We must apply ourselves to the task of using the great wealth we are able to produce, not for a hierarchical standard of living, but for a good standard of living for all our people. As a matter of fact, that idea is in the Speech from the Throne. It has to be read carefully and between the lines to find that idea, but it is there, for the Speech from the Throne does say that we must use our capacity for production of wealth to produce as much as we can, but we must see to it that that wealth, having been produced, gets through to all our people.

There is a suggestion that there will be legislation in the field of income maintenance to meet that goal. That is good. I am glad I am not preaching to the unconverted. I am glad to know there are people who share with me in philosophical terms this notion I am now trying to spell out, namely that our job in the seventies is not to raise the incomes of those people earning $3,000 to $4,000 while the upper limits increase to $40,000 to $50,000. Our job is to achieve a greater approach to equality. Our job is to achieve the kind of society in which we accept the principle that a guaranteed livelihood is a natural right of every person in this country.

I recognize the fact that it will take time to reach this goal, but it may not take as long as some people think. I remember being told when I first came here that some of the things I advocated were idealistic but could never be achieved. They have been achieved. I have seen the elimination of the means test from the basic old age pension. I have seen hospitalization and medicare and other things of that sort enacted in this place. It may be that for no other reason than sheer necessity we will get to a guaranteed income for all Canadians sooner than some people think. But it will only come if we make it a high national resolve.

At this time we are thinking in terms of national purpose. We are disturbed about what is happening in the fabric of our lives. We are particularly concerned over the assassination Saturday night. It must not be in vain. The ideals to which Mr. Laporte dedicated his life must be carried on. I submit that we should include in those ideals the new attitudes and new scale of values referred to in the Speech from the Throne. That new scale of values must not be just a few more dollars for the poor and a few thousand dollars more for those at the top, but a society in which the first principle is that everyone in Canada is guaranteed a decent livelihood as a natural right.

Having emphasized the fact that we may achieve our goal faster than some people think, I now wish to mention one subject in particular and two or three other subjects in passing. Because it takes time to achieve a broad ideal like that is no reason that while we are seeking to attain it that we should not look carefully at what we can do along the way.

I welcome the fact that in the course of this session a standing committee will study the white paper on unemployment insurance. I do not think for a moment, and neither does the government, that unemployment insurance is the answer to poverty or that it achieves the justice and dignity that are our destiny. However, it is a step in that direction. I welcome the changes that were made last session in connection with the pensions of retired civil servants, retired members of the armed forces, retired members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and others receiving federal pensions. I also welcome the recommendation of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications that the same be done for the Canadian National pensioners. I welcome the veterans legislation that has been promised for the present session. I wish we had more details as to what will be in that legislation, and I hope it will contain more than the administrative changes that were called for by the Woods Report. I hope that there will be a scaling up of the pensions paid under the Pension Act and that there will be something for those who receive war veterans allowances. The point I am making, Mr. Speaker, is that these are ideals we want to see carried through in the final achievement. There are some who want to see a guaranteed income for all our people. I recognize that we have to take certain steps along the way, and I welcome those steps which have been taken recently or that are being contemplated at present.

This brings me to another phase of the matter, namely, the whole question of old age security to which I made a passing reference moments ago. I confess that in this area I have a great deal of concern. We were told a couple of years ago about the studies being made by Dr. Willard, the deputy minister of welfare in the Department of National Health and Welfare. For a while we thought we were to see Dr. Willard's report; it is now obvious that we will not see it. Then there was a white paper on pensions, which apparently was based on the Willard report. For a while it seemed that we were to see it in the last session. That commitment was not kept. Now, we are told that another white paper is to be produced in the present session which will be different in some respects from the white paper that we did not see during the last session. Until one sees the white paper, and until one sees the legislation to be brought in, one cannot know what is coming.

I confess that I am terribly worried that euphemism has taken over and that we are to get selectivity as the basis of dealing with the pensions of our senior citizens. I say that euphemism has taken over, because I think that is all it is. When you talk about selectivity you are talking about a pension based on some kind of means test or income test. We have been over this argument a good many times, Mr. Speaker. The point I want to make is that it is not consistent with the principles I have been advocating, namely, that a guaranteed livelihood, or a guaranteed income for the people of this country should be a natural right, should be the right of every one of our people.

It is still my view that one of the greatest steps taken in the years I have been in the House, and certainly the greatest step in the field of social security, was that step taken in 1950, in 1951 and in 1952—in one year the matter was before the committee, the next year we had legislation and the year after that the legislation was put into effect—by which we abolished the means test from the former old age pension and by which we said to the group of people of this country who were 70 years of age and over, "Nothing else matters; you are now 70 years of age, and this kind of pension is yours as of right."

The pension was only $40 then, but the universal basis on which it was paid was a tremendous victory for the concept of natural right in this field. We raised the pension from $40 to $46; then to $55; then to $65, and then to $75. The $75 in relative terms now is not much better than the $40 was in 1952 or the $20 was back in 1927. However, during the years when we were raising the pension from $40 to $75 we did not do anything to alter the principle under which it was paid. It was given to our people of 70 years of age and over as a matter of right. Later on, thank heaven, we got the age down to 65, and that is where it stands now. I still think, Mr. Speaker, that paying a pension of $75 a month to every citizen in Canada over the age of 65 as a matter of right is one of the best things we have put on our statute books. It is the kind of beginning toward the sort of society the Speech from the Throne anticipates that we must not go back on.

The reason I am speaking, the reason I am making this plea at this time, is that I am afraid that the government will bring in an increase, not in the basic pension, which is $75 a month before you add the 2 per cent bonuses, but rather in what the government calls the guaranteed income supplement. I know all the language in favour of it. I know of all the talk about using our money to give it to those who need it. But if you do that, Mr. Speaker, you are doing the very thing that I said at the beginning of my speech will not work. You do not solve poverty by doing things for the poor and leaving them poor; you do not solve poverty by singling out a particular group, those who are poor, and giving them something special because they are poor. You only solve poverty by abolishing it; you only solve it by providing your income level as a natural right. In due course I want to see this done across the board, for people of all ages. I am as convinced that this will come as I am sure I am standing here, if we hold the country together. But I am concerned in case we retreat from the extent to which we have protected that principle in old age security. So, my appeal to the government at this point, before it brings in either its white paper on income security or its legislation on pensions, is that it not take a further backward step by a further use of the means test or income test but that it increase the basic old age security pension to at least $150 a month across the board.

Let us do the same thing that we did in 1950, 1951 and 1952, when we said to our older people, "we will not treat you any longer as second class people, some of whom are well off and some of whom are poor. We will treat you as Canadians of a certain age. This income is yours as a matter of rights." Let us continue so to say to our old people, and by saying it to these people, let us give hope to the people in their working years, to the young, to the children, and to all Canadians, that the day will come when we will have the kind of society that respects human dignity—not just by rhetoric; not just with fine speeches; not just by talking about equality of opportunity—oh, how cold that phrase leaves me—because it will be the kind of society in which the dignity of all our people is established by there being no more poverty. In that society all will enjoy their share of the immense amount of wealth we are now capable of producing. When that day comes, human dignity will be real.

As I have already said, Mr. Speaker, I welcome the improvements which have been made in the last few years in increasing the pensions of retired citizens. I welcome the improvements that are coming in unemployment insurance. I welcome the veterans legislation that is coming. I am still proud of what this Parliament has done over the past decade or two in the field of old age security, hospitalization and medicare. But we have a long way to go before we have a society that is really just, before we have a society that truly recognizes human dignity. We shall take an important further step in that direction if, during the present session, we raise the old age pension for all people who are 65 years of age and over to a reasonable figure—I suggest $150 a month—and if we restore the principle that all our older people shall get it, as they should, as a matter of right. This will be a step of which this Parliament could really be proud.

Mr. Raymond Rock (Lachine): This is a difficult time at which to deliver a speech, bearing in mind the events of the past week. It is sad, indeed, it is tragic for all Canadians that these events should have ended in the brutal murder of the Quebec Minister of Labour and Immigration, the Hon. Pierre Laporte, a great Canadian and a good personal friend of mine. My sincere sympathy goes to his loved ones.

First, Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the mover of the motion for the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. member for Bourassa, (Mr. Trudel) and the seconder, the hon. member from Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas). It was indeed an excellent choice—an hon. member representing an eastern urban metropolitan area and another representing a western agricultural community.

I had the honour of being a member of the Lachine City Council for close to 13 years. At one point during this time, the Hon. Lionel Chevrier, then in charge of the Seaway construction, stated at a banquet organized by the Lachine Chamber of Commerce that all craft using the old canal system would be allowed to use the new canal. After the official opening, the St. Lawrence Seaway authority banned all craft under 20 feet from using the new canal, thus preventing thousands of people from travelling from Lake St. Louis to Lake St. Francis, to the Thousand Islands, the Great Lakes and eastward, to Lake St. Pierre and the Richelieu Rivers, Lake Champlain and the Hudson River.

Since the Seaway has been completed, the Seaway authority has attempted to close the old Lachine Canal completely, without regard to its probable future use. Many times I have stated that this canal should be used as a marina for pleasure craft. Last year the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) appointed a firm of planning consultants, Jean-Claude LaHaye et Associés, to study the future use of the Lachine Canal. In August last this firm submitted a report in two volumes, Tome I entitled "Navigation" and Tome II entitled "Other Functions". In the report it is mentioned that past studies made in 1964 by the federal Department of Public Works, in 1968 by Lalonde, Valois, Lamarre, Valois and Associates, in 1968 by the City Planning Department of the City of Montreal, Urban Development Division, in 1969 by Sorès Incorporated and in 1969 by N. D. Lea and Associates, all admitted that the one problem basic to all the studies and still remaining unresolved was the difficulty of communication between the three waterway systems within the Montreal area. The three waterway systems to which I refer are the St. Lawrence-Great Lakes system, the Ottawa River and the Lower St. Lawrence-Richelieu. The majority of pleasure craft in the Montreal region are held captive because of the cutting of the communication by closing the Soulanges and Lachine canals.

Before the redistribution of the federal electoral districts I represented Ste Anne de Bellevue, one of the 17 municipalities in the old constituency of Jacques Cartier-LaSalle. During this time the Department of Transport repaired and beautified the St. Anne's locks and made a park area there. For several years, I have been requesting the department to do the same at the Lachine locks but my request has been repeatedly refused because the locks were under the jurisdiction of the Seaway authority. I also asked for the old Lachine Canal to be transferred back to the Department of Transport, but this request has also been refused. At least my request to have the whole question studied by engineers was granted, and for this I am very grateful.

When a Member of Parliament from the Montreal region spends a great deal of time in Ottawa and notices the millions of dollars which are spent in the capital area, and realizes that these are in addition to billions of Canadian tax dollars already spent in projects such as the beautification and reconstruction of the Rideau Canal system, it makes him sick to his stomach to return to his riding to see property such as the historic Lachine Canal go to waste and look like a garbage heap.

The planning consultants hired by the St. Lawrence Seaway authority, Jean-Claude LaHaye and Associates, made certain recommendations which gave me hope and made me happy. They are to be found on page 75 of Tome II of their report, and I quote:

It is recommended that the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority take the necessary measures to ensure that any construction work done on the Lachine Canal over the next few years will in no way hinder the possibility of developing the canal for recreational purposes at a later date. In particular, the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority should ensure that:— bridges to be built or replaced have at least five feet clearance above water level, over a minimum width of 30 feet; work on dams and other control structures allow for future construction of locks, whenever warranted; any change in these structures allow for a two-foot drop in water level, if required. It is strongly recommended that the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority make representations to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to conduct an overall study of recreation in the Montreal region. The development of the canal and its immediate surroundings should form an integral part of this study.

I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate this firm of engineers for their excellent work. I agree fully with their recommendations and I hope that the Minister of Transport and the St. Lawrence Seaway authority will accept the recommendations they have made. The historic Lachine Canal could, in its entirety, become a large marina providing facilities for the population of southern Montreal, people who have for years been hemmed in and denied all water rights to the St. Lawrence River because of the Port Authority.

An overall study such as this would take in the total needs of pleasure craft for Des Mille-Iles River, Des Prairies River, Lake of Two Mountains and Lake St. Louis. If the Seaway Authority and the Department of Transport are not interested in providing services for pleasure craft users, a federal responsibility, the old canal system could be transferred to the jurisdiction of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chretien) could then create a federal canal park system which would bring pleasure and beauty to the Montreal and Lake St. Louis district.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has often stated that people should participate in making decisions. Well, many of us in the constituency of Lachine, as well as in other constituencies along the Lachine Canal and in the Lake St. Louis district, will be organizing a seminar in the near future to study the needs of pleasure craft in the Montreal and Lachine canal area. It is my hope that the member for Laval (Mr. Roy) and Terrebonne (Mr. Comtois) will join us at this seminar.

I have heard a news report concerning a statement made in Toronto by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) that the situation which exists in Canada is international in scope; that organizations are out to break the democratic system in many countries. I will go further and say that the members of the FLQ and members of similar groups are out to break our free enterprise system which has resulted in affluence and a very high standard of living. In fact, our standard of living is usually regarded as second highest in the world.

It is no accident that the very able premier of the province of Quebec, the Hon. Robert Bourassa, visited New York state lately to interest the Americans in a $2 billion power project which would produce 36 billion kilowatts of electricity in the James Bay area and would open up this area for development of its natural resources. This power project would create a surplus of electrical power which would be sold to the Americans, our friends south of the border. The plan could even include Thomas W. Kierans, grand canal system which would divert these waters, after their being fully used, to the Ottawa River and Great Lakes system. This water surplus would thus create more power potential for the power plants along the Ottawa and the St. Lawrence valleys, and there would be enough water to allow the Americans to use it south of the border, where it is much needed.

It was during the time Premier Bourassa was asking the Americans for a $2 billion loan for a development which would provide thousands of jobs in our province of Quebec that the FLQ went out on a wave of kidnapping, possibly to sabotage Premier Bourassa's plans for economic expansion. When we celebrated our 100th birthday of confederation, the FLQ did everything to sabotage the celebrations in our province. So this is nothing new; it as been going on and on.

There were in the past many important projects which were national in scope, some of which were realized while others, for some reason, fell by the wayside. For example, there were the great railway systems from east to west; the Alaska highway; the Trans-Canada highway; the communications microwave system; and then, lately, Telesat. However, many others fell by the wayside, such as the causeway to Prince Edward Island.

In 1855 there was much talk of building a telegraph system across Canada to Alaska, then across the Bering Strait to Asia and Europe. This suggestion was made following the break in the first trans-Atlantic line. However, the plan was abandoned when a second cable was laid successfully across the Atlantic ocean.

Then, about 1861 there was much talk of building a railways system from New York to Denver, via Alberta—then known as the Northwest Territories—and on to Alaska and across the Bering Strait by ferry to Siberia. This was a feasible plan in those days when people had vision.

In 1965, we had Thomas W. Kierans' grand canal proposal calling for the diversion of the Harricanaw River to develop power. In 1967 Acres Research and Planning limited published a report called "Canada North Development Corridor". This was a plan to coordinate a system of communications, highway and railway networks from Newfoundland, by subway under the Strait of Belle Isle, and across the northern part of the provinces to Alaska. This is an excellent study, and I hope that included will be a causeway across the Bering Strait to Siberia, connecting North America with Asia. These projects I have mentioned were all excellent. Some have been developed, some not. Some of the later ones hopefully may be implemented.

I hope that Premier Bourassa's plan to open the James Bay and Hudson Bay areas for development purposes does not fall by the wayside. This proposal should be taken up by the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, as well as the federal government in order to realize the grand canal project and to consider development of Canada north corridor plan. It is to be hoped that the recent disturbances in Quebec will not cause American financiers to lose interest.

If development of the James Bay area took place, it is to be hoped that our aboriginal Indians and Eskimos would be given the opportunity to become totally involved in the economic benefits flowing therefrom, along with other Canadians. Hundreds of Indian and Eskimo children are presently completing high school. Many will take up professions and trades, but their talents may not be needed in the northern regions unless these areas are developed.

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to congratulate both the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. members for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel) and Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas). Both members have made their constituents proud as a result of their presentations.

Like my colleagues on both sides of the House, I should like also to express my most sincere and heartfelt compassion and sympathy to the family of the Minister of Labour of the province of Quebec, the Hon. Pierre Laporte, in their hour of bereavement and extreme sadness which is shared by the whole country. I also extend my sympathy to the family of the British diplomat, Mr. James Cross, and I am sure it is the prayer of the whole nation that he, at least, is still alive. I have little to add to the multitude of public pronouncements of indignation and horror that have been levelled against those social misfits who have been directing a campaign of physical violence and murder against our society.

May I thank, you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity of commenting on the Speech from the Throne, I did think we would never come back to it. I must confess at the outset that I am going to find it difficult, to say the least, to respond favourably to the attempt in the Speech from the Throne by the government to allay the fears and concerns of the Canadian people.

It is unfortunate that the Throne Speech was not delayed until the government had wrested control of this country from the FLQ. I say this in view of the recent dastardly act, specially the murder of Pierre Laporte, by the FLQ which has taken the heat off the Throne Speech. In a few days or weeks from now the government will be out of the woods as far as the Throne Speech is concerned, having not had to face the full weight of just criticism from the outraged members of the House.

For this reason, I was prepared to move a motion, seconded by the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott), that the House rules relating to the debate on the Speech from the Throne be suspended in order to allow additional time for members who wish to speak on the many economic and social problems that beset Canada. However, it has come to my attention during the last hour or so that some discussions along these lines are presently taking place among the House leaders. Therefore, on the assumption that the House leaders will arrive at a formula that will provide ample opportunity to those hon. members who would like to speak on the Throne Speech, I will withhold my motion for the time being.

The Throne Speech has been upstaged by the recent horrible events that have affected the lives of us all, and I cannot help feeling that the government would welcome an opportunity to fill some of the vacuum created by the speech. I cannot help feeling that the government would welcome the opportunity to explain to this House, and to the Canadian people, why there was so little in the Throne Speech in the way of specific programs designed to clear away the enormous backlog of serious problems that face this country. The problems of unemployment of housing, of unfair competition in our markets from foreign goods and from low cost labour are only a few.

I think I express the sentiment of my colleagues on this side of the House, and possibly a few in the backbenchers on the other side, when I say the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) would surely welcome the opportunity to explain to us what he really meant when he said we were standing on the threshold of greatness. We are all intrigued by the prospect and I for one would like to know whether the Prime Minister was speaking objectively or subjectively. Does he mean that he and his cabinet ministers will soon soar up into lofty heights? If they soar high enough it will delight a multitude of people from one end of the country to the other. I might suggest that if the Prime Minister does not wait too long he might be able to accommodate his cabinet in one of these new jumbo jets. After the Prime Minister and his cabinet have soared out of sight in their futile search for greatness we can employ few more jumbo jets to send his proteges after him. I am speaking of the hordes of hippies, yippies, draft dodgers, deserters and assorted freaks that the present government welcomes to this country from across the border.

I will not dwell on this at length, because the indignation of most of us has been expressed in this House, except to say that people who have shown clearly they do not respect the laws and traditions of their own society and country could not be expected to have a very high regard for the laws and traditions of our country. It should be abundantly clear, even to our present government, that we do not have to import revolutionaries, freaks and malcontents; we have a substantial number of our own. I think it is time we stopped coddling these people in the name of the Prime Minister's new permissive society.

The majority of responsible citizens of this country have the right to expect protection from a lunatic minority that has been bombing, shooting, robbing, murdering and terrorizing innocent Canadian citizens and foreign dignitaries. I cannot believe that we are being led into greatness by a group of gangsters who have grown so powerful they can virtually paralyze every level of government.

As the Prime Minister emphasized last Tuesday, we are faced with a situation where a small group of arrogant gangsters is trying to establish a parallel power in this country in direct contravention of the traditional political system we have built up over the past 100 years, and in clear contravention of the wishes of a majority of Canadian people. The shock and horror expressed by people all across this country should serve to remind us anew that we are one country, with one society and one set of aims. We should realize now as never before that any attempt to impose the will of one culture group or one language on all Canadians will only serve to divide rather than to unify our one society.

It should be obvious to all of us now that the FLQ and other organizations of its type are not so much interested in the wellbeing of Canada as a nation as they are in furthering their own narrow, bigoted and self-serving aims. When I mention other organizations of this type, let me remind hon. members that we are confronted with other bodies besides the FLQ which are out to seek the dissolution of this country. For a very long time these groups, and especially the FLQ, have managed to enjoy relative immunity from public censure by pretending to be legitimate political organizations, seeking to change our social and political system by legitimate political means. We know now they have been sailing under false colours. We know now that the permissive policies of the last two governments have, whether they meant it or not, helped these bodies along in their policies of subversive activity.

Even the Prime Minister, who for years has dismissed the FLQ threat with a smile and a shrug of his shoulders, has finally awakened to the danger to our national security posed by the revolutionary and militant phonies whose only reason for being is the so-called liberation of one province from this great country. At long last, apparently aware that these gangsters represent a threat to his own power, the Prime Minister has publicly stripped from the FLQ the cloak of political propriety they have enjoyed for so long. It is unfortunate that the Prime Minister waited so long to take a stand on the question of revolutionary activity in this country. He waited until a crisis arrived and it became necessary for the government to invoke the War Measures Act, the most extreme measure presently possible under our constitutional system of government. I contend that the government long ago was warned of what was going to happen. The government was warned of developments that have culminated in the terrible events of the last few days.

As late as January, 1966 a tri-continental conference of all the so-called liberation movements was held in Havana, Cuba. Its objective was to co-ordinate all the Communist subversive and guerilla activities throughout the world. This conference was made up of delegates from Red China, which we have just recently recognized, the Soviet Union and Cuba. The conference was financed by Red China and Russia. Cuba was the host. The Soviet and Chinese delegates co-operated fully at that time and the Hon. Paul Martin, then Canadian external affairs minister, was apprised of this.

This year the tri-continental secretariat in Havana—that is the permanent secretariat of this tri-continental Communist conference—published a Brazilian mini-manual for urban guerillas which, among other things, deals with political kidnappings and assassinations. This mini-manual was distributed in Canada and in the United States by the thousands, and in many languages. It is now the main FLQ textbook on urban guerilla warfare. Very likely this was the literary instigation of the evidence given by Lucien Saulnier here, in the West Block, at a committee meeting last November 27, 1969. Mr. Saulnier was an able and well-versed witness and he gave this House, through the committee, an account of the subversive activities going on in Montreal and throughout Quebec. He said, as reported at page 10 of Volume 14 of the Committee evidence:

> We also find on the premises officially occupied by the Company of Young Canadians and paid for by the Canadian taxpayers, newspapers and pamphlets showing how to fabricate molotov cocktails, paint bombs, flasks and vials devised to disrupt police work in the maintenance of public order.
> These documents recommend fighting men, dogs and horses with pepper, ball bearings and slings and even promote the use of potassium cyanide by way of injection, and these recipes are printed and distributed by the thousands.

This is an association that should have been investigated. The government knew about this as did the Hon. Paul Martin, who has gone to his permanent reward in the other place. The Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) knew about these moves in French Canada. He knew about the conditions in the CYC. He knew, and still knows, about the Communist infiltration of the CBC. He has done nothing and for these reasons I ask for his resignation.

It is a little puzzling to me that the people of this country should have been surprised at this latest move of the FLQ, the dual kidnapping and murder. It is also a little puzzling that there should have been such general acceptance for so long of the claim of the FLQ to political status in our society. How could we as Canadians have tolerated any group of people who employed methods such as bombings, murder, bank robberies, public condemnations of our traditional political system and more recently kidnapping and murder of innocent public officials in the name of political expediency? I have long been convinced this has largely been due to a lack of leadership in our federal system and a lack of real interest in Canada as a nation.

Over the past years it has appeared to me that the governments of Lester Pearson and Pierre Trudeau, in their policies of loose permissiveness, have been more interested in establishing a permanent power base for their Liberal party than in establishing a distinctive Canadian power base through sound policies.

Mr. Anderson: Nonsense.

Mr. Alkenbrack: They have had all the ingredients of a strong, productive country that could have provided adequately for all its citizens. They have played a foul game of politics with the issue of French Canadianism versus English Canadianism rather than of French Canadian and English Canadian side by side in one society. In this, to our sorrow, they were well aided by Charles de Gaulle, one of the leading actors on this stage not so long ago. As a result, organizations such as the FLQ are able to come into being to flourish like a cancer in the body of an otherwise healthy being. As a result, this great country has the largest percentage of drifters, dissolutes and unemployed in the western world. As a result of the playing off of one culture against another, we are experiencing a state of turnoil in our civil service. People with long service in our government fear for their future because they have lived and worked all their lives in only one language.

We are faced with a situation wherein our two founding races are beginning to eye each other suspiciously as they jockey for position in a national power struggle. Up until now, the Liberal party has managed to use these manœuvres to stay in power and to keep the Canadian people off balance as it strengthens its position. The recent Speech from the Throne is the latest case in point. Instead of proposing ways and means to solve our pressing social and economic problems, the government takes great pains to avoid present issues and states that more government departments will be set up and more ministers will be added to the largest federal cabinet in the history of our government. No one would quarrel with a federal cabinet, large or small, if the individual ministers were coping seriously with national issues. If it were possible to solve all or most of our problems, and if Canadians were given an opportunity to work for a living wage without fear of being displaced for purely political reasons, I would even be in favour of a cabinet of 50 ministers. But if 30 ministers in the federal cabinet cannot come up with answers to even the most basic issues facing our country, then I wonder how long we can stand the expense of what appears to be pure political patronage.

I think the people of this country must soon ask themselves what they are doing with the single most potent force in our country, their votes. In my view we must take a close look at where we are going. We must ask ourselves if this is where we really want to go. We must also ask ourselves what has happened to our national goals and aims. It is time that we demanded of our federal government that it begin to give us leadership of a kind that will take us out of the wilderness which the Liberal party appears to find more acceptable than national prosperity and the sovereignty of the Canadian individual.

In the Speech from the Throne the Prime Minister admitted that his much-touted just society is now out of reach. He then followed up with his enigmatic statement that we are on the threshold of greatness. This is contradiction without parallel. Worse, this is evidence of indecision and perhaps even a measure of panic. How much greatness can there be in massive unemployment? How much greatness can there be in a situation where Canadians are penalized for speaking only their native language? How much greatness can there be in a system where a small group of renegades can terrorize the whole country and bring political activity to a virtual standstill while their ransom demands are discussed and negotiated. I am inclined to agree with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) when he said that the Prime Minister's promises of greatness apparently referred to the impending Conservative victory at the polls in the next federal election.

Let us now turn to the thorny issue of bilingualism. There is a growing awareness in this country that the present government is attempting to reverse the tide of Canadian history, and that an attempt is being made to force the great river of Canadian nationalism to flow uphill. Over and over again, we have been told the only road to true Canadian nationalism is through forcing all federal employees to learn two languages and the creation of enclaves throughout the country based on one or other of the two founding languages. We are told these moves are necessary to ensure that the two founding cultures of Canada are preserved and allowed to flourish. No one is opposed to the philosophy that the two founding cultures of Canada should be preserved and encouraged to manifest themselves in private and public life. However, we are being led along a road on which we will see the emergence of a power play between the English Canadian and French Canadian factions in this country. I say factions, Mr. Speaker, because that is what is happening. The country is already being set apart into two factions, each vying for preferred position in the federal civil service.

Almost daily we see increasing evidence that the traditional and ethical merit system in the government service is being compromised in favour of bilingualism. We are told that the merit system is circumvented only occasionally in order to give preference to bilingual candidates for positions or promotions. The mere fact that personnel boards however, are allowed to use this device at all is clear evidence of the government's intent. This past summer Mr. Keith Spicer, who holds the position of official languages commissioner, made a number of comments to the press concerning his mandate. Those comments give us pause for concern. I must admit that Mr. Spicer was candid about his qualifications, but I do not feel inclined to accept his view that bilingualism can be imposed on the country in the span of three to four years. It is interesting to note that Mr. Spicer took pains to state that before he was appointed languages commissioner he had not administered anything larger than a two-hole outhouse. That might be appropriate if applied only to Mr. Spicer, but we must consider such public statements in the light of the broad mandate Mr. Spicer has been given, as well as the enormous budget assigned his office and the sweeping powers given to him.

The power that has been given to Mr. Spicer in order that he might convert our federal service into a bilingual jungle in the shortest possible time is greater than that of any other official of deputy minister rank. There is a clear indication that from three to four years from now anyone in our federal service who speaks only English will be as out of place as a person who speaks only Ukrainian, Italian or Polish.

We have already reached the point where anyone in government service who dares to object to the encroachment of the official languages bill into his work, whether or not a second language is essential to his job, is subjected to harrassment, intimidation and sometimes even demotion. It is also evident that Mr. Spicer's office is more receptive to complaints from French speaking public servants than from English speaking employees, that is to say, people whose first language is French as opposed to those whose first language is English.

It has been brought to my attention by reliable sources that a device is being employed in the federal service that gives an unfair advantage to one segment of our work force. If it were not such a serious charge I would hesitate to mention it in the House, but it is the sort of thing that the government should be required to face up to and deal with before it gets out of hand. The device I refer to is the process of examining public servants in order to confer bilingual status, and thereby give the applicant an advantage in job placements and in promotion. Employees whose first language is French, and who have less than adequate knowledge of English, have been allowed to state that their first language is English. They are then examined in French; they receive appropriate grading, and to all intents and purposes they are considered bilingual. This is only one of many examples of abuses of the official languages law, and the English Canadians do not have a champion to plead their cause.

It would be specious to suggest that Mr. Spicer, in the light of his mandate, would lend a sympathetic ear to the plight of the English Canadians. I repeat that there has never been a time in our history when the morale of our public service has been as low as it is today, and this condition has been created coldly and deliberately.

Mr. Spicer also mentioned another aspect of his mandate that has not been given sufficient publicity or even any airing in this House. I refer to his statement that he wants to go further than just to make all of the public service bilingual. He stated that in order to promote a harmonious atmosphere for bilingualism in Canada he must also tackle industry. He did not say industry in Quebec, Mr. Speaker, he said industry in Canada. This raises an interesting point. Does Mr. Spicer seriously plan to force the Quebec government to reverse its stand with regard to making French the working language in Quebec industry? No one could be that naïve.

[Mr. Alkenbrack.]

I plan to say more about bilingualism in our federal service and in other areas in our country at a later date, I can only hope that I will get some support from some of my concerned colleagues in bringing this issue out of the dark and into the arena of public scrutiny. We had been on the threshold of success in bringing the two founding races of this country together in harmony. However, the Pearson government, and more recently the present government, have and do consider it more expedient to use the force of the federal sledgehammer to bring the people to heel. It will work for a while, but in the end we could be faced with a continuing situation of trouble and crisis. It is the hope of all Canadians that the government now will get down to work to deal with Canada's many social and economic problems so that she may advance instead of retreat, as has recently been her lot.

Mr. R. J. Orange (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I join all members of the House and the vast majority of Canadians in expressing shock, shame, dismay and frustration at the events in the last number of days. Many words have been said about the direction in which this country is going and the reasons this has happened. It is not my intention to dwell on this today except to extend to Madame Laporte, her family, the government and the people of Quebec, and particularly my colleagues in this House from Quebec, our deepest sympathy on this Canadian tragedy.

I should like to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel), who spoke so eloquently when he moved the motion for the Address, and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) who is a very able representative of the province of Saskatchewan and has made a great contribution to the House of Commons in the short period he has been with us.

The year 1970 was the year of the north, the year when Canadians and people all over the world paid a great deal of interest and attention to the Canadian north. In addition, it was our centennial year in the Northwest Territories. One hundred years ago we became, as a result of an act of the British parliament, part of Canada, and the Hudson's Bay Company turned over Rupert's Land to the Canadian government for its administration.

There have been many highlights in this past year, and we have had many exciting moments. Her Majesty the Queen, together with members of the Royal Family, spent five days travelling the length and breadth of the Arctic to pay a visit to the Indian, the Eskimo, the Metis and the white people who live in the Northwest Territories. We were honoured by Her Majesty's visit. We saw how she and her family were able to communicate and meet with the people who had never had an opportunity to meet the Royal Family prior to this and probably never will have again, although we are looking forward hopefully to their return. We saw a gracious family who were relaxed during the whole course of their stay with us.

During the year we have had three visits, two of them short, on the part of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), to Frobisher Bay, to the magnificent Nahanni area and an extensive tour of the central Arctic last spring. In addition, we have been honoured by the visit of the Governor General and Mrs. Michener to those areas of the Arctic which did not receive either the Queen or the Prime Minister during the course of the year. Our people in the north have had an opportunity to show themselves in their native habitat to these distinguished visitors.

It seemed to me during the summer that every time we turned around in Yellowknife there was a conference just ending and another one just starting. We had visits from interested investors and people who were concerned about wildlife management. We have seen conferences sponsored by the government, such as the communications conference in September, which will be followed by a transportation conference under the ministry of transport in December. Last March we participated in the Arctic winter games when the Arctic people from Alaska, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories were able to come together to participate in sports activities.

These games were a great success, not only in terms of the people competing but in the opportunities they had to exchange ideas and views on how we should continue to develop and live in the northern half of North America. Our centennial activities included many things in all communities across the north. There were the northern games in Inuvik, and the centennial canoe race down the mighty Mackenzie with about a dozen teams participating, lasting for approximately three weeks.

There was a revival of the old, original mail runs, by dog sled, both in the eastern Arctic and the Mackenzie District. I have before me one of the newsletters published by the centennial committee, which outlines in detail activities that took place all through the north during the past year. Our centennial is virtually over, Mr. Speaker. Now, having built the infrastructure of our Canadian north we face the task and the challenge of implementing this for the benefit of the people who live in the Canadian north, for the benefit of the economy and environment of the Canadian north, for the benefit of the ecology of the Canadian north and, most important, Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the people of Canada.

This Parliament last session enacted legislation amending both the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Acts which did a number of things relating to the quality of life in the Canadian north. The amendments to the Northwest Territories Act provided for an increase in the number of representatives who come together on the Territorial Council. The amendments to the Yukon Act provided for the establishment of an executive council which, in effect, is the first step in the establishment of cabinet government in that territory. During debate the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) indicated that as a result of the experience gained in the Yukon the same kind of arrangement would be made in the Northwest Territories.

One of the complaints which many of the people in the north have with respect to the management of their own affairs is that they are still living under a system which does not give them full freedom of expression. We would like to see our elected representatives on the Territorial Council have active participation in the management of government. By this means they will learn the responsibilities and the powers involved in government. I hope that the arrangement to be worked out in the Yukon Territory establishing an executive council can be soon implemented in the Northwest Territories, thereby giving our council a real say in the things which affect our lives.

It is almost redundant to say that we are on the threshold of great developments in the Canadian north. We have talked too often about this in the past. On many occasions we have said that the north is Canada's storehouse of wealth. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the door to that storehouse is about to be opened. There have been great discoveries of oil and gas at a place called Prudhoe Bay on the north slope in Alaska. Canadian territory will have to be used to transport these resources to the United States. We know there are serious problems associated with the building of pipelines through the north, problems affecting the environment and the ecology. However, we believe it is possible to build these pipelines in such a way as to retain most of our environment in its present state.

At the moment, plans call for the building of oil pipe lines through Alaska to the port of Valdez on the southern coast of Alaska. However, it is quite probable that simultaneously with this development pipelines will have to be built through Canadian territory to bring natural gas from Prudhoe Bay to the United States. There are a number of factors which must be considered seriously in this development. The first and most important is that people along the Mackenzie River, particularly the Indian people and the Métis people, should understand the effect and purpose of a pipeline. I ask the government and the oil companies concerned to ensure that there is proper communication between them to enable a full understanding in this respect.

The second important point is to guarantee that when pipelines are built they do not destroy the tender ecology of the north. We believe that through experiment, planning, organization and the expenditure of money, pipelines can be built running from the north slope of Alaska along the coast into the Mackenzie delta, and down the Mackenzie River into Alberta, in such a way as not to affect the cariboo migration, the permafrost, and the way of life of people who are dependent on hunting and trapping for their livelihood.

In this connection the oil and gas companies have already undertaken extensive research work to determine the effect of pipelines on permafrost. The Mackenzie Valley Research Program at Inuvik, which has been in operation for a year and a half, has provided a great deal of information to the pipeliners and to governments, so that when the time comes we may, and I repeat may, be in a position to ensure that these pipelines do not constitute great danger to the north.

Extensive oil and gas exploration is also taking place in the Canadian north, arousing the same nagging worries there. We look to government to prevent a disaster which could occur without proper planning and research. One proposal is to take oil from the Canadian Arctic by tanker. On two occasions the American supertanker, the Manhattan, has tested the Arctic ice. In fairness we must recognize that this ship was not built for that purpose. It was only reinforced against ice.

At this stage, Mr. Speaker, knowing the problems connected with Arctic ice, particularly in winter months, the problems of darkness and the problems of wind, I say that until such time as the government can be absolutely assured there is no possibility of oil spills from tankers, Canada must close the Northwest Passage to oil tankers. This is not to say that experimental trips such as those of the Manhattan were not useful. We discovered that in certain parts of the Arctic, particularly beyond the Northwest Passage, big tankers and other ships can be sailed without danger for most of the year. We have discovered that some of the minerals to be found in the eastern part of the Arctic islands may be transported south by large ships. Massive iron ore deposits, which were first discovered five or six years ago along the Mary River, have been left sitting there waiting the resolution of a number of problems, not the least of which was the transportation problem. As a result of the voyage of the Manhattan, it now appears there is a possibility that large ships can go through the new ice, ice formed during the course of one year. A ship can go through this ice without danger to the ship or to the environment, at the same time providing economic opportunity for Canada, in particular the Eskimo people of the eastern Arctic.

In the course of the growth of the north one of the most encouraging signs for Canadians, and indeed all people in North America, has been the interest in tourism. I am not referring to someone leaving a large city early in the morning and arriving at an isolated, comfortable fishing camp to spend a week at substantial cost. These camps are for a particular group of people. I am talking about the tourist who will travel, with a trailer hitched to the back of his car, up the Alaskan highway or the Mackenzie highway to visit the north that he has only read and heard about. We think more and more people will travel to the north by automobile, in addition to the primary means of transportation, air travel. The communities along our highways are reacting to these visitors. They help our economy. The northern people are proud to show their communities.

In many respects, Mr. Speaker, the infrastructure of northern development has been built. Most of our young people now attend school. As a result of the massive building program during the last five years, new homes are now available to most people of the north. Economic development is reaching the point where there is greater participation on the part of those who were born and continue to live in the northern communities. However, we must ask ourselves, where do we go from here?

Last year the government of Canada made a number of major decisions regarding northern development. The Department of National Defence has implemented a program to establish an Arctic headquarters. This is based primarily on sovereignty. For the time being, this headquarters will be located in Yellowknife. Armed Forces personnel will be scattered through the north for varying periods of time. The Armed Forces have a number of Arctic training projects covering construction, living in the Arctic, and other matters.

The Department of Justice has moved closer toward giving responsibility for justice to the territorial governments. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) has announced the establishment of an Arctic administration to be located in the north. I understand this will be a headquarters for the administration of all forms of Arctic transportation. The Department of Communications, through the Telestat operation, will improve communications for the people of the north.

Bearing all this in mind, I suggest to the government that it is time to develop a plan for the north. I am concerned when I see the various departments of government each working in its own direction. Although they are working with concern and interest, they are not necessarily working as closely as they might with sister departments of government and the territorial governments.

I like to think there is some means whereby planning might be done in advance, with a series of priorities established for the use of the resources, the lands, and to ensure that there is participation on the part of human resources, the people of the north. This could be accomplished by a planning council, strengthening the advisory committee on northern development, a white paper or task force. I am not sure what the answer is.

I strongly believe it is time for this government to compile a total plan, a design for the development of the northland of Canada. We must consider the criterion for investment in the Canadian north as well as the question of ownership of land and the use, either multiple or exclusive. When I say land, I am talking about conservation of areas and the development of proper planning for communities.

We must consider the human resources of the north to determine if the programs to this point have been satisfactory and meet the needs. Does the education program which has been developed really meet the needs of the people, the old and the young? We must look at the present social development programs to see if the people who are participating in these programs understand them. Do these people understand that they are on the threshold of great changes? Although these changes may have started 15 years ago, they are now being escalated. We must also determine the system of government that is best for the Canadian north. Do the territorial governments have enough power and strength to carry out those things which affect the quality of life of the northerner? What is happening with respect to the development of government?

I feel very strongly about the grand design for northern Canada. It is an opportunity for Canadians to transcend in many ways the regionalism that so often affects our country. The Canadian north offers Canadians a unique challenge to use their talents and abilities. Canadians from all parts of Canada must work to develop the human and natural resources in this vast expanse of Canada. Possibly this should be the melting pot of languages, races and skills, not only working for the benefit of the north, but the entire country.

In the process of talking about this country that I love so well, I cannot help but point a finger at some of the pressing and urgent matters that affect Canadians in the north and in the south. As our north changes, as our people come out of schools and as some of our people understand more and more of what is happening to them, they are saying to us, "We want to be involved; we want to be part of the action." The Canadian Eskimo, the Indian and Métis as well as the white man, is concerned and wants to participate in this growth and development. We have seen examples of this earlier this summer.

The people of Banks Island, hearing that oil companies were coming to their trapping grounds to undertake seismic work, objected; the news of their objection was picked up and carried by the media. We have seen how the government, with intelligent planning, was able to speak with the people of Banks Island and work out a program which was satisfactory. It is unfortunate, damned unfortunate, that before any decisions were taken the people involved were not consulted as to planning and programming. The solution that has been arrived at apparently is satisfactory to all concerned. I hope this is a lesson, Mr. Speaker. I hope that this is the silver lining and that from this time on the Indians, Eskimos, Métis and white people involved will be consulted before major economic decisions are taken in the north. They must understand the "why, how, when and where" of any decision.

Organizations such as COPE, the Committee on Original Peoples Equality, have taken the forefront in pointing out to industries, businesses and governments concerned the very point to which I have just alluded. They are saying, "You had better make certain that we know what is happening, because we will not be quiet any longer." In the process of change and development, the native peoples of the north must face a number of questions. Until they are resolved, I do not think they will really feel they are part of the Canadian dream.

I am talking primarily about aboriginal rights of Indian and Eskimo peoples of the north. By way of background, may I say that in 1921 most of the Indian people in the Mackenzie valley signed treaties with the government of Canada. These treaty documents are a disgrace. If people had been as greatly concerned about human rights in those days as they are now this matter would have been brought into the open. In no way could a government today get away with the kind of treatment that was meted out in 1921. Be that as it may, those treaties have not been upheld. The Indian people have not received the full benefit that they were entitled to under the treaties. Those benefits include land settlement benefits. At the same time there are many other people, primarily Eskimos in the north, who have never entered into any agreement or arrangement with the government of Canada. And this is what aboriginal rights are all about.

Up to this point the government has taken a fairly strong line with regard to aboriginal rights. First, I believe the term itself must be clearly defined. Second, if the government is to permit oil companies and others to exploit these lands, I think we shall have to sit down with these native people and say we are prepared to recognize that they have some claims and some rights with respect to participating in these developments. I hope this government will change its stand on aboriginal rights and not say, "We do not intend to discuss them." There seems to be a ray of light here, because the Prime Minister not too long ago said, "Maybe we can do that." If there is to be confidence between the native peoples of the north and the government of Canada, the present issue involving treaties and aboriginal rights must be discussed.

Too often in this House, Mr. Speaker, we hear a certain kind of question posed by hon. members. Often we hear about rumours—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House consent to permitting the hon. member to continue his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Orange: Mr. Speaker, may I express my sincere gratitude to my colleagues here for their courtesy in allowing me to continue. I will try not to be too long. I wish to say many things, and I believe hon. members of the House are interested in hearing them.

All too often in the House we have heard statements made by people, who may not fully understand the situation, to the effect that they have learned by way of moccasin telegraph of rumours of dreadful things happening in the north. By the same token, we seldom hear about some of the progress being made. On more than one occasion the question of the Indian mortality rate has been raised in the House. Statistics show that the Indian infant mortality rate has dropped from 64 births per thousand in 1965 to 24.2 in 1969, which is only two points above the all Canadian rate of 22 per thousand. The Eskimo infant death rate is still high; it is still triple that figure. Those engaged in medical services are doing their best to bring it lower.

The percentage of children born in hospitals has risen from just under 80 per cent in 1965 to 93 per cent in 1969. The natural increase in population—and we are very proud of this figure—in 1969 was at 31.3 per thousand of population, compared with the national average of 10.8 per thousand. There has been a reduction of 23 per cent in new cases of tuberculosis discovered in 1969, as compared with 1968. In the Northwest Territories alone 11 new nursing stations were built in 1969-70 in various communities. The government's objective of having nursing stations staffed by qualified nurses in all communities of more than 100 persons will be attained within a year or so. So, Mr. Speaker, all is not bad. As I said earlier, we have seen a massive housing program undertaken. Approximately 2,000 additional homes have been built. We have seen our children lodged in school. We are on the threshold of truly participating with the rest of society. We have problems. Our prices are high. We are finding difficulty in financing our ski team and in raising the quality of human life.

In conclusion, may I urge one more thing on the government. In the South Nahanni area one can find one of the most magnificent wild rivers in Canada. It is one of the most spectacular sights I have seen in my lifetime. Although I have lived in the north for many years, I saw it for the first time this past summer while in the company of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner). We agreed that this area was worthy of protection for the people of Canada and for the generations to come. I know that there is some concern with regard to mining interests. I also know that the area is not used now, and has not been so used for some time, by the native peoples for hunting and trapping because it has a violent nature. There is only one person living in the area and because of the possibility of it becoming a national park, and being too crowded, Mr. Kraus is planning to move to another area. I urge the government to give serious consideration to a national park in this wild river region.

Mr. Ryan: Would the hon. member suggest assisting this prospector to get past the rapids on the South Nahanni river each spring? Maybe the old boy might find that long lost mine some day.

Mr. Orange: First, he stayed there all year. We are talking about the guy on the site there now, Albert Faille. He has been going up for years. The only way he'll ever make it up there again is by airplane and the Commissioner of the Northwest Territories has promised to arrange this for him. Albert will get his final trip up the Nahanni by airplane, and he might find that mine.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): It is very difficult to stand in the House of Commons today and speak in the debate on the Address in the light of the situation facing us. It is difficult for all members, and especially for those who have taken part in the discussion today, to ignore at least temporarily, for the sake of responding appropriately to the Speech from the Throne, a critical and serious problem in our nation. Nevertheless, perhaps the events of the last week provide a fitting background to some of the remarks I am about to make and I ask hon. members forgive me if I do not attempt to take a wide national perspective but, rather, direct attention at an appropriate period in Canadian history to the problems which face one part of Canada. I feel it is somewhat futile to say anything at all, and this reflects my disappointement in the effectiveness of debates such as these. The people I really want to talk to are not in the House today, some for very good reasons and others for lack of interest. I should like my words to reach at least some of those who are responsible for decisions affecting spending and programming.

The people I represent on the east coast of Canada are in many ways the least likely to receive consideration because of their seeming inability to draw attention to their problems by displays of unrest such as seem to have become familiar in other parts of Canada. I represent the quietest people living on the continent of North America. The amazing thing is that the people of Newfoundland probably have the richest culture in North America, the only distinctive culture remaining in Canada. The rest all seems to have become the same. Our history goes back a long way. We have had a civilization of great magnificence going back at least to the year 1500 according to the records, and there is archeological evidence to indicate that there were settlements in Newfoundland as far back as the year 900 at a time when the great cities of Toronto, Vancouver and Montreal were not even heard of. It is perhaps a contradiction that some of the representatives of Newfoundland, including the Premier of our province and the Members of Parliament who represent our province, excluding myself, of course, should be so vocal and so aggressive in presenting their case. It is an odd contrast that those they represent should be such quiet people, people who believe justice will be done simply because of the need which exists.

I wish to express appreciation to those hon. members who visited our province in the earlier part of this year. I am referring to members of the regional development committee who had an opportunity to see at first hand some of the difficulties which the province faces. I know they are convinced that Canadians ought to pay attention to the needs of the east coast of Canada, if for no other reason than to honour the pledge which was made in 1949 under the terms of union, that is, the standard of living in Newfoundland would be made to correspond, roughly, to that which prevails in the other provinces.

What does it really mean to be a Canadian, and what does it mean to be making a livelihood in this nation? It might mean you are employed at a salary of $25,000, $30,000 or $40,000 a year, living in a hundred thousand or two hundred thousand dollar home with three or four cars and two colour television sets. You might be as fortunate as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) who, I understand, has a considerable number. You could be a farmer on the prairies with hundreds of acres of grain, or a fisherman based on Prince Rupert with an average income of $10,000 a year. You could be a tradesman or a technician working in Hamilton or Metropolitan Toronto or one of the other large population centres and earning $7 or $8 an hour. You could be among the 93 per cent who are employed at the present time, or you could be among the 20 per cent of the working population of Newfoundland who are unemployed. This percentage is about the same as the unemployment level in North America during the years of the great depression. It will make no difference that I put forward these observations in the House of Commons today, because it seems that the process of bringing about social change, to which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) so often refers, has broken down somewhere along the line; that great receiving set, the elected representatives of the nation seems not to be tuned in to the democratic process.

Perhaps this is a reflection of the times in which we live. It might not have anything to do with the particular government which is in power. But it seems to me that the means we formerly used to bring to the attention of the government the fact that there are problems to be resolved, are no longer effective. This is one of my greatest concerns. I do not want to see the kind of unrest that is evident in parts of Canada perpetuated to the extent that it becomes part of the modus operandi of people in the rest of Canada. A moment ago the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange) made an urgent plea in this regard and said, in effect, "We are not going to stay quiet any longer".

I hope that what I say to the House of Commons today will be listened to, for surely to God during the last two years the Newfoundland members of this House have on every possible occasion tried to drive home to the Canadian people and to the members of the House, as well as to the government and the Prime Minister, the fact that Newfoundland faces problems, problems that will be solved.

We have not even started on the road toward a just society, yet most Canadians are talking of reaching that ideal. For example, Newfoundlanders know they are paid the lowest wage rates in Canada, with a minimum wage of $1.25 an hour which many companies complain they cannot afford to pay. Very few people make more than $2 an hour. Most people in Newfoundland today earn around $2,000 a year, which is considered a very good income. Although we tell the Canadian people our plight, no one seems to listen. As a matter of fact, we are accused of being parochial when through the House of Commons we tell the country about the severe problems which we face.

The Department of Transport administers one of the most discriminatory pieces of legislation that I have ever seen. The people in my riding who live in the town of Gander and are employed by the Department of Transport are paid wages that are lower than those paid to fellow employees in other parts of Canada. This is because the people in Gander are placed in a certain zone. Certainly Adam Smith knew, as any other economist has known for the past five centuries, that the one way to create a just society is to put money into the pockets of the earning man. Yet, as I say, the Department of Transport pays lower wages to its employees in Gander than it does to employees in other parts of the country, simply because Gander is classified as being in the Atlantic region.

We do not expect to have the just society overnight, but we have hospitals in Newfoundland which do not even deserve that name. There are four cottage hospitals in my riding, and in most cases they consist of poorly designed dwellings with mediocre facilities which are totally inadequate.

There are five or six island communities in my riding where people still have a beautiful way of life, where hospitality and friendship, goodwill and decent living, are still qualities that they understand and retain. These are qualities that in many parts of Canada have long since disappeared. This year many moves have been made by the Department of Transport to eliminate their basic line of communication, the antiquated ferry system, but not in order to bring us some new ferries. I see the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) listening attentively because he represents one of those island communities, Bell Island. We do not want a paved road to Fogo Island, which is 12 miles off the coast, but we do expect that the 5,000 people living there will have adequate ferry transportation.

Twillingate, Greenspond, Bell Island, St. Brendan's, Change Island and other beautiful island communities have populations in some cases of over 5,000 people. This year the Department of Transport has moved to increase the already exorbitant ferry rates and in many cases to cut back on the number of trips that the ferries make. This means that the number of services provided through use of their Trans-Canada highway is actually diminished.

Some members wonder why there is an increase in unrest. I should like to inform them that I have written to the "czar of transportation" in Canada, Jack Pickersgill—who won his war on poverty with a $40,000 salary—about this question. The chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission replied to me that he could not afford to subsidize ferries on a budget of $3,000. That was the amount allowed by Treasury Board, and he explained that the budget was already overdrawn.

Is it any wonder that the people in my riding are coming to the point where they are beginning to exhibit evidence of unrest of the sort that has manifested itself in an ugly way in various other parts of Canada? How can I explain to them that the government is not willing to listen to their demands? Some people in my province do not enjoy the benefit of telephone service, even though some of them are living within 20 miles of one of the biggest international airports in the world—Gander. At the same time, we are able to watch television broadcasts of men walking on the moon.

Last year Canadian National Railways discontinued its passenger services across our province. We campaigned against this for two years but received very little sympathy from other members of this House. It was not only the support of the government that we lacked; we also lacked response and support from other members of the House. Members from other parts of Canada are now beginning to wonder whether there will be rail abandonment in their areas, and they should be a little reluctant to approach Newfoundland members for sympathy and understanding.

Around our coasts we have a few thousand communities whose wharfage and fishing facilities have enabled them to earn their livelihood. Fishing is one of the three major industry-producing endeavours in our economy. I wish I had in the House the letter I received from the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) regarding these facilities, because they are now being allowed to deteriorate. People in Ottawa have decided that no longer should the rural economies be encouraged. That decision has been made in Ottawa, though it has also been encouraged by the province of Newfoundland which is now suffering under a rather insane political set-up.

The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), who made such an impassioned plea in the House last Saturday, talks of changing the system through the political democratic processes at our disposal. But he will not accept the fact that continually we try to drive home to him and to the government that the fishing economy of the province of Newfoundland needs to be fostered and developed instead of undermined and allowed to perish.

Since I do not have the letter that I received from the minister, let me try to summarize its contents. It was written by the Minister of Public Works and concerns a community called Salvage, one of a dozen communities in my riding that is urgently in need of fishing facilities. In this community there are 30 boats, fishing craft, and they provide employment for almost every person in the community. In addition there are four long-liners. I do not know the value of the boats in Salvage, but some of them are worth $20,000 and employ five family men. Each man makes a living from the operations of the long-liners; at the same time, these vessels provide much needed employment ashore.

The minister informed me that he could not justify acceding to their demand for a $12,000 slipway so they can pull the boats ashore periodically to repair the bottoms, overhaul engines, re-paint and so on, because there has not been an increase in fishing activity in that community. In other words, he is telling them that the government is not prepared to construct a $12,000 fishing facility to enable the men to continue earning their livelihood.

In Newfoundland there are very few urban communities: we have St. John's, Gander, Corner Brook and Grand Falls. About a dozen communities have populations of around 10,000, and only one has about 100,000. Perhaps 25 per cent or even less of our population is living in urban communities. The rest is made up basically of people living in a rural environment. About 1,000 communities are made up basically of people who are involved in the industry of farming to a very minor extent, in forestry to a very major extent, and in fishing to a very major extent. When we became a province 21 years ago, we did not have a well developed fishery but we were in the midst of great fishing resources. We asked Canada then, and we ask Canada today, to help us develop this resource and make ours a great fishing economy so that when it is developed we may contribute to the wealth of Canada.

Perhaps hon. members do not realize that the fishing industry was the original, staple industry of the Canadian nation, followed by farming and forestry or whichever came first. Perhaps the farming industry came after forestry, because it was the industry which helped develop and spread the nation to the west where the great, primary industry of farming became the basic development. For two centuries fishing was a well developed industry, long before the rest of Canada was even heard about or developed.

Last year there was talk of a great regional development program for the province of Newfoundland. We rose in the House day after day, to the chagrin of most members of our caucus and many members of the House of Commons, and talked about the need for a fisheries policy encompassing the fishing industry. Several months later we heard that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion was going to announce a major development program for our province. He announced that millions of dollars were going to be spent on it. That money is only now beginning to be spent. The very strange thing about this program is that not a single penny of federal funds is going into the development of our fisheries resources. All this money is being channelled into infrastructure, whoever in God's name manufactured that word.

I should like to know who is making these decisions. They are quiet people in the province of Newfoundland, but I could tell the House a few stories about changes of attitude in the province which will manifest themselves loud and clear in the not too distant future. How can you expect these people to sit back for many generations and tolerate the fact that those planning future development in Newfoundland are not paying one bit of attention to their demands?

This is what is happening because the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, working in co-operation with the provincial government, has decided that in Newfoundland there should be about 50 communities instead of 1,000. Their biggest contribution to Newfoundland, as they see it, is to foster a healthy resettlement program under which people are brought from a rural to an urban economy, because they believe the kind of economy we have now should be modelled on Montreal. Montreal has a great many street lights, a beautiful sewer system, a great deal of smog and pollution, unrest, disturbance, heavy traffic, rented homes and rented houses. They have high-rise apartments where you can live on the fifth or the fiftieth floor.

Last year the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) replied to, I believe it was the hon. member for St. John's East, "who wants to live in a rustic Newfoundland outport where you may even have to tolerate things like outhouses", and called it the "pastoral syndrome" when we suggested he should listen to the people of our province. Perhaps many of them would like to live in rustic outports. Many Newfoundlanders want to live in these areas, carrying on the work of their forefathers. They cherish this attitude which in Newfoundland has been passed down through the last five centuries. Perhaps they want to live in an environment where people are still Christians, still believe in democracy and still go to church. These people are hospitable and still call their neighbours George, Tom, and so on. Perhaps they want to live in this kind of an environment with God-fearing people who like their neighbours. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion does not understand the environment of my Newfoundland friends. He wants an environment modelled on Montreal. I was going to tell him what he could do with that Montreal model, but I do not think this is the appropriate time.

We have a problem in respect of our fishing industry and I think I should spend a moment or two discussing it. Earlier today my Nova Scotian colleague who is chairman of the Fisheries Committee presented some of the reasons why Canada should come to the assistance of our fishing industry before it is too late. I contend that had we started a couple of decades ago, when Newfoundlanders first became Canadians, to develop the fishing industry in eastern Canada, we might have accomplished something. Perhaps this development should have been placed high on the list of priorities together with western fisheries. However, I will let the representatives of the industry there speak for themselves.

The fishing industry in eastern Canada has been treated with political bias by a number of governments, including the Conservative government, down through the years. They felt that the east coast was not a valuable political asset because it elected only a few members. Newfoundland has only seven members and we cannot change the government. We are not as powerful as Quebec and Ontario who have enough members to change the direction of government at least to some extent. Governments should have recognized that the people of Newfoundland are worthy Canadians living in a province which has valuable resources. They should not have treated us like Cinderella in respect of priorities. They should have put us high on the priority list to see whether we could make a contribution to the Canadian economy. This was not done.

I plead with the House of Commons to pay a little more attention this year to the question of international fisheries. While we have been sitting back treating with disdain the problems of the Atlantic fisheries, Russia—which is not a democratic state—has put many of its international fisheries eggs in one basket. Today the Russians have about 3,200 vessels, some as long as 300 feet, with crews of up to 5,000 manning the fleet. They prosecute an international fishery. Back in 1964, for example, they did not take a pound of haddock off the east coast. In 1965 they launched a naval war against the haddock fishery off the southeast corner of Newfoundland. That year 249,000 tons of haddock were taken, of which Russia took 129,000 tons. This year that fishery is so depleted that the fisheries products people tell me they do not even record the catches because they are so small.

The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) had the gumption a couple of days ago to inform the people of Canada that this year, from October 23 to December 31, George's Bank is being closed to the haddock fishery. That is a tremendous move. It is being closed because there are no haddock. Last year the International Commission for Northwest Atlantic Fisheries suggested that we close certain areas of our haddock fishery. Some members of the press gallery came to me and suggested we were getting action already because George's Bank was being closed. Isn't that tremendous! This is the kind of hogwash and gobbledygook being given to people of Canada. They are closing George's Bank because there is no haddock. This year we want assistance, because it is no longer a problem of the Canadian fishery; it is a problem of almost every major nation which has vessels fishing off our shores. Everybody is aware of this problem.

I understand that this weekend a documentary film is being shown on one of the television networks. I understand it is heavily biased in favour of British Columbia. I do not mind if it is biased in any direction so long as we draw to the attention of the Canadian people the fact that we have a great fisheries resource which has only five or ten years left if the Canadian people will not put aside politics. They should forget that we are a long way from Ottawa and are only a few people and should help put the fishing industry on some kind of self-sustaining basis so that it might have a lifetime of more than ten years.

I have suggested to my colleagues that we should have an international conference on fisheries. The minister claims there will be an International Law of the Sea conference in two years. Last year he said it would be two years from now, and this year he says it will be two years from now. Either something is wrong with his mathematics or I am a long way behind in my new maths. In two years' time there will be very little fish left on the east coast of Canada: it will be too late.

The North Atlantic Fisheries Commission is not the proper body to take care of the fisheries. We contend it is not because this commission is not of a sufficiently high level. It can only recommend; it cannot make important decisions in respect of quotas and all the other things, or in respect of international agreements concerning our coasts even as far as the Grand Banks, 400 miles away. Let us not in this House think that Canada does not have some responsibility in the fisheries problem which is becoming more serious. I shall give some statistics to show that over the last two or three years the Labrador fishery has been a complete failure. Why were there occasions this year when fishing crews sailing to Labrador came home with only seven codfish after a summer's fishing? Everyone said it was because of pollution and cold water. In 1968, on Hamilton Inlet banks, 250 miles off the coast of Labrador, one billion pounds of fish were taken 25 per cent of it by the Soviet Union. The largest fishing plant in my area, the Twillingate plant, processed over 12 million pounds that year. The fish taken at Hamilton Banks would have been sufficient to keep this plant operating for 100 years.

This might give hon. members an idea of the extent of the rape of our resources by some nations. In 1964, at the Twillingate plant 94 per cent of all fish taken was the traditional cod. Everybody thought this species was in such abundance that there was no possibility of its becoming extinct. In 1970, it is estimated that 30 per cent of the processed fish will be cod. This gives a dramatic indication of the situation in the cod fishery especially when one remembers it was possible to catch a basketful by dropping a basket over the side of the boat.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House agree that the hon. member be permitted to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I should like to express my appreciation to hon. members for being permitted to continue for a few moments. I was speaking of the international fishery. In 1958, the International Conference on the Law of the Sea reached agreement that a coastal state, which Canada is, had the right to unilaterally impose a measure of management and conservation in the seas adjacent to its territorial seas six months after failing to receive international agreement on conservation measures.

I hope I have made myself clear. In 1958, the International Conference on the Law of the Sea said to Canada that it could unilaterally impose measures in respect of the waters adjacent to its territorial seas, which by definition means the continental shelf, if it could not reach international agreement. We do not even go that far in our plea: we merely ask that Canada take the lead in attempting to obtain international agreement. We can worry about what moves we make after that, because I understand that nations, including the Soviet Union, are very concerned about the amount of capital investment in fisheries and their productivity, which is about one-quarter of what it was five years ago even though the average effort is twice what it was five years ago.

The cod catch in the Newfoundland fishery this year will be 25 per cent less than what it was two years ago. So, Mr. Speaker, I plead with the members of this House and the government of Canada to immediately convene an international conference of the fisheries of Canada which would not get bogged down in matters of pollution, military weapons' discharge, the rights of nations in the air above the seas, oil exploration and all the other ramifications of Law of the Sea conferences.

I am asking that Canada take the initiative in respect of a conference on the Law of the Sea to see whether a little encouragement can be given to British Columbia, eastern Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland—provinces directly affected by the imminent danger of depletion of our great fisheries resources. As a Canadian, I do not think this is too much to ask. Perhaps this plea will fall on deaf ears. If it should fall on deaf ears, the government of this nation will have to assume a great deal of responsibility for the further deterioration of law and order in this country.

[Mr. Lundrigan.]

I wish now to deviate from the subject of fisheries and proceed to another aspect of our economy. As an educator, I believe it is time Canada got off its constitutional high-horse and started paying attention to educational problems, in Canada. I believe the time has come when education must be considered more than a provincial problem. It can remain a provincial responsibility so far as curricula and the basic aims and objectives of our educational systems are concerned. But the government of Canada should take the initiative in becoming involved in the business of developing human resources in all parts of Canada.

In a day and age when there is great mobility of people in Canada, it is time we had more unification in our educational system throughout the nation. I am not speaking of curricula. One of my fundamental beliefs is that Canada must reform its manpower policy in particular, to see what we can do in respect of tens of thousands of Canadians who have reached middle-age and upper middle-age and are in the position where they have no prospects for the future.

I would be the first to admit that I have no answer, but I believe there should be a tremendous review of our manpower policy. In my province there are thousands of people who have never had the opportunity to gain an education. I am sure other hon. members have the same situation in their areas. Many people had to leave school at an early age. A favourite expression in my province is that they were dragged out of school and put in a fishing boat. In our Newfoundland culture the language sometimes is a lot richer than that which I have just used.

People who have had little schooling deserve consideration. I imagine there are many such people in the province of Quebec. I have only studied the situation in Quebec, having been there only 15 or 20 times. Therefore, I cannot pretend to have any knowledge of the situation there. But I imagine that Quebec, with its large rural community outside Montreal, has a tremendous number of men who have never had a chance to receive much education and who are out of tune with the technological society in which we are living.

It seems to me that the trade schools which are available today to some people who leave high school are not adequate to teach them to deal with the kinds of problems to which we have been referring. There have been situations this year in Canada—I will not be parochial by mentioning Newfoundland only—where out of hundreds of people who have applied to enter trade schools, only some have been accepted. I am referring to a situation where 700 people applied and only 200 openings were available. As a consequence, those who got in were high school graduates. Therefore, the people I am referring to, many of whom have only grade 4 or 5 education, or even less, have had no chance. Unless we are prepared to retire Canadians at the age of 45, we should assume some responsibility for trying to make their lives constructive, which I am sure is their aspiration.

I have one last point to make on this topic. It could take me an hour, but since time does not permit me to speak that long I hope to hear someone develop it further. Basically, we are living more and more in a welfare state. I spent hours and hours as a small boy listening to my father and grandfather tell stories in the wintertime about some of their achievements, the odds they overcame and the hard work they did.

They spoke about an age when hard work was held in the highest esteem. They spoke about a period when the protestant ethic, which has nothing to do with religion, basically meant that achievement came through hard work. This seems to be what Newfoundlanders, at least, have cherished throughout the years. You did things by the sweat of the brow. The person who worked the hardest and the longest hours, and who had the most gumption and "get up and go", was held in high esteem.

Our generation of Canadians is responsible for deterioration in the Canadian society because of the emphasis in another direction. I firmly believe that the whole welfare system must be reviewed. I know I am treading on thin ice and I know I am saying something that is not the political thing to say. I know there are people in my own riding who will feel I am on touchy ground, and I know there are some damn lazy Canadians who will think I am out of order. The fact remains that as representatives of the people of Canada we can no longer reward lack of initiative, because we have a responsibility to provide a system wherein people can succeed through their own initiative.

I heard the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) tell the House a couple of days ago about a man 70 years old who was forced to pay back over $200 that he had earned through selling newspapers because government regulations would not permit him to receive his pension and still earn that kind of money. I know of many people in the same situation. Right now I am trying to draft three letters to people who are receiving war veterans allowance, because of their contribution to society in days gone by, and have to give up their employment because if their annual earnings exceed $1,200 they will have to pay back the difference to the government.

I could speak at length on the subject of welfare and Canadians who are not allowed to obtain employment to supplement their income. I have heard of a man who is 62 years old and cannot provide food for his family. He has little education. He owns a small boat 18 or 20 feet long, and not too far off the coast he can catch 15 or 20 quintals of fish, which are worth $400 or $500. The welfare department told him that this year he is allowed to earn only $20 over and above what he is receiving in welfare and anything beyond that will have to be paid back. That is the declared policy of the department of welfare in the province of Newfoundland—and 50 per cent of this welfare is paid through the Canada Assistance Act. I will not go into the details of the Canada Assistance Act, but a time will come very shortly when, if we do not overhaul drastically the welfare system in this nation so that we give people the opportunity to earn a living and the incentive to do so, we will be heading for a lot more trouble than we have had in the last week.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—Post Office—Termination of legal role of Minister of Communications as head of department; the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg)—Agriculture—Pesticides—DDD—Reason for one year extension on use-notification of changes; the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis)—The Canadian economy—Steinberg wage increases—Clarification by chairman of Prices and Incomes Commission of effect on prices.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa-West): Mr. Speaker, I would like first of all to congratulate the movers of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne (Mr. Trudel and Mr. Douglas). They spoke well to the House. We were pleased to listen to them because they are certainly very capable.

[English]

This debate, which is unique in my experience in the House, has unfortunately been interrupted by events of a most tragic nature. The special debate on the application of the War Measures Act which took place on Friday and Saturday in the House was an example of a democratic Parliament at its best. Without any question, the full range of views was explored in the House, the implications of what we are doing were solemnly discussed and the measure of unanimity that was achieved as an expression of the wish of the people of Canada is a tribute to members of this House.

Without any question, these are historic days. We hope they have not left such a mark on the character of our institutions that this kind of thing will stay with us. We trust that it will be possible for the present emergency to be adequately dealt with at the earliest possible date, so that the necessary measures are carried out to dispose of the threat to our institutions.

I wish to raise two major subjects in the discussion today, one of which has given me concern for some time. I shall talk about the growth of our Crown corporations and the issue of public accountability that is involved. They have a special application in the constituency of Ottawa West which I have the honour to represent in the House. On referring to the Canada Year Book, 1969 edition, I note that the section beginning at page 108 describes the Crown corporations that have been instituted in Canada. The Financial Administration Act, part 8, which was enacted in 1951 attempts to define and classify these various agencies, corporations and miscellaneous bodies. First it describes departmental corporations, which are supposed to be as follows:

A departmental corporation ... that is a servant or agent of Her Majesty in right of Canada and is responsible for administrative, supervisory or regulatory services of a governmental nature.

The second major classification, which I have great difficulty in distinguishing, is the so-called agency corporation which is defined as follows:

—an agent of Her Majesty in right of Canada and is responsible for the management of trading or service operations on a quasi-commercial basis or for the management of procurement, construction or disposal activities on behalf of Her Majesty in right of Canada.

This second group, which gives me the greatest concern, includes such agencies as Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, the National Capital Commission, the National Harbours Board, and so on. The third group of Crown corporations consists of proprietary corporations. Again I quote:

A proprietary corporation is defined as a Crown corporation that (1) is responsible for the management of lending or financial operations, or for the management of commercial or industrial operations involving the production of or dealing in goods and the supplying of services to the public, and (2) is ordinarily required to conduct its operations without parliamentary appropriations.

Among this latter group are Air Canada, Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, Cape Breton Development Corporation, and so on. It is my contention, Mr. Speaker, that there is a major problem in public administration which has developed as the result of the extensive growth of employment in this sector. There is a problem in accountability by the Crown corporations to the elected representatives of the people. There is a problem in adequate review of their policies, programs, and in many cases their budgets. There is finally, in my opinion, a development which gives me the greatest concern—the type of agency or corporation that considers it is responsible to no one and which in fact, in my opinion, has come dangerously close to committing contempt of Parliament.

Crown corporations, Mr. Speaker, are not exactly small fry. Again according to the Canada Year Book, page 117, total federal government employment on March 31, 1968, comprised 369,354 persons. Employment in Crown corporations, agencies and miscellaneous bodies at the same date comprised 210,505 persons. In other words, the sector which I feel is not subject to adequate, shall we say, supervision by elected representatives is now substantially approaching in magnitude—payrolls or any other way you want to measure it—the regular public service of Canada.

In addition to the Crown corporations we have two or three special cases. For example, Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General is responsible only to Parliament itself. I suppose that members of his staff would be similarly regarded. We all know that the Parliamentary Library, Parliamentary counsel, people who are employed on Parliament Hill under the direction of Mr. Speaker, again are responsible to Parliament in a very broad sense and not to any minister.

We recognize the need for the independence of the Auditor General. But Parliament in its wisdom has a Standing Committee dealing with the Auditor General. The Standing Committee perhaps does its work well, perhaps not so well. Sometimes it does it more conscientiously than others. Sometimes its meetings are more frequent than at other times. But it is a Standing Committee of this House.

The Chairman of that Standing Committee is not one who sits on the government side of the House. He sits on the opposition side, thereby to guarantee greater impartiality in the conduct of its proceedings and scrupulous concern for review of the report of the Auditor General, which must be one of the first concerns of every member of the House. But it may come as something of a surprise to hon. members to learn the Public Service Commission, which claims that it is in precisely the same status in relation to Parliament as is the Auditor General, reports through a minister, not to a minister, and in this case the minister is the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier).

I have been told by a member of the Public Service Commission that their view is that the minister is something of a post office. They drop their report with him and he gets it over to Parliament without doing anything to it, without entering into the policy, without in any way bringing about the type of ministerial supervision which is the normal part of governmental activity.

Mr. Nesbitt: It's a nice theory, anyway.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, an hon. member on the other side said something which I am sorry I did not hear. If he cares to rise I would be prepared to answer a question.

Mr. Nesbitt: I said it was a nice theory, anyway.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. member that according to the Standing Orders, if he wishes to ask a question he must do it from his seat.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, I am not really in disagreement with the interjection of the hon. member. We have a position here where a particular body, in this case the Public Service Commission—about which I want to say a great deal more—takes the view that its activity is an activity somewhat parallel to that of the Auditor General. I noted, for example, that this spring there was a very interesting session before one of the parliamentary committees. The head of the Public Service Commission appeared before it and pointed out that according to the statute the Public Service Commission did the recruiting for the Auditor General. This is one independent agency recruiting for another independent agency. The statute so requires, and the Auditor General had his own views as to whether he was being well served in regard to recruiting.

It seems to me that the result of this situation should be to call the attention of hon. members of this House to a very basic question: What is the structure of administration? Who reports to whom? Should we not, as a very minimum, have a Standing Committee of this House to review the work of the Public Service Commission, just as there is a Standing Committee of the House to review the work of the Auditor General?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Francis: If the position of the Public Service Commission—and I suspect a good case in law can be made for this—is that it should report directly to Parliament to ensure the protection of the merit principle in the selection, promotion and appointment of public servants, is there not some obligation on the members of this House to provide a little more by way of review of the operations of this body than a 15-minute appearance once per year before the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee? The problems in the growth of the Public Service are well recognized. The problems in the growth of Crown corporations and miscellaneous agencies have not been recognized to the same degree.

I think that anyone looking at the record will agree, for example, that what has been said before the committee of the other place reviewing science policy is most revealing. A tremendous commitment of public funds has been made in the atomic energy field without adequate review by parliamentary process. The amount of money that has been spent in the name of Canada for the CANDU reactor is a commitment that may yet turn out to be a wise one. But on the basis of the evidence presented to the Senate Committee on Science Policy, it might have, shall we say, benefited from legislative review of a more careful nature than at present is extended to this whole sector of Crown corporations. The commitment here is not in millions of dollars, or tens of millions of dollars; it is in hundreds of millions of dollars. The problem is not only lack of review; it is lack of uniformity of standard, lack of a logical, coherent structure.

At one time, Mr. Speaker, I had the honour to be the national president of an organization of public servants. We attempted to organize public employees in the Crown Corporation sector. It was quite revealing to see the lack of uniformity of personnel policies and selection policies. There was a great variation in policy with regard to collective bargaining. When a Crown corporation received its charter through an act of Parliament and gained the right to recruit, select, promote and operate its own budget, it was more than just a symbol of status.

With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I think that the hiring freedom which has been given the Company of Young Canadians should be studied. Without any qualification, they have been given the right to hire whom they wish. Funds are provided by Parliament to do so. That privilege in such a blatant and unrestricted form has been given to very few Crown corporations, mercifully so.

All members of this House become concerned when the head of the Public Service Commission states over television that he is "not dancing to the tune of any political master". It is fine to use casual language in an exchange, especially with a little provocation from a journalist, but when the head of the Public Service Commission further states that a solemn undertaking given by a former Prime Minister and repeated by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is such that he does not think he can implement it, it is indeed a matter of concern. He used a television program to tell the nation that those are his views concerning the statements of two Prime Ministers of this country. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, this is dangerously close to contempt of Parliament. This kind of thing cannot be permitted to continue.

The head of the National Capital Commission was quoted in the press as saying that he thinks he might move the Prime Minister away from Harrington Lake. I do not know if that is an accurate quotation but it is what was printed. Such a statement is dangerously close to contempt of the executive branch, if not the legislative branch of Parliament.

Most of us have thought about this subject to some degree. It has been said that it is unfortunate there has to be the Crown corporation device for certain things. Polymer Corporation is conspicuously cited as a successful example. Few of us want to be negative in our criticism. We do not want to be accused of destroying what others have built. All hon. members have an obligation to look at what has happened to the over 200,000 people engaged in the sector of Crown corporations. I regret that the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) is not in his seat at this time, but no one can be expected to be here all the time. This member has placed 38 private member's bills before the House, all of which would have the effect of putting a member of the House on the board of directors of one or more Crown corporations.

I commend the hon. member for Cochrane for two reasons. First, he is now focusing attention on the fact that we need reform in respect of private members' bills. Each member of this House should be given a quota of possibly two which would be placed in the draw. When a member submits 42 private member's bills, the whole process becomes ludicrous. What would happen if 264 members each submitted 40 bills? We deal with only 50 in the course of a session. It would be similar to a reward in a lottery if a bill of a private member were dealt with in the session.

A simple reform of the rules is an obvious need. I hope we will have the co-operation of a particular group in this House which prides itself on private members' bills. This group has been responsible for far more bills than any other, despite their limited number of M.P's. I hope the members of this group will join with us in seeking a reform of the rules with regard to the number of private members' bills to be submitted in one session. If the hon. member for Cochrane had this in mind, it is worthy. It draws attention to this situation. I know the proposal to have members of Parliament on the boards of directors of Crown corporations will be resisted, not the least of which resistance will come from the corporations concerned. That can be taken for granted. The force of inertia will be one of the things. It will also be resisted by those who do not think any new ideas have a possibility of working.

It has been said that the role of a private member is not clear if he is placed on a board of directors. He would be either snowed under by the establishment or a thorn in the flesh of somebody. The possibility that it would be useful or constructive has not come through to them. In the province of Ontario this device has been used effectively. I have spoken to a number of members from both sides of the House and to a number of members who serve on the boards of such corporations. It is my personal opinion that it is a useful device and creates a bridge between the elected representatives of Parliament and the Crown corporations. It manages to achieve a degree of autonomy that is not inconsistent with the electoral process.

Some members say the relationship of the private member to the government would be anomalous. They say the member would be in an impossible position, his duties would be too great, and so on. Those who say this ignore the experience in the province of Ontario which should be carefully examined. Hon. members will possibly have 38 opportunities to examine whether members should be on the boards of directors of 38 Crown corporations which have been enumerated. I hope hon. members will ask what devices are available to Parliament to bring in a greater degree of accountability of the Crown corporation sector to this place.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the Chair. The sitting will resume at eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, before the House rose at six o'clock I was talking about the problem of public accountability of that sector of the public service generally called Crown corporations and agencies. I pointed out that over 200,000 persons are employed in that sector; that there are immense variations in the degree of accountability to Parliament for the activities of the sector with respect to personnel policies, hiring and promotion rights and collective bargaining policies.

I pointed out, too, Mr. Speaker, that some Crown corporations and agencies have now developed to the point where, in effect, there is little if any supervision of what they are doing by the elected Members of Parliament. I pointed out, for example, the problem in the science sector. The Senate Committee on Science Policy has pointed out that in one case hundreds of millions of dollars were spent without any tight or adequate review of priorities or national objectives.

I also pointed out my concern that the head of a Crown corporation says he does not report to the minister, but that through the minister he reports directly to Parliament—thus claiming a status, and I think with good legal basis, similar to that enjoyed by the Auditor General. The difference in the case of the Auditor General is that there is a Standing Committee of this House to review his activities. In the case of the head of the Public Service Commission there is no comparable arrangement for review.

I was pointing out, too, that the same kind of problem seems to have developed in regard to the National Capital Commission. I note that the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Andras) who is designated as the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs was recently made responsible for this sector. I am confident that one of the things he will do is to review the program of the National Capital Commission. Those of us who have followed its activities have been pleased with the fresh ideas, vigour and renewed emphasis which have come as a result of the appointments in the past year. We look forward to action on a new bridge to Hull, which I am sure will be welcomed by all people in the area. We know it is very much needed.

We are only asking that there be adequate consultation with the municipal authorities on both sides of the river which will have the responsibility for guaranteeing the access points and approaches. This involves a very substantial project when one considers the planning which has taken place over a number of years and the reports, the making of which the federal government has participated in and consented to, of previous years. We have now seen the recognition that changes are necessary. I think there is a great deal of merit in the proposals. We ask only that there be adequate and prior consultation in an orderly way.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the suggestion which has been endorsed at other times and places, namely, that there should be a joint committee of this House and the other place to review the work of the National Capital Commission in this area, will be considered by the government at an early date. I sincerely hope, as the member representing Ottawa West, that among the items which will be profitably considered by such a committee will be an examination of the recommendations of volume V of the report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism, in which some very serious charges were made concerning the administration of the national capital, the city of Ottawa.

I hope that in such a way the recommendations will be examined and that the city and other groups which feel they have been unjustifiably attacked in the report—one which is altogether different in tone from previous reports—will have their say, so that these administrations will have a forum in which they can reply to the charges which have been levelled against them.

I can see nothing but good coming from the creation of a forum in which this matter could be weighed and the necessary recommendations made by an all-party committee, representing all parts of Canada, to this House to do what it considers right and proper in our capital. I would be the first to say, Mr. Speaker, that in this respect the record of the city of Ottawa has not been as good as it should have been. This does not mean I am prepared to accept a number of the statements made in the report, and I would welcome an opportunity to lay the record before members of this House for close examination.

I hope such a committee could look at the whole question of pollution in the national capital region. The pollution of the air is painfully evident in the area when the wind blows from the east and the mill down at Thurso is changing its process; the sulphuric fumes are breathed by all those in this city when the atmospheric conditions are unfavourable.

The pollution of our waters is scandalous. The policy of the federal authority in regard to assistance in the creation of sewage treatment plants in this area needs strengthening. The time for that is long overdue. One of the things I would welcome at an early date is assistance which would help la communauté Outaouaise to develop a sewage treatment plant. I hope the city of Ottawa will carry its service beyond that of primary treatment, which is grossly inadequate. Secondary and other treatment must be provided.

Mr. Speaker, the agenda for such a committee could be long and very fruitful. I would hope such a committee could tackle its responsibilities in keeping with the sense which we all feel, that the national capital belongs to all of Canada, not just to the people who live in it.

Mr. Speaker: I have no intention of rushing the hon. member—he still has about 45 seconds left—but I would bring to his attention that the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. Thomson) wishes to ask a question, if the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) will accept it.

Mr. Francis: I will be glad to do so.

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would tell us whether he feels the National Capital Commission should move the E. B. Eddy plant out of the Ottawa-Hull environment into another locality.

Mr. Francis: That is a very complicated issue and I cannot give an off-the-cuff answer. Two thousand jobs are at stake. I think a program for the relocation of its facility has to be undertaken, but nothing can be done abruptly; one cannot abruptly terminate so many jobs. But I think we have an obligation to clean up this corruption and give the company notice of the kind of planning necessary to eliminate pollution.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): In my opening words, Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply. As a member of the Finance Committee I got to know the member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel). He struck me as a very sensible fellow, one who did not pay too much attention to the strange notions on taxation which exist in the minds of his leader or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) but was inclined to follow the mainstream of Canadian thought on tax reform. I believe this will stand him in good stead when later in this Parliament we get down to the nitty-gritty of our discussions about changes in taxation.

I believe we shall get round to doing this. As some have pointed out, though, there are other areas in the Speech from the Throne we might not have an opportunity to deal with, because I suspect the schedule of this Parliament has been rewritten by events, more particularly by a shot into the head of an innocent man, Mr. Pierre Laporte. I should like to make a few comments on that matter and on the Cross kidnapping, since I knew Mr. Cross in Halifax and I suppose that when one knows victims of such senseless behaviour the message becomes all the more potent.

During the kidnapping, but before the death of Mr. Laporte I thought about presenting a notice of motion on the subject, to the effect that the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs be empowered to examine and report upon terrorist activity in Canada, and specifically to study: (1) the penalties which now exist in the Criminal Code as they relate to crimes committed by terrorists, (2) the efficacy of counter-terrorist activity, (3) the matter of compensation for victims of terrorism or their families, (4) the relationship of the Canadian terrorist movement with foreign influences, (5) the existing legislation dealing with emergency powers and to make recommendations thereon.

The events of the last couple of days have completely outstripped anything I had set forth in the resolution, though I believe that when the legislation to be brought forward is being examined, consideration will have to be given to the points I have advanced. I have spoken to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and understand the legislation will go to the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. I am a member of that committee, so there will be an opportunity for me to follow up some of my points of view.

We must not lose our perspective. This kind of terrorist activity is really like the slow emergence of an iceberg from the sea. We are witnessing a very small part of a kind of activity which is likely to grow worse as time goes by. We might as well know what we are up against, and we do not have to look far back in history to find out. The ideas we are up against here are taken from Algerian Popular Front activity, these in turn from Chairman Mao and his ideas in China, and these in turn from Mr. Lenin and his ideas in Russia.

In fact, the first real philosopher of terrorism in our time was a Russian named Nechayef. We do not have to go to ancient history; we can stay within the history of this century in our study of these baleful activities to learn exactly what we are up against. This gives us an opportunity to study the philosophy of terrorism, decide whether we have taken appropriate measures to deal with it—I suspect we have not—and whether we have to declare a set of principles upon which we shall stand. I think we have to do this.

When I say "Declare a set of principles" I am thinking of the situation which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or his colleagues would face if one of their number were picked up and held. One must decide what bartering, if any—and I hope it would be minimal—would be engaged in, so that terrorists would know in advance the kind of society they were dealing with. I believe we should also make certain, when the legislation is before us, that it is tough legislation—none of this "Ten years' imprisonment and then you go free, Mr. Murderer." I hope there will be none of that. I hope that from one end of Canada to the other people who wish to engage in terrorism will know exactly the type of revenge a thoughtful society intends to wreak upon them.

