Residents of Mexico City and Monterey Made Uncomfortable by Strike of Bakers

MEXICO CITY, July 19 .- Residents Mexico City will be forced to curtail their consumption of bread tomorrow and before the end of the week thousands of families will be using the home-made variety, unless an agreeent is reached between bakers and bakery owners. A large part of the bread makers walked out today after being unable to secure accession to their sole demand, that for an 8-hour day. They expect to gain general support tomorrow.

MONTEREY, Mex., July 19 .- This city of 66,000 inhabitants is in the midst of a bread famine owing to the strike of the bakers and is practically subsisting on tortillas. Thirty of the more important bakeries have closed. The strikers want increased wages.

CRASHES THROUGH BRIDGE LORDS EXPECTED

Wrecked and Six Persons Injured

MUSKOGEE, Okla, July 19 .forthbound passenger train No. 5, or the Midland Valley Railroad, crashed through a bridge one half mile west of Avant, Okla., late, today. The Allegation Made By Illinois of Avant, Okla, late total high, had been weakened by a swollen creek. A wrecking train has been sent from here to the scene.

According to reports received here late tonight, at least six persons were injured, among them Conductor J. C. Smith, of Muskogee

The engine passed completely over the bridge before the pier gave way. FOR INSURANCE The baggage car is hanging at the west end of the bridge and the "Jim Crow" car, which crashed through lies at the bottom of the creek, nearly buried in water.

The smoking car is hanging over the trestle, about to fall. The two rear passenger coaches remain on the track. A severe electrical storm put the telegraph and telephone wires out of commission and further details of the wreck are unobtainable tonight,

Hans Lervig, storehouse foreman. The explosion shook buildings and wrecked windows within a radius of one mile, and was distinctly heard in South Deaver. No cause has been assigned.

The disaster is unusual in that the force of the blast was almost entirely upward. Men in the vicinity saw th two buildings rise in a cloud of black smoke, with a circle of flame at its base. When they had reached to an estimated height of 100 feet they broke into pieces and fell in a shower of fragments, coverings the ground for a radius of 200 vards. Subsequent examination showel a deep hole where each building had stood, Property dam age is estimated at $6,000.

BATHER DROWNED

NANAIMO, July 17 .- John B. Beveridge, 24 years of age, a native of Scotland and a resident of Ladysmith for the past six months was drowned yesterday afternoon while bathing. The unfortunate young man was swimming with a number of friends about a mile south of the Smelter City, at Russell's farm. He was noticed by his friends to be in danger and immediate assistance was rendered. The body was taken to the beach, but life was extinct, the young man having expired from heart

He was glad that so many victorians so appreciated the imporance of the proposed reciprocal pact voluntarily confine themselves within doors, when the conditions outside were so attractive, to listen to a discussion of it. After paying a marked compliment to Mr. Burrell, who had kindly come to Victoria to appear on the platform with him on this occasion, he remarked that the question which was the feature of the night's programme was the most important which had confronted the public of Canada for many years. Owing to the presence of his friend from the Mainland, however, it was not his intention to enter into the subject as fully as otherwise he would tempted to do.

Coronation Procession

Athenian Club, London,

Thursday, June 22, 1911: : It is such a wonderful night! We got here just as the club doors were opened at 7 a.m., and first of all John took me over the club, the place so sacred to men where no woman may put her foot, and here we are in hundreds, prancing about in all the "silent" rooms and nobody saying us nay. But the outside and what is going on is more attractive still. Oh, 'tis marvellous; the king's funeral is nothing to it. I am seated near the corner and look up and down Waterloo Place and all along Pall Mall, both ways, and seem to see nothing but one dense block of people linings the roads, packed into the open space and hanging in balconies on both sides of the houses all the way, even roofing the roofs, for the middle of the road is a mass of cars and cabs and carriages with horses that do not like the fuss and are prancing about, and the police almost cover the ground themselves, they are so innumerable, and they seem to have time and the will to attend to every individual, helping scurrying, frightened women and children who scuttle about like bunnies, but gay ones, and a path is still open for people to walk along. Now come the soldiers, and in an instant the road is cleared and soldiers in thousands are marching along, coming every now and then to a stop, as they walk five abreast to let a carriage through Pall Mail and up Waterloo Place.

Round the Crimean statue is a blaze of color, scarlet blue and gold, the troops waiting to move, and up and down trot busy mounted officers in brilliant uniforms, and bands play all around distractingly. Now I see an Ambassador's carriage with coachman and two footmen standing up behind, in drab with red plush breeches and pink silk stockings, and such a lovely hammer cloth, and an unending stream of vehicles, and the soldiers being drilled as they stand three deep in front of the foot path. There is no confusion in this vast concourse, it all seems as easy as A B C if at a little close quarters.

The decorations, too, are very pretty, the house opposite has a trellis put on it, pink roses going all over, and Pall Mall itself has venetian masts with festoons of green and pink roses hanging in sprays. The decorations are done uniformly after designs by big artists so the effect is generally very pleasing. A company of leopard skins are in front of me now, on restless horses, but no one seems disturbed, there is so much to gaze it. At present it is quite fine but it looks very threatening and the weather report is bad. Now, off go all the soldiers at a fairly brisk march, to be followed, I suppose, by another regiment. Oh, such a crowd now, there hardly seems room to breathe in the street, another regiment in red is coming down, and yet the horses get room to dance! It is wonderful As far as I can see, towards Trafalgar Square, there is a gleam of bayonets and brass topped helmets and scarlet coats, with officers white feathered helmets here and there pointing them out, and a double row of vehicles still striving to get to their destinations, and no disorder or undue confusion so that ladies can really walk along as if it were a country lane. An officer's car is passing with a teddy bear fixed on the top, a fine way of recognizing it among others, and for want of an outlet to their feelings the pavement crowd applaud it. Now I see a trollie up! Alas! Alas! It is nearly 8 o'clock and looks so gray.

