distinction should be made between losses on buildings, factories, or crops and losses of cash, jewels, and articles of personalty. They have accordingly determined that, in regard to the former, when the amount of the admitted loss should exceed 2,000 Rupees, compensation to the extent of one-half shall be awarded, and in cases where the admitted loss shall exceed 2,000 Rupees compensation shall be awarded to the extent of 1,000 Rupees and one-third of the sum by which the loss shall exceed 2,000 Rupees, in regard to cash, jewels, and articles of personalty, they consider it proper to limit the compensation to one-third of the admitted loss, in no one case granting a larger amount than 5,000 Rupees.”

I may observe that, a rupee is about equivalent to two shillings sterling, or a half dollar of our money.

There is another very important principle laid down there, that the public are not to compensate in full—that in no case do they compensate to more than half the admitted loss, and they allow the individual to bear the remainder of the loss. The 9th paragraph is as follows:—

“According to the information at present before me, and as far as I am able to form an estimate from the statements forwarded, the amount which will have to be provided as compensation, under the principle laid down in this despatch, will not exceed 8,000,000 Rupees; but Her Majesty’s Government desire that it should be distinctly understood that whatever may be the amount of losses substantiated, no larger sum than 10,000,000 Rupees can be granted for the payment of compensation, and that in the event of this sum being insufficient to satisfy the claims established on the foregoing principles, a pro rata reduction must be made. I shall be prepared to remit to you the requisite sum in the course of the ensuing winter.”

The last paragraph says:—

“It will be the duty of your Government to take care that the inquiry is so conducted that, whilst all the parties have the fullest opportunity of establishing their losses, the revenue is protected from unreasonable claims, and strict proof must be required that the losses incurred were really caused by the mutiny and could not have been prevented by the exercise of common prudence on the part of those who sustained them."

Then there is a subsequent despatch, one paragraph of which, I propose, with the permission of the House to read. It appears that the Governor-General, in replying to the despatch a portion of which I have just read, recommended that the full amount of the ten millions of rupees should be regarded as in any case available to meet the claims, and if the claims calculated in the manner laid down in this despatch did not reach that amount, any surplus remaining should be distributed among the claimants. He is taken to task by the Imperial authorities as follows:—

"In granting one crore of rupees to meet these claims to compensation, Her Majesty's Government desired that it should be understood that whatever might be the amount of losses substantiated, no larger sum than one crore could be granted for compensation; and that, in the event of that sum being insufficient to meet the claims a pro rata reduction should be made. I regret that you should have encouraged any hope on the part of the claimants that, in the event of a surplus remaining out of the crore of rupees, it would be distributed rateably among them. Her Majesty's Government does not consider it expedient to alter the terms of the arrangement laid down in my despatch above referred to, or to pledge itself as to the manner in which any surplus that may remain after the prescribed allotment shall be disposed of."

Now, as I have said, I think that the action of the Home Government in the case of the losses by the Indian Mutiny gives us a very good model to copy. The next notable case where damages were awarded for losses sustained during an insurrection was in the case of New Zealand. The Province of Taranaki had been almost devastated by the Maori war, and at the close of the war the people of the province petitioned for relief. The Legislature of New Zealand gave them relief in the session of 1861; but the form in which the relief was given was different from that which we have heretofore adopted in Canada. The Legislature agreed to borrow £200,000 sterling for the purpose of setting the Province of Taranaki on its feet again; but it made that loan of £200,000 payable by the province. It bound the Province of Taranaki to repay the amount of that loan by instalments. Then we have had in Canada two or three cases of compensation in the case of rebellions. In the case of the rebellion of 1837-8 there was compensation.

HON. MR. SCOTT—On both sides.

HON. MR. POWER—Yes. I am not going into the history of that. I am not very familiar with it, and it is perhaps a little too ancient; but the course that was adopted in the case of the rebellion of 1837 was that at a comparatively early date after the outbreak had terminated the loyalists who had suffered were compensated. The work of compensation was not completed until 1849—more than ten years after the outbreak had terminated. A commission was appointed either in 1844 or 1845, to enquire into and report upon the claims of persons in the Province of Lower Canada who had not been convicted of taking a part in the rebellion and who claimed to have suffered losses. This commission reported in 1846; but the report was not acted upon until 1849. The commissioners in their first report, which is the only one that I have read, stated that the total amount of the claims which had been submitted to them was £241,965. They pointed out certain deductions which would necessarily be made from that amount, and they concluded their report by saying they thought that £100,000 would be as much as would be required by justice; and the Act of 1849, which led to such grave consequences, proposed to give that sum to those who had suffered losses. As to the serious results that arose from the Rebellion Losses Bill, I do not propose to say anything. Most hon. gentlemen are familiar with them; but if hon. gentlemen will take the trouble to look into the history of that commission they will find that care was taken to eliminate claims for consequential damages and claims of a doubtful character generally. Then we had in the case of the first difficulty in the North-West a commissioner appointed, a Mr. Johnston, for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of damages suffered, and the total amount which I have found in the Public Accounts was something less than $100,000. I think that the case of the first rebellion in the North-West ought to serve as a warning to the Government to guide them in dealing with the claims arising out of the outbreak of last year ; because undoubtedly some persons in the North-West laid the foundations of their fortunes in that outbreak. Sums were received for damages which made them comparatively wealthy men, and which no loss that they had suffered could possibly have entitled them to.

Having referred briefly to a few of the precedents, I wish to say a few words as to the present case. The proposal is that the people of the older provinces who have been paying millions of dollars, every year since that country has been taken over from the Hudson Bay Company, for the benefit of the North-West—that these people of the older provinces who in addition to that sent up their young men to defend the people of the North-West and their property from the rebels, and who are now paying the several millions of dollars which the rebellion has directly cost the country, should be still further taxed in order to pay parties in the North West for any property that has been destroyed or for any damages that they have sustained. That proposition, even stated in that way as to property actually destroyed, I think is one of doubtful propriety. When we consider the immense amount of money that was spent in that country during the rebellion and the loss that the other portions of the Dominion suffered on account of the rebellion, and for which the persons who directly suffered it are not to be compensated, it seems to be unreasonable that, supposing certain persons in the North-West did sustain loss or damage, they should be compensated more than those whose husbands, sons, clerks or other employees went up there, and in some cases, lost their lives, or at any rate, deprived their employers and their families of their services for several months. I hope the Government will not object to bring down the papers, and that when they are produced it will appear that the Government have taken all the precautions that should have been adopted to prevent imposition upon the tax-payers of the Dominion ; and I hope it will appear that they have followed the example set by the Imperial Government in the case of India. There are two or three principles which I think are very important, and which I hope will be found to be embodied in the instructions to the commissioners : in the first place, that no indirect claims will be recognized—that no claims for loss of business or profits, or for consequential damages of any sort shall be recognized—that only claims for actual destruction of property shall be admitted. I trust also that, even in the case where actual damage has occurred, it is not proposed to compensate these people in full ; that they shall be only compensated in part ; and that they shall bear a portion of the loss which, through the action of the Queen's enemies has fallen upon them, and that the taxpayers of the country shall bear only a proportion. There is one other principle which I sincerely trust the Government have adopted, I hope they have made it the duty of these commissioners to ascertain, wherever a claim is put forward for compensation for damages, whether the party making the claim has made gains which will go to compensate or more than compensate for the losses which he has sustained. That is a fair and equitable principle and one which is adopted in the United States and in this country with regard to property expropriated for public purposes. If for instance a city corporation thinks it necessary to take a man's property for the purpose of widening a street or opening up a new street where one has not existed before, then under the law which prevails in our provinces and in the States of the neighboring country, the proprietor does not necessarily receive the whole value of the property taken, but the value of that property less the increase which the improvement causes in the value of the remainder of his property. In the United States that is called the Betterment Law ; and I think it is based upon a perfectly fair and equitable principle ; and that it would be unfair and unjust to the country at large to adopt any other principle in dealing with claims in the North West.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—That principle is recognized in arbitrations.

HON. MR. POWER—It is a safe principle to adopt. I believe that the cases where loyal subjects have suffered loss greater than the advantages which they derived from the presence of the troops and the great expenditure of money which took place in that country last year, are very few indeed. There is one to which I venture to call attention, as being peculiarly one where no compensation should be given. I notice that in the case of the former outbreak none was given either. That is the case of the Hudson Bay Company. We do not know as yet how much the Hudson Bay Company have received or are to receive from the Government in connection with that outbreak, but in the Public Accounts for last year I find that up to the first of July they had received nearly $1,000,000.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Not for losses; for things purchased from them.

HON. MR. POWER—Certainly, but all in connection with the outbreak; that is just the point. They did not make the money in connection with losses, but the receipt of that $960,000 was a consequence of the outbreak; and it would be manifestly unfair if, for instance, two or three buildings of the Hudson Bay Company were destroyed, that they should receive compensation to the extent of say $50,000 or $60,000, when they had really received as a consequence of the same cause that destroyed their buildings, the sum of $960,000. There is no doubt that more than half of that $960,000 was clear profit.

HON. MEMBERS—Oh oh.

HON. MR. POWER—I do not think there is anything so amusing in it; and I do not think there is anything absurd about the statement; because this money was paid largely for forage, and we know on pretty good authority that hay which the Hudson Bay Company paid only $6 or $8 a ton for was sold to the Government at rates exceeding $20 a ton. I think it is perfectly safe to say that one-half at least of that large sum was clear profit. There is another fact which goes to indicate what the position of the Hudson Bay Company is as regards the recent outbreak, and that is the fact that the £20 shares of the Hudson Bay Company were worth at the close of 1885 about £3 a share more than they had been worth a year before. It is a tremendous increase in the value of the shares of that Company; and it is perfectly clear that it would be altogether unjust and inequitable that the people of this country who are all suffering considerably from the effects of that outbreak, and who are obliged to pay so many bills that they cannot avoid paying, should be mulcted still further to pay additional sums into the treasury of a company who have made such immense sums of money out of the rebellion.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—My hon. friend, I think, was too rash—if I may use the expression—in drawing attention to the Hudson Bay Company without knowing whether they had ever made a claim for losses arising out of the rebellion. In truth they have made no such claim. Then as regards the stock of the Hudson Bay Company, there was a much greater rise in the stock of that company some years ago than £3 a share; there was a rise of £6, £7, or £8 a share. These things do not depend on rebellion losses, but on other circumstances connected with the business of the company—the increase of the value of the lands of the company, which is going on rapidly; the appreciation of English and other capitalists and investors who deal in stocks of the value of the shares of the Hudson Bay Company and of the facts as they arise. The company have made no claim so far as I have learned. Then as regards the motion itself, we have objection to bringing the address down and showing the instructions which have been given to the commissioners appointed. I do not remember having seen those instructions, and I would rather not discuss them until I have seen them. I will endeavor to have them brought down as soon as possible. I do not acquiesce in all the rules, which the hon. gentleman has laid down, but no doubt it is an important subject, and one to which he has very properly called attention. I think where losses have occurred in one part of the Dominion, such as those referred to, it is not an unfair thing that those losses should be met by the Dominion at large. They also in the Territories pay their taxes; they pay as much as we do in proportion to their property in contributing the money out of which the losses are paid, and stand on the same footing as we do in that respect. They have suffered specially from those exceptional causes which we all so much regret, there is every reason for our dealing with them fairly and justly, and compensating them as far as can be reasonably done for some of the losses they have sustained. I will be very glad to discuss the matter with my hon. friend when the papers are brought down, and I shall endeavor to have the papers brought down as soon as possible.

HON. MR. GIRARD—I do not wish to detain the House but I wish to endorse the good words pronounced by the leader of the House in reference to the Hudson Bay Company. The hon. gentleman who has moved this resolution has used some expressions that he should not have used towards that company. The Government and the country at large are deeply indebted to the Hudson Bay Company for what they have been doing during the last 15 years. During the trouble in 1870, the Hudson Bay Company provided for the government what was necessary for the establishment of the new regime in Manitoba, and even in the recent insurrection they assisted the Government by providing many things that could not have been otherwise easily obtained. They have their trading posts in different parts of the country, and it was to those posts that the troops sent for the defence of the Territories applied and they received all the necessaries that they were in need of. Under those circumstances the Hudson Bay Company are perfectly entitled to receive compensation for what they expended in the interests of the country. The bill for advances has been settled between the Government and the Hudson Bay Company, and if to-day they claim indemnity for buildings of theirs destroyed through the insurrection, it seems to me it is only perfectly right that they should be paid. The hon. gentleman has endeavored to place a condition in the commission which has been issued to commissioners appointed to inquire into the losses. It seems to me that the best condition is to repair the wrong which has been suffered by the people. It is well known that it was not from want of loyalty on the part of the people that they are suffering. They were taken by surprise in that insurrection, so they all declare. Although they have suffered great loss, they are every day thanking the Government for what they are doing in their interest. They are now being fed and provided for by the Government, but that cannot last much longer. I do not ask indemnity for those who were the cause of the trouble—for those who have been disloyal to the Queen, but for those only who have been through ignorance and error brought into the rebellion by force of circumstances.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—The hon. gentleman from Halifax asks for information which Parliament ought to possess. I confess that having for some years observed the ways of the present administration in selecting almost in every case mere partizan followers, especially in the North-West, and knowing as I do a large number of the persons so appointed, I regret that I cannot come to the conclusion that many of them have been appointed upon the ground of fitness for the positions which they occupy. I do not make these remarks in reference to the commissioners named in this motion, but I make them with regard to the appointments generally made in the North-West, and which have been made generally in the departments of the public service. It is a painful duty for me to make the observations I do, but I have within the last week or two gone into the departments for information, and have had such experiences—that there are many unfit to discharge the duties of their offices; and a very wide-spread feeling prevails from one end of the Dominion to the other that the present Government cannot make any appointments now in which the chief motive is not the rewarding of partisans who have served in past elections.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—I rise to a point of order. I would ask the Speaker if the hon. gentleman is addressing himself to the question before the House.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman has certainly wandered from the question: his remarks are not relevant to the motion before the House. Under that resolution the hon. gentleman is not in order in discussing the policy of the government appointments to offices in the public service.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—In conclusion I will say that I hope the commissioners who have been appointed will discharge their duty faithfully, and that they will not be guided by the reasons and the motives to which I have referred ; that they will deal with the public money honestly, and that when questions of loss comes up either by the Hudson Bay Company, or the Bell farm, or any other persons, they will not allow political considerations to influence their report as to the amount due to the parties.

The motion was agreed to.

THE DRUGGISTS BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. McMILLAN moved the third reading of Bill (J) "An Act relating to Druggists."

HON. MR. SCOTT—I was not present when this Bill was before the House at its former stages, otherwise I would not probably have troubled hon. gentlemen with the observations I am induced to make when a measure of this kind comes before it for consideration. When in 1878 this House devoted at least three weeks to discussing the Canada Temperance Act ample provision was made and ample protection afforded, in my judgment, for the sale of liquors and spirits of all kinds under medicinal prescriptions, or for use in any art, trade or manufacture. The business proper of the druggist was in no way interfered with under that Act. He was made the channel through which liquors could be sold for special purposes. The House felt it was a proper thing that as that privilege was likely to be abused it should be surrounded with certain checks and safe guards, which would in no way interfere with the carrying out of the measure in accordance with the intention of Parliament, but would simply prevent it being made a channel for promiscuous drinking. The medical profession was given a pretty wide latitude. I do not propose now to make any comments upon the course pursued by some medical men, but I have brought before this House, through the public reports that have been sent to the Inland Revenue Department, ample proof that there was a good deal of misplaced confidence in giving to the medical profession the right to order prescriptions of alcohol. I have heard no complaint that there has been any difficulty in obtaining spirits or liquor for the purposes of any art, trade or manufacture. I have heard of no prosecution of the druggists. I have heard no complaint from one end of this country to the other, wherever the Temperance Act has been in force, that the fair traffic of the druggists' pharmacopœia was in the smallest degree interfered with or disturbed by the Canada Temperance Act. I regard the Bill before the House as one of those cleverly-disguised opportunities to turn the drug stores into dram shops. I am sure that no physician having a regard for his profession or standing will abuse the opportunities given him by this Bill, but I do say, and I have produced evidence to show, that druggists acting in collusion with doctors have driven a coach and four through the Canada Temperance Act. It has been proved over and over again that a druggist and a medical man together have ordered four gallons of brandy for one perscription and six dozen of ale for another—liquor enough for a man to bathe in. I merely point to these facts, as I have already on a former occasion given ample proof from the Official Reports, that the powers given to druggists and to medical men have been abused to a very extreme degree. I myself felt that when a measure of this kind was passed it would be subject to very great opposition. I quite recognize that we have in this community, as in all communities, a considerable number of people who believe that this is not proper or correct legislation. They believe that they have not in any moral sense offended by contravening this law : that while it is in some degree parallel and akin to our criminal law, they may commit breaches of it without doing violence to the court of conscience. I quite recognize that fact, but at the same time I do feel that the class that ought to have observed an Act of that kind, and for whom ample provision and ample protection was made, ought not to have availed themselves of it as they have done to openly violate that law. As I said before, there has been no complaint whatever, and ample provision was made under the Canada Temperance Act for all classes of cases that could fairly arise. I will read to the House one of the provisions:—

THE SPEAKER.

“ Provided also, that the sale of intoxicating liquor for exclusively medicinal purposes or for bona fide use in some trade, art or manufacture, shall be lawful only by such druggists and other vendors as may be thereto specially licensed by the Lieutenant-Governor in each province.”

HON. MR. McMILLAN—By those only, though.

HON. MR. SCOTT—By those only. It would not be perfectly fair for the legislature of any country to put on the statute book a prohibitory law unless they surrounded it by proper checks and safeguards, because it is the belief, a belief that is acted upon by those who are opposed to laws of that kind, that they can be openly violated by indirect methods. We know that this violation occurs not alone in counties where the Canada Temperance Act is in force, but a prohibitory law is violated in the State of Maine, where it has been in force for over twenty years, although it has been made a part of the constitutional law of that State. Yet a minority will violate it, and so it is in other countries. It is just one of those laws that people feel warranted in violating, and I quite appreciate the difficulty of enforcing a statute of that kind. If we think it is not wise and proper that liquors should be exposed for sale and permitted to be sold with the freedom that they are under ordinary licenses, then I say we are quite right in protecting this Act with the safeguards by which it is surrounded. It is a perfect farce to pass a law of this kind, and at the same time leave loop-holes through which it can be violated. In future years we cannot quote the experience of the country as to whether that law is good or bad if we ourselves give the opportunity for breaking it in the variety of instances in which it is proposed to violate and break the Canada Temperance Act. I say there is not, and has not been any necessity for this Bill. I have never heard of any instance which calls for such legislation, and my attention would probably have been directed to the matter as much as that of any other gentleman had there been prosecutions against the druggists for selling the ordinary pharmacopœ where it is done honestly and candidly, and not for the purpose of breaking the Canada Temperance Act, or availing themselves of the opportunity to sell whiskey disguised with some drug. We find that under this Bill physicians can at any time order a half pint of whiskey for a person who may want it. He can get his whiskey neat, and there is no law, that I am aware of, that will prevent a druggist giving a man water with his prescription at any time. A man can get 8 ounces of alcohol, and as it is pure spirit, or assumed to be, I think it is a pretty stiff drink. That is perfect freedom. There is no check to be kept of liquor so sold; we are not to be informed by whom this law has been broken. Under the present statute, if a medical man gives a prescription which includes spirit of any kind, the druggist files it away as he does any other prescription; he is not bound under this Bill to file it away or preserve it in any way, therefore you allow the medical men to give dram drinking prescriptions ad libitum and to drink ad libitum through the drug store. I am quite aware that a large proportion of the medical profession would not stoop to do anything of the sort. I feel most unlimited confidence in a very large percentage of them, but we have to make our laws so that even the small percentage will not have the opportunity to openly violate that law, and I am sure that any medical man who respects and has a proper regard for his profession, would like to see the temptation withdrawn from those weak members of the profession who think they are not doing anything wrong in breaking the Canada Temperance Act. It is the boast of many medical men that they do not propose to be bound by any prohibitory law with respect to the sale of liquor, and they openly violate it in collusion with the druggist. The proof of that is already in possession of Parliament in the returns that have been made from time to time to the Inland Revenue Department. This Bill is to allow the sale of any patent medicine unless such patent medicine is known to the vendor to be capable of being used as a beverage. How is that to be ascertained? The vendor is not bound to make the enquiry whether it is capable of being used as a beverage or got. He sells Warner's Safe Cure or Perry Davis' Painkiller. It is well known that Warner's Safe Cure, without adulteration contains about 30% of alcohol. It is a well known fact that in the North-West, at social parties, Perry Davis' Painkiller was a popular drink which circulated round the table until it became known to the authorities, and the sale of it had to be prohibited. The Inland Revenue authorities had an eye to two objects. They felt that it was not painkiller that was being drunk by the people, but that it was whiskey, which ought to pay to the revenue a high tax, and painkiller was therefore put upon the tabooed list and cannot be bought now in the open way it could be a few years ago in the North-West. I am not aware whether the Safe Cure has been put on the list also, but if it is not it ought to be prohibited. I think I am quite within the mark in saying that as it is sold now it contains 30% of alcohol.

HON. MR. DICKEY—That accounts for it being such a good medicine.

HON. MR. SCOTT—I have given a good deal of attention to this subject. I read the scientific papers, and my information is not such as can be displaced by an observation of that kind. In the next paragraph we have "eau de Cologne" and "bay rum." The name is rather taking. It does not take much more alcohol to make bay rum than to make Moselle. I have heard an hon. gentleman say that Moselle is a mixture of bay rum and brandy, with something else thrown in to give it the Moselle flavor. Certainly eau de Cologne occasionally has a little of the Moselle flavor, or the Moselle a little of the eau de Cologne flavor: but things have been so much mixed the last few years that it is impossible to get pure Moselle. Pure Moselle has become so subordinated to pure eau de Cologne that I have heard a very good judge say that Moselle is eau de Cologne with a little bay rum thrown in. If our laws were made for people who felt themselves conscientiously bound to observe them, there might be no objection to allow such a Bill as this to become law, but such is not the case, and I appeal to the good sense of any hon. gentleman whether within his own experience this system of adulterating liquors of all kinds is not carried on to an extraordinary degree? I proved on a former occasion before this House that the Government of this country had for years and years—I think it was taken off the statute book at my instance last year, I think shamed off—a statute under which any person who chose to take out a license from the Government could make his own wines of various kinds—sherry, Bordeaux, Maderia—or whatever he chose. He might make his gin, his rum, or his brandy. On that occasion I read to this House the advertisement of a man in Montreal who did not say he proposed to sell pure liquors, but Canadian-made wine, rum and brandy. When we know that this is going on every day in Montreal, in this city, and in every other city in Canada—that these adulterations are being manufactured—do you mean to tell me that when we pass a Bill of this kind it is not inviting the druggists to avail themselves of the opportunity it will afford them to sell liquor when the taverns are shut up? We say close up the taverns under this law. We say to the people, "We give you the right in your district to prohibit the sale of liquors," and then we step in immediately after that law has been passed, and say, "It is quite true you have under the law debarred the hotel-keepers from selling liquor, but we are now going to give you another law under which the druggists can sell liquor ad libitum without paying any license, and without being open to inspection." Does the hon. gentleman tell me that that is a bill that ought to be accepted either by druggists or hotel-keepers? We have records of the most authentic kind that the traffic in liquor is playing havoc all over this world. On the authority of Dr. Richardson I see it stated that 1,000 persons a week die in England and Wales simply from the effects of intoxicating liquors—1,000 persons a week, heads of families, the bread-winners, those whom society could least spare, sent to their graves through drinking spirits or drinking beer. If ten persons go to their grave through the effect of small-pox what an excitement arises all over the land. We are at once alarmed! health boards are established; we surround the district affected with a cordon: there is to be no communication between those who are affected with the small-pox and the outer world. Or if typhoid fever gets into a locality the civic authorities are all on the qui vive to find out the cause, whence the miasma arises or why it is that the lives of the people are thus recklessly sacrificed, and yet a thousand people may die each week from this cause and nobody is to say a word or enquire whether the evil can be stopped. This House, that at least has arrived at those years when a subject of this kind ought to attract their attention, is prepared now to put on record its approval of a measure of this kind to permit liquor to be sold freely in counties where the people, under an Act of this Parliament, have declared that it shall not be sold. I say it is not right or proper, and it will not enure to the honor of this Senate. I say it will cause a stronger feeling against the Senate than anything else that has come before this House—it will develop the feeling which prevails outside of this House that a reconstruction of the Senate, as it is constituted, is necessary. It will increase the feeling that the Senate is not a body which represents the people of Canada—that it is a body which acts in defiance of the feeling of the people. (Oh, oh.) Hon. gentlemen say "Oh, oh"; I am speaking my own honest sentiments; I speak them with great regret and sorrow when I look round and see hon. gentlemen, like myself, with grey beards, who act in defiance and opposition to the spirit of the age, a spirit which is making headway not alone in Canada and the United States but in the Mother Country and in Europe. The feeling abroad is now becoming general among those men who are, at all events, outside of the centre of the circle, who feel that they are in this world for something more than to gratify their tastes, who feel that they are their brothers' keepers, and particularly if they are placed in the position of legislators, feel that they are bound to give the people the full benefit of those moral laws that the majority of the community may seek to bring into operation. I tell this Senate to-day that this continued opposition to the Canada Temperance Act and to the temperance feeling of this country is going to do more to shatter this Senate, as at present constituted, than anything that has ever come before it. (A laugh.) Hon. gentlemen may laugh.

HON. MR. McMILLAN—Hear, hear.

HON. MR. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman says "hear hear;" he could not go back to his own constituency and be elected.

HON. MR. McMILLAN—If the issue was the Scott Act I could.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The Scott Act is not making headway in Canada.

HON. MR. SCOTT—I am talking about the intelligent opinion of the age, not merely in Canada but throughout the world. Will any man who has watched the progress it has made during the last 20 years deny that the temperance sentiment is making headway? Will any one deny that it is making progress in England? A few years ago there was but a single man in the British Parliament who supported a prohibitory measure, and that man I believe is still alive. What is the case to-day? Something over 60 gentlemen in the British House of Parliament are ready at any moment to vote for a prohibitory law.

HON. MR. VIDAL—Over 300—a majority of the House.

HON. MR. SCOTT—There are over 60 temperance men, who are in favor of a prohibitory law. I do not take the vote that was given two years ago—a majority vote that was given in the House of Commons in favor of the principle—although that might be quoted as evidence. They laid down no arbitrary lines but passed a motion in favor of a prohibitory law of some kind without defining what that law should be, whether local option, or something more general. That was carried on two different occasions in the House of Commons, the last time by a very much larger vote than on the former occasion. When I spoke of sixty members, I was referring more particularly to those who were absolutely teetotalers—blue-ribbon men—who are opposed to drinking in all shapes; but there is no doubt, as my hon. friend has stated, that there is to-day a very large number, I should hope one-half of the House of Commons, favorable to temperance legislation. If there is not one-half to-day, hon. gentlemen may rest assured that there will be more than one-half before the next five years go over. Are hon. gentlemen not aware of the progress which has been made in Sweden, which has been one of the most debauched countries in the world? On one occasion recently the King and Queen approved of the movement and said they were prepared to adopt it themselves. Do hon. gentlemen not know what has been going on in Switzerland, where ten years ago there was free trade in drinking—where they thought it was monstrous to interfere with what are called the rights of individuals to drink and sell liquor as they please? And what was the effect of it? Absolute national degradation, until the people themselves were obliged to come to their own rescue and pass one of the most stringent laws to be found in any country in the world. Do we not know that the other day Bismarck, prompted partly by a desire to increase the revenue, but also with a view to have a better supervision over the general drinking usages of the country, wanted to take the whole manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors into the hands of the Government? I merely quote these facts as showing what the spirit of the age is, showing that the growing feeling in favor of temperance is not only in Canada and the United States but also in other civilized parts of the world. No one can deny that the temperance sentiment has grown immensely in Canada and is spreading constantly. Any of us who looks back twenty-five years, knows from his own experience that drunkenness is much less prevalent now than it was in those days. I can remember the time when it was not considered at all disgraceful to be seen drunk. A man under the influence of liquor was "jolly." Now a man under the influence of liquor is looked upon with feelings of pity and regret, and we say "how sad it is that he has fallen away." There is a sense of shame and sorrow attending the sight of a man who has so far degraded himself as to be under the influence of liquor. This House ought to recognize what is so apparent abroad; we ought to recognize that a Bill of this kind is not in harmony with the sentiments of the people of the country; that one of the strongest objections to the Senate, as it is at present constituted, is the fact that it is acting in open defiance of the wishes of the people of Canada. Since the foundation of the country we have always considered that laws of this kind should be given absolutely to the people in the locality—that the liquor traffic should be left to their control. In this city, for instance, the people have the right to say how many taverns there shall be, and every one who wishes to sell liquor has to get the approval of his fellowmen before the Government will issue a license to him. That is the law all over this country and has been the law, in a narrower or wider sense, for the last 30 years; yet you fly in the face of that law and say that we shall pass a Bill to empower the druggists, with the aid of the doctors, to set the Canada Temperance Act at defiance—that they shall be accountable to no one, and that the provincial and municipal revenues shall not be benefited one dollar by the traffic—that the druggists shall be permitted to sell intoxicating liquors without a license, freely to everybody. In civilized countries that have made fair progress on this question they do not permit liquors to be sold within a certain distance of a school house or college, and why? Because they know that young men are apt to be corrupted—that if they once get a taste for liquor before they reach the years of discretion they are lost. I do not need to give instances where this has been the case. The country is full of them; the graves are numerous; they are strewn all over this land; fathers, brothers, uncles, all know where they lie, and fully know the cause. In most civilized countries they will not allow liquor to be sold to a minor, yet by this Bill you say "my boy will have a right to get a prescription from a doctor and go to a druggist and drink himself to death." He may go on in that course until his life is blighted, and go down into his grave, and he will have good reason to curse the Senate of Canada as the cause of his degradation and premature death. Hon. gentlemen may think that I speak strongly on this subject; if I do it is because I feel strongly and feel that the Senate is making a great mistake. Certainly a venerable body like this should not be the first to rush against the laws of morality—the laws that are at least aimed to protect people from themselves, to elevate them in the scale of honor, rectitude and propriety. I perhaps, have spoken too strongly; if so I can only express my regret. My remarks have been a source of amusement, perhaps, to some of you; but they may be a source of grief when it is too late to know that my words were spoken in vain. I move that the Bill be not now read the third time but that it be read the third time this day six months.

HON. MR. VIDAL—It is scarcely necessary that I should repeat to the House the motives which influence me to second the motion which has just been made. The evils which would naturally and almost necessarily result from the adoption of a measure of this kind, have not, in my judgment, been at all too strongly depicted. I do not propose, however, to enter upon the subject, much as I might like to express my views upon it, and feeling it to be a most important one. I would rather confine my remarks to the simple reason which I think ought to influence the House, apart from the general temperance one, and that is its inexpediency and its being absolutely unnecessary. Now what does it propose to do? Look at the title of it. Very properly that title has been strongly objected to in this House. Why should we place on our statute book an Act with a title calculated to mislead? "An Act respecting Druggists" might very naturally be supposed to be a measure guarding carefully the lives of our people and prescribing certain rules for the preparation and sale of dangerous and poisonous medicines, as, for instance, that they shall only be prepared by persons possessed of the necessary skill and education. We might naturally expect something of this kind, but what do we find? Not one single item in the Bill pertaining to druggists and the practice of their profession, except this of selling intoxicating liquors. Now the 1st clause shows that the Bill is really directed at the Temperance Act of 1878 and nothing else. As an hon. gentleman has observed in this House, it is an underhanded attempt, under a deceptive title, to amend or, to a certain extent as we think, destroy the Canada Temperance Act of 1878. Why does it not say so in the outset? Why does it not say "An Act to enable druggists to sell alcoholic liquors?" Is it because the promoters of the Act are afraid or ashamed to use the proper term? Because that is the real and true intent of the Act and nothing else. It says that "nothing contained in any Act of the Parliament of Canada since Confederation shall be held to interfere, &c." I have already objected to the title and shown how defective it is. I will merely here make an observation as to the impropriety of the terms used. I think it is a very awkward expression to put in an Act like this, "since Confederation." It appears to me the proper way would be to put "A.D. 1867," or some definite and fixed date, and not to make it necessary to look up the statutes and find when Confederation took place. Of course I merely state that by way of criticism. Now, as to the necessity of this Bill, the hon. member from Ottawa has shown that it is wholly unnecessary. I should like to add just one more quotation from the Act of 1878, to show that it is entirely and absolutely unnecessary. For instance, the essential part of the Act is the 99th section, which provides that from the day the Act takes effect no person shall sell these liquors unless it be for exclusively sacramental or "medicinal" purposes. Now does not that cover the whole case?

HON. MR. McMILLAN—I would like to ask the hon. gentleman under what authority it is sold for such purposes—is it not under the certificate of a medical man?

HON. MR. SCOTT—Yes, but it has to be a registered certificate.

HON. MR. McMILLAN—It is only those who are licensed for that purpose who can sell it?

HON. MR. SCOTT—Under your Bill any druggist can sell it.

HON. MR. VIDAL—Does the hon. gentleman wish to enact that every druggist in the country and every druggist's apprentice shall be permitted to sell liquor.

HON. MR. McMILLAN—No.

HON. MR. VIDAL—Well, that is what this Bill means; so long as it is a bona fide prescription it makes no difference.

HON. MR. McMILLAN—There is a difference between a doctor's prescription and a certificate to sell alcoholic liquors.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I do not see the difference. Suppose a doctor prescribes eight ounces of alcohol with one drop of peppermint.

HON. MR. SCOTT—It is not necessary that it should contain the drop of peppermint.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I contend that as long as a druggist honestly and fairly complies with the requirements of the law, and conducts his business legitimately, without any attempt to violate the Canada Temperance Act, he incurs no danger at all.

HON. MR. McMILLAN—But under the Canada Temperance Act other men than druggists can be vendors of whisky.

HON. MR. VIDAL—That is still further widening it. I contend that those persons who are to have licenses ought to be such as the public can trust not to sell liquor improperly. I quite admit, with sorrow, that under the temporary operation of the McCarthy Act this was unhappily not the case—that there were officers appointed, not directly by the Government, but by the commissioners whom the Government appointed, who conceived it to be consistent with their duty and with propriety to appoint in the County of Huron, tavern-keepers as the persons to hold licenses to sell as druggists. Everywhere throughout the county the same persons who kept taverns were licensed to sell as druggists. That is the way the Act was carried out. I hold it is entirely unnecessary that a single one of these provisions should be adopted by this House in order to secure the druggists the opportunity of carrying on their business without being unnecessarily and improperly interfered with. I have already challenged, and the hon. gentleman from Ottawa has challenged the production of a single case, since the Act has come in force, in which a druggist has been charged with violating the law. If there has been any such case I have never heard of it; but if such a case has occurred and it has been brought before a court, the court has dismissed it, because there has not been a single case of conviction.

HON. MR. McMILLAN—How is it that the temperance law is not sufficiently strong to put them down? They are not tavern-keepers.

HON. MR. VIDAL—We are trying to make the Temperance Act sufficiently strong to put them down, and if you would help us to do that we would be much obliged to you. But I do contend that this Bill is unnecessary and improper legislation for us to adopt, and that the evils, which have been pointed out by the hon. member from Ottawa as the probable and necessary result of it, have not been overstated; that it is opening the door to tempt respectable druggists, who have hitherto conducted their business legitimately, to make their places common drinking resorts where people can go to their counters and drink these eight ounce prescriptions without even the obligation to take it from the place. I do not think the druggists themselves desire such a thing. The hon. gentleman alluded to the licensing of druggists under the Temperance Act, and said that the number was restricted; it is true that the number of persons authorized to sell alcohol on medical certificates, or orders, are restricted to one in each township or parish, two in each town, and, in cities, not exceeding one for every 4,000 inhabitants. Now, that is a fair and legitimate subject for discussion and amendment, and I do not hesitate to say that if, after the Act has gone fairly into operation and been tried, the hon. member is prepared to come here and show that the public convenience and rights are interfered with by this restriction, and that a larger number of licensed places are required by the public, I do not think I should resist it. Our object is not at all to cause any inconvenience or difficulty, but to protect the weak and those who are exposed to danger through the temptation and use of intoxicating beverages. So far from a limited number of persons authorized to sell under those medical certificates being an objection, I think it is a very decided advantage. But if, on actual trial, it should prove to be an inconvenience, I would not be so unreasonable as to resist an attempt to amend the Act in the direction which my hon. friend has indicated. In the meantime I think I have given sufficient reasons why I cordially second the motion.

HON. MR. FLINT—The principles which I have endeavored to carry out for nearly 59 years are such that it is morally impossible for me to support this Bill. I think that the measure is a very dangerous one and well calculated to awake suspicion, at least in the minds of many if not all the gentlemen here, that the object is to endeavor to increase drinking in our community. Now what does this Bill say? "Physicians prescriptions consisting of, or containing spirituous liquors, if sold in quantities of not more than eight ounces at any one time." We know that if any person drinks eight ounces of alcohol it will make him pretty drunk. My hon. friend from Sarnia says that the doctor might put a drop of peppermint in it, or some ipecac or jalap, but that would not prevent a party from taking it. There are many persons who would be glad to take a whole dose of jalap if they could get rum or whiskey to wash it down.

HON. MR. McMILLAN—The Scott Act allows a pint.

HON. MR. FLINT—I never voted for the Scott Act. I have often said that if I had been here I should not have voted for it because I do not support anything that has liquor in it. If it was the intention to make this a druggists Bill, the hon. gentleman ought to have described it as an Act to facilitate the drinking usages in Canada Temperance Act Counties. If he had done that I think he would have given us to understand exactly what he meant by this Bill. I am very much surprised that the hon. gentleman who is a physician and one who no doubt stands pretty high in his profession (I know nothing about that but I trust he does) should think proper to introduce a bill of this kind. I have no doubt that it will carry, but that is no evidence that it is wise or proper. I think he is legislating in a wrong direction. I should like to see the Bill thrown out, but I have no hopes that it will be. There has been so much said heretofore in favor of light wines, beer, and cider that I am quite convinced a majority of the members of the Senate do not share my views on the subject. I expect the Bill will pass here, but I do trust that in another place it will be thrown out.

The Senate divided on the amendment which was rejected by the following vote :

HON. MR. POWER—I wish to call the attention of the Postmaster General, who was not in his place a few minutes ago, to the necessity of making a change in the title of the Bill. It is now "An Act relating to Druggists." That does not give any idea of the character of the measure. The sole object of the Bill is to authorize the sale of alcohol in various forms and under various circumstances by druggists. I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that the proper title of the Bill is "An Act relating to the sale of Alcohol by Druggists."

HON. MR. KAULBACH—No, no, it is not.

HON. MR. POWER—My hon. friend is not in the Ministry yet and is not responsible for the title of any Bill which we may pass, but the leader of the House has responsibility for the propriety and appearance of our legislation, and I submit that we should not send this Bill down with such a title as this. It might as well be an act relating to the public at large.

HON. MR. DICKEY—It can be amended in another place.

HON. MR. POWER—It is better to send it down in the proper shape.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I do not think it is for the leader of the House to set himself in opposition to the majority. The House has read the Bill the 1st and 2nd time; if the hon. gentleman had drawn attention to the title of the Bill at an earlier stage perhaps it could have been altered.

HON. MR. POWER—I did call attention to it.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—There is no objection to the other House altering the title of the Bill, if they see fit to do so.

HON. MR. SCOTT—I shall not make any further observation, but I will ask the House to exclude from the operation of this Bill all those counties in which the Canada Temperance Act is now or shall hereafter be in force. The people having already voted, or who may hereafter vote, that liquor shall not be sold in the counties where they live except under certain restrictions, are entitled, I think, to the protection of the Temperance Act. This is a democratic country—a country which is governed by the people, and the people have a right to say what laws shall or shall not be in operation. It ill becomes this House to say that those counties that have already adopted the Temperance Act on the faith of this Parliament shall have that law openly violated through the connivance of the Senate of Canada. I therefore move that the Bill be not read the third time, but that it be referred back to a committee of the whole House, with instructions to provide that it shall have no force or effect in those counties that have adopted the Canada Temperance Act.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I wish to point out that this motion which my hon. friend has just made is entirely contradictory to the title of the Bill as adopted by the House. It is perfectly inconsistent with it. It has been treated so throughout this discussion. That part of it was very strongly impressed on the House by the hon. member from Sarnia, and it was perfectly understood that this Act, so to speak, put all counties, and any county that had adopted the Canada Temperance Act, under any legislation of the Parliament of Canada. Therefore, it is an entire contradiction to the vote which has just been given to adopt this amendment. The Scott Act is referred to in the very first clause of the Bill: and if it is intended that this Bill shall not have that effect, it is very like the play of Hamlet with Hamlet left out.

The House divided on the amendment, which was declared lost on the following division:—

HON. MR. POWER moved that the bill be not now read the third time but that the title be amended by inserting the words "sale of alcohol" before the word "druggists."

The amendment was declared lost on the same division.

THE SPEAKER—The question is now on the main motion for the third reading of the bill.

HON. MR. DEVER—Before the bill is read the third time I desire to say a word or two. When this bill was in committee I took exception to it because I thought it was not quite in accordance with the legislation that we should adopt in this House; but since then the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill has made such alterations in it as to reconcile me to it to some extent.

HON. MR. POWER—What are they?

HON. MR. DEVER—In clause two I find that physicians prescriptions containing spirituous liquors to the extent of eight ounces are allowed to be sold, and I thought it was not right to give an opportunity to prescribe eight ounces of alcohol, which is equivalent to 16 ounces of whiskey, in one prescription. After consideration, I think it is not too large a quantity for a physician to prescribe in certain cases. Eight ounces of alcohol would be a large dose, but there are cases where physicians have to prescribe linaments for sprains and other outward applications, and under such circumstances I feel that a bottle of alcohol containing eight ounces would not be a very large prescription. Therefore I have no objection to the passage of the second section. I have, however, a very serious objection to the adoption of the third section. In my opinion that section opens the door for druggists or chemists, or rather for assumed druggists or chemists, to introduce into this country the sale of liquor under the guise of the patent medicine or medicated alcohol. We see complaints in the public press that throughout the North-West and other portions of this country it is a common practice for traders with wagons to go about the country disposing of liquor under the guise of patent medicines. This is a condition of things we ought not to countenance if we know it, and, under the circumstances, I propose that this Bill should be amended so that patent medicines shall be permitted for sale only where they cannot be converted into beverages. The honest patent medicine I have no objection to, but I have great objection to a patent medicine which is merely medicated alcohol, which is a fraud on the excise laws of this country and deprives the country of revenue to a large amount, because we find under the head of patent medicines that it is imported into this country under a 50% ad valorem duty, whereas the ordinary liquor pays a duty of $1.90 per gallon. Under those circumstances, I do not propose to permit this Bill to pass without making an effort to compel those parties to sell only honest patent medicines, not alcohol under the guise of sweetened or flavored essences.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I rise to a question of order. I am very reluctant to interfere with my hon. friend, but really he is not discussing the question before the House. The question is on the amendment to the title of the Bill.

HON. MR. DEVER—My hon. friend is mistaken: that has already been disposed of, and I hope the hon. gentleman will not again interrupt me. I try as far as possible to keep within the rules of the House.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, I was under a wrong impression.

HON. MR. DEVER—I hope that every hon. gentleman who is disposed to act fairly and respect the law of the country will vote for my amendment. I move that the bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to committee of the whole with instructions to strike out all the words after "any patent medicine" in subsection 3 and insert the following "not capable of being used as a beverage."

HON. MR. McMILLAN—I would be willing to accept the amendment, but I will substitute these words if my hon. friend would be willing to accept them. That all the words after "medicine" be struck out in the first line, and the words "if sold for medicinal purposes only," substituted. If my hon. friend would be satisfied with that I have no objection to the amendment.

THE SPEAKER—If the motion of the hon. gentlemen from St. John is withdrawn the other can be substituted and handed in in writing.

HON. MR. DEVER—I prefer to have the vote on my own amendment and let it go to the country.

The House divided on the amendment, which was adopted on the following division:—

HON. MR. SCOTT—Oh no!

HON. MR. McMILLAN—This amendment will do away with the spirit of the Bill entirely. I wish to substitute other words.

HON. MR. SCOTT—You have no option to change it here. The committee must obey the order of the House.

THE SPEAKER—The Bill has been referred back for a certain purpose, and no other amendment can be made.

HON. MR. BOYD, from the Committee, reported the bill as amended.

The amendment was concurred in, and the bill was then read the third time and passed on a division.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (32) "An Act to incorporate a community of religious ladies under the name of 'The Sisters, Faithful Companions of Jesus.'" (Mr. Girard.)

Bill (53) "An Act to incorporate the Calvin Company, limited." (Mr. Flint.)

Bill (54) "An Act to incorporate the Medicine Hat Railway and Coal Company." (Mr. Allan.)

Bill (60) "An Act to incorporate the Continental Bank of Canada." (Mr. McKay.)

THE SENATE

Ottawa, Thursday, April 8th, 1886.

THE SPEAKER took the Chair at 3 p. m.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THE SANITARY CONDITION OF THE SENATE CHAMBER.

MOTION.

Mr. POWER moved :—

The appointment of a Committee on the Sanitary condition of the Chamber and its surroundings, such Committee to be composed of the hon. Messrs. Scott, Botsford, Allan, Pâquet, de Boucherville, Robitaille, Almon, T. R. McInnes, McKindsey, Sullivan and the mover.

The motion was agreed to.

THE BIRRELL DIVORCE BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB presented the certificate of the Clerk that notice had been properly posted.

The certificate was read at the table.

HON. MR. PLUMB presented a notice to the Speaker of the Senate, signed by Counsel for the Respondent, that the Respondent was present.

The notice was read at the table.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that the Respondent, William Henry Birrell, be now called to the bar of the House and be examined as to his identity as the Respondent.

The motion was agreed to.

THE SPEAKER—Let the Respondent come to the Bar of the House to be examined.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I would like to ask if this does not come within the amendment to Rule 73, by which declaration is substituted for oath ?

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—They are going to prove it by the party himself, upon whom the notice was served.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that the following question be put to the witness :—
“Are you the Wm. Henry Birrell named in the Bill now before the Senate, entitled “An Act for the Relief of Flora Birrell ?”

The motion was agreed to.

THE SPEAKER—Let the question be put to the witness.

WITNESS—I am the Wm. Henry Birrell named in the said Bill.

HON. MR. PLUMB—If there are no further questions to be put to the witness by the hon. members, I move that he be allowed to withdraw.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Have you proved service of the notice and Bill ?

HON. MR. PLUMB—He is here.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—He has not only to be here, but proof is to be given that copies of the notice and the Bill have been duly served upon him, and when.

THE SPEAKER—I do not think it is strictly necessary ; he has appeared.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—There is another question, whether the notice served upon him is a copy of the notice which has been affixed to the door of the Senate, and whether that notice and the copy of the bill served upon him were received by him 14 days ago. The fact of his coming here does not prove that he received them in proper season, 14 days ago, and there should be some proof that he had these papers within the time that the rule requires.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I move that the following question be now put to the witness :—

“Have you been served with a copy of the bill now before the Senate and with the Clerk’s notice respecting the second reading of the said bill, and when ?”

The motion was agreed to.

WITNESS—I was served with such bill and notice on the 13th of March, 1886, and I now produce the same.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I move that the witness have leave to withdraw.

The motion was agreed to and the witness retired.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Although it is usual to require that the Petitioner be in attendance below the bar, her counsel is present, and will, if called upon, show the House that she is on her way from a southern clime. She is in delicate health, and has been spending the winter in the south, and she has been detained and cannot reach here until Saturday. As the examination of the Petitioner at the bar has always, under the customs of the House, been waived, and referred to a committee, I hope that the hon. members will consent, the service on the Respondent having been proved, to dispense with her appearance at the Bar as she will be here in time to attend on the committee. I trust that this case is one in which there will be no defence, the respondent having contracted a second marriage in the United States, and being a resident of the United States with the wife that he has married there. No one in the Senate is more desirous to have the rules which govern cases of this kind more rigidly enforced than I am. We shall see probably in the course of this trial that the abuse of the privileges and rules of the divorce courts in the United States lead to cases exactly of the kind now before us. The counsel for the Petitioner, the ex-Deputy Minister of Justice, is here, and if necessary will state to the House the circumstances which have prevented the attendance of the petitioner. I observe that the rule which requires that attendance also provides that under circumstances which justify a remission of the rule the attendance may be dispensed with, otherwise I certainly would not think of asking the House to dispense with it in this case. I therefore move:

That the examination of the said Petitioner at the bar be dispensed with, but that it be an instruction to any Select Committee to whom the said Bill may be referred, to examine the said Flora Birrell generally, and also as to any collusion or connivance between the parties to obtain a separation.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I do not think that that motion is sufficient;

HON. MR. PLUMB.

it proposes to dispense with the examination of the Petitioner at the bar, but that is not the only thing which the rule requires: it requires the appearance of the Petitioner. It seems to me also that something ought to be noted on the Minutes of the House of the reason for asking that the attendance of the petitioner be dispensed with. We should not waive this rule without cause, and the cause should appear on the record.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I hope that all decisions in this matter shall be entered on the record as being carried on a division.

The motion was agreed to on a division.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that Bill (1) "An Act for the relief of Flora Birrell" be now read the second time.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I would suggest that the notice served on the respondent should be read. The witness admitted receipt of the notice, but whether that notice complies with the rule of the House is a fact with which the House is not vested.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—The notice was described in the question put to the witness and in his answer to that question.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—But we should ascertain whether that notice is sufficient of itself.

HON. MR. PLUMB—It is the notice of the Clerk of the Senate.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—That may be, and the Clerk of the Senate may have issued a notice not in accordance with the rule of the House.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—The notice was produced and laid on the table, and it is here for the hon. gentleman to see.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The notice that was served was brought back here and handed in by the witness, and it is in the ordinary form.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—The notice should have been read to the House in order to satisfy members that it is in conformity with the rule.

THE SPEAKER—I consider the notice has been sufficiently identified. The witness said that he had received the notice from the Clerk, and he sent it up to the table after giving his answer.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—My contention is that we do not know what that notice is. We should know that the Clerk has conformed to the rules of the House.

The notice was then read by the Clerk at the table, and it is as follows :—

I, Edouard Joseph Langevin, Clerk of the Senate of Canada, hereby certify that Notice of the day fixed by the Order of the Senate, made on Wednesday, the twenty-fourth day of March, 1886, for the Second Reading of the Bill intituled: "An Act for the relief of Flora Birrell," was, pursuant to the Standing Order of the Senate, in that behalf, affixed upon the doors of the Senate throughout a period of fourteen days after the date of the First Reading of the said Bill, and between the said twenty-fourth day of March, A.D. 1886, and the eighth day of April, A.D. 1886, Given under my hand, at the Senate Chamber, in the City of Ottawa, in the Province of Ontario, in the Dominion of Canada, this eighth day of April, in the year of Our Lord One thousand eight hundred and eighty-six.

EDOUARD J. LANGEVIN,
Clerk of the Senate.

The Bill was read the second time on a division.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved :

"That the said Bill be referred to a Select Committee composed of the Hon. Messrs. Dickey, Nelson, McKindsey, Flint, Turner, Vidal, Clemow, Read, and the mover, to report thereon with all convenient speed, with power to send for persons, papers and records, and examine witnesses on oath, and that the exemplification of the proceedings to final judgement in the Superior Court of Detroit in Chancery, and the further proceedings presented to the Senate on the Petition of the said Flora Birrell, be referred to the said Committee, and that all persons summoned to appear before the Senate in this matter appear before the said Committee."

He said—I think it was my duty to have reported these names to the Speaker and I apologize to him for not having done so.

THE SPEAKER—The rule is not to that effect. I think the last rule we had on that point was that the leader of the House, who was then Minister of Justice, should be consulted.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Then I apologize to both.

THE SPEAKER—I remarked to the House that there were reasons, holding the views that I did on the question, why I should not be called upon to supervise these Committees, and I think it was then understood that the Minister of Justice, who was then leader of the Senate, should exercise that supervision.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I agree with what has been said, that it was supposed that the matter should be referred to the leader of the House, he being at that time Minister of Justice and a lawyer, and not to the Speaker, who, for the reasons he has given, desired to be relieved from that duty. I am very glad that I have not been named a member of this Committee. I hope that it is not packed for the purpose of getting the bill of divorce through, but I understand that generally in these cases those members of the Senate who are lawyers were appointed members of a divorce committee. Personally I am glad to be relieved of the duty, but I think it is a bad precedent to establish, apart from that rule.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—The circumstances of this case seem to call for some explanation. The Respondent at the bar of this House, as we are informed by the hon. member who has charge of this Bill, has already married and he is therefore guilty of a great crime. I wish to bring that fact before the notice of the leader of this House. The Respondent appears as a bigamist; he admits that he is married to another woman besides the petitioner in this case. I merely submit whether under these circumstances he should be allowed to be at large?

HON. MR. PLUMB—I would inform my hon. friend that the divorce in this case is one of those cheap and easy divorces which are obtained in the State of Michigan. It is not a valid divorce in Canada, and of course under our laws he has not been married a second time. The marriage took place in the United States, and it is a matter for the lawyers to decide whether he is guilty of bigamy or not. As I have not the honor of being a member of the legal profession, I leave it for the lawyers to settle the question amongst themselves.

The motion was agreed to on a division.

NORTHUMBERLAND STRAITS TUNNEL RAILWAY COM- PANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. HOWLAN moved the second reading of Bill (K), "An Act to incorporate the Northumberland Straits Railway Company. He said—This is a Bill to construct a tunnel between Cape Traverse and Cape Tormentine. The Company is to have a capital of $5,000,000 in shares of $100 each. The Bill gives powers to amalgamate with other lines of railway either in Prince Edward Island or New Brunswick and to build branch lines. The other conditions of the Bill are the usual and necessary conditions with regard to issuing stock, and fixing the time for the beginning and completion of the work. Since I had the honor of addressing the House last year on this subject we have gathered a good deal of information regarding the construction of this sub-way and I know that a great many hon. gentlemen here think it is a matter of very novel construction, but if we look back at the history of novelties since the commencement of this century, we will find that a great many opinions on matters, that are now beyond any question of consideration, have settled themselves. For instance, on the introduction of railways in England, in 1819, a writer in the British Quarterly Review stated:—

"We cannot but laugh at an idea so impracticable as that of a road of iron upon which travel may be conducted by steam. Can anything be more utterly absurd and laughable than a steam wagon propelled and moving twice as fast as our mail coaches."

HON. MR. PLUMB.

So again with regard to the introduction of gas. Many anecdotes are told about William Murdock, in connection with his discovery, towards the close of the last century, of combustible air or gas. An English paper says:—

"So little was the invention understood and believed in by those who had not seen its use, that even great and wise men laughed at the idea. 'How could there be light without a wick?' said a member of Parliament, when the subject was brought before the House. Sir Humphrey Davy ridiculed the idea of lighting towns by gas, and asked one of the proprietors if he meant to take the dome of St. Paul's for a gas metre. Sir Walter Scott made himself very merry over the idea of illuminating London by smoke, though he was glad enough, not so long after, to make his own house at Abbotsford light and cheerful on wintry nights by the use of that very smoke. When the House of Commons was lighted by gas the architect imagined that the gas ran on fire through the pipes, and therefore insisted on their being placed several inches from the wall for fear of the building taking fire. The members might be observed carefully touching the pipe with their gloved hands, and wondering why they did not feel warm. The first shop lighted in London by this new method was Mr. Ackerman's, in the Strand, in 1810; and one lady of rank was so delighted with the brilliancy of the gas lamp on the counter that she asked to be allowed to take it home in her carriage."

More recently the building of the Suez Canal was looked upon as a matter that certainly was not necessary to the age, and was scouted by the very best economists in England, and on the Continent; but we find now more than 25,000 tons of shipping pass through that canal daily, and frequently one or two days elapse before a steamer can get an opportunity of passing through. But in the matter of progress in that way perhaps nothing is more wonderful than our railway system. At the time of Confederation, nineteen years ago, there was about 2,000 miles of railway in the Dominion; now we have some 10,000 miles of railway, and so it is with a great many other matters. Last year when I introduced this project to the House as a novel matter I had not consulted many able engineers on the subject. I have since done so and I shall trouble the House with a statement of their opinions as I proceed further. Since I last addressed the House on the subject we have surveyed four lines between Cape Tormentine and Cape Traverse and ascertained the character of the bottom, a sample of which I have here on my desk. After we take off some six feet of sand and mud we come to some 60 feet of brick clay: nothing better could be found in which to lay a tunnel of this nature. In surveying those lines we took soundings every 50 feet so that we very accurately ascertained the state of the bottom, and we found rock at only one sounding, so that we have at the bottom everything necessary for laying the tunnel. We found the depths of water vary from one to thirteen fathoms. For about two miles of the way the water is over ten fathoms, and where the two tides come together, as they do in the Straits from the East and the West twice a day, the silt which has fallen from the water has made a regular plateau under the Straits, bearing about the same comparison to a level surface as the desk I am now standing at does to the floor. Nature has therefore already done a very great deal for us. We also found that the distance across was not so great as had been anticipated—that it was only seven nautical miles from shore to shore. I have prepared a working plan which shows that the distance between the piers on the both sides is about five miles. Last year the estimated cost of the work was about $3,000,000, but when I placed this project before engineers, the idea of our continuing or making wooden piers on either side did not meet with their approval. They thought in a great and substantial work like this the piers should be of iron, and consequently it will cost more than was at first estimated. One of the great questions which seemed to agitate the minds of many hon. gentlemen, and very properly so, was with regard to the ice. They feared that icebergs would come down through the Straits and sometimes ground, and if they grounded over the pipe they would entirely destroy the work. It was certainly a very important matter, and I have investigated it so as to be in a position to show the House that with regard to the ice there are no difficulties in the way. In the first place the Strait of Northumberland is about 150 miles south of the iceberg current. The iceberg current comes down the St. Lawrence between Anticosti and St. Paul, and is met by the Strait of Belleisle current and the united currents flow around the cape north of Cape Breton: therefore no icebergs can be carried through the Strait of Northumberland. I have here a chart which shows clearly and distinctly where the ice currents are. It is clear therefore that no ice will be encountered in that way, but if ice could be carried to the Strait of Northumberland the first shallow water it would encounter is at a distance of 25 or 30 miles from north of Cape Traverse. From Summerside to Shediac there is a depth of three to six fathoms of water less than where we propose to put this tunnel through. But so as to set the matter at rest I made further investigations, and found that the Dominion Government had sent in 1879 a commissioner, in the person of Henry F. McLeod, to examine and report upon the building of the piers, and to gather all the information he could with regard to the crossing of the Strait of Northumberland, so as to place the Government in a position to arrive at an intelligent opinion with regard to this question of winter crossing. Mr. McLeod was given some 36 questions to which he was to get answers from persons living in the vicinity of the Strait. Amongst those questions are two, the 22nd and 23rd, that have some immediate bearing on the subject now under the consideration of the House. The 22nd question was, "What is the usual thickness of ice in Straits?" and the 23rd was "Have you ever known it to ground in mid-channel?" The first one examined was Thomas Allen, 56 years old, who had had experience in the winter crossing all his life; was contractor for the English mails at one time, and had crossed as a hand in the ice-boats; for the last twenty years had been employed in aiding the ice-boats, etc. In reply to question 22 he says that the thickness of the ice in the straits is "from two to twenty feet," and in reply to question 23, "have never seen it ground in mid-channel." The next evidence is from Smith McGlashing and David Mills, the former of whom had crossed for fifteen and the latter for nine years. In reply to the 22nd question McGlashing says, "Field ice from two to three feet," Then we have the evidence of Arthur Irving and Lewis Muttart, both of whom have had long experience in crossing the straits in winter. To question 22 both reply, "From one foot to twenty feet," and to question 23, "Never." Phillips F. Irving, with fifty years' experience of crossing the straits, says the ice is "from two to twenty feet thick," and in reply to question 23 says "No."

I think, therefore, that the matter is entirely set at rest. But to prevent injury to the tunnel from ice in any possible way, we propose to sink the tunnel in mid channel to such a depth as will afford ample protection, and there is no difficulty in doing so. I may say with regard to the height of the waves in the Strait it is not more than 20 feet. Therefore, when we sink this tube, as we propose to do, to at least 36 feet below high water, there will be no difficulty from either waves or ice. Another question which seemed to agitate the minds of hon. gentlemen last year was with regard to the ventilation. Some hon. members thought the tunnel would fill up with smoke, and as a consequence very unpleasant results would arise therefrom. That difficulty can be very easily met. I took the trouble to go and see a locomotive which consumes its own smoke, and is thus described in the American Mail of November 1885.

The Brook smoke-consuming locomotive, America, now being tried on the Boston and Albany Railroad, weighs forty-three tons, and is an odd-looking machine, with the smoke stack immediately in front of the cab. The flues go forward from the fire-box in the usual way, and then doubling upon themselves return to the smoke-stack. The heating surface is thus practically doubled, and twelve of the return tubes being above the water line and larger than the lower tubes, the steam is to a great degree superheated. The gases and cinders in their long course from fire-box to smoke-stack are consumed. The inventor claims that the saving of fuel is at least 15 per cent. Thus far, the America has seemed to answer all reasonable requirements, and a machine of that nature is evidently the machine of the future.

The question with regard to smoke in the tunnel can therefore be very easily disposed of. But to show that no difficulty is likely to arise with respect to smoke, it is proposed to put in two automatic steam pumps, working one at each end; those are very like spring clocks. As soon as the indicator shows that there is impurity, they go to work and pump out the impure air, so that no difficulty can arise in the direction of ventilation. No doubt my proposition last year took very many gentlemen by surprise, but when I tell them that the same proposition, with a very little alteration, is proposed in the Iron Age to cross from Dover to Cape Grisnez in France, 23¼ miles, the only difference being in the thickness of the shell, and that this has met with the approval of very eminent engineers in England, they will be no longer surprised. At the present time there is being built across the Mersey a sub-way. It will no doubt be in the memory of hon. gentlemen that very recently the Prince of Wales opened a tunnel under the Mersey, and it is proposed at the present time to construct a subway also. The following article in the Liverpool Daily Post of February 14 will be interesting as showing the influence which the building of this tunnel has had on the steam ferry between Birkenhead and Liverpool. The article is as follows :

The Mersey Railway Company have cause to be satisfied with the great success which so far has rewarded their labors. So far an average of more than 30,000 persons have travelled by the tunnel each day. Of course, it is not to be expected that this high figure will be maintained fully all the year around, inasmuch as many persons have been impelled by curiosity to cross the river by the tunnel. Still, there will probably be no very great diminution of the passenger traffic. If the number of 30,000 is maintained through all the year the company will carry in the twelve months nearly twelve millions of passengers. They may fairly hope to enjoy an annual passenger traffic of 9,000,000. Now the returns of the first two days suggest a curious calculation. The Birkenhead Ferry carries in the year about 12,000,000 persons, or an average of a little over 30,000 a day. But it was stated at the Birkenhead Council meeting yesterday, that the takings at the ferry on the day the tunnel was opened were only £12 less than on the corresponding Monday last year. Consequently, of the 36,000 persons who crossed by the tunnel only 3,800 were attracted from the ferry. This shows as far as the experience of one day, and that the opening day, can, that the promoters were right in anticipating the development of a very large new traffic. It is stated that residents in houses in Oxtou, who formerly occupied fifty minutes in getting from their homes to the Exchange, can now cover the distance in little more than twenty minutes. Under these circumstances, many men of business who formerly dined in town, will go home to their dinners; and from this cause and many others which may be imagined, a large development of traffic will take place. All that is now required to complete the facilities for communication between Liverpool and Birkenhead is the prosecution of the subway scheme which is at present before Parliament. Then it will be possible for one to drive straight from Birkenhead to places of amusement and social engagements in Liverpool, and opportunity will be afforded for the extension of that smaller horse traffic for which railways are not entirely suited. The excellent prospects of the tunnel will doubtless encourage the promoters of the subway to persevere in their enterprise.

So that the matter has taken a very tangible shape in other places. Another thing which has occurred to hon. gentlemen has been with regard to the weight of the water and the contraction of the tunnel. I may say that the tunnel is capable of sustaining a pressure of 4,000 tons to the lineal foot or 40,000 tons to the ten feet, and that engineers qualified to give opinions on the subject say that it is more than sufficient for the water which we have in the straits and which I shall describe presently. The tube is made of chilled white iron which is anti-corrosive. The same kind of metal has been used in a similar work in New South Wales, and after a thirteen years' use there has proved to be anti-corrosive, the only appearance of injury to the metal being a sort of hard grease which arises from the action of the sea-water, so that the difficulty would be overcome. With regard to the shrinkage of iron endways, they found that the shrinkage of the metal would be about .008 per cent. and of the concrete .009 per cent. It is proposed to put concrete inside of the tunnel to the depth of two feet eight inches in the bottom and one foot all around. To make the metal and the concrete come together it was necessary to put in strips so as to equalize the shrinkage. The reason why I propose to put two feet eight inches of concrete in the bottom instead of a greater depth is this: the bridge across the Seine in Paris is at the apex but two feet eight inches in thickness and yet it carries all the traffic. I thought that was sufficient, and on consulting eminent engineers I found them to be of the same opinion. The shell is to be two inches thick, the flanges four and a-half, and the shrinkage strips six inches thick. The difference in the temperature of the water makes it necessary that we should have the weight of water on the tube established beyond a doubt. The difference in temperature forty feet below the surface is very little. The water at that depth is never as low as thirty-two degrees Fahrenheit, because it does not freeze, and probably is never below 39, because that is the point of the greatest density beyond which it would not sink to the bottom. Experiments made by the United States Fishery Commission steamer Speedwell, under the direction of Professor Spencer F. Baird, in Halifax Harbor show that water at from 40 to 50 feet below the surface is about 35 degrees the year around. It is known from similar examination made in lake Superior that the same state of affairs exist there. It is therefore fair to assume that in the Gulf of St. Lawrence the temperature of the water is sufficiently uniform to require no special precautions to be taken. Mechanical engineers and others who have paid much attention to the facts relating to the bearing of temperature on iron structures say that the expansion and contraction caused by change of temperature is less on short sections than it is on long sections—for instance there would be less contraction and expansion in a ten foot section than there would be in a hundred feet section, and as we propose to make this subway in ten feet sections there will be little difficulty on that account. I will now read letters from eminent engineers with regard to the construction of this work, obtained by me since I had the honor to address the House on this subject last year. The first one of whom I addressed was Mr. Light, chief engineer for the province of Quebec. He says:—

QUEBEC, May 15th, 1885.

HON. G. W. HOWLAN,

DEAR SIR,

In reply to your letter asking my opinion of your scheme for a sub-way under the Northumberland Straits, between Prince Edwards Island and New Brunswick, as explained in the pamphlet you kindly sent me, I beg to say, that I have read the same with much pleasure, and that from the examination of the Profile and Model, I see nothing that is very difficult or impracticable in carrying out the scheme. I think if once unwatered and completed its working or maintenance afterwards, will probably be attended with very trifling expense.

There may be difficulties about the ice, or danger from the anchorage of vessels, that I am not prepared to give an opinion upon, but presume that on these points, you have already obtained the information and are satisfied about the risk.

I have not gone into the estimates, and can give no opinion as to their sufficiency, the few details given, are no doubt correct as far as they go, but you require very much more information as to the depths of water, the form of the bottom, and the material that will have to be removed, before any satisfactory working estimate can be made. Dredging will have to be resorted to before the Tube can be placed into position, and I see no reference as to the cost of this, probably because without special surveys and soundings any deductions from the Bayfield Charts, must be mere guess work. After these surveys have been made, I shall be happy to go into the estimates, but without them I should be unwilling to commit myself to an opinion as to the cost of the work.

I am, dear sir,

Yours very faithfully,

A. L. LIGHT.

I then wrote to Mr. Walter Shanly and asked his opinion, to which he replied:—
OTTAWA, 18th July, 1885.

HON. GEORGE HOWLAN,
The Senate.

DEAR SIR,

I have examined Mr. Vernon Smith's plans for the carrying out of your proposed sub-way between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. Of course, without complete soundings, giving an accurate outline of the ground (sea bottom) on which the tubular roadway would rest, and without equally correct knowledge of the material of which it is composed, it would not be possible to arrive at more than a problematical estimate of the cost of the undertaking, and Mr. Smith does not claim that the figures he has so far presented are others than a possible approximation to what the actual cost may prove to be, or what his estimate of cost may prove to be, when he is in possession of all the requisite and indispensable information on which to base his calculations. As for my own views all that I can now say is that I fail to detect any apparent reason why your idea should not come to be classed among the feasible projects of the engineering world.

Yours very truly,

W. SHANLY.

After the surveys that I had reference to had been made, I took the reports of those surveys with all the information I had gathered together, and submitted them to Mr. Shanly, and also to the leader of the Government of Prince Edward Island, and I will read the correspondence which passed between those two gentlemen on this question:

Montreal, January 29th, 1886.

To Walter Shanly, Esq., C.E., M.P.

Sir,—Referring to my interview of this morning with yourself, Mr. Hall, C.E., Prof. Bull and Senator Howlan, may I ask you to inform me whether, in your opinion, the construction of a subaqueous railway across the Straits of Northumberland in the vicinity of Capes Traverse and Tormentine, is feasible and practicable. If so, within what time could such a work be completed, and what would be the probable cost of the same.

Yours, etc.,

W. W. SULLIVAN.

Montreal, January 30th, 1886.

Hon. W. W. Sullivan.

Sir,—Replying to the questions contained in your letter of yesterday touching the construction of a subway under the Straits of Northumberland between Prince Edward and the mainland—

1. Whether the construction of such a subway is feasible.
2. Within what time could be constructed.
3. Probable cost.

I consider the construction of such an undertaking on the very ingenious plan proposed by Mr. H. H. Hall, of New York, to be entirely practicable and that the work might be completed within three years from the time of actual commencement.

As to cost, I have not myself visited the locality, but have carefully examined the plans and soundings exhibited to me by Mr. Hall. I have given a good deal of valuable information, but more will be required, that is to say, further surveys and bearings are necessary before an accurate estimate of the cost of the work could be arrived at. My opinion is that it should fall within five millions.

(Signed) WALTER SHANLY.

I afterwards submitted the question to the editor of the Engineering and Mining Journal of the United States, who is looked upon as a great expert in these matters, and he wrote me as follows, enclosing an article published in his periodical:—

EDITORIAL ROOMS OF THE ENGINEERING AND MINING JOURNAL.

NEW YORK, 17th March, 1886.

Geo. W. Howlan, Esq.,

Senator, Dom. of Canada.

DEAR SIR,—Your letter of 11th February has just been handed me, in answer I can only repeat what I already wrote upon the subject. My remarks upon Mr. H. H. Hall's ingenious tunneling advice are confined to the engineering part and have nothing to do with the patents, which I have never examined nor am I an expert in patent law. So far as relates to this method of laying submarine tubes it appears to me to be very ingenious and well adapted to many cases where the ordinary methods are expensive or totally inapplicable. With ordinary care in construction there should be no great practical difficulty or danger in executing the work of laying a tube of almost any dimensions in this way; and usually the cost of doing the work should be less than tunneling in heavy ground. I have had some experience in sinking a shaft by the use of hydraulic jacks pushing down a sinking frame corresponding to Mr. Hall's caisson, from the permanent lining corresponding to the tube, and from this experience I conclude that Mr. Hall's method when managed with intelligence and knowledge of shaft sinking and tunneling presents the elements of practical success. I have recently expressed the same opinions in a paper I read in the American Institute of mining engineers a copy of which I enclose.

Yours truly, R. P. ROTHWELL.

"A NEW METHOD OF LAYING SUBMARINE TUNNELS AND TUBES, BY RICHARD P. ROTHWELL.

"The device to which I desire to call the attention of the members of the Institute consists of a water-tight caisson, which is connected by a stuffing box with the tube to be laid, and the caisson is pushed forward with hydraulic jacks set against the end of the tube. The tube is of hard white iron, cast in chills in segments. These segments are carried from shore through the tube itself, in which a track is laid as the work progresses, and the segments are bolted together in the caisson, where there is ample room to work and proper appliances for handling heavy weights. As each segment is bolted on, the jacks are set against its forward end, and when the whole ring is complete, the caisson is pushed forward by the jacks, a trench having been dredged out in front of it, or, in very loose ground, jets of water under a very heavy pressure can be thrown out to loosen the ground in front of the caisson. The direction in which the caisson is pushed is completely under control, and both the caisson and the tube are loaded to the amount necessary to overcome their buoyancy.

"I understand that negotiations are now under way for the construction of a 16-foot tunnel of this kind across the Straits of Northumberland, between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, and for tunnels in several other places. One of the most interesting uses of this system is in laying water mains out into lakes. The work can be carried on without interruption from storms, etc.; and when the desired distance has been reached, the caisson can be converted into a filter, which can be easily cleaned from time to time.

The accompanying illustrations show the general design of the novel and ingenious method of laying tubes, both for railroad and water-work purposes. Full particulars and estimates are furnished by the patentee, Mr. H. H. Hall, No. 95 Liberty street, New York; but without entering into these details, which necessarily vary with the local conditions, it is evident that a tunnel of this kind could in most cases be laid at a small part of the cost of an ordinary tunnel. The iron segments may be cast at the furnace, and would therefore cost little more than pig-iron, and the operation of putting the segments together is simple and inexpensive. The tube would generally be lined with a concrete or béton lining, which would help to load it and would protect the iron from the effect of corroding gases. White cast iron is very slightly acted upon by sea-water.

My own professional interest in this improvement was first engaged by the fact that I had devised a somewhat similar contrivance for sinking a shaft in Pennsylvania about fifteen years ago. I used a solid sinking-frame of 12-inch timbers, with a bevel iron shoe on the bottom, and into this sinking-frame a number of hydraulic jacks were let, so that when the ram was down the head of the jack rose only a little above the top of the frame. The sinking frame was pushed down, as the gravel and clay were removed, by jacking from the permanent lining of the shaft, which was also composed of 12-inch timbers. Heavy plate iron bolted to the outside of the sinking-frame lapped over at least two timbers of the permanent lining, and being pressed tightly against these, prevented the gravel, sand, etc., from entering the shaft between the sinking frame and the shaft-lining.

This method of sinking was found extremely inconvenient, and the movement of the sinking-frame was under perfect control, and the parties who used it found no drawback to it, though the frame was 75 feet long over all and 12 or 13 feet wide, the shaft being intended to have four hoistways, a pumpway, and a manway. When the sinking-frame had been pushed a sufficient distance down from the permanent lining, the jacks were lowered a few at a time, and an additional timber of the lining was slipped in and formed a new base from which to push with the jacks.

From the experience in that case, as well as from the simplicity of the problem, it appears to me possible to apply this new method of tunnel-laying without serious difficulty, and with great economy where the local conditions are favorable. And there are many cases where the question of grade, the nature of the bottom, and other conditions render the construction of a tunnel in the ordinary way impracticable or enormously expensive. This new system offers such striking advantages in such cases, as well as for laying water-pipes out into lakes, that it cannot fail to interest engineers, and in that expectation I have brought it before the Institute at this time."

I next submitted the matter to a gentleman who at one time was the chief engineer of the United States army, Mr. McAlpin, who is now, and has been for some time past, chief engineer of the State of New York. He is member of the Institute of Engineers of England and holds the "Telford" medal. He writes:—

CITY OF NEW YORK, HARLEM RIVER BRIDGE COMMISSION COTTON EXCHANGE BUILDING.

NEW YORK, January 23rd, 1886.

To the Submarine Tunnel and Tube Co.

GENTLEMEN,

During the last three years I have been frequently consulted by Mr. R. H. Hall in regard to the plans of his patented process of subaqueous tunnelling and have taken occasion to examine and advise in regard thereto and have carefully considered its applicability for operating under great depths of water.

The process of securing the machine at the proper level in the bed of the channel, that of forcing it forward as the excavation progresses (aided by the water jet acting upon the earth in front) the use of an incorrosive shell for the tube and many other devices to accomplish the object aimed at with the greatest economy have all been attained in this process.

From the descriptions which have been furnished to me of the character of the bed of the Northumberland Straits, where it is proposed to use this process, I am of the opinion that it will accomplish the work in the most successful and economical manner that can be devised, and with judicious management there is no doubt in my mind of the complete success of this process at the Straits.

Respectfully,

WM. J. McALPIN.

I dare say the leader of the House will remember this gentlemen.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Yes, quite well.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—He advised with respect to the canals of this country, and with regard to the improvement of the harbor in Montreal. I have also a letter from Dr. Bull, who is the professor of civil engineering at New York university, and has been for some forty years. He says:—

34 Gramercy Park,
New York, March 10th, 1886.

HON. GEO. W. HOWLAN,

DEAR SIR,

For several years past, I have frequently consulted with Mr. Hayden H. Hall of New Hamburg, about submarine tunnelling.

The method of using a water-tight caisson, invented by him, supplied with all necessary machinery and tools, as a movable workshop at the head of the tunnel, where the work of construction goes on, has always commended itself to my favorable consideration as being of great value, both in regard to the safety of those employed, and cheapness in construction of the work.

The many ingenious devices adopted by him to surmount the engineering difficulties, such as the travelling speeds to counteract lateral disturbances, the hydraulic jets to remove obstructions to the free advance of the caisson, and other contrivances which are found in his plan, are guarantees of his ability to accomplish the object sought. I have no hesitation in pronouncing this method as possessing more eminent merit in respect to simplicity, economy and rapidity of constructing subways under water, than any other that as yet been devised.

In September last, I visited with Mr. Hall, Cape Traverse and Cape Tormentine, and made personal examination of the place where it is proposed to place a submarine tunnel to connect Prince Edward Island with the main land, and after extended enquiries of those who have long lived in the neighborhood, and have been in the habit of navigating the straits both in summer and winter, we arrived at the firm conviction, that the location afforded great facilities for the object sought.

Still further, a careful examination of the surveys made by Commander Orlebar, R. N. in 1886, and the soundings made since our visit, by Capt. Philip Irving, taken at each fifty feet across the straits from the pier near Cape Traverse to the end of Jourimain Reef, shows that the bottom of the straits, is favorable for the building of the tunnel, there being no sudden depression in the whole distance, and the surface being mostly sand and gravel giving a good foundation to rest upon. Thus with ordinary care and skill there will be no great difficulty in its construction under the method of Hall's patent.

The precise cost cannot finally be determined until borings of the bottom, are furnished, yet from all that we can glean from the data now within our reach we would judge that the expense would not be far from four million and five hundred thousand dollars.

Very respectfully yours,

R. H. BULL, Ph. D.

*Emeritus Prof. of Civil Engineering,
New York University.*

I have detained the House by reading those letters so as to show that this matter may very properly be said to be beyond the region of conjecture. Some hon. gentlemen think that we of Prince Edward Island are unduly bringing these matters before the House, and that as we have a winter steamer, we ought to be satisfied with it: but those gentlemen should remember the incidents of last winter, and the misfortunes of the steamer during the present winter, and consider that it is not a very pleasant experience for people who have to cross there. But we are told that nobody crosses there. When asked how many people cross the Straits, my answer always is that none except those who are compelled to go over, will cross—no one will make a pleasure trip of it. I shall, with the permission of the House, read a description of a night in the Gulf on that steamer when she was disabled in the ice, to give some idea of the care, anxiety and sorrow that fill the minds and hearts of many people having friends on board the ship during its trouble. I have no doubt it will impress hon. gentlemen with the fact that I have stated, that no one crosses the Straits in the winter season for pleasure. The article is as follows :

In the storm of last Saturday the Northern Light had a terrible experience. She left Georgetown at 6 o'clock in the morning, and had got as far as Pictou Island when the storm struck her. A thick snow storm coming on, she was obliged to put about and make for Georgetown again. The return passage is described as something fearful. The sea ran mountains high, and the wind blew with a fearful velocity. The wheelhouse was carried away—Capt. Finlayson, and the pilot, Capt. McLean, barely escaping with their lives. A horse shipped by Mr. McLaughlin, of Souris, was killed, the poor animal's legs being broken by the constant pitching, and the cargo, consisting chiefly of barrels of pork, was smashed and thrown about the deck. The pumps were kept constantly going as the vessel was making water the entire passage. At nine o'clock on Sunday morning Capt. Finlayson managed to get his craft into Georgetown. He was badly bruised about the shoulders; Capt. McLean was cut in the face, Engineer McMullan was bruised in the breast, while the watchman and several of the crew, while working about the cargo, received severe injuries. Altogether it was such a storm as the Northern Light never before experienced—what may be called a terrible night in the Gulf."

During the consideration of the question submitted by the hon. member from New Westminster the other day, some difference arose between us with regard to the view he entertained of the statistics of Prince Edward Island. At that time I stated to my hon. friend that the statements which he made were inaccurate, inasmuch as they did not show the correct amount of revenue derived by the Dominion from Prince Edward Island. With the permission of the House, I should like to take up this question of the expenditure and revenue connected with that Province, as I know that the impression remains on the minds of hon. gentlemen that the amount of revenue collected from Prince Edward Island is not equal to the expenditures out of the Dominion treasury for that Province. I know that when they refer to the Blue Books their opinions are borne out. On reference to the Blue Book I find that we are stated to have paid into the Dominion revenue for the year ending June 1885 the sum of $187,642.80. I took exception to that as being an improper statement, and not a statement of what may be properly called the facts of the case. It is quite amusing to read the figures in the Trade and Navigation Returns.

HON. MR. NELSON—I shall be prepared to call the hon. gentleman to order if he behaves badly to British Columbia.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I shall only do what my hon. friend from New Westminster did the other day, give the House a statement from the Blue Book. After having gone carefully through the Blue Book and noticing the different items given in the returns which Prince Edward Island, in common with other portions of the Dominion, pays in duties on goods not manufactured in this country, we find that she pays her proportion per capita with all the other provinces. I make that statement, and it can be sustained, with reference to the many items of imports, woollen goods, linen goods and foreign liquors, not the produce of this country. I shall call the hon. gentleman's attention to one fact as a sample of all the rest. In the Trade and Navigation Returns, under the head of "playing cards" we find that Ontario imported from all parts of the world 36,737 packs: Quebec 32,586 packs: Nova Scotia 4,147 packs: New Brunswick, 1,137 packs: Manitoba, 7,032 packs: British Columbia, 20,593 packs: Prince Edward Island 1 pack, on which there was duty paid six cents.

HON. MR. DICKEY—"No cards."

HON. MR. HOWLAN—So far as the morality of the question is concerned, if there is any morality connected with it I shall leave it to my hon. friend to explain why British Columbia with a population of 16,000 should find it necessary to import 20,000 packs of cards, while there was only one pack imported into Prince Edward Island which has a population of 120,000.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I should like my hon. friend to explain where they get their cards.

HON. MR. NELSON—I do not see anything inamoral in a quiet game of cards.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I do not question the morality of the people of British Columbia, in referring to this return. I find that in 1860 the total imports of Prince Edwards Island amounted to about $747,000, on which we had then a duty of 12½ per cent., which gave us a revenue of $93,000. In 1872, just prior to confederation, our imports were $2,104,134 and with an average duty of about 15 per cent. we had a revenue of $304,397. It is hardly a true representation of the affairs of that Province to say that with an increase of trade and population the revenue from Prince Edward Island, as set down in the blue book, should only be $187,642 twelve years afterwards. Supposing that Prince Edward Island had been standing still, and no progress had been made since 1872 up to 1884, it would be a strange fact that under a 15 per cent. tariff we had a revenue of $304,000, while under the present tariff of the Dominion we are only credited with a revenue of $194,000. The answer to this anomaly is not hard to find. Previous to that time the majority of our people imported their own goods from the different parts of the world in which they were manufactured: at the present time 88 per cent. of the goods brought into Prince Edward Island are bought in Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, St. John and Halifax. As a consequence, if you take up the blue book you will find that Ontario is credited with $32,000,000 imports, and Quebec with $37,000,000. We know how that arises, because the goods consumed in Ontario have been entered and duty paid on them in Montreal. I have proof that will bear me out in the statement that the exports of Prince Edward Island in 1861 to all the countries were $793,810: and in 1872 the exports had risen to $1,497,058, or about 88⅓ per cent. of an increase. It is hardly in the nature of things that our exports have not increased since that time, and with an increasing export, it is the rule of all countries, there is a corresponding growth in the purchasing power of the people. If you follow out that increase from 1872 to 1884 it will be, found that the revenue has increased three times over since Confederation. The last census credits Prince Edward Island with 55 head of live stock for every 100 acres of improved land, whilst the other provinces show only 38 head per 100 acres. To every acre of improved land we show a yield of 100 bushels, as against 61 bushels in the other provinces. Take the value of our fisheries as against the whole of the other provinces, we have $17 per head as against $3.50 for the rest of the Dominion. Take our savings banks, certainly the best indicator we have of our prosperity, they show a deposit of $16 per head as against $7 per head in the other provinces. From our isolated position we do not show as well in manufactures, which are only $31 per head to $72 for the rest of the Dominion.

HON. MR. POWER—The savings banks deposits show there were no better investments to be had for the surplus money of the people, and they are no indication of prosperity.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Will my hon. friend tell us the value of the whole Island?

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I can tell him the value of the whole Island if my hon. friend would tell us the value of Lunenburg. I will tell him what we have in area: we have 2,114 square miles of the best land on the continent. We have not a lot of rocks such as they have down at Lunenburg. If the hon. gentleman wants to know what the soil is like, I will give him an authority on that point too. I will give him English, not American, opinion—I will give him the opinion of Professor P. J. Sheldon, professor of agriculture at the Wilts and Hants Agricultural College, who visited Prince Edward Island in 1880, and in his report says:—

“In some respects this is one of the most beautiful provinces of the Dominion, and it has probably the largest proportion of cultivable land. The soil generally is a red sandy loam of one character throughout, but differing in quality. On the whole, the grass land of the island and the character of the sward, consisting as it does of indigenous clovers and a variety of the finer grasses, reminded me strongly of some portions of old England.”

• • Prince Edward Island is covered with a soil that is easy to cultivate, sound and healthy, capable of excellent crops of roots, grain and grasses—an honest soil that will not fail to respond to the skill of the husbandman. The island grows very good wheat, and probably better oats than most other parts of the Dominion. • • • The island is noted for its large crops of excellent potatoes, which not uncommonly foot up to 250 bushels an acre of fine handsome tubers. Swedes make a fine crop, not uncommonly reaching 750 bushels per acre of sound and solid bulbs.”

Speaking of the mussel-mud, Prof. Sheldon says :

“The island possesses one advantage which is unique and immensely valuable. I refer now to its thick beds of ‘mussel-mud’ or ‘oyster-mud,’ which are found in all the bays and river-mouths. The deposit, which is commonly many feet thick, consists of the organic remains of countless generations of oysters, mussels, clams and other bivalves of the ocean, and of crustaceous animals generally. The shells are generally more or less intact, embedded in a dense deposit of mud-like stuff, which is found to be a fertilizer of singular value and potency. The supply of it is said to be almost inexhaustible, and it is indeed a mine of great wealth to the island. A good dressing of it restores fertility in a striking manner to the poorest soils. Clover grows after it quite luxuriously, and, as it were, indigenously. • • • It may be regarded as a manure of great value. • • • Nor is it soon exhausted, for the shells in it decay year by year, throwing off a film of fertilizing matter.”

Now, I will give the opinion of Sir Wm. Dawson. He says :—

“The great wealth of Prince Edward Island consists in its fertile soil, and the preservation of this in a productive state is an object of imperative importance.”

HON. MR. POWER—We all admit that—carried.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—No, my hon. friend sitting directly alongside of me, (Mr. Nelson), does not admit it. He does not admit that we grow anything at all.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I appeal to the Speaker to put a stop to the interjections of the hon. gentleman. To my province the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Alberton are most important, and he should not be interrupted while making his statement.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I do not think, unless the hon. gentleman who is speaking is opposed to it, that any objection should come from this side of the House ; but I will now ask what the remarks of the hon. gentleman has to do with the Bill before the House. The question before us is a Bill to authorize a company to construct a subway under the Straits of Northumberland. It has nothing to do with the revenue and expenditure of the Dominion or the products of the soil. It may hereafter be a matter of importance whether this project is to be a paying one, or whether the Island is prepared for such an undertaking, but that is not now the question. What we are considering is a Bill for the construction of this subway, and I do not think my hon. friend is in order in the remarks he is making to the House. That is my point of order.

THE SPEAKER—There are two points of order now before the House. The hon. gentleman from Charlottetown is perfectly right in calling attention to these interruptions, and I request hon. members not to interrupt the hon. gentleman if he does not wish it.

With regard to the other point of order I think the hon. gentleman from Alberton was not in order in referring in the remarks which he has been making, to what took place in a previous debate : but on an occasion of this kind, on the second reading of a Bill, where the matter under discussion may have some relevance, it would be hardly fair to rule him out of order. The Bill, contemplates a large public expenditure.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—No, private expenditure.

THE SPEAKER—In that case I think the hon. gentleman is wandering away from the question before the House.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—When I first commenced my remarks I stated distinctly that I knew I was departing from the rule of the House, and there was no objection raised to it. When this question came up the other day I then stated that I would take another occasion to correct the remarks made by the hon. gentleman from New Westminster, and before doing so to day I asked permission of the House, I said then that I would make a statement of what Prince Edward Island received from the Dominion, and what we paid towards the Revenue, to set the matter right. What we received from the Dominion Government, and the amount they assumed and paid for us and are still paying for us, taken from the public accounts of 1883-84 is as follows:—

Interest on debt of Island, assumed by Dominion at Confederation, viz., $596,000, at 4 per cent	$ 23,840
Interest on cost of Prince Edward Island Railway including Cape Traverse Branch, $3,654,356 at 4 per cent	146,174
Interest on amount paid by Dominion Government for purchase of Proprietary Estates, $747,976.71, at 4 per cent	29,919
Subsidy to Province	164,510
Postal expenditure, including $13,386 to steamboats and sailing craft, and $13,722 to Prince Edward Island Railway	59,809
Expenditure by Militia, say	9,769
Paid to Indians	1,993
Judges' salaries, etc	18,800
Lieut. Governor's salary	7,000
Maintenance of Northern Light	19,539
Lighthouse and Coast Service	19,059
Fisheries	2,767
Half cost Telegraph to Mainland	2,000
Excise	2,345
Weights and Measures	1,383
Gas Inspection	309
Quarantine	885
Collecting Revenue	21,249
Auditor's office, Charlottetown	4,585
Saving's Bank, Summerside	200
Public Buildings	7,361
Harbors and Rivers	15,382
	$558,908

P. E. I. RAILWAY.

Locomotive power	$65,402
Car Expenses	36,718
Maintenance of Way and Works	70,421
Renewals	11,532
Station Expenses	24,452
General Charges	11,826
	$220,351
Less Receipts of Railway	144,504
	75,747

HON. MR. POWER—If the hon. gentleman will excuse me, for interrupting him, I think he will find that the Public Accounts show there is a deficit in the working of the Island Railway of $100,000.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I gave them credit for $75,000 the year before, and I gave them credit for the interest on the railway and the loss of working it, and I do not think that these figures can be disputed. Now if we take the Public Accounts for 1883-84, we find that the average amount of Custom duties per head of the population paid by Prince Edward Island was $4.93. Estimating the population of Prince Edward Island at 120,000, which would give about the natural increase 1881, we would have the following as the Island's contribution :

From Customs	$591,600 00
“ Excise	136,400 00
“ Railway	144,504 12
“ Post Office	30,000 00
“ Northern Light	6,206 00
“ Sick Mariners' Fund	684 46
“ Steamboat Inspection	269 72
“ Weights and Measures	657 14
“ Gas Inspection and Law Stamps	791 51
“ Fishery Licenses	80 00
“ Customs Seizures	230 00
	$911,422 95

That is the amount which Prince Edward Island contributes to the Dominion Treasury instead of $195,000 set down in the Public Accounts. The difference between the two statements is $716,000. That amount the people of Prince Edward Island contribute to the Dominion Treasury in excess of what she is credited with, and the amount of revenue derived by the Dominion from the Island is $276,000 more than the Island costs the Dominion. I might remark en passant that this annual sum would be more than sufficient to build the subway across the Straits of Northumberland, to broaden the gauge of the Prince Edward Island Railway, so as to make it conform with the railway system of the continent, and build branch lines when the traffic would warrant, particularly from Charlottetown through Belfast to Murray Harbour, and again from county line on Bradalban through to New London and Rustico thus tapping the fisheries of the north and south sides of the Island. But that has nothing to do with the question at all. I did not make any use of these figures for the purpose of drawing any deductions from them but simply for the purpose of showing hon. gentlemen in this House and out of it what Prince Edward Island pays into the revenue of the Dominion. I do not think that is a fair way to treat the case, but I wish to put an end to the oft repeated statement that Prince Edward Island costs the Dominion more than the Dominion receives from her. Prince Edward Island came into the Dominion of Canada, joined the brotherhood of Provinces which form this Dominion, and whether the Island is rich or poor has nothing to do with this matter: I do not think it is fair or right to be continually referring to it and other small provinces as being a source of expense to the Dominion.

In bringing this matter to the notice of the House last year, a great many men shook their heads when the project was broached, and I thought it my duty to place before the Senate such facts regarding this question as would put it beyond any doubt or ridicule. It is true a great many enterprises have, during the last few years, been taken up in this Dominion. The sound still echoes in this Chamber of the ridicule which greeted the first mention of the Pacific Railway project. Many hon. gentlemen laughed at it and said the whole resources of the country would not be equal to its construction; but the railway has been built, and I hope we shall all live to see this tunnel completed. In closing I have to apologize for having taken up so much of the time of the House in the consideration of this measure. I know to some hon. gentlemen the question has not that importance which it possesses for us down by the sea, but I say this, that there are more commercial travellers visiting Prince Edward Island to-day from the great cities of the Dominion than perhaps any other class of the community. We always receive them kindly and are glad to see them because we belong to the same great country. I hope the time is not far distant when many of our members here will be able to visit Prince Edward Island; then they will aid us by their influence and their votes—they will give us this Bill of incorporation to enable a company which is broad minded and liberal enough to take up this great work, and make it one of the greatest engineering works in the world.

HON. MR. POWER—I wish to ask my hon. friend for one item. He gave us the exports of Prince Edward Island in 1861 and 1871; they rose from something over $700,000 to something over $2,000,000. The hon. gentleman did not give us the exports in 1881 or 1884.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—No, there is no way by which we can get them.

HON. MR. POWER—Are there no returns of the exports from Prince Edward Island?

HON. MR. HOWLAN—A great many of our exports go to St. John and other ports and are credited to those ports.

HON. MR. POWER—They must clear from the ports of Prince Edward Island.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I presume that there will be no serious opposition to this Bill, but I desire to bear my testimony to the industry energy and ability with which my hon. friend from Alberton has persevered in getting up his case. The Bill before the House is simply one to incorporate a company for a special purpose, but I think every hon. gentleman will understand perfectly well that there is an ulterior object behind it, and that ulterior object is that in some shape or form the Government of this Dominion will so subsidize or make such arrangements with that company as will enable them at long last to fulfil the original terms of confederation with Prince Edward Island, not merely as they have attempted to do heretofore, but actually in the very spirit and letter of the original agreement. If this were simply an ordinary Bill to incorporate a Company it would not have been necessary for my hon. friend to have enlarged upon it in the manner he has done, nor would it be necessary for me to rise to offer any remarks upon it. The Bill would naturally go before the proper committee and receive a thorough sifting. But as this differs from ordinary cases when a Bill for the incorporation of a Company comes before the House, I am justified in offering some observations upon it. Hon. gentlemen cannot suppose that the people of Prince Edward Island in whose favor those terms of Confederation were made as long ago as 1869, were not fully sensible of the great difficult-ties under which they labored in the matter of their commerce. If they were to become a part of the Dominion and to assume an equal share of the public burdens with the people of Canada for the construction of public works on the mainland, it was absolutely necessary that they should have very prompt and easy access in common with the rest of the Dominion so as to enable them to make use of those works at all seasons of the year ; and with a view to so enable them, the condition which has so often been referred to, of establishing and maintaining continuous steam navigation winter and summer, was first inserted in the terms of Confederation offered to Prince Edward Island in 1869. And it was with a full sense of the essential importance of those terms that they found a place in the subsequent terms which were proposed and agreed to. Naturally the people of the island considered that if they became joint proprietors of the Intercolonial Railway and of the projected Pacific Railway, and bore a share of Canadian taxation—if they resigned their own tariff in favor of Canada and permitted the Dominion to impose Canadian duties on them, they ought to be placed in as full and complete position to take advantage of all those great works as a Nova Scotian, a New Brunswicker or an inhabitant of any other part of Canada. It was specially that clause of the agreement, to which I have referred, and which implied the establishment of continuous steam navigation winter and summer between the Island and the mainland which contributed very largely to induce the people of my Province to accept the terms of Confederation at all. Before that period they were in possession of an independent constitution. Their appeal in all cases was to the Imperial Government. They resigned all that and cast in their lot with this Dominion. I do not say that those terms of Confederation could be literally fulfilled by means of powerful steamers, and it is for that reason that I hailed the introduction of a Bill such as this with the greatest pleasure. I do not assert or insinuate that the Government of the Dominion of that day or any government which has since existed, has at all sought so escape from its liabilities. They have simply felt the enormous difficulties which beset the question, and while willing, probably, if they could see their way clear, to fulfil them, did not like to embark on an uncertain and possibly unsuccessful undertaking. It is therefore the more desirable, when an opportunity is afforded them of literally fulfilling the conditions, although no ship should be employed in this service, still steam would be the motive power, that such opportunity should be adopted, and the terms of Union literally fulfilled by means of the projected tunnel with the least possible delay. I am not at all desirous of occupying the attention of the House at any length in this matter. The main point which I insist upon with regard to this is that the people of the Province of Prince Edward Island entered the Confederation upon these explicit terms, and that these terms, for reasons which are obvious and which I have referred to, cannot be literally fulfilled by the old ordinary method, and that here is a project which if successful will enable the Dominion Government strictly to fulfil those terms, and therefore it is most desirable that this Bill should have a thorough sifting to establish the practicability of the work and put its cost beyond a doubt ; though if it is undertaken by the company that is a matter for them more than the Dominion Government to look after. I do hope that no obstacle will be thrown in the way of this project by the members of the Government. They have now an opportunity of showing their good will and their integrity of purpose as regards our Province by acting in a prompt and ready manner in regard to my hon. friend's Bill. I believe that the question, as brought by him before numerous meetings of the people of Prince Edward Island, has been received by them in a most welcome manner. They presumed that if all the statements made by the hon. gentleman were correct and could be sustained, that at least a means was likely to be found to relieve them of the great and most serious difficulty under which they labor. I do not think I need weary the House with many further remarks. My hon. friend mentioned the several difficulties which had always been spoken of in connection with his project and I think met them all successfully. As to the nature of the sea bottom, with which he had to deal, I think he showed it was favorable; he showed also that the anticipated dangers from the grounding of ice and causes connected with that point were without foundation, and also the easy manner in which the smoke difficulty could be avoided. It is scarcely necessary in a chamber where so many hon. gentlemen are themselves intimately connected with business to enlarge at any length upon the great disadvantage it is to our Province to shut down its business matters possibly in the month of November, to remain in a quiescent state so far as imports and exports are concerned, for five consecutive months. The amount of loss which is thus incurred by the province can be more easily imagined than actually related. The opening of this tunnel would have the effect of placing our province in the same position which other portions of the Dominion occupy. No longer would it be necessary for us, on the approach of winter, to increase our imports, often at a great loss, or to export our products to Halifax and other ports in such quantities as to glut the local market and thus reduce their value. The tunnel once successfully constructed these matters could be attended to from time to time throughout the whole winter. Many articles of export which are now held over until spring, until they are greatly deteriorated in value and in quality, would now be daily transported through that tube, and the consequence of its construction would be a complete change in the whole commercial life of the province. I believe that, in conjunction perhaps with other improvements, it would materially increase the wealth of our province—not merely add to its commerce, but add to the value of its landed property, and very likely tend to retain at home a large and valuable portion of its population who now seek their fortunes in other parts of the world.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I have listened with great interest to the speech which my hon. friend has made on this Bill. I do not think a speech has ever been delivered by him in this House more interesting than the one to which we have listened on this occasion. It is full of information, full of assuring knowledge, showing great research into various points which, up to this time, had seemed to members of this House to throw considerable doubt on his project and to put it in the category of things which appear to be almost impossible of execution. I think the hon. gentleman has, by his speech and by the information he has brought before the House, removed his measure from that category and placed it in the list of things which are certainly possible, leaving the question of expense to be yet considered. I congratulate my hon. friend on the result he has already attained, and which is owing largely to his own resolute industry and persistence of purpose. There are some parts of the Bill which will require great attention on the part of the Committee of Railways & Canals, to which, I presume, it will be referred. The enterprise is one of an entirely novel nature, involving great risks of an unusual character, both as regards public and private interests, which I think ought to receive, and I am sure will receive, the very careful attention of the Committee. I think too, that the connections of the tunnel with the railways on the Island and the mainland should be subject to the approbation of the Governor in Council the same as the sub-way itself is, because the Government has made a connection between the Island Railway and the Strait on one side, and a private company has made a similar connection between the Intercolonial Railway and the Strait on the other side, and the connections between these lines and the sub-way, should it be constructed, ought to be subject to the approbation of the Governor in Council.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—There is no objection to that.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I am glad to hear my hon. friend say so. I rose also to state that the Government must inform the House that the Bill cannot be accepted and is not accepted by us in the light in which the hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Haythorne) puts it. The measure before the House does not involve any subsidy. It is not the first step towards the accomplishment of such a project as the hon. gentleman opposite me describes—that is, the obtaining of a subsidy. The Bill is a measure on its own merits, for the creation of a private Company for the purpose of constructing this subway, and does not involve any undertaking, direct or implied, on the part of the Government, I felt that if I sat still and allowed the hon. gentleman to assume that it did I should not be discharging my duty to the House. We do not assent to it in that spirit; we do not look upon it as involving any question of that kind. We believe faith has already been kept with Prince Edward Island, so far as faith could be kept with them. We have done our utmost in every way to accomplish that object, but it does not follow from our assenting to the second reading of this Bill that there is any implication that we are going to subsidize this subway.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I would not have risen if the hon. member from Marshfield had not shown such irritation at the remarks which I interjected when my hon. friend from Alberton was speaking. They were not made in a spirit of antagonism to my hon. friend, and I know that he was pleased to hear them. My hon. friend (Mr. Haythorne) must not think that he can impress the country with the idea that the terms of Confederation with the Island necessitate the construction of a sub-marine Railway.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I think the hon. gentleman is out of order; the question of the terms of Confederation is not before the House.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I am speaking in reply to the remarks of the hon. member from Marshfield. He says that the Dominion is bound to carry out the terms of Confederation by establishing continuous steam navigation between the Island and the mainland, summer and winter. The House and the country must know that Prince Edward Island, would never have been admitted into the Dominion on such a condition as the hon. member mentions—that there should be a submarine railway constructed, or that there should be steam communication at all seasons of the year and nothing else. If they ask for terms which cannot be carried out, they are nugatory. The hon. gentleman should not lead the people of Prince Edward Island to believe that the Government is wanting in good faith and integrity if it does not aid the project which is contemplated by this bill. The terms given to Prince Edward Island, liberal as they were, never contemplated anything of the kind. All that was contemplated has, I believe, been fully carried out by every Government that has been in power since the admission of the province into the Confederation.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman from Lunenburg is perhaps right as to the facts, but the feeling of the people of Prince Edward Island is not an unnatural one. The province of British Columbia had, at the last census, a white population of about 12,000. This country agreed to build a railway to British Columbia, and has expended about $100,000,000 in establishing a railway connection with these 12,000 white people. I do not think it is very unreasonable or unnatural that the 120,000 people in Prince Edward Island should expect the Government to spend $5,000,000 to establish connection between that province and the rest of the Dominion. I think it right to say that if expectations have been raised which the Government are not prepared to fulfil and to meet, then the Government themselves are largely responsible for it. Their conduct in the past in aiding undertakings of a more stupendous character than this has naturally led the people to believe that they will go on in that course. One circumstance has struck me about this undertaking, that this plan of making sub-marine roads is a comparatively new thing, and it has not been established—not by experience at any rate—that a road of such a length as this is a practicable thing. The longest sub-way now existing I think, is not more than a mile in length.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Three and a half miles.