We have been soft and permissive for far too long. I suppose terrorists can be expected to think: Oh well, nothing very much is likely to happen to us or to our allies. I think we have now passed that watershed and have entered a new age, one that has to be tough. It is an age that has to assert the value of human life in a way we have not asserted it in the past when dealing with those who have taken human life. We will have to decide whether our Criminal Code measures are strong enough.

I should like to put on the record some of the proceedings before the Broadcasting Committee last year when Mr. Saulnier of Montreal made his famous appearance. I do so simply to show Canadians from coast to coast the pattern—if they have not seen it already—that has been set. My first reference is to the fourteenth report of the committee's proceedings for November 27, 1969, where Mr. Saulnier says:

> We now know that in Canada, individuals and groups are working actively to implement a plan which will carry the destruction of freedom, of our form of democratic government and, in this plan, the people's will, as expressed in the ballot-box, is excluded.

Then as reported on the same page, Mr. Saulnier says:

> The partial revelations to which I will limit myself today are but a small example of things I know and of which I have privately informed the Prime Minister of Canada a few times in the past year.

A little further on in the report is the evidence of Mr. Michel Côté, chief city attorney for Montreal, who was speaking about a document entitled "Revolutionary Strategy and Role of the Avant-garde", which was seized during police investigations in the city of Montreal. Talking about that document, Mr. Côté says that this revolutionary strategy comprises three stages. The document states that the first stage is that of bringing a radical element into spontaneous social agitation.

The second stage is the organization of the exploited classes on a vast scale and, third, the organization of the exploited classes must be brought into effect, when the time comes, with a direct view to popular insurrection which will be characterized by the armed occupation of factories, universities, schools, public services and the national territory.

A little later on in his evidence, as reported at page 17 of the report, and again quoting the document, Mr. Saulnier says:

> Since 1963, ever since the explosion of the first FLQ bombs, we have been in that first stage of the revolutionary struggle which will be pursued until agitation becomes widespread and culminates in a general political, social and economic crisis. We are now approaching this crisis very rapidly, and this has been particularly the case in the last six months.

The bottom of page 18 lists the main tasks of a revolutionary movement, which are three in number. The first is:

> —the organizing of a true popular power based on the rural, the student and the industrial class, by setting up conscious and active cells.

The second main task, again quoting the document, is:

> The ideological training, the moral training and technical training of militants.

You can well imagine, Mr. Speaker, when speaking of moral training, that in this context we are not referring to the lessons one learns in a Christian society. The third task is defined as follows:

> With regard to action, in the immediate future, we must pursue and extend action, propaganda, and permanent contestation at all levels of social life, so as to unveil, unmask, demystify and weaken further and further the gears of the system which imprisons workers and students in a strangling slavery. Excellent work has already been achieved in this field and we must continue this work.

A little further on the document contains this paragraph:

> We must not be afraid of being outside the law. We must take maximum advantage of the bourgeois democracy which grants the right to demonstrate.

In other words, they would use the rights of free speech and all the things that we in Parliament cherish very highly as their means to a particular end. One can imagine how "free" speech would be if its custodian were that villain who shot Mr. Laporte in the head. My last quotation from this volume of the minutes is at page 77, where Mr. Saulnier is again giving evidence and requesting a royal commission of inquiry. As reported on that page, he says:

> —I may add that a royal commission of inquiry would also show as an added advantage, that these activities are not necessarily limited to the province of Quebec, but that they extend perhaps over all of the Canadian territory.

We have had some indication during the last few days that it can reach as far as our most westerly province.

Then comes this exchange between Mr. Saulnier and Mr. Sheppard, our counsel, who asked:

[Translation]

Do you have, without disclosing secrets, some indications on which to base that statement? It is a problem ...

Mr. Saulnier: Yes.

Mr. Sheppard: ... which is not peculiar to Quebec?

Mr. Saulnier: It is not peculiar to Quebec.

[English]

I now turn to the report for the next day's proceedings and make reference to a question I asked Mr. Saulnier about the costs being incurred by the citizens of Montreal, who up to that time had pretty well borne the brunt of the battle against terrorism, or a disproportionate load of the battle. The rest of us were thinking that perhaps it was a Montreal problem only, with no relevance to the rest of Canada. As reported at page 26, I asked Mr. Saulnier this question:

What is the estimated cost in the Montreal budget of the increased expenditures due to the escalation of your war on subversion?

Mr. Saulnier: It is in the order of millions of dollars. I could not quote a figure right now. We will know for sure when we come up with our annual financial statement.

Then I asked:

Have you had to add many more bodies to the Montreal police force as a result of this situation you are facing?

Mr. Saulnier: We increased the number of men on the force, but in many cases, if not in most cases, we had to divert a substantial number from other duties.

Finally, I refer to the conclusion of the Broadcasting Committee with regard to all this evidence, as set forth at page 9 of the sixteenth volume of the minutes. Part of the conclusion is as follows:

In view of the necessarily limited amount of evidence presented to your committee, and in view of the restrictions imposed on your committee's inquiry by its terms of reference, Your committee suggests, with respect, that Mr. Saulnier's evidence and representations be given further study and consideration by the appropriate ministers of the Crown.

I hope that was the case, and I hope we will find out exactly how effective that study was when we deal with the new legislation that is to come before us. I said that I suspected the program set out in the Throne Speech for this session of Parliament would undergo pretty severe alteration as the result of the murder of Mr. Laporte. Obviously, we will have to concern ourselves with emergency legislation, that is, legislation dealing with emergency situations such as are created by reason of subversion in our time.

Parts of the Throne Speech which we will consider include major items that will occupy our attention. The idea of a ministry of urban affairs appeals to me. I for one think the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Andras) responsible for housing is an earnest fellow and makes this a full-time job. I cannot for the life of me see why he has to be penalized to the extent of thousands of dollars because he does not hold a portfolio. Other members of the cabinet do not have to work any harder but they have portfolios. This is a distinction I would be glad to see removed. Apart from that very human consideration, since he has to raise a family on the money he takes home from Parliament—just as I do; and we both know it is inadequate—the guts of the matter is whether we will create better housing legislation as a result of the measures we pass.

I suggest there are several areas that must be tackled if we are to have a better housing program. We cannot solve the problems of people earning $5,000 or less until we get into the subsidy field for rental, which we now have in the case of public housing, and the subsidy field in respect of ownership. That may strike one as a very revolutionary idea, but I do not see why we cannot do it through a greater use of technique. This system is used to an extent in Ontario and, I think, in British Columbia where there is forgiveness in respect of some mortgage principal payments if the owner who is being helped stays in his house for a specified period of time. I think that is a good, practical way of getting into this field, and it should be done more often.

I would extend that principle to those now living in public housing, giving them the opportunity to get out therefrom—even if it means massive subsidies—if they can show responsibility in dealing with what would be their own property. There should be more incentives along the line of the so-called Andras formula by which people in public housing can retain more of the extra money they earn in order to buy their own property. Serious consideration must be given to cutting down the cost of housing. This could be done in several directions. Technical ones commend themselves, but the removal of the sales tax on building materials is important.

The new premier of Nova Scotia says he will get rid of this tax at the provincial level, and he thinks his federal friends will listen to him. I hope he can put that feather in his cap, though we have tried here by pointing out over and over again that the sales tax adds thousands of dollars to the cost of a home. Those thousands of dollars break the back of many Canadians before they even get to the position of owning their own home. They know financially it will always be beyond their reach.

Then, sir, undoubtedly we will be dealing with taxation and the report of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) called the suggestions "proposals." I do not know in what sense the Prime Minister used the word "proposals" because I have not heard the right hon. gentleman make the proposals that one normally makes. In that regard the House of Commons committee provided a most useful base for an approach to taxation. The committee of the other place also had its innings in regard to taxation and found just about everything wrong with the White Paper or the proposals. That committee is a long way removed from accountability to the people, but a committee of this place is accountable.

Tax reform is never a very pleasant topic to deal with, and it might even seem strange that a member of the opposition should be waxing eloquent about it while inviting others to join and do as we do, put themselves under the headsman's axe. The point is that for nine years tax reform has been discussed in Canada, by a royal commission and by the government. The white paper has been presented and the people have had an opportunity to deal with it. Considerable concern is arising because four or five different schools of thought have emerged on major issues. The senior government makes its decision, brings it in and leaves it to the people to suggest improvements. I would be happy if the Minister of Finance would not wait until spring but would do it now. The sooner certain issues are dealt with so the people know where they are, the better will be our economic climate. Finally, Sir, on the general topics that will engage this Parliament I hope that veterans legislation will be introduced at an early stage and that we will have an indication of the proposals of the government in the fields of income and social security.

I should like now to turn to several topics of particular interest to Halifax-East Hants. I will have an opportunity later to speak in greater detail about the Shubenacadie River crossing, because in the luck of the draw I think my notice takes position No. 15. Because the discussion is now going on between the government of Nova Scotia and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, I should like to put in my oar for the Shubenacadie River crossing, which I think will do very much for northern and western Nova Scotia. The government of Nova Scotia, on Thursday, August 27, approved it in principle, that is, to include it in proposals now being studied by the federal government for a five-year plan. I am confident that the government of Nova Scotia will want to retain this crossing as part of its program.

In correspondence with the federal minister I noted that truck traffic into and out of the Annapolis Valley, to the east, is increasing, and because transport trucks are becoming heavier and heavier either bridges on existing routes will have to be improved or the crossing will have to be provided. There was evidence from the Annapolis Valley spokesmen, who are very knowledgeable about transport, that the crossing would indeed be a great boon to the agricultural interests in the Annapolis Valley.

Another point I made was that Valley agriculture would benefit because of a shorter haul to the Truro area. If a causeway were decided upon, a great inland freshwater lake would develop, thus providing a logical northern playland for metropolitan Halifax-Dartmouth as well as an extension of the metropolitan growth centre. Another argument I used was that Fundy tidal power will be developed. In light of hundreds of millions of dollars of construction work, no doubt important savings would be made by having a shorter link with Truro. Yet another argument was that there would be educational and health benefits for the people on the west side of the Shubenacadie River whose natural capital is Truro. I also suggested that the crossing is a logical link in a Fundy Trail.

I will have an opportunity to pursue this point in a couple of weeks time; my resolution will provide the vehicle. I thought I would mention it now just to note that even with the change of government in Nova Scotia, that crossing has to be kept in mind by the federal government or I will be haunting both the federal government and the provincial government about it.

I should also mention that the time has come for a northwest arm bridge for the city of Halifax. I was stuck in a traffic jam the other day which could have been avoided had a bridge been in existence. It reminded me that sometimes conditions become so intolerable that strange voting patterns may develop. If I had not already voted on that day, I think I would have wreaked my vengeance on somebody for there being no northwest arm bridge, since I felt so keenly about it. People believe that transportation in the Halifax-Dartmouth area must be improved. That is one method.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): How did you vote?

Mr. McCleave: I also suggest that when the Department of the Regional Economic Expansion commences its long-range plan for the metropolitan area of Halifax-Dartmouth, the most obvious way in which Halifax could become a super city, a real metropolis of, say, three-quarters of a million or one million people, would be the redevelopment and relocation of the city watershed. The watershed now is like a plug in the neck of a bottle; all the development goes out one side of the plug or out the other side of the plug, but does not go straight through the watershed. Unless a decision is made by all levels of government to relocate the waters bed so that land may be used as judiciously as possible for housing and industry, Halifax will simply not realize its potential.

Mr. Speaker, I am left with two topics and about one and a half minutes, although some of my time may have been cut into by an exchange involving the previous speaker. I will make one point and leave the other for a later date. It concerns containerization development as it affects Halifax. This is a noble idea and I have no quarrel with it. The difficulty, however, is that the stevedores and longshoremen are being hurt because the amount of labour associated with containerization is very small indeed.

I promised the waterfront workers I would find out what the federal government could do for them. I find that the following shipments of food will be made from Halifax. There will be 500 metric tons of canned fish for South Viet Nam. We are a long way from South Viet Nam, but we are glad to be handling canned fish. That shipment is for October. In November, February and May there are to be three shipments of 500 metric tons each of canned fish for Nigeria. From December 1 to March 31 there are to be 60,000 metric tons of wheat for Turkey. This shipment may go to Saint John rather than Halifax. Four shipments of 300 metric tons of food for Saigon are being arranged for November, February and August. If I did not have to gallop breathlessly down the home stretch I would have time to explain how people are hurt rather badly by the technological age but I shall, hopefully, do this on another occasion.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel) and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas).

Today, of course, is a sad day in the history of this country, just as the last few days have been. Before beginning my remarks in connection with the Speech from the Throne, I think it is only fitting that I should say a few words about Mr. Pierre Laporte. I believe all Canadians owe him a great deal because in a very special way he gave his life in order to protect the freedom and rights of all people in Canada. I think we owe him a great debt. I hope that tomorrow, on the day of his funeral, all Canadians will take the opportunity to express our debt of gratitude to him and to his family. I wish also to express my most sincere sorrow to Mrs. Laporte and her family.

The tragic events of the last few days I think remind all of us that law is the basis of democracy. Today this point is often forgotten. Without a society based upon law we must have the other alternative, a society based upon people. A society based upon people and upon their whims and feelings from time to time is really a society based upon tyranny, because if the person in charge should not be a man of goodwill, or even if he should be, we are subject to the caprice of his views and feelings.

We in this chamber and, I hope, all Canadians realize the very purpose of a democratic society is to formulate and pronounce laws for the benefit and common advantage of all people. Unless we abide by and have some respect for these laws, society itself is in great peril. It is true that all of us in a democratic society have the right at any time to advocate changes in our laws and adjustments to those laws so that they may constantly be up to date and improved and thereby we may have a better, freer society.

We must always remember, however, that untrammelled freedom is not freedom at all. Law, by its very nature, is restrictive in one way or another. There is law such as the criminal law which involves our following norms of conduct which are not acceptable to the whole society and which certainly, by its nature, is restrictive. Even permissive laws, or laws which would grant benefits of some kind to people, impose obligations. In such cases it is necessary that the people fill out forms to the letter of the law in order to comply. This breeds red tapes, bureaucracy and all kinds of unpleasant things. But there really is no alternative. We must have a society based upon laws.

To many people in our society, laws on the surface appear to be a burden of oppression. I believe that unless people in a democratic society have a strong, effective voice in the formation of those laws they can be interpreted as oppressive measures. Participation of the people in a democracy is not a political gimmick; it is a necessity.

If we do not allow people to become more and more deeply involved in the issues of this House, then in the long run we will create conditions which cause anarchy. We must find a way to reach the people of our country and give them a genuine hand to assist us in the operations of Parliament, otherwise our system will not and cannot survive. That was not true in days gone by, but in our age of rising expectations Canadians are more sophisticated and demand more. We also owe them more. We must allow them an effective means of communicating with us, so there will be an effective two-way street between we whom they look upon as the governors, as it were, and those who elect us to office.

Alienation between the governed and government has been increasing at an alarming rate in the last few years. Consider for a moment the attitude of many people in this country. I am not saying that they are wrong; I am saying that the attitudes which I will outline should warn us that there is an urgent need for something to be done. First of all, "politics" is a bad word, not only in Canada but perhaps throughout the western world. Why is it a bad word? Why is politics not an honourable profession? Surely it really is, but why is it not viewed as such by the people in the street, those who vote us into office? Far too many believe that politicians are dishonest and are only out for personal gain. Far too many of them feel that politicians do not really care, that we are not interested in anything outside this chamber, that there is not much point in communicating with us because we will not do anything about it anyway.

I believe that in our homes and in our schools this attitude is indirectly and unconsciously fostered. I think it is not uncommon to find parents—I know this is true because I have done it myself and I am sure all of us, if we are honest, have done it at one time or another—talking about local provincial or federal politician and saying, "Ah, he does not care." We so often imply a great disrespect for people who are trying to serve the public.

Is it any wonder that parents who have done this year in and year out in a very subtle and unconscious way find their children take their words quite seriously and grow up to have no respect at all for the institutions that we all know are the basis of everything good in this country? In this time when we have such unrest in the country, I think people should sit back and reflect upon the example that we set for each other and our own children.

I have spoken in nearly all the schools in my riding and I have been shocked and amazed at the lack of understanding students have of what goes on in this country. But more than that, I am absolutely astounded that those whose very profession it is to teach political science often know very little more than the pupils they teach. It is amazing to me that so many people in our federal society have no realization of the distinction between the powers of the municipal, provincial and federal governments. How can anybody vote intelligently if they do not know who is responsible for what? It is not very useful to go across this country speaking about federalism when no one knows what it is. It is obvious that some people do, but there are far too many who do not. We have to do something positive to change this situation.

I think, also, that in our schools and on our radio and television broadcasts there is a tendency to oversimplify very difficult problems, such as pollution. I have been to schools where people cannot understand why we do not immediately outlaw cars because they pollute the air, or why we do not outlaw anyone who puts any kind of sewage into the Great Lakes.

An hon. Member: Good idea.

Mr. Cafik: It is a good idea. But if you did not think of all the consequences of such action you would find yourself standing up to your forehead in the very thing you want to prevent. So we have to do something, and these are urgent problems. But it does not really help anyone if we speak to a group of little kids and tell them these things can be solved tomorrow morning, and show them photographs of sewage running into the Great Lakes instead of discussing all the relevant problems surrounding pollution. They want us to do away with pollution and do away with cars, and yet unemployment is too high. If we did these things in the way they have in mind, probably the vast majority of people in North America would be out of work. I think that it does not really serve any useful purpose to frustrate our youth by giving them half-baked answers to very complicated issues, and I think it is doing them a disservice to try to do so.

I think, also, that one of the causes of the difficulty—I am not speaking of the difficulties that we are having with the FLQ, but these are all things as lead up to the condition that makes it possible—is that we as politicians are far too political. I think that sometimes, if not all the time, we should put this country and its unity ahead of political ambition or political expediency. Far too often I have seen, as I am sure we all have, people stand up on political platforms and say, "What has my opponent ever done for Canada?" or they have said, "The two old parties have never done anything".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: Or they have said, "The NDP are a bunch of communists". This is not what we should say. Let us be responsible and talk about the things that they really are. If we keep knocking down our neighbour and our fellow politician, surely we are only causing a condition of animosity within our society. Perhaps we think these things are humorous or are not important. I do not believe any one of us has not gone campaigning, knocked on doors and tried to explain who he was, and then run into the odd person who seems to be motivated more by hate and distrust than anything else because he belongs to a different party.

They say, "You are no good. Only the NDP are any good," or if they are Liberals they say the Conservatives are no good, or whatever it may be. I do not think we are beyond blame for this condition, and I do not think it is a very useful attitude or a very useful feeling to foster and spread throughout Canada. Something has to be done to create proper conditions for the development of national unity rather than national disunity.

In an age of mass communications I submit that no democracy can survive unless these tools are used, not for political or partisan purposes but to inform and involve our people in the democratic process. In this field we have failed miserably.

I believe that Members of Parliament should be given the facilities and the means to truly involve the people within their areas. Unless we do, one cannot blame people for feeling alienated from us and from everything we represent. To achieve this end I believe that every Member of Parliament, certainly in the federal House and perhaps in provincial Houses, should have an office in his own riding, paid for by the government of Canada or by the government of that province, so they could communicate with the people they represent. I do not think the cost would be very great, because there are many public buildings in every riding and I believe they should be made available to those who represent the people, so they may represent them more effectively and learn their views and feelings regardless of their political persuasion.

I also believe that Members of Parliament should be given adequate staff to carry out their work in participatory democracy. I remember saying about a year and a half ago that if the people of my riding participated any more, I would have to shovel it out the window.

An hon. Member: What?

Mr. Cafik: I had a great many letters coming into my office because I encouraged people to write and let me know their views. But there was so much mail that I could not possibly do anything with it when I got it. When you say that you want participation, you are doing a disservice if you do not supply facilities to members of this House so they may do something with the participation when it arrives.

I believe we ought to have proper, adequate staff and quarters in these buildings so that we can deal with involvement by the people in our riding. In addition, we must have two-way communication with our ridings. We all know how hopeless are the facilities in that regard. From the House of Commons we can telephone to our ridings, but if a member happens to be in his riding—where he should be from time to time, if not each weekend—he cannot communicate with the people except out of his own pocket; he has to pay for these calls himself. I do not mind, but many people who become members of this House cannot afford it. I would like to give an example of this. Last Easter weekend I was in my riding and had a telephone call from a person who said that his daughter was in jail. I will not name the place because the people involved may read this speech. The daughter was in jail in the United States. Later there was a call about a second person in jail. I received this information on Good Friday night. That night I phoned Washington, and Dallas and other areas. I phoned all over in order to try and have these people released. They were finally released, but due more to the help of the Salvation Army than to the help of the government. Where we failed, they succeeded.

Later on, when the telephone bill came in, I knew I would not be reimbursed but I decided to apply anyway because it was a fairly dramatic case which had received national publicity. By the way, it was quite a considerable bill. What happened? I was not paid because I had phoned from my riding instead of from the House of Commons. I gather I should have got into my car and driven back to the House of Commons in order to make the phone calls. If that is not the height of stupidity I do not know what is. It is absolutely absurd that a member cannot work on behalf of his own people and charge the cost to the government or, to you Mr. Speaker, with all respect, to the House of Commons. That type of thing just should not be tolerated in an age when we are trying to get people to participate yet deny members the means to do anything when they do participate.

In addition, I believe the work schedule of the House of Commons should be arranged in such a way as to allow us more opportunity to get into our ridings and find out what our people are really thinking. If we want participation, we have to be there at first-hand to make it a reality. I believe there are steps that could be taken. Whether we sit three weeks out of the month, have two days off, or whatever the arrangement might be, we should be able to visit our ridings more frequently in order to do a job for our people. In our complicated society there is more to being a Member of Parliament than sitting here in the House of Commons. There is more than just passing legislation. We have to communicate and deal with our people so that we know what they want. If they feel they can tell us, and that this has some effect upon us, we will rid ourselves of a great deal of unhappiness and dissatisfaction in this democratic society.

I also believe that the federal government, perhaps in conjunction with the provincial governments, should establish information offices across Canada to help cut through the terrible rolls of red tape and confusion surrounding the federal system, and the complications it has for our citizens. Many people, when they have a problem, do not know whether they should come to the federal government, to the provincial government or to the municipal authorities. I believe well-publicized offices should be established, with zenith numbers, so that members of the public could phone them free of charge to find out where they may lodge complaints or offer advice and get through the kind of red tape that exists in our society.

In addition, I believe that schools and other institutions should be supplied with educational materials, films etc., dealing with the nature of our government and the provincial and federal areas of jurisdiction. As I said before, there is not much use talking about federalism if we do not communicate to our people precisely what it is, its benefits, how it operates and how to deal with the system.

We also need constructive public affairs programs on television to sell federalism and the democratic process. We have seen too much on television that tends to divide and destroy this nation and its institutions. Surely it is not too much to ask the CBC to do something more positive for society, rather than to carry on as it has so often in the past. I think we have been too authoritarian in the past on small, unimportant issues and have not spent enough time looking at the direction in which our society is going and trying to do something to change that direction. Perhaps we need some kind of a research centre to study the problems of democracy and Canadian unity so that we may really know what to do about them.

There are other ills that cause general disrespect for those in authority in Canada. As an example I mention the Quebec medical strike. Many people in our society—this has nothing to do with politics—have a feeling that professional people, doctors, lawyers, you name it, really do not care for anything but themselves and their own pocket-books. I am afraid they are often right. The Quebec doctors' strike gave us an indication that they had in mind motives other than looking after the sick of that province.

When medicare was introduced in Ontario I was revolted that doctors were charging 10 per cent more than the rate paid by the provincial government. I said to one doctor when I was in his office, "You should put up a sign and we will take up a collection for you poor fellows. Perhaps in that way we can do away with this 10 per cent charge." All you have to do is look at the statistics to find out how much doctors earn. They are not very poor. The same applies to the banks. Everyone has the impression that if you need money you can get it from anywhere but a bank. If you have money, you can borrow more money from a bank; but if you do not have money a bank will not look at you. The man in the street has lost faith in banking institutions as being of any meaningful help to him.

When the white paper on tax reform was issued I attended quite a few meetings in my riding. People continually rose and said, "Look, Mr. Cafik, if we thought that our tax dollar was being used for a constructive purpose we would not mind paying higher taxes, but we feel it is being wasted." If people in our country feel we are squandering their money, surely to God it is of national concern to us because such a feeling is bad for a society such as ours. If we are wasting money—and I have been on the Public Accounts Committee when it has been discovered that we have wasted money, not in this but every other government—we should do something about it.

We should adapt a stance where we as a government care about the public purse and really intend doing something about it. When we find mistakes in spending, surely we as a responsible government ought to say that we recognize it and will do something to change it, because we are as concerned about all these matters as you. If our society is ill, let's all do something positive to remedy the situation. I will now leave this topic and deal specifically with the Speech from the Throne.

I welcome the Speech from the Throne and I support it. I agree with what it states. I also realize there are many things that the Speech does not say. It cannot go into everything in great detail. It is not legislation. We must look at the bills that will be introduced. I particularly welcome the strong emphasis on pollution and the fact that a new department of environmental control will be set up. It is badly needed. I support that move very strongly. I hope something is done to make our environment safe, not only for Canadians but for all people. We must play our part in making our air and water safe. I agree with the statement in the Speech from the Throne that our society should be measured in terms of quality and not quantity.

I also welcome the emphasis on urban affairs. I am happy that a minister has been appointed to study the problem of urban affairs. Approximately 1½ years ago I wrote to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) on the subject of urban transportation. I outlined the need for legislation affecting the CNR and CPR which would make railbeds available for the purpose of commuter transportation. I suggested that the railroads be forced to give preferential time schedules for such purposes, even though it may require adjustments to their freight schedules.

I also suggested the railroads should be forced to charge reasonable wheel-mileage rates for commuter transport purposes. Many people feel these are excessive at the moment. Permission should be granted for these railbeds to be used by provincial and other governments or institutions for the purpose of establishing commuter transport facilities where the CNR and CPR refuse to do so. I hope these suggestions will be considered seriously by the ministry of urban affairs. If we change the pattern of urban transportation we will do much to correct air pollution in our large centres. A great deal would be accomplished in getting people to and from their work with less wear, tear and strain.

Although my time has almost expired I would like to spend a moment talking about tax reform. I wish to go on record as thanking the dozens of people in my constituency, many of them experts in the field of taxation, who worked with me for many months on Saturdays to study the white paper proposals on tax reform. Many of them are non-Liberals. I set up this committee because I feel the proposals are probably the most important piece of legislation that I as a member of Parliament will ever have to judge. I certainly did not want to judge it in a partisan way. I wish to thank these individuals for all their work in assisting me to arrive at an objective judgment in respect to these proposals.

The tax committee in my constituency will complete its work on November 10 at a meeting with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). At that time we will present our findings to him. I wish to point out some of the main changes we will be recommending. First, the elimination of capital gains on unrealized income. Second, I believe that capital gains should be divorced from regular income. I say this for a number of reasons.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I ask for unanimous consent to continue for another moment or two.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there such unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cafik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to divorce capital gains from regular income because I think it imposes a maximum tax rate of 50 per cent for personal income. I do not subscribe to this. I believe that the maximum rate for personal income should be 65 per cent. I see no justification in charging the maximum rate as proposed in the white paper. This rate starts at $26,000 a year. It also applies to someone earning $100,000 or $1 million a year. It does not sound much like equity. I believe that rate has to be increased. I think the tax rate for middle-income groups arrives at the 50 per cent rate far too soon. It ought to be adjusted and the rate of incline decreased so that the 50 per cent rate is reached at perhaps $35,000 a year.

The Minister of Finance stated—this has been quoted numerous times in the press—that he really does not want to see capital gains on private homes. If he does not want them, I suggest he eliminate them from the proposals and any legislation which may be introduced. I also believe that capital gains tax liability on death should be considered in the estate before the application of estate tax. At present there is a dual taxation in this regard. Something should also be done for the small businessman, who is hit harder than he should be. I suggest a 20 per cent tax deferral for five years for small businessmen.

I wish to thank my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me an extension of time. I do not want to abuse that privilege. There are many other proposals I would like to make, but I will make them at a later date.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the terrible events of the past few days have made a deep impact on all of us. Our thoughts go out to Madame Laporte and her family in their grief. We are in deep sympathy with the head of the Quebec government and the citizens of that province as they attempt to root out the cancer of violence and terrifying hatred which is threatening them and all Canadians. However, in the midst of this we cannot neglect our duty in the House and sidetrack any longer discussions on the Speech from the Throne and the matters it contains. After all, the Speech from the Throne presents the view of the government as to the situation existing in Canada and a forecast of the government's program to deal with it.

The previous speaker made a number of very good and very interesting points. I agree with his idea that we must have respect for law in this country, but I point out that respect for law through democratic participation can only be achieved if people feel that the laws are based on social justice and that there is a chance for everyone to share the good things in the country. I cannot agree with him that the big lack today is in mass communications. I think we could do far more if we in this House were to succeed in getting through a few concrete measures involving social justice—measures which would redress the balance between those who have more than they need and those who have pitifully little. To my mind this would do more to build a foundation on which law could be established and respected than anything else we could do in this House.

Speaking at the commonwealth conference in Australia on October 8, a distinguished woman delegate from India declared that the world today consists of two types of people—those who are content, and those who are discontent. She went on to indicate the reasons for this division in terms of civil rights and economic security. In some measure, the same thing is true of Canada. Whether we like it or not, we are divided far, far too much into the content and the discontent, pretty well along the lines of the "haves" and the "have nots." I am not talking of the terrorists at all. Those people we must root out and get rid of completely. I say again that terror does not flourish and cannot flourish in those countries where there is a fair and even sharing of the economic and social benefits available. You do not find such terrorist activities, not on a large scale at least, in places like Britain or the Scandinavian countries. That is no accident.

I am afraid that this Speech from the Throne foreshadows increasing affluence for the "haves" and little but very pious hopes for the "have nots"—bits of tokenism which fall very far short of action in redressing that balance. I know there are good things in the Speech from the Throne. There is the establishment of a department of the environment, and emphasis on urban affairs and other like matters. Those things have been pointed out by other members and I have no wish to denigrate them at all. But I would say that the speech as a whole is packaged in soothing generalities which all too skilfully conceal its content or lack of it and continue to foster the expectations of the Canadian people that this government, while it has left so many of them in want for so long, cannot fail to come through with the things they need and must have for modern living.

Once again, the expectations of those in poverty, of those without employment, of those on low, fixed incomes, of great numbers of young people and old people are minority groups like Indians, Métis and Eskimos, are doomed to disappointment. I say that because in this speech there is little or nothing for them. This government is still riding high, far above most of the storm clouds that hide the jagged peaks of the mountains. Nevertheless, I warn the government that many rulers in the past have miscalculated their ability to provide affluence for the elite while leaving the masses in misery. During those centuries few of the mass had any idea what they were missing. They lived and died without knowing how the affluent lived. Such is no longer the case. Modern communications such as radio and television have depicted clearly for everyone the manner of life enjoyed by the elite. Advertisers have created the clear impression that this is possible for everyone. The revolution of rising expectations can no longer be denied with impunity.

Delaying those programs that would create the just society in Canada, and utilizing verbiage about its desirability, will merely compound the floodwaters when the dam breaks. Insurrections and revolutions happen when governments do not know enough soon enough, or will not do enough soon enough. In my opinion, what is most lacking in this Parliament is its ability to produce actual measures of improvement for those large sections of our population which need help to obtain an income and some of the amenities that go with modern life.

Now I want to talk about something very specific and concrete, about a problem which has been mentioned once or twice but not dealt with at length in this Throne Speech debate. Out in Vancouver we are not in a state of insurrection, notwithstanding the impression one might gain from our lively mayor. But we are faced with serious problems which, if neglected too long, are bound to lead to trouble. I point out that some of these problems which are very serious today, and which we are hearing about as relating to other parts of Canada, have been neglected for many years. The storm signals have been flying and have not been heeded. They have been ignored for far too long.

During the past months very great numbers of young people have been drifting to Vancouver from all over Canada. Vancouver now has far more than its share of young people who are idle, without prospects and without jobs so far as the coming winter is concerned. The people of Vancouver are becoming up-tight and upset about this situation. I know this well because even during the summer months there was great concern and worry in the city, and there are indications that the situation is now worsening.

I say that we are getting for more than our share of restless, unoccupied and unemployed young people. A survey taken in the Beatty Street armoury showed that of the young people in the armoury, only 11 per cent came from inside the province of British Columbia; the rest came from other parts of Canada, a fairly small percentage coming from the United States. They came there for many reasons, one being that British Columbia has the only climate in Canada where a person will not freeze solid if he ceases being active. It is the only place like it in Canada. You may be very, very miserable but it is the only place where you will not freeze to death.

I know the situation because I went to the armouries and talked to the young people. There are all sorts of young people in Vancouver. We have the hippie type. We have the type that is trying to foment trouble with doctrines of various kinds. We have young people who began looking for work in the Maritimes and went steadily across Canada unable to find it. We have students. We have young people who ran away from home, and so on. The group is not monolithic; they are not all of one type. This government, I believe, is committing an error if it believes that these are summer travellers, or that the majority of them are summer travellers, out to travel from hostel to hostel as young people do in Europe. The vast majority of these young people could not find work or an occupation no matter whether they are students or not. I am convinced that that is the case.

Why is it that the people of Vancouver are worried and upset? For one thing, they are worried and upset—this applies particularly to many people in my riding, to those in the eastern part of the city and in the central part as well—because they feel they are terribly overburdened with taxes and simply cannot face the idea of keeping these young people housed and looked after in ever increasing numbers, especially since only 11 per cent of them come from British Columbia. As I say, only 11 per cent of them come from British Columbia. These people are angry and upset. They feel it is unfair. I think it is unfair, too. I believe the federal government has a responsibility to help provide shelter and work, because we are dealing with Canadians from right across the country. The people of Vancouver are worried financially, and they are worried because they do not know what so many young people, penned-up in idleness and subject to the propaganda coming from a small number of them, will do in the line of riots, disorders and trouble in the city.

Frankly, I think the attitude of our mayor has been anything but responsible and helpful. From the beginning he has assiduously sought to avoid taking action. He has taken the attitude that these young people should be driven out of town. This attitude has been fomented carefully and insistently among the population of Vancouver. Then, to add insult to injury, when the young people were moved from the armoury out to Jericho, the mayor remarked conversationally to the media, "Well, I see the brothel is being moved to Jericho." This is not the kind of comment the first statesman of a city should make. I consider that the inflammatory talk, the explosive elements around Vancouver, taken with the fact that there has been no action of any kind, are dangerous in the extreme.

I know that shelter is being provided to a certain extent. The Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) told me after the House met that about half the young people were being accommodated, for the time being at least, by the federal government and that the other half were being looked after by private citizen groups. This may be all right as a temporary measure but it is not a long-range solution. The students who were going to open the university administrative buildings to these young people felt strongly, after investigation, that this was not the solution, and they rejected it. The YMCA and other organizations are trying to pinch-hit, together with some of the church groups, but this is not the solution and in my view it is a very shortsighted policy for the federal government to decide not to intervene at the present time.

Then there is the challenge of finding socially useful work these young people can do. I know hon. gentlemen opposite are likely to say this is not a federal responsibility. I remember that at one time the federal government took the attitude that unemployment of any kind was not their responsibility and that it should be left strictly to the municipalities to deal with. This attitude had to be abandoned in the face of mass unemployment. Responsibility for providing work for these young people can no longer be evaded.

The taxpayers will not stand for these young people lying around in idleness without any chance to contribute productively to their own keep. In any case, this is bad from the standpoint of the young people themselves; it is demoralizing in the extreme to deny them the opportunity to do something useful to earn their daily bread. The government's summer program for youth provided an estimated 36,000 jobs of which about 10,000 were in the militia. If the federal government could provide 10,000 jobs in the militia, paying $700 to each person who took part in that program for two months, I suggest it can find money to pay wages to young people for socially useful tasks now and in the springtime.

These are not just my views, Mr. Speaker. Speaking on September 23, Mr. Reuben Baetz of the Canadian Welfare Council stated that 665,000 Canadian students were looking for work this summer and few had found it. He predicted there would be 750,000 looking for work next year. A release from the Department of Manpower showed that 179,000 students were registered across Canada for employment at the peak of last summer. Sixty-eight per cent of them found jobs, 32 per cent were still seeking work, and of these 27 per cent were post-secondary students and 73 per cent were high school students. It is the high school students who have had to bear the brunt of the unemployment catastrophe.

I have talked with the manpower people in Vancouver about student placement and learned that by the end of August there had been 29,212 registrations in British Columbia and only 9,595 placements. The figures for greater Vancouver are 13,900 registrations and 2,023 placements. No record was kept of the duration of the employment provided or the conditions under which young students were required to work. In sum, I was told by the manpower officials that there are not enough jobs to go round and that only the most aggressive or persistent of the students can hope to get jobs in the circumstances.

I should like to suggest several steps which I believe Ottawa must take. First, the government must recognize that the employment of young people is a federal problem. They have to recognize British Columbia in general and Vancouver in particular as a disaster area as far as the provision of work for young people is concerned, and should be prepared to provide jobs and programs to deal with the situation. It is not a summer thing; it persists all the year round. Private enterprise can help. I have talked with the Chamber of Commerce people and I know they have helped. But Ottawa has to take the initiative and provide a comprehensive program. The Vancouver city council has been urging that work of a suitable character be found for these young people. A private organization has found 5,000 jobs to Canadian young people in Germany next Summer. I do not think we should have to depend on Germany to find work for our young people.

Programs we should consider ought to include such work as cleaning up pollution. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) has received a letter urging that the National Harbours Board help Vancouver clean up driftwood and other materials from the harbour. Why cannot the young people do this kind of work and get paid for it? Young people would do this kind of thing because they would realize it is useful to the community. Again, there are opportunities in forestry. Only one acre out of seven of our timberland is being reforested. Why cannot we employ our young people on work of this kind, replanting our forests? It will be 75 years before the new growth is ready for cutting.

Here in Ontario the cutting down of diseased elms is a task which might be done by our young people, or we might use them to trim the bushes along our highways instead of using dangerous chemicals. These are some of the things which could be done. It is too important a matter to be left to casual supervision by the young people themselves. We should put our topflight management in charge of such programs, people who are used to working with youth and who can manage these schemes with success. The alternative to such a program is to leave these young people cooped up in idleness, or roaming the streets. They will be sitting ducks for the type of propaganda which led to the disaster existing in one of our eastern provinces.

I have been told that young people will not work. I should like to suggest that a great many of these young people would work if they were offered the chance to take part in such a program. This is an opportunity they should be given. If there are some who will not or cannot work, then other solutions must be found for them, other types of program. But we owe such a program to those who will work.

Like other speakers before me, I know that my time has just about expired and there are many other things I should have liked to say. May I say to the new minister of the environment that we are pleased to see him trying to move in regard to the Skagit River. We hope he can do something to save that valley for the recreational use of the people even at this late date. But the hour is very late, with the timber now cut down and the victim prepared for sacrifice. I hope the minister will act, and quickly.

The other things I should have liked to mention will have to wait for another time. In the meantime, I urge that we save our ecology and eliminate pollution and destruction. At the same time we must save our young people. Federal programs must be initiated and financed at least in part by the federal government in order to put our young people to work and to save our environment. Saving the environment will save a lot of our young people in the process.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, I shall say no more about the situation in Quebec; more words on my part will not help. A lot has been said with great sincerity by members of the House. But if in the course of my remarks I allude to situations which might have a bearing on the grave situation in Quebec, this is intentional.

I should like to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. I was particularly impressed by the remarks of the seconder, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas). Since he has come to the House I have been pleased to hear him ask questions during the question period, placing barbs into the government from time to time when dealing with the economic situation in the west. I had a sort of kindred relationship with that gentleman, but suddenly, having read his speech seconding the Address it seems either that all the wheat in western Canada has been sold or he has changed his mind and now regards this as the most wonderful government ever to have existed, though of course there are one or two problems to be dealt with.

Perhaps the explanation is the honour bestowed upon him of seconding the Address. I have never had that honour and in fact I am sure I will never have it. However, though his was still a good speech I would prefer to see the hon. member in his old stripes. I now feel alone in the House, though I am sure the hon. member, now sitting in his seat, will revert to his sharp, controversial but interesting self once again.

My remarks tonight were supposed to be directed to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) but I see that neither he nor his Parliamentary Secretary are here. However, I imagine that somehow the word will get to him, though on the last occasion I had a chance to berate a minister apparently his executive assistant, noticing that I had made a speech about his minister, said to him, "You had better see Otto and say, 'Good speech, Otto' ". So when the minister came into the House he said to me "That was a good speech you made". I thought that strange because by rights, in view of what I had said about him, he should have taken an axe to me. In other words, no one had read what I had said. In fact, I did not praise the minister at all.

This will be the context of my speech tonight. A lot of sense has been said and a lot of remarks have been made having great bearing on the situation in Canada today. In summary I would say that our malaise is that we now have two factions in society—the established and the disestablished. All of us in this House represent the established—the small businessman, the big businessman, the union, the organized man, the wealthy, the middle-income group. But who speaks for the disestablished? The disestablished is the man who does not care about income tax on $30,000 at the rate of 50 per cent because in his whole lifetime he will never make that much money, not even half or a third of that sum. The dises-tablished is the 65 per cent of our people who do not care about the white paper recommendations or the committee recommendation that no tax or succession duty be levied on estates of less than $150,000, because in their whole lifetime these people will never know anybody who leaves an estate of $150,000. Indeed, they do not know anyone who will leave any estate.

The disestablished is not the homeowner, the man who sits in his private property enjoying the view and fighting apartment developers to the last breath. After all, the apartment dweller is not the established; he must face the railway tracks or the glue factory. So we have this division in our society, and if you examine history carefully, Mr. Speaker, you will find that the preamble to all revolutions is this friction in society. Consider today's position. We have structured our society not only into age groups. We never talk about our young people as "us" or "we", we talk about our young people as "they". Indeed, even the hon. lady from Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) referred to the young people as "they". We no longer speak of our older people as "we"; we refer to them as "they". It is "they" who must be put into homes; "they" must be given low-rental apartments; "they" must be given nursing care. They are also the ones we shove out into the suburbs. Because after all, "they" are not "we".

The only thing we have in common is that, as sure as we are living, we will progress from one to the other. We have a stratified society, not only in age groups but in the ease with which we may be entitled to go up the ladder of economic success or material gain. It was not a new thing when lawyers were stratified into a very tight little group—for the public good, mind you, and for the public good only. I see in the House a member who was a member of the benchers association of Osgoode Hall, the Law Society of Upper Canada. However, we must not have too many lawyers available because this would not be good for the public. Nor must we have too many doctors or too many engineers. Although these professional groups were self-governing, they also had a responsibility. That responsibility has somehow vanished. Instead, we now have many other calcified groups.

It is not longer possible to build yourself a dwelling or a shelter; you must follow certain restrictions. You must buy expensive property, if property is available. You cannot be a garage mechanic without going through all the stages of apprenticeship, journeyman and so on. You cannot even work up to owning or leasing a service station, because a licence is not granted. You cannot be a welder, a bricklayer or anything unless you go to this little, established group. I am speaking not only of professional groups but of unions. It takes a long time before you can get that vested position in a union where you will be the last to be laid off and the first to be taken on. In the meantime, 60 per cent of the population wants to get ahead. They are ambitious, they want to work but every avenue is blocked. History will show that when a society reaches that stage, violent revolution is the next step. Unfortunately, we read and know history but we are absolutely positive it will never repeat itself. It does repeat itself, however.

In the cities of Toronto and Vancouver—especially Toronto, because I know that area very well—in order to get decent accommodation one must pay 50 per cent of his take-home pay. A man who started out as an ambitious journeyman thought the time would come when he would make $9,000 or $10,000 a year—a fantastic amount. When he finally reached that stage he felt he would have a better life; he might take a little trip, his children would be better dressed and his family would eat better. After 13 years of hard work he finds he is rewarded by reaching the stage where he makes $9,000 or $10,000 per year, but he takes home less than $600 per month and out of that he has to pay over $300 for, not palatial accommodation but simple, decent accommodation. He hates our guts. He is at the revolution stage. It makes him enraged because he does not eat well, he does not dress well and his children do not have the things he thought they would have. All those years have disappeared. This is the situation. Can you blame people who are in that position for grasping at a manifesto or anything that will appeal to them?

The fact is that society is ill. The question, then, is: Will this government recognize the need for reform in giant strides? In other words, were we elected to be daring or were we elected to be cautious? The hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) said we must protect our institutions. I say to him that all institutions become calcified, all institutions become stagnant over a period of time and this House is no different. What I am saying today is really irrelevant and the people know this is so.

Consider the people we have in our communities. The people do not have any respect for the M.P., the alderman, the planning director or the works commissioner. In each society you have a shadow administration. In society you have people who have come from the ranks of the responsible and who dispute the findings of planning commissioners and boards because there is no communication. Within the unions you have shadow executives who have no faith in the union leaders.

An hon. Member. Give us the answers.

Mr. Otto: I will give you the answers in just a little while. I am sure the hon. member is listening very, very patiently for those answers.

An hon. Member: I am.

Mr. Otto: I say that before we protect these institutions we must realize whether they are worth protecting or they should be changed. Let me refer to the speech of the Minister of Finance. I could really revise the whole speech, or summarize it. But in brief he says that he is happy to see the businessmen of this country now getting lower profits. Isn't this a brave new world? I thought this was a new world, a new place of adventure, a place of opportunity where people could get greater profits. The minister says he is happy that profits are lower; indeed, he hopes that they will go still lower. He is happy, or seems to be, that national productivity will just ease in a nice, gentle movement downward so there will not be any disruption. I thought this was a country where we wanted more production.

Dr. Young, the great adviser, says that if inflation is put under control, prices will stabilize. Of course prices will stabilize. Most businessmen are selling their inventories at cost. When it comes to replacing that stock, I anticipate an inflationary cycle of approximately 10 per cent because the cost of replacing those goods will increase. There is no way the cost will decrease, under the present system.

Let me review some of the facts of the economic situation in Canada. Our capital equipment, machinery and tools of production, is absolutely decrepit. We have the most inefficient accumulation of capital equipment of any country in the world, bar none. It has been said, and I think this from a very reliable source, that if our capital equipment were replaced we could increase productivity by 28 per cent. I have no doubt about that. I visited many plants belonging to friends and business associates. I am amazed that they can produce anything. So to blame labour for something which is entirely the fault of the government is really not right.

The cost of money is not going down; it is going up. So far we have not dealt with this problem at all. Our category of executives is not the best or the second best in the world; it is about tenth best. There is a great lack of executive ability both in junior and senior positions. This is no fault of ours. I think one of the great evils of having foreign-dominated industry is that there is no room for our own executive category to receive training. One of the great advantages of controlling our industry is that our junior executives have room in which to train and expand.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

POST OFFICE—TERMINATION OF LEGAL ROLE OF MINISTER OF COMMUNICATIONS AS HEAD OF DEPARTMENT

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to launch the late-night show series for the third session of this Parliament. Perhaps to retain the shipyard analogy I should say "to sound the first toot." Doubtless my position at this time and place is some sort of bitter-sweet reward for being such a great contributor to this series in preceding sessions. I enjoy the packed galleries, the crowded House and the great anticipation of all my colleagues as we debate these matters at night.

I asked a question the other day about the Post Office Department because I was concerned about its administrative structure. As hon. members are aware, I have had some concern about this department in the last few years. I found it interesting to read the Government Organization Act in connection with the announcement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) following the almost gentle and timid cabinet shuffle of a few weeks ago. On reading the two together, it would seem to me there is a great deal of room for uncertainty. The statute is clear. Section 3 (2) of the act as amended reads:

> The Minister of Communications is the Postmaster General and has the management and direction of the Post Office Department.

That is pretty clear. But we were advised that the Minister without Portfolio from Longueuil (Mr. Côté) has responsibility for the Post Office Department, according to the press release. Yet that minister of harmonious, efficient administration, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Kierans), retains the title and portfolio. Who, then, is in charge? Who is the responsible minister?

One recalls very vividly an incident during the first session of this Parliament when the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) was being assisted in certain aspects of administration by the present minister in charge of housing. When conflict arose, questions were asked in the House more than once—and I have turned them up—concerning which minister prevailed. We received the answer quite clearly that in the case of any conflict between the minister without portfolio and the minister with portfolio, there was no question but that the minister with portfolio would prevail. So with regard to the Post Office today, who has and who has not the portfolio? If the minister from Longueuil, who said recently that he always tried to handle personnel in a reasonable way—and I believe him—should handle policies and people in a way not acceptable to the Postmaster General, what will happen? I imagine the employees of this important department would like to know.

The present situation is very far from clear. The Edmonton Journal the other day, in language less eloquent than I would put it, under the heading "Chicken with its head off" said:

> Many Canadians will cheer the removal of Mr. Kierans from responsibility for the Post Office. But the re-appointment of Jean-Pierre Côté to the job—but not the title—of Postmaster General leaves the Post Office in a kind of limbo. It is not a regular government department since it is headed by a Minister without Portfolio. But neither has the government decided whether to turn it into an independent Crown agency.
> The government should move quickly to end this uncertainty which is bound to affect staff morale and efficiency, already shaken by labour controversies and management clumsiness.

I presume the proposed amendments to the Government Organization Act will deal with this matter. But will we have the incredible situation of the movement of mail removed from the ambit of section 9(b), which refers to the Minister of Communications, being in charge of the development and utilization generally of communications undertakings, facilities, systems and services for Canada? The postal service has lagged, it has been slow; but surely it still deserves to be classed as communications. Or is the Post Office Department to become a Crown corporation, to disappear as a government department, and is the minister from Longueuil merely conducting a holding operation? If this is the case and he is merely conducting a holding operation, I think it is too bad because neither he nor the department deserve such an ignoble end.

I think that if the minister from Longueuil would read the speeches of the Minister of Communications and his strictures upon his predecessors, including the minister from Longueuil, he might be extremely well equipped to take on the long-harrassed department. With the ability he professes to have, and which I believe he has, he may make great improvements. I hope the status of the minister and the department will be made clear as soon as possible so that the remedial operation may soon be undertaken by the minister from Longueuil. In his earnest efforts and heavy task I wish him well.

Mr. Barney Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is with particular respect that I make my maiden speech in this role—apart from a dramatic performance the other day in the question period—to reply on behalf of my minister to the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) whom we all regard so highly.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is a good beginning.

An hon. Member: Keep it up; you are doing fine.

Mr. Danson: The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself, when the question arose, answered the hon. member adequately in the House. It is true that the portfolio of the Minister of Communications and the Postmaster General is still a united portfolio. But in the speech from the Throne and in the Prime Minister's reply to the hon. member on October 9, which is recorded on page 19 of Hansard of that day, the Prime Minister said:

> ... we did announce yesterday through the mouth of the Governor General that we should be asking the House to approve a minister of state system, and it would be my intention to ensure that my hon. friend from Longueuil shall at that time be a minister of state in charge of the Post Office.

I think it is agreed by all members of the House that he is an excellent one. The ministers without portfolio have been assigned rather imaginatively by this government because they have not been locked into inflexible positions. Perhaps this degree of flexibility is unknown or inconceivable to some hon. members opposite, but it reflects the flexibility and imagination of this government.

As I indicated legislation will be introduced, as I believe the Prime Minister indicated, at the first opportunity and, hopefully, before the end of this year.

Of course, this is subject to urgencies that might arise, and we hope we will not have any more of the type we are now experiencing. It is also, of course, subject to the co-operation of hon. members in all parties in the House. However, I do not think we need have any real concern about that matter because following the Prime Minister's comment in the House on October 9 which he ended by saying: "I hope the opposition will co-operate with us in expediting this arrangement", the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) said: "Don't you worry about us". So I suggest we have nothing to worry about, and I thank the hon. member for Hillsborough for raising this matter.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You have learned the lingo awfully fast.

AGRICULTURE—PESTICIDES—DDD—REASON FOR ONE-YEAR EXTENSION ON USE—NOTIFICATION OF CHANGES

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, on October 13 a question was asked with regard to the extension of time given to the pesticide DDD. I think in Hansard it appears as "DDT." The relation between the two chemicals could be considered to be one of sister to brother or brother to sister, but the pesticide in question is DDD and I hope that whoever answers my question has that in mind.

The press release was printed on October 10 in the Ottawa Citizen. It contained the first information we had obtained that the government intended to extend the period for the use of DDD by one year, to January 1, 1972. At that time it was pointed out that in the United States there had been an investigation in 1969 and a decision that these pesticides should be eliminated within two years, for public health reasons.

The Canadian Department of Agriculture put out a news release on April 5, 1968, which set what they considered to be the national example for the use of DDD. It was pointed out that science did not yet know enough about the properties of this poison to allow its regular use, and the hope was expressed in the news release that a new and less dangerous chemical could be found. This indicated that the officials of the department were well aware in 1968 of the dangers of DDD which they themselves were using.

I suggest that civil servants cannot be blamed in so far as the use of DDD is concerned because, after all, they take orders from the government and sometimes the government does not know the hows and the whys of pollution problems and does not take the advice of the civil servants. It has been proven, also, that the use of DDD has resulted in the killing of water birds which had eaten fish contaminated by DDD.

It has also been proven that in many cases governments know the harm that can result from the uncontrolled use of poisons like DDD, and not only do not condemn them but the public is left completely unaware of the danger. This is one of the reasons the question was asked at that time. Why was the public not made aware of the situation, and why was advice not given by the government? It is the government's duty to let the people know the dangers of all pesticides, including DDD, because the whole nation could be poisoned through their uncontrolled use.

Why has the Department of Agriculture taken this regressive measure, extending the use of DDD to January 1, 1972? Has the department been taken in by the poison manufacturers so that they may get rid of their existing stocks? The news release suggests this is what has happened and that after that date new stocks will be denied registration. The government should not allow the continued use of existing stocks of this poison, in the interests of human life, wildlife and marine life.

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to commend the hon. gentleman for raising this question because it gives us an opportunity to put the record straight. The article in the Ottawa Citizen of October 10 was based on a false assumption.

With regard to the questions raised by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) concerning the pesticide DDD, also called TDE, I may say that this product had a limited use and has now been largely superseded by newer and more effective products. Thus, in the continuing assessment process that goes on for all pesticides it was decided that DDD should be phased out. This decision was communicated to the trade under date of August 27. Unfortunately, the wording of the notice was such as to imply cancellation of registration status as of January 1, 1971. This notice was replaced by a further notice dated October 1, 1970, which clarified the phasing-out schedule and outlined provisions for normal disposal through sale of remaining stocks, and indicated that there would be no registration of DDD stocks manufactured in the year 1971. In other words, as of January 1, 1971, the department will not approve the manufacture of DDD.

With regard to the question raised by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg), I can assure the hon. member that there is no change in our intention to keep the public informed on the status of pesticides. Indeed, we are currently reviewing our information procedures with a view to improving communication and understanding. We are assessing the relative roles of letters to the trade and of broader information statements to the public.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—STEINBERG WAGE INCREASES—CLARIFICATION OF CHAIRMAN OF PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION OF EFFECT ON PRICES

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, on October 7, Mel Dobrin, President of Steinberg's Limited, sent the following telegram to Dr. John H. Young of the Prices and Incomes Commission:

> I am astonished at the contents of a news bulletin released by your commission today and carried on radio stations and reported to the press wherein you are reported as having denounced pay settlements in major grocery chains including Steinberg's Limited as being "excessive, unjustified and inflationary", and in which you are also reported as having said that "customers will have to pay the shot in higher food prices." As far as Steinberg's Limited is concerned the settlements referred to were made with the collective bargaining agents for our Ontario division store employees after lengthy and conscientious negotiations. The extent of the settlements was made known to you in advance of the signing of the collective agreements and your commission was given both verbal and written assurances that Steinberg's would do everything possible to avoid increasing prices as a result of such wage increases. Your representatives have met regularly with members of our organization and have been kept informed concerning our prices and operating margins. You therefore must be aware that at no time repeat at no time has Steinberg's Limited increased its prices directly or indirectly as a result of these negotiated increases. We have in fact reduced prices further since such wage settlements and are now operating at lower gross margins than those in effect prior to the settlements.
> Your comments in so far as our company is concerned are inaccurate, misleading and unfair. We would appreciate your issuing a statement which would make the facts clear to our customers and the public at large.

On October 14 I asked the minister if he would discuss with Dr. Young the necessity of issuing a statement to set the matter straight and to make amends for the inaccurate statement he had made. The minister brushed off my question with a quip and a reference to the consumer price index which had just been released. More important, no answer has been received by the Steinberg firm since that time. I checked this today; I have been keeping in contact with them. The facts are that Steinberg's went through the proper collective bargaining procedure with employees who received wage increases; Steinberg's did not raise prices as a result of those wage increases. Dr. Young's statement is not in accord with the facts, and a correction should be issued.

I again ask the minister whether he will take action. His responsibility is clear. The Prices and Incomes Commission reports to Parliament through the minister. What is his objection to using moral suasion on Dr. Young to persuade him to set matters right? Surely both of them should be glad to find a firm prepared to cut their profit margin in order to give better wages to their employers without raising prices to the consumer. This is a matter which should be given publicity instead of inaccurate statements being made.

In any event, it is highly debatable whether Dr. Young has exceeded the terms of his authority in denouncing the actions of Steinberg's. In outlining the proposed terms of reference of the commission two years ago, the minister stated:

> It is particularly important to stress that the commission will not, except in cases involving the national interest in a vital way, be expected to report on the specific price decisions of individual firms or the wage decisions of particular collective bargaining situations.

In outlining the terms of reference of the Commission, the minister made it perfectly clear that it was not within the purview of the chairman to make statements regarding individual firms. If this was in the mind of the minister when the commission was set up, it is doubly important that the minister exercise his responsibility and ensure the public is not left with the impression that the statement was correct.

The minister said it was peculiar that I should be defending the Steinberg firm. I will defend any firm, individual or consumer that feels there has been an injustice. An injustice has been done to the Steinberg firm, a firm which has lived up to the terms of the guidelines and in addition has enabled its employees to get a fair deal without harming the consumer. I suggest that the minister make no further attempts to hide behind Dr. Young in this matter. He should exercise his responsibility as the minister responsible and give Steinberg's the credit due them.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I must apologize to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis). The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) cannot be here tonight, so I am stepping in at the last moment with no knowledge especially of the particulars of this case.

I do, however, think that the hon. lady has accomplished one of her objectives. During her intervention in the question period, and again in the late night show, she has given a certain amount of publicity to the achievements of the Steinberg company. They have done the impossible. They have given wage increases to their employees, increases which were sufficient to result in a satisfactory settlement with the unions in question, and at the same time they have held their prices; indeed, in some cases they have cut them. So Steinberg's I would think, have received much of the publicity they sought.

Also, I think the hon. lady gave to the House and to the nation one example, at least, of where the Prices and Incomes Commission has been successful in its objective of trying to hold the line on prices. This example is an important one, namely, a food chain which sells a great deal of food to very many people in one part of the country. She said it is not the job of the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission to comment on individual firms. I am not sure that he commented on Steinberg's. He is reported in the press as having done so; I do not know whether he did. In any case, I doubt whether the hon. lady thinks that he should comment on the affairs of Steinberg's individually and publicly in answering them and in publishing any retraction.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

The House met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WOOLLIAMS—WAR MEASURES ACT MOTION—STATEMENT BY MEMBER FOR GREENWOOD ON VOTE OF CERTAIN MEMBERS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting all members of the House of Commons and in particular those members who took a strong position that the government should have brought in and should bring in a special bill to cover a special situation, namely, the crisis created by the FLQ in the province of Quebec and indeed elsewhere. This morning's Globe and Mail contains the following statement under the heading "War Act Supported 190-16":

"they have swallowed their own convictions because of fear of political consequence," Andrew Brewin (NDP Greenwood) said.

"We know the stand we were going to take was an unpopular stand—but do you abandon your principles because of that?"

This statement is reported to have been made by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). The statement is false and implies wrong motives. It reflects on the voting position of many Members of Parliament and particularly on the position taken by many members of the opposition, including my leader, in reference to this serious situation. We voted in accordance with our principles for what we considered to be a solution, for unity and I hope for the good of Canada. We asked for a special bill for a specific purpose. When that request was accepted I considered, like many other hon. members, that the principles we had enunciated had been effectively assured. I personally voted accordingly and in accordance with my conscience, as indeed I am sure other members did, with the sincere hope that the course followed would promote justice and unity. I am sure all members followed the same course.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has given the Chair the notice required by the Standing Orders. The Chair spent some time reflecting on the very important and serious matter raised by the hon. member. I would take from his statement that he took the opportunity of raising the question of privilege to restate what he considers are the correct facts in relation to the vote taken yesterday. I assume that the hon. member does not wish at this time to press the matter further. There is no suggestion of a motion being submitted to the House. In the circumstances, the matter will not be considered further by the House, and no ruling will be made whether there is or is not a prima facie case of privilege.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TABLING OF EXTRACTS OF MINUTES OF MEETINGS OF COMMISSIONERS OF INTERNAL ECONOMY, FEBRUARY 9, MAY 5 AND JUNE 23, 1970

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to lay before the House extracts from the minutes of meetings of the Commissioners of Internal Economy of the House of Commons held on February 9, May 5 and June 23, 1970.

ADJOURNMENT FOR FUNERAL OF PIERRE LAPORTE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in view of the funeral of the late Mr. Laporte, I should like to suggest to the House that we might make arrangements to adjourn the House for the afternoon to provide an opportunity for hon. members to attend the services either in Montreal or in Ottawa. This would mean we would rise at one o'clock and return to the House at eight o'clock, with the understanding that this day be regarded as one of the appointed days for the debate on the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INTRODUCTION OF PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS—STATEMENT BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: As hon. members know, it has been the practice at the outset of the past several sessions to give, by unanimous consent, first reading in a group to the numerous public bills standing for introduction by private members and thereby allow such bills to proceed to the second reading stage with a caveat to the effect that every bill would be examined by the Chair before it was proposed for second reading in order to ensure that each bill met the requirements of the rules and practices of the House. The reason for such a procedure is of course the great number of bills which have been received and which, on this occasion, has reached an all-time record. Time did not afford an opportunity to examine the bills in detail.

Before suggesting to the House that this procedure and practice be followed again this year I should like to make a few references to certain procedures which seem to be evolving in connection with such private members' bills. In the first instance, the number of bills being introduced far exceeds the number of opportunities that will be provided for the consideration of such bills in this session. In like manner, some members have given notice of several or more bills. Indeed, in one case an hon. member has filed notice of more than 40 private members' bills in his name. I would not like to suggest in any way that it is not the hon. member's right to do so. The rules as they stand at present allow any hon. member to propose for consideration by the House any number of private bills. Inevitably, however, the bills proposed by that hon. member will take up a disproportionate share of the time allotted for the consideration of private members' bills.

Another related factor is that a great number of bills that cannot be reached at this session will be printed at considerable cost. It is for hon. members to determine whether it is advisable to continue the practice whereby so many bills receive the usual pro forma first reading and are ordered for printing at substantial expense when the Standing Orders will prevent most of these bills from ever being considered in the House.

It is obvious that in many cases there is much value in having private bills circulated and considered by hon. members of the House and by interested members of the public. There are arguments on both sides of the question. But the fact remains that from year to year there is an ever-increasing proportion of private bills proposed by hon. members that will never come before the House for consideration and debate.

The Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization may wish to have a look at the situation to determine whether a more equitable procedure can be devised for the consideration of such bills.

Another aspect of the matter is that there is an increasing tendency to include money provisions in private members' bills. Hon. members know that the time-honoured practice has been to include such proposals in the form of a private member's motion rather than in a bill.

In many cases in the past, in order to meet the convenience of hon. members the consideration of the second reading of such bills was entered upon. It seems to the Chair that this procedure is not good parliamentary practice.

May I enumerate a number of bills which, at first glance, appear to include money provisions. Initially, there is a bill entitled "an Act respecting the employment of women in federal jurisdiction before and after childbirth", standing in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. Then there is an act to amend the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act and also an act to amend the BNA Acts 1867 to 1965. Then there is a bill to amend the Canada Pension Plan, standing in the name of the hon. member for Hillsborough; a bill to establish a Newfoundland tunnel authority, standing in the name of the hon. member for Humber-St.George's-St. Barbe; a bill to amend the Atlantic Freight Assistance Act, standing in the name of the hon. member for Moncton; a bill respecting fares for disabled persons on federal modes of transport, standing in the name of the hon. member for Oxford; a bill to amend the National Housing Act, standing in the name of the hon. member for Hamilton West, and a bill to provide for the constitution of a federal transport commission of inquiry, standing in the name of the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East. There are many other such bills. I am sure hon. members would not want me to go through the whole list, so I will stop my enumeration there.

The Chair considers that in the drafting of bills more care should be exercised to ensure that financial provisions are not included in such bills. When the aforementioned bills and any others which, on closer examination, appear to contain financial provisions are called for debate, I propose to examine the question of whether or not such bills are in order from a procedural standpoint. At that time hon. members who have sponsored these bills will have an opportunity to satisfy the Chair that the bills are in order from such standpoint before proceeding to substantive argument on the merits of the bills.

I apologize to hon. members for taking up so much of their time but this is a matter which, as they know, has given some cause for worry to a number of hon. members interested in the procedural aspects of the matter.

• (11:20 a.m.)

Finally, may I refer to the practice which has been developing in some cases of including as purported explanatory notes to the provisions of such bills that are, in reality, matters of debate. In one instance there is included as an explanatory note a statement of some length made on April 20, 1970, by the occupant of the Chair. That statement may have a place in our proceedings but it does not strike me as providing an explanation of any provision of the bill to which it refers. In another case there is an interesting quotation of six or more paragraphs from a statement made in 1796 by George Washington. With all due respect to that late, great and honoured gentleman, I suggest that the inclusion of such material under the guise of an explanatory note offends the rules of the House.

I conclude by asking the House whether there is unanimous consent to an order that all private members' bills listed on today's order paper be deemed to have been introduced, given first reading, ordered to be printed and allowed to stand for second reading at the next sitting of the House subject, of course, to subsequent examination as to the regularity of each bill? Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL SECURITY

WAR MEASURES ACT—PROCEDURE FOR DISCLOSURE OF NUMBER AND NAMES OF PERSONS ARRESTED, CHARGES, ETC.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether he would make a statement, not today of course but at the first opportunity thereafter, indicating the success of the operations under the War Measures Act, what procedure we may expect to be followed with regard to disclosure of the number of persons arrested, their names, and what the charges are, and also what assurances there may be with regard to the right to counsel and the arrangements with regard to review? Would the Prime Minister consider making such a statement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will gladly consider that suggestion. I am sure it will be most helpful to the House to know how the procedures under the Act are being applied. Perhaps I may have one of my ministers make a statement rather than myself. I am sure the Leader of the Opposition realizes that the regulations under the Act foresee that it is the provincial Attorney General of course, who is entrusted with the application of the Act. It will be our role to co-operate with him and to ensure that we can give him any assistance required in making certain that the regulations and the Act are interpreted along lines that the members of this House would desire.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

As several people have lately drawn attention to the fact that following possible arrests they have no idea where their children or relatives are, could the Prime Minister request the Attorney General of the province of Quebec to publish daily the list of people taken into custody as well as the place where they are held so as to reassure their families?

Mr. Trudeau: The suggestion seems to have merit, Mr. Speaker. I will make sure that the Attorney General of the province of Quebec, who is responsible for enforcing the regulations in that province, is informed of the hon. member's suggestion.

[English]

ASSOCIATION OF FOREIGN EMBASSIES WITH FLQ ACTIVITIES

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister is in a position to tell the House whether or not any foreign embassy or embassies have been associated directly or indirectly with the activities of the FLQ? I realize there may be some difficulties in this regard, but can the Prime Minister indicate one way or another whether this has taken place?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no information that there is any association of foreign embassies in this activity.

ADDITIONAL ORDERS IN COUNCIL UNDER WAR MEASURES ACT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether any Orders in Council other than the one which the House has seen have been passed under the War Measures Act or whether any other Orders in Council are contemplated under the act?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The answer to both questions is no, Mr. Speaker. I would remind the hon. member that we did undertake, I believe in my statement on Friday, that if or when we had to make amendments to the regulations we would bring them before the House forthwith so that the House could take cognizance of them.

LACK OF FRENCH-SPEAKING MEMBERS OF ARMED FORCES ASSIGNED TO SECURITY DUTY IN HULL

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister inform the House whether the military personnel now on duty in Quebec will come under provincial police authority?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is a question of law, but, provided hon. members will bear with me, I would say yes, the armed forces were called out following a request from the Attorney General of Quebec. Therefore, they are under the general authority of the Attorney General, not so much as armed forces but as peace officers.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

The government is giving protection to the leaders of the political parties and to some diplomats. I thank him for this.

Until this morning, I was under the protection of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and Hull municipal police. But this morning the guards were replaced by Canadian forces members. I would ask the Prime Minister whether it is normal that, in Hull, I be given guards who do not speak a word of French, when my wife and my constituents do not speak English? Could the Minister of National Defence not do something so that we could be protected in Hull by someone who speaks French?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we have taken note of the remarks of the hon. member in that regard. I took measures to have the English-speaking soldiers replaced today by some who speak French. I must tell the House that, as everyone knows, French-speaking soldiers were in great demand in Montreal. That is why English-speaking detachments were sent to Ottawa. However, we have made the change requested by the hon. member.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INTRODUCTION OF ADDITIONAL MEASURES TO DEAL WITH UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance regarding the report of the Economic Council of Canada which was released yesterday. In view of the council's statement that rates of unemployment in Canada are unacceptably high, indeed, the highest in any of the more industrially advanced nations of the world, does the government intend in the near future to introduce any other measures to deal with the situation in addition to the items the minister outlined in the speech he made during the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): We are, of course, keeping the matter constantly under review. If there are any further measures we shall announce them in the House.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Having regard to the statement by the Economic Council of Canada to the effect that Canada's rate of growth is less than half what is required to maintain even a reasonable rate of employment, and that this involves a loss in potential wealth production of $3 billion to $5 billion a year, does the government intend to do anything about the recommendation of the council that there is need for growth measures particularly in the fields of housing, pollution control and transportation? May we anticipate some statement from the minister in the near future in line with the recommendations of the Economic Council in this respect?

Mr. Benson: We are, of course, interested in speeding up economic growth in Canada and we do announce measures from time to time in this connection.

SPECIAL ECONOMIC STIMULATION PROGRAM

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Does the government have in effect a program known as the special economic stimulation program? If so, can the minister tell us what this program entails?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have never used that term.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, may I address a supplmentary question to the minister responsible for manpower and immigration. The other day the minister said he would check and advise whether or not the manpower department had sent out a circular advising manpower offices to curtail additional facilities—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether this should be considered as a supplementary question. Perhaps the hon. member might ask that as a separate question. I will come to him in a few moments. I believe the hon. member for St. John's East wishes to ask a supplementary.

Mr. McGrath: Does the government have in effect at the present time a program designed to stimulate employment by pumping additional funds into public works in Canada, and is this program known as the special economic stimulation program?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, it is not known by that name to me. We certainly have a program which I mentioned last week under which we are putting additional moneys into public works.

HOUSING

INCENTIVE BONUS FOR WINTER CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I address a supplementary question to the minister in charge of housing. In view of the increasingly gloomy picture house builders are facing regarding sales this winter, is the minister planning, together with the Minister of Labour, to reintroduce a monetary form of incentive bonus for winter house construction, thereby giving an incentive to builders, realtors and buyers?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Alexander: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members are trying, I suggest, to ask supplementary questions which do not really relate to the original question asked. I think these questions ought to be asked in due course as separate questions.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA—CANADIAN POSITION ON ADMISSION TO UNITED NATIONS—APPOINTMENT OF AMBASSADOR

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It has to do with a matter that will come before the United Nations shortly, namely, a resolution to the effect that Communist China shall be admitted to the United Nations. Does the government of Canada intend to follow the course it has followed in the past, that such a resolution constitutes an important question and thereby requires more than a bare majority for acceptance?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs dealt with this question last week.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask the Prime Minister, then, whether there is any basis for the suggestion that the government is giving consideration to or has already decided that Professor Paul Lin will be appointed ambassador to Red China, as he is a Canadian-born Chinese who visits Red China and who, when writing about "our country," refers to Communist China?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, several times in the past year or two the right hon. member has been concerned about this friend of his, Paul Lin.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He is the Prime Minister's friend, not mine.

Mr. Trudeau: I can assure the right hon. gentleman that we do not name ambassadors on a patronage basis, even if recommended by the right hon. gentleman.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, when this government makes appointments one can be assured that they are patronage appointments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the right hon. gentleman has a supplementary question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I asked whether or not Lin, who has made it plain that he is a revolutionary, is being considered for appointment. That was a simple question. When it comes to friendship, the association between the Prime Minister and this man in the past has been such that I am surprised—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I know the right hon. gentleman has said this a few times. I assure him, of course, that I do not know Paul Lin and that I never met him. I should like the right hon. member to state to me, on my question of privilege, where he got this information and why he thinks Mr. Lin is a friend of mine—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: —or is he just interested in telling lies to the House?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Trudeau: Is it a lie or not?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a most unusual question of privilege.

Mr. Trudeau: Is it a lie or not?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FINANCE

UNEVEN MOVEMENT OF MONEY SUPPLY—REVIEW OF MONETARY POLICY

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Would the minister tell us what steps he is taking, along with the Governor of the Bank of Canada to review the procedures and to establish a monetary policy that will avoid the uneven movement in the money supply, as indicated in the report of the Economic Council of Canada, which has led to considerable disruption in economic policies in the country during the past year?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the governor and I discuss this matter every week.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It may be discussed every week, but what are they doing to even out some of the uneven applications of the policy with the results pointed out by the Economic Council?

INTEREST RATES—MEETINGS WITH CHARTERED BANKS—RESTORATION OF CEILING UNDER ACT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Inasmuch as the Economic Council of Canada states that the exorbitantly high interest rates in Canada are the main factor in holding back economic growth, may I ask the minister if he is contemplating any meetings with the representatives of the chartered banks to deal with this matter or, failing that, is he considering the advisability of introducing legislation to impose a ceiling on interest rates under the Bank Act as was the case formerly?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

INTERPROVINCIAL MARKETING—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE TO SUPREME COURT—PURCHASE OF SURPLUS EGGS, BROILERS AND TURKEYS

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the Supreme Court's rejection of Manitoba's application to have certain marketing board regulations respecting interprovincial trade brought before that court for a decision, will the government, through the Department of Justice, now initiate some action to bring these regulations before the Supreme Court?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice replied to a question of that nature last week.

Mr. Baldwin: He waffled on it.

Mr. Thomson: As the federal government has taken no action with regard to the legal question involving marketing board legislation and in view of the urgency of the situation with regard to chicken and egg prices, will the government not consider some form of surplus purchasing of eggs, broilers and turkeys to help to solve the problem immediately?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, requests have been made for that kind of action. I should draw to the attention of the hon. members that I am ready to pass the marketing legislation any day that the House indicates it is ready to do so.

Mr. Baldwin: Why does the government not use the War Measures Act?

Mr. Olson: Why does the hon. member not help us to maintain unity?

FARM MACHINERY PRICES—INVESTIGATION BY DEPARTMENT—REFERENCE OF BARBER COMMISSION REPORT TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Inasmuch as the move to float the Canadian dollar has not resulted in a corresponding decrease in the prices to the farmer of farm machinery and repair parts, would the minister say whether his department is conducting an investigation into this matter and undertake to make a statement on motions?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, Dr. Barber has indicated to me, and I think I conveyed this message to the House some time ago, that in his final report, which we expect shortly, there will be a chapter dealing with repair parts, services and prices. I presume that he has the very same situation the hon. member alluded to under review.

Mr. Mazankowski: Since the Barber report has been in the hands of interested parties for some considerable length of time and as a fair amount of public debate has gone on, can the minister say whether any consideration is being given to referring the Barber report to the Standing Committee on Agriculture, as well as other matters relating to farm machinery prices?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the government has not received the report of the Barber Commission. What we have received are special research reports on specific subject matters. The report and recommendations of the Barber Commission as such have not been presented to the government.

[Later:]

Mr. Mazankowski: I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister received any representations to the effect that the floating of the Canadian dollar has not resulted in a decrease in the prices of farm machinery?

Mr. Olson: No, not in that exact context—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is not in order. It is not sufficient to ask whether the minister has or has not received representations.

REPRESENTATION AT AGRICULTURAL CONGRESS

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, may I also direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the announced intention of the government to hold an agricultural congress in the near future and the importance of that congress in view of the condition of Canadian agriculture, can the minister indicate whether all agricultural organizations will be represented and if an invitation will be extended to the members of the Standing Committee on Agriculture?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt in my mind that the members of the standing committee will be invited to attend, if not as delegates, at least as observers. I believe that was the arrangement worked out the last time, and it is what the members prefer. In so far as all agricultural organizations being invited is concerned, I cannot give an undertaking that every one of them will be invited. I know that we are trying to arrange for about 350 delegates. These invitations will be distributed as fairly as we can through the farm organizations in the country.

NATIONAL SECURITY

EXISTENCE OF FLQ CELL IN PARIS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

A few days ago an FLQ cell manifested itself in Paris, predicting that the organization will carry out further acts of violence in the coming weeks, and this, outside the province of Quebec, directing their attacks against air and railway transportation in Canada.

Has the government taken or is it taking steps to locate the Paris cell and does the government also intend to adopt measures to prevent acts of violence and sabotage in Canada's other provinces?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall see that the Solicitor General be informed of the facts reported by the hon. member.

Personally I would tend to believe those people belong to the "Pantoufle" cell set up by Michel Chartrand.

RESEARCH

THE ARCTIC—CO-OPERATION WITH UNITED STATES IN SCIENTIFIC STUDIES

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question arising out of the summary and recommendations of the seminar between Canadian and United States scientists with regard to Arctic research problems recently tabled in the House. I address my question to the President of the Treasury Board who reports to the House on scientific matters unless, because of the fact that social sciences are included, I should more properly address it to the Prime Minister. Has the government made a decision on whether it will accept the recommendation of this report for joint scientific studies by Canadian and United States scientists? If not, is the government seized of this matter? May we expect shortly a government decision on whether we will undertake co-operative research with the United States on the question of the management of the Arctic and the future of its population?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): As I think members are aware, Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions going on for some time with the United States scientific authorities in connection with joint co-operative projects. I think it is realized that we both have a stake in the Arctic. Approaching these larger ecological problems by using the combined resources of both countries is likely to produce more effective results than our going it alone. We are conscious that in respect of the Arctic we have a particular and special proprietary interest. With this in mind we are continuing the examination of possible joint projects.

HOUSING

ROCHDALE COLLEGE—TABLING OF FEASIBILITY STUDY—AMENDED MORTGAGE ARRANGEMENTS

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): My question is for the minister responsible for housing. Is the minister prepared to table the feasibility study with respect to the operations of Rochdale College?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the situation of Rochdale College is being examined very carefully, in great depth and in consultation with others involved at the present time. I hope to be able to disclose the details of that examination and the possible decisions that will flow at the earliest possible time. That might be a matter of two or three weeks from now.

Mr. Ryan: Will the minister also be prepared to reveal the amended mortgage arrangements with the college at such time?

Mr. Andras: Yes, indeed, Mr. Speaker.

GRAIN

PROCESSING OF APPLICATIONS FOR PERMIT BOOKS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I have a question for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration who answers for the Wheat Board. It is now four months since applications were originally made by some producers to the Wheat Board for permit books and they are still waiting for them. How much more time is necessary before these applications are processed? Will the minister ensure that the issuing of these permit books will be expedited, because these producers cannot now make any deliveries?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): If the hon. member has a specific case where it is taking this length of time, I will be pleased to receive information about it and to look into it. Certainly the bulk of the permit books for which applications were received in good time have in fact gone to the producers. Indeed, many of the late applications have been serviced as well. I will be pleased to receive information on a specific case.

MANPOWER

ALLEGED CURTAILMENT OF ADULT TRAINING COURSES

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): I wish to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration if he would answer the question I directed to him on October 9 concerning a directive that may or may not have been issued by his department to the Manpower offices asking them to curtail applications for adult training for unemployed people in view of the great burden on the budget.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I have checked this matter with my officials, Mr. Speaker. Of course they do not know anything about such a directive. The hon. member should know from the announcement by the Minister of Finance to the House some days ago that not only has the budget not been curtailed but that there is additional money available for the purpose of manpower retraining this year.

HARBOURS

ESTABLISHMENT OF PORT AUTHORITY AT CHURCHILL—LOCAL REPRESENTATION

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Can the minister say whether a port authority has been set up for the Port of Churchill under the national port authority concept?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, no authority has been established. However, I have been in communication with the Premier of Manitoba and have indicated to him that we would be pleased to consider Churchill in terms of the application of the new proposals now before various ports across Canada. I will be meeting with the Premier of Manitoba and those whom he designates in a comparatively short time regarding this matter.

Mr. Simpson: When preparations are made to set up this authority, will the minister give full consideration to having local representation on the Churchill port authority?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, one of the main objects of the new plan is to ensure a good deal of local autonomy. That will be the case in Churchill and elsewhere.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

LEGISLATION TO IMPROVE PENSIONS OF HONG KONG VETERANS AND WIDOWS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the complete unanimity which has been evident at every stage concerning the proposals to improve the pensions of Hong Kong veterans and their widows, can the minister say whether we might expect legislation implementing these proposals to be before the House at an early date?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, legislation is being prepared in that connection. I am not in a position to anticipate exactly when this legislation will be before the House but as far as I am concerned, the sooner the better.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If there is going to be any unusual delay with regard to the whole question of veterans legislation, could there be early introduction of the legislation regarding Hong Kong veterans?

Mr. Dubé: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe there will be any unusual delay. I expect this legislation will be before the House at an early stage. I hope that at that time we will have the co-operation of all hon. members, including the hon. member who asked the question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You will.

TRADE

PROTEST AGAINST IMPOSITION OF QUOTAS BY UNITED STATES ON CERTAIN IMPORTS FROM CANADA

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. This matter was to be referred to him by the Minister of National Revenue on October 14th. Perhaps I can repeat my question. Has the government made any representations to the United States government by way of protesting trade bill H.R. 18970 now before Congress, which proposes to impose quotas on several Canadian imports that are vital to our economy?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there are a number of bills before the United States Congress at this time. It is impossible to comment on them en bloc because some parts of them are favourable and others are not. With respect to those that are not favourable to our trade relations and, we believe, to world trade patterns, we have made the proper representations and drawn attention to the effect of these possible legislative acts on Canadian trade, in particular with respect to mink skins which the hon. member has in mind.

Mr. Noble: Has the government given consideration to introducing measures to assist industries that will suffer from the passing of the Mills bill?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I believe it is premature to think of that now, the bills not having been passed.

TRANSPORT

FERRY SERVICE BETWEEN NEWFOUNDLAND AND LABRADOR—ADEQUACY OF SHIP AND FACILITIES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Would the minister advise the House whether he has had submitted to him a report dealing with the unsatisfactory conditions on the ferry service between Newfoundland and Labrador, and will any corrective action be taken in view of the recent accident?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have had a report with regard to the seaworthiness of the vessel concerned. My officials advise that they have checked her out thoroughly in accordance with all the procedures of the regulations and that the vessel is seaworthy. The conclusion subsequent to that was that most of the problem arises from the fact that the ship is not wholly perfect in terms of design for ferry service, and there are also difficulties with the facilities at each end of the run. I have asked for a special and further study of these questions and I will be glad to keep the hon. member informed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ST. JOHN'S NFLD.—INVESTIGATION OF ACCIDENT INVOLVING SNOW CLEARING EQUIPMENT

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Before I proceed, may I congratulate the minister on the honour bestowed upon him last week by Memorial University when he received an honorary law degree.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Carter: May I ask the minister whether he is now in a position to say if the investigation promised last year into the accident near St. John's involving some Canadian National snow removal equipment has been completed and, if so, what has been the outcome of the investigation?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his kind words. I will now have to reduce some of my general mistrust of lawyers, under the circumstances. As for the question, this is a matter for the Canadian Transport Commission. The report has not yet reached my desk, but I will be glad to make inquiries and to provide an answer as fast as I can.

HOUSING

HAMILTON—AMOUNT OF MONEY FOR LOW-INCOME HOMES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing. I gave him notice of the question last week. It concerns the $18 million that was promised to Hamilton and district. I believe there has been some indication that the amount has now been reduced to $12 million, the balance having been promised to other parts of the country. Has the minister a statement for me in this regard?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I regret that perhaps due to my absence last week on official duties this question was not brought to my notice. I will correct that situation forthwith and give an answer to the hon. gentleman as soon as possible.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would hope that the minister would give this matter his immediate attention because it is causing some problems in the city of Hamilton and district.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INVESTIGATION OF SHOOTING OF YOUTH NEAR SASKATOON

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. In view of the fact that a 15-year-old youth was shot to death near Saskatoon last week by an officer of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, can the minister say whether his department is conducting an investigation into the incident?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Solicitor General supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville. When the Solicitor General is investigating the incident referred to by the hon. member for Yorkton-

Melville, will he also investigate changes in the description of the incident in reports which were attributed to the RCMP? I ask this question in view of the fact that I understand it was first denied and subsequently admitted that the death occurred as a result of a shot fired by an RCMP officer.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to do that. I noticed one discrepancy of some significance in the newspaper reports, and I will be very glad to see that the question the hon. member has now raised is considered and dealt with when the other question asked earlier is being answered.

NATIONAL SECURITY

PROTECTION OF CERTAIN PERSONS WHEN THEY LEAVE OTTAWA

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It has to do with the security arrangements that have been made and have been in effect for several days, under which either armed forces members or Royal Canadian Mounted Police officers are acting as security guards. Do these security measures apply to the individuals to whom that protection has been accorded when they leave Ottawa or do they not apply? I am simply asking for information so that those who are subject to the security measures that have been taken, which incidentally are most commendable, will know the facts.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the arrangements vary from person to person. If the right hon. gentleman is interested in knowing what type of security he deserves, he can consult with somebody in the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister shows today that mean truculence that is not in keeping with Parliament.

INDUSTRY

NORTHWESTERN QUEBEC—MEASURES TO DEVELOP NEW MINES

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, there is a question I would like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Is the hon. Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in a position to say whether the government is taking any action to expand the mining industry in Northwestern Quebec in particular and to open new mines?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): This question is really a little too broad, Mr. Speaker. I will certainly discuss this matter with the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and report to the hon. member on any mining developments at present being carried out in that area and on whatever action has been taken concerning other projects.