I have been to breakfast with Poppie, all so comfie and kindly. I left him devouring an egg and am so glad I came back, for all the grandeurs are going by now in their state coaches, such as I have never seen, full of lovely people in ermine and jewels and feathers, and pages in canary cloth and white satin and pale blue, such liveries as rival the people in the coaches. Oh, there go two pages in black velvet with such lovely lace jabots, and there is a judge in his long wig, and a lady resplendent in diamonds and pearls, such big ones, and the soldiers are four deep now, lining the road which space is quite clear for the necessary procession of carriages going to the Abbey. Some one in a crimson velvet cloak with ermine cape, has passed, and now a lady in grey satin and white feathers and a dog collar of pearls; a ruby colored page now, with such a sweet, pretty lady in a diamond tiara; now a lot of plain people not worth a description; now Japs covered in gold lace; now a yellow coach, more gorgeous than ever, filled with jewels and gold, a lady and her man and their page. How those boys must love it!

And what must the Abbey look like? A horticultural show can hardly be in it. An open glass coach with a man passing over his ermine robe and a page doing his best to help. Indefatigable police guiding, directing and helping everywhere and everyone. Pearl earrings as big as wren's eggs, and such lovely ladies! How beautiful a woman can be to be sure! Those below in the street look a different order of being altogether. Now an orange and gold coach with men in black and gold liveries. What wealth it all means, and the soldiers look so tired and fagged already as they stand at ease chatting together. The rain has stopped and it is better for them than a glare of sunshine.

This letter is rather like a verbal cinemetograph, isn't it?

tails tied with black ribbon, very effective. Now comes a doctor in scarlet robes and a black velvet mortar board. Victoria street will be a blaze of fire crackers as they are to wait there during the service, so the maids will have something to amuse them. Two rows of carriages are going along, the one nearest me to the to the Abbey, the other turns up Waterloo Place, no confusion, it is a miracle of order. Oh! Now Hindus in beautiful turbans and gold, and now another blue and brown coach with a page standing up inside in lace frills and jabot and light satin coat. I expect he daren't sit down for fear of soiling it. There are dark people showing up their colored robes, and long white bearded gentlemen looking venerable and important beneath their golden breasts. Now the soldiers are "at arms" and as stiff as pokers, so I suppose something more gorgeous is coming. I fancy my immediate neighbors wink, I am a reporter, I write so fast and watch so closely! Rather clever on the whole, don't you think? The soldiers are being drilled again, poor dears, they don't have long "at ease," but it amuses us to see them drilled. Another canary of pale blue coach with an ermine man inside and two pages, he must be very grand, indeed. Clapping in the distance, and shouts, Lord Kitchener in an open car. Each side of the Crimean Statue has a troup of mounted Hussars and one or two hospital nurses on a raised place, a little ambulance centre, 'A band has struck up marching along, so we are on tip toe again. It is just after nine I fancy but we have no watches for precaution. Another little lull, soldiers being drilled. A Duchess has passed with a policeman riding in front, a stout, comfortable lady, displaying big diamonds on an ample bosom with a genial smile for the crowd. Everyone is "at ease" just now, some of the soldiers even sitting on the pavement, they must all be dead tired standing these eight or nine hours. Here comes a little party of old Crimean veterans. all over 80, one or two on crutches; they are being escorted to a special place raised round the Crimean Statue and are being tremendously cheered. One old man has three medals and looks mighty proud. The rain keeps off and the coolness must be most grateful to the standers. I don't think it is 10 o'clock yet and the seats began to feel a little hard. All last night was very noisy, you couldn't sleep half an hour together, people going around in excited bands, and you may believe they had no consideration for us sleepy heads in bed.

There is a tremendous long lull now, we get lunch soon and that will make the seats seem less hard, I expect.

Kind Poppie has just been to see how I am getting on; he is upstairs on a balcony. I wish I had asked him the time. Down comes the rain, and up go the trollies, how sad. It is II o'clock now and the rain was only a scud and then the sun came out, not gloriously but quite nicely for a while, A beautiful band is going up and down on horses, sent by Lord Kitchener to amuse the people in the long wait, for the Abbey service takes three hours. The crowd is wonderful, so patient and great. The soldiers flirt with the girls behind them. They are happy enough you may be sure. One man has three girls and they hold his helmet by turns, and are screaming with delight. Every now and then he says, "Now then, now then!" and I expect they are saucy. Two little ladies on seats near me are much shocked and say, "How disgraceful." Poor little foolish ladies,-acceptable. It is just 12 o'clock and there is still a good two hours to wait for the great event of the day, so I think I will crochet a little for a change.

At I o'clock we were getting very tired with sitting, sitting and wishing the procession would come, and now to wake us up three fire engines and a motor full of fire officials have come tearing down, enormously cheered by everyone. Quite a diversion. A girl opposite began to faint and the St. John's ambulance men were upon her, but the fire engines quite restored her. I don't wonder anyone faints, their powers of endurance seem wonderful. They must have stood since very early this morning. The rain holds up and there are lovely bright gleams. Here comes the real thing at last!