HON. MR. POWER—Very considerable doubt must still exist as to whether a submarine road of this length is practicable. There is one other point which I think deserves some consideration. No doubt, the Minister has said that it is not the intention of the Government to assist this Company with a subsidy, but it may be that next Session the Government will have changed their minds.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—We will raise no objection to that.

HON. MR. POWER—This deserves some consideration—that the Government have subsidized a railway leading from the Intercolonial Railway to Cape Tormentine, and subsidized it chiefly with the object of facilitating the communication with Prince Edward Island. They have built within the last two years several miles of railway on Prince Edward Island, a railway which is operated at a very considerable loss to the country. They built that also for the purpose of facilitating intercourse between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. During the past year they have spent some money in establishing what they think is an improved mode of crossing the Straits. I think myself, from the evidence taken before the committee on that subject in the other House that there is still room for improvement, and that it will be the duty of the Government to put on one or two small steamers. But when the Government have done that they will really have done all that the bargain with Prince Edward Island binds them to do. At any rate, having gone to that expense, it is unfair for the hon. gentlemen who insisted upon having all this money spent to establish winter communication, to come now, before that system of communication has had a fair trial, and insist that another and more costly system should be established. If the representatives of the Island were going to look for this tunnel or sub-marine railway they should not have insisted upon the great expenditure which has already taken place, and it is only fair to the people at large—who have to pay for all these things—that the present mode of communication, with the improvements which have been indicated, should be tried before the country is called upon to pay a large sum for this new system. It is perfectly certain that when the terms of union were agreed upon neither party dreamed of the building of a tunnel or subway, and, therefore, that cannot be claimed as necessary to the fulfilment of the terms of the agreement.

HON. MR. GOWAN—I have great pleasure in voting for the second reading of this Bill. I think my hon. friend has made out a very clear case for the establishment of this subway, and he has managed to invest a subject, usually very dry, with a great deal of interest, and I think it is quite germane to his subject to speak of the traffic that would probably pass through this tunnel if it should be constructed. It may be that the Bill covers entirely new ground. It refers to the construction of something that never was attempted before in this country, and it would be very proper for the committee to whom it may be referred to consider carefully how far it may affect the navigation of the Straits, and to guard against the public being in any way injuriously affected by the approaches on either side. Then the adoption in general terms of all the railway clauses would require to be very carefully considered, for many of the clauses in the Railway Act would not suit exactly a tunnel such as is here proposed, and the necessary work to be done upon it. I must say I have listened with a great deal of interest to what my hon. friend has said, and I think the people of his Island are very much indebted to him and his colleagues for the very able manner in which he has presented the claim of this company to build a work of great importance to their province, and I think also of very great importance to the whole Dominion. In supporting this measure, no one would feel himself pledged to vote for a subsidy for it in the future, and in voting for it and giving it all the support I can, I do not feel myself under any such pledge.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSENTINI NATURALIZATION BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill (37), "An Act to naturalize Girolamo Consentini, commonly called Baron Girolamo Consentini." He said: This is a somewhat unusual Bill, but it is placed in my hand by a member of the other House who is a distinguished lawyer living in Sherbrooke, Mr. Hall. He explained to me that the gentleman whose naturalization is intended by this Act is a very elderly gentleman of high standing who has taken up his residence in Sherbrooke. He is desirous of getting an Act of Naturalization passed to enable him to deal with his affairs as a British subject. He is now in Italy, where he has estates, and he has, in anticipation of the passage of this Bill, performed the necessary duties in taking the oath of naturalization, and performing other acts required by the law. I have no doubt his counsel will be able to show that before the Committee, to whom I would ask that this Bill be referred. The object of the Bill is to obtain naturalization prior to the three years' residence required by the law, as he has only been six months in this country.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I do not oppose the second reading of the Bill, but I think some change will have to be made in the Committee: otherwise I feel that I shall be obliged to oppose it when it comes before the House for third reading. Hon. gentlemen know that there is a general law under which naturalization is open to anyone after three years' residence in the country. It is always a dangerous thing to depart from the general law and to enact special laws in particular cases. There is nothing in this Bill which shows that this gentleman should be allowed special legislation for himself. It may be that certain facts may exist which would warrant the House in passing such a Bill; but if they do exist they should appear in the preamble of the Bill to show why this gentleman should be allowed to depart from the statute governing all the rest of the community. This also should be borne in mind: my hon. friend says that he asks under this Bill to do something in Italy as well as to accomplish some purpose here. It is not very safe for us to enact by special legislation any change in this man's position which would enable him to do something in Italy which he would not otherwise be able to do. I can understand if he is advanced in life and has property in Canada why he should wish for naturalization more quickly in this country than he could obtain it under the general law, if he desires to make conveyance of his property, or to make his will here, but such an explanation as that should be inserted in the preamble of the Bill. If we legislate in this case, we shall certainly be asked to do so again by others, and we will be departing from the safe principles which should govern all classes and all persons who wish to be naturalized. This is the safe plan, and one which the House will be disposed to pursue unless this gentleman shall show some special reasons which special reasons ought to be stated to the satisfaction of the committee and recited in the preamble of the Bill.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I quite agree with the leader of the House that the facts which I have stated here are perhaps not sufficient to warrant a departure from the general law under which those who are desirous of becoming naturalized should come. At the same time, if the Bill is referred to the Private Bills Committee it will be possible to see that there is nothing which will prevent the Bill from being referred back to this House when it is before the committee, I will see that such information as has been suggested by my hon. friend will be forthcoming. The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the 2nd time.

NIAGARA GRAND ISLAND BRIDGE COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the 2nd reading of Bill (38), "An Act relating to the Niagara Grand Island Bridge Company."

He said—This is a Bill to extend the time for the completion of the Niagara Grand Island Bridge. This Company was chartered some time ago for the purpose of making communication between the Canada Southern system and the New York Central system of Railways across the Niagara River by Grand Island. There has been reason for the delay, and I do not think there can be any particular objection to the 2nd reading of the Bill, and when it goes to the proper Committee no doubt some one will be present representing the Company who will make the necessary explanations.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the 2nd time.

HON. MR. PLUMB.

CANADA SOUTHERN BRIDGE COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the 2nd reading of Bill (40), "An Act relating to the Canada Southern Bridge Company." He said: This is a Bill very much of the same nature as the other. It was intended by this Company to build a tunnel under the Detroit River, and there have been a good many difficulties connected with it in the surveys, and other matters which can be explained before the Committee.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the 2nd time.

The Senate adjourned at 5:45 p. m.

THE BIRRELL DIVORCE BILL.

FIRST REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

HON. MR. DICKEY, from the Committee to whom was referred Bill (I) "An Act for the Relief of Flora Birrell," presented their first report. He said—As this is a mere formal matter connected with the proceedings of the Committee, for which they had to come to the House for authority, I beg to move that the report be now adopted.

The motion was agreed to on a division.

THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILROAD AS A TRANS-CONTINENTAL MAIL ROUTE.

MOTION.

HON. MR. GIRARD moved—
That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before this House, correspondence between the Imperial and Dominion Governments, relating to Subsidy to any line of Steamships sailing between Vancouver, the Pacific terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and Japan, China, India and Australia; also, relating to the carrying of Her Majesty's mail and troops for the East, via Canadian Pacific Railway from England.

He said—It is with some degree of hesitation that I rise to speak on this question, which to my mind is one of the greatest importance, and my regret is that I am not better qualified to perform the duty which I have undertaken to discharge. At all events I shall take the liberty of making a few remarks on the great event which, it seems to me, interests the whole world, the opening of the Pacific Railway. We naturally see with a certain amount of pleasure that before many days this wonderful work will be in operation from ocean to ocean. It is interesting not only for the Dominion as a whole, but has a special interest for the British Empire. We are all interested in maintaining the high position now occupied by the Mother Country. It is our pride to assist in its glory, and to contribute as well as we can to any means by which England will retain her position as one of the first nations in the world. The question has been more than once discussed, by what means we can cement more strongly the tie that unites us to the Mother Land. We have spoken of Imperial Federation as giving us representation in the Parliament of Great Britain. I do not know if anything of that kind will at any time come to pass, but I submit to hon. gentlemen my humble opinion that the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway will certainly contribute very largely to the maintenance and continuance of that connection with the Mother Land which we all appreciate so much. When we have a line of steamships starting from Vancouver, the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway, making regular communication with China, Japan, the East Indies and Australia, our position as one of the colonies of the Empire will be completely changed. It will be now easy for England at any time to transfer troops and munitions of war to afford protection to her millions of subjects in the East, and at the same time it will be an easy matter for England to receive from those colonies that assistance which has been loyally and cheerfully given in the past, when circumstances arose that demanded it. The completion of this great work has certainly a great importance for us. We must feel proud to have within the limits of our Dominion railway works which are rightly considered as wonders of the world—I refer to the Victoria Tubular Bridge and the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is now about completed. The authorities of England are united in their congratulations to the Dominion on the completion of our great national highway, and they have given most serious consideration towards the utilization of our railway as a mail route across the continent. At a meeting which took place in London on the 18th March last of the Executive Board of the London Chamber of Commerce they authorized their secretary to represent to the Secretary of State, that having considered the arrangement proposed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the organization of steamship communication between Vancouver and Japan, China and India, the Committee are deeply impressed with the importance of the same, and that, in their opinion, the commercial and Imperial value of the proposals cannot be estimated. I have read also in a late issue of the Ottawa Citizen, the 29th March, that a private cable despatch received in Ottawa had contained the important announcement that in reply to a question asked in the British House of Commons that afternoon, it was officially stated to be the intention of the Imperial Government to subsidize the Canadian Pacific Railway Company line of steamers between British Columbia and China. "This fact," says the Citizen, "we may regard as an indication of the probability of the present administration following out the determination of Lord Salisbury's Government to utilize the route for Imperial purposes, a proposal which was strongly urged by Sir John Macdonald during his recent visit to England." Then again, we have the important appreciation of our great national highway by the authorities in England in the fact of tenders having been called for the transfer of Her Majesty's mail between Vancouver, China and Japan, the trade of which is of very considerable importance to our American neighbors, who, I find in 1884 imported from China alone, $16,292,000; Japan, $11,762,000, and the Sandwich Islands, $8,857,000, being a total of $36,911,000. The exports for the same year were $12,500,000, consisting exclusively of cotton, wool, boots and shoes, leather, blankets, soap, liquors, petroleum, &c., &c. Here, then, there is an opportunity presented to our enterprising business men of Canada to compete for this trade, now that they possess the shortest and cheapest transportation to the east, and this is small in comparison with the vast English trade of India, Ceylon, and our Pacific colonies, in addition to China and Japan, which will be of such vast importance to the Canadian Pacific Railway and the trade of this country, the vast resources of which have lately drawn the attention of all Europe, through the efforts of our Governor-Generals, in giving to the world their travelled experience throughout our great North-West during the last 15 years. At the same time they have shewn themselves the faithful representatives of their sovereign and the devoted friends of Canada.

We must all rejoice at the great interest manifested, not only in England, but throughout the whole civilized world, in the successful prosecution of this great national highway, the Canadian Pacific Railway, induced by the far-reaching foresight and vigorous policy of the Canadian Government, the wisdom of which policy is now acknowledged. The construction of the road has become an accomplished fact within the short space of five years. This magnificent line of railway is the longest under one management in the world, and in its luxurious accommodation and comfort for the traveller stands unrivalled. There is something almost marvellous in the idea of those magnificent sleeping and dining cars—fitted up like the abode of royalty, and each costing a small fortune—being built to traverse the wilderness of the far North-West, into which the light of civilization has only just begun to dawn. Besides, this great railway is the shortest across the Continent of America. The distance from San Francisco to New York by the Union Pacific Railway is 3,363 miles, while that from Vancouver to Montreal is only 2,830, or a difference of 633 miles in favor of our Canadian route, which will shorten the passage from Liverpool to China, in direct distance, more than 1,000 miles.

To demonstrate the practical utility of this grand railway communication, it is sufficient to mention the fact that in 1861 the troops were occupied from 11 to 12 days in traversing the distance from Halifax to Quebec. During the time of the North-West troubles in 1870, the transfer of the troops from Quebec to Red River by the Lake Superior route required 11 weeks, and from Toronto to Winnipeg it took 95 days, while to-day that long distance is traversed in 6 days. When the line of steamships is established between Vancouver and Japan and Hong Kong, the distance between Liverpool and Japan will be traversed in 26 days, and Hong Kong and Shanghai in 34 days. To-day the voyage between England and Yokohama, by the shortest route, occupies from 40 to 44 days, and by the Straits of Gibraltar from 49 to 53 days. I shall now, with the permission of the House, give a statement of the distance between Liverpool and Japan and China by the Canadian route, and compare it with the distance by the United States route. It will be found in the annual report of the commerce of Montreal for 1875, and is as follows:—

UNITED STATES ROUTE.

	Miles
Liverpool to New York	3,040
New York to San Francisco	3,370
San Francisco to Yokohama	4,470
Yokohama to Shanghai	1,045
Total	11,925

CANADIAN ROUTE.

	Miles
Liverpool to Montreal, via Belle-Isle	2,790
Montreal to Port Moody, C.P.R.	2,870
Port Moody to Victoria, B.C.	90
Victoria to Yokohama	4,108
Yokohama to Shanghai	1,045
Total	10,903

Difference in favor of Canadian route 1,022 miles.

Then follows this statement:—

“It is, therefore, evident that the shortest line of communication between Great Britain and Japan and China will certainly be the one through Canada, the difference in time being a most important consideration. Passenger travel would undoubtedly prefer that northern route, while its advantages for transmission of mails and merchandise are evident: and, most important of all to the Imperial Government, there will be the opportunity for transporting troops, either in time of peace or war, entirely through British Territory to the Pacific Ocean without risk of impediment,—an advantage the greatness of which cannot be easily estimated.”

I think we will all agree with these remarks. The Imperial Government is greatly interested in this new means of communication between Great Britain and the far east. At the present time there is only one means of communication between England and its vast possessions in India and Australia—the Suez Canal. It is pretty well established that the navigation by that route may be interrupted at any time. In such an event it would be of the greatest importance to England, having such great interests in the east, to possess a route through Canadian territory which can never be closed. I will here take the liberty of reading a few words from an engineering authority, one who was largely interested in the construction of our Pacific Railway, Mr. Sanford Fleming. He has written a book entitled “England and Canada,” in which he shows the importance of the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway to the Empire. He speaks also of a system of submarine telegraph cables which should follow at an early date, to establish telegraphic communication between Canada and Japan and China. He says:—

“They will be extended to India, Australia and New Zealand. Great Britain may then be in close relations with her possessions in every quarter of the globe by lines of communication under the protection of her flag without passing through an acre of foreign soil. Egypt owing to its geographical relationship with India and Australia, is constantly a source of anxiety. Lord Wolsley gave as his opinion that the destruction of the Suez Canal could be effected by the means of a few old canal boats loaded with stone, or one effective torpedo exploded in a well selected spot. Notes of warning in other forms have frequently been given. Three years ago an insurrection in Egypt, out of the fold of Imperial policy, but claiming consideration from the aspect it assumed with regard to Indian interests, exacted British interference. Two-thirds of the available naval power of Great Britain was called into service to keep open the canal. Even then the possibility that the canal may at any hour be rendered unnavigable and the telegraph destroyed, what other conclusion can there be than the words of Lord Wolsley, that it is suicidal to depend on the route through Egypt as the means of communication with the East.

"The Imperial character which this consideration gives to the lines of communication now being constructed by Canada is indisputable. They offer a constant reliable communication with the eastern possessions of Great Britain when European complications shall assume a threatening attitude, or when Egyptian difficulties have led to the stoppage of the navigation of the Suez Canal. Canada will consequently add greatly to the common safety by the completion of her national Railway from the Atlantic to the Pacific seaboard. Its two termini have the common excellence of possessing within command inexhaustible coal deposits, where ships may be supplied and naval arsenals may be established on any scale. The railway itself passes through a territory a great part of which, east of the Rocky Mountains, is not surpassed in fertility by any soil in the world, while immediately north of the line the fertile belt presents a field for immigration for centuries, where bread and butchers' meat will be plentifully produced to meet the most extended requirements which the future may create."

Not only have the people of the Dominion approved of the plan of which I am speaking, but it has received the high approbation of our American cousins. I have made the following extract from a recent report from the Hon. Mr. Ordway, of Concord, New Hampshire, who was Governor of Dakota under the Garfield administration :

"We are forced to acknowledge that the North-West is a splendid country, in regard to its large extent, by the future in store for it; with its great trans-continental artery, binding the two oceans, Canada has opened an enormous country, that will be in possession of a trade practically illimited. This road is a legitimate cause of pride for the Canadians; no country can boast to have realized, to the present day, an undertaking of that importance."

I shall now, with your kind permission, read a short extract from a speech made in the British House of Commons by Lord Harrowby, as reported in the London Canadian Gazette of the 11th March last. He said :—

"To start a great line of mail steamers from the city of Vancouver, the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to Japan and Hong Kong, it was felt that this would be the crown of the Pacific Railway scheme, one of the greatest and most marvellous works of our times. It was impossible to speak too highly of the energy, the indomitable zeal and patience of our Canadian fellow-subjects in carrying the enterprise through. They ought to be proud in this country of having for fellow subjects men who have been able to overcome so successfully, and so rapidly, such great difficulties as were opposed to them, and in this connection it was impossible to avoid mentioning the names of Sir George Stephen and Sir John Macdonald, to whose exertions the enterprise owes so much.

I perfectly concur in every word of this, and agree with the speaker that the road will be of great value to the empire. I do not see why British troops should not be stationed on our Pacific coast as well as at Halifax. They would be ready a great deal sooner to be transported to the scene of action should any difficulty arise in the east. We all remember the old adage—"In time of peace prepare for war." It would be of immense advantage to Great Britain to have a military and naval station on our western coast, ready for any emergency that might arise in the Australian colonies or India. I hope the time is not far distant when steps will be taken to carry out some such scheme. The policy is so evidently in the interest of the empire that I expect to see it adopted ere long, and I hope we will live long enough to see, either by means of an Imperial subsidy or some other way, a regular line of powerful steamers running between the western terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway and Asia. I hope and believe that the result will be to vastly increase the commerce of the Dominion, and I do not despair of seeing Winnipeg, in which we are all so much interested, and which is actually the centre of this Dominion, becoming to a certain extent the centre of the world, the great entrepot of the trade between Asia and Europe. (A laugh). I suppose it is nothing but right to hope, and though I may appear rather sanguine I hope to live long enough to see my prediction realized. When that time comes gentlemen will have reason to rejoice that they were wise enough to incur large expenditures for developing our great North-West. Though you may think it has been a source of heavy expense up to the present time, it will yet yield to the Dominion treasury an abundant revenue. I feel great difficulty in addressing the House in the English language, and dealing with this important subject in a fitting manner. I wish in closing to refer to an article published in Good Words by one of our former governors, the Marquis of Lorne. I think you will all approve of what he says, and I am glad to have an opportunity to bring his name before this hon. House, and express my appreciation of all that he has done and is doing in our interest. It is well known that ever since he left us he has been exerting himself constantly to advance the interests of Canada. The following is from the article to which I referred:—

“I am sure it will be the wish of all patriotic men, be they British or Canadian, that this back-bone of the Dominion may, year after year, draw ever-increasing profits. Troops and freight may thereby be sent by a route twelve hundred miles shorter than any other to China and Japan. Mail service, if sent over by this way, will be greatly accelerated, and none but British ground, and none but British ships, need be touched from London to Hong Kong. It is a noble work, nobly performed.”

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B. C.)—I desire to say a very few words on this important subject. I think the House has reason to thank the hon. member from St. Boniface for having introduced a matter of such universal interest to the notice of the House. He has dealt with the Imperial, the commercial and the luxurious sides of the question. It is highly gratifying, I am sure, to every member of this House to find that the immense importance of our great trans-continental highway through the empire is so thoroughly understood. Earl Harrowby has taken a great interest in the matter and he thoroughly understands what he is speaking about; and although the reply of the Secretary of State, Lord Granville, was not quite definite yet its tone was hopeful. I observed last night in one of the city papers here the announcement that a subsidy has been granted by the Imperial Government of £100,000 annually for ten years in aid of a line of steamships between British Columbia and Asiatic and Australian ports. I hope the announcement is correct. That subsidy, together with any help which the Government of this country can give, ought to insure the establishment of a first class line of steamers on the Pacific Ocean. The subject of this motion is one of very great importance to the whole trade of Canada, and almost necessary for the successful working of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is earnestly to be hoped that the Imperial authorities, the Dominion Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, may see their way to placing a line of steamers on the Pacific Ocean before very long.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—This is a matter of very great importance at the present time, when the subject of Imperial federation is receiving so much attention. I think that Canada has done as much, or more, to bring about a closer union of the empire physically if not politically, as any other part of the British possessions, not excepting Great Britain itself. It must be evident to every one of us that our great Pacific Railway has done more to consolidate and strengthen the empire than any other means that could be devised. As my hon friend from British Columbia has said, a cable dispatch, which has appeared lately in the press of Canada, announces that the British Government have decided upon subsidizing a line of steamers to run between the Pacific terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway and Hong Kong and Australia. I hope the leader of the Senate will be able to give us information to-day which will confirm that report. The announcement from an authentic source would be most gratifying to the public of this country, demonstrating as it would, that the mother country is alive to the immense importance of this new highway through the British possessions, increasing the commerce and the military strength of the empire. The recognition by the Imperial authorities of the value of our Pacific railway to the empire will prove of very great benefit to the Dominion. My hon. friend from St. Boniface has shown how easily the Suez Canal could be blocked in time of war. He has fortified his opinion by reading the views of eminent military authorities on the subject. It is, therefore, of very great value to the empire to possess within its own territory a means of communication between Great Britain and her distant possessions which is at once safe and speedy. We can all remember the gloomy days of the Pacific Railway enterprise, when the government of this country was overthrown by calumnies in connection with that great project, and a general impression was created throughout this country that the road would be a burden on the Dominion and would never pay even for the grease for the wheels of its trains. Our people were told that the project was of the wildest and most visionary character, that it was impracticable and would eventually ruin the Dominion. In view of the events of the past ten years it is most gratifying to every patriotic man to witness the success which has attended the enterprise, and we must all feel that this government is entitled to a new lease of power for having accomplished such a gigantic work, if for nothing else—that they are entitled to the public confidence for their faith in the future of the country, for their earnestness, courage and indomitable perseverance in bringing this great enterprise to such a successful conclusion. When their predecessors were in power the policy pursued was marked by vacillation. They showed a want of confidence, and a lack of integrity in this matter which was deplorable, and attended by the most demoralizing results. The country must feel that the present administration are entitled to their gratitude and confidence for having advanced not only the interests of Canada but also the interests of the empire in the speedy construction of this great highway across the continent.

HON. MR. NELSON—It is a matter for very great gratification to the members from British Columbia that this question has been brought before the House by a representative of Manitoba. For myself I can say that I am very glad that this important matter has not been brought up by a British Columbian, and I think that is the feeling of all the representatives of that Province in this Chamber. We are glad that it has been introduced by a gentleman, whom we all know and respect so highly, and who, coming from the centre of the Dominion, can view the question impartially, without any leanings towards either the east or the west. The City of Winnipeg, from which he comes, may now be regarded as occupying a position midway between the Pacific and the Atlantic. I think for that reason this question is given much greater weight than it would have had if a member from British Columbia had brought it up. In that case it would have been received in the old way—as an attempt on the part of the representatives of British Columbia to bring the importance of their own province before the public. The hon. member has referred to the enormous advantage of our Canadian route to the empire in the event of European complications. The Suez Canal, situated as it is in the neighborhood of many powerful nations, might at any time be closed up. The threatened trouble between Greece and Turkey may at any time result in an extensive war and it might possibly be difficult for British ships to go by the Red Sea route to India. There is another view to be taken on this question. My hon. friend from Alberton dwelt at considerable length yesterday upon the importance of the trade of Prince Edward Island. I think it is appropriate to this subject to say something about the trade of the Province of British Columbia. A great many persons, in speaking of our Pacific Railway, compare it with the Union & Central Pacific Railway and point to the fact that the latter has its western terminus at a great city in a populous state. From this they conclude that the Central Pacific will have a great advantage over our line. British Columbia is, however, a very large territory. My hon. friend from New Westminster dwelt on the area of British Columbia and the necessity of having it represented in the Cabinet, but it is a very large territory with a very small population. Our existence before the world, and particularly so far as the Dominion of Canada is concerned, dates from the time of Confederation. I think it will not be inappropriate at the present time if I read a few tables of the Trade and Navigation returns to show that British Columbia, taking into consideration her small population, is making tremendous strides. I do so to a certain extent from the fact that an hon. member of this House took the opportunity yesterday to dwell upon the importance of another province, which in his opinion had been greatly decried. I think no province of the Dominion has been more decried, and, to use a common phrase, more black-guarded, than British Columbia.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—"A sea of mountains."

HON. MR. NELSON—Yes, a sea of mountains, and many other hard things have been said against it, especially for being such a source of expenditure to the Dominion. We are frequently told that our province has increased the debt of the Dominion enormously. I am happy to think that the day has passed when the Province of British Columbia will be derided on the floor of this House or the House of Commons. I think the day has gone by when the Pacific Railway can be regarded as a white elephant on the hands of the Dominion Government. I think it is now recognized as a work which will be of immense benefit to the whole Dominion—as the means of developing our great North-West, which my hon. friend from St. Boniface so well represents. I think it is recognized now that the present Government of Canada took the only step it could possibly take to make a great country of the Dominion. The Trade and Navigation returns, from which I am about to quote, are open to every member of this House, but probably few hon. members from the eastern provinces have paid any attention to the figures concerning British Columbia. I do not think they have watched, as we who represent that province have done, the great growth of the trade and revenue of British Columbia. I will take the exports first. They are as follows:—

In 1872 when we entered the Union our exports were $1,912,167: for what was supposed to be a population of 10,000, this I think is no mean export. The next year our exports were a little less, $1,792,347. In 1884 they reached $2,120,624, in 1875 $2,824,812: in 1876 $2,755,787. I may say that they gradually increased until they amounted to $3,237,804, in 1885. In 1883 they amounted even to a little more, $3,383,342. These exports show that although they may, from some temporary cause, have decreased for a year or two, still the exports, and consequently the general prosperity of British Columbia, have steadily increased, and as a natural consequence our population is also growing. I now come to the imports. I will not take the trouble of reading them over, but I may say that they have grown from less than $2,000,000 in 1872 to $4,023,452 in 1885. I may say in connection with this that it has been stated very frequently and very prominently, that the cause of the great increase in our imports and in the amount of duties collected, was the building of the Pacific Railway and the moneys expended in the province in connection with that great work.

I grant that the amount of imports has largely increased from that very fact, but I certainly take the strongest exception to what has often been stated in this House, that the great increase in our imports was almost altogether due to the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I think that that assertion can be set aside by the fact already quoted, that our exports in 1885 amounted to $3,237,804, or a little under a million of dollars less than our imports. So that the House and the people generally will understand that the whole increase in our trade is not entirely due to the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I may say, in regard to figures, I have quoted from the returns of last year—although the imports and the duties collected on imports were much greater than in former years, still the amount expended in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway for that year was much less than it had been for two or three years previous.

HON. MR. McINNES (B.C.)—And Pacific Railway material came in free of duty.

HON. MR. NELSON—Material connected with the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, such as iron and things of that kind, did; still the number of people engaged in the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway had to be fed and clothed.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I quite agree with the hon. gentleman; the exemption did not relate to a great many articles of consumption in the way of clothing and things of that sort.

HON. MR. NELSON—It has been put forward again and again, that the great increase in the prosperity of British Columbia was only apparent; that it was temporary, and due entirely to the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway; such is not the case. The fact that our exports amounted last year to very nearly as much as the imports, shows that the country is making material progress. Perhaps at no very distant day, in regard to local trade, the province having communication across the great Pacific Ocean, and having a great country lying behind it like the North-West, in which we expect to have a large population, our trade must very materially increase. I do not think I need go any further into these returns; I only remark that my hon. colleague the other day in quoting the returns of duty paid during the last five years, unfortunately left out the last year of which we have any statement—the year 1885.

HON. MR. MCINNIS (B. C.)—I could not get it at the time.

HON. MR. NELSON—It is published in the Trade and Navigation Returns and made the amount some half a million of dollars more than the hon. gentleman quoted. I find that the total amount is $4,037,812.29. I tried to correct him then, but he did not adopt my figures; so that apart from the general view that my hon. friend from Manitoba took in this case there is the other view that although British Columbia is a country with a small population, she has been making rapid strides in commerce, and her population must have vastly increased within the past few years. With such opportunities as she will now have through the construction of the Pacific Railway, the population must continue to increase, and having a market in the interior of the country for our products we must expect that the progress of the trade of our Province will be very rapid in coming years.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—I do not rise with the intention of detaining the House, as my hon. colleague from St. Boniface has so clearly set this question before us, that there is little or nothing left for me to say than to add that I entirely endorse all his statements. I think it is very proper that this question should come before the House, and I am very much pleased to find the sentiments with which the statements of my hon. friend have been met. I do not suppose I can add anything more to what he has said; we all appreciate the importance of the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the parties to whom my hon. colleague has referred in connection with that great enterprise certainly have deserved very great credit. We all know the doubt with which the project was met at its first inception, and I am most happy, as I am sure the House is, to find to-day that the expectations of the most sanguine amongst us at that time, are now more than realized.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—The hon. gentlemen from St. Boniface has brought this important subject before us with his well known ability and candour. If there has been any correspondence, it should be laid before Parliament. Of course we are all most anxious that the Canadian Pacific Railway, which has swollen so largely the public debt of the country, should be at the earliest moment utilized in every possible way and we may indulge without harm in sanguine visions as to our establishing commercial connections in the West with Japan, China and Hong Kong. If they even prove to be sanguine and are not realized there cannot be much harm so long as we do not lead the Dominion to expend too many millions in promoting such objects, especially before such service is required. There is wisdom in inspiring our people with a lofty ambition. No one objects to large expenditures to attain great national objects so long as the views are practical and bringing fruitful results. Now this Railway has been declared to be a great Imperial work and the first Minister (Sir John Macdonald) openly stated at a public meeting that the Imperial Government regarded it of great Imperial value. If this is really the case, I think it will be desirable that such should be announced in both Houses of Parliament at home, and I confess it will be still more satisfactory if they would give us some substantial evidence of that fact by voting a large subsidy to such ocean steamers on the Pacific as have been referred to. The hon. gentleman has stated that he understood that the Imperial Government had granted £100,000 a year for ten years as a subsidy. Where did the hon. gentlemen see that?

HON. MR. MACDONALD (Victoria)—I saw it in the newspapers.

HON. MR. NELSON.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—That is no authority at all, and I do not think we are justified in making such statements on mere rumors published in newspapers. Look at the announcements that have been made through the press during the last two months with regard to the Pacific railway!

HON. MR. KAULBACH—That statement appears in the Globe newspaper, which the hon. gentleman usually considers a good authority.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—The Globe is a paper that has done an immense deal of good to the country, and I do not know what would become of the country if we had not the ability of the Globe, and the fidelity of the Globe and its editors to show up the mal-administration of the Government. In reply to the statement that has been made by the hon. gentleman from Victoria "taken from the papers," what did we see on the 28th March last? That Lord Carnarvon had asked the question in the House of Lords as to whether the British Government had determined to give such assistance as £100,000 for ten years to the Pacific railway, upon which Lord Granville, the Colonial Minister, replied that the Government has not yet been able to form an opinion.

HON. MR. MACDONALD (Victoria)—What is that taken from?

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—From the record of the debates in the House of Lords.

HON. MR. MACDONALD—Is it from a newspaper?

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—It is taken from the London Times; it is not a newspaper statement, it is from the report of the statement of Lord Granville in the House of Lords as published in the London Times.

HON. MR. MACDONALD—But the hon. gentleman does not believe in newspaper statements.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—There is no use in arguing that point at present. All sorts of announcements have been made by the papers and in after-dinner speeches by Sir John A. Macdonald, and amongst other utterances a prominent engineer of the Dominion made the public statement that mails and troops could be carried from Liverpool to Vancouver in 11 or 12 days. Now what good can such statements do? This must be an exaggeration, and it is undesirable that our public men should upon any occasion make such colored statements, which can never help the case. It is possible to force an engine without cars across the country so as to make the trip perhaps in 15 or 16 days; but to make the announcement that mails and troops can be carried from Liverpool to Vancouver in 11 or 12 days is absurd. I have no faith in this sort of statements at all; I do not think they are honestly made, and I do not think any responsible man ought to make them. They never benefit the enterprise. They only do mischief. Do hon. gentlemen, or the people of this country, think that any such statements will have any effect with the practical men of the House of Commons in England? The members of the British House of Commons are practical men; they do nothing in a hurry, and they will make the most careful examination of the figures as to the ocean stretches on the Pacific and Atlantic, and will consider carefully any difficulties that we are likely to encounter in running our inter-oceanic line of railway. They take no action on the mere ipse dixit of an engineer in any part of the world, made for one particular object, but everything is computed on business principles, and that is one of the reasons why the British Government has not yet given an answer—they have not yet been able to weigh that matter with the calmness which they always do before they arrive at a decision. I believe that Gladstone's Government at the present moment do not know what they are going to do with regard to a subsidy for the Pacific Railway. If the leader of the Government can, on official authority, state that it is otherwise, I shall be very glad to know it.

HON. MR. NELSON—I beg to correct the hon. gentleman in one particular. I think the statement is perfectly true that Port Moody can be reached from England on the 12th day, or even on the 11th day. Take the speed of the steamer Oregon, that has lately gone down, and with a steamer like her the distance from Liverpool to Montreal might be made in 6 days. She has made equally great speed, and it is within the range of possibility that more can be done, and we know that from Montreal to Port Moody can be accomplished in five days—possibly less. The distance from New York to San Francisco has been accomplished in five days—in five and a half days certainly, and we have an advantage over the Central Pacific and Northern Pacific routes. From Liverpool to Montreal six days, and from Montreal to Vancouver five days, would make, for the total distance, eleven days.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—As regarding rumors in the paper that the British Government are about to station a large body of troops in the North-West Territories and in British Columbia, so as to be in a position to transport them suddenly to India, every member of this House knows that such rumors breathe more of romance than of reality. Any man who has attended a country school and has acquired a knowledge of the geography that the children of the country schools learn, knows that the statement is simply ridiculous—something like the statement of a Minister of the Crown on one occasion when he said we were prepared to give the last shilling and the last man to assist in the Russian war. If we give the last man how are we going to raise our wheat? What is the use of this romancing? Ministers of the Crown ought to be exceedingly careful that their statements are perfectly true. I do not believe in postprandial statements such as are reported to have been made by some Ministers in England. What would the people of England think of this country if they heard a Minister of the Crown talking of spending the last shilling, and the last man, or talking of taking troops from Liverpool to Vancouver in eleven days? Why they would say that the whole nation was dishonest and untruthful, because the first Minister would be considered as reflecting the opinions of his people. We never heard Gladstone or Lord Granville, or the Lord Chancellor, or any Minister of the Crown in England speak otherwise than truthfully, honorably as to the facts of a case; but our Canadian Government are drifting into such ways and methods that they are not only bringing the country into embarrassment but dragging—

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—I rise to a point of order.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Will the hon. gentleman sit down? I am done.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—Notwithstanding the deprecatory tone which the hon. gentleman from Woodstock assumed during his address, I think it would be only fair to remind him that at his period of life he must be able to carry his recollection back to the practical completion of a vast number of undertakings that were previously regarded as impossibilities. Quite likely this very point on which he now casts a doubt may within the next few years be carried into effect before his eyes. I do not think the hon. member from St. Boniface, who introduced this subject to the House, had any occasion to apologize on account of his supposed inability to do it justice. The question is of the first importance, and I may say that the hon. gentleman did it very full justice, especially when we remember that he was speaking in a language not his own. Having completed this great work, the Pacific Railway, it is of course incumbent on us not to leave it unemployed. Having finished the building and equipping of that road we have now to find work for it, and it seems to me that to have led that road down to the Pacific ocean and to leave it unemployed would be one of the most unwise policies that the Dominion could possibly pursue. I wish this afternoon for a very few moments to call the attention of the House to the character of those countries into connection with which we may be brought by a few days' steaming with the assistance of this great road of ours. There are two old countries, Japan and China. Looking at Japan, to begin with, it is one of the most intelligent and civilized of the Eastern countries. I think nearly twenty years must have elapsed since Japan inaugurated its railway system, and it has since continuously displayed a most remarkable love for literature, science and the introduction of all the useful European arts. One remarkable instance I will relate to the House connected with its own domestic literature, and the literature of Europe. The character of Japanese writing was of the most intricate and difficult description, rendering access to the literature of the country almost impossible to foreigners. The Japanese observing this fact, adopted the ordinary European type, and thus they not only by introducing this into their educational establishments, facilitated the progress of their own scholars in European literature, but they opened the door of their own to those of Europe who wished to study it. That is a remarkable instance of the intelligence of the nation whom we were at one time accustomed almost to regard as barbarians. Their interest in education is also most remarkable. There then is one nation with whom we are almost brought into the contact of near neighborhood by means of the Pacific railway and the fast steamers of the present day. Then, if we take a glance at China, we find that country waking up from a lethargy of ages. She is getting over a great number of those prejudices which so much interfere with her intercourse with foreigners. I see it stated that the food of the Chinese, which used to be principally rice, is now rapidly changing to flour, and the United States of America provide a large quantity for use in China. Here is an instance of what the opening up of routes can do. So long as there were no Pacific railways and no Pacific steamers, the possibility of interchanging rice and flour between the United States and China would have been an utter impossibility. Then we have our own Australian colonies. It is an undoubted fact, and I think all who have read Froude's recent work "Oceana," must be conscious of the fact that the Australian colonies provide a market of the most extensive kind. Although the population is small, they are earning vast annual wages. The returns for profitably employed labor in working of gold mines, the production of fine wools and manufactures of various kinds, are large. It is a remarkable fact which anyone can see for himself who will turn over the pages of "Oceana," that the laboring class earn from 8 to 13 shillings a day, and a population paid at that rate are obviously capable consumers of every description of manufactured goods and luxuries that can be placed before them. These men choose to live in comfortable, well finished buildings, in such buildings as are constructed from the pine easily produced and manufactured in this Dominion. These facts I think ought to encourage us to hope that when steam navigation supplements the completion of our Canadian Pacific Railway, there is a fair prospect open to us for future prosperity in connection with that trade. I wish further, to call attention to the undeniable fact, that if we look back to the history of other countries we find that whatever nation has controlled the trade of the East, has speedily become a wealthy and influential people. Take for instance the Venetian Republic at a very early age. It for a long time held the keys of India, and it became a country of the greatest importance in Europe. It expanded its originally narrow boundaries to a great extent; its flag was flying in all the waters of the Mediterranean and of the civilized world at that time, and the Venetians themselves became well known as a people of intelligence, lovers of fine arts, and for general prosperity in every respect. It may be remembered that our own poet, Byron, spoke of that country in glowing terms. He called her:

... A ruler of the waters and their powers,
And such she was: Her daughters had their dowers
From spoils of nations, and th' "exhaustless east" Pour'd in her lap all gems in sparkling showers.
In purple was she robéd, and of her feasts Monarchs partook, and deemed their dignity increased.

Thus Byron spoke of the "exhaustless east," as he observed it in the history of the Republic of Venice. In the course of time Venice lost her hold of this trade. The discovery of the Cape of Good Hope changed the course of Eastern trade. Thus Venice lost her monopoly. That same traffic then fell into the hands of Holland, the great commercial nation of that date, and she held it for a considerable time until the English superseded her, and, as we all know, the English have held it by one route or other ever since; and long may she hold it. But I do not think the British people are so narrow-minded, so bigoted, or so selfish as to deny to this her youngest child, who has exerted herself in such a fashion as to serve her own as well as Imperial interests, a fair share, or whatever share we can fairly earn of that same eastern traffic. True, that eastern trade is not what it used to be; it is not now what it was in the days of George III., when the nabob merchants made their remittances in jewels, and successful soldiers passed through a native treasury with gold to the height of their shoulders—returning to the Old Country the possessors of immense wealth. Such days are gone. I take it that more peaceful times are before us now, and what they gained by victories and by conquests we have to gain by commerce, and I see no reason why this great Dominion of ours should not take a prominent part in such enterprises. Talking of the possibilities of the Australian trade, we are speaking this evening of establishing of a line of steamers between the terminus of the Pacific Railway and China, and the possibility of those lines of steamers carrying mails from Vancouver to the Australian colonies. That service has been performed for many years via San Francisco and New Zealand, partly by American and partly by English steamers, and the result of the Americans carrying that trade in their own vessels has been evident, if we take up an Australian or New Zealand paper, we will find many American advertisements of agricultural implements and other articles in the manufacture of which our cousins to the south of us excel. This is just an instance of what may be the result of opening up a mail route to the East by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Probably had the American flag not flown on those Pacific steamers, American manufacturers would not have found their way so rapidly into the Australian colonies. I think we can fairly conclude that if once we see established a suitable line of steamers upon the Pacific Ocean, having for their port of departure some place on the coast of British Columbia, we will then have inaugurated a prosperous period for the Dominion. For myself, although

I am politically connected with the Eastern Provinces, I must say I do not begrudge in the least degree whatever prosperity British Columbia or the west of our country may gain through the completion of this great road, believing that our time will come, sooner perhaps than some hon. gentlemen suppose.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I do not think the time of Prince Edward Island can come sooner than everyone in this House hopes for at all events. I think the hon. member from St. Boniface is quite right in believing that the construction of the Pacific Railway will very much alter the course of commerce on this continent. It seems to me that is a prediction which we can safely make. My hon. friend has referred in general terms to the course of business which he thinks is likely to result from it. I think in his remarks he had no occasion to apologize for any want of knowledge of the subject, and as little occasion to apologize for want of knowledge of the English language. He speaks it as perfectly as any of us, and there is this advantage which hon. gentlemen from Lower Canada constantly have, that when they speak in English, somehow or other they always avail themselves of the most useful and apposite word. I have noticed that repeatedly, and my hon. friend from St. Boniface has that advantage over us who speak the English language in the ordinary and common way—my hon. friend speaks it in a most forcible and unusual way. My hon. friend's attention has been drawn to this subject, naturally, by the fact of the Canadian Pacific Railway passing by his door. Amongst the changes which I think may be looked forward to confidently in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway are these: I have no doubt a more rapid communication across the Atlantic will be the early result of the opening of the Pacific Railway. The present communication between Liverpool and Quebec is very good and for the times that have passed quite sufficient, but for the future it is not rapid enough. I have no doubt that we shall see in a very few years a more rapid transit between Liverpool and Quebec. I may say in this connection and it will be of some interest to the House to learn that the Department over which I preside is already, with the sanction of the Government, preparing an advertisement for tenders for a more rapid service between Liverpool and Quebec.

HON. MR. POWER—And Halifax?

HON. SIR. ALEX. CAMPBELL—And Halifax in the winter. The present service averages 12 knots or so an hour. We propose to advertise for a service which will average between 14 and 16 knots. If we have such a service at all—say 14 knots an hour—it is probable that the transit between Liverpool and Quebec or Montreal in the summer, and Liverpool and Halifax in winter can be accomplished in six days. Another arrangement which I think will probably follow, will be the creation of a line of high class steamers between Vancouver and the extreme east. The notice which appeared in the papers to which my hon. friend from Victoria drew attention has not been confirmed by any official communication from the British Government. I do not desire to throw doubt upon its accuracy because of that, since a little time must of necessity elapse before official communications take place. For the most part these communications do not come by telegram. The information to which my hon. friend has referred has come by cable, and I shall look forward with some hope—my hon. friend from St. Boniface uses the word hope and I avail myself of the expression—I express the hope more than any mere confident expression that that information will be confirmed by a communication that will reach us by mail. I know that recently, during the visit of Sir John Macdonald to England he and Sir George Stephen, the President of the Pacific Railway Company, waited upon members of the Government there to urge upon them the advantage of the creation of a mail line of rapid steamers between Vancouver and the extreme east, and they urged on the English Government that it was an essential feature of the scheme that these steamers should be rapid, because they were obliged to compete, in order to succeed, with steamers from San Francisco, which are good and rapid steamers, and therefore it was of no use to advertise, as was done by the Imperial Government, for a service between Vancouver and the east by steamers which could do at least 12 knots an hour. I think that was the advertisement, but I am not quite sure whether it was so much—11 or 12 knots an hour. It was urged by Sir John Macdonald and the President of the Pacific Railway that there was no use in such an advertisement, that that would not bring or keep trade; that what should be advertised for, and the line they should subsidize, was a more rapid line doing 15 or 16 knots an hour. If they advertised for and subsidized such a line then there would be a probability of their being able to compete satisfactorily with steamers running from San Francisco to the extreme east, and I know that view was taken by the late Government, the one preceding Mr. Gladstone's. I hope—again to use my hon. friend's phrase—that the view of the Government expressed in the interview held at that time will be the view of the present Government and that, in order to compete with the line which runs from San Francisco to the east, steamers which will run at least 14 knots an hour will be subsidized. It was suggested to the English Government by Sir John Macdonald (who has one of the most practical minds in all that concerns statesmanship which we ever meet with) that these steamers should be able not only to carry mails but to carry soldiers should need arise, to the extreme east, and therefore it was the concern of the empire more than of this Dominion that such a line of communication should be established. I believe that a great impression was made, and I hope and think that the result will be that a complete communication from Liverpool across the Atlantic to a port on this side, Quebec or Halifax, from there across the continent by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and from there to Hong Kong by rapid ships running at least fourteen knots an hour will be the result and that such a line will be established before long. The suggestion made in England was that a passenger, or Her Majesty's troops, might embark in ships of the character I have mentioned at Liverpool, be transported rapidly across the Atlantic, sent on by rail through Her Majesty's dominions rapidly across the continent, and embark on the other side on ships flying the English flag, and be transported to the extreme East. It was also further suggested that China is now rapidly opening her eyes to the importance of railway communication and that it is quite possible that a railway communication towards Calcutta will be opened through that side of the Asiatic continent. Of what immense advantage such communication, taking the whole of it together, to the Crown and Empire in case of difficulties in India, concurrent with European troubles, is patent to everybody. Instead of being obliged to yield to the difficulties which may present themselves in the use of the Suez Canal, of its possible destruction, the British Empire would be able to avail itself of the sea upon which it is still supreme, of its own territory across the American continent, which it controls, and by ships of its own or flying its own flag, across the Pacific ocean to the extreme east, and thereby be enabled with great facility and at comparatively reasonable expense to at once apply such measures as might be necessary to subdue troubles arising in India, or to meet our foes there. About the course of commerce I am not able to speak with knowledge at all equal to that possessed by others. The commerce of the East coming this way has perhaps been exaggerated in the minds of many. I think so because I happened when in San Francisco one or two years ago to see persons connected with the Pacific Railways coming this way from San Francisco and found that the traffic from the east was not by any means so great as we had been led to suppose here. I found for instance that in San Francisco they had a line of steamships arriving from the extreme east once a fortnight; that these vessels brought only 11 or 12 car loads of cargo intended for the eastern parts of the continent. That is not a very large amount of trade; but it may grow. The business of British Columbia no doubt will increase. I quite agree with my hon. friend from British Columbia that the business of that province will grow and no doubt a vivifying influence from the Pacific Railway will be felt all along its line. A railway cannot run through a country without producing to all about it a beneficial effect, and it cannot fail to increase the population. Such I believe will be the influence of the Pacific Railway in Canada. It has been brought about by the present Government and no one is entitled to credit for it so much as the eminent statesman, Sir John Macdonald.

HON. MR. POWER—I wish to say a very few words before the resolution passes. The hon. Minister who has just sat down has been candid enough to tell us with respect to this Canadian Pacific Railway that it is not likely to have much freight coming this way from the far East. I simply rise for the purpose of adding the further observation that unless the fiscal policy of this country is altered there will be very little export from Canada to the extreme east. Any hon. gentleman who has paid any attention to the Trade and Navigation Returns must have remarked that during the past few years the exports of manufactures from this country have fallen off, and we cannot expect to compete in the markets of Australia, China, and other eastern countries with manufacturers of the United States and England unless our fiscal policy is altered and we are in a position to manufacture as cheaply as our neighbors. (Hear, hear.) Hon. gentlemen do not seem to think that is a grave matter, but I think it is a very serious fact. The hon. gentleman from Marshfield referred particularly to the exportation to Australia from the United States, and he hoped from Canada, of agricultural implements. Now, what is the fact? The fact is that we import largely agricultural implements into this country from the United States, simply because the tariff has been so arranged that we cannot manufacture those articles as cheaply and as well as the United States.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—That is a mistake.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman may say it is a mistake, but we have the evidence of the blue books. What was predicted by gentlemen on this side of the House has happened; the tariff has made our manufactures dear and consequently we cannot export. We may have our own market to ourselves, but we cannot compete in the markets of the world with other countries.

Consequently I do not look, until there has been a considerable change in our fiscal policy, for any very large commercial advantage to arise from the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—We have the same policy as the United States has.

HON. MR. POWER—I was rather struck by the remark made by the leader of the House, that Sir John Macdonald was a very practical business man.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I did not say that.

HON. MR. POWER—That has not been the reputation he has hitherto enjoyed. I was not under the impression that he was known as a practical business man.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I did not say that he was a practical business man. I said that he was a practical man, and I meant in statesmanship.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman referred to the line of steamships to be established on the Pacific, and the practical suggestion which Sir John Macdonald had made with reference to that line.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—As a matter of statesmanship.

HON. MR. POWER—I think it is much more probable that the practical suggestions came from Sir George Stephen, who is very much interested personally in the line being established. Sir John Macdonald has the reputation of being a practical politician; there is no doubt about that. The object of the politician is to remain in power, and Sir John Macdonald has shown great skill in maintaining himself in office, but beyond that I do not think his reputation stands very high. I had hoped that the Minister would have given us some information as to what the government are doing to bring about the result spoken of by the hon. gentleman. It is perfectly true as the Minister said, and as I think he stated, that the Premier had said that the Canadian Pacific Railway, and certainly the lines of steamers connected with it, were more a matter of Imperial than Canadian concern. It strikes me that it was the imperative duty of this Government to urge on the British Government the claim of Canada to Imperial assistance, if not in connection with the railway, certainly with the line of steamers which was to be put on more for the benefit of the empire than of Canada; and I must express my regret that we had nothing at all from the Minister—outside of the conversation which he said the Premier had with the Imperial authorities in England—to indicate that the Government had done anything to bring about the result which we all so much desire.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—What could be more earnest than the Premier's voyage across the Atlantic and waiting on the Imperial Government to present the subject to their notice? All the dispatches in the world could not be as effective as a personal interview of that kind.

HON. MR. POWER—That would have been true perhaps if there had been no change of Government in England; but the effect produced on the late ministry by Sir John Macdonald's conversation would not necessarily affect their successors in office, while the dispatches would be there for reference no matter who held office.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—What communications have past since then would appear. How could Sir John Macdonald know that there was going to be a change of Government in England? He could not know that. He made the proper representations to those who were in power at the time of his visit to England. What has since been done the papers will show. I would ask the hon. member from St. Boniface to alter the motion so as to include communications between the Government here and the Agent General.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Before this debate closes I feel it my duty to say a few words. All the other representatives from the far west have spoken, and for fear my silence might indicate a lack of appreciation of the great line of railway which has just been completed, or practically completed, and of this projected line of steamers between the Western terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway and Asiatic ports, I feel called upon to say something on the subject. I sincerely hope and trust that the negotiations that were entered into or, I should have said, the conversation Sir John and Sir George had with members of the Home Government, was very likely to lead to negotiations which would result in a large Imperial subsidy being granted to a line of steamers on the Pacific in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway. The statement made by the leader of the House about the Asiatic trade in connection with the Central Pacific Railway, corroborates the statement I made to the House some time ago. I took the liberty last year when the Canadian Pacific Railway Bill was before the House, to mention that the Asiatic trade which was expected to be attracted by the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway was not of that magnitude or of that importance that very many people in the Eastern Provinces supposed it would be, or the Government and Canadian Pacific Railway Company would lead the public to believe. I have heard a great deal and read a great deal about the enormous Asiatic and Australian trade that was likely to be attracted by the Canadian Pacific Railway, owing to its shortness, and superior character, and I have paid a little attention to the question for the last year or two, and I am forced to the conclusion that the existing trade, or any trade that is likely to be developed in the near future, between the Orient and the Occident, will be very small indeed, and will not contribute much to the support of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The only articles that will bear transportation via the Canadian Pacific Railway are some of the superior grades of tea, silks, dye-stuffs and medicines. Now the contract with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, which was largely subsidized by the United States Government and, I believe, by Australia, to carry the mails between those two countries, expired a year ago last March, and so unremunerative was that trade that the Steamship Company could not be induced to renew their contract. I mention this in order to show that the great trade which the Pacific Railway Company appear to expect from the extreme East is not likely to be realized. There is another thing also which in my opinion will militate very much against that trade. No doubt every hon. gentleman is aware that the Panama Canal is well under way and is likely to be completed within the next two or three years. If that canal should be completed and I think there is no doubt it will be within the time I mention, it will revolutionize the commerce of that portion of the world. However, from the Imperial stand point, I was very much pleased to hear the able and patriotic remarks made by the hon. gentleman who introduced this motion. In fact the most of his able speech was more appropriate to be delivered in the House of Commons in England than here. That portion of it I fully and thoroughly endorse and I sincerely hope, as I said before, that not only will the proposed line of steamers between British Columbia and China, Japan, and Australia succeed, but I also hope sincerely that the Canadian Pacific Railway itself will be a success financially. However, I do not think that the people of this country are justified in expecting any great amount of trade and assistance to come from the extreme East. That road will have to depend, in my humble judgement, for its success on the settlement of the great North West and British Columbia. Upon that they must depend to make their road pay running expenses. However, I do not wish to take a very gloomy view of the future of the Canadian Pacific Railway for fear I should be charged, as I was unjustly once before in this House, with being unpatriotic and decrying the country. However, I feel it to be my duty to state that I do not believe the trade that will be attracted by this line of steamers will warrant the sanguine hopes and glowing anticipations persistently indulged in by our daily press. Such statements will be found to be misleading, and eventually do more harm than good.

The contemplated line of steamers will be of the greatest Imperial importance, and of great convenience and importance to the Dominion.

The motion was amended to include correspondence with the Agent General, and adopted.

THE SENATE DEBATES.

MOTION.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—moved That the contract with the Messrs. Holland Brothers be changed, enlarged and extended to enable the Hansard Debates of the Senate to be sent to the County and Local Papers and other parties throughout the Dominion.

He said—Believing that the majority of this House approve of this motion I simply move it without making any remarks.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I do not think that the resolution ought to pass the House, probably not at all, but certainly not until a statement is laid before the House of what the proposed extension will cost. The papers that are published weekly or fortnightly, which this resolution is supposed to favor, can, I think, readily get copies of the debates if they choose to ask for them. Each member receives five copies, and I do not think there can be any difficulty in having the weekly papers supplied. If the House is to furnish them, then we ought to know how many weekly and fortnightly papers there are, and see what it will cost. The notice of motion is very large. I think it would be far better if there had been an inquiry as to what the cost would be. I hope the House will not grant the motion until we know what the cost will be of this proposed increase.

HON. MR. ALMON—I quite agree with the leader of the House. We receive five copies each. I send three of mine to my friends, and I have two remaining, which I do not know what to do with. I am like the old patriarch, Job, who wished his enemy had written a book: I wish to Heaven I could find some one who would undertake to read my copies of the debates.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I quite agree with what has fallen from the leader of the House, that it is not wise to “go it blind” and pass a resolution of this kind without knowing what the results will be. But I oppose it for another reason: This whole question has been committed by the House to the Debates Committee, and therefore it is trifling with our time to bring the question here.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—My hon. friend has anticipated what I was going to say with regard to the question before the House, but independent of that there are hundreds of these papers sent away all over the country now. There are seventy-seven members in this House who receive five copies each, and the two hundred and eleven members of the House of Commons are also supplied. These copies are distributed all over the country, and I am sure there is not a newspaper in any of the provinces that is not supplied with copies of our debates, either through members of this House or through the representatives of this province.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—There is another view to take of this question, and it is this—that before such a change is made, there is another increase in this connection which should suggest itself to the favorable consideration of the House. According to the constitutional law of the country, the French members have the right to ask for a translation of the reports of the debates into French. We have not done so, and I do not propose to ask for it now, because I know that it would largely increase the expenditure, and as I believe that it is most important for the country at large that we should have an official record of the utterances of the members of this House, I think it better not to press for a French translation that would cause so large an increase of the expenditure. If the hon. gentleman was serious in proposing this resolution, I would move an amendment in the direction I have indicated, but I do not think the hon. gentleman is in earnest, as it is well known that the newspapers that are desirous of publishing those reports can easily obtain them.

HON. MR. DEBOUCHERVILLE—I have some information on this subject which may be of interest to the House. There are four hundred and sixty-four weekly, and about forty semi-weekly and tri-weekly newspapers published in the country, and to supply each of them with a copy of the Debates would involve an increase of the daily edition from seven hundred up to twelve hundred copies, which would involve an additional outlay of some four or five hundred dollars. The Committee have had no demands from any other papers for the Debates, and it is not considered advisable to incur this increased outlay.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—When we consider that we are paying $7,000 for reporting and publishing the debates of the Senate of the Dominion, it must be the desire of every member of the House that a knowledge of what transpires here shall reach the great body of the people. Now you may traverse every Province, and every county in each Province, and you will scarcely find one individual who ever know anything of the public action of the Senate. I have always maintained that we ought to extend and widen the circulation of the reports of our debates to the county and local papers, and have we not found, within the last three days, two senators state publicly on the floor of the House, that they had letters from their constituents making the complaint that they never could learn anything of what transpired here? Do hon. gentlemen not desire that the Senate shall stand high in public estimation, and how will it stand high in public estimation if the people have no means of knowing what are the utterances of the members on the floor of this House on questions of public interest?

HON. MR. POWER—I should think it would stand just as high in the estimation of the people if some utterances on the floor of this House were not reported.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—It is just the sort of remark I should expect to fall from a gentleman of his order of mind—an old member of Parliament who ought to feel that the people are desirous of knowing what is transpiring in this House. We do not publish the Debates for our own reading. We fiddle away thousand of dollars every year, and while we spend millions every year in the public service, for the sake of an extra paltry thousand dollars we would deprive the people of the country of a knowledge of what transpires in Parliament. Is that the character of the hon.

gentleman from Amherst? I have observed the course which he has pursued for many years as a member of that Committee. I refer to it, because he is just the kind of gentleman always put on the Committee to prevent information from going to the people.

HON. MR. GOWAN—I rise to a question of order. It is really too bad that the time of the House should be occupied in listening to a personal assault on a member of this House. The last remark that was made by the hon. gentleman from Woodstock is, I think, utterly uncalled for. I feel an interest in not having the time of the House wasted while measures are to be considered, and as no other member has interfered I rise to call the hon. gentleman to order.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER.—I rise to an explanation.

THE SPEAKER—A point of order having been raised, I desire to state, and I have stated it frequently, although no attention has been paid to it, that the hon. gentleman is bound to take his seat, and cannot again address the House without leave. That rule applies not only to the hon. gentleman from Woodstock, but to every member of this House. I desire to say, with respect to the point of order raised by the hon. gentleman from Barrie, that the hon. member from Woodstock was out of order in saying that the hon. gentleman from Cumberland was in the habit of being put on committees for improper purposes.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I would ask leave of the House to say that the hon. gentleman from Barrie seems more qualified to rise to points of order than to discharge any other duty before the House.

HON. MR. FLINT—I am not surprised at anything that falls from my hon. friend from Woodstock. I think, however, that as regards the question of furnishing information to those papers that do not receive them, it would be a good thing if it could be done without too much expense. But I would like to ask the hon. gentleman from Woodstock, as he receives a number of copies of the debates every day, what he does with them? Does he send them to those papers, or does he not? If he does not send them to the papers why does he not do so? If he wishes to give information which he thinks necessary, he should endeavor, as far as he can, to inform those in his own particular riding. If he neglects to do that he has no reason to complain because the House does not see fit to incur extra expense for the purpose of furnishing them. Does the hon. gentleman desire that the debates should have larger circulation, for the sake of giving the people throughout the country an idea of the number of speeches that he makes here, and the personal attacks that he makes on members of the Senate? If that is the object of the hon. gentleman, I think it is better it should be opposed, because in my opinion it would only make the hon. gentleman more of a laughing stock than anything else. I am sorry to have to speak in the way I do in reference to this matter. I wish to be friendly with the hon. gentleman, I try to be, and I try to advise him from time to time in reference to these matters, but he does not seem inclined to take my advice. If he will give us his views on any subject of public interest, which I know he could do in an able manner if it were not for his erratic disposition and his desire to attack somebody, he would certainly do a great deal of good for the country. But instead of that he cannot speak unless he slaps into some person, and if it is not the Postmaster General it is Sir John Macdonald or the hon. member from Amherst, or some other member who must take a tongue-lashing every time the hon. gentleman gets up. I am sorry this is the case, and I do hope he will not do it any more. We have every desire to listen to what he has to say on public questions, but when he comes down to personal abuse it is high time to stop it, and I wish there was some way to induce the hon. gentleman, if it is in his power, to address this House without using the violent language that he does from time to time. I should like to see every paper in the country have a copy of our official report, but it seems to me it cannot be done without considerable extra expense. It is true that it would be a very small amount in comparison with other expenses, but the question arises, if the papers do get the reports will they publish them? The putting them into the hands of the editors of the newspapers does not give them publicity as long as the editors do not see fit to publish them. Even the daily papers pay very little attention to what goes on in the Senate. Occasionally you find a paper publishing something that the hon. gentlemen from Woodstock has said and endeavoring to make a little fun of it, but that is all; they do not pay any attention to it. Our debates have not the same interest to the public as those of the House of Commons. In the other House the members are responsible to the people, and the public like to see what they are doing, what are the questions likely to come before them in the next election, and what subjects have been brought before the House by their representatives. In conclusion I would say that the hon. gentleman should recollect, when he gets on his feet, to treat his fellow members with respect, if he does so he will stand high in the estimation of the House, and in the estimation of the public also.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I rise to explain.

HON. MEMBERS—Order! Order! Chair! Chair?

The motion was declared lost.

BRITISH TROOPS IN THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. GIRARD enquired whether the Government have any knowledge or information of the intention of the Imperial Government stationing troops in British Columbia or the North-West Territories, so as to be in more convenient readiness for service in India or elsewhere in the East, when regular steamship communication is established to connect with the Pacific terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I can only give my hon. friend an answer in the negative. There is no information on that subject.

FAITHFUL COMPANIONS OF JESUS, BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. GIRARD moved the second reading of Bill (No. 32) "An Act to incorporate a community of religious ladies under the name of the Sisters Faithful Companions of Jesus." He said: The object of this Bill is to incorporate a community of religious ladies whose object is the instruction of youth and the practice of works of Christian charity. They ask for just such powers as have been granted to other communities of a similar kind.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

CALVIN COMPANY BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. SULLIVAN moved the second reading of Bill (53) "An Act to incorporate the Calvin Company (limited)." He said: The object of this Bill is to facilitate the winding up of the estate of the late D. D. Calvin of Garden Island, Ont., and to enable the heirs of the estate to carry on and extend the business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

COLONIAL BANK OF CANADA BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. MCKAY moved the second reading of Bill (60) "An Act to incorporate the Colonial Bank of Canada." He said: This Bill is to incorporate a new Bank having its head quarters in Montreal. There is nothing particularly new in the Bill, it is almost word for word the same as charters that we have frequently passed in this House incorporating other banks.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

HON. SIR. ALEX. CAMPBELL.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (18) "An Act to incorporate the Anglo-Canadian Bank." (Mr. Dickey).

The Senate adjourned at 5:45 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Monday, April 12th, 1886.

The Speaker took the Chair at three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine proceedings.

VITAL STATISTICS.

THE SPEAKER presented a Return of of baptisms, marriages and burials in the district of Gaspé during the year of 1885.

HON. MR. DEBOUCHERVILLE—May I be allowed to make a suggestion with reference to these Returns?

THE SPEAKER—With the permission of the House.

HON. MR. DEBOUCHERVILLE—Would it not be right to inform those municipalities that they are not bound to send these reports? A few municipalities in the Province of Quebec, I see, send reports thinking they are obliged to do so. It gives them some trouble and causes them some expense. Would it not be proper for the Clerk of the House to write to them and inform them that they should send those reports to the Local Government and not here?

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Yes, I think that might be done. There is no obligation to send those reports. It involves a good deal of trouble and expense. If the House agrees, I see no reason why they should not be notified that it is not necessary to send these returns here.

THE SPEAKER—Is it the wish of the House that I so instruct the Clerk?

The suggestion was adopted.

TERMS OF UNION WITH PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE enquired

Whether any letters, telegrams, Minutes of Council, or Memorials, have been received by the Government of the Dominion, from the Local Government of Prince Edward Island, or any deputation from that body, since the 1st January last, on the subject of the fulfillment of the terms of Confederation between that Province and the Dominion, and, if so, whether the Government object to lay the same on the Table of this House, together with the replies made thereto; also, whether any letters or telegrams on the same subject from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, bearing date since January 1st, 1886, have been received, and, if so, whether the Government will lay them on the Table of this House, together with any replies which may have been made thereto?

He said: I put the subject to which this motion refers in the form of a question rather than an address for papers, because I was uncertain as to whether there were any such papers in existence. It is therefore only necessary for me to make the enquiry.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I cannot give my hon. friend the complete satisfaction that I would like to give him, because the correspondence which has been going on between the Government of Prince Edward Island and this Government is not yet concluded. There are papers such as the hon. gentleman describes; I do not know the exact character of them, whether they are letters or minutes of council, but there are papers which have passed between the two Governments. A deputation came up here and made certain representations to the Privy Council. They were asked to put their views in writing which they did, and that paper is one which might ultimately be brought down. They then decided, I believe, to represent their views to the Imperial authorities, and letters were given to them, either then or subsequently, to give them the opportunity of making their views known to the Colonial Office. Since their return to Prince Edward Island we have had no representations from them, but we believe that the correspondence is not yet concluded, and therefore we think it would be prejudicial to the interests concerned to bring them down or to make known their contents. That is the answer I give my hon. friend just now. Should anything occur hereafter which would enable us to bring down those papers, without prejudice to the public services, they will be produced.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I learn to-day that the legislature of Prince Edward Island has met, and that the announcement is made in the Speech from the Throne that the papers, if any such exist, will be brought down. When I made this motion I was not aware that the legislature would meet quite so soon. I was under the impression that some delay would be likely to take place, and I therefore put this enquiry on the paper.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Has my hon. friend any authentic information that the papers to which he refers have been brought down by the Government of Prince Edward Island to the Legislature there?

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—Nothing further than the announcement in the Lieutenant Governor's Speech than they will be brought down.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—If we are to understand that no further correspondence with us is intended, there can be no objection to bring them down, but I have had no reason to believe that the correspondence is completed. Perhaps my hon. friend will allow the motion to stand, and we will know in the course of a few days whether the correspondence has reached such a stage that it can be laid on the table.

The motion was allowed to stand.

SEIZURE OF DYNAMITE AT HALIFAX.

MOTION.

HON. MR. POWER moved—

That a humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that he will cause to be laid before this House, copies of of all communications between the Dominion Government, or any Department or officer thereof, and any person whomsoever, respecting certain dynamite imported into Halifax, Nova Scotia, during the year 1885, by Messieurs H. H. Fuller & Co., and seized by the Customs authorities for alleged under-valuation.

He said, with the permission of the House, I should like to add the following words to the resolution, "and also of all certificates and other documents accompanying such communications." Messrs. Fuller & Co. are a very respectable firm of hardware merchants doing a large business in Halifax, and are extensive importers. In the spring of 1885, in the month of April, this firm imported 200 cases of dynamite from German manufacturers at Düsseldorf. The goods were shipped in the steamer "Dentholme" at Hamburg and landed at Halifax. The dynamite was invoiced at 90 shillings sterling per 100 pounds, and the importers paid duty at that rate in the regular way, the duty amounting to $938. Afterwards, owing to representations, as I have understood not from the officers in Halifax but from some other source, those goods were seized by the Customs authorities for undervaluation, and there has been a long correspondence in connection with this seizure in which different parties have taken part; and I propose to call the attention of the House to some of the correspondence which has come to my knowledge. In the first place, it may be well to state very briefly what the law of the Customs is in this matter. Those goods were seized on the allegation that they were entered below their value. The Dominion Appraiser, whose decision governed the matter, held that the goods instead of being invoiced at 90 shillings per 100 pounds should have been invoiced at 130 shillings. I shall read the law so that hon. members will understand the point in question:—

"The fair market value of all goods, wares and merchandise imported into Canada shall be understood to be the ordinary wholesale price at which the same are sold for home consumption in the country where they are purchased or manufactured."

"It shall be the duty of the Appraiser of Canada or of the Collector of Customs to ascertain, estimate and appraise the true and fair market value and wholesale price of the merchandise at the time of exportation, and in the principal markets of the country where the same has been imported into Canada."

From this it will be seen that the rate to be ascertained was the market value in Germany at the time that the goods were invoiced to this country. After the goods were seized, and the importers were notified of the seizure of the goods, there was a correspondence as to the exact nature of which I cannot speak. Then there was a letter from the London agents of the German manufacturers covering a certificate from the British Consul at Düsseldorf, and with the permission of the House I shall read the certificate. Düsseldorf is near the place of manufacture:—

"I, Thomas Robert Mulvany, Her Britannic Majesty's Consul at Düsseldorf, do hereby certify that a number of letters of contracts closed for 1885 have been produced at this Consulate by the Rhenish Dynamitfabrik at Opladen, near Coeln, for supply of dynamite of superior quality, also returns of sales made through agents in England, and that according to said authentic documents prices obtained ranged, during this year, from 70 shillings to 90 shillings, and only in two exceptional cases from 96 shillings to 112 shillings per 100 lbs. English. That on the average, prices obtained so far have been 85 shillings per 100 lbs. English, franco place of consumption. I do further certify that, according to information I have obtained from consumers, therefore quite independent sources, superior dynamite can now be obtained franco place of consumption, at 84 shillings to 86 shillings per 100 lbs. English. Taking into consideration that the prices named are, in many cases, for small quantities, which have often to be transported across country very considerable distances, per cart and horse at great expense and that the dynamite, 200 cases, forward by the Rhenish Dynamitfabrik per SS. "Dentholme" bound from Hamburg to Halifax in April last being a consignment, has not been undervalued at 90 shillings per 100 lbs. English, which under this circumstance, is a fair value at which to levy duty. In witness whereof, I have hereto set my hand and consular seal at Düsseldorf, this 30th day of July.

(Signed) THOMAS ROBERT MULVANY."

That was one piece of evidence furnished to the Department, and there was a letter from the agents of the manufacturers, and also a letter dated 23rd of July from the secretary of the New Albion Gold Mining Company of London to a gentleman in Halifax offering No. 1 dynamite at 90 shillings. As far as I can gather, the difficulty in this case did not arise with the officials in Halifax, but with some other parties. The communications that I have mentioned, and this certificate, and I think some other communications, were forwarded to the Minister of Customs. The Minister handed these documents over to Mr. Fraser, the Chief Appraiser, and Mr. Fraser made a report on the 1st of September to the effect that they would not change his decision, and that the goods should have been invoiced at 130 shillings per 100 pounds instead of 90 shillings. That decision was not satisfactory, and further correspondence took place. It may be noted that Mr. Fraser, in this case, to a certain extent acted as a Court of Appeal from his own decision. The appeal of the parties was not to Mr. Fraser but to the Minister. After being informed of this decision, the importers wrote to the Minister of Customs, and the first letter to which I shall refer as coming from them is one dated the 17th of September, 1885. From that I shall read the following extract:—

“We are in receipt of your favor of 4th inst. acknowledging ours of 20th Aug. with affidavits, &c., and regret to observe that they were referred to the Dominion Appraiser, as he had already decided as to the value of the explosive. We were in hopes that an appeal from him to the Minister, supported by such testimony as we could furnish would have been sufficient to convince you that the Appraiser's valuation was not tenable.”

That letter, I should have said, was forwarded before Messieurs Fuller & Co. got word of the Appraiser's second decision. In reply to that the Minister of Customs wrote to the importers as follows:—

“I have yours of 17th inst., and note that you object to my reference of your case as submitted to me to the Dominion Appraiser.

You will readily understand that it was impossible for me to come to a decision in a question of the kind without calling to my aid such evidence as the Appraiser had, and which, he considered, justified the demand for duty on a higher value of the explosives; and when he presented to me evidence of a higher rate from the firm, the only course left me was to submit the facts to you.”

Naturally, that was not satisfactory, because, as I said before, and as the importers had mentioned, they had appealed from the Appraiser's decision; and it does not seem to be in the usual course of business that an official should be appointed to hear and decide an appeal from his own decision; and further correspondence took place. The next extract I shall read is from a letter dated October 10th, 1885, from the German manufacturers to the Minister of Customs. In the beginning of their letter these gentlemen are very respectful; they address the Minister as “Right Hon. Sir Bowell, Minister of Customs, Ottawa.” They say:—

“We received from our London Agent a copy of the report which the Dominion Appraiser, Mr. Wm. H. Fraser, has addressed to Your Excellency on the 1st September re seizure of dynamite at Halifax.

In this report is stated that after a cablegram, and also a letter from one of the largest manufacturing companies, a combination of British and German manufacturers of explosives have adopted a uniform price for Great Britain and the Continent, and that £130 per ton is the ordinary price.

We should be glad to know the name of the competing company who has made these false communications only in the intention to injure our company; we should immediately sue them at law. That company was doubtless aware of their falsehood, for everybody who is selling dynamite knows that only for some markets various combination prices ruling, but that never a uniform price for Great Britain and the European Continent has been adopted. Further, every dynamite dealer knows that the Dominion of Canada is not included in the list of convention markets; also, that in Germany everywhere 75 per cent. dynamite can be obtained at a lower rate than 90 shillings per 100 lbs. English weight, and that we are therefore much satisfied when we later obtain indeed such net proceeds of the dynamite which we have consigned to an open market.

We are irritated that the affidavit of Her Britannic Majesty's Consul at Düsseldorf (see enclosed copy), the Hon. Mr. Thomas Mulvaney, which has been submitted by our Halifax Agents, Messrs. H. H. Fuller & Co., and which certifies after many careful enquiries that our consignment has not been undervalued at 90 shillings per 100 lbs., could be belied by the malevolent communication of any competing company.

If necessary we shall claim the intervention of the Halifax German Consul, and even of Reichskanzler, the Prince of Bismarck, but we confide in the love of justice of Your Excellency that these measures will be superfluous, and that you will command the immediate restitution of the goods and of all expenses that are incurred by the unmerited seizure.”

These gentlemen use strong language; but perhaps it is not to be wondered at. Then, there is another communication from the same company, dated 13th October, also addressed “Right Hon. Sir Bowell,” which I shall read to the House:—

"We beg to confirm our letter of the 10th instant, meanwhile we received from the Nobel's Explosives Company, Limited, at Glasgow, the enclosed telegram, wherein they state :

"We sent no telegram or letter to Canadian Appraiser, but we understand, your German price was about ninety pounds, at which you would be entitled to invoice.
"Letter follows.

NOBEL."

This telegram is the reply of the Nobel's Company to a letter, wherein we had informed them of the seizure of our 200 cases Dynamite and wherein we requested their assistance in order to cause the restitution of the goods.

The announced letter to our Company will explain the refusal to confirm also to the Dominion Appraiser by letter and telegram that the German price does never exceed 90 pounds per 2,000 lbs., but from the telegram itself your Excellency will be sufficiently convinced, that as the largest competing Company certifies that we have not undervalued our shipment to Messrs. H. H. Fuller & Co. at Halifax, we have been much wronged."

I shall next read an extract from Nobel's letter, which is referred to in their telegram. It is addressed to the manufacturers in Germany :—

"We are in receipt of your favor of 10th inst., and have to-day telegraphed you as per enclosed copy. We were certainly not appealed to by the Appraiser of Customs in Canada in reference to your shipment to Halifax, and we are not therefore 'the largest manufacturing company' who are stated to have telegraphed and written to that official on 6th August. Our own impression was that your convention price in Germany was about £90 per ton, and if therefore you have invoiced at that price and the Customs insist on pricing the dynamite at £130 per ton, we think you have a very good case against them."

They send the German Company an extract from the Dominion Law which I have already read, and go on to say :—

"From the foregoing it is perfectly evident that you are quite entitled to invoice the dynamite at the current rates chargeable in Germany. We note from the letter addressed by the Dominion Appraiser to the Minister of Customs that the former official appears to be under the impression that the fixed price of £130 per ton rules both in Great Britain and Germany. As to this you ought to find no difficulty in convincing him that he is entirely wrong."

I think that that letter, coming from a company competing with the Rhenish Dynamite Company ought at least to have carried conviction, even had there been no other evidence, but it did not. I shall next read a short extract from a letter from Messrs. Kraftmeier, of London, the agents of the German Dynamite Co., addressed to the importers in Halifax. I presume that Messrs. Kraftmeier had called the attention of the High Commissioner in London to this matter, and they mentioned what the High Commissioner's opinion was. The letter says :—

"The High Commissioner assured us that the Canadian Government had no intention whatever to hamper the importation of foreign manufactures, and that, on the contrary, the Government would be only too glad to help the mining and railway industry by putting the same into a position to obtain dynamite at lower prices than hitherto. If the Government does not do us justice in this matter our works are fully determined to claim the intervention of the German Government, but we trust this will not be necessary.

It is certainly strange that the Minister of Customs and the Appraiser seem not to have taken the slightest notice of the certificate given by Her Majesty's consul at Düsseldorf, to the effect that after careful enquiries he had ascertained that the value of dynamite is not higher than 90s. per 100 lbs. This certificate should be pressed upon the attention of the authorities there; they are in duty bound to attach higher importance to the same, than to the statement of a competing company, which naturally has an interest in keeping us out of the market and not allow consumers the opportunity of getting the dynamite at lower prices than hitherto.

The best way to avoid similar difficulties in future would be for the Canadian Government to fix a duty of — cents per lb., which is the method adopted in most other countries where duties are levied."

The next communication is one from the importers at Halifax, dated 30th October, and addressed to the Minister of Customs :—

"We wrote you last 17th ult., and had your reply 22nd id. We are just in receipt of a communication from the London agents of The Rhenish Dynamite Company enclosing copies of letters addressed to you by the principal House at Opladen, under dates 10th and 13th inst. These certainly seem to us very conclusive evidence, though rather, strongly put, that your Appraiser's department have allowed themselves to err in the question at issue, under the influence, we fancy, of misrepresentation from some inimical source. We hope to learn at your early convenience, that your good judgment has led you to the same conclusion and that you will cause definite instructions to be at once issued in the premises."

The Minister answered that in a letter of the 2nd November, and said :—

"I have your favor of the 30th ultimo, and by the same mail received a number of documents from the High Commissioner's office in reference to the value of dynamite, but have not had time to give the matter the attention it deserves; and, as my Chief Appraiser is absent, I fear it will be a few days before I shall be able to decide the question."

Then there is a letter from Kraftmeier's of London, dated 12th Nov., from which I shall read an extract simply to show the action of the High Commissioner:—

"In the meantime the High Commissioner of Canada has written the Minister of Customs there on this matter, enclosing him a letter of Messrs. Nobel's (Glasgow) to our Works, in which they substantiate our statement that 90s. per 190 lbs. is the market price for dynamite in Germany, etc., etc., and we had hoped that his letter would have had the desired effect and caused him to release our dynamite."

I shall now read a short extract from the same parties' letter of the 26th November:—

"Our Works are now thoroughly disgusted with the delay caused by the Customs there, and in consequence have placed the matter in the hands of the Foreign Office at Berlin and the German Consul at Halifax."

So that hon. gentlemen will see that the matter ceased to be a private matter, when it got into the hands of the German foreign office. On the 29th December the importers at Halifax, not having heard anything from the Minister of Customs, wrote him asking to know what the result of their application was; and on the 15th January last the Minister wrote them the following note:—

"On receipt of yours of 29th ult., I again referred the question of the seizure of dynamite to my Appraiser, and beg to enclose you his reply."

This is the Appraiser's final decision:—

"I have the honor to report in reference to the letter handed to me by you, and in compliance with your instructions I have carefully gone over all the correspondence in this case, and also of similar correspondence on same class of goods imported at other ports, and I cannot see that I would be justified in modifying or altering my report of Sept. 1st, 1885. A cablegram and other documentary evidence sustains said report, and justifies the decision arrived at by the Commissioner in this case."

It does not appear that the Appraiser had taken any pains to secure further information after making his first report, and I think it must strike every hon. gentleman that it is a most singular way to transact public business—that where an importer appeals from the decision of the Dominion Appraiser the appeal is to be decided by that officer. The natural inclination of the officer is to uphold his first decision. I think after the correspondence that I have taken the liberty of reading to the House, and other documents which are not before us are considered, one would suppose that the Minister of Customs would have done something else than to refer the whole matter for a final decision to this same officer. I think it is a complete denial of justice to the importer, and a violation of all principles of justice, common sense and law. The appeal was from Mr. Fraser's decision, and it is an extraordinary and unprecedented course of proceeding that the appeal should be submitted to the very man from whose decision it was taken. I make no charge against Mr. Fraser but we know the construction to which his conduct is open. I know that in Halifax there were people who thought that, as some of the other dealers in dynamite who export their goods to Canada were capitalists, there was really nothing at all to hinder an officer from acting for a consideration, as a friend of the competing company.

I do not say that that is the case at all. I only say that the conduct of the officer leaves him open to that suspicion in the minds of people who are interested on the other side—the people who have suffered. I think that the Government must see that the mode of procedure adopted in the Customs Department is not one that is calculated to give satisfaction. In this case the people who are competing with this German Company are not home manufacturers, but they are other manufacturers abroad; and I think it is the duty of the Government to give equal justice to all outsiders; and even if there were parties manufacturing dynamite in Nova Scotia or in other parts of Canada, it would still be the duty of the Government to see that the importers got fair play. They are just as deserving a class as the manufacturers. They employ a great many men and contribute largely to the revenue. The Government put a very considerable duty on dynamite—in fact a high duty—and I think they ought to be satisfied with getting that duty and giving the importers fair play. It is clear that in this case,— that is as far as we can see—the importers have not had fair play. I may mention that they paid the increased duty and have abandoned the idea of importing further. The consequence is that the business of the port of Halifax suffers to a certain extent, and the miners and other people in Nova Scotia who use dynamite suffer also, because they do not get the article as cheaply as they would have got it if this importation had been continued. I may say although I am not going to enlarge on it, that there is an impression in the lower provinces that in the matter of the imposition of customs duties they suffer, as compared with Montreal and other upper ports. It has been shown pretty clearly by prominent merchants in Halifax over their own signatures that the same grade of sugar pays in Halifax a higher duty than in Montreal; and the natural tendency of that policy and of the policy that appears to have been adopted in the present case is to drive business from Halifax, and I presume from St. John and other lower province ports, and to compel people to import through Montreal. I do not think that is the desire of the Government: it certainly should not be.

I do not know the mode of procedure usually adopted, but it occurs to me that a case of this kind involving a very important principle, which was considered important enough to be referred to the foreign office in Berlin, was important enough to be referred by the Minister to the Treasury Board here; or that if the Minister did not wish to do that, he should have done what the importers desired in the first instance—he should have looked at the evidence for himself and taken his Appraiser's decision only as evidence in the case but not as decisive, and then given his own decision. If he was not able to make up his own mind, then I think the matter should have been considered by the Treasury Board and the question settled for good. One reason why this matter has been brought before the attention of the Government now is that the importers in Halifax are naturally anxious to know whether the Customs Department will continue to act as they have acted in this case, or whether they will allow goods honestly imported at the fair market value of the country in which they are manufactured to come into Halifax, as I imagine they come to other ports. I beg to move the resolution, with the addition which I have here—"and also of all certificates and other documents accompanying such communications." I may add that we do not want the papers which we already have, but the cablegram and other papers which have not been sent to the importers.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Will my hon. friend give me the list of papers which he has not, or of the papers which he desires to have?

HON. MR. POWER—I can give a list of the papers I have.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—The Government have no objection whatever to the papers being brought down and the fullest information placed before the House. I think my hon. friend in making the motion should have been careful not to cast imputations upon this officer, who, he says, leaves himself open to suspicion that he may have been influenced by money considerations to deal with this matter in the way he has done. That is a very grave suggestion to make, and one which I hope my hon. friend has not made without having more ground for it than anything he has stated to the House. This officer's character stands very high and is as precious to him as my hon. friend's character is to himself. I apprehend that he is far above giving a decision on any business transaction on the ground which my hon. friend or other people suspect him of having done. Then my hon. friend, too, is wrong in supposing that there has been any discrimination, either knowingly or without care being taken to prevent its being made, against any port of the Dominion in the entry or valuation of goods. The desire of the Government—the desire of any Government—must be that the Customs House transactions should be conducted on the same basis, and that the valuations should be uniform at all ports in the country. Every effort has been made by this Government and, I am sure, by our predecessors, to attain that result. My hon. friend says there is a suspicion in Halifax that goods are entered in Montreal or the west on better terms than at Halifax. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that there is a suspicion in the West that the reverse of this obtains, and that goods are entered at Halifax, notably sugars, on better terms than in the West. These suspicions are without foundation, I believe, on both sides. With reference to sugars, a complaint of this kind was made by Mr. Jones, formerly in the other House, and occupying, I believe, the position of Chairman of the Board of Trade of Halifax, and an investigation took place. It was established, beyond all controversy, I think, by the very best tests that could be used, that the valuation in Halifax was based upon precisely the same ground as the valuation of sugars elsewhere. There was no unfair or any other difference between the valuations there and elsewhere. I am persuaded that, so far as the exercise of care and industry can go, the valuations at one port are on the same basis as the valuations at other ports. If we take my hon. friend's statement as being full and complete—I am quite sure it is accurate as far as it goes—he has made out a strong case against the Custom House officers and their proceedings certainly. It is always safe, however, to hear the other side, and I am quite confident that when the other side of this case comes to be heard it will be seen that this officer has, at all events, endeavored to do his duty. He may have made a mistake—I know nothing of the facts—but I am quite sure he has endeavored to do his duty. That this case should have been referred by the Minister of Customs to some other person than the one who first made a decision upon it may or not may not be right: I do not know what the practice of the Department is or how far the original statement made by an officer is capable of being revised by another officer, or whether that is a safe thing to do, but it is not proper for the House to decide upon a single case. It may not be a safe matter to refer the decision of an officer upon the value of an article, such as dynamite, to some other officer who may have a different opinion, the one opinion being perhaps as valuable as the other; or it may have been better to refer the decision of the first officer to another for review; that I cannot say, but I hope, and I am sure, the House will reserve its judgment respecting the case until all the papers are before it, and until it has an opportunity of hearing both sides and seeing whether there is any foundation either for the suggestion that there is a suspicion against this officer, or the other suggestions that a different rule obtains in Halifax from other ports in the Dominion or that the Government has not endeavored in this case to obtain the real value of the dynamite and charge the duty upon it. The natural presumption is that they have done so. It would seem that the valuation is high; what the explanation of that is I do not know, but when the papers come down we will know and I shall be quite prepared to discuss the question then with the hon. gentleman.

HON. MR. POWER—The statement of the Minister is satisfactory. I am sorry that he should have supposed that I meant to express myself any opinion whatever as to Mr. Fraser's character. Mr. Fraser is a gentleman, so far as I know, whom I have never seen. I know nothing about him, good, bad or indifferent. I did not know who he was or what position he held until I heard it in connection with this matter, and consequently I did not myself mean to cast the slightest imputation upon his character. What I said was a fact; that people in Halifax who were aware of this transaction did some of them draw conclusions which were not favorable to Mr. Fraser's character; and I think that it is to be regretted that any officer should be placed in a position where his conduct would be open to suspicions of this sort. With respect to the over-valuation of goods at Halifax, I may say that within the last little while I have seen in one of the Halifax papers a letter from Mr. Jones in which he gives an instance where the same class of sugar was rated lower in Montreal than in Halifax. However, I do not propose to say anything about that; but the point I was anxious particularly to bring home to the Minister does not seem to have struck him as forcibly as I could have wished. Granting that Mr. Fraser's character is beyond reproach—as I hope and presume it is—still, when his decision was appealed from on grounds that the Minister himself must see are pretty strong, it occurs to me that when the second appeal was taken, the Minister's own sense of what is becoming and just must show him that the appeal should not be to the person from whose judgment it was taken. I do not say it should have been to another officer; it might have been to the Minister, and he might after weighing the evidence have decided: but it appeared to me that the natural court of appeal would have been the Treasury Board, whose duty it is I suppose to deal with difficult questions that arise in connection with the financial and commercial business of the Government, and which require the benefit of the judgment of different Ministers, including the Minister of Justice.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (47) "An Act respecting the Railway from Esquimalt to Nanaimo, B. C."—(Sir Alex. Campbell).

Bill (72) "An Act respecting the Union Suspension Bridge"—(Sir Alex. Campbell).

Bill (76) "An Act respecting the Burlington Bay Canal"—(Sir Alex. Campbell).

INSURANCE BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (G), "An Act respecting Insurance."

In the Committee,

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL said: When the Bill was up for the second reading I explained that it was principally a compilation of the laws as they exist at present. The several laws affecting this subject of Insurance found in the different parts of the Statutes were put together by the Commission to revise the Statutes. They met with some difficulty and they added some clauses of their own and in that way it was proposed to consolidate the Statutes, inserting the changes which this Bill now presents for the consideration of the House. But afterwards, upon conferring with the members of that Commission, it was thought, I believe quite rightly, that the more convenient way would be to re-enact the law altogether from the beginning, taking the old clauses and inserting them in this Bill, and adding the few new clauses which the Bill proposes, and then passing a single Act which might be bodily transferred to the Statutes of this session. If the House will consent to this being adopted I think the easier way would be for me to go through the Bill clause by clause, and only call attention to what is new. The old clauses having received the sanction of Parliament, being in fact now law, I apprehend there is no necessity to discuss them unless some member of the House desires to draw attention to or seek some change in them, in which case we might discuss those particular clauses.

HON. MR. POWER—I think it is a pity to incur the expense of having this long bill printed and our time taken up with it for the few amendments which are proposed. As I understand, the only amendments that are being made in the Act, as reported by the Commissioners to consolidate the Statutes, refer to the mode of recovering penalties. It would have been more convenient to have just passed a short bill making those changes.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—My hon. friend mentioned that at the second reading, and I explained to him then that I was at first of the same opinion, but on conferring with the Commissioners I yielded to their view that it was better to enact a new law and transfer it to the Consolidated Statutes.

On sub-clause G of clause 2,

HON. MR. POWER asked why the recommendation of the Parliamentary Committee was not concurred in by the Government?

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—The reason is that the Custom House Service and the Registration of Shipping Act in England formerly extended to the harbor of Montreal, which is supposed to be the head of tide water, although I believe the tide only extends to Three Rivers; but that is the point where English jurisdiction, as contradistinguished from ours, ends. Therefore it is better to adopt that and say "all above the harbor of Montreal" is inland marine, and all below it is sea.

HON. MR. POWER.

The clause was adopted.

On the 36th clause,

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I ask the hon. gentleman if this section will interfere with the proceedings of some of the benevolent insurance companies that exist in many of our towns? I know that considerable anxiety is felt by the managers of some of those societies lest they should find themselves interfered with by some act of this parliament, and it would be very gratifying to them to have it known that no interference with their operations is intended by this Bill.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—There is no intention, by any clause of this Bill, to interfere with such societies, unless the interference may be by some of the earlier clauses which requires them to deposit a certain sum in the public treasury. There is a clause in the Bill which requires that all insurance companies doing business in Canada shall pay a certain amount into the treasury of Canada as security for their policy holders, and I do not think that those benevolent companies are exempt from it. The clause is:—

3. The provisions of this Act shall not apply—

(a) To any company transacting in Canada ocean marine insurance exclusively; or—

(b) To any policy of life insurance in Canada, issued previously to the twenty-second day of May, in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-eight, by any company which has not subsequently received a license; or—

(c) To any company incorporated by an Act of the legislature of the late Province of Canada, or by an Act of the legislature of any Province now forming part of Canada which carries on the business of insurance wholly within the limits of that Province by the legislature of which it was incorporated, and which is within the exclusive control of the legislature of such Province; but any such company carrying on the business of life insurance may, by leave of the Governor-in-Council, avail itself of the provisions of this Act, and if it so avails itself, the provisions of this Act shall thereafter apply to it and such company shall have the power of transacting its business of insurance throughout Canada.

If that will exempt them, then they are exempted, but I will inquire further.

HON. MR. DICKEY—There was an Act passed last year upon the subject of insurance and the companies to which such legislation should apply, and I should like to know whether there is any change as to the companies to which that legislation shall apply.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—No, none, because the clause of this bill is an exact transcript of what it was last year.

The clause was agreed to.

On the schedules,

HON. MR. POWER—I wish to call attention to something in these schedules which has apparently been copied out of the Consolidated Statutes. It is an unusual thing in an Act. If the Minister will look at the end of each schedule, he will see that there is a citation at the end of it. For instance 38 Vic. C. 20, S. 20, : 40 V. C. 42, S. 20, etc. They are calculated to mislead. They were in place, of course, in the report of the Commissioners who were consolidating the laws, as showing where they got them, but being inserted in this Bill they are calculated to make any person who is making up a statement or declaration of this kind believe they were part of the statement.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—This bill does not affect Marine insurance association in Nova Scotia?

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I do not know that it does unless under the language I have referred to. If the hon. gentleman will send me a note of his question I will try and have it answered by the superintendent of insurance. The citations at the ends of the schedules, referred to by my hon. friend from Halifax, might be struck out.

HON. MR. WARK was understood to enquire of the hon. Postmaster General if it would not be expedient, in consolidating the laws relating to insurance, to make provision for more complete information in the annual returns, which mutual in-insurance companies were obliged to make, to the superintendent of insurance.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I am much obliged to my hon. friend for the suggestion. I believe that the returns which those companies make are very full, but I will endeavor to get one of them and show it to him: and if there is anything we can add to the form, I think we have power under the present statute to require it. If my hon. friend will point out to me what other additional information we can ask from those companies, not already provided for in those returns, we will endeavor to have it supplied.

HON. MR. ROBITAILLE, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress, and asked leave to sit again to-morrow.

The report was received.

OFFENCES AGAINST THE PERSON BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. GOWAN moved the second reading of Bill (N) "An Act to amend the Act respecting offences against the person." He said: This short Bill proposes to deal with one of the sections in the Act relating to offences against the person, by making the law upon the points covered by the Bill uniform all over the Dominion. The Bill proposes to enact that the wife shall be a competent witness in prosecutions by indictment against her husband for wilfully and without lawful excuse refusing to provide food or other necessaries for his wife or his child. In Ontario it has been decided, and the law is, that in such cases the wife is not a competent witness. In Lower Canada it has been decided that she is a competent witness, and so, in at least one of our Maritime Provinces, and I think one if not two other provinces.

HON. MR. GLAZIER—It is not the law in New Brunswick.

HON. MR. GOWAN—I am not aware that a decision of the full Court has been given in any of those cases. In Lower Canada I know that it has not from the case I refer to, which was before a single judge only. I am unable to say, for I have been unable to find any case decided in the Maritime Provinces, whether there has been any decision on this point by the full Court.

HON. MR. POWER—Men never treat their wives badly down there.

HON. MR. GOWAN — Nevertheless, there have been cases at nisi prius in which that question came up. Possibly they were acquitted, but some such cases arose. I am not aware that the point was formally decided—at any rate it was not raised as it was in Ontario, and decided by the full Court on Appeal from the decision of the inferior tribunal. Doubtless, it has been held in provinces, where it has been so decided, upon the principle that it came within the exceptions to the rule of common law relating to the security of her person and her liberty. As I have said, therefore, one of the objects of the Bill is to secure uniformity in the law all over the Dominion, for it must strike everyone as a matter of paramount importance that the Criminal Law should be the same in every Province of Canada. The section designed to be altered, or perhaps, I should say more fully developed, is section 25. The first part, so far as it relates to this Bill, reads in brief as follows:—

Whosoever being legally liable * * * as a husband * * * to provide for, any person, wife or child * * * necessary food, clothing or lodging wilfully and without lawful excuse refuse or neglects to provide same * * * is guilty of a misdemeanor.

To the natural duty of every man to provide for his wife and his family it has unfortunately been found necessary to superadd the enforcement of law, and it must, I think, meet the approval of every Christian man. An offence against the law of God for a husband and father to wilfully neglect those in close relation to him, it is by this particular clause, section 25 of the Act relating to offences against the person, made also an offence against the law of the land. Every hon. gentleman will recognize this as a natural duty. He will see plainly that it is a natural duty, and every one with a human heart will say that any provision that the law has made for the enforcement of this natural duty should not be made difficult in application by technicalities of any kind, and the enactment I have quoted ought to be made as perfect as possible to carry out the benevolent intention of Parliament. It must, I think, strike everyone, and it is known to lawyers, that it is a most difficult thing to sustain a conviction under this statute unless the wife is made a competent witness, she above all others being most likely to know of the facts, for she is the sufferer by the brutal neglect of her husband—no, I will not say brutal, it would be a libel on the brute creation to compare such men with the beast of the field whose instincts teach them to provide for and guard their mates and their young—but it is she who is the person injured, and she herself is the most competent person to give evidence in matters of which she has particular knowledge. As the law has been construed in Ontario, if not elsewhere, she is not a competent witness, she cannot be allowed to utter a word. The general rule of law, as most hon. gentlemen know, except in cases affecting her liberty or her person, the wife is not a competent witness in Upper Canada. In the case of the Queen vs. Bissell this question received a very full consideration. It was an appeal from the inferior court. It was very ably argued on both sides both for the Crown and for the prisoner. All the authorities upon the point were very fully reviewed, and the decision of the court was prepared with a great deal of care, and the whole subject very fully entered into. One point upon which the case turned in the Queen vs. Bissell was that it was an act of non feissance, and therefore did not come within the general exceptions of the Criminal Law. The very learned Chief Justice of Ontario, in his judgment on the case, possibly felt somewhat pressed by the moral aspect of it; at all events he said in giving judgment, “as a matter of opinion, it might be wiser to allow the evidence, but as Lord Blackburn said on the same point “that is a matter for the Legislature and not for us.” Well, the matter is now before the House, and this Bill seeks to provide a remedy. I may say, I have had the honor of knowing the learned Chief Justice who gave this judgment in Ontario, for a period of fifty years, and he possibly made an exception in my favor from the reticence which sometimes prevails with judges: at all events he has written to me in reply. In his letter he says:—

“I fully approve of the Bill admitting the wife as a witness. The Queen vs. Bissell to which you refer me shows the necessity for the proposed change and the abolition of a rule so highly technical.”

I might doubtless rest upon this expression of opinion from the Chief Justice of Ontario, but I shall also read an extract from the judgment of Mr. Justice Armour who differed from the majority of the court in the decision in that case.

“The law,” said this learned judge “under which the prisoner was indicted is in my mind a most wholesome enactment and it must in my opinion in nearly every case like the present be a dead letter, unless the wife against whom the offence is committed by her husband be permitted to testify against him.”

The Honorable Chief Justice Cameron, who was also my fellow student some 45 years ago, has been kind enough to express an opinion to me on the point, and I am glad to be able to state that he also entirely approves this measure. My friend the learned Chief Justice Cameron, and Chief Justice Haggarty were the two judges that held in the negative as to a wife being a competent witness. Mr. Justice Armour differed from them and thought that she was. Chief Justice Cameron writes me upon this subject as follows:—

“With reference to the Bill it seems to me that while it is just that the wife should be a competent witness, a conviction ought not to take place without some evidence of a corroboratory character.”

Last year the Bill that I introduced had no provision of the kind, though my hon. friend from Lunenburg suggested such a clause. I had not thought of it before, but when he made the suggestion it at once commended itself to my judgment as a reasonable one, and I dare say he will not feel displeased to find that so able a judge as Chief Justice Cameron touches the very point that occurred to him at the second reading of the Bill last year. The present Bill provides for a corroboration. I have introduced this Bill after a good deal of consideration and no hon. gentleman in this House can feel more strongly than I do upon the sacredness of the marriage tie. But I believe that every-one with a spark of manhood or humanity in his soul must desire to see technical impediments which stand in the way of punishing brutal persons, who ill-treat their wives or children, removed. The Bill reads as follows :

“1. Section twenty-five of the Act passed in the Session held in the thirty-second and thirty-third years of Her Majesty's reign, intituled : ‘An Act respecting offences against the person,’ is hereby amended by adding thereto the words following: ‘and in any prosecution of any person under this section, for refusing or neglecting to provide necessary food, clothing or lodging for his wife or child, his wife shall be competent and compellable to give evidence as a witness, either for or against her husband.’”

So far it was contained in the Act of last session. The words following, “but such evidence shall not be sufficient to sustain in a conviction, unless it is corroborated by other evidence,” have been added. As I have already observed, this addition was suggested by my hon. friend from Lunenburg last session and adopted by me and incorporated in this Bill; it is the very point that my hon. friend Chief Justice Cameron spoke about. I made the suggestion on the spur of the moment last year, more in deference to my hon. friend opposite, and there was another amendment proposed by my hon. friend the senior member for Halifax, which I accepted at the time but on further consideration I find that I am unable to do so. Indeed, I fear that the adoption of it might imperil this Bill, as I know the strong feeling of the leader of the Government, as well as the majority of the House on the subject of admitting prisoners to give evidence on their own behalf, which I heartily share. I have therefore eliminated that from the Bill. I accepted it last year at the instance of my hon. friend from Halifax, but I feel now, on reflection, that it would be an unsafe thing—that it would be, as it were, an entering wedge for a most objectionable alteration in the law of evidence. I have therefore left it out. I was glad to hear the suggestion, as I am always glad to hear suggestions from my hon. friend who is conversant with every subject he speaks on and shows a desire to arrive at the best conclusion. I am sorry that I cannot on this occasion accept his views and introduce that clause, as he proposed it, into the Bill. With these explanations I move the second reading.