FISHERIES

GEORGE'S BANK—CLOSURE OF HADDOCK FISHING

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Fisheries whether he knows of any nations other than the ICNAF member nations that are fishing on George's Bank, and can he tell the House whether the government has reached agreement with such countries in regard to closing haddock fishing on George's Bank from October 23 to the end of the year?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, the haddock fishery is closed to all nations. They are all observing the sustained yield quotas instituted this spring.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NORTHLAND NAVIGATION COMPANY—PUBLISHING OF CONCILIATION BOARD REPORT

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Labour or the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour. May I ask either gentleman whether he will inquire into the long delay in making public the report of the conciliation board on negotiations conducted between Northland Navigation Company, on the one hand, on the coast of British Columbia and the SIU and the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers on the other, a report that has been hanging fire since mid-July?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to make inquiries and advise my hon. friend.

GRAIN

AVAILABILITY OF SPACE FOR DELIVERY OF HIGHER GRADES

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in his capacity as the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. Taking into consideration the fact that we are now entering the third month of the new crop year and that producers have been unable to deliver any of the top three grades of grain because of lack of space, could the minister say what action is being taken or can be taken to alleviate the situation?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the only extent to which the hon. member's question is accurate when he says that the problem is due to lack of space is the fact that the space available is being filled by barley and Durum and lower grades of wheat which are required to be moved to the considerable markets for them. The Wheat Board has under consideration the appropriateness of opening quotas for the higher grades of wheat and is daily watching the space situation and the availability of space for these grades.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Monday, October 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel, for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, while members are leaving the House, may I say that I am sorry to see that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) is leaving as well, as has his parliamentary secretary. This gives me a wonderful opportunity to continue some comments that I started last night in connection with our economic and financial position.

I had been reviewing some of the causes of the malaise that is current in our nation, and specifically the tragic fact that we have stratified our society into small, very tightly knit groups. As a result, the individual finds it impossible to express himself or to gain any position in society without waiting a long time trying to break into that group. I spoke specifically of association such as law societies, medical groups, manufacturers associations, unions, trade guilds and all such things.

• (12:00 noon)

The answer is a very difficult one, but it has to be found and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is in the best position to find it. He said originally that the new constitution would have to include certain rights for individuals. I suggest that of paramount importance for inclusion in the new constitution is the right of an individual to practice a profession, a trade or a calling, and the right of persons to enter into business without asking or begging leave of a small, tiny group. Standards of qualification for individuals in Canada should be set by the state, not by those people who are interested in minimizing the numbers in various groups. This is what must be done, and I hope the Prime Minister includes that in the new constitution.

It has often been said that nothing is so important to the people of Canada as the economic picture, and that is true. We have in the past suffered almost any indignity without too much furore, but our pocketbooks are of prime importance. No matter how strong a leader or how good his government is, if there is unemployment, insecurity and a lack of opportunity that government is going to go down to defeat. This is not strange. We are very cautious people. We like savings, we like life insurance policies and we like security. When the Minister of Finance said there was going to be additional unemployment, that statement struck fear into the hearts of most Canadians because no one knows who is going to be next. In Canada, unemployment is a degrading thing.

Therefore, let me make a suggestion to the minister. He said he was going to lift the monetary restraints and he is trying to do so. I think it would be a drastic mistake to remove all restraints. If financial restraints are lifted, the only result will be more inflation. This is the time for selective lifting of restraints. The Bank of Canada has already reduced the interest rate. There is more money available. What have the commercial or chartered banks done? They have put the red convertible loan advertisements back on the television because this type of lending is more profitable to them. This consumer credit involves a rate of interest up to 32 per cent. For what more could you ask?

This is the time for the finance minister to consider a new approach entirely, and that approach is this. What is it that the banks hold of great importance? I suggest the answer is reserves. In other words, at the moment the banks have to put 7 per cent or 9 per cent into the Bank of Canada for reserves. I suggest to the Minister of Finance that he now consider dividing reserves into two categories. If the banks lend money to business and industry to replace their capital goods or equipment, thereby creating employment, their reserves will be 2 per cent. However, the reserve required in respect of consumer credit will be 20 per cent or 30 per cent. In that way, the Bank of Canada could control the chartered banks so that they would put out the money where it is needed, and at the moment it is needed most by industry for replacement of capital equipment in order to become more productive.

In our economy, the minister should place more emphasis on productivity. I do not think the money he indicated would be used for additional welfare will do much good. I would much rather see that money spent on retraining programs. The money that is to be allocated for giveaways should be transferred to retaining programs through the Department of Manpower and Immigration in order that we can better equip our people to become more productive.

The area development program has always been questionable because it is founded on the idea that the administrators know how and what to do for certain areas in order that those areas can become self-sufficient. I suggest that the emphasis be changed and placed on market and production research. In today's sophisticated research experience, each area in Canada has a certain product that, it can most efficiently produce. Many areas have services that they can best perform. This matter requires the advice of experts in the field, not bureaucratic experts in the government. Such decisions require the advice of manufacturers and people in market research in order to guide development.

Let me give you an example. Some time ago, and I am talking about seven, eight, or nine years ago, a shipyard was started in the Collingwood area. At about the same time, Mr. Jozo Weider of the Blue Mountain ski area was ordering ski lifts. When we talk about a ski lift, we are talking about a $200,000 investment. The only available source to this day, quite frankly, is France. The ski lifts are manufactured there and brought here. Jozo and I went over to the shipyard and said: Look, you have the steel, the pipes and the welders, why don't you manufacture ski lifts? Jozo said that he would be their first customer. The answer was: Oh, good heavens no. We are boatbuilders, you know, we don't touch ski lifts. There you have a perfect example of the static thinking which is common to many of our industries.

What we require is government assistance to a group that will dare to follow good advice from market research experts. At this time Collingwood would have been as busy as any place in Canada manufacturing ski lifts, not only for Canada but for the United States as well. Instead of that, to this day we are still importing ski lifts from France. This is the type of development that is necessary but it will not come about as a result of the boards and commissions we have, or through the efforts of the department which is now attempting to deal with the problem. This task has to be given to individuals who know the business and the results of market and production research.

Let me now give the minister another bit of advice. At the moment the country, the communities and the people are sitting on a razor's edge. They do not know what to do. If we tell them to anticipate trouble, we are going to have trouble. For the minister and for this government to say that we are completely overshadowed by the United States economy is nonsense. We can survive independently. In fact, we can do better than the United States in every phase but it requires the minister and this government to make a statement and a move of confidence.

Psychologically, businessmen and entrepreneurs are waiting for some sign of confidence. They are not getting it from Mr. Young and they are not getting it from this government. They certainly are not getting it from the advisers to this government. I want to say a word about these advisers. Sooner or later, the minister has to recognize that the present government advisers are old-time economic thinkers. They left their schools and universities some 30 years ago and now find themselves in a static milieu. They talk to each other and not to anyone else. They have firm policies that are ancient, decrepit and absolutely useless. They believe in policies of economic restraints, so called confinement of capital expansion and policies of restriction rather than policies of expansion.

It is up to the minister now to develop new methods and new advisers. We have some in this House. We have the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Harries), a man who is experienced in industry and economics, and who is not hidebound by the old theories that circulate around Ottawa itself. We have the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Smerchanski), who at times is a little radical but nevertheless has proved his theories by himself. He has made a remarkable success of his life and is in daily contact with business as is the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona and the minister from Winnipeg South. There are many members here who could advise the minister in a confidential way. The minister must develop a method by which he can take advice from persons, other than those in his department, who will seriously guard the government's position and not allow anyone else to befuddle his mind. This would be a bureaucratic tragedy. We must take into consideration new economists like Miss Cohen and Mr. Weldon from Montreal, people with new ideas, and not the old Bryce ideas. Mr. Bryce has lost his job as deputy minister and will not be financial adviser to the cabinet.

The minister must take a new approach so that he can benefit from the views of people who are active in industry and business. I see that my time is almost up. I should like to remind the government that we need not preach gloom, but that if we preach confidence we must take radical steps. We must introduce reform measures in giant strides and not in little, mincing steps. The Prime Minister must remember he was elected not to be cautious. In the past, we have had cautious prime ministers. He was elected to be daring and it is up to his government and his ministers to be daring.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, as members of the House know only too well, during the past two weeks the whole country has been deeply shocked by the tragic kidnapping of Mr. Cross and Mr. Laporte and most recently by the cold-blooded, callous murder of Mr. Laporte. As we are aware, on Friday at 4 a.m. the government invoked the War Measures Act to provide the forces of justice with the powers required to rescue, if possible, the two hostages and to stamp out the forces of evil from our country. Mr. Speaker, there are those who say that these sweeping measures should not have been taken by the government because they would have the result of restricting our democratic freedoms. I believe one of the most important democratic freedoms is the freedom from fear; the right of a man and his family to walk the streets and live in their homes free from fear that they could be suddenly whisked away by terrorists and held for ranson, and if that ransom is not forthcoming brutally murdered.

Had the government introduced legislation asking for only the restrictive powers it needed to deal with this tragic and very serious situation before the police forces moved in to make the arrests and apprehend those whom they suspected of having some connection with this series of events, those criminals would have been well advised long before it was possible for the police to make their move. Then, of course, by the time this move was made those criminals would have been many miles away. We in the official opposition believe, therefore, that the sudden invocation of the War Measures Act early Friday morning to give the forces of justice the element of surprise which was so badly needed to assist them in their task was completely justified. It is for that reason we have solidly backed the move the government has made. We hope sincerely, along with all Canadians, that the invocation of the War Measures Act giving the government very wide and sweeping powers to enable the forces of justice to operate completely freely and effectively will lead to Mr. Cross' safe return to his family in the near future as well as to the blotting out of the FLQ menace from the face of this land for all time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak for a few moments about a matter of great importance to this country. I refer to the fight against pollution. When the Canada Water Act was passed four months ago, the country believed that at long last we would see the government begin to take action to effectively combat pollution, which action the minister assured us was only awaiting the passage of the bill. But, after four months of waiting, there has been no sign of action, nor is there any indication that any will emerge in the near future. In strong contrast to the lethargic attitude of the Canadian government to this very pressing problem is the kind of action taken in the United States. On July 9 President Nixon announced plans for a new super agency to co-ordinate the government's fight against pollution and to clean up and protect the environment. The president put teeth in this new agency in the form of a budget for the current financial year of $1.4 billion. This budget makes it possible for the new agency to immediately implement antipollution measures across the country.

Since the gross national product of the United States is fourteen times that of Canada, a comparable budget for antipollution operations in this country would be $100 million a year. However, our Canada Water Act, a toothless tiger if I ever saw one, provides no funds for grants to finance antipollution projects. Although the act permits loans to be made in certain circumstances, and small amounts of money to be made available for studies, no funds have so far been appropriated for either and there is no indication that any appropriations will be made. A very large part of the $1.4 billion which the United States government has allotted for the first year to fight pollution will be used for loans to be made to industries and municipalities to help them finance the usually high cost of antipollution machinery. The reason such financial assistance is necessary in both the United States and Canada is that small and medium sized industries and municipalities simply cannot afford the large outlays necessary to finance this expensive machinery. Such expenditures are non-revenue producing and therefore are very difficult to justify to shareholders and ratepayers. If the money to buy such machinery is not forthcoming, the machinery will simply not be installed and pollution will continue to run rampant in our country.

In order to make it possible for industries and municipalities which are polluting our air and our water to purchase the expensive machinery they need, I suggest that we employ the same method which we used during wartime to make it possible for industry to convert to war production. At that time the federal government made available low interest loans on a long term basis and allowed industry to write off the cost over a relatively short period of time. This made it easy for industries to switch to war production, and the results were, as we know, spectacular.

Loans bearing 5 per cent interest to be paid off over 15 years with a three year write off period will enable industries and municipalities, particularly small industries and municipalities which have not yet established a high credit rating to purchase the antipollution machinery they need without imposing a crippling financial burden upon them. The government should now announce that $100 million will be made available for such loans during the next 12 months of operation of the Canada Water Act so that an effective antipollution program across the country can become a reality. After the first year of operation, it will be apparent whether this amount should be increased or decreased for the next year.

I, like all Members of Parliament I believe, was glad to learn from the Speech from the Throne that the government intends to establish a department to "co-ordinate and consolidate our antipollution efforts in an effective fashion". It is to be sincerely hoped that this co-ordinating effort will end the overlapping of responsibility and the confusion which have greatly reduced the effectiveness of antipollution efforts in this country.

I am glad to see that the minister who will be in charge of this department is in the House at the moment, and also that he is paying close attention to what I am saying. I say to him that he must not only co-ordinate the antipollution efforts of the five federal departments which presently deal with it but must also work closely with provincial ministers to ensure that the country's efforts are as well co-ordinated as possible.

One of the best ways to bring this about would be to persuade the provinces to adopt a uniform antipollution code which each would put into effect in his own jurisdiction. Such a code would remove the pressure on the province not to crack down on a polluting industry for fear that it might move to another province where antipollution regulations were not so strongly enforced. It would also make it impossible for an industry to play one province against another when deciding where to locate in the first place.

One of the minister's important functions must be to work closely with the U.S. government, and the governments of the States, with which Canada shares common waters to ensure that the legislation on both sides of these waters is as similar as possible. It is obvious that bringing in effective measures by governments on the Canadian side will be ineffective if similar legislation is not enacted on the U.S. side, and vice-versa. As we know only too well, pollution does not stop in midstream.

During the annual meeting between the U.S. and Canadian parliamentarians in Washington last March, the subject of pollution control was given the number one priority for discussion. There was complete unanimity that similar legislation must be enacted on both sides of the boundary if protective pollution control is to become a reality. Both sides passed on this unanimous opinion to their respective governments.

In conclusion, I would like to say I am confident that if we take the steps I have outlined, we will eliminate a great deal of the confusion which today is making our efforts to clean up the environment largely ineffective and will make it possible for industries and municipalities to start installing the machinery they need to eliminate pollutants from waste before they are discharged into the environment.

Mr. Jean-R. Roy (Timmins): Last week it was my privilege and pleasure to accompany the minister responsible for housing on a visit to most of the huge territory of northwest Ontario. We travelled to many communities and discussed many subjects with many individuals, but the unprecedented events which were taking place in the city of Montreal, the province of Quebec and in Ottawa, could not help but become the most frequent and serious subject matter of our deliberations. Our citizens in that part of the country, as in all other parts, were shocked practically to disbelief at what was happening in Montreal. Not one person who spoke on our tour expressed disapproval of the government decisions that were taken as events unfolded. Indeed, the invocation of the War Measures Act at the request of the Montreal and Quebec governments, was welcomed with the largest possible degree of approval. I was left with the clear impression that these Canadian citizens would have lost confidence in the capability of the government to govern had this decision not been taken at that time.

Even as I detected at times in northwestern Ontario some feeling of detachment and of distance from the problem, I also felt the concern for and the bitterness at the brash and arrogant performance of the FLQ terrorists, the leaders and members in our communications media, and the stupidity of the media in providing these people with a platform from which they could disseminate their hatred and their objectives of destruction. When we returned to Timmins, the feeling of remoteness from the events was completely dispelled because these areas are heavily bilingual with a large number of Canadians who are French speaking. The significance of the frightening events in Quebec touch our people much more directly because these families have direct blood and racial ties which have been established over generations and remain ever so strong, binding them with extraordinary firmness, especially during crisis and adversity.

Here, in the heart of northeastern Ontario, our backgrounds and roots are from Quebec but our characters and mentalities have been tempered and developed in Ontario. Our feelings are of indescribable sadness and gloom in this crisis for our compatriots in Quebec, feelings of a brother who has lost his favourite sister, feelings of a frustrated onlooker's terrible concern for the series of ever worsening developments. This series of developments has lasted for so many years it has created feelings of deep anxiety at the seeming irreversibility of them. There is incredibility at the paradoxical situation of a people in semi revolt against the church which was once their most sacred institution, at large numbers of teachers who prostitute their noble purpose of educating youth for the scurrilous political indoctrination of youth, at students wishing to destroy an educational system which was practically non-existent when they were born, and at labour leaders who are taking away the individuality of the men who were the most individualistic in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we French Canadians from Northern Ontario feel deeply confused and concerned about our brothers. We are not ashamed because the FLQ assassins do not deserve to be called French Canadians. They are, as someone said, wild beasts. No other characteristic, be it racial, national or other could have the least importance or supplant this description.

We are rather confused that these events should take place in Quebec. We want to reaffirm our support, our confidence and our encouragement to Quebecers and assure them of our understanding and solidarity.

Quebecers, the people from Northern Ontario always remain sympathetic and grateful to you in these extremely difficult hours. Be assured that you are not alone in your misfortune. Your fellow countrymen, across Canada regardless of race or language are with you.

[English]

Along with all Canadians in all provinces, Mr. Speaker, I learned with terrible grief and sadness of the news of the Hon. Pierre Laporte's death. My immediate reaction was one of such anger that I might have been unbalanced. Yet how do you keep a proper balance, reason and judgment, when confronted with such senseless actions? How do you detect justice and order, values and meaning when confronted with such events? How, and when do you return to rational existence? When do you disperse the fear and eliminate the hate? How do you rediscover the meaning and understanding of life, society, humanity, good, evil?

Anger is bad. No human being should have to live with anger and hate in his heart. If I felt deep resentment when some of the opposition leaders and members were playing politics with a situation the like of which we have never seen in this country, when they stupidly refused to see the need for unity and the need for firm, immediate action to halt the destruction of our society, then I must say I felt absolute disgust when I saw the NDP members rise to vote against the motion proposed by the Prime Minister in order to restore sanity in Quebec, in order to crush the insidious revolutionary hands of murdering terrorists active in Quebec and most probably in the rest of Canada. These NDP members will have to answer to their constituents for their vote because by that vote they in fact extended their support to the murderers. They, in effect, encouraged these people—

Mr. Winch: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker; the hon. member has just brought into question the motivation behind not only the speeches but also the votes of members of this House. A vote was taken yesterday. The members of this group did not all vote as one but whether, Sir, as members of the N.D.P. or as members of this House of Commons, we voted one way or the other. We voted according to principle, conviction and conscience. And therefore, Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member says that because certain members of the House of Commons voted in a certain way they have aligned themselves with the murderers in Quebec, I say that that is a shameful statement. That is not permissible in this House of Commons. It should not only be withdrawn immediately but the New Democratic Party and all the members of this House of Commons have the right to insist on an apology as well as a retraction.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The Chair is in agreement with the main point made by the hon. member, if not with all of his remarks. I take this opportunity to read Standing Order 35, the latter part of which reads as follows:

No member may reflect upon any vote of the House, except for the purpose of moving that such vote be rescinded.

At this time, I think I should remind the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Roy) that he may comment on the situation and the events that have occurred, but he may not be permitted to reflect on the vote taken by this House or any position taken by members of the House. I think if he sticks to that he will abide by the rules of the House. As far as the other point made by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) is concerned about the withdrawal of the remarks, I am sure that the hon. member for Timmins in his further remarks might add some comments that might satisfy the hon. member for Vancouver East.

Mr. Winch: I am sorry, Sir; I am very sorry, but I think you will understand that I must get to my feet again. I am not seeking clarification by any further statements. I believe I have the right, and I must insist, that the hon. member now withdraw the remarks which he made, and the insinuations therein contained.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I see the exact point the hon. member for Vancouver East is making and I think I will agree with him. I will ask the hon. member for Timmins to withdraw that part of his remarks.

Mr. Roy (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to withdraw any part of my remarks that is contrary to the rules of the House, whichever part that may be.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Roy (Timmins): If this satisfies the hon. gentleman I shall try to continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Timmins.

[Mr. Roy (Timmins).]

Mr. Roy (Timmins): As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, is it any wonder that this party has never been able to obtain support from the electorate of Quebec? They have never understood the people of Quebec. They have never been concerned about them. They would now abandon them and throw them to the extreme socialists; the anarchists, the Maoists and the FLQ. No doubt chaos and disorder in Quebec would help the socialist cause. They thrive on that sort of adversity, but what a price for Canada to pay for the sake of cheap politics.

In addition, they hypocritically hide this gruesome gesture under the cloak of defence of individual liberties. This attitude is taken by people who have on so many occasions denied to others the rights and liberties which they claim for themselves, who on so many occasions would impose on others the morals that are theirs, who on so many occasions have taken unto themselves the decision of what is just and what is not, confusing justice with their own diabolical designs. Witness the civil disobedience of our laws and governments so often proposed by members of that party. Witness their disregard for our laws in so many labour confrontations and strikes. Witness their callousness and lack of human respect for workers who are not of their unions. Witness their fixation for criticism of non-socialist countries while approving by their silence all socialist dictatorships. Indeed, along with such misguided people as Levesque, Chartrand, Lemieux, Laberge, Pepin, and their leftist socialist friends, their leaders and members are the ones who sow the seed that gives birth and strength to the anarchists, the terrorists, the Maoists and the murderers. They are the ones who fan the flames of dissension and confrontation, who constantly twist the truth, who give tacit support to all sorts of extremes by their silence, who condone violence as a sometimes necessary activity in labour disputes—

• (12:40 p.m.)

Mr. Winch: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I am certain you have noted the remarks of the hon. member for Timmins. You have noted his references to the party which I have had the honour to represent in this House for the past 17 years and for 24 years before that in the British Columbia legislature.

An hon. Member: About time you left.

Mr. Winch: Shut up! He implied that because of our policies, our principles and our statements we were responsible for certain things that have taken place in this country.

Mr. Francis: On a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. There is already a point of order before the Chair. If the hon. member for Ottawa West wishes tc speak afterwards, he may do so.

Mr. Winch: I say that the allegations which have just been made by the hon. member are not such as can be made in this House of Commons at all, and that they should be withdrawn—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The Chair cannot permit the hon. member for Vancouver East to make a speech at this time. He should make his point of order if he has any complaint about what the hon. member has said, and that is all. Perhaps I should take the opportunity to say that the Chair listened to the remarks of the hon. member for Timmins and was worried at one point about whether there was not a danger of getting on to thin ice. However, listening closely, the Chair took it for granted that his remarks were not directed to any members of this House or to any party of this House. Maybe it is a question of grammar or syntax, but I think they were related to the group that is called the FLQ or to the revolutionaries. Maybe the Chair should leave it to the hon. member for Timmins to clarify his point; I am not certain as to the conclusion to which he was coming.

Mr. Winch: May I ask, Sir, that you read Hansard tomorrow.

Mr. Francis: On the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I listened carefully to the hon. member who has the floor and while he did retract those remarks to which objection was taken, possibly correctly, by the hon. member for Vancouver East, he has not since that time made any reference to the party or group to which the hon. member for Vancouver East belongs. In those circumstances, it is improper for the hon. member for Vancouver East to make an interjection.

Mr. Winch: Then you read Hansard tomorrow—uncorrected.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): As I said before, I would expect the hon. member for Timmins to clarify the point he has made, then we might not have to read Hansard tomorrow.

Mr. Winch: I would appreciate that immensely.

Mr. Roy (Timmins): Possibly I could clarify the matter by saying I was referring to the extreme socialists who are causing such disturbances in our country today, wherever they might sit.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member implies that his remarks might refer to a member of this House, and this the Chair cannot permit. If he means "sitting anywhere in Canada or the world" I might take a different view, but if there is somewhere in his remarks a reference to members sitting in this House, the Chair cannot accept it.

Mr. Winch: Hear, hear.

Mr. Roy (Timmins): I am puzzled by the fact that the hon. member should see himself as an extreme socialist. I will say my observations applied to no member of this House. I will except members of this House—while they are sitting in this House.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Roy (Timmins): It is these extreme socialists, as I say, who condone violence as a sometimes necessary activity in labour disputes, who condone the destruction of property in the same disputes and then scream for justice having derided the laws. They may stop short of condoning sedition, they may stop short of condoning insurrection or treason, but there the terrorists start, continuing their work beyond the bounds of civilized society, beyond the intentions of these so-called reformers, but helped by their advance to the brink of disaster and social impropriety.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, the socialists have misread the feelings of our citizens. The vacillation of these people would bring more terror, but Canadians want this terror to stop; their hypocritical, confusing words would bring confusion, but Canadians want clarity; their sinister politics would bring help for the terrorists, but Canadians want these terrorists eliminated; their soft-pedalling would bring more senseless murders, but Canadians are sick of all violence; their desires would weaken authority, but Canadians want a restoration of authority; their bleeding hearts would bring anarchy and the termination of our freedoms, but Canadians want their liberty, with law and order.

For my part, I pledge myself to be ever vigilant and watchful for any unnecessary encroachment on the rights of Canadian citizens which could result from the application of the War Measures Act, but I have no hesitation in supporting what is necessary in order to stamp out these murders and terrorists with their violence and hideous crimes. Thank heaven we had a government with the courage and wisdom to act.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): May I say at the outset, Mr. Speaker, how pleased I am to have this opportunity to take part in the debate in this House. I should like to extend my congratulations to the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel) and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) upon the honour bestowed upon them in being chosen as mover and seconder of the Address. I had the opportunity to serve with both these hon. members on parliamentary committees, and I must say I found them very good members to work with, men who were certainly acting in the interests of all Canadians.

The Speech from the Throne which traditionally marks a new session of Parliament was again filled with the usual flowery phrases, catchy cliches and challenging invitations reminiscent of words we heard so often during the election campagin of 1968. What is disappointing is that after two years of this regime we are hearing basically the same old rhetoric—somewhat more dramatic and more passionate on this occasion, with a little more ambivalence and ambiguity.

To use an expression we use out west, if we separate the wheat from the chaff, the tangible and concrete contents of the speech can be summed up adequately in a dozen sentences. We are told the just society is now but a distant ideal. We are told we stand on the threshold of greatness. We are told not to be cold and impersonal for the sake of efficiency but rather to be warm from the heart, as between friends. I cannot help but recall the tone of the task force report on agriculture which consistently referred to the need for agriculture to become more efficient at any price; there is somewhat of a contradiction between the policy spelled out by the Liberals for agriculture in the seventies and the sentiment contained in the Speech from the Throne.

We are told, again, that there is to be more planning; that there are to be more studies undertaken in many new and diverse fields. This has been going on, now, for 24 months. We are told we can expect new forces, some of which we do not yet understand; some of these forces will originate internally, and others will originate externally. We are warned of the consequences of rapid change brought about by advances in technology, and the growing difficulty we are likely to encounter in controlling our destiny. Despite all this advice, we do not see much in the Speech from the Throne which prescribes a remedy for many of the conditions we are likely to face in the forthcoming year, or for that matter, in the forthcoming ten years.

We are told that 80 per cent of our population will reside in a few large metropolitan areas. As one looks at these areas, one can reaffirm one's opinion that this government totally lacks any feeling for our rural areas, the people of which are feeling a growing sense of alienation. We are adding to our problems by making large cities larger, at the expense of our rural areas, the populations of which are declining. We are aware of the quality of life in the cities. Their problems result from pollution, crime and the crowding of many people into a very small area.

We are told that there will be problems relating to housing, pollution and drugs in our cities. In Toronto alone, there is a backlog of something like 2,000 drug cases waiting to be dealt with by the courts. One wonders whether new measures will be introduced to improve the method by which we deal with the matter of drugs. I wonder also whether the minister will soon be able to table information relating to the records of cases involving drugs so that we may ascertain whether there is any disparity between sentences.

I do not believe there is a Canadian in this country today who is unaware of the problems outlined in the Speech from the Throne and who is not willing to sacrifice something in order that we may overcome the problems which face us in the 1970's. What I say we need is a co-ordinated attack on our problems, under proper leadership. Certainly, the setting up of a ministry of urban affairs and a ministry pertaining to environmental control is a start and is, I think, commendable. At the same time it is clear that appropriate policies and programs are essential if those ministries are to be effective. What we must ask ourselves is, why has all this taken so long? Perhaps the government will again use the constitution as a scapegoat. After hearing this government constantly weaseling out of its responsibilities by using the constitution as an excuse, one wonders how this country managed to survive for 103 years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: The point is that the constitution is as good as the participants within it, and if co-operation and co-ordination to achieve a goal or overcome a problem cannot take place within the present framework, we are hardly likely ever to arrive at a way of achieving a satisfactory amending process.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: I am referring to a process under which the constitution will be all things to all participants.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: The previous Throne Speech referred to the fact that something like one million new housing starts would take place in the next five years. There was particular emphasis on low cost housing, social progress and urban employment opportunities. The present Speech from the Throne makes no mention of this goal. One can only assume that the ministry of housing and urban affairs will accomplish these goals as the result of co-operation with the provinces and municipalities. I say that this is the logical and sensible approach. This was the main theme and essence of the Task Force Report on Housing. Why have we had to wait for two years for its implementation?

The matter of pollution and the preservation of our environment quite rightly is an issue which must be attacked by all levels of government and by all sectors of society, by the young and the old, the rich and the poor. I believe that all Canadians will be prepared to work together in a planned and effective approach in overcoming this most threatening problem if they are given adequate leadership. As I said before, I certainly welcome the intention of the government to establish a department concerned with our environment. I hope that the many young people who have corresponded with their elected representatives throughout the past year, and expressed their deep concern over matters relating to pollution and the disturbance of our ecology, will have their fears allayed somewhat by proposals such as those contained in the speech. We have received literally hundreds of letters from young people drawing to our attention their concern over the destruction of our environment and the disturbance of our ecology. I believe that all Canadians will be compelled to share in this exercise if we are to preserve this great land for future generations.

Specifically, I hope that young people will engage in more positive methods of assistance instead of merely criticizing. I hope that the minister will display the initiative and ingenuity to develop programs that will harness the energies of these young people, which can be used in fighting pollution and preserving our environment. To date, Mr. Speaker, I believe that in some areas the young people have not been as co-operative and enterprising as they might have been. Some have displayed a contempt for authority and engaged in litterbug tactics which, to me, destroy the credibility of some young people when they cry for business, government and industry to clear up the mess. I suggest that they, too, may be caught in the web of disorder and find it expedient merely to criticize instead of engaging at working co-operatively in the finding of positive and meaningful solutions to some of these very pressing problems.

As I said before, the Speech from the Throne suggests that there will be more white papers and studies during the present session. I ask, Mr. Speaker, what has become of the white paper on Indian affairs and the subsequent response made by the Indian Affairs Association of Alberta? Since the commencement of the twenty-eighth parliament, a vigorous debate has taken place with respect to the policy to be followed in dealing with our Indian peoples, yet very little has been achieved in a concrete way to improve the welfare of our native peoples and to put right some of the social injustices with which our native peoples have been confronted. Perhaps they are more frustrated today than they have been at any time previously as a result of the expectations aroused by the government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

Mr. Mazankowski: May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It being one o'clock, and pursuant to the special order made earlier this day, the sitting stands suspended until eight o'clock, p.m., later this day.

SITTING SUSPENDED

At one o'clock the sitting was suspended.

PRIVILEGE

MRS. MacINNIS—STATEMENT ON BEHALF OF MEMBER FOR GREENWOOD CONCERNING ARTICLE IN GLOBE AND MAIL

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. This morning a complaint was made against my colleague the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), arising from a news item in the Toronto press. My colleague was not here at the time and the matter was drawn to his attention later. He is not able to be here this evening and has asked me to read the following statement on his behalf.

I understand that the attention of the house was called to a statement in the Globe and Mail—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have very serious doubts as to whether the question of privilege is in order. Mr. Speaker heard the question of privilege raised by the hon. member and made a ruling thereon. It is my impression, unless I am mistaken on the procedural aspect, that the subject was closed with Mr. Speaker's ruling.

Mrs. MacInnis: With deference, Mr. Speaker, my colleague was not here this morning. As soon as he heard about it, he decided he would like to deal with the matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the House would give unanimous consent so there would be no question about impropriety in allowing the hon. member to read the short statement?

Mr. Otto: Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no consent.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I happen to know that the statement which the hon. member for Greenwood would like read on his behalf is, in fact, an apology which he felt should be made to the House at the earliest opportunity. I believe under those conditions the House will want to grant that privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With the explanation of the hon. member, does the House give unanimous consent?

Mr. Otto: I am surprised that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) would try to promote such a thing. Surely, it cannot be the rule that a member can have another member make a speech for him when he is absent. I ask the member for Winnipeg North Centre, a man learned in the rules, whether he really thinks this is the type of—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is obvious there is not unanimous consent, and I think the House might proceed. The hon. member for Vegreville.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel, for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Mazankowski: Prior to the adjournment of the debate this afternoon, I was dealing with the white papers referred to in the Speech from the Throne and the various studies to be continued this session. I am somewhat concerned about the fact that the white paper in respect of Indian affairs was not mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. I am concerned about the fact that today the native people find themselves more frustrated than at any other point in time because of the expectations brought about by this government, prompted largely by the fact that they were asked to participate in the discussion with regard to policy. They were given reasonable assurance that the government would listen to their representations. Are we to assume that matters affecting the native population will not be dealt with this session? I believe this urgent matter must be considered. I want to go on record as stating that this is a glaring omission. The government should seriously consider introducing acceptable policies for our native people, taking into consideration their submissions.

There has been a detailed investigation into the prices of farm machinery. The Barber Commission investigated the prices of farm machinery. I believe the cost of that Commission was in the neighbourhood of $1½ million This Commission, which was launched in 1966, issued a very strong indictment against the major multi-national corporations which engaged in the practice of price fixing at the expense of the farmers. The Commission stated this has resulted in discriminately high prices. If this is true, some action should have been taken by this time. It is imperative that this charge be disposed of immediately. This matter should be brought before the Standing Committee on Agriculture. I believe that the machinery companies should be asked to appear before the committee to answer the charges made by the report.

Furthermore, in light of the task force report on agriculture which asks farmers to become more efficient and competitive, I suggest that the time to act is now. The whole tone of the task force report is efficiency. I do not believe there is a producer in the country who would argue that he must be an efficient producer, that he must be competitive, in order to capitalize on the potential of our export markets. This is a time when he sees his input costs increasing yearly without any measureable control. I submit that every possible step must be taken to effect some control. Certainly, this is an area, in light of the Barber report, in which some improvements can be made.

The spread between farm production income and input has been further widened this past year by the unpegging of the dollar, bringing about further reductions in the price of farm products destined for export. As a matter of fact, immediately after the unpegging of the dollar we saw a decline in the price of wheat of something of the order of 6 per cent. The price of livestock earmarked for export decreased proportionately. This reduction was necessary in order to maintain our competitive position within those markets. Consequently, one can only assume that the input costs—and I refer specifically to those inputs that are a major factor in the cost of production, namely farm machinery and farm machinery parts—would have been reduced accordingly had there been a premium on the Canadian dollar. However, to this date no such decrease has been apparent.

As matter of fact, we are told now that farm machinery prices are going up. The prices of farm machinery parts have increased throughout the year, and many of the farm machinery companies are asking for orders in various parts of the country because there is a price increase in store within the next year. This is all very strange to me because I can recall quite clearly in 1962, when the dollar was devalued, that almost immediately a surcharge was imposed of some 7 or 7½ per cent on all items imported into this country—by items, I mean machinery, and machinery parts in particular—to offset the discrepancy created by the pegging of the dollar. Now that the situation has been reversed, no countervailing action has resulted, and probably never will unless some pressure is brought to bear.

When I questioned the minister in this House this afternoon, he suggested that this matter is under review by the Barber Commission. We can all see for ourselves just what effect the Barber Commission has had to date. It has been conducting a study since 1966 and many recommendations have been made, yet none of these recommendations has been translated into legislative action.

I submit that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) or the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford), should look into this matter and look into it immediately. If to compete in international markets we must lower our export prices as a result of the increased value of the dollar, then I think a corresponding premium should be added to the value of our dollar when we import items which are necessary to produce farm commodities.

The Throne Speech also makes reference to the improved export position of grains, and I am certainly glad it specifies grains rather than wheat. I say this because in many press circles this question of increased grain exports has been interpreted as an increase in our exports of wheat. But this is not the case.

The speech also praises the government for the success of the Lift program. Let me make it very clear that I think the success of the Lift program has been due largely to the weatherman more than anything else. We are all awaiting the program that is going to be instituted next year, especially since, as the House knows, there is plenty of summerfallow in western Canada this year. Under the Lift program and the wheat reduction acreage program, this year the farmers were asked to restrain from increasing their acreage of feed grain, particularly barley and oil seeds. However, we are now told that demand for barley is excellent. As a matter of fact, our sales figures indicate that exports of barley have been very good.

There has been some suggestion that we may not be able to fill all available orders for barley, and there was evidence of this as early as last spring when prospects for barley looked promising. However, this information was not transmitted to the producers; as a result many were not able to capitalize on the buoyant demand for barley.

We all welcome the aggressive sales approach that has been taken in the last ten months. This only proves to me that markets have been available, and they will be available providing someone is prepared to go out and merchandise particularly our feed grains. We in this party have continually pressed the government for a more progressive merchandising policy, above all headed by someone who understands the business.

I cannot help but once more refer to the task force report on agriculture which draws attention to our blatant disregard for market research. Of the total amount of research devoted to agriculture, only 1.2 per cent has been set aside for marketing research. Another glaring weakness in our policy is that research data is not readily available in Canada. As a matter of fact, the data that was tabulated in the task force report was obtained largely from foreign sources, mostly from the United States.

I am sure there is no member of the House who does not welcome any measure that would improve the market potential of our agricultural products. However, the Speech from the Throne only touches on this subject very vaguely, merely suggesting that the government will continue to introduce programs designed to improve market potential for agricultural produce and to assist in the adjustment to changes in this vital sector of our economy.

The task force report clearly suggests that the need for more than that is obvious. If anyone is to place any credence in the report, it is abundantly clear that we will have to do much more than just continue along the lines we have adopted in the past. We must aggressively engage in market research programs that will provide the ways and means to anticipate, to plan, to implement, and of course to assess, the appropriate measures to capture the full market potential of our products.

Above all, in discharging this duty I believe it is of paramount importance that we engage qualified and knowledgeable people. I hope that hon. members will not be misled into the belief that the problems of agriculture in western Canada have been overcome by this vast array of publicity brought about in respect of improved grain sales. The lack of grain sales has been a chronic problem experienced by the Liberal government, and our sales performance has been nothing short of dismal in the last few years. There is a lot of catching up to do.

May I remind you as well that the grain which is being sold is largely barley at an elevator price of 60 cents a bushel. The elevator price for wheat is $1 per bushel. When you subtract the advances of previous years, I suspect that the effective cash influx will be much less than the anticipated $500 million figure which has been quoted.

Referring again to the task force report on agriculture, we see in it a broad approach to agriculture in the 1970's. Certainly, one could find ample opportunity to debate many of the recommendations contained therein. There is one area in which I feel the government will soon have to make its plans known, and that is the future position of the small family farm.

It is clearly evident that the policies we have been dealing with in the past two years are directed toward larger, so-called viable enterprises, with little emphasis or consideration being directed toward the small enterprise. I believe this is a most pressing and urgent situation and the government owes a statement of intent in this regard because the small operators can no longer adjust to the arbitrary quotas on grain and on cream which are being discriminately placed upon them. The abolition of the 400 bushel unit quota has placed a severe hardship on small family operations. They, too, are being dealt a blow by the discriminatory practices of the Farm Credit Corporation in that they are not able to obtain any capital to expand.

These small family farm operators are concerned about the reference to the sorting-out process in the report on agriculture. This sorting out process suggests that only those farmers who operate aggressive and viable enterprises will survive. This matter creates a certain amount of apprehension and fear, particularly when we consider the high level of unemployment. Many of these people will be faced with little or no option other than to go on public welfare.

The mention of quotas leads me to the subject of the farm products marketing bill which has been referred to as a contentious measure. We in the Conservative party were accused of filibustering and killing the bill during the last session, even though many of our members cut our summer recess short to attend committee meetings studying this bill. Let me say here and now that this is a sweeping measure which demands comprehensive study. I make no apologies for being associated with a party dedicated to a thorough study of such a measure. The simple fact is that many people throughout the country have had some very serious second thoughts respecting this legislation, having had an opportunity to study it and realize its far-reaching implications. I remind you that the majority of those presenting briefs to the committee found many inadequacies in this bill. In practically all instances, the matter of producers' rights was clearly overlooked. This is particularly so in view of the fact that the intent of the bill was supposed to be directed toward the interests of producers.

I see you are sitting on the edge of your chair, Mr. Speaker. May I conclude by saying simply that a grain act, designed along similar lines was introduced. Again, in this regard, we have been accused of killing this bill. I want to remind hon. members that we are concerned about the direction in which the government is moving in respect of agriculture. I think it is very appropriately summed up in an address by Mr. D. R. Marshall, the president—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please. I regret that it is my duty to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to permit the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mazankowski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members for your indulgence. I merely want to conclude by quoting a concern which was expressed by Mr. D. R. Marshall, president of the National Dairy Council of Canada in an address he made to the 53rd annual convention in Toronto. In part he said:

> The march toward "concealed" socialism in agriculture in this country is now well advanced and I am sure that is not the wish of the vast majority of Canadians that it should be continued, no matter under what camouflage.

If this is an accurate assessment of that trend in agriculture—I see the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) indicating that it is not and I wish I could agree with him. If this is an accurate assessment, I am proud to be one of those who is fighting this measure. I will continue to do so in order that those freedoms of choice which remain to the producer may be preserved and not destroyed by multi-corporations or integrated companies or the bureaucracy. I am convinced that these two measures seek to destroy these privileges.

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to take part in the debate on the Address in reply to the Throne speech.

Mr. Speaker, how could anyone speak today without referring to the death of a minister of the Quebec government?

Without going through the complete details of this event which saddens the whole population of Canada, I think I must draw the attention of hon. members to its distant cause. Someone once said that the violence of the weak is a reaction against the inertia of the strong. Because Louis XVI and Louis XV had remained indifferent to people's demands, Louis XVI was eventually executed.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Violence is only the normal escalation of democratic procedures followed to stir the dormant conscience of competent authorities. The intuitive judgments of the people are sounder than the deductive judgments of misled intellectuals.

Justice and harmony are so deeply rooted in the heart of the man in the street that they are at the origin of the most efficient revolutionary movements.

While congratulating the government for having taken emergency measures to control aggravating and dangerous conditions, I would like to point out that those are only superficial steps which will never put right the causes of the deep dissatisfaction of the people before the procrastination of competent authorities who for too long have remained conservative while calling themselves Liberals or advocates of political economic liberalism.

Mr. Speaker, I am asking the following question: do people revolt against honest, fair and humanitarian governments?

Current events oblige us to much soul-searching and self-accusation as to the way we in Parliament have conducted the personal, family and social affairs of all Canadians.

One aspect we must not forget: the Canada we represent is in 1970 a country with a population of nearly 22 million people who all have the right to a living standard in keeping with our gross national product.

Mr. Speaker, that is the essence of the problem. Have we settled it? Does the last Speech from the Throne propose appropriate solutions? Can our people wait any longer for an honest distribution of the production from a prosperous economy? I do not think so.

The people are not asking for promises, resolutions, wishes, words, laws, white papers, slogans and investigations. The people want a fair and honest distribution of Canada's magnificent annual production, according to the needs of all citizens who live in Canada and according to the merits of the Canadians who work and who provide capital.

Mr. Speaker, the first right of the 22 million Canadian citizens is the right to life. That should not be forgotten, even faced with the death of a noble citizen who has paid with his life for the inertia shown by governments in recognizing the right to life of all citizens. Mr. Speaker, thousands of children may die every year through lack of proper food and care, heads of families may get so discouraged that they want to kill their wives and children because they feel unable to feed them and give them a decent living, on account of the inaction of governments which are too slow in bringing the necessary reforms, but we do not seem to care. We find all kinds of excuses.

But if a selective assassination is committed, we are touched. Well, if we do not want any more selective assassinations, we will have to consider most seriously our grave responsibilities. Let us prevent collective assassinations, an obvious result of our inertia, ensure a guaranteed personal income, an adequate and proper purchasing power consistent with our national production.

There is of no need, here, to give a university lecture in economics. Production must first be used for consumption and then, for capitalization. Nothing is more simple. Even citizen in this country can understand that.

Our production amounts to $84 billion, which represents $3,900 per person, or $19,500 for a family of five as an average. We should demand a personal minimum allowance for every child in Canada and every young people. We should establish it at least at $90 a month for adults between 18 and 59 and at least at $120 for old people and pensioners of 60 and over.

As for family allowances, established in 1945, they have been increased only by $1. Their rate ranges only from $6 to $8 while the cost of living has considerably increased.

The right to live is a normal and proper one, in fact the first right of each citizen within a civilized society. It is therefore the first to be protected by legislation.

As can be seen, no political partisanship is involved, any more than nationality, religion, language, race, colour, different provinces or even the Constitution. It is just a matter of elementary justice for all citizens of the land.

Nor are capitalism, socialism or communism involved. In all countries, whether capitalist, socialist or communist, goods and services are produced by the nation's adult population and apportioned between consumption and capitalization. That is the purpose of an economy, to be kept well balanced by simple means consistent with facts and economic realities of our country.

Nor is it entirely a matter involving a monetary system. The situation does not depend on that only.

In any economic and political system, the production of any year should be used by the living citizens before being made available to citizens who will be living during the following years. We should consume enough before capitalizing too much.

There are great academic people, famous men who believe they are the centre of the world, who maintain they are increasing production and who increase capitalization without worrying about consumption.

Such is, Mr. Speaker, the crucial problem that must be solved. If we can produce, then to be logical, we should be able to consume our products. That production should meet all needs, at least the essential needs of everyone, otherwise, our economy will be unbalanced, even unjustified.

That is important and simple. One does not need a university degree to understand that. It is simple common sense. Even a very young child will think of eating today before thinking of saving for tomorrow. The little squirrel eats the peanuts people give it and hides the rest for winter when it is not hungry any more.

Therefore, in order to act according to the laws of nature in Canada, if our production is worth $84 billion in 1970, every Canadian should consume enough before we capitalize $34 billion.

That is the rub. That is the core of the problem. There is too much capitalization and not enough consumption and frustrated people are dissatisfied, and rightly so. It is up to the government to correct the situation. But who is the government? At least 264 members and ministers, elected by the Canadian people to look after the management of the Canadian economy for the 22 million people of Canada.

I believe that at present, we consider the Canadian economy in the abstract. Living from hand to mouth, most people laugh on Friday and cry the next Monday. The future of a community must not be built on present sorrows, but on economic facts and realities. From now on, Canadian prosperity will keep publishing analyses on the economic life of Canadians.

States are duty bound to become aware of national problems and of conditions required for their solution. Can we define and detect the problems? Several organizations have been making inquiries and reports of all kinds in order to detect poverty and unemployment for many years. But the number of unemployed is still on the increase. Those inquiries and plans of all kinds, and so on, have cost millions to the government, but they failed to solve the unemployment problem.

Unemployed are found in all municipalities. The idleness and helplessness of so many men being such a serious problem, members of the House and economists as well are seeking effective solutions.

Technocrats set up great programs, economists consider, analyze and seek solutions. Intermediate bodies demand, call for and condemn; realistic publications voice opinions and think.

But few people reflect on the true composition of the puzzle we have to solve. Unrest and dissatisfaction are now widespread.

The solution seems immediate and concrete. Everyone could bring an element of solution to the anguishing problem of unemployment. But that evil is not the responsibility of anyone in particular, and no one works positively towards its solution. A solution is not a plan, an idea, a program, or an invention, but the answer to a problem! It is not a conclusion, but action!

I defy anyone to tell me that in this Parliament, in the last ten years, steps were taken to solve the serious problem of unemployment.

Are the Canadian people really incapable of innovating, of creating, of foreseeing the needs in order to enlarge or develop the required markets? Are we short of imagination, initiative or competence? Needless to say, initiative would upset many comfortable habits but if the elite does not move within the next months to relieve human hardship, considerable upheaval and disastrous consequences can be expected.

If credit unions do not make money more accessible nor use it to raise the living standard of their most disadvantaged members, it is all the more unlikely that capitalist philanthropists should put an end to the ills of Quebecers and other Canadians.

Those in charge of government who appreciate what the economic development of a state or a country means should feel extremely concerned. Mr. Speaker, it is quite customary to find in any Quebec village a $600,000 school, a senior citizens' home valued at $800,000 or $1 million and a quite comfortable church, whereas, in hundreds of municipalities, not a single industry exists.

The young people may attend school, the older people stay in a home for the aged, the whole population goes to church yet, the young people have to rely on welfare or unemployment insurance payments. For their part, the workers must leave for the large cities. In many rural or semi-urban centres, the population happens to be much lower in 1970 than it was in 1950.

Soon we shall have a great metropolis inside a desert, inside a territory almost uninhabited. Meanwhile experts continue to study, analyse and forecast fully expecting that the economy will pick up with time.

Mr. Speaker, for an analysis of our public financial position, one has only to refer to statistics and check expenditures by the central government and the province of Quebec, where my constituency is located. In 1970-71, the federal government spent $12.9 billion, the Quebec government, $3.982 billion, the Quebec municipalities, $810 million and the school boards, close to $1 billion. Nobody has the exact figures since it is impossible to obtain accurate statistics for the Quebec school boards. But this year, for every citizen, young or old, male or female, Ottawa is spending $845, Quebec, $665, the municipalities, $135 and the school boards, $135 or more. The annual expenditures of the Ottawa and Quebec governments, of the municipalities and school boards, total $18.492 billion, i.e. $1,579 per capita. It is the highest per capita average in Canada and it applies only to the province of Quebec and to Ottawa; I am not talking about the other provinces.

Mr. Speaker, can we afford to finance this display of grandeur with part of the money borrowed? This is a sure way to compromise our future.

On March 31, 1968, the direct federal government debt was $32.575 billion and the indirect debt $8.335 billion. On March 31, 1968, the consolidated debt of the Quebec government stood at $1.678 billion and the indirect debt at $2.799 billion. The 1,652 Quebec municipalities owed $283 billion on December 31, 1967. The bond debt of the school boards amounted to $485 billion and even more in 1963 and it has increased at a fantastic rate since.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, each Canadian is in debt to the tune of $1,971 at the federal level, $755 at the provincial level, $355 at the municipal level and possibly more at the school board level. So, each Quebecer sees his future income mortgaged for about $83,436. The government debt exceeds $50 billion in 1970 and to this must be added close to $10 billion in personal debts. The total Canadian debt exceeds $60 billion. Considering the rate of interest to be paid and the amounts needed for bond renewal, no country, much less a province, can survive. I challenge anyone to find somebody smart enough to finance that.

Debentures are renewed at new interest rates, the rich are getting richer, but there is an increasing number of poor people and welfare recipients. The frightful rate of public debts does not frighten anybody, neither the governments nor the governed; the former bring in more social measures and increase expenditures, the latter call for more without thinking that eventually they will have to foot the bill.

Is it possible, Mr. Speaker, to find an adequate financial system that will put some order in all this and enable the citizens and the government to pay their debts? But, in order to pay their debts, interests rates have to be reasonable, debentures have to be renewed under reasonable terms and not under the exorbitant conditions existing today.

Such conditions are senseless. We make the rich richer and the poor poorer. This causes general discontent and brings about developments such as we have never seen before in this country. We will see more of them if we do not control the situation, if we do not put our economy in order, if we do not allow each citizen to live decently in a rich and prosperous country. We will pay for our mistakes. We have paid part of our dues, but there is more to come. This is only a beginning.

To administer billions of dollars, the people elect representatives most of whom are unable to administer a single million and are even less able to understand the nature and operation of orthodox financial mechanisms. These only pile up public debts that will never be paid even if all our real wealth is used for that purpose. It is therefore normal to find that the application of fiscal policy, the dispersion of loans, the scarcity of investments and the inconsistency of administrative measures greatly increase the costs of public services.

Those facts are sufficient to show that an economic problem does exist, that it is becoming more and more serious from year to year in our country, and especially in Quebec. Prosperity cannot grow by itself, and the people must truly want it. Can we imagine what tomorrow's society will be like, to guess what the future will bring and to plan accordingly? Can outside influences, which we are unable to control, prevent us from becoming what we want to be?

We are assured of being able to realize this on the one condition that we once again become masters of our money and our credit and make use of them for the realization, in answer to real needs, of attainable objectives.

A balanced system must make financially possible what is physically workable, whereas the present system makes impossible financially what is physically workable. This is nonsense but such is the way things have been for decades.

As for the Speech from the Throne, it proclaims the definition of a just society in reasserting the slogan which brought the present government to power. We can say that the definition is a good one, and we accept it:

> —a society in which individual freedom and equality of opportunity remain as our most cherished possessions;

We are convinced that by its housing policy the government did not achieve that high ideal. A decent home—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I have still a few remarks to make. May I be allowed to go on?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House agree to let the hon. member for Compton conclude?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I was saying that we are convinced that the government did not attain its lafty ideal through its housing policy.

The policy of individual freedom and of equal opportunity is still very far from the social justice advocated in the "just society" slogan, considering the number of slums where too many Canadians live.

The 12 per cent tax on building materials, the 8 per cent interest rate on capital loans, the 8 per cent tax on material purchases in the province of Quebec, the 10 or 12 per cent interest on bank loans for the construction of houses, all those things further contribute to raise the cost of materials and services that the people and the municipalities must pay.

By increasing taxes and interest rates, the government contributes to raise the price of real estate and construction, so that an individual can no longer afford to own his home.

Under our present economic system, the individual is made to bow to the whims and demands of money-lenders, instead of the economy adjusting to his needs and those of his family. If money-lenders decide to build sky-scrapers so that their investment will yield a higher interest, families are packed together in superimposed bird-cages and charged prohibitive rents, considering the low income of the citizens.

Our just society, by its taxes and its housing policy, deprives the individual of his right to ownership. Can it be repeated too often? Only those with a high income can become home owners. Low wage-earners will always be tenants from generation to generation.

But interest on large investments keeps increasing, both in private and public enterprise. The value of a bond bearing a 10 per cent interest doubles in seven years, quadruples in 14 years, multiplies itself eight times in 21 years. And this is how capital controls the whole economic life of the nation, while wage-earners live from hand to mouth, without being able to make both ends meet.

In order to realize the present state of our economy let us consider this aspect of private ownership of individual and family housing, and we will find that the situation is impossible, unfair, unacceptable, for the present as well as for the future.

What is the use of having a Minister of Urban Affairs and Housing, as mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, if we make ownership more and more difficult, if we prevent individuals from becoming property owners?

How is it, Mr. Speaker, that so many people could find more suitable and cheaper houses in all our towns and villages hardly fifty years ago? Is this situation merely due to chance? Is there no one responsible? And if someone is responsible, are we to blame? Is it the passenger or the driver who is responsible for an accident?

Mr. Gaétan-J. Serré (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, following the unfortunate events taking place in our country these days, it is with deep emotion and great anxiety as to what the future holds for us that I take the floor in the House, the seat of democracy cherished by all worthy Canadians.

In my own name and on behalf of all my fellow citizens of Nickel Belt, I hasten to express my most sincere sympathy to Pierre Laporte's family, to all his colleagues in the National Assembly, to the Prime Minister and all government officials. I wish them the courage required to meet the challenge now facing us.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that we shall soon hear that Mr. Cross has been safely released.

The events of the last few days have consequences that go far beyond the captivity of Mr. Cross and the assassination of Mr. Laporte. I hope that thanks to the indomitable courage shown by our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and to the co-operation of governments at all levels as well as of every Canadian citizen, it will be possible to restore order and to ensure the security of all Canadians.

[English]

I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, we are presently faced with the worst crisis in Canadian history. Anyone who believes the present situation can be solved by arguments about a possible threat to our civil liberties is fooling himself. There is no room at this time for opportunism and party politics such as the leader of the New Democratic Party and some of his hon. friends in that party have shown in the last few days. The political opportunism and lack of sincerity displayed by th NDP will never be forgotten by the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nystrom: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member is imputing motives, and that is contrary to our rules. I, for one, can say I was not insincere in my stand. I was very sincere as, I am sure, were other members of my party. I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his last remark.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I must tell the House that I was busy talking to somebody here so I did not follow the last part of the hon. member's remarks. It is difficult, therefore, for me at this time to judge the remarks about which the hon. member is complaining. But if that part of the hon. member's observations were comments about a vote in the House of Commons, I might take the opportunity to read again the last sentence of Standing Order 35, which states as follows:

> No member may reflect upon any vote of the House except for the purpose of moving that such vote be rescinded.

This is the second time today I have had to read the Standing Order and I hope hon. members will keep it in mind in order that the Chair may not be confronted with points of order similar to those which have been raised earlier.

Mr. Serré: I should like to tell the House, Mr. Speaker, that I was not referring to the vote which was taken here yesterday.

This is a time for statesmanship, for leadership such as our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has been giving us all along during these difficult moments in our history. Even though these sad events are most deplorable, it is my firm belief that they will have served to unite us all more strongly than ever.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with my colleagues in congratulating the two members who distinguished themselves so much by moving and seconding the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, namely the member for Bourassa and the member for Assiniboia (Messrs Trudel and Douglas), the former, an accomplished businessman and the latter the farmers' untiring spokesman. Both performed their task in a masterly manner, and have shown once again the great worth of the men recruited by the Liberal party at the last election.

Mr. Speaker, on reading carefully the Speech from the Throne, one can find a keener desire on the part of the government to take concrete steps aimed at establishing the just society, which is the ideal of any true democracy and of most Canadians.

With a view to enabling the Canadian people to participate in the establishment of a sound policy, the government intends to pursue its policy of issuing white papers, while implementing bills carefully prepared in the past two years with the help of the whole population.

I am delighted to find that the government will keep on intensifying its fight against air and water pollution by setting up a department responsible for the environment and by introducing a piece of legislation on air pollution.

God knows that the pollution problem worries us in the Nickel Belt. Needless to say, the situation has become alarming. The main industry, INCO, has been allowed far too long to deteriorate the ecology of the area. To be sure, great efforts have been made recently and the company spends fantastic sums of money to remedy the situation, but it is rather late in the day.

The provincial government, which has jurisdiction in that field, has certainly been remiss in its duty. It should have forced the company to take the necessary preventive measures. It even should, in the present context, punish the polluters severely, be they giants like INCO, a small industry or even an individual.

Since the provincial government has been unable to control pollution in our part of northern Ontario, the federal government should take the initiative and set up a pollution research and control center at Sudbury's Laurentian University, right in the center of northern Ontario. Such a center could co-ordinate the initiatives at every government level. People are becoming extremely impatient and I am sure they are favourably impressed by what our government is doing in this regard.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel).]

Mr. Speaker, our life in the Sudbury area has far too long been conditioned by the mining industry, the only major industry controlled by foreign capital. INCO has always exploited our abundant natural resources, making enormous profits every year, without concerning itself enough with the living conditions its operations create for the people in the area.

I feel that it should contribute more to the various community services such as housing, transportation, education, recreation and so on that are required by its employees and all citizens in the area.

Such an operation being controlled by foreign interests, of course, it cannot be totally sensitive to local problems. Therefore, my constituents and myself shall certainly follow with interest the developments resulting from the white paper on the control of our economy shortly to be tabled by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray).

I recognize that foreign investments have been and remain necessary to the development of some of our resources. However, I consider that the government should take the necessary means, as soon as possible, to make sure that we have better control over our economy.

The recent proposal of the Ontario Liberal party to the effect that 50 per cent of our national interests should be controlled by Canadians seems to be quite reasonable in the present circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, our area is greatly in need of both secondary industries and investments. But prospective investors are often afraid of moving into our area because we lack adequate means of transportation.

The cost of living is higher than elsewhere, especially owing to lack of competition and to exorbitant freight rates. For instance, I believe that the railway companies exercise discrimination against northern Ontario, where they have set the rates higher than in other parts of the country.

I have asked and I am still asking that the Department of Transport undertake a full study on this problem and insist that this abnormal situation be rectified as soon as possible.

When I talk of inadequate transport facilities I refer specifically to air transport, the worst in my opinion. For example, our only airport, operated by the city of Sudbury, is too small to give good service to the 200,000 odd citizens of the area. An expansion program is imperative. The increase in air traffic makes it long overdue. Aware that the city of Sudbury is not in a position to undertake such an expansion program entailing expenditures of a few million dollars, I suggest that the Department of Transport take immediately the necessary steps in order to take over its operations.

After all, Mr. Speaker, that airport has to become regional because it has to service not only the city of Sudbury, but dozens of surrounding municipalities. I therefore hope that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) will take notice of my suggestions and that he will deem it advisable to transfer the jurisdiction from the city of Sudbury to the Department of Transport in order that the population be offered an adequate service.

For example, it is high time that our area be serviced by jets as is the case in centres much smaller than ours at the present time.

In perusing the program proposed by the government for this third session, I am pleased, like all my constituents, I am sure, by the fact that the government will give special consideration to all citizens without exception, at all levels of society, and mainly to the disabled, both young and old.

I do not have time to comment on the numerous measures which will be introduced these next few months. I will mention only a few like, for instance, the establishment of two new departments: Urban Affairs and Housing, to remedy the problems created by the influx of people into our great cities and to give particular attention to the housing crisis and to the pollution of our environment. A number of measures will be introduced especially on air pollution and tax reform, designed to divide more equitably the economic burden and improve the small wage-earner's lot.

There will be amendments to existing legislation on labour-management relations so as to improve the collective bargaining process and establish a more modern legal framework to that end.

Mr. Speaker, as I have the honour to represent people who are for the most part wage earners belonging to a powerful labour union, I am sure they will watch closely the new amendments to the Labour Code.

New measures will also be introduced to give consumers better protection so that they know better what they buy and so as to protect them against unfair practices.

The existing unemployment insurance system will be amended so as to increase the number of eligible people. Special consideration will be given to the possibility of providing assistance to the unemployed so as to enable them to secure decent employment.

As I said earlier, and again in order to enable people to take part in the preparation of measures concerning them directly, a number of white papers will soon be issued on foreign ownership in the Canadian economy, national defence, citizenship, immigration, the status of women and social security.

In the white paper on social security, special attention will be given to the old age security pension plan and family allowances.

It is high time that we show greater concern for our old people. Many of them may well be the poorest citizens in Canada, while they actually were the ones who built up this prosperous country in which we live today. For several of them, the pension cheque is hardly large enough to pay the rent. I hope this government will increase by a substantial amount the pension payments which are the only income these old men and women ever get.

As regards the old age security pension, as in the case of family allowances, may I be allowed to suggest that the benefit rates be increased considerably but that eligibility be limited. In other words, it could be withdrawn from those whose income is large enough to provide for their own needs, and it could accordingly be increased in the case of lower income citizens.

There is a group of pensioned citizens who are not treated fairly and I refer here to retired railwaymen. I do hope that the CNR management will find their way to accept the last recommendations of the Committee on Transport and Communications that the already pensioned employees and those who will retire in the future may enjoy the same advantages as the employees of other sectors. As of now I urge the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) and the Minister of Transport to put the necessary pressure on.

• (9:20 p.m.)

I certainly hope that during this third session of our 28th Parliament, our colleagues in the opposition will choose to be less negative and more positive, less irresponsible and more constructive, so that we may stand firm and united during these difficult days that lie ahead, and so that we may each contribute more fully according to our talents and experience toward the fulfilment of our common ideal; a just society in a united Canada.

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): As has been customary over the years, Mr. Speaker, I offer my congratulations to the mover (Mr. Trudel) and seconder (Mr. Douglas) of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. However, I say to them that they should not be carried away by all the congratulatory remarks that have been made, irrespective of the fact that their contributions were good and their efforts in this House have been commendable. There have been a great many members chosen to move and second previous Speeches from the Throne who are not here today. Other criteria are necessary to win the confidence of the people who are in this great House of Commons.

My wife and I would like to join with the thousands who have tendered their sympathy to Madame Laporte and her children, and well as the colleagues of Mr. Laporte. I sincerely hope that the memory of the happy associations and the pride in the outstanding achievements of a husband and father will be a great consolation in the days of trial ahead.

My constituency is mainly rural. I was rather surprised that there was not more said about agriculture in the Speech from the Throne. Just one small paragraph referred to export sales, the Lift program, marketing and a few things in that connection. I wish to quote from an article which appeared in the September 14 issue of the Globe and Mail. The article is headed "Applied research felt need for agriculture", and reads:

> A special study for the Science Council of Canada recommends creation of two federal boards and five specialized research centres to co-ordinate agricultural research and shift the emphasis to applied research.

The next paragraph is very profound:

> The three-year study by an eight-scientist commission under Dr. B. N. Smallman of Queen's University, Kingston, says agriculture is still "the most important primary industry in Canada" and research is largely responsible for its success.

I see the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) applauding because the leader of this commission is from Kingston. Those of us from agricultural areas have always felt that the prospering of most nations depended on the top six inches of the soil. We feel it should not have taken an eight-scientist commission three years to determine that agriculture is still the most important primary industry in Canada. For that reason, I am critical of the government because there was not more said in the Speech from the Throne on ways and means to improve agricultural processes and procedures in this nation. The article continues:

> However, an increasing degree of specialization has resulted in an inadequate communications system among researchers and with farmers.
> Dr. P. D. McTaggart-Cowan of Ottawa, executive director of the science council, says the Smallman report's conclusion may seem controversial to some but should serve as "a useful starting point for informed public debate" on agricultural research.

Was anything mentioned about agricultural research in the Speech from the Throne? After sitting for three years, an eight scientist commission presented a report, but this matter is not referred to in the Speech from the Throne. If agriculture is going to maintain a position of importance in the years to come to assist in feeding the many millions of people who need to be fed, improved agricultural research programs must be given more consideration. In the field of marketing, crop specialization, animal husbandry and practically all other fields of agriculture there is room for a great deal more research in order that agriculture will continue to be the most important primary industry in our nation.

I sincerely hope that as this session proceeds legislation will be introduced regarding marketing programs that are necessary. We hope this legislation will be better drafted than previously so that it will not be so difficult to bring it to completion in this House and in committee.

I hope the Minister of Finance will give consideration to ensuring that farmers can get the farm improvement loans they require. There has been some reticence on the part of the banks to providing the farm improvement loans that many farmers require. They would rather lend the money on their own terms. I ask the minister to do his utmost to see that this money is readily available for those who need it.

There are many other fields to which continued thought should be given. This government has received adequate assistance. There have been commissions, the task force on agriculture and the Barber Commission on farm machinery, as well as the commission on research to which I have made reference. Many people are working to find ways and means to assist the government. I hope the government applies some of the programs and suggestions of the commission.

The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) intimated that little had been done as a result of the Barber Commission report which indicated that Canadian farmers should be able to get their farm machinery and replacement parts at lower prices than are presently being charged.

I intend to use the rest of the time available to me to mention two or three matters applicable to my own constituency to which I have referred on many occasions. The first matter is the building of post offices. I am happy the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) is in the chamber tonight. He has given very kind consideration to the post office in the village of Elora. About two years ago, the post office authorities in Elora decided that they wanted more space, more modern facilities, and decided to tear down the old post office building, find a new site and build a new post office. We must remember that there are communities in this nation that are not so ready to brush off the old and take on the new, but Elora is one of them.

The reason for this is that Elora is a beautiful community. The Elora rocks have always been an outstanding tourist attraction for people passing through or staying in the vicinity. Many of the homes in Elora were built of limestone, and they are beautiful structures. This is the case with the existing post office. The building is an asset to Main Street. It is a landmark and is as strong and sturdy as the day it was built. With some renovation, changes and additions, I feel, along with an outstanding architect who has looked into the subject, that it is not necessary to destroy this beautiful old post office in order to erect one of these new match box buildings the Post Office Department favours today, which are rarely things of beauty no matter where they are sited.

The people of Elora rose up in arms and presented petitions to me, to the Postmaster General (Mr. Côté), and Minister of Public Works, (Mr. Laing). I have been very happy that the Minister of Public Works has been able to hold back his people, so nothing has yet been done. I sincerely hope that the plan the people of Elora would like to see implemented, which is the retention of the old post office building after renovating it and improving its facilities, is the plan adopted. I hope also that the Minister of Public Works, as he promised me, will some day go to Elora to see the post office building.

The second matter I want to bring to the attention of the House is one I referred to last April and have spoken about innumerable times in this House. I refer to the attitude of the Canadian National Railways to the passenger service which it provides in a great many areas in Canada. When I spoke about the matter in this House last April, I said that except for Newfoundland we in this part of western Ontario felt that we were being used as guinea pigs, since the second application that had been made to the Canadian Transport Commission to reduce passenger service related to this area.

I attended the hearings of the commission at Owen Sound during the Easter recess. I was rather encouraged because I could not help but feel that, in view of the tremendous pressure brought to bear by the representations made to the Canadian Transport Commission at the hearings, the commission could do nothing else but maintain passenger rail service in this area. However, along with a lot of other people in the area I was shocked when I saw the decision handed down on September 30 by the Canadian Transport Commission. The commission decided to cut off all passenger services north and west of Guelph, including those serving my part of western Ontario, the city of Owen Sound, the town of Southampton, the town of Kincardine, Stratford and Goderich.

I do not think that this is a good decision or a fair one, because I do not think that attention was paid to all the representations made at the hearing. In fact, when I see commissions like this in operation, I sometimes wonder whether we are living in a democracy or in a country where commissions and bodies of this type make the final rulings that destroy the right of the individual not only to be heard but to have his representations considered. Believe you me, Mr. Speaker, I do not think the commission listened carefully to the words of the people who made representations at Owen Sound.

I should like to refer to that part of the decision which relates to the cutting off of the railway services which I have mentioned. Paragraph (a) of the decision reads:

> The Committee finds that the actual losses incurred do not justify the continuance of these passenger train services for the convenience of the number of passengers that have used them and that, in the opinion of the Committee, would be likely to use them if the services were not discontinued.

It was elicited at the hearing that the commission did not even consult with the mid-western organization that was making surveys of the requirements of this particular area. Neither did it listen to the representative of the province of Ontario, which is making a study of the transportation needs of the region. The Commission went ahead without waiting for the completion of these surveys and studies, and as a result did not get the true picture.

The next paragraph of the decision reads as follows:

> The Committee finds that the highway system serving the points in this region of Ontario served by the passenger train services is excellent and is probably as extensive as could be found in any comparable area of Canada. The Committee further finds that the existing bus services in the area constitute a satisfactory alternative public transportation service and the Committee accepts the evidence adduced at the hearings that these bus services will be adequate in capacity and will be increased in frequency as required by traffic demands resulting from discontinuance of passenger train services.

On talking to the mayor of Southampton, one of the towns affected, I learned that if you go to Toronto from Southampton, a distance of 120 miles, by bus, you travel via London, which adds another 80-odd miles to the journey. So, the suggestion that the bus service is a satisfactory alternative is not correct. The decision continues:

> The Committee agrees with the submissions of both railways that discontinuance would have a minimal effect on other passenger train services.

One thing that I found most difficult to understand was that one of the railroads said that if the other's services were discontinued, it would take up the slack. But what has happened? Both services have been cut off. The CPR service from Toronto to Owen Sound has been discontinued, and if this decision is upheld there will be no passenger service by rail from Toronto.

Then, the committee report has this paragraph:

> Finally, the Committee further finds that discontinuance of these services would not, in its opinion, conflict with future plans for the area to be further studied by the government of Ontario in accordance with the guidelines of the report, Design for Development: The Toronto-Centred Region, which was adduced in evidence by the government of Ontario.

I do not think there is any justification for this particular decision. In fact, I feel that the whole thing was already cut and dried between the railways and the transport commission before these hearings at Owen Sound, commenced. The hearings were a sop to the people of the area, an attempt to convince them the commission was doing the job it was supposed to do. This is just not good enough.

I also find it hard to understand why the things we asked for, such as improved service, a survey of the requirements of the area and a possible alternative service, were not taken into consideration. However, in denying the railroad company's application to cut off train service from Guelph to Toronto, the commission used the very reasoning we had asked them to use in our case. I should like to put on the record what the commission said about maintaining the service from Guelph to Toronto. Incidentally, there are a lot of passenger trains passing through Guelph en route to Toronto, irrespective of this particular service, so it would not have meant too much to the area had this service been discontinued. However, it meant a lot to the area I represent. The commission says:

> None of the evidence convinces us that the actual losses incurred could not be substantially reduced by changes in equipment assignment, and by providing more convenient and more suitable service based on surveys using modern methods, of the requirements of passengers, both actual and potential.

We have been asking the railroads for years to upgrade their equipment and to make more modern rolling stock available. If they were to do this, they would attract more passengers and make the service more sound economically.

I was interested in a little booklet that came to my desk the other day entitled "News briefs from France". There is an article in it about transportation in France where they have been carrying on a transportation system a lot longer than we have in Canada. This article appears under the heading: "More comfortable and faster trains for the French railways" and there is a picture of a turbo train. It is one of the latest and is a very attractive, modern, efficient looking train which I imagine has one or two coaches similar to our railiners. It is certainly a lot more attractive and much more comfortable than the 25 year old trains our transportation system requires us to use. These trains are not comfortable; they are often dirty and certainly do not provide the best type of transportation or even an adequate transportation system in my area.

I appeal to the minister in this particular case because I feel that, irrespective of commissions, rules and laws, as in many other departments of government, the minister has the right to make whatever ruling he wishes. I say this because of a statement the minister made regarding changes in the role and structure of the federal transport portfolio. This appears at the bottom of page 4 and reads:

> The Canadian Transport Commission will continue to perform its economic regulatory role independently, subject to Ministerial and governmental review as established in the National Transportation Act.

On the following page there is a paragraph which reads:

> Canadian National Railways, Air Canada and Northern Transportation Company Limited, being outside the Public Service, will continue to exercise freedom in their personnel policies, but policy issues or public interest matters will require continuing close consultation with the Minister in the light of the Government's general policies.

I sincerely hope that the minister will give his earnest attention to this particular matter. The paragraph then continues:

> Administrations and authorities, although largely made up of public servants, will be exposed to the normal forces of the commercial environment and will need a capability to be responsive and adaptive to changing conditions. A high degree of authority will therefore be delegated to the heads of Administrations and Authorities allowing them to make managerial decisions on many day to day matters but subject to Ministerial decision on all policy issues.

I do not see the minister in the House tonight, but I hope to see him one of these days to put this matter to him personally. I hope he will insist that a clearer picture is provided and that another look will be taken at the importance of maintaining this particular service in that part of the province of Ontario. This service is required for the future development and organization of that part of the province. If this service is taken away it will be a tremendous blow. I sincerely hope the minister will give this his earnest consideration before the thirtieth of this month, at which time this service is to be cancelled.

One other thing that worries me is that when actions of this kind are taken they are not taken for today or for tomorrow but forever. For this reason, I think the government should have another look at this decision by the Canadian Transport Commission. On other occasions when the commission has made decisions, the government has reversed those decisions after further consideration.

An hon. Member: They didn't in Newfoundland.

Mr. Howe: No, they did not do that in Newfoundland but we hope that is not the pattern to be followed. We hope the minister will look into this question seriously and insist that the railways continue to give the passenger service so badly needed in that area.

Another thing of particular importance to my riding is the discussions taking place and the studies being made regarding the development and construction of a new airport in the area of Dufferin County, particularly in that part encompassed by Amaranth township. I feel this is a good site. I feel that a decision should be taken in this regard very shortly. The hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Ryan), in his speech the other day, mentioned the fact that the present airport facilities at Toronto are inadequate. The traffic is very heavy and the highway facilities in and out are inadequate. A decision should be made in this regard very soon and I sincerely hope that attention will be paid to this particular area because it would be a good site for an airport of this magnitude.

An airport of the type anticipated will cost a great deal of money and should be designed to be useful for many years to come. In the area to which I have referred there is sufficient land at reasonable cost. The area is not that far away from the large centres in southern Ontario. It can be conveniently reached, perhaps by some of these turbo trains, monorails or special highways. The area is not highly developed and the noise or pollution resulting from the operations of an airport there would not create a great deal of trouble. I hope the Minister of Transport will give serious consideration to the suggestions I have made tonight.

It is my hope that the Minister of Public Works will have another look at the Elora post office before making a final decision to tear it down.

[Translation]

Mr. Robert P. Kaplan (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the speeches made by my colleagues the hon. members for Bourassa and Assiniboia (Mr. Trudel and Mr. Douglas). I must say that I felt proud listening to them. I am sure their constituents are proud of them too. I congratulate them.

[English]

I want to focus my remarks tonight, Mr. Speaker, on the references contained in the Speech from the Throne to the recognition of a federal responsibility in the area of urban life in Canada. It is proposed that there be established a Minister for Urban Affairs and Housing. The same proposal has been expressed before and has generated a lot of excitement in this House and across the country.

A number of factors have been dealt with by hon. members who have spoken on this subject in the House.

Some people are asking that there be a greater investment by the federal government in our cities and that the federal public sector be enlarged. Other people have recognized that there are already a large number of programs of the federal government which are carried out in the cities. They are asking that, in respect of this new ministry, these programs be co-ordinated and that policies be established which would comprehend all of the programs of the federal government within the cities. It is also suggested that there be new programs.

The third approach being taken by members and other people commenting on the Speech from the Throne has been based on constitutional considerations. It has been observed that the federal government is not the only government with urban responsibilities. The constitutional questions have been considered. The participation of other levels of government is being considered. A wise government policy, as the minister himself observed, would be a national policy, not just a federal policy, planned, agreed upon, and implemented at all levels of government. A number of members have made suggestions concerning tri-level political instruments focusing on housing, airports, harbours, or urban ground transportation.

Hopefully all these ideas I have itemized can now be considered in a broader context than before, when the minister was nominally only responsible for housing. The reference to urban affairs in the new title of the minister is in itself encouraging. To me it suggests what I hope will be a new focus, broader than housing and broader even than the term "urban development" which was the expression used in the past. These limited terms of reference, that is housing and urban development, seem to be oriented to the idea of growth and a concept of futurism rather than to intensification of the use of existing facilities and an interest in the present condition of urban life. This is the subject I should like to discuss in the short time available to me. The reference to urban affairs reflects recognition of the potential that urban life presents for Canadians.

I should like to suggest that Canada become an urban nation and that we should commit ourselves to giving all Canadians the opportunity to be urban people, whether or not they live in cities. I refer to urban in the sense of being plugged in and aware of the opportunities there are for experiences of the type which always draw men to live together in cities and which have characterized the great cities, that is opportunities to communicate, to learn, to grow as people; opportunities to make choices of life styles and choices of association; the opportunity to have access to the greatest variety of experiences, of goods and services, leisure activities and entertainment.

In a recent speech the minister responsible for housing, the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Andras), who will become the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, proposed new terms of reference as his criteria for future urban programs. He asked this question: Does the program pay in terms of social comfort and stimulation of people? Does it quicken the pulses of the large cities that are becoming the homes of most Canadians? This is an intriguing question and may imply, as I hope it does, that there will be new standards for government action along the lines I have outlined.

Ottawa in the past has searched for a handle on the urban environment. It has been natural to look to the BNA Act for something that would give Ottawa the right to play a role in shaping the cities. Transportation, housing, and sewers are the subjects Ottawa has chosen to use in the past. I should like to suggest that our past approach has been too much obsessed by the hardware of city life and not enough by the software. We have thought the answers to urban problems lay in physical solutions, such as a better stock of housing, more rapid and efficient transportation systems and better sewage treatment.

These programs are important and there should be no reduction of our commitment to them, but I believe we are putting too much faith in hardware. In addition, hardware solutions imply the destruction and replacement of what we are already living with and these "scorched earth" approaches are beginning to revolt even those people in the cities whose physical surroundings are the worst.

Lately there has been a trend to downgrade physical growth as a valid standard of urban progress in favour of a new standard which has been given the name "Quality of Life". But even this expression has come to mean something physical and a new kind of hardware. It is used to refer to the level of pollution, the conservation of wild life and again, it is a growth standard, but in this connection growth of public capital investment. These so-called quality of life priorities are also important, particularly the attack on pollution. We must fight pollution and fight it with hardware until we reach what the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) has called the plateau at which further deterioration of our environment is arrested. We must assure the preservation of a liveable environment for ourselves and for the plants and animals on which we depend. But, Mr. Speaker, concentration on these physical priorities has dominated government thinking about cities and urbanism itself has been forgotten.

All the programs I have described are designed to produce physical comfort and, as important as that is, it is different from the minister's phrase "social comfort and stimulation". I suggest that if physical improvement alone were the answer we would already have a great urban life in Canada because it is a fact that we are the world's best housed nation. I do not say this in a sense of complacency. On the contrary, there are big urban problems in Canada, but there are worse problems in our large cities than physical comfort and standards. There are problems manifested even in those areas of large cities where physical standards are adequate and more than adequate. There is a growing feeling that there is a lack of contact with the environment, not just the natural environment but the urban human political environment.

It is a sense of lack of access to social institutions, private and public. It is a sense of alienation from established political functions. It is a lack of awareness of the rich potential of urban life. It is a lack of influence over one's surroundings.

In the approaches we have taken in the past we have virtually ignored all the opportunities which exist within the housing stock we have, within the given hardware, to enrich urban life by policies which encourage Canadians to define their interests and to relate more to each other.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock at this point?

Mr. Speaker: It being ten o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock.

At ten o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, October 21, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

OPPORTUNITY FOR CHIEF OF COMMITTEES AND PRIVATE LEGISLATION BRANCH TO SERVE AS THIRD CLERK ASSISTANT

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I take a moment of the time of the House to inform hon. members of an important change in the duties assigned to a senior officer of the House of Commons, Mr. Antonio Plouffe, Chief of the Committees Branch. To recognize the services of this loyal, competent and much respected officer of the House of Commons it has been decided to give him an opportunity to serve from time to time at the Table as Third Clerk Assistant. Mr. Plouffe will continue his duties in the Committees Branch, while the benefit of his experience and wise counsel will be available to the Table until the time of his retirement at the end of the year. I am sure all hon. members would want me to extend congratulations to Mr. Plouffe and express their appreciation for his continuing contribution to the work of the House of Commons.

PRIVILEGE

MRS. MacINNIS—STATEMENT ON BEHALF OF MEMBER FOR GREENWOOD CONCERNING ARTICLE IN GLOBE AND MAIL

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. It concerns a complaint that was made yesterday against one of my colleagues, the hon. member for Greenwood, arising from an account in a Toronto newspaper. My colleague was not here at the time. When the matter was drawn to his attention he asked, in view of the fact he could not be here today, because of official duties, that the following statement be read on his behalf:

I understand that the attention of the House was called to a statement in the Globe and Mail of Tuesday attributed to myself criticizing those who had apparently changed their minds about the vote on Monday in relation to the approval of the government's invocation of the War Measures Act and the regulations passed thereunder.

The statement made by me was not intended for publication. It was made immediately after the vote at a time when my feelings as well as those of other members were understandably strong.

I regret any imputation in my remarks and am glad to withdraw them and to apologize.

I know this statement should be made at the earliest opportunity but as I will be out of Ottawa for some days on the Constitution Committee which is travelling to the Maritimes, I have asked one of my colleagues to present this statement on my behalf.

Andrew Brewin,
Member for Greenwood.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FISHERIES

AGREEMENT WITH SOVIET UNION RESPECTING FISHING OFF PACIFIC COAST

On the order: Motions.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order before you proceed past "Motions". I notice that the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry is not only scheduled to be here today but is here, and I wonder whether he would not take advantage of the opportunity under motions to make a statement to the House about the draft agreement with the Soviet Union regarding fishing privileges off the west coast of British Columbia, which on the surface looks like a sell-out of the Soviet Union?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I had the impression the hon. member himself was anxious to make a statement on motions. He realizes and knows as well as other hon. members that if he wants a statement to be made this has to be done by way of a request during the question period and, if the minister so wishes, he can ask for leave of the House to return to motions. Certainly this is not the time in our proceedings to make such an inquiry.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROVISION OF DEATH PENALTY FOR KIDNAPPING FOR POLITICAL PURPOSES

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-171, to amend the Criminal Code (Kidnapping).

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill would amend section 233 of the Criminal Code which deals with kidnapping. There are now three subsections and it would add a new subsection 1 to the Act and renumber the present subsections as 2, 3 and 4.

The purpose of the new subsection is to make kidnapping for political purposes a capital offence subject to the death penalty. Because of the relevance of the subject matter of this bill at this particular time and because of widespread public opinion which I believe, favours such action, I ask that the House give unanimous consent to move this private bill from the last place it will hold to the top of the list so that the House can deal with it immediately.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Thompson: Who said "no"?

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion made by the hon. member for Red Deer that this bill be moved to the top of the order paper. This would require the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no such consent. Therefore this bill will be read the second time in due course at the next sitting of the House.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

AGRICULTURE

INTERPROVINCIAL MARKETING OF POULTRY PRODUCTS—ACTION OF PROVINCIAL BOARDS

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the action of provincial marketing boards in closing their traditional markets to poultry products from other provinces which has resulted in serious dislocation in the movement and the prices of such products and calls for immediate attention by this Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: As the hon. member and all hon. members know, one of the factors which has to be taken into account by the Chair in determining whether a motion can be put to the House under the terms of Standing Order 26 is the possibility or probability that the matter may be debated by the House within a reasonable time. We are now on the Throne Speech debate. There was an opportunity yesterday, there is an opportunity today, and there will be an occasion tomorrow for hon. members to debate and consider the subject matter raised by the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley. In the circumstances I am sure the hon. member will understand and agree that the motion cannot be put at this time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED PROTOCOL ON PSYCHOTROPIC DRUGS—CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS—DISCUSSION OF TERMS PRIOR TO SIGNING

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the participation by Canadian officials in the preparation of a protocol on psychotropic drugs, would the minister undertake to make a statement at a very early date outlining the representations being made by Canadian officials in connection with this protocol? I think this is especially important because it has been our understanding that the Canadian government was reserving its views on this question until after the Le Dain Commission had reported.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have been discussing this matter with my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and either he or I will make a statement.

Mr. Stanfield: Will the minister also indicate whether the government of Canada is making any requests that the final draft of this protocol be postponed until after the government has received the Le Dain Commission report and has had an opportunity to consider it?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, this point of view obviously is one that is very important and I thank the Leader of the Opposition for his suggestion.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister to assure the House that before the government will consider signing the protocol, if and when it is passed, the House will receive a report on what is included in the protocol and have an opportunity to discuss its terms?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, depending upon the nature of these international agreements, sometimes the House is invited to express its views and at other times it is not considered worthy of being placed on the agenda because of other more pressing matters, but I will certainly take this suggestion into account when we are reaching a decision on whether to bring this matter before the House. Of course, as the hon. member knows, the government can sign the protocol or ratify the agreement without the concurrence of the House.