Home 4:15. We are back now and have iust had a meal and I will finish my letter. Oh, it was all so gorgeous and impressive, it nearly made me cry! To be a king of such a people, and wealth, such magnificence, at home and over seas, was an idea that seemed quite overpowering. First came heralds, then a mounted band of troops and troops of soldiers, the Indians so fine in their gold and turbans that the rainbow would look poor beside them, and in time came the eight creams of the gilt coach and the crowned king and queen inside, looking so kingly and queenly, so dignified and happy. They had a tremendous reception. More troops followed and two more independent processions, and the children drew roars of applause, the Prince of Wales with a little crown, and the Princess Mary in an ermine tippet and another little crown, bowing right and left, and opposite them three smaller brothers in sober clothes, quite impressed with the grandeur of the others. It was a grand sight, the grandest I shall ever see, and now I feel I know what it must be to A wee white satin and silver page now, be a king. We walked home and in Victoria and flunkies in cream and crimson, with pig- street was a crowd of ragged slum children,

Mabel dear,-I wrote it on the stand as the people and procession passed along, just as I saw it, and I thought you in your far away home would like to hear of this great day and its great doings from one who was present to witness it. I wrote three together, as you see, and sent two to my girls as none of them are in town. I hope you can read it. Much love to you and a message to him, too, and to your

We are always hearing of the things which should, or should not, be included in education. Some people are altogether on the side of utility. We ought only to learn what is going to be "useful" to us in after life. And useful in what sense? If one pursues the inquiry, one generally finds that the sense is commercial. The utilitarians ban Latin and Greek because modern languages are more useful, and fit people better for that mysterious struggle known as the battle of life. One has an uncomfortable feeling, however, that the utilitarians don't see very far. Who is to judge whether, the discipline of learning things not in themselves immediately useful may not be a very important factor in turning out good citizens? I see that the teaching of dancing is advocated, not because a knowledge of dancing is going to be useful to any one but the small percentage of professional dancers, but because dancing is an ideal system of physical culture. It makes muscle and achieves grace. It teaches carriage and rhythm, and is far more effective in improving the body than any other form of physical culture. Dancing, however, must be properly taught if it is to become an integral part of an average education.

Flight From Scotland

Twenty-one thousand Scots, young, vigorous and brimful of hope and enterprise, have left Scotland for other lands since the year began. More are to follow. Towns are gradually emptying. Villages are dying or dead. The rate at which Scotland is wasting needs no further proof. It is realized that the pace is fatal. The thing now is how to stop the wasting, and to find the answer to that the first step is to get at the causes of it, The first question as to Scotland's affliction-whatever its cause-is that of extent. How far has it gone? Is the national phthisis in one lung only or in both? On that point think there has been some hesitation to disclose the whole truth. It is very serious. For rural Scotland has been held up as the only lung-may one say?-that is "touched," whereas the disease is really in both, in Scotland rural and urban. It began with the rural places, it is true, but it is no longer confined to this limit. The towns have begun to follow. The emigration party lists alone will convince anyone of this fact, for the frequency with which the words "fitter," "join-"painter," "turner," "smith," domestic servant," and so on figure in the column headed "occupation" speaks as eloquently for the town as the words "farm hand" do for the country. The disease is common to both if in slightly varying degrees, and the fact should not be ignored. The sense in which the onus of being the first seat of trouble may be said to lie upon the country districts is in the fact that this town population that is emigrating was originally of the land. Neglect of the agriculturist and the expansion of town industries years ago combined to bring the agriculturist from the country to the town. Mod ern conditions in both town and country in Scotland now tend to drive him from both.

A Two-Fold Problem

It is a great two-fold problem, then, while confronts the agency that would put Scotlar aright. A start may safely be made with land, for two reasons: first, it is the greate source of trouble at the moment, and, secon it is the line of least resistance, for however parties may haggle as to what will put a to and its industries to rights, be it Scottish English, there is no dispute about the ca of Scottish land, Radical and Tory alike as: that the Scottish land system is wrong. sins, too, are for the most part agreed up the chief among them being that it result land being insufficiently accessible. The I erals would increase the facilities for sm holdings; the Unionists would increase facilities for small ownerships. Mr. Ball put it very clearly in a speech in Edinba last autumn, when he said, "What I believ is the multiplication of small owners who occupiers—owners, it may be, of a large sin farm or small portions of land down to minimum which can with advantage be dea with by intensive cultivation or the hand work of a man and his family. But you neve in my judgment, will get small owners as small cultivators really to succeed unless, addition to being a small cultivator, with the difficulties incidental to being a small tivator, you add two or three things. In the first place you must make him the owner with all the stimulus which ownership gives to hard work, and all the certainty that every atom of work he puts into it will be an advantage to himself or to those who come after him. And, in the second place, you must have on the whole, broadly speaking, some form of co-operation if you are to have a large number of small owners."

The Liberals, as expressed in Lord Pentland's Bill, urge (1) more small holdings, (2) greater safeguards as to security of tenure 3) the establishment of a Scottish Land ourt, (4) a Department of Agriculture for Scotland. Thus there is surely enough common between the two to give the hope of Land Reform without undue delay.