HON. MR. ALMON—I am sorry that it is my duty to move that the Bill be not now read the third time but that it be read the third time this day three months. My reason for doing so is this: I disapprove of tinkering with the law. I believe that no Bill of this kind should be introduced in this House unless it has the imprimatur of the Minister of Justice. We do not know what law this Bill would interfere with: we all know that according to the British law man and wife are one—“Those whom God hath joined together let no man put asunder.” That principle has been acted upon even in cases of murder: the wife is not allowed to give evidence against the husband. I remember one case where the evidence against a man accused of murder showed that he was living in the same house with a woman he had seduced under promise of marriage; I remember the judge saying to him “your sin has found you out; had you fulfilled your promise and made this woman your wife, she would not have been allowed to give evidence and you would have escaped the sentence which it is my duty to pronounce on you.” Therefore, in cases of murder the evidence of the women against her husband is not admitted. What will be the effect of passing this Bill? The wife would be obliged to perjure herself, and it is therefore a measure to encourage perjury. But supposing she does not; supposing her religious principles are stronger than her affections (I think in most cases it is not) and she gives evidence against her husband, can they live together in happiness afterwards? No; we all know very well that if they continue to live together their home will be a constant scene of bickering, and this Bill is practically untying the knot by which God has bound them together. If it was a very grave danger which we were asked to legislate to meet, I should perhaps waive my objection, but what is it? Refusing to supply necessary food and clothing. Now clothing includes bonnets. Supposing the wife goes up Sparks St. and sees in a window a love of a bonnet, and goes home and asks her husband to buy it for her. If he refuses they have a row, and under this bill she can take proceedings against him in a court of law for failing to provide her with proper clothing. Now, as we have no such law on the Statutes Book the husband in such a case generally manages to settle the difficulty by purchasing a pair of gloves instead. But under the operation of this Bill, the marriage tie is broken and the family hearth desecrated, and instead of being a scene of happiness which, as we all know, domestic life is, it is the scene of turmoil and strife for the rest of their lives. Judge Jones, Justice Robinson and Chief Justice Smith, I have no doubt, are very nice men and their opinions with the lawyers have great weight, but suppose you hear mine for a moment. There was a man in Halifax, a southern soldier, who had been much mutilated in the war. He shot his wife with a rifle, the bullet passing through her liver. She should have died, but she recovered. He was to be tried for attempting to commit murder. The wife came to me and said "your are summoned as a witness." I said "yes, and the severest punishment that the law provides should be inflicted on your husband." She asked what it would be, and I replied seven years in the penitentiary. "Seven years in the penitentiary! That means seven years for myself and my children in the poor house. I wish, Doctor, you would not appear at the trial." Of course I did appear at the trial, but I gave the evidence as much in his favor as I conscientiously could. The man was pardoned. Now supposing the principle involved in this Bill which makes the wife a compellable witness, had been recognized in the law, and she had been a compellable witness, my opinion is that she would have perjured herself—I know she would rather than send her husband to pententiary for seven years. We are asked to pass a most wicked Bill the effect of which would be to encourage perjury. I hope the unanimous vote of this House will sustain the laws of God and man, by throwing out this Bill.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—This Bill has already been before Parliament and was thrown out. The mover has with his accustomed industry altered the Bill to meet the views of the Senator from Lunenburg and other members of the House.

I hope the House will not harass him any longer but give his Bill a trial. I promised the hon. gentleman one day to use all my powerful influence with the House to induce it to accept this Bill. Hon. members must remember that he is a most distinguished luminary from the Division Courts of Ontario. Not only an able but pious gentleman. I think it is somewhat unfortunate for his reputation that he should have joined the brigade of patriots commanded by the Senator of Niagara. He has often interrupted me along with the others, but I forgive him and them. Since his admission into your honor's house he has labored with great assiduity. His first proffered legislation was the famous Pawnbroker's Bill. Such legislation of that character, brought to my mind a well-known incident from the biography of a very renowned English divine—the Rev. Sydney Smith—who, when asked one day whether he believed in the Apostolic succession, replied "I never did, until I met the Bishop of Exeter, who was such a perfect resemblance to Judas Iscariot that it removed all doubts from my mind." In this connection and in remembrance of the famous Pawnbroker's Bill I was asked whether I believed in the existence still, of the lost tribes of Israel. Perhaps the House will allow me first to give the history of those tribes. Jacob had twelve sons, ten of whom disappeared with all their descendants, while Joseph the youngest son and Judah remained, from whom sprang the people of Judea, while all the descendants of the ten were scattered over the face of the earth, unknown to history. The subject of their destiny has occupied the minds of historians and the ablest men of science, and still great doubt exists as to what people or nations have sprung from them. Now all my doubts have been removed as to the existence of some of the descendants in Ireland since, if my memory serves me faithfully, a beautiful portrait of Mordecai exhibited in the Vatican at Rome is a most extraordinary likeness of a distinguished member of this Chamber and no doubt he and his immediate ancestors could throw great light upon the history of some of those descendants.

HON. MR. POWER—I have no doubt

we are very thankful to the hon. gentleman who has just sat down for his valuable discoveries in Biblical history. He must have given us that account of Jacob's family from some recently discovered manuscript, because it is different altogether from that in the authorized versions. I hardly know what to think of this Bill. My hon. colleague from Halifax objects to our tinkering with the law. I cannot agree with him in that : this is a legislative assembly, and it is the right place for law-making. That is our business. I do not believe in tinkering with the law, but if we see it seriously defective and attempt to alter it, we are doing our duty. I do not agree with my colleague that we should not deal with any Bill affecting the criminal law unless it has the imprimatur of the Minister of Justice. I think my hon. friend to a certain extent misconceives the position of the Government. The theory is that the Government are a committee of the legislature, whose duty it is to transact all business which arises when Parliament is not sitting. They form the guides of the legislature when it is sitting, to a certain extent ; but I should be very sorry to think that the Parliament was going to give up the right of legislation, even in respect to the Criminal law, to the Ministry. It must be remembered that we have in this House a Minister who has filled the position of Minister of Justice, and when this Bill goes to the other Chamber it will be submitted to the consideration of the present Minister of Justice there ; and consequently we are quite safe in going on and passing the Bill if it seems good to us. While I do not agree with my hon. colleague in these preliminary objections to the measure, I do feel that there is a great deal of force in his substantial objection to the character of the Bill. Of course there is this to be said, that as the law stands now, if a man is legally liable to provide for his wife, ward &c. necessary food, clothing or lodging, he can be proceeded against if he fails to do so. My hon. friend seemed to be under the impression that he could not be punished under the existing law. He can be punished, and the only question is whether we shall decide that the wife shall be a competent and compellable witness.

HON. MR. ALMON—I have no objection to the man being punished for not providing clothing or food for his wife and children. I think he should be punished, but I do not believe that the wife should be a compellable witness against her husband.

HON. MR. POWER.

HON. MR. POWER—I have grave doubts as to whether the wife should be a compellable witness. It may be that she should be allowed to give evidence, but to compel her to do so is I think a questionable policy. There is one point as to which I have no doubt at all. When a wife brings her husband into court under this Act respecting offences against the person, I think it is pretty safe to say that the family relations are—

HON. MR. ALMON—Strained.

HON. MR. POWER—Pretty nearly broken up, once that step is taken. I do not know that I shall vote against the second reading of the Bill ; but I think if the husband and wife fall out and the wife brings the husband into court and is herself admitted as a witness against him, it is only fair play that the husband should be allowed to give evidence too. The hon. gentleman who has introduced the Bill has not told us why he thinks the husband should not be allowed to give evidence. There are two parties to the quarrel : you not only allow but you compel one of them to give evidence, while you do not permit the other to give evidence in his own defence. It does not seem to me that that should be the case. I hope, if the Bill is read the second time, that when we go into Committee of the Whole, it will be amended by providing that the husband shall be allowed to give evidence as well as the wife. If I may be allowed to say a word which does not relate to this Bill, with respect to the hon. gentleman who has introduced it, I would say this—that I have heard more than one hon. gentleman make observations, which I think were not intended to be complimentary, as to the hon. member from Barrie. Reference has been made to one or two Bills which he has introduced besides this one. I think that these observations are very objectionable. The hon. gentleman from Barrie has devoted his whole life to the practice of the law, chiefly as a judge, and during his many years experience he has had opportunities, which probably no other member has had, of seeing certain defects in the law. He comes in here, where he has an opportunity to remove those defects; and I think it is very much to his credit that, instead of sitting down and taking his ease and doing nothing, he has devoted some time and industry to try and leave the law a little better than he found it. An eminent jurist once remarked that it is a duty which every man owes to his profession to leave the law better than he finds it. My hon. and learned friend is trying to discharge that duty, and I think he deserves the praise, good will and encouragement of his fellow-members rather than the reverse.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I am very reluctant to say anything upon a subject on which professional men have spoken, but I must say that I see a good deal of objection to this kind of legislation. I think that matters of this kind are very safely left to the Government itself. While I have no doubt that what has been said by the senior member from Halifax is entirely correct, and while I have the highest respect for the hon. gentleman who has brought in this Bill, there are very grave objections to it, one of which is the clause compelling a wife to be a witness against her husband. It is an innovation, and I doubt whether it is going to work either in the way of promoting domestic harmony or correcting the abuses which my hon. friend seeks to deal with by this Bill. If the wife is allowed to be a witness against her husband, the husband should be allowed also to be a witness against his wife, and in either case, if one is compellable the other should also be compellable. Those are objections which strike me, and any layman has a right to an opinion upon a matter which is one more of the domestic relations between husband and wife than anything of a legal technicality. I can hardly say that I congratulate my hon. friend on his ally, the hon. member who supported his Bill. I have no doubt that in opposing the Bill and voting against it, as I shall be compelled to do, I shall be in a minority in the House. At the same time I do think that it is desirable for us to decide, if possible, that legislation of this kind is properly in the hands of the Government. On this point I differ from my hon. friend the senior member from Halifax. I think it is very much better that any amendments or additions should be made by the responsible officers of the Government. If this is approved of by the Government, it is much better that it should be a Government measure. We are not ourselves, in all cases, competent to judge of legal technicalities, and I should consider myself safer in the hands of the proper officers appointed by the Crown, and having the responsibility of matters of that kind, than I could in the hands of my hon. friend, notwithstanding the high respect which I entertain for him, or of any other legal gentleman in this House. It is a matter that we must take on trust, and I prefer that the responsibility should fall on those officers of the Crown who are entrusted with it under the constitution.

HON. MR. DICKEY—When a bill of a somewhat similar character to this was before the House last year I felt it my duty to object to it especially on two grounds, first that the wife was compellable to give evidence, and secondly that the Bill was a one-sided measure because it did not allow the husband the same privilege that is accorded to the wife by this Bill. On both these points it turned out that I was sustained by the opinion of the House. It is hardly necessary to argue the question, because I do not suppose that the opinion of the House has been changed in the short space of twelve months. The Bill, as it came in, compelled the wife to give evidence, but the hon. member who had charge of the Bill and in whose charge this measure is, on its going before the Committee, himself moved that these words should be stricken out and at his instance the amendment was made. He states to-day that he has changed his mind since then as to that, but he has given us no reason for his change and we are left in the dark. We are not in a position, at the present moment, to state whether we should adhere to the decision which the House arrived at last year on the subject. But the House did come to a deliberate vote on the other question, whether the husband should have the same privilege as the wife. My hon. friend has not given us any reason for now introducing this Bill in the form in which it was presented before without giving that privilege to the husband. It was the deliberate judgment of this House last year that it should be given, and they so amended his bill. At the same time all these matters are, I think, questions for the committee. I should not be disposed to treat the bill in a cavalier manner and throw it out. There is another reason why my hon. friend who has made the motion should be a little careful as to the effect of this decision should the House adopt his motion, because he has moved the three months hoist. We are here now in the early days of April and if we sit as long as we did last year, the Bill would still be read the second time. It is hardly worth while for us to commit ourselves to such an absurd position as that, because I am really afraid as things look, when we have already had an adjournment for a fortnight and propose taking another adjournment for a similar period, that we will not be in a position to leave here before June or July next. Apart from that I should not be disposed to vote against the second reading of the Bill. I think the proper course to pursue would be to let the Bill go to Committee and be dealt with there, because all the questions which will arise under this legislation will be proper subjects for a Committee rather than for the House on the second reading.

HON. MR. GIRARD—The long experience of the hon. promoter of this Bill would naturally lead me to support it, but it seems to me that the hon. gentleman overlooks too much in his measure the fact that husband and wife are one. This is an innovation, and I am afraid of all innovations which tend to change the ordinary rules of society. Although I should be glad to support the hon. gentlemen's measure if I could see my way in doing so, I feel that I must vote against its second reading. I see no necessity for such a measure. Society does not appear to suffer from the position in which husbands and wives stand towards each other in this Dominion. If there is to be any innovation on a matter of such great importance, the measure should originate with the members of the Government and not come from a private member.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I think this Bill should not be prejudiced on account of not coming from the Minister of Justice or a member of the Government in this House. My hon. friend from Halifax thinks that we would be abandoning our rights by taking such a position. My hon. friend himself on former occasions has belittled bills because they did not originate in the Department of Justice. I remember one important case where a bill was introduced to amend the criminal law, in which my hon. friend made that objection. With reference to this Bill, now before the House, as first introduced I was not enamored of it. I was opposed to it until I had engrafted on it, in committee, the amendment to which the hon. gentleman, the introducer of the Bill, refers. But when the amendment proposed by the hon. member from Halifax was added to it, I felt then, as a majority did, that it should not pass. It allowed the husband to give evidence, and it interfered so much with the recognized criminal laws that it was an innovation to which I could not be a party. This is a Bill relating, not to offences of commission, but to acts of non-feasance—to matters which a party has failed to do. My objection to compelling a party to give evidence under this Bill is this, that the class of persons to whom this Bill is likely to apply are the least intelligent people in a community—those belonging to the lower classes of society.

HON. MR. GOWAN—That point can be dealt with in Committee.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—That is true, but I prefer taking the exception now. If you compel a woman to give evidence against her husband, persons of low intelligence subjected to fear and restraint would not give evidence which would be very trustworthy or reliable, and therefore I hope, if this Bill goes to Committee, that that portion will be eliminated from it. I think this Bill should not apply to the wife only; if we go that far we should do more and make it apply not merely to the wife whose husband does not provide her with food and clothing and lodging, but to others as well, for instance where a person is legally liable to provide for an apprentice, ward, idiot, lunatic or any person in that position. I think a law of this kind should apply with equal force to all persons so situated—persons who are not able to take care of themselves. Any man who has an infant, or ward, or idiot under his legal control should be made responsible for the way he exercises that control, and liable for his non-feasance as regards its food, clothing and lodging. I dislike all those innovations in the law of evidence. It is only four or five years since we allowed the wife to give evidence in certain cases against her husband. I am very tenacious of the law as it stands; but I think this is an improvement, if it goes no further than the Bill with my amendment last year went. Thn hon. gentleman having incorporated the amendment which I proposed last year, and to which he so very courteously referred to-day, I feel that I should support his measure if he takes from it the words "and com- pellable."

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL— I hope my hon. friend the junior member for Halifax will not press his motion upon the House at this stage of the Bill. I think there has been a sufficient indication that the bill, as it stands, does not present its final appearance, and perhaps in committee it may be altered in such a way as to meet with the approbation, if not of my hon. friend himself, of some of my hon. friends who may not approve of it now. I think it is a pity, and it is not paying sufficient deference to any member of this House, to reject a bill on the second reading unless the circumstances are stronger than they are in this case. I hope my hon. friend from Halifax will not press his motion but will let the bill be read the second time and go to the committee and see what aspect it presents when it comes back to us. If it should then be as objectionable to my hon. friend as it is now, I think his motion will secure a larger vote. For my own part I voted against the Bill last year, not believing it was a measure which was acceptable to the general sense of the community I should desire, and I hope my hon. friend will agree, to let the bill go through the second reading and be referred to committee, and see what will be done with it there. I do not agree in thinking that these bills amending the criminal law come with the same advantage from a private member (which I understand to be the position of the senior member from Halifax) as they do from the Government.

HON. MR. POWER—No; I did not say that.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Then I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; it was very nearly that. I do not think the House, in acquiescing in the views expressed by hon. gentlemen that these bills should come from the Minister of Justice, at all assume the position that they abandon any part of their own power. They do not say at all that no private member shall introduce such bills, but that they prefer and think it safer that such measures should come from the Government. I must say that is my view and feeling, although I differ from the hon. member from Barrie, and although if he was Minister of Justice I should follow his lead with implicit confidence; yet he is not Minister of Justice, and I should therefore prefer a bill coming from a member occupying that position. In proposing such a bill the whole system of the criminal law should enter into consideration. It may very well be that the hon. member from Barrie sees a point here and there in which there is a deficiency which he resolves to supply. The defect may really exist, and his mode of supplying it may be the correct one, so far as these particular deficiencies go, but yet he has not in view the whole system, as the Minister of Justice necessarily has, or the changes which the Minister of Justice may be contemplating from time to time, and I think he presents a bill for the reform of any particular part of the law with disadvantage, and that it is safer to allow these bills to come from the Minister of Justice.

HON. MR. POWER—Life is too short to wait for them.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—My hon. friend from Barrie has not thought that consonant with his duty as a member of the House, and has introduced a bill to deal with a certain point to which his attention has been directed, and we are bound to give it fair consideration. My idea of giving it fair consideration is to allow the Bill to be read the second time and go before a Committee of the Whole, and see what changes can be made in it, and then make up our minds what course to pursue on the third reading. I have stated my own opinion so far; I may now state the opinion of the Minister of Justice, whom I have consulted with reference to this Bill; he is in favor of it and, so far as he is concerned, would give it his support. His opinion is entitled to the greatest respect and I am prone myself to defer to any person occupying that position, and to say that although I voted against the Bill last year I should consider now whether it would be proper for me to vote against it on this occasion. I am bound to say this on the part of the Minister of Justice, because the hon. member from Barrie has seen him and I have seen him on the subject, and I know that he approves of the Bill in its present shape.

HON. MR. GOWAN—If no other argument existed in favor of bringing forward this measure, I think a cogent one would be found in the fact that in Lower Canada it has been held by the courts that the wife is a competent witness under this Act.

HON. MR. ALMON—Compellable?

HON. MR. GOWAN—As a competent witness under this Act. In Ontario it has been held that she is not a competent witness, and in the Maritime Provinces it has been held that she is; therefore the Criminal Law is administered in a different way in one province from the way it is administered in another, and that is a sufficient reason why the point should be settled and the law rendered uniform all over the country. It is merely declaring that in prosecutions under this enactment the wife shall be a competent witness. With regard to whether compellable or not, that is a matter which can be settled in committee; but I think it is rather a summary mode of dealing with a bill of this kind to move the three months' hoist on the second reading rather than hear what is to be said on the details. If there are any details which do not meet the approval of this House, they may be rejected. With regard to what has been said by the hon. gentleman from Niagara, and to some extent followed by the Postmaster-General, I am unable to see the force of his remarks. Now, as I understood my hon. friend from Niagara, he said that no measure pertaining to the administration of justice should be introduced into this House, unless it came from the hands of the Government, or responsible officers of the Government.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I did not make such a sweeping statement as that; I spoke of this particular Bill and the principle which underlies it.

HON. MR. GOWAN—I cannot agree to that proposition. In looking over the legislation since confederation, I find that in the 19 years which have passed since then, some 32 measures only of a public or general character have been introduced by gentlemen in this Chamber who were not members of the Government. While I think it would be a presumptuous thing for any one to endeavor to force his views on matters of high concern and public prominence without first conferring with the responsible Ministers of the Crown, at the same time I am not prepared to ignore the right that I have, and that every member of this House has, to bring forward matters for the consideration of this body—matters with which he is familiar. If hon. gentlemen in this House had brought forward measures for the general benefit of the country upon subjects with which they are familiar—had brought forward more measures of this kind—less would be said about the uselessness of this body; and so long as I stand in this House I shall always, if I introduce a measure of this kind, first refer it to responsible Ministers of the Crown who, whether referred to or not, are bound to watch proceedings of this kind, and see that the laws conform to the general system of jurisprudence of the country. Still every hon. gentleman of this House has a right, and I claim that right, to bring forward this measure, first having communicated with the Minister of the Crown. On the two grounds referred to, I strongly urge that this Bill be allowed to go to Committee. I have no personal desire beyond considering what is due to myself and due to this House in bringing forward a measure that I think is of importance. I have no personal feeling whatever, but I do think that when one, who has large experience in matters of this kind, submits a question, after considering it carefully, to this House, that it ought not to be dealt with in this summary manner, particularly as the two judges who have pronounced most reluctantly (as any one can see on reading their judgments) against admitting the wife as a witness, have since expressed themselves in the way I have read to this House as being favorable to the measure.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Without altering my position, perhaps it would be fair, under the circumstances, that the Bill should be allowed to be read the second time.

HON. MR. ALMON—I should very much like to follow the dictates of my leader, but I fear I must be held guilty of high treason in this matter, because I think this Bill is such a wicked and unscriptural bill that it is my duty to oppose it. At all events, in doing so my hands are washed clean in endeavoring to prevent this innovation of the law and the Scripture. I did not vote with the Government in their attempt to lower the franchise by means of their Franchise Bill, or their Bill to impose restrictions on Chinese Immigration, which I consider contrary to the genius of the 19th century; nor do I support them in this case, and I feel it my duty to insist that the sense of the House shall be taken on the second reading of the Bill.

The House divided on the amendment, which was declared lost on the following division:—

THE SPEAKER—The amendment is declared lost. The question is now on the second reading of the Bill.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I regret that this motion was made by the hon gentleman, but it having been moved I was bound to vote against the Bill. Last year the majority of my colleagues in the Senate voted the other way, the non-contents for the six months hoist on that occasion being Alexander, Archibald, Campbell (Sir Alex.), Flint, Girard, Gowan, Grant, Haythorne, McLelan, McInnes, McFarlane, Miller (Speaker), Odell, O'Donohoe, Pelletier, Poirier, Power, Scott, Smith, Stevens, Sutherland, Vidal and Wark. I could not help voting against the Bill now, as I did then, and I was sorry that I was obliged to do so, because I think the Bill ought to go to committee, to see whether it could be amended in such a way as to meet the views of the majority of the House.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time on the same division.

ANGLO-CANADIAN BANK BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill (18) "An Act to incorporate the Anglo-Canadian Bank." He said: This is a Bill for the incorporation of a bank having its head-quarters in Toronto, with a capital of $1,000,000.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned at 6 o'clock.

Bill (35) "An Act to amend the Act incorporating the Lake Nipissing and James' Bay Railway Company." (Mr. Girard)

Bill (45) "An Act respecting the Dominion Lands Colonization Company, Limited." (Mr. McInnes.)

Bill (27) "An Act to amend the Act to incorporate the West Ontario and Pacific Railway Company." (Mr. Plumb)

Bill (51) "An Act to amend the Act to incorporate the Nova Scotia Steamship Company, Limited." (Mr. Power)

Bill (43) "An Act to amend the Act to incorporate the Canada Atlantic Railway Company." (Mr. Clemow.)

AN ADJOURNMENT DURING PLEASURE.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—In pursuance of the notice of motion that I gave yesterday I move that the House adjourn during pleasure, with the understanding that they meet again at 5 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to and the Speaker left the chair.

The Speaker resumed the chair at 6:05 p.m.

MEDICINE HAT RAILWAY BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. ALLAN moved the second reading of Bill (54) "An Act to incorporate the Medicine Hat Railway and Coal Company." He said: The object of this Bill is to charter a company to build a railway from a point near Medicine Hat, in the North-West Territories, on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to the Saskatchewan.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

ESQUIMALT AND NANAIMO RAILWAY BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL moved the second reading of Bill (47) "An Act respecting the railway from Esquimalt to Nanaimo, in British Columbia." He said: This is a bill to assent to a sharper curve for this railway than was provided for in the original arrangement.

HON. MR. POWER—There is an important principle involved in this Bill, and I suppose the leader of the House will have no objection to discussing it in the committee stage.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Not the least.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

UNION SUSPENSION BRIDGE BILL

SECOND READING.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL moved the second reading of Bill (72) "An Act respecting the Union Suspension Bridge." He said: This is a Bill to give up the tolls collected by the Government on the suspension bridge across the Ottawa river at this city.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

INSURANCE BILL.

THIRD READING.

The order of the day having been called, House again in Committee of the Whole on Bill (G), "An act respecting insurance."

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL said: As it was thought some changes were desired in this Bill when it was in committee, I moved to have the Bill recommitted, but I have since ascertained that no changes are necessary. I therefore move that the order of the day be discharged, and that the Bill be read the third time presently. The hon. gentleman from Halifax referred to some foot notes at the ends of the schedules, which he thought should be eliminated. It is desired that those notes be retained in the meantime; they will disappear afterwards.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned at 6.20 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Wednesday, April 14th, 1886.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

AN ADJOURNMENT.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL moved

That when the Senate adjourns on Thursday, the 15th instant, it do stand adjourned until Wednesday, the 28th instant, at eight o'clock in the evening.

He said—Some adjournment at Easter is necessary, and it seemed to me that that would be an adjournment which would meet, as far as it could be met, the convenience of members generally.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I suppose, as this is a Government measure, I shall appeal in vain to the House to pause before passing it. At all events it ought not to pass except under protest. We have already had a fortnight's adjournment.

HON. MR. ALMON—No, not a fortnight.

HON. MR. DICKEY—Yes, and we are asked for another adjournment of a fortnight, and I feel it my duty to point out to the House that the business of Parliament has so far advanced that it is expected the prorogation will take place about the Queen's birthday. We shall then have sat three months, and we shall have passed one-third of the whole of that time adjourned from our public duty if this motion is carried. There is another fact that stares us in the face from our own Minutes—that we have now about one dozen bills before us for consideration, and some half a dozen of them are of a character that requires careful consideration by committees, which, under our rule, cannot possibly take place after they are read the second time if there is to be an adjournment. In many cases parties are in attendance, expecting their measures to come before the Committees, and they will be obliged to wait another fortnight for that purpose. We are entering, I hope, upon the last six weeks of the Session, and we are deliberately proposing to cut off one-third of that time, leaving only some four weeks to finish the business of Parliament. I do not therefore think it is such an adjournment as will commend itself to the general sense of the House. It may be very convenient for certain members to have this adjournment, and I should be very sorry to stand in the way of their spending a fortnight at their homes during the Session ; but when Bills are before us such as require our consideration, we have no alternative but to rush into their consideration hastily and try to get them through in time to allow hon. gentlemen to leave to-morrow or the next day. Under the circumstances, it is only in discharge of a public duty that I oppose this motion, and I regret that I am called upon to enter my protest against this adjournme

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—We have at all events to-day to compliment the hon. and gallant knight that he has had the courage to place his name to this motion, and not inspire another member of the House to bring it forward. I am a little surprised at the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Amherst, and I am much afraid that those remarks of his, will place him in the category in which I stand—of disaffected members. Possessing, as I do, powerful influence in this Chamber, I have no doubt that, if I supplicated the House to negative this motion it might be lost ; but I am inclined, like an old friend of mine whom I visited some years ago, whose son was present, and was acting improperly, and when I suggested to his father to correct him, replied, “I think it better not to correct him, because I fear that I should lose all the powerful influence with him, that I am supposed to have.” That is the effect I should suppose would follow if I tried the same experiment here. The leader of the House, is no doubt conscious of the many acts of wrong doing of the present Government. I have no doubt that his policy, if openly proclaimed, is that there cannot be too many adjournments. The hon. gentleman’s object is to prevent as much as possible any criticism or exposure of the thousand acts of maladministration of the party now in power. That is just his desire and purpose. We now behold him having the audacity to ask the House to adjourn for a fortnight to the hindrance of the public business. We have a whole page of orders before us to-day, and with the thousand and one matters to investigate, as he himself knows—for no one better knows than he, who is a member of the Government—with the thousand matters which we ought to investigate, showing incapacity, recklessness and waste of the public resources of the country. I know that the hon. gentleman will reply, that we have done a large amount of public business. We certainly have been busy during the last week. We have done a great deal of business from the standpoint of hon. gentlemen who occupy the treasury benches, and it has been of an important character. For instance we have appointed a gagging committee. That is a very important matter but the gagging committee have not yet reported, and I very much doubt whether after the loud expression of disapproval made by the press of the Dominion, it will report. It is somewhat ridiculous the leader of the House named a committee to gag a member who is upwards of 70 years of age and who has been endeavoring, to the best of his judgment, to serve his country honestly and faithfully and to stop wrong doing and crime. Then we have fought three or four rather hard battles with the party of interruption, commanded by a very distinguished general from the Northern States, who I believe was born in Albany but must have been educated at West Point. That party of interruptions have had a recent accession to their ranks in the learned Senator from Barrie. I wish I could compliment the learned gentleman upon his joining their ranks in some of those battles referred to. I think the party attacked had rather the best of it ; at least he punished somewhat severely two of those troublesome members, namely, the leader of the House and the Senator from Niagara. I desire now, calmly and dispassionately, to state here that I will brook no unseemly interruption, in the course of debate, from any quarter. Then again I had on Monday to punish another interrupter of legitimate debate as will appear in the official report which is issued this afternoon. Amongst the other important matters done by the House I must not forget to cite some of the important legislation we have really passed emanating from a great legal luminary who has come here, overflowing with patriotic zeal, to elevate the Senate in public estimation by introducing some statesmanlike measures, and thereby show to the country our usefulness. The first act emanating from the great and learned mind was the famous Pawnbroker’s Bill which I am sure will stand forth as a monument of the hon. gentleman's superior mind and will have the effect of removing much of the clamor which has manifested itself in the local press throughout the Dominion in regard to this august body.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—I rise to a point of order: the hon. gentleman is entirely out of order.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Sit down! Will the Speaker call the hon. gentleman to order? I am always interrupted by that hon. gentleman when I want to speak. (Cries of "chair, chair.")

THE SPEAKER—I wish to read for the benefit of the House the 25th rule, as I find it is impossible to get some gentlemen to understand:—"Any Senator called to order shall sit down"—

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—That is the hon. member from Woodstock: he should sit down.

THE SPEAKER (continuing to quote)—"and shall not proceed without leave of the Senate." I did not catch the hon. gentleman's point of order.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—The hon. member from Woodstock is not addressing himself to the motion before the House, and therefore he is not in order.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Will the Speaker allow me to explain?

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman may speak to the point of order. The rule which I have just cited does not prevent a member speaking to the point of order itself, but he must confine himself strictly to the point of order—he cannot address the House.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I have to thank the hon. Speaker for permitting me to explain that I think I am in order in speaking about the useful business we have done and are endeavoring to do.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman is, in my opinion, quite out of order, and has been out of order the last five minutes.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman is making a sharp and taxing speech.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I will put myself in order.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—But the hon. gentleman must get leave of the House before he can address it.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Then I humbly and respectfully ask permission of the House to say a few words more. (Cries of "no" and "yes.")

THE SPEAKER—The hon. member may proceed.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I have only to add that this famous Pawnbroker's Bill—(Cries of "order.")

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—That is the same thing.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Then I have nothing further to add.

HON. MR. GOWAN—I desire to say—

HON. GENTLEMEN—Never mind him.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Do not notice him.

HON. MR. GOWAN—I desire to say that I think it would be unreasonable and unfair to refuse the adjournment that is asked. I believe that there will be not more than five working days lost, and I think that those gentlemen from the Maritime Provinces who, on other occasions, have been unable to visit their homes, are entitled to this concession. Under the circumstances, the motion which has been made by the hon. leader of the House ought to be sustained. If the House will permit me, I desire to say one or two words in reference to some remarks which were made by the hon. member from Woodstock, not that I value in the slightest degree the reproaches that were passed upon me personally, but I think it is due to myself that I should make some allusion to what he said upon a previous occasion. The hon. member from Woodstock is a travelled man, who has seen many lands, and many works of art. Amongst the latter he saw a picture in which he says there was a character that bore a strong resemblance to me.

HON. MR. ALMON—I rise to a question of order. If the hon. member from Woodstock, was out of order surely the hon. gentleman from Barrie in replying to him is also out of order. If the premises are not in order surely the arguments based upon them are not in order.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. member from Halifax did not stop the hon. Senator from Woodstock when he was attacking the hon. gentleman from Barrie. The hon. gentleman from Woodstock was allowed to say anything that he pleased, and therefore I think the hon. member from Barrie has a perfect right to reply to what fell from the hon. member from Woodstock respecting him.

HON. MR. GOWAN—I would not have said anything had the hon. member from Woodstock been stopped in his remarks respecting me when he stated that he deliberately attempted to throw ridicule upon me on a previous occasion. I do not desire to throw ridicule on him—to shoot at crows is powder thrown away. But there is a sequel to that picture of Mordecai. There is a certain character that Mordecai referred to when he was opposing the designs of that wicked man who desired to injure innocent people, and that was Haman, who was hanged on a gallows many cubits high. I do not desire to say that the hon. gentleman from Woodstock is like the wicked Haman who was hanged, but I do think there is perhaps as much resemblance to the wicked Haman in him as there is to Mordecai in me. With regard to what the hon. gentleman says about me personally I care not—I value it as little as the idle winds that pass me by.

HON. MR. ALMON—I rise to a point of order; I think the discussion is on a motion that when this House adjourns tomorrow it stand adjourned till the 28th instant.

THE SPEAKER—I think the hon.

HON. MR. GOWAN.

member from Barrie is quite within the latitude allowed in this House to a member who has been attacked.

HON. MR. GOWAN—I have endeavored in an humble way to bring forward measures to which the hon. gentleman has referred, and I have tried to be useful. My hon. friend the junior member from Halifax, who interrupted me, is a distinguished member of the Senate, who has been for many years in Parliament. He has been for seven years in this body and what is the result of his long experience and his knowledge? He has not introduced in the seven years one single Bill. Under the circumstances I think it is unfair to assail me when I venture in a very humble way to improve the administration of the law.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Pawnbrokers Bills.

HON. MR. GOWAN—The measures I introduced may be regarded by some hon. gentlemen as small, but they are not small, for the principles of benevolence and justice make them great.

HON. MR. FLINT—I am always opposed to adjournments; I do not think they are right. We are here to do the business of the country; but it is quite evident, under all the circumstances of the case, that if we have any adjournment at all, we might as well have it for the time mentioned by the hon. the Postmaster General. Many members of the Senate live a long distance from the Capital and they should have an opportunity to visit their homes during the season. The Postmaster General is greatly indebted to the hon. member from Barrie for having drawn off the vials of wrath that the hon. member from Woodstock usually pours upon him. If the hon. member from Woodstock would take my advice he would be better off than he is; but he cannot. It seems morally impossible for that hon. gentleman to rise in this House on any occasion without pitching into some one of two or three hon. gentlemen here. What the reason is I cannot conceive. I hear the hon. gentleman every day here joining in that beautiful prayer of our Lord where he taught his disciples to say "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us." But he does not do it; he follows every man that he thinks is his enemy with a virulence that convinces me that he is not sincere in that prayer. If he is not sincere what must be the consequence? I would not stand in his shoes for all the world—I would not join in that prayer and immediately afterwards rise, as he does, and use abusive language towards different parties in the House. I think his wish would be to send them all down to perdition. If his prayer is to be answered he must go there himself, and if he goes there what part does he expect to take? Does he expect that his Satanic Majesty will give him a red hot poker with which to stir up his enemies.

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B. C.)—
Form a Cabinet there.

HON. MR. FLINT—I think if he considers that properly, he will either pray that he may be forgiven himself or that his enemies may be forgiven, and not ask to be forgiven as he forgives others, because certainly he does not forgive others, and consequently cannot expect forgiveness himself.

HON. MR. ALMON—I think that according to the finding of his honor the Speaker, I would be now justified in answering the hon. member from Barrie, but he is so wrapt up in his Pawnbroker's Bill and in his Bill to make a woman a compellable witness against her husband, it is unnecessary to refer to him. I felt, while the hon. member was speaking, the force of the old remark that "laws, like cobwebs, catch the little flies but let the big flies break through": it certainly has been exemplified in this House to-day. The two gentlemen who have last spoken I think, were out of order—certainly the hon. member from Barrie was, quite as much as the hon. member from Woodstock. The last recess that the House took was one of which the members from the Maritime Provinces could not avail themselves. It was not the fault of the hon. gentlemen who supported the resolution, but the House resumed on a Tuesday. If those who live in the Maritime Provinces had gone home they would have been obliged to leave for Ottawa, on their return, on a Saturday and be detained on the road over Sunday, so that the recess was quite useless to them. However, we did not grudge hon. members who live nearer the Capital their holidays. I do not think that this House is at all furthering the business of the country by meeting every day and doing nothing. I remember one time reading a passage in Bacon's works where the author makes Queen Elizabeth address the Speaker of the House and inquire "what has passed since your meeting six weeks ago?" The reply was "Please your Majesty, six weeks." That is the way in which we meet, and if instead of adjourning to-morrow we were to remain here and meet ever day we would pass nothing but two weeks. There have been certainly some interesting debates in this House, but to my mind, quoting the opinions of judges on Bills before the House was more suited to a debating society, and a very stupid one at that, than to a body like this. I think if we go away for two weeks and read the papers and books we will get through as much business as if we remained and drawled out the time here.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I shall just make a very few remarks upon this point. I have invariably opposed those adjournments and although I am myself one of those Senators whose home lies at a distance, I am not going to allow my own convenience to influence my vote on this occasion. In my opinion it is not to be desired by any means that those adjournments should take place. They create an unfavorable impression abroad as to the utility of this House. I remember very well that, very soon after the previous adjournment, comments appeared in the press of Ontario reflecting on the utility of this chamber, and a second long adjournment in the same session will I think give some sort of foundation for these unfavorable opinions as regards this body. It cannot be said with any foundation that we have only a small amount of business before us. Besides the ordinary committees of the Senate there are the Joint Committees of this House and the House of Commons, the business of which is always increasing; and the absence of members from their places on those committees would seem to indicate that it is not at all necessary that they should be there at all. Moreover, there is by no means a lack of business on our order paper to-day, and it is quite likely that the business will increase rapidly as time wears on. I therefore think it is unnecessary that we should have this adjournment now. Had it been for a few days, between Thursday of Easter week and the Tuesday following, no one could object to it, because there are days during that interval that many of us are inclined to regard as of unusual sacredness; but when the adjournment extends to 14 days, the natural consequence is, as my hon. friend from Amherst remarked, that the business is too rapidly put through. After an adjournment there is an accumulation of business of all kinds, and hon. gentlemen who endeavor to perform their duties faithfully are constantly compelled to transfer their attention from one subject to another in a manner which prevents them from doing justice to either. If a division is taken on this motion I shall certainly vote against it.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—My hon. friend who has just taken his seat speaks of the adjournment as being for fourteen days. Between our present sitting, and the time at which we are to meet again after this adjournment, there are not more than five or six working days, and that is the time lost, and not fourteen days. If the motion had been made by any member of the Senate not responsible for the business of Parliament, objection might be taken to it, but when the adjournment is not only sanctioned but proposed by the leader of the Government here, it seems to me that we can, with full safety, concur in that motion. After our return, if there be any pressure of business, no hon. gentleman can have any objection to night sittings, if they be necessary, and in two or three night sittings all the business that may be in arrear can be easily disposed of. If the generous feeling of hon. members of this House is that gentlemen should get leave to avail themselves of the Easter holidays to visit their families, while no injury can befall the public business, it seems to me the proper thing is to concur in it. I therefore am in favor of this motion, and I think it should be concurred in.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I believe that the leader of this House consulted the views of hon. gentlemen, and not his own convenience, and he has proposed this adjournment in consequence of the strong feeling manifested by a majority of the House in that direction. I have always opposed those adjournments, and oppose this one now, as I think it is too long a recess at the period of the session. Knowing, however, that the motion has come from the leader of the House, a large number of gentlemen have already prepared themselves to go home in anticipation of its being carried, and it would be exceedingly inconvenient to them if they were to be disappointed.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—There can be no question that if there was any real occasion for our remaining here, undoubtedly we would remain during the holiday season: but representing the Government in this House, I know pretty well the current of business and what Bills are expected from the other House, and I understand the character of the Bills before us now. The hon. gentleman from Amherst has alluded to bills being on the table which will occupy considerable time. I differ from him in that: they will occupy but a very short time. Any hon. gentleman who will look over them will find that they are not likely to occupy the time of the House, as they are nearly all private bills. There are only two measures which may be expected within the next day or two from the other Chamber. The other House will undoubtedly adjourn to-morrow. They will assemble again on the following Tuesday, Monday being a holiday. The public business will sustain no inconvenience by this adjournment. When a holiday was necessary, I have always felt it to be my duty, as representing the Government here, not only to propose it, but to say at what length, in my judgment the House might fairly go, without interfering with the public business. When other adjournments have been proposed, and when asked the question, I have said whether it would interfere with the public business or not. On this occasion I do not urge the holiday, but at Easter it is necessary, and understanding what is going on in the other branch of Parliament, I have proposed the adjournment for the time mentioned. As to what the hon. gentleman opposite has said about public opinion, the House should be governed by its own opinion of what is in the public service.

HON. MR. DICKEY—The hon. gentleman has entirely misunderstood my reference to the Bills on the order paper. What I said is this: there are nine Private Bills which have to go to committee, and cannot go to committee now until after the adjournment, unless we suspend all the rules and rush them through to-morrow, and it cannot be done. For instance, the Private Bills Committee does not meet to-morrow. The Railway Committee meets for an hour or two earlier for the purpose of anticipating the Banking Committee. But my objection is that the parties interested in those Bills will have to wait for this Private Bill legislation until after the adjournment. I have been taunted with opposing the Government. It is not the first time I have opposed government measures, and it is certainly not the first time I have opposed those adjournments when offered by the Government.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—I misunderstood my hon. friend: I thought he referred to the bills on the table. The Bills are from the other House, and having passed there, we cannot suspect that there will be any difficulty in getting them through here, although some of the witnesses may be obliged to remain over.

The motion was agreed to on a division.

CONTINGENT ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

MOTION.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL moved That the Honorable Mr. Plumb be added to the Select Committee appointed to examine and report upon the Contingent Accounts of the Senate for the present Session.

The motion was agreed to.

NORTH AMERICAN TELEGRAPH COMPANY'S BILL.

A SUSPENSION OF THE 51ST RULE.

HON. MR. SULLIVAN moved that

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL.

the 51st rule of this House be suspended in so far as it relates to the petition of R. W. Carter and others praying to be incorporated as the North American Telegraph Company, as recommended in the 8th report of the Committee on Standing Orders and Private Bills. He said: the reason why the suspension of the rule is asked for is, I believe, that the company is doing business all through the Dominion, and did not consider it necessary to comply with the rule requiring notice of this application in the newspapers.

HON. MR. POWER—When this petition was before the Committee on Standing Orders and Private Bills, I gave my hon. friend notice that I should oppose the motion which he has just made. The Bill, is one of an important character. It is for the incorporation of a company with power to construct telegraph and telephone lines and to manufacture telephones, and apparently to operate all over the Dominion. Notice of the intention to apply for this Act of incorporation was given in the Canada Gazette and nowhere else. Hon. gentlemen know perfectly well that the Canada Gazette is a paper which practically the public does not see, and the object of giving notice of those private bills through the press, is that persons whose interests may be affected by them may be made aware of the intention to ask for legislation, and may be in a position to come and defend their interests which may suffer by the passing of those bills. There are at the present time only about three telegraph companies in operation in the Dominion. Hon. members who have been any time in the House know how vigorously those bills are fought in Parliament, and can realize, in all probability, if adequate notice had been given, this measure would be opposed. There is no doubt that the introduction of the Bill here is a sort of notice, but it is not the notice that the parties whose interests may be affected are entitled to receive. Our rule as to the publication in newspapers other than the official Gazette is that in Quebec and Manitoba a notice is to be inserted in the Canada Gazette in the English and French languages, and in one newspaper in English and in one in the French language, or in both languages in one paper if there be but one in the district affected; or if there be no paper published therein, then in both languages in a paper published in the nearest district in which a newspaper is published. In any other province the notice is to be published in one newspaper published in the county, or union of counties affected, or if there be no paper published therein, then in a newspaper in the nearest county in which a newspaper is published.

The argument of the hon. gentleman who has moved this resolution is that if the Bill affects only one district, or only one small section of the country, then it must be published in the newspaper; but if it affects not one but many districts, it should not be published in a newspaper at all. I think the rule should be that notice of a measure affecting the whole Dominion should be published in one newspaper in the chief city of each of the provinces. I see by the Bill which this petition refers to that the headquarters of the Company are to be in Kingston. There are very respectable papers published in Kingston, and the least that these gentlemen should have done was to have given notice of this application in one of those papers. This is not a case where the rule should be suspended, and the fact that among the promoters of the Bill are two or three members of the other House, is a reason why every rule should be strictly complied with.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—The Committee have recommended that the rule be suspended, so far as it relates to this Bill. The hon. gentleman should have urged his objection before the Committee.

HON. MR. POWER—I did.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—Then if the hon. gentleman was overruled, the House might assume that when a Bill comes to us from a Committee where it has been sustained, that satisfactory reasons were given for non-compliance with the rule.

HON. MR. POWER—After the Bill has been referred to the Committee it is too late to take the technical objection.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—The report of the Committee is Your Committee also examined the Petition of R. C. Carter, and others; praying to be incorporated as "The North American Telegraph Company," and found that the notice of application has been duly published in the Canada Gazette, but that no notices had been published in any local newspapers. Your Committee recommend that Fifty-first Rule be suspended in this case, as it will be competent for the Committee to whom the said Bill shall be referred to provide that no injury to any party shall arise therefrom.

The Committee will take care that no injury is sustained by parties who are interested in this measure. I think it is the safer plan for us to adopt the recommendation of the Committee.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I think the hon. gentleman from Halifax is strictly within his rights in urging his objection now; it does not follow, because a member is overruled in the Committee by a majority of one or two, that he should feel himself tied down by the decision of the Committee. At the same time, I agree with the hon. gentleman opposite, that where it is a matter of regulation we do, as a general rule, adopt the recommendation of the Committee. I do not know exactly the scope or extent of this Bill, and before the suspension of the rule we should have some further information about it. We certainly should let it stand over until to-morrow so as to have an opportunity of looking into it. I do not think it is well to rush these matters when an objection is raised by an hon. gentleman in his place. He may be right or he may be wrong, but my present impression is that there is a good deal of force in his objection and no harm could be done by allowing this matter to stand until to-morrow.

HON. MR. SULLIVAN—I understood that it was not an unprecedented matter to have the rule suspended, and I also supposed that the fact of the House of Commons having allowed it to pass would prevent any opposition, since the object is to establish telegraph and telephone lines throughout the Dominion. I have no objection to let it stand over if hon. gentlemen wish.

The Bill was allowed to stand.

BURLINGTON BAY CANAL BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL moved the second reading of Bill (76) "An Act respecting the Burlington Bay Canal." He said this is a Bill from the House of Commons the object of which is to abandon the tolls on the Burlington Bay Canal, which is a short channel connecting Burlington Bay with Lake Ontario.

HON MR. POWER—I do not rise for the purpose of making any extended observations on the Bill now before the House, and I do not propose to offer any opposition to it directly. The Bill is not one which very seriously affects the revenue of the country; it does to some limited extent. The Bill recognizes a principle which I think is of some considerable importance. I understand that this Burlington Bay Canal is substantially the entrance to the harbor of the City of Hamilton, that the Government of Canada have spent a considerable sum of money in making this canal; there are I think two lighthouses at the entrance of the harbor, and I understand that the Dominion Government maintain a ferry across the canal. I do not know whether the Government intend to do away with the tolls on the ferry.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—There is a railway bridge over the canal. I am not aware that there is a ferry.

HON MR. POWER—I understood that the tolls was charged on a ferry. The Government proposes to maintain the canal lighthouses, and ferry without charging any tolls. I think that might be called the small end of a very large wedge. A proposition is before the Government and is being pressed with a good deal of vigor by the people of Montreal, and also I believe by the people of Hamilton and Toronto for the abolition of the tolls on the Government canals generally. I doubt the wisdom of that course. The country takes money from the people at large and spends it on these canals, and I think that the public should receive whatever revenue is to be got from the canals. In Australia where the railways are Government property as a general thing, the Government receives a handsome revenue from them, and the same rule should apply to canals. If we pass this Bill we establish a precedent which will be cited when the proposition is made to abolish the tolls on the other canals. When that is done, I want to know on what logical ground the Government can refuse to abolish the tolls on the Intercolonial Railway? If it is right that the tolls on the canals, which have been built with the public money, shall be abolished, then is it not right that the tolls on the Intercolonial Railway should be abolished also? Not only have the Government so far declined to abolish the tolls on that road but they have kept them up at a figure which a great many people think is unreasonably high. I have thought it my duty in connection with this Bill to call attention to what we may look forward to in the future; I warn the Minister that if the Government proceed farther in that direction (they have already reduced the tolls on the canals one-half) great dissatisfaction will be created in the Maritime Provinces if the rates on the Intercolonial Railway are not abolished or at least considerably reduced. It occurs to me that the proper way to deal with this matter would be to hand over the Burlington Bay Canal with its ferry to the City of Hamilton; and the Government, having built the canal and maintained it for some time, would be perfectly right in doing so and allowing the people of Hamilton to dispose of it as they please.

HON. MR. MACINNES (Burlington)—I beg to state that the amount of tolls collected on the Burlington Bay Canal is less than $1,500 a year and also that from reliable calculations, which have been made, that the Government have in their hands a large sum over and above the original cost of the canal to the country. Of course, the object of the work is to facilitate trade and navigation at the place, but the collection of tolls is found to be vexatious. With reference to the statement of the hon. gentleman from Halifax as to the Intercolonial Railway, I can tell him from personal knowledge, having gone through rates of the Intercolonial Railway some years ago, that there are no people in this country who get their freights carried so cheaply as the people of the Maritime Provinces: neither is there any part of the Dominion where passengers are carried so cheaply as they are in the Lower Provinces over the Intercolonial Railway. It strikes me that the arguments of the hon. gentleman are rather puerile, that because the tolls on a canal half a mile long are to be abolished on the petition of the people of the place, that therefore there is danger that no rates will be collected on the Intercolonial Railway.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—It is evident to my mind that it is in the interest of the Lower Provinces that the tolls on the canals should be reduced, because it is bringing the trade from the west down to our Lower Province ports. The greater the facilities we offer to trade, the more we will get, and the cheapness of transport by our canals must be of vital importance to us. It brings us products of the Western states which would otherwise go by the Erie Canal to New York, so that the Maritime Provinces must be benefited by any reduction on the canal tolls. But my hon. friend from Halifax is not altogether consistent as regard the Intercolonial Railway. He thinks the rates are too high now: it is not long since he informed us that the Intercolonial Railway should be run on commercial principles and made to pay its own expenses—that it was not of so much importance to the Maritime Provinces as it was to the people of western Canada. He contended that the people of the Maritime Provinces had not much freight to send over it, but that it was all-important to the people of the west as a means of sending their products down to the Lower Provinces. Therefore, my hon. friend is not consistent in this matter when he says now that the people of the Lower Provinces are complaining of the high tariff on the Intercolonial Railway, and would like to have it reduced.

HON. MR. TURNER—The channel to which this Bill refers is called a canal, but it really is not; it is just an entrance from Lake Ontario to a body of water called Burlington Bay. It was originally a river, and a small stream ran from the Bay to the Lake. Ultimately it was found necessary, in the interests of trade, to make the passage large enough for vessels. The grand object of this Bill is to put it under the control of the Board of Works and make it a harbor of refuge. It cannot come under the name of a canal at all. It is the only place where vessels coming down the Welland Canal can come to; they have no other harbor of refuge when north-east winds are blowing. It is necessary for the Government to keep up this canal and it costs more to collect the revenue from it than the tolls amount to.

HON. MR. DEVER—There is something rather dark about this transaction. The gentlemen from the Upper Provinces are quite right in advocating this Bill; but I do not think it recommends itself highly to the people of the Maritime Provinces. We learn that a ferry boat is maintained, and that other expenditures are involved in connection with the maintaining of this work. We have a harbor in New Brunswick known as the Harbor of St. John.

HON. MR. ALMON—When the tide is in.

HON. MR. DEVER—It is a harbor at any rate which takes the trade from Halifax. We have a ferry boat plying between those portions of St. John known as the western, and eastern sides, and the consequence is that it is quite an expensive ferry to the citizens of St. John and Carleton. The cost of it is felt a good deal owing, perhaps, to our somewhat reduced circumstances and our increased taxation since the great fire. Now if the Government of Canada, seeing they are about to abolish the tolls on a ferry boat in Upper Canada, would take over this ferry, it would be but fair. No doubt Upper Canadians are men of importance and weight in this House; nevertheless, the people of the Lower Province are of some importance also, and it strikes me that they are just as sensitive to the action of the Government as any other portion of the Dominion. In the last election it was believed very generally that the iron bridge would cross that portion of the harbor of St. John known as Navy Island, and in consequence of that the portion of St. John known as Carleton was induced to give a large vote in support of the Government. But instead of crossing there, the bridge was located at a place wholly adverse to the interests of those people. The Government should, under the circumstances, consider our case and give us a free ferry on the harbor of St. John; it would be looked upon as an equivalent to this concession given to Upper Canada.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL.—The House must bear in mind, in dealing with a question of this kind, that the House of Commons, which is particularly charged with these subjects, has agreed that these tolls should be abandoned. As the Commons and not the Senate, has charge of the public purse, it seems to me that we might perhaps devote less careful consideration to this measure than would otherwise be reasonable.

HON. MR. POWER—No.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—With reference to the question itself there was, as my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Turner) said, an opening between Burlington Bay and the lake, and the operations of the Government have only been to wharf the two sides of this natural opening so as to use it without difficulty for the entrance of Burlington Bay, not only for the purposes of the City of Hamilton but to enable vessels in distress in that corner of the lake to reach a place of safety, a very important feature. It very often happens that vessels up in the bight of Lake Ontario have occasion to run into some place of refuge, and this Burlington Bay Canal enables them to do so. It therefore serves a double purpose, in the interests of the commerce of the country and also of the city of Hamilton. The revenue from this work in five years is given in a table which I hold in my hands. The net revenue seems to be about $2,000 a year; that is really the amount which is being given up. Then, in commenting upon giving up the tolls and contrasting what has been done here and in the Maritime Provinces, it should be borne in mind that the tolls on the canals in the west have been reduced, at the instance of the Boards of Trade at Montreal, Quebec and other places in the East, than from any conception that it is going to benefit Ontario in any way. It was done for the general purposes of commerce, because the tolls on the Erie Canal were being reduced, and it was thought the general current of the business on the St. Lawrence would be attenuated if we did not reduce our tolls also. The reduction was not particularly for the benefit of Ontario, but for the advancement of the material interests of the Dominion at large.

HON. MR. DEVER—The Board of Trade of St. John would not recommend it.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time, at length, at the Table.

OFFENCES AGAINST THE PERSON BILL.

ORDER POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day having been called :—

“Committee of the Whole House on Bill (N)—Offences against the person amendment Bill.”

HON. MR. GOWAN moved that the Order of the Day be discharged and that the said Bill be committed to a Committee of the whole House on the 29th instant.

HON. MR. ALMON—Before this motion is adopted I would call the attention of the House to a report of our proceedings which appears in the Citizen of yesterday. I do not mean to say that it was inspired by any person within the walls of this House, but I think when I read it you will see that there has been a great oversight on the part of the reporter who made the report. It is as follows :—

“Hon. Mr. GOWAN moved the second reading of a bill entitled “An Act to amend the Act respecting offences against the person.” This Bill, he said, proposes to deal with one of the sections in the Act relating to offences against the person by making the law upon the points covered by this Bill uniform all over the Dominion. The Bill proposes to enact that the wife shall be a competent witness in prosecutions by indictment against her husband for willfully and without reasonable cause, refusing to provide food or other necessities for his wife or for his child. In Ontario it has been decided, and the law is, that in such cases the wife is not a competent witness. In Lower Canada it has been decided that she is a competent witness, and so, in at least one of our Maritime Provinces."

HON. MR. ALMON moved that the Bill receive a six months' hoist.

Now it is unfair to say that I opposed the Bill when the point to which I objected is omitted, and it is a singular thing that it escaped the notice of the reporter that the objection was to the wife being made a "compellable" witness, since that was the point commented upon not only by myself but by several other members. Nobody supposes that the hon. member from Barrie inspired this, but people who have not the same Christian charity that I possess, might suppose that he did, and I merely mention the matter to give him an opportunity to rebut the charge.

HON. MR. GOWAN—I can only say that I not only never saw but never heard of the article before now, and I decline to be answerable for anything that appears in the newspapers.

The motion was agreed to.

BANK OF NEW BRUNSWICK BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. LEWIN moved the second reading of Bill (14) "An Act to reduce the capital stock of the Bank of New Brunswick." He said: The object of this Bill is to reduce the capital stock of the Bank of New Brunswick from $1,000,000 to $500,000. The necessity of this reduction has been growing upon us for the last two years. The collapse of wooden ship building, which used to employ a very large amount of the capital of the bank, as well as the establishment of branch banks and agencies of other banks throughout the whole Province of New Brunswick, has given us this large amount of surplus funds, which we find we cannot legitimately employ in the Bank. Consequently a meeting of the shareholders was held in October last, when the question was submitted to them, what should be done in the matter. By almost unanimous resolution they resolved to reduce the capital stock of the bank, and instructed the directors to apply to this Parliament for legislation to enable them to do so. That is the object of this Bill.

HON. MR. ALMON.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

PICTOU BANK BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. POWER moved the second reading of Bill (50) "An Act respecting the Pictou Bank." He said: This is a Bill to reduce the capital stock of the Pictou Bank. The paid up capital is now $250,000, and this Bill asks to reduce it to $200,000. The bank sustained very heavy losses some time ago, and has found it necessary to suspend payment of dividends since January 1884. There was a general meeting of the bank held on the 27th of last January at which the shareholders unanimously resolved that application be made to Parliament, in the usual way, for authority to reduce the present paid-up capital of $250,000 by $50,000, and that the balance be placed in the reserve fund to await the liquidation of assets.

The motion was agreed to.

NIPISSING AND JAMES' BAY RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. TURNER moved the second reading of Bill (35) "An Act to amend the Act to incorporate the Lake Nipissing and James' Bay Railway Company." He said: The object of this Bill is to extend the time for commencing operations, and, further, to divide the road into several sections.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

DOMINION LANDS COLONIZATION COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. MACINNES (Burlington) moved the second reading of Bill (45) "An Act respecting the Dominion Lands Colonization Company (Limited)." He said: The only amendment asked for by this Bill is one enabling the Company to accept the shares in payment of lands.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

WEST ONTARIO PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

The Order of the Day having been called for the second reading of Bill (27) "An Act to amend the Act to incorporate the West Ontario Pacific Railway Company,"

HON. MR. PLUMB said: The Company desire to construct a branch line from London to some point on the Detroit River, near Windsor, and they want legislation to enable them to do so. They also want their bonding powers amended. I move that the 61st rule of this House be suspended, so far as it refers to this Bill. The rule requires twenty-four hours' notice before the Bill can be considered by the Committee, and as we adjourn to-morrow there will be a difference of two or three hours, and I would like to get the Bill reported back to the House before the adjournment.

HON. MR. POWER—It may be that there are persons who wish to oppose this Bill, and who would thus be deprived of the opportunity of appearing before the Committee for want of proper notice.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The Bill goes before the Committee to-morrow.

HON. MR. POWER—And if the Committee consider the Bill to-morrow, what opportunity have the public to appear and oppose it?

THE SPEAKER—If the hon. gentleman raises the question of order the motion cannot be put.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Does the hon. gentleman object?

HON. MR. POWER—I would like to ask my hon. friend, through His Honor the Speaker, whether there was any opposition to the measure in the other House?

HON. MR. PLUMB—I am not aware that there was any.

HON. MR. POWER—Then I will not press my objection.

The motion was agreed to.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of this Bill.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

NOVA SCOTIA STEAMSHIP COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. LEWIN moved the second reading of Bill (51) "An Act to amend the Act incorporating the Nova Scotia Steamship Company, limited." He said: The object of this Bill is simply to remove the headquarters of this Company from Yarmouth to St. John, N. B.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

CANADA ATLANTIC RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. CLEMOV moved the second reading of Bill (43) "An Act to amend the Act incorporating the Canada Atlantic Railway Company." He said: This Bill is to authorize an additional issue of debentures for this road. Originally $15,000 per mile was allowed to be issued but the road has been constructed since that time in a more costly way than originally intended, involving a much larger outlay, by substituting iron for wooden bridges. They also require an extension of time for the completion of the road. A very extensive and costly bridge is to be built over the St. Lawrence River, involving a large outlay and considerable time, as it can only be done in certain seasons of the year. This railway supplies a great want that has long been felt in the country, in facilitating the transportation of lumber from this district to the eastern section of the United States.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

ESQUIMALT AND NANAIMO RAILWAY BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (47) "An Act respecting the railway from Esquimalt to Nanaimo in British Columbia."

In the Committee,

On the 1st clause,

HON. MR. POWER—When this Bill was at its second reading the Minister gave us to understand that he would make the necessary explanations at the Committee stage.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—When the troubles which existed for some time between the Dominion and British Columbia were adjusted, it was agreed that this railway should receive a certain subsidy from the Dominion Government. That was all the aid which the Dominion Government gave; but it had, in addition to that, certain aid from the Local Government, consisting of a tract of lands of a certain width along the line of the railway. This is given to the company in consideration of its agreeing to construct the road. The Government here, being interested in the matter, submitted a plan of the railway, limiting the curves to a certain radius. The plan, or agreement, was ultimately shown on a profile, which showed curves of a certain radius. The profile as shown, provided curves in accordance with the Act of Parliament of the Dominion, which agreed to and ratified and confirmed the arrangements which were made in British Columbia, in which Act the curves were described. Those arrangements were reduced to a profile, and this profile was afterwards shown and reduced to practical operation by the engineers of the company who were to construct the railway. Some engineer in the employment of the company, with the idea, I suppose, of favoring the contractors, wrote down the word "seven" as indicating the degree of curve; whereas in truth, the profile showed a curve which should have been indicated by the figure ten. The result of that was that when the railway came to be constructed, the curves, instead of being as shown on the profile, were curves indicated by the figure erroneously placed on the profile, and instead of being the curve of the profile, which was 10, they were really curves of 7. That was not ascertained until some time after the work had been done, when it would have been very difficult to reconstruct or change the curve. It was discovered by the engineer of the Government on visiting British Columbia, and the attention of the contractors was drawn to the fact, and they were asked how this curve, which, on the profile, indicated a curve of 10 degrees, was in practical working made sharper and reduced to a curve of 7; and the explanation came out that it had been the result of an error—almost worse than an error—made by the engineer, or some of the engineers of the construction company. The engineer who put the figure 7 where we put the figure 10 was dismissed from the company, but in the meantime the work had been constructed, and the question then came up whether it was better that the Government should insist on the road being pulled to pieces and constructed again to a curve of ten degrees, or to accept the curve of seven degrees. Under those circumstances the Government agreed to accept the railway as it was. That was urged by the Government of British Columbia, who are also interested in the road, also having given large aid in land to the enterprise—interested more than we were in the road being properly constructed and the curves not being too sharp. We agreed that the railway should be accepted as it stood, and this Bill is to change the requirements of the original Act of Parliament. It is described here in the enacting clause now before the Committee,

The Governor in Council may, when the Legislature of the Province of British Columbia, has by an Act passed by it, assented thereto, accept curves in the said railway not being of less radius than five hundred and seventy-three feet, as satisfying the requirements of the said Act forty-seventh Victoria, chapter six, which shall be construed and have effect as if that radius had been mentioned as the least allowed by paragraph 2 of the specification A in the schedule to the said Act, instead of a radius of eight hundred feet.

HON. MR. POWER—I do not suppose that there is any use in opposing the measure, and I do not mean to say that the Government have been 'guilty of any wilful wrong doing in the matter: but I presume that this work, during construction, was to be subject to the approval of the engineer of the Dominion Government.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—It was.

HON. MR. POWER—Then that engineer could not have done his duty if he allowed the specification and the law to be departed from as widely as that. I do not mean to say that the Government knew that there was anything improper going on; but really it looks now as if we were called upon after something very wrong had been done to ratify it. The Government engineer neglected his duty in allowing this company to construct a road which was not in accordance with law, and not in accordance with the specifications. For all we know, that engineer may have been acting in collusion with the contractors. The probabilities are that he was, because I do not think his neglect can be explained in any other way. I remember when this arrangement with British Columbia was being discussed some time ago, having heard that the people who were building this road were chiefly foreigners.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL.—No, the majority part of the stock was held by British subjects.

HON. MR. POWER—It is to be regretted that the hon. gentleman from New Westminster is not here now, because he would be able to set forth the iniquity of this transaction much more forcibly than I can. The least the Government might do now, in consideration of the degradation of the character of road is to reduce the amount of the subsidy which they are to pay to the Company.

HON. MR. PLUMB—My hon. friend from Halifax usually finds some mares' nests in those Bills, which he sees with that microscopic eye of his.

HON. MR. POWER—I rise to a question of order. The hon. gentlemen is out of order in using such language as that to another member.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I retract the 'mares' nest."

HON. MR. DICKEY—Swallow it.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I take it back. The hon. gentlemen has already charged the Government with iniquity in connection with the road.

HON. MR. POWER—No.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I think the hon. gentlemen has, and he will find himself reported in that way. Although the gradients on this road are different, and the curves are somewhat sharper than would have been admissible under the specifications, the railway is of a more durable and substantial character than if built where flatter curves could have been obtained. It is not uncommon, as the hon. gentleman knows, in rough countries where railway construction is difficult, both in the interest of the company and of the public that the curves and grades are charged, and not having the line before us I think we are compelled to accept the allegations of the preamble unless we know to the contrary, and not suspect that they are in the interest of any foreign company, or as my hon. friend has insinuated, that there is some hidden iniquity in the Bill itself. If my hon friend would use language less severe in its character in his criticism of measures of this kind he would have more influence with the House.

HON MR. DICKEY—As I was one of those gentlemen who criticised this legislation before, I may be permitted to say a word, I might add, not hostile, on this question of the Nanaimo Railway. I do not think that any fault should be found with my hon. friend from Halifax for his criticism. He has done it in more than usually moderate tone. But when we look at the Bill itself, in the preamble it is described "the railway shall be the best the physical features of the country will admit of without involving unusually or unnecessarily heavy works of construction, with respect to which the Governor-in-Council shall decide." That is the principle that runs through the contract and bargain between the Government and the company. When the work was actually constructed it appeared that there was this change in the gradients. It is a very heavy drop from 800 feet to 573, as any one knows who is acquainted with railway construction. That, however, is a matter more for the company than the Government, and there is just this consolation about it, if the company are to be paid by the mile they will get less than they would have got had they made the larger curve, because that would have had the effect of lengthening the line. That is the only consolation we have, although I quite agree that the conduct of the engineer should be criticised, but I think we ought to allow this Bill to pass without censure now, whether the engineer was to blame or not.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I was also opposed to this Bill originally. It seems to me that the curves as constructed are very sharp, more so than the curves usually adopted on railways. I do not know whether the localities in which those curves are will permit of their being used with safety. My hon. friend from Halifax spoke with a good deal of diffidence as to how far the Government is implicated in this, but the Minister has explained that it is purely the result of a mistake or error on the part of the engineer.

HON. MR. GOWAN, from the Committee, reported the Bill without any amendment.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—moved that the Bill be now read the third time.

HON. MR. POWER—As the hon. gentleman from New Westminster, who had a good deal to say about this measure before, is not now present, the Minister should allow the third reading to stand over until to-morrow.

HON. MR. CAMPBELL—There is no amendment to the Bill and the hon. gentleman from New Westminster ought to have been in his place.

HON. MR. DICKEY.

HON. MR. POWER—Before the Bill is read the third time the Postmaster General should give us some opportunity to verify the statements made in the preamble of the Bill which states:—

"Inasmuch as it appears by the reports of the Engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, who has inspected the said works, that the gradients of the said railway are as required by the said specification, and the work satisfactorily performed, and that although sharper curves have been introduced than are admissible under the said specification, the railway is of a more durable and substantial character than if built where flatter curves could have been obtained, and that the allegations of the said company as to the difficulties arising from the physical features of the country appear to be true."

I think the House should have that information before it. How can we say that "it appears by the reports of the engineer," if we have not seen the reports?

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—The question should have been raised in the Committee, I think.

HON. MR. POWER—It is a very good time to raise it now on the motion for third reading. I do not think the Minister can ask us to stultify ourselves, and to say that "it appears by the reports of the engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, who has inspected the said work," if we have not seen the reports.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—The hon. gentleman from New Westminster should have been in his place if he wished to discuss this Bill.

HON. MR. POWER—Apart from the absence of the hon. gentleman from New Westminster, the House has a right to have the reports of the chief engineer here.

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—That is a question that should be raised in Committee of the Whole, and not on the third reading.

HON. MR. POWER—I think it is in order to raise it at any time. That is the reason so many stages are required for each bill, just to afford such an opportunity. The leader of the House should bear in mind that now-a-days the Opposition is not as strong an Opposition, and is not as vigorously conducted as in former days, when that hon. gentleman himself led it, and the hon. gentleman will probably remember that when a bill with almost the same title as this was before the Senate some years ago, when Mr. Mackenzie was in office, it was fought very vigorously, and for some considerable time, and he cannot complain when there has been twenty minutes' discussion on this Bill altogether, if we ask to have the third reading stand till to-morrow, as I should very much like to see this report of the engineers, if nobody else does I can imagine if the hon. gentleman from Niagara, who I regret is not now in his place, were in opposition, and this measure were being forced through at railroad speed by an administration to which he was hostile, the way in which he would make the walls of this Chamber reverberate with charges of hastening to do evil; and he would probably allege that the engineer's report was altogether unreliable; that it was made under pressure of the Minister of the day, and would impute the worst possible motives to the Government and intimate that they were trying to cover up their iniquity by hurrying the Bill through this Chamber. In these remarks I wish briefly to indicate to the Minister the kind of opposition we used to have in this Chamber in years' gone by. The leader of the House has of late got so used to having a very moderate and temperate and reasonable opposition that the Government are getting to be, I think, a little unreasonable themselves, and do not concede as much to the House as they ought to concede.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—The hon. gentleman from New Westminster was in his place to-day; the order paper was before him; he saw the Bills that were to come up this afternoon, and if he intended to take any part in the debate, he would have remained in his place.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the third time on a division.

UNION SUSPENSION BRIDGE BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (72) "An Act respecting the Union Suspension Bridge."

In the Committee,

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL said: This Bill contains a proposition to abandon the tolls on the Suspension Bridge at the Chaudiere Falls, which connects Ottawa and Hull. The bridge has been in existence for many years and has yielded a large sum in compensation for its construction by the Government. In 33 years it has yielded $57,500, a yearly average of $1,716. The circumstances under which it was agreed that these tolls should be abandoned are these: the City Council of Ottawa have had many interviews with the Government concerning the proportion which the Government ought to contribute towards the city expenses. The property of the Government here, consisting of the three buildings, the land in front of them, the little park, called Mackenzie Park, on the other side of the canal, &c., is exempt from taxation. After very many interviews it was agreed that the Government of the Dominion should assume the care of the two bridges across the canal and of the part of Wellington street in front of the Parliament buildings, and that we should also abandon the tolls on this Suspension Bridge. In addition to that reason, there is the further fact that the bridge connects the two Provinces together, and that tolls on bridges of that character are not very usual, though I am not positive about that. The arrangement of which I speak is one that will commend itself to the House. It is undoubtedly the fact that although Ottawa receives great benefit from the Government being here, yet a great deal of property in the city is untaxed because it belongs to the Government. For both reasons—that the bridge is of an inter-provincial character, and these exemptions of Government property from taxation—the tolls on the bridge are abandoned. The net revenue for the last five years from the bridge was $4,710, rather less than $1,000 a year.

HON. MR. MONTGOMERY, from the Committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (57) "An Act respecting the extension of the Intercolonial Railway from a point at or near Stellarton to the town of Pictou." (Sir Alex. Campbell.)

Bill (26) "An Act to incorporate the Tecumseh Insurance Company of Canada." (Mr. McKindsey.)

The Senate adjourned at 5.40 p.m.

THE SENATE

Ottawa, Thursday, April 15th, 1886.

THE SPEAKER took the Chair at three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

PRIVATE BILLS.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ADOPTED.

HON. MR. LACOSTE, from the Committee on Standing Orders and Private Bills, presented their Ninth Report, recommending that the time for presenting Reports on Private Bills, which expires on Thursday, the 22nd instant, be extended to the 3rd of May next, and moved that the Report be adopted.

The motion was agreed to.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills, reported from Standing Committees, were read the third time and passed without debate.

Bill (53) "An Act to incorporate the Calvin Company, limited." (Mr. Sullivan).

Bill (40) "An Act relating to the Canada Southern Bridge Company." (Mr. Vidal).

Bill (14) "An Act to reduce the capital stock of the Bank of New Brunswick." (Mr. Lewin).

Bill (50) "An Act respecting the Pictou Bank." (Mr. Power)

Bill (18) "An Act to incorporate the Anglo-Canadian Bank." (Mr. Plumb).

MEDICINE HAT RAILWAY AND COAL COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. DICKEY, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbors, reported Bill (54) "An Act to incorporate the Medicine Hat Railway and Coal Company," with amendments. He explained that, although they were numerous, they were chiefly rendered necessary by the Bill having been drafted from an old form. The amendments were verbal, with the exception of those in the promissory note clause, which was brought into harmony with bills of a similar character. One other amendment was rendered necessary in the clause providing for the publication of the notice required to be given of the meeting for making arrangements with other Railways. The clause originally provided that it should be published in a paper in every county through which the line runs. There being no counties in the North-West it was doubtful if the notice could be given at all. The Committee inserted instead of that "a newspaper published at Medicine Hat, or in the newspaper published the nearest thereto." As Medicine Hat was one of the termini of the Railway, and as that was the provision in the bond clause which required a similar notice to be given to the shareholders, they adopted the same language. Those were the only amendments, and as they had been made with the sanction of the promoters of the Bill, he thought it unnecessary to discuss the matter further.

HON. MR. ALLEN moved that the House do concur in the amendments.

The motion was agreed to; the Bill was then read the third time and passed.

WEST ONTARIO PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. DICKEY, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbors, reported Bill (27) "An Act to amend the Act to incorporate the West Ontario Pacific Railway Company," with amendments. He explained that the only amendments to the Bill applied to the 12th clause, known as the bond clause. They were to rectify an omission with regard to the persons who were to be represented at the meeting to be called for the purpose of carrying out that clause. In a subsequent part of the clause, where the bonds are made a lien or incumbrance upon the whole property of the Company, there was an omission to make it applicable to their tolls and revenues. As it was decidedly in the interests of the Company that the omission should be supplied, when they wanted to raise money for the undertaking, the amendment was agreed to by the promoters and was an improvement to the Bill.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that the amendments be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was then read the third time and passed.

BIRRELL DIVORCE BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

HON. MR. DICKEY, as Chairman of the Select Committee to which was referred Bill (I), "An Act for the Relief of Flora Birrell," reported the same with amendments. He said: I can explain in a few words the tenor and effect of those amendments. The fourth clause has been struck out. It was a clause interdicting the future marriage of the respondent with any other person, which it seems we have no power to enact. The two amendments to the preamble are these: there was a recital that the respondent had been guilty of adultery with other women besides Adelaide Talbot, and as there was no evidence of that, the preamble, we thought, should be amended by striking out that statement. There was also an allegation in the preamble that the respondent had been naturalized in the United States. There was no evidence of that: there was simply evidence of his having filed in a court in the State of Michigan a declaration of his intention at a future time to become naturalized. These are the only alterations in the Bill. I think there is nothing in them to prevent the Bill being considered at once, because they are simply to make the preamble conform with the facts proved, and to strike out a clause which we have no power to pass. I shall be prepared, at the third reading, to explain, if it is deemed necessary, the ground on which the Committee came to a conclusion on this very important case—important from many points of view.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that the amendments be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to on a division.

HON. MR. PLUMB—After the explanation given by the Chairman of the Committee I think I may venture to ask the House to permit the bill to go through a third reading. The Petitioner is here and I think the sooner her suspense is relieved the better. As we are to have a long adjournment, I think the House might agree to the third reading of the Bill to-day.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I should oppose such a course: it is unprecedented. We have not had the evidence before us yet. This is a case which involves questions not only of law but of fact. We should have before us, in a matter of this kind, all the evidence, and we should have plenty of time to study the case thoroughly. We will probably not be able to see the evidence until after Easter and certainly the third reading should not take place before a week after our return from the holidays.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Inasmuch as my hon. friend has objected to the third reading of the Bill to-day (which is within his right) I move that the third reading take place on the 29th inst.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I object to that.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I am prepared to accept anything that the hon. gentleman wishes.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—We will not return here until the evening of the 28th. We should have an opportunity before the third reading to examine the evidence, and to study the cases which have been cited, before the third reading.

HON. MR. DICKEY—The evidence is very short, and there are two copies of it. The hon. gentleman can inspect it before he goes home if he wishes to do so. I think the purposes of justice would be subserved if the third reading were to take place on the 29th. There is no reason why business should be suspended because hon. gentlemen wish to go home.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—How can we get the evidence?

HON. MR. PLUMB—It is here.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—It is not printed yet?

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—But the copies are ready.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I entirely concur in the remarks made by the hon. member from Amherst. While my hon. friend from Lunenburg is technically correct, I may explain that he was present in the committee room while the evidence was being taken. I cannot believe, therefore, that he makes the objection simply because he wishes to see the evidence. Surely he does not want more than a fortnight to master the case. I hope the third reading will be fixed for the 29th.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—There is something more than the evidence to be considered: very important questions of law arise in this case, and I think it is proper that every member should be in a position to discuss the question intelligently when the bill comes up for its third reading.

The motion was agreed to.

THE TERMS OF CONFEDERATION WITH PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. PELLETIER—There is a notice of motion on the order paper for the 19th inst., an inquiry to be made by Hon. Mr. Haythorne. The hon. gentleman has just left for home, and he says that the Postmaster-General was kind enough to promise that he would answer that inquiry, and if there is no objection I will now ask the leader of the Government in this House,

“Whether any letters, telegrams, Minutes of Council, or Memorials, have been received by the Government of the Dominion, from the Local Government of Prince Edward Island, or any deputation from that body, since the 1st January last, on the subject of the fulfilment of the terms of Confederation between that Province and the Dominion, and, if so, whether the Government object to lay the same on the Table of this House, together with the replies made thereto; also, whether any letters or telegrams on the same subject from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, bearing date since January 1st, 1886, have been received, and, if so, whether the Government will lay them on the Table of this House, together with any replies which may have been made thereto?”

HON. SIR ALEX. CAMPBELL—The answer I was prepared to give to the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island is that such papers do exist, and there is no objection to their being brought down if a motion is made to that effect.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (52) “An Act to reduce the capital stock of the Union Bank of Halifax.”—(Mr. Dickey.)

Bill (41) “An Act to reduce the capital stock of the Union Bank of Lower Canada, and change the corporate name thereof to the Union Bank of Canada.”—(Mr. Vidal.)

Bill (20) “An Act to punish seduction and like offences, and to make further provision for the protection of women and girls.”—(Mr. Dickey.)

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Before the orders of the day are called I rise from a sense of duty to raise a question of privilege. I regret very much to refer to so trivial a matter, but it is a matter affecting the honor and dignity of this House. I have no doubt that the subject to which I refer is very pleasing to the hon. member from Niagara, from the expression of joy which appears on his countenance. With regard to the reporting of this House—it is well known that a considerable amount of public money is given to the Citizen to report the Debates of this Chamber, and the question is what is the purpose of Parliament, in giving a considerable sum of public money to that paper? Is it that the House should be respectably, and faithfully and honestly reported, or that one or two members, or any number of members should be held up to public obloquy and ridicule? I will read the report to the House. They make me to say:—

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I am a little surprised at the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Amherst, and I am much afraid that those remarks of his will lead the leader of the Government to place him on the category in which I stand—of almost rebels in the House.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Hear, hear.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—The hon. gentleman from Niagara says “hear, hear,” because it is, no doubt, a pleasing thing to him that I should be held up to public obloquy in any public journal. I ask hon. gentlemen, is it the feeling of the House that the Daily Citizen of Ottawa should be paid to criticise so unfairly any of its members? I know the good feeling, the good principle of the House to be such that they look with contempt upon any parties who could inspire such a report. I do not believe that that report was ever made by any fair minded reporter of this Chamber, and it would never have appeared in the Daily Citizen if it had not been inspired by some persons who have the inclination to traduce private character. It reminds me of an anecdote of Hon. Sir John Beverley Robinson, a distinguished chief justice of Upper Canada, who, on the floor of Parliament, asked the leader of the Opposition “Why he continually slandered members of the House?” The reply of the member was “Because my slanders will go where the answer will not go.” Is that the object of the gentleman who inspired that article? Is his chief object to detract from his brother members? Do the people of this country send representatives to this Chamber to be held up to ridicule in such a manner? I know too well the good sense of this House; the good principles of this House; the high-toned feeling of this House, to doubt that they will frown down and look with contempt upon the man who will be guilty of such conduct as inspiring such a report of the speeches of an humble member of this Chamber.

THE SPEAKER—Next order.

BURLINGTON BAY CANAL BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. SMITH moved the third reading of Bill (76) “An Act respecting the Burlington Canal.”

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

NORTH AMERICAN TELEGRAPH COMPANY'S BILL.

THE 51ST RULE SUSPENDED.

The order of the day having been called:—

Resuming debate on the Honorable Mr. Sullivan's motion:—That the fifty-first rule of this House be dispensed with in so far as it relates to the petition of R. C. Carter and others; praying to be incorporated as “The North American Telegraph Company,” as recommended in the eighth report of the Committee on Standing Orders and Private Bills.

HON. MR. HOWLAN, in the absence of Mr. Sullivan, moved the suspension of the rule.

HON. MR. POWER—This motion was postponed at the instance of the member from Kingston yesterday. That hon. gentleman intimated that he would be prepared to lay before the House some further information showing why the rule should be suspended. I think a prima facie case was made out against the suspension of the rule, and I believe that was the opinion of the House. The hon. gentleman from Alberton has not given any further reason for suspending the rule, and I would suggest therefore that the better way would be to postpone the matter until after the adjournment.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I think the purpose of the promoters of the Bill, as well as the convenience of the House, would be best served by agreeing to the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Halifax. We will all be better able to come to the consideration of this measure after the holidays, and it would be better therefore to postpone it until the 29th.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—If it is the sense of the House I have no objection. I have merely moved this resolution in the absence of Mr. Sullivan, though the Lower House considered that the preliminary proceedings were sufficient and passed the Bill, and I do not see any good reason why it should stand over.

HON. MR. VIDAL—It is very seldom that the House ventures to go contrary to the recommendation of one of its committees unless some good and cogent reason shown why they should do so. Is there any reason shown that we should set aside the deliberate conclusion of the gentlemen appointed as a committee to consider those matters and examine into them? That committee, after looking into the matter, have reported to this House a recommendation that the rule be suspended; and if my recollection is right, the only objection to it was that the advertisement was not put in the local papers, and the answer was what local paper could they take in a matter that was intended for the whole Dominion? It was advertised in the Official Gazette and the Bill has been passed in the other branch of Parliament. I think it is straining a little too much the requirements of our rules to oppose this resolution. I think it would be only in the public interests, and an act of courtesy to the Committee, if my hon. friend should withdraw his amendment.

THE SPEAKER—Does the hon. gentleman from Alberton withdraw his motion?

HON. MR. HOWLAN—No.

HON. MR. POWER—Then I move that the further consideration of this motion be postponed until the 29th instant.

THE SPEAKER—Are the yeas and nays demanded?

HON. MR. POWER—No.

HON. MR. DICKEY.

HON. MR. DICKEY—No.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Yes.

HON. MR. VIDAL—Yes.

The House divided on the amendment which was declared lost on the following division:—

Howian,

THE SPEAKER—The question is now on the motion of the hon. gentleman from Alberton.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. member from Sarnia made some reference to a want of courtesy on my part in questioning the report of a committee on a bill. As a general thing I have endeavored not to be discourteous to any member of this House or to any committee. I rise now simply to protest against the theory that when any matter is referred to a committee, Senators, whether members of it or not, are bound by the report of the majority of the committee. That would be a most objectionable doctrine. Hon. gentlemen know that we have had in this House very warm debates on reports from committees. There was a difference of opinion in the committee on this Bill: the majority decided to report in favor of this petition. I do not think that I was alone in the committee, but at any rate I gave notice that when the matter came before the House I should oppose it. I think any hon. gentleman who can find in my conduct want of courtesy in that matter has a much keener sense of what is due to his fellow Senators than the average member has. I think I was quite within my right and did not show any want of courtesy to any one. Hon. gentlemen might well consider that there is something more than a lack of courtesy involved in pressing the question now. There was nothing whatever to be gained by pressing for a division to-day. There are interests of a very considerable magnitude involved in this matter. The petitioners in this case propose, without giving any notice to parties, whose interests are likely to be interfered with by this Bill, to have themselves incorporated as a company, for the purpose of constructing and operating telegraphs and telephones all over the Dominion. Now that is a most important private Bill, and there has been no reason whatever given why they have failed to give notice in any paper but the Gazette, which as I have said is only read by the officials.

HON. MR. VIDAL—If I expressed myself in such a way as to charge the hon. gentleman with want of courtesy I cannot certainly have conveyed my own sentiments clearly, for I have had no such thought in my mind, and I think he must have misapprehended what I said. I merely spoke in a general sense, that it was not a very common thing for the House to go against the report of a committee unless there was some very cogent reason for it. Now I think that is a fact admitted by all of us. I do not see, in the additional arguments given here, why we should not have voted as we did a moment ago. I do not see what is to be gained by any particular interest by blocking the progress of the Bill at this stage. I think when the Committee reported in favor of it, that it is due to them to attach some importance to their report, and I cannot see what is to be gained by blocking the proceedings at this stage. No injury can be done to any one: the matter has to go to the Committee, and before the Committee any adverse interests can be protected surely. Then it must come back to this House, the report must be received, and the Bill has to get its third reading. There is therefore ample protection for any rights that may be jeopardized by this Bill. It is because I thought the objection was an unnecessary interference with the progress of the Bill that I took the ground which I have taken to-day.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I must say, in justice to my hon. friend from Halifax, that while a good deal has been said as to his course being unusual, it is an unusual proceeding on the other side, when a member rises in his place and states that there are grave objections to pressing the Bill, to accuse him of discourtesy. There is a little courtesy due to him as well as to the promoters of a Bill the objects of which we are not exactly in a position yet to understand. This is not a matter in which there has been anything sprung upon the House suddenly, because my hon. friend the other day gave his reasons at length against the passage of this motion. The hon. member who had charge of it was so impressed with these reasons that he consented to the Bill being allowed to stand over. Now, without explanation, we are asked to override those objections, and instead of my hon. friend from Halifax blocking the proceedings, there is a disposition shown to override his objections and hasten the passage of this Bill in the absence of the hon. gentleman who had it in charge and who was willing that it should stand. A great deal has been said about the respect which is due to the report of a Committee. There is a memorable precedent for the course which my hon. friend from Halifax has taken, in the Marine Electric Telegraphs Bill, which was before a Committee for a long time and received a searching investigation. The report was brought here, discussed day after day, and finally voted upon. Did anyone then object? Has it ever been suggested that any member is prevented discussing the report of a committee adopted by whatever majority you choose? If there was only a single dissentient against it why should not the hon. gentleman have an opportunity to oppose it here? He has not had time to argue the question, and the hon. members opposite are determined to proceed with the Bill notwithstanding his objections. I do not think the discourtesy is all on one side. I think there is a slight want of courtesy on the part of my hon. friends in taking exception to the objection of an

hon. member who simply asks for an opportunity to discuss the measure.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—The remarks of the hon. member from Amherst as to the right of every member to discuss the report of a committee are quite correct: but my hon. friend from Sarnia did not say that the hon. member from Halifax was discourteous. He said simply that the opposition to the motion was discourteous to an hon. member who was absent. If we were going to read this Bill a third time to-morrow there would be some weight in my hon. friend's objection; or if those whose interests are supposed to be affected by this measure, had not an opportunity to attend here and oppose it, there would be some force in his argument, but in this House and out of this House, there are gentlemen who are paid solicitors for these telegraph companies who can see that no harm comes to the interests they represent. Because the decision of this House has been in favor of this motion of the hon. gentleman from Kingston, it does not follow that this legislation is to go on at once. Therefore no harm can be done by advancing this Bill a step to-day. It must go to the Committee, of which the hon. gentleman from Amherst is himself the Chairman, and he will have the opportunity there of stating his reasons against it. I certainly think that the report of the Committee is entitled to some respect unless great and grave reasons can be shown to the contrary. We have a similar committee of the House of Commons: how did they treat this matter? The promoters of this Bill ask for incorporation for a telegraph Company, and the objection of hon. gentlemen opposite is that certain advertisements were not published in newspapers throughout the Dominion. If telegraph lines are to be extended through the length and breadth of Canada, it would be necessary to put an advertisement in every paper throughout the country. Therefore the only step that they could take was to publish the advertisement in the Gazette. The hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill is absent, and he did not promise that this motion should stand over longer than until to-day.

The motion was agreed to on a division.

HON. MR. DICKEY.

TECUMSEH INSURANCE COMPANY'S BILL.

ILLNESS OF SIR ALEXANDER CAMPBELL

HON. MR. SCOTT—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire, with very great regret, to call attention to the circumstance that we have met this evening without the leader of the House being present. It is, I am sure, a source of great regret to every hon. gentleman in this Chamber to learn that Sir Alex. Campbell is suffering from ill health, I will not say a severe illness, because I trust it may be only temporary. We all, I am quite sure, deeply deplore his being detained, even for a short time, from the House, and hope that the period of his absence from us will be limited and that he will soon be restored to his ordinary health.

The motion was agreed to.

THIRD READINGS

Bill (35) "An Act to amend the Act to incorporate the Lake Nipissing and James' Bay Railway Company." (Mr. Turner.)

Bill (37) "An Act to naturalize Girolamo Consentini, commonly called Baron Girolamo Consentini." (Mr. Plumb.)

NORTHUMBERLAND STRAITS TUNNEL RAILWAY COY'S. BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE

HON. MR. DICKEY, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbors, reported Bill (K) "An Act to incorporate the Northumberland Straits Tunnel Railway Company," with amendments.

He said—The amendments made to the second clause were intended for the protection of the public and of the Government Railways. As the clause stood, it provided that the location of the Railway should be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council ; but we have added that plans and specifications shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, and also the connections with are authorized with the Government and other Railways with which this line is proposed to be connected—that these connections shall be, as they ought to be, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, in order that that there may be no collision or conflict. An amendment, also of some importance, is made to the third clause by striking out the words which authorized connections to be made with existing railways in the Provinces of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island and specifying the railways with which it is proposed that this line should connect, instead of giving a general power to connect with all railways in both these provinces. That is accomplished by striking out the words "existing railways in those provinces", and specifying the Shediac and Cape Tormentine Railway in New Brunswick, and the Prince Edward Island railway on the Island. The other two substantial amendments are made to clause 10, which refers to the annual meetings of the company, and clause 11, which refers to the special general meetings, and provides that notice of those meetings should appear in a newspaper published in the City of St. John as well as in one published in Charlottetown, as provided by the seventh section in regard to the first meeting of the company. In the case of a company which proposes to construct a work connecting two provinces it is desirable that the notices of these meetings should be given in the papers in the principal cities of the two provinces. The amendment to clause 16 refers to the time for the commencement and completion of the work. As the clause stood five years was allowed for the commencement and ten for the completion of the work from the passing of the Act. Although five years may seem to be a long time, yet in connection with an enterprise of this character, which requires extensive surveys, it is not a very long period: but it was proposed, after consultation, to restrict the time to three years instead of five, and to limit the time for the completion of the work to eight years instead of ten from the passing of the Act. These are the amendments.

HON. MR. HOWLAN moved that the amendments be concurred in.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I am not a member of the committee to which this Bill was referred, but I made it my business to attend the meeting this morning, and I there proposed that no further progress should be made with the Bill to-day. I should therefore be better satisfied if my hon. friend would defer further action on the Bill until to-morrow. We could then have an opportunity of seeing the amendments in print. I am dissatisfied with some of the clauses which remain in the Bill: and it is my intention to move, at a future stage of the measure, that a certain clause shall be still further amended, if not omitted altogether. I need not at the present time go into the objections which I entertain to that clause, but at a future stage of the Bill I shall avail myself of an opportunity of opposing it. Perhaps my hon friend from Alberton will be disposed to postpone further consideration of the amendments until to-morrow.

HON MR. HOWLAN—I would have no objection to postpone the measure until to-morrow, or until next week, if the Session were not so far advanced that any postponement would imperil the passage of the Bill this year. I have every wish to meet the views of my hon. friend, but I think he will agree with me that it is necessary, if this Bill is to be passed this year, that we should proceed with it at once. I therefore intend to persist in the motion which I have made.

HON MR. HAYTHORNE — This House has been in Session for two months or more, and recently it adjourned for 13 days. It does not appear therefore that there has been any pressure on the time of the House. If the hon. gentleman determines to go ahead with the Bill I will avail myself of some future opportunity to make the motion to which I have referred.

HON MR. KAULBACH—I hope my hon. friend from Alberton will consent to allow the Bill to stand. It is important that time should be given for a full discussion of the measure.

HON MR. HOWLAN—I do not wish to delay the Bill, for the reason I have stated. If the objection was to the principle of the Bill, there would be some reason in acceding to the proposition: but the objection of the hon. gentleman was stated in the committee and met there. I have moved that the amendments be concurred in, and the motion is before the House.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I do not understand my hon. friend from Marshfield to object to these amendments. I understand that he wishes to add something to the Bill at its third reading. I think, therefore, it will facilitate matters and answer my hon. friend's purpose if we concur in these amendments now: and at the third reading of the Bill to-morrow my hon. friend can make his motion if he thinks proper to do so.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—The question now is that the amendments be concurred in.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I am not altogether satisfied with the time that is given to the promoters of this Bill. I had understood from my hon. friend opposite, in private conversations that we have had from time to time on the subject, that he would be prepared to undertake that five years should be the limit within which the project is to be carried out: and when it is remembered that this Company will have the exclusive occupation of the ground during that time, be it long or short, and that no further progress will be made in the improvement of means of communication between the Island and the mainland, the importance of setting the matter at rest will be understood, so that, in case the scheme of the hon. gentleman should be found impracticable, or he should be unable to carry it into effect, the people of Prince Edward Island will lose no time in seeking other means of obtaining a fulfilment of the terms of Confederation. I still entertain serious objections to the term of eight years, which is now provided for in the amended Bill.

The motion was agreed to.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER — Before the Orders of the Day are called I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to call attention to a very remarkable cartoon, which appeared in the last issue of the distinguished Toronto journal called Grip, which some think is calculated to affect the dignity of this House. That journal has been distinguished for its noble and independent spirit, and for its able efforts to elevate the tone of our public life for many years. Some think that this cartoon is a slight departure from the ordinary tenor of its way. It designates one of the humble members of this House "A Wasp," but such persons say that it ought to have informed the reading public that that member of the Senate has been roughly treated—I repeat, very roughly treated, not by the respected members of this House, but by five very troublesome members, whom, if the rules of Parliament permitted, I would designate the five scorpions of the House.

HON. MR. DEVER—The what?

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—No doubt the conflict between that member and the five scorpions has been a very unseemly one. It has been, no doubt, very distasteful to the House, and it has certainly been very distasteful to me. I heartily wish we could end this conflict.

HON. MR. ALMON—Hear, hear.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER — It has affected my health, and it has affected most seriously the health of two other members, which we most deeply deplore. I think it is in the interests of the country that I should add one or two words of explanation. My reading of the British Constitution—both of the practice of the House of Lords and of the Commons ever since the days of Burke, Pitt and Charles Fox, has been that there should be entire free discussion or debate in Colonial Parliaments—to this extent that every member should have the right to expose and stop wrong-doing and all acts of mal-administration. Of course rules require to be framed to govern debate, and where the trouble has arisen is that those rules have been unfairly applied. Is there one member of this House who does not now feel that those rules which govern Parliament have been most unfairly applied to me? that while others transgress the rules of the House, those five troublesome members have disturbed me when I have been endeavoring to serve the interests of the people? No man of any spirit will brook unseemly interruption, and I give those five members due notice that if they see that, perhaps from a higher source, two of their number have been laid low, they may suffer in like manner.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I rise to a question of order.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Will the Speaker call the hon. member to order. He is always interrupting me in debate.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I must persist in my point of order, and I ask the Speaker of the House to say whether this is a question of privilege that the hon. gentleman is speaking of.

THE SPEAKER—I think the hon. member is going beyond his right of privilege in attacking, as he is doing, four or five members of this House, two of whom are absent.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I stand corrected by the Speaker of the House, and I will endeavor to put myself in order. I have had to ward off such blows with skilful fencing, and I have had to render some home thrusts which perhaps those five hon. members will not forget. The House will remember that I have not received assistance, not even from members of the Opposition. I am never in the least afraid of those members, but I confess I was discouraged by words of admonition given me by one who is deeply respected by this House, my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Flint) the Senator from Belleville. He always makes good and practical speeches, characterized by a desire to do what is right and to act fairly, and I believe that in giving the advice which he offered me, he was actuated by a desire to prevent me using extreme language or pursuing an extreme course, and that he was governed by a desire for my well-being in offering the admonition which he gave. His last speech was one of his best in this House. He referred to myself as a penitent Christian following the Chaplain, as I always do, upon his reading the Lord's Prayer, and he added that no sooner was that prayer ended than I immediately commenced to raid some five members of this House with a red hot poker. The hon. gentleman will allow me to explain that he does not quite understand the position which I now occupy.

HON. MR. FLINT—I do not think anybody does.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Perhaps the hon. gentleman will understand it when I tell him that my mission is to bring those five members to a sense of their duty and turn them from their wicked ways so that they may not hereafter perhaps fall into a region where they will suffer in earnest from a red hot poker. I have only in conclusion to implore those five members to act with a little more self-respect, and to remember that they are here for a solemn purpose and not simply to advance the interest of the party. Some of them are now approaching the end of their lives. I see one who is nearer his than myself, and I would only implore of them to remember that there is something higher to be attained than the success of party. I will not refer to the manner in which the present administration are conducting the affairs of this country, but I say it is deplorable to see men advanced in years interfering with a humble member like myself whenever he rises to discharge his duty, with no personal object in view, for I would not accept at the hands of this or any future administration any position in their gift. We know that one of these five members expects to be made a Lieutenant-Governor, another Speaker of the House, a third a Judge, and I say it is deplorable that they should lose sight of the great interests of the country, and sacrifice their self respect and act in so reprehensible a manner as they have been doing, during the present and former sessions.

HON. MR. MCINNES (B. C.)—I do not rise for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to wasps, scorpions or red hot pokers, but for the purpose of asking the Government why certain papers which I asked for on the 6th July last have not been brought down?

HON. MR. SMITH—It is possible that the delay may be due to the illness of the leader of the House.

HON. MR. MCINNES—The Return was asked for nearly a year ago, and I should like to know why it has not been brought down.

HON. MR. SMITH—I will inquire.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER.

THE BIRRELL DIVORCE BILL.

THIRD READING POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day having been called for the third reading of Bill (1), "An Act for the Relief of Flora Birrell."

HON. MR. PLUMB said: As some questions have been raised with regard to this Bill, I would like to ask my hon. friend, the Chairman of the Select Committee to whom it was referred, to make such explanations as may be necessary. I move the third reading of the Bill.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I think the evidence has scarcely been circulated and it would be better to postpone the third reading until to-morrow.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—The evidence has been circulated; I have a copy of it here.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—It has only been circulated within the last five minutes.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that the order of the day be discharged and that the third reading of the Bill be fixed for to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

SHUSWAP & OKANAGAN RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. NELSON moved the second reading of Bill (33), "An Act to incorporate the Shuswap and Okanagan Railway Company." He said: The proposed line of railway is intended to connect the Okanagan Lake with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and to open up one of the most fertile wheat districts of British Columbia and give an outlet for its products. It will also connect two large bodies of navigable water with the line of railway. I think I can better explain the object of the Bill by reading some extracts from a report to the provisional board of directors of the proposed railway company from a resident of the Okanagan Valley,

Mr. M. Lumby, who is an extensive farmer there. He says:

I beg to lay before you a few items in reference to the scheme for the construction of a line of railway from a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway, at Skamoose Narrows, to Okonagon Lake, a distance of fifty miles, with a boat on Okonagon Lake, giving a water stretch of over seventy-five miles.

The object of the scheme is to give an outlet to the finest stretch of wheat growing land in British Columbia, and to enable the producer to ship wheat to the sea coast. The country is specially adapted for wheat growing, yield and quality cannot be surpassed in any part of the world, and with the facilities for procuring necessary machinery and supplies, which the proposed railway will afford, wheat can be raised at a low price, no irrigation being required.

At present but a comparatively small area, within reach of navigation, has been cultivated for shipment. Throughout the greater part of the district, on account of the difficulty of shipment, only enough has been grown for local consumption.

I quote some of the yields of wheat for 1884, obtained from Messrs. Tronson & Brewer, the proprietors of a steam thrasher:—

Messrs. Clinton & Murray threshed 208 tons from 165 acres of lands.

Mr. Graham, 108 tons from 65 acres.

Mr. F. Young, 64 acres, which averaged 3,100 lbs. to the acre.

Mr. O'Keefe, 60 acres which averaged over 3,600 lbs., or 60 bushels to the acre.

Mr. Fortune, 60 acres, average 2,500 lbs. to acre.

Mr. Furstenau, 85 acres, average 2,400 lbs. to acre.

This return shows the enormous yield of from 37 bushels to 60 bushels to the acre.

The amount of land already occupied in this district, certified to by Messrs. Dewdney and Nicholson, Government Agents, is 136,373 acres. It is difficult to estimate, with any degree of accuracy, the area of land capable of producing wheat, but from data furnished by reliable farmers, in different parts, deducting twenty per cent., I put down the area at 200,000 acres. Irrespective of grazing land, this represents (were it in one block) over 300 square miles.

In the year 1882, the Dominion Government had a survey made for a canal between the head of navigation on the Spallumcheen River and the Okonagon Lake, by L. B. Hamlin, Esq., C.E., who reported most favorably of the country. I quote a few lines from his official report.

"The importance of this canal scheme cannot be over-estimated. It would establish an unbroken navigable water stretch of over 240 miles, opening upon a rich agricultural country, which is unsurpassed in British Columbia for its fertility."

He estimated the lowest probable cost of a canal at $27,000 per mile."