Mr. Orlikow: In view of the fact that the government has already appointed a commission to study the whole question of the use of drugs in Canada and their effects, would the minister not agree, even though the government has the right, that before it signs such an agreement or protocol the House should have an opportunity to discuss the implications?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's supplementary question is an argument and not really a question.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, would the Secretary of State for External Affairs give an assurance that the government of Canada would not sign any protocol before it announces its own policy in Canada with respect to drugs?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am examining with my colleague the inter-relationship between this international agreement and the studies that are under way in Canada as to the form of our legislation. I am sure the hon. gentleman would agree, however, that international co-operation in this field is essential, and that he would not want to interfere with an agreement that would help to control the drug traffic.

Mr. Stanfield: I am simply assisting the government to play their role in the participatory democracy which it talks about so much.

NATIONAL SECURITY

WAR MEASURES ACT DETENTIONS, CHARGES AND RELEASES—NAMES OF THOSE DETAINED, RIGHT TO COUNSEL, COMMUNICATION WITH FAMILIES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question either to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of Justice. Can the government tell the House how many persons have been taken into custody under the Public Order Regulations passed under the War Measures Act, whether or not these persons are being held incommunicado, what number have been released and what number detained, and how many have already been charged?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, my information is that to date in all areas the total number taken into custody is 379. The hon. member will appreciate there might be variations as a result of some being picked up since I got the figures at noon. As to those released, the figure I had as of last night was 21, but a large number are being released today. I cannot give that figure because I do not have it. The authorities are in the process of releasing quite a substantial number today, but as I say I do not have the exact figure.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the Solicitor General whether the names of the persons being held will be released and whether those who are being detained are being given the right to secure counsel and are being allowed to communicate with their families?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, perhaps you would allow me some latitude in replying to this question because I think I may be able to anticipate some others as well in my answer.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, we understood from the Prime Minister's statement yesterday that the Minister of Justice or some responsible minister was going to make a statement on motions. If the minister wishes I am sure the House would readily agree to revert to motions in order to allow the minister to make a full statement.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister has the choice either to make a statement or to reply to the question.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will just reply to the question and then rely on your ruling. The hon. member is aware, of course, that the regulations under the War Measures Act, as in the case of offences under the Criminal Code, lie within the responsibility of the Attorneys General, in this case the Attorney General of Quebec. As early as last Saturday I was in communication with Mr. Choquette and we agreed on the desirability that there be some effective control and supervision by the provincial legal officers on the application of the regulations, and that there be a review as soon as possible of the evidence against any persons arrested by a team of Crown prosecutors and lawyers who could assess the material from the legal standpoint. It was understood that any person so arrested against whom the evidence clearly proved to be insufficient should be released as soon as possible. We understood as well that the accused should be given access to counsel at the earliest opportunity. It is my understanding that the Attorney General of Quebec has made a statement or issued a release dealing with these matters.

I might say that this morning I transmitted to Mr. Choquette the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition in regard to what procedure should be followed, and whether the names of persons arrested, the numbers and the charges laid against them should be made public. I might say that in my view—and this is in answer to the question of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands—I am not convinced that it is necessarily in the interest of all those who have been arrested—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister has indicated that he would rely on the judgment of the Chair to determine whether he was answering the question or making a statement. He should decide whether he simply wants to reply to the question put to him by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. I realize how important this matter is and I do not want to apply the rules too strictly, but if the minister thinks the information he has to give cannot be given within the limitations of an answer to a question, he should be prepared to revert to motions to make a statement.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am replying to the specific question of the hon. member. It may not necessarily be in the interest of all those who have been arrested to have their names published in these particular circumstances. I am sure the House has assessed the significance of what I am saying. However, I have transmitted to the Attorney General of Quebec the concern of some hon. members of this House that that should be done.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I say that I hope the minister will still reconsider and ask the House to revert to motions, because I think we should be given a much fuller statement. From what the minister said it is apparent that he is prepared to give more information, but that decision must lie with the minister. In view of his statement and his constant reference to the fact that the administration of the Public Order Regulations, 1970, is in the hands of the Attorneys General of the provinces, may I ask if the government is prepared to amend those regulations, which it can do by Order in Council, so as to guarantee that every person who is held in custody will be assured of the right to communicate with his family as well as the right to secure legal counsel?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to accept any implication in the hon. member's question that, because the primary responsibility for the administration of these regulations lies with the Attorney General of Quebec, we have not expressed to him and to the government of Quebec our concern that the ordinary rights of people be interfered with as little as possible and for as short a time as possible—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —consistent with his responsibility and our responsibility in attempting to immobilize and break this criminal conspiracy of violent men. It is my understanding that those detained have been given the right to contact parents and friends so that their whereabouts may be known. The Attorney General of Quebec made a statement this morning dealing with the right to counsel.

WAR MEASURES ACT—SUGGESTED INDEPENDENT COMMISSION TO SUPERVISE APPLICATION OF REGULATIONS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): May I ask the Minister of Justice whether the minister or the Attorney General of Quebec, or both, or the two governments have given consideration to a suggestion which I read in one of the Montreal newspapers that, as it were, an independent commission of two or three people be appointed to do what he says is now being done by officers of the Department of the Attorney General?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Attorney General of Quebec is aware of that suggestion.

WAR MEASURES ACT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON APPLICATION OF REGULATIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, am I to understand from the exchange that has taken place today that the full statement I requested yesterday is not to be given?

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Forrestall: The minister is not even answering. What does the government think this is?

[Later:]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Prime Minister heard my question. I asked whether, in view of the exchanges that have taken place, it is correct to assume that the full statement I requested yesterday will not in fact be made?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, that is not a correct assumption.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: When may we expect such a statement, then?

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Mr. Trudeau: If the hon. member reads Hansard for yesterday he will see that I did not undertake to have that statement made today.

WAR MEASURES ACT—LOCATIONS OF ARRESTS

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Solicitor General. Can the Solicitor General tell us what areas he meant when he said that there have been a number of arrests in different areas? Could he indicate what those areas are?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker: Montreal, Rimouski, Hull, Sherbrooke and Quebec City.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, may I address a further question to the Solicitor General. Has any arrest been made outside the province of Quebec in this regard?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, there was one temporary detention over Saturday night in Toronto while the authorities were investigating the story the person picked up had told them. That is the only one I know of.

WAR MEASURES ACT—ARREST OF HULL, QUEBEC, SOCIAL WORKER

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I have a further supplementary question for either the Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General. Would the responsible minister undertake to investigate the report of the arrest of Mr. Cournvoyer of Hull, Quebec, a social worker, and report back to the House? It is reported he was arrested because he was organizing assistance for some of those arrested under the War Measures Act regulations. Is either minister aware of that arrest? If not, would the responsible minister undertake to investigate and report on it?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): I am not familiar with the case to which the hon. member is referring, Mr. Speaker. I will investigate the matter to see if I can properly bring forward an official answer.

SUGGESTED REWARD FOR APPREHENSION OF FLQ KIDNAPPERS

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Justice. Has the minister or the government taken any initiative to provide a substantial reward, with executive clemency for the informant, for information that will lead to certain individuals who are known to be directly involved in the kidnapping, a most serious offence?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Not at the moment, Mr. Speaker.

WAR MEASURES ACT—NUMBER OF RAIDS, ARRESTS AND RELEASES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Can the Solicitor General advise the House in connection with some of the statistical information he obviously has in front of him? How many raids have taken place, how many actual arrests have been made and how many releases have there been? I ask these questions so that we may have the full picture.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): I cannot give the House any more than I have already given. I accompanied it by the warning that although the figures were approximate they were as accurate as I could get them at noon today.

[Later:]

Mr. Forrestall: A further supplementary. I will restrict my question to the Solicitor General and ask him to give the House an indication of the total number of raids carried out by the various authorities in connection with the recent events?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what a "raid" is in this context. If the hon. member is referring to searches, I do not have that information available.

WAR MEASURES ACT—INITIATION OF DEPORTATION PROCEDURES AGAINST SOME OF THOSE ARRESTED

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. Can the minister inform the House whether deportation procedures have been initiated against any of those who have been arrested in the last few days?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): I have no knowledge of any deportation being ordered or anticipated in any of the cases.

WAR MEASURES ACT—SUGGESTED COMMITTEE OF MINISTERS AND PARTY LEADERS TO SUPERVISE APPLICATION OF REGULATIONS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Is consideration being given to establishing a committee such as the Defence of Canada Regulations Committee which was set up in 1940 and met in secret so that the name of each and every person picked up with the evidence against them could be made available to the committee which would be sworn to secrecy? If such a committee were established composed of members of the Privy Council, other government members and party leaders, there would be no question whether justice was being done. In particular, those who are picked up and found to be innocent would not have their names bruited throughout the country.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): There is something to be said for that suggestion, Mr. Speaker. I prefer to answer it by saying I will refer it to the Attorney General of Quebec.

WAR MEASURES ACT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER ON NECESSITY OF REGULATIONS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Considering that confusion prevails, that the leaders of some groups are banding together to protest against the application of the War Measures Act by the Canadian Parliament and that very misleading explanations are volunteered by every half-witted person in the province of Quebec, would the Prime Minister be willing to give some information and some re-assurance to the people with regard to the validity of such measures, by making use of television, radio, and newspapers, in short all the mass media at his disposal? This way he could correctly inform the public who, at the present time, is confused because of the statements made by some Quebecers and some political leaders in this chamber.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I feel that the hon. member has made good suggestions. I hope they will be heeded by the owners of information media.

KILLING OF QUEBEC LABOUR MINISTER—DELAY BY RADIO STATION IN GIVING INFORMATION TO POLICE

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I wish to address my question to the Minister of Justice. Has the government investigated the conduct of the manager of the radio station in Montreal which on Saturday night received three or four calls reporting that Mr. Laporte had been killed and giving the location of the car in which the body could be found, who did not notify the police of any of these calls and finally sent his own employee to investigate the situation, thereby delaying police action for several hours and reducing the chances of apprehending the murderers very considerably?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): That situation was drawn to the attention of the Attorney General of Quebec, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hees: Would the government bring to the attention of all police forces that it would be wise to give the public knowledge of licence numbers and descriptions of any cars in which crimes are committed to prevent cars such as the one in which the body of Mr. Laporte was transported being driven undetected in daylight through heavily populated areas?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously the hon. member is making a suggestion to the minister. He has to assume it has been noted.

ASSOCATION OF FOREIGN EMBASSIES WITH FLQ ACTIVITIES

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the minister inform the House whether any foreign governments are directly or indirectly implicated in the activities of the FLQ? I ask the question in view of remarks reportedly made by the minister in Toronto last Saturday night.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. As I think I informed the House, or perhaps it was on radio or television, we did inform the governments of Cuba and Algeria about the contents of the manifesto issued by the FLQ. As far as I know these governments, and they are the only two which have been mentioned, are not implicated.

AGREEMENT WITH SOVIET UNION RESPECTING FISHING OFF PACIFIC COAST—CONSERVATION OF ATLANTIC CONTINENTAL SHELF RESOURCES

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. It concerns the announcement made earlier today that Canada and the U.S.S.R. have reached a tentative or draft agreement with regard to permitting the Soviet Union fishing fleet to fish inside our territorial waters on the west coast. Will the minister move forthwith to have this draft agreement referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry so that it may be examined by members of this House?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): I will be glad to do that, Mr. Speaker. I point out to the hon. member, if he is not aware of it, that representatives of all segments of the west coast fishing industry agreed unanimously that this is a good deal for our fishermen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard (Skeena): The minister should be aware that I have many good friends among those who were delegates and therefore I knew what was happening. I am glad that the minister has agreed to refer the agreement to the standing committee.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member was given the floor for that purpose.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Inasmuch as a map was attached to the press release which appears to have on it fisheries closing lines, can the minister indicate whether they have in fact been promulgated?

Mr. Davis: The map was for illustrative purposes to indicate the areas in which the Russians are permitted to fish and the areas in which they are not permitted to fish. As the hon. member knows, the closing lines have not been proclaimed.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I wish to direct a related question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the disastrous effect of foreign fishing fleets on our declining fisheries resources on the east coast, has any progress been made in discussions with ICNAF countries concerning international rules governing safe navigation, the reporting of catches, the species of fish which may be taken and in what quantities, on our continental shelf?

Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, progress has been made. For example, two days ago we made an announcement with regard to haddock stocks off the coast—

An hon. Member: There are no haddock there, anyway.

Mr. Davis: —and the suspension of fishing by all countries.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (Southwestern Nova): In light of the agreement reached between Canada and the Soviet Union, the effect of which is that Russian fleets will now have access to our ports, will the minister be introducing legislation to rescind Bill C-134 passed last March?

Mr. Davis: Well, the effect of that particular bill was to bring the Russians to this country to try to get back into the port of Vancouver, and the price they had to pay was to stay off our continental shelf.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Will the minister now honour the undertaking he made on Thursday last to make a full statement to the House on motions perhaps today or tomorrow, outlining the reasons behind the agreement which has now been drawn up and explaining the government's future plans on the east coast in order to accommodate east coast fishermen with respect to international fleet fishing?

Mr. Davis: There are two matters to be considered here. The bilateral negotiations with the Russians related to the west coast are somewhat involved and I would prefer this to be dealt with by the Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. As to the other matter affecting the Atlantic coast, I think we should await further progress.

CLOSURE OF CERTAIN WATERS TO FOREIGN FISHERMEN—DISCUSSIONS WITH FRANCE AND UNITED STATES

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I believe it would be appropriate to direct my supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is he now in a position to reply to the question I asked on October 15 concerning whether negotiations are being pressed with France and the United States which would lead to an early proclamation of our fisheries closing lines?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I do not believe it will be necessary to secure any international agreement of the kind suggested before proceeding to establish fisheries closing lines. This is a matter which lies within the jurisdiction of Parliament; indeed, parliament has now granted the government the right to make a proclamation. There are, of course, other considerations of a more general nature and these are under study.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Comox-Alberni and other hon. members appear to be anxious to ask supplementary questions. We shall soon be running out of time and I think we should move on to another subject. Nevertheless I shall allow two or three more supplementaries, but they should be brief.

Mr. Barnett: My further supplementary arises from the statement the minister has just made to the effect that this is a matter entirely within our own jurisdiction. I therefore ask him to tell us when he intends that the government shall take such action to honour the commitment given by the Minister of Fisheries last spring that these lines would be proclaimed almost immediately.

Mr. Sharp: The Minister of Fisheries has brought this matter before cabinet, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): In view of the fact that redfish and flounder are becoming extinct, while stocks of cod are seriously declining, has the Minister of Fisheries asked the ICNAF countries to close certain areas along the lines of the action taken to preserve haddock stocks?

Mr. Davis: The brief answer, Mr. Speaker, is yes. We are very concerned about fish stocks off our east coast.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Would the minister give consideration to extending the headlands on the east coast all the way out to Sable Island, bearing in mind his action on the west coast?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggested there might be two or three supplementaries. We shall extend that number to four and recognize the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the Minister of Fisheries holding any discussions with the Secretary of State for External Affairs with respect to the possibility of convening a fisheries conference led and headed by Canada and attended by representatives of the great fishing nations of the world? If so, does he have the backing of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, a person who, I understand, has been dead against any move in this direction?

NATIONAL PARKS

SUPREME COURT RULING ON PERPETUAL LEASES—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Rocky Mountain): Can the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development advise us whether he has now reached a decision to abide by the ruling of the Supreme Court of Canada with regard to perpetual leasing in national parks?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, this matter is now under consideration by the cabinet and I hope to be able to report to the House in the very near future.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

BANKS ISLAND—TABLING OF OIL EXPLORATION AGREEMENTS

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table, in both official languages, copies of the agreement between the government and companies engaged in oil exploration on Banks Island in the Northwest Territories, as requested on October 13 last by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett).

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. minister leave to table the documents to which he has referred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ACTION TO REDUCE HOSPITAL, MEDICAL AND DENTAL COSTS

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Yesterday the Department of National Health and Welfare published a report which says that the cost of hospital, medical and dental care has almost quadrupled in Canada between 1957 and 1969. Here is my question: Is the department now considering measures for the 1970-1980 decade in order to determine whether the costs will quadruple again? What does the government intend to do in that regard?

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest to the hon. member that his question is much too wide in scope. He will undoubtedly agree that normally the minister should answer his question by making a statement on motions.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

PROVISION OF WORKING RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN BUSINESS BUREAUX, CONSUMER AGENCIES AND DEPARTMENT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. What mechanism does the hon. gentleman propose to establish to provide a working relationship between the Association of Canadian Better Business Bureaux, provincial consumer agencies and his department? Will he undertake to make a statement in the House on this subject?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): That is a very broad question, Mr. Speaker. With regard to provincial agencies and departments, my officials, particularly regional officers, are instructed to meet with them from time to time for the purpose of liaison. This liaison is very close—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to have to interrupt the minister but it is my understanding or interpretation that the hon. member asked whether a statement would be made. I do not think such a statement should be made now.

Mr. McGrath: Perhaps I might ask a supplementary in a related field. Has the misleading advertising branch of the minister's department established guidelines—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will appreciate that the question as asked is in terms which cannot be accepted by the Chair from a procedural standpoint.

Inquiries of the Ministry

DRUGS

EXPRESSION OF OPINIONS BY MEMBERS PRIOR TO INTERNATIONAL MEETING IN VIENNA—LE DAIN COMMISSION FINAL REPORT

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and it will be brief. I want to know whether Members of Parliament will be given an opportunity to express their opinions on the drug question before the subject is discussed in Vienna in January?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I think there will be considerable opportunity for hon. members to express their views on this question before the appropriate committee. In addition, I believe there will be opportunities for them to express their views to me in the House at various times during the next two months. I want to say that the government's attitude still allows for much flexibility prior to the meeting in January as far as the whole drug question is concerned internationally.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister can advise the House, because of the peculiar position the government finds itself in now in respect of the final report of the Le Dain Commission, if he or the government is considering asking for a postponement of the meetings in Vienna?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, last January when this matter first came up we indicated that in view of the fact there was an inquiry we did not want to be too definite at this particular time. When this comes up again in January there will be several options open to the government which can be decided upon within the next couple of months. One, of course, is that of making reservations in respect of any particular program.

TRANSPORT

CARIBOU, N.S.—IMPROVEMENTS TO FERRY TERMINAL—ADDITIONAL SHIP

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport which I posed earlier and now wish to bring it up to date. When will tenders be called for improvements to the ferry wharf at Caribou, the Nova Scotia terminal of the Wood Islands Service?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we have run into some difficulty because of a piece of land which has to be purchased and which is owned apparently by a very great number of people. We have had to track down the various members of the family. This has been part of the problem. As soon as this has been completed tenders will be called.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. MacEwan: Has the minister or the government decided whether or not another ferry will be added to the service?

Mr. Jamieson: This is under consideration and I think I can say that the considerations are affirmative. I prefer not to go beyond that because I do not know what our relationship is with the two provincial governments concerned at the moment.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTED POSTPONEMENT OF FRONTENAC AND LABELLE BY-ELECTIONS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Considering the unquestionable anxiousness of the people and the social unrest in several areas of Quebec, would he consider postponing the by-elections which are to be held in the Frontenac and Labelle constituencies on November 16 next?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I must admit that I have not considered the matter, Mr. Speaker. I do not think that I have the legal power to do so, but I will examine the question put by the hon. member.

NATIONAL SECURITY

TERRORIST OPERATIONS—ALLEGED TRAINING OF CANADIANS IN CERTAIN FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a further question to the one I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs earlier. In view of the nature of the minister's reply, has the Canadian government made representations to the governments of Algeria and Cuba, and I would take it Jordan as well in view of the reports, objecting to the training of Canadians for FLQ activities in these countries?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, we have made no such objections, nor have we any reason to do so as far as I know.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, the minister has indicated, and there have been other indications in the press and elsewhere, that these men have been trained in these countries. Would the minister not make representations?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PARIS—OCCUPATION OF CANADA HOUSE BY CERTAIN QUEBEC STUDENTS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Whereas a Montreal newspaper has reported in its yesterday's edition that Canada House in Paris has been occupied since last Sunday by something like a hundred students from Quebec, and whereas some of them have indicated that they were in agreement with the contents of the FLQ manifesto and that they intend to launch in the low-class districts a subscription campaign in favour of the FLQ prisoners, would the minister be in a position to state whether this report is true and whether the government has taken action with respect to this occupation?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think it is significant that the students have already ended their occupancy of Maison Canadienne.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

NEW BRUNSWICK—PAYMENT OF COST OF MEDICARE PUBLICITY

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare in connection with the very massive expenditure of what appears to be thousands of dollars for newspaper advertisements, television, radio and other publicity regarding medicare in New Brunswick? Is the federal government involved directly in this cost? In other words, is the government paying the cost or is the province of New Brunswick picking up the tab?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this would depend on the nature of the advertising. As the hon. member knows, this is a cost-shared program and I would have to look at it in more detail to determine whether this is really part of the administration of medicare.

Mr. Forrestall: I have a very brief supplementary question which I think is justification for the original question. I would ask the minister whether or not the federal government approved the very direct identification of the Liberal party in such publication of the present medicare program proposals?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would not think that the question can be asked in those terms. If there is urgency in respect of the search for this kind of information, which is not apparent to the Chair, the hon. member might give notice of his desire to have the matter considered at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Forrestall: Perhaps the Minister of National Health and Welfare and I might discuss this at ten o'clock.

NATIONAL SECURITY

QUANTITY OF WEAPONS SEIZED IN RAIDS—AVAILABILITY OF INFORMATION LEADING TO INVOKING OF WAR MEASURES ACT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Solicitor General. In view of the statement made last Friday in the House by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to the effect that the FLQ has thousands of guns, rifles, machine guns, bombs and about 2,000 pounds of dynamite, and in view of the concern that this has very naturally caused in many quarters, I should like to ask the Solicitor General whether since that time any quantity of these offensive weapons has been seized as a result of the raids which have been going on since the War Measures Act was proclaimed.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): As far as I am aware, Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. I presume the hon. member means substantial quantities.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask a supplementary of the Prime Minister. In view of the statements that have been made not only by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion but by the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Labour regarding intelligence information which the government had and on which it based its contention that there was a state of apprehended insurrection, may I ask him whether it is the intention of the government, or if the government would be willing, to make the contents of that report available to hon. members or, if there is some reason for keeping it confidential for the time being, would he be prepared to make that information available to the various political parties in the House on a confidential basis?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will consider that suggestion, Mr. Speaker. I might remind the hon. member, however, that insurrection can be a technique which is used without all that quantity of dynamite. Perhaps I could refer the hon. member to some reading material on the theory of insurrection which might be of assistance to him.

AIR TRANSPORT

ASSISTANCE IN LOCATING MISSING ATHABASCA AIRWAYS PILOT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. I ask him whether the Athabasca Airways pilot, Mr. Hamilton, who has been missing since September 30—

An hon. Member: We can't hear you.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I beg your pardon?

An hon. Member: Speak into your microphone.

Mr. Diefenbaker: My microphone has not been working for the last half hour. I will speak up. The RCAF has conducted a search unsuccessfully. The helicopter has not been found despite search in the Northwest Territories within an area which is generally known and designated. In view of the imminence of the approach of winter at any time, which would make any further search impossible, will the minister give consideration to providing a couple of aircraft from his department to assist and co-operate with the RCAF in making an immediate search? The helicopter having not been found is an indication of the probability that this man is still alive.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly look into this immediately for the right hon. member. If there is anything more that we can do I can assure him that we will certainly do it.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Tuesday, October 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel, for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Robert P. Kaplan (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was dealing with the proposal contained in the Speech from the Throne to create a minister of state for urban affairs and housing. I had suggested there was a great challenge to him to go beyond the hardware programs which have characterized the past activities of the federal government. As important as hardware is, and without a reduction in our commitment to housing, transportation and the quality of life, I think this government should commit itself to making Canada an urban nation and to giving all Canadians the opportunity to be urban people whether or not they live in the cities.

I speak of urban in the sense of being plugged into and aware of the broad range of opportunities which are available in the cities: opportunities to communicate, to learn and to grow up as people; opportunities to make choices of life styles and of association; the opportunity to have access to the greatest variety of experiences, goods and services, leisure activities and entertainment activities.

In our past concentration on putting new hardware in and around our cities we have ignored, or virtually ignored, the opportunities that have existed within the housing stock we have, within the given hardware, to enrich urban life by policies which encourage Canadians to define their interests, to recognize their power over events and to reach out more to each other. We would greatly benefit from such a focus. We have done our cities a disservice in ignoring the opportunities which have been there all along to make life richer. We have looked only at the problems rather than at the opportunities. For past governments, which have been oriented to move without policies from crisis to crisis, this attention only to problems is understandable. For a government which proposes to plan for the future and to enrich Canadian urban life, concentration on opportunities is vital.

Without meaning to be cynical, I would observe that there always have been and always will be problems in human society. But if a government never looks above them to the opportunities, these opportunities will disappear—because opportunities depend upon the good will of people, and human morale is a precious commodity which will weaken and disappear if it is frustrated for too long. We are in great danger today of having our morale as city dwellers disappear. If it does disappear, urban life will degenerate in Canada—as it has in some American cities—into a cluster of walled enclaves, each looking inward, sharing space but not communicating, interdependent but related symbiotically rather than through shared values and human contact.

There should be a software side to urban affairs in the new ministry. It should involve programs which bring people into contact with each other, which give meaningful access to the institutions which exist in society to serve them, to help them understand their environment and assert control over it. To live as an urban man should be to have basic information about the environment and the society, to be able to communicate and be involved, to be able to choose from a wide variety of life styles, of neighbourhoods, of human associations.

What I hope the government will do, through its assumption of responsibility for urban affairs, is seek methods of developing this kind of social integration. Let the federal role in our cities be information, research, provision of media for communication, the stimulation of volunteer associations with advice, expert services, the lending of facilities and even seed money, whether the association's goal is to bring a neighbourhood to life by providing information referral or whether the goal is cultural, social or even political. The great task of the government in establishing a ministry of state for urban affairs and housing is nothing less than than taking the opportunity to bring Canadians together by social comforts and stimulation.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin, as is traditional and proper, by extending my congratulations to the mover and to the seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. I listened to their remarks with interest and appreciation. I noticed that before he was too far along in his address, the seconder referred to the establishment of a distillery at Weyburn, Saskatchewan. I am tempted to say, after reading the hollow homilies of the Speech from the Throne, that if it would not lead people to drink it would lead them to think of drink. I shall resist that temptation and say I enjoyed his remarks.

Mr. Speaker, since I last participated in this exercise, which I think is a very important one in a representative Parliament—namely, a general debate—we have suffered a loss, which is particularly significant to me, in the death of my seatmate George Muir, a long-time friend whom I knew long before either of us came to this House, a man of whom I could say simply that he was a gentleman and a gentle man. I miss him dearly. I am happy that in his place we have a new member of our party, the distinguished hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Ryan).

There are so many things about which one could speak—matters concerning one's home province, one's country or the world itself. It is difficult even in this Throne Speech debate, when our minds should be on the generality of the questions and issues which we face to pre-empt from our thoughts the great crisis which faces our country today. Certainly we are passing through difficult times. I believe it is clear to all of us that we Canadians will never be quite the same again. Out of the great travail, sorrow and anxiety through which Canadians are passing we will, I hope, discard some of the smugness and security which perhaps for too long we have glibly assumed and sometimes even, I fear, eloquently proclaimed.

Too often as we looked about the world and saw people facing immense and trying difficulties we, I think, allowed ourselves to believe that in this very blessed land such things did not happen and that in some fortunate way we were not as other men are. I note the following in the Throne Speech which was delivered just a short time before the tragic events in Montreal:

> Notwithstanding its difficulties, Canada continues to enjoy social stability to an exceptional degree.
> This stability is not simply a matter of luck. Good fortune is a factor, but we should accept gracefully the fact that we are also more amenable to reason and, perhaps, more capable of wise decision than we are normally willing to admit. The burden of our European inheritance and our fascination with our American neighbour tend often to distract us and cause us to be unaware of that reasonableness and that wisdom. We forget to our own disadvantage, for these are traits that have made Canada a land of freedom. Canadians should pause on occasions such as this to reflect that their country is regarded by others with envy.

That self-satisfaction in the Speech from the Throne was not merely a reflection of the authors. I think we Canadians too often felt just that way. I hope that one thing this crisis will teach us, if I may use that old-fashioned and didactic expression, is to foresake the attitude which we have too often displayed when we look at the people to our south in the United States and too often reveal for them a lack of compassion and a superabundance of condescension.

We have been going through a recent, fevered upsurge in anti-Americanism and have been too little aware that the great problems which face the people of that country—social, political and economic—are in many cases, and indeed most cases, the very same types of problems which face us and most decent, free people in these tense and trying times. Perhaps we might henceforth, at least for a while, look southward with a little less condescension and less assumption that somehow we have a superior mystique and that the ills of their society are something which out of their peculiar character they have brought upon themselves and from which we are somehow happily immune. I have often found that what is supposed to pass for exceptional, super-Canadianism is sometimes anti-Americanism of the smallest and meanest kind. I think there is no place for that attitude in a mature country which Canada should be.

There are many developments in the world on which one might like to speak. After many months of waiting we have come to a new stage in our relationship with the People's Republic of China. I noticed at the United Nations the other day that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) dilated upon the importance of this new relationship. The following is a quotation from his statement at a news conference:

> I do not think there has been any other action taken this year as important as Canada's agreement to establish good relations with Peking. I can think of no initiative that is more likely to advance this matter in the United Nations than what we did yesterday.

This is a question that causes me to wonder.

Mr. Ryan: It causes everyone to wonder.

Mr. Macquarrie: I do not take a hard line. I think we have to recognize a de facto situation and we have to avoid the point of view which often prevailed in U.S. diplomacy, that the juridical and diplomatic act of recognition is also an indication of moral approval. If we adopted that attitude, the row of our embassies would be somewhat narrower, in the view of many Canadians. But two questions about this development concern me. I think the Canadian people should not expect too much to flow from this. We should not believe that all the tensions, the great power struggle and all the anxieties will somehow be vitiated and disappear because Canada and Peking have a new relationship. I recall watching what happened when Westminster and Peking established contact, and what happened when Paris and Peking established diplomatic contact. I am not saying I think this recent move was wrong, but I think it is a mistake to inflate the expectations of the Canadian people as to what will happen as a result of this action.

The other aspect which troubles me is that I do not think it is a humane diplomacy, if I may use that expression, to cast Taiwan into utter darkness diplomatically. I wonder if we could not have been as logical in the one case where you say that Mao of course is the de facto sovereign of the People's Republic of China—to use the old political science terminology—and at the same time and with equal logic to recognize the de facto sovereignty of the Nationalist Chinese in Taiwan.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: Why could not some effort have been made—perhaps it was made, but we have never heard of it—to try to find some way whereby the Taiwan administration is not totally cast off into limbo with no diplomatic association with friendly states? Surely there is nothing to be gained by taking those actions which isolate that country, and I think that it would behoove the Canadian government to give consideration, despite the credo of Mao and of Chiang Kai-shek about one China, to finding some way whereby Taiwan could retain some association with countries of the world.

That is my comment on the situation. If I am wrong, then I shall be glad, but I do not expect those tremendous changes in the diplomatic patterns of world politics which are sometimes postulated and prophesied by those who after many years have brought forward this act of recognition. I repeat that if I am wrong on this, I shall be delighted, because if it makes for an improvement of the world situation I will not mind at all that Macquarrie was wrong and that things in fact are better. Time alone will tell.

I am very much troubled, and I do not see how anyone in Canada could be otherwise than troubled, about the escalation of troubles, anxiety and bloodshed in the Middle East. I was appalled when I looked at the multi-coloured white paper, if I may call it that, on foreign policy which came out in the last session and found how little emphasis, how little attention, and indeed how little script was given to our relations with the Middle East and to our concern for what is taking place there.

Today we are agonizing over acts of terrorism in our country—and, God knows, we should and must. But it is only a short time ago that the world was focusing its attention upon terrorist activity in the Middle East. However, it should not require some spectacular form of terrorism, hijacking or civil war to cause us to turn our attention in that direction. The Middle East is, and seemingly has been down through the long reaches of history, one of the most intense crisis-ridden areas of the world.

These tensions which come from history, from geography, from religion, from strategy and from much else, have made it a danger spot of explosive potential and the possibilities of a major conflagration are there every day. I agree with President Nixon who said some weeks ago that the dangers in the Middle East, in so far as the great powers are concerned, are much more acute and more portentious than in reference to Viet Nam or, I should say more properly now, Indochina.

In these days of instant communication and modern warfare we cannot assume that this is some remote area where Canada does not have direct and close contacts and precise and important responsibilities. Whoever wrote the white paper might have thought that, but he should not have thought that and Canadians should not think that. Canadians dare not think that, because what happens in the Middle East is going to be of major importance to us, whether or not we in our diplomatic structure regard it as an area of priority. There will be no escape for us if trouble comes in that area; and if we have given it a low priority, we had better think again.

The other day I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the government was considering further aid to Jordan, where there has been terrible destruction and loss of life. The minister's reply was, if I may say so, a magnificent example of pharasaic self-satisfaction. He said:

I believe it is considered that Canada has made a very generous contribution.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

What was the contribution? It was $25,000 to the Red Cross and an additional $150,000 to the UNWRA program, in the aftermath of a war which was terrible in its intensity and awful in the suffering which it inflicted upon so many people. Of course, I commend the government for doing that much—naturally I would—but in the immensity of the suffering, surely such self-satisfaction was a little out of place. I humbly commend a little modesty to the minister and to the government as to their contribution in this matter.

We must do a lot more. Even in times of our own domestic travail, sir, we must do more. We must assist with a greater measure than we have so far. Canadians have been involved with truce operations and in peacekeeping forces. Our men have done a splendid job. The name of General Burns is highly regarded in that area. But it strikes me that since the end of the six-day war, the Canadian role in the Middle East has been diminishing. In fact, one of the things that trouble me is that there are so many areas in the world where Canada's role has been diminishing.

For years we have paid our portion to the United Nations Works and Rehabilitation Agency, UNWRA. We have done more than many other countries. This is true, we can say with candour. But I feel that for too long we have made our annual contribution by way of taking part in the debates and listening to the Commissioner General's report. I have sat in the United Nations General Assembly and heard these debates. We have then seemed to let the matter rest. But the population in the refugee camps has mounted over the years. There are now 1⅓ million people living in tents, hovels and shacks throughout the Middle East. Some of them were born there and have known nothing but the squalor of that situation. After 20 years there is an increase in the population of displaced persons, and an annual contribution just to keep them existing is surely not enough. How could we expect that people uprooted from their homes and shut up in camps under these privations would not erupt into something a little more disturbing than satisfaction and complacency? What kind of human beings would they be if they did not manifest a different reaction from that?

A few months ago I was in the Middle East to attend a meeting of parliamentarians to discuss the Middle East situation. I remember very vividly the spokesman for the Palestinians, a most eloquent man. The fact that he is the son of a Presbyterian minister did him no harm in my judgment. Dr. Yehid Hammoudd began his remarks by saying, "There is no Middle East problem; there is only a Palestine problem." That was months ago. This is one of the things we are realizing slowly, and in some cases painfully—that at centre stage must be the Palestinian people.

For far too long we have talked about governments as a group of strategically located political entities and we have forgotten that wars are not about, and this problem is not about, a collection of governments. This problem is not merely about some spots on a map, but about people with a deep sense of grievance, people with intense longings, people with aspirations and people who have reason to believe that the world community has not regarded them very highly or with much compassion and concern. With that whole complex of human suffering, it is not surprising that some of the reaction is of a violent kind; and, of course, as always with violence and terrorism, it is counterproductive.

In the world outside the middle East there is some forward movement in popular opinion toward the belief that a free Palestine must be set up. But as these moves and gains in public opinion are registered, then comes an outrage, a hijacking, and it often hurts their case far more than the progress of moderation gains for it. This, of course, is what extremists never learn whether they are in the Middle East, the Far East or anywhere else. But I hope it is not too late for us to look with a little more knowledge and a little more compassion at the Palestinian problem. We must not think that all Palestinian leaders are violent men.

I would think that Canada, as a country which has always been involved in UNWRA, which voted for the establishment of the state of Israel—and I believe the right of Israel to exist stands today as it did when we voted that way—must not satisfy itself with the old methods. As Canadians we cannot allow this dangerous situation to remain in the Middle East, lest it bring forth the conflagration that would overwhelm us all. We have there the dabbling of great powers. We have there animosities, ages old. We have there the potential for a terrible explosion. It is not for us to draw about us the skirts of legality and say that it is someone else's problem. It is not someone else's problem. It is our problem and I would like to see Canada assume leadership. Let us move in on the refugee problem and say this cannot go on year after year, that we must take dramatic, perhaps difficult steps to try and liquidate at least some of the awful human suffering which pervades so much of that group of people who once were residents of Palestine. The way out will not be easy, but the way out surely must be found.

We in this chamber, Mr. Speaker, as representatives of our provinces and constituencies try to find opportunities to bring to the attention of the House some of the important problems facing our people and bring forward suggestions to better the areas which we have the honour to represent. Indeed, we try to do this throughout the whole session. I expect to be pressing the government on a number of matters because I submit, sir, that it has not yet completed all those things in Prince Edward Island which I think should be done. And if it ever reaches that stage, I will devote my energies to thinking up some more things to be done!

We are always talking about transportation. The first Prince Edward Islanders who came up here talked about transportation. We do it yet. It is almost a conditioned reflex. I do not say that the most important problem in P.E.I. is the condition of the Charlottetown airport, but I say it is at the very top so far as urgency is concerned. We have one of the finest commercial air services in any part of this country. One can in comfort fly from Montreal to Charlottetown in about an hour and a quarter on a splendid service provided by Eastern Provincial Airways. On the way back it takes about the same amount of time and we are served with a delicious P.E.I. lunch, P.E.I. potatoes and all the rest of it, which makes it even better. After all our pleading, Mr. Speaker, the minister did have his department arrange for an extended terminal. It is a splendid one so far as it goes, but in terms of seating capacity it only goes about half way down the cabin of the aircraft, and that has nothing to do with seating space for the good people in the waiting-room greeting their loved ones on arrival or saying goodbye to them. In other words, putting it very simply it is significantly too small.

Prince Edward Island depends very much upon tourism for the growth of its economy. Agriculture we can improve; fisheries we can improve—but the one which I think is most capable of expansion is tourism. More and more people are coming to P.E.I. I can never completely despair of Canadians and Americans when so many of them choose to come to P.E.I. We love to have them, but we want them to come in comfort. I think it is the responsibility of the government, having failed to give us the causeway, at least to give us a good airport terminal. I have great regard for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) and I will send him a copy of my speech tomorrow, with a covering letter telling him once again that I am appealing to him, honourable and learned doctor of laws and of much else, to look upon our needs in Charlottetown with immediate favourable reaction.

I have something to say to another minister. This is to the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier). He was largely responsible for the establishment in Charlottetown last year of what was called a youth hostel for young people. I tried to assist during the summer by wiring him when I saw him getting into trouble, but I was not able to forestall some of his difficulties. I presume that the tradition across the country, when establishing a youth hostel, is to take semi-abandoned military barracks and turn them over to transient youth. This is quite all right in view of the fact that so many of our young people are unemployed, which I think is a crime. There is nothing wrong with their moving across the country. I know a great many of them. I live in Prince Edward Island between Borden and Charlottetown and have picked up all sorts of young people moving in and out of the city, and the great majority of them are fine young Canadians.

Nevertheless the Secretary of State made a complete botch of establishing a hostel without consulting the authorities in the city of Charlottetown or the province of Prince Edward Island. When it came to choosing those who were going to run the hostel, instead of going to any of the many fine youth leaders in the city of Charlottetown he imported some whose attainments in leadership left a good deal to be desired.

It is tremendously important in this day of the generation gap, when some people think that a man with long hair is suspect, that when the government establishes a venture of this kind it ensures that it does not contribute to any further misunderstanding between the young and the old; that it does not contribute to the building-up of a bad reputation for what is essentially a very fine group of young people. I do not care how a man wears his hair, whether as long as Einstein, as short as Jack Benny, or as in my own case where 75 per cent of the question is academic. But when a youth hostel is established it should be well run. It should be run by people whose reputation is reasonably impeccable.

This reminds me of the old Scottish Presbyterian who told his preacher that humanly speaking, he was perfect. None of us is that. However, it would be wise to avoid those who have had recurrent problems with the taking and trafficking of drugs, and so on. Indeed, I think we should err on the side of caution. It would not hurt occasionally to appoint an out-and-out "square". I think these youth programs could do some good. It is a terrible thing in any community to create the kind of situation where it is easier for people who are hostile to youth to continue to express themselves in such a way as to say "I told you so". The Company of Young Canadians let down a great many of us who believed it was worthy of support. I do not want the same thing to happen with the youth hostel program.

I hope that next year, if the program is implemented, we will not have a recurrence of what took place last year. I hope the Secretary of State will pay heed to some of us who are very concerned about these matters and are very anxious to see that all young people in Canada are given opportunities. I have been in youth work for many years. I hope the minister will avoid some of the pitfalls into which he fell with great rapidity last year.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to take part in this debate on the Speech from the Throne. First of all, I should like to make a comment on the speech yesterday of the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) in respect of the question of pollution. In his speech he alluded to the fact that in his opinion long-term, low-interest loans would be the way to most effective abatement of water pollution.

I would point out that this idea is completely contrary to the tenor of the Canada Water Act which the government has indicated is one of its major weapons in the fight against water pollution. The philosophy behind that act is one of "the polluter must pay"; that the cost of cleaning up water must be an integral part of the cost of production. Just as with municipal taxes or labour costs, so must the cost of cleaning up water to be used in production be a cost of that production. Only thus will we have the economic motivation whereby in each area of our manufacturing industry we will achieve the optimum results with respect to water usage.

If, on the other hand, we say that we will have the government look after polluters by extending to them long-term loans or otherwise, this of course is a disincentive to a polluter to clean up his own house. The polluter who knew that somewhere downstream the non-polluters, the taxpayers of Canada, would in some wise have to pay for the cleaning up of his pollution would be very foolish indeed to build in anti-pollution measures as a cost of his production and so pay for them himself.

Therefore, may I point out that the two philosophies are opposite and opposing and in our view the principle of the Canada Water Act is superior. I would refer my hon. friend to the evidence given by Professor Juby to the House of Commons committee on this score. I think he put the case for "the polluter must pay" proposition, that the cost of cleaning up pollution should be an integral part of the cost of production, far better than I could hope to put it today in the short time at my disposal.

I want this afternoon chiefly to speak to the dual questions of nationalism and natural gas which in speeches from the opposite side of the House were referred to by more than one member including, I believe, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). The two do, in fact, in some way go hand in glove and I think can be effectively dealt with together. First of all, on the question of nationalism itself, if I may be permitted to mix a metaphor I would say that nationalism is, in any age and in any country, at once a tender flower and an unruly horse which must on the one hand be carefully nurtured and on the other hand be ridden with care; because if it runs away, then indeed the problems of a surfeit nationalism can be greater than those of not having a strong nationalism in a country.

I think we have seen of recent days actions by the FLQ, in the name of nationalism, to which none of us would subscribe. I think over the years probably more harm has been done and more wars have been waged in the name of nationalism than any other cause. I believe a great deal of harm can be done by irresponsible nationalism, by nationalism which seeks to incite popular acclaim in the short term, which seeks to gain short-term political advantage, over the long-term best interests of positive nationalism. Nationalism in a positive sense is indeed one of the most wholesome attributes of any country. It enables the people of any land to work together toward common objectives, to enhance the lot and the opportunity of the entire people of a country. It points out the road and the direction in which a nation must move and can ennoble the very purposes of nationhood.

I have said, and I say again this afternoon, that I think there is in Canada today a very real influence toward a positive Canadian nationalism, a very real nationalism, a nationalism which is not against anyone, but which is determined to build in Canada a unique Canadian society; not a pale imitation of any other society, not merely a second-hand view of some other land or of society in some other land but something that is peculiarly and essentially Canadian. This philosophy is particularly evident among our young people. All of us should indeed welcome it because in this direction of thinking there is the source of the very unity which Canada has sought so long.

The question before all of us in deciding the major issues that come before this House, which are particularly the responsibility from time to time of the government, is whether in any specific decision that is taken we are steering a course toward that kind of positive Canadian nationalism wherein will lie the best interests of the country, or whether we are acting in a negative nationalistic sense, for the purpose of short-term gain political or otherwise rather than in the interest of that positive Canadian nationalism.

Mr. Speaker, we should view the decision of the National Energy Board to export 6.3 trillion cubic feet of natural gas, that decision having been approved by the cabinet, in light of the basic question of whether this was a positive decision which would be conducive to Canadian nationalism in its best sense, or whether it was a negative decision in favour of the country of import and against the Canadian national interest.

Mr. Speaker, if we as a nation want to reach the objectives we have set ourselves, we must build on a sound economy. It would be a gross error to yield to emotions and to take unjustified decisions, from the economic point of view.

It would badly serve the cause of Canadian nationalism and engage it more surely on the way to frustration and failure.

[English]

In other words, Mr. Speaker, essential to that positive Canadian nationalism and to our ability to build a strong and unique Canadian house is that we have the strength, the will and the ability to tend well our own garden and to build a strong economy by adopting such sensible policies as will serve the Canadian interest, present and future, so that our young people may have continually widening economic opportunity, as well as opportunities in other areas of human endeavour. I do not think that Canadians have made a national decision to return to Walden with Thoreau. I think they want here growing and expanding economic opportunity. No single factor would contribute more to the dissolution of the Canadian state and enable others to take over our economy, if they so desired, than not running our own ship well and not managing our own economy well. I should like to approach the decision in respect of natural gas on that basis.

I should like for a moment to turn my attention to the remarks of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas). He has made a valiant attempt to satisfy the two irreconcilable appetites which exist within his party. On the one hand he tells us that we ought not to use our energy resources to "feed the voracious appetite of American industry," further, that our move has placed Canada completely at the mercy of giant oil corporations of the United States and that we have moved one more step in making Canada an economic dependency and military satellite and a cultural colony of the United States. Those are fighting words indeed. But I wonder if they are words spoken in that positive, Canadian national sense, or are they of that very negative kind of nationalism which is meant to arouse hatred or animosity toward some other people or nation, instead of enhancing our own positive, real and unique Canadian nationalism?

Whatever else those words did or did not contribute, we know one thing that they did—they satisfied, possibly, the Waffle group. But the hon. member's task is not that simple, Mr. Speaker. On the other hand there is an older and wiser element within his party whose appetite is for power and for office. They realize that this Waffle nonsense will keep them sitting where they are today, in even smaller numbers than at present.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Greene: To placate the office-hungry people of his party he said later in his speech, "We do not object to selling to the United States any of our surplus energy resources provided Canadian long-term needs are taken into account"—which the Energy Board has done—"and provided we gain access to the United States for Canadian semi-processed and finished products" which, as I mentioned, is happening to an increasing extent almost every year of our history. Both quotations, Mr. Speaker, were taken from the speech made by the hon. member in the debate. I trust that the contradiction has satisfied both halves of the two-headed party which he now leads.

Mr. Skoberg: The minister belongs to a no-headed party.

Mr. Greene: It must be said, Mr. Speaker, that the duality of the Leader of the New Democratic Party makes him a formidable opponent and a formidable adversary. One never knows whether the swing will come from the left or the right, whether the hon. member is talking at any given moment from the Waffle side of his mouth or the office-seeking side of his mouth.

The decision of the Energy Board, as approved by the government, to permit the export of surplus Canadian natural gas was made in the Canadian interest. That is the one aspect of the decision to which we must address ourselves. I feel sure that our customers for this product in the United States of America are well able to take care of themselves. They will determine whether the sale is in their interest. We for our part should determine only one question: Was it in Canada's interest? I intend to devote my efforts to answering that question in the affirmative. Mr. Speaker, I contend that the decision of the board, confirmed by the government, is the only decision that could be made consistent with good, economic sense.

The total value of the new pipeline facilities to be constructed in Canada under these and associated authorizations issued with respect to the applications is approximately $200 million. The Canadian content of the facilities will be approximately 80 per cent and some 13,000 man-years of work will result in Canada. Of this total, about 30 per cent of the employment effect will occur in the Prairie provinces, about 45 per cent in British Columbia and the balance of 25 per cent east of Manitoba. The amount of gas authorized to be exported over the 15 to 20-year period of the licences is 6.3 trillion cubic feet, compared with 8.9 trillion cubic feet sought by the applicants. The export revenue to Canada from the gas to be exported over the period of the licences is approximately $2 billion.

I point out that the term of the sales was shortened by the board in its decision—some to 15 years and some to 20 years from the 25 years which was the general period of the applications. It is interesting to note that throughout the course of our history in exporting surplus energy resources we have greatly diminished the term of the export, to the greater protection of the downstream Canadian consumer. We originally exported in 1910 or 1911 hydroelectric energy for periods of up to 85 years. We now find that a shorter period will give greater protection to future Canadians. The period in question is the shortest to be found in the history of such decisions.

Canada, Mr. Speaker, has energy resources in very great abundance. It is estimated, on the basis of geological factors, that Canada's reserves of natural gas could amount to 725 trillion cubic feet. We should judge this decision for the export of 6.3 trillion cubic feet within those parameters. Our proved oil reserves exceed 10 billion barrels, and potential conventional reserves have been estimated at 120 billion barrels, of which 25 billion barrels may be on our eastern continental shelf. In addition, the oil sands of Alberta have reserves estimated at 300 billion barrels. We have 28 per cent of the world's proved reserves of uranium, which a rapidly advanced technology will one day make a principal source of energy in Canada. Furthermore, we have very large reserves of good grade coal in western Canada.

Mr. Speaker, a resource policy and more particularly an energy policy is a question of priorities. These priorities may change in time, but our statutes and our present policy clearly reflect certain basic national objectives.

First, we promote the development of our abundant natural wealth. Second, we try to make available to consumers a variety of cheap energy sources. Third, we advocate the marketing of our surplus of energy to foreign countries, thus improving our balance of trade and our opportunities to carry on and even to accelerate our exploration programs. Fourth, we are anxious also to protect our national security both as regards both the availability of resources and the capacity to develop and use them.

• (3:50 p.m.)

[English]

It has long been the policy of Canada that all resources clearly established to be surplus to Canadian needs are to be developed and sold with broadening economic benefit to Canada. Almost a decade ago the decision was made by Parliament, not the government, that the decision as to what was surplus to Canadian needs ought to be made on the basis of scientific determination and not left to the whimsy of the political marketplace, as the leader of the New Democratic Party apparently would have it.

[Mr. Greene.]

In pursuit of this policy the National Energy Board was established and charged with the responsibility of determining what of our resources were to be considered disposable surplus. The board has developed an establishment of some 170 people, including scientists, engineers, accountants and economists. It has access to all the government's geological and other scientific determinations and is privy to confidential records of the industry not generally available to the public.

The board was aware in 1969 that new circumstances were developing in the natural gas industry and felt that the forthcoming major public hearing on gas exports would provide an excellent opportunity for the board to reconsider the criteria and practices by which it had in the past dealt with applications for gas export licences. It therefore asked applicants and interested parties to advise the board of their views as to whether the board should alter its criteria and, if so, what new criteria should be used.

The parties interested in these matters responded generously with thoughtful, constructive and cogent advice to the board on the criteria which the board used to determine Canadian requirements for natural gas, the measurement of supplies against which surplus is determined and pricing arrangements in the export markets. Thus, the board had the benefit of knowledgeable advice from all provinces from Quebec west to British Columbia and from all sectors of the natural gas industry, the producers, the transmission companies, the distributors and the consumers.

The board deliberated over a considerable period. Applications were first received in May of 1969 and the board considered until August, 1970, when its decision was rendered. The public hearing on these applications was held in Ottawa, commencing November 25, 1969, and ending March 20, 1970, occupying 54 days and resulting in over 6,000 pages of transcript. Some 150 exhibits were filed and representations were heard from more than 40 parties. The results of the Energy Board's deliberations on these matters are contained in the board's report to the Governor in Council dated August, 1970, which many hon. members no doubt have seen. I commend it as excellent reading to anyone who genuinely wishes to obtain an understanding of the economics of our natural gas resources and wishes to contribute in a positive sense, rather than in the realm of political profit, to Canada's natural gas policy. On the basis of this expertise and information, the National Energy Board determined that the 6.3 trillion cubic feet was surplus to Canadian needs and was available for export.

Mr. Speaker, it may be that there exists somewhere an equally competent group of scientists who are prepared to challenge the findings of the National Energy Board in this regard. If so, the government would welcome their advice. What we are interested in is facts and figures, not ill-informed conclusions based upon inadequate investigation and incomplete facts and manipulated so as to fan the passions of narrow or demagogic chauvinism. The temerity of the leader of the NDP is somewhat striking when he says the National Energy Board is wrong. He states this quite categorically. He cites no scientific authority. Only the wisdom in his all-knowing head, for that conclusion!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Greene: The National Energy Board has a proud and proven record of ten years' service in the national interest, which convinces the government that it is entitled to continue placing the utmost confidence in its decisions and advice. The board has consistently maintained that increased sales would result in increased proven reserves because of increased exploration and development. The facts have proven the board to be right. At the beginning of 1960 our proven reserves were 30.3 trillion cubic feet. At the end of 1969, after exporting in the previous decade approximately 4 trillion cubic feet with a value to Canada of over $1 billion, our proven reserves amounted to 57.4 trillion feet.

I repeat, after selling gas which produced $1 billion in foreign exchange and creating the basis of exploration leading to new jobs not only in western Canada but eastern Canada as well, our proven resources have almost doubled. In light of these statistics it is difficult to put any credence in the alarm expressed by those who would play politics with our precious energy resources, rather than leaving the decision regarding surplus, in the hands of those scientifically trained, and proven able to make these judgments on behalf of the people of Canada.

It has been suggested that the National Energy Board has failed to take into account the increased demands upon natural gas because of anti-pollution measures, which will make it a more desirable fuel than oil and coal. He who so alleges obviously has not even taken the trouble to read the reasons for judgment of the board. A reading of the National Energy Board report will indicate that this increased demand has been taken into account. In the reckoning of required supplies, allowance has been made for the conversion by Ontario Hydro of the Hearn plant and two other plants to natural gas use. Allowance has also been made for the use of gas in British Columbia power plants. The board is also accurate in pointing out that natural gas is not the pollutant-free fuel, as some have suggested, and that the heightened demand for this purpose has to be limited by that consideration. It does not contain sulphur but it does contain nitrogen, and the polluting factors of nitrogen have not yet been fully researched or reported upon.

[Translation]

It was said, Mr. Speaker, that authorized explorations are exhausting too many of our known reserves. It indicates that one of the basic principles on the economy of resources is misunderstood. It is only by expanding our markets and boosting our sales that we can hope for an increase in our known resources, since it is also the only way to stimulate research and development of existing power sources.

[English]

It was alleged that this export will result in higher prices to Canadian consumers. Energy prices both in the United States and Canada may well be increased in future years. I would not pretend to mislead or disillusion the House or the Canadian consumer in any way on this question. One cannot expect increasing costs in other areas of our economy, increasing wages in the industries which serve the energy industry, and static prices for energy. Again, the best protection for Canadian consumers, in the view of the National Energy Board and concurred in by the government, is to increase the supply. This can only be achieved by increasing markets. Surely that is a fundamental rule of economics. It is a restricted supply which puts unwarranted pressure on prices.

• (4:00 p.m.)

If we fail to build up our reserves by stimulating exploration through sales, I can guarantee that there will be a very sizeable increase in consumer prices. This is what the United States is experiencing today. Might I point out with respect to prices that the sale of surplus natural gas will enhance the competitive position of Canadian consumers of natural gas whose requirements are fully protected through lower prices attributable to economies of scale, and through benefits flowing from the export revenues of natural gas transmission companies in Canada.

In the case of the licences issued to two of the applicants, the board has added the stipulation that the export price must at no time be less than 105 per cent of the comparable price to Canadian distributors. The National Energy Board controls the rates of the transmission companies under its jurisdiction and the provincial public utilities boards control earnings of the distributing companies within their jurisdiction. The more revenue derived from exports, the lower the consumer price allowable in the Canadian market.

It has been further said that the government did not take advantage of the American need for our natural gas to extract concessions from the Americans for the export of our oil. To those who feel that such a tactic is a sound manner of increasing our trade and improving our trade relations, let me point out that the amount of new gas now to be exported to the United States will amount to approximately 1 per cent of their national demands. Surely it would be naïve to believe that this is a sufficient club with which to coerce the government of the United States into altering its strategic oil policy, a policy which in the view of many has been a fundamental factor in its foreign policy as well as of its domestic oil policy for a period of half a century or more.

The reluctance of the United States to grant us open access to their oil market is motivated to a considerable degree by the concern of that country for security of supply. The security of the supply of Canadian oil is one of the factors which concerns them in considering their decision as to whether or not to rely in greater degree on Canadian oil. We are hopeful that such apprehensions can be allayed. What is known and appreciated by United States officials, and this was clearly indicated in the government's announcement as reported in the New York Times of Wednesday, September 20—

An hon. Member: Lights out!

Mr. Greene: I had not realized that my speech was having such an effect on the house and its lighting. That report stated:

> The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, J. J. Greene, has made it plain that if the United States expects much more natural gas from Canada it must let much more Canadian crude oil into the United States.

I can assure hon. members that this simple economic fact is clearly understood by United States officials and by the United States negotiators in respect of oil.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I might say to the minister that perhaps the flickering of the lights indicated that his time has expired. His time has expired and he may continue only with unanimous consent. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Greene: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I shall try to be easier on the lights and easier on hon. members.

The simple economic fact is that unless greater access to American oil markets is granted, future exports of natural gas are unlikely to be allowed, not because of any desire on the part of the Canadian government to intimidate but simply because the proven Canadian reserves which determine our exportable surplus will only be increased if there is further exploration and development of oil resources to which natural gas is complementary, and this in turn can only follow from increased markets for Canadian oil.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with the critical observation that Canada is both an exporter and an importer of oil. My department, the National Energy Board, and certainly the oil and gas industry, have had under consideration for some time the economic feasibility of the construction of a pipeline to bring western oil into eastern Canada. Until the exploration programs currently under way offshore in eastern Canada and in the far north are completed and the results determined, it would in our view be foolhardy to undertake the construction of an oil pipeline which could only be undertaken with some form of government support and which might prove to be totally unnecessary. If these exploration programs should prove to be unsuccessful, then Canada, in the interest of her own security of supply, may have to give serious reconsideration to the proposal of a pipeline.

There is an urgent need at all times to be responsible and reliable in our dealings with our trading partners in matters of energy trade, as well as in other aspects of our trade. Canada is one of the world's great trading nations. Our future depends on expanding trade and enlarging our marketplaces. There are only two great marketplaces available to us in the free world—the United States and the European Economic Community. Each of these must be developed by us. At the moment the United States is suffering from an energy shortage. Everyone is aware of this. However, I and anyone else who is close to the situation will tell you that this shortage is likely to be only of a short-term nature. I quote from an editorial which appeared in the New York Times of October 2 this year:

> There is no shortage of coal, oil and gas as such. The nation's reserves of all three are still enormous. Foreign sources are also available. But several special circumstances have developed at the same time to cause disruptions in the normal marketing of these fossil fuels.

By conducting our trade relations as responsible and reliable merchants, we will in the future, as in the past, achieve further development of our trading relationship with the United States as Canadian interests dictate. Would it, then, be prudent, even if such a ploy could be successful, to take advantage of the current fuel shortage in the United States to gain an immediate benefit? Would this help our trading position in energy and otherwise with our largest trading partner in energy and other commodities? Would this be a proud act of Canadian nationalism? Or would it be in our interest to act as does an honest merchant in dealing with a proved and reliable customer?

Canada has not been irresponsible in its natural gas dealings with the United States in the last ten years. We have delivered according to contract and these contracts have not been interfered with for political gain or as a squeeze in other trading areas. We have scientifically determined, by the best methods available, whether there was a surplus to Canadian need, contracted for sale of that surplus and delivered according to contract.

Indeed the United States is anxious to obtain additional supplies of natural gas from Canada. The National Energy Board's position, endorsed by the government, is that additional supplies of natural gas, by the natural economic link of oil and gas in the business of exploring for hydrocarbons, will only be found if there is a market available for oil. In the exploration for oil engendered by such a market, more gas will be found and we may then have more surplus for export. Conversely, the absence or limitation of a growing market for Canadian oil will discourage investment in the exploration for hydrocarbons generally.

The decision of the United States to exempt natural gas liquids from the crude oil import quota is welcomed by the Canadian government. This decision allows those materials which are produced from raw natural gas in the course of processing to enter the United States without the quota of crude oil exports to the United States being affected. Estimates are that this will make available markets for approximately 40,000 to 50,000 barrels per day of additional sales.

Sulphur is also a by-product in the manufacturing process of a large proportion of Canadian gas. The government has pointed out that in a situation of global surplus of sulphur it would not expect the United States to adopt any measures to restrict access quantitatively for Canadian sulphur to the United States market. Such restriction would discourage exploration for gas in Canada by increasing its costs and would diminish the amount of gas which might be available for future export to the United States.

The export of surpluses, be it minerals, fuels, wheat or other trade commodities, brings back benefits to Canada which would have otherwise to be foregone. I have already mentioned some of the benefits which will directly flow from the recently approved export of natural gas. While there are trade commodities which respond more readily to demand and bring forth more production, fuels and minerals have to be explored for before becoming available. Exploration, then, is the key to increased supply, assuming of course that it is worth while to look for these resources in the first place. It appears to all of us that Canada is just such a place where it is worth while to look.

We have seen something of the problems of unsold surpluses in the mineral field, such as potash and uranium. Our producers, our miners, and all those dependent on them cannot live off these surpluses, however important and desirable the commodity itself is. I ask you to point to any example in the world where a surplus in any commodity has benefited the country unless it was sold. It is this fact of basic economics that must be kept in mind. It is the demand in the marketplace that makes for an economic value, results in a return, encourages more production and, in the case of the fuel and mineral industries, results in further exploration and, if the tempo of sale is right, results in even increased exploration and, in completing the economic cycle, in even greater surpluses.

Our present surpluses are mostly in Alberta and British Columbia. Increased exploration undoubtedly will reach more and more into our northland and encourage the development of the north. The Canadian vision has been increasingly to this frontier and successive governments have made it their policy to reach north. It is not so different to suggest "roads to resources" or a pipeline corridor which is a very real economic road to resources. In its totality, increased exploration will convert possibilities or hopes into a real inventory of resources. Without exploration we will never know, never have, never sell and hence never receive a benefit.

Some people have asked if we should not retain the surplus of natural gas in Canada and use it to attract industry. The answer to this is that such a tactic simply does not work. In industry other economic factors, such as proximity to markets, are more important than availability of low-cost energy. Examples of this are seen in decisions of industry to locate in Ontario rather than in Alberta where energy costs are much lower. I believe in Texas, Mr. Speaker, they offered free gas to potential industries but had no takers because this is a very minor factor in the economic location of industry.

Here again we see another of those double-barrelled conundrums which was put forth by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. He tells us on the one hand that we should withhold our energy resources and make the United States industries locate in Canada. Yet as leader of the NDP he deprecates the fact that there are too many United States industries located in Canada at the present time. I wonder which goal he really wishes us to pursue. On the other hand, a gas production and transmission industry expanded to increasing needs of Canadians and export markets attracts supply and service industries, such as pipe mills, of considerable importance to the producing provinces and the provinces through which the transmission line passes.

I should like to answer one final criticism to the effect that Canada should use the leverage of its energy resources to gain access for our manufactured goods into the United States. I have already indicated how much leverage 1 per cent of its gas demands would have on United States policy. I would like to point out to the NDP leader that natural gas is not a raw product; it is a manufactured product. He did not appear to appreciate that fact. It is exported in useful form, having been manufactured to that form. I would also point out that Canada has been able to gain increasing access for Canadian manufactured goods into the United States market and I have every reason to believe that our position will continue to improve. I might point out our success at the Kennedy Round which opened up and considerably enhanced our opportunity in the United States market.

I would point to the automotive pact, which is certainly in the interest of Canada. Might I say, with the greatest respect to the leader of the NDP, that he would provide a great service to Canada and Canadian workers generally if he could persuade the bosses of those large American unions upon whose support his party so much depends to reduce their pressure on the United States government to resist the lowering of import barriers to Canadian manufactured goods in the interest, of course, of employment in the United States rather than employment in Canada. It is this tariff resistance which is the real barrier to opening the United States market to finished Canadian products. This is a barrier that is not likely to be repaired by any narrow use of our present export policies.

The concern has been expressed in some circles in western Canada that the criterion used by the board when rejecting the one application could result in a preferential position for those transmission companies already established to the point where there was concern lest a monopolistic situation develop which would be a detriment to Canadian producers. I do not believe that a careful reading of the board's judgment leads to this conclusion. With respect, I think the judgment should stand on the particular facts of the case and the particular applications involved. I do not for a moment believe that the judgment lends itself to the conclusion that those already in the field will have a continuing monopoly.

In concluding my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I would reiterate our contention that the sale of energy resources clearly proven by scientific methods to be surplus to Canadian needs makes good economic sense. It is a positive decision in Canada's national interest both present and future. It is a decision founded on economic realities and not on emotions or imagined fears. It is a decision geared, not to short-term political gain but to long-term economic interests; to Canada's present and future. I believe history will confirm that this was prudent husbandry of our resources that will help generate the wealth with which we can attain the goals of our uniquely Canadian society. I believe it is a sound decision in the interests of that positive Canadian nationalism to which I believe this House and the people of Canada would universally subscribe.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, those men who set this debate in motion. I listened with considerable interest to the minister who has just resumed his seat, in respect of the problems of energy and its uses in Canada. It is not my intention to reply to him or to say anything about the subject of the minister's speech. I do not intend to speak on economic matters, which is the customary thing in this debate. I realize that economic matters are vitally important as a prerequisite to the realization of what we might call the good life.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say as emphatically as I can that I do not believe affluence can in itself produce a satisfactory kind of life to which all Canadians would aspire. I therefore propose to direct my remarks for the most part to matters, other than economic ones, which I believe to be vitally important. If my few remarks were such that they would merit a descriptive title, I would probably call them "not by bread alone". I think this is an age in which we tend to judge everything too much in economic terms and evaluate everything by the yardstick of the dollar. I belong to that generation which grew up in the great depression and on maturity found itself confronted with the almost insurmountable task of overcoming the dual force of nazism and fascism.

Having accomplished that objective, our generation moved forward with enthusiasm toward a better life not only for themselves but for mankind generally. I think it was that feeling at the end of World War II that produced such efforts on the part of mankind as a determination to achieve world peace through the setting up of the United Nations organization. Then a secondary, or perhaps equally important goal of 20 or 25 years ago was the provision of equality of opportunity. By holding these views we were probably not sufficiently aware that we were ripe for exploitation.

In our effort to provide equality of opportunity we forgot that this could be debased by growing numbers of people who would interpret it as meaning that the world owed them a living. In an attempt to provide for the physical prerequisites of a good life we measured everything in materialistic terms and made economic matters almost a religion. In biblical terms, we became worshippers of the golden calf forgetting some of the other, most important aspects of life not only for the individual but for nations.

In that framework of thinking chiefly of material gain we were ripe for exploitation by the vendors of political snake-oil guaranteed to cure all political ills. Many Canadians—especially those in the cities—are, politically speaking, primitive and ripe to have their most valued possessions bartered away for slogans, ideals, states of society, new orders, just societies and in short all the tinsel and finery with which modern political charlatans charm their jewels from the modern political savage. As a result, often as Canadians we have exchanged things which were priceless for things which were merely expensive.

I believe we have forgotten there are things, including our very way of life, which are fragile and which must be carefully preserved. As Canadians we go along blindly on the assumption that we have some magical constitution that will protect us from bad government. Nothing could be further from the fact. Canadians, like any other people, will get governments only as good as the people who make up those governments and only as good as the ability of the people who elect them to determine good from bad.

Mr. Speaker, I am a Conservative. For this I make no apology. I believe the aim of politics, as of all else, is the good life. But the good life is something which cannot be comprehended in some phrase or formula about political or social order. Even if it could be so comprehended, it could not be brought about in the main by political means. I believe and contend that the most a politician can do is ensure that some, by no means all, of the most important conditions in which the good life can exist are present and, more important still, prevent fools or knaves setting up conditions which make an approach to the good life impossible. Many of the great evils of our time have come from men who mocked and exploited human misery by contending that government, according to their way of thinking, could offer Utopia. I find the motive force of human progress not in the compulsory authority of the state but in the individual's conscience and his sense of duty.

As a Conservative, strangely perhaps, I do not believe that the political struggle is the most important thing in life. In this I probably differ from Communists, Socialists, Nazis, and even Social Crediters or perhaps many Liberals. But to the great majority of Conservatives, religion, art, study, family, country, friends, music, fun, duty and all the joys and riches, of existence of which the poor know less than the rich are the indefeasible freeholders, are higher on the scale than their handmaiden, the political struggle—because the most the political struggle can achieve is an improved standard of living, and in trying to achieve it frequently we have traded for it other valuable things that are not measured in dollars.

As a result of this I believe we have taken for granted some of our most priceless values in life. We have failed, for example, to recognize that man has existed on the globe for millions of years and that only in a small fraction, the last 1 per cent, of his experience has there developed anything we might in the loosest terms call civilization. Yet we take for granted that our civilization is a permanent thing that will go on no matter how we mistreat it or with what carelessness we fail to inculcate it in the next generation.

We have failed to realize that our civilization is carried on from one generation to the next only by learning it and having a proper respect for a civilization that civilized men have achieved by struggle over the centuries. Civilization, therefore, is a very weak and fragile thing. In the course of the centuries, even in our own memory, this tiny light in an ocean of darkness has flickered and almost gone out. Instead of realizing that our way of life and civilization is a thin veneer which can be quickly lost, we tend to assume that it is our automatic heritage or that it is proportional to technological advance.

I think there is very little relationship between true cultural civilization on the one hand and technological advance on the other. We make the great error of assuming that this is automatically our heritage, but we should realize that it should be carefully nurtured and passed on from generation to generation. I believe that one of the greatest weaknesses of our present way of life and of our present civilization is that our economic situation is such that one pay cheque will not support the average household. Therefore, too many mothers have to provide a second pay cheque to allow the family to meet its economic needs, thereby depriving the children of a close-knit family relationship which I believe is essential to the passing on from one generation to the next of the values that we hold so dear.

In rural Canada and in the small communities it has been traditional for families to be closely knit. They have been the bulwark, in rural and small town areas, of traditional virtues to which a country must resort in times of stress. Yet in the last 25 years especially, the economic policies of one government after another have devastated the rural life of Canada so that much of rural Canada today consists of dead or dying communities, vacant houses, abandoned land and empty churches and schools.

This series of policies has been as effective in decimating the rural population as was the bubonic plague in the Dark Ages or the Communist programs in the Ukraine between the wars. One of the causes of this—I do not know why it arises, and I am sure it is not from malice on anyone's part—is that the bureaucratic planners in all governments seem to look upon rural people as, not people in the ordinary sense but merely automatons to produce cheap food. Their right to exist and to continue must be measured in cold, economic terms only. If they cannot produce wheat at so many cents a bushel, they have no right to exist, and so on.

I believe this is a very unfortunate state of affairs. I do not know for whom this cheap food should be produced, whether it is to satisfy the teeming millions in our metropolitan areas or whether it is an unconscious way of assuming that good life is not achievable in a rural setting. I think maybe that is it, and this is a great fallacy. With modern facilities I believe that any family can achieve a much higher standard of living, in the true sense of the word, on a given income in a rural setting or in a small town than it can in a large metropolitan area.

At the same time we are letting our large cities grow, without plan or purpose, like a cancer until they strangle themselves in their own transportation systems, in pollution, crime and bad housing. They are staggering under a burden of taxation that they cannot support and which cannot even provide the essentials with which to carry on. Also, the uncontrolled and unplanned growth of our cities forces an ever-increasing percentage of their inhabitants to do without even the essentials of a reasonable life, such as a decent diet and a roof over their heads. These things they can afford.

Much of this growth is unplanned and it is probably stimulated, in most cases, by the activities of corporations. I do not want to be misunderstood. I believe that the most feasible way of carrying out the large-scale operations that are required in a modern society is through the corporations. However, having said that I must add that I do not believe that just because a corporation has no body to be whipped or no soul to be saved, it should not be required to be a good corporate citizen in the society in which it intends to live and should not take on the responsibility of paying the cost of the social disturbance that it creates by operating in one environment or another.

I think our large corporations should be required, under a rational taxation system, to assume at least some of the extra cost that society must bear because of pollution, because of congestion, because of the need for new schools and the infrastructure of roads that goes with the placing of an industrial operation in a given position. If even a token portion of these costs was imposed on corporations, they would make more sensible choices of the places in which they chose to operate. I think you would find that corporations would not locate additional enterprises in the large, overcrowded cities but, rather, would do so in the smaller towns from one end of this great nation to the other.

Only by dispersing the primary type of employment throughout the country together with the secondary service industries which create more and more jobs, only by creating this compounding effect, can regional economic disparity be eliminated. I believe this is where the central government could give leadership to the provinces in the planning of new cities, new towns and the rationalization of our industrial capacity as a nation.

I want to turn for a minute or two to another subject, that is, the type of leadership we have been receiving from this government for the last six or seven years. Perhaps this applies in some measure to all governments which I consider have shown hypocrisy and an erroneous judgment of values in dealing with the rest of the world and with ourselves. We are everlastingly rushing around to the far corners of the world with a "holier than thou" attitude, trying to make underdeveloped countries into our own image or telling other people what they should be doing. We subscribe to the principle of self-determination for peoples in Africa, countries like Rhodesia. But I have never heard the government say in a crystal-clear fashion that the right of self-determination by democratic means is a right which also pertains to all Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacLean: I would like to hear the federal government say that if the people in the Maritime provinces, in British Columbia or in Quebec decide by democratic means that the vast majority want to secede from Confederation, they have every right to do so.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I am not a separatist of any kind. I think such a course would be unwise. But I would be the first to defend the right of any area of Canada to secede from Confederation if it believed it was in its own interest. By the ambiguous actions of central government we have led people to believe—unjustly, I think—that they are compelled to remain in Confederation. That is not the case. We have been ambiguous in many other realms and fields, and it is no wonder we find ourselves in a crisis.

We have, as reflected by the government in any case, equated freedom of speech with the right of anarchists to appear on our nationally-owned radio and television network and, at the public's expense, pour their venom into the minds of people—this venom ticketed with the respectability of our national network. We have subsidized anarchists through organizations such as the CYC and the Canada Council. We have taxed our people to a shocking degree. This year every Canadian, every man woman and child, will on the average have to fork out $656. A family of six gives over $3,600 just to pay for the federal government, not to mention provincial and municipal governments. In this set of circumstances we almost become employees of the state because we have to devote so much of our time to trying to pay our taxes.

In this environment, usually both parents have to work to get their children through school and to pay for their higher education. With great sacrifice and great endeavour, these young people who have been deprived of a proper home environment are sent off to university to sit at the feet of revolutionaries, dedicated in some cases to the destruction of our civilization. We have allowed these people to infiltrate our universities in the name of academic freedom.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. MacLean: This, in my humble opinion, is lunacy. This government has downgraded our national symbols. It has done away with many of the traditions of our armed services, those services that we now have to call upon. It has struck from the masthead of our national flag the symbol of Christianity, I suppose because that is old-fashioned. We have scorned law and order in the name of free speech. The freedom to do our own thing has been talked about a great deal. Mr. Speaker, what is the freedom to do our own thing? The freedom to do our own thing, to do as we damn well please, is the freedom of the jungle—nothing more and nothing less.

I believe that the government over the last few years has shown a kind of schizophrenic attitude toward the responsibilities of leadership. I believe this is because it has two factions within it, one gaining ascendency at one time and the other at another time. But I hope the faction within the government that will gain ascendency in the future is the faction which believes in some of the principles that we hold dearest, that most Canadians hold dear, and I hope that in the future we will be more careful of our heritage. Some may say, "Oh, heritage; that is old-fashioned. What we need is a brave new world." To me, Mr. Speaker, a country that scorns and forgets its heritage is like a man who has lost his memory.

There is no magic that will preserve our way of life. We have to do it ourselves. We must recognize that the very ethic we live by is in the final analysis determined, preserved and protected only by the sense of decency of the people who happen to be its temporary custodians. For example, there is no point administering an oath of loyalty or oath of office to someone to whom it means nothing. There is no means by which extraordinarily destructive power could be withheld from a government that desired more power than it needed. I do not mean this as criticism of the government in the present situation, but we should recognize that when a government becomes a government, it is all-powerful. Nothing assures the future of what we consider to be our way of life except the willingness of members of the government to carry on that way of life.

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to speak at length today. Before dealing with the one subject on which I intend to speak, I want to compliment the member who moved the motion for the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. We must not forget, Mr. Speaker, that he is a member of the government rump in this House. While there are not too many of us here this afternoon, we feel that periodically we hold the balance of power in this House and therefore we are very proud that a backbencher should have been chosen to move the Address in Reply.

I would tell some of my hon. friends to my left, who may not know him as well as the rest of us, that he is one of the most completely bilingual men in the House of Commons. His French and his English are perfect. He also speaks another language. I think a man like the hon. member should be congratulated for the fine job he did in moving the Address in Reply, and also for the fine job he does as a member of this House in representing the great constituency of Bourassa.

I would also like to compliment the member who seconded the Address in Reply, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas). From all sides of the House we hear a lot about the poor western farmers. It would surprise some hon. members to my left to hear some of the things told to us by that hon. member in caucus, when he talks about the wheat farmers and the dire straits in which they find themselves. As a result of this, the Canadian Wheat Board and the minister responsible for selling wheat have pulled up their socks and wheat is now being sold in great quantities. To the hon. member for Assiniboia, my congratulations.

This afternoon I wish to speak about a subject that is somewhat local to my riding. However, I feel that many

hon. members present will be interested in it because it concerns a problem that is prevalent across Canada. Some time ago the Canadian Transport Commission held hearings dealing with Canadian National Railways and Canadian Pacific Railway, in the cities of Owen Sound and Guelph. They brought down a verdict that from November 1, 1970, there would be no more passenger trains, either Canadian Pacific or Canadian National, running north of the city of Guelph in the province of Ontario, that is, in southern Ontario. I have not the slightest idea whether the government reads these speeches. I have not the slightest idea whether the speech I have made this afternoon is an exercise in frustration. But I do hope that some member of the government will look into the situation that I am about to recite, because it is most important that he does.

We have to go back many years, Mr. Speaker. Many speeches concerning this subject have been delivered in the House of Commons and undoubtedly some of what I say will be repetition. Canadian National Railways is owned by the people of Canada. The Canadian Pacific Railway, free enterprise corporation that it be, has been subsidized, not only since it commenced to run train services across Canada but indeed before it started to do so. For example, the Canadian Pacific Railway was given $25 million by the taxpayers of Canada. What is more, it received a grant of 25 million acres of land in Canada, absolutely free. This land was a present to the company. In return, the company had an obligation to perform. The obligation was to provide services, both freight and passenger, wherever rail lines had been built in Canada.

I do not think there are many of us in the House who would want either Canadian National or Canadian Pacific to run a train service to a part of Canada where nobody lives. It is true that there are in Canada lines where economy demands passenger service be either stopped completely or curtailed. In my opinion, the railways of Canada have not been forced out of the passenger business. What happened was that the board of directors sat down at the table one day and came to the division that ten years from now the company would be out of the passenger business in Canada completely. They decided they did not want to bother with it because there was too much other business to be had—carrying freight and other ventures of the company such as oil wells, gas wells, copper mines, hotels, airlines, shipping lines and so on.

At the hearings held in Owen Sound the railway representatives said the reason for wanting to get out of the passenger business was that it was not paying. Most of us are not willing to accept the figures put forward by the railways in support of this claim. At least, I am not willing to accept them because they do not prove this contention at all. Somehow or other there is a kind of closed corporation between the Canadian Transport Commission and the railways. The railways claim that it costs $15.87, or whatever it is, to carry a passenger from Owen Sound or from Southampton to Toronto. How do we know that these figures are correct? I am highly suspicious that they are exaggerating them in an effort to get out of the passenger business completely. I think they should be told to put all their figures on the table so that I and other interested citizens of Canada have the opportunity to examine them. Be that as it may, their contention is that they must get out of the passenger business because it does not pay.

On the day I attended these hearings I asked the representatives of Canadian Pacific Railway whether they wanted to get out of all business activities that did not pay, and they said yes. I clipped an article out of the financial section of the Globe and Mail about a month ago, which announced that CP Air had lost $600,000 or $700,000 during the last two or three months and that as a result of this loss an extensive advertising campaign was being taken up immediately. There was published that day a half page ad in the Globe and Mail—hon. members may well remember it because it appeared in all the larger newspapers in Canada—advertising a flight known as "The Executive".

I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether you have ever flown on this Executive flight, but let me tell you it is some plane. In the advertisement it was stated that you can have any kind of magazine on the plane. If you are travelling from Toronto or Montreal to Vancouver and you want to occupy yourself with business matters, they can even supply you with dictating machines. You can have any kind of beer you want. They serve the best meals. There are toys for the children. They even boast about the pretty stewardesses, and this may be one of their true claims. It is very hard for a country fellow like me to appreciate all this boasting about the great service given by CP Air, which is owned completely by CPR, when you cannot even buy a cold hamburger on their train from Toronto to Owen Sound, a city of 19,000 people. As I say, as of November 1 Owen Sound will not have one train leaving the station.

Years ago when I was a member of the legislature in Toronto I used to travel by train from Owen Sound to Toronto quite often, and when I did it was absolutely full. The train went down in the morning and came back at night. The CPR decided some years later to get out of the passenger business. They did so because they were making so much money in other endeavours that they could not bother to count the money collected from their passengers.

In spite of the fact that 15 years ago this train was full, the CPR then decided to run the train every second day only. Since the train was still full, this made it difficult for them to get out of the passenger business as fast as they could so the company decided to double the fare. While the CNR would charge you "X" dollars to take you to Toronto from Owen Sound, the CPR charged "XX" dollars. That is one way to get out of business, and it is an indication that the CPR certainly wanted to lose its passenger business in Canada. I defy any of their senior officials to tell me otherwise.

Once again let me impress upon you, Mr. Speaker, that as of November 1 the people in the city of Owen Sound, some 19,000 of them, and many thousands more living in the surrounding area will not have one passenger train leaving the station. The verdict of the commission handed down the other day was that it would not only allow the CPR to discontinue its service but also Canadian National Railways.

I close by saying something about the Canadian Pacific Railway. There is no member in this House who believes more in free enterprise than I. On the other hand, I believe that a corporation such as the CPR should have an obligation to the people of Canada. This corporation owns hotels all over Canada worth hundreds of millions of dollars. One thing that surely we can boast of is that this is the largest transportation company, not only in Canada but in the whole world, with shipping, railways and airline operations. That is something of which Canadians should be proud.

How did they make these hundreds of millions of dollars with which they built up their airline, shipping and hotel interest? I will tell you how they made it. They made it out of the railways. And how did they get the railways? They obtained them from the people of Canada. They were given 25 million acres, according to the original contract between the Canadian Pacific and the goverment of Canada, and $25 million, which was a great deal of money in those days. They kept the money, they kept the millions of acres, and now they do not wish to supply us with passenger service. What is more, in my opinion they are trying to get out of providing that service even though in many instances it has been, and still is, a paying proposition.

The Canadian Pacific Railway, Mr. Speaker, has two or three aspirations. One of those is to make money. Another is to get out of the passenger business not just from Owen Sound to Toronto but all over Canada. The railways are attempting to stick us, the people, with this lack of service. They are doing this after having taken all the goodies given to them in years gone by. And what goodies they are! Think of the gas rights and the oil wells that they obtained from the 25 million acres that were spread right across Canada. Think of the prime locations they have in the various cities of Canada. Think of the location of the Royal York Hotel in Toronto, and of the locations of the CPR hotels in the cities hon. members come from, or in the cities close by.

It is high time we found out who is running these services, whether it is Parliament or the railways. So far as I am concerned, a deal was made. The deal was completed before the hearings took place. Not a single witness who appeared at the hearings wanted the railways to discontinue passenger service. Only the railways wanted to do that. I am sure the Canadian Transport Commission has heard all the arguments many times before. This situation is simply not right, when two parties have signed an agreement they both are under the obligation to carry it through. The government of Canada, on behalf of all Canadians, has kept its side of the bargain. The Canadian Pacific Railway, in my opinion, has not. The same could be said about Canadian National Railways. From that city which is north of Guelph there will not be a single passenger train running on or after November 1—not one.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, many residents of that area have no alternative means of transportation. When the hearings were held, the railways said that there are bus services if one goes to London. If you want to go to Toronto you must go to London and then to Toronto. It is a most unsatisfactory arrangement. The people living in places like Southampton, Kincardine, Walkerton, Port Elgin, Owen Sound, Mildmay and Hanover are all placed in this position.

If I may, I should like to refer to one paragraph of a letter written by the mayor of Southampton. He said that when the report was issued that this vital service was going to be discontinued on November 1, the citizens of Southampton could not believe that the report was correct. He said, "It was the most shocking and distressing news we have had in many years". He also said that evidently the voice of the people is completely ignored by our government, because they spoke strongly against this both in Owen Sound and in Guelph at the supposedly public hearings. In both these localities the only people who supported the discontinuance of the service were the railways. If this is our democracy, he wrote, these so-called public hearings are a farce and a complete waste of the taxpayers' money. To this, Mr. Speaker, I say amen. He continues with a most logical argument, pointing out that as far as Southampton is concerned there is no alternative service to the metropolitan area. I point out that within my riding is the huge development at Douglas Point, at which over $1 billion will have been spent in the next three or four years. All the same, the Canadian Transport Commission had the nerve to allow the railways to discontinue passenger service.