Reviving Village Life

To revive the Scottish village life, however, there must be thought for others than the agriculturist, first though he must come Might not something be done for the home worker, who through one cause and another is fast disappearing? Ireland and its ladies are doing a fine work in this direction for the vi lage folk. There is a fisherman, too, in Scot land who needs attention. The small owner is fast losing ground in competition with the larger steam fishing concerns, and though the trawlers require more and more men ever year for their crews, the part of a member a crew does not offer to the ambitious and dependent Scot the fascination of his old wor as a master of craft. Why not small or part ownership co-operation and organization in fishers, too, as well as for farmers? Many of Scotland's village troubles ju now seem, in fact, to arise from the lack organization and the isolation of the many dustrial units. Before the closer knit organ zation of large combinations elsewhere have failed to hold their ground and ha slowly died off. Amalgamated, these times specks of energy and enterprise would st have their place. More small harbors a needed and better marketing facilities. small man cannot do these things for himse There is the three-mile fishing limit question too, that might receive a sympathetic ear.

The question of Scotland's town industr and their condition is more intricate and me contentious. Free Trade and Tariff Rei will each, no doubt, find a "case." I had example in Edinburgh the other day, who Free Trade stalwart denied that Free was the cause of the decay. "The Clyde tra is booming," he said. "Coal and booming too. The building trade is not who it was, it is true, but in our industries our own, Look at Edinburgh here. We make more gas meters than almost any city. We make more chloroform than any city in the world. Look at the Clyde, second to nothing and at the ironfield of Lanarkshire."

The Workman's Point of View

And so on. He is no doubt quite rig The trade of urban Scotland may compare w with that of previous years. But in face this stands the silent commentary of the Sc tish workman himself, the man who produc this wealth. Surely this commentary is first imporatnce, and it is this: "Scottish en ployment may be all you say, but it is no good enough for me." That is the reason this great exodus now taking place.

You have to take into account, of cours the extraordinary enterprise and the ambitic of the man. You have to take into account too, the wonderful temptations to emigra that are now being laid so shrewdly before him-first by his own kith and kin who have emigrated in bad times before him and who word he can trust; second, by the emigration agencies, government and other, which are now canvassing Scotland with some of thoroughness of a general election campaign These are special factors to take into account in estimating what amount of emigration due to Scotland's industrial condition. Bu even a Scot will not tear up his domestic roo wantonly and without shrewd calculation. addition to regarding emigration as promising, he must also regard staying at home as unpromising. There must be a reason and a remedy for that.-London Daily Mail.

The "Grand Manner" in Politics

Amid the clash and turmoil of this year's Legislative Assembly in the world, if you parliamentary fighting the most noteworthy feature, writes the parliamentary representative of the London Daily Mail, is the constitutional duel which is going on between Mr, Asquith and Mr. Balfour, a duel which is resumed at practically every amendment on the Veto Bill and which is lifting the interest of the contest far above the fierce contentions of party men. None know this better than the rank and file on both sides, and when their chiefs emerge into the fray they give themselves over to appreciation of the continuance of the combat between the two men whose authority, intellectual weight, and personal power equip them above all others in the House for a fight on great issues.

The Government leader and the Opposition leader are discussing—to put the matter in a phrase—the methods by which the people of a country should govern themselves. They are dealing with it in a grand manner. Their speeches are models for young politicianscourteous in tone, literary in form, clear-cut in argument, uplifting in scope and intention. They are, so to speak, statesmen trying to get the right perspective of posterity. Now and then, on the fringe of their speeches, they unavoidingly descend to party cries; on the whole their words are worthy of the great parliamentarians of the past, and they sometimes make the wranglings of lesser men in the House seem small and contemptible.

The two leaders are very different in training and temperament. Mr. Balfour is a philosophic statesman with a wide range of vision, while Mr. Asquith is of a somewhat harsher intellectual type with a lawyer-like preciseness. The Prime Minister is none the less effective for the latter quality, and his attainments in the shape of knowledge, of clear thinking, of lucid expression have justified the word brilliant at every stage of his career. Mr. Balfour conceals a will of steel behind the softest and most charming manner: Mr. Asquith puts up a wall of bluffness in tront of his natural geniality and reasonableness. But they are both great fighters, and while maintaining the courteous dignity expected of them, constantly manifest themselves capable of the attack which puts smaller men out of action at once. If Mr. Balfour is perhaps the more probing thinker, Mr. Asquith is the more practical man of affairs. Withal, the two statesmen have much in common. To hear them battling with each other on the broad and vital principles of governing a country is a fine intellectual treat,

It is an unwritten convention in the House of Commons that when either the Government leader or the Opposition leader has made a speech his opponent shall follow him immediately in debate. There has been therefore in the past few weeks a quick dramatic completeness in the parliamentary passages between the two men. An amendment will be moved by a Unionist, Mr. Asquith will rise to oppose it and he will be immediately followed by Mr. Balfour. Or perhaps in the course of the committee discussion a point involving a question of principle will spring up. Mr. Balfour will take the opportunity of explaining the general constitutional bearings of the matter, and as a matter of course Mr. Asquith will speak next in order to give his own view. For instance, Mr, Balfour, on the question as to who should decide what was a money bill, objected on broad general grounds to the appointment of the Speaker as the arbiter. Here was a touch of Mr. Balfour above and beyond the party leader: "I am an earnest and most faithful believer in the continuity of the traditions of the House. But I do not think that it is going to be an easy matter as time goes on to keep the House what it is now, a model for every made in this House."

overburden the man upon whom the order and dignity of the House is dependent."