It is proposed that this line of railway shall take the place of that canal. I might quote from another report by Mr. Lumby, but I think I have shown enough to convince the House of the importance of the enterprise.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

TORONTO BOARD OF TRADE BILL.

COMMONS AMENDMENTS ADOPTED.

The Order of the Day having been called for consideration of amendments made by the House of Commons to Bill (E) "An Act to amend the several Acts relating to the Board of Trade of the City of Toronto,"

HON. MR. ALLAN said: When that Bill came up, just before adjournment, I had not an opportunity of looking over the amendments: but I found, on looking at them subsequently, that they were merely verbal, and will not interfere with the working of the Bill. I move therefore that the amendments be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

UNION BANK OF HALIFAX BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. DICKEY moved the second reading of Bill 52 "An Act to reduce the capital stock of the Union Bank of Halifax." He said—The object of this Bill is merely to reduce the capital stock of the Bank.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

UNION BANK OF LOWER CANADA BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. VIDAL moved the second reading of Bill (41) "An Act to reduce the capital stock of the Union Bank of Lower Canada and to change the corporate name thereof to "Union Bank of Canada." He said—In taking charge of this Bill when it came up from the House of Commons, I did so as there was no member present who seemed to have charge of it. On going carefully through the Bill I find that it is simply to reduce the capital, to make a slight change in the name of the bank, and with the usual safeguard clauses to protect the public from injury. Before the Bill shall take effect it must be approved by a majority of the shareholders.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

POST-OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

COMMONS AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

The Order of the day having been called for consideration of amendments made by the House of Commons to Bill (D.) "An Act further to amend the Post Office Act 1875," HON. MR. SMITH moved that the amendments be concurred in.

HON. MR. POWER said: This amendment is one of some little consequence, and I propose to invite the attention of the House to it with a view of ascertaining what the feeling of members is on the subject. I shall read the clause which is proposed to be amended:—

"61. Every deposit received by any postmaster appointed for that purpose shall be entered by him at the time in the depositor's book, and the entry shall be attested by him and by the dated stamp of his office; and the amount of such deposit shall, upon the day of such receipt, be reported by such postmaster to the Postmaster-General, and the acknowledgment of the Postmaster-General, signified by the officer whom he appoints for the purpose, shall be forthwith transmitted to the depositor:

"2. Such acknowledgment shall be conclusive evidence of the claim of the depositor to repayment of the deposit, with the interest thereon, upon demand made by him on the Postmaster-General; and, in order to allow a reasonable time for the receipt of the acknowledgment, the entry by the proper officer in the depositor's book shall also be conclusive evidence of the title, as respects a deposit made in any part of Canada other than the Province of British Columbia or the North-West Territories, for ten days from the making of the deposit, and as respects a deposit made in the Province of British Columbia or the North-West Territories for eighteen days from the making of the deposit; and if such acknowledgment has not been received by the depositor through the post within such ten or such eighteen days respectively, and before or upon the expiry thereof he demands such acknowledgment from the Postmaster-General, then the entry in his book shall be conclusive evidence of title during another term of ten or eighteen days respectively, and toties quoties."

The Bill came from the Post-Office Department, and it was amended in this House by inserting the words "By registered letter addressed to him at Ottawa." That amendment was accepted by the Postmaster General. When the Bill went down to the House of Commons it was amended by striking out the word "Registered." It occurred to me, as I think it occurred to some other hon. gentlemen, that it was desirable for two reasons that the letter should be registered. In the first place, if the depositor simply posts a letter unregistered he gets no receipt for it and he has no evidence in his hands to show that he has actually made the demand on the Postmaster General for the acknowledgment. It would be a very difficult thing for the depositor to establish that he had made the demand, and it would be unfair to impose upon him the necessity of taking witnesses to the post office when he mailed the letter, to establish afterwards the fact that he had done so. It occurred to me that the receipt of the registration clerk or postmaster, as the case might be, would be the most convenient evidence for the depositor, and that which could be most conveniently forwarded to the Postmaster General, in order to establish that the depositor had made this demand. Another reason was one in the interest of the Department: that the Department would have evidence from its own records to show that this depositor had at a certain date mailed a letter to the Postmaster General at Ottawa: otherwise the Department might be exposed to being misled or deceived by the allegation made by the depositor that he had mailed a letter when he had not done so. Those were the reasons that struck me as making it desirable that the letter in question should be registered. However, I thought I might be mistaken, and I called to-day at the Post-Office Department and had an interview with the Deputy Postmaster General.

He said in effect that he thought that inserting the word "registered" to a certain extent defeated the object of sending a notice. He said that it would enable the Postmaster, if he was a dishonest official, to defeat the object of the Bill: and he intimated that the Bill was intended in a great measure to provide against misconduct on the part of Postmasters. If the Postmaster was dishonest, the registration of the letter would give him notice that the depositor was communicating with the Postmaster General, and he would, of course, take care not to forward the letter. I gathered from what the Deputy said that the occasion of this Bill was the misconduct of a Postmaster within the last few months, who had embezzled the money deposited in his hands by persons to be forwarded to Ottawa, and had destroyed all the letters sent by those persons to the Department in connection with their deposits. I asked him then if those letters had been registered. He said not. Consequently the objection of the Deputy Minister to the insertion of the word "registered" does not seem to be a very valid one. In large city post offices there is a special officer whose duty it is to register letters, and those registered letters would not necessarily be brought very directly to the notice of the Postmaster. In country Post Offices, as is well known, the Postmaster as a rule looks over all the letters that are being sent, and if a non-registered letter is sent to the Postmaster-General it is just as likely to attract his attention as if it were registered: and there is this other fact about it: if he destroys an unregistered letter, the sender has no means of showing that he mailed the letter at all. If the feeling of the House is that we had better accept the amendment, I am not disposed to press my objection; but I have to say that the arguments of the Deputy-Minister did not convince me, and I thought it my duty to submit the facts to the House in order to enable hon. gentlemen to consider them.

HON. MR. SMITH—It seems to be the desire of the promoters of the Bill that this amendment should be accepted.

The motion was agreed to and the amendments were concurred in.

INTERPRETATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

COMMONS AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

HON. MR. SMITH moved that the amendments made by the House of Commons to Bill C, "An Act further to amend the Interpretation Act," be now concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

E. B. EDDY COY'S. BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (30) "An Act to incorporate the E. B. Eddy Manufacturing Company." He said: This Bill proposes to incorporate a number of capitalists who are now interested in a large manufacturing concern situated in the City of Hull, and doing business not only throughout Canada, but over this continent and a good part of Europe, for the purpose of enabling them to manage their affairs more satisfactorily.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

LAKE SUPERIOR MINERAL RAILWAY CO'Y. BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (34) "An Act to incorporate the Lake Superior Mineral Railway Company." He said: This Bill proposes to incorporate a number of parties who are largely interested in some mining enterprises on the North shore of Lake Superior, for the purpose of constructing a railway which is to connect with Port Arthur or Fort William in the vicinity of the Pacific Railway.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

THE SABLE AND SPANISH BOOM COMPANY.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. TURNER moved the second reading of Bill (36), "An Act to grant certain powers to the Sable and Spanish Boom and Slide Company, Algoma (Limited)." He said he had to thank the hon. member for Ottawa for having taken charge of the Bill at its first reading.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

SASKATCHEWAN LAND AND HOMESTEAD COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill (42) "An Act respecting the Saskatchewan Land and Homestead Company (Limited)." He said:—This is a bill to reduce the capital of the company from $500,000, of which $400,000 has been subscribed, to $350,000, and to reduce the shares to $70 each, instead of $100; and also to provide that any shareholder of the company may surrender to the company the whole or part of the shares held by him for lands or other property of the company.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

BOW RIVER COAL MINE RAILWAY AND TRANSPORTATION CO'Y. BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill (47) "An Act to incorporate the Bow River Coal Mine Railway and Transportation company." He said: This is a Bill for the incorporation of a company to build a railway to run from the Canada Pacific Railway to connect with the Mining District at Bow River.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

CENTRAL ONTARIO RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. READ moved the second reading of Bill (67) "An Act respecting the Central Ontario Railway Company." He said: This is a Bill to increase the capital stock of the Central Ontario Railway Company, and to give power to issue preferred shares and for other purposes. This is a company that has built a railway without any government, municipal or other aid than their own private capital. The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

THE STANDING COMMITTEES.

HON. MR. POWER—Before the House adjourns I wish to call the attention of hon. members whom it may concern to a practice that has grown up for the first time during the present Session, and which is very inconvenient. It is well known that the committees of this House are large, and the same members are often on two or three committees. Up to the present Session care has generally been taken not to have those committees meet at the same hour, so that members who happened to be on two or three of them should not be hindered from attending meetings of all the committees to which they belong. I really do not know where the blame lies, but I think it is a bad practice to initiate, and I hope that the proper authorities will see that it does not occur in the future. We have plenty of time to do our work, and there is no reason why the meetings of the committees should be crowded into the same hours.

THE SPEAKER—It is a matter of very considerable inconvenience. I have often experienced it myself, and I hope it will be remedied as far as possible.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—The same thing occurred to me to-day: I was on two Committees and could attend only to one.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—That could be easily arranged by the chairmen of the Standing Committees.

HON MR. POWER suggested that the clerks might be able to arrange it better in future.

The Senate adjourned at 4.45 P.M.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Friday, April 30th, 1886.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills, reported without amendment from Standing Committees, were read the third time and passed:—

(Bill (43) "An Act to amend the Act incorporating the Canada Atlantic Railway Company." (Mr. Clemow.)

Bill (51) "An Act to amend the Act to incorporate the Nova Scotia Steamship Company, limited." (Mr. Boyd.)

Bill (26) "An Act to incorporate the Tecumseh Insurance Company of Canada." (Mr. McKindsey.)

DOMINION LANDS COLONIZATION COY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. ALLAN, from the Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported Bill (45) "An Act respecting the Dominion Land Colonization Company, limited," with an amendment. He said: I may explain, with reference to this Bill, that its object is to enable the shareholders of the Dominion Lands Colonization Company, to surrender shares in capital stock in lieu of lands and other property. At the time the Bill was before the House of Commons, clause 3 provided that the provisions of this Bill should not take effect or go into operation until they had been submitted to a general meeting of the shareholders of the Company and approved of by a two-thirds vote. Since the Bill has come up to the Senate, papers were submitted to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, showing that a meeting of the shareholders of the Company had been held, at which a copy of the Bill was presented and unanimously approved of, and therefore the clause was considered unnecessary, and has been struck out.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that the amendment be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill as amended, was read the third time and passed.

FREE PASSES ON THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY AND GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY.

MOTION POSTPONED.

The motion having been called—

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before this House, a list of the names of all Senators and Members of the House of Commons who received Half Fare Passes and Free Passes from the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk Railway Companies between the first of November last and the first of April, 1886,

HON. MR. MCINNES (B. C.) asked permission of the House to allow the matter to stand until Tuesday next.

HON. MR. SMITH—I would like the hon. gentleman to deal with this matter at present, and would request him to go on with his motion.

HON. MR. MCINNES (B. C.)—I would rather allow it to stand for a few days.

THE SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman has a perfect right to allow the motion to stand if he thinks proper.

HON. MR. MCINNES (B. C.)—If I am compelled to go on with the motion, it is the first time that ever such a request was made by the Government in this House before. I ask that it be allowed to stand as a matter of courtesy; but if I am compelled to go on with it now, I prefer to withdraw it and take it up again.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—The hon. gentleman has already postponed his motion three or four times.

HON. MR. SMITH—As the motion is of such a peculiar and private character the Government do not see that there can be any good result from keeping it on the Order Paper.

THE SPEAKER—I can understand, under the circumstances, the Government wishing that the hon. gentleman should go on with his motion, as it is of a peculiar character; but the hon. gentleman is perfectly within his right in asking to allow it to stand.

HON. MR. POWER—As I understand the ruling of the Speaker, this motion is entirely under the control of the hon. gentleman who has charge of it.

THE SPEAKER—If there is any objection made he can drop it and bring it on again.

HON. MR. DEVER—And allow it to stand as an iron rod over our backs.

HON. MR. MCINNES (B. C.)—I am perfectly satisfied to allow the motion to drop at present, but I will bring it up again at another time.

HON. MR. VIDAL—It is a privilege that every member has.

The motion was postponed until Tuesday next.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY.

INQUIRIES AND MOTION.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE inquired

Has the Government been informed of the serious troubles which took place at the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary on the 24th inst?

HON. MR. SMITH—The Government has had a report of the troubles, and is looking into it, and will bring down the papers.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—

Does the Government intend to order a serious and minute inquiry into the circumstances of this revolt and into all the troubles which have occurred in this institution for four years past, and into the proximate and remote causes thereof?

HON. MR. SMITH—The Government have had all the information, and will bring down the papers from the last report.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE moved

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before this House, a copy of a letter to the Warden of the Penitentiary of St. Vincent de Paul, dated 31st July, 1885, signed by ex-Keeper J. B. Desnormeau of the said Penitentiary against his dismissal, and making most serious charges against certain officials, and asking for an indemnity.

HON. MR. SMITH—The Government will furnish a copy of the letter and bring down the necessary information.

The motion was agreed to.

Bill (24) "An Act to incorporate the Kingston & Pembroke Mutual Aid Insurance Company (limited)." (Mr. Sullivan.)

Bill (3) "An Act for the further amendment of the law of evidence in certain cases." (Mr. Wark.)

Bill (61) "An Act respecting the Canadian Copper Company." (Mr. Flint.)

Bill (66) "An Act to incorporate the Forbes' Trochilic Steam Engine Central Company of Canada." (Mr. Vidal.)

Bill (62) "An Act respecting the Anglo-American Iron Company." (Mr. Flint.)

Bill (83) "An Act to amend the Act incorporating the Board of Trade of the City of Ottawa." (Mr. Clemow.)

NORTHUMBERLAND STRAITS TUNNEL RAILWAY BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. HOWLAN moved the third reading of the Bill (K) "An Act to incorporate the Northumberland Straits Tunnel Railway Company."

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—It is with some regret that I rise to oppose the third reading of the Bill at the present time. I rise to move that the Bill be referred to a Committee of the whole for the purpose of striking out certain words in clause 12, because I do not wish it to be assumed that I am in any way opposed to the measure before the House, a measure which is so important to the interests of my province, and upon which my hon. friend from Alberton has bestowed so much pains and labor; but my impression is strong that the tenor of the 12th clause, as it stands at present, is very objectionable. In fact I candidly admit that I would far rather see the Bill without it. I cannot think there is anything contained in it that is actually necessary to the successful working of the measure. It seems to me that a principle is sought to be adopted in that clause which is of a very injurious character. It is the adoption on a large scale of what used to be known in British legislation as the truck system. It is nothing more or less than paying for the services of men of the learned professions, and for the services of directors, engineers and other persons, in stock of the company. It is possible that the adoption of such a system may give rise to serious abuses and for that reason I would a great deal rather see that clause dropped out of the Bill altogether; but as I do not consider that that is possible, I am prepared to adopt the alternative of moving in the House an amendment pretty nearly the same as that moved in the Committee by my hon. friend from Halifax. I think it would be unwise to attempt to tie up the hands of the company or their Board of Directors in any way so as to cripple their usefulness; but where, as in clause 14, they have ample opportunity for raising funds I think that the additions in this clause are quite unnecessary. It seems to me that although the initiation of the project may fall into very good and safe hands, in the course of its construction these original projectors may disappear from the scene altogether. Another clause of the Act provides for the completion of the work within eight years. That is a long period in the active life of any individual; and it is quite impossible to forecast what changes may occur in the body of directors that the project starts with, and in whom the public may have every confidence. You may ultimately find them replaced by others of very questionable character; and I think on all occasions this House should adopt as a leading principle of legislation that we should provide for all possible conditions of malfeasance by parties to whom large powers are intrusted. The same rule that applies to governments is applicable to boards of directors or corporations of any kind ; and since I have occupied a seat in this House I have never yet lost an opportunity to advocate that principle when the opportunity arose. I do so on this occasion, I believe, in the interests of the people of my Province. I think the time to take action upon a matter of this sort is now, in the commencement of the undertaking. We may perhaps find hereafter that we are chargeable with remissness upon this important occasion for not guarding the interests of the shareholders and public generally as carefully and as faithfully as we might have done. It must be remembered that the undertaking which this Bill provides for is one of vast magnitude and importance. It contemplates a matter of so serious a character as the changing of the gauge. I do not know that that forms a part of the Bill, but it must necessarily follow. It also contemplates the enlargement of the existing lines or branches of Railways in the Province and extending them into various settlements. It takes very large powers, and this company, if the Bill passes and the Company goes into operation and succeeds in its efforts, will occupy a most important position, not only in Prince Edward Island but in the Maritime Provinces. We shall have established amongst us a power which may be productive of good or evil ; and this clause may be used for evil purposes as well as good. It is to prevent the possibility of such a thing as that occurring that I am now taking the action I contemplate. I have also an objection to the time which is provided for in the 16th clause. Eight years are stated in that clause as the period within which the work must be completed. I think that is unnecessarily long, and that the patience of my Province may be exhausted long before that. One of the good results which I anticipated would occur as a consequence of the initiation of this project is that the emigration of our youth would very likely be to a considerable extent arrested. Young men who are reluctant to spend their lives surrounded by the disadvantages which they labor under at present in Prince Edward Island might, if the period were shortened in which they would see the termination of those diffities, be content to remain there ; but if they see that under eight years they have nothing to hope for in the way of improvement, it will not have sufficient influence to detain them in their native country. This is a serious matter, besides the objection which might likely be very fairly urged that during the progress of this undertaking very slim efforts will be made by any Government to improve the existing means of communication. That also is a serious objection to extending unnecessarily the time within which this undertaking must be completed. I, myself, in a recent visit which I paid to my Province, have spoken of it as an undertaking which would probably be completed within five years, and I think that the expectation of the people generally is that if this Parliament passes an Act for the incorporation of this Company, that it should be limited to five years for the commencement and completion of the work. It would be quite easy, if unexpected difficulties should be encountered in the work, or obstacles should occur beyond the power of the Company to grapple with, for them to come to Parliament and ask for an extension of time. It is a matter of frequent occurrence, and I scarcely recollect any instance when such an application, properly supported, has been rejected by Parliament. Not desiring to detain the House unnecessarily, but simply wishing that the Senate should have an opportunity to pass in review this important Act before it remits it to the other branch of Parliament, I move that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred to a Committee of the Whole House with instructions to amend the same by erasing on page three, clause 12, line 33, all from "engineers" to "Company" in line 35, and by substituting therefore the words "Solicitors, actually rendered by them" and further to amend the 16th clause by substituting the word "six" for "eight."

HON. MR. WARK—I think it would be better if the hon. gentleman would put his amendments separately.

HON. MR. POWER—As I understand the motion of the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island it is to refer the Bill to a Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of making these two amendments.

THE SPEAKER—He is quite in order in making such a motion, but it is possible that one amendment might be acceptable to the House and the other might not, and the two would be defeated.

HON. MR. DEBOUCHERVILLE—For my part I am quite ready to vote for one amendment, and I am opposed to the other.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—With the permission of the House I would ask leave to withdraw the second amendment and I will move it afterwards.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I rise to express my surprise at the course pursued by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield. He says a principle is sought to be placed in this Bill which is a novel one. It is only such a clause, word for word, as appears in nearly every railway bill which has passed this parliament. Amongst the many I may name "The Quebec and James' Bay Railway Company," "The Pacific and Peace River Railway Company," "The Wood Mountain and Q'Appelle Railway Company," "The Cumberland Coal and Railway Company," "The Quebec Railway Bridge Company," "The Lake Nipissing and James' Bay Railway Company," "The Gananoque, Perth and James' Bay Railway Company," "The Saskatoon and Northern Railway Company," "The Alberta Railway and Coal Company," and many others which I will not detain the House to enumerate. All these objections were answered by me fully in the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours. The Bill received the approbation of that Committee, and it is not customary to oppose its reports. The Bill states that the work must commence within three years and be finished inside of eight years. As it will take three years to build the tunnel, this was not considered an improper time to allow. I think I may say that I represent the people of Prince Edward Island as fully as my hon. friend, and am as anxious as he can possibly be for the early completion of this important work. The change of gauge is placed under the control of the Government. There is an old adage that when the blind lead the blind they both go to a certain place, and in this instance it seems to be verified. I submit that the hon. gentleman is entirely out of order, and I am surprised that he is not better acquainted with the rules of the House. In support of my position I shall read the 70th rule of the Senate, which says:—

"No important amendment may be proposed to any private bill in a Committee of the Whole or at the third reading of the Bill, unless one day's notice of the same shall have been given."

As no notice of the proposed amendment has been given, I shall leave the matter in the hands of His Honour the Speaker for his decision.

THE SPEAKER—If the hon. member insists upon that point of order.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Certainly I do.

THE SPEAKER—Then the motion of the hon. member from Marshfield is out of order.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—It was not possible for me to give notice, but I can substitute another motion. I move that the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be read the third time on Wednesday next.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I certainly object to that amendment. I believe the hon. gentleman is sincere in his desire to have this work completed. The promoter of this Bill is one of the provisional directors of the company, and he feels that such an amendment would be fatal to his Bill; therefore I am in this awkward position that I do not know how to act. As to one of the amendments the time has been reduced one-half—from 15 years to 8 years.

HON. MR. POWER—No, from 10 years to 8 years.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—It was altered to meet the views of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—It was reduced, as I say, and therefore, so far as that clause is concerned, there is no decided objection. As to the other clause, I have a decided objection. I think it holds out an inducement to persons to get stock without paying for it. In fact it appears to be a temptation to hon. members to act in opposition to the Independence of Parliament Act. Those things have been occurring for some time, no doubt, though it is only lately that they have come to light. I have no doubt that they often occur. I should like to see some clause introduced hereafter in these bills which would prevent anything of the kind being done—legislation which would prevent members of Parliament from using their positions as members, to promote bills in which they have a special interest, or when their services are to be paid for. I do not wish to attack this particular bill—I prefer not to do so; but if I do not oppose it in this instance it is not because I do not think the principle which I advocate should be adopted. Hereafter, when any other bill comes up I shall endeavor to have such legislation introduced that no member of Parliament shall have a right to receive stock or otherwise be paid for his services in promoting a bill.

HON. MR. POWER—In seconding the motion of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield I did not wish to do anything to interfere with the ultimate success of this Bill, or of the undertaking which is contemplated by it; but I think the motions made by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield are calculated to improve the chances of the ultimate success of the undertaking, and to render the measure more consonant with the dignity of Parliament.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I rise to a point of order. What question is before the House?

THE SPEAKER—There is a motion for the third reading, and a motion in amendment that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be read next Wednesday.

HON. MR. WARK—The hon. gentleman should move that the order of the day be discharged and that the Bill stand for third reading at some future day.

HON. MR. KAULBACH.

THE SPEAKER—That would be better.

HON. MR. POWER—The matter is of sufficient consequence to be discussed for a few minutes. I think I may say a word as to the statement of the hon. member from Lunenburg as to what the Bill originally was. I have before me the original measure and the 16th clause provides that the company shall commence the construction of the works and finish the same within 10 years. My hon. friend will see that he was altogether wrong in contradicting the hon. member from Marshfield and myself when we said that the original time was ten years. That was the time fixed in the Bill originally and the Committee amended this clause by providing that the work should begin within three years from the passing of the Act and reducing the time for completing the work from ten to eight years. The hon. member from Marshfield having the interests of Prince Edward Island, and the hon. member from Alberton both sincerely at heart thinks it would be better to shorten the time for completion to six years.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—That was done in committee to please both you and him.

HON. MR. POWER—It showed that the committee were willing to go a certain distance. The hon. member from Marshfield does not think that the committee went far enough.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—The hon. member from Marshfield accepted it and was satisfied with it.

HON. MR. POWER—I have nothing to say as to what the hon. gentleman stated before the committee. As to the merits of clause twelve, that was discussed before the committee. I expressed my views there and I do not think it desirable to say anything further about it here except that I agree with the hon. member from Marshfield as to that.

The Senate divided on the amendment which was rejected by the following vote:—

FLORA BIRRELL DIVORCE CASE.

THIRD READING

HON MR. PLUMB move the third reading of Bill (I), "An Act for the relief of Flora Birrell."

HON MR. DICKEY—My hon friend who has just moved the third reading of this Bill appealed to me yesterday to state to the House the grounds on which the Committee resolved to recommend the passage of this Bill, and as the questions involved, as will be seen presently, are of a most interesting and important character, it is perhaps well that the House should be possessed of those reasons. This is a Bill brought by the wife against the husband for adultery. The preamble sets forth that by a pretended decree of divorce obtained in the State of Michigan by the husband, without the knowledge or consent of his wife, a marriage solemnized in Canada between two domiciled Canadians was dissolved: and it sets forth further that the respondent committed adultery with a person who, under that pretended plea, he treated as his second wife. Assuming the character of the decree to be as described by the petitioner, it is quite clear that there was sufficient evidence of adultery given before the Committee. The testimony of Arthur Minchiner is, I think quite clear and unequivocal upon the point, and I shall not enlarge upon the discovery of that situation between the parties, but shall refer hon. members to the minutes of evidence taken. It was proved by that witness that the parties lived together for weeks as man and wife at Detroit, and that for months they travelled as man and wife together to Germany and elsewhere: so that there could be no doubt as to the question of cohabitation. On the other hand if this decree of divorce was a regular decree properly pronounced there could be no adultery, because the parties were regularly separated from the marital relation as man and wife. It will be seen, therefore, that the facts in this case are of a somewhat intricate character: and I may add that the questions raised are the most important that in my experience have ever been raised before a divorce committee in the Senate. They involve points of international law arising out of the comity of nations of the effect of divorce decrees in another country upon marriages performed in this country: upon the effect of fraud and perjury in the person obtaining such divorce, on the question of domicile of the parties and other cognate questions. The committee had the benefit of hearing these points argued before them by able counsel; and they had no difficulty in coming to a clear and satisfactory conclusion. It is a well defined principle of international law that the decrees of a competent foreign tribunal are recognized as prima facie decisions that should be respected in all other countries. This principle has been carried so far in England in relation to divorces that the courts of England, to which we look for precedents, have actually recognized divorces regularly granted in other countries, although the ground of divorce was such as would not be sufficient for obtaining a divorce a vinculo in England. There is an instance of this in one notable case of the application by a wife against her husband for adultery committed in Scotland, where adultery by the husband is sufficient cause for a divorce a vinculo. By a refinement of cruelty in England, the wife is not allowed to obtain a divorce for the mere adultery of the husband, while she herself is liable to be divorced if she commits any single act of adultery. But in the case of the husband the adultery must be followed by desertion for a long period, or by incest or other aggravating circumstances to justify the Court in granting it. It is otherwise in Scotland, and therefore the question arose in England whether they should recognize the decisions of the Scotch Courts, which would separate husband and wife for the mere act of adultery by the husband, while, in England, it would not have been a cause of separation a vinculo. The case came up, and it was decided that the Courts in England were bound to recognize prima facie the decisions of the Court in Scotland, which was regarded as a foreign tribunal in the same way that a Court in France or Italy or Canada would be regarded, for all purposes in which decisions in one country is considered foreign to another, although politically they may be connected. There is a still more singular case, and the decisions have gone further than that by a case that occurred in Prussia, where a divorce was granted for incompatibility of temper. That decision was recognized in the Courts of England, because it was a decision regularly obtained with no suggestion of fraud or perjury or connivance, by a competent tribunal in a foreign country, and the somewhat harsh decision was come to that there were sufficient grounds for justifying the English Court in declaring the divorce valid. The rule is clear and distinct that these decisions of foreign courts are recognized only prima facie, but they will not be respected if there is evidence of fraud or perjury on the part of the persons obtaining those divorces. There is also another important element connected with it, and that is the question of domicile, for in all countries the decision of the court of divorce is only respected where the parties seeking it have obtained a real bona fide domicile in that country for a sufficient time to justify them in making the application. I may as well explain to the House as far as I can—to the non-professional members of it—what the meaning of that question of domicile is. It is not merely a forensic domicile—a temporary domicile for the purpose of carrying on a suit, but it must be a bona fide change of domicile, and not only a change of domicile, but a change of domicile with what is called the animus manendi, that is, a clear intention of remaining in the country. I mention these principles as established by the highest and most recent authorities on the subject. By the law of the State of Michigan, even where divorces are supposed to be obtained so readily, the statute requires a bona fide residence of more than one year before the party can obtain a divorce; and the question now arises first, in what position was the party who obtained the divorce in Michigan? What position was he in for the purpose of obtaining that divorce? Had he acquired a bona fide domicile? He says that he had. Where was the domicile of the applicant at the time of, or anterior to the proceedings of this divorce? Foreseeing that this was the crucial question in the case I thought it my duty at the close of the examination of a most respectable and responsible witness, Mr. McKellar, to take up that question and get for the information of the committee something clear and tangible upon the subject, and I may as well read the questions that I thought it my duty to put to the witness and his answers upon that subject. They are to be found on page 6 of the printed minutes:—

“Q. Where was respondent then living at the time that you wrote in September, 1884?”

That is immediately after the divorce.

“A. He was in London. His domicile was really there all the time. I know that to be the case of my own knowledge, because I was in London several times, and on each occasion saw him there attending to his business, although he claimed afterwards that he was a citizen of Detroit.”

He claimed that because he wanted to establish his divorce. Then he is asked by Mr. Nelson—

“Q. That is London, Ontario?”

“A. Yes.”

Then he is asked by the chairman—

“Q. In point of fact had he been living in the United States before that?”

“A. No, I think not; he had attempted to establish the domicile there by renting a room, but I learned afterwards that occasionally he would go down to Detroit and spend a day or two there and return to his business, but his business and his real home were all the time in the City of London. Part of the time he was keeping house there.”

So much with regard to the question of domicile, and I will ask the attention of the House presently to what he himself says upon that subject. I shall make a few extracts from his examination at page 16 of the report. That is the examination in the ex parte proceeding, in which he is examined by his own attorney, and he signs and swears to the statement, without any cross-examination. He is asked—

“Q. What is your business at present ?

“A. I am living on my money now.”

“Q. How long have you lived here ?”

“A. I have lived here seventeen months.”

I will ask the attention of the House to the time. This was in August 1874. The examination continues :

“Q. Did you come here to get a divorce ?”

“A. Well, my idea was to live here altogether in Detroit.”

He evades the question and conveys the idea that he came to live in Detroit altogether. Then at the end of that singular proceeding the Court pronounces this solemn decree :—

“You may take a decree on the ground of desertion.”

That was all the evidence. It is my duty first to show how the evidence of McKellar is corroborated by testimony under Birrell's own hand. If the House will look at the agreement of separation between these parties, which I shall speak of more particularly presently, at page 8 they will find that just thirteen months before this time (in August 1884) when he swore on his solemn oath that he had been living in Detroit for seventeen months, his residence was in Ontario. Here is an agreement of separation which bears date on the 19th July, 1883, just 13 months before, between William Henry Birrell, of the City of London in Ontario, merchant, and his wife : and this agreement is signed by himself at the time, so that he has contradicted himself there by the fact of his own admission under his own hand, that his place of abode thirteen months before was in the City of London ; and we have the further testimony that he had remained there ; that his business was there ; that he had a dry-goods firm, of which he was a member ; that he was constantly in the habit of attending business there during the whole period when he says he was living at Detroit ; although he occasionally went there so as to keep up a sort of sham residence for the purpose of enabling him to procure this divorce. It is right that I should state to the House the grounds on which this divorce was granted in Michigan. They will be found at page 11 of the Minutes. It is the proceeding in the quasi Court of Chancery, and in those proceedings the words “Your orator” are used by Birrell as petitioner. Here is a statement of the grounds on which he obtains this divorce, and the House will see how he managed to deceive the court there :—

“And your orator further shows unto the Court that the said defendant, disregarding the solemnity of her marriage vow, on or about the first day of May, A.D. 1879, without cause, cruelly deserted your orator, and has ever since continued to live separate and apart from your orator, and said defendant is now a resident of the State of California.”

And he follows that up by saying :—

“And your orator positively avers that the act done and the cause of divorce charged in this bill of complaint, for which divorce is sought, were committed without the consent, connivance, privity or procurement of your orator, and that such bill is not founded on or exhibited in consequence of any collusion, agreement or understanding whatever between the parties thereto, or between your orator or any other person.”

That is to say that what he calls desertion was without his knowledge or procurement or consent whatever ; and yet I have before me here the formal deed of separation in which these parties agreed in the month of July, 1883, that they should continue to live as they had for the four years anterior to that, separately, and it was done by his formal consent and tested under his hand and seal. This is made more singular by the fact sworn to, which I need hardly quote from the papers, that he actually, from the year 1879, paid his wife an allowance of $1,200 a year to induce her to live separately from him ; and he has the hardihood to swear to the truth of the bill in the divorce court of Michigan that she cruelly deserted him without his knowledge, consent, privity or any other condition whatever. The wife, Mrs. Birrell, testifies to this effect on page 1 :—

Q “Did your husband make any allowance to you ?

A “Yes, $1,200 a year

Q “From 1879 ?

A "Yes.

Q "So that you left him with his consent?

A Yes."

That is proved by the agreement which the unfortunate woman produces signed by him. After he paid that allowance four years they entered into a formal document with his brother as security—for I suppose she required something more than his mere promise—thirteen months before he claims this divorce in Michigan, and has continued, as I believe, to the present day to pay it. I hope I have made it quite clear that as regards the question of domicile in the first instance, this man's domicile was in the City of London, and there never was any change of domicile whatever; and that he had therefore no bona fide domicile in Michigan, and that he deceived the Court there and obtained this divorce by false representations. In the language of the courts of England, speaking on this subject, he misled the Court, and he must take the consequences. He was therefore guilty of fraud and guilty of perjury in swearing to facts which were entirely opposed to the evidence and opposed to the documents which are laid before the House over his own signature. I have already stated the principle that the decision of a divorce court in a foreign country is only recognized as prima facie, and it could be set aside, as has been frequently the case in England, upon evidence that the divorce was obtained by fraud and perjury and that if the court was imposed upon it is sufficient ground for setting it aside. I have also shown that the party had no real domicile in Detroit. It was only a colorable residence there, what is called a forensic domicile, adopted for the purpose of bringing suit and only for that purpose, and that he went backwards and forwards attending to his business, having his home in London and going occasionally to Detroit, having rented a room there, as is supposed, for the purpose of fulfilling the requirements of the law, and having no bona fide domicile there. The Committee thought it necessary to examine most closely and critically this Mrs. Birrell upon the question of her connivance in this matter, and we did not confine ourselves to the instructions that were conveyed to us as to connivance or consent with regard to this divorce bill.

We insisted on examining her severely as to her consent or connivance in this previous alleged divorce in Michigan. We have her testimony here. It is not necessary that I should quote it but in all the various forms of question and answer that could suggest themselves to the Committee, she was examined as to those points, and she stated most distinctly that so far from having connived or given any consent to this Michigan divorce, the first notice she had of it was a month after it was obtained. She learned of it in a letter from an acquaintance in this country. At that time and for several months previously she was a resident of California, at the other end of the Union, and she merely by accident obtained this information. By a curious practice in that country, even when a person resides in the United States—and in this instance the husband swears that she resided in California—no personal notice is required. In point of fact no attempt was made to give her notice. The notice was published in a newspaper called the Wayne Courier, which, of course, she never saw and probably no person in California ever saw, and that was considered sufficient evidence to warrant the Court in deciding to dissolve this marriage contracted in another country. Then on the question of connivance and consent to these proceedings, she is equally distinct in her answers negating any idea of collusion. We are not confined to her testimony on that point, because she swore, and her testimony was confirmed by Mr. Blake, that she was acting from first to last entirely under the advice of the leading Chancery counsel in Ontario in all the proceedings that she took, and it was under his advice that this application for a Bill of divorce was made, for the simple reason that there was no other way by which the unfortunate woman could get rid of this sham divorce obtained by her husband in the State of Michigan, so that she could be put on the same footing with him. Knowing that it was a divorce that must be set aside by the courts of this country, she could not rest upon that. It gave her no chance for a future in her life and therefore she was obliged to take steps for obtaining this divorce, in order to put her upon the same footing as her husband. I have made this statement because the principles involved in this case are very important, and it may save us some trouble hereafter in other cases. I trust I have not unnecessarily wearied the House in making this explanation.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I wish to thank the hon. gentleman for the very clear, lucid and interesting statement which he has made. This case presents some features of a novel character. It involves one or two very important questions, and one of them, I may say, at my urgent request that the hon. member consented to address the House on the subject. I thought it was desirable that the points which he has stated so clearly should be upon record. They were largely stated by him as chairman in the committee, and I and all the other members of the committee thought it was exceedingly desirable that they should be on record in the Senate Debates. I trust the hon. gentleman will accept my most cordial thanks for the manner in which he has laid the matter before the House.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I do not intend, after the full, lucid and elaborate statement not only of the law, but also of the evidence in the case by the hon. member from Amherst to say more than a few words. It would be a work of supererogation on my part to attempt to add anything to what he has stated, but as I strenuously objected on two former occasions to this Bill, involving questions of the highest importance, being read the third time, without a thorough investigation both of the law and the evidence on the subject by this House, with all the evidence taken by the committee before us, it would probably be as well for me to make some remarks. My hon. friend has admitted that this is a case peculiar in itself, the like of which has not come before this Parliament, involving so many intricate questions of international law and comity of nations. I have ever felt throughout my parliamentary life that the severance of the marriage tie should not be referred to a tribunal constituted as this House is, and I do not stand alone in this view. It has seldom happened that so difficult a case as to points of law has come before us. The question of divorcing man and wife is a grave and solemn one. Many of us believe marriage to be a sacrament and not to be treated as an ordinary case to be dealt with by a civil court, and that if it must be treated as a civil right subjected to legal decision, that it should go before the judges in the highest Court of the land. It is a grave defect in our constitution that these cases must necessarily be referred to this body. I think it is a blot upon our constitution, and if we cannot get rid of the duty, that it would be wise, and should be made imperative in all cases to appoint as members of Divorce Committees honorable gentlemen who have given special attention to the subject, and have been trained in the law. I do not wish to be understood that I have any personal desire to be appointed to such Committees. I should rather be off them, but still I feel convinced from long experience that we should endeavor to have the advantage of as much legal ability in the adjudication of such cases as possible. It seemed to me very singular that in the appointment of this Committee the Chairman was the only lawyer upon it, and it was also very unusual that a gentleman very learned in the law, Mr. Samuel H. Blake, Q. C., a retained Counsel for the Applicant, should be called upon to give testimony both as to the law and the evidence applying to this case. His testimony seemed to be necessary, material, and very clear on the question of collusion and connivance, but he instructed the Committee not only upon those questions but also on what the law is in cases of this kind. He dealt not only with the facts and evidence material to the issue to be tried, but also the law governing them. I have known cases in which experts and scientists have been summoned as witnesses under certain circumstances, but this is the first instance in which I have known a witness to be called in to give an opinion on points of law and on cases cited by him, and to instruct the tribunal of judges how such cases should be decided. He distinctly states in his evidence that he was asked to put himself in that position. "I make the statement because I have been asked to do so." I believe that the learned gentleman imparted a great deal of important information to the Committee, for which they should feel obliged. My hon. friend who is in charge of this Bill was not so wise a judge even in his own conceit (if he had any in the matter) as to think it unnecessary to question him as regards the law and the evidence.

HON. MR. PLUMB—We can all be taught some law.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—My hon. friend was not so wise a judge but he asked the witness what was the law.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I did not ask any such question.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I will refer my hon. friend to the evidence. “Mr. Plumb—I suppose that will stand as the law until there is another decision?”

HON. MR. PLUMB—Yes, I said that.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I will show my hon. friend more if he wishes.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I did not ask an opinion otherwise.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—The witness gives his opinion as regards the case of Lloyd and Gould and its bearing on the case at issue. I merely mention this to show that in matters of such great importance, which we should deal with very carefully and with a great deal of diffidence, the tribunal to which they are submitted should be composed of men who have made a study of law and who will not find it necessary to bring in experts to tell them what the law is on certain facts, or what is material to the issue. This is a peculiar case, and it seems to me that although there was an apparent divorce, and one which, for the cause assigned, desertion, would appear to stand good in the United States although bad here for that cause, a married woman apparently here and a divorced woman in the United States, there seems to be a conflict, yet although obtained by fraud on the Court—and for a cause not recognized here—the decree stands good until such time as it is set aside. There seems to be a conflict between the authorities taking that position and those who say that no matter what view may be taken of international law, a foreign divorce does stand good until set aside when obtained for cause not recognized where the marriage took place. No doubt that is so; I think the authorities go that far and that this divorce obtained by fraud in Michigan is good there until set aside. Although that is the case still it was not necessary to set it aside, and it is difficult to be set aside after the party has again married, but we are quite competent to grant another divorce as regards the wife. That did not deprive her of the right to come to this Parliament to get a decree of divorce. The divorce is no answer to this application. I think these positions have been all well taken and established by the facts. Now in this matter there seemed to be some collusion from the fact of the respondent himself coming here and volunteering to give evidence as regards the service of papers. If the evidence of service or any other evidence that he gave was material to this case, I very much doubt whether I should act upon it, because it is evident from what my hon. friend has said and what appears from the evidence that this divorce in the United States was obtained by fraud and misrepresentation. His wife had not deserted him. The respondent merely went to Detroit, not for the purpose of settlement, but if possible to get the appearance of domicile in order to obtain a divorce, of which she had no notice. He went there with animus revertendi. In the State of Michigan that is not sufficient: you cannot evade the law in that way. The first marriage was in this country and yet there the divorce which he obtained by fraud and misrepresentation is valid. There is abundant ground for setting aside a decree even in the United States, when it is proved that it was obtained by such means, and under the circumstances the petitioner in this case is entitled to a divorce. I feel quite confident that the decision of the Committee is a good and just one, and I am disposed to give my support to the passing of this Bill; at the same time I should always obstruct, as I have obstructed before, the passage of every bill of this kind until the evidence is before every member of this House, to enable him to see for himself whether the application is one that he could conscientiously support: that the petitioner, as has been abundantly proved in this case, has done no wrong and is free from connivance and guilt.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed, on a division.

REPRESENTATION OF NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES IN DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

ADDRESS.

The order of the day having been called — “Consideration of Address to Her Majesty re Representation of North-West Territories in the Dominion Parliament,”

HON. MR. DICKEY moved that the blank in the said Address be filled by inserting the words “Senate and.” He said: This is an Address, as the House may perhaps remember, asking the Imperial Government to procure legislation for the purpose of enabling this country to arrange for the representation of the North-West Territories in the Dominion Parliament. It has excited some surprise, and indeed I was somewhat surprised myself at first, until I looked at the Act, that such a provision was not already in the British North America Act. There is a reference to this matter, which I need not discuss at large, but it has been considered by the best legal authorities here, I believe, that it is not sufficiently explicit to enable this Parliament to legislate on the subject and therefore it has been decided to make it the subject of an Address to Her Majesty so that we may be enabled to grant representation to our territories

HON. MR. POWER—I do not rise for the purpose of opposing this Address. I think it is desirable that these North-West Territories should be represented in Parliament, and I think that probably if they had been so represented the rebellion of last year would not have taken place. If this measure had been passed two years ago when it was first advocated by the hon. gentleman from Niagara, it would probably have saved the country some money and a good deal of difficulty. However it is better to take it now than not to get it at all. On looking over the report of the debate on this Address in the other Chamber I find that the Prime Minister gave it to be understood that the measure which was to be forwarded to the Imperial Government would be submitted for the inspection of the other House. Of course the House will not have to pass upon the measure, but it will submitted for their inspection; and I presume it will be such a measure as will meet with the assent of Parliament here. I venture to suggest one or two points with respect to the measure which I think are open to criticism. The Bill will propose, as I understand, to give five members altogether.

HON. MR. DICKEY—Yes, two to Assiniboia and one to each of the others.

HON. MR. POWER—I have some doubt as to the propriety of giving so large a representation. The composition of the House of Commons is under the British North America Act, based upon population, Quebec being taken as the criterion to establish the number of the representatives of each Province. The rule at present I think is to give a representative for each twenty or twenty one thousand of the population. Manitoba and British Columbia have been excepted from that rule; although possibly the Province of Manitoba has now no more members than she is entitled to, because the population has increased. British Columbia has, and now we propose to give to a population which amounts altogether—including Indians as well as whites—to 48,000, a representation of five members. The districts would be really entitled, according to population, to only two members, and I think that there is some question as to the desirability of departing from the general rule. The city of Montreal, which has a population of about 160,000, has only three members, and those 48,000 people out in the North West will have five—almost double the representation of the commercial capital of Canada. The county of Halifax has a population of about 70,000, and it has only two members; so that the 48,000 people in the North-West, half of whom are Indians, will have more than double the representation in Parliament than the 70,000 whites of Halifax county have. I do not think that any sufficient reason has been given for this wide departure from the principles of the British North America Act. I think that if two members had been given to those territories it would have been sufficient—one to Assiniboia, and one to the other two. I do not know that that is a very serious ground of complaint however; but this proposal to give representation to the North-West Territory, and the census which has been taken with a view to the introduction of this measure, recall to our minds certain discussions which took place, and statements which were made sometime since by very distinguished men; and I think the feeling of every hon. gentleman on learning the result of the census of the North-West Territory must have been one profound disappointment. I know that that was my feeling, and I do not suppose that other hon. gentlemen yield to me in their desire to see that country well peopled. I wish to call attention to some statements made in the year 1880, when a Bill respecting public lands in the North-West was before the House of Commons—especially the statements made by the present Premier, Sir John A. Macdonald. That right hon. gentleman was talking of the rapidity with which he hoped the public lands in the North-West would be disposed of, and he gave it as his opinion that the Canadian Pacific Railway could be built and cost the people of this country nothing, owing to the rapidity with which the lands would be sold and the rapid increase of the population. At page 1053 of the Commons Debates for 1880, I find Sir John Macdonald reported as having said that:—

“The road may be eventually built without costing the people one single farthing which will not be recouped. I believe that land can be made productive, under the terms of the resolution, to complete the whole of that road, to open that immense country and give us a magnificent railway from sea to sea without adding to the burdens of the people, and without causing any necessity for an increase of taxation. We can do it all by the sale of the lands which we hold as a sacred trust for the purpose of defraying the whole expense of the construction of the Pacific Railway.”

He goes on to speak of the rate of increase of population in the United States, and takes the ground that the rate of increase in our population will be as great as that in the neighboring Republic. At page 1055 he continues:—

“There are one or two postulates which I must ask the House to consider, because, if we admit them, the rest is simply a matter of calculation. It is believed, from the best information that we can get, that 20,000 people went into the North-West last year.

HON. MR. BLAKE—There were not more than one-tenth of that number.

SIR JOHN MACDONALD—I can inform the hon. gentleman from the returns of the Hon. Minister of Agriculture, that 12,000 are known to have gone in, and, from the best information we have got, as many more went in that could not be counted, who were not under the supervision of the Department; but let us say that 8,000 more went in, and that only makes 20,000. If we are to judge from the reports we have read, we may rely upon it that 50,000 people will go into that section this year. We know that in the United States, when railways were about to be opened across the prairies in the various states and territories, a large influx could always be calculated upon, because there is always an increasing rush towards those lands which are being opened up by the construction of railways. We are told that 50,000 will come in, but let us put the number at 25,000, and I have been informed by every one—and I have spoken to a great number of persons who have come from the North-West, and who have the best means of judging—that that estimate is ridiculously small.”

Then Mr. Mackenzie interrupted to the effect that the number going in was not so great. The leader of the Government continued on in this strain for some time, and finally he made this calculation:—

“Then we calculate that as 25,000 people would go in this year, we may add each year an increase of 5,000, so that we may expect 30,000 to go in the next year. This is a very small percentage, if we look to the results from railway enterprise in the United States. We assume, therefore, an increase of 5,000 a year until 1890, and expect in that year 75,000 settlers in our North-West.”

Then he went on to say that he thought that was a very moderate estimate, and he said:—

“On those figures, the estimate of the total cash revenue to be received for the lands by 1890, is $38,593,000.”

Then he made a calculation as to the actual value of the Government and railway lands sold, and got a grand total result from the sale of the land of something like $71,305,000, and says, “Deduct from the estimated cost of the surveys for the ten years, $2,000,000, and of the land officers, $400,000, and you reduce it by $2,400,000," and he finds that he has $69,000,000 "either of money in hand or money for which we shall have the best security in the world—the land itself. The whole estimated cost of the railway, including surveys and construction through the difficult as well as the prairie country, does not exceed, by the most excessive computation, $75,000,000—for the work from Lake Superior to the Pacific Ocean."

He goes on to the end of his remarks in that strain—that the railway is not to cost anything—that an immense population will pour in there, and that the land will be sold off very rapidly, and the country will realize very large sums from it. I have taken the trouble to make a little calculation as to what the population of the North-West would have been if the Premier's expectations had been realized; and I find that at the end of last year, if emigrants had gone in there at the rate at which he anticipated at that time, there would now be in the North-West a population of 225,000 white people, instead of which we have a little over one-tenth of that number. We cannot help regretting this state of things, and it is to be hoped that the granting of representation to those three territories may have the effect of rapidly increasing the settlement of the North-West. This matter, as I intimated at the opening of my remarks, was brought before this House in the session of 1884 by the hon. gentleman from Niagara. He made a very instructive and able speech on the subject of the representation of the North-West Territories. In 1880 that hon. gentleman occupied a seat in the House of Commons, and he endorsed the views of his leader. In 1884 in this House, his views were similar, although they were somewhat modified by the experience of intervening years; but the hon. gentleman thought that in 1883 there were 25,000 people in Assiniboia alone, and that it would be safe to estimate the entire population of the territories at 35,000 whites, so that it will be seen that two years ago the hon. gentleman, with the experience of the years intervening between 1880 and 1884, was of opinion that there were 35,000 whites in those territories. As it turns out, there were in 1885 only 24,000 whites; and the case of the hon. gentleman is one of many, as we were all disappointed to find that the number of white settlers in that country was so small. I have no objection to the passage of the Address.

HON. MR. TURNER—I think my hon. friend from Halifax in his remarks has wandered away very much from the subject of this resolution. I do not intend to follow him in his wanderings; I only wish to make a few remarks in reference to the representation of the territories, which he contends is altogether too large, and his assertion that if the suggestions of the hon. gentleman from Niagara had been acted upon two years ago the rebellion might not have taken place. Now, if the hon. gentleman from Halifax would have only two members for that vast country, I would like to know where he is going to put them? Where would two representatives do any good representing such vast areas? Assiniboia, very properly, in my opinion, is to have two members. Possibly Saskatchewan with one representative, may do very well; but Alberta cannot be properly represented by one member alone. There is one thing in connection with that country that I would like this House to thoroughly understand: it is that each place has different interests. Alberta, for instance, has its mountain interest, that is the grazing interest; it has its mineral interest and its agricultural interest—the one to the south, and the other to the north, and in my opinion Alberta should have two representatives. The grazing interest to the south extends from Calgary down to the American line; and the other interests extending northward are the coal, iron, gold mining, and agricultural as well as grazing interests. I did not intend to say anything on this subject, but the discussion has wandered away from the question before the House which is, I think, a most important one to have carried out, that is to obtain authority to grant that representation that the hon. gentleman desires and, in fact, the whole of us want to have for the North-West, whether by two members or by six or by ten, in the parliament of the Dominion. I would just like to say that it is not representation by population that a country like the North-West should have at the present moment.

HON. MR. POWER—Population is the basis of our representation here.

HON. MR. TURNER—The particular district and particular interests should be represented in an authoritative way, so that when we are discussing questions affecting those interests, they can be dealt with by thoroughly practical men who understand the subject.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I am very glad to know that the Government have consented to move in the matter, which I addressed the House upon a few years ago. I felt deeply then that the time was fast approaching when such a movement would be necessary. I am rather surprised at the argument used by the senior member from Halifax in speaking of this motion. He tells us in one breath that if there had been representatives from the North-West two years ago, the trouble which occurred there last year would not have arisen. He tells us the very next moment that we are now asking for too many members, two years afterwards, when the population has very considerably increased. The hon. gentleman is inconsistent. I should like to know how he would, upon the principle which he has stated, give representation to these territories. He says that in the more populated parts of the Dominion there is a representative for every twenty-one or twenty-two thousand souls. I wonder how he would have given any representation to the North-West Territories two years ago on that basis? There would not have been population enough to give representatives to half of them. The hon. gentleman in his desire to make a case for his party, has contradicted himself very materially.

HON. MR. POWER—I speak only for myself.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Then, the hon. gentleman expressed regret that the population of the North-West has not increased as rapidly as Sir John Macdonald anticipated it would in the speech which he made in 1880 on the Bill appropriating land for the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway. There are a good many reasons why that increase has not taken place, and none of them more unmistakable than the persistent attacks upon the North-West, the Canadian Pacific Railway and everything connected with the opening up of our prairie country, which have been made by the hon. gentleman's friends in the House of Commons and this Chamber, through the press, and wherever they could get a hearing, by which the enterprise of building the Canadian Pacific Railway was almost paralyzed and by which, on false reports as to the condition of the North-West Territories, emigration to that great country was seriously checked. The hon. gentleman has referred to the debates in the other House. We all know that certain members of that body have stated that our North-West Territories were so sterile that people would not go there unless great inducements were held out to them.

HON. MR. POWER—Nothing of the kind was said.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I rise to a point of order. Is it within the privilege of the hon. gentleman to speak of what has occurred in the other House of Parliament?

THE SPEAKER—It is permissible to allude to acts which have taken place in the other Chamber.

HON. MR. POWER—I rise to another question of order. I do not question the hon. gentleman's right to refer to what has taken place in debate in the other House, but I do say that he has no right to allege as having taken place in the other House something which did not take place.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I have no doubt the hon. gentleman does not like the facts which I have stated.

HON. MR. POWER—But they are not facts; that is the point.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I felt bound to make this statement from the manner in which the hon. gentleman has wandered from the subject.

HON. MR. TURNER.

HON MR. HAYTHORNE—Will the hon. gentleman be a little more specific.

HON MR. PLUMB—I do not trouble the House so often that any objection should be made to my replying to remarks made by another member. The hon. member from Halifax said that he felt a profound disappointment that the statements made in another place in 1880 had not been fulfilled. He then went on to say that there would have been a population of 235,000 in the North-West by this time if the predicted increase had taken place. The hon. gentleman did not include Manitoba in his calculation, though he knows perfectly well that when that statement was made it had reference to the entire North-West and not to the Territories alone. Then I wish to tell the hon. gentleman another thing, that population will follow the railroad. It has always been the case in the Western States and it would have been the case more largely in our North-West, if immigration had not been stopped by every malicious invention that ingenuity could devise. The extent of our release from the burden of building the Canadian Pacific Railway depends upon the receipts in the Custom house, and the hon. gentleman should know that the revenue collected in the Custom house in Winnipeg alone has been great enough to cover a large proportion of the interest on the outlay involved in building the Canadian Pacific Railway. These Customs duties were a legitimate portion of that prosperity which was expected to follow the development of the North-West, and which never would have been experienced in Winnipeg if it had not been for the rapid construction of the Pacific Railway—never would have been experienced if the road had only been built a hundred miles at a time, as proposed by hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. gentleman having provoked the discussion I felt bound to mention that he has not stated the whole case. He says he thinks the representation proposed in this Address is too large. Well, there is not a population in any of the districts yet to warrant representation, but it would be difficult to predict what the population will be two years hence in that vast country provided the hon. gentleman and his friends do not prevent people going there. We cannot make a calculation of what the increase will be by the time Parliament is ready to deal with that question. I have no doubt by that time the representation will be large enough to warrant the representation mentioned in this Address.

HON. MR. POWER — Hope tells a flattering tale.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman should remember that the territories embrace a vast extent of country, and its various interests should be represented. Even the five members proposed by this Bill will very inadequately represent the extensive territorial interests of the great North-West. There are difficulties, and will be difficulties in organizing the country in such a way as to get a suitable representation; but I trust the day is not far distant when we shall have the pleasure of hailing in the House of Commons representatives from the territories, who will be able to fairly represent them in proportion to their population, and that they will be able to show that although the increase of population may have halted for a year or two, and circumstances may have occurred to prevent the rapid growth that was anticipated, that a change has taken place now that the Canadian Pacific Railway is completed in spite of all obstacles thrown in the way, and extends from sea to sea, forming the only railway on this continent that can control business from ocean to ocean, having in that respect an advantage over any other railway on this continent—that with this advantage, with the prospects of an abundant crop this year and a general revival of confidence in the future of the country—notwithstanding the attacks that have been made on the North-West and on the great enterprise which has developed its resources—the time will come when the population will be sufficient not only to warrant the representation given by this Bill, but largely to increase it; and I have no doubt my hon. friend will hail it with great pleasure, because I believe he has the interest of the country at heart, though he is sometimes swayed by party interest. It must be remembered that those questions which he brings up here have been threshed out in another place. They are familiar to us all. There has been a debate upon them within a day or two in another place, and that debate signally failed to establish that it was because of the lack of representation in the House of Commons from the North West that the rebellion occurred last year. In fact, I think the question of the rebellion and the causes that led to it has been settled in a way that is not palatable to gentlemen who seek to make political capital upon it.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I think the hon. member from Halifax is unfortunate in his opposition to this measure, and I am unfortunate in following the hon. gentleman from Niagara, because he has said almost everything that can be stated on the subject. My hon. friend from Halifax spoke about population being the proper basis for representation in this Confederation, and contended that it should be the basis for all parts of the country alike; but as the hon. gentleman from Hamilton has shown, that is not the only basis—extent of territory as well as population should have a great deal to do with it. As my hon. friend from Niagara says, if two years ago representation has been given to the North-West on that basis, there would have been no representation for half the territories. On the same basis, British Columbia would have had no representation until lately. That Province has not to-day half the population of the county of Lunenburg, from which I come. I doubt if Prince Edward Island, or Manitoba, would have the representation which they now enjoy, if it were based on population solely. In opening up a new country like our North-West, into which a large population will flow, now that the people are convinced that there are no more troubles or rebellions likely to arise there—now that we have completed our Pacific railway in spite of all the hostility shown to it—now that the Imperial government have recognized it as a great highway of commerce from ocean to ocean, connecting the United Kingdom with all her colonies—with all those incentives, we must expect that there will be an immediate influx into that country of a vast population. The facilities for the development of our territories are very great, and therefore, I say, when my hon. friend from Halifax based his objection to this Address on the ground of a scanty population he could not be sincere. As regards the prognostications of the increase of population in that country, we know how often predictions made in this House have failed. We all remember how the hon. gentleman's friends predicted that the Canadian Pacific Railway would not be built in 40 years—that it would only be constructed through the prairie country, and the statement that the lands in Dakota were far better than the lands in our North-West.

HON. MR. POWER—No, that was never said.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Not only was that said but an effort was made to decry the financial condition of our country, and to destroy the prospects of the railway itself.

The motion was agreed to.

HON. MR. DICKEY moved that this Honor the Speaker do sign the Address on behalf of this House.

HON. MR. POWER—Before that motion passes I wish to say that the members of the Reform party in the House of Commons and in the Senate have never decried the character of the North-West Territories.

HON. MEMBERS—Oh, oh, oh!

HON. MR. POWER—They have decried the administration of the North-West Territories, and the results of the census taken by the officers of those gentlemen during the last summer have amply justified the statements made by members on this side of the House, and of this party in the other House and elsewhere, as to mismanagement in the North-West. I think it is disgraceful to the Government, after spending so many millions of dollars, and after so many years, that a magnificent country like that should have such a contemptibly small population.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I am bound to say in reply to the remarks that have just been made by the hon. gentlemen from Halifax, that the debates in another place are full of attacks on the North-West, on the character of its climate. I will not say what has happened here, but either the hon. gentleman has not studied those debates, or he has seen them with a prejudiced eye; I do not think, otherwise, he would have ventured to make such a statement. It is patent to everybody that Kansas and Texas have been recommended—that any place has been recommended, for the intending emigrant rather than the North-West and Manitoba.

HON. MR. POWER—Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to mention any such statements from members of the Reform party? These allegations have been made many times. I should like him to produce any statement made by any member of the House of Commons of the character which he has mentioned.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I will give any number of them.

The motion was agreed to.

HON. MR. DICKEY—As His Excellency is the only recognized means of communication with the Imperial Government, I am under the necessity of asking the House to adopt this motion:—

That a humble Address be presented to his Excellency the Governor General in the following words:—

To His Excellency the Most Honorable Sir Henry Charles Keith Petty-Fitzmaurice, Marquis of Lansdowne, in the County of Somerset, Earl of Wycombe, of Chipping-Wycombe, in the County of Bucks, Viscount Caln and Calstone in the County of Wilts, and Lord Wycombe, Baron of Chipping-Wycombe, in the County of Bucks, in the Peerage of Great Britain; Earl of Kerry, and Earl of Shelburne, Viscount Clanmaurice and Fitzmaurice, Baron of Kerry, Lixnaw and Dunkerron, in the Peerage of Ireland, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and St. George, Governor General of Canada, and Vice-Admiral of the same, &c., &c., &c.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY:

We, the Senate and of Canada, in Parliament assembled, have agreed to an Address to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, in relation to the representation in the Parliament of Canada of the several Territories forming part thereof, and respectfully request Your Excellency will be pleased to transmit the said Address in such a way as Your Excellency may see fit, in order that it may be laid at the foot of the Throne.

The motion was agreed to.

HON. MR. DICKEY moved that His Honor the Speaker do sign the last Address on behalf of this House.

The motion was agreed to.

BROCKVILLE AND NEW YORK BRIDGE COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. CLEMON moved the second reading of Bill (68) "An Act to incorporate the New York and Brockville Bridge Company." He said: This Bill is merely for the purpose of incorporating a Company to construct a bridge across the St. Lawrence. Every precaution is taken for the protection of the public interest.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned at six o'clock.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Monday, May 3rd, 1886.

The SPEAKER took the chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (P) "An Act to amend an Act respecting a Reformatory for certain juvenile offenders in the County of Halifax, in the province of Nova Scotia." (Mr. Power.)

GOVERNMENT LANDS AT SOREL.

ENQUIRY.

HON. MR. GUVREMONT inquired
Si c'est l'intention du gouvernement de vendre, de la même manière que le département de l'intérieur a décidé de vendre l'Île Ronde, toutes les propriétés qui lui appartiennent dans la seigneurie de Sorel, et qui sont occupées en vertu de baux annuels.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I was informed by my hon. friend from Toronto, who is the only Minister at present leading the House, that it was his intention to be absent in Montreal to-day, and under that impression he took no pains to inform himself as to the answer to be given to this question. The Department to which it belongs, in the meantime, within an hour or two, transmitted the answer to the question to me, probably under the same impression as I was, that my hon. friend would be absent. Finding a few moments before the House met that the hon. gentleman would be in his place, I left the memorandum, handed to me, at his disposal; but he insisted that as he had not an opportunity of thinking over the matter I should make use of the information and answer the question. I mention that, in justice to myself, and to show that I feel myself compelled, under the circumstances, to comply with my hon. friend's request. The answer to the question is this: if there be no public reason to the contrary, and it is decided to sell any of the properties occupied by individuals under annual leases, they will be sold in the same way as the Government has decided to sell Ile Rond.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY.

MOTION.

The Order of the Day having been called

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that his Excellency will cause to be laid before this House, a copy of a letter to the Warden of the Penitentiary of St. Vincent de Paul, dated 31st July, 1885, and signed by ex-Guard J. E. Durocher, protesting against his dismissal, and making serious charges against certain Officials, HON MR. BELLEROSE said: I beg to ask the hon. gentleman from Toronto, who is a member of the Privy Council, when I may expect the answer to the address which I moved on Friday last? It is only a letter that I asked for, and it could have been copied on Saturday and handed in to-day. If it cannot be laid on the table to-day I will ask the House to allow me to postpone this motion.

HON MR. SMITH—The letter that the hon. gentleman requires will be furnished. I was not aware that he required it to-day, but it will be furnished without delay.

The motion was allowed to stand.

VACANCIES IN THE SENATE.

MOTION.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER moved

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, expressing the opinion that it is not in the public interest that any more vacancies in the Senate, arising from death or any other cause, should be filled, until the people of the Dominion have had an opportunity, at the next general election, to express their views respecting the constitution of the Senate.

He said: I believe I shall best consult the convenience and the pleasure of the House by being as brief as I possibly can in bringing this motion to its notice. I am sure that the House will to-day discuss this important question from a higher standpoint, from the standpoint that under the Confederation Act the Senate of the Dominion was designed to be a high judicial body. Such was the purpose of the framers of the Confederation Act, designing it to be a safe-guard to prevent all maladministration from either the one or the other of the two great political parties of the country. When the Senate acts as a partisan body it fails to fulfil its mission to the country. As regarding the past appointments to this Chamber, every one must admit that those selected have been the prominent men of their respective districts. Had those very men been elected by the people, we should then have had the Senate in accord with public sentiment. I need not weary the House by going over ground which is familiar to every one. We all know how the Senate has become almost entirely composed of Conservative members. Have we not found the leader of the Government, and the so termed leader of the Opposition for some years complimenting each other in debate. Such conduct explains itself. It requires no comment from me. When the senior member from Halifax, Senator Power, one of the most industrious members of this House, tries to do his duty, he generally meets with much interruption. It cannot be expected that the enlightened people of a rising country such as this will permit this peculiar state of things to go on: and would it not be more dignified and more graceful for this august body to take the initiative to-day in aiding the people to have Parliament framed and formed so as to secure for them faithful, wise, and honest administration of their public affairs? If ever there was a people upon earth that deserve to be well governed, it is the people of this Dominion. What a bright picture of human life we behold in the rural districts of the Province of Quebec—their beautiful churches, their frugal habits, and their happy contentment; and is the picture less bright in the other provinces, where we have, as the result of untiring industry and energy, profusion of the products of the soil and a state of well-being. Then I say, let us act worthy of ourselves and take the high patriotic ground that we invite the people of those beautiful provinces to say how they desire the second Chamber to be constituted at the next general election. It is surely no honor to be a member of the Senate of the Dominion unless we possess the esteem and respect of the country. Contrast the position of the Senate of the Dominion with that of the United States. The latter is regarded by their people as the most important of the two branches, whereas the Canadian Senate is never heard of in the columns of our public journals; and a large portion of the Dominion press speak of this Chamber either as a nullity, or as some few local papers say an expensive incubus. I do not say so myself; I am merely repeating the language of some of the local press. Is it not then deeply to be regretted that the Canadian Senate, composed to a large extent of the most estimable men of the Dominion should have been so managed and led—shall I say for ten or fifteen years—as to deaden all public interest in their deliberations? I for one raise my humble voice, and I hope that the Senate to-day will echo that voice that there be no more vacancies filled upon the nominative principle. I earnestly hope that the House will confirm my humble motion before we rise, and then the next proceeding will be to draft an Address to His Excellency the Governor-General to be laid before the Throne, supplicating the Imperial Government and parliament to amend the Confederation Act (which may possibly take two or three years) declaring that future vacancies in the Senate of the Dominion shall be filled by popular election, as it was during the period from 1856 to 1867, or by the Local Legislatures. I myself had the honor of being returned for a large constituency—North Oxford and South Waterloo—and I see many men around me who were returned in a similar way. Did not the people then make proper selections? and do they not now feel that the principle of election of members to the Upper House should never have been departed from?

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Go to the country now.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—Retire and try to be elected, and see what will take place.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—With regard to the Address to be sent to the Imperial Government, it would pray for such alteration in the Union Act in the direction indicated. The country will decide all details.

HON. MR. SMITH—I consider that this is not a proper motion to put before the House, and I trust that hon. members will view it in the same light. I must therefore oppose the motion.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I must congratulate the hon. member who has made this motion on the kindly manner in which he has spoken of the province from which I come; but I am not surprised that he has so good an opinion of our people. He has had occasion many times to visit the Province of Quebec, and our province, to be well appreciated, must be visited. I thank him for his kindly expressions, and I only regret that I cannot return the compliment. I should do so with pleasure, if I could support his motion, in acknowledgment of his kind expressions towards the Province of Quebec, but I have always been, am still, and I believe always will be opposed to an elective Upper House. Naturally this House should be nominated by the Crown. I must say, however, in view of the lack of independence manifested by this House, that I might, in the not distant future, feel compelled to vote against this conviction. That independence which I thought would characterize an Upper House nominated by the Crown, is not manifested here, and that being the case, if the question were put seriously before Parliament, I might, while expressing my conservative principles, vote in favor of this House being made elective, for the reasons which I have given. It would be an experiment. In the past we had a Legislative Council elected by the people, and I do not think that it gained in independence. There might be another way of making the Senate elective, the system in force in the United States, and that might work more satisfactorily, though I do not say that it would. I might possibly be induced, for the reasons I have already given, to support a measure for the trial of that system. I must say, also, that I am not quite decided yet whether it would be prudent on the part of the minority to ask for an amendment of the Constitution. Some 40 years ago such a step was taken, and I must say it was not in our interest. The minority suffered by the change because, while asking for one thing, we were given two: the French language was done away with, so I do not consider it would be quite safe to ask for an amendment to the Constitution at present, when we have so much to complain of, when even under our written Constitution we are denied that to which we have a right. Has it not been acknowledged here by the Government, speaking through the Minister of Justice at that time, Sir Alex. Campbell, that we had a right to have on the Treasury benches a Minister of the Crown who could speak the French language? Nine years ago it was admitted by the Government that, constitutionally speaking, we had that right, but it has never since then been accorded to us. At this day we have no Minister of the Crown on the Treasury benches in this House. The hon. member from Toronto (Mr. Smith) is a member of the Government, but without portfolio; he has no voice in the Government, so that I cannot regard him as a Minister such as we are entitled to in this House. He cannot even speak French. I regret it, because I believe he is not adverse to us; but, at the same time, the fact is there, we are without a representative on the Treasury benches, although the present is a most convenient one to meet our views and give us such a representative as we may desire. No doubt the Government relies on the fact that our people are rather slow on this question, as they are on others; but I believe that when the Government is forced to admit that the Constitution provides for it, we should expect that it would be granted, because that admission stands to-day in our official report of the debates of the Senate. We have before our eyes the spectacle of a Government acknowledging that it is their duty to give the French speaking people representation in the Cabinet in this House, and at the same time pronouncing that they will not do it. Is that treating the minority with the respect and consideration to which they are entitled? I say no. Neither is it an acknowledgement of the services which the Province of Quebec has rendered to the Government of the day. It cannot be denied that the present ministry owe their position to the Province of Quebec; still that is the way we are treated. I thank the hon. member from Woodstock for having brought this matter before the House, because I would not have ventured to speak on this question of our rights had not this motion afforded me an opportunity to say a few words. I would have the Government remember there is a Province of Quebec; that there are in that Province two official languages, and that both languages have a right to be represented on the Treasury benches.

HON. MR. POWER—I think it is to be regretted that the hon. gentleman from Woodstock should have given this notice of motion without any consultation, as far as I am aware, with any member of the House. In order that a resolution of this sort should be productive of a debate which would be of much value, there should be consultation and preparation on the part of other members to discuss the question. I took the liberty to second the hon. gentleman's motion simply because I thought it was, on the whole, a move in the right direction. If I had been asked to draw up a resolution of that character myself, it might not have been worded perhaps in the same way; but substantially the resolution is one which in my opinion deserves our support. This House at the present time is composed of about three-fourths Conservatives and one-fourth Liberals and Independents. The hon. gentleman's resolution, as I understand it, simply proposes that during the short time which is to elapse before the next general election this disproportion shall not be increased, and that is not an unreasonable motion. What good will be done to the country or to Parliament by a further increase of the disproportion between the two parties in this Chamber? I do not think that any hon. gentleman can point to any possible advantage that will arise to the country by it; and if we do not fill up the vacancies we save the country a little money—not a great deal, but still a little. There would be also this further practical advantage about it, that supposing at the next general election the present advisers of the Governor-General were found not to possess the confidence of the majority of the electors, the incoming Government would have an opportunity to fill a few vacancies in this House, so as to give them at least a reasonable amount of strength to enable them to carry on the public business in the Senate. That would be a desirable consummation, and I think hon. gentlemen of the Conservative party must feel that also. They would not wish, if there were a change of administration, that the Government should be carried on with so ridiculously small a representation in this House as it would have to be if the change were to take place to-day, and if the vacancies that now exist were filled up by the present administration. That is a practical argument in favor of the hon. gentleman's motion. I do not see any object at all to be gained by filling up those vacancies. I am not going now to discuss the objects for which a House like this exists. They have been discussed at different times in this Chamber and in a great many other places, and hon. gentlemen are familiar with the arguments in favor of the existence of such a body; but the truth is that this Chamber, as at present constituted, does not fulfil satisfactorily any of the objects for which the Senate is intended. A second Chamber which is a mere echo of the Lower House, is of no value in the Constitution. If the second Chamber has no independence—if it never crosses the will of the Lower House—if it never rejects a measure which is adopted by the ruling party in the Lower House, or if it never largely amends such a measure, of what value is it? This is a very handsome room, and there are a number of very respectable and dignified looking gentlemen sitting here, and there are occasionally very good speeches made here; but that is not what the country expects from the expenditure that is made on account of this House. They want something a little more substantial than that; and if this House is simply intended to register, as it has been registering for a number of years, the decrees of the Premier of the day, then I think we might as well not be here, and that there is certainly nothing whatever to be gained in the public interest by filling up the existing vacancies. If there is any chivalrous feeling in the majority of this House they will vote for the resolution of the hon. gentleman from Woodstock. I have heard gentlemen of the Conservative party in this House, say that they wished that the Government would appoint some Liberals to this Chamber in order that there might be—not anything like a balance of parties, but that there might at least be a respectable representation of the weaker party in this House; and these gentlemen who entertain that feeling can at any rate carry out their views, to a certain extent, by supporting this motion. It does not seem that there is likely to be much interest taken in the discussion to-day; and I do not propose to trouble the House any further.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I do not agree with my hon. friend to-day.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman never does.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I do not think that anything is to be gained by perpetuating race, provincial and party prejudices; in all these matters Canadian unity should be our watchword, on it depends our welfare, security, peace and future greatness, and I do not think anything of that kind would result if this resolution, which suggests a violation of the constitution, were to pass. In the second place, looking at it from a practical point of view, if it could be acted on it would disfranchise certain portions of Canada from representation for an indefinite time, which is a matter of very great importance.

HON. MR. SMITH—What would ?

HON. MR. KAULBACH—If this motion should pass in this House, and if it could be recognized by the executive, appointments would not be made for years, at least for more than a year, and many years might pass before it would be of any practical use in this body. The Imperial Government would first have to change our Constitution. I do not believe with the hon. gentleman from Halifax that this House has been a mere registering body of the acts of the House of Commons. I think we have done much more than that ; I think the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island will agree with me that rights, privileges and interests of the smaller provinces, have been guarded and secured by the action of this House, and that Prince Edward Island especially has gained largely through the action of the Senate. We have amended and improved many bills which have come up from the Lower House, and have rejected measures from the Commons, not only when the Reform party was in power, but under a Conservative Government ; and in doing so I believe we had the support and endorsement of the people of the country. It is all very well for gentlemen here, when they once get a seat in this House to talk of making Senators in the future elective ; but if they were outside, they would not be so likely to go to the people for election to this Senate. I believe that if the Senate were constituted differently from what it now is it would not be in the interests of the country. You might bring men here coming from a higher position in the country—elected by a higher element in the country, than gentlemen to the House of Commons and they might have more independence of action on questions of finance—and exercise it in a way that would not be for the harmony of both branches or be considered as in the interests of the people as a whole. By this resolution we suggest that there is something wrong in the constitution of the Senate. It has not been shown that there is, but it is a suggestion to actually invite the people to look into this matter and to admit that we ourselves feel that we do not represent the people as we should, and we actually invite the people to inquire into the matter. It is not a proper motion. The hon. gentleman from Woodstock has over and over again, in a most fulsome manner, talked of the Senate as a body of independent gentlemen as being representative of every branch of industry, of every trade and of every important interest in the country—of extensive knowledge and power in debate—that all interests are highly represented by hon. gentlemen in this House. At times he indulges in such addresses to the House, and at other times he condemns the Senate as being merely the mouthpiece of the party in power. I am surprised at the inconsistency of the hon. member, and I do not think that any other gentleman in this House would introduce such a resolution. This resolution is likely to have the same result as all motions that emanate from that hon. gentleman—it must result in nothing. The Opposition may suppose that we are not independent because we don't think and act as they do. But we have acted and do act in accordance with the views and wishes of the people—the great majority of the people in all the Provinces.

HON. MR. McINNES (B. C.)—It was not my intention to say anything on this subject until I entered the chamber a few moments ago, but I made a promise to the hon. junior member from Hamilton, at his request, that if I made a few observations on this subject the House and country would have the benefit of a speech from him. Consequently, in order to carry out that pledge, I feel called upon to make a few remarks, but instead of following the line of argument of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, I will briefly state that I think this House is under an obligation to the hon. gentleman from Woodstock for bringing this important and living subject before our notice and before the notice of the country. It is an undoubted fact that the Senate is not held in that estimation throughout the Dominion that it ought to be, and however well people may be disposed to look upon a second chamber, I claim that the vast majority of the people feel that this House does not represent the true interests of the country—that it is not representing the sentiments of a majority of the people of this country. If the present Government remain much longer in power I have every reason to believe that the Senate will not remain as at present constituted for another five years. It cannot remain much longer as it is at present. My idea is that the constitution of the Senate ought to be changed without delay. I believe that the provinces, or rather the local legislatures, ought to appoint the members of the Senate for life or for a very long period of years. Next best to having the senators appointed by the local legislatures, let them be elected by the people for a period of from nine to twelve years, and let one-third retire every three or four years.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—More provincialism.

HON. MR. MCINNES (B. C.)—I believe that if the provinces had the appointing of the senators, they would come here and feel that they were not under any obligation to the right hon. leader of the Government, or the leader of the Opposition, that they would come here as true representatives of the province in the first place, and after that the interests of the Dominion as a whole. What is the fact to day? There is not a member here, who has received his appointment from either Government, that does not feel under more or less restraint or obligation to the party or leader of the party that appointed him, and members are to that extent shackled and bound. In many instances I am quite satisfied that hon. gentlemen here would take a different stand from what they do, where it not that they feel they owe their appointment to the present Government and consequently must support all measures introduced by them. If they came here, as I have suggested, as representatives of the Provinces, they would come no knowing one party or the other; but would come to discharge their duty to the country, and I believe the sooner that system is adopted, the sooner this House will become what it was intended to be, a grand judicial, deliberative body, and a check on crude legislation emanating from the other House—not a mere recording body as we have been for a very considerable time.

HON. MR. TURNER—Being challenged by my hon. friend opposite, I think it is due to myself that I should make a few remarks. There is one thing that has been accomplished by this debate. We have had the hon. member from Woodstock moving resolutions from the commencement of the session, and until to-day he has not had a seconder. I give the hon. member from Halifax credit, therefore, for boldness in seconding this resolution. With regard to the statement of the hon. member for Woodstock that he has a very high opinion of the late appointments in this Senate, and thinks that if they had been elected by the popular voice, they would have been perfectly qualified to sit in this Chamber, I confess I do not see how an election would affect the abilities of those gentlemen in any degree.

HON. MR. MCINNES (B. C.)—Has the hon. gentleman reference to me?

HON. MR. TURNER—No, my reference is to the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Woodstock. So far as I am concerned, I differ from some of the speakers on the other side; I think that the business of this House is managed in a very becoming manner, and with a great deal of caution and judgment, and I feel perfectly satisfied also that if the present Opposition were in power tomorrow, they would receive the same fair treatment and the same kindly feeling from the members on the now Government side of the House as the Government do at present. At least, I speak for myself, and I feel satisfied that I voice the sentiments of the great majority of the members of this House.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman was not here when the Conservative party were in Opposition or he would know better.

HON. MR. TURNER—For my part, if the Government bring in what I consider to be injudicious and unwholesome measures, I certainly shall oppose them, no matter what party may be in power. I am satisfied that the previous Government brought in some very unwise measures, and I would have opposed them had I been here. I accepted a seat in this House with the full determination of acting according to the best of my judgement, whatever Government might be in power, and of giving my vote for such measures as I considered were in the best interests of the country; and that resolution I intend to adhere to as long as I have the honor to occupy a seat in this Chamber. One of the fundamental reasons for creating this Senate was to protect the interests of the smaller provinces, so that their interests could not be overborne by the greater power and influence of the larger provinces. To carry out the plan proposed by my hon. friend opposite—to keep the vacancies open for some years, would be perfectly ridiculous. To carry his argument to the reductio ad absurdum, supposing all the members of one of the smaller provinces died in the meantime, that province would for an indefinite period be unrepresented in the Senate. I consider it is the duty of the Government to fill up the vacancies as they occur, and to keep the balance of power, so far as the interest of the provinces are concerned, as originally intended.

HON. MR. SCOTT—Lest my silence be misconstrued, I feel it my duty to say a word on the present occasion—and only a word, because I do not intend to discuss this question at length. It is very well known that I have, on former occasions, in answer to some hon. gentlemen, expressed my views in favor of a re-construction of the Senate, either entirely on the elective principle or the combined elective and nominative principles. I am not at present committed to the particular character of the nomination hereafter—either by the provincial Assemblies or by the people; but that some change is imminent must be apparent to every gentleman who takes an interest in the character, in the honor, in the dignity and position that this Senate ought to occupy in the country. To say that the Senate at this moment commands the respect of the people is idle and absurd when we remember for one moment that nearly one-half of the people of Ontario, the premier Province of the Dominion, is represented in this Chamber by only four gentlemen. I am not now including the hon. member from Woodstock, because he announces his position as a Conservative opposing the administration; but excluding that hon. gentleman, there are just four members of the House who are in sympathy with the great Reform party in the Province of Ontario, a party that, if you consult the electoral lists either of the last or of the preceding election, you will find in point of members differed very little from the party that gained the ascendancy. By a careful manipulation of the constituencies, which was carried out with the assistance of this House, and by other devious and improper methods, the representation of Ontario has been revolutionized, as it will be changed, no doubt, by the assistance of this House, at the next election when the elective franchise goes into operation, under the skilful manipulation of the revising barristers in the different counties where the votes can be changed from one side to another. I mention these points in order to show that it is utterly preposterous to talk about this Senate meeting with the approbation of the people of that Province at all events—the Province for which I speak and from which I come. We live in a democratic age, when a chamber constituted as the Senate is, differs entirely from any other legislative body on the face of the globe. Even European countries, far behind us in intelligence and knowledge of constitutional government, have upper chambers elective either wholly or partially. In Canada a nominated chamber is entirely repugnant to the first principles on which we are governed. Our municipalities, our town councils, city councils, and county councils are all elective, and many of our offices are filled by election. The tendency of the age is towards elective representation. The people are the masters. It is idle to say that any government—I am not speaking of the appointments made by any particular administration, because it is the tendency of governments to appoint their friends—will appoint their opponents. In many instances gentlemen who are entitled to hold commanding positions in the country have been appointed: in others, gentlemen who are not so fitted for the position, who have never been elected and could not be elected for any constituency, but who have been found in the way of ambitious members of the House of Commons, have been appointed to the Senate to clear the way—those are the motives and promptings that have governed this administration in making their appointments, and I do not for one moment mean to say that any other administration would do much better. It might and might not, I should hope that a Reform administration would do much better, but I do not claim any superior excellence in that respect for the party to which I belong, because it is in the natural order of things. According to the history of this Senate, it is used simply for the political exigencies of the government of the day. That is the fact; and if anybody chooses to look back the last sixteen or eighteen years he will find my words confirmed. What was the character of this Upper House when it was elective? I say it was superior to this body to-day—it was a more independent body. Your presence in this Chamber to-day in Ottawa is due to the elective Legislative Council of old Canada. Year after year the representatives of the people of Upper and Lower Canada in the Lower House combined to keep up the system of moving the seat of government from Toronto to Quebec and Quebec to Toronto to the disgust of the great body of the people. Who stopped it? The Legislative Council of old Canada, not a nominative body but an elective body, refused to pass the estimates because the government persisted in putting in an item for the removal of the government from Toronto to Quebec and vice versa. In that way a permanent seat of government was obtained. We owe to the people of Ontario, at all events, the selection of the very best men from that province in this Chamber. The leader of the government, whose absence, in union with all of us, I deplore to-day was elected by the people, and has been an honored member of this body ever since. Those who held seats in the old Legislative Council of Canada were naturally the first named, under patents, by Her Majesty to the Senate when Confederation took place. We owe the presence of Sir David Macpherson, and even of the hon. member from Woodstock himself, to their election by the people. To the same cause, also, we are indebted for my hon. friend on my left (Mr. Allan), a gentleman second to none in this House, and my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Read) who has shown such excellent judgment on all occasions, and my hon. friend opposite (Mr. Vidal). I think they all feel stronger in their position here because they have been chosen by the people. My hon. friend from Hamilton just now said he would be prepared to treat any government fairly whether he was in harmony with them politically or not. I quite appreciate his sentiment, but if he had sat in the last Parliament, as I did, he would know that members of this Senate were not then quite so fair and reasonable; that this House, with its great Conservative majority, was used as an inquisitorial commission for the purpose of sending forth through this country damaging reports against the late Government—reports that to-day they would not endorse. They spent month after month procuring evidence to show how preposterous it was to make improvements on the Kaministiquia River, yet last year and this year there are votes for the improvement of that river. They said that a breakwater should be constructed at Prince Arthur's Landing, and to carry out the scheme, they spent money there to no purpose. It failed. When we introduced a Bill for the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway, it was thrown out of this House; when the present Government introduced a Bill for the same purpose it was carried here. When we introduced a Bill to right a wrong in the County of Huron—to reconstruct the ridings of that county as they should be—it was scorned and thrown out; when a Bill is introduced by the present Government to manipulate every municipality in Ontario—to "hive the Grits," as they say—to alter every constituency at the beck and instance of their friends in the other House—no attempt is made to stop it, or to see whether it is fair or in accord with provincial rights or not. When the present Government took the absurd position of fighting the Provinces and attempting to deprive them of their rights—when they attempted to take the licensing power from the provincial governments which they had enjoyed for 18 years, and when I raised my voice here against the Bill when it came up to the Senate, who listened to me? Not a soul. Sir John Macdonald had stated that the licensing power belonged to the Dominion, and so this House, at the beck of the government of the day, at once accepted the proposition and would not listen to any argument against it for one moment. What is the position of this House on that question to-day? Does it occupy a good one on a question where it should stand up for provincial rights? On every measure affecting provincial rights it supported the Government. It was in the interests of the strong party in the House of Commons that that view should prevail and it did prevail. That was the way this Chamber manifested its independence. I ask in all fairness whether we can secure the approbation of the people of Canada as this House is constituted? Assuming that by reason of the extraordinary manipulation of the counties and the franchise, the Conservative party will at the next election be winners, where will the corporal's guard of Liberals in this House be left? Time makes sad havoc in our ranks, and we cannot expect that we will be all here at the end of another five years. Do you expect that the public business can be carried on properly in this Chamber by the exclusion of one great body? It may not be in the opinion of this House a majority, but it possesses a majority in some of the provinces. It has had a majority in Ontario for the last fourteen years. Do you suppose that that party in Ontario will rest satisfied and allow this Senate to sustain the Conservative party in the way it has been doing? I think not—not if they are an independent people—not if they feel that they have equal rights with other men. They will not support or permit it. I say it is not in harmony with the age. The question is a large one, and I am obliged to leave here in about ten minutes; therefore I regret still more that I am speaking, because I ought to be present when other gentllemen are replying; but I felt that I could not allow this question, which is a living one—because this is an age when the power of the people is coming to the front more and more every day—to pass without some comment. This is an age when a man holding such a high position as Lord Roseberry feels it incumbent upon him to warn his peers in the House of Lords that some change is needed there in a country where the constitution is a thousand years old—where everything is in such firm lines that it would seem impossible to alter them. But here, where the nominative system has been on trial for only a few years, where it is a departure from the principle that the people are the source of power, and to the people belongs the representation in parliament, we cannot afford to ignore this question. It is a living one, and it cannot be shirked, and I merely rise for the purpose of stating my views briefly on the question, lest my silence might be misconstrued. I have not in any sense exhausted the subject; I have barely touched it. If I had the time I could go over the various countries that in the last ten or fifteen years have been reconstructing their constitutions, not by appointing representatives, but by the election of representatives by the people, who are responsible to the people, and who at one time or other have to give an account of their stewardship to the people. Who are we here to-day? We can do as we please; not a word can be breathed against us; we care not for the people; we can order those doors to be closed; we can exclude the reporters, and the people need know nothing of our work. We can pass orders and make decrees. Perhaps a mad-cap king in Bavaria may do freaks—but even he is called to account now and then; but this Chamber has no check on its powers. We are absolute, and do just as we please. I say that is not in harmony with the age, and not in accordance with the spirit of the times. I think it would be proper for the Senate itself to take that action which it ought to take in re-constructing itself. As I said before, this is a subject which we ought all to approach from a high motive, from a desire that all those who come after us at all events should feel grateful for the change we have brought about. Hon. gentlemen may fancy that they would be injuring themselves personally by such a change. They look upon it from the standpoint that it means their own execution. I do not think so; I would not advocate any violent change. I would not approve of any change which would deprive hon. members who have received patents for life of the privileges and honors conferred upon them. I do not ask for any such change. I think the change can be brought about by the gradual process of resignation or death. In that way a very material alteration would take place in this Senate in a very short period.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Suppose we all resign.

HON. MR. SCOTT—The Senate would feel the influence of the new blood from the people. It would feel at all events that the principle on which appointments had been made no longer existed; and therefore they would be free to act as they thought proper. Looking at it from that standpoint I think the Senate itself ought to rise to the occasion, and discuss properly on all occasions a new constitution for itself. I am not committing myself to any special line, but it ought to be on the elective basis.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Do you think this is a proper time to discuss it?

HON. MR. SCOTT—No, it is not a proper time, and I must apologize for having spoken. I observe my hon. friend from Niagara is about to speak, and I regret that I am not able to remain to hear him.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—I did not expect that this question would be discussed to-day because it is one which would place the Senate in a false position. It is not constitutional, and I regret very much indeed that the leader of the Opposition has felt it necessary to make his eloquent speech on such a motion. If he had made it on an Address to the Crown and Imperial Parliament to alter the constitution of our country, then it would have been in point; but I must say I am surprised that he should have made it on a resolution which, as I shall presently show, is one that ought not to be sustained in this House. I rise also to entirely disagree with the hon. members who have spoken on this question as respects the composition and manner in which this Senate performs its duty. In the first place the hon. member who brings forward this extraordinary resolution says that the large majority of this House are not independent. By what right, or on what principle can he charge the majority of this House with not being independent—with being gentlemen who come here to vote as other people say they should and have no independent opinion of their own? I protest against such an assertion made by any hon. member of this House. I believe the Senate to be as independent as any legislative body in the world. Then again the hon. member who seconds this resolution says that the Senate has never performed its duty; that we have not made alterations in the Bills, and have never thrown out a measure sent to us from the other branch of Parliament by the present Government; that we are mere recording bodies of the acts and proceedings of the House of Commons. I say that is not a correct statement of the manner in which the Senate has performed its duty ever since it was constituted. I maintain, from the recollection which I have of the legislative measures which have come up from the other Chamber, and which have been discussed here, that we have on very many important occasions made material alterations in Acts passed by the other House. Then again the hon. member in advocating this resolution says that we are not independent; that we are under restraint because we have been appointed by the Crown. Now if he feels that way I am sure I do not, and I never have so felt. I have been 19 years a member of the Senate, and I can state with great sincerity that I never was influenced in any one single vote that I gave because of having received my appointment from the administration of the day. I believe I have sufficient knowledge of the character of the members of the Senate to know that they are not hampered by such a consideration when they are dealing with measures which are for the benefit of the Dominion at large. I think that such observations should not come from hon. members of this Senate. They are not justified in making disparaging remarks against the whole Senate of Canada. With respect to what public opinion is in the Dominion of Canada as regards the Senate, I must say the information which I possess, and the expressions of public opinion in my own province especially, lead me to the conclusion that the people consider the Senate of Canada to be a responsible, respectable and influential body. There is not that detraction any where in my province as regards the constitution of the Senate that I hear pronounced by the individual members of the Senate themselves. This resolution cannot pass at all. If the hon. member from Ottawa, who is not now in his place, had reflected for a moment, he would have seen that the Constitution of this Dominion cannot be altered by a simple resolution of the Senate of Canada. That is quite clear; yet what does he propose that we shall do? Suppose this resolution passes; we ask the Governor General to violate his oath of office, to suspend the duties which he is called upon by the British North America Act to discharge. Now, is not that an extraordinary position to take? We call upon the Governor General, in direct violation of his instructions, to suspend, in fact, the Constitution, and not to discharge the duties which he is required by the Constitution to perform. I am surprised to hear hon. members in their speeches discuss this question as if it could be at all entertained by the Senate. If there is to be an alteration of the Constitution of the country, it must be in the ordinary and regular way which is pointed out—by a joint Address of both Houses of Parliament to Her Majesty and the Imperial Parliament to alter the Constitution of Canada, and we should be prepared to give sufficient reasons for such legislation. But the idea of the Senate of Canada asking the Governor General not to perform his duty—asking him to stultify himself and to violate the constitution of the country, is one that cannot be entertained for a moment. As regards the influence which this Senate may possess if elected, that is a question which, of course, could be fairly discussed when it is thought desirable by a majority of both Houses of Parliament, to present a joint Address to Her Majesty and to the Imperial Parliament. That would be the proper way if it is necessary to make an alteration; but under existing circumstances I do not see how it is possible that a majority of the Senate will sanction a resolution of this kind.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I did not intend to speak on this subject, for I have made it a rule to ignore entirely anything which is proposed by the hon. member from Woodstock. I do not consider him worthy of an answer, but as the leader of the Opposition has seen fit to address the House on this subject, I feel bound to say a few words in reply to him, and I am sorry that he has found it necessary to leave the House before I had an opportunity of speaking upon the subject. My hon. friend who has just sat down has pointed out that we have no right to pass a resolution of this kind. It is not at all extraordinary that the erratic member from Woodstock should move a resolution which is utterly inconsequential, utterly unconstitutional, and which would stultify this Senate if it were passed. I do not understand at all that any considerable portion of this House are willing to put themselves on record on a resolution which calls upon the representative of the Queen in this country to violate his constitutional oath, to abrogate his duties, and put himself in a position of absolute antagonism to the constitution of this country. I do not believe that there is anyone who is willing to place himself seriously and permanently on record in the minutes of this House in such a position by voting in the affirmative upon this motion. The resolution itself has, in its direct effect, not been spoken to. Every one who has spoken on the resolution, except perhaps my hon. friends from Lunenburg and Hamilton, has gone entirely outside of the matter. We are not talking about a change in the constitution of the Senate, but we are talking about limiting the action of the Governor General pending such change. We have nothing to do with discussing the change. This resolution does not touch it at all; and as my hon. friend who has just sat down has pointed out, it has not been brought within the limits of discussion here by a proper form of motion. The hon. member from Woodstock has been a member of this House and of the old Legislative Council of Canada for twenty-two or twenty-five years, and he has not yet learned how to draw a motion; he has hardly ever introduced one here framed in the proper manner. He has, in his extraordinary way, endeavored to bring this subject up, and if there is anyone responsible for the derogation of this House, I need not point out who it is. When my hon. friend from Ottawa rose to say that he wished to put himself right on the record in respect of this resolution, he might have been expected to confine himself to the question itself. I was surprised to see that instead of doing that he wandered over the whole question of politics. He went as far as the Kaminstiquia River, and spoke of the bills which have been thrown out in this House. His references to them were very unfortunate. Everyone knows that the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Bill was objected to by the present leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons. It was sent up here with that gentleman's strenuous objection attached to it; and everyone knows that it was defeated in the Senate by the votes of leading members then in accord with the Government and now in opposition. The hon. gentleman from Ottawa also referred to another bill, known as the Tuckersmith Bill. That was an unfortunate reference. After the question of the re-construction of the constituencies had been settled under the census of 1871, a gentleman in the House of Commons, whose election had been protested and who was likely to be unseated, as he subsequently was, endeavored to have a bill passed for his especial benefit, the object of which was to annex the township of Tuckersmith to his constituency and thus ensure his re-election. This House very properly said that such questions should be dealt with only once in ten years according to the constitution, and they would not allow any interference with or manipulation of the electoral constituencies during the interim, because every one knows to what abuses such a measure might lead. The hon. gentleman also harked back upon the act for the reconstruction of constituencies in 1882. I do not intend to discuss that question here. I do not think this is a timely occasion to discuss a matter which has nothing to do with the question before us; but yet I will say—and I wish the hon. gentleman from Ottawa were present to hear me—that while two wrongs do not make a right, and while I do not pretend to be the advocate of any measure of any government which is not in accordance with my judgment a correct one, there has been no more abominable reconstruction in regard to constituencies under the rule which makes a decennial reconstruction necessary, than that of the Mowat Government under the Redistribution Bill of Ontario.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I rise to a point of order, and I ask the Speaker what this has to do with the question before the House. It is simply an outrage.

THE SPEAKER—I wish to say, in reply to the hon. gentleman, that I consider a number of members have been allowed to wander from the question and the hon. gentleman is merely replying. I think this discussion has wandered far from the limits of the resolution, and while I have the power to stop hon. gentlemen under such circumstances, since the House is ultimately to be the judge of the question and has not stopped the other members, I leave it to the House to stop the hon. gentleman from Niagara.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I had not the slightest idea of going into any of those questions if I had not found them introduced in the speech of the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition in this House; and it would be a strange thing if anyone should be prevented from replying to an hon. gentleman who has made serious charges on the floor of this House against the Government, after he had wandered from the subject of the resolution, because it is not pertinent to the subject. I do not think it was courteous to interrupt or to attempt to circumscribe remarks based on those of the hon. gentleman holding the responsible position that he occupies as leader of the Opposition in this House, interrupted occasionally in his leadership by the hon. gentleman from Halifax, and taken occasionally entirely out of the hon. gentleman's hands by a gentleman whose name I will not mention ; but I conceive that it was not proper that such statements as those made by the hon. member should go unchallenged upon our Debates. I think I am quite within the judgment of the House when I claim the right to notice, in a brief way, and in a parliamentary way, the statements that were made by the hon. gentleman from Ottawa. I therefore presume that the House will bear with me while I briefly refer to what the hon. gentleman has said. When I was interrupted I was speaking about the redistribution of Ontario into constituencies for the Local House. I can say that in that reconstruction townships were cut in two for the sake of giving a slight advantage. I can say that it is not strange that for some years the Government has been—

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I rise to a question of order. I protest against the introduction of Ontario politics in this House. It is not necessary for the discussion of the question now before the Chair.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I am only replying to the hon. gentleman who introduced the subject.

THE SPEAKER—I desire to repeat what I have already said, and which hon. gentlemen seem not to have understood. The discussion before the House is one altogether beyond the limits of the resolution. Every hon. gentleman who has spoken, with the exception of the hon. gentleman from Woodstock, who moved the resolution, and the hon. gentleman from Halifax, has departed from the reasonable scope of the discussion which should have taken place on this resolution ; but no one went so far in that direction as the leader of the Opposition. He was permitted, by the large majority which is said to be in this House in favor of the Government, to proceed without interruption, and was not called to order. While, therefore, I have the power of stopping the hon. member from Niagara, my decision on all occasions is subject to the approval of the House. The House not having stopped the hon. member from Ottawa, I do not intend to stop the hon. member from Niagara ; but there is a way of doing it. Any member by making a motion can stop it ; he can move that the hon. gentleman be not allowed to proceed as he had been doing when called to order, and take the sense of the House upon it.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I have in no case, since I rose to my feet, in the slightest degree wandered from the debate as presented to us by the leader of the Opposition. Every point that I have touched upon to this time was challenged and provoked by the speech of the hon. gentleman, and I have yet to believe that this Senate will not permit me to reply to the challenge thrown out by the hon. leader of the Opposition. If the hon. gentleman wants to stop me in those remarks—and I give him notice that I intend to go on with them until I am stopped—he knows how to do it ; but I protest against his abortive attempts to stop me and I ask him to meet the question boldly by proposing that I shall not be heard. My hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, for whom I have the highest esteem and regard, certainly wandered from the point at issue. We all know that, because he brought in matters which have nothing at all to do with the question under discussion ; but he did not wander from it much more than the other gentlemen did. The question is not as to the constitution of the Senate ; the question is as to preventing His Excellency the Governor General from making any further appointments to the Senate until there has been a public expression at a general election as to its present constitution. That is all. There is nothing about submitting the proposition anywhere, and it is a question as to whether we shall stultify ourselves by asking that the Executive shall not fulfil a duty which he is compelled to do, under his oath of office when he accepted the position which he holds as Governor-General of this Dominion. But my hon. friend said, among other things, that during the time when the late Government was in power the Senate behaved very badly, and that the Senate had appointed committees for the purpose of bringing, if possible, the Government of the day into contempt. He said they had one on the Kaministiquia river terminus. Now the hon. gentleman says :

"You see how baseless the ground for the appointment of that committee was from the fact that there is an estimate before the other House for dredging out the channel of that river." The hon. gentleman did not see that he was giving himself away by that statement. We contended that the Kaministiquia was not navigable; that we could not get vessels of proper draught up that river. Now the hon. gentleman says the government are making estimates for the purpose of dredging that river which shows that we were perfectly right when we contended that there was no navigation there.

HON. MR. POWER—Nothing of the sort.

HON. MR. PLUMB—My hon. friend never interrupts me! The hon. gentleman from Ottawa said that under the elective system the Senate was a body of much higher character than it now is under the nominative system. I could point out to the hon. gentleman the words of the great leader of the Reform party—the man who created the party in Ontario—the man who had a seat in this House; and a nominative seat it was; and I might also mention to the hon. gentleman who said something about people sent here who had lost their elections, that the Hon. George Brown was appointed after it was found that he could not get a seat in Ontario—after he was defeated at the polls. That hon. gentleman, who was largely the author of the nominative system, in his speech on the formation of the constitution, stated that the elective Senate had been a failure; that the elective Senate had deteriorated; that the elective Senate was not such a desirable body as we should have for the upper House of the Dominion. Any one who has read the record of the politics of that day (and no one has read it more carefully than the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island) knows that the Hon. George Brown was a fervent advocate of the nominative system for this Senate, and said that any other system would fail to secure that which was intended and desired. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that that was the case; and it has been pointed out repeatedly that the elective system could not be worked out where such large constituencies were absolutely necessary to be represented by only 24—for instance in Ontario—and if there was any change in the Senate it would be necessary to fill it up on the system of nomination by the legislatures. It is not our fault that the Conservative party are largely in the majority in this House. It is the irony and logic of events that year after year the hon. gentleman and his friends have been in the minority in this Dominion. Whether it is from one cause, or whether it is from another the fact remains. My own opinion is that the people of this country have given their confidence to the Conservative party and therefore it has happened that the hon. gentlemen in opposition have not had the opportunity to make appointments to the Senate when vacancies arose.