I said at the beginning of my remarks that I sometimes wonder whether those in the government service read speeches made in this House. I sometimes think that what we say here is said in vain and that our remarks have no effect. I hope that someone in the government will look into the situation in the next week or so. I am referring particularly to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson), to whom I have spoken about this matter. This whole question is most difficult. We realize, of course, that passenger services have not always paid in the past. There are many other factors that must be corrected: the service is lousy and the trains are lousy. I do not mean that they are infested with lice; I mean that often they are dirty. There are no meals, and the only way you can obtain a drink of cold water is by stopping at a pump. Also, the hours of service are disgraceful.

It seems to me that if the citizens of Canada are to continue paying subsidies to the railways for passenger service, wherever it still exists, the citizens should have the right to say where and at what time a train will start. For example, trains from Owen Sound to Toronto leave at seven o'clock in the morning. That simply is not good enough. There are many ways in which passenger service should be improved. I appeal to the government and particularly to the Minister of Transport to look into this situation involving thousands of people who live in the area north of Guelph and who, after October 31, will be entirely without passenger service as a result of the decision of the body that dictates to the railways. That decision was made notwithstanding the testimony given by every citizen who appeared at the hearings and who gave substantial reasons as to why the trains should continue in operation.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) saw fit to ask one of my friends, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) to second the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. The hon. member's constituency adjoins mine in Saskatchewan. We both represent people who are great Canadians. I am sure, although our political philosophies may differ, that we agree on this point. I am also pleased that the Prime Minister saw fit to ask the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel) to move the motion for the Address in Reply. He and I went on a "voyage of discovery" this past summer to the nations of central and eastern Africa on behalf of the Canadian Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. I heartily concur in the remarks of an hon. member who said a short while ago that the hon. member for Bourassa is a great credit to this House.

Many of us attended the memorial services held yesterday in connection with the funeral of the late Pierre Laporte. Many went to Montreal to attend the service. I admire Mrs. Laporte's decision to have a quiet, simple funeral in an attempt to avoid making national figures out of murderers. Our heartfelt feelings go out to Mrs. Laporte and her family, and to the late Mr. Laporte's immediate family and relatives. All of Canada will have watched on television the coverage of the services, and all areas of Canada will react in different ways to what they saw. I only hope that overreaction will not be the situation.

I can only say to those unfortunate, opportunist souls, the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Roy) and the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Serré), who criticized our stand on the War Measures Act, that they would be well advised to spend as much time recognizing the rights of innocent people who have, no doubt, or will be questioned and detained under the regulations of the War Measures Act. I stand in my place in this House of Commons proud of the fact that I voted as I did.

I condemn the terrorists and murderers who have inflicted death and horror on one province of Canada. However, the imposition of the War Measures Act will do more harm to Canadian unity than anything that possibly could have been done by those people deliberately dedicated to the destruction of Canadian unity. The people of Quebec, and indeed of all Canada, are divided by the implementation of this act. People across this nation are supporting the Prime Minister for reasons other than those he wishes to believe.

This past summer we visited some nations in Africa. At that time we met some of the liberation movements and freedom fighters of those nations. In particular situations, revolution by force is the only way. That statement applies particularly to those nations which do not have the ballot-box at their discretion. That is the situation in South Africa. I support the position of those people using a type of force. But in Canada, where revolution by the ballot-box is possible, we do not need revolution by force. I am sure everyone agrees that changes are necessary, but these must be brought about by use of the ballot-box. We were fortunate to obtain copies of a book written by the President of Tanzania, Mr. Nuyere. The book is entitled, "Ujaama"; in other words, "familyhood". In that book he refers to the obligations of his country, one of which is to give the individual the right to job opportunity. In exchange for job opportunity the individual must be prepared to work.

We would not be faced with the problems we have today if every Canadian had the right to job opportunity. It is only through job opportunity that we can suppress what is happening today. I sincerely urge members of all parties to bring this fact to the attention of every authority, whether local government authority or otherwise. I hope no member of this House will support the law of the jungle philosophy which was also referred to a moment ago by an hon. member. In a democratic society we have recognized authorities vested with law and order. These authorities must ensure that innocent people are not subjected to terrorist acts. We know what happened in the rise and fall of the Third Reich in Germany. We do not want the same to happen in Canada. Suppression of civil liberties is taking a chance on the road to democratic society. We must ensure that the civil rights and liberties of individuals are not suppressed.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) addressed the House a short while ago. The lights did not flicker in this chamber because of his speech; it was not that earth-shattering. Before I came to this House I was told that the minister would provide some humorous speeches. I have not been disappointed in that regard. The minister stated that the government did not subscribe to taking short-term political advantage. Not too long ago the minister made a speech in Denver, Colorado. Since that time he has been trying to apologize for what he said to his corporate friends. A good deal of his speech today was devoted to the philosophy of our party. He must be bankrupt of ideas if he has to spend so much time defending something he was not able to put before us.

The minister suggested that a positive nationalism is being created across Canada and it is no pale image. I wish I could subscribe to his philosophy. Unfortunately, outside of the speech he made in Denver he has not said very much with regard to positive nationalism. I suggest it is short-term political advantage he is concerned with at this time.

I now wish to deal briefly with the agricultural economy of Canada. It has been said in this House, and bears repeating, that 51 per cent of the people in Canada are directly or indirectly connected with the agricultural economy of Canada. For some reason, particularly in central Canada, this fact seems to evade some hon. members of the House. This government must recognize the fact that 51 per cent of the people are directly or indirectly connected with agriculture. Those people must be looked after. They must be listened to and their wishes made known. There must be planned economy and planned involvement.

A typical example of what was not done this year was the granting of a three-bushel quota for Durum wheat. The elevators in my district were full of Durum wheat, but the government opened the quota. The elevator agent is saying, "I have a little room, but I do not want more Durum. What can I do?" In spite of this, the government left the quota at three bushels of Durum. Is this the planning about which they talk? Planning must go further than just saying, "we are going to obtain an eight bushel quota this year come hell or high water, so we will do everything we can to get the eight bushels there as quickly as possible."

Some hon. members have already spoken about participation by those most directly involved in the production of a particular resource or material. This question could be referred to the task force on agriculture. Has this government asked the opinions of those directly involved in agriculture? I suggest it has not. The task force on agriculture will hold a meeting in Ottawa in November. At the same time, the farmers of western Canada will hold regional meetings throughout the west to get the opinions of producers in respect of the task force on agriculture. Instead of waiting for these farmers to formulate an opinion to pass on to their representatives in Ottawa, the government goes blissfully along suggesting that which has no basis. They say, to heck with the producer. It is not too late for the government to reverse the decision of the task force on agriculture. I ask all hon. members with authority, particularly the hon. member for Assiniboia, to urge the minister to delay the conference which is to be held in Ottawa.

Questions have been raised in this House with regard to the marketing bill and protein grading. It must be admitted without hesitation that these bills were delayed, but not by us. Canadians need a national marketing act and a bill to provide for protein grading. There must be equal representation in so far as the regulations are concerned and the adjustment to be taken into consideration concerning these two bills.

It has been said in this chamber that there must be active participation by people across this nation. I agree with the hon. member who stated yesterday that more Canadians must feel they are part of this institution. Every member is obligated to make his constituents sincerely believe they are part of this institution. Because of the lack of participation by the people of this nation we are confronted with such a serious situation today. I urge members of all parties to at least speak to those in the schools at their earliest convenience. It may be too late to speak to some people, but those in the schools should be told they can participate in bills before this House by making representations, they might feel they are not too far from Ottawa.

I will now turn to one of my favourite subjects, decentralization. I see no reason at all for the centralization of all government departments here in Ottawa, bearing in mind modern means of communication which are available. I believe the public would get better service if departments were decentralized. If information is needed quickly, those concerned can punch a computer in Ottawa and get the answer. I am sure every area of Canada would benefit from the decentralization of government offices, and I think this would apply not only to the federal government but to the services of provincial governments. If we really want to take government to the people, we have an obligation to do exactly this.

I was extremely pleased to hear what the hon. member for Wellington-Grey (Mr. Howe) said last night. I was also very pleased to hear the references which the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) has just finished making to transportation problems affecting various areas. Last week an attempt was made to appear before the Canadian Transport Commission in Regina and put forward views with regard to the rationalization program of the CPR. The president of the Transport Commission, Hon. J. W. Pickersgill, once again saw fit to take the chair at those hearings. Submissions, which he accepted, were made on behalf of six Members of Parliament. I had prepared a statement for submission. He reserved judgment on whether to accept it at the Ottawa hearings beginning next week. I shall read from the Leader-Post an item headed, "Pickersgill to Reserve Judgment on Statement".

J. W. Pickersgill, Canadian Transport Commission president, Friday reserved judgment on whether to receive a statement prepared by John Skoberg, NDP Member of Parliament for Moose Jaw, for presentation at the rail transport committee hearings in Regina.

Mr. Pickersgill did not allow Mr. Skoberg to read a statement at the close of the Regina hearings into the CPR's proposal to reduce service provided by "The Canadian," and to increase fares.

The commission president said he would reserve judgment, examine the statement prepared by Mr. Skoberg and announce his decision at the railway transport committee's hearings in Ottawa later.

Further on, the report continues:

Mr. Pickersgill said the references to the commissioners were "irrelevant and rather offensive". He said the commission was set up and the commissioners were appointed by the Canadian government. He said Parliament was "the proper forum" for this type of discussion and directed Mr. Skoberg to discontinue that line of discussion.

Later, when the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) was trying to pursue a point in the brief, Mr. Pickersgill made a further observation. The newspaper report reads:

Mr. Pickersgill, a former Liberal MP and former cabinet minister said Parliament was the forum for proposing the changes suggested by Mr. Benjamin.

"I've retired from the legislative arena and you're there and I'm not going to do your work for you," he told Mr. Benjamin.

In view of the statement by the president of the Transport Commission that it was very doubtful whether he would accept my brief, I thought it only fair to present it here in the House of Commons. Indeed, in effect Mr. Pickersgill directed me to do exactly that, I believe it is only appropriate that the people I represent should be looked after to the best of our ability. The fact is that the president of the Transport Commission has already made up his mind about transportation in Canada, but he insists on repeating judgments he has made many times before. I would point out that the Supreme Court has upheld the costing formula of the C.T.C. and that branch line abandonment proposals will now be considered on the basis of that formula. As long as the Canadian Transport Commission holds its present ideas, there is no question as to what our transportation policy will be. All of us realize that the make-up of the Transport Commission is really the "gut" issue and we must look at the situation in this light.

I tried to present my statement in Regina on October 16. The commission ran out of witnesses, so we were able to get on at about 6.30 in the evening. The submission was made in the interests of good transportation generally and deferred to the plan for the rationalization of "The Canadian." I shall read from the brief:

The remarks I shall be making today will in some cases sound like mere rhetoric. If they do, I can only suggest that thousands of Canadians like myself are concerned. It is common for politicians to take so-called cheap shots or to be accused of taking cheap shots at persons, particularly officials, who cannot defend themselves.

Let me say in this regard that Mr. Pickersgill is quite capable of defending himself. The brief continues:

This may well be the reaction to what I am now going to say. The distinction I want to underline at the outset is that the subject of my remarks, the President of the Transport Commission, is here. He will react as he sees fit.

I might note, at this point, that he did react.

The burden of my comment is that he should not be hearing this case, indeed, that he should not be the President of the CTC. Clause 6 of the National Transportation Act outlines the constitution of the commission. The commissioners know it well, especially the president, because he made the transition from being the minister who marshalled the creation of the CTC through Parliament to being the first head of the commission.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but perhaps I should take this opportunity to read to him part of section 157 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, page 132, where it is stated in paragraph 3:

It is out of order to read extracts in a debate if they ... reflect upon the conduct of persons in authority.

If the hon. member continues his remarks along those lines the Chair may have to call him to order.

Mr. Skoberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. But really this is no reflection on the character of a member, nor will there be from here on. I am reading from my own brief; I am not referring to a debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The citation says it is out of order to read extracts in a debate if they reflect upon the conduct of persons in authority. It was my impression that the hon. member was reading extracts which might reflect upon the conduct of the president of the Canadian Transport Commission who holds a position of authority.

Mr. Skoberg: I was not quoting any outside authority in this regard, but I will take what Your Honour has said into consideration and continue to refer to my brief. It continues:

Clause 6 states that "each commissioner holds office during good behaviour ... but he may be removed for cause by the governor in council at any time."

I have asked the government directly to relieve the president of his duties.

I have a letter here which will confirm this. I am awaiting a reply. My immediate reason for making such a request centres on the statements made by the president since he became president, and some of his staff, which indicate to me and others that the opinions he holds regarding the future of passenger service on the railways are prejudicial to a fair and neutral judgment on his part in respect of arguments put forward by anyone who questions the policy and the methods adopted by the railways to get themselves out of the passenger business.

I believe it is a more complex and serious situation than that. I believe strongly that the former Minister of Transport should never have taken the job and, further, that it was a grave error in common sense for any government to have offered the post. I said in my brief:

To amplify, I came into politics as a Member of Parliament after the president had made his leap from the Commons to his present judicial function. Before coming to Ottawa I had no fixed opinion as to his competence or fairness beyond a memory that on two occasions as a minister of the Crown he failed to act in situations and seemed to reflect a pro-management bias. I refer firstly to the fact that as government House leader in 1963 he effectively blocked House consideration of recommendations of the Commons Railways, Canals and Telegraph Committee that the Railway Act should be amended to place upon the railroad the responsibility for dislocation costs of workers as a result of technological innovations. Later as Minister of Transport he brushed aside the recommendations of the committee in as specious and circuitous a speech as I have ever read.

I have that speech here, which I can refer to. Then I said:

Secondly, in 1963 discontent of the running trades on the CNR over management plans to introduce run-throughs led to a national wildcat strike. Beforehand representatives of the men could get no sympathetic response from railway management or government ministers. At the same time the president was Minister of Transport. His unwillingness to listen and to act led directly to the strike and subsequent appointment of the Freedman inquiry. Surely one fair opinion one can draw from the recommendations coming from that inquiry is that there were substantial grievances and views to which the then minister turned a deaf ear. So the memory of these two cases and the president's role in them were all that I brought to Ottawa with me in 1968 in so far as he is concerned.

I quickly found in Ottawa that the president's name among politicans of all parties was synonymous with partisan chicanery and over clever partisan acts. That statement, put in assertion terms, is libellous or close to it. In other words, I realize the seriousness of making it. Let me tie it into the present situation where the president now sits in judgment on issues that affect the well-being and future of my constituents. I do not in fact trust his fairness and I am shocked at his reputation as a devious partisan.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Again I must remind the hon. member that he is treading on very slippery ground. I must refer him to May's Parliamentary Practice, the Seventeenth Edition. Let me read him one of the rules governing the contents of speeches, which appears at page 448. It states:

A member, while speaking to a question, may not... reflect upon the conduct of the sovereign or of certain other persons in authority—

In the last sentence of the last part of the hon. member's remarks he has been passing judgment on a person who occupies a position of authority in the public administration, and he also has been reflecting on the character or the integrity of that person. The Chair cannot allow the hon. member to carry on in this manner.

Mr. Peters: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, during the debate on the Address in Reply to the Throne Speech hon. members are allowed a great deal of latitude. The Throne Speech really is of no relevance. It simply provides hon. members with an opportunity to state their positions in terms of their constituencies. I think the hon. member is doing just that, although I would agree with Your Honour if you were to say that he is sticking too closely to his text.

As to whether or not the hon. member is allowed to comment in this manner, it has been the general policy during these debates that if a person refers to the conduct of a department or an agency of government, and that person's background is part of the policy being developed by that agency, considerable latitude has been given. I have in mind the discussions that recently took place in this House, within Your Honour's memory, about the circumstances surrounding the Atomic Energy Commission and its relationship with the deuterium plant in Nova Scotia. This debate took place during the latter part of last session. I would suggest that we have considerable latitude during the debate on the Address in Reply to the Throne Speech and in that respect I do not think the hon. member is necessarily out of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Perhaps the Chair should remind the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), in respect of the remarks he has just made, that an hon. member may be allowed to make statements or comments on facts, but when those comments go as far as questioning the integrity of a civil servant at a high level, we in this House must consider the specific situation. I am sure the hon. member would agree with me that members of this House would be quite unfair in passing judgment on people in authority in the public administration, because those people do not have an opportunity to come here and defend themselves.

I think this is a basic principle the Chair must keep in mind. I am still in the position that I cannot accept the argument just made. I waited as long as I thought proper for the hon. member to change the course of his speech and perhaps speak more generally of the actions of the commission or something along that line, but he did not. The Chair had no alternative but to bring him to order.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, I was only doing what the president advised me to do at a hearing in Regina. He suggested that Parliament was the place to present my opinions or remarks. I will try to abide by your suggestion in this regard. My brief also said:

We are concerned with the absolute lack of consideration given to the basic ingredients of any nation if that nation is to achieve greatness. Without an efficient rail transportation policy Canada is facing a crisis and I respectfully suggest to this House that if the terms of reference seek only to regulate while failing to establish guidelines for an efficient and national rail transportation policy then this country is doomed to remain static and to failure in the transportation field. As in the government task force on agriculture, which adopted the philosophy that agriculture was doomed in Canada, the president of the Canadian Transportation Commission has adopted the policy that rail passenger traffic is a thing of the past in our nation and from that premise conducts public hearings.

I fail to understand how the commission can investigate itself, particularly if public pronouncements have been made as to the role of passenger trains in Canada by the president himself. For example, the MacPherson commission has recommended that a transportation research agency be set up as a separate advisory body. Its reason for wanting a separate agency was the fear that research carried out within an established authority which also had administrative authority would be used to substantiate decisions that had already been made. This point is well taken. It would not be the first time that governments have initiated special research studies to prove their own infallibility or to justify doing something they intended to do anyway.

I suggest that the commission is doing exactly what the MacPherson commission was worried about, namely, holding public hearings to justify doing something it intended to do anyway. When the railway transport commission was requested by one of the council appearing before the railway costing hearing to explain the criteria applied by the railway transport committee in determining whether a service is a passenger service the commission replied that the train or trains must be designated in public timetables as providing a regular year round service for passengers, and passengers carried on the train or trains must be sufficient in number and be travelling at such times that they could not reasonably be accommodated on alternative service.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but I must remind him that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is there agreement to allow the hon. member to continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members for allowing me the extra time. I might say, in respect of the remarks I was just making, that in addition to this explanation, the railway transport committee stated the following:

—to protect the public fully in any case where there is doubt, the committee would incline towards declaring the service to be a passenger train service in order that the fullest investigation can be made.

I would suggest that they should have used plain language and said really what they are talking about in so far as passenger train service is concerned. Another factor I believe we should be concerned about is showing the concern of the Canadian Transport Commission about ground transportation problems. To appreciate the situation one has only to refer to the establishment of the Canadian Institute of Guided Ground Transport at Queen's University by the CNR, CPR and the CTC which will each contribute up to $100,000 a year for five years.

On should welcome the establishment of such an institute. However, after reading the press release in the Gazette of May 6, 1969, wherein Robert A. Bandeen told the Canadian Transportation Research Forum that the CNR and CPR should get out of the passenger train business because it does not make any economic sense and, after finding out Mr. Bandeen is vice-president for CNR Corporate Planning and Finance and has been named chairman of the institute, is it any wonder our rail passenger transportation is headed for oblivion? The Canadian Transport Commission failed to appoint one of its own members but, rather, someone from the Department of Transport to this institute, at a time when results from specific research studies are incomplete. I could go on in detail in respect of work being carried on by the Canadian Institute of Guided Ground Transport at this time. This work has not been completed, and still the Canadian Transport Commission goes along with the theory that the abandonment of rail transportation is proper.

On May 8, 1969, Mr. MacMillan, president of the CNR, was before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. At that time I asked Mr. MacMillan this question:

Has your company ever considered or discussed with your competitors the setting up of a national passenger train policy, in order that the entire nation may be adequately served by passenger facilities without duplication?

Mr. MacMillan replied:

Yes, we have—and we have done more than that. We have under way at the moment—in collaboration with the research section of the CTC, in which the CPR are participating—a study in depth looking to the formulation of a rail passenger network of a character which will be adequate to meet the needs of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, if one looks at that statement and the elimination of passenger train service since that time, one realizes that the research work which is going on really means nothing to the Canadian Transport Commission. I have some recommendations which I believe should be considered seriously in the interest of the whole transportation policy of Canada. I say that this is in the interest of our nation because it affects a comprehensive, national transportation policy. I further suggest that the president of the Canadian Transport Commission should tender his resignation. As I mentioned earlier, I have already written to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) in this regard.

I say that the Canadian Transport Commission should grant no further curtailment or abandonment until all research studies undertaken by the Research Division of the CTC or other departments of government into all guided ground transport studies and pollution control measures be completed and, further, that the commission should rescind its order to stop service on 400 miles of rail passenger service in southwestern Ontario. I also further say that the Canadian Transport Commission should give imaginative leadership in developing a transportation system in the interest of the user, the environment and the national economy. I say, too, that the personnel of the Canadian Transport Commission should not be determined by railroad influence or recommendations and a new approach should be adopted for filling CTC positions.

I also say that the railroads should be required to file annually with the CTC a public document showing what free trips were provided to individuals, organizations, the press, radio and TV, either on rail passenger, private rail car or subsidiary-owned airlines. Next I say that the CPR should be required to file an annual public statement showing what amounts CP rail has charged itself for rental of facilities owned by itself. Further, I say that the Canadian Transport Commission should immediately institute a comprehensive, professional, independent audit to assess railroad passenger cost estimates intelligently.

This suggestion probably answers some of the thinking of those who appeared before the commission. Then I say that the commission should immediately instruct the railroads to provide adequate and clean rolling stock for public convenience, and that the commission should cease and desist granting applications for abandonment on the balance-sheet alone, and take into consideration first and foremost convenience and service to the public of Canada. The attitude of "The public be damned" must come to an end. Last, I say that any loss in passenger train operation should be met by the resources of the railroads' other non-rail holdings and not from freight operations.

I am sincerely convinced that the non-rail holdings should offset any deficit in passenger train operations. It is not right that the users of freight services should have to worry about that particular deficit. Only through this method should the railways be obligated in meeting that deficit.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, as you have pointed out, that I am, and intend to be, critical of the president of the Canadian Transport Commission. I believe the president is convinced that the rail passenger train service is at an end in Canada. At the same time millions of dollars are being spent by other departments of government on the whole question of pollution and other controls, highway building and other things while the commission continues with these abandonments. I suggest this is a matter of concern to the nation as a whole and that Members of Parliament must be concerned about the type of approach we take.

I thank hon. members for the extended time granted to me.

Mr. Rud L. Whiting (Halton): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to join previous speakers in congratulating the mover of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel). As was mentioned earlier, the hon. member for Bourassa sits very close to me and has become a very good friend. It was my pleasure to have the hon. member visit my riding last fall to speak to a group of people in Halton. While there he made many friends, and I took the liberty of sending copies of his remarks to the people in Halton who met him. They wish him well and wish him continued success in his parliamentary career.

To the seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas), may I say that the people of my riding have not had the pleasure of having him visit our part of the country. However, knowing him as I do, and from listening to the speech he made in this debate, I can say to him that he would receive a very warm welcome should he visit the riding of Halton.

The opening of a new decade is a time to renew our hopes and aspirations and to assess the values that have assumed importance in our way of life. It is a sort of stock-taking time wherein we look at the achievements of the past and weigh them against the problems that forever seek solution. It is time to reaffirm our faith in our institutions and in our democratic system. These thoughts were reflected in the Speech from the Throne when it referred to freedom of the individual and equality of opportunity as our most cherished possessions. It talked of the enjoyment of life as measured in qualitative rather than quantitative terms, and a society which encourages imagination and daring ingenuity and initiative.

As these remarks were amplified throughout the Speech, it reflected an optimism on the part of the government that the 1970s will be a decade of growth and expansion, not only in material things but in all things which would give Canadians a way of life that could be the envy of the world. I say this despite the agonizing test to which the country has been put in the past two weeks. Our greatest duty is for all of us to stand together and to uphold and support authority. Let us then work for the betterment of all. We have our problems; let us deal with them.

Agriculture is still a major problem, despite years of serious and determined effort on the part of organized farm bodies, departments of agriculture in every province and the federal Department of Agriculture to bring the industry a reasonable measure of economic and social stability. The importance of the industry is well known to everyone. When prices drop below the cost of production, when markets for the products of agriculture are inadequate in relation to the volume of goods that have been produced, then the industry is in trouble. Very few are the years in modern times that could be termed good, and many are the years that have been bad, with consequent bad effects on the nation's economy, expansion and progress in the pursuit of stability and security.

Marketing boards, acreage control, price controls, subsidies to ensure minimum prices and other devices have been resorted to in an effort to avoid overproduction and to ensure a decent standard of living for the agricultural producers caught in price squeezes and unmarketable surpluses. Through it all there have been humanitarian protestations related to exploding population, hunger amid plenty, waste through storage necessitated by lack of methods of distribution, problems of credits and payments, etc.

It is an open question when and how any of these problems will be solved to the satisfaction of peoples directly involved and those indirectly involved. But for the moment let us take a look at agriculture as one of Canada's industries. It is in a bad way, with rural slums developing and more and more farmers leaving the land, mostly for economic reasons. The movement away from the farms of this country is more likely to accelerate than to diminish. Of course, not all the farms being deserted are being abandoned entirely, but enough are being foresaken to constitute a threat to our basic heritage, the soil. The time has come for the development of a new philosophy regarding this heritage. Through past decades, through all time, the prime interest of agriculture has been to cause the land to produce more abundantly and at the same time to protect it from deterioration and misuse. The objective has been to produce food for the peoples of the earth.

In these things we have been quite successful. There is not the slightest doubt that in Canada we can produce most of the food needs of our peoples. If we had to, technological advances are such that we could double our production in less than five years. But we would be able to do so only if the plant, the farms and the ranches were not allowed to fall into disuse and disrepair. Manufacturers do something about it when they get in a cost-price squeeze or a situation of overproduction in relation to the capacity of markets to absorb. One of the steps they take is to seek new items to add to their line, and new lines that will keep their productive capacity in use.

One of the steps that could be taken by Canadian agriculture would be to develop secondary outlets for agricultural production. As well as being the food basket for mankind, agriculture should become a supplier of raw materials for our great and growing processing industries. What the crops would be, what needs industry might have for raw materials, should be researched for possibilities. These possibilities then would require further research to determine potentials for fibres or for chemicals and pharmaceuticals, and certain crops might be grown as sources of the need materials.

Most, or at least much of Canadian agricultural research has been into problems of new varieties, heavier producing varieties, improved livestock and poultry, quality control and improvement, and so on. The time has come for greater flexibility in agricultural research programs. In this the chemist must have a dominant role. Perhaps the chemist can be to agriculture what the physicist and the mathematician have been to atomic power and the conquest of space.

Who will get things started? It could well be the departments of agriculture, federal and provincial, and universities. But the problem and the need for a solution for the salvation of agriculture will require the support of the entire community. Such organizations as the chambers of commerce and any other associations with chemists and chemical engineers at the command of their members could play a big part in the revolution of agricultural philosophy.

There was a period in Canadian affairs that extended through many years prior to the 1930s when the annual reports of our banks, railways and other large corporations contained special mention by the president, general manager or chairman of the board of the state of Canadian agriculture. These reviews almost invariably were loaded with advice to farmers, most of it gratuitous and little of it of any real value to the man making a living from the farm. It seemed that every successful businessman was an expert, if self-appointed, on agriculture. This went out of fashion during World War II and, perhaps fortunately, was never revived.

The time has come for revival on the part of business and industry in the well-being of Canadian agriculture, and the time has come for a much more serious and practical approach to a solution of the problems that beset Canada's farmers and other land-based producers. Now is the time to take positive steps to protect the heritage of the Canadian people, the land, against deterioration and misuse. The penalty for failure to come to grips with the changing scene in these changing times will be awful in terms of erosion, drought, pestilence and human misery, with a new low in poverty.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Before calling at six o'clock, does the House agree to allowing the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) to revert to Motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

FEDERAL COURT OF CANADA—RESTORATION OF BILL TO STAGE REACHED AT SECOND SESSION

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions extending far back with respect to the bill respecting the federal court of Canada. Discussions have been renewed today and it is agreed that we could pass this motion which would put the federal court bill at the stage it had reached last session, with further points that will be apparent when I read the motion. So with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I move:

That, notwithstanding the provisions of any Standing Order or practice of this House, the version of the bill intituled an act respecting the federal court of Canada, as reported with amendments from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs on Wednesday, June 10, 1970, in the past session, be deemed to have been introduced, read a first time, ordered to be printed, read a second time, referred to and reported by a standing committee, and that the said bill be ordered to stand on the order paper for consideration by the House at the report stage on or after October 28, 1970; and

That, in addition to any motion or motions to amend the said bill to be filed during this session under the provisions of section 5 of Standing Order 75 in relation thereto, any motion or motions to amend the said bill filed in the prior session under the provisions of section 5 of Standing Order 75 in relation thereto shall be posted for consideration when the said bill is called in this session.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish only to say that the minister is quite correct in saying that there have been consultations and I am happy to confirm that the motion as he has read it out does cover all the points we wanted to be covered in connection with the reintroduction of this bill. We are happy to agree to this motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I wish to agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and to state that our party agrees.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, our group is pleased to agree to the proposal.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The House has heard the motion moved by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). Shall the motion carry?

Motion agreed to.

At 6.04 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, October 22, 1970

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

JUDGES ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR RESERVE JUDGES

Mr. Hyl Chappell (Peel South) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-173, to amend the Judges Act (reserve judges).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

• (11:10 a.m.)

Mr. Chappell: Mr. Speaker, this bill will allow judges to retire at age 70 rather than 75, provided they remain reserve judges until the age of 75. It is anticipated that these few extra judges would clean up backlogs of cases and make access to the courts faster.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL SECURITY

REASONS FOR INVOKING WAR MEASURES ACT—ACTIVITIES OF FRAP—STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Was one of the reasons for the government invoking the War Measures Act that the government had "good reason to believe that the FLQ, which, as a front, has the organization called FRAP running candidates in Montreal, wanted to disturb the election by explosions of all kinds and by further kidnappings or even shootings"?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I want to read from the same article that the hon. gentleman is reading from.

Mr. MacEwan: It is very interesting.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In the statements from which he is quoting, my colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, also said: "At this moment in Montreal...there is an election. There is no relation between our action and the election itself." That was made quite clear by my colleague.

Mr. Stanfield: Is the Minister of Justice prepared to answer the question I asked? I will repeat it if I may, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether that is necessary. I am sure the minister heard the question and should indicate whether he wants to reply or not.

Mr. Stanfield: Would the minister answer my question, whether this is one of the reasons that the government invoked the War Measures Act?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, sir. The reasons have already been given in speeches made in this House.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, no.

An hon. Member: What reasons?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It was quite clear that the situation with which we were dealing is a situation that existed throughout the province of Quebec, as evidenced by the letters of Premier Bourassa and the Mayor of Montreal, Jean Drapeau, and I think that has been made perfectly clear in this House.

Mr. Stanfield: Since there is a municipal election in Montreal, I believe within four days, will the Minister of Justice make a full statement today in the House as to the reasons for the government believing that FRAP is a front for the FLQ, as alleged by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion outside the House? Surely the people of Canada and the candidates and people of Montreal are entitled to know the reasons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York South.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question—

Mr. Lewis (York South): As a supplementary question—

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will return to the Leader of the Opposition. I believe the hon. member for York South wishes to ask a supplementary. I apologize to the Leader of the Opposition. I did not realize he wanted to ask a further supplementary. We will return to him in a moment.

FRAP—STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—ACTION AGAINST MEMBERS OF ORGANIZATION

and ask him whether the statement made by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to the effect that FRAP was a front for the FLQ was a statement which the government approves of and, second, does that mean, as it seems to me to mean, that under the regulations the members of FRAP are members of an illegal organization and are subject to arrest?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, on the second point the hon. member is entitled to his own legal interpretation, but on the first point the answer is no.

Mr. Lewis: May I then ask the Minister of Justice whether he or his department has considered, or whether he knows whether the Attorney General of Quebec has considered, applying the regulations against members and supporters of FRAP and, if not, would he say whether it is right to call it a front for an illegal organization?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I just answered that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously the second part of the question is not in order. Perhaps the first part of the question would be acceptable from a procedural standpoint, but certainly not the second part.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if I may repeat the first part of the question, perhaps the Minister of Justice would give an answer. My question was whether, in view of the allegation made by a colleague of his, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, FRAP is now considered an illegal organization by him or the Attorney General of Quebec, and is action contemplated against those associated with it?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is quite clear, Mr. Speaker, that the responsibility for the application of these regulations in Quebec is the responsibility of the Attorney General of Quebec. I have not communicated with him on that particular subject.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether he proposes to make any statement in the House or to the public at large in view of the extraordinary and alarming statement made outside the House by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, particularly in view of the electoral circumstances that prevail in the city of Montreal?

Mr. Trudeau: My statement was very clear and sharp, Mr. Speaker. I answered the question of the hon. member for York South by a clear no.

SUGGESTED POSTPONEMENT OF MONTREAL MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a supplementary question of the right hon. Prime Minister.

[Mr. Lewis.]

Considering the tragic situation in Quebec, could he tell us if a member of his cabinet has been in contact with a minister of the Quebec government with a view to postponing indefinitely the municipal election in Montreal?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Not that I know of, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

REASONS FOR INVOKING WAR MEASURES ACT—ACTIVITIES OF FRAP——STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, why ask other ministers when the minister in question has arrived?

An hon. Member: He just came in.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion whether the information he gave so blandly in Vancouver yesterday was well founded or is it—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. gentleman knows, of course, that the question cannot be asked in this form. It was asked in the correct form by other members who preceded him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I want to find out from the minister whether it is true that one of the reasons for the War Measures Act being invoked by the government is the fact that this FRAP organization, or whatever it is called, in Montreal was regarded as an instrument of wrongdoing?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have indicated to the right hon. gentleman that the question cannot be asked of the minister in those terms. In relation to a statement made outside the House by a minister, a question may be asked of the Prime Minister, and this has been done.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, surely there is not being built around this government a wall of protection when the minister is in the House and he is asked to answer directly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The rules are very clear and they are applicable to all members.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. No one is more deferential to Your Honour that I am, but I have heard questions like this asked over the years. Either the minister spoke out of his hat or was endeavouring without any information to influence the election. In either case Parliament never had this information. This is another reason that a full statement should be made regarding the situation which resulted in the bringing in of the War Measures Act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I cannot quarrel with the statement made by the right hon. gentleman but if a statement of this kind were to be made it would not be as the result of an inquiry of the minister in question, but a request of the Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice. My impression is that this is what was requested previously during the question period. The hon. member for Egmont.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I noticed that the minister is rising. In view of the minister's direct intervention in the municipal election in Montreal, I wonder whether he is now prepared to make a statement to the House, particularly in view of the serious charges that were in fact made by the minister outside the House?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege.

We have no intention of interfering, either directly or indirectly, in the municipal election in Montreal. There is nothing to withdraw from the statement I made yesterday. However, there has obviously been some confusion due to the fact that, because of my imperfect command of the English language, I used the English word "front" instead of the French expression "caution morale". I shall clarify this outside the House.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in view of the danger of innuendo and smear, will the Prime Minister not agree that the time has arrived for full and concise information as to the exact nature of the apprehended insurrection as asked for earlier in the House?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I address a very simple question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the statement he is reported to have made, would he not agree to make a statement on motions—I am sure hon. members would gladly revert to motions now to give him the opportunity—explaining the statement he made about FRAP and giving the House the evidence on which he made that statement which has smeared a good many innocent people?

Mr. Stanfield: Dictatorship.

An hon. Member: Including his own friends.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Would the Minister of Justice, as the chief law officer of the Crown, discuss this matter with his colleague to ascertain if his colleague has facts in connection with which there should be further investigation, and then report his findings to the House?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have already discussed this matter with the Solicitor General. He is not in the House today.

Mr. Stanfield: That's too bad.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I have nothing further to add to what the minister has already said.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of Justice whether, in the discussions he has had with the Solicitor General, consideration was given to the fact that the remarks made by the minister in question come within the provisions of the Hate bill legislation?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the Minister of Justice would indicate whether any other action has been taken to prevent FRAP from distributing political literature or, in effect, to make inoperable an aspect of the political campaign now being waged in the Montreal municipal elections?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as has already been said, the bringing into force of the War Measures Act has no relationship to the municipal elections.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In order to clarify certain matters, can the minister say in the House whether or not FRAP is a front for the FLQ?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

MONTREAL—REMOVAL OF FRAP ELECTION POSTERS IN UNIVERSITY SETTLEMENT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Will he undertake to investigate whether or not the police entered the University Settlement in Montreal and required that FRAP election posters be taken down, on threat of imprisonment? Does he not consider this action if it is correct, to be an infringement of the rights of the people in that area with respect to municipal elections? Also, what action does he propose to take with respect to this matter?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will ask my colleague, the Solicitor General, to look into the hon. member's question.

WAR MEASURES ACT—HOLDING INCOMMUNICADO OF THOSE DETAINED, RIGHT TO COUNSEL—AMENDMENT OF REGULATIONS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask another question. Yesterday the Minister of Justice made the following statement in the House, as reported at page 422 of Hansard:

> It is my understanding that those detained have been given the right to contact parents and friends so that their whereabouts may be known. The Attorney General of Quebec made a statement this morning dealing with the right to counsel.

In view of the statement made by the Attorney General of Quebec yesterday that more than 300 of the persons detained are going to be held incommunicado and denied the right to counsel, may I ask the minister if he can clarify the situation inasmuch as he appears to be making one statement and the Attorney General of Quebec appears to be making a totally different statement?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the premise upon which the hon. member concluded his question. I should like to table later in the day—I do not have it with me now—the press release or statement issued by the Attorney General of Quebec, if I have the permission of the House. The Prime Minister has a copy here which we can table so that it will be clear to the House what the Attorney General of Quebec actually did say. I would be glad to table that copy now, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member have a supplementary question?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I would like to go on if I may, Mr. Speaker, to answer the substance of the question of the hon. member.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, could this statement be made an appendix to Hansard?

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For text of statement referred to above, see appendix.]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): With reference to the statement contained in the hon. member's question that those arrested were to be held incommunicado, I refer to the headline in this morning's Globe and Mail, "Choquette will detain prisoners at least 21 days incommunicado". I think I can say that that headline misrepresents the situation that exists.

The information I have, after conferring with the office of the Attorney General of Quebec this morning, is that 369 persons have been arrested under the regulations under the War Measures Act and that up until yesterday afternoon 55 of those arrested had been released. I also understand from the office of the Attorney General of Quebec that at least 48 more either have been or will be released today.

It is true it was my understanding after discussions with Mr. Choquette that the Quebec government recognized that the arrested persons had the right to instruct counsel on their behalf, and I believe that arrangements either have been or are being made to permit this to be done. Mr. Choquette refers to that in the statement I just tabled. It is also my understanding from the press communiqué issued by Mr. Choquette that the police have already notified the families of those detained in any cases in which they were requested to do so.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact that the minister and the federal government drafted these regulations, not the Attorney General of Quebec, and the minister must therefore accept responsibility, is the minister now prepared to amend the regulations in order to assure the people of Canada that the persons now being detained or any persons who may be detained under these regulations will have the clear and undisputed right to legal counsel and to communication with their families?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): What the government intends to do, Mr. Speaker, is to introduce legislation at an early date to replace the regulations. The Prime Minister wrote the leaders of the other parties, including the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, asking for suggestions as to what should be included in the legislation. We would appreciate receiving a reply as early as possible so that we can proceed with this legislation.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has a further supplementary following which I will recognize the hon. member for Egmont.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The minister is quite right in stating that we received an invitation from the Prime Minister to submit our suggestions. We are in the process of doing so and he will have them either today or tomorrow. In view of the statement made by the Minister of Justice yesterday, as reported in this morning's paper and on television, that the present regulations will be transferred into a statute, I ask the minister, if that is the case, whether this means that the invitation for opposition parties to make suggestions is pure hypocrisy and a farce?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question, of course, cannot be allowed.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Justice on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I hoped this question was important enough that it would not descend into the political arena, something the hon. member is seeking to bring about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You started it.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that this is not very helpful. I would think that the minister who has just spoken did not indicate that he had a question of privilege. This is, again, a point of debate. The minister has invited debate in the same way as the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands has done, and I think it would be as well at this point if I were to recognize the hon. member for Egmont.

WAR MEASURES ACT ARRESTS—SUGGESTED USE OF INDEPENDENT OBSERVERS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Bearing in mind the resolution recently presented to the federal government and the government of Quebec by the Canadian Council of Churches, may I ask whether the Minister of Justice has yet had an opportunity to consult with the provincial Attorney General as to the possibility of following up the suggestion that independent observers be allowed access to people held in custody so that there may be a minimum of future embarrassment or difficulty created because of prolonged or unnecessary detention?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I relayed that suggestion to the office of the Attorney General this morning along with the suggestion made yesterday by the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

WAR MEASURES ACT—OPINIONS EXPRESSED IN LETTERS TO PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Considering I am receiving hundreds of letters from all parts of Canada congratulating the government on its position in the present situation, could the Prime Minister tell us whether he himself is getting a considerable number of letters—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Caouette: There is no oh's or ah's about it. I want to know whether he is getting a great number of letters from all parts of Canada expressing the opinion of the general public, not that of the crackpots who are in Parliament.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The situation is not improving. I will now take a chance with the hon. member for South Shore.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Témiscamingue will have to wait a moment. I have already recognized the hon. member for South Shore.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

NEW BRUNSWICK ELECTION—OPPORTUNITY TO VOTE FOR CAMP GAGETOWN TROOPS ON DUTY OUTSIDE PROVINCE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I shall direct my question to the Minister of National Defence, Mr. Speaker. At the present time New Brunswick troops are out of Camp Gagetown on duty in Quebec. Has the minister made any provision for absentee voting by servicemen on duty outside their own province? If not, what action will be taken to ensure that New Brunswick soldiers are not disenfranchised in the forthcoming election?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): This question relates to the right to vote and the provisions which allow for absentee voting or the service vote. It is a matter entirely for the law of New Brunswick and it is therefore not within the power of the federal government or this Parliament to change the provisions of that law so that these people may vote. I did indicate when I was in Gagetown yesterday that the primary consideration was that soldiers should be in a position to discharge the duties they are now discharging in the interest of national security. But if, as I sincerely hope, it is possible in the very near future to bring some of the men back to the Canadian Forces Bases we shall make a particular effort to get the RCR back to Gagetown so that they will be able to vote next Monday.

NATIONAL SECURITY

QUEBEC—WAR MEASURES ACT—SUGGESTED FREE VOTE AMONG UNION MEMBERS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I am back again, not with a statement, but with a question for the Prime Minister.

According to this morning's news, the union leaders Pépin, Laberge and Carbonneau are requesting immediate suspension of application of the War Measures Act in order, they claim, to save democracy.

In view of these people's claim that they are speaking on behalf of their membership, which, incidentally, is unfounded, does the Prime Minister intend to suggest that those three feather-brained characters hold a free vote among their members in order to realize that 90 per cent of them are in favour of legislation aimed at protecting—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

MEASURES TO INCREASE BENEFITS PENDING WHITE PAPER ON SOCIAL SECURITY

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): I wish to direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since there has been evidence of continuing delay in the tabling of the white paper on social security, will the minister tell the House what measures are to be introduced in the interim to increase benefits for veterans receiving allowances and disability pensions?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): That would be a more appropriate question to direct to my colleague, the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: I was under the impression that a similar question was addressed to the minister a few days ago, but since I am not sure, perhaps the hon. member might like to continue.

Mr. Marshall: May I simply redirect my question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I am sorry. Would the hon. member kindly repeat his question?

Mr. Marshall: Because of the delay in bringing in the white paper on social security, would the minister advise the House what interim measures are being taken to increase benefits to war veterans receiving war veterans allowances and disability pensions?

Mr. Dubé: This matter is still under very active and sympathetic consideration and when a decision is made it will be announced in the proper way.

ELIMINATION OF RESIDENCE RULE IN RESPECT OF WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): In the course of the consideration of veterans benefits, is the position of war veterans who live outside Canada and who would otherwise qualify for war veterans allowance being reviewed so as to eliminate the arbitrary residence rule now in effect?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): All these questions are being looked into at the present time.

CLOSING OF LONDON, ENGLAND, OFFICE—CONTINUATION OF SERVICE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I have a question, Mr. Speaker, having to do with Canadian veterans living in the United Kingdom. Is the Department of Veterans Affairs office in London being closed and, if so, who will be looking after the many Canadian veterans over there? Also, what is being done to provide positions for those who are being removed from the offices they have held?

Mr. Speaker: Again I have the impression that this question has already been asked but in view of the importance of the matter the minister might wish to reply.

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): This question was answered last week, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No. This question was not answered. More evasion!

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

GUIDELINES RESPECTING FALSE AND MISLEADING ADVERTISING

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Is he prepared to tell the House what the guidelines are that have been set down to determine what constitutes false and misleading advertising so that the Canadian people can be made aware of them?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Over a year ago I made a statement setting out certain instances of misleading advertising which we would endeavour to reach under section 33(d) of the Combines Investigation Act. That statement received wide publicity among better business bureaux and retail merchants associations, who have been very helpful and co-operative in our misleading advertising campaign, so I am not sure what the hon. member is referring to.

Mr. McGrath: May I ask, then, whether the minister has resolved his jurisdictional conflict concerning this matter with his counterpart in the province of Ontario?

Mr. Basford: Without offering a legal opinion I might say there is no view of which I am aware which expresses any doubt as to our jurisdiction to administer section 33(d) of the Combines Investigation Act.

ADVERTISEMENTS FOR NON-LEAD GASOLINE

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): My supplementary question has to do with misleading advertising, Mr. Speaker. It arises from the fact that the National Research Council has established that non-lead gasoline, when used in cars built prior to the recent models, causes greater air pollution, not less. Has the minister consulted with his officials to determine whether or not these advertisements for non-lead gasoline are contravening the misleading advertising regulations?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member appears to be inviting the minister to express a legal opinion. I doubt whether his question is in order.

Mr. Basford: I did not take the question as asking for a legal opinion, Mr. Speaker. All I can say is that we are examining all of the oil companies' advertising—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ALLEGED CENSORSHIP OF CONTENTS OF UNIVERSITY STUDENT NEWSPAPERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether RCMP officers were acting on the instructions of the government when they warned university student newspaper editors that action would be taken against them if they distributed newspapers the contents of which had been questioned by the police?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): That question is phrased in terms too vague for me to answer. In any event, I will refer it by way of notice to the attention of the Solicitor General.

Mr. Orlikow: Will the Minister of Justice undertake an investigation and report back to the House regarding the censoring of student newspapers across Canada, especially of editorials arguing against the implementation of the War Measures Act?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will look into the matter, Mr. Speaker, but there is nothing in the regulations to which reference was made earlier today that in any way implies censorship of news coverage or public comment.

Mr. Orlikow: That being the case, would the minister look into the question of whether in fact the police have been misusing the regulations in the way suggested?

AGRICULTURE

CATTLE—CHANGES IN BEEF GRADING SYSTEM—CONTINUED USE OF OPEN AUCTION BIDDING

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the serious concern of many cattle producers over pending changes in the beef grading system in Canada, which appear to indicate a much greater proportion of rail grading as a basis of settlement to the producer, what thought or consideration is being given to western beef producers who rely heavily on the facilities of the open auction markets where their cattle are exposed to the bidding of several buyers, which seems to be a very satisfactory competitive bidding arrangement?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the minister reply to this question briefly. It seems to me to be one of a very general nature which would normally call for a statement on motions. If the minister can reply quickly and briefly, it will be acceptable in those terms.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will comply with your suggestion. I do not believe there will be any interference with or any basic change in the auction method of selling most cattle, but there is a plan that is being worked out by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Canadian Cattlemen's Association and others, with some co-operation from my department, to change some of the bases on which beef is graded. As far as I can tell there is no agreement on the question at the present time, and I think that more work will have to be done before a new grading standard becomes operational.

PUBLIC WORKS

CHURCHILL—CONCLUSION OF REDEVELOPMENT AGREEMENT

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. Can the minister say whether an agreement between the federal government and the government of Manitoba has been finalized with respect to a redevelopment plan for the town of Churchill?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I might tell the hon. member that we advanced this proposal to the government of the province of Manitoba several months ago. Although no agreement has yet been concluded, we are hopeful.

Mr. Simpson: Can the minister say whether the matter of a $10 million redevelopment plan for Churchill has as yet been placed before cabinet?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would not think that that question is in order.

COMBINES

FARM MACHINERY PRICES—INVESTIGATION OF LACK OF DECREASE FOLLOWING FREEING OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The minister may recall that I contacted him some time ago in regard to this matter. In view of the continued increase in the price of farm machinery and repairs, much of which machinery is imported and should have been reduced in price following the freeing of the Canadian dollar, is this inequitable situation being investigated by his department and, if so, will the minister make a statement soon in this regard?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have accepted the recommendation of the Barber report that, apart from what my colleague the Minister of Agriculture would do relative to farm machinery prices, the Combines Investigation Branch should examine the situation, and they are. However, it is established policy that the work of this branch is not revealed until either charges are laid in court or notice of discontinuance has been filed.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

QUEBEC—MEASURES TO ELIMINATE DISCONTENT

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In addition to the War Measures Act implemented to control terrorism, is the government considering the enactment of other measures of a social and economic character likely to eliminate the main causes of current dissatisfaction in some parts of the country?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question is obviously very important but he will agree, I think, that such a wide-ranging inquiry normally requires a general answer which should be given on notices of motions.

GRAIN

WHEAT—AVAILABILITY OF SPACE FOR DELIVERY OF HIGHER GRADES

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Inasmuch as up until now emphasis has been placed on movement of low-grade wheat, I should like to ask the minister when he anticipates that deliveries may be made of the higher grades?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this question was put the day before yesterday, and I indicated that the Wheat Board has this matter under advisement. There is, of course, a good supply of No. 1, 2 and 3 grades of wheat in the elevators and handling system. Therefore there is no immediate need for their delivery and the space is required for these other grades. However, I anticipate that before very long it will be possible to open the first quota of a general nature for wheat.

WHEAT—CLOSING OF 1968-69 POOL—ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO MAKE UP DEFICIT

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact that an Order in Council has now been passed closing out the 1968-1969 wheat pool, can the minister indicate how much of the funds allocated for the purpose of making up the deficit for the 1968-60 pool account have actually been put to that purpose?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, certainly I can before long give the hon. member the exact figure, but if I understand the purport of the question correctly, the amount allocated in the previous estimates was all required for the fund and in fact an additional amount will be necessary.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONTINUATION OF DESTROYER CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM —COMPLETION OF COST REVIEW

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. May I ask the minister whether or not he or the government is in a position to indicate if the DDH-280 program will be cut back by either one or two ships? If not, can the minister indicate when the construction cost review will be completed?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I cannot indicate that at this time. I hope that in a matter of several weeks I shall be able to announce at least those details about the ships.

Mr. Forrestall: I wonder whether the minister could indicate whether or not, during the period of the construction cost review, work is going ahead on all four vessels?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that it is, but I would have to check that point. It is at least so far as the ones in an advanced stage of construction are concerned.

PENSIONS

ENTITLEMENT OF CANADIANS OF GERMAN ORIGIN TO BENEFITS EARNED IN WEST GERMANY

Mr. Keith Hymmen (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister advise the House about his recent trip to Germany and his discussions with West German authorities on the entitlement of Canadians of German origin to their earned pension benefits?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would think that this is a question that should be answered by a statement on motions. There may be some urgency that is not apparent to me, and if there is the hon. member is welcome to give notice for discussion at the time of adjournment.

NATIONAL SECURITY

WAR MEASURES ACT—PUBLICATION OF NAMES OF THOSE ARRESTED

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Is it true that the decision of the government not to make public the names of those arrested under the War Measures Act was made because it would be embarrassing to certain people, and are these people private citizens or are they politicians?

SUGGESTED FREE DISTRIBUTION OF MILK IN SCHOOLS AND HOSTELS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture.

COME-BY-CHANCE, NFLD.—PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE IN CONSTRUCTING DOCKING FACILITIES

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, may I address my question to the Minister of Public Works. Can the minister say whether approval has been given by his department to a request from the government of Newfoundland for assistance to construct docking facilities at Come-By-Chance, Newfoundland.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in this particular matter we are waiting for more particulars.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INCLUSION OF OPTOMETRIC SERVICES UNDER MEDICARE

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As the minister is aware, optometric services do not qualify at the present time for federal shared-cost benefits under the Medical Care Act. In view of the fact that there are only 660 eye physicians in the country to serve 20 million Canadians and in view of the fact that 65 per cent of eye care is provided by—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This sounds to the Chair like a speech, or at least a mini-speech. The hon. member should get to his question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Scott: I shall make it brief, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister have any plans to include optometric services in the shared-cost benefits under the Act?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): There are no definite plans at the present time. However, the matter will be discussed at the forthcoming federal-provincial conference of health ministers.

INFORMATION CANADA

DISSEMINATION OF GALLUP POLL FINDINGS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of Information Canada and welcome him back to the House and the country. Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce?

On May 14 last, the Minister stated that he would soon submit a bill on textiles which would state government policy in this field. Is he in a position to advise when this legislation will be introduced?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this will depend on the order of presentation of the various bills in this House. The bill involved here is just about ready and I hope it will be passed before Christmas.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

NEWFOUNDLAND—FILING AND PAYMENT OF CLAIMS OF DISPLACED LINCOLN CONSTRUCTION COMPANY EMPLOYEES

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Labour who was here earlier but seems to have evaporated. I shall address it to his Parliamentary Secretary. With regard to the abrupt closing down of operations due to financial difficulties of Lincoln Construction Company in central Newfoundland, which has thrown some 250 men out of work, will the minister assure the House that the unemployment insurance records of these men will be immediately obtained from the company and that special provision will be made to expedite the filing and payment of unemployment insurance claims of those who wish to apply?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I assure the hon. member that his question will be brought to the attention of the minister and that a reply will be sought to this important inquiry.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the President of the Privy Council would tell us the nature of the business of the House for the balance of this week and the beginning of next week.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, first of all I wish to advise the House concerning how we propose to conclude the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. Today is the last full day, the eighth appointed day, but there is a period of two hours owing to the debate arising from the interruption to deal with the establishment of the Constitution Committee. It is proposed that these two hours will be provided tomorrow afternoon from three o'clock to five o'clock and that the question on the main motion will be put then and if a division is requested it will occur on the following Monday after the oral question period. I suggest that this arrangement might be made an order of the House.

Apart from the arrangement I propose in respect of the termination of the debate on the address, the business for tomorrow will be called in the order listed on the order paper. The first order of business is government order No. 7, Bill C-2, in respect of the Canada Shipping Act—pollution. The second is government order No. 8 in respect of Bill C-3 concerning investment companies. The third is government order No. 9, Bill C-4 respecting the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. The fourth is government order No. 10, Bill C-5 respecting Deuterium of Canada Limited.

Monday's business will be a continuation of Friday's business in the same order. Tuesday will be an allotted day under the auspices of the Official Opposition. On Wednesday we will deal with the report stage of the federal court bill which was restored to the order paper last evening. On Thursday we will conclude the federal court bill and follow with any outstanding business left over from Monday. I hope that on Monday next we will deal with the five references to committees standing in my name on today's notice paper. This, however, will be subject to further discussions with the parties opposite.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Peddle.]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Wednesday, October 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Halton.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rud L. Whiting (Halton): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also wish to thank hon. members who greeted my rising to speak in the way they did. This is greatly appreciated, I assure them.

When I visit, as I regularly do, the communities of Acton, Erin, Georgetown, Milton and Oakville in my riding which I have the great honour to represent I try as often as I can to visit the local news media in these communities because I find that the people who represent these media can provide me with further information concerning what is happening in these communities. I also like to think I can provide them with additional information concerning various government policies. However, Mr. Speaker, I do from time to time receive calls from the news media. Sometimes I am asked to come down and visit the newspaper offices in my riding if there should be something in particular the people in these offices wish to discuss with me. This happened last April.

I received a call from the daily Journal-Record of Oakville. I was asked if I would come down to their office as they had something of importance to show me. When I arrived there I was taken to a room which I thought was a storage room. I was right; it was a storage room. There were boxes piled high containing envelopes, books, folders, brochures and everything imaginable made out of paper. This is what they had received from the federal government and various federal agencies over the last 12 months. It amounted to 185 pounds of paper which had not been opened, which had not been looked at, which was not wanted and which could not be used by this particular newspaper. To say that I was shocked or surprised is a gross understatement. Upon leaving the newspaper office I did a quick survey of other newspapers in my riding. I found out that they received the same material the Oakville daily Journal-Record had received. What did they do with this material? They put it in file No. 13, the wastepaper basket.

• (12:00 noon)

This prompted me to place on the order paper last March four questions which I would like to read to the House at this time if I may. Question No. 1: How many newspapers across Canada, both weeklies and dailies, received unsolicited materials such as newsletters, press releases, books and other documents from the various government departments during the year 1968-69? Question No. 2: What were the actual mailing costs involved?

Question No. 3: How much did it cost the respective departments to provide this material in those years? Question No. 4: How much of a saving could be realized by these departments, apart from mailing costs, if these unsolicited services to newspapers were cancelled?

When I received the answers to these questions—and I will not go into detail on the answers at this time—I was perplexed. The 18 departments which replied admitted spending $74,331.15 on these materials. Some departments noted that their figures did not include labour costs because they considered such work to be a routine part of their staff's duties. But this was an essential part of the information I requested. So the actual cost would, I think, be substantially more than the $74,331.15 of which I was informed.

Mr. Patrick Nicholson, feature columnist for the Thompson group of newspapers, did a survey of some 40-odd newspapers on this subject which revealed that this unsolicited material was used only rarely, that any important news that it contains is disseminated immediately by the Canadian Press wire service, and that in any event many of the releases were received too late to be of any value.

When you receive material that you do not ask for, do not want and do not need, you throw it out. It is what is called junk, and I would classify this as junk mail. In my opinion it is an insult to good business practices. Supporting this viewpoint are the findings of the task force on information which reported to the government last November. It issued a damning indictment of the information apparatus dispensing publicity for the myriad of departments and agencies that make up the federal government. The report said that the apparatus was characterized by duplication, incompetence and outright bungling, and it implied that its $148 million annual cost is almost a total waste.

Armed with these facts I went to Information Canada and laid this information before them. I had the impression that Information Canada agreed that this was a profitless way of communicating. I sincerely hope that the government will consider and support this viewpoint. I am not saying that this information should not be produced or should not be sent out, but I maintain that a mechanism must and should be found to make it more selective.

This government has urged the farmers, the industrialists and the businessmen of Canada to diversify. The government does not have to urge our national railroads to do this because that is exactly what they are doing. They are diversifying to the point where they have forgotten what their prime purpose is—to provide transportation of all types to the Canadian people. What disturbs me about this situation is that we, Members of Parliament, have very little to say about it. When people in my riding ask me: "What about the CNR, they are doing this and they are doing that", I have to admit to them that I have virtually no control over the activities of this government corporation. Yet every year the CNR comes hat in hand looking for money from the Canadian taxpayer, and we, the Members of Parliament, are asked to approve these appropriations.

I would like now to outline some of the problems being faced in my riding that are caused by the CNR. In Oakville we have numerous railway crossings. Three of them in particular, on Kerr Street, Chartwell Road, and the Ninth Line, are causing motorists especially much concern as trains are blocking these crossings a large percentage of the time and it is very difficult to lay a charge against the railroads for blocking a crossing for over five minutes. This is something that we could rectify by strengthening the governing legislation. Not only is this annoying but there is a safety hazard involved because located near the railway crossing on Chartwell Road in Oakville is a fire station. If a train were stopped on that crossing for a considerable length of time, not only could it have but it would have an effect on the fire engines and other fire-fighting apparatus getting to the place where they were required.

I move along, Mr. Speaker, to another community in Halton, the town of Milton, where some years ago the CNR built a bypass around the town. They required much fill in order to lay the tracks. What did the CNR do in this case? They opened up a pit and laid to waste approximately 60 acres of land. They broke every rule of conservation. When they were finished it was nothing but a wasteland. It used to be reasonably good farm land.

What happened when it rained? The top soil had been removed, and so the rain worked its way down to a pond which had been built as Milton's centennial project in Centennial Park. There are fish in that pond, Mr. Speaker. This pollution, and that is what it is, cannot help but have a detrimental effect on the life of the fish in the pond. In addition to making the pond a very unsightly place, what was once clear water now becomes very murky after a rain storm and takes days to clear up.

When this was brought to the attention of the CNR what did they do? They said, "We are not responsible for this; in no way can we be blamed for this," when in fact, Mr. Speaker, the blame lay firmly with them. I personally took up this matter with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) whose department prosecutes—maybe that is too strong a word—looks after or investigates pollution caused by Crown corporations. The people of Milton and I are most grateful to him for his fast action. He sent out some of his officials and they looked at the situation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry I have to rise to inform the hon. member that under the rules his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement that the hon. member continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Whiting: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members.

Officials of the Department of the Minister of National Health and Welfare went there and proved conclusively that the CNR was the cause of pollution and, Mr. Speaker, the matter is being rectified. The question I want to ask is: Why is it that the CNR in so many cases has to be pushed, has to be goaded, has to be pressured into rectifying such matters? Why do they not say, "Yes, we are the cause of this problem. We readily admit it. We are sorry and we will do something about it." But no, they adopt this belligerent attitude time after time.

But, Mr. Speaker, I think the most classic example of CNR bureaucracy took place in the town of Acton. This town is now virtually without railroad service emanating from it. The service has been transferred to the city of Guelph. The methods employed by the CNR to deprive this community of railroad service should be enunciated. Trains that used to stop at Acton now whistle right by. This means that anybody wanting to get on a train or off a train at Acton can no longer do so. This means that freight and express have to be picked up elsewhere, in Guelph. Then the CNR moved in and took out the telegraph service—

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Whiting: —leaving the town virtually without railroad service. But they had an agent in Acton, Mr. Speaker, and he had very little to do. Quite obviously, if there were no trains stopping there and no services to perform, what could he do? Well, Mr. Speaker, he had a telephone, and then they came and took his telephone out. Then, Mr. Speaker, they made application to the Canadian Transport Commission to remove the agent from Acton.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whiting: He had nothing to do, and this was the first time that the people of Acton had any meaningful way to present their case against the injustices done by the CNR. We had a hearing in Acton last January and the pseudo-experts of the CNR, armed with their slide rules and brief cases bulging with data, much of it irrelevant, arrived there, and we put up a battle. I thought we put up a good battle, but when the ruling came down from the Transport Commission, Acton was without railroad service.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Whiting: They upheld the CNR.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Whiting: After this ruling came down I could see just what would happen. The CNR flexed their muscles and said, "We won, we won. Now let us go and take away passenger service from Guelph to Toronto". This would deprive Georgetown, a town of some 16,000 people, of passenger service. Hearings were held in the city of Guelph which were attended by many members from both sides of this House. We worked together in trying to convince the Canadian Transport Commission that this should not be done. Strange as it may seem, the commissioners in this case said to the CNR: Whoa, hold it; you can just go so far in this matter. And they ordered the CNR not only to continue passenger service from Guelph to Toronto but to update the service and bring it into this part of the twentieth century. This is what I want to urge the CNR to do. The CNR should bring its passenger service from Toronto to Guelph up to date.

The coaches they are using are of early twentieth century vintage. They are drafty, dirty and uncomfortable. In no way would anybody ride in these coaches if they did not have to.

If the CNR would look on passenger service as a means of conveying people and as a money-maker and would tailor the service to that need by running trains at proper hours, I think we would see a great change in the financial picture regarding passenger services. I believe and I have advocated on more than one occasion in the House that the time has come when we must develop a national transportation policy in this country. We cannot have our railroads closing down lines indiscriminately. We must look at the broad picture because the railroads did a great job in building this country. They still have an important role to play in the further development of Canada.

I thank hon. members for allowing me to go over my time. I know this is a subject which concerns many and I urge the government to act on my suggestions and the suggestions made by others. We should adopt a national rail policy and bring the CNR, this Crown corporation, closer to Parliament. We could then have more to say about its operation. This could be done if at least one Member of Parliament were appointed to the board of directors of this Crown corporation.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, in the concluding days of the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne I appreciate having the opportunity to say a few words. At the risk of being repetitious, but I hope not redundant, I should like to congratulate the mover of the address, the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel), and the seconder, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas). They can now join that great fraternity of movers and seconders who have taken their place in this great chamber down through the history of Canada.

I propose to make a comparison between the first Speech from the Throne and the last Speech from the Throne I have heard in this place. I have heard about 15 Speeches from the Throne since I have been a member of this House, and I think it would be wise for us to take a minute or two to look at the first Speech from the Throne I heard in 1957. I might say that it is only two columns in length compared with the five columns of the speech we are debating today. With the new format of

Hansard these columns are almost twice as wide as they were with the old format.

We look to the Speech from the Throne to show some imagination, some vision, some great forethought and some programs to promote production, as well as ways to put people and money to work; indeed, we would even expect to find that more so in this Speech from the Throne as we have just completed the decade of the sixties and have now launched into the decade of the seventies. We should be looking forward to great horizons, visions and ideas. We do not seem to find this in the Speech from the Throne. If we were to describe it in the language of the late Mr. Churchill we might say: Never has so much been written about so little.

Let me quote a few passages from the first Speech from the Throne I heard:

> You will accordingly be asked to maintain modern defence forces—

It then states:

> In domestic affairs my ministers look forward to meeting next month with the leaders of the provincial governments—

Then it goes on:

> In the legislative program to be laid before you, it is fitting that mention should first be made of measures to improve the lot of the senior members of our society. Accordingly you will be asked to increase old age security pensions and to shorten the period of residence required to qualify for them. Changes will be proposed in the terms of assistance offered to provincial governments to enable them to increase the payments to be made under the Old Age Assistance Act, the Blind Persons Act and the Disabled Persons Act—

Then it states:

> You will also be asked to increase the scale of war veterans allowances and to enlarge the groups to whom they are paid. Changes will also be proposed in several sections of the Pension Act.
> In order to assure to the farmers of Canada a fair share of the national income, you will be asked to enact a measure to provide greater stability in the prices of their products. Every possible effort is now being made, and will continue to be made to seek new markets for agricultural products—

Then it goes on to state:

> Due to inability to market their grain, prairie farmers have for some time been faced with a serious shortage of funds to meet their immediate needs.

It also says we will be asked to discuss an advance payments program and we are told that the government will strive to secure additional markets for the products of our fisheries.

That speech also says that a national development policy will be carried out in co-operation with the provinces in "developing the resources of this great nation." The Roads to Resources Program constituted part of this development program. It says also that there is to be an immediate start on a program for the production and transmission of cheaper hydroelectric power in the Atlantic provinces. It goes on to say, "You will also be asked to provide assistance in financing the Beechwood project which has been under construction in New Brunswick." It goes on to say:

> My ministers will advance this national development policy further by initiating new discussions with the government of Saskatchewan in order to make possible the early commencement of construction of the dam on the South Saskatchewan river—
> My ministers will place before you a measure to ensure that those working in industries under federal jurisdiction will receive annual vacations with pay.

And so it goes, Mr. Speaker. That is what is contained in the first throne speech I had the privilege of hearing. It was short, crisp and to the point. It outlined all the government's projects and all the business and administrative measures it proposed to bring before the House.

What do we find in the Speech from the Throne we are now debating? We find many platitudes. I shall mention two or three of them, because the speech contains a few gems. On reading it one could suppose it is a report on the state of the nation's business. It does not put forward what we hope the government will do. As a matter of fact, I think one can prove this point by referring to the speeches which have been made by government members of this House. In those speeches the ministers dealt with subject matters that should have been dealt with in the Speech from the Throne, and they dealt with them as they considered they ought to have been dealt with. I think that proves my point, that the speech is really a report on the state of the nation's business.

I said I would pick out a few sentences from the speech we are considering. The following phrase is most enlightening. It ought to be included in any speech:

> The passing of the sixties and the beginning of the seventies—

Another sentence tells us that man must anticipate and plan. Still another tells us that:

> As Canada moves into the seventies, we are all invited to join in this bold enterprise—to share the excitement, to face the challenge, to pursue the distant ideal of a just society.

The speech does not spell out how this is to be achieved. Now I am about to quote a real "dandy".

> Every Canadian is a consumer of goods and services, millions of Canadians are employees.

Is that not a truly bold statement?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hales: The speech tells us that we may expect many white papers. Perhaps they will bring forward some explanations. It also states:

> It would be irresponsible to suggest that the economy is now in a satisfactory condition. When costs rise more rapidly than productivity, when men and women are unable to gain employment, when a reasonable distribution of the wealth of Canada is denied to certain sectors or regions, then these are matters for deep concern.

That is another profound statement. Has that not been the case ever since Canada became a nation? The speech also says:

So long, however, as Canadians who desire work are unable to find it; so long as persons on fixed incomes are unable to provide adequately for themselves and their dependants; then so long must the government strive to assist them.

There are some other "dandy" statements in the speech. It goes on to say:

An economy that is in need of adjustment; a society beset by a variety of tensions; an environment that has been abused and degraded; an international community that is under intense pressures—these are the problems that demand our urgent attention.

They certainly demand our urgent attention. The statement I am about to read is hardly appropriate under present circumstances, considering that the War Measures Act has been invoked:

A society is said to be judged best by the compassion and the fairness with which it treats those of its members who breach or are accused of breaching the norms of conduct which it establishes for itself. The Canadian record in this respect is of a high standard—

I am afraid that we shall all have to back-peddle with regard to that statement. I wanted to compare the Speech from the Throne that I had the privilege of hearing when first elected with the speech now being debated. It is always easy to criticize and it is much harder to be constructive. From now on I propose to be somewhat constructive.

I am at a loss to know why the Speech from the Throne did not deal with the results of some of the many trips which members of the House have taken. Let me begin with the Prime Minister, who went to the Far East. He visited Japan and Tokyo and had a ride on that great Tokaido express, sometimes known as the Bullet train, which it was my privilege to ride on with a group of parliamentarians when we visited Japan in June. I was amazed at the rapidity of that train and at its cleanliness and smoothness. We went from Tokyo to Osaka, a distance of about 300 miles, in a little over three hours, travelling at 135 miles an hour. I wonder why the Speech from the Throne has not mentioned the subject of transportation in this great country of ours. Why did the Speech from the Throne not lay down a long-term program for transportation in Canada?

Let us get away from the ad hoc development we have seen in this area and the curtailment of transportation services which has been discussed in the House so ably by the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Howe) and the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle). They spoke of the curtailment of transportation services, and particularly of the fact that the CNR has been discontinuing passenger train service. The hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) told us yesterday that in the great area north of Guelph, a city that I represent in this House, an area encompassing Owen Sound, Mildmay, Walkerton and other centres, the railway has discontinued its passenger train service. The people in that area are without passenger train service.

It seems to me that this government intends to increase our urban sprawl by developing the larger centres instead of trying to spread out the population and develop some of the rural areas of the country. Actually, we in Guelph have not too much to complain about, because the railways left alone the train service between Guelph and Toronto—at least, they left us the commuter train. It is to remain in service for a year at least, and then the matter will be reviewed. If the railways do not improve the quality of the coaches and do not give the people the type of service they expect, they will find that people will not want to use their trains. There is no reason why that commuter train should not be staffed with a stewardess in the morning who could deliver the morning newspaper to commuters so that they could read the morning news. There is no reason why they should not serve coffee on the train, why it should not be clean and why the windows should not be clean enough for one to look out of them. If the railways continue to display the attitude: "Well, we do not want any passenger business; we want to get rid of it," then, in future they will wish to discontinue operating this one commuter train between Guelph and Toronto.

May I refer again to the broad question of our transportation problems. I should have thought that the government, in the Speech from the Throne, would have been wise to say: Look, to begin with we are embarking on a 15-year program under which we will build a railway line from Montreal to Windsor, and the service to be provided is to be similar to that provided by the rapid Bullet train of Japan. During the first years of the program the crossings could be removed, and then subsequently station platforms could be elevated so that people would be able to step off the train onto a platform. No steps would be needed for one to get on or off trains. The equipment would then be planned and developed. We would then have a train that could travel between Montreal and Windsor in three hours.

It would have been better to buy some of the sub-marginal land around Kingston, a solid rock area, and establish a large international airport there to handle the jumbo jets. Passengers leaving the jumbo jets could then take the Torpedo train, arriving in either Montreal or Toronto in an hour's time. Vision and foresight of this kind are required with regard to the over-all transportation system of Canada, but this is not in the Speech from the Throne.

We must bear in mind that the density of population between Montreal and Windsor is in the southern part of the country. Surely there are enough people in this area to support a train similar to the one I had the privilege of travelling on in Japan. If this nation is going to develop, grow and progress we need more forward planning than what we have at the present time.

The first Speech from the Throne to which I referred dealt with the Roads to Resources program, how we would develop the Arctic, the northern part of Canada.

An hon. Member: And we did.

Mr. Hales: We did. At the time we were criticized for speaking about roads from igloo to igloo. We no longer hear that expression. The program is being enlarged rather than curtailed.

The Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Constitution Committee, the Science Council of Canada and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) have travelled throughout the Arctic. The Speech from the Throne does not state how the northern area of our country will be further developed.

A group of cabinet ministers visited some Latin American countries. On their return they made a short report. I thought they would have some ideas about improving trade, but the Speech from the Throne does not outline any proposals for trade with these countries. We must give very serious thought to the matter of trade.

Not long ago we used to hear the words, "If the United Kingdom enters the European Common Market", but now the words are, "When the United Kingdom enters the Common Market". What will happen when it does enter the Common Market? There are no outward views or visions with regard to this in the Speech from the Throne. Where are we going to pick up the trade we are bound to lose? The United Kingdom will be obligated to buy many products from members of the European Common Market when they become a member.

I wish to refer to some of the larger volume items of export to the United Kingdom. The figures I am using are for 1967. I am sorry they are not more recent. I am quoting from the Canada Year Book, 1969. When the United Kingdom enters the European Common Market what will happen to the dairy products, eggs and honey that we have been exporting to them? I will use round figures when quoting. Some of our exports to the United Kingdom in 1967 where dairy products, eggs and honey, $10.5 million; wheat, $123 million; wheat flour, $6.5 million; vegetables and vegetable preparations, $22 million; flaxseed, $10.5 million; office machines and equipment, $7 million. All these products are either grown or manufactured by members of the European Common Market. West Germany will be able to sell office machines and equipment to the United Kingdom at a cheaper rate than it costs for Canada to ship this equipment to the United Kingdom. This is a very serious matter. We should be projecting ideas of how we can overcome these calamities that are going to befall this country if we are not prepared to meet them. There is nothing in the Speech from the Throne about that.

While speaking about transportation I neglected to mention proposed areas for a new airport as an auxiliary to Malton airport. Apparently four or five areas are being considered for an auxiliary airport, one of which is Beverly township in my constituency. This area is close to the cities of Dundas, Hamilton, Galt and Guelph. The area has been surveyed and tests have been taken. I point out that the people of that area do not want an auxiliary airport. It would be very foolish to build an airport there because of the congestion and heavy population that already exists in that area. It would be better to build it somewhere to the north and west of Hamilton. Other areas have made representations to the minister stating that they would like the airport built in their area. From all outward appearances it would be much wiser to establish this airport in Amaranth township or the general area north and west of Toronto.

There are many other matters that should have been included in the Speech from the Throne. I now wish to deal briefly with the subject of agriculture.

When we pause to think of the mess that agriculture in this country is in today, we must lower our heads in shame. Over $100 million was spent so that the farmers of western Canada would not grow grain. Including the cost of all those who are paid to enforce this measure, the final figure will probably be near $200 million. The western farmers were told, "Do not grow grain. Do not produce what you are capable of producing. We are going to pay you not to grow grain." This was said at a time when in many parts of the world people are starving. They do not have the proper nutrition and food.

We would have done much better had we taken that $200 million we are spending on the Lift Program and bought an equivalent amount of stored wheat and given it to people in countries where they are in great need of it. Instead, we paid farmers $6 an acre not to grow it, and if they put their land into summerfallow we gave them $10 an acre. While we build up all this wheat in Canada, there are children going to bed here in our own country unfortified by good red-blooded meat or high protein food. Why? Because we do not have the cattle in Canada to make use of this surplus wheat. This is the result of lack of foresight and proper planning. Given proper planning there would be more pasture land in western Canada and a large cow-calf operation enabling us to use the grain to produce beef for as many as need it. Yet we have outstanding departments of agriculture in our universities and experimental farms across the country upon which millions of dollars have been spent. We have a federal Department of Agriculture staffed by highly-paid officials, knowledgeable people paid by this and other governments to project, plan and lay out programs.

When one thinks of it, it is really terrible that we should have let ourselves get into this position. And while we pay our farmers not to grow wheat we are importing about nine pounds of meat per capita from other countries—beef, lamb and so on. So we run a poor shop, really; we have made a mess of things in the field of agriculture, and all this time we are paying people a great deal of money to give advice. I do not blame the government. They pay people to give them advice and program these things. Of course, ministers can accept or reject that advice. But there have not been enough ideas coming forward, and that is where the trouble lies.

I have been saying for many years that we must find some alternative use for wheat apart from feeding it to human beings or to livestock. With the great sources of knowledge and research available today I am not sure but that we cannot make wallpaper out of wheat or ladies' silk stockings, for that matter. I suppose we can do almost anything of that sort today; yet we sit idly by letting the grain pile up. I will give one example. During the first world war, Germany was in real difficulty. So what did they do? They took the humble potato and from that potato they refined gasoline which they used to run war machinery. If you can do that with a potato, what can you do with wheat? I criticize those who lack the mental air conditioning to put forward ideas in this field. This is what will put Canada on the road to being a great country.

If we continue to be presented with Speeches from the Throne such as the one before us, with its lack of imagination, lack of program planning and lack of foresight, this country will not move ahead. It will stand still.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I should like very much to join with previous speakers in this debate in congratulating the mover (Mr. Trudel) and seconder (Mr. Douglas, Assiniboia) of the address on their comments as well as all previous speakers who have made reference to housing and urban affairs.

One of the important things we are talking about in this debate is choice—the ability and the responsibility to support and to continuously re-create in this country, in myriad ways and at every level, choices as to the kind of Canada Canadians want it to be.

Canada began under that imperative, Canada is evolving under that imperative, but a new ethic insists upon consideration of two chief things. First, that the traditional decision-makers of power must move over a little so that choice devolves upon the greatest numbers of people, people who are well enough informed to choose on considered merits; and, second, that the bases of choice have changed for many of us along with the growing material wealth, complexity, and concentration of our society. There is a growing recognition, for instance, that economic growth for growth's sake, to put it crudely, must be increasingly tempered by considerations, by choices, which put growth at the service of the social comfort and stimulation of Canadians.

These are not quite yet truisms for everyone but they form the goals of this government and, I believe, of other governments in Canada. Certainly they are at the very heart of the proposed formation of the ministry of state for urban affairs and housing. They are both its reason for being and the guidelines within which it intends to operate. Choices, evolved with a degree of understanding never before reached in Canada, must urgently be made as we move at rather an unnerving pace into a Canada which, it is predicted, will be 94 per cent urban within the next 30 years. We see a Canada developing, 73 per cent of whose population is likely to be established in only 12 major centres, a Canada whose population will soon have doubled, about 45 per cent of that doubled population living in only three great foci of national power, Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver. In these three places will be found vast numbers of people, if that is what we want, like New York, Chicago and Tokyo.

The Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the minister but it now being one o'clock I do leave the chair to resume it at two o'clock.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, before lunch I was making reference to the need for all of us in elected office to provide the mechanism whereby Canadians can exercise their choice under all reasonable conditions. I was also referring to the demographic projections for this country over the next 30 years, to a Canada with double its present population, 45 per cent of which would be located in Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver. I was comparing that series of events within the profile of what has happened in large cities south of the border and in other countries.

We start the question leading to choice by asking whether we want our cities to look like those cities, and whether they should act as cities have been acting in places like Chicago, Los Angeles, Detroit, New York and Tokyo. The whole process of rapid urbanization is pretty well inexorable. The sharpest pace of that growth is upon us now, in the decade 1970 to 1980. In the next three decades we will have to build a capacity to cope with what will be, in terms of numbers, a second Canada. We must now ask ourselves whether this urban Canada is to continue just to grow relatively uncontrolled, in a misshapen and unclean way, in a way that is too often inequitable.

Instead, I would prefer to think of a Canada of choice, of many co-operative choices; a Canada informed by consultative and co-ordinated efforts to create our own distinctive excellence. It can be a Canada that avoids the widespread social despair and the awful social unrest that growth run rampant has brought to other areas and which we have seen in very recent days so very close to us. This is not, let me emphasize, "airy-fairy" idealism; it is a pragmatic and practical approach, one that is within our competences.

In this country we still have the time and the resources to write our own urban history in terms of our own vision, rather than just have it happen. We can begin to give our environments a shape and a humanity of our own. We can choose environments that have clean spaces for people and that have deliberately blurred lines of social cleavage; environments that provide for the weakest a crucial sense of worth; environments that provide personal and family privacy while giving a sense of belonging, a sense of community without which few of us can cope with life.

Let me repeat the words I have just used—consult, co-operate, co-ordinate. These are meant to be neither soothing motherhood words nor words to gloss over any supposed lack of real intentions by this government. They are, in fact, precise indicators of how we will approach the problems posed by rapid urbanization in Canada at the federal level, as well as in our dealings with the provincial governments, who bear the primary responsibility, and with the municipalities that exist in the provinces.

So that this is understood absolutely and unequivocally, let me quote my own words which were read for me in a speech in Montreal on October 8, the day the government's proposed formation of this ministry was announced:

> And the federal government today recognizes in a concrete way that it is deeply involved, in myriad but often unco-ordinated ways, in the problems of Canadian cities already; it recognizes that it must transform that involvement in much more integrated ways. These will be ways, I want to emphasize to you, in which the watchword will be scrupulous and careful co-operation with the provincial governments and, through them, with muncipal governments. A co-ordination of federal roles affecting the cities—yes. Federal intrusion into areas not its own—no. Federal co-operation, consultation—maybe even some degree of joint planning if the provinces wish—yes. Federal movement into new jurisdictions, wielding new powers—no—not anywhere in Canada.

So, it is within the present constitutional boundaries that we will work. The constitution does not need to be bent, or broadened to implement an urban policy of choice. If we can get the kind of reasearch, planning and program co-ordination and co-operation that we hope for, if we can get the three levels of government working together in much greater concert, we can begin to stop duplication and waste, programs that conflict, programs that are instituted to solve one problem without real regard for other problems they may cause. We can begin to get decisions on whether we in fact want our cities to develop unconstrained; and if we do not want that, we can find alternatives to proffer.

This ministry of state for urban affairs and housing will first of all be concerned with bringing order in the federal House as it affects the cities. I need hardly note for hon. members how massively the federal government is in the cities already. We have powerful direct impact through housing, land assembly and sewage programs, with a great influence on the location, growth and structure of urban areas.

We have a similar influence through our use of a very great deal of urban space federally owned or leased, and an influence in taxes paid, urban demands created and incomes earned. I am thinking of where we locate public buildings, airports, railways, harbours, military centres, communications facilities and a score of other things.

There are now 112 federal programs involving financing elements of the urban process, and 131 research programs applying to elements of the urban process. There are 27 departments and agencies which have influence of one degree or another in the cities. I am afraid that in large part the federal departments and agencies have not worked well enough and interdependently enough with each other, and with provincial and city governments. We need not feel entirely ashamed or alone. No country has done this in a way that consciously seeks out and sets priorities, and that rationalizes scarce national resources, as we hope to do. We hope to make the federal involvement in the cities no longer a series of unconnected initiatives but parts of a better understood urban whole. Inevitably, there are federal, provincial and municipal considerations to almost everything done in that light so that anything less than effective tri-level co-operation simply cannot work.

We will co-ordinate and integrate the federal urban role in various ways. For example, the minister of state in cabinet and cabinet committees, and in bilateral and inter-departmental arrangements, will be involved with his colleagues in urban overviews of the various plans of other federal departments and agencies. There will be a secretariat, headed by a person with the rank of deputy minister, that will fully review the federal efforts in urban affairs and through consultation and agreement will carry further through the government systems the work of rationalizing, co-ordinating and planning. This secretariat is being put together now, Mr. Speaker, as an important research, policy planning, consultative and co-ordinative instrument.

An initial research process has already produced important understandings for us, and a report of this will shortly be made available to hon. members and to others. Now, our efforts will be expanded to draw together the very scarce human resources in this field to plan and work out possible priorities and strategies. We will hope to attract the best minds now diffused through governments, industries and universities and to return them again to governments, universities and industry in a continuous and cross-fertilizing stream. I sincerely feel that this more rational approach between governments and within the federal government will serve to protect provincial jurisdiction, helping to forestall past experiences when unco-ordinated federal departmental programming inadvertently distorted provincial and municipal priorities. That often happened simply, though irritatingly, because the effect of one federal program on another or on a provincial initiative was not considered in an urban context.

In addition to an urban secretariat, of course, the ministry shall have reporting to it, and increasingly co-ordinated into a more total urban effort, the Crown agencies of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the National Capital Commission. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation's capital and expenditure budget is a potent force, and hon. members will know that I have switched its direction to the provision primarily of low income housing. Early this year, Mr. Speaker, as part of that low income housing program I earmarked $200 million of CMHC's budget toward encouraging specifically innovative, experimental ways of providing good quality housing for people earning between about $4,000 and $6,000 a year. The $200 million, and a little more, has been approved for 97 projects consisting of more than 17,000 dwelling units. They are projects involving novel techniques of construction, land use, financing, and they result from co-operation by CMHC, builders, non-profit groups, municipalities and several provincial governments. The results have been positive, Mr. Speaker, and give firm promise of developing even more and better cost-cutting, but not quality-cutting, methods to come. I intend to maintain next year specific federal incentives to further this search. I further intend to maintain the general emphasis of CHMC policy on homes for the low income group. This emphasis will have produced roughly 50,000 dwelling unit commitments this year or 77,000 unit commitments this year and last.

In these two years, Mr. Speaker, our low income housing activity will have doubled all the government-financed low income housing ever built before in this country—and I am proud of that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andras: It means that this year housing production directed to the low income group where the great need is, has risen dramatically although total housing starts this year will be about 180,000 compared with a record 210,000 units in 1969. However, when we talk of the total national need and when we think of the great middle ground of Canadians who must be served, let me emphasize again this government's commitment to one million new housing starts of all kinds in the five years from 1970 through to 1974.