Should what is known as a money bill-say a measure for imposing taxes—be of such a nature as to impose social and political changes on the country? That was the constitutional question which Mr. Balfour and Mr. Asquith set themselves to debate one evening. "With few exceptions," said Mr. Asquith, "there has hardly ever been presented to the House a money bill which is not open to the charge that it was not wholly or in part political in its character or object." Mr. Balfour would not have it. "This House," he said, "ought not under the guise of finance to set to work to modify the social life of the countryside in either a good or bad direction." From the stores of their knowledge the two leaders quoted great authorities against each other; Burke was brought up, Professor Dicey, Sir William Anson, and many others. But generally speaking Mr, Asquith and Mr. Balfour did what was much more interesting; they drew their own deductions from past and present experience, and gave the House new thoughts on their own account. What do the people mean at a general election? was one of the riddles they set themselves. It arose from the intention of the Government to pass Home Rule under the lee of the Parliament Bill. Mr. Asquith contended that plain statements of intentions by ministers on various occasions during the election were sufficient, if they were again returned to power, to enable them to claim that the country had endorsed the policy stated. The weak point in this was immediately shown by Mr. Balfour: "The most we can hope for at a general election is that the country shall give some broad decision in favor of a particular party, perhaps even of a particular leader, and that that will be very often, though not always, associated with general expression of approval of one particular

The latest outstanding fight between the two men was in respect of the referendum. In a remarkable speech listened to with deep attention by all parties in the House, Mr. Balfour urged the growing danger of the rigid party system, the mischievous recent tendency of Governments to make a hostile vote on any matter a question of life and death, and the resulting danger to continuity of administration. An appeal to the people on the rare occasion of some great issue and joint sittings of the two Houses of Parliament on smaller matters would, he urged, be all to the advantage of the State now and in the future. Admitting some of the present disadvantages, Mr. Asquith made an eloquent defence of the present representative system, "Why has it stood the test of time and experience? Because in the first place it gets rid of what would otherwise be an intolerable difficulty, the difficulty of submitting every trumpery, trivial, and everyday occurrence to the decision of the vast masses of the people. A second reason, much more important, is that it enables people to choose specially qualified men as their representatives, having tested their qualifications or line of policy, on one particular subject. That is really all you can hope to get at a general

attempted to test them." Perhaps one of the greatest speeches delivered in Parliament this year was that in which Mr. Balfour maintained that the House of Commons of the present was equal in character and capacity to the House of Commons of the past. Liberals, Labor men, and Nationalists all joined in the cheers. With flushed face, Mr. Asquith rose at the table and said, "I think that speech is one of the finest vindications of the representative and independent character of the House of Commons ever

ART CRITICISM

Some Views on Painters and Paintings, From Charles Blanc, 1813-1882

"The great artist," wrote Blanc, "is he who guides us into the region of his own thoughts, into the palaces and fields of his own imagination, and while there, speaks to the language of the gods."

From 'The Dutch School of Painters.) Rembrandt has taken great pains to transto us painting of his person, or at least of his face, from the time of his youth up to at of shrunken old age. He was a man at once robust and delicate. His broad and slightly rounded forehead presented a development that indicated a powerful imagina-His eyes were small, deep-set, bright, intelligent, and full of fire. His hair, of a warm color bordering on red and curling naturally, may possibly have indicated a lewish extraction. His head had great chareter, in spite of the plainness of his features, large flat nose, high cheek-bones, and a opper-colored complexion imparted to his ce a vulgarity which, however, was relieved the form of his mouth, the haughty outne of his eyebrows, and the brilliancy of his wes. Such was Rembrandt; and the character of the figures he painted partakes of that of his own person. That is to say, they have great expression, but are not noble; they possess much pathos, while deficient in what is termed style.

An artist thus constituted could not but e exceedingly original, intelligent and independent, though selfish and entirely swayed caprice. When he began to study nature entered upon his task not with that good nature which is the distinctive characteristic so many of the Datch painters, but with n innate desire to scarp upon every object his own peculiarity, supplementing imagination by an attentive observation of real life. Of all the phenomena of nature, that which gave him most trouble was light; the difficulty he most desired to conquer was that of

Moral Influence of Art

(From 'Grammar of Painting and Engraving.') Painting purifies people by its mute eloquence. The philosopher writes his thoughts or those who can think and read. The Painter shows his thought to all who have eyes to see. That hidden and naked virgin, Truth, the artist finds without seeking. He throws veil over her, encourages her to please, roves to her that she is beautiful, and when he has reproduced her image he makes us take her, and takes her himself, for Beauty.

In communicating to us what has been seen nd felt by others, the painter gives new trength and compass to the soul. Who can ay of how many apparently fugitive impresions a man's morality is composed, and upon that depends the gentleness of his manners, e correctness of his habits, the elevation of thoughts? If the painter represents acts cruelty or injustice, he inspires us with rror. The 'Unhappy Family' of Proudhon wes the fibre of charity better than the nilies of a preacher. Examples of the subare rare in painting, as the painter is pelled to imprison every idea in a form. may happen, nevertheless, that moved by ights to which he has given no form, the ist strikes the soul as a thunderbolt would e ear. 't is then by virtue of the thought received, but not formulated, that the picture ecomes sublime.'

Landscape The poetry of the fields and forests is inparable from truth. But the painter must ealize this truth by making it express some entiment; faithfulness of imitation alone ould not suffice. The artist, master of realy, enlightens it with his eyes, transfigures it cording to his heart, and makes it utter hat is not in it—sentiment; and that which neither possesses nor understands—

The artist sees in the creations of nature hat he himself carries in the depth of his al, tints them with the colors of his imaginalends them the witchery of his genius. temperament of the artist modifies the racter of objects, and even that of living ures. But this power of taking possession the appanage of great hearts, of great aris, of those whom we call masters,—who, stead of being the slaves of reality, domine it. These have a style; their imitators we only a manner.