HON. MR. READ—The N. P.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I cannot imagine, if the hon. gentlemen had possessed the power, that they would have appointed Conservatives to the Senate. I imagine that they are no more strictly or triumphantly generous than political parties generally, but the leader of the Opposition has said that an elective Senate stood so directly in opposition to the popular branch—the immediate representatives of the people—that when they wished to force a question, they refused to pass the estimates. That is exactly what we say is the danger; that is exactly what we say is the difficulty in giving the purse strings into the hands of the higher body. That is the argument we have always used that if the Senate is elected by the people, it will claim to have a right to deal with the fiscal policy of the country, and to have control over the Treasury, and there is where the complication will be; and the hon. gentleman admitted the whole fact by saying that the elective body had interfered and forced the majority out—forced the body that represents the people directly into a position which they would not otherwise have taken, by refusing to pass the estimates. Could there be anything more illustrative of the danger of having a body elective than the confession made by my hon. friend? It was not in keeping with his usual astuteness ; it was not in accord with the usual clear judgment he shows in other cases ; but I pardon him, because he was not prepared to speak when he rose, and when he said that the time had come when the people would demand a change, but he was not at all prepared to say exactly in what form that change should be made, I have to suppose therefore, that his subsequent remarks were made without that reflection which usually distinguishes the utterances of that hon. gentleman in this House and elsewhere. A few more words will suffice. The hon. gentleman says that we are fighting the provinces ; and another hon. gentleman, who spoke upon this subject, proposed that the Senate should be so constructed that its first duty should be to the provinces and afterwards to the Dominion. I supposed that we were here under the Act of Confederation to make this Dominion a whole. I supposed when I was sent to this House that I came here as a representative of the interests of the Dominion, and I say that no more dangerous principle for the security of Confederation could be advanced than that this body is composed of isolated members, each of whom is representing his province and not the interests of the country as a whole. I say that that would be one of the greatest dangers in a body created as it has been proposed, during this discussion, to create the Senate. I believe that the man who serves Canada most faithfully to-day is he who, disregarding provincial interests, disregarding the lines which are drawn to separate province from province, will endeavor to fuse this great Dominion as a whole, forgetting that there are sections or sectional differences, and endeavor so far to do his duty that no hostile and irritating questions connected with sectional interests shall arise in the debates of this body. I believe that nothing will be more detrimental to the future of this great Dominion, which we believe will ultimately be a great power on this continent, standing alongside of the great neighboring Republic, than the fomenting of those petty differences which will naturally come up as long as the principle of representing provinces, and not the Dominion, is regarded in the legislation of this House. I say that every man who wishes well to this country will endeavor, so far as he can, to obliterate provincial lines and to act for the general benefit. I believe that I am as much a representative of British Columbia, of the North-West, of Manitoba, of Quebec and of the Eastern provinces, as I am of Ontario. I do not speak of my province ; I speak of the whole ; and I shall, as far as my humble efforts are concerned, devote them to the prosperity of the Dominion at large, only through which we can ever hope to hold ourselves together as a Dominion, and to carry out the destiny which Confederation was deigned to bring about for us. The hon. gentleman says that we are subservient to the Government ; that we are merely here to register the decrees of the majority. When we ventured, on an occasion which I mention with some hesitation on account of my hon. friend who sits at my left, and whom I highly respect—when we ventured to differ from the House of Commons on that occasion, there was a general howl raised all over the country because the Senate had asserted its independence. The Senate had the right to assert its independence, and to assert its opinion, and it did assert its position. Whether that position was in the interests of the country or not, the Senate believed it was, and it had no possible object in acting in the way it did except in the sincere and earnest conviction that it was acting in the interests of the community, and that it could afford to interpose its check, and put itself outside of and beyond the temporary popular excitement. They felt that that excitement would probably die out, and it was the duty of the Senate—it was what it was created for—to stand outside of immediate popular movements and review them with the feeling that it is not immediately affected by them ; and I take it for granted that I am within the judgment of the House—that I am within the judgment of the country, when I say that this body in a practical way represented the temperate, well-considered public sentiment, and that now, as then, we shall never be found recreant to our duty. I trust that this mischievous resolution will meet with the fate it justly deserves. If there is anything which is calculated to bring this House into public contempt it is exactly the kind of legislation which is proposed by resolution of this kind.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—Did I understand the hon. gentleman from Niagara to say that the Government were bound under oath to follow the constitution?

HON. MR. PLUMB—I was speaking not of the Government at all, but of the Governor-General who, as head of the Executive, is compelled by his oath of office to appoint members to the Senate when he is called upon by his advisers to do so. The resolution before us calls upon him to suspend his judgment until after the elections.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I was about to ask the leave of the House, and I regret to be obliged to do so, to recall what the issue is that we are asked to vote on. We have heard a great deal to-day as to which I shall say nothing. I shall pass no opinion on it, because it is not the question before the House. My rule is invariably to keep to the question, and my object in now rising is to ask the House to keep to the question. What is the subject before the House? It is not whether it is desirable that there should be at some future period an elective body; it is not whether there shall be a body chosen by the various provinces; but the question before the House, and what we are asked to vote upon, is an Address to the Governor-General, asking him to suspend the exercise of his functions and not to fill up vacancies in the Senate until some remote period. That is the whole question, and as germane to that question, and to satisfy my hon. friend from DeLanaudiere, I invite his attention to the 32nd section of the British North America Act, which bears upon this question. It is to this effect:—

“When a vacancy happens in the Senate by resignation, death or otherwise, the Governor-General shall, by summons to a fit and qualified person, fill the vacancy.”

That is the constitution of the country, and as my hon. friend from Sackville has pointed out it can only be changed in one way, and that is by the act of a Parliament of equal power to the Parliament which gave us the constitution. The hon. member who proposed this resolution probably was not aware that that was in the constitution of the country; but there can be no doubt of the fact, because I have referred to the Act itself, and the House will, perhaps, pardon me for doing so as being a member from one of the smaller provinces, the special object of the creation of the Senate being to protect them by that body in the constitution of our country. It is unfortunate, and I am here a standing monument of the fact, that there has been scarcely an interval between any two sessions since we came to this House, that we have not been called upon to deplore the absence of our fellows who have gone over to the majority. In speaking of my own province I am sorry to find that his honor the speaker, and my hon. friend on my right, and myself, are the only survivors of the contingent sent from Nova Scotia 18 years ago; and we are asked now, with that fact before us, and with the possibility that there may be even more vacancies in the various other provinces—vacancies, if they only amounted to one a year, of some six or seven in the smaller provinces—we are asked to postpone the filling up of those vacancies for one or two years, so that there may be, possibly, before any could be filled among the smaller provinces of the Dominion, vacancies to the extent of ten or twelve seats. Under those circumstances, I think I need offer no apology to the House for saying, as a member representing one of the smaller provinces, that I earnestly protest against the passage of this resolution. It is an attempt to tie up the hands of the Governor-General in a matter in which he is controlled by a higher power—by the Imperial Act, and by his own oath of office; and if we were to pass such an Address and present it to His Excellency, I think I am justified in saying that it would be regarded—I will not say by His Excellency, but by a great many people—as little short of an impertinence in connection with the discharge of the solemn duty which he has under the constitution, and which he is bound under the constitution, alike with the oath of office, to fulfil. I hope the House will not entertain this resolution, and when the larger question, which has been very improperly introduced into the debate to-day, comes before the House, we will look to it carefully and conscientiously, and we will be in a position to come to a conclusion upon it very different from what we might expect from the temper which has been displayed here to-day, which unfortunately, has been an effort (that I hope will not be successful) to make this a party question. I do not find fault with them; they have the right to take their own responsibility; but I do regret that gentlemen who know perfectly well the responsibilities under which they lie in taking a position of this kind, should insist upon treating this as a party question and making inflammatory speeches for the purpose of influencing votes in support of this resolution. Without desiring to say a word that will create any feeling, I am quite satisfied that the sentiment I have just given utterance to is in entire accord with the sentiments of the reflective members of the Opposition to win whom was the purpose of the course that has been taken to-day. I therefore trust that the House, having now the plain issue before them, leaving out of sight altogether those extraneous matters that have been introduced, will vote simply on whether they are prepared to go to the Governor-General with an Address of this kind and ask him to suspend his functions under an Act of Parliament until after another election, or whether we will negative this resolution and say that those gentlemen, wishing to raise the question as to a change of the constitution of this House, shall do so in a legitimate, fair, open and honorable manner and not endeavor to accomplish their purpose by a side wind, in the manner proposed by this resolution.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—Some days ago I intended to put on the order paper a notice of inquiry whether it was the intention of the Government to fill the vacancies in this House which I, at least, deplore. This being my sentiment, it is hardly necessary for me to state that I cannot approve of the resolution which is before us. A good deal has been said in this debate, and I think that some of the assertions made cannot be allowed to pass unchallenged. Some of them have the effect, in my opinion, of narrowing the field of our labors and disposing of what I believe to be the constitutional rights of the members of this House.

In this resolution, in my opinion, there are two distinct questions. First, the question which is directly raised whether we should not express our opinion to His Excellency that no further appointment should be made. Second, a question which is rather suggested than directly proposed, and which has brought about most of the debate which has taken place—the suggestion that there should be this postponement of appointments, pending a change in the constitution of the Senate. Though it is not directly proposed by the resolution, it is suggested, and I would not be prepared to say that the remarks made on the reconstruction of the Senate should be considered clearly out of order. There is a proposition which has been expressed by the hon. gentleman from Niagara, to which I think it is my duty to call the attention of the House. If I understood him properly, he said that this resolution is clearly unconstitutional. I expected when he rose that he would call the attention of the Speaker of this House and ask him to pronounce upon that point. I fail to see that this resolution is unconstitutional. I do not think the question should have been set aside on a point of order, because this House has a right to assert what is mentioned in this motion. I may add, however, that I consider it would be very unfortunate and unwise if the House should do so, but still I fail to see that there is anything unconstitutional on the part of this House in expressing such an opinion. If I call the attention of the Senate to this point it is because it touches one of our most precious rights—that is, the right to express our opinion on any question of public interest. I repeat, I do not believe that the motion should be supported. I believe it is a very unwise one, but still this House, in my opinion, has a strict right to pass it. I was very glad to hear one of the senior members of this House, as well as the hon. gentleman from Hamilton, point out what I consider to be the principal objection to this resolution. I do not consider it unconstitutional, but it suggests something which, if carried out, would be a violation of the spirit of the constitution, and for this reason: it is well known that one of the most important objects in the creation of the Senate was to maintain a balance between the different sections of the Dominion, and to redress what was considered to be an injustice in granting representation by population in the other House. It was considered at the time that the whole Dominion, as it stood then, was divided into three great groups, Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces. Ontario was given a much larger representation than either of the two other groups in the Lower House, and it was considered that in some place the three groups should be placed on a footing of equality. If I remember correctly this was done specially to protect the Province which had fought for years and years against the principle of representation by population, by creating a House where the Province of Quebec should be on exactly the same footing as the Province of Ontario so that if the majority from Ontario in the House of Commons should perpetrate some injustice it could be redressed by the equal influence of the two provinces in this Chamber. The moment the representation of each group is not complete here, I humbly submit that the spirit of the constitution is violated, because the balance is destroyed. I was very glad to hear my hon. friend from Amherst remind the House that filling vacancies was not left to the caprice of the Administration, but that it was one of the provisions of the Constitution. I would like to insist upon this point, but, as I stated before, I did not do so because of the illness of the leader of the Senate, but my intention was to ask the Government why certain vacancies had not been filled. Everybody knows, for instance, that one of the leading men of our province, who is now Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec, has not been replaced in this House. Of course we, who are in the minority, will miss his vote, if an important occasion should arise when it would be needed. I am always very glad to hear hon. members of this House, or any of our public men, assert the principle that we should try to make Canada a homogeneous country; but we cannot forget that our population is composed of elements essentially different—elements which have a perfect right, not only according to the constitution but according to treaties, to retain their autonomy; and while, in one sense, we ought to be Canadians and do our best to make our country great and prosperous, on the other hand it cannot be expected that a part of the people of the Dominion should sacrifice what they consider to be dearer than their lives, an inheritance for which their fathers fought for a century, for the mere sake of creating uniformity of language and customs. We cannot expect that one of the nationalities in this country will abandon all that and consent to their extinction from the point of view of nationality and language. Therefore, I do not consider the opinion expressed by the hon. member from Niagara is altogether right. Our constitution not only admits, but makes it a duty of the members of the different sections to represent sectional interests to the extent I have just mentioned. Those broad and liberal views are so often expressed, and they are so true in one sense, that we are more generally inclined to give them our assent than to oppose them; but we ought sometimes to explain our position, in order that the country may not entertain a wrong impression on the subject. I am sure that those who speak a different language and belong to a different race from ours would not be prepared to say that for the mere sake of unity they should abandon what they consider to be their dearest inheritance—their language, their usages and nationality, and they should remember that we, on our part, entertain a similar objection. Of course it is hardly necessary to say that, as to the other question, I should be very glad to see it brought in a different form before this House, and I think we cannot examine and study it too much. Strictly speaking, I have the same right to speak on it, but I think it is better to refrain from doing so. I repeat that as to the present motion I consider myself obliged to vote against it, though I may state frankly and without any political feeling, that I consider it is to be regretted that the two great political parties in this confederation are not more equally represented here. It is not from sympathy with those gentlemen that I say so, but considering it from the point of view of the general interest of the country, I think it is almost as necessary that there should be a strong Opposition as a strong Government, and I believe that it is a misfortune to a certain extent that the Opposition in this House is not a little more numerous.

HON. MR. DICKEY.

HON. MR. ALLAN—Like some other hon. gentlemen who preceded me I certainly had no intention whatever of saying a word on this resolution when the debate began. It never occurred to me for a moment that the House would seriously entertain the resolution. Although the hon. member from Halifax here, in his usual benevolent spirit, seconded it. I suppose that it is only for the purpose of giving himself, and perhaps other members, an opportunity of expressing their opinions. I cannot conceive it possible that hon. gentlemen in this House, no matter what may be their opinions with respect to the constitution of this Senate, can seriously propose that the question should be taken up and that they should record their votes in reference to any changes on a resolution framed in the manner in which this one before the House is. But I should be sorry, after all that has been said and the course which this discussion has taken, to allow, if the resolution is really pressed, a vote to be taken without saying one or two words in reference to it. In the first place, I desire to protest, and protest very strongly, against the language which has been used by some hon. members of this House in reference to the Senate itself. It is bad enough to have these things said out of doors, but I cannot help thinking of the old proverb, "It's an ill bird that fouls its own nest," when members of the Senate repeat words spoken against us by the press. I think it is unfair and unjust; I have been a member of this Senate since Confederation; I have had the honor of belonging to two of the largest committees of this House, and therefore I think I can speak with some knowledge when I refer to the manner in which the legislation of the country is conducted in the Senate. I have heard remarks made, which were exceedingly complimentary to the manner in which business was conducted in the committees of this House, by gentlemen who have been for years members of the largest committees of the House of Commons. I think the Senate has no reason to be ashamed of the manner in which it has conducted the business of this country. It is done carefully and thoughtfully, and I deny in toto that we have constituted ourselves merely a registering body for the House of Commons. On the contrary, we have seen measures time and again changed and rejected and had I supposed the discussion would have taken the course it has to-day, it would have been very easy to have furnished examples. I should have no difficulty in quoting a large number of them, showing where this House has exercised a most wise and judicious control over the legislation of the House of Commons.

HON. MR. POWER—I should like to ask the hon. member if he would be good enough to point out any instance since 1878 where this House has rejected or largely amended any Government measure coming from the other Chamber.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I think it is about time that this farce should be stopped. I want to know if this debate is in order?

HON. MR. ALLAN—I am in the hands of the House.

THE SPEAKER—Any member acting under the decision I have already given can stop the debate by a motion. If I had had control of the order of the House this discussion would have been ended an hour and a half ago.

HON. MR. ALLAN—After what the Speaker has just said, I should be very much inclined to sit down. (Cries of "Go on.") I intend to be very brief. I shall not go into the discussion of what measures have been rejected here by this House. I was speaking generally, and of my knowledge of what were the facts of the case. I desire to protest against the statements which have been made with respect either to the character of the legislation of this House or its position in the country. Even at the risk, perhaps, of calling up again my hon. friend on my left (Mr. Power), I venture to say that in a very large measure it will be found by any candid person that the manner in which this House has been spoken of by the press and outside of this House, as alluded to by my hon. friend from Ottawa, has been confined, to a very great extent, if not entirely, to that portion of the press which is now in opposition to the present Government, and which, therefore, naturally tries to find fault with a House, the majority of whom they know to be in sympathy with the Government. But I desire to say another thing, and that was my chief object in rising: I have never concealed my desire that this House should not be composed exclusively of gentlemen of any one party, or should assume a strong political partizan character, and nothing would give me greater pleasure than to see appointments made to this House of gentlemen of standing and weight in the country who are not strong partizans, no matter to what party they belong; but that, or any other change, surely cannot be approached or properly debated on a resolution such as this which we now have before us. The time may come when it will be necessary to consider whether any and what changes will be made in the constitution of this Chamber, but I hope when that time does come the subject will be taken up in the earnest and thoughtful manner which the importance of the subject requires, and not taken up on a resolution which the merest tyro in constitutional law must know cannot be passed by this House.

HON. MR. READ—I hope the House will permit me to reply to some statements which have been made in the course of this discussion. It has been claimed, and it is not denied by the mover of this resolution, that the Senate is a high judicial body. Its acts have shown, ever since I have had the honor of holding a seat here, that it has acted in that capacity. Complaint is made that it is composed principally of Conservatives; that is not the fault of the House; it is the fault of the country. What does party government mean? It mean a way of governing by the majority. The majority, in this case, support the National Policy and the construction of the Pacific Railway. Those are the two great questions on which the country has been divided, and this House now represents public opinion on those great measures. It is no matter what you call me; I am a National Policy man, and it is no matter what you call anyone on the other side, he is against the National Policy. That is the great question which divides us. The construction of the Pacific Railway has divided us; but that is decided; the Government, in its wisdom, has carried it out in a manner that is creditable to itself and to the country, and in a manner that the country will sustain when the occasion comes. It is not a very great misfortune to belong to a party which has carried out those great measures and possesses the confidence of the people. It has been said that we should have wise, honest and faithful administration of public affairs. Well, we have it; the electors say so, and the country shows it. If the people did not choose to return members opposed to the National Policy, and in favor of constructing an amphibious line of railway, the fault is not ours. Then, it is said that we have not the confidence of the people of the country because there are strictures on the Senate in a portion of the press. My experience is that a public man cannot pursue any course without meeting with the censure of a portion of the press. I do not mind what is said. I am prepared to do right though the heavens fall. That is what we are aiming to do in this Chamber. The hon. gentleman from Ottawa referred to some acts which were carried through this House during the time that he was leader of the Government, and he referred to the redistribution bills. If he had made a fair or honest statement, I should not have attacked him, but as I had the honor of making the motion, and the hon. member from Belleville seconded it, defeating the Tuckersmith Bill, I propose to say something about it. During the redistribution of seats to increase the number of members from Ontario, it was necessary to rearrange the constituencies and the county of Huron was divided into three ridings by Sir John Macdonald's Government. The county of Huron contains 822,000 acres; that is divided into three sections, the north having 313,000 acres, the south 256,000 acres and the centre 253,000 acres. Now, take the householders. In the north there were 3,759; in the south 3,703; and in the centre 4,002. Now, take the population; in the north there were 21,856, in the south 21,512, in the centre 22,721. There is an equal division of acreage, householders and population; but the gentleman who held the seat in the other branch of Parliament for the south riding, whose election was protested, knew that he would be unseated, and he did not expect to be re-elected. He said: "You have not rearranged the constituency properly; it is not exactly uniform; there are right angles and acute angles, and the county of Huron is all angles; you will do better by taking the county of Tuckersmith from centre Huron and adding it to the south riding.

HON. MR. DICKEY—He was angling for votes.

HON. MR. READ—There were four hundred voters in that county, three hundred and fifty of whom petitioned to be added to the south riding. I have a return of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery from which I find that that Township of Tuckersmith had given in one election a Grit majority of 200, so you may imagine why he wanted the Township of Tuckersmith added to his constituency. I will state now how the rearrangement would have left the acreage and population. South Huron would have contained 299,000 acres and Centre Huron 219,000, a difference of 80,000 acres. Then, in householders, South Huron would have had 4,300 and centre Huron 3,405. The rearrangement would have made a decided inequality. It was a Bill for the purpose of enabling the hon. gentleman, who was subsequently unseated, to get returned if possible. Then, if the Bill had passed and he had been re-elected, what would have been the effect? Tuckersmith would have been represented by two parties in the same Parliament. I think I have proved sufficiently that we had good reason for rejecting that Bill. It has been stated that the Legislative Council of Old Canada threw out the Supply Bill because the Government of that day put a vote in the estimates for moving the seat of Government. Now, was that done by an elected or a nominated Council? In 1856 the first election for a Legislative Council was held. On that occasion 12 members were elected. Twelve more were elected in 1858; 12 in 1860, and 12 in 1862.

I see in Bourinot that in the session of 1856 the Supply Bill contained a provision for the erection of Public Buildings in Quebec, then the seat of Government.

HON. MR. READ.

The majority in the Legislative Council were opposed to the policy of the Assembly on that question and took strong ground against the passage of the Bill while it contained this obnoxious item. The majority carried a resolution defeating the Bill on the ground that the House had not been "consulted on the subject of fixing any place for the permanent seat of Government of the Province." Then, in 1859, Bourinot says "The Legislative Council again refused to vote the supplies, an amendment being carried on the second reading of the Bill, to the effect that the Council could not consider the Budget until the Government had made known its intention with respect to the Seat of Government. Subsequently, however, the Bill was revised and supply voted—other councillors who had been absent on the first division having arrived in time to save the Bill." So that the House, when this Bill was carried, was not composed of elective members. There might have been 24, and may not have been any on the first occasion. The House at that time was composed of 55 members—that is in 1859, and I see among the names that of the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Mr. Allan); consequently the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition in this House was a little mistaken as to the composition of the Upper House at that time. I shall decidedly vote against the resolution of the hon. gentleman from Woodstock, as I consider those constitution tinkers are not exactly what we require at present. The constitution that has stood so long and has served us so well should be retained until some just reason is advanced that will show that the country is dissatisfied with it. The best proof that the country is not dissatisfied is the fact that when we have defeated any measure of the Government they have never brought it before us again. We have defeated some Government measures, and the country was satisfied that we were right and the Government was wrong.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I shall endeavor to follow the good example set me by the hon. gentleman from Amherst, who, I think, confined himself very closely to the resolution before the House. I think it is to be regretted that a question of such great importance should have been taken up in this desultory fashion. A question of such importance as this should have been the result of considerate deliberation and concert between leading members of this House. I have, myself, on a former occasion, and I think a more suitable one, expressed my views as regards the manner in which this House should be reformed. Possibly I may, on some future occasion, have an opportunity of repeating those opinions, and I intend to reserve anything I have to say on that point until that opportunity shall occur. I think some things have been said during this debate which are not altogether relevant to the question before us, and which might be fairly commented upon. For instance, a great deal has been said about the dependence of members of this House. I, myself, am a standing monument of the contrary fact. I was appointed to this House by the Government of Sir John A. Macdonald in 1873, and I and my colleagues saw fit to take a position opposed to that Government, and I have been opposed to it ever since—not blindly, I hope, because any measure of theirs which I thought was a good and useful one I have always been ready to support. Then, as regards my own party, I took a position opposed to my own political friends upon an important franchise bill which came before this House. I opposed that measure, in concert with other Senators from my own province, and we opposed it so successfully that our amendment was sent down to the House of Commons and adopted there. That shows that there is room for independent action of members in this body. I could not agree with the remarks which fell from the hon. gentleman from Niagara to the effect that a Senator appointed to this body is emphatically a Senator of the Dominion—I think the hon. gentleman went so far as to say mainly and chiefly a Senator of the Dominion. I cannot take that view of the question. I think that the number of Senators appointed for the smaller provinces, as alluded to by the hon. gentlemen from Amherst, indicates very clearly that the intent of the framers of this constitution was that the Senators should have special charge of the interests of their particular provinces. I have felt that to be the case with reference to the terms of Confederation of our province. How often have I brought that question before the House? I have now the satisfaction of knowing that a deputation from my Province, which recently went to the Imperial Government and had various interviews with the Secretary of State for the Colonies, based their proposition upon motions made by Senators from Prince Edward Island, and upon answers given by a gentleman whose absence we all deplore—the Postmaster-General. Upon the answers made by him was a large portion of their memorials addressed to the Secretary of State. I therefore say most emphatically, notwithstanding the opinion of the hon. gentleman from Niagara, that I consider myself and my colleagues charged, first and foremost, with the interests of my province, not necessarily opposed to the interests of the Dominion, but that specially and particularly the interests of our province are placed under our charge. I say that with the more confidence because in the other Chamber it frequently happens that there occurs a difficulty. It is not so easy, where a large number of motions are before the House, to bring a matter affecting any one province before the notice of Parliament, and it frequently happens that some particular motion which interests some province specially is not reached. The consequence is that the wants and wishes of that province are not so prominently and so pithily brought before the notice of the Government as when the motion is made in this House where, from a paucity of business, every motion is sure to obtain an attentive hearing. I do not, after the patience with which the House has listened to a very irrelevant debate, wish to be drawn into any speech in reply to hon. gentlemen who have become rather discursive. I could make some remarks on the Kaministiquia River, and some other questions that have been referred to, but I decline to do so. As to what changes must take place in this House, I have already expressed my opinion, and I will again do so when the proper time occurs.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I do not propose to reply to the very modest speeches of the hon. members from Dorchester and Niagara. Their arguments, so logical and convincing, must have been satisfactory to the House ; but I desire to specially notice the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Amherst, a very distinguished barrister of long standing, who raised the point that the motion was unconstitutional. I ask him now, is a motion requesting the Senate to express an opinion upon any great public subject unconstitutional? Would he answer now? I observe that he is silent, which will make it evident to the House that he was trifling with the Senate. As to the hon. senator from York (Mr. Allan), I understood that he used the same language with regard to the motion, and added that any tyro would know that the motion was unconstitutional. It is the general mode of reply of the hon. gentleman, as I have observed, for many years, that he and his leader generally called those from whom they differ bad names. They say that such members are out of their minds: that they are slanderers: that they are beside themselves: that in fact they know nothing. That is the style of reply of that hon. gentleman who appears always to be very scrupulous in his manner of dealing with public questions. I only hope that he and his leader can satisfy their own consciences with regard to their public conduct.

The House divided on the resolution, which was lost on the following division:

AFTER RECESS.

FINES AND FORFEITURES BILL

SECOND READING.

HON MR. DICKEY moved the second reading of Bill (82) "An Act respecting the application of certain fines and forfeitures. He said: This Bill is intended to remedy a defect in our legislation in respect of the application of fines and forfeitures under the laws of Canada. The first section is to that effect. The second section provides, in cases where such fines have been imposed, that they may be paid over to any provincial or municipal authority that has, wholly or in part, been put to expense in connection with those fines, or for any other purpose that the Government may choose. As the Act has such an obvious application there can be, I fancy, no possible objection to it. I hope the House will agree to the second reading, and it can be referred to committee at a future day.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I have not got the Bill before me, but does it not provide how the fines shall be applied that come to the Crown?

HON. MR. DICKEY—Yes, only fines imposed under laws that are not local.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

LIGHT HOUSE AT CAPE RACE
BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. SMITH moved the second reading of Bill (100) "An Act respecting the transfer of the lighthouse at Cape Race, Newfoundland, and its appurtenances, to the Dominion of Canada." He said: This Bill is intended to take over the lighthouse that has been in possession of the home Government and the fund created by fees, amounting to $100,000. That fund is handed over to us with the lighthouse. The expense of maintaining the lighthouse is about $4,000 a year. The lighthouse is at Cape Race, on the Newfoundland side. In the past Canadian vessels passing that way have been charged fees. In the future there will be no fees collected from vessels going from or coming to this country. We think the arrangement a good one, and trust that this House will sustain the Bill.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Do I understand that we are to be relieved from paying any lighthouse dues?

HON. MR. SMITH—In the future all vessels will pass free.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Then shipping will be relieved from those fees, and we get the fund of $100,000 and we pay the expenses of maintaining the lighthouse.

HON. MR. SMITH—Yes.

HON. MR. DEVER—If I understood the hon. gentleman well, I think we have made a good bargain by this transaction. I understood him to say that we are to receive a fund of $100,000.

HON. MR. SMITH—Yes.

HON. MR. DEVER—That will be, at the rate of six per cent., $6,000 a year, while, the cost of maintaining the lighthouse is estimated at $4,000. That will give a profit of $2,000 a year.

HON. MR. SMITH—Yes, if you can get six per cent. for the money.

HON. MR. DEVER—I think it is a good bargain for Canada.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

ST. LAWRENCE AND ATLANTIC JUNCTION RAILWAY BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. FERRIER moved the second reading of Bill (58), "An Act to incorporate the St. Lawrence and Atlantic Junction Railway Company."

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

REFORMED EPISCOPAL CHURCH BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B.C.), moved the second reading of Bill (59) "An Act to incorporate the First Synod in the Dominion of Canada of the Reformed Episcopal Church." He said: I have to thank my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Dever) for having taken charge of this Bill in my absence. This is a measure passed in the House of Commons to incorporate the Reformed Episcopal Church of Canada. Such legislation has been granted to all religious bodies which have applied for it. The object is to enable the church to hold land and to receive grants for school and church purposes, etc.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—Is there not a petition against the Bill?

HON. MR. MACDONALD—The subject will be discussed thoroughly in committee. There was a long discussion over the word "First" used in this Bill.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—A petition has just been shown to me here pointing out that this will conflict with another Corporation bearing the name of "The Reformed Episcopal Church" otherwise known as the "Reformed Church of England" and it is also called "First," which is objected to. The other Reformed Church claim that they are the first Synod, and that this is a institution foreign to all the notions we have of religious organizations. I am certainly not in favor of this kind of reform. If we have one Church of that name already in the country I think it is enough. The title of this Bill conflicts so much with the name of the other church that I think it would be well for us not to give it our support, but to throw it out entirely.

HON. MR. DEVER—I found this stray lamb the other night. Though many shepherds were after it, it responded to my voice with more kindness than to the others: hence I took hold of it and assisted it to get its first reading. I have not the slightest doubt that it looks as far back on its history and its foundation even as the days of Peter. I think this is a good Bill, and as I admire a free church in a free state I intend to support it.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

HON. MR. MACDONALD moved that the Bill be referred to the Committee on Standing Orders and Private Bills.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I think no blame can be attached to members who have raised objections to this Bill, because now is the time to do so, on the second reading. It has been found to be a useful practice, at the second reading of private bills, to make any objections that were entertained to them.

HON. MR. MACDONALD—I rise to question of order. The Bill has been read the second time and the hon. gentleman is now speaking after the second reading of the Bill.

THE SPEAKER—I do not understand the hon. member to be speaking on the principle of the Bill. I understood that he was speaking on the motion to refer the Bill to the Committee on Standing Orders.

HON. MR. DICKEY—If the hon. member had exercised a little patience he would have found that my recommendation in no way conflicted with the rules of the House or the Bill itself. I was stating that no fault could be found with hon. gentlemen who raise objections on the second reading, because that is the proper time to do so. I was going to follow it up with the observation that I have often heard from the Treasury benches on the other side, when objections have been taken to Bills, the hope expressed that the Committees to which they were to be referred would take particular pains to require into the facts so as to be in a position to report them to the House, and then we could intelligently take up and discuss the measures. I hope there is no harm in making that observation, and that is all I had to say.

The motion was agreed to.

HON. MR. DEVER.

ANIMAL CONTAGIOUS DISEASES BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day having been called "Second Reading of Bill (19) Animal Contagious Diseases Bill,"

HON. MR. SMITH said: My name has been placed to that Bill, but I do not know anything about it, and cannot take the responsibility of moving its second reading.

HON. MR. WARK—I move that the Order of the Day be discharged and that the Bill stand for second reading on Wednesday next. By that time somebody will be prepared to take charge of it no doubt.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned at 8.20 P. M.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Tuesday, May 4th, 1886.

The Speaker took the Chair at three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills, reported from the Committee on Standing Orders and Private Bills were read the third time and passed without debate:—

Bill (36) "An Act to grant certain powers to the Sable and Spanish Boom Slide Company of Algoma (Limited)." (Mr. Turner.)

Bill (30) "An Act to incorporate the E. B. Eddy Manufacturing Company." (Mr. Clemow.)

LAKE SUPERIOR MINERAL RAILWAY COMPANY B LL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. DICKEY, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbors, reported Bill (34) "An Act to incorporate the Lake Superior Mineral Railway Company with several amendments. He said: This Bill appears to have been very carefully drawn from the revised bills which have been passed through this House, and although it is a long Bill, there are only one or two verbal amendments. There is one amendment of more material character in the 12th clause, in which the words are struck out which refer to the power given to the bondholders and proceedings under bond, that those shall take place in the name of the trustees. When we came to compare that with the proceedings on the same bond in the 14th clause, there was a slight incongruity in this, that the 14th clause required the proceedings to be in the name of the persons holding the bonds. The promoter of the Bill, on its being pointed out to him, agreed that it was better to strike out those words which require the bondholders to proceed in the name of the trustees in the 12th clause, as they already had the power, in order to make the Bill congruous. That is the only material amendment, and I see nothing to prevent the amendments being concurred in.

The amendments were concurred in, and the Bill was then read the third time and passed.

THE SHUSWAP AND OKANAGAN RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. DICKEY, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbors, reported Bill (33) "An Act to incorporate the Shuswap and Okanagan Railway Company," with certain amendments. He said: The amendments of this Bill are of rather a voluminous character, but at the same time they are purely verbal. The necessity for those amendments is caused by this Bill having been drawn from an old form before the more condensed form, that is free from tautology, was agreed upon, and the promoters of the Bill appeared before the committee and agreed to those changes. As the amendments are purely verbal I see no reason why the House should not concur in them and allow the Bill to have a stage.

The amendments were concurred in and the Bill was then read the third time and passed.

BOW RIVER COAL MINE RAILWAY AND TRANSPORTATION COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. DICKEY, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbors, reported Bill (44), "An Act to incorporate the Bow River Coal Mine Railway and Transportation Company," with several amendments. He said: The amendments to this Bill are of the same character as those I spoke of with regard to the last bill. They are purely verbal, arising from a desire to use the abbreviated form and make the language more plain. I know of no reason why the amendments should not be concurred in.

The amendments were concurred in and the Bill was then read the third time and passed.

CENTRAL ONTARIO RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. DICKEY, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbors, reported Bill (67), "An Act respecting the Central Ontario Railway Company," with certain amendments. He said: There appears to have been in this Bill, as it came to us from the other House, a material mistake in the title of the Bill and the name of the Company. It was the Ontario Central Railway Company which was incorporated, and this is an Act to amend that charter, and it proposes to amend an Act to incorporate the Central Ontario Railway Company. The promoters, finding that these amendments were necessary to be made, not merely in the title, but in the preamble of the Bill, desired them to be made in the Committee, and certain parts of the Bill required it to be recast. The Bill is a short one and there are several amendments, and the hon. gentleman who has charge of the measure will state to the House what course he chooses to adopt with regard to it

HON. MR. READ moved that the amendment be taken into consideration to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

FREE PASSES ON THE CANADIAN PACIFIC AND GRAND TRUNK RAILWAYS.

MOTION POSTPONED.

The motion having been called, That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before this House, a list of the names of all Senators and members of the House of Commons who received Half Fare Tickets and Free Passes over all roads or portions of roads owned or operated by the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk Railway Companies between the first of November last and the first of April, 1886.

HON. MR. MCINNES (B.C.) said: My reason for asking on Friday last that this motion should stand until to-day was that I had to write to a distant part of the country for certain information bearing on this subject. I regret to say that I have not yet received that information, but I hope to have it within the next few days. I would therefore ask that this motion be allowed to stand until Tuesday next, and I shall then proceed with it whether I have the desired information or not.

The motion was allowed to stand.

GOVERNMENT PROPERTIES AT SOREL.

MOTION.

HON. MR. GUÉVREMONT moved,

Qu'une humble adresse soit présentée à Son Excellence le gouverneur-général pour prier Son Excellence de vouloir bien faire transmettre à cette Chambre une liste donnant les noms de toutes les personnes qui occupent, en vertu de baux annuels, les propriétés du gouvernement situées dans la seigneurie de Sorel.

He said: (in French) I did not proceed with this motion yesterday because I did not at the time understand the answer to the inquiry which I then made. I am not quite sure that I am better informed today than I was yesterday, because the answer to my inquiry, I find is not quite clear. The reply yesterday was that if the Government should decide to sell that property it would be in the same manner as was done in the case of Ile Ronde. It appears to me that the question of how these properties should be sold is easily decided.* If this motion is adopted it will be seen from the return for which I ask that the properties in question have been occupied by different persons under lease for a term of years, but the leases have expired. In the case of Ile Ronde the properties sold were under lease and the leases are now expiring. If I am well informed there are some properties in two concessions which have never been leased or occupied, and I am informed that the Department has decided to sell these properties at $2 per acre. Now I am convinced that if the Department would sell these properties by auction they would bring a much higher price than that, because the owners of the lands adjoining them are desirous of obtaining possession of them. I do not blame the Government in this matter but I wish to see all parties treated in the same way. I ask no favors for my friends or for any one, but I do ask that justice be rendered and that all persons be treated alike.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I regret that the answer which I gave my hon. friend yesterday on this subject was not so complete as he desired. I am instructed to state, in regard to the present motion for an Address, that the Government have no objection whatever to furnish the information asked for. It has already been given, as I am instructed, in response to addresses from the House of Commons on several occasions, but if my hon. friend, in the exercise of his discretion, desires to have the expense of these returns duplicated, there is no objection to the Address.

The motion was agreed to.

SISTERS OF CHARITY IN THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

MOTION.

HON. MR. GIRARD moved

That the fee of two hundred dollars paid on the Bill intituled: "An Act to amend 'An

HON. MR. DICKEY.

Act to incorporate the Sisters of Charity of the North-West Territories," assented to on the 1st May, 1885, be refunded to the petitioners for the said Bill. .

He said—If this application were made merely as a favor to these Sisters who have done so much good in that distant part of the country, I am sure there would be a unanimous voice in favor of granting their request, but they do not come absolutely asking a favor. They merely ask for something to which they are entitled. In 1882 an Act to incorporate the Sisters was passed. The sum of $200 had been deposited, according to the rule of the House, but when the Bill was passed it was decided that that sum should be refunded to them. What was done at that time should in the same way be done when an amendment to the Act of incorporation is asked for. I think that the rule is clearly indicated in Bourinot, at pages 644 and 645. I find there that "in case the Bill is withdrawn, or otherwise fails to become law, the fee of $200 is refunded, generally, and properly on the recommendation of the Committee on the Bill." Among the different instances in which a refund has taken place, it will be seen, if we look at the end of page 645, is "the Sisters of Charity in the North West Territories." The reason given is that an association like the Sisters of Charity in the North West Territories is not liable to the fee charged on Private Bills. The last case given is that of an amendment to a previous Act. By the certificate I have in my hands now, signed by the Clerk of the House, it appears that a sum of $200 has been paid and an additional sum of $9.46 for cost of printing. Although we may ask, perhaps without reason, that the cost of printing and translation should be paid, according to Bourinot it is not absolutely necessary that it should be. Bourinot says, at the end of page 645, "It is also usual, though not necessary, to add 'less the cost of printing and translation'—the fee to be refunded being the $200 paid after second reading. In 1882, at the end of the session, a Bill was deferred for three months on the motion of the member in charge, who was unwilling to agree to amendments made by the Senate, and the fees were thereupon ordered to refunded." With these remarks, and the citations from so well known an authority as Bourinot, I think I have shown that my motion is well founded and there will be no hesitation in giving to the Sisters who are doing an immense amount of charity in the North-West, a sum which will be employed not only for their own advantage, but for the advantage of the whole Dominion.

HON. MR. DICKEY—The action of my hon. friend who has made this motion in this matter must commend itself to the sympathy of the House. It is quite true that the usual rule is that an application for a refund of this character should be accompanied by the condition that the expense of printing and translation have been paid; but it appears from a certificate that he has in his possession that the small expenses incurred in that way have been paid. Therefore, he is entirely in his right in asking the House to pass the resolution although it does not contain those words.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I can hardly allow a motion of this kind to pass without expressing the opinion that I think the entire feeling of the House, apart from the technical question, is with my hon. friend. There is no portion of the community with whom I have more tender and earnest sympathy than with the holy women who devote their lives to the amelioration of suffering, who efface themselves, who efface even their family name, and give up the sacred ties of family, friends and affections, for the purpose of mitigating human suffering;

"Meek, prayerful, humble servants of the Cross,
Who count as heavenly gain all earthly loss;
Touching the fevered wound with hands like balm,
Filling the pest-house with a holy calm,—
God smooth the flinty pathway to their feet,
Make their reward eternal and complete."

And if I can by my humble voice, in any way benefit them, I shall always be ready to do so, and on this occasion, apart from feeling of sect and apart from the feeling that I belong to another religion than that of the hon. gentleman, I have great pleasure and great delight in saying I believe that this House will unanimously consent to the resolution which he has placed before us.

The motion was agreed to.

CONSOLIDATED RAILWAY ACT '79 AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. ALLAN moved the second reading of Bill (8) "An Act to amend the Consolidated Railway Act 1879." He said: This is a Bill from the House of Commons which has for its object certain amendments to the Consolidated Railway Act of 1879, the particulars of which are set forth in the three short paragraphs of the Bill. They are as follows:—that this Act shall be read and construed as part of the Consolidated Railway Act of 1879, and that the powers given under any special Act to construct a railway shall be exercised, subject to the provisions of the Consolidated Railway Act of 1879, as amended by this Act. The third clause, which really contains the gist of the whole Bill, provides for compensation to be made to the owners of lands taken or injuriously affected. It is as follows:

For the value of lands taken, and for all damages to lands injuriously affected by the construction of the railway in the exercise of the powers by "The Consolidated Railway Act, 1879," or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, vested in the company, compensation shall be made to the owners and occupiers of, and to all other persons interested in any lands so taken or injuriously affected.

Cases have arisen very frequently in which lands have been appropriated for railway purposes for which proper compensation has not been given. For example, the railway passes through a man's property, and he receives compensation for the land absolutely taken from him, but in many instances it so far injuriously affects the rest of the property as to render it of comparatively little value to the owner, and this measure is to provide for cases of that kind. Since the Bill has passed the House of Commons, suggestions have been made in reference to some other amendments which it is thought desirable to incorporate in this Bill, and as it is of great consequence that when it comes to take its place in the Consolidated Statutes of Canada it should be as perfect as possible, I propose, with the permission of the House, after the Bill obtains its second reading, to refer it to the Standing Committee on Railways, because I think any suggestions or alterations can be very much better considered in that Committee. The Bill as reported by the Committee would then be again submitted to the approval of the House and it will be for the House to adopt the suggestion of the report of the Committee or not as they may think proper.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

PICTOU COAL AND IRON COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. MCKAY moved the second reading of Bill (64), "An Act to amend the Act incorporating the Pictou Coal and Iron Company." He said: This company ask for power to expropriate lands for the purpose of building their railway. They did not have the power in their former Act; and they also ask power to secure the first mortgage bonds by giving security on the subsidies they received before building the road.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

GUELPH JUNCTION RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. POWER moved the second reading of Bill (76) "An Act to amend the Act to incorporate the Guelph Junction Railway Company." He said: As I understand it the road that is to be built is a very short one of about 12 miles in length, and it is intended to connect the Town of Guelph with the Canada Pacific Railway system. One object of this Bill is to reduce the Capital stock which they thought was too large, and the object of the second clause is to enable the Town of Guelph, which I understand proposes to build the road out of its own funds, to be represented on the Board of Directors and to take stock in the Company. The third clause merely extends the time for the beginning and completion of the road.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

LETTERS PATENT FOR INDIAN LANDS BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. DICKEY moved the second reading of Bill (102) "An Act to expedite the issue of letters patent for Indian Lands." He said: This is a Bill to obviate the necessity of delay by the present requirement that a patent should be signed by the Governor-General. It provides that a Deputy Governor will be appointed to sign those patents, and it also provides how they are to be dealt with after they are so signed. Unfortunately, a good deal of delay has occurred in issuing these patents in the past, and it is expected that the provisions of this Bill will considerably expedite the issue, especially to persons in the North West. The patent, although required to be signed by the Deputy Governor-General, has also to be signed by the Superintendent of Indian Affairs. It has then to be registered, and it is to be transmitted to the Secretary of State, where the Great Seal is affixed; so that every provision seems to have been made, in the course of the passage of this Bill through the House of Commons, to assure the House and the public that there can be no opportunity whatever, for injudicious patents being issued. These are the leading provisions of the Bill and any suggestions will be made more properly perhaps in Committee.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

STELLARTON AND PICTOU RAILWAY BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. DICKEY moved the second reading of Bill (67) "An Act respecting the extension of the Intercolonial Railway from a point at or near Stellarton to the Town of Pictou. He said: It appears that the sum of $250,000 was placed in the supply bill last year for the purpose of making an extension of the Intercolonial Railway from a point near Pictou called Stellarton to Pictou Town, so that railway communication should be had irrespective of the difficulties which at certain seasons of the year have been experienced in crossing the harbor. Before that no communication could be had until this railway branch was constructed except by crossing the harbor by ferry, which was inconvenient at some seasons of the year. The maintenance of that ferry was by no means a small expense. The Bill authorized the Government to construct a railway and to apply this money, as voted, or any revote of it, for that purpose. The railway will connect the county town of the county of Pictou with railways which it is supposed, will lead to a very considerable increase of business to the Intercolonial Railway.

HON. MR. POWER—I do not propose to move against the second reading of this Bill, but I think it ought not be allowed to pass this stage without some few observations. The hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill has stated that it proposes an expenditure of some $250,000. As I understand, that will be only so much on account; and from the best information I can get the proposed extension will cost at last half a million. At present the two points which this road proposes to connect are connected by the Intercolonial Railway and a ferry. The Intercolonial Railway from Stellarton to Pictou Landing is about ten miles in length. By the proposed road the distance will be 18 miles.

HON. MR. DICKEY—Oh no.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman may say "Oh no," but I have very good authority for what I am saying.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I am instructed that it is fifteen miles.

HON. MR. POWER—I am not going to quarrel over the three miles. We will grant that it is 15 miles; that does not alter the principle much. I do not, however, admit that my information is incorrect. Here is the fact, that we propose by this Bill to incur an expenditure of half a million of dollars for the construction of a second railway from Stellarton to the town of Pictou, and that second road will be at least five miles longer than the existing road. I think that that is a proposition which deserves a little consideration. We find that not very long ago we incorporated a company to build, what was called the Short Line Railway, from near Oxford Station on the Intercolonial Railway to Louisburg or Sydney, in the Island of Cape Breton. I understand that the Short Line Railway, if constructed—and I believe the company profess that they are prepared to go on with the work if they receive reasonable encouragement from the Government—would approach the town of Pictou from a somewhat different direction from that from which this road approaches it, and it would give the town of Pictou at much lower cost connection not only with the Intercolonial Railway at New Glasgow or Stellarton, but also with the Intercolonial Railway at Oxford Station, and would be in every way a much more advantageous connection for the town of Pictou than that which would be furnished by the road proposed to be constructed under this Bill. That is one important consideration. I am satisfied that if the Government will add to the existing subsidy to the Short Line Railway Company, the sum which this road is to cost, no difficulty will be found in building the road from Oxford to Pictou and New Glasgow; and the Short Line Railway will not only benefit the town of Pictou, but it will benefit also large portions of the counties of Cumberland, Colchester and Pictou. The town of Pictou has had railway communication with the city of Halifax since the year 1866 or 1867—at any rate since about the time of Confederation—and there are other portions of the Province of Nova Scotia more important than the town of Pictou which have not yet railway communication. There is the western portion of the province, the counties of Digby, Yarmouth and Shelburne, who are cut off from the Intercolonial Railway and from the capital of Nova Scotia by what is called the “missing link” of some 18 or 19 miles. The sum that is proposed to be voted for the construction of this Stellarton branch would build that road—would certainly insure its construction; and clearly the claims of those three counties are greater than those of the town of Pictou with a population of not more than 4,000.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Have they petitioned?

HON. MR. POWER—They have been petitioning the Government for a long time, but in vain. I think it must strike the House that that is correct; but there is a still stronger case than the case of the western counties. There is the Island of Cape Breton. That island has a population at the present time of 90,000, and the Government have not yet built a single mile of railway in that Island, and it does seem to me that it is the duty of the Government and the duty of Parliament to see that the Island of Cape Breton has some railway facilities before the town of Pictou has duplicate railway facilities. I find it hard to understand how it is that the Island of Cape Breton has been neglected in the way it has hitherto been. That Island has been a portion of the Dominion since 1867; she has paid her share of customs and excise duties; has borne her fair share of the public burdens during all that time; she has a large population, and in many portions a very fertile soil; she has mineral resources which are not exceeded by those of any portion of the Dominion; yet we have this country spending some sixty millions of dollars in cash, besides many more millions in other forms, to effect a connection with British Columbia, and spending further large sums for the construction of a local railway on Vancouver Island, and all that for a Province which came into Confederation four years after Cape Breton came in, and for a Province whose white population is now not more than one-fifth of the white population of the Island of Cape Breton. I think it must strike every member that there is something unaccountable in the way in which the interests of Cape Breton have been neglected. If we leave the Pacific coast and come over to the Atlantic coast we find Prince Edward Island, which is, no doubt, a very fertile Island, and whose population is probably one-fourth larger than that of Cape Breton. We find that that Island came into Confederation several years after Cape Breton.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—We were an independent Province.

HON. MR. POWER—I do not think that makes any difference. Nova Scotia was an independent Province, and Cape Breton was a part of Nova Scotia.

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B. C.)—It was only a part of it.

HON. MR. POWER—Well, Vancouver Island is only a part of British Columbia, and yet has a railway of its own, why not treat Cape Breton in the same way that Vancouver Island has been treated? I give that conundrum to the hon. gentleman behind me. Now, how has Prince Edward Island been treated? The Government have assumed the debt which had been incurred by Prince Edward Island in constructing the railway.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—No they have not; Prince Edward Island paid for its own railway.

HON. MR. POWER—Prince Edward Island came in and was allowed so much for the debt created by the construction of the railway.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—So did the other provinces.

HON. MR. POWER—I grant that I am not so infallible as some of my hon. friends on the other side. The argument may not be without a flaw; but I take it that the argument as a whole is sound.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—No, it is quite unsound.

HON. MR. POWER—Within the last few years a large sum has been spent by the Dominion in extending the railway in Prince Edward Island to the point of crossing at Cape Traverse. The Dominion has assumed a large annual expenditure for the purpose of maintaining communication across the straits of Northumberland. If the hon. member from Alberton has his way, the Dominion will assume a still larger liability for the construction of a sub-way under the straits of Northumberland; and the Dominion Government pays every year on account of a deficit on the Island railway something in the vicinity of $100,000.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—$150,000.

HON. MR. POWER—While I am not finding any fault with what has been done for Prince Edward Island, it does seem to me that the other Island which is larger and nearly, if not quite as valuable, deserves at least a little of the consideration which has been shown to Prince Edward Island. Here we are nearly 20 years in the Confederation and the first spade has yet to be put in the first sod on a railway in Cape Breton. Under these circumstances it is hardly justifiable to ask this House to pass a Bill like this which provides, as I have already explained, although this Bill only asks for $250,000, for an expenditure of half a million, for a second railway to the town of Pictou. There are two costly bridges to be built on this line from Stellarton to Pictou. To ask Parliament to sanction such an expenditure as that before effectual steps have been taken to secure the construction of a railway in the Island of Cape Breton and to secure the construction of the missing link is exceedingly unreasonable.

HON. MR. ALMON—Which railway in Cape Breton does the hon. gentleman wish to have subsidized?

HON. MR. POWER—That is a matter for the Government. My view is that the Government should see that the railway is constructed from the Strait of Canso to the town of Sydney, which is the commercial as well as the political capital of Cape Britain.

HON. MR. ALMON—Some people think it should be to Cape North.

HON. MR. POWER—Nobody can seriously propose that. There is another circumstance in connection with this road: I find the people of the county, a very large minority at least of the people of the county of Pictou are dissatisfied with this measure. They have sent a petition to the other House signed by I think about 1,800 ratepayers of Pictou protesting against this measure. Public meetings have been held ; and a request has also been made that some amendment should be made in this Bill which will provide for the keeping up of the ferry across the harbor of Pictou. It appears that to the people who live along the line of the existing railway between New Glasgow and Pictou the cessation of the ferry service across the harbor would be a very considerable loss. They request that some guarantee be put in this Bill that that ferry shall be continued. Under the circumstances, this House would be perfectly justified in showing that independence of which we heard so much yesterday by rejecting this Bill ; but it is not proposed to ask the House to do anything of that sort. I do not propose to oppose the second reading of the Bill, but I wish to give notice that, when the Bill reaches the Committee stage, as I presume it will, amendments will be moved looking in the direction of protecting the interests both of the other sections or Nova Scotia and of the eastern portion of the County of Pictou.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Comparisons are odious and very often invidious. If my hon. friend had said something about Lunenburg too, he would have stated that we have been 20 years in the Confederation, as the people of Cape Breton have been, and have contributed largely to the revenue of the country and are struggling for a railway which is of very great importance to us. Whether we are an Island or not we should have railway communication. I think not being an Island we are more entitled to a road than we otherwise would be. Cape Breton ought to have, and I believe will have a railway in connection with the general railway system throughout the country, and if we are to be relieved of that ferry it will have a tendency to have all the other railways built. When we stop the building of a railway by saying that some other place is more entitled to one, I think instead of promoting and encouraging, we are rather retarding the construction of railways. I agree with my hon. friend that other parts of Nova Scotia are more entitled to railways and have not the same facilities as Pictou, yet I think our time will come. The policy of the Government to subsidize railways everywhere extends to Nova Scotia, and I believe that Lunenburg and Cape Breton will have their railways. It seems that the trouble in Cape Breton is to decide what direction the road shall be in, and when the best route is discovered I am sure that the road will be built. The project has my earnest support, and I believe in the interests of the Dominion the road will be built.

HON. MR. GRANT—I would not like this Bill to pass without saying something on it, as I come from the very place where the road is to be constructed. Some facts connected with this question may not be to the knowledge of a number of gentlemen here, and I will place those facts before them. About 21 or 22 years ago the Pictou extension of the Intercolonial railway from Truro was built. At that time it was a matter of doubt between the engineers and constructors of the road, what direction it would take to Pictou town. There were two routes at the time under contemplation. One was down the West River, a distance of 22 miles from the westerly station to Pictou, down through the valley of West river, a perfect bed for a railway from end to end. The other route was from the present westerly station of Pictou town over a very expensive and hilly country, nine miles longer, to the coal mines through New Glasgow, landing on the south side of Pictou harbor, and on the opposite side from Pictou town. It was ultimately decided, through various influences used, the principal one being that by bringing it down to New Glasgow it would be nearer to the eastern extension when it was constructed, and the latter view prevailed. It was a great disappointment to the people of Pictou, who were put to inconvenience afterwards in the conveyance of their lumber, coal, brick and building materials of all descriptions, breaking bulk on the north side of the harbor and bringing all those things over in lighters and scows to a great extent. It was impossible, with the advantages and facilities for public works on the south side of the harbor towards the mines in the direction of New Glasgow, that Pictou could establish anything like a manufacturing industry, owing to the cost of erecting their buildings and finding their fuel. However, since that time the railway has come down there, a longer distance by 9 miles, and at much greater expense in building the road and at great cost to the people of Pictou in crossing. There is also danger in crossing that harbor in winter-time. Although no lives have been lost, the danger has been great, and there has been much inconvenience caused. The boat could not cross when there was ice. Often the ice is not strong enough for teams, and I have myself, on more than one occasion, driven 22 miles to get to New Glasgow, because I could not cross the harbor to come here. However, that was all submitted to and a boat was put on by the Government which cost, so it is said, $14,000 a year to keep it up. That represents interest on an amount of money which will meet the expenditure that is contemplated now in building the road to Stellarton and the bridge across the harbor. A few years ago the Minister of Railways entered into a contract with a company to build a short line from Oxford to New Glasgow. If that line had been constructed, the crossing of the harbor would have answered all the purposes that Pictou wanted; but the harbor was surveyed, and a large part of the road, as we all know, was half built, and then the whole work was abandoned and left it that state notwithstanding the promises given by the Minister of Railways to the people of Pictou that that short line of railway and the bridge to be built in connection with it, which would have been most satisfactory to the people of Pictou. When the work was stopped, they became very anxious and applied again here, and promises were continually made to them that if they did not get the short line it would be done in some other way. That is the way the Government are trying to do. They have taken the short line of railway into their own hands; whether they intend to build it or not I do not know; but the project that they have brought before Parliament is the substitute for the bridge across the harbor. I may say this, that if the Short Line is only built from Oxford to New Glasgow, it is not necessary that it should go a step beyond the commencement of this road that is now projected. The crossing of the harbor and the road to Stellarton answer all the purposes that were required of a short line. The Short Line was required to communicate with the eastern extension of the road from Stellarton to Pictou, so that nobody will lose by the building of the present line when the short line comes to be constructed, if it ever is. I feel satisfied that with the saving of the steamer, which costs $14,000 a year, the country will lose very little by the building of all that is contemplated by this Bill. It is true the hon. member from Halifax says that there have been petitions here from New Glasgow and the neighborhood of that place, objecting to the change in the railway. I must admit that it comes rather hard upon New Glasgow, because it is a flourishing town in the centre of a very flourishing population, and they have built large hotels and other things suitable to the locality in which they are and the facilities which are around them. The intention now to connect the eastern extension with Stellarton, which is two miles farther up than New Glasgow, will be an injury to them I admit. But that is a matter in the hands of the Government, and I regret that it is so; but it is too bad that the town of Pictou should be deprived of the advantage which they ought to have had from the very first and not now after twenty years. The road coming down through New Glasgow is no advantage to them; it is there and the public works are raised around it, and may suffer a little from it; but the road will not be taken away. The railway from Stellarton to the harbor will remain still, because it is intended to be and is used as a coal road, and will be so used hereafter. If there is passenger traffic enough to require a passenger car, that will certainly be continued on, and the present railroad goes past their manufactories, their glass works, their steel works and their forge works. They are all on the side of the railway, and that railway will still remain there. The Government never intend to remove that. But the line from Stellarton down, although it runs parallel with that road, is a good many miles away from it to the west, and it runs through a mining population who want that road to pass up through the town. That is the main advantage required for that Stellarton and Pictou road. It will serve a large population. It is, I think, four miles longer than the present road from Pictou to Stellarton; but the time consumed in running over four miles is much shorter than is required to cross the harbor, and transferring from the railway to the steamboat landing.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I do not rise for the purpose of raising any objection to the Bill, but merely to reply briefly to the senior member from Halifax. I am not, as a Prince Edward Islander, opposed to giving Cape Breton or Nova Scotia, or any part of the Maritime Provinces, the fullest and fairest consideration, and I am only surprised that the hon. gentleman, who is a member of the Chamber of Commerce of Halifax, does not take a broader and wider view of this matter than he seems to have done. He has forgotten to tell the House one thing, and that is that the connection between Pictou Landing and Pictou is by a ferry, and that that stretch of water where the ferry runs is frozen up about half the year. That is a matter on which he has not enlightened the House.

HON. MR. POWER—Excuse me, I did mention that.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—The hon. gentleman did not mention the ice. I remember very well some twenty-two years ago that there was a very great excitement at Pictou on account of the road going to the other side of the landing. The reason given was that the Pictou harbor being subject so much to in-drift, it was necessary that vessels should be enabled to load as late as possible in the season, and that was why the other side of the harbor was selected for the terminus. Since that time the people of Pictou have had a grievance about having no connection with the road, and have petitioned this Government, as they petitioned the late Administration, with regard to an extension of the railway into Pictou town. It is true they have a ferry there, but as has been well stated by my hon. friend who has just sat down, there are times in the autumn and late spring when you cannot get across the harbor and must go round. If this road is built it will not interfere with the Short Line as explained by the hon. gentlemen who proceed me. On the contrary it will be rather an assistance. Since I have had the honor of a seat in this House I have come to the conclusion that the Nova Scotia Railways ought to be taken up en bloc instead of in detail, and it is possibly not the fault of this Government or of the late administration that that has not been done. In Cape Breton they require about eighty miles of railway; they are praying for the Nictaux and Atlantic Railway; they are praying for the extension and for the western extension to Yarmouth. All these, in the aggregate, amount to nearly 200 miles of railway which, at a cost of say $10,000 a mile, would involve an expenditure of $2,000,000. If some plan could be devised by the gentlemen who represent Nova Scotia, in connection with the Government, to take up these projects and let them give that portion of the road from Truro to Pictou as a basis to start with and a small subsidy per year, they would settle the extension of all these railways. Being placed under one management, a very great saving would be effected in the first place to the management and in the next place in the interests of the people of Nova Scotia. That would be the better way to handle it. Moreover, I contend that what is in the interest of one of the Provinces is in the interest of another. While I am here as the representative of Prince Edward Island, trying to do what I can in the interest of that Province, I do not wish it to be understood that I am in any way opposed to advancing the interests of Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, or any part of this Dominion. The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

KINGSTON AND PEMBROKE MUTUAL AID AND INSURANCE COMPANY'S BILL

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. McMILLAN, in the absence of Mr. Sullivan, moved the second reading of Bill (24) "An Act to incorporate the Kingston and Pembroke Mutual Aid and Insurance Company."

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

LAW OF EVIDENCE BILL

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. KAULBACH moved the

second Reading of Bill (3) "An Act for the further amendment of the law of evidence in certain cases." He said: This is a Bill to do away with restrictions on the law of evidence in certain cases. I do not propose at this stage of the Bill to discuss it at any length: the details will come under discussion in Committee. It is founded, as to sections 1, 2 and 3, on two Imperial Statutes. Section 1, is the same in effect as section 4, of 32 and 33 Vic. cap. 68 (Imperial) and is to be found at p. 360 of the Statutes, published in Vol. 4 of the Law Reports of 1869, and the Ontario Act of 1882, Section 2 and 3 are similar to sections 20 and 21 of 17 and 18 Vic. (Imperial), cap. 125, (1854) but is extended to persons who declare that an oath is not binding on their consciences &c., and is intended to cover cases where such persons wish to or are required to make an affidavit or depositions, in any criminal or civil proceeding in respect of which the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction &c., As to Section 1 and the principles involved in Section 2 the speech of Mr. Denman M. P., who moved the second reading in the British House of Commons, is referred to (See English Hansard Vol. 195, p. 1798, et seq.) Section 4 of the Bill speaks for itself, at present the Acts of the several Legislatures when brought in question in any other than the Province in which they are the law, have to be proved in the same way as foreign law, &c. This Bill proposes to obviate that difficulty.

HON. MR. DEBOUCHERVILLE—I was not aware that this Bill was coming up to-day, and had I known that it was to be moved this afternoon I should have been prepared to say something on the subject, but I shall not allow it to pass without at least protesting against it by my vote.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I did not know that such a Bill was before the other House even, having been occupied with other matters. I may say that I am a little surprised that in a Christian community we are asked to help those who profess to believe that there is no God and to relieve them of the disabilities under which they labor. If there are men so stupid as to believe that they came into this world without supernatural power, they are dangerous members of a Christian community, and we ought not to help them, but ought to force them either to submit to natural law and the law of God, or to stand outside. For my part I am decidedly opposed to this Bill and it shall never be said that I have helped such a class of people. They are not very numerous; I do not believe there is one man in the world who is really an atheist. Those who profess to be, are merely influenced by pride, or perhaps they have devoted their attention always to materialism so that they have doubts on the subject, but that there is really a man in existence who does not believe in the existence of a God, is something which I cannot credit. I am confirmed in this opinion by facts. I have known men who have been recognized as atheists until they came to their deathbed and then they said: "If I call for a minister do not go for one." There is a natural law which tells every man that there is a superior being, and so I believe in a Christian community like ours we ought not to help atheists. We ought to say that they are dangerous men and not to be trusted because they do not believe in God. What is there to deter them from wrong-doing? It is well known that at the present time the breakers of the law do not dread penitentiaries or death. It is morality that keeps the masses of the people right at present. If the law has no terror for some it is better that they should not be relieved in this way but that they should be kept out of it where they will be neither useful nor troublesome. Although I have not studied the measure I am quite decided to oppose it to the bitter end.

HON. MR. DEVER—I had the honor of seconding this Bill, though I had not examined it before doing so. If there is anything infamous about the measure I am not aware of it, but certainly there is nothing in what the hon. gentleman has stated that would convince me that it contains anything wrong. If he can show me that there is anything against the Christian religion in this Bill, I will withdraw my name as its seconder, but I think he altogether misunderstands its scope and object.

The Senate divided on the motion which was adopted on the following vote :—

FORBES' STEAM ENGINE COMPANY BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. VIDAL moved the second reading of Bill (66), "An Act to incorporate the Forbes' Trochilic Steam Engine Central Company of Canada." He said : This is a Bill to incorporate certain gentlemen residing in the town of Windsor as a Company for the purpose of introducing into Canada a new discovery in the application of steam to engines. It is not very generally known, but it is a discovery of vast importance which, in the judgment of many eminent engineers, will work a complete revolution in the operation of the steam engine, both by the cheapness with which it can be operated, the increase of power, and the incredible quickness of its movements. It meets the hitherto supposed insurmountable difficulty with engines, the loss of power with the loss of momentum at the extreme limit of the piston stroke. This discovery also obviates the vibration that is felt in the working of the ordinary steam engines, and renders the motion continuous and equal all the time. I need not further enlarge upon the invention. The Bill is a very simple one incorporating those gentlemen, whose names are well known to many members of this House, who will feel that they are responsible parties. They ask simply the powers that any company of gentlemen would seek who associate themselves together for the purpose of carrying out such enterprises.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

SEDUCTION BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. VIDAL moved the second reading of Bill (20) "An Act to punish Seduction and like offences, and to make further provision for the Protection of Women and Girls." He said :—At the request of the introducer of this Bill I have undertaken the responsibility of its charge in this House. I need scarcely say that I do so with a very painful sense of my inability to be its advocate. My slight and imperfect acquaintance with our criminal law disqualifies me to a great extent from advocating the measure with the clearness and force that it demands, and to substantiate its claims upon this House for its adoption. I may also remark at the outset that I have another difficulty to encounter, inasmuch as a measure for the same object, very similar to the one before us, was rejected by this House some two years ago. The Bill before us, however, is considerably changed from that measure on which we did not agree, and the circumstances under which it is now presented to the House are very different from those under which the other Bill then stood. It may be remembered by hon. gentlemen that when we rejected that Bill it was not entirely upon the ground that we disapproved of the provisions contained in it, or that we entertained the idea that there was no necessity for such a statute upon our books, but that the House was led to its decision rather by the assurance of the Minister of Justice that the amendment of the criminal law was then under the consideration of the Government, and he thought it was quite likely that the following year a Bill, in which the leading provisions of the then proposed measure might be embodied, would be submitted to Parliament. Under these circumstances the House rejected the Bill. I may also remind the House that at that time we had no encouragement to adopt such a measure as a copy of British legislation on the subject; that is now entirely changed. During the session of the Imperial Parliament last year, a measure of this character became law in England, a measure much more stringent and much more severe in its penalties than this bill. I may say that the measure now before us is framed generally upon the British law. The very words of that Statute are employed in many provisions of this Bill. We have had on our statute book almost since Confederation—since 1869—some provisions to punish the offences against which this Bill is directed, but those provisions are very limited in their extent, and are felt to be entirely insufficient to properly meet the evil against which this Bill is really levelled. I may remark, however, that some of the provisions in the English law are not inserted in this Bill, because they are already on our statute book, and there is, of course, no necessity for duplicating or re-enacting them; and it may be well for me to ask attention to a few of the differences that will be found in comparing the British statute with the Bill now before us. I trust hon. gentlemen will at once admit that there is a necessity for legislation of this kind. When we remember that in nearly all civilized countries women and girls have a measure of protection thrown over them by the law of the land, and that Canada stands almost alone in having no sufficient provision for their protection, I trust it will have some effect on hon. gentlemen. When we examine the statute books of the neighboring Republic, we see that almost all the States have laws for the protection of women and girls, and that the penalties imposed for the offences referred to in this Bill are much more severe than those now proposed. In the State of New York, for instance, the offence is made a misdemeanor, and the punishment attached to it may be five years imprisonment in the State prison. We find also in the English law a similar provision and a similar punishment, graduated according to the discretion of the Court and the circumstances connected with the offence that has been committed. At the present stage of the Bill, I do not propose going minutely through its clauses, because I trust that the House will permit it to be read the second time and let it go to committee, when it will be considered in all its details and provisions: but points of difference between this and English law, requiring some explanation, should be referred to perhaps just now. The first clause of the Bill which is directed against illicit connection with any girl previously of chaste character, to dishonor or deceive her is made a misdemeanor, when she is above the age of ten and under the age of sixteen. In the British Statute the age is different: and the reason why the term of "ten years"—which may seem a very tender age to mention at all—is because we have already on our Statute book that age fixed as the age at which the accomplishment of any design of this kind against a child is made a felony; and it is thought better by the promoter of this measure to be guided rather by the law, as it at present exists on our Statute book, than to take the limit which we find in the English Statute—than to take the more advanced age of thirteen years. The Canadian law I refer to is that in our own Statutes of 1877, where we have a clause which fixes at ten years the age under which it makes this crime a felony, and imposes as a punishment imprisonment in the penitentiary for life or for any term not less than five years—a punishment not one whit too severe for an act so inhuman as the crime contemplated by such a provision. The Bill provides that any person who attempts to seduce and have illicit connection with any girl of previously chaste character, being of or above the age of ten years and under the age of sixteen years, will be found guilty of a misdemeanor, and is liable to punishment according to the terms found further on in the Bill. Then provision is made for the protection of an unfortunate woman deficient in intellect or imbecile,—a very necessary and humane provision. In cases where it can be shown that such a crime is committed with knowledge of the person's condition, the party is severely punished for it. We have in the second clause a new feature which we do not find in the British Statute, and which I do not think can be objected to: that is where a person under promise of marriage commits this offence and brings grief and distress and dishonor upon a woman, this is made an offence punishable in the same way as the other, with this proviso, that if the man is an unmarried man, his subsequent marriage with the woman may be pleaded as a bar to the conviction.

HON. MR. ALMON—Is there any age specified for the man? For instance, if a man of sixteen was to have illicit connection with a woman under promise of marriage, she being twenty years of age, would he be liable to this punishment?

HON. MR. VIDAL—No age is specified for the man.

HON. MR. ALMON—Therefore a lad of sixteen would be punished for seducing a woman of twenty or be obliged to marry her?

HON. MR. MCINNES—The boy would be punished for being seduced.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I can only say that in the English Statute provision is made for a case of that kind, and it is competent for the court to declare that such a young man should be whipped as well as put in prison. In the Bill before us I think we have no provision of that nature. I do not know that it would be wise at this stage of the Bill to go more thoroughly into its provisions, because in the Committee it will be examined very carefully before its final stage. It is worthy the consideration of this House that this is legislation that is needed, and comes before us with an example we may safely follow: that is, British legislation. The additional fact should be of interest to us, that in the Old Country the measure was twice introduced in the House of Lords, and passed there before it was accepted by the House of Commons. Here it was introduced twice in the House of Commons and refused by the Senate.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman says it has been refused twice by the Senate: but he has told us that it has been very much modified since its introduction into the Senate. It would be hardly fair to say that this Bill has been refused by the Senate.

HON. MR. VIDAL.

HON. MR. VIDAL—The hon. gentleman from Niagara has given a very forcible illustration of the impropriety of an hon. gentleman not being in his place when an explanation is made—had he been in his seat he would have heard my explanation already given.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I say that the Bill which I understand the hon. gentleman is speaking of is the Bill now before the House. He says that the history of this Bill differs from the Bill of a similar kind passed in the British House of Parliament—that it was passed there in the House of Lords twice and refused in the House of Commons, while this Bill has been twice in the House of Commons and refused by the Senate. I want to call attention to the fact that it ought not to go on record unchallenged: that the Bill which was refused by this House is not the Bill which the hon. gentleman has in his hand.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I was not descending into minute particulars at this stage of the Bill, but merely stated that a Bill with the same object in view as this Bill, and with the same name, had been rejected, and was making an observation as to the origin and fate of the Bill in the old country, and its origin and fate here. I do not think it was an observation that will give any serious offence. One of the great advantages which we have at this time is that the Bill comes to us with the cordial sanction of the present Minister of Justice. On the last occasion when the former Bill was before us—and this will constitute a very important change—the Bill contained such features that the then Minister of Justice could not accept it, and spoke against it.

HON. MR. READ—It is not the same Bill.

HON. MR. VIDAL—No, the Bill is so changed in its features that it is not the same Bill.

HON. MR. MCINNES—It is not the same Minister of Justice either.

HON. MR. VIDAL—No, the present Minister of Justice not only sanctioned the introduction of the Bill, but took a warm interest in the measure, watched its progress through Committee and through the House, and even suggested that stronger provisions might be in it than now are, and showed himself thoroughly satisfied with the Bill as now submitted to us for our consideration. I think that under those circumstances the Bill should be taken into consideration by us with minds entirely free from any prejudice which might remain from our dealing with the former measure which two years ago we thought proper to reject. There is one provision in this Bill where we are, I think, a little in advance of the English law. There the offence committed is spoken of as being committed against the girl, mentioning her age, without any reference to her former character. In the Bill before us you will observe that one essential feature of the crime is that the girl shall be a girl of previously chaste character, which I think is a very important feature, and one which ought to commend itself to our approval. Then again we have a provision—this, however, is taken from the English law—that no person shall be convicted of any offence under this Act upon the evidence of one witness, unless such witness be corroborated in some material particular by evidence implicating the accused. Every safe-guard is thrown round the accused that he shall not be convicted on imperfect testimony, and so far from this being a measure to encourage the levying of blackmail by a designing woman, I think under this Bill such a thing would be utterly impossible. There are laws precisely similar in those features in force in the adjoining states of the Union for a number of years, over a quarter of a century, and this complaint that it would open the door to levying blackmail by designing woman has never been brought against the law there. As a matter of fact that result has never followed this legislation in the States, and it has succeeded to a great extent in diminishing the crime against which it is directed.

I am aware of the fact, on good authority, that the law is to be found in the Statutes of some 30 States, as well as in the Statutes of nearly every civilized country in Europe.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I do not often take up very much of the time of the House, nor do I intend to do it now. I opposed a measure of this kind last year. I would be just as careful that everything should be done to protect innocence as any hon. gentleman here, but I think that protection should be on both sides; and notwithstanding all that has fallen from the hon. gentleman about the protection of virtue and the impossibility of blackmail, I say that there are many opportunities afforded by this measure for blackmailing by designing women, while it has very little to do with the protection of innocent females. I think we are finding out very fast that it is almost impossible to legislate people into being honest at all times. It is hard to stop drinking by legislation when people want to get liquor. Temperance legislation has never succeeded, and I do not think we can legislate people into virtue and morality; they must be taught it without legislation. I think the proper place to inculcate morals in the minds of the youth of both sexes, and especially the female sex, is in the family circle, in the Sunday School, in the church, and in the public school. Where people are brought up properly, and their moral training is attended to, immorality will not prevail. When the public are educated where the sanitary conditions are improved, and the overcrowding of both sexes in tenement houses is done away with, it will do more towards checking immorality than any legislation we can enact. Legislation will not make people moral. This measure will afford to designing women an opportunity of putting young men in a very bad box occasionally. Young fellows such as my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Almon) referred to a few moments ago, that may be just as innocent, or very much more innocent than the female, may be got into trouble that he cannot get out of just by this kind of legislation, and I for one think that this Bill is an insult to the morality of the sex in Canada, more than it is a measure for their

HON. MR. OGILVIE—What State is it in?

HON. MR. VIDAL—I believe it is in some 30 States. I have only looked into the law of the State of New York; but protection. My hon. friend from Sarnia said that in all civilized countries of Europe such laws exist. I would very much like to see that assertion proved. I have been through most of the civilized countries of Europe myself, and if the hon. gentleman can show me such a law upon the Statute books of those countries, then he knows a great deal more than I do about them. I think this kind of legislation is calculated to do more harm than good. A virtuous woman as a rule can protect her own honor, and when trouble does take place it is very questionable in my mind if the woman is not more to blame than her seducer. As far as I am concerned I will vote against the Bill.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I do not see that any necessity exists in this country for such legislation. It will do harm to society. I do not think that the morals of the sex are so weak or that their virtue is so easily overcome as to require such a bill as the one now before us. The present law is all sufficient for the chaste woman. It may be that in the case of female idiots or imbeciles some protection of this kind may be advantageous, but I believe that anything further is only an insult to womanhood. No law of man can make an impure woman virtuous. A female who allows her honor to be betrayed or bartered away under a promise of marriage is quite capable of going a little further and swearing falsely as to the circumstances under which the act was committed, and a law of this kind would be a temptation and a premium to some women to easily part with their chastity. This kind of legislation, in my opinion, is nothing more or less than sentimental nonsense in many respects, and it can have no beneficial effect upon the morals of the community. A good woman knows she is the guardian of her honor and lives above suspicion. Pure, modest women need not the protection of the law to guard their honor, and no man looking on one surrounded by purity can have evil thoughts. That purity which should pervade womanhood is a barrier against all kinds of immorality. A woman surrounded with the safe-guard of her own virtue is seldom or never improperly approached and when she is approached violently there is already on our statute book a criminal law ample and sufficient to protect her. The moment we impress upon the minds of the community that woman is not the guardian of her own honor, that she requires a law of this kind to protect her against unchastity, that moment we are endangering the best interests of society and gratuitously insulting the whole female sex. They should be allowed to feel, as they do feel, that they are the custodians, the guardians of their own honor and virtue, that pure minded women need no such protection, and that the tendency of such measures as we have now before us is to increase the immorality that they are intended to suppress.

HON. MR. ALLAN—The Bill now before us, as I understand, is a very different measure from the one that was before the Senate last session. I have not had an opportunity of looking over this Bill, and I should like to do so in order to carefully consider the whole matter. I hardly think the description of the measure given by the hon. gentleman from Lunenburg, that it is "sentimental nonsense," is quite correct. The subject is one of great importance and of deep interest, and, I think, if the Bill, when it comes before the Committee of the Whole, is found to be objectionable or injudicious in any of its features, we can either amend it in the proper direction or reject it altogether; but I for one am not prepared to vote for its rejection on the second reading.

HON. MR. DEBOUCHERVILLE—At the second reading is the proper time to approve or disapprove of the principle of a measure. In this Bill there are many provisions, some of which I approve, and some that I will oppose; therefore I think it is but right before allowing the Bill to pass its second reading to state that I do not consider myself bound to support the measure as a whole, and I shall certainly vote against some of its clauses.

HON. MR. ALMON—I am not going to oppose the second reading of the Bill, because it is not the same measure that we had before us on a previous occasion; but I should be sorry to see this Bill pass as it now stands. Nobody is more convinced than I am that punishment ought to be inflicted on any man who, under promise of marriage, seduces a young woman, more especially if he, with the sanction of her parents, is allowed to come to her home and associate with her as one of the family. A man may make a promise of marriage, acting under the excitement of the moment, and the woman may yield to him, but she knows when he makes the promise, under such circumstances, that he does not intend to keep it. I object strongly to the first clause of this Bill, which provides against illicit connection with any girl of previously chaste character, being of or above the age of ten years and under the age of sixteen years. I contend that such an offence against a girl of ten years of age ought to be punished with greater severity. The consent of a child of such tender years does not amount to anything, and I think the clause should provide a punishment for having connection with a girl of that age, whether she consents or not. The second clause which provides a punishment for the seduction of an unmarried female under twenty-one years of age, provided that in the case of an unmarried man, the subsequent marriage of the parties may be pleaded in bar of a conviction, is simply, in my opinion, a premium for blackmail. There is no provision that the man shall be over a certain age, and a lad of sixteen may have connection with a woman of twenty—she may be a servant girl in your house; your boy may have had connection with her, and frightened by the threat of exposing him to his parents he may be terrified into a promise of marriage as the only way he can get out of a severe punishment, and such a marriage would not only ruin the boy, but would bring unhappiness into his family. I believe that if this Bill passes as it now stands it will prove to be the greatest curse to the community that has ever emanated from Parliament since I have had the honor of a seat in this House.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—On former occasions when a bill bearing the same title nearly came before this House, I felt the greatest difficulty as to how I should vote, because I was far from being convinced that the plan proposed was likely to result in the improvement of public morals. I felt that public morals were not to be improved by legislation but rather by domestic training, by the advice, control and supervision of parents and clergymen—that with these rested chiefly the care of the youth of our age. For this reason I should feel disposed to vote against any of those bills, but this measure differs widely from the bills we have previously had before us, and I do not think it contains any provision to which I should be disposed to entertain any strong objection. Hon. gentlemen will recollect that last year, in England, a case occurred which gave rise to a great deal of public discussion, and a great deal of interest was attached to it—the abduction of a girl from her parents in London as an experiment, conducted by the editor of the Pall Mall Gazette. Subsequently, as most hon. gentlemen are aware, that case came to the court and was tried, and I think that the circumstances which surrounded it gave rise to the English Bill to which my hon. friend referred in introducing this measure. I do not desire to detain the House on this question. I merely wish to say that I am generally opposed to the principal of improving morals by legislation. I think we must trust to other sources to improve public morality than to make laws to bind the people. I intend when the Bill goes before the Committee to comment on its various clauses.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—I shall vote for the second reading of this Bill. There are many parts of it which I think are good, and are not intended or designed for the improvement so much as for the protection of morals.

HON. MR. VIDAL—Hear, hear; that is the object of the Bill—not to make people moral.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—It is said that females are able to take care of themselves: those who are well not be affected by this Bill. It cannot hurt them. There are some provisions in the Bill to which I take exception, but I think it is quite necessary to throw protection about persons of unsound mind. Where it lessens the punishment of persons having intercourse with children under the age of ten years, I think it is a mistake.

HON. MR. VIDAL—It does not do that. That clause of the Bill does not relate to the commission of the act, but to the mere taking of a person into a house of ill-fame for the purpose.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—The clause to which I refer is the following :

(1) Shall, if such girl is under the age of ten years, be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned in any penitentiary for a term not exceeding five years, or for a period of less than two years in other place of confinement.

HON. MR. VIDAL—That is not a provision for the punishment of the offence of ill-treating the girl, but it is the punishment for taking her into a house where she may be subjected to ill-treatment. The prior statute is in force, with its penalty of imprisonment for life, or for a period of not less than five years.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—In committee we may perhaps be better able to discuss that clause. The present law is much more severe, and it occurs to me that perhaps this clause, if passed, might repeal that law.

HON. MR. VIDAL—This does not interfere with it at all.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—My hon. friend from Sarnia may think so, but others may not exactly agree with him. There are many provisions of the Bill of which I approve. Two years ago, after a pretty full discussion of a measure similar to this, the Minister of Justice did not exactly oppose the measure, but he promised to bring down a bill on the subject.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I did not understand him to say that he would bring down a bill for that special purpose, but that in any amendment of the criminal law he would introduce some provision of the kind.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—That is my recollection of it, that he promised to introduce a bill dealing with the subject.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE.

I understand that the present Minister of Justice approves of this measure: therefore it seems to me highly proper that we should examine the Bill carefully and deliberately in all its details, and adopt all of it that commends itself to our judgment, eliminating from it the parts which we conceive to be objectionable.

The motion was agreed to on a division, and the Bill was read the second time.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (17) "An Act to amend the Act respecting the North-West Central Railway Company." (Mr. Dickey)

Bill (70) "An Act respecting the Manitoba and North-Western Railway Company of Canada." (Mr. Turner)

Bill (74) "An Act to incorporate the Maskinonge and Nipissing Railway Company." (Mr. Clemow)

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT BILL

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD moved the second reading of Bill (2) "An Act to amend the Criminal Law, and to declare it a misdemeanor to leave unguarded and exposed certain holes and openings." He said: This is an amendment of the Criminal Law to provide a penalty for leaving exposed openings in the ice on rivers and streams. Everyone who is familiar with our rivers must know that it is a very dangerous practice, indeed, to cut holes in the ice and leave them unguarded during the season of the year when the ice is used for highways. The second section provides a punishment for leaving the openings of abandoned mines unguarded. I am not so well acquainted with the accidents which may happen from that cause, but I have no doubt that in certain districts those unguarded openings may lead to disastrous results. The third section provides that if a party convicted of either of these offences does not within ten days proceed to take the precautions pointed out in this Act, he may be proceeded against for another similar offence and punished.

The provisions of the Bill are such as ought to receive the support of this House. Any further explanation, which may be required on the subject, can be made in Committee of the Whole.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I rather think that a bill of the same description as this has been before this House and rejected on a former occasion. It looks very plausible, but under certain conditions it might prove exceedingly mischievous. For instance, in the province from which I come a large proportion of our population are engaged in the winter season on the ice, dredging for shell manures to fertilize their lands. There may be a score of men engaged in one spot, and should an accident occur there it would be very difficult to trace it to any individual. Moreover, those places are sometimes abandoned for a time, and the work is resumed when the weather suits. In the meantime it would scarcely be possible to fence in the large space where danger might occur.

HON. MR. POWER—I wish to call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that this Bill does not apply to the case to which he refers. It only applies to holes made by persons for the purpose of harvesting or obtaining ice for sale or use.

HON. MR. READ—This Bill is an excellent one and quite requisite. From the neglect of my men this year accidents occurred near a public highway on the ice in front of where I reside. A couple of cattle fell into a hole in the ice which my men neglected to guard, and in the same manner during the night anyone might have driven into the same place.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned at six o'clock.

THE SENATE.

The Speaker took the Chair at three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

CONTINGENT ACCOUNTS OF THE SENATE.

THIRD REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

HON. MR. HOWLAN, from the Select Committee on the Contingent Accounts of the Senate, presented their Third Report. He said: With regard to the recommendation in this Report, it is an appropriation of $150 to the Law Clerk of the Senate, for the purpose of purchasing Statutes of some of the Provinces that are now difficult to get and that it is necessary for him to have. It is thought that this sum will be sufficient, at all events for this year. I move that the report be adopted.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I think it would be well that the report should be placed in the Minutes, and at a future day taken into consideration.

HON. MR. HOWLAN moved that the report be taken into consideration on Friday next.

The motion was agreed to.

THIRD READINGS.

The following bills were reported from the Committee on Banking and Commerce and read the third time and passed without debate:—

Bill (41), "An Act to reduce the capital stock of the Union Bank of Lower Canada, and to change the corporate name thereof to the Union Bank of Canada." (Mr. Vidal.)

Bill (52), "An Act to reduce the capital stock of the Union Bank of Halifax." (Mr. Power.)

Also Sections 11 and 29 in Township 10, Range 2, West, and in all other lands comprised in the Goulet Riviere Sale survey; also for copies of all applications for scrip, a list of scrip issued, and a schedule of the names of all persons receiving such scrip issued upon such applications for, in connection with, or in lieu of, said lands.

The motion was agreed to.

TERMS OF CONFEDERATION WITH PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

MOTION.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE moved

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid on the Table of this House, copies of all letters, telegrams, Minutes of Council, or memorials which have been received by the Government of the Dominion from the Local Government of Prince Edward Island, or from any deputation from that body since the 1st January last, on the subject of the fulfilment of the terms of Confederation between that Province and the Dominion, together with the replies made thereto; also, any letters or telegrams on the same subject from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, or from the High Commissioner of the Dominion in London, bearing date since January 1st, 1886.

He said:—The papers to which my motion refers were the subject of a question which I put to the Postmaster-General some weeks ago. At that time his honor was not in a position, although those papers existed, to lay them before this House. Subsequently I was informed that they would be brought down if moved for in the usual way, and accordingly I placed this motion, which I now make, on the notice paper.

HON. MR. SMITH—There is no objection to the Address.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I was going to observe that perhaps the hon.

HON. MR. SCHULTZ.

gentleman would cause the papers to be brought down without any unnecessary delay.

HON. MR. SMITH—Yes, as soon as it is possible to copy them.

The motion was agreed to.

THE REVOLT AT ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY.

INQUIRIES.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE inquired,

Does the Government intend to order a serious and minute inquiry into the circumstances of the revolt which took place at the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary on the 24th instant, and into all the troubles which have occurred in the said institution for the four years past?

HON. MR. DICKEY—After the deplorable events which have occurred recently I am not at all surprised that my hon. friend has put this notice on the paper, and I am instructed to reply to the question he has put, in the affirmative—it is the intention of the Government.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE inquired,

Does the Government intend to order the Commission to be appointed to inquire into the proximate and remote causes of the said revolt and of the said troubles?

HON. MR. DICKEY—As any inquiry would be necessarily imperfect that did not deal with the subjects spoken of in this motion, I am instructed to say that the investigation will embrace those points.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENI- TENTIARY.

MOTION.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE moved

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before this House, a copy of a letter to the Warden of the Penitentiary of St. Vincent de Paul, dated 31st July, 1885, and signed by ex-Guard J. E. Durocher, protesting against his dismissal, and making serious charges against certain Officials.

He said: The painful tragedy which took place at the Penitentiary of St.

Vincent de Paul on the 24th April forces me to bring this question before Parliament. It cannot be said that I am too hasty in my action, since I have been for some years past warning Parliament and the Government that there was something wrong with this institution, not merely inside of it, but more particularly outside of its walls, in the city of Montreal and even in Ottawa. It is only a few weeks ago since I renewed my appeal to the Government to intervene before it was too late. That was on the 4th day of March last, very nearly eight weeks ago, but nothing was done. Now that the evil predicted has taken place—now that one of the convicts has been shot dead and the Warden is lying on a bed of suffering, if not on his death bed—now that twelve or fifteen other officers and convicts are suffering from wounds, am I not bound, I, who know something of these facts, to take a further step and try to induce the Government to adopt such a course as will enable them to discover the true state of affairs? Charges of all kinds have been made, some by myself from my seat in this House, particularly last session on the 15th April, 1885. Have not a good many, and some of them of the gravest character, been made through the press? Have not even some of the dismissed officers, since the inquiry of 1884—an inquiry which some people say was a sham investigation—made some of the gravest charges against officials of high standing? It has been publicly stated that a conspiracy existed, the head of which was outside of the walls of the institution, and the actors inside, against the administration of this prison. Do not all the troubles we hear of indicate that there is something of the kind? Whether you call it conspiracy, plot, cabal, or other name, it matters very little; if such a state of things is allowed to exist, if any number of men are at work or are combining, or have agreed together to injure the administration, no such institution, whatever may be the ability, zeal and devotion of its head, can succeed. Progress and discipline are impossible, especially when convicts know of the existence of such a state of things, and it is alleged that every one of them knows such to be the case, and that they have already profited by that knowledge. How could the governor of such an institution succeed? How could any honest man pass judgment upon him, if he, the chief officer, is surrounded right and left by officials who are hostile to him and to his administration, and who may have an interest in so being? Any intelligent man will understand that the chief officer of such an institution, so situated, may be forced, for his own protection and for the good of the institution of which he has command, to relax some of the less important rules of the institution to attain the object he may have in view, namely, that of forcing his enemies into their last entrenchment to enable him to expose them. In support of this expression of opinion, that an institution thus troubled cannot be worked satisfactorily, let me quote a few lines from a report of Messrs. Tache and Miall. Mr. Tache, then Deputy Minister of Agriculture, had been for many years a member of the Board of Directors of Penitentiaries. These gentlemen were appointed a commission to investigate the administration of this same institution in 1879, and the following expression of opinion is contained in their report:—

“We think it our duty to mention an occurrence which took place some time ago in which three or four under officers allowed themselves, as it were, to be enlisted into a sort of conspiracy against some of the superior officers of the Institution, the medical attendant, and at the request of a party outside the walls of the Penitentiary, they were induced to sign communications conveying unfounded charges and false statements in regard to this physician, which they themselves afterwards admitted to be such. Upon their admission of guilt, they were, through the generous pardon of the person thus offended against, retained by the warden, and are reported by him to have, since that date, given no cause of complaint. We could not pass by the incident unnoticed, or without recording our condemnation of an offence which, being in itself a grave moral wrong, showed, at the same time, on the part of the wrong-doers, a fatal want of the proper esprit de corps which should animate a body of men who, above all others, have to rely sometimes in the face of great perils, upon the honest dealings towards and generous help of each other. Notwithstanding the generosity of the superior officer in overlooking and freely pardoning those implicated, we doubt the wisdom of retaining in position men who had proved themselves so utterly recreant to even the common decencies of social intercourse.”

Now let me state some of the charges which have been made in connection with the Penitentiary, and which, as hon. gentlemen will recollect, I made myself from my place in this House. They are to be found in the official reports of the Senate Debates, so that I need not repeat them here. Others, which I have made elsewhere, are to be found in different letters of mine as follows.—First, in a letter to La Minerve, of Montreal, published in its issue of the 5th March, 1885, in answer to an article against myself in the same newspaper in its issue of the 24th February previous; second, in a letter to Le Monde, of the 6th April, 1885, in answer to an attack upon me by a correspondent in La Minerve of the 10th of March, 1885. That newspaper having refused to publish my answer I had to ask Le Monde to insert my reply; third, in a letter to the Chronicle of the 7th March, 1885, being my answer to an attack upon me by that newspaper in its issue of the 3rd of the same month; fourth, in two other letters of mine in The Shareholder of the 27th March and the 3rd April, 1885, being my answer to an article in that journal, attacking me, in its issue of the 13th March, 1885.

The conspirators who had inspired all those attacks upon me, and whom I had silenced by my answers, ceased their attacks upon me, but continued their malicious work against the few officers who had been punished after the inquiry of 1884. These attacks may be seen in the Star of the 4th August, 1885, La Presse of the same date, the Herald of the 7th August, 1885, Le Monde of the 5th, and the Times of the 15th of the same month. One of the dismissed officers replied to every one of these newspaper attacks. His answers will be found in La Presse of the 7th August, the Herald of 29th August, Le Monde of the 10th August, and the Times of the 15th August, 1885. I also refer hon. gentlemen to the Times of the 2nd of September, 1885, for the answer of this ex-officer to the Star, that so-called independent journal having refused to insert his reply to its own attacks. The ex-official to whom I have been referring had signed his first letter "one of the Victims," but the Herald having refused to publish his answer to their attacks, unless he would sign his name in full, he did so, and his letter to the Herald is published over his own name—

J. E. Durocher. To his letter the Herald made such a reply that Mr. Durocher wrote a second letter, furnishing good evidence of a conspiracy against warden Lavolette. The Herald refused to insert it. Every one of these letters published by Mr. Durocher contains most serious charges. The following is the one published by the Times of the 26th August 1885.—

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY.

To the Editor of THE TIMES:

SIR,—I am most grateful to you for the good article which I find in your columns of the 15th instant, under the heading "St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary," and wherein you give full justice to the five officers of the penitentiary who have been punished after the last inquiry. The consequences you draw from what you have been told, was the nature of the report of Messrs. Moylan and Baillarge, are most logical. If the Warden was proven to have introduced in the penitentiary the vicious system of espionage, how could we, his subordinates, be punished, and he, the most guilty party, be retained in office. But let me state as a matter of fact that though the presiding judge, Inspector Moylan, has shown himself, during the inquiry, to be the accuser and the most hostile adversary of the Warden, and at the same time has acted as the attorney and protector of the deputy warden; notwithstanding all such efforts, he has not succeeded in finding sufficient evidence to show that either the warden or the dismissed officers had been such guilty men as they have been reported to you to have been. No, the evidence which is now of record do not show that, though strong doubts are entertained by some of the witnesses as to its correctness. It is stated by some of the witnesses that they had occasion to read over their sworn declarations. Some say they found grave omissions, while others state that some important answers of theirs are quite incorrectly reported; some even the reverse of their statements. How far this may be true, I could no say, I had no occasion to verify it but one thing I know, and it is this: One of the witnesses was authorized to have his declaration read over to him by the shorthand writer. This witness stated them to the reader that he could never have sworn what was read to him. The reporter asked the witness to state what he had stated upon oath. So did the witness, the reporter writing as if he was taken the declaration de novo. This witness does not know which of the two versions is kept in the record.

Mr. Baillarge stated at the end of the inquiry that he had taken his own notes and that he would base his judgment on his notes, and not on the report of the evidence taken by the shorthand writers.

It is also a fact that the two commissioners having not been able to agree to a joint report, had to make each of them a special report.

Had all these facts been known by the Minister, no doubt no action would have been taken upon the Inspector's report, but the Minister of Justice could not have known then how this investigation had been conducted by the Inspector, consequently I thought it my duty to give you such information as could induce you to attack the only guilty party and spare all others.

When the warden gave me notice that I had been dismissed for espionage, I wrote to him in the following words :

" St. Vincent de Paul, 31st July, 1885.

G. Laviolette, Esq.,

Warden, &c.,

" Sir,—If I had to deal with an ordinary boss, I would well know what I would have a right to do in case of such dismissal as that I am now a victim of, but with a Government I feel that I have to submit and suffer patiently until Providence furnishes me an occasion to show how have acted the different parties interested in this affair. You say (Mr. Warden) that by a judgment signed by the Minister of Justice you are bound to dismiss me for espionage (spying).

" I was so little inclined to spy that I state here, as a matter of fact, that I have refused important favors offered to me, rather than do the work of a spy in the penitentiary. Again as a matter of fact, I declare that I have been sufficiently honest to resist the most tender and honey-like words which were made use of to bring me out of the way.

" No one knows this better than Inspector Moylan and his great, great and intimate friend and chaplain, Father Leclerc.

" Those two gentlemen do not ignore that my leaving the penitentiary is the consequence of an act of vengeance.

" They know that I leave the penitentiary because I refused to be unjust and to become a tool in the hands of parties wishing to work mischief.

" They know that I leave because my conscience has triumphed of all efforts which have been made to turn me out of the good way.

" It is not then because I have acted a spy that I leave the penitentiary, but rather for having refused giving help to those who determined to bring trouble in the prison.

" Calumny has succeeded this time happily her reign is ordinarily short, while that of truth and justice, late as it may come, is permanent.

" I remain, Mr. Warden,

Your obdt. servant,

" SIGNATURE."

Now, sir, if these two grave charges are true, and I am ready to swear they are, it was neither the warden nor any of his subordinate officers who should have been punished, but it was those who had for years past inaugurated the system of spying in the Penitentiary.

The charges which are mentioned in my letter to the warden explain why it is that Mr. Laviolette having tried over and over again, during the inquiry, to prove that the cause of the trouble was to be found outside, Inspector Moylan would never allow him to do so. But whatever efforts the inspector may have made to prevent such evidence being given he did not completely succeed.

An outsider, holding a high position, having been summoned as a witness, appeared before the Court; the inspector did not dare menace or try to make him fear, as he had done, again and again, with a part of the officers of the prison who had been called to give evidence. While cross-examined by the inspector, this witness added to an answer of his, " But I remember having written the warden during last winter (1884) from Ottawa, that he had to be on his guard, that there was a party in Ottawa working in the dark to injure him." Did Inspector Moylan dare to follow this up and put the question " Who is the party?" No, his lips were shut. The documents in this inquiry, which are of record, will show you many things else, which will show you what that man is.

I have reached the age of 45 years, and yet I unhesitatingly declare that I have never as yet met such a man, a man so decidedly prepared to be so deliberately unfair, unjust and partial as is Inspector Moylan. Numerous facts, which it would be too long to enumerate here, are ready for investigation.

Again, the inspector is quite changeable in his opinions as to the value of such officers who are under his supervision. Their worth much depends on his love or his hatred for them. An example:—

Nobody here ignores that when Mr. Laviolette was appointed warden, and for some time after, the inspector and his great friend were intimate with him, while they were quite adverse to the deputy warden, who they said had neither the proper instruction nor the proper education for the post he occupied. The deputy warden had, some time before, on the report of the inspector, been degraded from the post of farm instructor to that of simple guard for want of energy. To-day, and for some time past, the hostility of the inspector and of his alter ego towards the warden is quite apparent. Even convicts know it and speak of it. The warden is no more a fit man for the situation, while, according to Inspector Moylan & Co., the deputy warden is now the right man in the right place, though he is no better scholar now than he was four years ago, and though his energy cannot have increased while he is increasing in age. You know, sir, that the deputy wardenship necessitates more energy than that of a farmer instructor. The deputy warden had four years ago a convict in his office to do such work as required a good instruction. To-day the deputy-warden is also bound to have a convict with him to do the same work, which comprises correspondence between the deputy and the warden, and even in the absence of the warden, correspondence between the deputy, acting as warden, and the Department of Justice. Now, sir, I leave it to you to say whether it is possible for the warden to succeed in his administration with a system which allows convicts to know the secrets of the administration. I remember an official of the penitentiary having complained to the Minister of the ill-treatment he was a victim at the hands of the inspector. The inspector being at the penitentiary some time later said to this official, "I do not care about your complaints. I am a match for every one of you; neither do I care about your friends, whether members of Parliament or others. Sir John is my friend and will stand by me." Such is the influence the inspector acknowledges is at his disposal for preventing officials receiving justice at the hands of the Government for any bad treatment he may impose upon them. No doubt it is not necessary for me to go over the whole ground. I have said enough to show that if my statements are true there is nothing extraordinary in the fact that it has been apparent for some time past that there was something wrong with our penitentiary.

An investigation was made some months ago to find out the cause of these troubles inside of the prison, but with no success. Let then the Government continue this investigation and they will find that such cause comes from outside, in Ottawa and in Montreal. Whatever may be the grade or the nationality of the party who is charged with this guilt, it ought not to prevent the continuation of the work begun. Poor men, occupying lower grades, ought not to be left victims in the place of more wealthy men who have done the mischief, whatever post they may occupy. I will also establish that while five French officers have been punished in this instance, others belonging to another nationality, that of Inspector Moylan, have been reported as having accomplished the rules of the institution, while the reverse only was the truth. The above charges I will be ready to make good whenever a competent tribunal will be ready to hear the evidence.

I remain, Sir,

"ONE OF THE VICTIMS."

St. Vincent de Paul, 19th August, 1885.

Did I not at the beginning of this very Session warn the Government—did I not tell them that if Inspector Moylan had wished to do his duty he could have discovered, when his attention was called to it, that some of the escapes which have taken place at that penitentiary during the last three or four years succeeded through help received? Those escapes, and the failure of the Inspector to do his duty, his neglect to take or suggest proper means to find out who were the parties who had given such help, encouraged the convicts to try and use all means to recover their liberty. They understood full well what all these sham inquiries meant, and they persevered in their attempts, with such success that the instigator of the revolt of the 24th ult. managed to regain his liberty, though he was confined in a pitch-dark cell, with stone walls two or three feet thick, and after having been visited in his cell by an officer of the institution only a few hours before his escape, as I learn from reports published in the press. However, I will say no more at present on the subject of this escape, as I do not wish to prejudice the case.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—He has been re-captured, has he not?