Moreover, I am happy to inform the House that the housebuilding activity began increasing in the latter part of this year, because for the month of September housebuilding was running at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 194,800 starts as compared to 188,800 for September, 1969. In 1970, the first quarter, seasonally adjusted starts numbered 166,200. This dropped to 136,600 in the second quarter, but has risen to 185,800 in the third quarter. The main impact on starts of the CMHC special $200 million innovative program to which I referred and the additional 240 million of commitments authorized in August is still to be felt. All told, this year CMHC will have committed approximately one billion one hundred million dollars in its capital budget, of which about $960 million have gone directly to housing through programs under sections 16, 35, 36B and 40 of the National Housing Act, with the remainder having been invested in land assembly, urban renewal and sewage treatment loans.

As hon. members know, the private sector mortgage flow has been a serious problem this year. I have held a series of meetings with the approved lenders, banks, trust companies and insurance companies, setting forth capital requirements to meet our five year target of one million new homes, including the pick up of any shortfall this year from the average annual performance required. A second series of meetings with these institutions will be held before the end of the year to get their factual and realistic assessments of their participation. From this information, more specific steps will be considered to ensure mortgage flow. In addition, I plan to invite the senior representatives of the major pension funds of this country to meet with me shortly to discuss the need for increasing investments in residential mortgages by those extremely sizeable sources of capital.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, from the announcement of last week, I have become responsible to parliament for the National Capital Commission, which in a way is the sine qua non of all we hope to do. It is attempting to bring social comfort and beauty and an expression of national distinction to the capital region of our country to make it the exemplar of justly diffused dignity and opportunity, and we need that exemplar today as we never have before.

Mr. Andras: Let our national capital contribute to a national sense of direction in an atmosphere of co-operation and unity, and let that direction be prideful, affirmative and positive as we seek to draw together, particularly in these dark days. Let our capital be, in fact and in symbol, the reflection of a national agreement that is based upon linguistic, cultural and material equity. The National Capital Commission and this government will continue to press forward so as to ensure that the two official languages and the cultural values common to all Canadians are recognized by all governments concerned in these two cities, and in the capital region in general, so that all Canadians may have a feeling of pride and participation in their capital.

In more strictly urban terms, nowhere are there more layers of governments, degrees and opportunities of disparity, problems to be solved and beautiful examples of what can be done than in the capital region covered by the NCC. Here is where multi-level government co-operation in urban policy and programming can work and can be seen to work at its best. This is a leadership opportunity of an important kind. In a real sense, the minister of state responsible for urban affairs and housing shall be a sympathetic advocate in cabinet on urban problems for the provinces, municipalities and urban dwellers. Also, he will report back to them federal concerns and desires. In that process of catalyzing, consulting and co-ordinating, I am hoping there can be held soon a beginning meeting or series of meetings with provincial ministers to determine how best we may establish ongoing consultative processes.

I should like to say in passing that I am very appreciative of the public reactions of initial warmth that I have seen from provincial representatives. I am also happy about the very warm messages of approval and support from the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities and from many individual mayors. I assure them that ways by which municipalities can be helped to deal with the many problems thrust upon them will be foremost in all our thinking.

All our efforts will be directed toward giving Canadians choices about their future. Tentatively we can pose a few indications of what will happen if we continue as we are, which may be a sound option to take, but certainly we should understand it. The unconstrained future will see three vast and nation dominating urban enclaves 30 years hence. They will be Toronto, with a population of six and a half million, Montreal with a population of six and a quarter million, and Vancouver with a population of about two and a half million. Other Canadians cities will double in size, although their positions in relation to the three major centres may grow weaker. I want to repeat that this is a studied forecast of Canadian growth, projected from current trends and in the absence of major policy changes at any level of government.

Even today, the so-called Montreal-Toronto corridor is a nation dominating entity. Already it has 40 per cent of the Canadian population. Two thirds of all cheques cashed are cleared through those two cities, 75 per cent of all head office corporate assets are in them, and nearly 90 per cent of head office assets of financial institutions is to be found there. Manufacturing costs in them ripple through the nation. There is a tremendous interchange between them. For instance, each week at least 50,000 people move by railway, road or air between Montreal and Toronto. I think that hon. members will not need to be reminded of more to suggest the national economic and political possibilities if this area extends its position of power in the next 30 years. It may be a wise option, but I think we would all wish to dwell upon it.

To get back to some specific problems, let me point out that the housing demand over the next 30 years of unconstrained future would be more than four million units for the three cities of Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver. There would be three million automobiles in Montreal alone, or in Toronto, by the year 2000.

I notice that my time has elapsed, Mr. Speaker. May I have the consent of the House to carry on?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The minister still has three minutes remaining to him. Is there agreement of the House to extending his time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Andras: I would like to thank hon. members for their courtesy.

• (2:30 p.m.)

The next ten years will be the crunch period. The evidence of this is there. The postwar baby boom children are having families, with resulting pressures growing on family type dwellings in a trend that is emerging counter to the high rise building of recent years. Other factors are immigrants, 75 per cent of whom now come to Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver, and internal migration from rural to urban centres, and from small urban to big urban centres.

The ever sharpening demand for scarce urban space that is created by this population growth sets up an inter-connected series of causes and effects which we have to learn to understand if we are going to cope. How many hon. members will not already recognize to some extent this scenario, where land becomes so expensive as to preclude all but extremely dense residential downtown living; families with children seeking single family dwellings will have to commute several hours each day; downtown areas becoming congested, polluted and noisy; higher taxes and yet higher land costs as suburbs sprawl further; industries fleeing to suburbs leaving the poor without access that they can afford to jobs, and the inner city without a necessary tax base; steady erosion of stable neighbourhoods; economic uncertainty facing core dwellers; deterioration in the quality of their environment; creation of an increasingly explosive situation when people feel cheated and when they despair; increased segregation of economic classes with its resulting divisiveness in the community and between communities at a time when unity is this country's great need?

What really happens as a result of all this, Mr. Speaker, is that everyone's choice is diminished. The aged and the handicapped and the otherwise unemployable, who are the great bulk of the nation's poor, are trapped either in shameful housing in core slums or located unreasonably far out from the active life of the city that gives them interest. Land costs will spur the flight to the suburbs for those who can afford it, but then they will have to spend more leisure time commuting, and the more the suburbs expand the more the congestion on the commuter highways, and certainly the more congestion downtown. Higher incomes are diminished by higher taxes and by higher costs of urban goods and services. Pollution and sprawl, noise and congestion diminish one's aesthetic and health choices, and penalize the weak whose status we wish to improve.

Frankly, I do not know where the trade-off in all of this is. I do not know, and nobody I have talked to can tell me when the exact point is reached that a city is simply too big. I certainly do not propose what can or should be done to control city sizes. I have not computed all the national, social, economic or political implications. I do not have any hard alternatives or any preconceptions at this moment. At this point, this government and I see only some of the more evident problems, and they are enough to make us wish to co-operate with other levels of government to try to understand this process we are caught in, and to use it to help fashion the kind of Canadian environment that Canadians want. For there is another side to all these negative things that can happen, and that is the opportunity to direct and create living environments in the manner that we want, fashioning progress to our social ends rather than being overwhelmed by it.

Because we are young and relatively rich and our urban problems are not yet out of hand, we have opportunities that almost no other country has. I would like to think, and I do think, that this country will grasp those opportunities.

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, as a member first elected in 1968, this opportunity to participate in a Throne Speech debate is another "first" in what has proven to be a long line of firsts for me over the past two years or more.

May I first congratulate the mover (Mr. Trudel) and the seconder (Mr. Douglas, Assiniboia) of the Address in Reply for the honour bestowed upon them, and say how much I admire their bravery for formally expressing thanks for this pretentious, and what now appears to be in many respects an irrelevant, document.

The first question that comes to me when considering the government's future program is: what is the justification for keeping the Minister of Communications (Mr. Kierans) on the payroll now that his job has been transferred to the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Côté) in charge of the Post Office? Surely, it does not take a minister of full cabinet rank to report to this House for Telesat Canada, an organization that will not even be functioning for another year or so? And speaking about the irrelevancy of the Speech from the Throne, I ask what priority position the proposals of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) to amend the Criminal Code regarding bail and wire tapping will have in light of the proclamation under the War Measures Act?

Many hon. members have dwelt on the government's action of last Friday morning, both in this debate and in the special debate of last Friday and Saturday. Probably everything has been said that can be said, but because of the importance of the question of order in this country I feel compelled to make a contribution in the hope that it will add something of value to the subject.

What bothers me, Mr. Speaker, is that so far the government's actions are aimed entirely at the separatists of Quebec be they FLQ or PQ, that is the Parti Quebecois of Mr. Levesque, and are repressive in nature. The justification for this action is that order had to be preserved, and because of this the government has received widespread applause and support for its action.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the basic reason most of those supporting the government in this emergency action do so is that they feel the government is also going to do something about the long-haired, unkempt, unproductive and over-privileged hippie type protest movement that has polluted the countryside for the past three or four years, and that this is merely a first step. I would like to say that these people are right. I would also like to say that it indicates the scales have fallen from the government's eyes to reveal the extent to which organized crime and labour racketeering have infected the commercial life of the country, and in this respect that the trouble is not confined to one province. However my feeling, Mr. Speaker, is that the people of Canada are going to be disappointed once again because, while the government has taken a very dramatic step of a potentially repressive nature, there is no indication that it is prepared to act in ways to get at the real problems of the country.

Even in the light of the present situation in Quebec, the government is taking the position that it is the responsibility of the province to administer the regulations it has proclaimed under the War Measures Act. I suggest that the people of Canada are looking to the government for a much more positive approach, and would remind hon. members that section 91(27) of the British North America Act assigns to Parliament:

> The Criminal Law, except the constitution of courts of criminal jurisdiction, but including the procedure in criminal matters.

It is clear that the government has the power to supervise the situation in Quebec because if the regulations are examined we find the following delegations: First, regulation 7(1) reads:

> A person arrested for an offence under section 4 shall be detained in custody without bail pending trial unless the Attorney General of the province in which the person is being detained consents to the release of that person on bail.

The reference is to the Attorney General of the province of Quebec. Regulation 8(2) reads:

> A person arrested pursuant to subsection (1) shall be taken before a justice having jurisdiction and charged with an offence described in section 4 not later than seven days after his arrest, unless the Attorney General of the province in which the person is being detained has, before the expiry of those seven days, isued an order that the accused be further detained until the expiry of a period not exceeding twenty-one days after his arrest, at the end of which period the person arrested shall be taken before a justice having jurisdiction and charged with an offence described in section 4 or released from custody.

We have seen what has happened. Yesterday, the Minister of Justice for the Province of Quebec said he was going to order that everybody who had been detained be held for this period of 21 days, without any exceptions. It, therefore, becomes evident that there has been a delegation of federal power to the attorneys general of the provinces. In other situations, the Minister of Justice has not hesitated to tell magistrates and judges what to do with reference to first-time drug offenders, and in the case of magistrates they are neither appointed nor paid by the federal government. I, for one, cannot see why the government has felt compelled to delegate this responsibility to the attorney general or Minister of Justice of Quebec.

Surely, in a matter as serious as this, there should be uniform enforcement of the laws across Canada. I suggest we are not going to have uniformity of enforcement when we have to depend on ten attorneys general for the enforcement of the powers granted under this act. What we have here is the government putting on a show of taking charge of a serious situation when in reality the job has been delegated to the provincial authorities, presumably so this government can avoid being tagged with any unpleasant results.

One might well ask why the government has not used the facilities and staff of the Department of Justice in Montreal and in Quebec City to decide who was going to be detained and who was not, and what further action was going to be taken against them. As I understand the situation, this government has established branch offices of the Department of Justice in Halifax, Quebec, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver. These are not small offices. I understand the staff of the Toronto office exceeds 18 lawyers, and I assume that the staff of the office in Montreal would be at least of a similar size. For the life of me, I really cannot understand why the federal government has not followed through with this job instead of delegating it to the provinces.

One might well ask also why the government did not place the Quebec provincial police and the Montreal city police under federal direction and control, because this certainly is the first time in our history that the federal government has not had the responsibility for the enforcement of regulations under this act. We should also remember that the fundamental rights of all Canadians are being affected by these regulations. I am well aware of the argument that if you behave yourself you should have nothing to worry about. The question is, who is going to be the judge of this behaviour, a provincial attorney general or the federal government? I, for one, would feel a little disadvantaged in Quebec at the present time because of my inability to converse in French.

I noticed that the leader of the Créditiste party said his wife felt disadvantaged because English speaking soldiers were assigned to protect his home in Hull. I do not know whether he is expecting a bilingual bullet or what, but I think if there is any force to his argument, in view of the fact we are dealing with the fundamental rights of all Canadians, the federal government should take the responsibility for enforcing the regulations which it put into effect.

The Bill of Rights is a very important document, and it is a federal statute. We are left in the position where the provincial attorney general can or could act, under the guise of these regulations, in direct contradiction to those rights. I would say that if this situation is as serious as the government implies, and we do not really have that many facts before us on which to base a decision but we have accepted the situation at face value, it should be dealt with by the national government. So far, all we have seen is an example of the government trying to suck and whistle at the same time, which is just not good enough.

As to the long term, the present trouble should indicate to the government that the experiment relating to capital punishment is a failure. If it does not, then surely the great increase in the murder rate all across the country, which I understand has risen by 55 per cent in the past three years, should make it conclusive. Another step that should be taken is a complete change in policy concerning the admission to Canada of United States draft dodgers and military deserters. These people just should not be admitted to Canada.

The people of Canada have shown that they are prepared to have their accustomed rights and freedoms suspended on a temporary basis in order that the government can deal with the present emergency. However, they also demand an end to the extreme permissiveness which they fell has contributed in a material way to the development of that emergency.

The municipal authorities of Montreal came to Ottawa last November and detailed explicitly the explosive situation that was developing in that municipality, largely through the efforts of the people who are now being rounded up under this emergency measure. Mr. Saulnier particularly said he approached the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) some time between February and November of 1969, warning him of these difficulties that were arising and asking that he take some action. No action was taken. Last January at a Liberal fund raising dinner in Montreal the Prime Minister pooh-poohed the FLQ and said they were a bunch of unimportant nobodies. There was warning, but no action was taken.

Because no action was taken, the sweeping powers in these regulations have not proven to be entirely effective to date. It seems like a lot of dynamite still has not shown up. I understand there is supposed to be over a ton of it floating around Montreal. We had a situation that was pooh-poohed and now we have very strong regulations in force that affect every Canadian. A national emergency has been declared by the government. I ask the government to act according to its words and take the responsibility for enforcing these regulations it has proclaimed.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, as my colleagues have done, I must at the very outset express congratulations to the mover (Mr. Trudel) and seconder (Mr. Douglas, Assiniboia) and commend them for the very creditable job they did, especially in the light of the material with which they had to work. I do not intend to deal at any great length with the content of the Speech from the Throne itself but rather with some other matters. I do want to make one or two observations which reflect my own view of the speech, and I have no hesitation at all in referring to the editorial page of the Chronicle-Herald of Monday, October 12. I should like to quote very briefly from this editorial because again I think this sums up my own feeling about the speech itself. In part, it reads:

> If Governor General Roland Michener sounded bored as he read the federal government's Speech from the Throne, at the opening of the new session of the Parliament of Canada in Ottawa on Thursday, who could blame him?
> It was a dull, uninspired document, whose rhetoric failed to cloak the government's disturbing complacency and continued disinclination to get its priorities right.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. Stanfield: On the verge of greatness.

Mr. Forrestall: On the verge of greatness, that is right. I continue:

> Only in its references to the appointment of a new minister, and department, concerned with urban affairs, and in one or two other matters, did the speech bear any evidence of Prime Minister Trudeau's concern with matters of immediate consequence—

I suggest that these remarks are pertinent in 1970, inasmuch as we are all very familiar with the magnitude of the urban problems facing us. Sometimes one cannot help wondering if the Speech from the Throne,—and this applies to the present speech as well as to many which preceded it—which is a traditional part of our parliamentary procedures, is not being deliberately downgraded and deliberately written in condescending terms in order to further erode, as I have suggested, that part of our tradition which is enshrined in this institution, the House of Commons. I can only conclude that the government does not seriously hold it necessary to put forward clear and hard priorities, or that it simply does not understand them. The government does not understand the seriousness of the situation.

As I indicated, it is not my intention to dwell at great length on the Speech from the Throne. Suffice it to say that it is a personal disappointment to me in a number of areas. At the outset of my remarks, I should like to make a few observations, if I may. First, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see in his seat the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene). May I pay a tribute not only to our scientists but as well, and particularly, to the captain and the crew of the ship Hudson which has just completed a circumnavigation of the Americas. I had the privilege, and I personally thank the minister for this, of standing with one or two other Canadians at a dockside in South America and watching that ship come out of the fog. I could not help feeling very, very proud of being a Canadian and, as that day and ensuing days wore on, a very great pride in the work that the scientists on that ship had been carrying on so successfully. I was struck by the tremendous, very sincere and deep respect that the scientists of the department on board the Hudson, as well as of those who came from scientific communities in South America had for the skill and dedication of the captain and the crew. May I express to the minister my congratulations upon such a voyage being undertaken. I look forward as the months and years go by to a continuing evaluation of the information collected on this particular trip.

The grievous problems that confront Canada are very clear in the minds of those in the various segments of our country that are particularly affected. I am speaking in a broad sense. I doubt whether any of those engaged in the various sectors of our economic and national life are unaware of the depth of the problems facing them. They must be very disappointed, as I am and as I am sure thousands of other Canadians are, that the government apparently has not recognized the depth of those problems and given them any sort of priority.

May I now direct a few remarks to the area of national defence? If there is one area within the government that has been neglected, certainly for a number of years, it is the area of the Department of National Defence and the Canadian Armed Forces. I should like to touch briefly on what I consider to be an urgent necessity, partly because of the events of the last two weeks, but more importantly, because of the events of the last three years. I am speaking of the urgency of increasing the budget for defence spending. I am sure that my purpose in making this appeal is obvious. I need only refer to the current review under way with respect to our four new destroyer escorts, the DDH 280's. It is important, in order that we may maintain our capabilities, for the defence budget to be increased in respect of a general re-equipment program and in respect of maintaining the strength of the Canadian Armed Forces at levels which are adequate to meet the commitments and obligations that we, as a nation, have incurred. From time to time we pay lip service to those commitments.

I cannot help wondering, Mr. Speaker, how the Canadian Armed Forces are to carry out those new responsibilities we have assigned to them, such as maintaining our sovereignty in the north and policing legislation introduced in recent days by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) with respect to pollution, as well as enforcing other Arctic pollution measures, with the present equipment we have. What is more damnable, there seems to be no apparent effort to design and construct equipment that is adequate if the armed forces are to police the laws and regulations now in effect in Canada. I hasten to say that those are enlightened laws; yet, if they are to be effective, we must be able to police and enforce them. We must, if we can—and I think this should happen during the present fiscal year—increase the national defence budget; we must increase it substantially if we want to maintain our credibility in the eyes of our partners, in the eyes of our neighbours to the south and in the eyes of our NATO allies. We must replace the Argus. I think the Argus will need to be maintained in service for considerably longer than the government is apparently willing to admit at this juncture. I think the elimination of the Argus, which is used in part in its present well known role and in part for the extended surveillance of the north, should not in any way delay or halt our moving ahead with a program to replace that aircraft with others such as the Nimrod or Orion.

There are experts who claim these are the best aircraft available for the job. It seems to me that if we equip our forces with this new generation of weapons, there is every reason to suppose, on the basis of that equipment, that Canada for the next ten or 12 years will have the finest maritime patrol aircraft in the world. We must, as I said a moment ago, ease restraints with respect to the national defence budget so that we can maintain a credible and balanced equipment program and a force structured to meet the external and domestic commitments that we have already undertaken and from which, hopefully, we shall not retreat. The failure to do this now is capable of interpretation by our friends and allies outside this country, only that we are further retreating into a position of isolation with respect to Europe and with respect to continental defence.

I have another pet subject to which I think we should be giving serious consideration, unless there was some understanding in connection with the report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, which report is based on the study by the subcommittee on Maritime defence. I wish to emphasize that it is now time for Canada to study a true submersible capability. The committee recommended that we do not acquire nuclear powered submarines at this time solely on the basis of cost. There is every indication that it is possible for us to acquire such a capability without becoming involved in the tremendous cost of new construction. I wish to be very emphatic in stating that the true submersible, the nuclear powered submarine, remains the only piece of equipment available that can operate 12 months of the year in our northern latitudes.

There are many reasons why Canada should have this equipment, such as the commercial application, the scientific application and the presence within our Department of National Defence and other government circles of knowledge of what is happening in our north. The most important reason is that it is the only piece of equipment that is capable of year round operation.

It must be a damnable burden for the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) to carry the responsibility of the CF-5 program. I have sympathy for the minister. There are very obvious roles for the CF-5 and it would be impertinent if I pointed them out. The minister knows what they are. I do not understand why he is not getting on with the job and why this very expensive equipment is still rolling off the assembly lines to be put into storage.

With respect to surface forces, on the east coast we have now lost the two remaining operational ships with a mine-sweeping capability. If someone should decide to place mines in our waters, we would not be capable of removing them. What would happen if mines were placed in such places as the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the entrance to Halifax harbour or some other strategic east coast location?

In keeping with the extraterritorial responsibilities, consideration must be given to construction of a fleet, light in armament but adequate to carry out the policing and investigation roles required by Acts of Parliament in recent months as well as an effective role with regard to our responsibilities under ASW. The DDH-280 must not be changed or cut back. The necessary money must be found for this program in order that Canada may retain credibility in the eyes of our partners, particularly those within NATO.

In retaining this program it would be irresponsible for the government to decide to downgrade the equipment on these ships in order to meet the total overhaul cost. Within three months of awarding the contract for these new DDH-280 ships, it was known that we would not by any stretch of the imagination be on time or within the cost estimates. In spite of that, the replies to the four questions I placed on the order paper were that no changes were indicated in the over-all cost. I hope what we are now faced with is not a fait accompli in terms of government thinking, but it must be close to that with respect to the total cost of the program, half a billion dollars. Canadians would not have objected or reacted strongly if the government had had the courage to indicate that when it embarked on the program two or three years ago.

I wish to deal briefly with Canada's defence role in our north. Much has been said about this in the past 12 to 14 months. There has been a lot of talk about northern capabilities. This has amounted to nothing more than a program of testing the capability of equipment and training people in northern operations. I have contended for some time that the north could best be developed by people over whom we have total and absolute control. My wish is for a program embracing particular skills of the Canadian armed forces working in the north to develop communications systems, airports and communities. This would require thousands of people, including members of the armed forces, their wives and children. There should be orderly development of the north by people over whom we have some control with respect to the ecology and so forth. It is not sufficient to talk in terms of a couple of hundred of people if we want to do anything meaningful. This should be under the control of competent men within our armed forces.

I would now like to spend a moment or two speaking about future development of the metropolitan area, part of which I have the privilege to represent. During the 1970's, particularly the early part, the elected people must determine our potential growth and the form it must take. Legislators must not continue to proceed on the basis that industry is good, no matter what its nature or form.

I used to think it would be good to develop the Minus Basin tidal power so that reduction and refractory industries might be attracted to Nova Scotia, all of the pollutant industries. All that seemed to matter at that time was that industry was industry. I have since changed my mind 100 per cent and I make no apologies for it. Perhaps I have been enlightened by all the talk about pollution in recent years. In any event, I have changed my mind. I now believe we have the capability in the metropolitan area of Dartmouth and Halifax. I trust my hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) will pardon me for consistently placing Dartmouth first; while Dartmouth is now an important part of Halifax, as the years go by I believe it will become less important. My feeling is that if economic generators can be found, this centre will produce a city of half a million people in the course of the next 12 or 15 years, based on clean industry. This is important.

We must find in the Atlantic provinces, we are told, an economic centre with a population of at least half a million before we can become self-supporting and say to the rest of the taxpayers of Canada: we no longer need subsidies or special help; we now have a self-sustaining existence. It is not feasible to attempt to develop more than one such centre in the Atlantic area at least in the foreseeable future. Many factors make this true, most of them apparent, but perhaps the most realistic is the rapidity with which technology and people's requirements are changing. We can, as has been suggested, develope an assembly-based industry involving a containerisation program and a full system of distribution. Parts would be brought into the area in containers, fed through an assembly process and then transferred to a distribution centre. This would be one industrial generator, and it would be a clean generator, not one which would pour pollutants into our air and into our waters.

A second generator which has been suggested by a number of well-informed, knowledgeable people would be the development of the downtown sections of both Dartmouth and Halifax. The federal government is in a position to play a large part here. Halifax has long been a financial and administrative centre of the Maritimes, at least, and over the next ten or twelve years, with careful thought and planning, this facet of our development could be expanded in an orderly way which would tend to enhance the quality of our environment rather than pollute it.

A third area of economic generation which I, and others, believe to be economically possible and feasible is one in which, again, the federal government must take the lead. It is the area of research and development programs. We have a sophisticated and closely interrelated research program in eastern Canada today concentrated in Halifax and Dartmouth and including such centres as the Bedford Institute, the National Research Council, the Nova Scotia research facilities, The Defence Research Board, research efforts in our universities, and so on. This activity should be geared to areas of growth, and in his context I refer particularly to the Bedford Institute. Today we have a responsibility to develop on the east coast of Canada and, hopefully, in the Halifax-Dartmouth area, an expanding research effort in connection with the sea and its resources, including those which are beneath the ocean floor.

To accomplish the development of the three main generators to which I have referred, a tremendous expansion is needed in terms of infrastructure, for example, water services—the whole bit. Specifically, in this connection, we need a hospital. It is to be hoped the government will act early on the suggestion of Mayor Thornhill of the city of Dartmouth to provide a much-needed hospital in that city. The mayor has been advocating this step for a long time and it is one which deserves the early attention of the government. As I say, we need help from the federal government in building up this infrastructure and it is necessary for us to proceed in this regard immediately.

In addition, I hope the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) will at this time reassess his position on the question of Fundy tidal power. There is certain evidence now available which calls into question the depth of the thinking upon the basis of which the government made its decision not to proceed with this project unless there was some marked change in circumstances. I hate to suggest to the hon. minister that he looked only superficially at the report of the standing committee which was presented to him, but I have a feeling he did not make a sufficient study in depth of the engineering work-up. He chose to rely almost entirely on the report of the committee itself, and with all deference to that committee, considerable objection has been found to the terms of their report. I have in mind, now, the deliberations of the international conference on tidal power which was held in Halifax earlier this year.

In closing, I urge the government to reconsider its freeze on national defence expenditure at an early date, so that we shall not entirely lose the credibility which remains to us among our allies. It is necessary to move now so that the cost of catching up will not be intolerable when the time comes to catch up. The need for a highly-skilled, well-trained and respected force has been clearly demonstrated to us in the last few days. I urge the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) to move swiftly. He has intimated that it is inevitable the budget strings will be loosened. I urge him to solicit the support of his colleagues so that this loosening may occur not in 1973-74 but in 1971-72.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North): Mr. Speaker, first, I should like to congratulate the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene), who I see present in the chamber this afternoon, on the successful trip of the Hudson. This has been a very fine achievement. The recognition of this House should also go to those who are running the operation at the Dartmouth Institute of Oceanography and, as chairman of the National Resources and Public Works Committee, I should like to extend my personal congratulations to them.

We, as a committee, visited the Dartmouth Institute last May. There is one suggestion I would make to the minister at this time. I believe we are doing a lot of good work in Water research in this country not only at the Dartmouth Institute but also at the Canada Inland Water Centre at Burlington, Ontario. I think we should be distributing some of their informational pamphlets to our high schools and secondary schools across Canada. From time to time, I receive letters from students asking why certain things are not being done when, in actual fact, the matters are already in hand. I should like to see the minister and his staff adopt a policy of sending information packages on the Inland Water Centre at Burlington and also on the Dartmouth Institute of Oceanography to the libraries of all secondary schools in Canada. If we do not relay to the people information about what is being done, then we cannot justify to them the amount of money being spent on programs.

Secondly, may I congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the cabinet in general on the strong measures, which at times have been unpopular, they have had to take to save the Canadian dollar and enable it to keep its value. It was heartening to hear it said at the recent International Conference of Finance Ministers in Europe that the Canadian dollar is in about the best position of the ten most developed countries in the world. I think this is a tribute to good management on the part of the cabinet and the Prime Minister.

Mr. Thomson: About the only tribute.

Mr. Hopkins: The hon. member can comment when he gets his turn. There is such a negative attitude on the part of some people at times that it is refreshing to get some positive and realistic statements on the record.

One thing we must do in the future if we want to institute policies that are effective is to spend more money on research. A good demonstration of the benefits to be derived from research is given by the Japanese in the way they have handled their coal and lumber industries. They have made in depth studies not only at their own domestic level but at the international level. They have compiled all kinds of data relating to those industries. This is one reason they are progressing so quickly and are in a position where they can buy raw goods from many nations of the world, manufacture them at home and then sell them back in finished form to the same nations.

It is proper at this time to congratulate the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on his energy policy. He has had a very difficult summer with some trying moments, but I think the vision he has demonstrated will be realized.

I want to say a few words about transportation. It is my view that equitable freight rates and good roads are important in developing the Canadian economy, as are our very worth-while policies of regional economic expansion. We in the Ottawa valley have always been plagued with unsatisfactory road conditions. If there is one thing we badly need, it is a good highway artery.

Let me give the House a good example of what I mean. The bridge in the centre of the town of Petawawa that spans the Petawawa River was built before the first troops moved into Base Petawawa in 1907. Today, it is called upon to handle all the traffic moving into Base Petawawa from various parts of the country, as well as traffic destined for Chalk River. Invariably there is a big traffic jam right in the middle of the town of Petawawa during the rush hour, and it is nothing for cars to be lined up for three miles. One morning about two weeks ago the nuclear laboratories at Chalk River lost $2,000 in wages which the Crown Corporation had to absorb because employees were late through no fault of their own. Renfrew County Council has brought this problem to the attention of the Minister of Highways of Ontario. It sent a resolution to the Minister of Highways requesting the early completion of the proposed highway 417. The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. McBride) and myself were asked to support this brief, and we did so.

In reply to my letter to the Minister of Highways, the Hon. George E. Gomme, I was informed that roads were not the only problems in eastern Ontario, and that if we had really wanted to admit it, another problem was lack of economic development policies. He suggested that if the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton and myself had succeeded in getting the area designated, this would have gone a long way toward solving our problems. In other words, the minister was trying to pass the buck to us. Let me tell the Hon. George Gomme that the hon. members for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton and Renfrew North have now done their homework and we are looking for him to do his. We want that highway and we want a new bridge at Petawawa. I see no reason for the federal government providing my constituents with a large number of jobs when their counterparts in the Ontario legislature cannot even provide decent transporation arteries for people to get to work.

If anyone wonders why I am spending so much time talking about a local matter, let them come to my house at week ends and receive some of the calls that flood in. I want to put the bread in the basket in which it properly belongs—at Queen's Park.

Mr. Aiken: We always blame Ottawa.

Mr. Hopkins: If we blamed Toronto as much as they blame Ottawa, we would be blaming them all the time. One thing I will say for this government is that it faces up squarely to its own problems and settles them.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Like unemployment.

Mr. Hopkins: The government is facing up to unemployment, too. The hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) made some comments about the Department of National Defence. I do not think he mentioned the pay scales in the lower ranks, which is one matter that I suggest the new Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) review. I want to congratulate the new minister on his appointment and in the interest he is taking in his new job.

There are some things I should like to bring to his attention. The first concerns rental problems at Department of National Defence bases. I believe rents should be kept at a low level as an incentive, and as one of the privileges of members of the armed forces, because they do not have the same privileges when they are in block housing that they would have on civvy street. I think the whole matter of housing on DND bases should be reviewed. You know, there are times during long periods of peace when many people feel that the armed forces of a nation are out of style. It is my belief that it is healthy to be prepared and that it is healthy to keep a good force at all times. At no time should these people be given kicks in the teeth, especially at a time when we are asking them to perform a duty.

The average soldier today wishes to do a good job. It must be rather frustrating to him, however, while he is in the middle of performing a duty he has been asked to perform, to find there are those who criticize him, will not back him up, or in fact appear to be making statements on behalf of the people whom he has been asked to protect. We should always keep a proper perspective and remember that being unprepared is just as great a promoter of disturbance as anything else. If individuals interested in crime or in international controversies know that certain nations are not prepared, then such nations are open to attack from other nations or from criminals and so on wherever they may be.

Freight rates is another subject I have discussed in this House on other occasions. I deeply feel the day is coming when we must look at our two major railways in Canada in a realistic way to ensure that they provide the service we wish them to provide in order to tie this country together. They must not be allowed to go on charging high freight rates merely to balance their books. I think the burden of sharing the deficits of these transportation systems will have to rest with Parliament. Otherwise, large areas of this country will be prejudiced because companies will not settle in those areas unless proper freight rates are available to them.

This is a subject which is, and in the next 20 years will be, closely related to pollution. If we do not have an equitable freight rate policy to provide an incentive to industry to move into the slow growth areas of Canada in the next few years, then industry will continue to move into the large urban centres of Canada with the result that we will be required to spend more money on antipollution measures. Some of this money would be better spent on subsidization of freight rates and the provision of a better economy for the slow growth areas of this country.

I might give one specific example in this regard. I believe it is an example of the arrogance of the CNR. A company in my area which is in the wood business asked for rates for the hauling of logs a distance of approximately 200 miles. That company was given a rate something in the order of 54 cents or 57 cents, which would have added some $50 a thousand to the price of the lumber or plywood produced at the manufacturing level. This rate was questioned during a meeting which was held. The railroads came back with a rate of 27 cents. This points out very blatantly how well they did their homework in the first place. It would seem obvious that there are people in the sales division who announce a rate but who simply are not interested in obtaining that freight. It would seem there are only certain lines of freight in which they are interested.

So, what happens? In some slow growth areas, such as areas in which forestry is the basic industry, the products, in this case wood products, are kept off the trains and hence the traffic is cut back on those lines. Then, some day we will find that the railway has appeared before the Canadian Transport Commission with a sob story to the effect the line is not paying and will have to be abandoned. Such action can only produce more problems for areas of Canada which are already slow growth areas. I think Members of Parliament today, regardless of party affiliation, who come from slow growth areas should be on top of this situation every day so that we might have a policy which would be fair to these areas, and so that we might be able to operate as economically as possible in this nation. Instead of just complaining about unemployment, let us do something in this regard.

Let us put these far-reaching policies into operation in places in Ontario where the basic tax dollar will help industries and muncipalities which do not have a strong economic base at the present time. At the same time, let us keep the railroads in a position where they are in fact knitting together the economy of Canada instead of simply making runs between the cities of Canada without consideration for the smaller communities in between.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that pretty well rounds out my remarks, with the exception of a few comments I have to make concerning the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The extra $100 million that has been thrown into CMHC is a good shot in the arm and I congratulate the Minister without Portfolio for that. But again, I should like to deal with the local situation because it seems to me that when certain policies are laid down, Renfrew county appears to be a buffer zone between the northern and southern parts of the province. When policies are laid down for northern Ontario, usually they do not apply to areas just below North Bay. The towns of Deep River, Chalk River, and part of the town of Petawawa qualify for CMHC loans, but the town of Pembroke does not qualify at this time. However, the city of North Bay with a population of 4,800 does qualify for CMHC loans. It is somewhat ridiculous to place the town of Pembroke with a population of about 16,000 on the same policy level so far as CMHC is concerned as the city of Toronto.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Hopkins: People in the town of Pembroke do not receive CMHC loans. As I said, we suffer because we are not included in northern Ontario, but at the same time we are too far north to be included in Southern Ontario. I think it is interesting to note that the smaller communities of Mattawa, Bonfield and the lower part of Nipissing have received little or nothing from CMHC simply because an instruction has been issued by the North Bay office that the Corporation does not want to be involved with housing in smaller communities.

Approximately 175 loans have been approved for the city of North Bay, but if my information is correct, very few have been approved for the town of Mattawa. I put this on the record because I want it brought to the attention of these officials, and I will be backing it up with letters. I want this reconsidered when the new budget for CMHC comes out.

Mr. Paproski: Let your constituents write to their federal member.

Mr. Hopkins: If they write to the federal member in my area, they will get service.

As a final note, I should like to congratulate in a very serious way the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) for the serious, dignified and discreet manner in which they have carried out their duties in the last few days.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, before I start my speech I should like to commend the hon. member for Renfrew North (Mr. Hopkins). I am quite sure that he is a positive person, but I noticed that even among his positive suggestions there appeared a few criticisms which, if they had come from the opposition, would likely have been referred to as negative. Anyway, I will try to be positive in my contribution to this debate, even though I am speaking from the negative side of the House.

Initially, I did not expect to take part in the debate, but a problem has come to the force in the last few days. I am referring to the chicken and egg war and the problems that have developed as a result of it. In Canada we have a Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) who, like old Macdonald, has a chick chick here and a chick chick there. At the moment he has too many chick chicks, not to mention a few too many eggs and a few too many turkeys. Not only that, but they are isolated in economic pockets in the country because they cannot cross interprovincial boundaries. This situation results from the marketing board legislation passed by the various provinces. It is regrettable that things have come to this pass, and for this reason I wish to take part in this debate.

Christmas turkeys should be going to the market now. In some areas they have not even been killed in the hope that some market development will take place or that the government will do something. So far, the federal government at least has been wringing its hands, and the Minister of Agriculture has been crying in his root beer, or whatever ministers of agriculture do. But I have not seen any action yet on this matter. The various provinces in Canada have initiated action through their marketing boards which has effectively stopped the transfer or shipment of eggs, poultry or turkeys from one province to the other. I would like to give one example in particular.

The lakehead or Thunder Bay is a natural marketplace for poultry products from Manitoba. It is a long way from the high producing areas of eastern Ontario, and as a rule it has been a natural outlet for surplus poultry products from Manitoba. Manitoba is now effectively cut off from this market. This is one example. In my own province of Saskatchewan eggs cost, if I recall correctly, some eight cents a dozen more than in Manitoba, again because of a marketing board regulation. Quebec, Ontario, and in fact all the provinces will, if they have not until now, be introducing regulations of this kind. In effect, it is an economic balkanization of certain industries. Let me suggest that if something is not done, this balkanization will escalate. This is something we should consider very carefully.

Recently Manitoba made an application to the Supreme Court of Canada to test the validity of these regulations. However, the application was turned down. I, as well as the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and the Minister of Agriculture what the federal government intended to do about it. The federal government said, in effect, that so far as the legal position is concerned, they will do nothing. What else they might do, I am not sure. The Supreme Court has said "no" to Manitoba, and the federal government has said "no" to opposition members. What then is to be done? I suggest that the government should hasten to bring in some farm marketing legislation to take care of the situation.

Bill C-197 was not passed by the House last year, and the Minister of Agriculture blames the opposition for that. We in this party supported the bill with some reservations—what I think were good reservations—and we would have hastened this legislation through with some amendments designed to deal with this particularly awkward problem. I should like to express criticism of the Conservative party in this respect. They have balked at Bill C-197. I agree it is their right to do so, but I have not heard them say what they would put in its place to solve the problem we have at present. If they have ideas in this regard, I suggest that they hasten to tell the House about them.

Mr. MacEwan: Read the amendments.

Mr. Thomson: I would like to hear the specific amendments, and then we can talk about them.

Some hon. Members: Read them.

Mr. Thomson: I believe that the federal government, in putting forth Bill C-197 without clearing up this constitutional problem, is using the constitutional problem as an excuse. I think this interprovincial trade situation should be dealt with on the legal level as well as the legislative. Let us hope that the federal government will re-introduce the farm marketing legislation with some amendments, as has been suggested, to ensure that this will be a national marketing act. We do not want the chicken or egg industries balkanized permanently in Canada. We want a free interprovincial market for all products in Canada. I have heard that some people who raise hogs and beef in some provinces are being affected adversely. Some individuals who cannot ship their eggs or poultry to Ontario or Quebec say they will assist farm machinery manufacturers to produce farm machinery in Manitoba. I do not think this is a healthy situation to be developing in Canada. We should hasten to solve the problem now rather than allow it to escalate.

Nationalism, Mr. Speaker, has been described as the strongest religion in the world. Under the guise of nationalism we do things we would not even consider in other circumstances, up to and including murder. In Canada, we are cursed with an additional problem. It is provincialism, or if you like, regionalism. One of the reasons I have heard given for the fall of the Greek city states is that they never overcame their small, parochial local interests. In this day and age, with our modern technology, we should get beyond merely looking after small, regional areas and parochial interests.

One of the things which have developed since the end of World War II which has appealed strongly to me is the European Common Market. Instead of a lot of small countries fighting among themselves, looking after their own problems, these countries have joined hands in order to solve shared problems. Despite the problems that have attended the development of the European Common Market, I cannot help but admire what it has been able to accomplish. It has proceeded more slowly in some areas than was hoped, but it has proceeded very effectively in other areas. However, I have been disturbed at the tendency of Common Market countries to gather together to protect themselves against someone, or something from outside. If the Common Market is a good thing for them, I say it should be expanded to include all the countries in the world.

We in Canada are moving in the wrong direction. We are moving toward the development of local, provincial sections. This is not a good thing. We should be putting our house in order in an economic sense, and here I refer to agricultural marketing boards. Let us first solve our problem in connection with the regionalization of marketing boards, and then let us look for markets abroad.

At the moment we have a surplus of eggs, chicken broilers and turkeys, at a time when these normally go out in large quantities to market. The reason for such surpluses in some provinces is that producers have been cut off from their traditional markets. Because the federal government has allowed this to happen, because it has done nothing to stop it from happening, I suggest it has some responsibility. I suggest that it should consider a purchasing plan of some sort to cover the immediate surplus problems experienced by the poultry industry, particularly for producers who have lost their traditional markets.

It may be argued that those who have over-produced for a market they did not have, do not deserve any protection. That is a separate matter. But I believe those who have lost their traditional markets have a claim on the federal treasury and the federal government should move quickly to assist them. I know this is an unpleasant matter. I know we have had programs for the purchase of surplus commodities previously. Such a program is not a happy undertaking for a government. It costs money, and there are other complications involved. But, Mr. Speaker, we have a problem. We have it now. Let us do something positive about it now.

We should re-introduce the farm marketing bill, make some amendments to it, and have it passed as quickly as possible so that we may avoid future situations such as this. I think some teeth should be put in the bill so that if provinces do not agree to allow farm produce to move freely within Canada, the federal government could consider sanctions against them, such as the withdrawal of subsidies as was done under the dairy plan. The federal government should also initiate some proceedings before the Supreme Court to clarify the position of the farm marketing legislation and the power of provincial marketing boards.

I wish to make one final point, Mr. Speaker. In the past we sold quite a few eggs abroad. I do not know if we sold turkeys and chickens in any significant amount. I am not even sure that there is a market abroad for these products at the moment, but we hear that there might be a market in Japan for pork, and possibly beef. I wonder if there is not also a market there for chickens and eggs.

I believe the federal government should undertake a more active research marketing program. Since becoming a Member of Parliament I have noted that a great deal of money has been spent on production research, in some cases with remarkable results. But, Mr. Speaker, extensive market research has not been undertaken, and I do not see any immediate plans to undertake it. We have not explored all the avenues available to us. It is high time we did in the interest of Canadian agriculture.

Mr. McKinley: I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question. He mentioned the Conservative party stand on Bill C-197. Could he explain the turnabout in his party's position after they found that the Farmers' Union opposed the bill without major amendment?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-L. Rochon (Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I am now experiencing a deep feeling of sadness and with all the Canadian people, I mourn the death of a great patriot,

[Mr. Thomson.]

Pierre Laporte. This feeling of sadness is almost haunting me when I remember the man who had been honouring me with his friendship for several years. Indeed, I cannot forget that he fought at my side in the 1962 election campaign, when I was elected to the House of Commons by the constituents of Laval, and I now realize that there are times in life when words cannot convey all our deepest emotions and we have to remain silent. I will summarize those feelings as follows: Dear Mr. Laporte, may you rest in peace. To your wife, your children, your mother and all your dear ones who mourn you, my most sincere sympathy. They weep, it is true, but they weep for a hero whose name will mark our history in letters of gold.

Those who preceded me, Mr. Speaker, depending on their political affiliation, in turn approved or disapproved the measures advocated in the Speech from the Throne but, upon reflection, one can read between the lines and see the same concern in all members of this House: the greater welfare of the Canadian people.

Opinions may differ on the implementation of certain measures, that is human. But in these tragic times, why not overlook those differences of opinion, why not support one another? Then, each one of us can, in his own heart, be conscious of having accomplished his duty.

I am, Mr. Speaker, one of the eldest in this House. I lived through the days of the depression in the 30s. I lived through the years that followed 1935. I sat in the legislative assembly of Quebec during that time. Then, as today, there was unease and troubles, but perhaps somewhat less than now. Later on, from 1939-1945, that is the second world war, we lived very dark hours indeed.

I read the Speech from the Throne very carefully. In it, I perceived the determination of the government to continue pursuing a policy towards a better and more just society.

I could speak at length on each and everyone of the measures advocated. Others have done so before me. They have analyzed them. The members of the opposition have criticized them and some of the criticism was constructive. The members of the government party have explained the good they can produce, and that is why I shall not go into them again. I merely echo the constructive ideas we have heard.

Last year, when I spoke on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, I pointed out something which seemed to me very important, that is, air and water pollution. I was then repeating what I had heard in Brussels during the sittings of the NATO science committee. I had been greatly impressed by the following words from a British delegate: "Tomorrow, the bottom of the seas will become the granary of the world." He went on to explain all that can be extracted from the rivers and the ocean, from fish to algae and underground oils. He concluded by saying: "That huge potential is to be protected, and one of the major means is by checking both air and water pollution, and international and national organizations will have to be set up, for in more than one city in various parts of the world, normal limits have been exceeded."

Last week, the federal government suggested to us what he intends to do in that respect through the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis), who said in his speech on the shaping of our environment in the 70's and I quote:

—shaping our Canadian environment is the biggest challenge we face in the 1970's. It is a bigger challenge than unemployment. It is a bigger challenge than inflation...it is a bigger challenge than all of our financial and social problems put together.

As can be seen, in its efforts to implement its anti-pollution policy, the government is planning a frontal attack on the problem, and, not wanting to rush things or to go ahead blindly, it understands that in the face of the urgency—and that is the expression used by the minister—it must do the following and I quote:

There is a real urgency here. We have to act on the environmental front quickly and with determination. We have to move ahead of events, rather than from crisis to crisis. Our critical path, in other words, must be laid out ahead of time. We must have a plan to preserve the quality of our environment. We must preserve our wildlife and our fish and our trees. We must renew our renewable resources as quickly and as effectively as we know how.

Economic growth is essential. Social progress must also continue in the 1970's. But their spin-offs must not result in a deterioration of our surroundings. Economic growth and social progress, in other words, must be paced in relation to our environment. They must be managed in such a way as to improve the quality of life in this country.

Mr. Speaker, in its efforts to clean up air and water, the government is facing another equally serious problem, that of protecting the industries which have made Canada one of the foremost industrial powers in the world, and that power enables hundreds of thousands of Canadians to earn their living. Indeed our country has the largest pulp and paper industry and God knows to what extent that industry has contributed to the pollution of our waters.

The minister also said and I quote:

Kraft mills have installed settling ponds and built biological treatment ponds.

It seems that those facilities are so up-to-date that there is good fishing in the rivers near them and that even the tourist industry does not have to incur, as in the past, the loss of revenue not only quite considerable but essential to the economy of some areas in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal now with shipping. During the current session, we will have to deal with a bill already introduced by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson), which will help check pollution, when in force. Going still further, the government will ask us to pass another bill providing for the establishment of a Department of Environment, which will be something new if I may say so, as no other country has thought of doing that so far.

I said a while ago that at the time I was sitting on NATO's scientific committee, I heard things that struck me. Moreover, I had the opportunity to talk with the representative of Turkey and, having read an article written by the reporter Jacques Girard on a lecture given by Dr. Gustave Prévost, a Quebec biologist, I said all NATO member countries could perhaps, in order to check such a plague, create their own departments to keep an eye on polluting agents which, all too often, know no boundary lines.

Let me read parts of an article published over a year ago and which concurs with the policy which the government intends to implement. I will therefore quote extracts from an article published in Montreal in March of this year:

States must keep an eye on polluting agents which know no boundary lines.

This is a statement by Dr. Prévost, a provincial government biologist. He further added, and I quote:

Ottawa should have full jurisdiction on the measures necessary to fight water pollution and this for reasons of efficiency: uniform standards should be adopted throughout the country so that everybody could find an advantage in not polluting the water more than his competitors.

And there should be an attempt to internationalize these standards through negotiations with the various countries and with the help of the UN: polluters ignore boundaries. Requirements for effluents should be identical everywhere.

Dr. Gustave Prévost, a biologist who has been interested in pollution for about thirty years and was at one time Director of the Quebec Biology Board took this stand at the University of Montreal Saturday afternoon during a forum organized by the junior commission of the Quebec section of the Federal Liberal party.

Dr. Prévost attacked the position that Quebec has adopted towards Ottawa, giving as an example what was taking place in the Eastern Townships, at Lake Memphremagog. Here is what he said:

The waters of this lake, which lies mostly in the United States, finally flow into the Saint-François River through the smaller Lake Magog.

For three years now, the town of Newport on the American side of Lake Memphremagog has had a treatment plan and a sewage system flowing into the lake and carrying a large quantity of phosphates from detergents. Consequently, algae are found in the lake and this process will eventually spell biological death of those waters, as has happened in Lake Erie. Such a process cannot be reversed. In the long run, biological death turns a lake into a swamp...

And many of our lakes and rivers in Quebec are in such a state. The article goes on to say:

Dr. Prévost classifies water into four categories depending on the degree of pollution.

First quality water—real drinking water—is spring water, except when it comes from certain underground pools which are already polluted.

Third quality water is contaminated by infectious hepatitis, and that is what we have in Montreal. It can be harmful. It is classified as drinking water when it does not contain colon bacilli. But the treatment it undergoes—chlorine included—does not eliminate viruses, detergent residues...A few years ago, Lachine "drinking" water was rather like a "detergent cocktail". Also in Pont-Viau...

I take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to ask again in this House for the dredging of the Mille-Îles and the Back rivers.

Also, in Pont-Viau, the "drinking" water brought in infectious hepatitis, virus disease...

Mr. Speaker, I have just described the condition of waters in the town of Pont-Viau and in several river-side districts of the City of Laval. Drinking water caused some cases of infectious hepatitis, a virus disease. I consulted several specialists about it and they told me that the drinking water in the river-side districts of Laval, particularly in some areas of Ahuntsic, Bourassa or Dollard, contains colibacillus, the cause of hepatitis. Like my colleagues from Terrebonne (Mr. Comtois), Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Major) and all those who tabled this project, I submit to the authorities what I have been suggesting since I became a member of this House—dredging the Mille-Îles and Back rivers.

I am aware that this is a local issue but this is one of the rare opportunities when a member of Parliament is allowed to speak about things of real interest to his riding.

City of Laval, which was part of my large riding of Laval before it was divided up and before I was elected in Ahuntsic, has a population of more than 230,000 today. It is the second largest city in Quebec.

The total municipal property assessment amounts to well over $800 million and taking into account the density of the population on the southern shores of the Back River, on Montreal Island, and adding the population in the constituencies of Bourassa, Ahuntsic, Dollard and Lachine, we get a total of over a million people for an aggregate property assessment exceeding $1 billion. This only goes to show, Mr. Speaker, the importance of that area and the reasons for my keen interest in that part of my constituency. The low-water levels which elsewhere are considered only as a threat, border on disaster where my constituents are concerned and a great many of them already have left or are considering leaving the river-shore districts. This situation is largely due to the conditions resulting from the pollution of the waters of both rivers and in this wonderful area known for its natural beauties and glorious mementoes of the early days of Ville-Marie, there is a feeling of uneasiness which apparently tends to paralyse any tourist promotion as well as the normal development of this natural water passage from the St. Lawrence to Lake St-Louis, then to Lake of Two-Mountains and into the Thousand-Isles and the Back rivers.

Briefs were submitted to the authorities. In the past, members representing that region felt duty bound to warn the authorities. However, in 1963, in view of the serious situation, a committee on the canalization of the Thousand-Isles and Back rivers was set up and registered on July 10, 1963 with the Superior Court of Montreal.

On the following August 15, a steering committee comprising a president, a vice-president, a secretary, four directors and a legal adviser was created. The federal members of Parliament whose constituencies bordered the rivers supported the request of 30 mayors of the riverside municipalities. Finally, in October 1963, the federal ministers of Transport and Public Works instructed engineers of their respective departments to undertake the required preliminary studies and report thereon.

In 1964, the Minister of Public Works agreed to meet the authorities of Laval. With these authorities and river-side residents he visited the whole area. He came to the conclusion that for the benefit of the population and in order to prevent an epidemic, it was necessary to dredge these two rivers during the spring of 1965. Following the flood in the western part of Laval, particularly in the city of Laval-Ouest the minister reported to the cabinet that it was urgent to take action in order to prevent a disaster.

During the fall of the same year the new Minister of Transport, Mr. Pickersgill, went further and said: these two rivers will be dredged, because the welfare of an entire population is at stake.

On July 7, 1967, I received the following letter from the Minister of Transport:

Dear Mr. Rochon,

I am pleased to inform you that on June 20, 1967, the cabinet approved the principle of the Grand Moulin Rapids canalization project on the Mille-Iles River.

The project will be undertaken in order to make the river navigable from the Deux-Montagnes Lake to Pont David. A sum of $1,250,000 is involved.

The Department of Public Works intends to start construction as soon as possible in 1968.

Meanwhile, Mr. Speaker, to stop the progress of inflation, a calamity we believe should be eliminated in the interest of the whole country, the government decided to delay the project and all those concerned understood that, in the general interest, it could wait. There the matter rested until the beginning of the fight against pollution.

Last March, after consultations with Ottawa, the Quebec provincial government—as well as the other provincial governments—decided to make the population aware of the serious pollution problem and on that subject, I quote an article by Mr. André Beauvais which was published in a Montreal newspaper:

• (4:20 p.m.)

Water pollution: Quebec efforts to develop greater public awareness

This year, the Department of Health intends to tackle with greater vigour the water pollution problem.

As early as May, the first phase of a long term program will be launched on a provincial scale with a view to awaken the public to the problem of water pollution.

Continuing in that vein, the riverside residents of the City of Laval as well as those in the riding of Bourassa in Montreal North in Ahuntsic and Dollard, were asked to send water samples to the laboratories of Laval or McGill Universities.

Over 55,000 samples were sent to those laboratories were colon colibacilli were found in almost everyone of them, in larger numbers perhaps in samples from the Back and the Thousand Island rivers.

A doctor I met and to whom I asked about the results of those tests told me that the thyphoïd epidemic of five years ago had probably been caused by pollution in the Back river near St. François de Salles, Saint-Vincent, Montreal North, La Visitation and Ahuntsic. Samples were sent from all over.

Mr. Speaker, I insisted on speaking of dredging the Back and the Thousand Island rivers because the general policy of the government against pollution—and I would like this to be well understood once again—is in the interest of all citizens. I am convinced that my appeal will not go unheard.

For some time now, along with my colleagues the hon. members for Laval (Mr. Roy), for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans), for Terrebonne (Mr. Comtois), and others, I have been meeting with the responsible ministers. We are now doing a more thorough study of this problem. Engineers have told us what the situation is and we are now looking forward to the enactment of more comprehensive legislation on pollution, in the best interests of the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, before resuming my seat, I would not forgive myself if I failed to do what all the previous speakers have done, namely congratulate the mover and the seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne (Mr. Trudel and Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia)). They proved worthy of the confidence of their constituents, and I am sure that after hearing them they had faith in their future in Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like at the outset to congratulate very sincerely the Deputy Speaker, who will, I am sure, discharge his duties with dignity, as he enjoys the full confidence of all members.

I should like to congratulate also the movers of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne (Mr. Trudel and Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia)). They fulfilled their obligation admirably. In fact, it was normal in their case to put emphasis on the government's accomplishments.

I should like to congratulate also in a special way the previous speaker, who just made a magnificent speech, where he pointed out, among other things, that the human being had once again been sacrificed to save the dollar. Alleging inflation the government has allowed the pollution problem to get worse. Like the hon. member I think it is unfortunate that such conditions should continue and I heartily support his claims so that we may take as soon as possible the necessary steps to check that national plague.

The Speech from the Throne is the usual statement of the policy which the government intends to follow and of the pieces of legislation it expects Parliament to pass. This year's speech is no exception to the rule: it abounds in high-sounding sentences which are pleasant to ear and bring hope, but it makes no mention at all of the means the government will take to establish a truly just society.

However, the Speech from the Throne refers to the generation gap in the following terms:

> Because of the clash between these new values and the old, because of the quest by the young and the disillusioned for some resolution of attitudes, we live in a period of tenseness and unease. It is an age frequented by violence as desperate men seek ill defined goals; an age of frustrations as gentle men question impatiently old assumptions.

This last sentence is quite significant. Indeed this age of ours affords us perhaps a last chance to choose our destiny instead of submitting to it. But that is only possible on one condition, that man be not the slave of progress, but rather its master. And to that end, Mr. Speaker, it is essential that the government have the courage to make the financial reforms required to put our monetary system at the service of the people, when at this moment, we are its slaves.

Yet, the government seems aware of that situation. It also seems to understand that change is the most pressing reality, since it states:

> The decade of the seventies extends beyond our present vision, yet the momentum of change is already so overwhelming that man can no longer afford the luxury of reacting to events. He must anticipate and plan. He must accept that contentment and indifference are illusory; that the most dramatic reality is change; that there is more need than ever before to preserve as constant values truth, honesty, excellence and relevance; that a society which is not inspired by love and compassion is not worthy of the name.

Mr. Speaker, the economic dictatorship often denounced over 30 years ago by politicians such as René Chalout and Dr. Philippe Hamel, continued to reign supreme in Canada and mainly in Quebec, regardless of the government in power. The fundamental rights of the individual are not respected in spite of the extraordinary progress accomplished in the field of science and productivity. In 1970, sick people unable to make a living are still facing daily difficulties because of a lack of income that would allow them to meet their basic needs. There still are many destitute people who get a small allowance of $30 to $50 a month and this, in a country as rich as Canada. In some cases, and there are unfortunately too many, repeated inquiries are made, procedures are delayed while those in need are urged to be patient, and soon. But, at the bottom of their heart they feel abandoned and refuse to believe in the advantages that society can bring them. The administration is too slow. No account is taken of the needs and of the income of those people. We quite often receive complaints in this connection and when I happen to follow them up, I find, unfortunately, that the person who complains is justified in doing so. In that regard, I think it can be recognized that the reports of the Senate committee now making and inquiry across the country are not exaggerated and that the members are making recommendations likely to correct the situation.

Economic dictatorship was denounced by the great Pope Pius XI in his 1931 encyclical on economic and social problems, in the strong following words:

> In the first place, it is obvious that not only is wealth concentrated in our times but an immense power and despotic economic dictatorship is consolidated in the hands of a few, who often are not owners but only the trustees and managing directors of invested funds which they administer according to their own arbitrary will and pleasure.

This dictatorship is being most forcibly exercised by those who, since they hold the money and completely control it, control credit also and rule the lending of money.

... This could even exist at the government level.

Hence, they regulate the flow so to speak, of the lifeblood whereby the entire economic system lives, and have so firmly in their grasp the soul, as it were, of economic life, that no one can breathe against their will.

This is so true that important and urgent projects are delayed from year to year, precisely owing to the shortage of money, that economic blood which must serve the nation rather than exploit it.

I am quite surprised to note that many individuals in a position to communicate with the public ruthlessly criticize the activities of politicians who are an easy target. They are unkind to politicians, but those same persons are extremely timorous when the established economic order, the financial and monetary systems are concerned. It looks as if they spend all their energy blaming the political order, but they do not dare deal with the stock market, lobbying, speculation, trusts, unrestricted competition, monopolizing, collusion, false advertising, kickbacks, disrupted trade due to the greed of unscrupulous agents. Yet, it should be done in order to improve and transform the system.

Mr. Speaker, the reform of our capitalistic system will be achieved by people who are respectful of law and order, and I believe that it is easily understood here that every one of us is working towards this goal. However there are outside elements of lawlessness at work trying to change our economic system. It is only a small group resorting to unethical means and it is the responsibility of the House to try and effect the change in peace and order.

If nothing is done our system will be destroyed by anarchic elements. It is up to us to make the choice while there is still time. One thing is certain: our system cannot remain what it is today, particularly in the area of distribution, where an abundant production is ensured by man's labour, by science, equipment and discoveries of all kinds. This accumulation of goods in the presence of needs that remain unsatisfied is an injustice which prompts the Canadian people to lend a sympathetic ear to those who advocate violence and disorder.

I think it is high time we reacted if we do not want to witness here what has happened in other countries.

In January of 1969 in London, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) replying to a newspaperman who had asked him what would be the solution to the economic problems of Canada, the Prime Minister coolly stated that he would favour true communism as the ideal solution.

I hope that the newspaper reports of his words were incorrect because we, as Canadians, have better things to do than try to establish in our country a communist regime which has never proved satisfactory elsewhere. However, history tells us that in every country where there is a communist regime, that has been brought about through the action of a very small number of revolutionaries.

In an encyclical letter, Pope Pius XI said:

Social and economic organization will be properly structured and will realize its objective only if it provides all its members with all the goods that natural and industrial resources and a truly social organization of the economy are able to provide, these being sufficient to provide each and everyone with an honest living.

Mr. Speaker, no one is asking for more. We want the smallest and the weakest member of society to have the minimum required or a decent living.

We should all eagerly aim at such an objective. The Speech from the Throne deals with it when it defines what should be our society. In fact, we can read the following:

—a society in which human differences are regarded as assets, not liabilities;

—a society in which individual freedom and equality of opportunity remain as our most cherished possessions;

—a society in which the enjoyment of life is measured in qualitative, not quantitative terms;

—a society which encourages imagination and daring, ingenuity and initiative, not coldly and impersonally for the sake of efficiency, but with warmth and from the heart as between friends.

This is the definition given in the Speech from the Throne and I endorse it. If the government with the help of the Canadian Parliament could achieve this objective of a well organized "just society", I think it would solve a great number of our present problems.

Jacques Maritain said that all men had an equal right to the use of material wealth.

The family is the vital cell of society and the true aim of economic activities is to insure the true common good, that is to say the necessary minimum income.

The fruits of the present future production result, for the greater part, from social capital accumulated over generations and those proceeds should be distributed in a "social" way to each and every member of society, as his right.

With the coming of automation, labour, which was formerly the main source of income, is becoming ever less necessary. That is why we have hundreds of unemployed who, because of our present economic system, are not entitled to share the fruits of production because they did not contribute to it by their manual labour.

In an open letter to the former president of the United States some American economists and sociologists have stated that in consideration of the fact that production is liberating human work without being able to take advantage of it in a useful way, the first condition to be implemented in order to avoid unprecedented economic and social disorder is to ensure to everyone a guaranteed minimum income.

I hope that the reference in the Throne Speech to the guaranteed minimum income will not be an empty one and that this objective will be achieved.

It is precisely what the Ralliement Créditiste has been suggesting for years. But governments have turned a deaf ear to these proposals. Again, last week, we moved a subamendment inviting the government to increase family allowances; that would have a direct effect in helping families, since Canada is able to do it, keeping in mind the tremendous production in store and the great number of unemployed who are ready to produce more.

This proposal has been voted on in this House, and the two traditional parties have joined to vote against an increase in family allowances. I wonder then whether they lack logic and sincerity.

Agriculture in Quebec is experiencing serious difficulties. Industrial milk producers are operating in trying conditions. Indeed, I have been told once that truly good producers do not need to be subsidized by the government to operate at a reasonable profit.

Nevertheless, following the visit paid by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on September 20th to Mr. Reebs, a St-Grégoire farmer, in the constituency of Nicolet, the magazine La terre de chez nous reported this incident:

> Mr. Reebs admitted to the Prime Minister that out of a yearly net income of $4,800, subsidies accounted for some $4,500.

I believe that he was exaggerating or else the journalist erroneously reported the figures. Anyhow, he was not exaggerating when he said that his net income was $4,800. This is a necessary minimum. However, I believe it is untrue to say that the subsidies amount to $4,500. I now resume the quotation:

> Needless to say that a cut in the subsidies would mean bankruptcy for me. I have been here for ten years only. You could tell me to turn to other types of farming; of course, there is the sugar-beet, about which I know a little, but this product is even more subsidized than milk, and you will not see me get into that—And what about cattle, said the Prime Minister?
> It is a proven fact that cattle requires three times as much capital, and it takes seven years to get something out of it—
> It will take me all my life. At the present time, I put back every penny I save. I have 20 years of experience in the dairy industry.

Mr. Speaker, it is indeed true that we could progressively get the industrial milk producers who have to leave that field for well-known reasons into other kinds of production. Perhaps it would be wise to interest some of them in sheep-breeding. Judging from an advertisement published in La Presse on October 14, 1970, and sponsored by Steinberg's, there would be room on the Canadian meat market for a larger quantity of lamb.

The advertisement read as follows:

> Spring lamb from New Zealand. Why is lamb such a good buy?

You can find out in La Presse under date of October 14, 1970. Those people can afford to advertise like that. They are going to sell lots of New Zealand lamb. But the producers of industrial milk, with their small income of $3.60 per hundredweight, cannot afford such advertising, so the consumers forget about the milk producers.

In my constituency of Bellechasse, such breeding could be done very successfully.

I suggest that the government should seriously consider the possibility of promoting that industry which could use the farms which have been or will soon be abandonned, if the policy is not amended.

Is the government really serious when proposing its farm policy? We saw last year that a petition bearing the signature of 25,000 producers of manufactured milk was handed to the government in the House. I signed it myself. In that request, the petitioners asked that an emergency debate be held on the government dairy policy. When the session came to a close, the government had not dealt with that petition even if on several occasions I had reminded the House Leader of it.

It might be said that an emergency debate was held on the situation of milk producers. I admit it, but this was done through a motion from the member for Bellechasse. However, the 25,000 petitioners keep asking, when they meet us, whether their petition will be considered in a serious debate likely to improve the situation.

And I always tell them the truth, I hope, when I say that their petition has been introduced in the House and that one of these days, they may be able to see the results.

In any event, I know full well that industrial milk producers have make more than reasonable attempts to reduce their production, and at this stage, I would like to bring the fact to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) who is responsible for the dairy policy. A great many of them have met the requirement of the government, but I beg for mercy for those who remain in the dairy industry. Better prices should be guaranteed to them so as to increase their income and allow them to meet their obligations. I shall take up the subject again when we consider the estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

There are also possibilities for industrial development in my area and I am asking the government to see that the requests for subsidies made by those who do not hesitate to extend their facilities or by those who have enough initiative to create new industries are processed as quickly as possible, as this would create employment.

Yet, this is a very simple thing. In fact, the legislation exists, the estimates have been passed. On behalf of the industry I put the question: Why does it take so long to consider a request, to give an answer or to pay subsidies?

I also ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) to assure me that the town of Montmagny, presently in difficulties because of its large number of unemployed, be designated as a special area so as to enable the municipal authorities to carry out urgent public works projects and provide employment for the excessive number of unemployed in that locality.

Finally, I ask again that the government undertake immediately the dredging of Montmagny Basin so that greater use may be made of the harbour in that municipality, which would greatly help industrial development in that area. I will perhaps be told that the government has no money for this. To that, I would answer that, if this was for war purposes, the financial problem would not arise.

Funds for warfare are always available, bout no funds are available for achievements in time of peace. The situation is becoming increasingly repulsive.

Most unfortunate events are now taking place in Canada, and more specifically in Quebec. Injustices of all kinds lead to unrest which is disturbing to all those concerned with the common welfare.

It is certainly not by resorting to violence that the situation will be corrected as it necessarily must be. All nations that have resorted to violence have subsequently found themselves in worse straits. Speaking of violence, allow me to read two short extracts from a letter published in l'Action of October 16, 1970, in connection with the events we experienced, and which became even more tragic at the end of the week. This is what was said:

> To oppose violence without taking the means to eliminate those factors which generate serious social pressures, is to give evidence of ignorance or of hypocrisy.
> To expose open violence is easy, but this is not enough. One must seek out its sources, kill the roots which give life to violence and change the soil in which it so easily sprouts and grows. That responsibility should be assumed by this scandalized elite which is in great need of enlightenment before it is too late.

Mr. Speaker, in some countries, violence was reported to in order to change situations which did not please the man in the street. There were fights, brother against brother; there were mass killings and after the battle was over, the same people had to rebuild over their own ruins and accommodate their lives to the same economic dictatorship and to the same financial sharks.

I recall the unfortunate events which took place in France in May 1968, witnessed by myself and several Canadian members of this House.

Let us recall also that the Canadian Parliament of which we are members was unable to go on with its business for over two hours at the last session because of a group of young women who had been mobilized to protest.

Mr. Speaker, I never did understand, why authorities tolerate revolutionary training schools in our country. This has already been denounced by people outside of politics who nevertheless were exercising some authority and who had the courage to warn the population.

The present economic situation is disastrous for our young people because too many are without work. We know by experience that when we are young we are full of energy. If it is not spent on good achievements it is spent on bad endeavours.

It is sad for parents who have given up so many things to bring up their children, to give them a sound education, to see that because of unemployment—which we must make every effort to check—some people try to have them take drugs and to use them, not to develop our country but to foment disorder and spread destruction.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

• (4:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, like other hon. members I wish to extend my sincere congratulations to the two hon. members who moved and seconded the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Both hon. gentlemen delivered very fine speeches. It is always a great honour for an hon. member to be selected to perform this function. While I must confess I do not agree with all these hon. members had to say, I shall defend their right to say it. I should like also to extend my very best wishes to hon. members opposite who have been elevated to higher positions in the government since our last session. At the same time, I extend my deepest regrets to those on the government side who were called but obviously were not chosen. To these former Parliamentary Secretaries, I can only say "it is better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all."

I am sure my constituents would want me to make reference to the recent turn of events in the province of Quebec, and at the same time express their sympathy to the bereaved family of the late Hon. Pierre Laporte. I must confess that while my initial reaction to the news of the murder of my fellow Canadian was that of shock and grief it was soon replaced by a feeling of extreme anger. I might say that as a relatively new Canadian, one who has developed a feeling of love and loyalty for this country and its institutions, I find it very difficult to accept what is taking place in our country at this particular time. In the light of the senselessness of the recent slaying, the sinister motives of a small minority of people in the province of Quebec who would overthrow our way of life and smear the good reputation of our nation at home and abroad, is it any wonder that as Canadians we all stand a little shorter in the eyes of the world when we realize that a mere handful of people is able to threaten that which we have treasured for so long and for which so many of our people have died. It is an extremely serious situation which demands that the full weight of the law be brought to bear on those responsible.

We on this side of the House fully appreciate the seriousness of the situation. We supported the measure taken by this government to, we hope, restore law and order in the province of Quebec. God knows, these measures were extreme and repugnant to most Canadians but, be that as it may, we agreed with the government that these measures were necessary and subsequently we supported them. We can only hope they achieve the objective at which they are aimed in a very short time. The invocation of the War Measures Act and the consequent deprivation of the civil liberties of our people is not the sort of thing to which I take pleasure in being a party. However, like most Canadians, I am prepared to forgo certain liberties and agree to the suspension of the Bill of Rights if it means the restoration of my freedoms and those of all Canadians. If it is necessary for us to put up with the loss of some of our freedoms in order to regain one of our most fundamental freedoms, the freedom from fear, then so be it.

There is one thing I shall not accept. As I said, I did accept the fact that the War Measures Act was necessary to, we hope, restore law and order in the province of Quebec, but there is one thing which I as a Canadian and a member of this House of Commons refuse to accept. I refer to one of the underlying causes of the unrest which we are experiencing in almost every part of this country today. It is the government's total indifference toward the social and economic problems which have nurtured this unrest. This government, by its anti-inflation policy and its policy of deliberately forcing our people on the rolls of the unemployed, is in my opinion fanning the flames of unrest across this country, particularly in the economically depressed areas. If the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his government are determined to persist in their present illogical policy of fighting inflation and stabilizing the economy, then the real victims of that policy, the unemployed, the untrained, the old age pensioners and those on fixed incomes, should be given special assistance.

When a wage-earner, as a result of becoming unemployed, has used up all his savings, is head over heels in debt and reaches a time when his unemployment insurance benefits have expired and is therefore forced on welfare, how long does it take him to get back on an even keel? In too many cases it takes years; indeed, some never recover from this experience.

Having said that, I should like now to make a few brief comments on the Speech from the Throne. I say "brief comments", sir, because a document that is so empty, so devoid of any worth-while matter, does of necessity allow only brief comments. The Prime Minister is to be congratulated on his choice of script writers. After reading the Speech from the Throne it becomes quite apparent that its authors can look forward to a great future. As a matter of fact, if they continue to turn out such drivel, I contend that they have a much better future as writers than does their boss as Prime Minister.

I am sure that many thousands of unemployed people in Canada will be extremely pleased to know that their government intends during the present session to give consideration to the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women. They will also take great comfort, I am sure, from the fact that there is no mention of any immediate plans on the part of this government to deal with the critical, government-induced employment crisis which we now have in Canada. I am sure that the many thousands of Canadians who are forced to live and to raise their families in homes and under conditions that are substandards, and in a great many cases unfit for human habitation, will be pleased to know that we are living in a society, as the Throne Speech says, wherein the enjoyment of life is measured in terms of quality and not quantity, in a society in which individual freedom and equality of opportunity remain as our most cherished possession.

I am sure, also, that our unemployed will be pleased to know that the Prime Minister's dream of a just society is not yet dead and that he is still pursuing it. Our young men and women who are forced, through no fault of their own, to live in the ghettos of our cities and whose address will automatically deny them a job for which they are adequately qualified, will also get great satisfaction from the Prime Minister's promise of a just society.

While I am on the subject of the so-called just society I would ask hon. members to talk to the fishermen in my riding in order to get their views on the so-called justice in our society. Let them ask the fishermen how it feels to be denied a chance to earn a living from the fisheries, by a government that is quite prepared to spend huge sums of money on compiling reports on the status of women, on bilingualism and biculturalism, on ministerial junkets and on multi-million dollar jet Stars; and having had the gall to do that, to plead poverty when we request them to provide a breakwater or other essential facility to enable our fishermen to provide a living for themselves and their families. I ask you, sir, in all sincerity: Where is the justice in a society that will condone that kind of situation?

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Carter: Another thing which was conspicuous by its absence from the Throne Speech was any mention of the very serious danger facing our marine resources—the danger of depletion. Like most hon. members, especially those from eastern Canada, I have a great interest in our country's marine resources. I was keenly disappointed that no mention was made in the Throne Speech of the need for immediate action by this government to put an end to the plundering of our fish resources by foreign fishing ships.

The Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) is well aware of the crisis facing our east coast fisheries as a result of the depletion of that resource. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) has publicly admitted that a crisis does indeed exist. People in the industry are aware of the crisis and have been pleading for government action, but I regret to say that none has been forthcoming. I am sure that the average Canadian living in eastern Canada, where fishery is a very important factor in the economy, must be asking himself why the government is so reluctant to take the necessary initiatives to stave off the impending depletion of this great marine resource.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), who was in the chamber until a moment ago, can afford to spend weeks, months and perhaps years negotiating diplomatic recognition for Red China. He can afford to make trips to Norway and other Scandinavian countries to speak to Chinese delegations about Canada's desire to recognize Communist China. Yet the same minister is unwilling to lift a finger to negotiate with the other communists, the Soviet Union, with a view to implementing a policy that would have the effect of conserving our marine resources to stave off their complete depletion. The answer is quite obvious. Most of us are not at all fooled by the minister's reluctance and by the unwillingness of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to try to negotiate on our behalf. I think the average Canadian is no fool and we are all getting the message loud and clear.

The Minister of Fisheries and Forestry is, of course, aware of this problem but he is obviously unable to get the necessary support from his cabinet colleagues and from the Prime Minister.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): That is a decision for the hon. member who has the floor. Does the hon. member agree?

Mr. Carter: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Kaplan: Is the hon. member aware of the Russian-Canadian treaty that was signed yesterday dealing with fishing rights off the Grand Banks?

Mr. Carter: I am aware of one thing, that the hon. member's knowledge of the situation and of what happened between the Soviet Union and Canada is as good as any knowledge of nuclear physics. The hon. member should know—I inform the House of this, in the event hon. members are misled by what he said—that the agreement entered into this week by our government and the Russian delegation had nothing whatever to do with the Grand Banks, much to the shame of the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry and of the government of which he is a member. We contend that had some effort been put into it, and had the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry accepted our advice and suggestions, while the Russians were here and were prepared to sit down at the bargaining table we possibly could have negotiated an agreement which would have taken in the continental shelf, including the Grand Banks.

Mr. Bigg: He was misled by his own minister.

Mr. Carter: I hope the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan) is listening, because I believe he is one of those who share this view. The hard fact of the matter is that this government appears to have adopted an attitude whereby it is embarrassed to talk about fish. The word "fish" has been a dirty, four-letter word. We believe it is incumbent upon this government to immediately take an international initiative, not at the next Law of the Sea Conference but immediately, to convene an international conference on fish conservation and management. We feel, also, that if agreement among all nations is impossible, then Canada must take unilateral action to protect and conserve this vital resource. We believe—in fact we know—that Canada has every right to take such action under articles 6 and 7 adopted by the International Conference on the Law of the Sea in 1958.

We believe, also, that the Russians, who are the biggest offenders when it comes to plundering the marine resources of our east coast, have a tremendous investment in fisheries. They have outfitted large fleets of vessels to cross the Atlantic and fish in this part of the world. In view of that fact and in order to protect their investment, we believe they would be prepared to listen to reason and to agree upon some form of management control. Certainly, the least we can expect from our government is that they recognize the problem, endeavour to do something about it and do not use the ostrich psychology of sticking their heads in the sand and pretending the problem does not exist.

In case hon. members opposite continue to entertain any doubt about the gravity of the situation, I shall read the following statistics into the record: The catch, in quantity, of our inshore fishermen in Newfoundland has dropped roughly by half over the last ten to 15 years. quantity, of our inshore fishermen in Newfoundland has dropped roughly by half over the last ten to 15 years. The average catch of the average small inshore fisherman in Newfoundland is down to about 50 per cent of what it was in the mid-1950's. Meanwhile, the total catch in the northwest Atlantic by member nations of the International Commission of the North Atlantic Fishery increased from two million tons in 1958 to four million tons in 1968. The Soviet catch in this same area and during the same period increased from 117,000 tons to 741,000 tons. The cod catch of the member nations increased from 880,000 tons to 1,860,000 tons while on the other hand, in the period from 1963 to 1969, Newfoundland's total cod catch dropped from 450 million pounds to 300 million pounds, despite the fact that Newfoundland fishermen have been operating at their efficiency peak and are better equipped than they have ever been to prosecute the cod fishery. According to these statistics, and to people eminently qualified to speak on the subject, cod stocks on Canada's east coast could very well be in serious trouble within five years.

As for haddock, the statistics are frightening. In 1965 the total catch in the northwest Atlantic was 249,000 tons, of which the Russians took 129,000 tons. In 1968 the total catch was 97,000 tons, even though some nations had quadrupled their efforts. I would refer at this point to a statement made by the Minister of Fisheries on October 14, in which with a great deal of enthusiasm he announced that fishing for haddock on George's Bank will be closed to Canadian fishermen from October 23 until the end of the year in keeping with a conservation recommendation made by the International Commission for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries.

In effect, the minister said that Canada is now prepared to lock the proverbial door after the horse has been stolen—because he knows, as do we, that haddock stocks on George's Bank have been depleted to such an extent that scientists argue it is almost impossible for haddock to replenish themselves by natural means. After allowing the Russians and others to overfish, to plunder our stocks of haddock on George's Bank until there is nothing left for anybody to fish, these countries now agree to exercise some control. Why would not the Russians and the fishermen of other countries agree to this earlier? The fact is that today the stocks have been depleted to such an extent that it is not economically feasible to fish for haddock on George's Bank. Why was not the Minister of Fisheries able to enter into negotiations with the Russians and other ICNAF countries to bring about some form of management control over haddock resources on George's Bank? Before I leave the subject of fisheries, Mr. Speaker, I would like to impress upon the House and the government the need for immediate action to bring about international agreement whereby our fish stocks will be conserved and the danger of depletion brought to an end. I believe this can be achieved, but it will require great interest and pretty strong negotiation on the part of the Canadian government.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I hope the government will give the fishing industry the attention and priority it deserves. That industry may not mean much to the economy of people living in Don Valley and other parts of Upper Canada, but to certain parts of Canada, including the province I have the honour to represent, it means a great deal. We have a population of a little over half a million people, and 125,000 of our people derive a living either directly or indirectly from the fisheries. Is it any wonder that we are so anxious to have the government take the necessary action to prevent the total collapse of that industry? If the cod fishing industry fails, if we stand by and allow a continuation of what is happening, it is quite conceivable that within five years codfish will be a rare delicacy. The effect upon the economy of Newfoundland would be terrible.

I was pleased to read in the Speech from the Throne the government's intention to reorganize its urban activities under the direction of a full-time minister of urban affairs and housing. Housing, Mr. Speaker, plays an important role in economic development. To ignore the importance of housing and urban renewal, when considering development, is to ignore an important ingredient behind economic growth. In the Atlantic provinces, and especially in Newfoundland, housing stocks leave a great deal to be desired both as to quality and as to volume. While it is nice for CMHC and the DBS to bring out a forecast of housing needs for the next ten or 15 years, our prospects in the Atlantic area of attaining the desired target are very gloomy. Our prospects of ever attaining the number of homes suggested by CMHC as being required are very remote indeed, taking into account the Newfoundland economy, the financial condition of the Newfoundland government which is forecast and the limited financial capability of the vast majority of wage earners in that province to buy homes.

To those of us who have taken an interest in the housing situation in Canada, particularly in Atlantic Canada, it would appear that there is room for flexibility and experimentation by CMHC. The problems of the Atlantic region are somewhat different from those confronting most of Canada and, we feel, merit special attention. If I may be allowed to overgeneralize, the government's program to date appears to have been conceived to overcome the pockets of poor housing that exist amidst general urban affluence, while the problem in Atlantic Canada, especially in Newfoundland, is one of pockets of affluence in the midst of general poverty. In this regard we must stress the importance of taking regional differences into consideration.

A housing program policy should fit within the framework of a general social and economic policy, in which case the Atlantic area should be given top priority on the government's list for future expenditures on housing. A government that is seriously concerned with present housing problems and is interested in providing a better quality of life for all Canadians, should start showing its concern by making home ownership available to our wage earners who are on the bottom half of the income level. As the first step toward reaching that goal I would respectfully recommend to the government that it abolish the sales tax on building materials. The sales tax on building materials adds an estimated $950 to the price of a modest, three-bedroom bungalow. A government which continues to impose such tax is not serious in its professed desire to conquer Canada's housing problem.

If it is not financially feasible to remove the tax in its entirety, consideration should be given to a gradual approach starting, possibly, with a system of rebates on the amount of tax on materials used in houses costing $20,000 or less. This, of course, would have the desired effect of helping people in middle and low-income brackets who are buying homes in the $20,000 or less bracket. Let us face it; the average person who is at the middle or bottom half of the income level in Canada is the fellow who is buying a house for $20,000 or less. Such a rebate system should be administered so that the reduced cost resulting from the elimination of the sales tax is deducted from the purchase price of the house at the time of sale.

The government should consider the possibility of subsidizing interest rates to support home ownership for low-income families, including those involved in co-op housing. A subsidy program should be devised to help families who really need it. I am not too concerned about subsidizing interest rates or abolishing the sales tax on homes that cost $30,000, $40,000 or $50,000 because I feel that the people buying that type of house can well afford to pay the sales tax and the interest charged by the various lending institutions. I agree with the principle of building societies, as well as providing some form of tax relief on mortgage interest payments. I see no reason why a government sincerely interested in trying to solve the housing problem in this country would not agree to some kind of tax relief on mortgage interest payments on homes, again within the $20,000 or less bracket.

I agree with the concept put forward by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in 1968 in a speech he made, I believe, in Windsor. At that time he pointed out the need for regional land banks and the establishment of a revolving fund out of which we would buy land in advance of development and later sell it to developers with the understanding that a reasonable price would be charged the purchasers of homes. It is quite obvious to all of us that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but I must remind him that his allotted time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House agree that the hon. member may complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Carter: Thank you, sir, and hon. members for allowing me to continue. I hope that what I have to say will justify the tolerance I have been shown.

Getting back to housing, I recommend that we abolish the sales tax and give some form of tax relief on mortgage interest payments. I recommend the establishment of a land bank financed by a revolving fund. I feel, too, that we should give some thought to amending the National Housing Act so that housing authorities, municipal, provincial or what have you, would be able to purchase existing houses for subsidized rental. I cite an example in my city where the three levels of government, municipal, provincial and federal, embarked upon a program of building subsidized rental housing. The cost of these homes in the final analysis exceeded $20,000 per unit.

In every city in Canada—and I speak with some authority of the city of St. John's, Newfoundland—there are probably hundreds of homes for sale at prices that range from $8,000 to $15,000. These houses probably still have 25 or 30 years of life. They could be purchased by a housing authority for a sum much less than the cost of building subsidized rental housing of the type that we have. These houses could then be rented to people in the middle and low-income bracket in the same way as rental houses under a subsidized rental plan. I feel this could work.

While I am talking about housing and the need for subsidized rentals for people suffering hardship because they are at the bottom half of the income ladder, let me make a few remarks about social assistance and welfare in this country. I do not think I am saying anything that has not been said before when I say that this country will never achieve its potential prosperity or high level of economic maturity as long as a major segment of our population remains non-productive. When you consider that 20 per cent of any population, whether it be in the province of Newfoundland, Ontario, Manitoba or indeed any part of Canada or the world, is forced by economic circumstances and legislative restrictions to live off the fat of an already flabby economy, you realize that society is indeed in trouble.