Aside from the style peculiar to every reat master, there is in art something still uperior and impersonal, which is true style oper. Style is truth aggrandized, simplified, reed from all insignificant details, restored to original essence, its typical aspect. This style" par excellence, in which instead of ecognizing the soul of an artist we feel the reath of the universal soul, was realized in he Greek sculpture of the time of Pericles."

IN THE WORLD OF BOOKS

None Other Gods," by Robert Hugh Benson This story has one distinctive merit, if no other: it is quite apart from the commonplace. I could talk to him all the time, too, or count ersonally, we think Father Benson should Benson's lines. But people who are not Roman Catholics or very advanced Anglicans, people of no confirmed religious belief whatever, or people of an agnostical turn of mind, would pronounce "None Other Gods" lacking in power of suggestion. The bare outline of the story is sordid enough. Frank Guiseley, one of the sons of a hot-tempered but thoroughly respectable member of the nobility, turns Roman Catholic. This is only the culmination, in the old gentleman's eyes, of a number of misdemeanors, mischievous pranks for which his son has been nearly expelled from college several times. So the parental relative delivers his ultimatum that unless Frank consents to renounce his newly-adopted faith and behave in consistence with established precedent, he shall be cut off with a shilling, and must earn his own way, unaided, in the world. Frank's strongest point seems to be his obstinacy; he renounces family name, and all obligations which one would fancy he might feel inclined to assume for the sake of that family, sells by auction anything he possesses except a change of clothing, and quits Oxford to go "on the road." He scours the country for days, in fact until the story closes he never stops scouring the country, doing odd jobs when he can get them, begging when he cannot find work. In fact he adopts apparently by choice that profession which we in this country, at all events, hold in the utmost contempt; he becomes a tramp, pure and simple. He meets the Major and his lady, who is not a lady and who is not the Major's wife, quite by accident, and throws in his lot with They are members of the same profession as himself. By some dint of unreasonable reasoning Frank feels that it has now become his duty to induce Gertie, the lady, to return to her home. Regardless of his father, of the girl to whom he is engaged, of the brother who stands by him, and the friend who loves him, Frank, with his incorrigible obstinacy, sticks to his idea that his life's duty is to rescue this woman, an untaught, weak-minded creature, who only leaves the Major ultimately, hoping her deliverer will accept her for himself. And in the end, when Frank has brought about her reconciliation with her people, the Major meets him and, misunderstanding his motive, assaults him, managing in some way or other to kick him to death. The above all sounds very vulgar, and the end is disgusting, and it is only a great ability that could clothe such a theme so that it would be at all presentable, Mr. Benson has made an interesting story of it, but we think the tale would have served as good a purpose if the hero had not been so brutally and, shall we say? ignominiously murdered. Now, for the benefit of those who can follow the hero's reasoning, we give the following extract, describing his "illumination"

The new 'process' began quite suddenly when I awoke in the shepherd's hut one morning at Ripon. The instant I awoke I knew it. It was very early in the morning, just before sunrise, but there was a little wood behind me, and the birds were beginning to chirp.

'It's very hard to describe it in words, but the first thing to say is that I was not exactly happy just then, but absolutely content. think I should say that it was like this: I saw suddenly that what had been wrong in me was that I had made myself the centre of things, and God a kind of circumference. When He did or allowed things, I said, 'Why does He?'-from my point of view. That is to say, I set up my ideas of justice and love, and so forth, and then compared His with mine, not mine with His. And I suddenly say-or, rather, I knew already when I awoke—that this was simply stupid. Even now I cannot imagine why I didn't see it before. I had heard people say it, of course in sermens and books-but I suppose it had meant nothing to med (Father Hildebrand tells me that I had seen it intellectually, but had never embraced it with my will.) Because when one once really sees that, there's no longer any puzzle about anything. One can simply never say 'Why?' again. The thing is

"Now this 'process' (as Father H. calls it) has gone on in a most extraordinary manner ever since. That beginning near Ripon was like opening a door into another country, and I've been walking ever since and seeing new things. All sorts of things that I had believed as a Catholic-thing, I mean, which I assent to simply because the Church said so, have, so to speak, come up and turned themselves inside out. I couldn't write them down, because you can't write these things down, or even put them intelligibly to yourself. You just see that they are so. For instance, one morning at mass—quite suddenly—I saw how the substance of the bread was changed, and how our Lord is united with the soul at Communion-of course it's a mystery (that's what mean by saying that it can't be written down)-but I saw it in a flash, and I can see it still in a sort of way. Then another day, when the Major was talking about something or other (I think it was about the club he used to belong to in Piccadilly), I understood about our Lady and how she is just everything from one point of view. And so on. I had that kind of thing at Doctor Whitty's a good deal, particularly when I was getting better. the knobs on the wardrobe, or listen to the ave said more than he did, or else a great Major and Gertie in the garden—and yet go leal less; but then many readers will not agree on all the time seeing things. I knew it wasn't with this view. The genial writer leaves any good talking to Doctor Whitty himself