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—Yes, I wish to congratulate the Government on their late—but better late than never—determination to have the whole matter inquired into and a thorough search made of the causes, proximate or remote, of all the troubles which have occurred at this institution. I particularly congratulate the present Minister of Justice on his decision to have the matter thoroughly investigated and to get at the bottom of all these troubles, which have resulted in revolt and death. I sincerely congratulate the hon. Minister who, though only a short time at the head of his department, has already arrived at the conclusion that a thorough and minute inquiry is a necessity. Investigation after investigation has been held, and the more inquiries there have been the more trouble has there occurred at the institution: the working of it has gone from bad to worse. This fact alone indicates the character of those inquiries. It shows that they were sham inquiries for the purpose of whitewashing what was black and blackening what was white. Let a good commission be appointed, every member of which will show a desire to do what is right, and peace and harmony will be restored—justitia et pax osculatae sunt. In 1879, having good reason to believe that there were some officers in the Department of Justice whose object was to injure this institution, I complained to the then Minister of Justice, Hon. James Macdonald, of the fact and asked for an inquiry by competent men, whose appointment would inspire confidence. My request was complied with and Messrs. Tache and Miall were appointed. They made a searching investigation of all the matters submitted to them and reported their conclusions. The result was that one of the officers of the Department of Justice had to resign, and two of the officers of the penitentiary reported against left the prison. Not a single word of criticism was heard, and peace was restored. I am no way interested in anything having reference to this institution. The present Warden has not chosen a single one of my friends to fill the numerous vacancies which have occurred during the last five years. In that time he has not in any one election voted for any of my candidates. I did not advocate his appointment; on the contrary, I opposed it. I had my candidate and did my best to secure his appointment, but failed. My friends in the Government thought it better to put my recommendation aside and appoint the present Warden. What was then my duty? What was I bound in duty and honor to do? Was I not bound as a good citizen and a politician, knowing my responsibility, to let that man alone—to observe his work, and then pass judgment upon him and his administration? That is exactly what I did, as I will now show by quoting from the remarks I made in this House on the 15th April, 1885, the following:

I said at the time of the appointment, and I say now, that the Government were wrong in not appointing a younger man, such as my nominee was. Mr. Laviolette, though not an old man, was not a young man. But the appointment having been made, I was then, and I am now, bound in justice and in honor—and so is the Government—to judge this officer by his acts and his merits as Warden; and so I have done. I saw him at work, I also saw his works, and I was forced to the conclusion that he was a hard-working man, that he succeeded well, that the institution made good progress, that in the opinion of any disinterested party it could fairly compare with even the Kingston Penitentiary, and that he had shown himself to be the proper man to take charge of that prison at such a critical period of its existence, when there existed inside the walls two parties quite adverse one to the other as shown by the reports of Mr. Acting-Warden Mackay and of the Inspector.

Mr. Laviolette, before his appointment, had generally under his control some few hundred men, which gave him valuable experience as to the proper mode of dealing with men. It was comparatively easy for him to gain the good will of his staff. This he did, and succeeded so well that that esprit de corps, so important to the good working of such an institution, had already been pretty well restored when two gentleman, from whom the country expected better, raised a cry of vengeance against him. From that day things became worse and worse every day through the efforts which were continually made to throw on Warden Laviolette the responsibility of this nefarious work with its consequences.

Such are the facts, so that if the Government desire to have justice done let them appoint a Commission of which every member will inspire confidence—men who will not allow themselves to be interfered with nor care which party will have to be pronounced guilty, men whose conscience will have full power over their passions. Let every member of that Commission show his determination to get at the bottom of all this trouble. Then and then only can the Government be satisfied that they have done their duty. They will be in a position to absolve the innocent and punish the guilty party.

As I have said, there has been nothing in the course of the warden to enlist me in his favor, except my desire to save the lives of men who during the past four years have been at the mercy of criminals confined in that institution. It is extraordinary that all the weak points in the prison are known to the convicts. We generally compare St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary with the institution at Kingston, but the latter is an old establishment with good walls and good buildings. At St. Vincent de Paul it is different; the convicts are working from one end of the year to the other constructing necessary buildings. One side of the stone wall around the yard had to be pulled down, and for two or three years was replaced by a wooden fence. At the end, where the dungeon is, the walls had to be pulled down to build a central tower, and it was replaced by a brick work for a year or two, but at the same time I say the dungeon from which Viau escaped was secure. How then did he get the implements which enabled him to make his escape under such circumstances? Why was not an iron ball chained to his ankle, as has generally been done in such cases? I know, and hon. gentlemen who have read the reports in some of the Montreal newspapers know the views of a man who understands something on the subject—one of the best detectives in Montreal. He says there is no mistake that it was the hatred of some of the officers towards each other that caused the revolt and the consequences which followed it. He adds : " I know what a dungeon is, and I believe I know something about prisoners, and I have no hesitation in saying that the man could not have escaped unless he received help." His words are published in the press of yesterday. I regret that the article has appeared, because nothing should be said or published to prejudice such an important case. I merely quote it to show the strength of that dungeon from which Viau escaped.

I have described the situation in which the penitentiary has stood for some years past, and hon. gentlemen will see that it is not at all extraordinary that there has been so much trouble there. Who is to blame? The Government have been informed of the facts from year to year. No doubt hon. members have thought it very strange that I should always be complaining about St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary. Its bad working was the natural consequence of the state of affairs which, in spite of all kinds of remonstrances, was allowed to continue. The chief officer of the prison, not having received that protection to which he had a right, his authority suffered, and the consequence has been that in spite of all his efforts to improve the management it has been unsatisfactory. The chief officer was obliged at times to do double work—his own and his assistant's. He could not do both well, and he certainly could not do that part of the work to which the Government should attend. He could not force the Government to treat him with justice. On one occasion, having been informed by a friend in Ottawa that there was something wrong going on behind his back, he came up here with a view to having an understanding, but was badly received. I have read the damaging statements which have been published by correspondents in the press over their own signatures. I do not assert that all those charges which they make are true. I do not know whether they are or not, but the charge is distinctly made that the Government and their officials are responsible for all the trouble at the penitentiary, and those who make the charge say that they are prepared to furnish evidence in support of their allegations. I am glad that an investigation is to be held, not only for the sake of the innocent but even in the interests of those who are guilty, because they, like the others, are in danger. Let justice be done, and there is no doubt that the institution will work well. I would have the House recollect that if I feel strongly on this question there is some reason for it. Hon. gentlemen will remember that the Secretary of State, last Session, in his place in the House of Commons, accused me of being the cause of the trouble. I replied to that very sharply, defying him to renew that charge, or to deny that the cause of the trouble lay in Ottawa and Montreal, and this I repeat. Even the journals of my own province accused me, and have been accusing me during the whole year; and why? Because I have here, on my feet been making charges against the management of this Penitentiary. I cannot, knowing what is going on in that institution, forget that I am bound in justice to let Parliament and the Government know what is going on at St. Vincent de Paul; so that if a man has gone to his Maker through the recent occurrences there, the responsibility is not mine; I have done my duty and would like to leave the responsibility on the proper shoulders. I may add that this Mr. Durocher is not an ordinary man; he is a man of good education in English and French, and writes both languages equally well. Through force of circumstances he was obliged to accept a situation to provide bread for his family in a position that he would not have otherwise sought.

HON. MR. DICKEY—The House will scarcely expect me to enter upon the various points so vigorously presented by the hon. gentleman, and I do not propose to follow him in that discussion. Indeed, I think hon. members will agree with me that it would be a most inconvenient practice to be called upon to do so before the charges mentioned in the letter asked for shall have been laid before us and inquired into. I may say, however, to the hon. gentlemen that there is no objection to this Address, and that the letter, if it can be produced, will be laid before the House without any unnecessary delay.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (105) "An Act to amend the Act to provide for the granting of a subsidy to the Chignecto Marine Transport Railway Company (limited)." (Mr. Dickey.)

Bill (108) "An Act to amend the Adulteration Act." (Mr. Smith.)

Bill (109) "An Act in further amendment of the Weights and Measures Act of 1879." (Mr. Smith.)

Bill (110) "An Act respecting Commissions to Public Officers in Canada." (Mr. Smith.)

Bill (117) "An Act to amend the Act to authorize the granting of subsidies and land to certain railway companies." (Mr. Smith.)

RETURNS.

HON. MR. POWER—Before the Orders of the Day are called I should like to ask the hon. member of the Government in charge when he expects that he will be able to lay upon the table of the House copies of the commission or commissions and instructions issued to the commissioners appointed to inquire into and report upon the losses sustained in the North-West Territory during the recent rebellion. These documents were moved for on the 7th of April, and the Postmaster-General assented to the motion. Now the papers must be necessarily short, and I presume that a clerk would make the copies that are asked for in the space of an hour, and I really think that the Government ought to lay the papers on the table of the House very shortly.

HON. MR. SMITH—I will obtain the necessary information to-morrow.

HON. MR. POWER—I moved also for some correspondence on the 13th April last with respect to the importation of dynamite into Halifax. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would be good enough to ascertain at the same time when that correspondence will be brought down.

HON. MR. SMITH—I will endeavor to get the information.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—Before the Orders of the Day are called perhaps the Minister representing the Government in this House will be prepared to inform us when we may expect the reports of Lieutenant Governor Dewdney which I moved for at the opening of the Session.

HON. MR. SMITH—I do not know of any reports. I shall make inquiry, and if there are any I will give the necessary information.

FINES AND FORFEITURES BILL.

THIRD READING.

Bill (82), "An Act respecting the application of certain fines and forfeitures," was reported from Committee of the whole without amendment and read the third time and passed without debate.

CAPE RACE LIGHTHOUSE BILL.

THIRD READING.

The Order of the Day having been called, that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the whole on Bill (100) "An Act respecting the transfer of the Lighthouse at Cape Race, Newfoundland and its appurtenances, to the Dominion of Canada,"

HON. MR. POWER said: Before the House goes into Committee on this Bill I would ask the hon. member in charge if he would give us some information as to one or two points?

HON. MR. HOWLAN—The information can be given in committee.

HON. MR. POWER—I do not wish to be told when we get into committee that I should have asked for information at some other time, which would probably happen. I had not the good fortune of being present when the hon. gentleman made the explanation at the second reading of the Bill. I find in the preamble it is alleged that in pursuance of an Order of Her Majesty in Council, made on the 12th December, 1885, the dues leviable in respect of the said lighthouse will on and after the first day of July, 1886, cease to be levied. I simply wish to ask the hon. member whether that action was taken spontaneously by the Imperial Government, or whether the action of the Imperial Government depended on our taking over the lighthouse.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I have no doubt that it depends upon the taking over of the property—that it is contingent on this Bill being passed.

HON. MR. POWER—That is not definite information. It is a matter on which the House is entitled to positive and definite information.

HON. MR. SMITH—I am not prepared to give an answer at present.

HON. MR. POWER—Then I do not think we ought to go into committee on the Bill.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The Bill fully explains itself.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—The preamble of the Bill explains that it appears from a despatch from Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, bearing date the 5th January, 1886, and other public documents laid before parliament, etc., that the matter is fixed that this lighthouse is to be taken over by the Government from the 1st July next. It is a very important measure to the shipowners of the Dominion, for it is a most obnoxious tax on shipowners. This Bill will place the Cape Race lighthouse in the same position as all the lighthouses in the Dominion—a free light. The accumulated dues, some £20,000 sterling, is to be given to the Dominion Government on condition that the lighthouse should be taken over by us on the 1st July.

HON. MR. POWER—We all know that; that is in the preamble of the Bill.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—That is the information the hon. gentleman asked for.

HON. MR. POWER—Not at all.

HON. MR. POWER.

HON. MR. DEVER—I thought this was a Government Bill, and I would like to know what the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island has to do with a Government measure?

HON. MR. HOWLAN—If the hon. gentleman had paid attention to the debates of the House he should know what I have to do with it; I have to explain it to the hon. gentleman who knows nothing about it.

HON. MR. DEVER—You know no more about it than I do.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—If the hon. gentlemen knew anything at all about it he would not be asking such foolish questions.

The House resolved itself into a committee of the whole on the Bill.

On the first clause.

HON. MR. POWER—I do not think that this committee is in a position to adopt the first clause of this Bill without getting the information which I asked for and which has not been given. If hon. gentlemen will take the pains to read the preamble of the Bill carefully, they will see that the matter is not quite as clear as the hon. gentleman from Alberton has stated. Beginning at line 21 it says "The whole of the said cost,"—that is the cost of the land and the erection of the lighthouse,

"has been so repaid, and that there remains a balance arising from the said dues, which it is estimated will, on the thirtieth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six, amount to twenty thousand pounds, or thereabouts;

That in pursuance of an Order of Her Majesty in Council, made under the said recited Act on the twelfth day of December, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five, the dues leviable in respect of the said lighthouse will, on and after the first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six, cease to be levied;"

Now, hon. gentlemen, as far as we can learn from the Bill before us, it appears that the Imperial Government, acting under the powers which they had in connection with this lighthouse, on the 12th December last decided that dues should not hereafter be levied in respect of that light. That being the case, what is the inducement for the Canadian government to take over that property? If the Imperial Government are prepared to maintain the light-house at Cape Race without cost to our government or to ship-owners, why should the Dominion take it over? We take over a piece of property which belongs to a province outside of the Dominion altogether, and we assume for all time to come the responsibility of keeping it up and providing the necessary expenditure in connection with its maintenance. Unless the hon. minister is in a position to state distinctly that this order-in-council of the Imperial government was passed as the result of an undertaking by the Canadian government to assume the responsibility for the light-house, it is an unwise step for this country to take over that property.

THE SPEAKER—I think the hon. gentleman from Halifax does not take the comprehensive view of this subject that he does generally of matters that come before the House, and on which he attempts to speak. This bill is one of the most desirable pieces of legislation which the House has been called upon to consider for some time. Hon. gentlemen who are acquainted with the light-house system of the Maritime provinces must know that the light-house at Cape Race has been a serious burden on ship-owners. The policy of this country for some years past has been to afford free light to all shipping visiting our ports. It is an act of commercial wisdom, for by taking off the charges from the tonnage coming to our ports, we are encouraging commerce with this country. If it were necessary I could say a good deal to show how glad we ought to be to pass a measure of this kind; but as the principle of the bill was affirmed before going to the committee, I shall not trouble the House with any remarks on that point. The hon. gentleman asks what business the Government has to take over this lighthouse and assume the expense of its maintenance when it is now in charge of the English Government, and will be sustained by them as a free light? The inducement that this country has in the first place is to make it a free light; for although it is on the coast of Newfoundland it is to all intents and purposes a Canadian light. It is a light used by all vessels frequenting the Gulf of St. Lawrence. We have a desire in the first place to put that light on the same footing as our own lights. We have to consider also that annually there is paid by Canadian shipping $1200 in dues to this lighthouse, which the Canadian Government refunds to Canadian ship owners so that no unfairness should exist in regard to vessels visiting the St. Lawrence any more than any other ports of the Dominion either on this side of the Atlantic or on the Pacific coast. We have to pay that $1200 a year at any rate. In addition to that amount which will be saved there will have accrued at the time we take over the lighthouse a sum of $100,000 in the shape of dues, the interest on which at four per cent. would be $4,000. We have that $4,000 of an income to commence with to support this light, and we have the $1,200 which we already pay annually, which makes a sum of $5,200 a year out of which to support the light, whatever the cost may be. I am not prepared to state what the cost of maintenance will be; but it was stated by the Minister the other day that he estimated the annual cost at about $4,000. Under those circumstances we assume no liability whatever, and we free our shipping, and free the shipping of the world from the tax imposed by that lighthouse—the only lighthouse on the continent where dues are collected. I think this is a very desirable object, and if I am not mistaken the Government of this country have been for some years in negotiation with the Imperial Government in order to secure such legislation as we are now called upon to pass. I think the House ought to congratulate the Government on being in a position to present this Bill for our consideration.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I think the general feeling of the country is that the Government should take over this lighthouse; but I do not understand from the Bill that the Imperial Government have decided on handing the lighthouse over to us. It seems to have been a recommendation from the Board of Trade to the Imperial Government that we should take over this lighthouse upon the condition that we make it a free light, and it is only conditional on the passing of this legislation whether it will be a free light to Canada or not. It is so expressed in the Bill before me.

The Government of the United Kingdom, on the recommendation of the Board of Trade, is willing that the lighthouse and its appurtenances be transferred to Canada on certain conditions. It will be done on condition that we pass this Bill, otherwise we will be in the same position we are in now—there will be a tax of $1,200 a year on our shipping for this light. I believe this is a good measure financially, apart from anything else. The interest on the fund accrued from the tolls will be more than sufficient, with the amount we pay annually, to keep up the establishment in a more satisfactory condition than it is now, and the lighthouse will be no tax on foreign shipping.

HON. MR. POWER—I regret that even His Honor the Speaker has not exactly taken the point of my inquiry. I take the preamble of this Bill, and beginning at line 26 I read as follows:—

“That in pursuance of an order of Majesty-in-Council made under the said recited Act on the 12th day of December, 1885, the dues leviable in respect of the said lighthouse, will, on and after the 1st day of July, 1886, cease to be levied.”

HON. MR. KAULBACH—On certain conditions.

HON. MR. POWER—There it is stated distinctly in the preamble of this Bill that the British Government have decided that, on and after the 1st of July next, dues will cease to be levied in respect of this lighthouse. Then what becomes of the great benefit to the Canadian shipping to be derived from this measure?

HON. MR. KAULBACH—It is contingent upon it.

HON. MR. POWER—It has nothing at all to do with it.

HON. MR. PLUMB—My hon. friend does not pretend to say that the dues will cease to be levied and the money will be handed over to the Canadian Government also.

HON. MR. POWER—I say that if the English language means anything, under the Imperial Order-in-Council, the dues will cease to be levied in respect to this lighthouse on the 1st of July next; consequently the $1,200 a year will not come out of the Canadian treasury after that date, even if we do not pass this Bill. The Minister in charge of the measure has stated to the House that it will cost $4,000 a year to maintain the lighthouse. The interest on $100,000 is $4,000, and where is the financial gain to Canada in this transaction? We are to keep up this lighthouse for all time to come on receipt of the $100,000, and it will require the interest on that sum at least to maintain it. We assume all risk and responsibility for maintaining the light, repairs, etc. If the Minister in charge had been in a position to answer the question I put before we went into committee, we would be able to discuss this measure intelligently. I think it is probable that the Order-in-Council passed by the British Government has been passed at the request of the Canadian Government, on their representation that they were prepared to take over the lighthouse; but if the British Government are prepared, under any circumstances, to declare this light free on the ground that they have money enough coming from the accrued funds of the lighthouse, to maintain it without any tax on shipping, then I do not think this Bill is any boon at all.

HON. MR. DEVER—I think it is but proper that this question should have been asked at the introduction of the Bill instead of taking it for granted that it is all right, as some hon. gentlemen would wish us to do. I could not help thinking, when I saw the hon. gentlemen who are supposed to represent the Government here declining to give that information, that I did not propose to be one of the blind to be led by the blind. I want to thoroughly understand what I am about to vote upon. It is quite evident now from the discussion that has taken place, and after the lucid explanation of His Honor the Speaker, that it is better we should understand exactly the question on which we are to legislate. It is an important matter to the shipping of the Lower Provinces, and I do not feel disposed to raise any objection to the Bill ; and if I have made use of expressions during this debate which were not parliamentary, I wish the House to understand that I withdraw them. I spoke on the impulse of the moment, as I thought there was not sufficient information before the House to justify me in voting for the measure.

HON. MR. KAULBACH.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—How could the Imperial Government cease to collect dues unless the Order-in-Council was made?

HON. MR. POWER—They could not do so.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—It is conditional on our passing this Bill.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Unless the Imperial Government passed an Order-in-Council to discontinue this tax, how could they cease collecting it?

HON. MR. POWER—Certainly it could not otherwise be stopped.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—Then the Order-in-Council was passed doing away with the Imperial tax on condition that we take over the lighthouse.

HON. MR. POWER—That is the question.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I might tell the hon. gentleman that if he consults any shipmaster who has sailed in those waters, he will find that the Cape Race lighthouse dues are most obnoxious. Every Board of Trade in Canada has made representations on the question of free lighthouses. I say that it is a matter of great importance to us that now, from California to Newfoundland, we have free lights.

HON. MR. POWER—There is no question about that.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—The hon. gentleman says there is no question about that: then why does he find fault—why does he split hairs on it?

HON. MR. POWER—I am not splitting hairs on it.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—This Bill, having passed the House of Commons, should not be opposed here. It has received the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the Minister of Justice, and I cannot see any difficulty about it. I am surprised that the hon. member should ask such a question about a matter which is so plainly mentioned in the Bill.

HON. MR. POWER—Then I understand the Government to insist on pushing this clause through without giving the Committee the explanation to which I think it is entitled. The question which I asked was a reasonable and proper one, as I am sure every member must feel. I simply asked whether this Order-in-Council of the 12th December, was passed conditionally on Canada taking over this light or not. If it was, this Bill is an eminently proper one and in the interests of the country.

HON. MR. PLUMB—It was conditional, and is conditional upon the passage of this Bill.

HON. MR. POWER—I do not wish to question the statement made by the hon. gentleman from Niagara, who may be supposed to represent the Government in this House. He stated awhile ago that he thought so and now he is quite positive on the subject.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—We all think alike on this matter: it is evident that it was conditional upon this Government passing such a Bill.

HON. MR. ALLAN, from the Committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

THE PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT.

FIFTH REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ADOPTED.

HON. MR. READ moved the adoption of the fifth report of the Joint Committee on the printing of Parliament. He said: This report makes a recommendation that certain papers be printed and certain others be not printed. The list of papers will be found in the minutes of last Friday.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I was not present at that meeting of the Committee and I should like to know why certain papers having reference to superannuation, and which I thought were eminently suitable to be printed, were ordered not to be printed? Can the hon. gentleman explain why it was decided that they should not be printed?

HON. MR. READ—The matter came up for discussion and it was considered that such a long document, embracing all the superannuations since Confederation, need not be printed, and if any member required a copy of it, that it would be furnished.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I may add another reason was that the whole of the information either had appeared or will appear in the Public Accounts.

HON. MR. PLUMB—There is a leaf in the Public Accounts that shows the whole thing.

The motion was agreed to.

CANADIAN COPPER COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. READ moved the second reading of Bill (61), "An Act respecting the Canadian Copper Company." He said: This company, incorporated in the State of Ohio, wish to carry on operations in this country and to have their corporate rights confirmed under our law. I am informed by the Law Clerk, and others whom I have consulted on the subject, that there is nothing unusual about the bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

ANGLO-AMERICAN IRON COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. READ moved the second reading of Bill (62) "An Act respecting the Anglo-American Iron Company."

He said: This is a Bill of a similar character to the one which has just been read the second time. These gentlemen are incorporated under the law of the State of Ohio and are carrying on operations in this country. They wish to have their corporate powers confirmed under our law. Every provision is made for the protection of the public interest.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

ANIMALS CONTAGIOUS DISEASES BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. DICKEY moved the second reading of Bill (19) "An Act to amend the Animals Contagious Diseases Act." He said: This is a Bill to repeal Section 13 of the "Animal Contagious Diseases Act," and to substitute for it the following:—

The Governor in Council may order a compensation to be paid to the owners of animals slaughtered under the provisions of this Act; and whenever the animal slaughtered was affected by infectious or contagious disease, the compensation shall be one-third of the value of the animal before it became so affected, but shall not in any such case exceed twenty dollars; in every other case the compensation shall be three-fourths of the value of the animal, but shall not in any case of grade animals exceed fifty dollars, and in any case of thorough-bred pedigree animals two-thirds of the value of the animal, not to exceed one hundred and fifty dollars; and in all such cases the value of the animal shall be determined by the Minister of the Agriculture or by some person appointed by him:

"Provided always, that such compensation may be withheld in whole or in part where the owner or the person having charge of the animal has, in the opinion of the Minister of Agriculture, been guilty, in relation to the animal, of an offence against this Act, or where the animal, being a foreign one, was in his judgment, diseased at the time of entering Canada."

The second clause provides that if, in any case, the sum realized by the Government on the sale of the carcass of an animal slaughtered under the provisions of this Act exceeds the amount paid for compensation to the owner of the animal, the overplus shall be paid to the owner. This is very different from the Bill as introduced in another place, where it met with a good deal of opposition, in consequence of which the promoter was obliged to recast it entirely. The amended Bill, which is now before us passed unanimously in the House of Commons.

HON. MR. KAULBACH — Does it restrict the claim to the party whose cattle has been slaughtered ?

HON. MR. DICKEY—It does somewhat. Objection was made, after other points were considered, that it should be applicable to horses as well as to cattle, but that was dropped and the Bill finally passed in its present form.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

OTTAWA BOARD OF TRADE BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. CLEMOV moved the second reading of Bill (83) "An Act to amend the Act incorporating the Board of Trade of the City of Ottawa." He said: This Bill is merely to amend the Act with a view to increase the membership of the Ottawa Board of Trade, and make it more representative in character.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

CENTRAL ONTARIO RAILWAY BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON MR. READ moved that the amendments made by the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours to Bill (67) "An Act respecting the Central Ontario Railway," be concurred in. He said: By some mistake the word "Company" got into this Bill where it was not required, the principal amendment is to eliminate it. There are also some trifling verbal changes to make the phraseology of the Bill correct.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

PATENTS TO INDIAN LANDS BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (102), "An Act to expedite the issue of Letters Patent for Indian Lands."

In the Committee,

HON. MR. DICKEY said: The object of this Bill is sufficiently explained in its title. Its object is to simplify and expedite the issuing of patents for Indian Lands.

HON. MR. VIDAL, from the Committee, reported the Bill without amendment, and it was then read the third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned at 5.25 p. m.

THE SENATE

Ottawa, Thursday, May 6th, 1886.

THE SPEAKER took the Chair at three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills were read the third time and passed without debate:—

Bill (64), "An Act to amend the Act incorporating the Pictou Coal and Iron Company." (Mr. McKay).

Bill (82), "An Act respecting the application of certain fines and forfeitures." (Mr. Dickey).

GUELPH JUNCTION RAILWAY COMPANY.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. DICKEY, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbors, reported Bill (78), "An Act to amend the Act to incorporate the Guelph Junction Railway Company," with certain amendments. He said: The amendments to this Bill are in the second clause, which is an amendment to the thirteenth section of the original Act of incorporation, and professes to enact that municipal corporations in the Province of Ontario might subscribe and take stock in the Company. As we had no power to pass such a provision as that, we amended it with the consent of the promoters by stating that any such subscriptions of stock, which are made under the law of Ontario, should entitle the parties to representation on the Board: and while the 13th section only allowed in such a case representation by the head of the corporation, such as the Mayor, Warden, or Reeve, the parties promoting the Bill asked that there should be two additional members allowed as directors on the Board of Directors: and it is altered in that sense by stating that in addition to the mayor there might be, if thought proper, two other directors to represent the corporation subscribing. They ask that on the ground that they expect to raise a great deal of money in consequence, either by bonuses or stock taken by corporations, to this Railway. I have no objection to the amendments: but I have not charge of the Bill, and will content myself simply by explaining the amendments.

HON. MR. POWER moved that the amendments be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was then read the third time and passed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (96) "An Act respecting the protection of navigable waters. (Mr. Smith.)

NATURAL FOOD PRODUCT OF THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

MOTION.

HON. MR. SCHULTZ rose to move

That a Select Committee composed of the Honorable Messieurs — be appointed for the purpose of collecting information regarding the existing natural food products of the North-West Territories, and the best means of conserving and increasing them; and that the said Committee have leave to send for persons, papers and records.

He said: In making the motion which I am about to make, I am anxious to explain that I have been in some measure encouraged to do so by the recollection of the importance of the information which was obtained and the great good which was effected by a somewhat similar committee appointed by this hon. House just sixteen years ago. The Journals of the Senate show that on the 12th April, 1870—

"The Honorable Mr. McCully moved, seconded by the Honorable Mr. Botsford, that a Committee of the Senate be appointed on the subject of Rupert's land, Red River and the North-West Territory, with a view of collecting information respecting the condition and capabilities, and the means of access thereto, with power to send for persons and papers.

And that such Committee be composed of the following persons—Honorable the Postmaster-General, Honorable Mr. Dickson, Honorable Mr. Botsford, Honorable Mr. Letellier de St. Just, Honorable Mr. Locke, Honorable Mr. Burnham, Honorable Mr. Dickey, Honorable Mr. Sanborn, Honorable Mr. McLelan (N. B.), Honorable Mr. Benson, Honorable Mr. Dumouchel, Honorable Mr. Olivier, Honorable Mr. Miller, Honorable Mr. Reesor, Honorable Mr. Christie and the Mover. Three to be a quorum.

And that the question of concurrence being put thereon the same was resolved in the affirmative, and Ordered accordingly."

This committee entered upon its duties with an earnestness of purpose which enabled them, by taking advantage of the opportunities of information then available, to present to this House a short time afterwards, a mass of carefully sifted evidence, which, attached to the following report, became of the greatest possible use to the Legislature, the Government and the people of this country. Their report was as follows:—

"COMMITTEE ROOM, SENATE, 25th April, 1870.

"1st. The Select Committee appointed on the subject of Rupert's Land, Red River and the North-West Territory, having considered the matters to them referred, agree to the following report:

"The presence at Ottawa, during the existing Session of Parliament of a number of persons recently from Red River, all more or less personally familiar with the North-West Territory and its resources, having suggested the idea that it would afford a favorable opportunity for obtaining reliable information on the subjects set forth in the foregoing resolution, the Select Committee appointed for the purpose have had before them a number of witnesses, and have collected much valuable information, which will be found appended to this report.

"2nd. The vast extent of country capable of cultivation, the favorable accounts uniformly given of its agricultural qualities, and the salubrity of the climate leave no room for doubt on the minds of the Committee that the region north of the United States boundary, west of the watershed of Lake Superior, and extending north of the northern bank of the Saskatchewan River, is a good wheat and vegetable producing territory.

"3rd. The principal drawbacks would seem to be distance from navigation and railway communication, absence of markets for agricultural products, occasional visits from grasshoppers, and the cold winter. But the testimony of all the witnesses examined upon this latter point tends to establish the fact that although the thermometer indicates a much lower degree of temperature at the Red River in winter months than in Ontario, yet the cold in its effects upon individuals produces scarcely, if at all, more inconveniences in the former than in the latter country.

"The Committee are satisfied that if measures are taken at an early date to afford facilities for access through British Territory to Red River, it will be found to be not only a very desirable home for immigrants, but will materially enhance the prosperity and promote the best interests of this Dominion.

"All of which is respectfully submitted.
"J. McCULLY, Chairman."

Honorable gentlemen are aware that the Senate has been called a useless branch of the Legislature. It may be so in these degenerate days—but, to honorable gentlemen now present, who were of its membership sixteen years ago, I desire to say that the blue book embodying the report of and the evidence taken before the committee ordered by them, became at once the standard of accurate and oft-quoted information, and was the most efficient immigration pamphlet issued for many years afterwards, and that when they visit Manitoba I will be able to point out to them a number of thriving settlers who were induced to go there by the pamphlet in question.

It may possibly be urged, however, that while sixteen years ago this hon. House might perhaps appoint a committee to investigate matters, then little understood and made of great importance by the recent acquisition of those vast North-Western Territories, yet that the information published since had been so exhaustive as to leave nothing to hope for from the investigation of the subject matter of this motion; but, if hon. gentlemen will bear with me for a short time, I hope to be able to point out important information to be obtained—important conclusions to be reached which are not to be found in any of the Blue Books, nor have formed before the subject of consideration by either branch of the Legislature. In making the members of the Committee large and composed in great part of the more elderly gentlemen of the Senate, as I propose to do, I have in view the great advantage which will accrue from their intimate knowledge of early pioneer and Indian life in their various provinces, and the value of that experience in enabling the Committee to direct a line of investigation which will lead up to conclusions which may be, and, I trust, will be of great value to the Indians and pioneers of our North-West. Before, however, I go on to give my reasons for believing that the proposed Committee is desirable in the public interest, and make the effort—which will be a severe one to me—of speaking at the length which I had intended upon this subject, and as my illness has not admitted of my taking this matter up earlier in the session, I am anxious to elicit an expression of opinion from hon. gentlemen as to whether there still remains time enough, before the probable close of the session, in which such a Committee could sufficiently deal with this important question, which will necessitate the procuring and examination of a number of persons, and considerable work in the collating and condensing of such information, as well as the discussing and preparing of their report. If it is thought that sufficient time remains I will at once proceed with my speech, otherwise I shall with the sanction of my colleague from Manitoba, the Hon. Mr. Girard, who is to second my motion, bow to the opinion of the House.

HON. MR. GIRARD—I certainly admire the pluck and determination of the hon. member who has just spoken. As we can all see, he is struggling with a very serious disease; yet he has appeared to-day before this hon. House to do what he can in the interests of his country. I think the question he has submitted to the House to-day is a very important one.

We do not know yet the value of that great North-West country. There is certainly natural wealth there which is yet to be explored and developed. I may take the liberty of mentioning a fact which I learned lately in Manitoba. One of the Indian chiefs named Old Crow was dying. Some days before his death, in conversation with Lieut.-Governor Dewdney, after expressing his gratitude to the Lieut.-Governor for past favors, he made a recommendation in favor of his tribe. He said to the Lieut.-Governor that in the vicinity of his reserve there was a lake which contained fish in abundance; and he said: "The white people can always provide for themselves; but it is not so with my people—they have not the same means to make their own livelihood; they do not understand so well the means of providing sustenance as the whites, and if it is possible that that lake can be kept for my people you will have rendered me the greatest service possible." I mention this fact just to inform the House that there are in many directions different means of assisting the Indians to obtain the food necessary for their sustenance. I do not think the Government can, for any length of time, continue to provide for the Indians as they have been doing. It is impossible for a country to continue to feed a whole nation of Indians as they are being fed to-day. We must try and devise some other means, and I think we will find in what nature offers there, with a wise administration and with careful research, all that is necessary to reimburse the expenses which have necessarily been incurred to feed the Indian race. It is an important question, and I think if a committee were appointed it would not only be very wise but we might expect, from the researches of such a committee, most advantageous results. At this time of the session I do not hesitate to say that a committee would not be able to give to the question that consideration which its importance deserves. It is now too late to send for papers, persons and records, and to obtain other information necessary to place the matter fairly before the public. I think the House will understand that there is much to be done in the way of the motion made to-day by my hon. colleague from Manitoba. If it is too late it will be, at all events, the commencement of a careful inquiry which at another date may be brought with advantage before the House and submitted to the Committee. At the present time perhaps it would be better for my hon. friend to withdraw his motion with the leave of the House, and with the understanding that he will have another occasion to bring this matter before Parliament.

HON MR. DICKEY—I have listened, as I doubt not the House has, with the greatest possible interest and pleasure to the brief statement my hon. friend has made. It is not the first time that we have been called upon to receive from him good advice and suggestions, and I think I quite interpret the sentiments of the House when I say that we are all glad to hear his voice once more within our halls. I trust that he is improving in health, and that, if he is spared for another session, he will be prepared to renew this inquiry with his health and strength fully restored, and give us his impressions of that land which was once his home. I may add that on every occasion when my hon. friend's health and strength would permit of it, his voice has always been heard here in the interests of Manitoba and the North West. He has done the country a great service on various occasions, and I have no hesitation now, as representing the Government, in acknowledging the deep obligation which we are under to the hon. gentleman. At the same time I feel the force of the suggestion made by my hon. friend from St. Boniface, and before I speak of that I think I am justified in adding that there are no two members in this House who have shown a more deep and vital interest in the resources and capabilities of the great North-West than the mover and seconder of this motion. At the present stage of the session I think it would scarcely meet the wishes of my hon. friend, who desires this committee, nor would it meet the convenience of the House, to go on with this inquiry. I therefore think that it is the sense of the House that my hon. friend should be permitted to withdraw his motion. At the same time, I desire to express in this public manner, our acknowledgement of the hon. gentlemen's services in the interests of the North-West. I may add for the comfort of my hon. friend, who takes such a deep interest in the Indians, that we appear to be entering on a new phase of affairs in regard to the great subject he has brought before this House, because a bill has already been introduced in another place, by the Government, expressing their intention to establish industrial farms in various parts of the Dominion and, amongst others, in Manitoba, and each of the four great districts into which the North-West Territories have been divided. They will have industrial farms established there to the extent of one in each of those great sections. I am sure that will be a matter of interest to my hon. friend. I might add, that I think I am speaking the sentiment, not only of this House but of the members of the Government, when I say that it will be their pleasure to consult my hon. friend and to give him every information as to those points connected with the establishment of those industrial farms. That will be nothing more than acknowledging the services which my hon. friend has rendered, and I trust that he will not only be enabled to give the benefit of his good advice and assistance to the Government in reference to this matter, but that he may be able to appear amongst us again, and that we may be enabled once more to have the pleasure of listening to his voice on a subject in which he has taken so deep an interest. I trust my hon. friend will withdraw his motion with the consent of the House.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—Having been a member of the committee to which the hon. member from Manitoba referred, I am in a position to say that no hasty examination of the question to which he refers would be doing it justice; and considering the short time which Parliament will be in session, I do not think that it can receive the attention which it deserves. I think he will concur in the opinion of the hon. member from St. Boniface that it is desirable to withdraw the motion, with the expectation that in another session it will be brought forward at an earlier period.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—We appear to have three distinguished members of this House clothed with authority to represent the Government—the hon. gentleman from Amherst, the hon. gentleman from Sackville, and another hon. gentleman not far from me. I do not think it would be proper to allow the hon. gentleman to withdraw his motion until we express the great pleasure which it gives us to see our respected friend from Manitoba here to-day in very much improved health; and I quite join in the hope expressed that we shall see him next session in still better health. While I express those views, I cannot say that I concur in the opinion that the hon. mover, with his distinguished colleague from St. Boniface, should not proceed with the committee. What have we done during this session? We have had several adjournments, as usual, and have done little real work, and why should this committee not now be named and proceed with its work? The first two months of the session have been almost wasted, and now, when we are anxious to go on with work, and an humble member of this House wishes to render a service to the country, he is asked to withdraw his motion. Hon. gentlemen will remember that on former occasions, it was an old habit of the leader of the Senate, knowing that he is certain of his majority, to demand the withdrawal of such motions. How often have we seen such a thing in this Chamber? If we had in the Opposition a few more men like the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Power), we would teach the leaders of this House that they should not demand of those trying to do good service to the country to withdraw their motions. It is most important that we should go on with this motion. Have we not spent $80,000,000 on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and is it not now a matter of vital importance that we should try and make known the resources of that great North-West, so that we may attract the emigration of the Old World?

HON. MR. SCHULTZ—I desire to explain that my hon. friend is quite mistaken, and that if any wrong has been committed it has certainly not been through the hon. member from Amherst. If there has been any delay in this matter it is entirely my own fault, or rather the fault of the illness which has prevented me from moving in this matter until this late period of the Session.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I was not aware that the hon. gentleman was willing to withdraw his motion to-day. Of course, the hon. gentleman having made such a statement, I have little more to say. I have often myself been asked to withdraw motions when it was in the public interest that I should press them.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I think the hon. member from Woodstock has been wrong, not only once but twice. I do not think the hon. member from Manitoba said that he wanted to withdraw his motion on account of ill health at all; he said simply that he wanted an expression of opinion from this House as to whether there was time, if a committee were granted, to carry out this investigation properly.

HON. MR. PLUMB—This session.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—So far as I am concerned, I do not think justice could be done to that motion at this late period of the session. There would necessarily have to be correspondence with the North-West, as well as information we would get here, and if my advice is worth anything to the hon. member, I think it would be very much better indeed to leave the matter over until next year, and begin at the beginning of the session. It might be well, also, if the hon. member from Woodstock would consider occasionally before he makes such terribly rash statements. He has stated that our late leader in this House, with a large majority at his back, whenever there was a motion before the House that was a little inconvenient, requested that it be withdrawn. Every member of this House, on both sides of it, knows perfectly well that our honored leader, the Postmaster-General, was at all times most fair in conducting the business of this House, and it will be perhaps a good while before we will get another gentleman who will be more fair, more upright, and more straightforward than Sir Alexander Campbell. Although many members of this House differ in opinion from him, I have rarely heard an unpleasant word towards him from members of the Opposition; and I think it is most unfair, especially behind his back, that the hon. member from Woodstock should stand up and make such statements about one who is so highly respected in this Chamber. The hon. member from Woodstock is only making himself (whether it is parliamentary or not to say so) a laughing stock to the outside world as well as to this House, and taking up a great deal of valuable time. I did think he had more consideration for his own dignity than to make such statements about our honored leader behind his back.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—I rise for the purpose of endorsing the sentiments which have been so largely expressed in this House with regard to the motion of my hon. colleague from Manitoba. I am very glad to observe the manner in which the House has received the motion, and I concur also in the opinion that it would not, perhaps, be doing justice to so large a subject to take it up at this late stage of the session. However, a good purpose has been served by the motion having been brought forward at all. It will enable those who may meet here next year to deal with it to better advantage, and I hope that my hon. colleague from Manitoba will himself be present to bring the motion forward at an earlier stage of the session. The question is one that demands a great deal of careful consideration. At first sight it may not appear to be of very great moment, but when viewed in all its bearings it is a very important question for this country to consider at the present moment. I shall not add anything further; I could not say anything which would add more weight to the motion than what has already been expressed, but I hope that at a future session the subject will come up and receive the attention which I think it deserves.

HON. MR. SCHULTZ—I desire to explain, lest there should be a misunderstanding in the matter, the reasons for which I ask the House to allow me to withdraw this motion. In the first place, I was in some doubt myself, and I would be departing from the course usually adopted by my colleagues and myself if I pressed it without consulting them, for I beg to assure the House that we from Manitoba are a happy family: we stand by each other and act together, or try to do so. When the hon. gentleman, the seconder of my motion, expressed his opinion as he has done, and a similar expression of opinion has been elicited from my other colleague (Mr. Sutherland), then of course, I have no option but to ask to be allowed to withdraw my motion, and if there is any fault found in the matter we three will shoulder the blame.

The motion was withdrawn.

THE LIGHTHOUSE AT CAPE RACE.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the third reading of Bill (100) "An Act respecting the transfer of the Lighthouse at Cape Race, Newfoundland, and its appurtenances to the Dominion of Canada."

HON. MR. WARK—In assuming the management of this lighthouse, the government should also assume other responsibilities in connection with it. It is situated three hundred miles beyond St. Paul's. In connection with the navigation of the coast of Newfoundland, which extends about the distance I have mentioned, certain very dangerous currents exist, and I do not know whether the laws which govern them have ever yet been fully ascertained. At one time a ship can sail from St. Paul's along the coast and scarcely perceive them; at another time she would be drawn into certain bays—Placentia Bay, St. Mary's Bay, and other dangerous places. Ships have been known to take their departure expecting to run safely past Cape Race, and have been drawn into these bays and wrecked. At some times the currents are very strong; at other times they are scarcely perceptible; but they must be governed by some laws, and it will be the duty of the government to take some such observations to ascertain what those laws are, as they are now undertaking in Hudson's Bay. Ships leaving the Gulf, whether it is the St. Lawrence River or lower ports, seldom experience any fog in the Gulf; but they sail out of bright sunshine into dense fogs when they approach Cape Race. They take their departure expecting to run clear of Cape Race and are drawn by those currents upon the coast, and some most disastrous wrecks take place. I remember one wreck which occurred some years ago, of a ship that was carrying the wives and children of a regiment of troops. I believe there was scarcely a soul saved. I came very nearly being ship-wrecked myself in a dense fog on that coast. We providentially met a fishing schooner that told us where we were, and we found that we were running into a very dangerous position. I hope I am not out of place in calling the attention of the Government to this subject, because I think no time should be lost, now that we have assumed the responsibility of the navigation as far as Cape Race, to inquire into the nature of those currents and see if any law can be discovered which governs them. I believe it is sometimes the strong current setting out of the Gulf, in consequence of the freshets of the rivers which flow into it. The winds must also have an influence; but so far as I can gather information I have never heard of any law which governs them by which ships can be guided in dense fog which prevails on that coast.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I am very sorry I have to differ from the views of the hon. member from Halifax with reference to this Bill. It is a simple question of supporting one lighthouse which certainly concerns the safe navigation of the St. Lawrence and therefore the whole trade of the Dominion. The Imperial Government ask us to assume it; it is no very large matter for the Dominion to assume.

HON. MR. POWER—I am very sorry that the hon. member from Woodstock should feel himself obliged to differ from me. The hon. gentleman like others misapprehends my position on this Bill. I have not opposed it, but I have asked for information as to the exact position of things in connection with the Bill. I understood yesterday when the committee rose and reported the Bill that the hon. gentleman in charge of it would be prepared to-day to give the information for which I asked. I presume he is; and I supposed that in moving the third reading of the Bill he would have given the information I desired and which the House has a right to expect. What I wanted to know was whether this order of the Imperial Government which was made on the 12th December last, abolishing the dues in connection with this lighthouse from and after the 1st of July next, was made in pursuance of an agreement that the Government of Canada should take the lighthouse over, or whether it was irrespective of that agreement. I think that was a very reasonable and proper question; and the House is entitled to the information. I beg now to repeat what I said then, that, if the Imperial order-in-Council was made in pursuance of an agreement with this Government, that the Canadian Government should take the light over, then the Bill is a very right and proper and praiseworthy one. If the Imperial Government made that order-in-Council independently of this Government, and if it is the intention of the Imperial Government not to levy any dues in connection with the lighthouse, whether Canada takes it over or not, then I think it is an undesirable measure; because we are taking over a piece of property from which we can make nothing, and we are assuming responsibilities which might just as well be left to the Imperial Government.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Whether the Imperial Government intend to make this a free light or not, it is a proper and wise thing for the Dominion Government to take over the lighthouse, and, therefore, whether the hon. gentleman, who is to answer for the Government, replies to my hon. friend or not, his answer can make no difference so far as this Bill goes. It is in the interest of the country that we should take over that light; we lose nothing by it, but rather make money.

HON. MR. PLUMB—In reply to my hon. friend from Fredericton, to whom I always listen with the greatest respect, I may say that this is a matter by itself. I have no doubt that the Government are alive to the duty of doing everything they can to protect the fishing interests and the navigation along their coast, and any coast that may have dangers affecting the prosperity of the Canadian marine, or any interest connected with it. Therefore, I think this measure has nothing specially to do with the difficulties of the coast or the dangers of navigation, but stands by itself. In reply to the senior member from Halifax, I beg to say that the order-in-Council is a part of the agreement. Unless this Bill is passed, the order-in-Council falls to the ground, and the charges and dues will not be suspended. I think that is the information that the hon. gentleman wants.

HON. MR. POWER—Yes.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I think if the hon. member had used the perspicacity which he usually brings to bear on questions of this kind, and had read the Bill carefully, he would have seen that it carries that meaning within itself and that the objection which he made was not well founded and he would not have been put to the trouble of making two speeches on the subject.

HON. MR. POWER—I am very much obliged to the hon. gentleman who represents a portion of the Government in this House for the information which he has been good enough to give. I say now that the hon. gentleman, as representing the Government, should have been in a position when the Bill was read the second time to give the information, and then the two speeches to which he objects would not have been made. I beg to say also that the Bill has now my most cordial support.

HON. MR. WARK—The hon. member from Niagara says these two matters are not connected. I think when we assume the responsibility of maintaining the lights on this coast, we are deeply interested in everything connected with the navigation between St. Paul's and Cape Race; and this is a question closely connected with the safety of ships. We support lighthouses there for the safety of shipping and to secure safe navigation, and if it is known that between those two points very dangerous currents exist, the Government ought to take steps to obtain further information about them.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

PROCEEDINGS BEFORE JUSTICES AND MAGISTRATES BILL.

CONSIDERATION OF COMMONS AMEND-MENTS POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day having been read Consideration of amendments made by the Commons to (Bill A) Summary Proceedings before Justices and other Magistrates Bill.

HON. MR. VIDAL said :— When I made the motion for the consideration of these amendments to-day it was in the hope that our hon. friend from Barrie (Mr. Gowan) would have been sufficiently restored to health to be in his place and take charge of his own bill. That I am sorry to say has not been the course of events ; he is still too unwell to be with us. I think, therefore, in order to give hon. gentlemen an opportunity to look into these amendments, it would be well to defer the consideration of them to a future day, not so much with the expectation that the hon. gentleman will be restored to us, but in order that I may be able to take his place and explain the amendments. I move, therefore, that the Order of the Day be discharged and that the amendments be taken into consideration on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

STELLARTON AND PICTOU RAIL-WAY BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (57) " An Act respecting the extension of the Intercolonial Railway from Stellarton to Pictou."

In the Committee,

HON. MR. POWER—When this Bill was being read the second time I gave notice that I would move an amendment when the Bill was in Committee, and I think this is the proper time to do so. I do not propose to go over the ground that I took in the House. Hon. gentlemen who are interested in the matter will probably be familiar with the arguments that were used then, and which were used in the other Chamber too. I rise for the purpose of moving that the following clause be added to the Bill :—

" This Act shall not go into operation until a contract or contracts shall have been entered into for the construction of a railway from the Straits of Canso to Sydney or Louisburgh in the Island of Cape Breton."

Hon. gentlemen may remember that the substantial ground which I took when the Bill was being read the second time was that it was altogether inequitable and unbusinesslike, that a town with a population of some 3,000 people, should have a double railway communication while an important Island with a population of nearly 100,000 had no railway communication whatever. I did not care to move against the Bill, but I think this clause is a very reasonable and proper addition to it. It does not say that Pictou shall not have its little railway, but it says that Pictou shall not have its railway until the negotiations which I presume the Government are carrying on for the construction of a railway in the Island of Cape Breton shall have reached a successful termination. I see in the newspapers that the local government of Nova Scotia have devoted a respectable subsidy to aid the Cape Breton Railway, and I understand the Dominion Government are willing to add a reasonable amount ; and it is to be hoped that during the present session the Dominion Government will take such steps as will secure the construction of a railway from the Straits of Canso to Sydney or Louisburgh. My amendment is simply to provide what is a very reasonable thing, that this large expenditure shall not be entered into for this line, duplicating the Pictou railway communication, until these arrangements have been made with respect to the construction of a railway in the Island of Cape Breton.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—It is a wonder my hon. friend did not include the Nictaux and Atlantic Railway, in the County of Lunenburg. If he had done so he might have supposed that it would affect my vote on this question.

HON. MR. POWER—No, I know you too well.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—The hon. gentleman's object is simply to embarrass members of the House—that is the object and motive of his amendment.

HON. MR. POWER—I rise to a question of order: the hon. gentleman has no right to impute improper motives to any member.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—My hon. friend from Belleville has answered the question. It is a mere matter of delay, because there is a chartered company now formed under a local charter to construct this road. The line referred to in this Bill is supposed to be a part of the Intercolonial Railway. The effect of the amendment if carried would be to delay the construction of this line, without helping the construction of the road in Cape Breton—in fact it would injure its position. As regards running to the town of Pictou and the population of that place, the hon. member says the population there is only 3,000.

HON. MR. POWER—That is what the hon. member from Pictou said in the other House.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Pictou is not reached at all by the railway. It is like Prince Edward Island during the winter season for weeks—the harbor cannot be crossed for a long time the navigation is uncertain and, independent of that, there is no communication with Pictou at all: and the expense of that ferry is almost equal to what the interest would be on the money appropriated for this purpose. I am sorry that amendments of this kind should be introduced in this House. Such tactics may do very well in another place, but we ought to be above such a course here. It is simply an attempt to embarrass members of the House.

HON. MR. McDONALD (C. B.)—As the hon. member from Halifax says, this is simply a small local railway connecting Pictou with the Intercolonial Railway, a connection which Pictou already has. The agitation for this second line was not heard of in Nova Scotia until last year. I consider it unjust to the whole Dominion, and especially to the Island of Cape Breton, that this large amount of money should be expended to build a second line of railway from the small town of Pictou. The Island of Cape Breton for the last 30 or 40 years has been agitating for a railway. My hon. friend from North Sydney knows more about that than I do. I remember reading a report of a meeting on the subject 36 years ago: and I think my hon. friend from North Sydney was at that meeting. We have a population of over 90,000 on the Island, and it is only just that we should be aided to get a railway. This clause, if added to the Bill, will not prevent the town of Pictou from having a second railway, while it may give us a lever to get the Government to extend the line of railway from the Straits of Canso to Sydney or Louisburg. While the railway to Pictou town is of no interest to the Dominion, except to a flourishing farming settlement on the west side of the Pictou River, the railway in Cape Breton would serve a very important section of the Dominion, and it is one which I think should be constructed.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—This Bill just furnishes a proper opportunity for the Senate of the Dominion to exercise independent judgment. If I understand the matter rightly the Government already possess a railway connecting Pictou with the Intercolonial Railway. We all desire the welfare of the town of Pictou; but if the Government already possess the present line, I should like to know what interest can be served by the Government possessing a second line? The object of having a second line to any town in the Dominion is to prevent a monopoly and secure reduced rates. The two hundred and fifty thousand dollars granted in aid of this enterprise was one of the items in the famous Omnibus Railway measure introduced at a time when a large amount was being given to the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Government required the votes of members of the House of Commons to carry it, and they introduced that Omnibus Railway Bill, voting money to be expended on railways where they were not required. Could there be any stronger evidence that this Government are constantly spending public money unnecessarily, simply for the purpose of keeping themselves in power? Could we have an instance more in point? Here we have my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. McDonald), who rightly and correctly represents that important part of the Dominion which, to this day, has no railway communication. Why did the Government, before bringing in bills of this kind, refuse to grant to Cape Breton those railway advantages to which it has a right? In Ontario we have a network of railways from one end to the other of the province, but how is it with Cape Breton? There is no railway on the island; yet the Government has the audacity to bring in this item simply to carry its corrupt Omnibus Railway Bill into effect, which was demanded upon the large money grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway. When shall all this criminal waste of the public money cease? When shall we have a government in power that will act faithfully and honestly with the people's money? Here we have money scattered broadcast simply because there is a general election coming on in twelve months. I hope the House will accept the amendment of my hon. friend from Halifax, which is in the right direction.

HON. MR. KAULBACH.

HON. MR. ARCHIBALD—I would have great pleasure in voting for the amendment of my hon. friend from Halifax if I thought it was of any benefit; but I am afraid it will defeat what we want, and therefore I shall vote against it.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I feel a deep interest in the railway through Cape Breton, and I think it is but fair to the Government of the country to say that they have also expressed their interest in a very practical shape. They became possessed of the link of connection between the Gut of Canso and Stellarton, in the county of Pictou, a long distance, at a very large expenditure, for the purpose of getting the first stage of connection with the Island of Cape Breton, and they followed that up by offering a subsidy to any company who would build from the crossing at the Gut of Canso through the Island of Cape Breton to the principal towns of Sydney and Louisburg. The Nova Scotia Government has followed that up by the offer of another subsidy, and I do hope that the great object of the Island of Cape Breton will be accomplished ere long. At the same time I believe, with my hon. friend from North Sydney, that the very way to defeat that object would be to press this amendment, if it could be carried. My objection is this: in the first place it is not germane to this Bill at all.

HON. MR. POWER—Oh yes, it is.

HON. MR. DICKEY—It has no possible connection with it, any more than it would have had if the most ingenious opponent of the Canadian Pacific Railway had offered an amendment that no subsidy should be given to that railway—that it should not be constructed until a railway was built somewhere in Prince Edward Island. I do not say that for the purpose of offensively opposing the thing, for I am in favor of the connection in Cape Breton. The demands which were suggested to us on the second reading of this Bill have been somewhat modified, because we were told then that it was unjust to make this connection until we provided the missing link between Digby and Annapolis on the western line, and until we have also built a line in Cape Breton. It appears that my hon. friend from Halifax has dropped the western line altogether, and he has got my hon. friend from Cape Breton to second this as the only thing to be done.

HON. MR. POWER—I did not ask him to second it; he did so of his own accord; and I did not know he was going to second it until he did.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I am perfectly satisfied that what my hon. friend from Cape Breton did was fair and above-board. This is after all a very simple matter. Some of the members here may not have been present when the hon. gentleman from Pictou gave his views of the question. It was originally the intention that there should be continuous communication with the town of Pictou by means of the Intercolonial Railway; but in consequence of local influence and other considerations connected with this large and flourishing town of New Glasgow, which is on the route, that object was not accomplished. Now, a word with regard to New Glasgow. It has been said that a large petition has been presented against this Bill in another place. I dare say the people of New Glasgow wish to keep direct communication from Pictou, because they are rival towns, but they ought to be satisfied with being on the line of Intercolonial Railway to Pictou Point, and at the same time being the junction station on the line which has since been built, and which leads to the Gut of Canso—the eastern extension. They still retain all these privileges, and are in no way substantially affected by this Bill, except that it may indirectly take some trade from New Glasgow and send it over to the town of Pictou, because they find they cannot get on without it. My hon. friend from Pictou explained this matter the other day and showed the necessity of it, and that it was carrying out the original intention of continuous railway communication. But we were told yesterday that we ought really to make all those other expenditures. I hope they will be made in due time. My voice will never be raised in this House or in this Committee against any expenditure in the Province of Nova Scotia for completing any missing links in the great line of communication. I do admit that the necessity of a railway in Cape Breton is urgent, and I have no doubt that that necessity has impressed itself upon the minds of the Government. If the subsidy which they have already offered, and if the subsidy added to that which has been granted by the Province, be not sufficient, Parliament should consider by what other measure means may be raised for the purpose of carrying out the views of the people of Cape Breton; but I certainly am justified in objecting to such an amendment as this being introduced into this Bill, as the only effect of it would be to delay and destroy it, and deprive the people of Cape Breton of what they seek. I trust that the hon. gentleman, after having placed his views and his resolution before the Committee, and on the Journals of the House, will be content to allow this Bill to pass. At all events, I take it for granted that the Committee, having carried the clause of this Bill, and having thereby admitted that the Bill is a necessity, will not destroy it by adding this rider to the tail of it, which will have the effect of killing the measure.

HON. MR. DICKEY.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I intend to vote for the clause, and to explain my reasons for doing so. I have been frequently a visitor at Pictou in the course of my journeys, and I have always been surprised at the inconvenience which has been experienced in that town for want of railway communication; and when I describe to the House the kind of place which is the present terminus of the Intercolonial Railway at Pictou Landing, they will cease to be at all surprised at the demand which is made by the inhabitants of Pictou for a branch of the Intercolonial Railway down to their shores. Within a few days a steamer arrived at Pictou Landing in the morning at nine o'clock, and passengers by that steamer had actually no place to go. They walked about the coal wharves and docks there until they were weary, and then had to return to the place whence they came—that is, they walked into the steamship that brought them there, and seated themselves in the cabin. When it became necessary for them to remove from that place they went into the cabin of the ferry steamer, and ultimately crossed to the other side by the ferry steamer and obtained a meal there, and after a delay of five or six hours continued their journey by the Intercolonial Railway. That same Pictou Landing is the point of approach for Georgetown and Charlottetown steamers. In the summer season the Charlottetown steamer arrives at Pictou Landing about five times a week, and the Northern Light, as long as she is able to run, arrives there daily from Georgetown, and all the accommodation that passengers have when they arrive there is just what I have described. Is it any wonder that the people of Pictou should seek to have the traffic brought over from this worse than ordinary railway station to their own shores? I can say, from communication with the captain of one of the steamers the other day, that if the railway were continuous to Pictou town the Island steamers would run in there and leave their cargoes and passengers on the other side instead of where they do now, and that certainly is some object for Prince Edward Island. For that reason, if there were no other, I would support this Bill; but I support it in the interest of Pictou itself. It is a rising town of some importance, and I think it is entitled to some such expenditure, without in the least disparaging the claims of Cape Breton. I have no doubt that Cape Breton will ere long be amply supplied with railway accommodation; but it seems to me a very narrow minded policy to say that Pictou town shall have no railway communication until Cape Breton has, at all events the commencement of railway communication within that Island. It is a narrow minded policy that I cannot sanction; I therefore vote for the clause and shall vote for the Bill when it comes up for third reading.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman from Marshfield gave as a reason for an expenditure which will probably amount to half a million of dollars, that there was no suitable refreshment and waiting room at Pictou Landing. Is not the reasonable and proper way to get over that difficulty, to build refreshment and waiting rooms there? I think it is very discreditable to the Government that there are no proper waiting and refreshment rooms at Pictou Landing; and I hope, even if this Bill does not pass, that such improvements will be made there for the accommodation of the hon. gentleman and the general travelling public. It has been stated by three or four hon. members who have spoken on this Bill that this rider if added to the Bill will interfere with the construction of the railway in Cape Breton. It is one of those things very hard to understand; and no hon. gentleman who made that statement has told us how it will interfere. Some hon. members say that if the Senate on this one occasion manifests a little of that independence of which we heard so much, the Government in a fit of spite for that show of independence will punish the Island of Cape Breton. That is logic which I cannot understand. It has been declared by the responsible representatives of the Government in the other House; it was declared by the late Minister of Railways, Sir Charles Tupper, and, by other men speaking on behalf of the Government, that the railway to Sydney or Louisburg was one of the roads which was not a local but a Canadian road and one which the Government of the Dominion had a right to see built. Can anyone pretend that this little road to the town of Pictou, which is admitted to be exclusively for the benefit of the town of Pictou and its immediate neighborhood, is a road for the general benefit of Canada? If the Government choose to build this road to Pictou it will be a very good thing for that town, and as a Nova Scotian I shall be rejoiced to have it; but, at the same time, we claim that the Government have a right to build first the road which is for the general benefit of Canada before building a local road. This is just one of the evil results of the mischievous policy, which hon. gentlemen introduced some years ago before a general election, of subsidizing roads of a purely local character for political effect. The hon. gentleman from Amherst said that this measure had no connection with the measure for the construction of the railway in the Island of Cape Breton. His memory must be a little short; because it will be remembered that previous to the elections of 1882 a company was incorporated to construct a road from the Intercolonial Railway at Oxford to and through the Island of Cape Breton. That Company did work to the value of $150,000, or thereabouts, chiefly in the county from which the hon. gentleman from Amherst comes. That work is there; the Company, with a little encouragement from the Government—with a much less expenditure than is involved in this measure—would, no doubt, be able to go on with their undertaking; and it appears to be understood by those who are familiar with what is going on, that the measure which is now before the Committee is intended as a substitute for the Short Line measure, and that if this measure is carried the Short Line Railway from Oxford Station will be heard of no more. My hon. friend can see then that there is a connection between this measure and the measure for the construction of a railway in Cape Breton. My hon. friend from Lunenburg wanted to know why the "missing link" was not included in the amendment, and why it did not embrace also the Nictaux & Atlantic Road. From the newspapers I see that a measure has been submitted in the Local Legislature of Nova Scotia, which provides for the construction of the so-called "missing link," consequently it is not necessary that we should embody any provision respecting it in this measure. As to the Nictaux & Atlantic Railway, I think it is a desirable public work; but that road is just like the branch to Pictou. It is not a Dominion work ; it is a Provincial work ; and I feel that we are perfectly within the line of our duty and our jurisdiction in providing that this important Dominion work shall be gone on with at least as soon as this petty local work in the County of Pictou ; and I hope that the fairness and good sense of this House will imbue them to look at the matter in the same way that I think all disinterested persons do.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I do not want to prolong this discussion, but when the hon. gentleman says that this railway is merely a petty local work, I am sure he is not speaking what is the sentiment of the members from Prince Edward Island. I say that Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia are concerned in this ; it is of infinitely more importance than the road on the Island of Cape Breton would be, because all people from our part of Nova Scotia, in order to go to Prince Edward Island, have to go by way of Pictou Harbor. I have tried to cross there myself, and have been frequently delayed, and not, as my hon. friend says, because of the want of a refreshment room. At some seasons of the year for days at a time you cannot cross there at all, and I say it is in the interests of all Nova Scotia, and in the interests of Prince Edward Island especially, that this road should be built, because it is the only direct means of communication at certain seasons of the year with Pictou.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I desire to say a few words in answer to the hon. gentleman from Halifax. I must apologize to him for omitting to notice what he said yesterday as to the cost of this work, because that is unfortunately a misunderstanding on his part, and I do not accuse him of misrepresentation. The cost of this work is $250,000, not half a million of dollars. The cost was ascertained by report of the engineer who surveyed the line, and it is all the money that is asked for by this Bill.

HON. MR. POWER—The Minister of Railways in the other chamber stated that the road would cost more than $250,000.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—The interest on that is not equal to what we have to pay for maintaining the ferry every year.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I am not exactly aware of what the Minister of Railways stated, but I am speaking now of the reports of the engineers, and the estimate which is embodied in this Bill ; but possibly it may cost more than that. It may be well to remind the House that the interest on the money would not be any more than the cost of keeping up the ferry. My hon. friend undervalues the town of Pictou. Yesterday he said it was a town of 4,000, and to-day a town of 2,000 inhabitants.

HON. MR. POWER—My hon. friend has misunderstood me. I said to-day it was a town of 3,000.

HON. MR. DICKEY—It only shows how necessary it is to approach this subject without any feeling one way or the other. My hon friend from Prince Edward Island who has come here candidly and given his opinion on the subject, stated that this branch railway was a necessity and would be a great convenience for the trade and traffic of Prince Edward Island, and he would not have undervalued the amount of that traffic if he had said that it was connected to the extent of one-half of the whole railway traffic from Prince Edward Island to the mainland. I think I am within the bounds when I say that. I have just been reminded of an incident that occurred last year when the circumstances that took place show the necessity of this railway. It is well known that the tight little Island of Prince Edward with its fertile soil produces, amongst other things a large export in the shape of horses. Prince Edward Island horses are well known from New York to Halifax and they are largely exported. This year there was a dealer who had come across with fifteen horses and, as my hon. friend explains, all those steamers, embracing sometimes I think, in the whole, as many as twenty from Cape Breton and Prince Edward Island and other points, all converge to this coal centre, Pictou Landing, because it is at present the only terminus of the Intercolonial Railway. This man landed with his horses in bleak weather.

He had no place to put them. He had to take them out of the vessel, and was not within miles of any convenience for his horses, and the result was very great loss and inconvenience to the owner. I mention this as one of the inconveniences that occur and will occur again for want of this road. This is not a new railway project; it is merely asking that a branch be constructed to Pictou as branches have already been constructed to Mirimachi, Rimouski, Dalhousie and other points on the Intercolonial Railway. It is in no way a new railway or a substitute for another railway; it is simply the construction of a branch which was intended to be continued when the line was built; but in consequence of the influence of New Glasgow the line came to Pictou Point.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I hope I may be allowed to make a few remarks on the Bill now under consideration. I happen to know a little about the section of country though which this road passes, and can speak from personal knowledge. But before I attempt to discuss the merits or demerits of the Bill, I desire to make a few remarks in reply to some of the observations or rather allegations, made by the hon. gentlemen from Lunenburg. Having no arguments to offer in favor of the Bill, and no valid objections to the amendment—he goes out of his way to charge the mover of this resolution with improper motives, that he was insincere and only desired to place certain members, I suppose, representing the Island of Cape Breton, in a false position such a charge I believe is unfounded. I have no doubt that the hon. gentlemen from Lunenburg has heard, as I have, and as most of the members of this chamber have heard, not only last year but this year, that the reason why this $250,000 was placed in the estimates was not that there was any particular necessity for this proposed branch railway—but that it was absolutely necessary to spend this amount of money in order that the county be retained by the Conservative party.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—It always was Conservative.

HON. MR. MCINNES—No it has not always been Conservative. To my personal knowledge it was represented by two Reformers from '73 to '78.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I rise to a question of order.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—State your point of order.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman from New Westminster states that the object of putting the sum of money into the estimates was to bribe a constituency.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I did not say anything of the kind.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman did say so in effect, and I wish to know whether it is permissible under the rules of this House—I appeal to the chairman, and I appeal to the reporter for the hon. gentleman's language, and ask that it be taken down.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Every word I have uttered is correct—is parliamentary and in order, and I want my remarks to be taken down.

HON. MR. POWER—There is no appeal in this House to the reporter. The hon. gentleman did not state it as his own opinion; but he said it was stated, and that is the fact.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I have heard it stated a hundred times that the chief object is to secure that constituency for the Government.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—The Chairman cannot give his opinion before the discussion on the point of order is finished. There is no use in trying to put a man down while he is urging his rights.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I did not make any charge against the Government. I stated nothing of what the hon. gentleman from Niagara charges me with. I did not state that this grant was for the purpose of bribery; but I stated it was mentioned and I heard it last year, as well as this, and I believe the majority of the members of this House heard that it was for the purpose of bribing or keeping the county Conservative, if possible.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I heard it.

HON. MR. MCINNES—And most of the people throughout the country heard it—that it was for the purpose of maintaining the county of Pictou as a Conservative constituency.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I call the hon. gentleman to order; I say he is imputing to the Government the intention of bribing the constituency.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—There is no doubt that they did bribe them.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I am merely replying to the charge made by the hon. gentleman from Lunenburg. He charged the mover of this amendment with improper motives—with moving this amendment in order to place certain members in a false position. Now I wish to say that I do not think the senior member for Halifax is to be accused of improper motives in bringing this amendment before the Committee. On the contrary, I think he deserves the thanks of this House and the gratitude of the people of Cape Breton for moving in their interests. The Government was charged with an attempt to influence the constituency by putting this sum in the estimates last year and all the circumstances in connection with this proposed railway would warrant such a construction. That is my contention. I do not say that it is correct; but I do say and state to the House and to the country what every hon. gentleman must know to be a fact, that that charge was made, and a vast majority of the people of this country believe it to be true.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Everybody heard it.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—Everybody did not hear it.

HON. MR. MCINNES—There are none so deaf as those who can, but will not hear.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—Tell the truth.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I do not think the hon. gentleman can name one man who heard it.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I ask the hon. member from Lunenburg to get up in his place and state that he did not hear it?

HON. MR. KAULBACH—No, I do not think I did hear it.

HON. MR. MCINNES—Are you positive about it?

HON. GENTLEMEN—Order, order, order!

HON. MR. MCINNES—I hope the hon. gentleman from Niagara will not again attempt to interrupt or call me to order when I am perfectly in order and endeavoring to discharge my duty.

It has also been claimed by some hon. gentlemen who have spoken that this amendment, if carried, would interfere with the building of a railroad in the Island of Cape Breton. I do not see how it is possible that it can interfere in the slightest degree with the extension of the Inter-colonial Railway, or the eastern extension from the Straits of Canso to Sydney or Louisburgh. To my personal knowledge that railroad (Cape Breton) has been agitated for a number of years, and I know that the late Minister of Railways, Sir Charles Tupper, promised the people of the Island of Cape Breton that this road should and would be proceeded with and in operation long before this. Unfortunately nothing has been done yet, but a few preliminary surveys in order to keep the people quiet and hopeful until after the general election. I do not think that there has been as important a portion of this Dominion that has been so badly treated as the Island of Cape Breton. In round numbers she has a population of 100,000, nearly as many as Prince Edward Island, and yet with the exception of a few thousand dollars expended on the St. Peter's Canal, a public work undertaken and nearly completed before Confederation, and a few other petty jobs in connection with a few harbors and wharves, she has remained patiently waiting and hoping for railways and other public works, similar to those projected in less deserving and necessary portions of our vast Dominion, but she has hoped and waited in vain up to the present time. I think it is only just and fair that something should be done for my native Island—that is why I take my stand here in behalf of Cape Breton, and I think I would be remiss in the discharge of my duty, as a member of this House, if I failed to raise my voice in her behalf when I consider that she has been ill used, and denied the common justice accorded other portions of the country. I cannot see the force of the argument that has been advanced here by the hon. member who has charge of this Bill about the building of this eighteen miles of railway, when they can go from Pictou Landing, a distance of only ten miles. I know at some seasons of the year there is danger and inconvenience in connection with the ferry, owing to floating and insecure ice in the harbor of Pictou, but I would like to ask that hon. member and the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island, who has also spoken about the inconvenience to which passengers are subjected in crossing the Straits of Northumberland and the harbor of Pictou, if they ever had occasion to cross the Straits of Canso in the winter season? I have had to do so many a time before now at great inconvenience, delay and peril of my life.

In the winter and spring, on account of high winds and floating ice, I have had to wait day after day for an opportunity to get across the Straits of Canso. I remember a few years ago meeting my hon. colleague from Sydney, Cape Breton, and the Speaker of this House at that place where we were snow bound for several days. Is the convenience of those 100,000 people in Cape Breton not to be taken into consideration at all? Is the population of the three or four thousand in Pictou town to receive all this consideration while the population of Cape Breton is ignored. I ask why this yearning—this solicitude—this patronizing care and affection for a handful of people in Pictou? Doubtless the near future will reveal. I am not against Pictou getting a second line of railway but I do think a small measure of justice ought to be done Cape Breton, the most neglected part of the Dominion, when the Government are recklessly spending millions in much less worthy undertakings. There is nothing in the amendment to prevent that work going on simultaneously with the construction of that road in the Island of Cape Breton.

If the Government are sincere in the repeated promises made Cape Breton they will accept the amendment.

The Committee divided on the amendment which was rejected, contents 9, non-contents 23.

HON. MR. POWER—I give notice that I will bring that amendment up again on the third reading. I now move that the following clause be added to the Bill:—

“This Act shall not go into operation until arrangements have been made to secure a continuance of the ferry from the railway terminus at Pictou Landing to the town of Pictou.”

I referred to a petition yesterday which came in from a very large section of the population of Pictou County, asking that some steps of this nature should be taken. While we are attending to the interests of the town of Pictou with its population of 3,000—

HON. MR. ROBITAILLE — Four thousand.

HON. MR. POWER—No, 3,000. The hon. gentleman from Amherst, with that fondness which I think he has for small points, remarked that I had stated yesterday that the population was 4,000 and today I mentioned 2,000. The hon. gentleman was not as accurate, as he generally is, on this occasion. I stated that the population did not exceed 4,000; and having looked over the speech of the hon. gentleman who represents Pictou in the other House I found that he stated the population at 3,000. I thought his authority was good and I have to day mentioned the figure which he gave. I hope therefore the hon. gentleman will acquit me of having made an incorrect statement. While we have a right to look after the interests of the 3,000 people who live in the town of Pictou, I think that the several thousands who live on the other side of the river between Pictou Landing and New Glasgow, have a right to be considered also. There is a very large population there which does business over this railway and a population for whose interests this ferry is very necessary. I understand that some sort of undertaking has been entered into that the town of Pictou will keep up this ferry if the branch railway is built. I do not care who keeps up the ferry, whether it is the Dominion Government or the town of Pictou, but in the interests of the large population to which I refer, and whose petition has been laid before the other House of Parliament, I move this amendment in order to secure the maintenance of this ferry.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I doubt whether this is a proper amendment. The keeping up of this ferry is a matter of a purely local nature. The hon. gentleman is inconsistent. He says Pictou shall not have this railway and then, his amendment to that effect having been defeated, he asks that the Government of the Dominion be charged with the keeping up of that ferry. He said that the Government shall not only construct the railway but that they shall maintain the ferry at an annual charge on the revenue of the country of $13,000. I think, however, that my hon. friend will find that Pictou has agreed to keep up this ferry if the railway is built. The result of his motion, if it were adopted, would be this—that the Dominion Government would have not only to subsidize the railway but also to keep up in perpetuity that ferry across the harbor.

HON. MR. POWER—My hon. friend misrepresents the amendment; it does nothing of the sort.

HON. MR. DICKEY—This resolution as proposed is entirely out of order. It is a resolution proposing a charge upon the country which cannot originate in this House. My hon. friend must be satisfied with having moved it.

HON. MR. POWER—I think that perhaps the point of order is well taken.

THE CHAIRMAN—Will the hon. gentleman withdraw it?

HON. MR. POWER—The chairman can decide that it is out of order.

THE CHAIRMAN—It would be more

HON. MR. POWER.

courteous to allow it to be withdrawn than to rule it out of order.

HON. MR. POWER—I shall stand the discourtesy.

The amendment was declared out of order and the preamble was adopted.

HON. MR. GIRARD, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

HON. MR. DICKEY moved the third reading of the Bill.

HON. MR. POWER—I hope the hon. gentleman will let the third reading stand until to-morrow.

HON. GENTLEMEN—No, no.

HON. MR. POWER—I am now appealing to the courtesy of the hon. gentleman who represents the Government in this House; and I wish to say that it is not intended to have any discussion on the third reading, but simply to move an amendment and have a vote upon it.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I have no disposition to press an hon. member who takes the responsibility of stating in his place that he wants time, especially as he says that there will be no discussion on his amendment. I therefore move that the Bill be read the third time to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

MANITOBA AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. GIRARD moved the second reading of Bill (70) "An Act respecting the Manitoba and North-Western Railway Company of Canada." He said: This is certainly one of the most important roads in the Province of Manitoba. It is a large feeder of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I think before long it will extend to the limits of the province, and thence, in another year, will be extended to Prince Albert, the seat of the late troubles. Power is asked to cancel certain second mortgage bonds issued by the company, and to issue in lieu thereof preference stock. The different clauses are to specify the authority thus given. There are also other amendments. In section 5 a clause of the old Act is repealed, and a new one with certain modifications is substituted, and by the last clause the company ask authority to construct a branch railway.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

MASKINONGE AND NIPISSING RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. CLEWOW moved the second reading of Bill (74) "An Act to incorporate the Maskinonge and Nipissing Railway Company." He said: This Bill is to incorporate a railway to run from Maskinonge, in the Province of Quebec, to a point on the Pacific Railway. This line will pass through a country susceptible of great improvement and which greatly needs railway accommodation.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (2), "An Act to amend the Criminal Law and declare it a misdemeanor to leave unguarded and exposed certain holes and openings."

In the committee,

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—The first section of this Bill provides that if any party cuts the ice on a navigable stream or other water and does not place guards about it he shall be liable to a fine or imprisonment at the discretion of the justice who tries the case.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—When this Bill came up on the second reading I did not oppose it or criticise it, because I was in favor of the principle of the measure; but it is an amendment to the Criminal Law the object of which, to my mind, is good. However, one question suggests itself to me—whether it should be confined to the persons who cut the ice, and also whether it should not be made to apply to other cases than those mentioned in the Bill. There are many ways in which holes are cut in the ice which, if left unguarded, are dangerous to the public. For instance, holes are cut in the ice for fishing and spearing and it is a question in my mind whether the Bill should not extend to all such openings. The Bill is an amendment to the Criminal Law, and such acts are always construed strictly. This Bill provides that if any person does such a thing he shall be punished; it does not say that if he causes it to be done he is liable to a penalty. It is a question whether a person cutting a hole in the ice, under instructions from another party, would not be liable and not the person who ordered him to do the work, and this clause, if strictly construed, might render an innocent man liable to punishment. Then, again, unless it could be proved that the hole was cut for the particular purpose mentioned in this Bill the offender could not be punished. Under that clause the chances would be that there could be no conviction, unless it could be established that the hole was cut for the specific purpose described in this clause. In that respect the Bill is defective. I think it also ought to be extended to persons who cut holes for fishing. There is another objection, that the offence is declared a misdemeanor, and some misdemeanors have heavy penalties attached to them. These cases are to be tried before magistrates, and the Bill does not state the term of imprisonment or the amount of the fine to which an offender is liable. It is usual in such laws to name the penalty, and I think that it should be done in this instance. We know what some magistrates are, especially in Nova Scotia. Yet they are given this large power not only to fine, but also to imprison, or to do both. Although it may be the first offence, and the party may be innocent of any wrong intention, the magistrate has the power of inflicting a very severe penalty. It is a large power to give magistrates, who are not always the best class of men to whom it should be entrusted. I would not like to trust many of them in any case, and especially in criminal cases. I think the Bill is defective, in the first place, as regards not specifying that the party liable to be punished shall be the one who causes it to be done, and also in not naming the penalty, the amount of the fine or the limit of the imprisonment.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—Those who have experience in those matters know that the principal danger arises from persons cutting ice for the purpose of harvesting it. There may be certain cases in which dangerous holes are cut for other purposes; but so far as my own experience goes, the danger has been confined to places where ice has been cut for the purpose of saving it. In fishing, the holes that are cut are not dangerous—they are small.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—On the sea coast they are large, and the fishermen drag from the sea.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—The hon. gentleman objects to the Bill because it does not go far enough. If he thinks so, let him propose an amendment. I think the Bill will accomplish good, and that it will be quite sufficient to meet all the cases of which I have any knowledge. Let the hon. gentleman propose any amendment that he thinks proper, and if it is concurred in by the House it can be incorporated in the Bill. Now with respect to the limit of the fine or term of imprisonment it seems to me that there are sections in the Consolidated Act which provide that every one who is summarily convicted of any crime, for which no punishment is specially provided, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding $20, or imprisonment, with or without hard labor, for a term not exceeding three months, or both. I hold that if we pass this bill without that limitation, the provision in the Consolidated Act would apply; and as I have stated, if the hon. gentleman does not think the Bill goes far enough let him propose his amendment, but the originator of this measure thinks, and so far as my own experience goes I agree with him, that it will meet the evil. It is a dangerous practice for persons to cut ice and leave the holes unguarded or unprotected, and the party who does so should be held guilty and punished as provided by this section.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—My hon. friend has largely answered my objections in that regard, but the Bill provides a penalty for the person who cuts ice—it should state for a certain purpose, as the law in criminal cases is construed strictly. The party to be prosecuted is not the person who cuts the hole in the ice, but the man who ordered it to be cut. The man who cuts the ice is simply a servant sent there, and if he cuts for a certain purpose you would not convict him: I think the clause should be amended by inserting in the first line of the first clause the words “causes to be cut or made,” so that it will read “Every person who cuts or makes, or causes to be cut or made for the purpose of harvesting or obtaining ice for sale,” etc.

HON. MR. POWER—I think the hon. member from Lunenburg is quite right. As a general thing ice is not cut by the man who proposes to sell or make use of it. As a rule, the party who causes the ice to be cut is a person of considerable means and employs workmen to do the cutting, and the workman is not the responsible party as a rule. I think the proposed amendment is a perfectly good one, and I hope the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill will accept it.

HON. MR. CLEWOW—As far as this section of the country is concerned, those holes in the ice are a source of great inconvenience, and sometimes loss of life and property. It makes very little difference whether the person who makes the hole or the party who employs him or uses the ice is punished—the party who leaves the hole unprotected is the one who should be punished. This Bill is a step in the right direction.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I think the objections that are raised are hypercritical. In all courts it is understood that the person by whose authority the act is committed is held to be the person who committed it.

HON. MR. POWER—No.

HON. MR. KAULBACH.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I would like to know who would be the party liable in the place where I come from, where the holes are not cut by human hands but by horses! It is an unquestionable principle of law that the person in whose interest the act is performed is responsible in law.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Not in criminal matters.

HON. MR. VIDAL—The Bill says every person who cuts ice for sale. The workman who cuts for wages does not cut for sale: it is the person who employs him, and he is the responsible party.

HON. MR. POWER—I think it is to be regretted that the hon. gentleman from Sarnia has not made law a regular study.

HON. MR. VIDAL—The hon. gentleman need not give himself any concern about it. I am content with the very limited acquaintance I have with it, and I think it enables me to discharge my duty without making as many mistakes as some hon. gentlemen who have studied law.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—The hon. gentleman from Sarnia will not find a lawyer in the House who will agree with him in his proposition as to where the liability would lie.

HON. MR. VIDAL—This Bill has been drawn up by a lawyer of considerable eminence, and it has received the support of many of the best lawyers of the Lower House; and I contend that the wording of the Bill is ample, as it is, to punish the person in whose interests the work has been done, and by whose negligence the hole has been left unguarded. The amendment is not necessary, and would not accomplish the object which the hon. gentleman has in view.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—No magistrate would prosecute an innocent man if he could get at the person who committed the principal offence.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman from Sarnia has spoken as though the Bills that come from the House of Commons are always perfect.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I did not say any such thing.

HON. MR. POWER—That is the conclusion one would come to from the remarks of the hon. gentleman.

HON. MR. VIDAL—The hon. gentleman jumps to extraordinary conclusions without any reason for doing so.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman says it was drawn by a lawyer of considerable eminence, and supported by other legal gentlemen, and that therefore it should receive our support.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I merely made the remark in reply to a statement of the hon. gentleman from Lunenburg that no lawyer would admit the correctness of my proposition. I merely made the remark that it was a lawyer who drew this clause.

HON. MR. POWER—I think that the ground taken by the hon. gentleman from Lunenburg is a perfectly sound and proper one. Penal statutes are always construed strictly, and I will put this case to my hon. friend. Where ice is being cut, the man who is having the work done may employ a dozen or twenty men to cut this ice. If the holes are not properly guarded and some one falls into them and is drowned, who is responsible?

HON. MR. VIDAL—The man who employed the workman to cut the hole.

HON. MR. POWER—Perhaps no one is looking on to see who it was that cut the hole, but everybody knows who the employer of these workmen is and with the amendment my hon. friend proposes you could convict the employer, and without those words in amendment you would fail altogether to convict anybody.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—I am not authorized to accept the amendment, and therefore I shall oppose it.

HON. MR. WARK—I would just remark that it is customary with us in New Brunswick to mark those holes in the ice with bushes, and I think if the words "Bushes or some sufficient safeguard" is inserted it would meet the difficulty.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I think the suggestion of my hon. friend from Lunenburg is quite appropriate, because in creating new criminal offences we ought to be very careful. On the one side we ought to protect the lives of the people, but, on the other, we should not go too far in prosecuting a party who is not guilty of any wilful negligence.

HON. MR. LACOSTE—I do not see what objection there can be to this amendment. As the Bill stands some member of this House think we can reach the employers; other are of opinion that we cannot reach the employers. Why not make the law clear by framing it in such a way that in every case we can reach the responsible party and not merely the poor man who is employed to cut the ice?

HON. MR. DICKEY—I believe that amendment is substantially what the Bill is, as it stands, because any person who causes another to do an unlawful act is equally liable with the person who does it. For that reason I cannot vote against the amendment, because it makes the law so clear that any person can understand that if he consents to a person doing the unlawful act he will be liable for it.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—With the explanation of the hon. gentleman from Amherst, I consent that the amendment be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

HON. MR. POWER—It seems to me that this clause requires some modification. It provides that if a party leaves such hole, opening, aperture or place, while it is in a state dangerous to human life, whether frozen over or not, unguarded and unenclosed by a guard or fence of sufficient height and strength to prevent any person from accidentally riding, driving, walking, skating or falling therein, is guilty of a misdemeanor. It might require a very high fence to keep some people from "falling therein."

HON. MR. ALMON—In Nova Scotia accidents of the kind which this Bill is intended to provide against occur very frequently. The north-west arm which is in the vicinity of Halifax, is frozen over in the winter season, and holes are cut in the ice by fishermen through which to spear eels, and such holes are always left unguarded. Myself and my servant man drove into one of those last winter and were nearly drowned. I would like to enquire if there is anything in this Bill which makes it unlawful to leave such holes unguarded.

HON. MR. DICKEY—Let us settle this other matter first, and afterwards we can "rope in" the eel holes.

The clause was agreed to.

On the third clause,

HON. MR. PELLETIER said that ten days after conviction, for one of the offences referred to in this Bill, was too long to permit the danger to be continued. If there was any real danger the guard should be constructed as soon as possible, and he proposed to amend the clause by limiting the time within which the party would be liable for a second conviction for omitting to put a suitable guard or fence round the place, to five days.

The amendment was adopted.

HON. MR. FERRIER considered that the owner of a property on which some one had made an opening in prospecting for minerals should not be held liable under the second clause unless the excavation was made with his consent and permission.

HON. MR. TRUDEL said there was force in the suggestion of his hon. friend, as an excavation might be made on a person's property, by others prospecting for minerals, and under this Bill, as it stands, the owner of the property would be held responsible, although he might not be guilty of the slightest negligence.

HON. MR. VIDAL—An excavation of that description could not be termed an "abandoned or unused mine or quarry."

On the title.

HON. MR. POWER—I move that the title be amended by striking out the word "openings," and inserting the word "excavations" in lieu thereof. The first clause refers to holes in the ice, and the second clause to excavations in the ground.

HON. MR. PLUMB—A hole in the ice is not an excavation.

HON. MR. POWER—The amendment would read "holes and excavations."

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I think the amendment suggested in the title would better indicate the nature of the Bill.

HON. MR. POWER—There is another objection to the title also. It will be remembered that there was a very broad smile even round this venerable chamber when the title was read on the introduction of the measure.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—I cannot accept the amendment.

HON. MR. TURNER—I really think the amendment is an improvement, supposing we make it "holes, openings and excavations"?

HON. MR. ALLAN—I think the three terms are used in the Bill, and it would be better to add the word "excavations" to the title.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman's suggestion is a better one than mine, and with the leave of the Committee I will add the word to my amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

HON. MR. DEBOUCHERVILLE, from the Committee, reported the Bill with several amendments.

The amendments were concurred in, and the Bill was read the third time, as amended, and passed.

The Senate adjourned at 6.05 pm.

THE SENATE.

ST. LAWRENCE AND ATLANTIC JUNCTION RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. DICKEY, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbors, reported Bill (58), "An Act to incorporate the St. Lawrence and Atlantic Junction Railway Company," with amendments. He said: The only amendments to this Bill are purely verbal. The amendment of the clause respecting the terminus of the railway is to substitute the town of Sherbrooke for West Farnham, it being found necessary that they should have that power to complete the connection. So far as I know, there is no objection to it, and the preamble is required to be amended in the same way, so that it shall be an application for a railway to terminate at Sherbrooke.

HON. MR. OGILVIE moved concurrence in the amendments.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

NEW YORK AND BROCKVILLE BRIDGE COMPANY'S BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

HON. MR. DICKEY, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbors, reported Bill (68), "An Act to incorporate the New York and Brockville Bridge Company," with amendments. He said: The amendments made to this Bill are rendered necessary by the fact of its being very clumsily drawn. There are two or three clauses which require important amendments, and while making them it was thought advisable that the Bill should be made conformable to the drafts of bills already passed. I do not think it necessary to enter into any explanations of the amendments, because it would be advisable and save the time of the House that they be considered at a future day. I move that the amendments be taken into consideration on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills, reported without amendments from the Committee on Standing Orders and Private Bills, were read the third time and passed without discussion:—

Bill (66) "An Act to incorporate the Forbes' Trochilic Steam Engine Central Company of Canada." (Mr. Vidal.)

Bill (59) "An Act to incorporate the first Synod in the Dominion of Canada of the Reformed Episcopal Church, and for other purposes connected therewith." (Mr. Macdonald, B. C.)

Bill (42) "An Act respecting the Saskatchewan Land and Homestead Company." (Mr. Plumb.)

ANGLO-AMERICAN IRON COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. LACOSTE, from the Committee on Standing Orders and Private Bills, reported Bill (62) "An Act respecting the Anglo-American Iron Company," with an amendment. He said: This amendment is merely striking out the words "and their successors," in the second clause. By the Bill as brought up to this House, it is provided that all the privileges conferred on the Company shall pass to their successors. As corporations have no successors, those words are struck out. I move that the House do concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was then read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN COPPER COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. LACOSTE, from the Committee on Standing Orders and Private

HON. MR. DICKEY.

Bills, reported Bill (61) "An Act respecting the Canadian Copper Company," with an amendment. He said:—This Bill is similar to the one which has been already accepted by this House, and the amendment is to the same effect. I move that the amendment be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was then read the third time and passed.

STELLARTON AND PICTOU RAILWAY BILL

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. DICKEY moved the third reading of Bill (57) "An Act respecting the extension of the Intercolonial Railway from a point at or near Stellarton to the town of Pictou." He said: In moving the third reading of the Bill I do so without remark, as it was agreed with my hon. friend the senior member from Halifax, that the third read should be moved without debate.

HON. MR. POWER—I beg to move that the Bill be not now read, but that it be amended by adding the following clause thereto:—

"This Act shall not go into operation until a contract or contracts be entered before the construction of a railway from the Strait of Canso to Sydney or Louisburg in the Island of Cape Breton.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER — The House is indebted to the senior member from Halifax for having moved this amendment. This is a Bill which, from my standpoint, appears to be of a character to demand a more thorough investigation than we gave it when before the Committee of the Whole. If I have been correctly informed, the Government has constructed a road from the Intercolonial Railway to Pictou Harbor, and the purport of this Bill is to construct a line of railway to the same place. Now, I asked three impartial members of another Chamber, who heard a lengthened debate on the subject of this Bill, whether during that discussion they had heard one solid reason advanced why this expenditure should now be incurred by the Dominion. They replied that they had not heard one, and that is the opinion of three of the most independent members of the Commons. After giving to any town in the Dominion one railway, the only argument that has ever been advanced, that I have heard of, for constructing a second would be, that an opposition line should be built, because of the danger of one line exercising a monopoly of rates. But this second line is to be built by the same parties who built the other line, and the two lines are to be run by the Dominion Government. Now, is there enough traffic to sustain one road? And how, therefore, could two roads be operated? Could there be a more practical illustration of the recklessness and waste of the present party in power? Is it possible that a majority of the Dominion Senate can ratify this Bill to-day? I can scarcely believe it. Feeling deeply the responsibility of this Chamber as a judicial body to sustain and protect the interests of the people, I cannot believe that they will take the responsibility of passing this Bill. It is self-evident that other reasons exist for pushing a second road through. Rumors abound in regard to this; especially one, that the money will be expended in constituencies formerly represented by Sir Charles Tupper in the Commons. That is surely no reason why we should throw away $250,000 of the people's money.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—It is not Sir Charles Tupper's constituency at all.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—It is in the proximity of Sir Charles Tupper's old constituency, and if it is not, we all know that Sir Charles Tupper influenced the last elections in Nova Scotia by his great talent and ability; and this grant is made so that the poor will be employed, and all those people will be expected to vote for the party in power. I am told by my hon. friend from Westminster that Sir Charles Tupper's son at present represents the county. Gentlemen have been reproved in this Chamber for saying that the object of the Government in voting this money was to influence the constituency. What rule of Parliament can be framed to prevent any member of this House from charging the Government when they are doing wrong? What is the object of Parliament meeting if rules are constructed to prevent members from performing a manifest duty? I ask, should rules be constructed to prevent members of Parliament from checking improper conduct? There would be an end of all parliaments if such were the case, and it would be better to shut up the Legislature, and to say let the whole Dominion be ruled by Sir John Macdonald and his colleagues. It is an enigma to me how the hon. Senator from Amherst can support this Bill. He has shown himself to be a great advocate for frugal administration. Scarcely 48 hours have elapsed since he raised an objection to give a suitable salary to a most efficient clerk of this House upon the grounds of economy, and here to-day we find he is an advocate of this road. He acts on behalf of the Government to press it on this House, although he has all along professed to be solicitous to save the people's money. It is somewhat mysterious, his sustaining this Bill. Perhaps he would furnish information to the people of this country, how many of the hon. gentleman's sons and sons-in-law and his kith and kin are now employed in the public service through the influence of the hon. gentleman in this House? Is that a reason why he should so often interrupt me in debate and upon every possible point of order, because he has his kith and kin, his sons and his sons-in-law employed in the public service as a bribe to him to use his political power here to prevent all criticism? Should I not be wanting in my duty if I did not hold him up to the contempt of House and to the contempt of the country—a man advanced in years—a man of the grey hairs—a man of wealth? Why can not his sons go forth like my son into a commercial city and there earn their bread, instead of having them pensioned on the country?

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—I rise to a question of order.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—The hon. gentlemen can sit down, I am done.

The SPEAKER—I am surprised that that some one did not call the hon. gentlemen to order long ago.

The House divided on the amendment which was lost on the following division.

CHIGNECTO MARINE TRANSPORT RAILWAY SUBSIDY.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. DICKEY moved the second reading of Bill (105) "An Act to amend the Act to provide for the granting of a subsidy to the Chignecto Marine Transport Railway Company." He said: This Bill refers to the construction, under an agreement between the Company and the Government, of a Marine Transport Railway across the Isthmus which connects New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, for the purpose of transporting steamers and sealing vessels whether loaded or unloaded, across that Isthmus. Most members of this House are, no doubt, familiar with the geographical position of the line. Nova Scotia is a peninsula jutting out into the Atlantic and is only saved from being an Island by this narrow flat Isthmus of some 16 miles wide, which connects it with the Province of New Brunswick. About four years ago legislation took place by which the Government and Parliament of Canada were committed to the expenditure of $150,000 a year, for a period of twenty-five years, to this Company for the construction of this work, commencing at its successful completion. That has been changed in consequence of negotiations which have been going on. It was found that the subsidy was spread over too large a period of years. They were unable to make their financial arrangements, and, in consequence of that, the work has stood until this period. We find that on the 4th March last an agreement was made substituting for that subsidy another for a shorter period—for a period of twenty years only, instead of twenty-five. Under that arrangement made between the Company and the Government, which was consummated in the form of an agreement, a copy of which I have here, arrangements have been made by which the Company will receive the subsidy which I shall mention presently. In the course of those negotiations they demanded a subsidy, spread over a period of twenty years, of $187,500 a year as the amount which would be equivalent, for that period, to a subsidy of $150,000 per annum for 25 years. But the Government, although willing to make the change, would only do so on the principle of its being that equivalent, and having referred the matter to an actuary they found that, in order to make the two subsidies equivalent, it was only necessary that they should give the amount mentioned in this Bill, which is $170,602 instead of $187,500, a very large difference spread over 20 years. I may state briefly that the amount under the previous agreement to which the Government and Parliament were committed would be, spread over the whole period of 25 years, $3,750,000, whereas the amount that is now agreed to is $3,412,000, a difference of nearly $340,000. I mention this in the first instance to present to the House one of the reasons why this Bill should pass. The new arrangement is important on behalf of the Company for this reason, and for other reasons which I shall mention presently. Now this project, which has been very much talked about, was entered upon as a substitute for the well-known Baie Verte Canal. That was an undertaking which was agitated in the Provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island for half a century. It received the sanction of every governor and every military commander to whom it was referred during the whole of that period and it became one of those things that had to be done. At all events the Provinces very strongly urged it, and when the Quebec Conference took place in 1864 it was then distinctly agreed and understood that this Baie Verte Canal, across this same Isthmus dividing the two Provinces, should be constructed by the Dominion, because, as the House will readily see, these three small Provinces, in their disunited state and with their small treasuries, could not grapple with a work of that magnitude. It was distinctly understood that it should be done and, following up that understanding, the Dominion Government from time to time made efforts towards the accomplishment of that work. I need not weary the House detailing those efforts, but I may state that about 10 years ago, during the administration of the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie, an accurate and, I believe, a thorough survey of the line took place; estimates were made of the cost, and it was reported that it would amount to at least $10,000,000. In consequence of the magnitude of the cost, the idea of constructing the work was for the moment suspended; and so it stood until the period to which I have already adverted, 1882, when the Company, which is named in this Bill, made an offer to construct the work under circumstances which I shall now detail. The proposed line begins at the same terminus on the Bay of Fundy where Mr. Keefer, the engineer who presided over the survey of the canal, starts, and the terminus is pretty nearly the same on the St. Lawrence. I may briefly state that the project has always been supported by the Maritime Provinces, especially by New Brunswick, the Northern part of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, as one which would immensely benefit the trade of those Provinces and of the Dominion from the St. Lawrence down to the coast of America, and from the Northern part of New Brunswick to St. John; and it has always been regarded as a project of very great consequence. Having been suspended in the way I have already described, it was renewed by these people, and the result was the passing of the Act which this Bill now proposes to amend. This brings me to consider the agreement which was made, a copy of which I have here. It was entered into on the 4th March last, and I will just state briefly from it what the conditions are. In the first place the Company agree to undertake the acquiring of the right of way at their own expense.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Was there any other agreement ever entered into but that one?

HON. MR. DICKEY—Yes, there was an arrangement by correspondence based upon this $150,000 subsidy, but it was slightly different in some respects, as I shall explain as I proceed. By this agreement of the 4th March last, the Company undertakes to acquire right of way and to faithfully construct and equip, in a sufficient and workmanlike manner, a ship railway across the Isthmus of Chignecto from Tidnish on Baie Verte on the Gulf of St. Lawrence, to a point at or near the mouth of the La Planche River, in the Bay of Fundy, capable of raising and lowering in its hydraulic lifts, and transporting over its line, steamers and other vessels of not less than one thousand tons register each, with full cargo.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Vessels of less than one thousand tons would not be carried over it?

HON. MR. DICKEY—It should be capable of carrying vessels of not less than 1,000 tons register, or as much more as you like. Of course the greater includes the less, and it includes vessels of smaller capacity, but it should be capable of doing that at least.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Then the word "less" has no right to be there.

HON. MR. DICKEY—If the parties agree to construct a line of canal, or railway, or anything which will carry a vessel of 5,000 tons, surely they fulfil the agreement when they carry one of 50 or 100 or 500 tons—the greater includes the less. The agreement continues: "The gradients shall be as nearly level as practicable, and the alignment one straight line." The House will see that in such an undertaking it is necessary that there should be a straight line. The agreement continues: "The rails shall be of steel weighing not less than 110 pounds to the lineal yard." That is double the weight of the ordinary steel rails. The Company, by the Act of 1882, had until the period of 1889 to complete the work, and they ask for no change in that respect. They are still committed to build this railway by the 1st day of July, 1889, and they are committed to this, that they shall complete the same in a substantial manner and fully equipped for the services for which it is intended, and "to the entire satisfaction of the Minister of Railways." So much for the work? The Company also are required, after the completion of the work, to "truly and faithfully maintain and keep the same," so that it shall be "ready and fit at all times for the purposes for which they are intended," and they agree to work the railway efficiently, "charging such tolls on hulls and cargoes as may be approved of by the Governor in Council." So that the rates are to be fixed, as in the case of ordinary railways, by the Governor in Council. So much for what they are required to do. Now what is the Government to do? The agreement says:

"Should the said Railway and Docks, and works appurtenant to the present undertaking, be completed in every respect in accordance with this contract, and should they be accepted as such by the Governor in Council, then, and in such case only, and so long during the term of twenty years from the date of said acceptance by the Governor in Council, as the said Ship Railway is kept in thorough repair and satisfactorily performs the services aforesaid to the satisfaction of the Government, a subsidy at the rate of one hundred and seventy thousand six hundred and two dollars per annum shall be payable to the Company at the end of each half year, in instalments of ($85,301) eighty-five thousand three hundred and one dollars; it being expressly understood and agreed, however, that such subsidy shall not be payable for any period during the said twenty years during which the conditions above mentioned have not been complied with."

I hope that is perfectly clear. The House will see by this that nothing is to be paid at all until the work has been completed satisfactorily; so that it shall meet with the acceptance of the Governor in Council. There is another clause in this agreement which I will read. The Minister of Railways appears to have taken advantage of the position to endeavor to get at all events a small instalment of benefit from the Company. While a great many people think that this work will never be a productive line and never yield large returns—

Hon. MR. POWER—Hear hear.

HON MR. DICKEY—The hon gentleman says "hear, hear." That may be the opinion of a great many; yet, at the same time, no man can undertake to say, in the progress of events, what will be the effect of that railway on the trade of the country and what profits this Company may receive in the course of twenty years after this work is completed; and the Government have provided for that. They say

In case the earnings of the undertaking should exceed seven per cent. per annum upon the aforementioned capital, the Company agrees to pay over to Her Majesty's Government of Canada, one-half of the surplus profit beyond the said seven per cent., until the whole of the subsidy which may then have been paid to the Company shall have been repaid to the Government by the the Company.