I suppose my province is no different from most provinces of Canada. It is a little worse off, yet no less proud or desirous of retaining independence. But because of lack of opportunity and restrictions in legislation governing social and welfare assistance, many of our people have been sentenced to a non-productive and demoralizing existence—through no fault of their own and without even having committed a crime. In my opinion it is imperative that we take a long hard look at the Canada Assistance Plan. The formula proposed last year by the Atlantic provinces for improved cost-sharing arrangements and the plan to make more federal funds available appear to warrant urgent and careful consideration by this government. This concept strikes at the very root of federal-provincial fiscal and monetary arrangements as they affect the slow-growth areas of our country.

This is one area in which a national formula, as far as I am concerned, is not the answer. Neither is it rational to have the same precise, rigid form of legislation which governs areas such as those covered by the Canada Assistance Plan applying equally to each province. For example, Newfoundland might disagree with some of the provisions of the act in so far as they restrict our province from developing programs which are tailored to our unique needs. We would still want to avail ourselves of the federal contributions available under the social assistance plan.

People on welfare, whether they live in St. John's, Newfoundland, Alberta, Halifax or New Brunswick have but one burning desire. I am not prepared to accept the theory that people on welfare enjoy welfare. They do not want to stay on welfare. Neither is it true that most of them think they have found their niche in life and are happy to stay in it. I do not accept that theory because I know it is not true. It may be true for a very small minority, but the majority of people on welfare have been forced to accept welfare as a result of circumstances over which they have no control. They do not like it any more than we would like it.

These unfortunate people are asking for a place in life where they will not be discards or cast-offs because through no fault of their own they contribute little to the productivity of our country; and by the same token, we contribute little to them. Surely, Mr. Speaker, there must be some way in which the province, the nation and the individual can contribute one to another. At the moment this government seems less than willing to talk about amending the Canada Assistance Plan in a way which would allow the provinces the power of discretion and to renegotiate the terms and conditions of the plan as well as the limitations it now imposes upon them.

There are many areas of this country where resources and public service needs lend themselves to wiser utilization of the federal and provincial funds now made available through welfare. In many parts of Canada welfare funds could be more properly used for the development and improvement of the quality of life, while at the same time allowing those burdened with the stigma and humiliation of welfare to be redeployed creatively. As I have said, the average person who has been forced by circumstance to accept welfare is begging for a place in the sun. He wants a chance to work so that he can stand tall, walk straight and again earn the admiration of his family, wife and friends. I am sure the average fellow on welfare does not want to feel that he is a parasite, or that he is living off the fat of the land. All he wants is a chance. It is up to us to amend the Canada Assistance Plan so that these people can be given a chance to work for a decent wage. They do not want to work for welfare—I make this distinction—they want to work for decent wages and regain that which they have almost lost, their self respect.

I shall conclude, sir, by making some brief remarks about the problems of some other very important people in our society who seem to have been given the other end of the stick. I am referring to our senior citizens. Most of us who have had occasion to talk to these people recognize that financial problems are their biggest worry. The biggest worry of our senior citizens is not old age; it is poverty. These people have given the best part of their lives to their country, and I contend that they deserve something better than they now have. Surely we as a society are under an obligation to see that our senior citizens do not suffer and are not humiliated in later years as a result of money problems.

In Newfoundland there is also great concern among those who have reached middle-age and upper middle-age. There is a need across this country—this applies particularly to Newfoundland where a very high proportion of these people are unskilled—for more initiative in manpower retraining programs. A frequent complaint of many Newfoundlanders who are middle-aged is that they are completely left out of the labour market because of their age and lack of training. Yet these people still have the responsibility, in many cases, of raising a young family. No level of government has ever seriously studied this problem or taken concrete action to solve it.

Mr. Aurélien Noël (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity during the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne to make a few remarks that I find appropriate.

First of all, I should like to join with my colleagues to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel) and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) as well as the new Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole House, the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Laniel).

Almost four months ago, on June 29, 1970, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) delivered to the Canadian nation the following message on the 103rd anniversary of the Canadian Confederation:

The day we are celebrating, July 1, offers the opportunity to reflect together on the Canadian reality and recall its singularly favourable character.

Thanks to the immensity of its territory, the abundance of its resources, the stability of its democratic institutions, its atmosphere of liberty, the good will and tolerance of its citizens, Canada is one of the most privileged countries of the world.

We certainly have problems to solve. Various pressures interfere here and there with our good luck. There is still too much distrust and resistance between the two main linguistic communities of the country; there is too wide a gap between those who own more and those who own less; divergent interests between the various parts of Canada tend to create isolated areas; and a frequent lack of understanding between the older and the younger generation is prejudicial to a good and fruitful friendship.

Very fortunately our problems are not as big and as serious as the conflicts which are afflicting and tearing apart many countries. They are nevertheless real problems and we cannot ignore them. On the contrary, we must do everything to smooth them and to settle them, because they give us an opportunity to transcend ourselves.

In tackling and overcoming them, we have an opportunity to build a society where fraternity will have replaced distrust, where justice will have conquered poverty, where altruism will have won over the egocentrism of areas and where mutual understanding will have brought generations together.

In a world always under the threat of injustice and revenge, hostilities and wars, Canada certainly has an exciting task. If indeed it succeeds in reconciling the oppositions that are pulling it apart, it will have shown that men, however different they may be, can, when it is their wish, live as equals and brothers.

We live in a country of unlimited hopes, where the variety of languages, cultures and minds offer us the possibility of rare enhancement. Let us be proud of it. And all together, with determination and enthusiasm, let us work without respite for the unity and the advancement of Canada.

These words express a fervent and sincere wish oft repeated by the Prime Minister. His government has indeed resolutely set itself to work since 1968 in order to assure a better administration, to strengthen the bonds of Canadian unity, to stabilize the Canadian economy, to improve the individual's status before the law and in his relations with his fellow citizens, in matters of unemployment and job security, in matters of housing and others dealing with environment, etc. Many studies have been carried out and others are under way in order to find ways to improve human conditions.

Unfortunately, problems over the past two years have developed too quickly and have been too complicated considering the time we have had to examine and solve them. Furthermore, we are the neighbours of a great country which, unwillingly, adds its own problems to ours.

The Speech from the Throne and the long list of bills tabled by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) point out the means by which a more just society can soon be achieved.

The tragic events of the last few days have thrown Canada into an unfortunate and unforeseen situation, used as we were to live in a country where attacks on democratic principles were not taken seriously. For a rather long time there had been dark clouds above the horizon, but it is mostly since 1963 that the storm had been gathering in the distance. The ones who shouted beware were considered as prophets of doom. Incendiary slogans replaced the ambitious guidelines of the quiet revolution. Veiled incitement to a change in our political system soon gave way to unruly demonstrations. "Mein Kampfs" of all sorts are published and the true aims of their authors are printed in black and white. At the same time, bombs explode in mail boxes and in a plant where a strike is on. There are thefts of arms, dynamite and bank hold-ups. In the meantime, Quebec politicians say that their province is different from the others. Some talk about equality or independence; others about sovereignty and association. Everyone has a theory of his own.

Publicity surrounding those events is well organized and well controlled by people in most of the media. Some people become worried and warn the authorities. The answer is always the same: Do not worry, freedom of speech must be respected. There must be no limitation of a freedom for which such a high price was paid. Newsmen, press attachés, old and new, become the most eager champions of freedom of expression. Most of them do so in all sincerity. Here is what Jacques Tremblay wrote in La Presse for Tuesday, October 20, 1970:

> —for many years, right-minded people sided with the theoreticians of crime, as a means of collective liberation. In order not to appear to defend the Establishment (which is bad for the reputation of a "thinking man"), one had to somewhat support "revolutionaries", didn't one? Some recognized their many literary qualities; others found a sentence they were in agreement with; and still others accepted the objectives but rejected the means. Finally, by splitting hairs, you can sanctify the devil himself.

As events develop rapidly, there are increasingly more acts of violence and of greater scope: Bombs go off at the Montreal Stock Exchange. The data centre at Sir George Williams University is destroyed. There are demonstrations in front of McGill University. Several editors blame the Montreal police force. On October 7, 1969, there was the Murray Hill incident and the police strike in Montreal. And that is not all. Six persons were killed in seven years. There were trials, a few convictions, several parolees. The educated frustrated are becoming dangerous. Recent events have traumatized us. There must be an end to that. The only thing one could do has been done, intelligently and courageously.

We must now learn from these events. We are all responsible to various degrees. We must study the true causes of all the ills of our sick society. The causes of the unrest which bred violence are numerous and varied.

One of the main causes of violence lies in the injustices which our social order breeds and tolerates, too often because it does not have time to cure them. To this one must add the lack of confidence and the impatience of the young in the face of the problems they foresee in the future. Finally, individuals and groups react differently to other causes.

Although the task is difficult, we must not hesitate. All levels of government must cease to indulge in petty politics. If we want to save our democracy, let us place democracy ahead of partisanship. Let us set up priorities, which is something Parliaments do not always do.

The first duty of a member of the opposition is to criticize, conscientiously and reasonably, what legislation the government introduces, with a view to finding its weaknesses and making suggestions to improve it. In that respect, some improvement can be seen in the work done in committees. The second duty of a member of the opposition is to criticize in a responsible manner. The opposition does not have the right to keep harassing the government with all kinds of pestering, with an eye to its own political interest. The population is more responsible than that.

Let us get down to work with determination. Let us not waste any more time, because there is none to waste. Let us redouble our efforts to discover new means of social, economic and political action, in order to bring those who have more closer to those who have less, without disturbing the balance which must be maintained at all costs. It is essential to provide means of communication between the various groups which make up society, and to fill at last the ever widening gap between generations. Let us train an army of qualified and honest missionaries in order to make the people aware of the problems facing governments. People will be willing to discharge their responsibilities, if everything is made quite clear to them. Let us find a means to create a new positive motivation.

[English]

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin my remarks by extending congratulations to the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel) and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas), the mover and seconder of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. I should also like to express my appreciation for this opportunity to add my comments to the excellent speeches that have been made by my colleagues from both sides of the House.

Like all my colleagues, and indeed all Canadians, I had been looking forward to the presentation of the Speech from the Throne. I was hoping that at long last the government would offer proposals to this House for measures, as the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack) expressed it the other day, that would clear the way for the enormous backlog of serious problems facing the country.

I recall that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) urged the Canadian people to give him a majority government so that he could enact the kind of legislation that would reverse the trend in this country toward regression and depression. The Prime Minister promised employment for all who would work. He promised a society wherein all Canadians would have an equal opportunity to prosper, equal rights under our laws and a voice in their government. We were told that if he were given a majority government and a mandate, he would create a just society based on the prosperity of the individual through participatory democracy.

The words and phrases have changed, Mr. Speaker, and the leadership has changed—but the situation remains the same; in fact, it has worsened rather than improved. Unemployment has increased to the point where we can say to the world that we are the champions. We are the undisputed title-holder in the game of unemployment. That is our position. The government is playing a dangerous game with our national economy, and the Prime Minister has told the Canadian people that if they don't like it, they can lump it.

It has been repeated in the House over and over again that we in Canada have everything we need to provide adequately for our people. We can provide jobs for those who are willing and able to work; we can provide adequate health services for the aged and the sick; we have the wherewithal to provide for those who are unable to work. I find it strange that while less fortunate countries are working desperately to provide jobs for their people and to stimulate growth in their national economies, the government of this wealthy and vigorous nation deliberately retards our economy in an avowed attempt to create prosperity. We shall enjoy prosperity in Canada, we are told, just as soon as the government has brought inflation within bounds.

The price we have to pay for this prosperity, we are told, is massive unemployment, loss of foreign markets for our products and higher taxation. What a formula! What a dream! The fact is, it is not a formula; it is a new set of rules for the old game of politics. And it is not a dream; it is a plain, old-fashioned nightmare. I must admit, in all seriousness, that when it comes to sloganeering, this government has no peer. I am reminded of the just society, but only for a brief moment. Just as the just society begins to fade into the lexicon of governmental catch-phrases, I am told to take heart again; that I am now standing on the threshold of greatness. I plead with the government to deliver us from such greatness. After seven years of such greatness I doubt that our sensibilities and our economy can absorb much more. I am also absolutely certain, that the unemployed in our country would trade their greatness for a job. I am equally certain that the elderly people in our country would trade their greatness for an adequate pension.

This would be a good opportunity, to enlarge on the question of old age security and to ask a simple question. How could it be that in a country which rivals most countries of the world in natural and human resources, we cannot solve this problem? We have legislation on the statute books designed to provide for people who have no other means of support or who have inadequate incomes at a time in their lives when they are no longer productive. One would quite naturally suppose that their needs are being served. But that is far from the case. We have legislation, true enough; but it has been bent, twisted and reshaped to the point at which no one can really say just what the legislation is supposed to achieve, or for whom.

To add to the ineffectiveness of the law, the old age security offices are so poorly managed that it is a miracle that anyone at all is served by this vital program. That should not really surprise anyone, Mr. Speaker, because inefficiency is not restricted to the social security program; it is the order of the day for this government. We have the resources, we have the trained, talented minds in this country and we have the will to solve this vexing problem. What, then, is the hold-up?

For some reason which no one has ever explained, the elderly, the handicapped and the pensioners are placed in a neat little square which has been labelled "Fixed Income". Because they have a nice title they are expected to keep quiet, to enjoy the good things in life and to not bother the government: the government, after all, is busy holding back the economy, creating unemployment and new cabinet positions. We are led to believe that the government cannot be expected to tackle our difficult problems when it is easier to provide for people who do not want to work. It is far easier to provide hostels for hippies, millions of dollars for the Company of Young Canadians and say to the country, "Today belongs to the young. The youth of this country must be served whether or not they want to work, contribute to society and pay taxes." I refer, Mr. Speaker, to those of our young people who find it easier to label themselves revolutionaries and intellectuals and talk through their beards about the brave new world they are going to create.

Our government appears to be preoccupied with these people—and not just with those who have developed in our own society. We say to the hippies, the yippies and the draft-dodgers and deserters from the United States, "Come to the promised land. Come to Canada and work against our government and our institutions."

It is time we extended the great promise of our land to those who have contributed to it with their labours, their loyalty and their respect for its laws and institutions. It is a truism that a man who cannot provide for his own children has nothing to offer those of his neighbours. I am not against foreign aid, Mr. Speaker. I would go so far as to suggest that we should continue to show compassion and understanding for the plight of the underdeveloped countries of the world. However, I consider it irresponsible for a government to commit itself to giving hundreds of millions of dollars to other nations when there are people in Canada who are needy, sick and elderly and who look to a government in Ottawa for understanding and assistance. They might just as well be looking to the moon.

We talk every day about the problems of the sick, the elderly and the destitute, and I wonder if the government feels that talking about the problem is all that is necessary. I wonder if the government really believes that by talking about these problems they will just fade away. I say to the government that it is time to look after the needs and the aims of our own people. After they are satisfied, if anything is left we can ask ourselves whether we really want to open our borders to people who cannot make a go of it in their own society. It becomes increasingly difficult to understand why our government, alone among governments of the western world, does not see fit to establish even minimum standards of conduct for immigrants and prospective citizens of our country. Are we so badly off that we are willing to make citizens from the dregs, the cast-offs and the misfits of other societies?

Judging from the government's performance in providing jobs for native-born Canadians, I cannot believe that we really need the tens of thousands of malcontents and cop-outs who have been accepted into our country in recent years. I am just as conscious as anyone else of the need for a haven in the world for those who have been oppressed and who have been denied an opportunity to express themselves. There are times, however, when it is more prudent to speak from the head than from the heart.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. It being six o'clock, I regret that I have to interrupt the hon. member.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—National Parks—Prince Edward Island—Establishment of second facility; the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau)—Health and Welfare—Action to reduce the cost of hospital, medical and dental costs.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word about the paradox of our armed forces experimenting in new and radical organizational concepts. I am not opposed to new ideas, but the wisdom, or the lack of it, in our new military policy appears to have the government squarely over the barrel at the present time. The government has been warned repeatedly from this side of the House to give full consideration to possible and probable future contingencies both domestic and foreign. They were warned repeatedly by members of the official opposition to give due consideration to the morale of whatever armed forces we were left with when the experimenters were finished.

As a member of NATO, as a member of the United Nations and as a free nation that is responsive to forces at work in a world committed to the downfall of freedom, Canada has a minimum requirement for trained and equipped armed forces. Yet we are below our required minimum at the present time. Anyone who doubts this is invited to explain how Canada could meet its present commitments to NATO and the UN when the bulk of Canada-based combat troops are presently performing guard duty in the province of Quebec and in Ottawa. It has been demonstrated beyond any doubt in the present crisis that we have at the present time only sufficient forces to deal with a large-scale domestic crisis. On the other hand, if the troops committed to foreign service were stationed overseas at the present time, we would be powerless to deal with a situation such as the threatened insurrection in Quebec.

We could adopt the NDP philosophy and follow the advice of people such as Melville Watkins. We could forget about national defence altogether and disband our armed forces. However, I doubt that any straight-thinking Canadian would buy that argument after recent events. It was typical of the present government's leaning toward NDP philosophy when the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) stated in Halifax that the reductions in armed forces strength would continue, in spite of the cogent lessons any responsible person would learn from the present crisis.

The need for adequate, trained forces to assist the civil power could not be demonstrated more clearly than by the events of the last few days. If our armed forces are to function in their second major role, as an arm or tool of foreign policy, it is only common sense to suppose that planning should be on a forward-looking rather than a backward-looking basis. We know now that armed insurrection can occur in Canada. It would be foolish and irresponsible for the present government to stick to yesterday's policies just to prove they are immovable. They are not immovable. The government are just being obstinate. We have fresh information on which to base our military requirements, information that was not available to us a few weeks or a few months ago. We know now that we can experience armed insurrection in this country and that it could get out of hand quickly.

I call upon the government to suspend the present policy of forces reduction for the time being and allow this House to debate the question of Canada's present and future needs in the way of military forces. Wait until the present crisis has passed, then examine the issue coolly in light of the new evidence available.

I will deal for a moment with another aspect of that question and call on the government to move soon on the recommendations of the Woods commission report and the report of the House Committee on Veterans Affairs. I call on the government to move quickly to table legislation on these recommendations. The people who will be affected have done their part. They cannot be expected to do more. The onus is now on the government to do its part and ensure that the hardships being borne by our veterans are lessened. All recommendations respecting veterans pensions and allowances have been approved by the government members on the Veterans Affairs Committee, so there is a consensus. There is, therefore, no good reason for the government not moving at an early date to present legislation to this House.

Before I conclude my remarks I should like to touch upon one more serious problem that we as a nation must face up to if we are to survive. We have a situation in our schools and universities wherein we tolerate radical and revolutionary professors. We literally turn our impressionable young people over to these professors and stand by while they are instructed in seditious and inflaming philosophies that are alien to our way of life, our system of government and our code of moral conduct and behaviour.

We know the end result of this attitude on our part. We are witnessing the result this very day as armed troops patrol our streets and guard Canadian officials from other Canadians. Some of these instructors are new Canadians from Europe and the United States. Some have allegedly fled other countries to escape repression, only to preach the same doctrines of lawlessness and hate on our campuses. We must decide whether we can logically accept the risks involved in the name of free expression or whether we should take steps to curb outright sedition before it manifests itself in bombings and kidnapping, murder and insurrection.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like first to congratulate the movers of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne (Messrs. Trudel and Douglas (Assiniboia), as well as the new Deputy Chairman of the House committees, the member for Beauharnois (Mr. Laniel).

Tonight, I should like to deal with the revolution in Quebec, which is a current topic in Canada. How did it start? Who organized it? Who wants it? What are its basic reasons? What were the warnings received by the government and what are the remedies?

In 1960, Mr. Speaker, the Quebec Liberal party came into power and, later on, it was said over and over again that this political party was making a quiet revolution.

Now, the quiet revolution was only a step towards a not so quiet revolution that we now experience. In the name of this quiet revolution, the axe was applied to our confessional educational school system so that it could be left open to anarchists and atheistic teachers as well as to books that have sowed the seed of revolution in the minds of Quebec youth.

And today, one wonders why these revolutionary matches have caught fire and engendered the developments that we know.

The teachings and teachers of the past are no longer worth anything. Then, we are charged with having provided backward education until today. That was the beginning of the quiet revolution, prelude and first act of the true revolution.

Quebec's educational system has been directed so much toward revolution that in September 1969 one of the optional subjects taught in several junior colleges of Quebec, notably that of Trois-Rivières, was communism.

The first issue of Education-Québec—the official publication of the Quebec Department of Education, under the signature of Education Minister Guy Saint-Pierre—dated September 16 last, features on its cover the picture of a priest dressed in black, whose rotten head bears the inscription "Karl Marx, founder of world communism". The idea is to show that the moral and religious education that we were given was rotten and will be replaced by atheist marxist training. Such is the explanation appearing on the cover of the official publication of the Quebec Department of Education.

The infiltration of the CBC by communist revolutionary socialists took place under the innocent eye of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) who is aware of marxist penetration into the Crown corporation for which he is responsible before Parliament.

Infiltration was easy for revolutionaries from all over the world who came to Canada to assist the cause of world revolution by injecting their venom into the CBC and all other means of mass communication.

Here is an example, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Cohn-Bendit, who organized the student revolution in Paris in 1968 and remained more than an hour in the hands of the RCMP in Montreal, because they would not let this man come to Canada, was let into this country. Who gave orders in Ottawa to authorize that revolutionary to come here in June 1969 to promote his cause, world revolution?

Seeing that he was gaining ground in Canada, he thought he should come back in February 1970. Each time he came to this country, that revolutionary was received by Professor Stanley Gray of McGill University. The CBC—with public funds—and the CTV network gave him a nice welcome and very good publicity. He stated that his goal was to promote democratic revolution; in other words, revolution, period.

In fall 1968, the twelve organizers of the world revolution appeared on the BBC in London and a few weeks later the CBC reproduced that interview. And among the twelve who took part in the broadcast were McGill University Professor Stanley Gray who represented the Canadian revolution.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, I shall give a few other examples.

In May 1970, another Quebec personality tolled the knell and sounded the alarm. A publication La Revue Colombienne gave a summary of the speeches of Mr. Justice Alexandre Bastien, honorary deputy of the Order of the Knights of Columbus, following a dinner in Crabtree, Quebec. Here are some parts of his speech as reported in the publication:

Some atheistic revolutionary socialists are using the CEGEPs as a platform for the diffusion of their ideas.

Mr. Justice Bastien strongly condemned all those who, according to him, are trying to enlist the young in the revolutionary movement in Quebec ... (revolutionaries) are doing all they can to attract young people in their association in order to destroy what is left of traditional values.

Later on, Mr. Justice Bastien violently denounced the present tendency to secularize everything here.

... "Vallières and Gagnon are gods who are given undue importance and are proposed to our youth as models". Speaking about Charles Gagnon, Mr. Justice Bastien stated: "Over the weekend, he was in the Rimouski area where he spoke in a CEGEP. They are paid atheistic revolutionaries.

Mr. Justice Bastien went as far as to say that at present in CEGEPs, on university campuses, those people (atheistic and socialist revolutionaries) were paid to start a revolution. He even added that certain atheistic teachers were teaching catechism in our schools ...

...in Quebec and this, after the quiet revolution of the Liberal party in 1960.

Going a little further, Justice Bastien reproved the way the information media are invaded by atheists who are socialist revolutionaries. "It's as plain as the nose on my face!", said he.

"Blow up everything!" This is the first stage in the revolutionaries' program; then they come up with a socialist dictatorship and communist slavery.

Mr. Speaker, I have here a copy of the newspaper Le Quartier latin, issue No. 3, volume 53, covering the period September 10-23, 1970. This publication which, besides being sold in thousands of newsstands in Quebec and especially in the CEGEPs, is delivered for cultural consumption to the student population, proves to be a revolutionary, socialist, separatist and communist publication from the first to the last page. On the outside front cover, there is a revolutionary monster ready to pounce on the flaming outline of the city of Montreal.

For the information of the House, I would like to read an article published on the first page of that paper and entitled:

Open letter to secondary school principals:
Mr. Principal,

You have a very good job which you no doubt cling to very much. You have power and you no doubt cling to it very much also. For instance, you have the power to force a boy, or a girl, to wear short hair as you do, to study what they do not feel like studying, to refrain from saying what they really think, to refrain from doing what they feel like doing... about eight hours a day. Other principals as powerful as you are also exploit older people in places different from yours and which are generally called, plants, companies, businesses. As for yourself, you exploit your guinea pigs in schools.

True, you are sincere, honest, morally blameless. You are not an ogre and are not being accused of plotting.

You are merely a poor devil trying to save his skin, his history, his future, his interests. But, in so doing you are threatening the present days of the students, of the young who have the right to be different from you, even to be against you. We also are defending our lives, we also have our rights. That is why we cannot accept that you be our pal and even less that you pity us. That would be an abdication for us.

Consequently, we want you to know that the struggle in progress between you and us is a struggle to death, that if you do not voluntarily give up your post as director, we will throw you out ourselves and then we will completely destroy your position, your title, your privileges and your laws. In short, we will put an end to your reign, that being the only way to bring about some changes in a society which rests upon exploitation, your society. It must die. We will see to it that it disintegrates and dies.

A little further on, one can see what kind of intellectual food is served to the young.

The next page explains the technique to be used to provoke revolution in Quebec. For instance, mention is made of films and I quote:

The largest possible number of people must be allowed to see controversial films!... there are Quebec political films and we can get some from outside quite easily.

What have our police done up to now to make it harder to obtain such films? I go on with the quotation:

—we would like groups or individuals in cities (or CEGEP) who want to show films to communicate with REZO.

And a little further a plan of action is given by the school co-operatives, and I quote:

—the direction which could take student co-operatives in Quebec.

[Mr. Rondeau.]

—to gain control over production of teaching manuals.

Farther, you can read the following:

It is quite certain that co-operatives will become a sort of practical laboratory for courses in technical administration and even animation... thence the importance for the co-ops to take part in the development of a free information network in Quebec... Information as what allows to intensify struggles at school.

...The S.D.S. calls upon all students who are aware that school... does not meet our needs in any manner to form school committees... so as to get one foot in in order to inform and conduct struggles at school.

Then an inventory of activities in various schools of the province: Christophe Colomb School, Meilleur School, De Lorimier School. I quote again:

...What is important now is to get organized into school committees so that the struggles should be guided and planned...

We are presently a group...

I shall now quote the letter of the vocational adviser or reporter responsible for revolutionary activities in the CEGEPs of Victoriaville:

We are now a fairly influential group, due to the creation of various movements such as the V.M.U.P.T. (meaning: vote now, live sparely later) the A.M.P.J. (Dirty association of youth problems), and others.

Everything is about to blow up in Victoriaville.

Meeting places: on weekdays, at the CEGEP, on weekends, at the Fin Gourmet, at the Central tavern and at the Marocain.

Mr. Speaker, if I keep on reading this letter, you will recognize the FLQ manifesto broadcast recently on the CBC. This manifesto is the same one that is used for the world revolution, except that it changes names from country to country. The tactics and the objectives remain the same.

Throughout the periodical, they show how to ferret out discriminations, minor or major, and urge people to make use of everything likely to set citizens against each other. They use vulgar language to destroy everything. On page 12, you find the following:

When traitors celebrate
...Trudeau's faithful doggie...
...Cadieux, that old idiot...
...Thibault, as a good dog...

Counter violence by violence,

At night, down town, we had a ball: the demonstration... was like an evening of justice for the people.

Molotov cocktails crashed into shop-windows

...the dogs, numbering 75, charged the demonstrators and clubbed them to their heart's content.

In the meantime, Thibault and the federal gang were taking it easy in a fashionable hotel north of St-Jérôme.

The federalists kept on celebrating cyncism, celebrating the daily application of the sweating system...

...In St-Jérôme, they are beginning to counter violence through violence, that's for sure...

• (8:30 p.m.)

A little further, it says:

Fight violence with violence!

And still a little further, it says:

—the dance of the incompetents—The roads system, it's only crap—citizen's committees to educate people, so they will no longer get screwed.

A little further, there is caricature of the Mayor of Montreal with the following caption:

A scare-crow to knock down!

FRAP sympathizers are requested to knock down the scare-crow of the city of Montreal. Further, there is a description of the political prorgamme of FRAP, an organization which is fighting for municipal election in Montreal.

On another page, there are four heads with these words:

—always aim at the head and aim at the right one.

In effect, the heads are those of the President of the United States, Mr. Nixon, of the Prime Minister of Canada, of the Premier of Quebec and of the Mayor of the city of Montreal.

"Always aim at the head and aim at the right one." A parallel is drawn between the situation in Quebec and the one that existed in May 1968 in Paris. Further, students who have acted like men are congratulated. It also says:

The Boston police is looking for four militant students suspected of a $26,000 holdup at the State Street Bank and Trust Co.

But here is the most surprising thing of all: an advertisement covering 45 per cent of a page of the magazine was paid by the Public Service Commission of Canada, with the Canadian taxpayers' money, to support such a revolutionary magazine.

On page 33, individuals who would like to earn $60 to $80 per week are invited to show a film to Quebecers twice a night.

On the last page but one, we find ourselves in the year 2010. It says:

The PQ was right.

And there is the picture of René Lévesque who in 2010 will be 88 years of age.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to establish a relation between the methods and the aims, as published in Le Quartier Latin.

The report submitted to the federal government by the authorities of the city of Montreal with regard to the Company of Young Canadians has been simply ignored.

The revolutionary methods that are being advocated in all university papers across Quebec are exactly the same as those drawn to our attention by the city of Montreal authorities in a report submitted to the federal government last year.

The government of the time, which is the same one as today's, had been fully warned of all that was going to happen in Quebec, but unfortunately the worst is still to come. It had been forewarned by the Chairman of the Executive Committee of the city of Montreal at the time the brief was submitted.

Who therefore has played a double game in Ottawa and has ordered to ignore the report which outlined coming dangers and events?

Who therefore in Ottawa pretends to be on the side of democracy by denouncing terrorists while at the same time not taking the necessary steps to avoid revolution and prevent events such as those we have just witnessed?

Some things in Ottawa make me wonder.

For a year and a half, the Canadian authorities had been having talks aimed at the official recognition of Communist China. And, in the House, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) kept telling us that the discussions were proceeding and that no agreement had been reached.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe much more in planning than in coincidence. How is it that right after Mr. James Cross' kidnapping, namely the day after, and when the whole Canadian population had this event in mind and everybody was greatly disturbed, the government took advantage of the collective psychological tension of the Canadian people to announce the official recognition of Communist China?

The people of Shefford and the Canadian people do not mind the lack of cultural relations with Communist China. The FLQ made everybody feel edgy but the events it has created have helped the Canadian government to get the recognition of Communist China down the Canadian people's throat.

We shall soon see hundreds of embassy attachés from Communist China walking through the streets of the main Canadian cities and to do what? First, visit all the Canadian Chinese and convince them of the greatness of the Peking government. Second, they will indoctrinate these people then start the implementation of the strategies dictated by Communist China's government. We will then have to face the experts of a government that achieved power through more sophisticated and better financed methods than those of the FLQ members.

Reading from the little red book entitled War Weapon, a valuable document in China, I would like to quote practical advice given by world revolutionaries. At page 147 it is said about Robert Williams, an American terrorist:

—He made a trip to Cuba and returned a fanatic supporter of Fidel Castro. In 1961, during a racial demonstration in Monroe, Williams killed a policeman, then kidnapped a white couple to use them as hostages. To evade the law, he fled to Cuba where he was welcomed as a hero. He worked for Havana radio from where he broadcast to the United States delirious calls to terrorism and riots—

From there he went to Communist China where he now lives and publishes The Crusader—

Through that publication, he directs Chinese communist infiltration in other countries throughout the world. I resume the quotation:

In the June 1964 issue of The Crusader, Williams wrote, "The weapons used by the fighters for Afro-American freedom must make up the poor man's arsenal: Molotov cocktails or gas bombs, bombs made by injecting caustic soda or acid in the metal of electric lights." But the bomb Williams calls "Black power" which is gigantic, will be more effective against tanks and armored cars.

It can be made with empty bottles three quarters filled with gas and the last quarter with heavy oil.

I could continue describing the methods and tactics advocated by those who have dedicated themselves to worldwide terrorism, and who, today, are in Communist China, where they are protected, and from where they can later spread their revolutionary ideas throughout the world.

I doubt very much that someday we can identify those who until now, because they have played fast and loose, have protected and helped FLQ members, by keeping silent for a while and who later on deplored the damages caused and foreseen, by a barrage of words, by recognizing the tragedy, and making pious statements.

In the face of these facts, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make the following suggestions to the government:

First of all, it should reintroduce capital punishment and secondly, exert a much stricter control on immigration.

Thirdly, it should clean up all media, radio stations, newspapers and television, and even, if necessary, close down the C.B.C., and not wait ten years to act.

It is essential to clean up the education system in the province of Quebec, its teaching body, amend the Criminal Code so as to provide penalties for all revolutionaries, fomenters of disorder and organizers of training schools in revolution, to declare illegal any revolutionary publication, to clean up the National Film Board, where Quebec culture has become the revolution and crudeness, to establish a much stricter censorship, based on morals, applying to all films to be shown in theatres or on television, to exercise a much stricter control on book and newspaper stands, which provide, at the present time, all necessary information on revolution, even instructions concerning the purchase and the manufacture of firearms or deadly weapons, also to control the purchase and the manufacture of firearms, dynamite or any other deadly weapons, to strictly supervise the so-called movements of social animation, to improve and relieve the congestion in our judicial system, in order not to give rise to criticism, which, in some quarters, has become ridiculous, owing to it slowness.

And the last proposal that I have to make and which is not the least, is to correct the deficiencies of the present bad capitalistic system, which indulges in abuses, in scandals and in mass social injustices, and which bears in itself the seed of its own destruction, by allowing revolutionaries to use its deficiencies and its abuses as an excuse to destroy everything, and bring about their so-called revolutionary, earthly paradise and their socialist communist system.

The father of the phony capitalistic system at the present time is socialism, and its grandfather is communism.

[Mr. Rondeau.]

A sound capitalistic system, as promoted by the Créditistes, allows all and everyone to be capitalist in the true sense of the word, that is owners not only of the wealth produced by every citizen, but also fo that which science, technology, and modern standards produce today in man's place.

Reverend Father Georges-Henri Lévesque said in 1936: "If you want neither communism nor socialism, suggest social credit, because it will put in your hands a terrible weapon against its enemies".

[English]

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, my first words must be words of congratulation to the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel) and to the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) for their excellent speeches on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. I cannot be as complimentary about the Speech from the Throne itself, particularly in view of what has developed since the Speech was delivered.

The Speech outlines a Canada in which the answers to all the problems that beset us have been found. I am sorry it has taken the dramatic effects of the last ten days to show that such is far from the case. We have talked about this matter in depth for several days; very few corners have not been delved into in this regard. I will try to make a positive contribution in the few minutes allotted to me to speak during the Throne Speech debate.

In 1957 and 1958 the people of Canada responded to a vision, and although it was laughed at in many quarters it was certainly taken up by the people of Canada. One of the largest mandates given to any government was given to that great leader from the Prairies who in fact started us on the road to a broader, wider and deeper Canada. The story which was written during the five years that government was in office has become fairly well known. We reversed the backward trend, we sold the excess grain, we turned back the unemployment figures to reasonable levels and we pegged the Canadian dollar at a level which enabled us once again to get into the markets of the world. We trained the young people of this country, who up to that time had not been trained, for a new and vigorous approach to the last 25 years of the twentieth century.

It is now time for us to forget about those things which divide us and take another look at the idea of vision which we fostered. Perhaps we need panavision in order to get a broader outlook. We must return to the approach we had in 1957 and 1958, and spend very little time looking into the reasons why we cannot get together. We must outline to the people of Canada, particularly to the young, the reasons this was, is and will remain the finest country in the world. If we succeed in this endeavour, the Speech from the Throne might have meaning and we might be able to put some flesh on the dry bones of wishful thinking. To achieve this will take work on the part of us all.

My friends to my left are still fighting the old, class war. One would think there were still money barons around who had all the money while the working people had nothing. The class war is as out of date as the dodo bird. What we need is more effort by all of us, including that great middle-income section of Canadian people who no longer live in poverty, without hope and in despair because of something cooked up by crackpots. This despair is invented for cheap, ambitious, political reasons.

Perhaps it is not popular to ask people, old or young, to go back to work. I suggest we have been spoiled. Many people in Canada take advantage of all levels of government which have been over-paternalistic and have told the people that somehow, by some easy means or socialistic panacea government can make it possible for them to live the good life without effort and without taxation. This is not the case. We must start with another new and dynamic plan. We must not think that any one government has all the answers. We must ask all Canadians to pull up their socks, roll up their shirt sleeves and get back to work.

I have been a labouring man most of my life and I have worked for far below the average national level of income. I know that most of the people of Canada are willing to go to work provided they are given the required leadership. We must stop talking about shorter work weeks and less work, and think of more effective work. We must think more of what we can do and ask ourselves, to paraphrase Mr. John Kennedy: What can we give to Canada?—rather than: What can we expect Canada to give to us?

The government can take the lead in this regard. It should take greater steps toward full use of our natural resources. It is not good enough to wave the anti-United States flag and say that all our troubles are caused by U.S. ownership in this country. Most of us who know anything, know that without United States capital Canada would be about as undeveloped as Baffinland. Many blame the United States for putting money into Canada and say that in this way they have violated our rights. They have done no such thing. They have made one of the best investments in the world—in the present and future development of Canada's natural resources.

I hope that governments at all levels will take a good look at how we can encourage Canadians to participate in the development of their country. They must work harder, use their imagination and self-control. The government should be prepared to encourage the development of Canada and the participation of Canadians in that development by granting sensible tax concessions. There must be a sensible survey of our resources.

We ought to allow our young people to work in the development of our country. Instead of giving them free education, we ought to encourage them to go out during the period they are not attending university and help survey our natural resources. We should pay them well and make sure they are completely free of income tax so long as they are using the money to pay for their own education. They should try to reverse the present trend instead of looking for help from a socialistic and paternalistic government, if they want to be part of the great Canadian adventure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bigg: That adventure, I suggest, ought to be embarked upon not only with the vision of the generation that I represent but with an ever greater vision, greater dedication and harder work. The rewards, I suggest, will be very much greater and our young people will be better Canadian citizens for knowing that they worked and paid for the education they received. They ought to know, particularly those of the lunatic fringe who are so anxious to tear down the institutions we have built for them, that our life savings have gone into those institutions; that many of these institutions have not yet been paid for and if they are torn down, neglected or not used the generation now maturing will have to rebuild them and pay for them twice. Not only will they have to pay for the buildings which we have not yet paid for, but they will have the added burden of rebuilding the institutions which they require.

There is no easy or short road to the good life. It is hard to put into words the irresponsibility of those who go among our young people and tell them that, in these times when opportunities were never greater, they are ignored, they are hated, they are misunderstood and that the world owes them a living. We can well imagine how much of the trouble we are presently facing in Canada is the result of this kind of talk. Nothing that my mother, father or grandparents ever said encouraged me to take the law into my own hands or destroy the institutions and the opportunities they worked so hard to provide for me. If that sounds "square", if it sounds unduly right wing, perhaps that is because I am not capable of putting over my story.

I ask those who are more eloquent than I to use their eloquence and to put this very short and simple story over to our young people and to all those who live in Canada and, do not appreciate the good life because they have never known anything else. Yet they are willing to risk throwing away not only the good life but the very freedom that makes the good life possible.

The vision of 1957 and 1958 took into account the fact that Canada is a land of different and varied regions. Those of us who took this vision to heart saw that our merchant navy in the Maritimes lagged far behind the merchant navies of other nations in its ability to carry Canadian products to the world. Because that vision was not pursued with the energy with which it should have been pursued by that and subsequent administrations, Canada has almost no merchant navy. It is not too late to build one. In the Maritimes there still live men who understand how to build ships, how to man ships and how to carry our goods to the nations of the world. Many people there have spent their lives fishing on the sea. Because of shortsighted policies, their fishing grounds are no longer capable of supporting them.

Mr. Bigg: Those fishermen are not looking for handouts. They want to see the Canadian merchant navy rebuilt. Although I am no seaman, I think I can say that if we adopted a rational policy for putting Canada's merchant navy back into operation many of those fishermen would be only too pleased to carry the Red Ensign across the oceans of the world in the proud manner in which Canada's merchant navy carried it in the past. That would not only solve the problem of the unemployed and discouraged fishermen in the Maritimes but it would help to build up a whole new, modern industry in eastern Canada.

I move farther westward in my remarks. In Ungava, and probably in Baffinland, there are still virtually unlimited resources of medium grade iron ore. We should develop these and make sure that we have dynamic new plans, particularly in central Canada, to use Canadian iron ore resources. With proper utilization of power grids and atomic energy there should be no unemployment in central Canada. We would then have dynamic policies that would put Canadians back to work, not necessarily with a 60-hour week but with a 40-hour week. Labour should get together with management, instead of always struggling with it, and say eloquently, "We the labouring people of Canada, who are the most willing workers in the world, wish to get together with our industry, which is the most willing industry in the world, and together for the good not only of the people of Canada but of all the world we shall produce cheap, good and efficient steelware." If that can be done in Japan, it can be done here.

I now move on to speak of the Prairies. Surely, Mr. Speaker, we can come up with better solutions than programs under which farmers are paid for not growing grain. The government called this the Lift program. The lift to what? Did it lift the Canadian economy? Fortunately, mother nature took a hand and showed us how stupied we were, even in one year, when we told farmers not to grow food that is needed by the hungry peoples of the world.

The answer we gave in 1957 and 1958 is still valid. We must not concentrate most of our energies on establishing marketing boards, which I think are necessary if we are to have orderly, shared marketing. Marketing boards for the small domestic market will not be good enough if we are to keep prosperous the Prairies and the agricultural industry of Canada, which is only now coming into its own. Most of today's Canadian farmers are technicians. The farmer has more than doubled his output.

I take joint responsibility with the administration when I say we must do more than merely establish a program of production controls to ensure the sharing of a very small domestic market. I say that because in heeding the dynamic vision which this party put forward, Canada must look outside her shores and see what the world needs in the way of food. Canada's vision must become part of the world's vision, if we are to feed the hungry peoples of the world. What has happened to the vision of a world food bank?

The present administration has decided to recognize Red China. I hope that the question of trade was mainly in its mind. If trade was the reason for recognizing Red China, I go along with it. The evolution of trade between Canada and Red China is a good reason for Red China's seeking a seat in the United Nations. Can we be assured that seating Red China in the United Nations would be to move toward peace and world prosperity? I venture to say it would not, because of the threat to world peace posed by Red China and Russia. If Canada, the United States, Red China and Russia each donated one-quarter of their defence budget to the food bank, that would certainly solve well into the twenty-first century western Canada's problems with regard to trade in world markets.

There is not enough arable land in the world for all people to enjoy the standard of living to which we are accustomed. It is not good enough to follow what is referred to in the Speech from the Throne. We pat ourselves on the back and say, "Things have never been better in Canada." This is the first time I have been aware that one of the peculiarities of the beaver is to put his head into the sand like an ostrich. The Canadian beaver is intelligent, hardworking, industrious, has good humour, the ability to build dams and to conserve. By hard work he stores enough food during the summer to keep him alive during the winter. This is what Canadians are used to. These are our virtues, and it is time we returned to them. In order to bring about these ideals we need a white paper on taxation which would improve the atmosphere so that people would return to work willingly and devote their efforts to making Canada a better, freer and safer country in which to live.

Our financial wizards should take a close look at bank rates. A few years ago the majority of the members of this House were talked into raising the ceiling on bank rates. We were assured that this step would not cost the man on the street any more money; indeed, we were told it would cost him a good deal less. It was to be easier for a man to obtain the money with which to buy a house. All the virtues were brought forward. It was suggested that young men would be able to afford a home for their families. What has happened? We have never before experienced the degree of inflation we have had since the so-called improvement to the Bank Act. We need co-operation from the Canadian financiers.

I think there is something to be said in favour of the criticism of the banks by my friends to my left. It might be a good idea for some of us to study the untoward profits of banks. Many stocks in Canada are decreasing in value. In the last five or six years it has been better to invest in the chartered banks of Canada. Why? It is the safest money in the world. Therefore, the banks should be satisfied with a smaller margin of profit on their investment. Many of us have had to gamble our personal resources to compete with those who manufacture boots in Czechoslovakia or textiles and pottery in Japan. Canadians are being asked to gamble while those in charge of the finances of this country sit behind their mahogany desk, protected by our democratic laws. I say without equivocation that they are making unnatural and unnecessary profits. Is this the co-operative society of which we hear so often? A co-operative society should be more than a two-way street between the taxpayer and the labourer. We should ensure that when it costs $2,000 to manufacture an automobile, the customer is not charged $7,000.

My home province of Alberta has almost unlimited resources. I venture to say that if the whole population of Canada moved to Alberta it could be fed, clothed and housed. There would be enough resources to support all the population. The resources of Alberta have not been developed to the fullest extent because we have not taken advantage of all the opportunities. We have been too busy quarrelling amongst ourselves. We have been concentrating on bilingualism, biculturalism, communism, non-communism, socialism, non-socialism and many other matters. If you want a red herring, just add an "ism" at the end of a philosophy and you can talk about it forever without accomplishing anything.

The people of Canada are thoroughly fed-up. Sometimes I think the people are willing to accept a type of dictatorship or unholy triumvirate which would take over and do their thinking. If this happens, it will be the fault of hon. members of this chamber for not having developed a dynamic plan and insisting that our leaders put the plan into action.

I would be remiss in my duty if I allowed the fourth estate to get off scot-free. I have often heard members of the press say that no one in this House takes his job seriously. They often state that we are not present in the chamber. Looking around this evening, there may be some excuse for saying that. However, there are not very many in the press gallery to disagree with me tonight. As a rule there is one lone observer in the gallery. He runs back and tells the rest of the boys how we neglect our duties. I suggest it is time the fourth estate took a good look at our country and considered more carefully the leadership that we have. The person with the loudest voice does not always have the most intelligence—otherwise I might be the prime minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bigg: Some members speak with quiet voices in this chamber. They do not receive press coverage. Although they do not have dynamic personalities, they talk in the language of simple truth. They are honest and reliable. They believe in virtues such as hard work, honesty and responsibility. Some of them do not have their garments plucked in public, nor do they appear with roses in their hair. We know truth when we hear it. I sometimes wonder if this fact is recognized by the press gallery. I venture to say that on many occasions I could get more press coverage if I wanted to be small enough to buy a case of beer. If that is the price of truth and publicity, without which any politician will die politically, I am not willing to pay the price. I have heard some members of the press gallery confess that they supported one stand or another because they received a bottle of whisky at Christmas.

I do not expect to make the press tonight. It would not be the first time one crying alone in the wilderness was neglected. I claim I am not alone, though I also claim that in many cases it is useless to speak the simple, flat truth. It is more dramatic to desert one's leader in times of trouble. That gets press coverage. It is more dramatic to abandon one's principles so you can plan "way out" things like the artist and the poor musician. Very often today they cannot make a living without being "way out". Painters are no longer allowed to paint pictures of the beauties of the forest, of the mountains or the sunset; they have to delve into their twisted minds and paint their erotic dreams or sadistic experiences under LSD. Then they are poets; then they are painters. I hope the day will never come when to be a suitable member of the House of Commons one has to be "way out" in everything.

More and more I feel the permissive society has gone too far. I voted in this House for the abolition of the death penalty. Little did I realize that I was doing away with the death penalty for treason. Very seldom do we get an opportunity to vote black or white. I for one think the penalty for selling one's country should still be punishable by death.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am informed that the hon. member's time appears to have expired. He may continue with the consent of the House. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bigg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I have reached a good place at which to end. I started out to make a plea for a new look at our economy, to make a case for a dynamic plan for the development of Canada. But at the back of my mind is still this cloud which is hanging over us all. Before I sit down I want to make this plea. This may be a good time to take a look at some of the old values; it may be a good time to take a look at some of the old penalties for some of the old crimes. Little did I know that the penalty for treason, for selling one's country, for openly supporting anarchy and shedding innocent blood, as we have just witnessed, would ever be condoned individually or collectively by the Canadian people. I must admit I was wrong, and at the first opportunity I hope to stand up and vote the way I should have done a few months ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne delivered a week or so ago began by offering belated birthday greetings to the Northwest Territories and Manitoba, and birthday greetings in advance to British Columbia. The Speech ended by asking divine providence to guide us in our deliberations. Between the birthday greetings and that prayerful supplication is sandwiched a deluge of, to my mind, the most preposterous, cliché-ridden, philosophical pap which ever purported to represent a preview of a government's legislative program. In a country like Canada, in days such as these, to try to relate this speech to the government which recently invoked the War Measures Act cannot fail—to quote both Sir Winston Churchill and the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker)—to boggle the mind.

I do not want you to misunderstand me, Mr. Speaker. I was not in the House on the invocation of the War Measures Act but I support the government in its action and I take this opportunity to go on record as saying so. But I do not and I cannot have much respect for a government which presents this document to the Canadian people and expects them to lap it up. If His Excellency the Governor General was somewhat embarrassed by having to read it, I can understand. And when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) sat over there and smirked and giggled while our leader was subjecting the Speech to the scorn and the ridicule which it deserved, I think I understand this, too, because I feel sure that the Speech was deliberately intended to be ridiculous.

I cannot accept for one moment that the Prime Minister, who is widely noted for having quite an intellectual capacity, could possibly present this document to the Canadian people other than with tongue in cheek. In order to continue his show of disdain and contempt for Parliament and its traditions, it is very possible that he deliberately allowed this Speech to be made knowing full well that it was completely out of touch with reality, that it conveyed nothing to the great majority of the people. The Speech was a fitting opening to a Parliament in which he obviously does not believe.

There is only one other alternative I can think of, which is that the Prime Minister commissioned one of those hairy gentlemen with big, purple goggles—like Tiny Tim—to write the speech and that he himself did not have time to read it before it was sent to the Governor General. Hon. members can take their choice of these alternatives; either one of them to me is most discomfiting.

Take the first paragraph in the Speech following the birthday greetings, in which is this gem:

> The passing of the 'sixties and the beginning of the 'seventies reminds us that Canada faces a new age.

Has it not ever been thus? In every decade have we not faced a new age? If this is not emphasizing the obvious, I do not know what I am talking about. The Speech continues:

• (9:20 p.m.)

> —an age which will be subject to forces not all of which are yet comprehended or understood, forces which shall proceed from external as well as internal origins.

I think that means from inside and outside. It continues:

> It is a new age not so much because of changed circumstances, but new because of changed values and attitudes.

[Mr. Peddle.]

Seriously, what does this jargon mean to the British Columbia lumberjack, the Ontario construction worker, the Nova Scotia farmer or, of all people in Newfoundland, the fisherman? I will tell you what it means—a great big, fat nothing. It is meaningless. It is words and more words. It talks of changed circumstances, changed values, changed attitudes.

The Newfoundland fisherman, lumberjack or miner cannot afford the luxury of these philosophical ramblings. He is too preoccupied with trying to live. I thought that this was a speech for all Canadians. There are people in Newfoundland who are too preoccupied with trying to pay the taxes that are extracted from them, not only by this government but by three or four different forms of government, and somehow decently support and educate their families on what they have left. The circumstances of these people have changed very little. Their values, except the value of the deflated dollar, remain of the highest. As for their attitudes, I think they are admirable and they have changed little—and I for one hope to God they do not change.

The second paragraph of the Speech is similar to the first, only worse. I feel once more compelled to quote it:

> Because of the clash between these new values and the old, because of the quest by the young and the disillusioned for some resolution of attitudes, we live in a period of tenseness and unease. It is an age frequented by violence as desperate men seek ill-defined goals; an age of frustration as gentle men question impatiently old assumptions.

There is more of that sort of things, Mr. Speaker. I agree there is a quest in Canada; there is no question of that. It is a quest not only by the young and the disillusioned but by the old and the disillusioned and by the middle-aged and the disillusioned. Indeed, by the whole human population of Canada which is disillusioned. Certainly they are seeking some ill-defined goals. They are looking for some resolution, some crystallization of this will-o-the-wisp attitude on the part of the government. Tenseness and unease, I agree, do exist not only in Quebec but all across the country. They exist in the minds of those people whose very temperaments do not lend themselves to violence. There are thousands of desperate people across Canada today, and they are indeed seeking ill-defined goals.

One ill-defined goal that they are seeking is how the heck they are going to get through the winter with no income, with no job and in many cases with no unemployment insurance. How do they feed, clothe, shelter and educate their families under these conditions? There is your ill-defined goal, the ill-defined goal that cries out for definition by the government. But does the government define it? No. The government goes off at a philosophical tangent and talks in terms that can only be understood, if they are capable of understanding at all, by some people who occupy very comfortable niches in our universities or some such place. Certainly it is not a Speech for Canadians.

Then there are the "gentle men" who "question, impatiently, old assumptions". I agree that there are, but not in the way the government presents the picture. There is the old assumption that the government should be truly concerned and preoccupied with, above all others, the problem of unemployment instead of spending its time and energy dreaming up this type of meaningless, impractical, foolish, philosophical "guk". I cannot find words to express just how I feel about the sort of statements I find in the Speech from the Throne which was delivered a few days ago. Let the government, for heaven's sake, not try to tell the unemployed, the struggling pensioner, the hardworking farmer, the woodsman and the fisherman that "the life-support systems of the biosphere may collapse unless man reverses his present course and begins to live in harmony, rather than in competition, with his environment".

These people I am talking about have their problem with life-support all right, but in much more practical and everyday terms than are suggested in the Speech from the Throne. By all means let us be concerned about pollution; I will subscribe to that. Let the scientists pursue and test their theories. Let the government show its concern by taking action. Let all concerned Canadians co-operate in the fight against pollution. But let us not get so up-tight on the subject that we forget the mental pollution that exists in the minds of honest, hardworking people who so much want the opportunity to earn a decent living, people who get no such opportunity but instead are forced to swallow their self-respect and head for an interview with the nearest welfare officer. This should be a matter of prime concern in this country today.

It would be very difficult to convince the fishermen and farmers of this country that they must today discontinue competition with their environment. The fishermen of Newfoundland have been competing with their environment in a life and death struggle for centuries. I know of no other way in which they can earn their living. It seems to me it would almost make more sense to tell the Atlantic Ocean that it must begin to live in harmony with the fisherman than to tell the fisherman in Newfoundland that he must live in harmony with the Atlantic Ocean.

I suggest a little commonsense in the Speech from the Throne, for a change, would not hurt. I suggest we have an environment that we could not possibly live with if we did not fight it. Perhaps the speech did not take into consideration at all the fact that there are other parts of Canada besides the great urban centres. However, it may be the Prime Minister who should get a more thoughtful and knowledgeable speechwriter.

I move on to the next paragraph of the Throne Speech, which almost paralyses me with its profundity. It begins:

> The decade of the 'seventies extends beyond our present vision—

If that is saying that we are not clairvoyant and cannot look ten years into the future, that is quite an admission.

• (9:30 p.m.)

> —yet the momentum of change is already so overwhelming that man can no longer afford the luxury of reacting to events.

I am sure this government must look pretty silly to the world today, in light of events that have occurred in the past few weeks and—I am very serious now—bearing in mind the warnings that have been given to it over the past few years, warnings which it refused to heed or pay any attention to. Now we get the statement that man can no longer afford the luxury of reacting to events. Then we find these words:

> He must anticipate and plan. He must accept that contentment and indifference are illusory; that the most dramatic reality is change; that there is more need than ever before to preserve as constant values truth, honesty, excellence and relevance—

Here comes the clincher:

> —that a society which is not inspired by love and compassion is not worthy of the name.

So, Mr. Speaker, you will understand why I am suspicious of the author of this document—make love, not war nor work. But to become serious for a moment, I have a feeling I have read those or very similar words before. Those words, in my opinion—I shall not offer an opinion as to whether they were intentional or otherwise—are of the type which serve only to encourage those who would tear down our traditions, upset our laws and set our social order in jeopardy. I ask hon. members to couple those words with a previous line in the Throne Speech:

> —man may be facing his last opportunity to control his own destiny rather than be subject to it.

Mr. Speaker, what do we have when we just sort of go through the Throne Speech and extract this type of statement? I shall repeat it again because it is worth repeating—man must control his own destiny rather than be subject to it. In times like this I very seriously doubt whether that statement should be emphasized responsibly. Although I would rather believe this is not intentional, it strikes me that that sort of suggestion could only lend encouragement to those elements which are today trying to tear us apart in this country. Let me again read these words:

> —man can no longer afford the luxury of reacting to events. He must anticipate and plan.

Here again I very seriously question the wisdom of such a statement in a Throne Speech at a time like this. Then we have these words, "contentment and indifference are illusory". Again, I very very seriously question the motivation of a government that tells its people in time like these that contentment is an illusion. I cannot help feeling this way, because obviously something is wrong. I hope the Canadian people have received copies of this Speech and will read it as I did. It is frightening just to think about the interpretations which might be put on these words by the very people who are causing our difficulties.

Then we see these words, "the most dramatic reality is change". This is spelled out very clearly in the Throne Speech. Again, I very seriously question the wisdom of this government lining itself up with that sentiment at this time. Then it says, "not inspired by love and compassion is not worthy of the name." I cannot help but wonder whether those words will not be interpreted in certain circles a meaning, not inspired by love and compassion is not worthy of continued existence, because any idiot knows our society is not inspired by love and compassion. Who is trying to kid whom? If we are trying to suggest to the people who are on the "love kick" that this society is not inspired by love and compassion—and we know it is not—then the message could very easily be interpreted to mean that not only is society not worthy of the name but it is not worthy of continued existence. It does not take too much of a cynic to read that into the Speech, Mr. Speaker.

This is the type of thing I am talking about which takes up the majority of the Throne Speech. It most certainly takes up a number of the opening pages. What is the government suggesting? Is it suggesting it will legislate love and compassion, as it presumed to legislate hatred last year in the bill passed in this House to control racial hatred and so on? That is not likely.

I am very concerned about the very great emphasis placed on such words as "freedom" and "liberty" in this Speech. It is not, God forgive me, that I have anything against freedom and liberty, but when I read a speech in this day and age when the country is bothered with grave crises and I see freedom and liberty still emphasized and not much emphasis placed on the need for continuation and strengthening of law and order, I become very worried indeed. It strikes me as being very significant that the speech emphasizes so strongly freedom and everything while showing no concern for what the Canadian people would expect to be there at this particular time.

Again I say I am not suggesting this has been done wittingly or knowingly, but I cannot escape the thought that this Speech does in effect give a great deal of encouragement, and sort of the green light, to the small minority which is hell-bent upon destroying our social order in this country.

The whole backbone of the Speech is to be found in the following phrases—the new age, the changing of attitudes, entering an age of tension. We are told in the Speech that this is what we can accomplish if we use foresight, stamina and enterprise. Ours may be, if we wish it, a society in which human differences are regarded as assets and not liabilities. I did not know there was ever a time in Canada's history when human differences of the right kind were not regarded as assets rather than liabilities.

It almost suggests to me that I am being asked whether I have been involved in a good demonstration lately, or a riot; and it suggests to me that if I was not, I should be ashamed of myself. We are told that ours may be, if we wish it, a society in which individual freedom and equality of opportunity remain the most cherished possessions. I have no doubt about that. That is what we all aspire to. We are told of a society in which the enjoyment of life is measured in qualitative, not quantitative terms. That sounds like a statement that is made to the very rich, to those who are happy and content and to those who have their bellies filled. Then, I think, we can start thinking in qualitative rather than quantitative terms. But try using this philosophy for the consolation of the large number of Canadian people who cannot afford the luxury of giving these words a meaning.

We are told about a society which encourages imagination and daring, ingenuity and initiative, not coldly and impersonally for the sake of efficiency but with warmth and from the heart as between friends. This takes the harm out of the other things that I do not like so well, but it does not work. We are told the following:

> As Canada moves into the seventies we are all invited to join in this bold enterprise—to share the excitement, to face the challenge, to pursue the distant ideal of a just society.

It is not the Just Society of a couple of years ago—written in capital letters—but just any old just society, not even capitalized. On June 18, 1968, Canadians were led to believe we would have a just society. Now it becomes a distant ideal that we have to pursue. The Prime Minister says he does not want to sloganize any more.

There are a couple of very vague references to our economic situation. There is a reference to the sale of wheat. The government is pleased at the widespread public response to its invitation to comment on the White paper on taxation. We used to hear that type of pious platitude in Newfoundland when I was in that legislature. I think the House would like to hear of this. Some years ago the minister of finance of Newfoundland put a large tax increase on the price of cigarettes. In announcing that increase he said in his speech, "It is my sincere wish that this tax will discourage people from using this vile weed," or words to that effect. Notwithstanding that, it put another $4 million or $5 million dollars into the treasury. I do not think this government is pleased, as it alleges to be. I think it is just trying to get out as gracefully as it can.

I would give any amount of money to know who is the actual author of the Throne Speech. I think all Canadians should have a copy of it, because I think a day will come when it will be a collector's item. I would like to conclude my remarks with the words used by the Governor General to close the Speech from the Throne: "May Divine Providence guide us in our deliberations"—because with the government we have, we need all the help we can get from above.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, it is not easy for one to follow the hon. member who preceded me, and it is not easy for one to look at the Throne Speech and see the things that he saw in it: one really has to be as bright as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). However, the Speech from the Throne amuses me also.

I could talk about many things that are contained in the Throne Speech, such as the distant ideal that was mentioned by the hon. member, and the philosophical words that are used therein to describe the way we are going in Canada and the way in which we are facing the new decade. I could talk, also, about the White paper on taxation, but I must confess that like the hon. member who preceded me, I see nothing in the Speech that would affect my constituents. Therefore, I should like to talk a little about my constituency. First, I would like to quote the following paragraph from the Throne Speech:

> As Canada moves into the seventies, we are all invited to join in this bold enterprise—to share the excitement, to face the challenge, to pursue the distant ideal of a just society.

What does a just society imply? What does it mean to you, Mr. Speaker?

An hon. Member: He cannot answer you.

Mr. Comeau: I wish Mr. Speaker could answer my question, because obviously the just society has different meanings to different people. I would think that a just society means at least one that is somewhat equitable, a society that takes care of the poor, a society that helps a man to buy his own home—and I see the minister in charge of housing here—a society that provides employment. I do not refer to a welfare society but a society that permits a man to earn a decent living, a society that leaves the individual free and not dependent upon the state.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but it seems to me there are conversations of an informal style going on in the chamber, and this is not in keeping with the dignity of the House. Perhaps the hon. member might now continue.

Mr. Comeau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps hon. members are getting tired and would like me to call it ten o'clock.

An hon. Member: Don't do that.

Mr. Comeau: Very well. The Speech from the Throne continues:

> So long, however, as Canadians who desire work are unable to find it; so long as persons on fixed incomes are unable to provide adequately for themselves and their dependents; then so long must the government strive to assist them.

Well, I'll be darned! As the hon. member who preceded me asked, who can contradict that? We all agree that we must strive to do these things. We all agree that we must provide jobs. Every government wants to achieve certain objectives to provide employment. But what is this government really doing about it? Everybody knows that this summer we had the highest unemployment rate of the past ten years. Yet every Throne Speech that I have read since becoming a Member of Parliament has said we must strive to assist these Canadians and help them provide for themselves.

We all know that pensioners are having a hard time. I have been sitting in this House for over two years, and just about every second day the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and other hon. members have made inquiries about increases in pensions, increases in veterans pensions, increases in old age pensions and more assistance for superannuates. In the 2½ years that I have been here, the same answer has been given. It was given again today. That answer has always been, "This matter is under active consideration. We are thinking about it. We are bringing in a white paper." We were supposed to have the white paper in June, Mr. Speaker. Again today we were told that it is being actively considered by the government. The government knows very well that pensioners, not to mention people on low income, simply cannot live on what they get. We do not have to remind the government of this every second day. But nothing is done.

It is very strange that each of the 264 members of this House knows that pensioners are having a hard time. Yet nothing is done. We know that they cannot live on what they get. Everybody admits it. A House committee admits it. Opposition members have tried to push the government into action. We have dealt with this question on allotted opposition days. We ask questions every second day about it. The government admits the reality of the situation, but nothing is done. It is very strange that we all agree that something has to be done but we do not do anything about it.

Why is it that governments do not practise what they preach? If the government really wants to do something about pensioners, let it do something about them. Why does the government keep on fooling the people? Why do we say we are going to do something? During every election campaign we say we will do this and that, but between elections government promises seem to fade away. They bring in Throne Speeches such as the one we received a week ago. I shall read another fantastic statement in the Speech from the Throne as follows:

> We stand on the threshold of greatness.

Yesterday the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) stood in this House and told us how enormous were the resources that we have in Canada. Every now and then the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) stands up in this House and tells us how great our economy is; that it is in great shape and we are going ahead. I wish I understood their vocabulary, Mr. Speaker, because theirs and mine just do not click. I cannot understand the words they are uttering. I cannot understand why, if we have such a good economy and our resources are so plentiful, we now have the highest unemployment of the past ten years. That is not clear to me.

In my area unemployment sometimes rises to as high as 20 per cent of the work force, probably because most of the work is seasonal, most of my constituents are fishermen. My area is heavily dependent upon fisheries and marine resources of all kinds. We have many times brought this fact to the attention of the minister within the past couple of years. We have pointed out that there are many problems connected with the fisheries. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) made a great speech on this subject the other day. The hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) and the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter) have also spoken about it. We have emphasized the fact that foreign nationals are exploiting our fisheries. For many years the hon. member for South Shore has been hollering about this problem, but nothing seems to be done. It is just like the situation regarding the pensioners.

What will happen if things continue the way they are now? My goodness, we will be on pension, and if the pension is only at today's rate it will be a very skimpy life for us. The situation of our marine resources is very serious. On that note, Mr. Speaker, I will continue tomorrow. I hope hon. members will come back and hear me finish my remarks.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL PARKS—PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—ESTABLISHMENT OF SECOND FACILITY

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the strong strictures of my colleague from South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) and the sparkling, scintillating and sardonic speech of my hon. friend from Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Peddle), I have the feeling that this is rather a poor night for a philosopher. Nevertheless, I will refer to the question I asked the other day of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) concerning the establishment of a second national park in Prince Edward Island. This question was prompted by my anxiety concerning recent press releases in the Charlottetown and other newspapers which suggested a departure from the program which the minister outlined in the House last session.

On March 13 I asked him about the establishment of a second national park in our province and his reply, I thought, was most favourable. It was:

> —this project has not been definitely announced. My Parliamentary Secretary met with the Premier of Prince Edward Island this week, and they made considerable progress with this plan to establish a second national park in Prince Edward Island. No agreement has been drawn up yet and federal government payments will come under the policy established in British Columbia where we paid 50 per cent of the purchase price of land situated along the coast.

• (10:00 p.m.)

The minister also said that his Parliamentary Secretary and the Premier of Prince Edward Island had agreed to start drafting an agreement, all of this on March 13, 1970. In a recent newspaper I read of meetings between the minister and the Premier of Prince Edward Island held last Labour Day. Later a federal parks spokesman, I suppose alias a well-informed source, to use the jargon of bureaucracy, was quoted as saying:

> The province must provide the land for a second park free and clear for development. Because land must be expropriated this involves some heavy provincial expenditures for the P.E.I. budget.

[Mr. Comeau.]

I would say he is darned right. It would involve a great expenditure for the Prince Edward Island government. This is a serious de-escalation of Dominion government commitment. No longer do we hear of Ottawa paying 50 per cent, the arrangement which was made with the affluent province of British Columbia some time ago. Now, if we read it right, it is all to be paid by the province of Prince Edward Island. Surely little P.E.I. should get a deal at least as generous as that given to that wealthy empire on our west coast. If not, what has happened since the ides of March, 1970? Why does our province not now rate the same formula which the minister revealed in this House during his welcoming years?

It was, I believe, common knowledge that the site chosen for the second park was in the far eastern part of Prince Edward Island, in Kings County in the constituency of my hon. friend from Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid). I know this area well, having spent the first ten years of my life—just a few years ago!—in the area. It contains one of the most beautiful beaches on this continent. I refer to the south lake area. This is near the north lake area which is now becoming the tuna capital of the Atlantic area.

If there are problems in reference to this location, perhaps because of the propinquity of much of the adjoining property to the finest agricultural land, thus creating an economic problem, I think we should know quickly and precisely what the current attitude is. There is now considerable currency given to the suggestion that the federal government may have withdrawn from its commitment to offer a second park, and that instead it will substitute a substantial extension of the one now existing which happens to be, according to figures and observations, one of the most popular national parks in this country, as well it might be because it is one of the most beautiful.

This park, with its hundreds of thousands of visitors, is far too narrow for the kind of development that is important for modern recreational needs. Even if the second park promise is not repudiated, the P.E.I. park as it now exists must be enlarged to meet the demands of its ever-enlarging flow of visitors to our province, so welcome in our midst. If this is to be done, it would be only fair that Ottawa make at least as good a contribution as was promised in reference to a new park. The P.E.I. government, with its limited resources acquired some 30 years ago the original land for the present site and turned it over free to the Dominion government. If there is a new policy for new parks whereby the 50-50 deal is abandoned, surely with the extension of the existing park, where the province provided all the land, at least that 50-50 generosity should be forthcoming. I use the expression "at least" in reference to a province which built its hopes upon the promise of having a second park.

This, sir, is my reasonable suggestion. I expect the eminently reasonable Parliamentary Secretary, a colleague for whom I have high regard, will be able to come forth with a reasonable response to my suggestion, and if he has been advised to temper reason with generosity, I shall not demur.

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I take great delight in reassuring the hon. member and in making perfectly clear that there has been no abandonment of interest on the part of the government with respect to a second national park in Prince Edward Island, in the area of East Point.

On September 7 last my minister met with Premier Campbell and members of his cabinet to discuss with the province possible plans for the development of a park in this area. The province is anxious to ensure that they have thoroughly explored all options and alternatives with regard to the best use of recreational lands and with regard to the very heavy increase in tourist traffic which has occurred in the province in the last few years. This increase, I understand, was particularly heavy in the season just completed.

The minister's discussions with the province were cordial and constructive. It was made clear that the federal government is prepared to proceed, depending of course upon the conclusions of the province as to the course of action which would be most appropriate for them.

Again I should like to reassure the hon. member that the financial basis would be as stated by the minister on March 13 last, that is to say, the federal government would assume 50 per cent of the costs of acquisition and assembly of the necessary lands on the same formula as was established in British Columbia with respect to Long Beach Park.

Mr. Macquarrie: Hear, hear!

Mr. Buchanan: We expect to hear further from the province in due course. I am sure that when a decision is reached, my minister will be making an announcement jointly with the province.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.10 p.m.

APPENDIX

Montreal, October 21, 1970

PRESS RELEASE REGARDING INDIVIDUALS DETAINED IN APPLICATION OF THE ORDER-IN-COUNCIL ADOPTED UNDER THE WAR MEASURES ACT.

In order to dispel concern which seems to have arisen in certain circles and to anticipate the spreading of false reports or interpretations, the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Quebec, Mr. Jérôme Choquette, wants to clarify here and now in what manner the powers granted by the order-in-council adopted under the War Measures Act are being applied.

The Minister of Justice has announced that there will be no abuse, on the part of police services involved, of those powers, requested in these unprecedented circumstances.

Therefore, although simultaneous detention of some 300 individuals throughout Quebec, 250 of them in Montreal, creates substantial concrete problems, the police have already contacted the families or individuals the detained persons have requested to have informed.

A group of investigators and attorneys has been set up to study the record of each of those detained as promptly as possible, in order to determine whether they are to be indicted and brought before the courts or released because of lack of evidence. It will, however, be readily understood that the task of dealing with such an impressive number of files under present circumstances will inevitably take some time. However, instructions have been given to proceed with all reasonable haste.

The minister has also announced that he recognizes the right of the individuals detained to retain services of counsel, but here again there are administrative problems, which are being overcome.

The minister has emphasized, however, that it cannot be expected that the task of attorneys and investigators dealing with the examination of the detained individuals' files will be completed within the initial period of seven days provided by the order-in-council and that he therefore intends, where such action is justified in the light of information submitted to him, to extend the detention period to twenty-one days. We will however accept to release, as and when information becomes available, those persons against whom no crime or infraction under the order-in-council can be imputed. Indeed, during the past few days some fifty individuals have already been released.

As regards the provisions of the order-in-council declaring the FLQ to be an illegal association and prohibiting all support of the said group, the minister has announced that he would deal firmly with any persons violating the order, or in any way supporting the FLQ, and particularly the kidnappers of Messrs. Cross and Laporte.

Finally the minister strongly denies all insinuations to the effect that persons detained have been ill-ill-treated in any way.

INFORMATION CANADA

ANNOUNCEMENT OF FEDERAL IDENTITY PROGRAM

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce the adoption of a federal identity program for all operations of the federal government and administration.

The main purpose of this program is to provide a co-ordinated and readily recognizable means of identifying federal activities. We believe that the interests of Canadian confederation are served when the people of Canada understand the realms of responsibility of the governments which serve them, and when they are able to identify the source of government services available to them. For this reason, it seems desirable to have a simple system of distinguishing designs, familiar to all Canadians, to identify federal activities. The program which we are adopting does not supplant any existing emblem of Canada. There has never been an emblem which represents the Canadian government as an entity within the Canadian nation. This program is intended to fill that need.

• (11:10 a.m.)

Mr. Speaker, the design consists of two devices from the flag; a red bar with a red maple leaf on a white square to its right, followed on the right by the bilingual identification in black of the Canadian government, the department, agency or other unit or function of the federal government. The bar and leaf may, on occasion, be rendered in black when use of colour is not practical.

Members may be aware that, in the absence of an identification system designed for all federal activities, departments have increasingly adopted their own designs so that, at the moment, there are more than two dozen different identifying designs in use by federal departments, to say nothing of boards and agencies. Many of them contain no element suggesting a relationship with the government of Canada. The new federal identity program will replace this multiplicity of designs in everyday use.

The coat of arms and the flag, of course, will continue to be used and honoured as emblems of Canada, the nation. Indeed, we believe that the adoption of a distinct design for identifying federal government activities will enhance the prestige and dignity of those symbols representing the nation as a whole.

The new program will be implemented gradually, starting on a limited basis immediately. During the next three months, a careful evaluation will be made of its application to stationery, signs, advertising, and so on. General introduction will commence early in the new year and continue until the end of 1973, as existing stationery stocks are exhausted and signs or vehicles need repainting or replacement.

When the new design has come into full use, Canadians will be able to identify more readily the activities of their federal government and its role in our nation. In this respect the program should be a significant means of strengthening Canadian confederation itself.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the minister for his courtesy in providing us with a copy of this two-page document half an hour ago. I will be equally as brief in my comments as he was in making the announcement because, quite frankly, the substance of the document deserves brevity, to say the least.

I must say I believe that statement made by the minister today is a sad reflection of the priorities of this government which seems to be preoccupied with pomp, circumstance and symbols rather than with the substance of nation-building. The bread and butter issues seem to go out the window and we are supposed to have symbols and cake in our bellies rather than policies of this government. As all hon. members know, this is an unprecedented time in our history; yet the minister stands up in this House and puts forward a mouse that the mountain has produced, a policy on symbols for this land which makes me wonder whether the situation in Canada is as serious as we have been led to believe, or is it a sham? Are the minister and the government completely insulting and showing no respect for the intelligence of the Canadian people and displaying their usual nerve in bringing forward this statement, or is it just naïveté on the part of this minister? We want statements on policy, not symbols on paper, and it is high time we got them.

Is this symbol of the government of Canada another step on the road to big brother in 1984? This country has had a symbol for Canada which we have all respected, a coat of arms which spells out Canada. Are the House of Commons and the people to have a government of Canada symbol, which right now should be in black or are they to continue with the coat of arms? There are many questions we could ask, but I shall not take the time of the House today in insulting the intelligence of the people of Canada any more than they have been insulted by this statement. We want statements on the War Measures Act, on the right to counsel, the protection of our rights, and on where the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion stands in respect of FRAP.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will recognize that his comments at this time should be on the statement and not on what might have been, should have been or ought to have been in the statement. I would ask him to direct his remarks to the statement.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I will conclude with about one sentence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: Words fail me in trying to comment—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: —positively and constructively on this statement. I suggest through you, Mr. Speaker, to the members of the government that the people of this country will understand the relationship between the government of Canada and the people of this nation only when this government produces policies on matters such as social security so that we can get away from paper and get down to policies that the people understand.

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, the thought that came to my mind after listening to the minister's announcement about the simple colours involved is that the Minister of Finance must have had some hand in the decision which was made. Apparently the federal government has found a way to be in the red and the black at the same time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mather: Actually, I think the announcement is one of the least harmful that the government has made for some time. The minister is in charge of Information Canada. I wish to take this opportunity to urge him to give us and the country as soon as possible more worthwhile and important information as to what Information Canada is actually doing for the benefit of the public. I believe there are 40 requests for the production of papers on the order paper, which would supply information to the members of the House and to their constituents. Instead of concerning itself so much with symbols, colours and other harmless trappings, Information Canada and the government as a whole ought to give the people the kind of information the people want and not the kind of information the government wishes them to have.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the statement made by the minister this morning follows up, I believe, previous statements made by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), in which he said, for instance, that if a province did not want to give recognition to the federal government's participation in some project, Ottawa would withhold its contribution.

According to the statement made this morning, the federal government wants its participation in any project to be recognized by the provinces, as, for example, the building of hospitals and technical schools and also the development of eastern or western Canada. Symbols will be used to show people that the federal government has really contributed to the establishment of hundreds of services, something people are often unaware of.

I think that people should be informed about provincial developments in which Ottawa is sharing. They should even be acquainted with municipal and school projects. They should be told what level of government is building roads.

But I wonder if this matter is so important at a time when many other things should be attended to and when legislation should be brought in to boost the Canadian economy.

Let us use symbols to inform people about the participation of the federal government and the provincial, municipal or school authorities in certain projects. Canadians will then know what the federal government is doing. As for the latter, it will do all it can to get the Canadian economy moving again.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL SECURITY

POLICE EFFORTS TO FIND MURDERERS AND KIDNAPPERS —OFFERING OF REWARD

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General. It is now nearly three weeks since the kidnapping of James Cross, one week since the invocation of the War Measures Act and almost a week since the foul murder of Pierre Laporte. Can the Solicitor General explain to the House the apparent lack of success of police efforts and the reports now being made that they are at a dead end and are relying upon tips? Can the Solicitor General give the country any assurance in this regard?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with three difficult criminal offences, and I am now speaking of that aspect of the whole situation. The two kidnappings and the murder and under investigation and it is not possible to give from time to time all the information I would like to give. I cannot accept the proposition that the police are at a dead end in this matter.

An hon. Member: That is what the police said.

Mr. McIlraith: If the hon. member wishes he can accept the words of those who said it, but I must speak as best I can in answering a responsible question by the Leader of the Opposition. The information I have received from our federal police sources does not support the statement that they are at a dead end. I am not able to give the bits and pieces of information that I might like to give in order to develop the subject. I regret that under the circumstances at the moment I am not in a position to give more complete information in that regard.

Mr. Stanfield: Can the Solicitor General explain why the government has not acted on the suggestion made some time ago by the right hon. member for Prince Albert that a reward be offered, especially since in the course of the last week the government has been relying upon all resources of pursuit and there are indications that tips are now quite important to the police, as presumably they always have been?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the matter of a reward has daily been receiving very close attention. The decision not to offer an award was made in circumstances that were relevant from day to day but it was considered and was made for very good reasons that I will be happy to explain to the House as soon as we can do so.

An hon. Member: When?

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. member asks when. I am sorry I cannot give that information at the moment. The fact that warrants have been issued for the arrest of two persons has been well publicized. One cannot give information in the House of Commons that might be helpful to these persons, much as it might be attractive and desirable to do so. I regret being in this awkward position. I do not like it, but I believe there is an element of responsibility that must be exercised in these cases, however regrettable it may be that we cannot satisfy the curiosity of some hon. members.

Mr. Stanfield: I must say it is not at all clear to any of us why the offer of a reward should create any difficulty, but may I ask the Solicitor General this question: In view of the time which has elapsed and the difficulties to which he has referred, and in view of the experience of police forces in other parts of the world in connection with the detection and tracing of terrorists and kidnappers, have the Solicitor General, the government and the authorities generally brought in experts from around the world to assist in the pursuit?

Mr. McIlraith: We have some experts on this subject quite outside the police forces concerned and we have been using their services on different aspects of the investigation.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): I appreciate the minister's difficulty with regard to giving details of what has been going on in the last week or so, but can he tell this House what federal initiatives, if any, were taken by himself and his law officers after receiving the information presented by Mayor Drapeau and Mr. Saulnier last December when they appeared before the committee investigating the Company of Young Canadians?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will appreciate that the supplementary question is very much broader than the question originally asked by the Leader of the Opposition. It might be acceptable later, but not as a supplementary.

Mr. Nowlan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it was because of the long and laborious answer given by the minister that this subject was opened up. I can appreciate his difficulties in pursuing the horrible criminals. I am trying to pursue the minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: His laborious answer opened up this field, and I submit that my question is perfectly proper.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has an opinion and he is, of course, entitled to it. I do not think the question is a proper supplementary but I will return to the hon. member in due course.

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Would the Prime Minister explain to the House on motions why the government did not decide to use the sedition act months ago when the FLQ was known to be in possession of large quantities of explosives?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will be glad to consider that point if the hon. member will tell me what the sedition act is. I have never heard of such an act.

INFORMATION LEADING TO INVOKING OF WAR MEASURES ACT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Last Wednesday, Mr. Speaker, as reported at page 427 of Hansard, I directed a question to the Prime Minister and the right hon. gentleman promised he would take it under consideration. My question arose out of the fact that at least three ministers, both inside the House and outside, have referred to confidential intelligence reports and evidence upon which they based their conclusion that a state of apprehended insurrection obtained in this country. I asked the Prime Minister at that time whether he was prepared to give the House such information or such evidence, or whether he felt it would be better to postpone any public statement until later. Is the Prime Minister now prepared to give this information to the leaders of the various parties? I want to ask the Prime Minister whether he would make a statement in the course of the next few days as to the course the government intends to pursue, whether he will give the House, either publicly or privately, the basis of the information upon which they took the step they did in determining there was a state of apprehended insurrection?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): By now I would have thought this information was in the hands of everybody. We have at various times explained why the War Measures Act was brought in at the time it was. The first fact was that there had been kidnappings of two very important people in Canada and that they were being held for ransom under threat of death. The second was that the government of the province of Quebec and the authorities of the city of Montreal asked the federal government to permit the use of exceptional measures because, in their own words, a state of apprehended insurrection existed. The third reason was our assessment of all the surrounding facts, which are known to the country by now—the state of confusion that existed in the province of Quebec in regard to these matters.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister whether the government had any evidence of a conspiracy to bring about an insurrection, and of the statement made by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion that there were thousands of rifles, machine guns and bombs in the possession of the FLQ? Is the government prepared to tell the House whether or not that information was in its possession, and is the government prepared to produce the source of that information? Or is the government acting entirely on the basis of statements made to it by other authorities?

Mr. Trudeau: I repeat, Mr. Speaker, not entirely on the recommendations made by other authorities, though that was obviously an important element in our decision. When the authorities of the province of Quebec and the city of Montreal say that there is a state of apprehended insurrection existing, then we take that statement to be a serious one. They are elected by the people and are responsible governments. But that is not the only source of information; of course it is not. There are other facts which have been made known to the public—that a great quantity of dynamite has been stolen in Quebec during the last year and not recovered, that there is a great quantity—I do not know the exact number but at any rate it is substantial—of rifles and small arms that have disappeared.

I wish the leader of the New Democratic Party would ask himself how much information Kerensky had in the spring and summer of 1917 when he was pooh-poohing the possibility of an insurrection which in fact happened in October, 1917.

ALLEGATION BY MAYOR OF MONTREAL THAT FRAP IS HAVEN FOR TERRORISTS AND REVOLUTIONARIES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question arising out of this matter to the Solicitor General. May I ask the minister about the statement made yesterday by the mayor of Montreal to the effect that the FRAP organization is a haven for terrorists, criminals and revolutionaries? Does the information that the Solicitor General has from the police authorities substantiate that charge and, if so, is he taking any action with respect thereto?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of entering the Montreal civic election campaign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McIlraith: I do not think it is appropriate to ask me to comment on statements made outside the House by someone who is not a member of the House. I am quite prepared to answer such questions as I am able to answer relating to matters that are properly the concern of Parliament.

INFORMATION LEADING TO INVOKING OF WAR MEASURES ACT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, who as I understood him is now suggesting that the public had available to it the information upon which the government based its decision. May I ask the Prime Minister how he reconciles this statement with the statement made by the Minister of Justice that it might not ever be possible to disclose to the public the information upon which the government based its decision, since it might endanger the lives of innocent people?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what I said was that the facts that I have recited and which are known to the House were sufficient for us to take the steps we did. I am not saying that beyond that there are not other facts which may or may not be known to the public. It is a matter that will be left to the police, as far as I am concerned. I say that the facts that are known to the House are the facts on which we acted, and it is on that that we stand.

WAR MEASURES ACT—OPINIONS EXPRESSED IN LETTERS TO PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): While I have the floor, Mr. Speaker, I might reply to a question put yesterday by the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste as to whether I had received letters or telegrams approving implementation of the War Measures Act.

Mr. Speaker, I have received 2,500 telegrams and 2,600 letters, 97 per cent of them supporting government action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[English]

ALLEGATION BY MAYOR OF MONTREAL THAT FRAP IS HAVEN FOR TERRORISTS AND REVOLUTIONARIES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Solicitor General a question put to him already, but may I put it in a different way. May I ask the Solicitor General whether the federal police or any other police force, to his knowledge, has information to the effect that FRAP is a haven for terrorists, criminals and revolutionaries? Does he have such information?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): To my knowledge at the moment, no, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

WAR MEASURES ACT—SUGGESTED INDEPENDENT COMMISSION TO SUPERVISE APPLICATION OF REGULATIONS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Solicitor General has been in touch with this matter, but last Wednesday I asked the Minister of Justice whether he or any other minister of the government or the Attorney General of Quebec was considering the appointment of an independent committee to be in contact with the people arrested, a suggestion that is now supported, I believe, by all the churches of Canada. May I ask the Solicitor General whether he knows if this is being considered and if there is any intention of appointing such a committee?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): I do not know, Mr. Speaker, that there is a great deal I can usefully add to what the Minister of Justice has said on this subject—

Mr. Lewis: The minister said that he would draw it to the attention of the Attorney General of Quebec.