"It seems to me most extraordinary now that I ever could have had those other thoughts I told Father H. about-I mean about sins, and about wondering whether, afstill, and I know perfectly well I must be on my guard but somehow it's different, "Well, all this is what Father H. calls the 'Illuminative Way,' and I think I understand what he means. It came to a sort of point on All Souls' Eve at the monastery. I saw the whole thing then for a moment or two, and not only Purgatory. But I will write that down later. And Father H. tells me that I must begin to look forward to a new 'process,' what he calls the 'Way of Union.' I don't understand much what he means by that; I don't see that more could happen to me. I am absolutely and entirely happy; though I must say that there has seemed a sort of lull for the last day or two-ever since All Souls' Day, in fact. Perhaps something is going to happen. It's all right, anyhow. It seems very odd to me that all this kind of thing is perfectly well known to priests. I thought I was the first person

WHEN THE THAMES WAS GAY

"On Coronation Day many persons of importance, peers and other members of Parliament, traveled by steamboat from Chelsea Pier to Westminster-just as their predecessors in authority have traveled since the Norman Conquest provided England with a leadership of business men for the first time in history. For centuries the Thames was the only Royal road to the city of glory and governance that centred about Westminster Abbey, and to the other city of wealth and commerce of which the four-fold traffic at London Bridge (across it in both directions, up stream and down stream) in Saxon times was the aboriginal germ," says a writer in the

"In Tudor times the Royal residences were situated along the Middlesex bank, and splendid barges manned by oarsmen in livery were constantly coming and going between them. The city companies all had their state barges and liveried watermen. Great river pageants were numerous; high-placed criminals traveled down to their death on the ebbing tide. Ambassadors and other envoys of foreign Powers were met at Gravesend by the Lord Mayor and his Aldermen and taken by river in a stately progress to Tower Stairs. The regular route westward was by river to Putney, thence by road across Putney Heath. 'That way went Wolsey, when deprived of the Great Seal, traveling from York House, to Esher in disgrace—until he fell in with the king's messenger on the heath and knew he was his master's man once more. In a later age the entry into London of Catharine of Braganza, the consort of Charles II., was a memorable example of the river pageant.

Roads as Markets "In old days the city roads were markets rather than thoroughfares; so that even if anybody wished to go from one part of the city to another, he went by river. And so if he had to travel to Chelsea, Fulham, or Greenwich; for the roads were quagmires in bad weather and at all times haunted by highwaymen and footpads. Pepys, that type of the patriotic permanent official, always used the river. Such phrases as 'by water to Whitehall' and 'so by water home' constantly occur in his Diary. In Queen Anne's reign there were 40,000 watermen plying for hire on the Thames and over a hundred 'stairs' or landing places in London proper. These watermen were the 'cabbies' of that age. The really curious thing is that the Thames was still a main thoroughfare less than sixty years ago. Not until 1537 did the Lord Mayor's

"It will be seen from the foregoing that until the day before yesterday the Thames was London's chief street. But there is much older writing on the storied scroll that unwinds itself as one travels down the river from Chelsea Pier to Westminster, and thence after parting with the Lords and Commons on their penny steamboat, to London Bridge, where the modern seaport begins and the show proceed to Westminster otherwise than masts of dock-land are visible. What the Storied Scroll Tells

London Bridge itself is the causa causans of London's existence. Invariably the allimportant point of division which separates the lower from the upper part of a great tical consequence comes into being. It generally happens that this first town is the most river. Rome on the Tiber is one example; London on the Thames is another; Rouen on ter all, the Church was actually true. In a the Seine was a third until Normandy, now sort of way, of course, they come back to me celebrating its millenary, was merged in France.

London Bridge as a Story

"It would seem that London Bridge did not exist when Julius Caesar invaded this island, since he crossed higher up the river into what was then the less wealthy portion of the southern land. Or, it may be, there was a bridge there even then and that it was wrecked to impede the invader's operations. The ancient children's singing-game, with its strange suggestion of the bridge-builder's human sacrifice and its fateful burden.

London Bridge is broken down may well have been a Druid sacrificial ceremony long before Caesar crowned his incessant labors from the 'short and narrow-verged shade' of the evergreen laurel. Indeed, it may have been that the dread ceremony, which is still remotely remembered by the little children of this most ancient city, originated in the very act of destruction that seemed the only way of gaining time to cope with the first disciplined army seen in Britain. But if the bridge was there, London was also there to see it all.

The Story of Watling Street

"Higher up the stream we come on another piece of very ancient history. Watling street, the most important of the four primeval routes across the Thames, comes over where the hideous suspension bridge runs from Lambeth to the Horseferry road in Westminster. Horseferry road? The ferry existed there up to the time of the building of Westminster Bridge, and produced a fine revenue for the Archbishop of Canterbury in his neighboring Palace. It is easy enough to trace Watling street up to the water's edge on the Surrey side. On the Middlesex side it is lost for a short distance. But it probably curved away in front of Buckingham Palace and proceeded in a direction parallel with, or perhaps identical with, Park Lane, and so into Edgware road, where its clear track across Northwest England begins.

"Note how some of the houses in Park Lane stand further back than others. That is because they are lined up to the boundaries of ancient 'long acres,' elongated farms that have frontages on the river and must have exactly resembled the ribbon-like tilths of the French-Canadian farmers whih the traveler to Quebec sees along the St. Lawrence. The prehistoric Park Lane may have been an irregular line of tiny shacks lined up with staring ox-eye windows (glasses, ot course) along the street's beginning.

The New Watermen

"So to the traveler by London's deserted waterway the antiquity of the city and the principle of its vitality are clearly revealed, if he will only do a little thinking. And presently all the facts that he has observed in his journeyings fall into a just and poetical perspective, and he becomes possessed of a clear impression of the city's impersonal personality, so old and so gay, so wise in the world's service, so mysterious, so reticent.