Then there is a provision that in case of a dispute between the parties on any matters relating to this agreement, the decision is especially given to the Minister of Railways and Canals of Canada, whose determination shall be final and conclusive. My hon. friend rather laughs at this idea of 7% return. I am not undertaking to state to the House that there is a prospect of it; I am not in a position to judge, I can only say this, that if they get no return whatever for the money, the whole undertaking will be at the risk of the company. They will have to find the money. How much? The capital of this concern, including the power to borrow, is five and a half millions of dollars. The work is estimated to cost at least $5,000,000, and that money is to be expended, to a large extent—very much more than in the case of an ordinary railway, because it is chiefly work that must be done upon the spot—in this country. We have the benefit of the expenditure of it and of all the results of that expenditure in the shape of the duties, &c. We pay nothing until after the whole of this money has been expended, and then we only pay it upon the condition that the work has been completed to the satisfaction of the Government; and if the lifts, docks and track of this line are not sufficient to perform this work—in other words, if the work is suspended—they get no subsidy. Under these circumstances, I cannot conceive that it was possible for the Government to have made a safer bargain with the company than this. But some hon. gentlemen go further. I have heard it in former debates—and I have no doubt it will be repeated here—that this is a chimerical project—that it is absurd to think of such a thing being done, with this criticism more especially directed to the fact of the lifting of those enormous bulks upon the cradle which is to support them on this line of Railway. Let me say, in the first place, that I think the hon. gentleman had better recall a little history which is now some thirty years old in England, where the Britannia Tubular Bridge was lifted from the surface of the water of the Strait separating the Island of Anglesea, from the rest of Wales to its present exalted position, from 150 to 200 feet above the sea level, in order to allow steamers and sailing vessels to pass through; and I have to call their attention to the fact that this is no new project. It is new in this respect—the transporting vessels a distance of 16 miles over a level country—but the fact of these lifts carrying out a work such as I have described has been verified both on this continent and in Europe. It has been verified in the Weaverton Canal in Cheshire, where barges carrying thousands of tons are lifted up a distance of fifty feet, and landed into a canal from the River Mersey. It has also been tested and proved on this continent in the Canal which spans the Alleghany in the United States with reference to loaded barges carrying thousands of tons of coal, with their own weight, which are lifted up and transported over a short distance and landed in a dock on the other side. So that, in one sense, it is no new project; but if the lifting of vessels, (which can be easily done upon this cradle placed on the line of Railway,) and the transporting of them across that distance of 16 miles, be a new project, we shall have solved a problem which will be a credit to the Dominion, because it will be new to the world, and we will be solving it without a dollar of expense to ourselves.

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B.C.)—There is a ship railway of the same character being built across the Isthmus of Nicaragua.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I think that is more than 30 miles. The distance across at Panama is only 30 miles.

HON. MR. McINNES (B.C.)—The distance is about 130 miles; Panama is 48 miles.

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B.C.)—There are some long lakes at Nicaragua.

HON. MR. DICKEY—This is not a new project, although it may be deemed by some hon. gentlemen to be chimerical. I do not hesitate to say that the leading mechanical engineer in the United States, Captain Eads, has proposed to undertake that work if the capital is found, and to carry it through to success—not merely carrying vessels of a thousand tons, but vessels of five thousand tons; he has undertaken, at Nicaragua, to carry them to the Pacific, over not an easy surface which, as my hon. friend from Sackville knows perfectly well, is in this case as level as a floor for miles, with no cutting of more than twenty feet—

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—Not over sixteen feet.

HON. MR. DICKEY—If Captain Eads' project can be carried out at Nicaragua, surely it can be carried out in this short distance at Chignecto. Captain Eads in crossing at Nicaragua had to cross mountain ranges, and had to make curves in his line. To overcome that, stationary platforms were constructed on which the train was run on the turn-table principle, and it was turned around at various points on the line so as to give it another direction, and thus avoid the curves which would be an insuperable difficulty with a long steamer or vessel on the track. All this he has undertaken to do, and I may say, with regard to the Chignecto Transport Railway project, it has been submitted to Capt. Eads, and he laughs at the idea of there being any difficulty. He has given it his sanction and approval. But it does not rest upon that alone; this project has received the sanction of the most eminent engineers in London, amongst them Fowler, Brunlees, Edwin Clark, and one of the ablest engineers in this country, Mr. T. C. Keefer, and in the face of such opinion hon. gentlemen should not sneer at the project, especially when it costs us nothing to see whether it can be carried out or not. Therefore I think the Government have done nothing more than their duty in making this agreement, guarded as it is by the stringent conditions that are imposed upon it, and I trust the House will give the Bill a second reading.

HON. MR. POWER—I am not one of those scoffers who think this project an impracticable one. With unlimited money it is possible to do almost anything, and the difficulties in the way of this work are not insuperable. They do not at all compare with the difficulties in the way of the proposed ship canal at Nicaragua. While we may all admit that this a feasible and practicable project, we may hesitate to say that it is a desirable under the circumstances in which it presents itself to us. The hon. gentleman from Amherst has told us that it will not cost anything to see whether it can be done or not; but we find that if the thing is done—and it is not denied that it can be—this country is to pay a sum amounting to nearly three and a half millions of dollars for the job. I think the question that naturally suggests itself is whether it will be worth that to the country or not. I venture, with all deference to the better judgment of my hon. friend, to think it is not. In the first place it is a remark which I think would suggest itself in connection with a measure of this sort, that there does not seem to be any general demand for this measure from any large portion of the country. I have never heard any demand coming from any extensive portion of the Maritime Provinces for the construction of this work. An hon. gentleman opposite spoke to-day of the probability of an election next year. I am disposed to think from the appearance of this measure, and from the measure which we read the third time just now, that the general elections are coming off during the present year. The appearance of these measures is almost as certain an indication for the immediate coming of the elections as the appearance of swallows is of the coming of summer.

HON. MR. PLUMB—We do not swallow that.

HON. MR. POWER—My hon. friend's capacity to swallow is very considerable; it just depends on whom the dose is coming from. If it comes from the proper quarter, he is able to swallow almost anything. I do not attribute any motives; I simply propose to state a few facts. In 1882 we passed a measure giving a subsidy for the construction of the Short Line Railway through Cumberland, Colchester and Pictou Counties. Something was done with it, and it was dropped. To-day we finally passed a measure providing for a very considerable expenditure of money for the construction of a railway in the county of Pictou. In 1882, before the elections, we passed a measure granting a subsidy to this Chignecto Marine Transport Railway Company. There were two counties largely interested in it. It was a measure which would involve, as my hon. friend has said, a large expenditure of money in those counties. We did not hear anything about this railway from 1882 until 1886; and I presume that the same result that followed the measure in 1882 will follow it in 1886; and I hope our friends in that portion of the country will get ready to meet this as they met the previous measure in 1882. The point that my hon. friend did not deal with was the value of this measure. He did not point out the commercial value of it. The commercial value of the Baie Verte Canal was a matter that was considered some years ago, and was reported unfavorably on; and I think that my hon. friend will find it very hard to show that the Chignecto Marine Transport Railway will have any appreciable commercial value. What does it do? It proposes to take a vessel from the Baie Verte, a place where navigation is anything but favorable, and deposit that vessel at the head of Chignecto basin, where navigation is still more unfavorable. The truth is that the only vessels that we could imagine as using this ship railway would be vessels coming from the Gulf of St. Lawrence to some point on the Bay of Fundy. Any ordinary captain who is in the Gulf of St. Lawrence with a staunch vessel, and is going to any point on the Atlantic coast of Nova Scotia, or to any United States port south of Boston, will take his vessel by the open sea rather than over this ocean ship railway, paying a considerable sum for the privilege of going over the road, and then having his vessel put down at the head of an exceedingly difficult and dangerous navigation in the Bay of Fundy.

HON. MR. CARVELL—It is not so as to the navigation of that Bay, and I know whereof I speak.

HON. MR. POWER—I think in the judgment of those who know about the navigation of the Bay of Fundy, it is difficult water to navigate in.

HON. MR. DEVER—The navigation of the Bay of Fundy is not difficult.

HON. MR. POWER—I am not reflecting on the harbor of St. John. The amount of traffic that now exists, in British bottoms, between the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Bay of Fundy, is very small indeed; and as far as I can see the vessels that would be most likely to use this railway would be American fishing vessels. They might possibly be able by using this ship railway to make an additional fishing trip in the year—vessels from the State of Maine for instance. I do not think they would; but it is barely possible that they might. I cannot myself see that the construction of this Marine railway would be of any appreciable benefit to the mercantile marine of Canada.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—And it is a question whether we would allow the Americans to use it for fishing purposes.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman referred to the feeling which formerly existed in favor of the construction of the Baie Verte canal, and he told us that at the conference in Quebec, the Maritime members were in favor of the construction of that work. He must remember however that things have changed considerably since then. Since that time, numerous railways have been constructed which render this ship canal of much less value now than it would have been at that time. It is only a little while ago that we voted a respectable subsidy for a railway which would lead down to Cape Tormentine, and which would run to a certain extent parallel with this ship railway; and I understand that another railway company has been chartered in the hon. gentleman's own county from Amherst, running in the same direction.

HON. MR. DICKEY—No.

HON. MR. POWER—I was under the impression that a company had been chartered to build a railway from Amherst to Cape Tormentine.

HON. MR. DICKEY—No.

HON. MR. POWER—The truth is we have subsidized railways to carry on business in this neighborhood, and we are now proposing to subsidize a ship railway which will to a certain extent compete with them. If private enterprise will build it, let it be built; but I do not think we ought to spend so very large a sum of money for the construction of a work of doubtful utility. The hon. gentleman said that these people were going to spend a large sum of money. I take it that if there were wealthy capitalists anxious to invest money in this work they would have done so before now. The energetic gentleman who promoted this enterprise, Mr. Ketchum, has been endeavoring to interest the capitalists of England in this work for years.

HON. MR. MACDONALD (Victoria)—And did not catch them.

HON. MR. POWER—And did not catch them, as my hon. friend suggests. It is thought by making the annual payments larger, and limiting it to twenty years instead of twenty-five, that he may catch them this time. I do not think there is the slightest probability of it; and I think that after the next election we are not likely to hear anything more of the Chignecto Transport Railway Company for a long time to come. If the Government are in a position to give $170,000 a year for twenty years to an undertaking which is of comparatively questionable value, and whose benefits would be confined to a very limited area, surely they could do something towards extending the railway into the Island of Cape Breton. If that sum of money were devoted to that purpose, it would be much better expended. There is the Nictaux & Atlantic Railway, in which my hon. friend on my left is naturally interested, which is much more deserving of public aid than this Chignecto project. There are a great many other works of the same character, and my hon. friend from Amherst will not think I am reflecting on his scheme when I say that the scheme of the hon. gentleman from Alberton is one that promises more benefit to the country than this. If the Government have so much money to spend they had better devote it to some of those objects, than to the one now under consideration. I do not suppose there is any use in moving an amendment to this measure. It is a Government measure, and notwithstanding the declarations of independence which we sometimes hear, we have never seen a Government bill defeated in this House. I shall content myself with voting against the Bill.

HON. MR. VIDAL—If this were the introduction of this project to the House, and the first proposition being made to spend money for this object, I could understand the speeches which have just been delivered. When we remember that this is not the case, that the statute now on our books has made this grant, and that we are not asked to interfere with it in the slightest degree as to its amount, as we are really not called upon to incur any additional expense, the remarks of the hon. gentleman are beside the question. This is a thing which Parliament in its wisdom, at a former period thought fit to adopt, and the sum specified in this Bill is precisely the equivalent of the amount in the original Act, as calculated by an actuary; consequently the whole argument drops to the ground. If we refuse to pass this Bill, we do not free the country from the obligation which it has incurred. It is there still on our statute books. We are not putting it there for the first time. I could understand if the hon. gentleman from Halifax brought in a bill to repeal that Act.

HON. MR. POWER—The gentlemen proposing the measure find that they cannot float the scheme on the present legislation.

HON. MR. VIDAL—The hon. gentleman has told us that the opinion is that even with this concession nothing will be done. He does not himself believe that any evil is to come of this; he thinks that no money is to be spent, and notwithstanding that is his conviction, clearly stated, he thinks it necessary to oppose this Bill. I cannot conceive upon what ground he can stand in doing so. The obligation is not increased in any way except in a slight variation in the time of making the payments, which are clearly shown to us to be the equivalent in value of a sum extending over the larger period of years. As to the reasons why this railway should be constructed, or as to the beneficial results which would follow its construction in connection with our trade and commerce, I do not think we need enter upon that now, because we are not inaugurating the scheme. The only new feature in this Bill is a provision which I think is a very wise one although, as the hon. gentleman from Amherst has said, it is sneered at by some hon. gentlemen. I think there is no harm in having a provision that there shall be a repayment of the subsidy to the Government out of any surplus profit which the Company may have beyond 7%, in the event of its turning out to be a complete success, and who can say to the contrary. Most extraordinary changes take place. When the Suez Canal was projected no one ventured to predict that there would be one-tenth of the traffic coming to it that there has been since it was opened. I consider it my duty to support the Bill.

HON. MR. ALMON—I am sorry that my colleague has given this matter a political complexion. However, that shall not prevent me from doing a thing I very seldom do, adopting his views on this question, and voting against this measure. I am not altogether adopting his views, because it will be in the memory of some hon. gentlemen that three years ago, when the original measure was brought before this House, I opposed and spoke against it. The money that we talk about as being a bagatelle is really an immense sum—$150,000 a year for twenty-five years. It is now increased to $170,000 a year and the time is limited to twenty years, and for what? For building a road which, if built, will not be of the slightest benefit. Only vessels passing down the Gulf of St. Lawrence to St. John may utilize it. They are small vessels, and it may be of advantage to them, so far as time is concerned; but when it is remembered that sailing vessels are run as cheaply as possible, and when we are told that the fact of having a harbor master at Halifax, to whom a small sum is payable by vessel owners, might prevent sailing vessels from coming there, I doubt whether the masters of sailing vessels will use this railway for the sake of the difference it will make in the length of their voyage. The hon. gentleman from Amherst has put this matter in a very favorable light. I should like to know how many capitalists in Cumberland County have taken stock in his project?

HON. MR. DICKEY—I have explained that this is an English undertaking.

HON. MR. ALMON—It is an English undertaking, and this sum is granted in order to catch English capital.

HON. MR. DICKEY—There is not actually enough money in the whole county of Cumberland to construct this work.

HON. MR. ALMON—Has any stock been taken in Cumberland County?

HON. MR. DICKEY—I do not think there is any.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—I am in a position to state that I saw the contract signed for the construction of this work.

HON. MR. ALMON—While we should be grateful for this clause providing for a repayment of the subsidy of the Government out of any surplus profits there may be over seven per cent., I do not suppose any person imagines there is the slightest expectation of the enterprise being a paying one. I do not think there is a man in the county of Cumberland, unless he has land to sell to the company, who has taken one share of stock in this project. In the present state of the finances of Canada, which I am sorry to say are not as flourishing as they should be, our object ought to be to economize money and not to vote, as in this case, funds for a scheme that cannot be carried out except at an enormous expense, and if carried out will be of little or no use. Look at the amount of money that has already been spent at Panama for a ship canal, which is only a little over twice the length of this. If this scheme were practicable, would not a Marine Railway have been built at Panama instead of undertaking the construction of a canal at such an enormous expense?

The hon. member from Amherst says it would be a great credit to this country to make this experiment a success. Perhaps it would, but I should like the experiment to be tried in some other country. If the senior member from Halifax will move the three month's hoist I shall be very happy to second it; or if he does not care to do so I will move it myself if he will second it.

HON. MR. POWER—I think the hon. gentleman had better move the amendment himself.

HON. MR. ALMON moved that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be read the third time this day three months.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I am placed in a difficult position with regard to this Bill. I remember long before Confederation this matter was talked of in Nova Scotia.

HON. MR. POWER—The Baie Verte canal.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Yes, the Baie Verte Canal. Sir Charles Tupper, who then led the country, spoke in favour of it. Considering the position of the country at that time, and not having such railway facilities as we now possess, it was thought that the canal would be beneficial to Nova Scotia. But since then matters have changed and we have railway facilities in every direction. To a large extent they have done away with shipping. I was in favour of this railway. A Committee of this House was appointed in 1870 or 1871 to report on the cost of Baie Verte canal in connection with the other canals of Canada: and their report, I think, was favourable to the construction of it, the amount being stated at $6,000,000 or $8,000,000. It seemed to me, when this scheme was proposed, that it was going to cost less: and the money we were to give was contingent upon its being built. Instead of giving a subsidy and probably losing it, we were put in that position, of only aiding the work in case it should be successful. I, at the time, as a Nova Scotian, having endorsed the views of our leader in Nova Scotia, was favorably inclined to the project, or at least gave it my support. Since then I have not looked upon it so favorably, and if I had to give that vote again I do not think it would be obtained from me. I feel embarrassed, however, by what has occurred in the past. We who voted for it authorized the Government to enter into an agreement with this Company, and I cannot place myself in the position of going back upon that, and now condemning the Government for doing that which we gave them power to do. Therefore I am obliged, contrary to my convictions, to vote for this Bill. I am also opposed to this measure, because I believe that any alteration we may make in it will be an inducement to capitalists to invest in this enterprise. I do not wish to say anything to prevent capitalists from investing money in this country: but when it is proposed to expend it in an enterprise which I think will be futile, I believe it is contrary to the interests of the country that it should be done. I remember the experience of the Shubenacadie Canal on which so much money was thrown away, and the effect of it on capitalists in England. For a long time they were very cautious about investing in our province: and they were suspicious of persons going over to ask for investments in any enterprise in Nova Scotia. I believe that this project will have that effect again. It seems to me we are, by this Bill, holding out inducements to capitalists to invest in this work as though we believe it would prove a success—because we are by this Bill, to some extent, entering into a partnership with the Company. I do not like to see the Government a party to anything of the kind. We state in this Bill that we want to participate with the Company in their enterprise. We hold out the idea that there will be profits above 7%, and if there should not be any profits we agree to pay a subsidy of over $170,000 a year. I understand that if earnings do not yield a profit of seven per cent. on the investment, that we only pay the deficiency.

HON. MR. DICKEY—Yes.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Then we are partners in something which may be a bankrupt concern. When we participate in its profits we are partners in it, and to a large extent we are holding out inducements to capitalists abroad to embark in that enterprise. We put a certain amount of capital into it and participate in the profits, if any are realized. It looks very like a partnership which I, for one, would not care to be led into,—one that I cannot approve of. So far as the construction of the Railway is concerned, I believe that capital, with engineering skill and science, will accomplish almost anything—will accomplish very much more than perhaps any of us here imagine—but, after all, while I believe that this enterprise will be to a large extent a failure, I cannot oppose the Bill. No vessel will go that way from Halifax, and I cannot see in the future what will be done by it. I hope that no capital will be invested in it. I cannot encourage such enterprises, and yet at the same time, as I have already explained, I am in this position: having committed myself to it, having voted to give authority to the Government to enter into an agreement of this character, and seeing no material alteration in that agreement, I cannot oppose the Bill.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—The projector of this work Mr. Ketchum is a gentleman who stands very high not only in his province but wherever he is known, and I believe his attainments as an engineer to a large extent inspired the parliament of the country to pass the first money vote; but I do not believe with all his skill that that first measure would ever have passed or that money would have been granted in aid of his enterprise

if there had not been other influence— But the chief object was to strengthen Sir Charles Tupper in the surrounding constituencies. With regard to the work itself, we find very few who have any real faith in its practicability. I have asked a great many merchants in Montreal and Toronto what their views are with regard to it, and I find scarcely one who has thorough faith in the enterprise; and when we couple that opinion with the fact mentioned by the senior member from Halifax, that the trade of the Bay of Fundy is not sufficient to sustain such a public work if it were practicable, we can scarcely vote for this Bill. Now the first bill was passed and a subsidy of $150,000 a year was voted when we had a full treasury. In giving that subsidy we voted the interest on very nearly $3,000,000. It is really absurd to listen to the objections of the hon. member from Sarnia that there is no alteration in that agreement—that it is exactly the same thing. If there is no change in it why do they come to parliament? How can he adopt such arguments to this House? They are asking now that we should increase the amount to $175,000 annual subsidy. The question with the House and parliament is this—with a deficit of upwards of $3,000,000 at the present moment, with a depleted treasury and with the prospect of having enormous claims on the Government—are we justified in altering the first arrangements made? That arrangement we are bound in honor to carry out. We are desirous of doing what we can for the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. I feel, myself, that justice has not been rendered to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in the past. I cannot help feeling, as a western man that in voting moneys we have not done justice with regard to Cape Breton and other parts of Nova Scotia, which require railways, and where there is legitimate work for them. But that is no reason why we should alter the arrangement to make the subsidy equal to the interest on $3,000,000. The hon. member from Alberton calls upon this Parliament to carry out, in good faith, the terms which Sir John Macdonald made with Prince Edward Island. We cannot deny that that promise was made in unmistakable language to the effect that they should be secured a winter passage between that beautiful and fertile island and the mainland. Having made the pledge the Government are bound to try and carry it out. Certainly we should not waste money, while we are unable to carry out our obligations of honor. Let us stand by the first agreement. Let us try to carry out in good faith what we have already promised. If there is any money to be granted certainly the enterprise of the hon. member from Alberton, which will secure what the First Minister promised to Prince Edward Island, has a prior claim.

HON. MR. CARVELL—The remarks which have been made by several gentleman with reference to the utility of the proposed railway and the probabilities that it will pay, do not call for any serious reply from me because—and I hope hon. gentleman will not misunderstand me as speaking unkindly—I think they, and especially my hon. friends from Halifax, are not in a position to judge much of the trade and navigation of the Bay of Fundy and the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—The insurance rates are higher there than elsewhere.

HON. MR. CARVELL—The junior member for Halifax said that only a few vessels from Prince Edward Island—small vessels—would use this railway. They are not all small.

HON. MR. ALMON—The vessels that would trade between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island would necessarily be small.

HON. MR. DICKEY—There are vessels trading with the United States.

HON. MR. CARVELL—There are other points besides those in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, and there are vessels trading that weigh up to 2,000 tons, and some of these are at this moment, or were a few days ago, and had been for many days previously, prevented from getting through the straits of Canso by the ice. Sometimes vessels are obliged to lie there for weeks—vessels of 3,000 tons—waiting for a chance to get through. With this avenue open between the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Bay of Fundy they would not be blocked in that way. The Straits of Northumberland are sometimes blocked with ice when Charlottetown and other ports are free from it, and communication is practicable between them and ports in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. There is just one point to be considered here fairly: the senior member for Halifax was pleased to say that this work was an impossibility—something that never was intended to be built—that it was an electioneering dodge emanating from the Government, and that after the election we would hear nothing more of it. Perhaps it would be just as well to give the hon. gentleman the benefit of his own concealed weapon. He tries to make a party vote of it, as his colleague has already said. The facts in reference to this bill are these; the original Act was passed four or five years ago.

HON. MR. POWER—In 1882, just before the election.

HON. MR. CARVELL—On the strength of that the Government entered into an arrangement with certain capitalists in England to pay them a certain sum to accomplish this work, and, notwithstanding the contradiction of the hon. gentleman from Woodstock, it was exactly the same sum, but made in different payments. Instead of paying $150,000 a year for twenty-five years, the Government agreed to pay $170,602 for twenty years, making by actuarial calculation a sum precisely the same as that mentioned in the original Act. The Government had entered into an arrangement; they consented to the proposition when it came from the capitalists in England. Orders in Council were passed; cable communication was had between Mr. Ketchum on the one part and his moneyed friends on the other, and the thing was settled definitely and completed, and now the company come here for a ratification of that, not for any increased payment, but to have their agreement ratified. That is all, and I do not think any objection should be raised to it.

HON. MR. CARVELL.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—I can hardly allow this measure to pass without saying something as regards this project. I have been deeply interested in it since I was twenty years of age. I accompanied the engineer who made the first survey of the isthmus by an appointment from Sir Howard Douglas, who was an engineer himself. I accompanied him throughout and Sir Howard Douglas came up and examined the route himself and approved of it in the highest terms. Therefore I began a long time ago to take a deep interest in this work, and from that time until the late government appointed a commission expressly for the purpose of preventing the canal being constructed, the government and the people of New Brunswick have recognized the importance of this matter, and had it not been for that commission I have no manner of doubt that the canal would have been constructed; but I am not sure that it would have been so advantageous as the scheme now before us. It is all very well for members to prognosticate that this could be of no service—that it must be a failure. What were the prognostications of a great many people when the Canadian Pacific Railway contract was made? I can recollect statesmen in the other house of parliament saying that the whole resources of the British Empire could not construct that road in the time that was mentioned, and I have heard not only in this House but in the House of Commons members state that if it were constructed it would entail a charge of some $8,000,000 per annum for working expenses over and above its earnings. When we take into consideration how completely those prognostications of evil and failure have been falsified, we may apply, perhaps, the same principle to this undertaking. I was not surprised at all to find opposition coming from the members who represent Halifax in this House. From the first inception of the project of a canal through the Isthmus we met with the opposition of the merchants of Halifax, and it was obvious why that opposition came from them. They were well aware that the large commerce of the Gulf of St. Lawrence would pass down the Bay of Fundy and go to

United States ports instead of going by way of Halifax; and they knew that it would not be an advantage to their city. But Halifax is not all the Maritime Provinces; nor should the pecuniary interests of the merchants of Halifax prevent the construction of a work which will be of great advantage to all the rest of the Dominion. It is impossible to say what the traffic may be, provided that work is a success. It is admitted, and all the ablest engineers that have been consulted state decidedly, that there is no difficulty in constructing this marine railway. The capitalists in England have taken all these circumstances into consideration. They have had details with respect to the existing commerce, the population of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island and the trade which now exists between the river and Gulf of St. Lawrence, and the United States and the Port of St. John. They have taken all these circumstances into consideration; and if they see fit to advance their money to construct this work, which may be one of vast importance, surely we ought not to throw any objection in the way of their doing so. We did not entice them to come.

HON. MR. ALMON—You gave them over $170,000 a year.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—It is a voluntary act on their part, and I was somewhat surprised at my hon. friend, the junior member from Halifax, ridiculing the idea of getting English capital to construct our public works. Because the County of Cumberland did not advance capital he seemed to think it was a matter of merit. I consider if we can, by proper inducements, get the capitalists of England to come to this country and build these works, we should not throw any difficulties in the way of their doing it. The project of constructing the Baie Verte Canal has been under consideration for years: it has been the dream of the people of New Brunswick for sixty years to have some communication across the Isthmus in order to facilitate the trade of their province, and at that time I was acquainted with some merchants in Boston, men of prominence who were doing a large business in connection with the province, and their statement was that the construction of a canal at that time would be of vast benefit to commerce and to the fisheries. Now, under these circumstances, I may say we are bound in fact to carry out this undertaking. We entered into this contract, the appropriations were made by the House of Commons, and the change is made for two reasons. I believe the company were sincere when they first undertook this work, having examined it in all its features, and they would have gone on with it, but the Dominion Government inserted in the original contract conditions which were considered unnecessarily expensive to the company. I have been so informed. After the first contract was entered into, it was discovered that there was a portion of the line where there was rock which was not supposed to exist at the time the first contract was made. The reason of the second contract and the shortening of the time has been that certain conditions and expenditures with respect to the basin and the extent of it have been so modified that parties in England are now prepared to go on with the work. It is impossible for any person to say when we look to the great works which have been accomplished and the advance in science, what the result of this railway may be when it is completed. I think this House would be doing that which would not be consistent with the advancement of the interests of the country if they should oppose this Bill.

HON. MR. DICKEY—The hon. gentleman from Halifax asked me a question with reference to a point which I was not able to answer at the time. In fact, I knew nothing about it until I looked at the Act of incorporation. I will now read the names of some of the corporators who belong to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. In addition to Mr T. C. Keefer, who lives in Ottawa, I find the following: Charles R. Coker, R. C. Hunt, Willam Elder M. P. P., Charles C. Gregort J. Stewart Christopher Milner, Hon. P. A. Landry, Hon. J. C. Townshend, James S. Hichman, W. D. Douglas, W. D. Main, J. C. Brundage, John H. Parks, A. E. Killam, M. P. P. These gentlemen are corporators, and all belong to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—They never invested any money in it.

HON. MR. ALMON—How many shares did they take in it.

HON MR. DICKEY—My hon. friend will get that information at the head office in London. I am surprised that such an objection should be made to this Bill. I must say one word about the navigation of the Bay of Fundy, concerning which the senior member from Halifax has made some sweeping statements. It is not the first time that he has done so with regard to the Bay of Fundy; and I, as a resident at its head feel just as susceptible on that point as the hon. member from Sackville who lives on the other side of the head of the Bay. My hon. friend from Halifax has thought proper to speak of the navigation of the Bay of Fundy as being difficult and dangerous; if his statement were true no body of capitalists would ever think of constructing this work. I tell him that he is mistaken—that he knows nothing about the navigation of the Bay of Fundy. I doubt if he ever sailed on it except to cross it. The Bay of Fundy is one of the safest in the world for its area, and there are less disasters there than in most navigable waters, for this obvious reason, that it is a tidal bay, and the ebb and flow of the tides is of great assistance to vessels, even sailing vessels passing up and down, because they have the eddy as well as the flood, and it is a protection against vessels running against reefs and rocks in time of flood. I point to the fact that it has not been of the dangerous character that the hon. gentleman describes. For one disaster in the Bay of Fundy, I can point him to half a dozen on the south coast of Nova Scotia. I do not wish to detract from any portion of my province, but it is one of those things that this very project was to avoid—the dangers of the navigation down on the south coast of Nova Scotia between Sable Island and the iron bound coast of the province, and therefore I could not sit still and hear that noble bay maligned, lighted as it is from top to bottom by one of the best systems of light in the Dominion, and also down the American coast, which is a better lighted coast than perhaps that of England—lighted from Maine to Florida—and that is one of the advantages which will be held out to shipowners and others who desire to carry trade over this railway and down this bay to the United States and even to the West Indies. But I did not go into the commercial argument, for the obvious reason that it is a matter for the company to enquire into. They know what they are about and if they are satisfied I am. I could talk for half an hour on that subject: but I do not wish to waste the time of the House. The Government and the country are committed to it. The contract has been signed by the Minister of Railways, and yet hon. members ask that we should vote to repudiate that and to throw out this Bill.

HON. MR. TURNER—I confess that I am more bewildered with regard to this than any other measure which has come before the House. I think it is better that I should get further information, and I am therefore prepared to vote for the second reading of the Bill.

HON. MR. WARK—My hon. friend from Westmoreland has saved me the trouble of referring to the jealousies which have always cropped out at Halifax when this project is mentioned. Every time this question is before the country whether as a canal or as a railway that disposition has been shown. It is only the other day that we received a round robin on the subject of union between Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick. This is a poor way to forward such an undertaking. We want direct communication with Prince Edward Island, and I think Prince Edward Island wants it with us. Is it reasonable that Halifax should stand in the way of the produce of Prince Edward Island coming round to St. John if a better price is offered there for it? I think it is only reasonable that we who wish to have a short route to St. John should get it and have the advantage of competition. It is no argument that there is now no traffic between the Bay of Fundy and the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Open the way for that traffic and we do not know to what extent it will develop. We have to look merely at the trade of the Bay of Fundy; but if the whole of Western Canada find that trade with the West Indies can be carried on safer and better terms by this route than by sailing round the dangerous coast of Nova Scotia, it is impossible to say to what extent that trade will develop in consequence of the construction of this road. The promoter of this undertaking is my next neighbor. I know he has been engaged in engineering for 20 years at least. He is not an old man, but he is very energetic. He has been an engineer in South America, and in different parts of the world, and he has carefully investigated this subject and deserves great credit for the pains and energy he has bestowed upon it. Therefore he is not promoting it for his own interest, but it is a public work in which he has taken a deep interest, and I think no obstacles ought to be thrown in his way.

THE SPEAKER—The question is now on the third reading of the Bill.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—My reason for voting for the Bill is that it seemed to be a part of the arrangement entered into by the Conference of 1867; consequently, having voted for Confederation at the time, it is my duty to carry out this part of the agreement. But I wish it to be an example to our colleagues in this House, that if we stick to our agreement made verbally, we will also expect them to stick by our agreement made constitutionally.

HON. MR. POIRIER—My reason for voting for the amendment is this: I favor personally the building of the Marine Transport Railway, but I would prefer the building of a canal, as being more permanent; and I believe sufficient attention has not been given to the feasibility of the canal between Shediac and Moncton, which would favor the interest of vessel owners much better than this marine railway. That is the reason why I voted for the three months' hoist.

HON. MR. WARK—Ought not the agreement between the Company and the Government form part of the Bill, or a schedule of the Bill? In the Pacific Railway Act the agreement forms part of the measure.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I would say to my hon. friend that the Act, which is on the Statute book, authorizes the Government to enter into the agreement. If there is any information desired upon that point I will lay a copy of the agreement on the Table. The agreement has been entered into, and has been signed and sealed by both parties.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (114) "An Act to amend the Acts respecting the British Canadian Bank." (Mr. Turner)

Bill (69) "An Act respecting the Bank of Yarmouth." (Mr. Power.)

Bill (91), "An Act to incorporate the Yarmouth Steamship Company, (Limited). (Mr. Plumb.)

Bill (90), "An Act respecting the Montreal Board of Trade." (Mr. Plumb.)

Bill (75), "An Act to incorporate the School Savings Bank." (Mr. Girard.)

HALIFAX REFORMATORY BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. POWER moved the second reading of Bill (O), "An Act to amend an Act respecting a reformatory for certain juvenile offenders in the County of Halifax, in the Province of Nova Scotia." He said: This parliament passed an Act in 1884 providing that juvenile criminals in Halifax City might be sentenced to a certain reformatory which was then expected to be established. Since that time the reformatory in question has been established, and it has been found desirable to give to the reformatory, with the concurrence of the magistrate who sentenced the boy to the institution, and with the leave of the Minister of Justice, the power of granting tickets of leave to boys after a certain period for good behavior. This is the substance of the Bill. It was felt that to keep every boy who was sentenced there for some trifling offence, for a period of three or five years would involve a large expenditure, and would render the benefits of the institution smaller than they ought to be; consequently this amendment has been asked for.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

ANIMALS CONTAGIOUS DISEASES BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (19) "An Act to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act."

In the Committee,

HON. MR. DICKEY said: I was asked in what respect this Bill differed from the Act which it proposes to amend. The first clause in the Bill repeals section 13 of the Act and a clause is substituted therefor which relates to compensation. There is no difference as to that clause in the former Act except in the case of grade cattle. By the former Act the amount of compensation could not exceed $40. By this Bill it is raised to $50. In the proviso that follows, it is provided that such compensation may be withheld in whole or in part where the owner of the animal has been guilty, in relation to the animal, of an offence against this Act. In the Act itself there was no modification of it at all. The remaining part of this section was not in the Act at all, that that where the animal being a foreign one was, in the judgment of Minister, diseased at the time of entering Canada, compensation may be withheld. Strange to say under the Act a foreign animal could be brought in, and compensation had to be given if the animal was found to be diseased and had to be killed.

HON. MR. NELSON, from the Committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

ADULTERATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. DICKEY moved the second reading of Bill (108), "An Act to amend the Adulteration Act." He said: The object of this Bill is to provide that any analyst who undertakes the responsible duties appertaining to this Act, shall have been previously examined, to see whether he is qualified or not to perform the duties of the office.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. DICKEY moved the second reading of Bill (109) "An Act in further amendment of the Weights and Measures Act of 1879." He said: The object of this Bill is explained in the first section, and the sub-section, that defining and specifying what weights, measures, weighing machines, and balances shall or shall not be admitted to verification. In point of fact I suppose it has been an omission, and there can be no objection to the Bill.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

COMMISSIONS TO PUBLIC OFFICERS BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. DICKEY moved the second reading of Bill (110), "An Act respecting commissions to public officers of Canada." He said: The object of this Bill is to enable the Government to grant commissions to certain of the civil service employes, some of whom have commissions, and some have not. The object, I suppose, is to make it uniform that the civil service employes generally shall be entitled to have commissions and to be paid for them.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Does it apply to those who had commissions before this Bill was introduced?

HON. MR. DICKEY—No, it provides that nothing done under this Act shall affect any commission now in force.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned at 6 p. m.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Monday, May 10th, 1886.

The Speaker took the Chair at three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

LANDS IN PARISH OF STE. AGATHE, MANITOBA.

MOTION.

HON. MR. GUÉVREMONT moved—
That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House, a copy of the Order in Council authorizing the issue of Letters Patent in favor of Mr. Longsdale for Lot No. 133, in the Parish of Ste. Agathe, Manitoba.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I am requested to state that there will be no objection to this address.

The motion was agreed to.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY.

MOTION.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE moved—

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before this House, a copy of the plea or defence in writing of Warden Laviolette, filed at the end of the inquiry made in 1884 into the administration of the Penitentiary of St. Vincent de Paul by Messieurs Moylan and Baillargé.

HON. MR. DICKEY—This motion will not be opposed as there is no objection to the address.

QUESTIONS OF PRIVILEGE.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Before the orders of the day are called I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to call attention to an erroneous report which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of the debate upon the Pictou Branch Railway Bill which made me use those words—“That I believe that the road was to be built simply because Sir Charles Tupper owned land in that locality.” Those are the words attributed to me. The gentleman who reports this Chamber probably misapprehended the meaning of my words, and I would not for a moment infer that that was done intentionally, because the gentleman who reports this Chamber does so with very great fairness and a desire to do justice. As regards the statement that Sir Charles Tupper owned land in that constituency, no member of this House would ever make such a charge against a Minister of the Crown or against any member of Parliament on such ground. It would be unworthy of any member of this House to make such a charge, and no one would suppose that a Minister of the Crown or a member of Parliament would advocate a railway branch simply upon the ground that he owned land in the district through which it runs. What I did say is, that that Bill was brought in to vote $250,000 in a district which was in the constituency or near the constituency which the Hon. Sir Charles Tupper represented, and I was corrected by the hon. gentleman on my left (Mr. Howlan) upon that point; but I was afterwards informed by another hon. gentleman (Mr. McInnes,) that his son represented that district ; I again repeat what I did say, was, that the money was lavished and entirely thrown away simply with the view to the general election about to take place at an early day.

HON. MR. POWER—Before the orders of the day are called, I should like to ask the hon. gentleman who represents the Government in this Chamber, if he has yet ascertained when papers, asked for a month ago—copies of the commissions and instructions to commissioners to inquire into the rebellion losses in the North-West—will be laid on the table.

HON. MR. SMITH—I will have the information very likely to-morrow.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I rise with great reluctance to a question of privilege. A few days ago the hon. gentleman from Woodstock, who has quoted from the Ottawa Citizen, read an extract from that paper and animadverted upon it in very touching terms, and I have ascertained since that the hon. gentleman had altered the official report, which contained the specific language that he complained of, and brought this matter up before the House as a question of privilege upon his alteration of the notes in the hands of the reporters. Of course, it is understood perfectly well that any hon. gentleman has access to the reporter's notes, and if he finds that on the impulse of the moment he has not expressed himself as clearly as he intended, very large latitude has been heretofore allowed him ; but I have yet to learn that the privilege extends so far that any hon. gentleman is permitted to bring up as a charge against the reporters of a newspaper the use of the very language which corresponds to the language taken down by the official reporters in this House, and that has been the case with the hon. gentleman from Woodstock. I can substantiate that fact, having ascertained it. That came to my knowledge because I remembered the language perfectly well that the hon. gentleman used, and I therefore do not put much reliance on the corrections which he has made in the report for the purpose of bringing it into harmony with what he says is his own recollection, because I have enquired of the reporters, and learned from them that he has altered the very speech which he now complains of being misrepresented.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—How does the hon. gentleman come to know what was reported?

HON. MR. PLUMB—I will answer the hon. gentleman. I saw that the language in the report that he used was not the language that I heard him use, and I inquired of the reporters who had the original notes to substantiate it.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I venture to express to-day what I have not done before, that I really believe that the hon. gentleman from Niagara is guilty of a great many of the perversions of my statements in this House by his going to reporters and getting them to pervert the language that I respectfully use.

HON. GENTLEMEN—Order, order.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I call the hon. gentlemen to order ; what he says is utterly false.

HON. MR. MACDONALD (B. C.)—I rise to a point of order. There is no question before the House. The hon. gentleman from Woodstock made his explanation, the hon. gentleman from Niagara has replied to him, and the matter should drop.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I would reply to the hon. gentlemen who aspire to become the Lieutenant Governor of British Columbia : am I not allowed to reply to the gross charge brought against me by my hon. friend on my left?

HON. MR. PLUMB—I am not your friend. Don't call me your friend.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Then the hon. gentleman on my left. I appeal to this House is there one gentleman in this Chamber, except the hon. gentleman from Niagara, who heard me say that Sir Charles Tupper caused that money to be voted because he had land there? Is there one gentleman in this House who heard me say so, and if so let him rise now ?

HON. MR. ALEXANDER.

HON. MR. BOSTFORD—That is not the question at all.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I call the hon. gentlemen to order. I convict him of stating what is false.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Sit down; boor, boor !

HON. MR. PLUMB—The hon. gentleman has misconstrued what I have said.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I have the floor ; sit down !

THE SPEAKER—I call upon the House to assist me to enforce order. My attention was called a few moment's ago, by the hon. gentleman from British Columbia, to the fact that there is no question before the House. Two hon. gentlemen rose to a question of privilege and fully exhausted their right in doing so and sat down. If the hon. gentleman from Woodstock had any explanation to make in reply to the charge of the hon. member from Niagara, he had a right then to make it ; if he had any explanation on that point to offer there would be no objection, but he does not address himself to the point.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I think on the Pictou Railway question and also on the Chignecto Railway question I occupied considerable time in giving my views to the House, and although I observe that the hon. gentleman from Woodstock and the hon. member from Niagara are fully reported in the newspaper summary, I was entirely ignored, so I think I have a grievance as well as the hon. gentleman.

THE SPEAKER—I would call the attention of hon. gentlemen to an irregularity of constant recurrence in this House. When an hon. gentleman is called to order it is his duty to take his place. When the Speaker rises to enforce the authority of the House one or two hon. gentlemen still insist upon keeping the floor. If I had the authority of the Speaker of the other House, I would name those hon. gentlemen and they would be immediately taken in charge by the Sergeant-at-Arms. Unless the House will, by some motion of censure, visit hon. gentlemen guilty of conduct which strikes at the foundation of all order, it will be impossible for me to maintain order in the chair.

PROCEEDINGS BEFORE JUSTICES BILL.

COMMONS AMENDMENT CONSIDERED.

HON. MR. VIDAL moved that the House do concur in the amendments made by the House of Commons to Bill (A), "An Act to make further provisions respecting Summary Proceedings before Justices and Magistrates." He said : In assuming charge of this Bill, in the absence of the hon. member from Barrie, I did so in the hope that he would be back in his place to take charge of it at its present stage. However, he has not returned, and I propose, layman though I am, to ask the House to adopt the amendments proposed by the House of Commons. If it were the introduction of the Bill, I would not undertake a task requiring professional knowledge. But in glancing over the amendments made by the House of Commons I see nothing which requires a legal training to enable one to understand their bearing. They are very simple and in no way affect the principle of the Bill. They will be found on page 234 of our minutes. I may remind the House that the Bill was very fully and freely discussed in this chamber before it was sent to the House of Commons. The first amendment is on page 1, line 10, after "shall" insert "on being removed by certiorari," which has no effect on the Bill except to make it more clear. The next amendment is on page 2, line 15, after "peace" insert "on the ground that such justice has exceeded his jurisdiction," merely stating the ground on which the writ of certiorari shall be obtained. On the next page of the Bill there is an entire alteration of a clause. The 6th clause of the Bill, as it left this House, is struck out and one is substituted for it. On comparing the two clauses it will be seen at once that the only change is to make the process more clear, and to give the court an authority not specially mentioned in the Bill originally. I think it is a very decided improvement. The next amendment makes no change whatever in the intent, or meaning, or object to be attained, but simply changes the process by which it is to be done, and the language is made clearer. As the Bill left us, the description of the procedure was less clear and distinct than this amendment makes it. The two last amendments merely specify that the procedure shall not be unnecessarily delayed, but shall be forthwith accomplished. These are the amendments, and they are so simple in their character that I have no hesitation in asking the House to concur in them.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—I would ask my hon. friend to let the Bill stand for a day so that members may have an opportunity to examine these amendments. It is impossible from just listening to the hon. member reading them to catch exactly their bearing on the Bill as we understood it. If my hon. friend would allow the Bill to stand until members have an opportunity to examine the amendments—

HON. MR. ALLAN—They are all printed in the Minutes.

HON. MR. VIDAL—They have been on the Minutes ever since the 30th of April, and every member who takes an interest in the Bill has had ample opportunity to examine them. I do not think there is anything which renders it necessary to have further discussion upon the measure.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman who asked for a postponement of the measure has been absent from the House for some little time and has not had an opportunity of seeing those amendments. I hope the hon. member from Sarnia will let the Bill stand over. I am satisfied when the hon. member has looked at them that he will have no objection to them; they seem all to have the object of improving the Bill.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—It is not usual, when an hon. member in charge of a bill is asked to allow it to stand for a day, to refuse the request. I think it would be only a matter of courtesy to let the Bill stand.

HON. MR. VIDAL—The hon. gentleman did not give me a chance to state what I would do. If the hon. member from Toronto had mentioned that he had not had time to look at the Bill, and would like to have an opportunity to see the amendment, I would at once have acceded to his request, but I understood him to put it on the ground that the House had not had time to look at the amendments.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—I had the opportunity, but have not looked at them; they escaped my notice.

The Bill was allowed to stand until tomorrow.

NORTH-WEST CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. CLEWOW moved the second reading of Bill (17) "An Act to amend the Act respecting the North-West Central Railway Company." He said:—Originally this Company was incorporated under the name and style of the "Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway Company." Several amendments were made to their charter in 1884, and the name was changed to "The North-West Central Railway Company." A considerable amount of money was expended by the first projectors of that road, resulting in the grading of some 70 miles, but owing to natural difficulties, they were unable to continue the prosecution of the work, and consequently this new Act was obtained with the expectation that they would be able to complete the road. Unfortunately, when they obtained the alteration of the Act of 1884 the time had expired within which they could get capitalists to undertake the work, and they are obliged to appeal to this House for the amendments which they now require. This Company assumes the liabilities of the Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway Company's construction, which at the present time amount to something like $129,000. I believe the Company are in a position to complete the road as was originally intended. As most hon. members are aware, the line traverses a very fertile and well settled section of the North-West, and will be of immense advantage to the development of that portion of the country through which it passes. The people of the North-West are clamoring for this road. The Legislature of Manitoba have addressed Parliament by telegrams on several occasions about it, and I find to-day that a telegram was received on Saturday addressed to Sir Hector Langevin, Chairman of the Railways and Canals Committee, from Hon. A. Murray, Speaker of the Manitoba Legislature, which explains itself:—

HON. MR. VIDAL.

“The Legislative Assembly has adopted the following resolution: Resolved,—That the Speaker be requested to telegraph to the Chairman of the Railway Committee of the House of Commons, thanking him for communicating the decision of the Committee in reference to the North-West Central Railway, and expressing the gratification of this House to find that the Committee, on the recommendation of the Privy Council, have taken such action as will secure the construction of fifty miles of the road before the end of the present year.”

This road, as I said before, is much required for the development of that section of the country, and unless it is constructed the result will be that a great many settlers, who have taken up land in that section, will be obliged to vacate it, because without any communication it is impossible for them to find a market for their products. It is in the interest of the Dominion generally that this road should be constructed as early as possible. Hon. gentlemen are aware that there has been considerable criticism in another place, and in the press of the country, respecting the conduct of certain gentlemen connected with this road. I hope that this incident to which I refer will not be imported into the discussion on this Bill at the present time, because provision has been made by which the Governor-in-Council is empowered, before acting on this measure, to determine as to the ability of the gentlemen who undertake to construct this road to carry it to completion, and I think that this provision will remove that source of irritation as respects the parties connected with the enterprise. If they are not found able to build the road to the satisfaction of the Government, this Bill enables the Government to take it from them and put it in the hands of other parties who will take charge of it and carry it to completion. It is highly desirable that no time should be lost, and I have no doubt that the House will readily consent to the second reading of the Bill. My hon. friend from Manitoba (Mr. Girard), who is to second this motion, is thoroughly acquainted with the country through which the road is to pass and will be able to satisfy the House that it is requisite in the interests of the country.

HON. MR. GIRARD—I have been asked by the hon. gentleman from Ottawa to second his motion, and I do so with great pleasure. Much good is to be expected from the construction of that road. We have lines running from one point of the Province to another, but this one will pass through the centre of Manitoba and will do much good for the whole country. This is not a new project. The Company was incorporated some time ago to construct the road and it now asks from Parliament an extension of the time. That extension is granted by this Bill but on condition that 50 miles of the road shall be constructed during the summer. In case the work is not done they cannot take advantage of their charter. Under these circumstances I second the motion with pleasure, and I am satisfied that there will be a unanimous vote in support of the passage of the Bill.

HON. MR. POWER—I do not think that this is a Bill which should be allowed to pass sub silentio. Hon. gentlemen are quite aware that the Bill has attracted a great deal of attention both in the other House and throughout the country at large. I think that it ought at any rate to receive some attention in the Senate before it is read the second time. There are several circumstances connected with this Bill which make it somewhat different from the Private Bills which generally come before us. In the first place the third reading of this Bill was carried in the other Chamber by a very small majority indeed, I think about twenty.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—Twenty-six.

HON. MR. POWER—That is a significant fact, and indicates that the Bill stands in different position from ordinary Private Bills. In the first place, it became quite clear in the discussion which took place before the railway committee of the other House and in the House of Commons, that the gentlemen who held the charter for the construction of this railway do not themselves propose to build the road. On the contrary those gentlemen since they got the amended charter in 1884, have been endeavoring to sell it in such a way as should insure the construction of the road, as my hon. friend from Manitoba tells us, which is a most desirable object, and at the same time put a considerable sum of money into their own pockets. It was asserted, and it was not denied, that the principal promoter of this Bill had asked the sum of I think $1,500 a mile for the rights of the present holders of the charter; so that the people who hold the charter are not going to build the road themselves or pay anything to the people who construct the road, but those who are to build the road are to pay the present holders of the charter for permission to construct the line. That is a singular circumstance in the history of railway building in this country and sufficiently striking to prevent this House consenting to the second reading of the Bill without some consideration. There is another circumstance connected with this Bill which requires attention. The charter of the Company had lapsed, but the Minister of the Interior notwithstanding that fact, did not wait until this Company had received legislation from Parliament to put them in a position to go on with their work and to keep their charter alive; but he continued to them the immense land grant which they had got, without waiting for, the action of Parliament. I think that that also is a significant fact. This Company has a grant of I think 6,400 acres of land per mile—valuable land in a part of the country where it is likely to become more valuable. The revelations in the other end of the building have shown that this is a clear case of brokerage in railway chartering—brokerage of the worst kind, because the parties trafficking in this charter are some of them at any rate members of Parliament. It does seem to me that even if we do read this Bill the second time, we should, when referring it to committee, instruct the committee to make inquiry into the circumstances connected with this enterprise—into the relations of certain directors to the Company and into the transactions which have come to light in the other House. I think that we owe it to our own dignity as a House, and we owe it also to the purity of Parliament.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—I have heard the remarks which have fallen from the hon. member for Halifax, and I have also heard the statements to which he refers that were made in another place. He was quite right in stating that the assertion was made in another place, that the promoters of this Bill were offering to sell the charter, but I have looked pretty closely after what was going on, and I fail to see any proof of that. The assertion also is made that they were to have $1,500 a mile to themselves out of the contract. I fail to see any proof in support of that statement.

HON. MR. POWER—It has not been denied.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—That the promoters of this Bill are not going to build the road themselves is not surprising; I do not know any company that does build a road. They generally give it out to contractors, and I know, not from hearsay, but from absolute knowledge, that these gentlemen are in a fair way, after this Bill passes, to give out the work to good contractors who are perfectly able, from their position, wealth and resources, to go on and build the road. I know the country pretty well and it is all important that those people should have that road built at once. If they do not get 50 miles of it built this season a great many people will suffer from the want of it, and although there was a great deal of cry out about this contract, I think it was principally because a couple of gentlemen quarrelled amongst themselves which caused them to do foolish things. I do not think that we should make the country suffer on that account, and I fail to see anything yet that is impure or wrong in this matter. There is nothing proved in that way. They get just such a charter granted them as we give to others.

It is a very important road indeed, going through a country where they have no railway at present, and I think if any member in this House who feels like voting against this Bill had a turn through that country for two or three weeks he would certainly vote for the measure. I shall be very sorry myself if the Bill does not pass. I have no interest in it but I have a great deal of interest in the people of the North-West, and always have had ever since I first went there to live 11 years ago. Because strong assertions are made, and there has been a great deal of quarrelling about it, we are not bound to believe charges unless they are proved. I hope that this Bill will not only be read the second time but that it will be allowed to go to committee.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I have devoted considerable time to ascertain the facts with regard to this charter. I believe the senior member for Halifax has stated the facts to the House in a very fair and correct way. I believe the facts can be substantiated, notwithstanding what has fallen from the hon. gentleman from Montreal. This is a Bill which has led to great acrimony of feeling in the Railway Committee of the House of Commons. I am informed that a charter was granted to certain parties to construct this road in the North-West, and amongst those gentlemen were two prominent members of the House of Commons. During the investigation before the Railway Committee of the other House there were angry accusations and recriminations which certainly were not very seemly, and to which I shall not refer, because it has nothing to do with our own Chamber; but I think that the investigation before the Railway Committee certainly ought to lead this House to one conclusion, and that is that it is not proper that members of either branch of the Legislature should obtain control of railway charters. It is not in the public interest. It is not seemly. It is likely to lead to many accusations as to the motives which induce those members of Parliament to support such measures. What can be more damaging to Parliament, than that the people should suppose that members come here to obtain railway charters for the purpose of speculation? What could be more damaging to either branch of Legislature, and notwithstanding all that has been said by the hon. gentleman from Montreal, the facts which have transpired proclaim very loudly, to my judgment, that there are very good grounds for the charge that that charter was obtained for the purpose of sale. In the conflict between those two members of the House of Commons, one member charged the other with having out-manceuvred him on the board, thereby securing the entire control as we often see on bank boards. A gentleman somewhat sharp and perhaps not over scrupulous, very often gets the advantage over an upright man. Very frequently the unscrupulous man gets the advantage, and when he gets the control of a bank board, or of a railway board, he is in a position to profit by his opportunities. I have no doubt from what I am told that there is a prospect of that member obtaining $150,000 from the sale of this charter, because the lands that were given by the Government to this company are likely to become more valuable every day, and the gentleman who has control of the board can go down to New York city and say, "Here are so many thousand acres of first-rate quality lands likely to double in value, and there is a great deal of money in the enterprise." Now is it in accordance with the dignity and honor of Parliament that members of the legislature should be able, to obtain through their influence with the Government, those charters? I do not believe it, and I think we ought to lay down the principle in this Chamber that we will allow no bill to go through in which any member of Parliament has his name as one of the promoters. It is a sad thing to see a Parliament, the members of which appear to have been schooled, one to get charters for railways, another to get timber limits, a third to get something else. It has become a question of selfish aggrandizement, instead of coming here with the noble object of serving their country faithfully and making Parliament beloved and esteemed by the people of the country. I say we ought to lay down the principle that no Bill should pass through this House with the name of any member of Parliament in it as one of its incorporators. Then the question comes up why should we grant charters at all? The state of Michigan grants no railway charters. Having constructed the Pacific Railway as a great trunk line from ocean to ocean, why should we grant railway charters for local railways at all? Where the country requires railway facilities cannot capitalists undertake to build their own roads without a charter? With all deference to the opinion of the House, because there are many hon. gentlemen with far more experience than I have as parliamentarians and lawyers, I make the suggestion that we should frame the general Railway Act in such a manner that any parties requiring to construct railways may carry them out under that Act. Thus we shall have no more of this unseemly traffic by members of Parliament in railway charters. What a sad spectacle to behold the people's representatives trafficking in railway charters in the way we have lately observed. I shall oppose the second reading of this Bill.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—The hon. gentleman may be right in his suggestion about building railways under the general Act; but as far as subsidies and concerned, they can only be got through parliament. I do not see that the influence of a member of parliament has had any effect in this case, unless it be that the grant of 6,400 acres per mile to this railway has been more than the usual quantity of land given to such enterprises. If a larger subsidy has been given in this special case, then it would be open to suspicion, and some satisfactory reason should be given for making an exception in its favor. It does not seem, as far as I have seen, that any special privilege has been given to this railway; but as far as I can learn from the evidence it has not been denied that those parties intend to sell this charter at so much a mile. I am not aware that that has been specifically denied, but it is clear that if these railways are simply projected as a speculation to enable the promoters to speculate on the charters for them, it is time that parliament should interfere, and those bonuses that are given in order to strengthen the charters, if they are to be used simply as speculations and dealt with as so much plunder by members who obtain them, some legislation should be introduced to prevent the abuse, and the sooner we get it the better. It always looks suspicious when a member of parliament obtains a charter of this kind with special privileges, if he is a supporter of the government of the day. A provision is inserted in this Bill that unless the company show their bona fides and give sufficient evidence that they are capable of constructing this road, the charter will be cancelled. It is evidently an important road; the people of the North-West are looking for it and pressing on the Government that at least fifty miles of it should be constructed this summer, if not by the present company, by some other means. If this land grant is unusually large under the circumstances which have been developed in another place, I say it is a suspicious element; at the same time it is not sufficient to induce me to oppose the second reading of the Bill.

HON. MR. SUTHERLAND—It is exceedingly unfortunate that such an enterprise as this should be the cause of a squabble between parties, because I consider there is a great deal of that in connection with this Bill. It is also said here, that a new departure should be taken, and that no member of Parliament should be allowed to have anything to do with a railway charter. It would be exceedingly unfortunate if that principle were carried out on this occasion, when a Bill of so much consequence to the North-West is under consideration. As regards the many reports that we have seen in the newspapers, I also fail to see that there is any truth in them or that any of them have been proved; and if there is any intention on the part of the House to take a new departure in regard to railway Bills, I hope they will not do so while this measure is under consideration, because it is well known that we have passed many railway bills in which members of Parliament have been interested. Considering that the Legislature of Manitoba has taken so much interest in this measure, that it has on two different occasions telegraphed down here to members of the Government to the effect that the Bill should be passed, so as to ensure the immediate construction of the road, I feel pretty sure that the Government believe that the railway will be carried on this season, and, if not by the present Company, that they have provided means by which to cancel the charter and allow others who are able to build the road to do so this summer. I hope the House will give the matter fair consideration and consent to the second reading of the Bill.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I do not pretend to go into a discussion upon the merits of this Bill, for it is well understood that it is the most important railway which has now a charter running through the North-West; and I believe that I can quote the words of the gentleman who is the leader of the party opposite, who opposed the Bill in the first instance—I can quote his words, for I heard them myself, when he said this was the most important line, except the Canadian Pacific Railway, which was before Parliament. I understand that the people of Manitoba and the North-West are exceedingly anxious to have the road proceeded with. I know nothing about the scandals connected with it. They are not before us in any way; we are not seized with them, and I do not intend in any action that I take in this House to be influenced by outside gossip. I have no doubt, if the Bill gets a second reading and goes to Committee, that if there are any persons opposing the measure, and if there is anything wrong connected with it, we shall hear it. It can never be seriously proposed that members of Parliament should be prevented from becoming directors of railways: and as the hon. gentleman from Selkirk says, it is hardly fair to make a new departure in the case of this Bill, which is of such importance to the North-West. The senior member from Halifax has probably forgotten that the Minister of the Interior, during the administration of the Government which he supported, brought in a Bill to charter railways in the North-West—a general Bill—a Bill enacting that any number of persons, six or more, who choose to associate themselves together for the purpose of building railways, on filing a certificate with the Minister of the Interior, and paying in $600 a mile became vested with the privileges of a special charter. They were allowed to construct railways and to take public lands—to take, not such lands as the Government might choose to grant them, but lands on either side of the line through which the road passed. They were allowed to take 6,000 acres per mile for lines south of the Canadian Pacific Railway and 12,800 acres per mile for all roads built north of that, and this road is north of it. It was also provided that the homestead regulations—regulations affecting settlers—would be suspended for the purpose of allowing companies building these roads to get their lands. No settler had a right to go in there in preference to the projectors of these railways: and they were allowed to take their lands when they had built only 20 miles of road. They were not compelled to build more than 20 miles: they could lay 20 miles of track in the best part, and claim their land grant. They were not restricted as to the kind of road they were to build: they were not restricted as to the grade, or as to the price which they were to charge, or as to the construction of those roads. They could put on any kind of material—scrap iron if they chose—for rails. They were not restricted as to the time in which they were to build. That Bill was brought in by the Minister of the Interior under the Mackenzie Administration, and it was at the end of the session of 1878, just before the general election. It was advocated very strongly by three or four prominent members of the House upon the present opposition side—Mr. Charlton was one of them—and it was discussed for several days. One gentleman said that there could be no harm in such a proposition; that if it passed, it could only take half the public lands in the North-West, and I do not think that gentlemen now, who have advocated a measure like that, can be particularly squeamish about any subsidy given to a railway which is a useful enterprise and desired by the public, after thus committing themselves to a measure of that kind. However, so strenuous was the opposition—so much was it pressed upon the House the undesirability of that measure and that it would necessarily involve the destruction of the Canadian Pacific Railway by tapping that road at every point by lines running from the North-West to the South-East, that after the Bill had been introduced and discussed and had become the property of the House as it were, it was withdrawn. There was such a feeling against it that it could not be proceeded with, and after the close of the session it seemed so desirable that we should have a record of the principles which governed the Government in regard to the construction of railways in the North-West, that we considered we should have that Bill before us as an evidence of those principles. So we endeavored to find copies of the Bill, and to my extreme surprise not a copy of it could be found within the purlieus of this building, except accidentally one copy in the hands of one of the clerks, and upon that copy we had the Bill printed in order that it might be shown what the policy of my hon. friend's party was in relation to building railways in the North-West. I trust that this Bill will get a second reading, and be referred to committee: and if there are any objections they will be there discussed and reported back to this House, and we shall all have then a knowledge as to what the particular points are. There are a great many pages of debate upon this subject, and although there was a division in the other House, with a majority of 27 in favor of the Bill, there were only 137 members present. There were only 82 of the ministerial supporters present, while there was a very large proportion of members on the other side, who ordinarily voted on that side, with the exception of eight or ten; consequently there was a small majority in favor of the Bill. I trust the House will allow the measure to be read the second time.

HON. MR. DEVER—I fully agree with my hon. friend behind me that all members of Parliament should not be excluded from railway charters. I believe there are honest members amongst us, and I believe there are honest members in the House of Commons; but I cannot help thinking, after the exposure that occurred in that House a short time ago, that we ought to look carefully into these matters and see that we are not abettors in such legislation as we have seen going through that House. If I mistake not, one of the members of that House has been accused in the public press that he was about to receive in lands or in stock equivalent to $33,000 for his services in carrying this measure through. If that is true, I think it is a sad state of affairs, and I cannot see how hon. gentlemen can rise in this House and justify it merely on the allegation that certain other gentlemen on a former occasion conducting the Government in this country had been guilty of similar conduct. Public men at a former time may have been very bad. No doubt they were; at all events, I never saw any specially bad legislation of theirs coming under my observation. But whether they did wrong or not, I do not see that it is any justification for hon. members in this House, undertaking to bulldoze other gentlemen into the belief that because one party did wrong there is no harm in the other party doing wrong also. I believe it behooves us, under present circumstances, to see that we conduct the legislation of this House in an honorable and straightforward manner, because there is at present in this country a very prevalent feeling that we are not doing so—that Parliament is not doing so—that there is wrong-doing going on in the legislation of the country, and I think gentlemen placed in the position we are, have a right to view critically every measure that comes before us. I have done so in the past as well as I could, but I must say that I did not give measures the consideration that I should have done, when I come to see some of the exposures that have taken place recently. I do not wish to accuse friends with whom I have been identified. I have looked on them in the past as men of honor, but I must say that matters have lately come to my notice to such an extent that I shall critically examine henceforth all measures that come before me. Notwithstanding the fact that I hold these views, I cannot see that I can prevent this Bill at present from being read the second time. I am satisfied that it should go to a second reading and be referred to the committee; and if those allegations that have been made in the Lower House can be sustained, I certainly should oppose the Bill.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time on a division.

HON. MR. CLEWOW moved that the Bill be referred to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbors.

HON. MR. POWER—I wish to propose an amendment. The hon. gentleman from Niagara has adopted a line which is not usual with that hon. gentleman. He adopted this line, that members of the Senate should close their eyes and their ears to things which everybody else has seen and heard, and that when a measure comes up here which has been discussed extensively in the press and in the other Chamber, we are to receive it with minds which are perfect blanks as regards that measure. Now that is not the practice which the hon. gentleman has generally adopted. He has had a good deal to say about what has been stated in the other Chamber and what the press have said. The hon. member first said that statements had been made but not proved. Statements were made on the veracity of Conservative members of the other House, which the hon. gentleman from Niagara may not think of much value, but still they were made in that way, and the point is that the substantial statements have not been denied. That is the point. It was a very simple thing for the promoters of this Bill to have denied the statements if they could have done so. But the evidence is satisfactory to all reasonable minds, that those who hold this charter hold it for the purpose of making money out of it, and not for the purpose of constructing the road. The hon. gentleman refers to telegrams from the Legislature of Manitoba. What do they mean? They mean simply that the Legislature is anxious that this road shall be built, and would, perhaps, have been better satisfied if the Government had taken it out of the hands of the people who now hold it and undertaken to build it themselves, or get it built by responsible persons.

HON. MR. DEVER—The Government have that power.

HON. MR. POWER—If everything is as serene and lovely as the hon. gentlemen say, will they explain why this 4th clause in the Bill

"4. This Act shall not come into force or have any effect unless on or before the first day of June, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six, the company shall establish, to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council, that it has made effective provision for the completion of the first fifty miles of the railway by the first day of December next, and for the completion thereof within the time fixed by the charter, nor unless and until a proclamation shall be issued declaring the fact, and authorizing the company to proceed with the work."

Now, this Company have had the charter—the present holders of it—for about two years, and nothing has been done in the way of constructing this railway, and if an important portion of the North-West country has not been settled for want of this line, why has it been? It is not because people could not be found to construct it on fair and equitable terms, but because the gentlemen who held the charter made claims that were exorbitant. They wanted not $33,000 as the hon. gentleman behind me stated, but $600,000; they wanted to get a sum amounting to about that for their interest in the charter. That is the reason why the road has not been built; and I think we need not go beyond the face of this Bill to see that it is a matter that requires some consideration and inquiry. The hon. gentleman from Niagara, with that fancy for archæology which characterizes him, has told us that he and his friends succeeded by a very careful investigation in securing a single copy of a Bill which was introduced by a Minister of the late Government, which Bill did not become law. The then Minister of the Interior I presume found that he had made a mistake with the Bill, altho' he thought it was a good one, inasmuch as it would encourage the construction of railways in the North-West. He found afterwards that he had made a mistake and dropped the measure; and it must be remembered in speaking of the land grants provided in that Bill that in 1876 or in 1878 the land in the North-West was not as valuable as it is now. We had not spent so many millions of dollars to make it valuable. If there is any argument to be drawn from the language of the hon. gentleman from Niagara, it is that we should oppose this measure; because he opposed in the most vigorous manner the measure introduced by the Minister of the Interior and he and his friends had that Bill printed as a campaign document to make capital against the Government, one of whose members had introduced the measure. Here is a Bill which proposes to give a very generous land grant. We find the most suspicious circumstances connected with it, and the hon. gentleman refers to this old story for the purpose of founding the argument for doing what he thought should not be done then. But there is one circumstance which I forgot to mention in speaking before, and which I think gives us a very considerable insight into the character of this measure. When the hon. gentleman who represents Kings, Nova Scotia, in the other House was pushed off the Board of Directors of this railway, the chief promoter substituted the name of one of the members from Pictou. I presume there is no reason why I should not mention his name—Mr. Tupper. He was not consulted, I have understood. He was told that it was desirable there should be a representative from the Maritime Provinces on the board, and he allowed his name to be used; but as soon as this matter was brought before the Railway Committee of the other House, and as soon as the member for Pictou found that his name had become connected with something which was probably not very creditable, he immediately wrote to the principal promoter of the Bill, and asked him to strike his name off the board of directors. If this transaction had been clear, clean and honourable, it would not have been necessary for a man who had some regard for his honour as a man and as a member of the House of Commons to quit the board of directors. I think if there is nothing else connected with this measure but that fact, that a member of the House of Commons, who had some respect for his position, felt obliged to leave the board of directors on account of transactions which had taken place in connection with the road, that is enough to put us on enquiry in regard to this Bill. I did not make any strong opposition to the second reading, because there is something in what the hon. member for Niagara says, while we may have our suspicions excited by what appears in the press and by the transactions in the other House, still in order to enable us to act with certainly and with sound reason, we must have the evidence ourselves, and the amendment that I propose to the motion before the House—I presume the hon. member for Ottawa will have no objection to it—is simply to add the following :

“That having regard to the orders in council for grants of land to the said Company, it be an instruction to the said Committee to require into the relations of certain alleged Directors of the Company, being members of the House of Commons, to the Company and into any provisional contract which may have been entered into for the construction of the road or any portion thereof.”

I suppose the hon. member from Ottawa does not object to that amendment.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—Oh, certainly.

HON. MR. POWER—I was not asking the hon. gentleman opposite. I was asking the hon. member from Ottawa.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—But I object to it for reasons which I am prepared to state, and I have my rights as a member of this House.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman no doubt has, but he has no right to reply for the hon. member from Ottawa.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—I speak on my own behalf.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I am afraid this is an amendment which the House cannot be asked to adopt. My hon. friend who moved it must know that it is not only an unusual instruction to give to a Committee but I think he will fail to find a precedent for it. He says that statements have been made elsewhere. This amendment could only be placed before the House upon the statements of the hon. members in this House. Those statements have been made pro and con. They have been made in one direction and in another, and the instruction now is, assuming the affirmative of those statements to be correct, and disregarding the negative altogether, that it shall be referred to the Railway Committee to inquire into it and decide that question. Now, as a member of that Committee, I object to that. This unsavoury and unfortunate incident in our parliamentary history has affected two members of the House of Commons. The facts connected with the history of it have been inquired into by a committee of that House at large, and I do say that it would be not merely an unpleasant proceeding on our part, but it would be very objectionable to ask us to take those facts in the nature of an appeal to our Committee, and ask us to review them and to decide one way or the other. So far as I know, the motion is without precedent, and if adopted would be most objectionable. I do not wish to go into the matter one way or the other as regards this fact, because it will be time enough when the matter comes before the Committee and parties wish to be heard. They can make their statements and applications before the Committee, and I have always understood that it was the practice of the House, whenever a bill has been referred to a Committee, to do so after argument here, and that the Committee take it up on their own responsibility and report to the House, and the House could deal with it afterwards if they liked. I have known Ministers to go as far in this House—and private members also—as to make objections to bills and say, "We will not oppose the second reading, but we will give you notice that we intend to make certain objections before the Committee, and we notify the Committee—we, by anticipation, place these facts before the House in order that the Committee may be cognizant of the fact when the Bill goes to them." But I am not aware of any precedent where the Committee has been tied down in a reference of a bill, with instruction to inquire into particular matters. As regards that, my hon. friend is a member of that committee himself, and I think he can hardly look with any pleasant feeling to what would be done in the way of making an inquiry of that kind. It occupied the House of Commons some six or eight weeks, and we have not possibly the time to do it; but, at all events, when the facts are placed before us and application is made to the committee to enquire into certain facts which it may possibly be in the compass of the committee to do, it will then be time enough for us to consider them; but the responsibility of that lies, I apprehend, on the committee, and as chairman of that committee I am perfectly prepared to assume that responsibility. We shall have to take into consideration any facts which come before us. I pass no opinion upon it; I know nothing about it but what I have read pro and con in the newspapers. I think the House will hesitate before agreeing to that amendment.

HON. MR. POWER.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—The hon. gentleman from Amherst has presented some of the objections which I intended to raise the moment I heard the amendments of the hon. member read; but he has not mentioned all the objections. He has rightly stated that it is quite an unprecedented course to pursue to give instructions to one of the standing committees of the House appointed at the beginning of the session to inquire into bills of a certain class or nature. That is one of the principal objections. The next objection I have is that the hon. member has no foundation for his amendment. We have no evidence before this House to base such a resolution as that upon. In fact, we have no evidence except hearsay. Another serious objection to that resolution is this: it casts a serious imputation on two members of the House of Commons, which we all know is not parliamentary. We know that it is not parliamentary for an hon. member to rise here and make insinuations against a member of the House of Commons; but to include it in a resolution of this House and to convey it as an instruction to one of its committees to make inquiries into the conduct of the members of the House of Commons, is a direct imputation against those members of that house and consequently unparliamentary. I do not think the Senate can, under the circumstances, sustain that amendment at all.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I do not think in giving these instructions to the committee that we are assuming these statements to be correct. Charges have been made and it is a question whether they are of sufficient importance to warrant these instructions to the committee; but I do not think, assuming they are correct, that it is necessary to go so far as the hon. member has done. We sometimes give instructions to a committee to find out certain facts; but it is not a usual course to pursue. Facts are sometimes elicited in the other House which I think must be taken cognizance of. We have made inquiries into some matters which were brought up in the other Chamber—there was the steel rails question, the Neebing Hotel question &c., the information concerning which we got from the other branch of Parliament, but still we thought they were important enough for us to inquire into them here, although it is not a usual thing to do. It is a question whether the facts are of sufficient importance to make them worthy of inquiry by the committee.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I did not intend to take any part in this debate but it seems to me, from the facts as they are before the public, that this House is taking a great responsibility in having voted for the second reading of this Bill as has been done. I agree with the hon. leader of this House that we ought to be careful not to establish dangerous precedents; but there is a fact which strikes me, and it is this, that there are so many unprecedented occurrences in our days that it may become necessary to establish new precedents to meet new cases. It has been urged that there is nothing before the House—no evidence establishing the guilt of some members of the other House, and that the motion of my hon. friend on the other side would cast an imputation on two other members of that Chamber. I see a good deal in this objection, but we ought to take the facts as they are. There are two kinds of evidence. There are matters which are not to be considered as proved unless there is in the record direct evidence of the facts. Then, there is another class of facts which are of such notoriety—so well known to the public—that further evidence is not required. Now the question is whether, in the present instance, the facts alluded to are of this character. I have read what was published in the newspapers. I have read the statements made by the parties in question, and I suppose the least we can do is to take their own allegations as unnecessary to be supported by evidence. It seems to me clearly proved that we have before us a project which is subsidized by the Government, and which is likely to yield such enormous profits that the parties interested are struggling for a division of them. Such things ought not to be encouraged. Parliament should not take the responsibility of sanctioning by its action such a state of affairs. I recognize that happily our country is a wealthy one, but if we admit that the subsidies granted by the Legislatures, either Local or Federal, ought to be such that they clearly give promoters of such charters not only the possible power to build railways but to make large fortunes and splendid speculations, I say it is robbing the State. It is robbing the public for the benefit of private individuals. I did not follow very closely what occurred before the Committee of the House of Commons; I am not, therefore, ready to say to this House exactly what was the position on the other side. I have only a mere impression, and it is for this House to decide how far the matter is of public notoriety. It may be that the facts are plain to some members of this House, and that the evidence may not be so for other members. The least we can say is that there is a very strong presumption in the direction that public subsidies have been granted to this company to such an extent that it is calculated to give private individuals undue advantages at the expense of the State; and I say the moment the question is in this position—the moment that this House is put on its guard, and its attention is called to this fact, every act of legislation we do now in the way of sanctioning such a condition of affairs is to make ourselves parties to it. For my part I am not ready to become a party to such a transaction. I see great objection to creating precedents, although I do not see so much in precedent as some do. We ought to establish a precedent when it is clearly necessary. The question arises, is it necessary under present circumstances to create a precedent and proceed in the way proposed by the hon. gentleman from Halifax? The present leader of this House is also Chairman of the Committee, and he has declared that for his part he is ready to face the situation; and if the other members of the Committee are of the same opinion, the proper proceeding is to refer the Bill to the Committee. My hon. friend from Halifax having called the attention of the House to the matter, should be satisfied to allow it to be dealt with by the Committee, and when they report my hon. friend will have ample opportunity to move, if in his opinion the Committee have not done their duty. Under the present circumstances it is clearly the duty of the Committee to inquire into this matter, and there is a presumption that being informed of the situation, it will do its duty. If we find that the Committee has not done its duty, it will then be time enough to take another course. I would not hesitate to vote for the motion of the hon. gentleman from Halifax if it were my only recourse; but he can move for an order from this House to send the Bill back to the Committee, with an instruction to do what it has neglected to do. It is merely a suggestion that I throw out to the hon. gentleman opposite, and I hope he will take it into consideration. Every day allusions are made to the usefulness of this hon. body. I think it is under such circumstances as these we ought to show that we are the guardians of the public interest; that we are here to stop what sometimes party spirit may inspire a majority of the other House to do. As to the question raised by the leader of the House that there is no precedent for this motion, it is not a sufficient reason, because it is very clear that anything that a committee of this House has a right to do, the House has the power to order it to do; the only question is whether it is necessary to order what we may assume the committee will do of their own accord.

HON. MR. DICKEY—Perhaps the House will allow me to read the rule applicable to this case. Rule 60 provides:

“Every Private Bill, after its second reading, is referred to the Standing Committee on Private Bills if appointed, or to some other committee of the same character; and all petitions before the Senate, for or against the Bill, are considered as referred to such Committee.”

That is the only rule we have applicable to such a measure as this. I turn to Bourinot, to see what his application of the rule is, and I find that he says:—

“When the order of the day has been read for a second reading of a private bill, the member will make the usual motion. At this stage counsel may be heard for or against the bill, but the necessity for this step has only arisen in a few cases in Canada, and, in fact, there have been no instances since 1867. The opponents of a bill find that the more convenient course is to explain their objections fully before the committee to which the bill may be referred.”

In support of this Bourinot quotes from an eminent English authority as follows:

“A public bill being founded on reasons of state policy, the House, in agreeing to its second reading, accepts and affirms those reasons; but the expediency of a private bill, being mainly founded upon allegations of fact, which have not yet been proved, the House, in agreeing to its second reading, affirms the principle of the bill, conditionally, and subject to the proof of such allegations before the committee. Where, irrespective of such facts the principle is objectionable, the House will not consent to the second reading; but otherwise the expediency of the measure is usually left for the consideration of the committee.”

That is the only rule that I can find that is laid down upon the subject, and it seems decisive on this point.

HON. MR. DEVER—It is very strongly urged that the hon. gentleman from Halifax has no precedent for his action. Be that as it may, I think the object in view is a commendable one, and the end would justify the means in this case. I think in pity to the gentlemen accused of doing wrong, an opportunity should be afforded to them to acquit themselves of the charge that is current throughout the Dominion against them. Under the circumstances I think it is only fit and proper that this amendment should pass.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Apart from the fact that this is entirely without precedent, it is unnecessary and a reflection on the Railway Committee of this House. Everyone who has attended that Committee knows the scrupulous care with which all questions connected with the Bills referred to it have been examined. The hon. gentleman who moves this motion is himself a member of that Committee. He has it perfectly in his power, without taking this unusual course, to bring up anything in the committee that it may be necessary to examine in connection with this question. The hon. gentleman, for some reason which I do not wish to inquire into, has seen fit to throw a reflection, by this motion, upon the Committee of which he has been a useful and active member for many years.

HON. MR. POWER—Hear hear.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I say that with perfect sincerity, and the hon. gentleman ought not to suppose that I am speaking in any way except with that feeling, and with that view. For some reason or other the hon. gentleman has proposed a course which I think is entirely out of rule and for which I can find no authority whatever. On the contrary, it has scarcely been imagined that such a course could be pursued. Although there is no provisions particularly against it, certainly there is no authority for it. If there is anything bearing on it, in the hasty examination I have given the question, it is against the hon. gentleman's contention, because it is stated in Bourinot, page 532 :—

“Neither is it regular to propose on the second reading, or other stage of the Bill, any amendment by way of addition to the question when it has been decided by the House that the Bill shall be read a second time.”

I understand that it has been decided by the House that the Bill has been read the second time, and the motion the hon. gentleman brings in is in addition to the question which has been already decided. That may or may not be a decided point to make, but when it is remembered that all the matters connected with the subject are matters of hearsay: when it is within our purview to take all these questions up when they are brought before us in the proper way; when it is remembered that the hon. gentleman himself has the power in the committee to make the most exhaustive examination of this question, while I have great respect for the statements of the hon. member from DeSabberry I can hardly agree with him in the opinion that there is any necessity for departing from the usual rule in respect to this Bill, and I trust that the motion of the hon. gentleman will be withdrawn. I question whether it is desirable that it should come to a vote, and I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman will see himself that everything that he proposes to attain by means of this resolution, can be attained without establishing a precedent which is not perhaps within the strict rules of this House in respect to such matters.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I am afraid I was misunderstood by my hon. friend. I did not say that it was necessary under the present circumstances to establish a precedent. I said that should the House come to the conclusion that it is necessary, we should not hesitate to create a precedent; but I said, on the contrary, that I was not satisfied that it was necessary to create a precedent in this instance.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I am very glad to hear the hon. gentleman make that explanation. I gathered from what he said, that he considered this was a case of great importance, that it involved certain matters which, if it did not justify it, would, to a certain extent lead us to a change in the ordinary practice of the House, and I am very glad to know that the hon. gentleman, who pays great attention to matters of this kind, and has clear and logical judgment upon such subjects, agrees with me and those who have taken the same view about it, and particularly with the experienced chairman of this Committee, who has presided over it for so many years, and whose word and authority ought to have as much weight as that of any gentleman in this body. It is not to be thought for one moment or desired that any person should not receive attention and examination before the Committee, and I have no doubt that the chairman of the Committee will endeavor to have the fullest examination and inquiry into this matter. I do hope that the hon. gentleman from Halifax, after having heard this discussion, will withdraw his motion, but I would like to ask his honor the Speaker if there is any precedents for the adoption of a motion of this kind, without at the same time desiring to say that even if there are it is desirable to adopt it in this case.

HON. MR. CLEMOW—Perhaps it will be proper for me to say that my motion was made in the usual way. I considered that this was the usual course adopted on similar measures, and I believe that one of the gentlemen connected with this Bill is only too anxious that this matter shall be fully ventilated. I desire to say that we have perfect confidence in the Railway Committee that full justice will be done to the matter there, and that I think it is a reflection on the committee to propose such a motion as that before the House.

HON MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman from Amherst said that this amendment assumed facts as being proved. The hon. gentleman surely does not say that seriously, because the amendment only says that there is room for inquiry, and I think that is perfectly clear. The amendment recites the grant of public lands to this company, so that there is a public interest in the matter. It is not merely a private Bill now, but there is an immense quantity of public lands going to this private company. We find in this Bill an extraordinary provision that, unless this company shall have made arrangements before the first of June to complete 50 miles of road, the charter will lapse.

HON MR. PLUMB—That is a safe provision surely.

HON MR. POWER—It is an extraordinary provision and challenges attention. On the face of the original Act it appears that there are members of parliament on the board of directors. The amendment makes no imputation at all; on the contrary it simply gives the gentlemen, whose names have been involved in this matter, an opportunity to clear themselves, and I think that is most desirable. Now as to the rule. I take it for granted that there can be no question about the right of this House to give the Committee any instructions it pleases in connection with any Bill or other matter referred to it. The rights of this House are as great as the rights of the House of Commons in England. The ordinary course is to refer the Bill to the Committee. I am not interfering with that course, and the House I think has a perfect right, at the same time, to say to that Committee, that owing to certain circumstances, even if they were mere rumors with nothing in the measure itself to give them any force, to say, "You will enquire whether there is any foundation for those rumors or not." I do not think there is any question as to the perfect right of the House to refer the matter to the Committee, and I doubt the wisdom of the suggestion of the hon. member from De Salaberry that we should wait until the report comes up from the Committee. Suppose the chairman of the Committee doubts the propriety of the Committee beginning to inquire into this matter, if the House has not instructed them to make the inquiry? I believe the chairman of that Committee, if a member of it suggested that there should be an inquiry, would probably say, "We cannot make that enquiry on our own motion unless someone comes before us and asks us for it." And supposing that the member who did cause the enquiry to be made in the committee of the other House does not want to take any further trouble and does not come before us, then I feel morally certain that my hon. friend the chairman would rule that we had no right to make this inquiry. Then we come back to the House here, and if we adopt the course suggested by the hon. member from De Salaberry, where are we? We are not as well off as we are now; because then the chairman of the Committee might suggest again, as he has done, that it was too late in the session, and that the inquiry was inopportune. With how much force that argument would come after another week had gone by, and we were within a week of prorogation? The inquiry is not a very extensive one, and the Committee will have time to make it. I think we owe it to ourselves, to our standing and reputation before the country to inquire into this matter; and I feel that if this House votes down this resolution, which is not to the effect that any one is guilty at all, but simply to the effect that an enquiry should be made by a proper Committee, the House will place itself in an exceedingly unpleasant and undesirable position before the country.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—I wish to refer to a circumstance which took place last session, in which the hon. gentleman from Halifax laid down the assertion that this House has a right to give instructions to any committee that it may see fit. The hon. gentleman last year moved an instruction to a Committee of the Whole upon a certain bill, and I, as well as the hon. gentleman from Sarnia, challenged the correctness of the motion, and said it was unparliamentary, and His Honor the Speaker decided it was quite right.

HON. MR. POWER—It was a Committee of the Whole on a Public Bill.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—Exactly, but there can be no doubt the principle is this, that the House does not give instructions to a committee if the committee has power, under its constitution, to do the act which the instruction proposes to lay down. I maintain that is so in all our standing committees: the resolution which is moved by the hon. member from Halifax, is giving an instruction which the committee has a right to act upon, and it has a right to take into consideration and to act upon this subject without instruction from this House; consequently it is not in the parliamentary course that instructions should be given to a committee to do that which it has the power to do without those instructions.

HON. MR. DICKEY—My hon. friend from Halifax takes a very limited view of the power of the Committee, and I should be very sorry that an impression of that kind should go abroad in this House among those who are not members of the Railway Committee, when he states that without any particular instructions of this kind the chairman would not feel himself justified in inquiring into these facts. The hon. gentleman has not been quite so long a member of that Committee as I have: but he ought to know, surely, that when there are contested bills we are constantly discussing questions like this—all concerned, private interests come in, and we hear them all patiently. Of course we come to our conclusion, and our conclusion is reported to the House, and is generally received; but we constantly inquire into all these matters, as to the bona fides of the parties, whether there is any thing wrong in these charters that are asked for. We probe the matter to the bottom. It is my experience, and I know it is my course, as Chairman of the Committee. I have to apologize to the House for rising again, but I do not desire as Chairman of the Committee, to lie under the imputation implied by my hon. friend in the statement he has made. I know it has not been my practice, and as far as my experience of other committees is concerned, I know it is not their practice either. Their practice is to inquire into everything connected with the merits of the bill.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—As a member of the Railway Committee, I cannot say that I feel that the motion of the hon. gentleman from Halifax is a reflection on us. If the hon. gentleman feels that in this case there are circumstances that demand an earnest investigation, he makes his motion because the Railway Committee might make no investigation at all, and then the time of the House would be wasted by having to refer the Bill back to the Committee. If the hon. gentleman feels that this a matter that ought to be investigated, and I certainly agree with him that it should be, what impropriety can there be in simply bringing forward a motion which may be unusual? As to the objection to establishing a precedent, cannot a member of Parliament, when he sees fit, and thinks he will save the time of the House, move perhaps an unusual motion of his own, contrary to the rules of Parliament? And who will say it is contrary to the rules of Parliament? I should not wonder if the thought crossed my hon. friend's mind that we have sometimes seen a member of the Government enter a committee of this House and dictate to that committee in a very unusual tone of language, and, strange to say, the committee are so amiable and so disposed to meet the views of Ministers of the Crown that they very often allow a committee to take action which is not right.

HON. GENTLEMEN—Order! order!

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I will put myself in order. My hon. friend brings forward this motion because he is impressed with the fact that an investigation should be made, and he feels that he can safely place himself in the hands of the House. He feels that the House will see the propriety of the proposed investigation, and I hope the Senate will pass the motion which he has made.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I am quite satisfied that the Committee have ample power to make this investigation; at the same time if they did not make it I do not think it would be a reflection on them. The only question in my mind is whether the Committee would take it upon themselves to make the inquiry unless some person comes before them and raises the question to be investigated. It is a question in my mind whether the feeling of this House is that the Committee should be specially charged with an investigation. I do not see any impropriety in making it a special charge to the Committee; but it is a question to my mind whether it is of sufficient importance to make it a special charge to the Committee to investigate it. If the House thinks it should be investigated, it is but right to draw the attention of the Committee to the question. I believe in the other branch of the legislature this same motion was made, and it was not attempted there to rule it out of order. It is a question to my mind whether it is out of order on the ground that the Committee have that power without specially giving it.

HON. MR. HOWLAN—The hon. gentleman from Halifax has stated himself that it would be impossible to carry on the business of parliament without committees. We have committees on Private Bills, on Banking and Commerce, and on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, and these committees represent the House as much as if the House itself were all a committee. The powers of the House were delegated to those committees for this special business which is referred to them, otherwise it would be impossible to go on with the business of the Session. This Bill comes before us in this shape: it provides that unless 50 miles of the road are built within a certain period of time, the incorporators shall lose their charter. As to whether the facts are or are not as stated in the press, we have nothing to do with that. We know that if we take the press on both sides of politics very different views are advanced and taken on the public questions of the day. We are not here to investigate newspaper gossip. We are here to take cognizance of what comes before us formally, and bills coming here in the ordinary course of legislation pass from this House to the committees to which they belong. The committees are appointed to investigate them. The hon. gentleman from Halifax has no confidence in himself. He has no confidence that he can look on this Bill impartially as a member of the committee. Every member of that committee has as much responsibility for the deliverance of the committee as the chairman, and when he speaks of the committee as one of its members, he speaks of the whole Committee. The only conclusion we can come to is that he has no confidence in himself, and that he wishes us to advise him as to his proper course. I have no doubt that if the Bill goes before the Railway Committee it will receive the same thorough investigation that it would receive in this House, and outside of that we have nothing to do. With regard to this matter of special instruction to a Committee, it may be done on a public question arising out of the government of this country, but I doubt if any precedent can be shown, either from Bourinot or May, from the procedure of this Parliament on a Railway Bill coming in here asking that certain things shall be done, in which special instructions have been given to the Committee. In my experience of a quarter of a century I have never seen such a course adopted. Now, with regard to the decision in this matter, it is a fair proposition that this Bill was not smuggled through the other branch of Parliament. It is a fair proposition that it received the care, attention and examination of as able minds as that of the hon. member from Halifax; that the same perseverance, talent and energy were devoted to the examination of this Bill in another place, and the measure was postponed from week to week, so that the fullest and fairest investigation into all the circumstances connected with it could take place. It is a fair presumption that a thorough investigation did take place, and that members of the other House were fully satisfied as to the circumstances. If it had been smuggled through Committee, and time had not been allowed to gentlemen opposing the measure to bring forward evidence on every possible point that could be taken against it, there might be room for such a motion as this, but investigation in this Chamber is not to take place unless when the report comes in from the Committee and is before the House giving the proper notice that a private bill should have before the third reading. But to say that no honest or thorough investigation takes place before the Railway Committee is to establish a precedent and lay down a principle which has never been adopted by any Parliament in the world.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—While I have the fullest confidence in the manner in which the hon. gentleman from Amherst conducts the business of the Railway Committee, I think I can support the motion of the hon. gentleman from Halifax without any imputation upon his ability, fairness or capacity as chairman of the Committee. A Bill has been introduced here which the promoters told the House was of vast importance to the tract of country through which it passed, and we are invited to give it our cordial consent in consequence of its importance. At this point the hon. gentleman from Halifax steps in and informs the House that certain parties, never mind who they are, have intervened between the good intentions of Parliament and Government of this country and the people of the province—that an intermediate profit will be made unless steps are taken to prevent it. Nevertheless the House agrees to the second reading of the Bill. The motion then is that it should go before the Railway Committee, and I am disposed to think that the hon. member from Halifax took a prudent course in moving this amendment, and for this reason: all members of this House are not members of the Railway Committee, and for the interest of those members specially the hon. gentleman from Halifax is careful to see that this matter does not escape, and cannot possibly escape the attention of the Committee. If this amendment passes, the Committee cannot avoid taking up the question to which allusion has been made on the second reading, and for that reason I think the motion of my hon. friend is necessary. The Committee may, if it so pleases, resolve by a majority of votes that it will not take up this statement made by my hon. friend, which he may make again, and be prepared to adduce evidence in support of it. The majority of the Committee may decide that they will not entertain it at all: then the Bill comes back to this House and no enquiry whatever is made. We are told that it is always competent for the House to refer a Bill back to the Committee with further instructions; but in my experience here—and I think it is the experience of every gentleman in this House—there is always a reluctance to do so as it implies remissness on the part of the Committee on the question referred, so that when a grave question arises the House is always reluctant to take that step. How much better is it to take that step now before the Committee has gone into the question at all. For these reasons I am myself prepared to support the motion of the hon. gentleman from Halifax.

HON. MR. O'DONOHÖE—I do not rise for the purpose of speaking on the question beyond calling the attention of the House to a point of order which was raised, and on which we have not had the Speaker's ruling and before saying anything I should like very much to have his decision.

HON. MR. POWER—It is understood of course that the Speaker's decision concludes the discussion, but I do not suppose the hon. gentleman has any objection to hearing the subject discussed.

THE SPEAKER—Has the hon. gentleman any authority to cite?

HON. MR. POWER—I took it so much as a matter of course that I did not fortify myself with the authorities and I have not looked them up. I am not a walking encyclopedia of parliamentary rulings and proceedings as my hon. friend from Alberton is. I did not enjoy as he did the privilege of leading a House nor was I a member of a Government for four years. These things naturally give him a familiarity with parliamentary procedure which a member like myself is not expected to have. At page 444 of Bourinot I find this:

“It is a clear and indisputable principle of parliamentary law that a committee is bound by, and is not at liberty to depart from the order of reference. Consequently if a bill be referred to a select committee it will not be competent for that committee to go beyond the subject-matter of its provisions. If it be found necessary to extend the inquiry, authority must be obtained from the House in the shape of a special instruction. Such an instruction may extend or limit the inquiry, as the House may deem expedient.”

HON. MR. HOWLAN—That is a special committee.

HON. MR. POWER—That is all the authority I have found. I had not looked the question up, but I just found that citation at the first glance.

THE SPEAKER—I do not consider the amendment of the hon. member from Halifax as any reflection upon the Select Committee on Railways, but I agree with the hon. member from Amherst and the hon. member from Sackville that it is a motion unprecedented in the practice of this House, and in my opinion clearly out of order. What is this amendment? It is an instruction to the Standing Committee on Railways to inquire into the relations of certain alleged directors of the company, being members of the House of Commons, to the company, and into any provisional contract which may have been entered into for the construction of a certain line of railway in Manitoba. In the first place, it is an unusual thing to give an instruction of this kind to a standing committee. Instructions are generally given to Committees of the whole House, and are not mandatory, but directory. The Committee is not bound to obey an instruction of that kind. The Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbors, a select standing committee of this House, has full, ample and complete power to make an investigation of the kind referred to in this amendment. Such being the case, I do not agree with the hon. member from Halifax that the House has the power or right within parliamentary rules to give any instruction to the Committee. The House cannot do so without being irregular in its proceedings. The Committee having power to deal with the matter, the question is whether the House has a right to give an instruction on the subject. Bourinot says:—

“Considerable misapprehension appears to exist among some members of the Canadian Commons as to the meaning of an instruction—a misapprehension by no means confined to that body, since English Speakers have frequently found it necessary to give decisions and explanations on the subject. An instruction, according to these decisions, is given to a committee to confer on it that power which, without such instruction, it would not have. If the subject-matter of an instruction is relevant to the subject-matter, and within the scope and title of a bill, then such instruction is irregular, since the committee has the power to make the required amendment.”

I shall not cite the precedents but I will come to the effect of an instruction when given:—

“According to the modern practice of Parliament an instruction to a committee is not ‘mandatory,’ and it is therefore customary to state explicitly in the motion as shown above, that the committee ‘have power’ to make the provision required in a bill. ‘For,’ as stated by Mr. Speaker Brand, ‘the intention of an instruction is to give a committee power to do a certain thing if they think proper, not to command them to do it.’ It has been pointed out by an English authority in such matters, that even the committee cannot act upon the instruction without a question put upon the thing to be done, which of itself implies that the instruction is not conclusive upon the committee.”

When a committee has full power to do an act, it must exercise that power without instruction, and if an instruction were given to them under the circumstances it would be irregular. If they had not the power and instruction were given to them it would still be optional with them to obey the instruction. Therefore the Committee on Railways would stand in exactly the same relation to the question after the proposed instruction that they now do. With regard to the last authority quoted by the hon. member from Halifax, I cannot see that it has any bearing on the point under consideration. In my opinion the amendment of the hon. gentleman is out of order.

The original motion to refer the Bill to the Railway Committee was agreed to.

BROCKVILLE AND NEW YORK BRIDGE COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON MR. DICKEY moved that the House do concur in the amendments proposed by the Committee on Railways Telegraphs and Harbours to Bill (68) “An Act to incorporate the Brockville and New York Bridge Company.” He said: The first principal amendment refers to what is called the bond clause. That section authorizes a special meeting to be called for the purpose of introducing those bonds on the market but in the clause as it originally stood there is no provision as to the amount or value of stock that is to be represented at the meeting, so that a catch meeting might be held and the whole undertaking might be swamped without the consent of the majority. We have introduced the words which are usually inserted in these Bills—"at which meeting two-thirds in value of the stock represented by person or by proxy"—so that it will require a majority of two-thirds, which is not an unreasonable requirement. The next amendment is what is known as the promissory note clause. I may state briefly, as the particulars are on the Minutes, that it is to make it conformable to the promissory note clause. The third amendment which is the most important, was in the twentieth section and the effect of it is to strike out the section altogether and to introduce another one. That section was in this form :—

For the purpose of constructing, working, and protecting the telegraph and telephone lines constructed by the company under this Act on their line of railway, the powers conferred on telegraph companies by chapter sixty-seven of the Consolidated Statutes of the late Province of Canada, intituled "An Act respecting Electric Telegraph Companies," are hereby conferred upon the company; and the other provisions of the said Act for the working and protection of telegraph lines shall apply to any such telegraph lines constructed by the company.

The powers specified in that Act are conferred upon the Company, but there is not a word as to the responsibilities which it imposes. The clause was one-sided, and there was another difficulty in it, that the Act of Old Canada, with the exception of a few sections, has been either repealed or amended so that there are only a very few sections which are applicable, and we thought it would be better altogether to provide that those sections which are in force shall apply to this Company. The other amendments are entirely verbal and, with regard to them, I am glad to acknowledge that the House of Commons has come to the conclusion to imitate our practice, because I find there are three other bills which are yet to be considered to-day in which the amendments are entirely verbal. I think we have a prospect of a better system of drawing bills before us and that has been produced in a great measure by the action of the Senate with reference to these bills.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

HON. MR. DICKEY.

FREEHOLD LOAN AND SAVINGS COMPANY BILL.

COMMONS AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

HON. MR. ALLAN moved that the amendments made by the House of Commons to Bill (L) "An Act to consolidate the borrowing powers of the Freehold Loan and Savings Company, and to authorize the said Company to issue debenture stock," be concurred in. He said: The amendments to this Bill are almost entirely verbal and are of such a character that I have no hesitation in asking the House to assent to them.

The motion was agreed to, and the amendments were concurred in.

WESTERN CANADA LOAN COMPANY'S BILL.

COMMONS AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

HON. MR. ALLAN moved that the House do concur in the amendments made by the Commons to Bill (M) "An Act to consolidate the borrowing powers of the Western Canada Loan and Savings Company, and to authorize the said Company to issue debenture stock." He said:—These amendments are almost identical with the amendments made to the Bill which has just now been before us.

The motion was agreed to and the amendments were concurred in.

CANADA LOAN AND SAVINGS COMPANY'S BILL.

COMMONS AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that the amendments made by the House of Commons to Bill (H) "An Act to consolidate the borrowing powers of the Canada Permanent Loan and Savings Company, and to authorize the said Company to issue debenture stock," be concurred in. He said:—These amendments are also of the same character as those which have been referred to by my hon. friend who has just sat down. They are not quite so many of them and they are purely verbal.

The motion was agreed to and the amendments were concurred in.

The Senate adjourned at six o'clock.

THE SENATE.

THIRD READING.

Bill (70), "An Act respecting the Manitoba and Northwestern Railway Company of Canada" (Mr. Girard) was reported from Committee, read the third time, and passed without debate.

MASKINONGE AND NIPISSING RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. DICKEY, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbors, reported Bill (74), "An Act to incorporate the Maskinonge and Nipissing Railway Company, with certain amendments." He said: Three of these amendments are of some importance: but they are amendments such as have been made in former bills. The first amendment is that with regard to the second clause of the Bill, in which three or four of the last lines of the clause are struck out, and for the reason which I shall explain presently. The Consolidated Railway Act referred to in that clause makes provision that all the clauses of the Act shall apply to charters, unless the special charter shall otherwise direct and make provision in another way. Now this part of the clause, which I have referred to, provides that with regard to certain things only, such as plans—in fact there are only three things mentioned, plans and powers and lands—that Act shall apply to them, but in no other respect, and in order to give effect to the intention of Parliament and to make the Act generally applicable, it was necessary to strike out that special restriction: and in that case the Act itself would apply in all its particulars. That is the amendment that is made. In Section 16, what is usually known as the bond clause, an amendment is introduced, such as has been made in other bills, requiring that at least two-thirds in value of the stock shall be represented at the meeting which should resolve to issue those bonds. The 21st section is what is known as the promissory note clause, and the amendments there are to make it more conformable to that clause as now generally accepted and received. The other amendments are purely verbal, and although they might strike one as not being very important, I am happy to say they are in a good direction. Both Houses at present seem to be acting on a principle that there should be something like harmony in our legislation, and, as far as possible, an absence of tautology. These amendments are verbal, having the effect of carrying out that new principle in our legislation. The result will be, I hope, that in the future we shall have little or no difficulty with regard to those bills. The amendments are so obviously necessary that there is no reason why the Bill should be delayed in passing the third reading in consequence.

HON. MR. CLEMOV moved that the amendments be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

The Bill was then read the third time, as amended, and passed.

FREE PASSES ON THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY AND GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY.