THE MARCH OF FORTY THOUSAND WOMEN

The very remarkable march of 40,000 women last Saturday through London is more remarkable in many respects than the march of men in this week's Coronation procession.

This greatest procession of women ever seen in the world's history was five miles long with seven women abreast and certainly impressed the imagination of the great crowd of visitors now in London from all parts of the world.

A Remarkable Procession

"With sure and certain steps the cause of women's suffrage is marching to victory, says the Chronicle. "Saturday's remarkable procession in London served as a prelude to the inevitable triumph. This beautiful pageant was one of the most impressive demonstrations that London has ever witnessed. It had been organized with consummate ability.

"Their experience—the experience of strenuous years-of pomp and circumstance, ripened by the clash of battle, stood them in good stead," says the Morning Leader. "Organization with the suffrage bodies has been carried to a fine art; their grip of the essentials of picturesque advertisement has never been firmer or more sure; and the result was that the great 'Coronation Procession,' of Saturday beat all their past records in engaging political panorama. It was a wonderful show. But for its earnestness, one might have described it as a transcendantal circus, all gold and glitter and sparkling pageantry. But there was no clowning. The tinsel that was necessary to make the grand effect was but a means to the end; this was no pinchbeck parade, but a magnificently marshalled army of stern young women and impressive matrons, who marched not so much with the light of battle as with the gleam of victory in their eyes.

"With their numbers and their well-remembered craft in skirmishing, they could, innavigable river is marked by the first bridge; deed, have stormed the Houses of Parliament, pray?

or made matchwood of the wooden monstrosities that have transformed our beautiful London into a packing-case wilderness. They important of all that are seated along the could have made hash of us all. This, however, was not their business. They had other fish to fry."

"The greatest Suffragette procession ever organized paraded through London on Saturday, from the Victoria Embankment to the Albert Hall," says the Mail. "It was six miles long and included about 40,000 women of all classes, from the earl's daughter to the 'sweated' worker. It took over three hours to pass a given point, and the Coronation traffic cheerfully allowed itself to be dislocated.

"No Suffragette procession has ever approached this in picturesqueness, variety, size, and significance. The views of Londoners about votes for women may or may not have changed, but it is certain that their attitude towards the women who demand the franchise has undergone alteration. The cheeriest relations existed between the women and the crowd. Everybody was in good tem-

"Perhaps the most striking feature of the demonstration followed—a solid band of 700 women, dressed in white, who have all been to prison for their convictions," adds the Mail. From the promoters' point of view this mobilization was a stroke of genius. At first the crowd just looked at them and their banners as part of the show, but in a little while as the 700 went on marching, five abreast, the crowd realized that these women had dared to suffer hardships and humiliations for an idea. There was nothing in their looks to suggest why they in particular should have done it. Some were handsome and some had personality, but taken as a whole they looked ust ordinary wonen."

The Coming Triumph

The procession, which took place in London on Saturday was a most impressive demonstration in favor of women's suffrage. It seems to have been a triumph of successful organization, says the Irish Times. Those who have had any experience in these matters will appreciate the difficulty of assembling some 30,000 people, and marching them through crowded streets. On Saturday the problem was complicated by the great throngs of people assemled for the Coronation. Yet the great enterprise seems to have been carried through without a hitch. The procession was as widely representative as could be gathered for any political cause. The University graduates, in their robes, walked beside the industrial workers in the drab garments of their toil. The wives of colonial statesmen and English politicians joined hand with the smartly-dressed ladies of the Actresses' Franchise League. The great pageant represented all the women who are working for the state today, and all into the fruits of whose labors we have entered. From Boadicea to Elizabeth, and on again to Queen Victoria, the Queens of England have been among her greatest Monarchs. Joan of Arc, the most wholly romantic figure of her time, bore her testimony to that triumph of ideals over physical force for which women should stand in the life of a nation. But among the victories of Saturday, the one upon which we congratulate the organizers most heartily is the announcement which was made in the evening that militant methods are to be abandoned. We need not pry too closely into the reasons for that decision, but we believe the decesion itself to be of the happiest augury. . We who have consistently supported a guarded and rational extension of the suffrage to women may rejoice at the removal of the weightiest objection to it. So long as methods of lawlessness and violence were permitted to continue it was difficult for those who believed most strongly in the claim of educated women to the franchise to advocate it without reserve. We can no longer see any reason to deprive the state of the advice and assistance of capable and responsible women. We do not imagine that the old cry of female infirmity is likely to be revived. It was never a cry that had any reasonable basis, for the smallest study of history will show that, under favorable conditions of education and environment, women have repeatedly equalled and excelled the achievements of men. Women are undoubtedly differently constituted from men, and we do not think that, under any circumstances, they will either seek or obtain a controlling influence in the state. But, because of that very difference, they ought to receive a fair measure of representation if the higher and more delicate factors in human life are to be given their proper expression. We agree that, after years of disappointment in the wilderness, the leaders of the suffrage movement are at last within sight of the promised land. We who have sought to help and cheer them in the way will rejoice if they are near success. But we may remind them that much will depend upon the way in which they act at first. We believe that their genuine desire is, not to rival or oust men, but to become more truly their helpmates than has been possible in the past. The need of the time is for womanliness as it ever was-for more intelligent comradeship, but not, even in foolish talk, for any division of