MOTION POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day having been called,

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before this House a list of the names of all Senators and Members of the House of Commons who received half-fare tickets and free passes over all roads or portions of roads owned or operated by the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk Railway Companies between the first of November last and the first of April, 1886. (Mr. McInnes, B.C.)

HON. MR. DICKEY said: Before this notice is read, I would appeal to my hon. friend who has charge of it to allow it to stand for the present. The notice implies to a domestic matter which might lead to unpleasant discussion, and I would like if my hon. friend would allow the matter to stand until Monday or Tuesday next.

The motion was allowed to stand until Monday next.

AMERICAN TUGS IN CANADIAN WATERS.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. MACDONALD inquired

Whether it has come to the notice of the Government that American tow boats have been towing in British Columbia harbors and within the "three mile limit" in Dominion waters?

He said: In putting this notice on the paper I desire to bring to the attention of the Government the fact that the law relating to towing within the three mile limit has been broken by American vessels towing in British Columbia waters. Hon. gentlemen are aware that in all questions regarding the coasting trade and navigation we have to deal with very jealous neighbors indeed, who will take all and give nothing in return, and, therefore, it behooves us to guard our own navigation and towing. It is most humiliating to see foreign tugs come into our harbors and tow ships out while our own tugs are lying idle. The law is rather vague on the subject. It allows tugs to tow ships into harbors, but prevents them towing them out to any other place, and the question is whether a vessel towing to a foreign port is liable to a penalty or not—it is a question open to discussion. I will just read what the law says on that point:

"The Master of any steam vessel, not being a British ship, engaged, or having been engaged, after the passing of this Act, in towing any ship, vessel or raft, from one port or place in Canada to another, except in case of distress, shall forfeit the sum of four hundred dollars."

Whether that means to another port in Canada or a port in a foreign country is a point open to doubt. I have been instructed by the Deputy Minister of Marine that that refers to any other port; that is to say, a tug could not take a ship out of a port in Canada and tow it to a foreign port; but that is a very doubtful matter. However, the fact remains that the law as it is at present is broken, and that this Act ought to be amended so as to prevent any towing by foreign tugs inside of the three-mile limit.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I am instructed to answer that it has come to the notice of the Government that American tow boats have been towing within the three-miles limit in Dominion waters. My hon. friend has stated very truly that the Act under which this takes place is somewhat vague, and in adverting to the present position of the question, I may say to him that the subject has been brought before the Government. I have here a number of papers bearing on it in the shape of various reports from different officers. I mention it to show that the Government are endeavoring to get all the information they can on the subject. They are now engaged continuing that inquiry, and the result of it will be made known to my hon. friend and to the House as soon as the Government can possibly deal with the matter and state what course they propose to pursue with regard to this important question.

HON. MR. ALMON—May I ask what course is adopted towards Canadian or English vessels towing in American waters?

HON. MR. DICKEY—I think it is substantially the same as that mentioned by my hon. friend as the construction held by some as to that Act—that is, they cannot proceed from any one port in the United States to any other port in the United States.

LAW OF EVIDENCE AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (3), "An Act for the further amendment of the Law of Evidence in certain cases."

In the Committee on the first clause:

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I cannot allow this clause to pass without making a few remarks. I was unfortunately absent when the second reading took place, or I would then have expressed my opinions on the merits of the Bill. I think, however, that this Bill might be amended in such a way as to meet what, in my humble judgment, are the exceptional cases where such legislation should be allowed. However, after having examined the Bill, I am confirmed in my first impression, that the measure should not pass. The only circumstances under which people of the description alluded to in the clause would refuse to testify would be when they wished to make use of the reproach brought against them for their own benefit. For instance, in a criminal proceeding; supposing a man who professes to be an Atheist, and who knows that in declaring that he has no religious belief he would be refused as a witness, was the only witness to a murder and that the murderer was a friend of his, then it might be considered in the public interest to force him to give evidence. But I think that in the very few cases where such a law should be allowed it is another measure which should be framed. For this reason I will propose no amendment. In the meantime I will reserve my right to make a few observations on the third reading.

HON. MR. ALMON—I have great objection to this clause of the Bill which is before the Committee. My objection is that it states that if a person shall refuse or be unwilling from alleged conscientious motives to be sworn, or shall declare that the oath is not binding on his conscience, it shall be lawful for the court or judge to permit such person to make affirmation and declaration. That is to say, if a judge thinks the witness is an Atheist and his calling God to deal with him if he bears false witness is not binding on his conscience, he is granted greater privileges than a Christian. A man appears before the judge to give evidence. The judge says "I cannot believe your word unless you are on your oath." He says to the Atheist "Your oath is illegal; I absolve you from your oath," whereas the Christian has to take the oath that he will tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. I object to that clause and move that it do not pass.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—It is not to relieve the Atheist, but to make him subject to all the rules of the law. He may believe in a Redeemer and believe in God and yet not believe in future punishment. It is a question if the judge would go into a theological discussion as to the man's belief. I move that the first clause be adopted.

HON. MR. LACOSTE—Before the adoption of this clause I beg to say a few words. It seems to me that this Bill is premature. It is stated in the preamble that the object of the Bill is the discovery of truth in courts of justice. It says "Whereas the discovery of truth in courts of justice has been signally promoted by removal of restrictions on the admissibility of witnesses, and it is expedient to amend the law of evidence with the object of still further promoting such discovery," etc. So far as we, in the province of Quebec, are concerned I may say we do not feel the need of any measure like this. We have our Civil Code and according to one of the articles of that Code individuals who do not believe in God and those who do not believe in future punishment and who refuse to take the oath, are declared to be incompetent. This article of the Code has been applied since the existence of law in the country, and I do not see that any man has suffered by it. The fact is, it was in the Code of every Christian nation in the world until lately. Infidels and those who do not believe in God were not admitted as witnesses, either in criminal or in civil cases, and if a bill similar to this was adopted in France and in England, it was forced on those countries. This House will remember the debate that took place on Bradlaugh's bill respecting the oath taken in the British House of Commons; it was only when England was forced to accept it that it was adopted. I do not see that in this country we should open the door to such legislation; it is a bad principle. It may be that in future years infidels may so increase in number that the door may be broken open, and then it will be time enough to regulate the law respecting the oaths of those who do not believe in God or in future punishment. The argument used in favor of this Bill is that it is not for the benefit of parties to a suit who may have witnesses to call who have no belief in God. It is true there.

may be some cause for it ; but if we once open the door those witnesses who do not believe in God will have the right to be called in every case, and for one instance where the innocent will be protected by the evidence of such men, in many other cases we will see witnesses of that kind giving evidence that will do more harm than good. For my part I have no confidence in the evidence of people who cannot take God to witness the truth of what they say. It has also been stated in support of this measure that men who would swear or affirm falsely under this Bill could be sued for perjury. I admit that it is a kind of argument but it is a very poor one. I might say that if such a witness intentionally makes a false statement before a criminal court he may be condemned for perjury ; but besides his evidence as to matters of fact, such a witness is brought to swear as to his appreciation of things that occur before his eyes, and to this part of his evidence there is no check except the fear of God or the fear of future punishment ; and as I said before for one case where an innocent party may be protected by such evidence there will be many cases in which those witnesses will give false evidence. It was stated as an argument that before our constitution all religions stand alike. I deny this. I think the constitution presumes that British subjects are, above all, Christians. The allegiance due to the Queen is under oath. The sittings of parliament are opened with prayer. In all courts of justice the judge before entering upon his duties has to take the oath of office. The oath is required in every instance under the constitution, and besides if we once open the door, if we admit those persons to testify, we will before long have to admit to this House, and to the House of Commons, members without taking the oath of allegiance, but merely making a simple affirmation under the pretext that they do not believe in God or that they do not believe in future punishment ; and I really believe that we will have gentlemen sitting as judges who prefer not to take the oath before exercising their functions, but merely to make the affirmation. I think that will be a consequence of this Bill if it becomes law. I do not say that the time will not come when we shall have so many Atheists in the country that we will be forced to amend our laws respecting evidence ; but that will be, I hope, some time in the future. I have another objection to make, and it is on the constitutional question. It is stated in the first clause of the Bill that it will apply not only to criminal proceedings, but that "in any civil proceeding in respect of which the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction in this behalf," the evidence of such persons will be admissible. It has been stated in the other House by the Minister of Justice that this would apply in the insolvent courts. In that case I think it is an infringement upon the rights of the Provinces. The insolvent courts adjudicate upon the rights of property in the Provinces. Questions as to civil rights, and the rights of property will go before the insolvent courts. It is true there is no insolvent law in force now, but there may be one, and if such a law were passed, it would be competent for such witnesses to give evidence before the insolvent court, notwithstanding the provisions to the contrary in the statute of the Province of Quebec. Such witnesses would be brought, whose evidence, according to our law, would be illegal ; but our law would be overruled by the provisions of this Bill. Under these circumstances I may say I am opposed to this clause and will vote against it.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I have heard the remarks of my hon. friend, and I must say they have impressed themselves upon me very strongly. The only argument I have heard in favor of this Bill has been that it is for the benefit of those who wish to have the advantage of this kind of evidence, and not for the advantage of the witness himself, not extending to him any privileges, but giving it to suitors who may desire to have the advantage of a kind of evidence that would otherwise be shut out.

That is the strong point in the case, and it is the only one. But I may be permitted to add to the objections made by the hon. gentleman those which strike me as being pertinent to what he said in regard to the future. We may hereafter have such pressure brought upon us for a bill of this kind that we may be, in a measure, compelled to view it with more favor than we do now. The hon. gentleman has referred to a case in the English House of Commons, and we all know the political conditions which pressed upon the Government a change in regard to that. No such pressure exists here, and I would call the attention of the House to this fact, that there is no evidence anywhere that such a radical change as this, a change which certainly should require something more to justify it than anything I have heard in the way of argument in its favor, has not been called for by petition from any part of the country. We have not heard that there has been any popular demand for this kind of legislation. I have not heard that any individual outside of the House of Commons has raised his voice in favor of it. I think the Bill originated there. I did not hear that petitions had been presented from any quarter for this legislation. We certainly have seen none here, and until I have some evidence that such a change as this, which certainly does not commend itself to my judgment or conscience, is demanded by the people in such an unmistakable way that it over-rides considerations which are obvious, and which have been presented so eloquently by my hon. friend who has just sat down, I shall feel myself compelled to vote against the Bill.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I desire to say a few words, and in speaking on this question I hope the House will understand that I express only my own individual opinions, and in no way represent the Government, for I believe they have had nothing to do with this Bill. I must say that it is to me a striking anomaly that in a Christian country like this we should be asked to pass a Bill for the benefit of Atheists and Agnostics. The present state of the law is to the effect that a Quaker, or other Christian, having conscientious scruples to the taking of an oath, may affirm. The reason of that is perfectly obvious. He does that as a Christian, because his construction differs from that which we put on the injunction to "swear not at all." He believes that injunction to extend even to legal oaths, and he is allowed, as a matter of necessity, to affirm. I draw the attention of the Committee to the clear distinction between such a case as that, which is made for the protection of Christians who entertain conscientious scruples, and the other case where people have no belief at all, or, if they have any, do not believe in a God. There is also another anomaly in this Act which has not been adverted to; it is made to apply not only to criminal proceedings, but also to proceedings in civil court over which the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction. If this Act were to pass you would have in the various provinces the singular anomaly of a class of witnesses being excluded in one court who are admitted in another. On the whole, I think the House would expect to hear something stronger than we have yet heard in support of this Bill before concluding to pass the first clause, which perhaps amounts to the principle of the whole Bill, because without it the whole Bill would not be worth anything. I only rise for the purpose of explaining my individual views and not to argue the question at length. It is not convenient to argue the principle of a bill in committee, and I only speak now of the effect of the first clause. I thought it my duty to draw the attention of the committee to it, and I should like to hear what my hon. friend, who has charge of the Bill, has further to say in support of it after the objections he has heard raised.

HON. MR. POWER—I take very little interest in this measure. I do not care much whether it passes or not, but as far as I have given it any thought my disposition is to support the Bill. There are two views of the law of evidence. The old view was that any man who had an interest in a case, and every man as to whose veracity there was any suspicion should be excluded. That was the view held very strongly until within the last few years. But the tendency of legislation of late has been to a totally different view. The modern view is that you should admit the evidence of every one who knows or is supposed to know anything about the circumstances which are being inquired into, and that the court and jury will attach the value that they think proper to his evidence. The parties interested, the plaintiffs and defendants, are admitted now, and the court and jury recognize the fact that the evidence of a person deeply interested in the cause is not in itself worth as much as the evidence of a witness who is not interested. That is the tendency of the law of evidence now: the court takes all the information it can get and then judges as to the value of that information. Looking at the matter in that way, this Bill is at any rate in line with the tendency of modern legislation. The criticism of the hon. gentleman from DeLorimier as to one portion of the Bill was hardly deserved. He stated that the portion of the clause which provides that in any civil proceeding in respect of which the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction in this behalf the Bill shall apply, was an encroachment upon the jurisdiction of the provinces. I think that was hypercritical, because the language of the clause limits it exclusively to those cases in which the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction in this behalf. If the Parliament of Canada has no jurisdiction, then of course the Bill does not apply, and therefore I think that the criticism was not well founded. As to the main question, of course it is a matter of opinion. Some hon. gentlemen have spoken of this Bill as if it were simply for the purpose of allowing Atheists to give evidence. If hon. gentlemen will look at the wording of the Bill they will see that it goes a good deal farther than that. The first clause applies to a man who objects to take an oath, and the second clause speaks of a man objecting because of conscientious scruples. If a man has a conscientious objection to take an oath, that I think should not disqualify him from giving evidence, or at any rate it should not deprive the tribunal before which the cause is being tried, of the advantage of hearing his evidence and attaching what weight they please to it. But even taking the extreme case of a man who is not now allowed to give evidence, because he does not believe in God—I think that fortunately at present, at any rate, the number of such persons in Canada is extremely limited. But we can suppose this case: that a serious crime, such as murder, has been committed, and the only person who happens to be aware of his own personal knowledge of the circumstances of the case, is called upon to tell the court what actually did occur. He may not want to give the information, and he has only to say that he will not take the oath. He may not be an Atheist, but he may wish to be relieved of the necessity of giving evidence in the case, and he has only to say that the oath will not bind him. Now is that in the interest of justice? Is it not better that that man should be obliged to testify, and that the court after hearing him cross-examined by skilful counsel may attach what weight they please to his testimony, than that the court should be deprived altogether of the information he can give? I think it is. I regret to say that although there may not be many Atheists in Canada at the present time, there is a not inconsiderable number of persons whose valuation of an oath is not very high. In a good many cases I would just as soon take the evidence of a man who had no religious belief, as of one who believes and has no scruple about sinning against his belief. The measure I understand met with the warm approval of the Minister of Justice in the other House. That gentleman had had a great deal of experience as a judge in criminal cases during the three years he was on the bench, and he has a good practical knowledge I should say of what the working of this law should be; and that is an argument which should weigh somewhat the House in dealing with the Bill.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I desire to say that to my mind, the observations which have fallen from the hon. gentleman from De Lorimier are unanswerable. They are the expressions of a truth loving mind advanced to this House in the interest of society. We know that the great majority of mankind do feel the solemnity of an oath. If we do away with that form we certainly are moving in a wrong direction. Now as the hon gentleman observed, one clause of the Bill provides that in the event of persons making a declaration they would be held answerable for perjury if they stated what was untrue. This may be declared to be law, but we know that many cases have transpired, where persons have obtained money under a declaration, where they would not have taken it wrongfully if they had had to take an oath before God.

HON. MR. McINNES (B.C.)—Yes they would.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I have known such cases where people have thus taken money wrongfully and not been deterred by the form of a declaration. I think that this House and country are indebted to the hon. gentleman from De Lorimier for the solemn and proper manner in which he has put that question before the House.

HON. MR. NELSON—I think this Bill is a step in the right direction, especially since we have shown an intention to legislate more particularly about the Chinese. A very large portion of those people are in the country. Hitherto they have been confined almost exclusively to British Columbia, but now that the Pacific Railway has been constructed across the continent they will spread through the whole country. It is generally known that the Chinese do not believe in God, and before the courts in British Columbia it is very usual to swear them by burning paper or breaking a saucer.

HON. MR. McINNES (B.C.)—Or cutting off the head of a chicken.

HON. MR. NELSON—Yes, or cutting off the head of a chicken. I think we should be prepared to legislate to meet cases in which such people are called into court to give evidence. We should also legislate to meet the cases of people who do not believe in the existence of a God. We know that some of the most scientific men of the age do not believe in God; yet we would not hesitate to take their affirmation before a court of justice. I think this law is intended to reach people on whom an oath would have no effect. There are many such people whose affirmation would be perfectly good before a Court of Justice, and in many cases a great deal of wrong might be done by excluding their evidence.

HON. MR. TURNER—I quite agree with my hon. friend opposite with regard to the necessity of protecting ourselves from the effects of leaving the Agnostic in a different position from others. The Agnostic does not believe in future punishment; we want him to understand that there is a punishment that he does believe in—that is present punishment and that if he is untruthful he will be punished. We want to put him in the position that he must give evidence whether he likes it or not and provide for his punishment if he makes a false statement. I think it is exceedingly desirable that we should place men of that sort in the position that they cannot refuse to give evidence. There is no doubt that there have been serious cases in Ontario where men have been deprived of their rights through witnesses saying "I cannot take on oath," and guilty parties have from the same cause escaped merited punishment. Now by this Act an Agnostic is forced to give evidence and in such a way that he suffers all the consequences of perjury if he does not tell the truth.

HON. MR. ALMON—How many people have you known to be punished for perjury in Canada? Have you known any?

HON. MR. TURNER—Yes.

HON. MR. ALMON—With regard to persons that you know have committed perjury, how many have been punished? Is not the law in fact an empty threat?

HON. MR. TURNER—No, it is not so.

HON. MR. McINNES (B. C.)—My hon. colleague has gone over the ground that I intended to cover in referring to the necessity of dealing with the case of the Chinese. I am very glad that he has brought that aspect of the question to the notice of the House, because we have something like 20,000 Chinese in British Columbia, and, as my hon. friend says, there is no doubt that a large number of them will find their way eastward before long, and some provision ought to be made to meet their case when they are brought as witnesses into a court of law. But, apart from that, I cannot at all agree with the remarks which have fallen from two or three hon. members—more particularly the hon. gentleman from DeLorimier—who have opposed this Bill. My hon. friend would lead the House to believe that no person but a Christian can speak the truth or give evidence which should be believed. I entirely dissent from that view. I have known, and I believe every hon. member here knows, men who are Agnostics, infidels, or whatever you please to call them, who are as truthful and honest as any people to be found. On the other hand, I have known men, professing Christians, who would make long and apparently fervent prayers, who to my personal knowledge—and I am ashamed to say it—have taken the Bible in their hands and deliberately perjured themselves within my sight and hearing. I have known that in more cases than one.

HON. MR. GLASIER—They ought to be punished.

HON. MR. MCINNES (B.C.)—Certainly; there is not one perjurer in a thousand who is punished. A great many who take the oath do not believe in its sanctity any more than the Agnostic. I am not advocating, and I do not believe in encouraging, Agnosticism in any way, but, at the same time, as there are many Agnostics in our country whose evidence might affect very important cases, I think that this Bill, which admits their evidence, is a step in the right direction.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—May I ask the hon. gentleman whether those Chinese in British Columbia refuse to take an oath because they do not believe it to be binding on their consciences?

HON. MR. MCINNES (B.C.)—They do not believe that it is binding. There are three ways, as far as I am aware, in which they feel under an obligation to tell the truth. The first is by the burning of a small piece of paper in court: the second by breaking a saucer, and I believe a third (though I have never seen it) by bringing in a live chicken and cutting its head off in the presence of the court—the spilling of blood. Those are the three modes.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—Do they give as a reason that the putting of their hands on the Holy Book is not binding on their conscience?

HON. MR. MCINNES (B.C.)—They do not believe that it is a Holy Book. I have heard some of those hon. members who oppose this Bill state on other occasions that you cannot make men temperate by Act of Parliament. I think they are as little likely to make men orthodox by excluding them from the privileges and responsibilities which the laws of the land confer and impose upon other citizens of this country.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—The hon. member from British Columbia who has just spoken says that the Chinese do not believe that the Bible is a Holy Book; then how will this Bill change their position? It will not change it in the least. In the same way, Agnostics who say that an oath on the Bible is not binding on their consciences, assert that they are at liberty to state the truth or not as it may suit their interests. The only thing that prevents them committing perjury is that they are afraid of human law. Well, what difference will this Bill make in their case? You say that it will be unnecessary for them to kiss the book, but that they may make an affirmation, and that it will be equal to taking an oath. Now, is it not absurd to enact laws which will be of no use, and which do not change the position? You leave them precisely as they were before; there is nothing binding upon their consciences in either case. Let the law stand as it is; require them to put their hands on the book, and if they do not do so, let them understand that they will be punished for it. That is the only way to deal with them since they have no fear of anything but human law. On the other hand, see the responsibility this House would take by enacting a law which will be of no avail—we would be legislating for an exception. It is all very well to assert that there are men of great talent who are Atheists. As I stated on a former occasion, I do not believe there is one Atheist in the country, and I have evidence of that fact, because I have seen those men whose pride is such that they defy the Almighty during their lifetime; but when they come to their death-bed they say to their attendants "If I ask for a Minister or anything of the kind, believe that I am wrong, and do not go for one." Now it is not right that a Christian community should place a law on the statute-book to meet an exception, when it will be useless. If this Bill could serve any useful purpose, then I could see the force of the arguments which have been used in support of it. I have shown that the position of a man who does not believe that putting his hand on the Bible is binding on his conscience will be the same, whether he does so or not; because what are you legislating for now? You say "Poor man; you do not believe in putting your hand on a book which is not binding on you; you need only make a statement; but, remember—if you do not state the truth you are committing perjury." Now, I cannot see any difference that such a provision will make, and I think the House would make a mistake in passing the Bill.

HON. MR. NELSON—Don't you see that at present you make a man take an oath upon a book which he does not believe in?

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I do not believe in the Bible that we have on the table here; to me it is nothing but untruth; but if you present it to me I put my hand on it and I swear—I affirm solemnly before God. It is not the touching of the book which constitutes the oath; the oath is a moral act, and that moral act is evidenced by putting my hand on the Bible. That is to say, when I touch the book I take God to witness the truth of the words I utter.

HON. MR. DEVER—I voted for the first reading of the Bill and I intend to support it now if I hear no stronger arguments than those that have been advanced against it. Instead of thinking that a party for whom this Bill is intended has no conscience, I believe, on the contrary that he has a very acute conscience, for if he had not he would step up to the book and take the oath, and would accomplish his end by deception. Neither do I agree with hon. gentlemen who think because a man declares himself a Christian, or professes the doctrines of any particular church, that it necessarily makes him an honest man. I believe that a man can be honest without being orthodox. A man's creed is very largely the result of his early training; it depends on the education he receives in his youth, and it is only when he investigates this subject for himself that he is likely to become what is known at the present day as an Agnostic. I do not agree with a previous speaker who defines Agnosticism as a disbelief in God. That is not Agnosticism. An Agnostic declares that he knows nothing about God.

HON. MR. POWER—That is not a belief to say that you do not know.

HON. MR. DEVER—It is a belief and an honest one. On this subject the greatest diversity of opinion exists. Some thinkers come to one conclusion, and some to another, and at best the idea of the creative power is very indefinite in the minds of most men. Where a man comes forward honestly and declares that he does not consider the ceremony of an oath binding on his conscience, I believe he is a more honest man than that one who follows unthinkingly the lead of any particular school. Therefore, I hold it is far better to give an opportunity for conscientious men to make a declaration according to their conscience—that conscience which God has given them, and which is so beautifully described by the poet, Pope:

What conscience dictates to be done,
Or warns me not to do,
This teach me more than hell to shun,
That more than heaven pursue.

Conscience is above everything, and he who follows its dictates, whether he be known as an Agnostic or an adherent of any of the popular forms of faith, I hold is an honest man and entitled to have his conscience and character respected.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—In reference to what fell from the hon. member from De Lorimier, he seems to treat the matter or principle of the Bill rather as affecting the witness than the case in which he is called. The hon. gentleman states that it makes no difference whatever, whether he puts his hand on the book or whether he affirms, if he does not believe—that his conscience is not affected. That all may be true, but that is not the point here at all. The necessity of this Bill is not due to the effect of it upon the witness. The hon. member from Halifax has stated the point correctly, I believe, and as a similar or further illustration let me just suppose the case of an Agnostic, or a person not believing in the existence of a Deity, who is present at a highway robbery, and the only witness of the crime. The robber is placed upon his trial. This witness, the only one who can give positive evidence, is called. The counsel for the defence finds that he is an Agnostic and puts the question to the court that this man does not believe in future rewards or punishments. The judge is obliged to set that man aside and say that he is not qualified to take an oath, and because the witness is disqualified from taking the oath, the prisoner must go free, there being no other witness against him. It is to prevent such a miscarriage of justice that this Bill has been introduced. As I understand, it imposes the same penalties to his telling a falsehood that are attached to perjury. Why then should his evidence be excluded? I cannot see. It is not like the case of Bradlaugh who declared that he did not believe in the Bible and desired in the first place to be permitted to affirm because he did not consider it was binding on his conscience, and then expressed his willingness to take the oath because it was binding on him. It was in his own interest that he acted. There is no parallel between his case and that of a man called as a witness where he has no interest but merely to tell what he has seen. Now, in my opinion he will tell what he sees just as correctly without putting his hand upon the book as he would if sworn, and what we want is his evidence. I saw it stated in a respectable New York paper the other day, that all men in the city of New York are in the habit of telling the truth excepting when they are under oath. I think the inclination of the courts, and the inclination of all civilized countries, is towards doing away with anything that would deprive the parties interested of the testimony of the only person, probably, who was in a position to give it. I therefore feel that the question of leading to Atheism or Agnosticism is not involved here. We are simply freeing those who have seen a transaction to speak about it. I therefore think that I am neither favoring the one nor the other of the matters to which I have referred by voting for this Bill, and I do so with still more confidence when I learn that the Minister of Justice has given it his assent, because he has not done so without looking more carefully into the matter than cursorily we are able to do. His position gives his opinion the weight of authority, and we should not displace or set aside that authority without very strong and cogent reasons. I therefore must vote for the Bill. The civil law now in Ontario is in the same direction.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—If a witness before the courts declares that he does not believe that the oath to be taken on the Bible is binding on his conscience, in that case is the judge forced, if there is only one witness, to dismiss the case, or can he go on and tell the man to take the oath?

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—No, if he cannot take the oath he is disqualified as a witness, and if there be only that witness the person must go free.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—Then there is a remedy. In place of making a law for that class of people, why should not the criminal law be amended in such a way as to provide that the witness will have to put his hand on the Bible and do what others do, and if he swears what is not true then he will be liable for perjury as he would be if he believed the oath was binding? That would not be encouraging this class of men. In making special enactments for such men I say we are not acting as Christian legislators in opening the door to such principles.

HON. MR. POWER—I am rather surprised that my hon. friend from De Lanaudiere should make such a proposition as he has made. I cannot understand how one, with the respect for the Word of God, which the hon. gentleman has, could suggest that a witness who has declared that he does not believe in the Bible and had no respect for it, should be made to use it as almost a plaything. I can conceive hardly any greater disrespect to the Word of God than a witness who does not believe in it being asked to swear on it.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—I have seen the hon. gentleman himself swear on a book that he does not believe in, so that he has himself been doing this very thing that he repudiates now. I have done it myself and I will do it again, because as I said it is the moral act that is binding on me and not the book. It is no disrespect to the book.

HON. MR. POWER—In this case there is no moral act.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I think there is a good deal of confusion in this debate. I intended to make a few remarks on the principle of this Bill, but it is not customary that the merit of a measure should be discussed in committee. This discussion should have taken place on the second or third reading: but since the debate on this clause has taken such wide range, I do not think it would be improper to address the House on the principle of this Bill rather than re-open the debate on the third reading. We have been discussing rather the form of the oath than the oath itself. It has been said, for instance, that it is for the pagans and Chinese. I hold in my hand the opinion of a man who was a pagan—Cicero, who says very properly that the oath is the foundation of all society. This is the belief of a man who was not a Christian, and who considered, as we do, that the oath is the foundation of every community. The same opinion prevailed in all communities before the Christian era. Does it follow that we must abolish the oath in the case of a pagan, or a man who has a different creed from ours, if his conscience will not allow him to make the oath that we have adopted? I do not believe it. I would say, then, let us have another form of oath. Supposing this Dominion becomes populous and has a mixed people, amongst whom are many pagans, and that those pagans, to have their conscience bound, must have the oath administered in a different way from what it now is, it will then be time enough to examine into this question, and to do what is sought to be done by this Bill. We are establishing a bad precedent, and laying down a bad principle to serve the man who does not believe in God; who has no conscience—because you may put it as you like, a man who does not believe in God has no conscience. He may have some idea of right and wrong, but it is very well known that he recognizes no law, but is a law unto himself: he makes the law to suit himself, and consequently he escapes any moral obligation. The objection I have to this Bill is this: We have before us not only 1,800 years of Christianity, during which it has always been recognized that the oath is the very foundation of all social order, but we have all communities before the Christian era, for 4,000 years, believing the same thing. While it is recognized that all important civil and religious functions cannot be fulfilled without the Church or the State having the security of the party having bound himself by an oath, and while we have Senators doubting the existence of men who do not believe in God, we are admitting, without any necessity for it, a new and dangerous principle into our legislation. Where is the case that has been quoted before us to show that the administration of justice has suffered for the want of such a law as this? I do not think any such case can be cited; and if some cases occur in which it is found that such parties should be compelled to give evidence, then it is not such legislation as this that is required, but a more stringent law to compel them to take the oath and give evidence. If the law is defective in this sense, I do not see that we will improve it by this legislation. The greatest objection to it is that this legislation puts on the same footing the pagan who believes in a God and the man who has no belief at all, and before such persons ask for legislation Parliament comes in and offers, in a certain sense, a premium to men to become Atheists, and to declare that they have no religious belief at all. It is inviting the coming generation to become Free-thinkers and Atheists, because they will have this encouragement that in the eye of the law, and in the opinion of the legislators of this country there is no difference between a man who believes and the man who has no belief. There is no difference in this 19th century between the Christian and all correct minded pagans that the Atheist is a kind of monstrosity. The old pagans considered a man who had no religion, a person who could not give an oath, as being a kind of monster, as an exception that should be treated more like an animal than a man. Then why should we put this sort of creature on the same footing as the ordinary citizen, or even a pagan who believes in God? Hon. gentlemen from British Columbia have quoted the case of the Chinese: the Chinese are pagans, but they believe in God.

HON. MR. NELSON—They certainly do not believe in God. They do not believe in our form of oath. They believe in a certain form of oath, of their own. Cicero believed, as the hon. gentleman says, in a certain form of oath; but Cicero was a highly cultivated man—one of the best educated men of his age. Those Chinese of British Columbia, although they have a certain amount of education, are not educated men, and they have a kind of sacred idea with regard to the peculiar form of oath they take themselves, while they place no value on ours. Then why swear them according to a form of oath that they do not believe in? You must swear them according to the form of oath that they believe sacred.

HON. MR. McINNES (B. C.)—The hon. gentleman from DeSalaberry has said that the Chinese believe in God: more of them believe in the devil than they do in God.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE—One does not go without the other.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—If there is a necessity to reach these men then we should examine into what will be the best form to employ to reach their conscience. By this Bill you will not do it.

HON. MR. DEVER—How will you do it?

HON. MR. TRUDEL—Because it is an affirmation; it is no oath binding on their conscience.

HON. MR. DEVER—How will you reach them?

HON. MR. TRUDEL—I am not sufficiently conversant with the Chinese religion, and am not prepared myself to propose a form of oath for them; but they admit a belief in God and a future life. We are told that there is a kind of sacrifice that is binding on them. In this sacrifice, the killing of a chicken or some other form or ceremony, we find exactly one of the old forms of oath that prevailed before the Christian era. That is, it is a sacrifice, a kind of sacrament, according to their own religion. Amongst the Romans, the oath was called sacramentum, which means a religious act which amounted to a sacrifice. I am not surprised to hear that those poor pagans have in their religion a form which is similar to one of the forms of the old pagans before the Christian era. This form is binding on their conscience; it is their way of invoking the God which they know. They may have an imperfect knowledge of God; but they have some knowledge of the Supreme Being, and they are far from being like those Atheists who do not believe in anything at all. If we vote for this Bill we are giving encouragement to Atheists, by placing those who are not believers on the same footing as those who are. We are affirming the proposition that there is no difficulty in setting aside an oath which has been considered, since the foundation of society, as the safeguard of every community, and doing so needlessly. My hon. friend has very properly remarked that the time may come when, if we say that Atheists will not be obliged to take the oath, we will be asked why not employ the same reason when we appoint a judge? It may be said he is a man of very great ability and remarkable talent, but he does not believe in God. He is appointed as a judge, and why should he not be exempt from taking the oath while other Atheists are examined? Then, if you exempt the judges from taking the oath, why not exempt Ministers of the Crown? Why not exempt gentlemen of the Civil Service, and why not exempt everybody who objects to taking the oath? That is the tendency of this legislation. I think when hon. members have properly considered this matter they will vote against this Bill. The sanction of the Minister of Justice has been quoted. We know perfectly well the circumstances under which this Bill passed through the other House. This Bill was brought in by a private member, and the attention of the Minister of Justice was not directed to the objectionable character of the measure. He thought at first that it was a good Bill, as many others have thought; but I have not the slightest hesitation in stating that if the attention of the Minister of Justice had been properly called to the matter—if he had been invited to study the question, he would not have come to the conclusion to support this measure. I think that hon. members on second thought will decide that we ought not to allow such legislation to pass this House. If, as suggested by the hon. gentleman from DeLanaudiere, it is necessary to amend the criminal law and make it more stringent to force men to give evidence, if they cannot be forced now, let us make the amendment necessary to do so.

HON. MR. ALMON—On Sunday last I was speaking to Chief Justice Ritchie of the Supreme Court on the Chinese question, and he told me he had sworn a Chinaman in court according to the custom in China, which was by getting a saucer and filling it with water and breaking it in the court. I believe that a man is bound who is sworn in the way which his religion dictates. The Jew is sworn on the Old Testament, a Mahomedan on the Koran, and so on. The Chinaman explained to Chief Justice Ritchie, before being examined as a witness, that this was his mode of taking an oath. On being asked to explain it to the court, he said "As the saucer was broken and the pieces could never be united, and as the water is scattered and cannot be collected together again, so God deal with me if I do not tell the truth." Although we have passed an unjust law by which to keep the Chinese out of this country, I would rather believe the oath of a Chinese on this beautiful and touching illustration of its binding nature on his conscience, than that of the Christian who hunts them down and treats them as dogs.

HON. MR. ALLAN—I have very great doubt in my mind as to what course to take on this Bill. In the first place, the Bill was introduced and carried through the Commons by a professional gentleman of considerable ability and experience. I am also aware that some of the judges on the bench are of opinion that some such legislation is required, not in the interest of the parties for whom this affirmation is to be provided instead of the oath, but for the protection and for the benefit of public justice and of suitors in our courts. I am also aware that already in Ontario there is an Act, one clause of which is precisely the same as that in the Bill now before us. The Statute of Ontario 45 Vic. Cap. 11, clause 5, provides that:—

If in any court of justice, any person called to give evidence in a proceeding in respect of which this legislature has jurisdiction to enact as in this section enacted, shall object to take an oath, or shall be objected to as incompetent to take an oath, such person shall, if the presiding judge is satisfied that the taking of an oath would have no binding effect on his conscience, make the following promise, affirmation and declaration.

Then follows the declaration, the same as in the Bill now before us.

HON. MR. KAULBACH — Exactly the same clause.

HON. MR. ALLAN—For all these reasons I had very great doubt as to what course to take with respect to the Bill, because, on the other hand, I entirely sympathize with the expression which has fallen from various hon. gentlemen with respect to the sort of formal recognition which an act of this kind, coming from this Legislature, seems to give to those who do not acknowledge Christianity—a sort of formal provision which it makes for the man who recognizes no God and no future punishment, to have for his own special benefit a particular form of oath provided—I say that I sympathize very deeply with the feeling that has been evidenced on that point by hon. gentlemen who have spoken. I have also felt this difficulty: that if this Bill becomes law there is a very large number of persons who might possibly take advantage of its provisions to state that they had conscientious objections to taking the oath, and so would be permitted to take the affirmation, the form of which is provided in this Bill. I regret to say, I quite believe that a very large number of persons who appeal to their Maker to witness the truth of what they are saying, do not speak the truth under oath. If we were all what we ought to be, the simple answer of yea, yea, and nay, nay, is all that would be necessary, and no oath would be required; but those who have large experience of human nature know that there is a very numerous class of people who, by their actions, show that they have not much practical belief in Christianity, yet have a sort of, in their case, superstitious dread of the oath, and who, although they would not hesitate to say what was not true so long as they were not put upon oath, hesitate when the oath is administered to them, and they would be at all events more careful as to what they say than if they were giving the same evidence on a simple affirmation. It seems to me that the passage of a Bill of this kind may possibly open the door for many persons to profess that they do not believe in God or attach any weight to the oath, and who would avail themselves of the form prescribed here and got rid of, in their case, the superstitious dread which they might have of punishment if they did not tell the truth. But I confess I cannot get over the strong feeling which I have had that I would be most unwilling to take part in any legislation which would seem to divest this Parliament of its character as a Christian legislature, or to give any formal recognized status to those who make no scruple of affirming themselves not to be Christians, and I would venture to suggest, in view of the feeling expressed by many hon. gentlemen, and in view of the fact that many of us have not had an opportunity of making inquiry with respect to the urgency for this Bill, that it should be postponed until another session. We have it in writing here from one of the judges of Ontario that in the interests of public justice it may be better to let this Bill go through; still I have personally that feeling of doubt about it that I should very much prefer to see it lie over, at all events for another year. If in the meantime there is sufficient evidence to convince me that there will be a failure of justice in a very large number of cases—so great a failure of justice that it is desirable to take the step provided for in this bill—then I will not say that I shall not be prepared to vote for it.

HON. MR. WARK—I have listened with a good deal of attention to this discussion, and the longer I have listened to it the more I am convinced that this legislation is not at present necessary. I am an old man, and I do not know that I ever met a man who said he did not believe in God. We are legislating for cases that do not exist. Even the Agnostics that have been referred to do not say so much—all they say is, "I do not know. There may be a Supreme Being or may not; I have no evidence of it, and I do not believe anything for or against it." I was struck with the arguments of the hon. gentleman from Halifax and the hon. gentleman from Toronto. They argued as if evidence was required only on one side—only to convict a criminal. Do they not think that witnesses may be called to clear a criminal? May it not be made to appear that two or three men have met at a certain place; that one of them has stabbed a man to the heart; that they were seen together; that when they left with him they were seen together and soon after the deed was committed? What is to hinder two of those standing together on it and swearing that the murderer never touched the other? May not that be a kind of evidence received in court under the provisions of such a Bill as this? Another thing that would be proved by those men who have no belief whatever in the existence of God: a man may commit a crime, and there may be strong evidence against him, but he may get such characters as those to come forward and prove an alibi—that the accused was at another place at the time the crime was committed. There is no pressing necessity for this legislation at present, and until the necessity arises I think it just as well to keep it off the Statute Book.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I have delayed saying anything on this subject until I heard everything that was to be said by hon. gentlemen. My hon. friend who has just sat down refers to the case of a man accused of crime—a criminal, as he calls him. The accused is not a criminal until he is convicted. My hon. friend says that he may get some one to come in and prove an alibi, and that he was innocent. But I ask my hon. friend this: If a man is on trial for his life, his mouth closed and the only evidence that can clear him that of a man who says, not that he does not believe in God, but that he is skeptical as regards future punishment—would the hon. gentleman disqualify him as a witness on that account, and allow the accused to run the risk of being convicted in consequence of that evidence not being given? The witness may be a man who is well known and respected in society. A man is known by his walk in life and the society he keeps, and for my part I would take the declaration of the man who has the courage to state in open court that he is a freethinker and has no belief in future punishment, thereby exposing himself to odium, than the oath of many a man who uses religion as a mask for his hypocrisy; and when a man's life is in danger, and the prospect of the gallows is before him, and there is a witness who knows that he is innocent and can give evidence to prove it, I say that his mouth should not be shut for want of a provision of this kind. My hon. friend has given instances in which evidence of this kind may be given. A man may not have belief in future punishment or in God, and under the law as it exists he is disqualified; but as I said before, I would believe the evidence of the man who has the honesty to come before a court and admit that he is skeptical with regard to these points—the man who has the moral courage to face the odium and reproach that such a confession involves, in open court—sooner than that of many a man who readily takes the oath. The judge and jury are to try the evidence of every man whether it be true or false, and whether on the sanctity of the oath or not, I say the evidence is to be weighed by the court. There are many persons in this country who believe that a man's sins are punished in this world and not in the next; men who believe that God is a merciful and righteous God and does not punish in the world to come, and that after death come peace and happiness. I say that the testimony of such men is as valuable, and should be believed just as much as the testimony of the man who is orthodox and has no scruples against taking the oath. This Bill is not intended to help Agnostics. It is not intended to relieve them. It is the reverse. It is to subject them to the terrors of the law. It is a right principle that the law ought not altogether to exclude, on the ground of incompetency of witnesses, testimony which may be trustworthy or true, but the sense of judge and jury should be relied upon to decide upon the value of such testimony. It is to protect men from being robbed of their rights—to protect the public against crime. It is a measure solely in the public interest. But my hon. friend from DeLanauiere says that he kissed that Book (the Bible) or he put his hand upon it, though he believes it contains nothing but untruth. He does not believe in the religious obligation of that, but he believes in the moral obligation. So it is with those to whom this Bill applies. They do not believe in the solemnity of an oath, so that the hon. gentleman is in precisely the same position as they are. The Agnostic does not believe, he does not know, he is in doubt as to a future state of punishment; but he believes in a moral obligation. These men who are skeptical as to future punishment, but have a sense of moral obligation (and their name is legion) occupy that position, and why should they be denied their rights? Why should a man who has a case in court be deprived of his rights because perhaps his best witness is not allowed to give evidence? This bill in no way relieves the Agnostic; it forces him to give evidence and attaches the same punishment to false statements that he may make just as if they were made under oath. Under the existing law all that a man has to do, if he wishes to avoid giving evidence, is to say, "I do not believe in a future state of punishment."

HON. MR. DEVER—He has only to say that he does not believe in the Bible.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—He may believe in the Bible, but if he says that he does not believe in a future state of punishment, or has his doubts about it, his evidence is excluded. Many a man may make that statement in order to relieve himself of the necessity of giving evidence. This Bill is to force such men to give evidence, and to make them liable to all the penalties which are attached to false swearing. We say, let such men make their statements and it will be for the judge and jury to say whether their evidence is worthy of credence or not. The man who has the moral courage to come forward and make the statement that he does not believe the Bible to be inspired, and wishes to affirm, and whose conduct is known in the community to be good, is more worthy of credence than one who, having no belief in a future state of punishment, and having no regard for the solemnity of an oath, takes it and gives evidence which may deprive a man of his property or even of his life. This law has been on the Statute Books of England since 1869, and Denman, subsequently a Judge of the Court of Queen's Bench, in a long appeal to Parliament, gives instance after instance where crime has gone unpunished in consequence of persons refusing to give evidence under oath. He states the case of a man whose moral character was high, and who happened to be the only one who could identify the prisoner. The counsel for the defence asked him, "Do you believe in a future state of punishment?" to which he replied "No." The consequence was that his evidence was refused, and the link necessary to convict the prisoner of crime was wanting, and justice was cheated. What do we find in Ontario at this day? We have a law there which has been in force for some four years, applicable to all civil cases, to the same effect as this Bill. This measure, therefore, is not an entering wedge even in this country. The local legislature saw the necessity of such a law and put it on their Statute books. All the arguments which apply to civil cases apply with even greater force to criminal cases. This Bill proposes to admit the evidence of Agnostics in criminal cases, insolved cases and exchequer court cases. In criminal cases every fact should be elicited and it is for the judge and the jury to decide upon the value of the evidence before them. The junior member from Halifax asks how many men swear falsely in courts?

HON. MR. ALMON—It was only to carry out my argument. I asked the hon. gentleman from Hamilton how many persons were punished for perjury, with a view to showing that it was not punishment for perjury that made people speak the truth but the moral obligation of an oath.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—The hypocritical man, under the cloak of orthodoxy, makes a statement under oath and perjures himself with impunity; but you exclude a man who is honest enough to admit that he does not believe any of the popular creeds. The object of this Bill is to prevent a man from refusing to give evidence in cases where the rights of parties are involved. The man who has the moral courage to say I am a skeptic as regards future punishment, is a more credible witness than many who take the oath without hesitation. I am surprised that this discussion has taken place. When the Bill came up for its second reading, after having passed through the other House with the sanction of the Minister of Justice, the principle of the Bill was fully discussed by the hon. member from DeLanaudiere, and a vote taken, with the result that there was a decided majority in favor of the second reading. Yet I find the hon. gentleman who leads the House now debating and opposing the principle of the Bill. The course he is pursuing has taken me completely by surprise and rather leads me to believe that the Government is using its influence to defeat a measure, the object of which is to promote the ends of truth and justice and to assist in the detection and punishment of crime. In the Province of Ontario a man's civil rights may be protected by the evidence of an Agnostic; but his life might be forfeited through the refusal of the court to admit the evidence of the very same witness. The hon. gentleman from Fredericton asserts that a man might escape the consequence of a capital offence by bringing a witness of that kind; but it may also happen that a criminal in the dock, whose mouth is closed, may have in the court room one who knows all the facts of the case and whose evidence may be as reliable under a declaration as another man's under oath; and yet cannot avail himself of the information which that man possesses to save himself from the gallows. The large Province of Ontario four years ago passed an Act which is verbatim the same as this clause and with the same penalties attached, and I would be surprised if this House, after sanctioning the second reading of the Bill, should now go back on the principle established on that occasion by a decided majority. I will not take up the time of the House reading the opinions expressed by the judiciary on the working of the Ontario Statute. I have letters from judges of high standing in Ontario approving of this Bill in every particular. I have one especially from Justice Osler, a Judge of the Court of Appeal of Ontario, and one or two others, but I do not wish to use their opinions to influence the House in the matter. I feel satisfied that the Senate, after having affirmed the principle of the Bill on the second reading, will adopt this clause.

HON. MR. KAULBACH

HON. MR. DICKEY—We are making no progress in this matter, and I beg to move that the Chairman do now leave the chair.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—That is an amendment to my motion which would virtually defeat a Bill intended, as I have said, to promote the ends of truth and justice.

HON. MR. LACOSTE—The motion can be made at any stage.

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—The object of the motion made by the hon. member from Amherst is to defeat the Bill. That is quite clear, because if the motion is carried the Chairman leaves the Chair and reports no progress and the Bill falls. This is a question which is one of very considerable importance and one on which very strong arguments can be advanced on both sides. I cannot fail to revert back to a long experience of criminal and civil procedure in my own Province. I have been a magistrate for many years presiding in a court of justice, and my experience, with respect to the evidence given before the Court, has forced me to the conclusion that many witnesses who put their hands on the Holy Book commit perjury. If it can be shown that every man who was willing to put his hand on the Bible and swear that he would tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, calling upon his Maker to witness that he intends to do so—if it could be shown that that had an influence upon him and that no man would violate that oath, it would be a great reason to reject this Bill; but I must say, and I say it with regret, that in a long experience I have known many cases of deliberate perjury committed by men who acknowledged themselves to be Christians, and that in a great many cases it is not the sanctity of the oath which prevents men from committing perjury, but the fear of human punishment. It has been so in many cases to my knowledge. This Bill provides for that. Now, this question can be argued without any passion, and there is no occasion at all for persons to become opposed to each other on this as on a political question. There is nothing like politics in it; we can discuss the question calmly and on its merits. The arguments which have been adduced in support of the measure with the experience I have had in criminal justice, have more weight with me than the objections which have been raised to the Bill. In the case of an Agnostic, under this Bill we have the benefit of his evidence. Now what is the object in making an Agnostic put his hand on the Bible and make a solemn oath? It can have no influence or effect upon him, but if you enable him by the provisions of this Bill to give evidence and subject him to the punishment of perjury, that is a check upon him if he does not believe in the Bible. I am under the impression that there are very few in our Dominion who would venture to assert that there is no God, but unfortunately very many persons who come forward in a Court of Justice and take a solemn oath upon the Holy Bible, disregard it entirely and commit perjury. I have seen it often and I am in a position to know that the oath has been no protection or safeguard as regards getting the truth out of an individual.

HON. MR. ALLAN—The hon. gentleman says that a great many men professing to be Christians give their evidence in court and are only deterred from saying what is not true, if they are deterred at all, by the fear of punishment and not from any regard for the sanctity of an oath, and the hon. gentleman repeats that there are many who come up and are sworn who do not tell the truth. In what way would this Bill remedy that, because I suppose it does not apply to the case of anyone except the witness who stands up in the face of the court and states that he does not believe in a God, and objects to taking the oath? A man must profess that he does not believe in God, or in a future state of punishment, before he is permitted to make a declaration.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I should like to ask the hon. gentleman if he intends to express the opinion that a man who perjures himself when he has sworn on the Bible, will tell the truth when he has not sworn on the Bible?

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—The provisions of this Bill, I say, will certainly afford an opportunity to get evidence from parties who would not otherwise be admitted as witnesses.

HON. MR. DICKEY—What sort of evidence?

HON. MR. BOTSFORD—It would be for the judge and jury to say. If a person, authorized under this Bill to give evidence, does so he is subject to all the penalties attached to perjury, and that is a protection. As I have already mentioned, so far as my own experience goes it is the principal protection we have in our courts to-day; it is the fear of punishment which prevents persons from committing perjury. Therefore, under all the circumstances, I will support the Bill.

The committee divided on the amendment, which was adopted.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (73) "An Act to incorporate the Winnipeg and North Pacific Railway Company." (Mr. Clemow)

Bill (95) "An Act to incorporate the Victoria and Sault St. Marie Junction Railway Company." (Mr. O'Donohoe)

Bill (48) "An Act to amend the Act to incorporate the Niagara Frontier Bridge Company." (Mr. Power)

Bill (103) "An Act further to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act, 1882." (Mr. Plumb)

HON. MR. ALLAN.

ST. GABRIEL LEVEE AND RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

FIRST READING.

A Message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (116) "An Act to incorporate the St. Gabriel Levee and Railway Company."

The Bill was read the first time.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I am requested to state to the House that this is a very important measure, affecting large interests in Montreal, and to ask the House, in view of the fact that the Railway Committee will meet the day after to-morrow, if they will permit this Bill to be read the second time to-day. I therefore move the suspension of the 41st rule in order that the Bill may be read the second time now.

HON. MR. POWER—I decidedly object, and for this reason: I find that the parties most directly interested in this measure, the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal, take a somewhat different view of it from that taken by the hon. gentleman; and I think that in a question involving a number of disputed points, and a great many important interests, hurry of the kind just indicated is very undesirable, and that the Bill had better take the usual course.

HON. MR. PLUMB—The Bill will be fully discussed before the Railway Committee.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Objection is raised to the principle of the Bill.

THE SPEAKER—The objection is fatal.

Ordered that the Bill be read the second time to-morrow.

SECOND READINGS.

The following bills were read the second time without debate and referred to Committee:—

Bill (114) "An Act to amend the Acts respecting the British Canadian Bank." (Mr. Turner.)

Bill (69) "An Act respecting the Bank of Yarmouth." (Mr. Power.)

Bill (91) "An Act to incorporate the Yarmouth Steamship Company, Limited." (Mr. Plumb.)

Bill (90) "An Act to amend and consolidate the Acts relating to the Montreal Board of Trade." (Mr. Ogilvie.)

SUBSIDIES IN LAND TO RAILWAYS BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill (117), "An Act to amend the Act to authorize the granting of subsidies in land to certain Railway Companies." He said: The object of this Bill is to authorize the granting of subsidies in land for the construction of certain railways in a different way from that provided in the original Act. They have hitherto been granted in odd sections. The proposal is to obtain permission to grant townships or fractions of townships or blocks instead of alternate lots, subject to certain conditions as to lands reserved to the Hudson Bay Company, or school lands.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

PROTECTION TO NAVIGABLE WATERS BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. DICKEY moved the second reading of Bill (96), "An Act respecting the protection of navigable waters." He said: The object of this Bill is to require any person who is the owner of a sunken vessel, or other obstruction to navigation, to give notice to Department of the fact, and if he neglects to remove that obstruction within a certain time, the Department is authorized to remove it; and a subsequent provision requires him to pay the expense of removal, but he is to be paid the value of the obstruction when sold. This is not to interfere with any other proceeding by private parties who have suffered injuries. There is a provision also for the removal of sawdust and other obstructions to navigable waters, and waters leading into navigable waters. There is also a repealing clause connected with it.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I agree with the principle of the Bill, especially respecting the removal of obstructions from navigable waters, but it is a question how far we are infringing on provincial rights as regards the throwing of sawdust into waters that are not navigable. It may, amongst other things, bear harshly upon small mill owners; but these matter may be amended when the Bill goes into committee.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned at 5.45 p. m.

THE SENATE

Ottawa, Wednesday, May 12th, 1886.

THE SPEAKER took the Chair at three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills, reported from the Committee on Banking and Commerce, were read the third time and passed without debate:—

Bill (24), "An Act to incorporate the Kingston and Pembroke Mutual Aid and Insurance Company, (Limited)." (Mr. Sullivan.)

Bill (83), "An Act to amend the Act incorporating the Board of Trade of the City of Ottawa." (Mr. Clemow.)

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (P) "An Act further to amend The Law of Evidence in certain cases." (Mr. Power.)

THE SEA COAST FISHERIES OF CANADA.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER rose to enquire:

Whether it is the intention of the Government to give to the House before it rises, some definite information of the present position and prospects of "the Sea Coast Fishery Question?"

He said: In rising to make this enquiry I desire to observe that it is one of the most important questions of the day. This interest is the leading and principal interest of the Maritime Provinces. Upon the proper protection and development of this great interest depends to some extent the prosperity of the Maritime Provinces. In the development of that industry are involved the employment of a large fishing population, the creation of much wealth, and many other great results which it would not be convenient, upon a mere enquiry, to discuss now. It would not perhaps be proper upon a mere enquiry to refer to what has taken place since the Treaty expired on the 1st July last year. It would not be proper to express what I know to be the public sentiment of the country that a great and important interest, involving the wealth and prosperity of the Maritime Provinces, should have been treated in the manner it has been. The Parliament of this country should not appear, at this moment, to be indifferent to the prosperity of the Maritime Provinces which such inaction would imply. This great question of the fisheries on our sea-coasts has scarcely been discussed at all this Session. We ought to know, and it is incumbent on the Parliament to know, what the Government of the day is doing with regard to that great industry, affecting as it does such important interests. If the First Minister were to-day what he was ten years ago it would be quite different; but we deplore, we all sincerely deplore the present state of his health, but while we do deplore the state of his health it is the more incumbent upon us, to obtain definite information for the country in regard to the actual position and prospect of the question, and I therefore put the inquiry which I have placed upon the notice paper.

HON. MR. DICKEY—The House will scarcely expect me to enter into a discussion of this important matter. It would be extremely inconvenient in the present state of affairs to do so; but I may say, in answer to the question of the hon. member, that I am instructed to state that the Government do not expect to be in a position to give definite information on this most important subject before the close of the session. It is under consideration, and when the report upon the subject is ready it will be communicated.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY.

MOTION.

HON. MR. BELLEROSE moved

That a humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House, copies of the reports made by the Inspector of Penitentiaries upon the escape of one Fortier, a prisoner, from the Penitentiary of St. Vincent de Paul, on or about the 1st October, 1884, and, also, copies of the Evidence taken at the time of the enquiries referred to, and of all other documents forming part of the record thereof.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I may state to my hon. friend who has made this motion, that there is no objection to the Address, and the information will be furnished.

The motion was agreed to.

THE INDEPENDENCE OF PARLIAMENT.

INQUIRY.

HON. MR. TRUDEL inquired

Is it the intention of the Government to submit to the consideration of the Parliament of Canada any measure to prevent members of that Parliament and members of the Civil Service from subscribing for shares in, or having pecuniary interests in, Railway Companies and other Companies of a similar nature subsidized by the State?

He said:—It is hardly necessary for me to say anything to establish the opportuneness of the inquiry which I have made. This House must know that it is almost of daily occurrence that members of Parliament and members of the Civil Service have pecuniary interests in railway enterprises which are subsidized by the Dominion, and every hon. gentleman must agree with me that a necessity exists to put an end to that state of things. It may have produced good in older times, but it can now be productive of nothing but evil. I think that some legislation should be introduced to prevent members of either House from taking an interest in enterprises which are subsidized by the Government. In former times members of Parliament connected with such enterprises were enabled to render important services to the country, but times have changed and it is time to put an end to the system.

HON. MR. DICKEY—In answer to the question of my hon. friend I am instructed to state that it is not the present intention of the Government to submit any measure on the subject referred to in this inquiry.

HON. MR. POWER—I am rather surprised that the hon. member from DeSalaberry should have put this notice on the paper, because he must have observed that in a Bill introduced by the Government provision is made that members of the Canada Pacific Railway Company, a most powerful and influential corporation, as the hon. gentleman knows, are qualified to become members of both Houses. The disqualification under which they laboured has been removed by that Bill. Being aware of that fact, the hon. gentleman has not shown his usual astuteness in asking the question.

HON. MR. TRUDEL—The fact that such a provision exists in the Bill to which the hon. member refers should not prevent the Government from legislating on the subject. This is a different thing altogether.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

HON. MR. ALMON—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I rise to a question of privilege. In the report of yesterday's debate, published in this morning's Citizen, I am reported as saying that I "did not know what course to take"—that is with reference to the Bill to amend the law of evidence—but that I would "like the Bill to stand over for another year." Now, if anybody gave no uncertain sound on that subject yesterday, it was myself. The question was whether an Atheist who is asked to give evidence should be permitted to do so without taking an oath, while the word of a Christian would not be taken and he would be obliged to give evidence under oath. I had no trouble in making up my mind as to how I should vote. My mind was not only made up, but it was not changed, and I think it is unfair that this paper should attribute such language to me. However, I suppose I should treat it with contempt.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—It is evidently a mistake of the printer. The name of the hon. gentleman from Halifax has been substituted in mistake for that of my hon. friend from Toronto, (Mr. Allan.)

THE SEDUCTION BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The Order of the Day having been called, "Committee of the Whole House on Bill (20), Seduction, punishment and Protection of Women and Girls Bill."

HON. MR. VIDAL said: Before making the motion that the House go into Committee I wish to suggest—and it is a matter which I do not venture to make any motion upon—that the debate on this subject is not one which is likely to be edifying, or to afford pleasant reading, and I think we can discuss the measure more freely if it is understood that no report of the debate will be published in the Hansard. I would ask the hon. member from Amherst to give his opinion on the matter.

HON. MR. DICKEY—I have not considered the question in such a way as to be able to give my hon. friend a definite answer upon that point. So far as I am personally concerned—and it is only in that sense I could give any answer—I can only remind my hon. friend that on former occasions the matter was discussed with open doors, but I have no objection personally to the course which he suggests. What I have to say would, I hope, bear to be reported.

HON. MR. ALMON—I am in favour of the Bill, to a certain extent, but very much opposed to some of its clauses, and it would appear as if I opposed the Bill generally if the discussion were not reported. As my hon. friend from Amherst says, I am not going to use any improper language or anything that I would object to having published. The difficulty in adopting the suggestion of my hon. friend is that it would place those who are opposed to some clauses of the Bill in a bad position if their views were not put on record.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I have no objection to the proposal of my hon. friend. A discussion of this kind can hardly be treated in plain language effectively. Even some of the clauses of the Bill are such as are likely to shock the sense of outside readers and are equally demoralizing in their tendency with the discussion which is almost certain to take place upon them.

THE SPEAKER—I think that the sense of the House is against the hon. gentleman, but I may be wrong.

The House resolved itself into Committee on the Bill.

In the Committee.

On the first clause.

HON. MR. VIDAL—In introducing the Bill and explaining its provisions, I gave the reason why the author of this Bill had put ten years as the limit, mentioning to the House that that was the age which was fixed in our existing Statute at which such an offence, being committed, was constituted a felony, subjecting the perpetrator to imprisonment for life or for a shorter term of years. Since making that statement to the House, and feeling my responsibility in connection with the matter, I have taken the trouble to ascertain the exact state of the law in the Dominion on the subject, and I find that an important clause has been overlooked—that we have on our Statute books already a provision for the punishment of this offence committed against a girl up to the age of twelve years. It will be found in our criminal law.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—We all know that.

HON. MR. VIDAL—It is a very strange thing that if all knew it, not a single gentleman in the House was able to refer to it when I made the statement that ten years was the limit of the age fixed by the existing law for this offence. Having ascertained that that is the existing Statute in the Dominion, there is no reason for making ten years the limit, and I propose to amend this clause by fixing the limit at twelve years instead of ten to bring it into harmony with the existing law.

HON. MR. PLUMB—If there is a statute on the subject already, why pass this Bill?

HON. MR. ALMON—I have no objection to that amendment.

HON. MR. MCINNES—In my opinion I think the age of sixteen is probably exceeding the proper age. I think if it were made up to fourteen it would be better.

HON. MR. VIDAL—Does not the hon. gentleman see that would leave a lapse in our law between the age of twelve and fourteen. In the English law the age is fixed at thirteen: but having on our own statute the age of twelve as the limit it would be better to bring this clause into harmony with the existing law.

HON. MR. PLUMB—It seems to me the wording of this clause is very bad if it does not intend to convey a different meaning from what the hon. gentleman supposes it to have. It provides that any person having "illicit connection with any girl of previously chaste character, or who attempts to seduce and have illicit connection with any girl of previously chaste character, being of the age of ten years and under the age of sixteen years."

The first clause of that sentence, down to the first comma, means that it applies to any girl of any age. The wording is bad. I do not know what the intention is, but certainly the hon. gentleman must see that my construction is correct. I appeal to gentlemen of the legal profession to say if it is not so.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—It certainly is.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I think any gentleman who reads it that way is passing a clause which is liable to that interpretation.

HON. MR. VIDAL—Why not then amend it?

HON. MR. PLUMB—I would like to point it out to the legal gentlemen here and ask them whether their opinion is the same as mine, and if they will suggest some other form which will prevent that misconception.

HON. MR. ALEXANDER—I do not conceive at all that we require to refer to the opinions of legal gentlemen on this point. The word "being" following, the reader must know that the word "being" applies to the first sentence. We do not require the aid of lawyers to tell us that.

HON. MR. VIDAL—It is quite possible that the wording of the clause may be open to that construction, and I am thankful to my hon. friend from Niagara for having pointed it out. I would suggest as an amendment the inserting of the words "in either case" after the word "being."

The amendment was agreed to.

HON. MR. ALMON—The amendment being agreed to, I beg leave to move a further amendment. I do not see why the law should allow a person, without being punished, to have connection with a girl under ten years of age if her previous character has not been chaste. The law, as I understand it, protects a prostitute from violence as much as if she was a decent, respectable woman; and I think any man who has connection with a girl under ten years of age deserves very severe punishment. I therefore shall move after the words "any girl" to leave out "of previously chaste character." Then page one, line 8, after the words "Any girl of previously chaste character" insert "knowing her to be." The clause of the Bill protects a bawd who takes a girl of juvenile age of unchaste character into her house and uses her for purposes of prostition. I think the same protection should be given to a man, providing that he commits the offence knowing she is of previous unchaste character.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I do not think that amendment will do at all, as it will nullify the object of the Bill.

HON. MR. POWER—I think the last amendment is unnecessary, because if my hon. friend will turn to the next page he will find that it is provided there that it shall be a sufficient defence if it is made to appear to the Court and jury that the girl was of or above the age of sixteen years.

HON. MR. DICKEY—That relates to an offence under the fourth section of the Bill.

HON. MR. POWER—I do not think the amendment in the form in which my hon. friend from Halifax puts it would be a desirable one at any rate, because the onus of proof that the offender did not know the girl was under sixteen years of age should be on him. The prosecution should not be obliged to prove that he knew she was under the age of sixteen. Although my sympathies are with my hon. friend in thinking that those words "of previously chaste character" ought to be stricken out, I think that possibly the amendment might lead to a defeat of the Bill either here or in the other Chamber, and it is better not to make the Bill any stronger than it is as it comes up to us.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—It seems to me the first section is objectionable on the ground that it makes the commission of the act and the attempt to commit the act of equal gravity. That is not so in the criminal law generally. While the substantive felony has a higher punishment attached to it, the minor one of the attempt is generally a misdemeanor. So it seems to me that in this Bill the attempt to commit is considered of equal gravity with the commission of the act itself, and in that it is wrong. I simply submit it to the promoter of the Bill. He will find in all our criminal laws for offences against the person that the act, and the attempt to commit the act are never of the same gravity: that the one is a felony and the other a misdemeanor, and that the punishment for the one is much lighter than the punishment for the other.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I think this clause is also defective in another point of view. It says “has committed this offence or who attempts to do so.” Now it appears to be very vague and uncertain what would be an attempt to commit this act. Such language is not sufficiently definite to put into a criminal act. If it were an attempt to commit an assault it does not require much proof of the assault: but the phrase “attempts to do it” is of vague and uncertain nature, and not sufficiently tangible to make it a felony. An attempt is a very vague term, which may be an intention of the mind.

HON. MR. POWER—No, no.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—It may be. It may mean conversation of an improper character. That might be called an attempt. I say it should be an assault with intent. The words are too vague and uncertain, and would leave the matter open to endless discussions in court.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I think the hon. gentleman from Toronto has some reason for the position he takes. I do not think any person should receive the same punishment for the attempt that he should for the commission of the act.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—What is the attempt?

HON. MR. DEVER—An attempt to shoot, for instance, is not open to the same punishment as the actual shooting and killing.

HON. MR. POWER—I do not think that the objection is well taken. The language used in this Bill is the language which is habitually used in criminal statutes. You find continually that anyone who does or attempts to do such and such things is punished in such a way. The hon. gentlemen from Toronto and Halifax speak as though there were only one punishment, but if they will look at the last clause of the Bill they will find that there is a very large discretion in the hands of the Court, and that is the place to leave the discretion. The judge who tries the case is in a much better position to discriminate as to what punishment should be imposed than we are. If the attempt is not an aggravated one the probabilities are that the Court would sentence the convicted offender to a comparatively trifling imprisonment. If the attempt is an aggravated one the guilt may be as great as if it had succeeded, and deserve severe punishment. I think it would not be well to hamper the discretion of the Court any further than the Bill does now.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Will the hon. gentleman show me a statute where the word “attempt” is used? There is “assault with intent.” I do not know what the definition of this term would be. I do not think the word has ever been defined. The word “attempt” is vague and uncertain, and it would be difficult for a Court and jury to decide what is an attempt; the thing may be an assault with intent.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I really think that in making a criminal law like this we should be careful not to use language which is likely to be misunderstood. I do not know how you could define “attempt to seduce.” I quite agree with my hon. friend from Toronto in his view of the case. The best way to meet the difficulty is to strike out all of the second line after the word “character” and all of the third line, and I move that those words be struck out. I do not make the motion for the purpose of hampering the Bill or rendering it less effective, because there are a great many of its provisions which I think should go on the statute book; but I ask that the Bill be amended so as to put it in a better shape. It is very easy to define the attempt to commit assault or murder; but this is one of those vague things that it is impossible to define, it is so difficult to get at any point which will fix the attempt. It would be very easy to say that an attempt is made, but very difficult to define it.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I am under the necessity of opposing this amendment.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE.

In the first place meeting the argument of the hon. member from Toronto, I would say that the offence is made a misdemeanor and the penalty is not too great, and further it is left entirely to the discretion of the Court in passing judgment to decide whether the offence is a serious one or whether there are mitigating circumstances in connection with it. We are accustomed to look to our parent land for the best patterns for our legislation, specially in laws of this kind. In the English statute I find that there is no distinction made between the actual commission of the offence and the attempt. The words used are "Procures or attempts to procure," etc. The third clause of the Act provides that whosoever unlawfully or carnally knows or attempts to have any unlawful or carnal knowledge." The difficulties which hon. gentlemen see here in the use of the word "attempt," did not occur to the minds of the eminent jurists who framed this English Act and criticised it before it became law. I hold that the language being used in the British statute is sufficient justification for the words used in this clause. It has been thought convenient in the other House in drafting the present Bill to use some words differing from those in the English Act, but having precisely the same signification. The words "seducing" and "having illicit connection" are practically the same as those of the English law: but we employ terms more commonly used in society in speaking of these things. The point I am arguing, is that in the English law it is not thought necessary or desirable to make a distinction between the actual commission and the attempt to commit, the degree of punishment being left to the discretion of the court.

HON. MR. DEBOUCHERVILLE—Does the hon. gentleman find the word "attempt" in the Canadian Act which refers to this offence against girls of 12 years and under?

HON. MR. VIDAL—The Act to which the hon. gentleman refers is the 40th Victoria, Chap. 28. The word "attempt" is not to be found there. It has been taken entirely from the English statute passed last year. I shall therefore oppose the amendment.

HON. MR. PLUMB—There is a very wide margin of difference between the language employed in the English statute and the words of this clause. Nobody can say that the meaning of those two clauses is exactly alike, and I think the safest way is to strike out the words mentioned in my amendment. The clause will be strict enough without them. I shall certainly press my amendment.

HON. MR. MCMILLAN—I think we are astray as to the meaning of the word "attempt" used here. I think it means attempting to have illicit intercourse with a girl under this age and not being able to accomplish it on account of the age of the girl—that is really the attempt which is meant in this clause.

HON. MR. POWER—I would ask the hon. member from Niagara how a man could seduce a girl of this age without having illicit connection with her? I am sorry to see the Senate dealing with this Bill in the spirit in which I regret to see it seems disposed to treat it.

HON. GENTLEMEN—No, no!

HON. MR. POWER—Two years ago, it will be remembered, the reason given by many hon. members and by the gentleman who then led the House, was, that there was no English law dealing with the subject. This year we have an English statute, and now hon. gentlemen say they do not want to follow the language of that statute, but prefer the wording of the Canadian law. I think we ought to be consistent. If two years ago we wanted an English model, we now have such a model, and ought to be satisfied to follow it. I appeal to the good feeling of members of this House to say whether any wretch who attempts to have illicit connection with a girl under the age of sixteen does not deserve to be punished.

HON. MR. ALMON—Whether of chaste character or not.

HON. MR. POWER—Yes, whether of chaste character or not. This Bill does not provide that a man shall be sentenced to the Penitentiary for any particular term, or anything of that sort, but leaves the punishment to the discretion of the Court. Surely there is no hon. gentleman here who thinks that such an attempt should not be punished. If there is, I am sorry for him.

HON. MR. POIRIER—In my opinion the word "attempt" ought to disappear from this clause. If it is allowed to stand it will offer inducements to girls to levy blackmail. If an attempt is made upon a girl it can be proved by medical testimony, but an attempt to seduce would enable a girl, intent on blackmailing, and having circumstantial evidence in support of her charge, to make out a case, and it will be delivering honest men bound hand and foot over to blackmailers. I have great respect for English laws, and in this particular matter the people of England have had much more experience than we in Canada, at least the revelations of the Pall Mall Gazette have proven so; but still we can be consistent and not adopt laws which are made to meet special circumstances which occur in England. I think we are going far enough with this Act by punishing the commission of the offence without adding to the clause the vague word "attempt"; and I shall certainly support the amendment.

HON. MR. TURNER—I think we might get over this difficulty by just leaving out the words "seduce and." I think that would meet the views of the House.

HON. MR. HAYTHORNE—I am of opinion that the clause is likely to be more efficient as originally introduced, for the reason that it will exercise a deterrent influence on badly disposed men. They will hesitate to approach a girl with evil intentions while they are liable to incur this punishment.

HON. MR. ALLAN—The reason why I should prefer such an amendment as the hon. member from Hamilton proposes, is that it will remove any reasonable objection to the clause. I should be disposed to take the clause as it stands; but I can understand the difficulty of proving what an attempt is, and there is also the danger of inviting blackmailing against innocent individuals; but I do not think there can be any such ambiguity if you strike out the words "seduce and." There can be no doubt as to the meaning of an attempt to have illicit connection. I think we can all adopt the suggestion of the hon. member from Hamilton.

HON. MR. VIDAL—If any change is to be made I would suggest that it would be better to adopt entirely the language of the English statute.

HON. MR. POWER—I would recommend the hon. member from Sarnia to adopt the suggestion of the hon. member from Hamilton.

HON. MR. VIDAL—Do you think that will be sufficient?

HON. MR. POWER—Yes.

HON. MR. TURNER—I move in amendment to the amendment to leave out the words "seduce and."

HON. MR. DICKEY—I think that the purpose of the Act will be accomplished by accepting the amendment of the hon. gentleman from Hamilton for this reason—what is the act to seduce? It is trying to have connection, and trying to seduce is simply tautology, and therefore if you accept that amendment it will be consistent and harmonious.

HON. MR. PLUMB—I accept the amendment of the hon. member from Hamilton in lieu of my own.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I also accept it without hesitation.

The amendment was adopted.

On the second clause,

HON. MR. VIDAL—This clause has been spoken of as the black mailing clause, but hon. gentlemen should bear in mind that no action for damages—no civil penalty is provided by this clause. It is solely dealing with the criminal side of the offence, and subjecting the offender to imprisonment. I cannot conceive that any girl would subject herself to the dishonor and grief which such an act would bring upon her, just for the satisfaction of having a man imprisoned in the penitentiary.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Could she not use that as a means to extort money?

HON. MR. VIDAL—No, clause 5 provides that no person shall be convicted of any offence under this Act upon the evidence of one witness unless such witness be corroborated in some material particulars. It is well to bear this provision in mind: it relates to the whole bill, and in my opinion is ample protection against attempts to levy black-mail by designing women.

HON. MR. DEVER—I must say it is a very unfair clause; I do not see why a young man should be subjected to such penalty, and the girl be allowed to escape. There is just as much danger of the young man being seduced as there is in the girl being seduced. I have known instances in my time where young women were most anxious to seduce young men. Under the circumstances I think the clause should be scrutinized very carefully.

HON. MR. MCINNES (B.C.)—Having been a member of the Committee to whom a bill similar to this was referred two years ago, on a pledge or promise given by the then Minister of Justice that he would bring in some legislation on this question as a Government measure the following year, I moved the rejection of the Bill, and my principal reason for opposing the Bill was this very clause. I look upon this clause as being a very dangerous one; I believe it does open the door to blackmail. Take, for instance, a young man of fifteen or sixteen who is sole heir to a large property, and a designing girl of nineteen or twenty seduces him, and then takes an action against him for seduction. If this clause becomes law the boy would have no other alternative but to leave the country, or be imprisoned in the penitentiary, or what is still worse, to condone the offence by marrying her. I have a couple of sons; I think a good deal of them, as no doubt every hon. gentleman here does of his sons, and we do not want to see them marry characters of that kind and bring them to our homes to be treated as we should treat daughters-in-law and members of our families. While I desire to see the mantle of protection thrown around all those who ought to be protected, I cannot close my eyes to the fact that if guardians, parents, and especially mothers, exercised more care and more authority over their daughters, there would be fewer of those abominable cases of seduction throughout the country. I think this is a highly objectionable clause, and if nobody else will move that it be rejected, I will.

HON. MR. TURNER—This section is the most objectionable of the whole Bill. I think it is due, however, to the promoter of the Bill in the other House, after having brought it forward so often, and now so much improved, and especially so as the late Minister of Justice promised when it was thrown out last session that he would bring down a measure of this sort this session.

HON. MR. PLUMB—There was no promise made.

HON. MR. MCINNES (B. C.)—He did promise in Committee.

HON. MR. TURNER—That we should under these circumstances give this Bill most careful consideration. Section two now under discussion is, to my mind, a black-mailing clause, and I intend to vote against it, and if it is not rejected I should move some amendments. The worst feature of this section is the proviso that legalizes the compounding of a felony. I can quite understand that if a man has done a girl this great injury, and makes reparation by marrying her, that there may be affection between them afterwards; but I cannot believe that there can be any love or respect between the man and the girl he marries as an alternative to going to the penitentiary. By this clause there is practically a price put upon a girl's virtue; with some the price is money, with others it is something else, and this law is a deliberate legalizing of an inducement for women to part with their honor. Promised marriage is in this case her price; and it is just as if she had been promised money; and a woman who permits herself to be seduced, the promise of marriage being the consideration, in the true interest of the sex should not be so protected.

HON. MR. PLUMB—It has been charged that the ex-Minister of Justice in this House, in the year 1884, promised that he would bring in a measure of this character. I will read to the House from the Senate Debates what the Minister of Justice stated on that occasion:—

“I have no objection to say that the Government will undertake, next session, to present a bill upon the subject of the inveiglement of young women into houses of ill-fame, and that they will also consider the question of seduction, but I cannot make any pledge with regard to legislation on the subject of seduction. I confine my pledge, with regard to introducing a measure next session, to the offences mentioned in the second clause, but I will give my best consideration to the other subject as well.”

That settles the question which I have insisted on—that there was no pledge on the part of the Minister to bring in a measure dealing with seduction, because such legislation is not known in the English law. While a statute was passed in England in 1885, the provision which we are now discussing was not a part of that Act. It has never been on the English Statute Book, and I can very well understand that the Minister of Justice saw that there would be difficulty in dealing with that question, and therefore he confined himself, in making his pledge, to the question of inveiglement of young girls into houses of ill-fame, a matter in which we are all in accord, that it should be severely punished. This particular clause he did not promise to deal with.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I made the statement, having been one of the special committee to whom the Bill was referred a couple of years ago. I stated that the then Minister of Justice promised to bring in a measure, or to amend the criminal law in such a manner as to cover the whole ground, or nearly the whole ground covered by the Bill then before us. What the hon. gentleman from Niagara has just read is what the Minister stated on the floor of this House, but the pledge I say he gave was not in this Chamber, but in the committee room, and it was what he stated in the committee room, and the pledge given to the committee that caused me to move for the rejection of the entire Bill.

The statement I made is correct, and I appeal to any hon. gentleman here who was on the committee, if I am not right.

HON. MR. OGILVIE—For once I quite agree with the hon. gentleman from New Westminster, and I certainly agree with the hon. gentleman from Hamilton. This second clause is most objectionable in every way, and I can hardly understand how any one could place it in the Bill and expect it to pass. I have not heard a favorable opinion as to the clause. We all know that boys of from fifteen to twenty years of age are generally very much flattered by having some attention paid to them by ladies somewhat older than themselves; and a boy holding a good position socially and possessed of wealth, is very likely to attract the attention of some designing woman who will endeavour to seduce him, and the young fellow in that position is very likely to make any promise almost that she likes. When such a promise is made, if this Bill passes, he has either to stand a criminal trial and run his chance of going to the Penitentiary or to marry the woman, which, as a rule, would be a great deal worse. I think there is no use in endeavouring to amend the clause; the best way is simply to eliminate it altogether.

HON. MR. DEVER—I think this clause can be made satisfactory by striking out the proviso that in the case of an unmarried man the subsequent marriage of the parties may be pleaded in bar of the conviction.

HON. MR. DICKEY—That will not alter the clause at all, because he would still be under the penalty of being brought before a Court and tried for the offence. I confess my own feeling is decidedly against this clause. I think it is most dangerous. It has been said that the effect of it is very much modified by Section 5, but that I think is an entire delusion. Clause 5 provides that no person shall be convicted of any offence under this Act upon the evidence of one witness, unless such witness be corroborated in some material particular by evidence implicating the accused. Now we must go to these trials for breach of promise and seduction to find out what that means. What is that evidence? It is testimony to confirm the evidence of the person who makes the charge, and that evidence may or may not be of a very strong character. For example, proof may be given that these parties were seen together keeping company, as it is called—that the person was paying attentions to this girl, and so on. Evidence of that kind, of the loosest possible character, would be material in one sense, because it would be showing that the girl was being courted by the young man under expectation of marriage, so that, under the circumstances, clause 5 is no protection whatever, as it would enable the girl to get the assistance of a companion, or of any other person, to show that this man was actually attempting to court her and steal her affections. I am in favor of the Bill as a whole, but this clause I consider to be most objectionable.

HON. MR. POWER—The hon. gentleman who has just sat down says he is in favor of the Bill as a whole; but it will be remembered this is really the vital clause of the measure, the one from which the Bill took its title originally; and the offence which is provided for in this clause is the offence originally contemplated to be legislated against. The provisions as to other offences are chiefly amendments introduced since the measure was first under discussion. I must confess to a certain feeling of surprise at the position taken by members of this assembly towards the offence mentioned in this clause. From the tone adopted by several hon. gentlemen who have addressed the House, one would suppose, not that we were a body of venerable gentlemen whose passions had calmed down and who were able to look at things in a quiet and cold-blooded manner; but that we were a congregation of young gentlemen, with very broad views on this subject, or that at best we were a set of old roués, "within whose ashes lived their wonted fires," because that really has been the tone of the debate. I should like to hear one of those hon. gentlemen who draws a harrowing picture of the virtuous young man being seduced by a girl under 21 to tell this House of a case in which a young man has been so seduced.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Yes, I know of such cases.

HON. MR. POWER—I think the cases where a young man has been seduced by a girl under 21 are very few indeed. Perhaps my experience has not been as extensive as that of some of my hon. friends, but I have never known a case of that kind. I do not think we should reject the clause, which in itself is a good one, because in its present shape it may be abused; the better way would be to amend it. Hon. gentlemen have spoken of their sons. I hardly care to mention the fact that men have daughters as well as sons; and I cannot help feeling that a Bill of this sort is desirable if it were only to prevent revenge being taken by parents whose daughters have been destroyed by men under promise of marriage. If a man over 21 years of age keeps company with a girl under the age of 21 and promises to marry her, and in virtue of the relation that is established between them by that promise and by that association he betrays the girl, I do not think that any punishment can be too severe for him, and I cannot understand why some hon. gentlemen always look at the other side of the question. Is not this the usual story? For one young man who is led astray in the way that has been described are there not a dozen young women? And the man who commits a crime is not generally a boy; he is usually a man of mature years; and hon. gentlemen know that there are numbers of men, even in Canada, who almost make a profession of seducing girls. I think it would be exceedingly discreditable to this House if we were to say that we did not approve of punishing that offence. I think it is one of the most heinous offences possible, and that it ought to be severely punished. At the same time, there should be reasonable guards thrown round the measure to prevent its abuse. If this clause is so unreasonable as some hon. gentlemen contend it is, how is it that the House of Commons by a two-thirds vote adopted it? The members down there are not supposed to be made of very much better material than we are here; still they pass this measure by a vote of two to one, and have passed it several times. I do not think there is any member here who will say that a man of mature years who deliberately seduces a young girl, should not be punished.

HON. MR. NELSON—That we have already provided for in the clause that is passed.

HON. MR. POWER—No, we have provided simply for the case of a girl under 16. I think we should put a proviso to this clause to the effect that if the accused was able to prove that he was under the age of 21, that should be a bar to the conviction.

THE SPEAKER—That would improve it very much—make the girl 18 and the man 21.

HON. MR. POWER—I shall move an amendment to carry out my suggestion.

HON. MR. DEVER—I think we must all feel grateful for the lesson we have just received from one whose knowledge of the world and of men so admirably qualifies him to discharge the task. I think this clause can be retained in the Bill with advantage if the proviso is struck out.

HON. MR. VIDAL—As I intimated at the second reading of this Bill, its provisions were carefully considered by the Minister of Justice and met with his approval. I hope the House will not lose sight of that fact. If, however, the Senate think that there should be some limitation to the age, I am prepared to accept the amendment. I do not think that the hon. member from Amherst has properly explained the position of the person who will be affected by this provision. It is not the man who is keeping company with a young woman and is frequently seen with her in public, but the man who has made such a promise of marriage as would, in a court of law, subject him to damages for breach of promise. When a promise of that kind has been made, and is well known to the parents, that man is received in the family like a son, and I fully agree with the senior member from Halifax that a man taking advantage of such a position, who betrays and dishonors an innocent, confiding girl, is guilty of an offence for which no punishment is too severe. Such an injury to a virtuous young woman is worse than death itself, and I think the punishment provided in the Bill is scarcely severe enough. When the hon. gentleman from Halifax called attention to the fact that there was no limitation to the age of the young man, and that a mere boy might be snared by a designing woman, I was prepared to accept his suggested amendment.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Certainly the proposition is an improvement upon the clause as it stands. At the same time, I think the proviso has a demoralizing tendency. It is a temptation to parties. We provide in this Bill for the protection of girls under sixteen years of age; I think after that age they are able to protect themselves, and if they get into trouble they are as bad as their seducers. I think this clause should be applicable to the other sex as well. Under the existing law, if the seduction of a girl results in loss of her services an action can be brought against the offender and the relations of the girl may recover damages, or if there is breach of promise of marriage an action can be brought against the man. In breach of promise it is not necessary that any promise in words should be established: from the circumstances of the case a breach of promise of marriage may be construed. My opinion of all these cases is that when a girl deliberately strays from the right path under such a pledge as that, it is not a case which deserves any consideration from this House in the way of imposing a criminal penalty. The civil remedy is open in such cases. If the parties make a contract between themselves it is not an offence against the public, but it is something for which the civil law provides a penalty.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—In reference to this section, my hon. friend the senior member from Halifax, stated a short time ago that this House approached it in rather a hostile spirit. In my opinion he has not exactly apprehended the feeling of this House. I believe there is a disposition in this Chamber to treat the measure with all consideration, but he must admit that this is a new provision, one which has never been engrafted on the English system and which is unknown in the laws of Canada. It is therefore no wonder that it has provoked an extended discussion in this House. It is a grave provision, one for which we have no precedent, and therefore deserves the greatest possible attention that we can give it. To my mind it is a serious innovation and not one which is based on sound philosophy. I believe it is unsound in the inducements it holds out to compulsory marriage.

HON. MR. DEVER—Yes, that is the objection.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE—When you compel young people to get married against their will, for gain, or for any other than right considerations, you are forming an unholy union which is not likely to lead to happiness. While the clause on the whole is objectionable it is one that I should not oppose if it were shorn of this proviso. That, I think, is most objectionable: it is offering a man the option of a marriage to which he is opposed, or imprisonment. The inducement which it holds out to parties to be guilty of evil conduct is the very strongest that can be conceived. It is an innovation which should not be sanctioned by this House. Far from feeling any hostility to the Bill as a whole, I am most anxious to give it my support, and this House has shown its willingness to sanction every clause which commends itself to our judgment. The sub-section of the 1st clause, preceding the one under consideration, was passed without discussion and that fact proves what the real feeling of the House is on the subject. With these observations I move that the proviso be struck out.

THE SPEAKER—I beg to remind my hon. friend that the question now before the House is on the amendment of the hon. member from Halifax. When that question is decided any other amendments to the clause can be proposed and then after it is amended the committee can reject it afterwards if they think proper.

The amendment was declared adopted.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that line 20 be amended by inserting 18 instead of 21 as the age of the unmarried female.

HON. MR. MACDONALD—Why should not a woman of 21 receive the same protection as a younger girl? We should make the age 30 instead of 21.

The committee divided on the amendment which was adopted, contents 26 non-contents 11.

HON. MR. ALMON—I intended to have moved the amendment that the senior member from Halifax has moved, and I am very glad that it has been accepted by the hon. gentleman in charge of this Bill. I have another amendment which I shall now move—I propose to amend—relating to seduction under promise of marriage—by adding after the word “marriage,” “which promise has been sanctioned by the parents or guardian of the female.”

The Committee divided on the amendment which was declared lost, only seven members voting for the amendment.

HON. MR. O'DONOHUE moved that the proviso respecting the subsequent marriage of the parties be struck out.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I cannot accept that amendment at all; I think it is a very wise and proper provision to put in the Bill; and I think the case mentioned by the hon. gentleman, and by my hon. friend from British Columbia has been very improperly presented to us. They have both stated the case before us as if the man was in this position; that he must either marry the woman or go to the penitentiary. They have not presented that in the right light. The case goes before the Court, and the presiding officer of that Court is likely to have just as much discrimination as the hon. gentleman, and is likely to know whether the young man was deceived, or whether he was the victim of a designing woman because he was inheriting a fortune. With all these things before him what is the alternative? To marry the girl, or perhaps to be sent one day to jail in the discretion of the court, and unquestionably in a case such as that mentioned by my hon. friend the decision of any court would be, if the man was found guilty, that he would be punished by one or two days imprisonment.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—The object of all laws in this respect is to deter crime, and to punish the offence when it is committed. Instead of that we are holding out an inducement for crime. The woman says, "If I consent to this conduct I can have my seducer indicted for the offence."

HON. MR. MCINNES (B. C.)—I have not yet seen anything to induce me to change my mind on this matter; and I move in amendment to the amendment that the entire section, with the annexed proviso be eliminated from the Bill.

HON. MR. DICKEY—The hon. gentleman is perfectly correct in moving his amendment, but it would be more convenient to do so after the Bill is reported to the House, when he can move to strike out the clause and journalize it.

The amendment to the amendment was withdrawn.

The Committee then divided on the amendment, which was adopted.

Contents, 22; non-contents, 14.

HON. MR. VIDAL moved that the clause, as amended, stand part of the Bill.

The clause was agreed to.

HON. MR. MCINNES (B.C.) gave notice that on the third reading of the Bill he would move to strike out the second clause.

On the fourth clause.

HON. MR. MCINNES—I object to the provision of sub-section i of this clause. In my judgment it does not go far enough. It provides that parties shall be punished who shall harbor girls under ten years of age for improper purposes; and the only penalty provided for that abominable crime is imprisonment for not less than two or more than five years. In my opinion there can be no punishment too severe for the person, male or female, who deliberately and coolly harbors any child under ten years of age for such a nefarious purpose. I believe they are greater monsters than the creatures who have illicit connection with such children. I shall move to amend this clause by increasing the maximum penalty to ten years imprisonment, and the minimum to five years in the penitentiary.

HON. MR. VIDAL—I should like to make the age of the girl 12 years instead of 10, to bring it into harmony with the other law.

HON. MR. DICKEY—In attempting to put down what the hon. gentleman has justly characterized as a horrible crime, he is quite likely to defeat his object by making the penalty too severe. I think five years in the penitentiary severed from the world is quite sufficient.

HON. MR. PLUMB—In the English Act the penalty is for life or not less than five years with or without hard labour. The age of the girl is 13.

HON. MR. POWER—We had better be careful about making those changes, for, as I understand, our Statute Law does not contain any provision for the punishment of this particular offence in connection with a girl under the age of 12, and the better way is to leave the Bill as it is. The younger the child the more heinous the offence, and I think it would be better to leave the clause as it stands.

HON. MR. MCINNES—What punishment does the law provide for those who seduce or have carnal connection with girls under 10 years of age?

HON. MR. VIDAL—Imprisonment for life.

HON. MR. MCINNES—If such is the case, I claim that the person who deliberately takes infants into his or her house for that purpose is actually worse than the monster who commits the crime. I can imagine that a miserable drunken sot may be induced to go into a house of assignation, where those poor creatures are kept, and if he commits that crime he is liable to imprisonment for life; and I claim that that man is not as guilty as the keeper of the house.

HON. MR. ALMON—I wish to call attention to the slipshod manner in which this clause is drawn. In the first clause

HON. MR. KAULBACH.

the girl must be of a previous chaste character; yet the persons who kept this girl in the house for immoral purposes have a sufficient defence to any charge under this section if they can prove that they had reasonable cause to believe that the girl was sixteen years of age. If it is a crime for a man to have illicit connection with a girl of this age, it should be equally a crime for a procurer to keep girls of that age for such purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

HON. MR. VIDAL moved the adoption of the section as amended.

HON. MR. NELSON—I would suggest at the punishment for seduction of girls of sixteen years of age should be made greater, as everything should be done to stamp out this nefarious trade of procuration.

The clause was agreed to.

HON. MR. VIDAL moved the adoption of the preamble.

HON. MR. PLUMB.—Before the Bill is reported I hope the senior member for Halifax will be good enough to recede from the statement which he has made, and which I think has been offensive to almost every member of this House. There was a desire to pass this Bill but everyone had a right, in the course of the discussion, to examine those clauses carefully, because it is legislation in a new direction, and it did not lie in the hon. gentleman's mouth to charge members of this House with having the prurient disposition which the hon. gentleman did charge them with.

HON. MR. POWER—If the hon. gentleman had any criticism to make on my language, he should have done so at the time; and I think he is out of order in now getting up and referring to what was said an hour ago. At the same time, if it affords the hon. gentleman any satisfaction, I must say that the way in which the House has dealt with this Bill has very much raised the Senate in my humble opinion. I rise now for the purpose of suggesting an amendment to the preamble. The preamble recites: "Whereas it is expedient to provide for the punishment of offence against chastity." That would imply that at present there is no provision in the law on subject, and I think it would be better to amend it by saying "Whereas it is expedient to make further provision" etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

HON. MR. PAQUET, from the Committee, reported the Bill with several amendments.

HON. MR. POWER gave notice that he would move an amendment on the third reading with respect to the change in the second clause reducing the age of the female from 21 to 18 years.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (123) "An Act to explain the Act entitled 'An Act for the final settlement of the claims made by the Province of Manitoba on the Dominion.'" (Mr. Smith.)

Bill (122) "An Act for the relief of the town of Cobourg." (Mr. Smith.)

Bill (115) "An Act further to amend an Act respecting insolvent banks, insurance companies, loan companies, building societies, and trading corporations." (Mr. Dickey.)

Bill (124) "An Act respecting experimental farm stations." (Mr. Smith.)

THIRD READING.

Bill (O) "An Act to amend an Act respecting a reformatory for certain juvenile offenders in the County of Halifax in the Province of Nova Scotia" (Mr. Power), was read the third time and passed without debate.

OFFENCES AGAINST THE PERSON BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (N) "An Act to amend the Act respecting offences against the person."

In the Committee,

On the 1st clause,

HON. MR. VIDAL said: The object of this clause is to make the evidence of the wife competent and compellable in a charge against the husband for not providing for the family.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—I move that the word “compellable” in the 11th line be struck out. I think it would meet with the approval of the House, and I have had some communication with the promoter of that Bill, who approves of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

HON. MR. POWER—I think we ought to make the husband a competent witness in his own behalf in the case of a family quarrel and a law suit arising out of it. I do not see why we should allow the wife to give evidence in such cases and the husband to be shut out.

HON. MR. VIDAL—It is not necessary, because it is the husband who has to provide for the family, and against whom the charge would be brought.

HON. MR. READ, from the Committee, reported the Bill with an amendment.

The amendment was concurred in, and the Bill was read the third time and passed on a division.

ADULTERATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The Order of the Day having been called—Committee of the Whole House on Bill (108) “An Act to amend the Adulteration Act,”

HON. MR. DICKEY moved that the Order of the Day be discharged, and that the Bill be read at length at the table.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read at length at the table. It was then read the third time and passed.

WEIGHTS & MEASURES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The order of the day having been called, “Committee of the Whole House on Bill (109), Weights and Measures Amendment Bill.”

HON. MR. DICKEY said: This is a bill to remedy a defect which has been observed in the working of the Weights and Measures Act. Strange to say there was no power given to the Governor-in-Council to make regulations, amongst other things which they are authorized to do, for defining and specifying what weights, measures, weighing machines and balances shall or shall not be admitted to verification. This Bill is for the purpose of introducing that as a sub-section of the 7th section of the original Act as one of the subjects on which the Governor-in-Council can make regulations. There can be no possible objection to it, and I therefore move that the order of the day be discharged and that the Bill be read the third time at length at the table.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

COMMISSIONS TO PUBLIC OFFICERS BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a committee of the whole on Bill (101) “An Act respecting Commissions to Public Officers of Canada.”

HON. MR. GIRARD, from the Committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (73) “An Act to incorporate the Winnipeg and North Pacific Railway Company. (Mr. Clemow.)

Bill (95) “An Act to incorporate the Victoria and Sault St. Marie Junction Railway Company.” (Mr. O’Donohoe.)

ST. GABRIEL LEVEE AND RAILWAY COMPANY.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved that Bill (116) "An Act to incorporate the St. Gabriel Levee and Railway Company" be read the second time.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—This Bill has not been distributed, and I want to see it before it is advanced another stage. It is a bill of great importance to the city of Montreal.

HON. MR. PLUMB—There can surely be no objection to reading the Bill the second time now and referring it to the Railway Committee.

THE SPEAKER—If the Bill has not been distributed it cannot be read the second time to-day.

The Order of the Day was discharged and the second reading of the Bill was fixed for to-morrow.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION BILL.

SECOND READING.

HON. MR. PLUMB moved the second reading of Bill (103) "An Act further to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act, 1882."

HON. MR. POWER—This Bill has not been distributed either.

HON. MR. PLUMB—There can be no objection to reading this Bill the second time now, and the details can be discussed in committee on Monday.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—Will the hon. gentleman explain the Bill?

HON. MR. PLUMB—It is a re-enactment of the Steamboat Inspection Law generally. It is a long Bill which will be best understood by discussing it in committee, clause by clause. There are five or six sections of the Act which are changed. The first provides for the issue of certificates to second class engineers, and this is done on the recommendation of the Boards of Trade. Section four amends the Inspection Act of 1882 by giving a little more power to the Chairman of the Inspection Board. It is intended to increase the provision for the safety of ships and those who use them. Section 14 adds some securities against dangers to vessels which use coal oil lamps.

HON. MR. KAULBACH — Does it regulate the certificates issued under the Imperial Act and our Act, making the certificates held by masters and mates the same as under the Imperial Act? In other words, are our certificates of competency to masters and mates and to engineers to be of equal force as if they were granted by the Imperial authorities?

HON. MR. PLUMB—That is a detail which will fairly come before the Committee of the Whole to which this Bill is to be referred.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned at 6 o'clock.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, May 13th, 1886.

The SPEAKER took the chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

NORTH-WEST CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

HON. MR. DICKEY, from the Committee of Railways, Telegraphs and Harbors, reported Bill (17) "An Act to amend the Act respecting the North-West Central Railway Company," without amendment. He said: I may state that no person appeared before the Committee to oppose the passage of the Bill; yet the Committee thought it their duty, without any special instructions from the House, after their attention had been called to certain objections to the Bill, to thoroughly examine the directors who were present as to their bona fides in this matter, and they saw nothing to justify them in refusing to report the Bill.

HON. MR. CLEMOV moved the third reading of the Bill.

HON. MR. POWER—I am rather sorry that the third reading has not been allowed to stand until to-morrow. I do not think that this third reading should be allowed to go through without observation. It is true, as the hon. Chairman of the Committee has stated, that nobody appeared to oppose the Bill, and it is also a fact that the Committee endeavored, of their own motion, to elicit information on some of the points that had been raised in connection with this Bill in the other House. I wish very briefly to state to the House the result of the examination had by the Committee, as it presents itself to my mind. There may be other hon. gentlemen who look at it differently. We examined one of the directors, who was a member of the House of Commons, and that gentleman gave the Committee to understand that the Company as incorporated, in their contract with the parties who are to build the railway, had reserved a sum of $1,500 per mile, which was to be paid to the company by the contractors. As the length of the road is 400 miles, the $1,500 a mile would make the sum of $600,000 which is to be paid by the contractors who build the road to the company who now hold the charter. When a director who was present was asked what was proposed to be done with this $600,000, he said that money was required for the purpose of operating the railway, and that there would be various expenses.

HON. MR. DICKEY—To pay the interest on the bonds.

HON. MR. POWER—I think that was mentioned by some member of the Commons. I do not think that the witness mentioned that himself.

HON. MR. NELSON—Yes, distinctly

HON. MR. DICKEY.

HON. MR. POWER—I think that was suggested by some member of the Commons and the witness assented.

HON. MR. ROBITAILLE—No.

HON. MR. POWER—I presume the interest on the bonds would be included in the charges for operating the railway. Then it further appeared, at any rate to my satisfaction, that the gentleman who was examined had not himself, although he was one of the directors of the company, put any money into the company, and I have no reason to suppose that any of the several members of Parliament who are on the Board of Directors have put any money into the company. Another gentleman, not a member, who presented himself stated that he had subscribed a considerable sum, and that some two or three other gentlemen whom he mentioned had also subscribed considerable amounts towards the capital of the company. I presume that these sums subscribed by the outside shareholders are the money upon which the work of the company is now being conducted—that these sums have gone, partly at any rate, to pay for the visits of the president to England, New York, and other places. The facts I take to be these then: that these incorporators, some of whom have not subscribed anything at all except their parliamentary influence, and some who have subscribed actually in cash, are to receive a sum of $600,000 from the parties who construct the road. There is nothing in the legislation respecting this road, either in the Bill now before this House or in past legislation, which would hinder the present company from transferring their interest to the contractors who are to build the road. If they do that, the company are in a position to take $600,000 from these contractors, and then hand their charter over to the contractors. Out of that $600,000 I presume something would be paid to recoup the gentlemen who have paid cash—the present shareholders—and to pay probably some of the expenses in connection with the promotion of this measure up to the present moment.

HON. MR. KAULBACH—And mental anxiety.

HON. MR. POWER—And mental anxiety as my hon. friend remarks. I see nothing at all under the circumstances of this case to hinder the present company from putting into their pockets a half million of dollars.

HON. MR. ROBITAILLE—Hear, hear.

HON. MR. POWER—I am glad my hon. friend approves of my sentiments. As he is one of the directors, I presume he is glad to see a chance of so much being made out of it.

HON. MR. ROBITAILLE—I am not a director.

HON. MR. POWER—I see nothing to prevent the present shareholders from dividing a half million of dollars amongst themselves after handing the charter over to New York gentlemen. I do not say they are going to do so: that would probably be an undue reflection on the members of both Houses. We know how those gentlemen particularly gentlemen like the hon. member opposite—how they would scorn to touch ignoble money of that sort: but there are vile creatures outside of this House, and outside of both Houses who are bad enough to suspect that with an opportunity for making half a million of dollars, even members of Parliament will be tempted to yield. Hon. gentlemen will remember that a few years ago there was a case of which the country heard a great deal, and of which this House heard a great deal.

HON. MR. PLUMB—Hear, hear.

HON. MR. POWER—Yes, my hon. friend knows it before I come to it. It is the famous case of the steel rails, as to which my hon. friend made a great many eloquent speeches, and many other members of this House made very eloquent speeches. What was the case of the steel rails?

HON. MR. READ—Do not state it.

HON. MR. POWER—It was this: the Government purchased certain steel rails.

HON. MR. READ—We have all the records of it.

HON. MR. POWER—I know my hon. friend has the steel rails record: but I do not think he holds a copyright of it. He said a great deal about them, at the time when talking did most good; and surely he will not object to my saying something of them now by way of illustration.

HON. MR. ALMON—The steel rails are getting pretty rusty.

HON. MR. POWER—No, some of them are on the road in British Columbia. What is the case of the steel rails? A firm in Montreal, named Cooper, Fairman & Co., had a contract from the Government to supply certain steel rails under tender and contract.

HON. MR. READ—And at a higher price than others.