Mr. McIlraith: I thank the hon. member for correcting his leader on that point. There is very little I can add to what the Minister of Justice said in explaining the situation to the House. It is my understanding that it is being considered by the justice minister of the province under whose immediate responsibility the matter falls.

ACTIVITIES OF PAUL CLICHE, PRESIDENT OF FRAP

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question.

If the minister to whom this question was put a moment ago by a representative of the New Democratic Party is aware that Mr. Paul Cliche is president of FRAP and that this movement is a cover for the terrorists in Montreal, does he know that Mr. Paul Cliche is also a strong supporter of the New Democratic Party in Quebec?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

Mr. Lewis: A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for York South rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Lewis: I certainly am, Mr. Speaker. I suggest to hon. members and to Your Honour that when a charge is made by a minister of the crown smearing an entire group of people, and that charge is repeated by the mayor of Montreal, it is the worst kind of McCarthyism for the hon. member for Temiscamingue to do the kind of thing he did, smearing a named person, Paul Cliche—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may resent it but that does not make it a question of privilege. I am sure he appreciates that.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, Paul Cliche is not in this House and he ought not to be smeared by an irresponsible reactionary.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that we are entering the field of debate at the present time; I suggest to the hon. member that this is a point of debate, not a question of privilege in any event.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

I do not wish to contradict the member for York South, but I would like to point out to the House that I have been personally acquainted with Mr. Paul Cliche for many years and that he belongs to the New Democratic Party—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond has a supplementary question which I am sure is not related to the exchange we have just had between hon. members. The hon. member for Joliette.

REQUEST BY QUEBEC GOVERNMENT AND MONTREAL MUNICIPAL AUTHORITIES FOR INVOKING OF WAR MEASURES ACT

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Prime Minister in order to define, I think, a matter that many Canadians are concerned about.

Is it really a fact that the Quebec and Montreal authorities asked the federal government for assistance concerning the problems of which we are all aware?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I can only repeat what I said a moment ago and last Friday morning when I announced that the government had taken those measures at the request of the authorities mentioned. I even tabled in the House the letters in which the government of the province of Quebec and Montreal municipal authorities expressed their fear of an insurrection. Besides, those letters have appeared in the official report of the House of Commons' debates.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will allow a supplementary question to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. In view of the few minutes left during the question period, perhaps we might then try to cover a few other subjects.

ACTIVITIES OF FLQ—STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Because of the smearing effect on innocent people as individuals and groups of the statement made by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to the effect that the FLQ had infiltrated virtually all the major institutions in Quebec, including our political party among others, would the Prime Minister consider making a statement as soon as possible in the House providing documentary evidence of this statement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not accept the premise, Mr. Speaker, so I have no intention of making such a statement.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

RECONSIDERATION OF CLOSING OF RIVERS AIR BASE

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Has the decision to close the Canadian Armed Forces base at Rivers, Manitoba, been reconsidered, since it is the only suitable airfield available for transporting troops in any emergency from Camp Shilo, as was shown by the extreme difficulties experienced last week in the enforced reactivating of Rivers in order to move troops to Montreal?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, these facts were very much taken into account when the earlier decisions were arrived at but there has been no reconsideration since the event the hon. member has referred to.

ALLEGATION BY MAYOR OF MONTREAL THAT FRAP IS HAVEN FOR TERRORISTS AND REVOLUTIONARIES

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General. Can he indicate whether the contentions of Mr. Drapeau concerning the FRAP organization in Montreal, which has been widely publicized during the last day, were communicated to the federal government or to the RCMP and, if so, were they communicated with supporting information and evidence?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, there is an election in Montreal this weekend and the question seems to be designed to bring out information with relation to that election. As I indicated earlier, I have no intention whatever of being drawn into this municipal election by any member of this House. It would not be a proper use of my role in the House to let myself be drawn into that situation. I will look at the hon. member's question very carefully and if there is any information sought in the question that can be provided on Monday I will try to do so.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION ADVERTISEMENTS IN ALLEGED REVOLUTIONARY MAGAZINE

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the right hon. Prime Minister in connection with FLQ infiltration in all circles.

Is the Prime Minister aware that the Civil Service Commission is attempting to recruit civil servants through competitions advertised in Le Quartier Latin, a clearly revolutionary sheet supporting separatism and the FLQ?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member can find this information. He is asking if the right hon. Prime Minister is aware of this fact, and I do not believe that the question asked in this manner is acceptable.

POLLUTION

FURTHER REDUCTION OF PHOSPHATE CONTENT IN DETERGENTS—INVESTIGATION OF SUBSTITUTES

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has any decision been made on the further reduction of the phosphate content in detergents under the provisions of the Canada Water Act?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the government banned the content of phosphorous pentoxide in detergents to the extent of 20 per cent by weight as of August 1, and banned the use of phosphates altogether by January 1, 1972. At the time of the ban the industry said it was scientifically impossible to achieve these two objectives, either the 20 per cent by August 1 or the January 1, 1972, total ban. I note now that some of the industry has full page advertisements to the effect that they have already achieved 100 per cent removal of phosphates from detergents, and we are reviewing to see whether or not the January 1, 1972, date can be brought forward.

Mr. Aiken: Before asking my supplementary I would urge the minister first to proceed as quickly as possible. Is any intermediate order intended between now and the final ban?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that a diminishing of quantities would be useful. It would be technically difficult and would not do a great deal of good. I think the thing to investigate, now that the industry has been able to make their scientific progress much more rapid than they had anticipated, and the most useful exercise to perform, is to find out how quickly we can push the January 1, 1972, date forward.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether his department has under review the substance or substances that manufacturers may be using instead of phosphates, and has he any information he can give the House on whether or not they may have any pollutant effect?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, NTA, which is the major substitute, has been used in Sweden for some years and our scientists have investigated the effect there and have also consulted Swedish scientists in this regard. We are also continuing our own independent research in this area. To date, while we are satisfied that the banning of phosphates was the proper decision, there is no complete and comprehensive scientific conclusion which can be made as to NTA. We are satisfied to date that it is a substitute which is worth while.

PHOSPHATES—NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES FOR CONTINENTAL BAN

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, since 80 per cent of phosphorous pollution emanates from the United States, has the minister negotiated with the United States government with a view to effecting a continental agreement banning phosphates, either through talks with the U.S. cabinet or through the International Joint Commission?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, on June 23, I believe it was, we had international meetings with the United States, the Canadian team being led by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the United States team led by Russell Train, the president's environmental council director. That committee is continuing to sit. One of the recommendations at that time was a total ban on phosphates on both sides of the border. We are continuing our representations with the United States in this regard, but to date we have achieved no agreement.

WAR MEASURES ACT—INFORMING BY POLICE OF FAMILIES OF THOSE DETAINED

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. I tried to catch your attention a few minutes ago because it relates to an earlier topic. In light of a statement by the Minister of Justice yesterday, is it the position of the government that the police should inform the families of all those detained under the War Measures Act, and I underline the word "all"? If this has not yet been the case, would the Prime Minister explain on motions or otherwise what regulation or statute empowers the police to withhold such information?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that in the statement of the Minister of Justice of Quebec, which was tabled yesterday in the House by the Attorney General of Canada and I believe printed in Hansard, the Minister of Justice of Quebec said that all those who have been detained and have requested access either to their families or to counsel have received it. The hon. member can read the statement.

[Later:]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the appendix in yesterday's Hansard. It might be well if my answer was given in the context of the following words which appeared in Hansard yesterday:

...the police have already contacted the families or individuals the detained persons have requested to have informed.

INDUSTRY

FINANCIAL SETTLEMENT WITH DOSCO SHAREHOLDERS—SUBMISSION TO HOUSE

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Prior to any government financial settlement with the shareholders of Dosco, will this matter be brought before the House for agreement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice and refer it to the appropriate minister.

Mr. MacInnis: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In taking the question as notice, will the Prime Minister also inquire of the Minister of Justice whether the list of shareholders will be made available along with the dates when the shares were acquired by the individuals?

Mr. Trudeau: I will take that as notice also.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

RETIRED EMPLOYEES' PENSIONS—ACTION TO IMPLEMENT COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION FOR INCREASE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. It is supplementary to a question which I asked him two weeks ago today. Is the minister yet in a position to report to the House on his discussions with the CNR concerning the increases in pensions by the Canadian National as recommended by a standing committee of this House and concurred in by the House itself?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. I am not at all certain whether it would be appropriate for me to report to the House regarding discussions between myself and officials of CNR. I can advise the hon. member that I have conveyed to the CNR officially the findings of the committee and the decision of the House. If there is anything subsequent to that which I can appropriately report I will, but I assume that this matter will emerge in the normal way through questioning before committees or in some other fashion.

HOUSING

REFUSAL OF CMHC FINANCING FOR DEVELOPMENTS NEAR AIRPORTS THAT VIOLATE COMPATIBLE LAND USE TABLE

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Calgary South): My question is to the Minister without Portfolio charged with housing. Can the minister give an assurance that CMHC financing will be refused in developments near airports which violate the transport ministry's compatible land use table?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): It is my understanding that information has not yet been published regarding the compatible land use table, but I can assure the hon. member that consultations with the Department of Transport are proceeding with regard to revising CMHC requirements for residential developments to make sure they are compatible with their views.

Mr. Mahoney: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister consider deferring such financing for potential violations until the table is published?

Mr. Andras: We will give that consideration.

WELFARE

NUMBER RECEIVING ASSISTANCE—REQUEST FOR EMERGENCY RELIEF PAYMENTS

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): My question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. As the number of people receiving welfare assistance in metropolitan Toronto rose to a record of 47,079 last month, an increase of approximately 50 per cent compared with the same time last year, and as that figure is predicted to rise by 50 per cent over the next five months, will the government give emergency relief payments to that city and to other cities in Canada with the same problem?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As the hon. member knows, the federal government pays 50 per cent of every dollar through the Canada Assistance Plan. I would think this is a sufficient answer.

Mr. Ryan: In view of the fact that employables are now coming on the rolls in great numbers and that the 50 per cent payment is not sufficient to take care of the situation, would the government consider giving relief to the extent of 100 per cent in respect of employables in view of the fact that the city says this situation is due to the anti-inflationary policy of the government?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The last part of the hon. member's question put him out of order.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED REDUCTION OF BANK INTEREST RATES

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I have a question for the Minister of Finance. I should like to ask him whether it is in accordance with government policy that chartered banks should reduce their interest rates on money lent in line with the recent reductions by the Bank of Canada and, if so, will he consult these banks to determine why they are reluctant to give up their high interest rates which do nothing toward fighting unemployment?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I think they should, and I will be glad to consult them.

Mr. Korchinski: Will he report back to the House on this?

Mr. Benson: Certainly.

NATIONAL SECURITY

WAR MEASURES ACT DETENTIONS AND RELEASES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General. In view of the fact that there seems to be some discrepancy between the figure which the minister gave the House on Wednesday with respect to the number of persons who have been detained under the War Measures Act regulations and that issued by the Attorney General of the province of Quebec, may I ask the minister whether he can now give us the figures he has regarding the number of persons who have been detained and the number who have been released? Can the minister also tell us the number of persons who have been charged and whether or not all these individuals have had a chance to communicate with their families and to secure counsel?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): I am very glad of the opportunity to clear up that matter. The number of persons released following detention under the special powers was 102 as of last night. The number still held as of last night was 232. The hon. member will notice that when those figures are added together the total of 334 is smaller than the figure which had previously been given of the number of people detained. I am getting precise information on that, but it appears—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that we are running out of time and there are a number of hon. members who appear to have questions.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a point of order. It seems to me extremely important that when the minister tells us that 379 people have been detained and now we have a figure of 334 we should know what has happened to these people. I will not press the point now at this late hour, but the minister should undertake to make a full statement on Monday regarding the number of people who have been detained, the number who have been released and other particulars.

Mr. Speaker: It is my suggestion that this can be done early next week, but we have about reached the end of the question period and I was hoping I could recognize one or two hon. members before we call orders of the day.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REPORTING OF COMMITTEE EXPENSES

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): I should like to direct my question to the Government House Leader. In order that the House may have better control of its activities and expenses, will the Government House Leader bring in a motion referring to the Committee on Procedure and Organization for report the need of all committees of the House to file a complete report of the expenses incurred during the previous session?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): This subject was touched upon in our debate on the establishment of the Constitutional Committee and I believe there was general agreement that we should look at this question. How we do it is a matter that I will be happy to consider.

Mr. McCutcheon: Would the minister also consider including in any motion when setting up a special committee the matter of the estimated cost? The figures of $300,000 to $500,000 are being bandied about regarding certain committees, and this is very nerveracking.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. A moment ago, when I suggested that the Solicitor General might make a statement early next week giving the information for which I asked, the minister indicated he was willing to give it now. Would the House agree to revert to motions to allow the minister to make his statement because it is exceedingly important to the House to know what persons have been detained and what disposition has been made of these persons?

Mr. Speaker: Does the House agree to reverting to motions?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no agreement. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DISCHARGE OF POLLUTANTS BY SHIPS

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-2, to amend the Canada Shipping Act, be read the second time and referred to the Special Committee on Environmental Pollution.

He said: Mr. Speaker, a few years ago if there were to be an amendment to the Canada Shipping Act the chances are that it would not even cause a ripple of excitement, except among the relatively small shipping community. However, over the last few years that situation clearly has changed, and as I speak to this proposed amending bill today I am very conscious of an incident which occurred several months ago, in fact in February of this year. At that time, I flew over a very attractive part of Nova Scotia known as Chedabucto Bay and saw the appalling damage that had already been caused as a result of the grounding of the tanker Arrow and the subsequent spill of many hundreds of thousands of gallons of crude oil on to the waters and shoreline of that particular area.

This incident was probably the most dramatic of many that have occured in recent months and years. It brought home to us all very clearly the necessity for significant changes in the powers that the government must have, that the people of Canada must have, to ensure first of all that such incidents are kept to an absolute minimum and, secondly, that when these do occur there is a means through which we can ensure that the responsible parties cover the costs involved in any clean-up operation.

It might be useful, Mr. Speaker, if on this occasion I took a moment or two to discuss the Arrow incident and its aftermath. In doing so my first responsibility, and indeed it is a pleasure, is to compliment Dr. McTaggart-Cowan and the members of his task force on the excellent job they did in cleaning up and controlling the aftermath and the effects of the Arrow oil spill.

Mr. Jamieson: It may be, Mr. Speaker, on this particular occasion and in the circumstances in which we find ourselves in Canada today, that it is also appropriate for me to call the attention of hon. members to the fact that the Canadian Armed Forces, particularly those stationed on the east coast of Canada, did a superb job under very difficult conditions. They illustrated in that case, as they have in the past and I have no doubt will again in the future, their ability to cope with an extreme situation of this sort whether it be in terms of the environment or in any other way. So, I do want as well to pay a well deserved tribute to Canada's Armed Forces and their leaders for the invaluable help they gave us in connection with the Arrow disaster.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, when I was in the broadcasting profession, I could not possibly imagine any field in which there were more instant experts. Almost invariably I discovered that the total population of Canada knew far more about broadcasting than I did, but I can now report to you with a great deal of accuracy that there is one other subject on which all Canadians appear to feel they are experts. I refer to the method of cleaning up oil spills and coping with these problems generally.

From the very first day that the Arrow disaster occurred, I received literally an avalanche of letters, phone calls and other forms of communication, all purporting to have the total answer to the problem. The fact of the matter, as of course we can see now in retrospect and in particular on the basis of the excellent report of the McTaggart-Cowan task force, is that there is no simple or unique solution that can be applied everywhere oil spills occur. The circumstances will vary from one part of our coastline to another. They will vary substantially depending on the time of year at which an oil spill occurs, and they will vary, too, depending on the kind of oil that happens to be involved.

Of course, the circumstances in the Chedabucto Bay area were amongst the worst we are likely to encounter in that the incident occurred in February, in the dead of winter. Water temperatures were extremely cold. The oil involved was a very thick type, commonly called bunker C type oil. This combination of circumstances created what, I repeat, Mr. Speaker, must be among the worst circumstances we could have encountered.

As a result of that difficulty, I believe we have now devised within Canada a competence with regard to dealing with oil spills that is superior to that known to authorities in almost any other part of the world. One of the examples I may give in support of that contention is the fact that for the first time in the case of the Arrow disaster means were devised, again with the co-operation of our Armed Forces, through which it was possible to attach valves to the vessel under water, and pump the oil through quite an involved system of heating coils so that it could be brought up to a point where it would flow.

The whole story of the operation is one that I believe would impress hon. members both with the ingenuity, and in some respects the courage, of Canada's Armed Forces whose divers went down in that very murky, cold and difficult water to carry out the exercise. But at the moment the important point to emphasize is that, although we have that known competence now in the circumstances surrounding the Arrow disaster, I would not want to mislead the House into thinking that we know everything there is to know about how to deal with an oil spillage of major magnitude.

The one that occurred more recently in the gulf near Prince Edward Island was of a completely different nature, and therefore we had to apply different techniques in that case. Mercifully, I may say, the bad effects of that particular spill were kept to a minimum. However, this was due as much to the fact that it occurred in the summer and that we were able to employ different techniques, rather than to the fact that we know everything there is to know about clean-up operations. I want to make that clear for a reason that will become apparent in a few moments in more detail.

The real objective of this legislation is not to so much, as has been emphasized, to ensure that somebody else pays for the clean-up operation. The real objective of this legislation is to guarantee to the maximum degree possible, to the extent that it is humanly possible, that oil spills will not occur at all. That must be our objective.

Now, Mr. Speaker, although I was born and lived all my life with the sea at my doorstep, I was not what might be called an expert on marine law until I became involved in these rather difficult problems during the current year. However, I have been fascinated during the past several months to study the evolution of marine law, and some of the rather strange and wonderful involvements that there have been of various groups in determining how shipping is controlled, not only in Canada and Canadian waters but throughout the world.

I do not propose to subject hon. members to a lengthy history lesson, but I do want to mention the fact that for centuries the great bulk of marine law was designed to do one of two things, either to protect the shipping community in one way or another or to protect life at sea. Indeed, when one looks at the quite massive amount of legislation within our own country on this subject, it is apparent that through all the years the main concern of our legislators has been to ensure that seamen were given the maximum amount of protection. We have commendable success in that regard, particularly when one sees the conditions that exist on most vessels today and compares them with the circumstances that existed on vessels even 20 or 25 years ago. But the truth is that until comparatively recent times no thought was given to pollution and its effects in terms of ocean shipping.

I suppose that is only natural, when one considers that up until fairly recent times the size of vessels was somewhat limited and we did not have what constitutes the greatest menace of our day, these massive tankers which now ply the sea routes and, in many cases, move into and out of Canadian waters. So, this bill we are now proposing and commending to hon. members, is designed to give to the Canada Shipping Act what might be described as a new look. We are hoping that through this measure we will add this new dimension to marine law, and will ensure that the shipping community assumes a greater measure of responsibility for the potential hazards that are inherent in the movement of large quantities of various items, but particularly oil, which can be a potential threat to the environment.

Let me now return to what I mentioned a few moments ago as the main objective of this legislation. Hon. members, I hope, will feel free in the committee stage on the bill to examine it thoroughly. For that reason I shall not burden the House today with the specifics of what we intend to do. Rather I shall try, with a rather broad brush, to outline the general principles involved and then permit members during the committee stage on this bill to question not only expert witnesses but myself, if they so desire, concerning what the specifics are.

Essentially, in terms of the insurance, I can point out specifically that one of the things the commission investigating the Arrow disaster discovered was that this was, in every sense of the word, a tramp. This was a very badly constructed ancient vessel which had not been kept up to standard. The record, as now publicized in the report of the committee, indicates that two navigation items were not operative and that in a whole series of ways this was not a vessel which could be classed as being suitable for the transportation of oil. May I point out to hon. members that in terms of today's standards of transport this was literally a toy ship in size. It was only a comparatively small ship in terms of the 250,000, 300,000, 400,000 and even 500,000 ton vessels now being constructed or designed. Yet, we have seen the appalling effects of this spill. This legislation will give us the right, in a sense as Canadian citizens, to legislate to establish standards for vessels carrying major pollutants which we will permit into our waters.

In other words, we will say, as we did in the case of the voyage of the Manhattan, that there are standards we as the Canadian government will lay down. If these standards are not followed, the ship cannot be used in the transportation trade of Canada. In addition, there are considerations in respect of hull design, such as the number of compartments that ought to be in the vessel and other things having to do with the structure itself. We will have the authority to ensure that navigation aids of various kinds are up to scratch, and that the vessel is properly equipped in every respect as well as adequately and skillfully manned to the point where the hazards can be reduced to the minimum.

But we will not simply leave it at this because it is also possible, as particularly those of us from the coastal parts of our country know, for even the best constructed vessel to run into trouble for reasons beyond the control of the captain. I believe there are phrases in Marine law such as, "acts of God" and "beyond the control of the captain and crew". So, we must do something to ensure that the vessels are sound and that they operate in our waters only under conditions which ensure that there is the minimum amount of risk.

There is, therefore, provision in these amendments in respect of the establishment of pollution control to give those who will be designated from time to time by the government the right to go on board vessels in our waters and issue instructions to those vessels not to come into a port or, conversely, not to leave port because of weather conditions and so on in order, again, to minimize the hazards. The work, particularly in respect of the Arrow, has indicated the necessity for this kind of legislation. The Arrow incident occurred on an extremely bad and foggy day, so we had the worst possible combination of conditions. The crew may or may not have been in some measure familiar with the area and may or may not have been totally competent but, in addition, there were bad weather conditions. So, in this legislation we are moving to ensure that such a situation cannot occur again. In other words, the legislation provides us with more power than we have had up until now to designate traffic patterns.

One comment Dr. McTaggart-Cowan made was that, in terms of international air transport, corridors are established and rights of way are declared. This also is our ideal. We propose the same kind of measures in terms of water transport within Canada's territorial waters. We will designate routes and will have the opportunity to control traffic so that there are not two or more vessels in the same region at the same time, if there should be a potential for collision or anything of that nature. We hope that through this combination of measures we will reduce very drastically the prospects of any major disaster of this nature occurring again. In this connection I might say we have also in this legislation proposed that not only the cargo of the vessels, that is the oil cargo, but that also the bunkering be included as part of the total package subject to control measures.

In many cases large vessels, such as I referred to earlier, actually carry for bunkering purposes, even though they may carry all manner of cargo aboard, more oil than was carried by the Arrow. So there would be a gap in our control if we said that a small ship carrying a cargo of oil would be liable but that another ship carrying a larger quantity of oil for its own fuel requirements would be outside the law. Therefore, we have embraced in this legislation the bunkering of vessels.

What is important in our experience is that, so far as I am aware, up to the present time there has been no law of the sea which applies to unmanned vessels. This again is because of the historic impetus of marine law which was originally for the protection of individuals. If no persons were on board vessels, there was no law governing those vessels. We saw evidence of this in the case of the sinking of the Irving Whale a few months ago near my hon. friend's delightful province of Prince Edward Island. This vessel carried something in the order of 11 million gallons of oil but because it was being towed it was not a vessel and therefore, inferentially at least, there was no risk to human life involved. This indicates a wide open gap in the legislation. So we do, indeed, include unmanned barges of any type used for the transfer of oil.

Without minimizing the problem, let me tell you what we propose to do about it. I have already told you of the establishment of the task force at the time of the Arrow incident and the additional competence we obtained at the time of the incident near Prince Edward Island. We are now moving ahead on the basis of Dr. McTaggart-Cowan's excellent report with a view to establishing certain depots throughout Canada where various materials which we now know are useful for the control of pollution can be stored, and where there can be a qualified team that can move to wherever an incident occurs.

I believe hon. members will appreciate the scope of the problem here. Canada has, I assume, the longest coastline in the world. Possibly the Soviet Union may have a little more, but my friends, for example, from Newfoundland and Labrador know that the coastline of the province of Newfoundland and Labrador is longer than the entire eastern seaboard of the United States. Canada has, as I say, a fantastic amount of coast to protect.

Mr. Lundrigan: I have most of it in my area.

Mr. Jamieson: The hon. member says that he has most of it in his area, and what he does not have I have. I represent the only constituency in Canada, Mr. Speaker, that is 700 miles long and half a mile wide. This actually is the case. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, there are parts of it that are so narrow I have difficulty in getting all of me within it.

• (12:20 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: Be that as it may, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is, as I have already said, we cannot exercise pollution control over the whole coastline at any one time so, we are proposing to establish depots for mobile teams at various points.

I have not touched on what is perhaps the most important part of the legislation. I will do that quickly. It is that part of the legislation which is designed to reinforce and enhance our contention that where there is pollution the polluter must pay. As hon. members will see when the legislation goes to committee, we have provided for several ways in which this can be achieved. In the first place, we have provided that various ship owners must give evidence that they have covered their liability through insurance, bonds and various other ways; that the insurance is in force and their liability is covered before they can move in to or out of Canadian waters. Secondly, we are proposing to level up to 15 cents per ton, not only on oil shipments entering Canada but on all movements of oil by water within Canada. In other words, we wish to cover the kind of situation which we encountered in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

The provisions of the legislation will extend to such situations. We do not really know exactly how much this toll is likely to generate, although on the basis of 15 cents per ton it should be in the neighbourhood of $300,000 annually. And, just to show that that is not an excessive amount may I say—and I believe hon. members already know this—that the cost of cleaning up the oil spill by the Arrow alone exceeded $300,000 by a very wide margin. Therefore, we have proposed the establishment of this fund.

One of the things about the fund which I think hon. members will appreciate and which I am very pleased about—I am very proud to be able to introduce this because I think hon. members opposite representing the Maritimes will also be pleased about it—is this: the fund will be and can be used to cover loss of income by fishermen as a result of pollution. Up to now there has been no means through which fishermen could be compensated. Individuals have found it extremely difficult, if not impossible, to take action in the courts and the like. There has been no means, other than government largess of one type or another, for making up the loss of income. Under this plan, the pollution fund will be used to clean up a pollution incident. From it payments can also be made to fishermen in order to cover their loss of income.

There are two ways actually in which the fishermen will be protected. On the one hand, the fund will cover income losses and, on the other hand, the liability provisions which I have outlined and which involve insurance and the like will be applied to any damage that may occur to the gear of fishermen, to their wharves, to their boats or anything of that kind. So, there is a clearcut distinction here which I think will work very satisfactorily. In other words, there is a clear insurance provision covering situations in which boats are damaged, nets are soiled or anything like that. On the other hand, the fund can take care of the loss of income and, through this means, we shall be able to make payments to fishermen much more quickly than otherwise would be the case in order to bridge them over any difficult period which they inevitably face under these circumstances.

A number of questions have been asked about this legislation. I have not attempted today to cover all of them by any means. I can only say that there is unanimity, I believe, within the shipping community that we have gone further, much further, than any other country in using this type of legislation in order to protect ourselves. I make absolutely no apologies for that, Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned. We have seen that historically, as I tried to document earlier in my remarks, the law of the sea generally has been weighted for centuries in favour of the shipping community. I believe it is high time that we reversed the circumstances and attempted at least to correct the balance somewhat on our own account and in our own interest.

I therefore believe that what we have proposed will do two things—perhaps it will do many other things, too. It will do two things at least. First, it will make the shipping community much more conscious of what I contend is its fundamental and basic responsibility in this regard. There will no longer be any inducement for those who want to exploit the shipments of oil and the like to the maximum degree to use rotten or rusty tubs in which to carry this highly dangerous and highly polluting substance. Second, I think it will help us to achieve what we ultimately wish to see: international agreement on the whole question of the control of pollution, not only within coastal or territorial waters but on the high seas as well. Third, and this is incidental to the other two points I have made, we want to make ship operators, those being the crews and captains of vessels, more conscious of their responsibilities when they are in our waters, not merely in terms of navigating carefully but also in terms of what they do with such things as oil bilge, the flushings from their tanks, garbage, and such other things which, unfortunately, crews and captains at the present do not seem to feel are important.

To cover this kind of situation, we have increased what was essentially a token fine of $5,000 for this kind of pollution to $100,000. Furthermore, as the legal gentlemen in the House will know and will see when the legislation is considered in committee, we have broadened the base on which we can take action against a ship operating in this way. We have tried, during the past several months of intensive examination and study of this matter, to determine just exactly what kinds of package measures were needed. I believe we have come up with what is at the moment the maximum that we can achieve unilaterally.

I am aware that there are those who feel we should go even farther. Indeed I, as the head of the Canadian delegation at Brussels last November, advocated that there be unlimited liability with regard to oil spills of this sort. Unfortunately, the world community was not prepared to accept anything like this. I can say to them through you, Mr. Speaker, that the instant the world community comes around to agreeing on the magnitude of this problem and on the potential threat it poses to us all, Canada will not wish to act unilaterally but will be quite prepared to fall in line with whatever is achieved through international agreements.

We cannot wait around for another Arrow to sail its wobbly way up Chedabucto Bay; we cannot wait around while perhaps the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the St. Lawrence Seaway are polluted and find ourselves helpless and powerless as we were in many respects when the two major incidents as well as some smaller ones occurred this year. That is why, on an urgent basis, I have brought this legislation before the House. I believe it will commend itself to hon. members. I shall be more than pleased, as I said earlier, to deal with it in detail in committee. I have not the slightest doubt that it will be approved unanimously. When this legislation is coupled with the improvements in the Fisheries Act, which my colleague the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) helped to bring forward, and when it is coupled with the Arctic bill which hon. members approved unanimously earlier this year and with other measures which will be taken within this area, we shall have devised within the short space of less than one year a comprehensive package which will ensure that our coastline and coastal waters are protected to the maximum degree that is humanly possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the hon. member for Comox-Alberni seeking the floor for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. Barnett: Yes, Mr. Speaker. My question has to do with the fund. The minister did not clarify this in his remarks, and I ask my question because the matter is not clear from my reading of the bill. Perhaps I should put my question this way. If there were two or three major disasters close together, is it possible that the fund could operate on an overdraft basis, since the amount in the fund would be insufficient to cover all charges against it, in order that the people who needed to be helped may be compensated?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to answer the question. I can only hope that we will not, in a sense, enter the committee stage at this point because, the answers to any of the questions with regard to this measure will need to be fairly lengthy. To be specific about the question asked by the hon. member, I see no problem with regard to having the fund operate in an overdraft state or something of that nature. Indeed, we anticipate that from the outset there might perhaps be some government advance into the fund on a loan basis to ensure that it becomes operative. I will be glad to discuss this with the hon. member in committee.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

• (12:30 p.m.)

Mr. Barnett: That covers the situation.

Mr. Aiken: Before beginning my remarks, may I be permitted to ask the minister a question which I feel is important? In view of the fact that the legislation is being sent to the Special Committee on Environmental Pollution, does the government eventually intend to transfer the responsibility for this section of the Canada Shipping Act to the new department of environmental affairs?

Mr. Jamieson: No, Mr. Speaker. There is no such intention in the legal sense, but my colleague the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) and I recognize the necessity of co-ordinated effort in this regard. The Canada Shipping Act has so many ramifications it is generally felt, and I think all hon. members will agree, that the Department of Transport has the greatest competence in this area. It involves the coastguard and this sort of thing. These provisions will remain the responsibility of the Department of Transport.

Mr. Lundrigan: A supplementary question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It seems we are getting into the committee aspect of the discussion. The Chair will permit one further question.

Mr. Lundrigan: Can the minister indicate under whose purview will fall the matter of oil drilling and any spills that might occur?

Mr. Jamieson: Here again, Mr. Speaker, there is no short answer. In so far as this legislation is concerned, it does not concern itself with anything other than shipping. Because we have to use the Canada Shipping Act to establish where the liability lies, that question is not resolved in this measure. The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources licenses oil drills, etc., and something in their regulations covers this field. I plead with the hon. member to give me time so that when we get to committee I can then give the answers.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his brief explanation of the objectives of this bill. I assure him that we in the Progressive Conservative Party support the objectives of this bill absolutely.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Aiken: This bill is intended to reduce the dangers of pollution of our waters by ships and their cargoes. To this particular objective we are absolutely committed. I am sure the minister understands that any comments, criticisms or suggestions that may be made by my colleagues or myself will be directed solely toward strengthening the bill, making it workable and effective, and clearing up some of the obvious administrative difficulties with which the minister is faced.

I join the minister in congratulating the task force "Operation Oil" which had the job of cleaning up the mess at Chedabucto Bay earlier this year. I was one of several hon. members who had the privilege of visiting this area. We saw the exact location of the disaster and the terrible results along the coastline, around the ship and for many miles in all directions. It was obvious that immediate measures were required to eliminate further spills. Even more important, and I place this first although the minister may have placed it second, when spills occur a group should be ready to deal with them.

The minister has expressed the extent of the bill. As far as marine regulations are concerned, there has been an effort to strengthen these in order to prevent spills. The minister referred to establishing groups throughout the country which might deal effectively with spills that occur. My main criticism of the bill is that it is not specific in setting up crews which could act immediately on situations such as occurred at Chedabucto Bay. I will deal with that later. Although this bill may not have intended to deal with that, I think it should. One of our most urgent concerns should be that we are prepared for disasters of this kind.

In a recent report prepared for the Progressive Conservative Party, of which I was a co-author, certain recommendations were made along these lines in very brief terms. I wish to quote paragraph 4 of this report:

> Contingency plans for oil or other spills from ships in Canadian waters need to be set down more specifically. We will set up, train and equip mobile crews to deal immediately with the actual or imminent spill of hazardous substances into water, drawing from the experience gained at Chedabucto Bay and elsewhere. To eliminate delays and arguments in emergency situations, we will embark on legislative procedures to give a Canadian government agency authority to immediately take control of any vessel carrying a hazardous substance which is in imminent danger of losing its contents into the water.

That is a brief, general description of our objective. The greatest concern I have at the moment is the ability of the government to enforce the provisions outlined by the minister. As he stated, they are not based on any international agreement or understanding. I agree that we cannot wait for years for such an agreement to be established.

There are other problems. We do not have a coastguard service sufficient to aid an inspector who may seek to board a foreign vessel for the purpose of inspection. The subject of a coastguard has been raised in this House quite often. We are now beginning to see the need. It would be a brave man indeed who would attempt to board certain foreign vessels and demand to inspect their facilities without sufficient backing. He requires the full force of the Canadian Parliament and a naval force to back him up when making such an inspection. Otherwise, the whole bill will be useless.

With regard to jurisdiction, we are concerned about the fact that fishing zones prescribed under the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act have not yet been defined. It is going to be very difficult to enforce this bill under present conditions. The definition of the application of this bill is in sub-section (2)(c). It applies:

> to any fishing zones of Canada prescribed pursuant to the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act:—

I hope the government will act quickly to establish these zones so that the bill now under consideration will be effective. If they are not, jurisdiction is gone and so are the prescribed areas. In certain parts of eastern Canada, these zones have not yet been prescribed.

• (12:40 p.m.)

I have not been able to discover in the bill any provision for the setting up and training of mobile crews to deal with emergency situations. The minister has said this is a desirable objective and that a beginning has been made in several locations. I had hoped to see the relevant provision written into the bill itself, bearing in mind the message we got from the special task force, "Operation Oil", on page 41 of its report:

> We carry no brief for the ratio of successes and failures in our own operations but we do hope that if there is another major spill in Canadian waters those responsible for the clean-up will be able to do a better job because of our experience and our recommendations.
> We are of the firm opinion that the only way that oil spills are going to be cleaned up effectively, when the responsibility rests at the federal level, is to have a small task force such as ours given the full responsibility and the authority to deal with it. This task force must, as it was in our case, be responsible to a single minister.

Further on, at page 42, the recommendation reads as follows:

> On the basis of these experiences we recommend that the Minister of Transport have the responsibility for dealing with pollution arising from oil spilled in water when the extent and nature of the spill makes it a federal responsibility.
> We recommend that this responsibility of the Minister of Transport be focussed in a small team at the headquarters level and comprise a minimum of one physical scientist, one biological scientist and one operations expert, the physical scientist being the leader.

This is somewhat similar to the operation which was set up at Chedabucto Bay. The minister did refer during the course of his remarks to such a force or forces but the bill itself gives no authority for setting them up in specific terms. I hope he is proceeding promptly to get these forces into operation.

With regard to taking charge of vessels in danger of allowing pollutants to enter the water, an existing section of the Canada Shipping Act, section 495(c), has been quoted. I am pleased to see that the section has been redrafted in clause 738 of the new bill. Correction, Mr. Speaker. On first reading, at least, the new clause does not seem to be much different from the old one certainly not so different as to give us cause for confidence that enforcement will be carried out more effectively. As I say, the provision exists already in the Canada Shipping Act. Yet we have found twice in the past year that ships in distress, foundering, with their cargoes likely to spill, have become involved in arguments between owners, charterers, masters and insurers as to just who would take charge and where responsibility lay. Delays in this connection could have serious consequences. Immediate action must be taken when spillage begins and sufficient authority must be secured from Parliament to enable the Department of Transport to take any necessary steps. I do not see that the new drafting brings about any improvement in the situation, and this subject will certainly have to be fully reviewed when the bill goes before the committee.

The report of the special task force on the oil clean-up at Chedabucto Bay recommends certain areas of action which, it says, should be specifically dealt with in the present bill. For example, it recommends provision for the setting up of a series of laboratories to identify oil products and, in particular, to conduct research into the effects of pollution on marine life. The minister told us that this was not really the idea of the bill he was presenting, but to the extent that there are no such provisions in the measure it falls short of what is required to give effect to the recommendations of the task force.

The task force also recommended that tugboats should be properly equipped and, again, there appears to be nothing in the bill in this regard. The special committee was particularly concerned about the need to instal dykes surrounding land installations and pipelines carrying oil products which might get into the sea. Here again, the minister may have decided that this is someone else's responsibility and would not come within the purview of the Shipping Act but we would certainly like to be assured that if it does not appear in this bill it will appear elsewhere. Again, I point out that these are recommendations which stem from experience and concern, not just from theory.

As I mentioned previously, the bill could easily have contained provision for the organizational framework for the setting up of emergency crews to deal with oil spills. As we all know, the time factor in these situations is of vital importance; remedial procedures ought to be spelled out beforehand and carried out quickly. The minister did make some reference to the matter but, again, he was not specific as to how the arrangements would be carried out or, indeed, whether they would be carried out at all.

There is one other subject I should like to mention and it has to do with the co-ordination of these efforts. Co-ordination between not only the various federal departments concerned but with provincial and other agencies is a most important factor in making anti-pollution measures work effectively. Here again, though the minister said he was prepared to co-operate, we do not see in the bill any provision for the establishment of anti-pollution forces in the event of an emergency. An ad hoc organization was certainly build up during the Chedabucto Bay emergency but arrangements to deal with such situations might have been spelt out more specifically in the present bill, stating who should be in charge and what departments should be involved. We raised this question before in connection with the Canada Water Act.

This bill provides for inspectors, and there is no question that pollution inspectors is what they are. The Canada Water Act also made provision for inspectors. The Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) has his departmental inspectors. Undoubtedly, the provincial authorities have their inspectors in jurisdictions close to the shore. I am wondering, as I have wondered once before, how the activities of all these inspectors will be co-ordinated if a situation arises where all of them have some interest or authority to exercise. Our minds are directed, of course, to Chedabucto Bay on the east coast of Canada, but a similar situation to that could easily arise on the Great Lakes.

The situation right now is terribly complicated. If there were a spill into the Great Lakes within the provincial jurisdiction of the province of Ontario, in addition to their own inspectors the inspectors of the Water Resources Commission as well as the International Joint Commission would become involved, as would any administration set up by that body on the recommendation made at the Great Lakes conference fairly recently. I hope that co-operation between all these bodies will be made effective; and I think that it could be made effective if the bill provided for the nucleus of an emergency team which would have overriding authority in such cases.

It may be the intention of the minister to consult with other government departments and with the provincial authorities with regard to making this very desirable addition to the bill. If that is the case it would meet this particular objection. Although at the moment arguments as to responsibility for pollution may exist between shipowners, charterers, insurers and the masters of ships, I hope we will not also end up with arguments between inspectors appointed under the Canada Shipping Act, inspectors appointed under the Fisheries Act and inspectors appointed under the Canada Water Act. I suggest to the minister that this might very well be made a subject for the consideration of the committee, and I hope if my criticism is valid—and I believe it is—the minister will move an amendment in this regard at the appropriate time.

As a member of the Special Committee on Environmental Pollution, I am a little perturbed and perplexed at the fact that this bill is being sent to that committee. I think the committee is competent to deal with it, but at its last meeting last session and its first meeting in this new session, the committee decided that it would like to undertake a general, broad study of environmental pollution in Canada rather than be tied down with legislation that would distract it from its original purposes.

I had thought that since the bill was being referred to that committee this might mean that a special responsibility would be placed on the new department. Certainly, I would like someone to explain to me what is going to happen about the desire of the Special Committee on Environmental Pollution to undertake a broad survey of the picture. Nevertheless, as a member of the committee may I assure the minister that we will be happy to give full and complete consideration to the bill if it is the wish of the House that this committee deal with the bill.

In conclusion, as I said at the beginning, we support the aims and objectives of the bill and we wish the minister and his special committee well in their considerations. In particular, I hope the committee will hear the members of the "Operation Oil" task force, and that it will also hear legal witnesses on the question of jurisdiction as well as representatives of shipping interests. It is quite obvious that the implementation of the bill will prove inconvenient and perhaps unpleasant to certain shipping interests, but I think they ought to be heard and given the opportunity to set their position forth so that we can deal with it.

I mention this point in particular because it was always a matter of regret when we were considering the Canada Water Act that representatives from the detergent industry were not called before the committee to speak to the special section of the bill relating to detergent phosphates. I hope this mistake will not be repeated, that those people against whom in large part this legislation is directed will come before the committee to give the committee their story, and that they receive a full hearing.

With those remarks I conclude. We will to the best of our ability make this bill an effective part of the pollution control efforts of Canada.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to share the sentiments expressed by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) and to say that our party too supports the objectives of the measure. I should like also to say how much I enjoyed listening to the minister. I find him articulate, persuasive, and extremely adept at pouring oil on troubled waters.

With those remarks, Mr. Speaker, since we are very close to our adjournment time for lunch, I wonder whether I may be permitted to call it one o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House agree to call it one o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It being one o'clock I do now leave the Chair. The House will meet again at two p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2.10 p.m.

Mr. Rose: I realize the difficulties we have had finding a quorum this afternoon but I would like to observe that members of my party are here in proportionately much larger strength than members of some other parties.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Is this quantitative or qualitative?

Mr. Rose: Before the lunch break, I said that the NDP supported the aims and objectives of this bill. We do not regard this piece of legislation as a particularly contentious one. I think I also thanked the minister for his excellent introductory and explanatory remarks.

I should like to start by saying that my remarks will be quite general this afternoon and will emphasize two very important concerns related to this measure. First, I wish to say that an otherwise perfectly good piece of legislation is being made ineffective, or not as effective as it might be, by the government's timidity in its jurisdictional approach to this matter. The government has designed this bill to apply only 12 miles off our shores. We think it should apply at least 100 miles, as it does in the government's own Arctic Pollution Prevention Act of last year.

Second, although this bill seeks to prevent—and I emphasize the word "prevent" because I think the minister made a great deal of this—further oil spills, it is unlikely that any bill can ever prevent such disasters. Therefore, we in this party believe we should press for very specific provisions to enable immediate clean-up operations on both our coasts in the event of some future spill which is almost certain to come. Fines levied after the event are not sufficient, and that is what this bill envisages.

Before I develop these two main points, let me review some of the recent history of Canadian oil spills legislation. We heard some of the history from the minister this morning and we were fascinated by his remarks. But I should like to add my own rather brief notes. Prompted by the ecological tragedies, such as the one that happened in the case of the famed Torrey Canyon off the coast of England, on December 8 of 1968, Bill S-23 was introduced to the other place for consideration. The bill included a very tough provision which was contained in clause 495(d) defining very effective measures known as unlimited liability to be charged to any carrier, shipowner or master of the ship. This provision made such persons responsible for not only the cost equal to that of the cargo and the value of the ship but also provided that the responsibility for the total damage, even though it exceeded the cost of the ship and its cargo, would be borne by the carrier, in this case the ship.

This was a tough but nevertheless thoughtful provision. During the committee hearings in the other place on Bill S-23 much concern was expressed by various interested people about this very tough provision. Shipowners, insurance companies and various oil interest representatives who were called as witnesses objected to this tough provision on the grounds that it would make the ship and its cargo uninsurable, and that that would effectively prevent any tanker from ever again calling at Canadian ports. The western oilmen would have probably applauded such a measure. The concern expressed by the insurance companies and the shipowners, although it was not meant to, gives the people some idea of the size of the risks involved. If the cost of the total damage of any spill and the consequent cost of clean-up is so immense that huge insurance and shipping companies cannot bear it, consider the immensity of the cost of any major oil disaster to be borne by the general public.

In any event, Bill S-23 emerged from the Senate committee hearings with clause 495(d) missing. In effect, the protection of the public was seriously threatened by its deletion. During the hearings of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, attempts were made by some of us, including the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) and myself, to have the provision for unlimited liability re-introduced into the bill. We failed, and later when the bill returned to the Commons an amendment was filed under the name of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni restating this concept on third reading or at the report stage, I am not quite certain exactly when. We wanted the protection of unlimited liability.

Of course, if the amendment had been allowed, the debate would have been very time consuming. Since we were close to the end of the session, the minister asked that the amendment be withdrawn on several grounds which I will enumerate. He suggested that the other parts of the bill were essential and should be passed before Parliament recessed for the summer. He went on to say that an extensive revision of the whole shipping act was forthcoming after this housekeeping measure—which was deemed very necessary at the time—had been allowed to pass. I may mention as an aside that this extensive revision will certainly come as news to various towboat workers in British Columbia who had so little faith in the Department of Transport safety regulations that they engaged in a long and bitter strike last spring in order to have the safety regulations made part, not of DOT regulations but of their collective agreement. Finally, the minister assured the mover and seconder that he would take the concept of unlimited liability to IMCO, the maritime convention in Brussels, in the summer of 1969 and would lend his great weight toward getting other maritime nations to see his point of view.

To the minister's everlasting credit he did just that, but in spite of the minister's great weight he failed to get agreement from the other maritime nations. When he returned home he was very bitter about this and, as reported in the press, stated that although Canada sought to get an international agreement on this very dangerous problem had failed to get such an agreement so Canada was prepared, therefore, to go it alone. But, Mr. Speaker, we did not go it alone. That was one year ago.

Mr. McGrath: What are we doing now?

Mr. Rose: At that time nothing was done. No legislation was introduced, and then we had the terrible tragedy known as the Arrow disaster. We know how involved the minister was; how worried he was, and how hard he worked during that disaster. We do not take anything away from him on that score, but the point is that Canada was going to go it alone, and only now are we going it alone, exactly one year later.

That brings the story up to date, Mr. Speaker. Today now we are considering a piece of legislation that falls somewhat short of the concept of unlimited liability. The liability is limited. It is limited to $14 million if negligence can be shown, and the remainder of the damage costs will be met from a fund. This is far short of unlimited liability, but still this bill is much stronger and has far more teeth than any legislation presently on the books.

I return now to my No. 1 objection, which I raised earlier, about the jurisdictional aspects of the bill. We are considering a bill the provisions of which are to apply only south of the sixtieth parallel north latitude, or in any area not covered by the Arctic Pollution Bill. Further, this jurisdiction extends only 12 miles from Canada's shoreline. I think we are entitled to ask a number of questions about this 12 mile limit. How can anyone justify the suggestion that the ecology south of the sixtieth parallel north latitude is less sensitive to pollution than that north of it? Certainly, there is greater population south of the sixtieth; certainly there is greater marine traffic, and certainly any oil spill could cause greater immediate damage in our main traffic areas, greater than is likely to occur when a spill takes place away from population centres.

Since the International Oil Pollution Convention has established an area 100 miles off shore—the minister reiterated this in his remarks—for the dumping of bilge, why has he not sought to make his jurisdiction congruent with that? Canada's jurisdiction is congruent in terms of the dumping of bilge, but here we are talking about how this legislation will apply to oil tankers close to our shores or moving about in inter-coastal traffic. In the case of the Arrow, the oil pollutants travelled 100 miles from Chedabucto Bay and substantial damage was done to Sable Island. How would this legislation apply in relation to damage of that kind?

Since the task force dealing with the Arrow spill recommended the establishment of pollution control zones extending 100 miles out, why has that recommendation been ignored, particularly when this bill is a direct government response not only to its failure to get international agreement but to the Arrow disaster? I think hon. members of the House should make it quite clear that this limited jurisdiction ruins the whole bill. It severely limits its effectiveness as a preventer of oil spills beyond the 12 mile limit. I think we should insist that an amendment be brought forward to overcome this limitation. I hope the minister will do this.

After World War II, the United States of America extended its jurisdiction to cover the whole of its continental shelf. South American states, such as Peru and other nations, have claimed exclusive fishing rights as far out as 200 miles off shore. Last year our own government, with much tub-thumping, extended pollution control zones in the Arctic to 100 miles off shore. Should not the same apply in this case? The minister shakes his head. Perhaps he knows something that I don't.

Mr. Jamieson: Never.

Mr. Rose: This is not the first time members of the government have known something that I don't, and it probably won't be the last since they are privy to all kinds of secret information.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Rose: Leaving aside the catcalls from the very smug government benches, Mr. Speaker, I point out that we are no longer in the days of the sailing ship. Big spills have caused and will continue to cause extensive damage. The minister recognizes this. That is why we are here. That is why we are discussing this bill. We are dealing with ships not weighing 18,000 tons as was the Arrow but with ships of up to 400,000 tons. Let us see what the task force has to say when comparing shipping with aviation:

> The sailing of ships is inherently easier and should be safer than the operation of commercial aircraft. They are substantially slower and it is a two dimensional rather than a three-dimensional problem. It is our judgment that until the nations of the world get together and sign a shipping convention, embodying the principles that have existed since the end of World War II in the civil aviation convention, of positive control and discipline, of proper standards of adequacy of equipment...the world is paying lip service to a problem of growing dimensions.

I am sure the minister will agree with that. International agreement has been sought on that point, and will continue to be sought.

If the example of the Arctic Pollution Prevention Act is to be a precedent for us, may I point out that international law is often made by recognizing existing national laws. We can take a lead in this area as well.

Mr. Jamieson: We are.

Mr. Rose: I turn now to my second major criticism of the bill, concerning the lack of preparedness in Canada to deal with oil disasters both before the Arrow incident and also today.

On October 1, in an issue of The 4th Estate, an article appeared dealing with the Irving Whale, the oil barge which sunk off Prince Edward Island, and to which the minister referred today. I quote the following excerpts from it:

> The federal government still has no contingency plan to deal with major oil spills that occur in Canadian waters.
> Had deep sea divers been summoned in the initial hours (of the sinking of the Irving Whale) they would have been able to plug the vent pipes. Naval divers were available for this purpose. Instead, civilian divers were hired eight days after the barge sank and the oil, chilled in 30 degree water 240 feet down, had congealed and practically stopped of its own accord.
> To be fair it should be pointed out that two coastguard vessels dumped several tons of peat moss on the fringes of part of the slick to absorb the oil and make it easier to clean up if it went ashore. This action had more propaganda value than real effect.
> The real problem is that Canada has no properly equipped and experienced salvage firm capable of dealing with the special problems posed by stricken vessels carrying petroleum products. Super tankers are now calling regularly at maritime ports. It is only a matter of time until the next serious oil spill occurs in this area.

We were just lucky, observes the writer of the article, Norman Pascoe.

I do not see anywhere in this bill any reference to protective plans and equipment facilities to look after the next disaster. The minister alluded to them in his opening remarks. Why aren't they in the bill? Without them we can expect further oil to be poured upon troubled waters. Let us have a look at some of the things the Arrow task force had to say in an effort to see whether consideration has been given to its recommendations in Bill C-2. The following appears at page 43 of the task force recommendations:

> We recommend that the federal government should have the operational responsibility and authority for all major spills at sea and should reach agreement urgently with the provincial governments concerning the responsibility for all other major spills.

Then, on page 42 we find this:

> We recommend that this responsibility of the Minister of Transport be focused in a small team at the headquarters level and comprising a minimum of one physical scientist, one biological scientist and one operations expert, with the physical scientist being the leader.

The following appears on page 55:

> We recommend that stockpiles of material be located at strategic ports. These would include peat moss or other absorbents, booms and boom components, and a variety of equipment not readily available, which will vary with each location.

Then the task force recommends that at least one slick-licker be placed at each major port on the Canadian coast and that at least two others be held in a central contingency packet. Then, there is a recommendation that the Canadian coast guard should have primary responsibility for the recovery of oil floating on the water, which will include slick-lickers, containment booming and all other ramifications. And finally, the task force recommends that the Canadian coast guard be responsible for steam-cleaning operations. Lack of specific clean-up provisions is the type of oversight which concerns our party. I am not suggesting that the minister is not concerned about these things. These are matters we will be discussing when the bill is before us. It is very easy for one who does not have the responsibility of the minister to adopt a position of, "I told you so". I think we should be fair about acknowledging this. The point, however, is that the bill is silent in this regard. A quotation I just read from The 4th Estate suggested that preparedness is sadly lacking. What does the minister intend to do about this?

Earlier I spoke about unlimited liability and the difficulties surrounding that idea. This bill attempts a compromise through limited liability insurance, with the remainder of any damage to be paid from the consolidated revenue fund financed by a maximum of 15 cents a ton being levied on the shippers. If we take the figures for last year's imports and exports, which represented some 61 million tons, we find that our total revenue would amount to about $9 million. Earlier, the minister said $3 million. Obviously he is dealing with different figures. The total costs for the Arrow clean-up were approximately $3 million.

According to the minister's figures the fund would have been completely used up in the first year had there been a fund during the Arrow tragedy. The total does not include any compensation and, in addition, all the damage was not repaired. The clean-up extended to only about 30 of the 190 miles contaminated. The Arrow contained 18,000 tons and would have paid only $2,700 into the fund. The amount of damage done can be much greater than might appear from the tonnage of the ship, depending on water currents, weather conditions and so on. When we consider the damage caused by an 18,000 ton Arrow, we have an idea of the damage that might have been caused by a larger vessel, say of up to 400,000 tons.

There are many more points with which I could deal at this time, but I am certain other speakers will touch on them. I am certain also that members of our party and other parties will be extremely alert during the committee hearings and during further stages of the bill. I shall touch, however, on one or two further items of concern before I resume my seat. Although it cost the people of Canada over $3 million to clean up the Arrow mess, not one dime to my knowledge was recovered from the owners of the Arrow.

Mr. Jamieson: Yes.

Mr. Rose: Not one dime?

Mr. Jamieson: Does the hon. member wish me to clarify this?

Mr. Rose: Certainly.

Mr. Jamieson: There is an international fund to which the owners of vessels contribute. While the hon. member is correct in saying that we have not received anything, there is an amount of about $1,300,000 which should be available.

Mr. Rose: That is very reassuring. I do agree that $1,300,000 is essentially a much larger sum than one dime. However, this still leaves about $2 million which the people of Canada will have to pay. Although the owner of the cargo, Imperial Oil, assisted in the clean-up operation no one, according to my information—and again the minister may care to interject—can legally establish the ownership of the vessel. This is a particular problem when dealing with foreign registry, flags of convenience and remote interlocking directorships. We do not know who owns the Arrow. We have our suspicions but nobody really knows. This will make the future collection of any damages somewhat of a problem because the Arrow, like most American and other national vessels really was flying the Jolly Roger. That is what it was doing; it was flying a flag of convenience in order to escape the responsibility for wages, working conditions, benefits and improvements in respect of its seamen, about whom the minister spoke so glowingly before lunch. Seamen aboard these ships do not enjoy modern living conditions, nor are they paid decent wages, nor are these vessels properly maintained. How will this bill assist in establishing true ownership, so that a claim against the owner has validity? I believe ownership should be declared before any ship enters our waters. Dr. McTaggart-Cowan, who was the chairman of the task force, had this to say about this situation:

> In my opinion, the flag of convenience is merely a device to enable shipowners to do an end run in avoiding proper regulation of their vessels. In the case of the Arrow almost none of the navigational equipment was found to be in proper working order. Shipwrecks of this nature are increasing at an alarming rate and severe steps must be taken to stop these idiotic losses.

Again the minister agrees with me. That is the reason the bill is before us. I understand that. Another point is that assessment at the rate of 15 cents per ton bears no relationship to the damage a wreck could cause. It is quite conceivable that a relatively small vessel, depending on the population density near the wreck location, could cause $1 billion in damage while a larger vessel could cause a smaller amount of damage, depending upon the situation. In other words, the assessment based on ship tonnage bears little relationships to the amount of damage its wreckage could cause.

We are pleased about the protective provisions in respect of fishermen relating to their boats and gear. However, I note that they have but a period of two years in which to make up their minds concerning whether or not there has been damage. The results of an ecological disaster may or may not show in a period of two years. Therefore, future claims of fishermen are limited for a period of two years when this period might not cover the situation. I have no suggestion in respect of a way around this situation although it would seem to me it should be covered in the legislation which is before us. I think we should also take a very careful look at this. Many of the areas in which wrecks could occur are the wetlands or tidelands. These are precisely the areas in which fish breed, and where an oil spill can cause the greatest ecological havoc. How does one compensate for birds and fish; how does one compensate in respect of such things? We should take a look in order to determine what kind of system might be devised.

I share the feelings of the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) about this bill being brought before the committee on environmental pollution. I realize that at first glance that is the obvious committee to which the bill should be directed.

• (2:40 p.m.)

An hon. Member: What else?

Mr. Rose: That is the difficulty. In the past, amendments to the Shipping Act were considered by the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. I should like to voice my misgivings about this bill going to the Environmental committee mentioned on two grounds. They are; first, that the committee is too small. It is representative, but it is too small, only one member of our party being on its membership; and second, as mentioned by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka the committee has other things to do. Perhaps it might be worth enlarging this committee so that the various things that committee must do may be covered.

An hon. Member: This bill will not go to the Transport Committee.

Mr. Rose: I know it will not; that is what I am complaining about.

In conclusion, may I say that we shall watch this bill as it goes through its various stages and try to change its direction here and there. I compliment the minister on the legislation. I reiterate my main objections to it: the bill encompasses too limited a geographical jurisdiction. I think it should go farther. We feel that the kind of mobile clean-up operational methods the Task Force envisaged should be clearly outlined and instituted, either in the provisions of this legislation or in the regulations resulting therefrom.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, may I just clarify a matter for the hon. member? I have no particular insistence on taking this bill to this particular committee. I wish to advise the House that it seemed to us that that committee was the most logical place for a consideration of the bill under all the circumstances. However, if the House is disposed to change that, there is certainly no objection on my part.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, first may I be permitted to take this opportunity of extending my congratulations to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) who has had conferred upon him an honorary doctorate by the Memorial University of Newfoundland.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: He is now Dr. Jamieson.

Mr. McGrath: I have no hesitation in saying that I welcome the fact that the minister has been honoured by our university. I think he truly deserves that honour.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McGrath: It may be a coincidence that the minister's first action after having had conferred on him an honorary laws degree was to delve into the rather hazy and mixed up field of admiralty law.

The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) put forward the principal views of my party and some of our reservations about the bill we are debating. He pointed out some of the shortcomings of the bill, although indicating to the House, as I am pleased to reiterate, our support of the principle of the bill.

There are one or two points I should like to put forward which are of particular interest to that part of the country I represent. Certainly, I know they are of special interest to the minister. Perhaps he will have a chance to deal with these points when the bill goes to committee. I notice that a number of the major recommendations of the McTaggart-Cowan Task Force have largely been ignored in the drafting of this bill. I should point out also that, to my knowledge, this report was never tabled in the House. I find it difficult to understand why it was not tabled and why a ministerial statement was not made.

While on the subject of statements, sir, may I say this. When the minister participated in the Brussels conference on pollution of the high seas last year he also promised, after being prompted by members of the opposition who were questioning him, to make a statement on the outcome of that conference in respect of the position that Canada took there and the course that Canada intends to pursue in subsequent international conferences. We were denied the opportunity of hearing that statement in the House and the opportunity of commenting on it. The minister can certainly correct me if I am wrong in that respect.

My reference to the Brussels conference reminds me of what I consider to be the major weakness of the legislation now before us: the fact that Canada has found it necessary to take unilateral action in a field where effective action can only be taken on a multilateral basis. All we shall be doing by passing this legislation is attempting to enforce the regulations set out in the bill within our limited territorial fishing zones. It is well known that some of the larger super tankers in the world today, tankers of the size of the Manhattan, require at least nine miles in order to get a full stop from full ahead. One can readily appreciate the difficulty connected with our jurisdiction being so limited, as well as the difficulty of enforcing any meaningful control over this very serious form of pollution.

Even though we may go along with the idea of enforcing this legislation within the territorial fishing zones of Canada, we shall immediately get into trouble when we come to the minister's own constituency or when we get to the province of Newfoundland and certain areas of the east coast. The one area of the country with respect to which the government has not been able to enforce effectively the fishing zone regulations is that area off the south and east coasts of Newfoundland. There is a very good reason for that. The reason is that the government has found its hands tied by international treaties which Canada, as a country, inherited from Great Britain and to which the government maintains we must live up. Those treaties involve the fishing rights of other countries, in addition to traditional rights of other countries the fishermen of which have fished off the coasts of Newfoundland for centuries.

The difficulty has been made even more serious by the fact that Newfoundland recently signed an agreement with an international consortium to build a 100,000 barrel oil refinery at Come-By-Chance on Placentia Bay, on the southeast coast of Newfoundland, that being the one area where the bill as it now stands would be ineffective and inoperative. The largest oil refinery in eastern Canada today is a 50,000 barrel refinery, which is either in New Brunswick or Nova Scotia. So, one can see the importance of the new refinery to the east coast and the serious pollution hazard it poses to that one area of Newfoundland where this bill will not have jurisdiction.

That is something, Sir—and I say this with all sincerity—that concerns me very much. We should not have needed to put up with such limitations in a bill of this kind if we had been able to reach some sort of meaningful international agreement. Indeed, the task force refers to this matter. I quote from page 3 of the report:

> We see no reason why the countries which have signed and lived up to the civil aviation convention for the past many years should find it impossible to adopt a similar convention to bring order out of chaos in marine navigation and particularly in tanker operation.

As Dr. McTaggart-Cowan points out, the precedent is there. It is a very good example. I refer to the International Civil Aviation Organization which, as hon. members know, is headquartered in Montreal.

Another well known expert in the field of pollution is from the minister's own honorary alma mater, the Memorial University of Newfoundland. Dr. Richard E. Warner, in a very useful and learned paper entitled "Environmental Effects of Oil Pollution in Canada", dated August 14, 1969, refers to the complication which we have in terms of the lack of a meaningful international agreement. I quote:

> Communication between interested scientists and organisations has also been hampered by the lack of a suitable international forum for reporting research results, proposed projects, and circulating other information which could materially improve research coordination and reduce duplication of effort.

I think that the bill, commendable as its objectives are, will not protect us from the very serious consequences of pollution from oil. The only meaningful protection we can hope for, and for which there is any hope of enforcement, would be to have some internation convention similar to the civil aviation agreement which operates under the aegis of the United Nations.

The increase in the tanker fleets of the world is a cause for very serious concern. Another very interesting shortcoming in the bill, which is of particular interest to the part of the country I represent, is that it will only tax carriers of oil. As hon. members know, other pollutants probably have even more serious consequences. I need only refer to the phosphorous pollution which occurred recently in Placentia Bay, where the consequences were so serious the whole fishing industry of Eastern Canada was affected.

Freighters from the southern United States daily carry phosphorous to the Erco plant at Long Harbour in Placentia Bay where it is refined into various by-products. This pollutant is not included in the tax which will be levied by this legislation only on the carriers of oil and oil products. These are some of the major shortcomings of this bill.

This bill points out the importance of continuing our international pursuits in the area of those treaties we have inherited from Great Britain which in my opinion should be revoked. One treaty which is causing great difficulties in enforcing our territorial fishing zones in Newfoundland is the Treaty of Utrecht. This not only gives France permission to operate within the 12-mile limit, but to operate within the three-mile limit, right up to our beaches. I repeat that we have not been able to enforce our territorial fishing zones area where enforcement is needed most, the fishing grounds off the south coast of Newfoundland. This legislation creates no jurisdiction in that area.

I also have reservations about having this bill referred to the special committee on environmental pollution. The same case that the minister made for this bill being under the administration of his department could be made for referring the bill to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. I was happy to hear the minister indicate that he has no strong views on this aspect of our proceedings. I am speaking personally, and not on behalf of my party, when I say that I hope the minister will agree to referring the bill to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. In my view, this committee is much better equipped to handle this bill.

Regardless of which committee examines the bill, I am sure hon. members will press for the hearing of witnesses. I am sure hon. members of the committee will want to hear from members of the McTaggart-Cowan task force. The committee should also hear Dr. Richard E. Warner who is internationally renowned in the field of oil pollution and environmental consequences stemming from oil pollution. I am certain there are other interested and interesting witnesses who may be able to throw some light on this very serious and complex matter.

I feel a mistake has been made by proceeding unilaterally in this field without having first obtained some form of international agreement. At the same time I believe it is a mistake to incorporate the principle of limited liability. If there is to be liability, it should be unlimited because we are now only beginning to realize how drastic the consequences are from oil pollution.

Not enough attention has been given to jurisdiction over the possibility of accidental spills as a result of tapping the potential oil resources on the continental shelf on our east or west coasts. We know of the unfortunate experience in Santa Barbara off the coast of California. We also know of the more recent experience off the coast of Florida in the Gulf of Mexico. I repeat my concern over the fact that this bill will have no application in enforcing the regulations in an area where enforcement is badly needed. I refer to the south and southeast coast of Newfoundland where there is a prospect of a 100,000 barrels per day refinery being put into production at Come-By-Chance.

I will be directing further questions to the minister. I look forward to hearing witnesses who can shed some light on this very complex matter. Working together with the minister, hopefully we will come up with some meaningful amendments to the bill so that when it is presented to this House for third reading it will be a better bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order please. Pursuant to special order made Thursday, October 22nd, 1970, it is my duty to interrupt proceedings on this bill in order that the House may resume debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Thursday, October 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): I wish to continue the remarks I started last night, Mr. Speaker. When the proceedings were interrupted at ten o'clock, I was intending to speak about the importance of marine resources to the Atlantic area. I intend to be a bit parochial in the few minutes remaining to me because this is one of the few opportunities a member has to speak about matters which affect his constituency.

I want to talk particularly about wharves and harbours in my area. Last year the estimates of the Department of Public Works never came before the House for consideration; they never came before the committee, either. The Committee on National Resources and Public Works, which normally studies these estimates, was bogged down by legislation having to do with the pollution of our waters and no questions could be asked on the estimates of the Department of Public Works. As I said last night, my area is heavily dependent upon fisheries and marine resources. Perhaps I should say it used to be dependent, Mr. Speaker, because right now the situation is very serious. This applies to the whole of Nova Scotia—in fact, to all the Atlantic provinces.

I represent a most beautiful part of Canada. The people down there are intelligent, they are tough, they are strong, they are industrious. Moreover, they are independent; they do not ask for much from the government. They do not care about all these highfalutin' buildings.

Mr. McBride: Is that why they sent you here?

Mr. Comeau: They sent me here because I care about their problems. I might add that they do not care much for partisan interruptions, either. They ask only for what is due to them. But they know what is going on. They see, they hear, they listen and they read about money which is being spent on different government projects, money they sometimes consider is being wasted though they cannot get a nickel from the government to repair a wharf so that they can tie up their boats. There is hardly a fishing village I have visited where people did not complain about the condition of their harbour or their wharf.

In the past two years I have received hundreds of letters asking for repairs, dredging or new construction to be undertaken. In some cases I have been successful and there have been improvements. But not enough has been done. Remember, the people in my riding depend heavily upon harbour facilities without which they cannot berth their boats or carry on their fishing enterprises. Every time I make an inquiry, the engineers in the Department of Public Works go to my riding, investigate and make a report. The reports are always favourable, Mr. Speaker. I feel the engineers do a good job. Then the report reaches Ottawa, the minister takes out his big axe, and goodbye, wharf; goodbye, dredging!

Coming from British Columbia, the minister does not understand the need. He does not understand that we experience high tides and seas varying up to 30 feet. He does not understand that we need sturdy facilities unlike those little floating docks they have on the British Columbia coast. He does not understand that good harbours are the basis of the economy of my riding and, for that matter, the economy of all the Atlantic provinces.

Two years ago I made it clear to the minister that I have in my riding 25 per cent of the harbours and wharves in the whole province of Nova Scotia. This is why my file on public works is growing bigger and bigger all the time. I do not know how many wharves I have inquired about: it is becoming ridiculous—Yarmouth Bar, Stoney Island, Camp Cove, Cape St. Mary, Church Point, Comeauville, Delap's Cove, Digby, Freeport, Ingomar, Lower East Pubnico Meteghan, New Edinburgh, Newellton, Pinkney's Point, Sandy Cove and Whale Cove, Saulnierville—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boulanger: Change cars; all aboard!

Mr. Comeau: I could go on and name them all. I make no apology for referring to these matters because this is one of the few opportunities we have to do so. Last year the government took away from Parliament the right to study the estimates of this department. There are many other areas in which there is urgent need for wharf maintenance and harbour repair: West Head, Wood's Harbour, Yarmouth Harbour, Abbott's Harbour, Shag Harbour, Annapolis—

Mr. McBride: There are too many.

Mr. Comeau: Yes, there are probably too many. In response to my requests I was told that the government intended to concentrate its efforts in building two or three extremely good harbours. I said: Fine; you come up with the good harbours and then I will listen. Yarmouth was supposed to have one of these good harbours, yet only the other day the papers came out with the headline: "Critical Yarmouth Wharfage Situation". What has the department been doing in the past three years? If it had built these harbours I would not be inquiring into all these things today. This situation makes one mad.

In Yarmouth we have two ferries, one going to Bar Harbour, a daily run, and the other, the Prince of Fundy, going to Portland, Maine, bringing in between 1,000 and 1,200 tourists a day in the summer season. The situation which faces us is that one of these boats, the Bluenose, which has been operating in my riding for quite a while, has to leave the wharf in order that the other vessel can come in. What a situation! The captain of the Bluenose needs to remain at the wharf. He needs telephone and water services; he cannot just put out to sea at any time. Nevertheless, he has to get out simply because the other ferry is coming in.

This summer all kinds of foreign vessels docked at Yarmouth. People from Digby, who are faced with a similar situation, were making use of the harbour. They were told, as I was two years ago, that Digby harbour was to be developed as a fantastic harbour serving the needs of Dibgy county as a whole. Nothing happened. This summer, Mr. Speaker, part of the wharf collapsed and a fellow almost got killed before tenders were put out for the repair of the structure.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Comeau: It is a terrible situation when you have to wait for structures to collapse before action is taken. The engineers in Halifax, in the regional offices, have been recommending that work be done for years. But the minister in Ottawa cannot understand the situation. With regard to another place in my riding Annapolis Royal, the minister told me, as an excuse for not building a wharf, that the export trade was slackening off. What kind of nonsense is that? Where did he get his statistics? I have not found such statistics anywhere. Certainly the government of Nova Scotia did not give him those figures. What bothers me is that the Speech from the Throne refers to the need for anticipating and planning. The government waits for the walls to collapse around it before taking any action. I suggest the government does not know the meaning of the word "planning".

• (3:10 p.m.)

I return to my main topic. The Department of Fisheries issued a statement two days ago stating that the ICNAF nations have agreed not to fish for haddock on the Grand Banks, effective as of today, October 23, until the end of the year. This is really quite amusing because in fact there is now no haddock on the Grand Banks. The government should have taken action a few years ago in this regard. It should have called a Law of the Sea Conference for the purpose of planning proper conservation methods. Had that been done, there would be no need for the present restrictions. The situation, Mr. Speaker, is becoming very serious. The minister has made some fantastic speeches on the subject of the fisheries, but either he does not have the influence he should have with his colleagues or he is unable to convince them that action should be taken. Many times he seems to be talking in the right vein, but it seems he cannot get their co-operation.

I have before me a bulletin issued by the Fisheries Council of Canada in September last. I shall read one paragraph from the bulletin as follows:

> It is now generally agreed that stocks of haddock and red fish are virtually extinct on the Grand Banks and flounder is in the process of being depleted. Furthermore, it is unmistakably clear that inshore cod stocks are less and less dependable due to continuing fishing efforts by foreign fleets.

Five years ago no one talked about the fisheries being depleted. Everybody thought there was a great deal of fish in the sea. Today there is evidence that haddock, herring, halibut, flounder and cod have almost become a rarity. Because of the shortage of these fish they are becoming expensive to buy. The inshore fishery is having a hard time.

Mr. McGrath: Soon there will be no Department of Fisheries.

Mr. Comeau: And soon there will be no Department of Fisheries. Where has the government been for the last couple of years? Why did it take an accident on the west coast before Canada and Russia got together? Two ships had to collide to get both countries together to talk about the depletion of the fisheries on the west coast. No mention was made of the east coast, so I suppose it will need an accident on the east coast to bring these two countries together to talk about the problems of the fishery on the east coast. When you have foreign fishing fleets consisting of 70 vessels, 50 vessels, 35 vessels fishing off the east coast, believe me, Mr. Speaker, the problems are very serious.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) has an interest in the fisheries and know that fishing is vital to the Atlantic provinces. Yet Canada has taken no initiative in the calling of a Law of the Sea Conference. Although the subject has been talked about for many years, Canada has taken no initiative in this regard. According to the Fisheries Council of Canada, it may already be too late. It may be that we cannot afford to wait for a Law of the Sea Conference. We must take the initiative to bring the fishing countries together, because Canada is heavily dependent upon the fisheries.

The department must convince Canadians that there is a livelihood to be derived from fishing and that that means of livelihood should be maintained. I am not saying that our fishermen are starving, but I am saying that we must do much more planning to conserve the fisheries than has been the case in the past. We must take proper conservation measures so that we put an end to the depletion of our fishing stocks.

Some Canadians think that the programs under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion benefit Atlantic Canada only. That sort of thing makes me mad. Grants are given to all regions of Canada under this program, not only to Atlantic Canada. Let us not try to create the impression that the central government is pouring too much money into the Atlantic provinces. If the government had carried out proper planning in the past, it would not be necessary to spend this money today. The Atlantic provinces are not getting any more than they need and deserve.

As I have said, the fisheries are vital to the Atlantic provinces. Another vital issue is the establishment of a 12-mile limit. Although we have been since 1964 talking of doing this, there are still eight nations which can come to within three miles of our shores to fish without let or hindrance. This is because the government says these nations have historical treaty rights. Let me remind the government that last year it had no worries about breaking the treaty with Washington.

[Translation]

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the hon. member for Gaspé rising to ask a question? If so, he will have to ask for the unanimous consent of the House, as the time alloted to the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) has completely expired.

[English]

Does the House agree to allow the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr) to ask the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) a question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for South Western Nova is apparently saying that there are far too many small fishing harbours in his constituency and I would like to ask him whether he has suggested to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) or to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) which ones were to be closed and where operations should be centralized?

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Speaker, I see no purpose in offering suggestions since the minister himself already has suggested his own solutions which I have agreed to but which were not followed-up. I was somewhat disappointed, and when I went to Gaspé about three weeks ago, I saw all those harbours along the Gaspé coast where there was not a single boat to be seen.

[English]

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we have all enjoyed listening to the eloquent argument of the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau). I did not find too much to quarrel with in what he said, except that I thought he went a little far when he suggested that he represented the most beautiful part of Canada. If he said "one of the most beautiful", I might go along with him.

• (3:20 p.m.)

I suppose at this stage of the debate we should not participate in a general discussion as to which of our constituencies is the most beautiful. We are at the point where we will shortly be asked to thank His Excellency for the gracious words of his speech. As is usually the case, not too much of the discussion has centred on those gracious words. Like other hon. members, perhaps particularly those on the opposition side, I am much more concerned about seeking-out those elusive advisers to His Excellency. It is one of the facts of life that during this debate, as a rule the particular adviser to whom one wants to speak is not to be found in the chamber at any given moment.

I could say some words to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing), for example, who despite what the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) says comes from the province of British Columbia. I suggest he also has displayed a fairly wide lack of knowledge about some of the improvements required on the Pacific coast of Canada. I shall not go into detail on that question this afternoon because if I did I would find myself talking to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), who impose harsh restrictions upon the amount of money their colleague the Minister of Public Works has to spend.

A short while ago I was going to say that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) was the only person to come to the defence of the government, but I see that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) is here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Barnett: He is being vigorously applauded by his supporters on that side of the House. He can listen to the words that may be addressed to one of the advisers to His Excellency, as I have described them. Earlier today, under another order, we listened to quite an eloquent speech by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) on a very important subject. This indicates that he is moving to take action in a direction which obviously will meet with the general approval of the House. I should like this afternoon to mention one or two areas of his responsibility in respect of which there has been singular lack of action, not only during his tenure of office but going back to when the portfolio was held by two or three of his predecessors.

This lack of action certainly goes back to a former Minister of Transport, the then hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, now president of the Canadian Transport Commission. As a matter of fact, when the hon. member for South Western Nova took us on a geographic tour of his constituency and mentioned all those places along the coast, I began to think he had been reading a speech of the former member for Bonavista-Twillingate. In the speech to which I refer, the then hon. member took us on an even more extensive tour around the coves and outports of Bonavista-Twillingate. That was when he sat on the opposition side of the House. Some hon. members may remember that geographic excursion.

The point I want to emphasize is the complete lack of action on the part of the minister and the Department of Transport to do anything to cope with the mess in the administration of small harbours in the province of British Columbia. I have raised this question many times and it was the subject of a previous debate. This mess reached the point, as some hon. members may recall, where the fishermen on our Pacific coast were prepared to allow themselves to be charged, and even sent to jail, before they would continue tolerating the unfair and inequitable arrangement which existed in respect of levying side wharfage fees. It reached the point where the minister who is now president of the Canadian Transport Commission appointed an officer of the Department of Transport, Dr. Tom How, to inquire into the situation. He filed an extensive report, with recommendations on this subject, in the fall of 1967.

As I travelled through my constituency during the concerned, a review of the situation on the coast of British Columbia shows that nothing has been done. The situation has steadily deteriorated and the administrative people in the area have an impossible and frustrating task upon their hands. I raised this question with the Minister of Transport when he assumed the portfolio. I raised it in a way which would indicate that I was prepared to give him some time to look into the situation, as indeed I did when the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) held that portfolio. I suggest that the time has long passed when one can allow the government to hide behind the excuse of frequent changes in ministers of transport.

There have been recent announcements about a new national harbours arrangement and authority. I am not decrying the importance of that move or the need for restructuring the management of our major harbours, but I suggest it is not good enough to have the whole question of a proper administrative arrangement for smaller harbours, which are important to the local commercial traffic up and down our coasts, left on ice. The Minister of Transport months ago said he would ask his colleagues the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) to look into possible changes in the administrative arrangement. From that time until now, neither the Minister of Transport, the Minister of Fisheries nor the Minister of Public Works has said one word in this House about what they intend to do, if anything.

As I travelled through my constituency during the summer recess I saw that the situation had become a festering sore. It is creating much doubt about the administrative capability of this government. I think the time has come when we should have from the Minister of Transport, on whose shoulders the responsibility rests, a statement regarding a definite plan or proposal to be put before this House for our assessment and examination. We should know whether the government is going to accept any or all of the recommendations made in the How report. We should know, after the review of this report—which presumably has been studied by the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Fisheries—whether the government has any useful idea as to how small harbours could be better administered. Let us not play around with this subject any longer.

In my area the commercial fishermen, the towboat operators, the commercial users and all those interested in having facilities for mooring pleasure craft are concerned. This is not only a very important matter because of the industrial and commercial activity that is going on, but it involves thousands of pleasure craft which are using the coastal waters of British Columbia.

When we had before us the new transport act, the government announced a general policy that the users of facilities should pay at least part of the cost of providing those facilities. I refer to transportation terminals for travellers by air and by water. That policy was adopted and settled in this House. At that time I believed, and still do, that it was the logical approach to take.

The commercial fishermen of B.C. have now, almost to a man, come to accept the concept of paying a reasonable annual fee for the use of public harbour and other facilities along the coast of British Columbia. But they want to know what the situation is. On the surface, I think the proposal of the Minister of Transport to unload some harbours on the Minister of Public Works and some on the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry can only bring about confusion, lack of co-ordination, overduplication in the case of some harbour facilities and unnecessary restriction in the use of others.

If any one of those ministers can put forward a logical argument as to why this kind of arrangement might be suitable, I for one would like to hear them in order to assess and consider the arrangement on its merits. My constituents and I are no longer content—indeed, for a long time we have not been content—with a situation about which month after month, year after year nothing is done.

I wish one other adviser to His Excellency were here at the moment. I refer to the man who recently accepted responsibility for the administration of postal affairs. I want him to reconsider the position taken by the erstwhile Postmaster General and the discriminatory policy of not extending postal services to communities which are entitled by law and under the regulations to have them. There is at least one such community in my constituency, namely, the city of Courtenay, which should have had these services over two years ago. The last time I raised this question there were, I think, at least 30 other communities in Canada in exactly the same boat.

The Postmaster General was hiding behind the excuse that this policy was instituted as a result of the government's restrictions on spending. When are these unfair restrictions on spending to be lifted? When will this government cease to discriminate against the citizens of some communities in Canada because its policies have resulted in a lack of adequate funds with which to administer the necessary services of departments of government?

I know that the genial Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, if he were to answer me, would probably off-the-cuff and in the pleasant way he has put forward a plausible argument as to why his colleagues the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance were justified in imposing this kind of restriction. This situation has existed for quite a long time. The government has had a chance to adjust the policies which it considered necessary and brought about with the meat-axe technique, as I have described it, in slashing expenditures.

Now is the time when at least we should know how much longer this kind of restriction on the extension of normal and essential services to communities will be continued. I hope that the minister, who has had previous experience with the Post Office Department, will very shortly rise in the House and make a statement of new government policy on this subject. I hope he will indicate that this discriminatory treatment in respect of some communities in Canada, including the city of Courtenay in my constituency, will be lifted so that they will have the same rights and privileges in the area of government services as their fellow Canadians in other communities.

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the Throne Speech was a rather interesting document because, to my knowledge, it is the first time that a government has attempted to outline its philosophic approach to government problem-solving. Among the subjects with which the government dealt quite extensively was the matter of the environment in the 1970s, the matter of pollution. These are very important questions and I thought I would bring to the attention of the House a specific example of the impact of pollution on certain segments of the country, an impact which can be out of all proportion.

I want to deal with the mercury pollution situation which has been particularly prevalent in northwestern and other parts of Ontario, and Manitoba. It has hit those industries which are dependent upon fish. It is said in my constituency, which depends on the tourist industry, that the local fishermen may get 35 cents per pound of fish but that the tourist who comes up to fish pays as much as $10 per pound of fish; yet the tourist industry provides about 10 per cent of the employment in my constituency.

Another group affected by mercury pollution is commercial fishermen. But perhaps the most important group and those who are most significantly affected by mercury pollution are the Indian people who live in areas in which mercury has destroyed their livelihood and, more important, has destroyed their way of life. No amount of compensation can provide adequate payment for what they have lost.

When we deal with pollution let me point out that there are all sorts of interpretations as to who is to blame. To some it is the company which pollutes, and to others it is the consumer who pollutes because he has been unwilling to pay the cost of the waste disposal of the process that brings to him a particular product. But let us look at the whole situation and find out who really is responsible for pollution. There are Crown corporations, as in Saskatchewan, and the private enterprise corporations; their shareholders, the management of the local mill, the workers who make the process work; and there are the service industries which are built around a particular centre of production, people such as small businessmen, school teachers and lawyers.

Another group is the consumers who, as I mentioned before, have had the benefit of low prices because they have not had to pay the cost of disposing the waste or the by-product of the products they purchase. Lastly, of course, and perhaps the greatest culprit of all, is government which represents the people, which taxes these industries, which regulates these industries and prescribes anti-pollution measures for them. I think hon. members will see, therefore, that the people who are basically responsible for pollution are not a particular group, such as a company, its shareholders or the workers: society as a whole has utilized this method of increasing its gross national product, thereby creating an effluent society.

When mercury was discovered in my constituency it had an immediate effect on the tourist industry and on the commercial fishermen. With all respect to the federal government and the province of Ontario, one must say that they moved in very quickly to look after the commercial fishermen, a small industry which in the province of Ontario has an income of about $6 million per year. But they ignored the tourist industry which has perhaps an annual income of around $200 million and was dependent upon the same product as the commercial fishermen, that is, fish.

The areas most affected by mercury were the English River system, the Winnipeg River and Lake of the Woods. In the first two areas the government moved swiftly to provide compensation to the commercial fishermen affected. But at Lake of the Woods we have had another problem because the mercury levels were not considered high enough to close down the lake. The federal and provincial governments, along with their chosen instrument the Fresh Water Fish Marketing Corporation, devised an arrangement whereby that corporation would buy all the fish produced from this lake and other lakes, test it for mercury, and that portion which was polluted would be destroyed.

The two governments agreed to compensate the board for the expense; the fishermen were not to take a loss. However, during the summer we had a great deal of difficulty because all the fish coming out of Lake of the Woods had to be frozen and later tested. At the end of the summer I went to Winnipeg to discuss the matter with the officials of the Department of Fisheries and Forestry. We came to an agreement whereby they would send a sampler to Kenora to take samples of fish, rush them to Winnipeg, make a test, and if the fish passed the test the catch could be sold as fresh fish. If there were some doubt, the fish would be frozen and tested again. The consequence of this was hopefully to put another $25,000 in the pockets of the fishermen.

What did the provincial and federal governments do then, Mr. Speaker? It would be only reasonable to suggest that they would allow a system that had been in effect for the spring and summer to continue into the fall. But halfway through the fall fishing season the Fresh Water Fish Marketing Corporation sent out a new price schedule, the effect of which was to penalize the fishermen on Lake of the Woods for mercury pollution, because instead of the government bearing the cost of the fish which were infected, the fishermen would have to bear the cost.

The result is that production of fish from Lake of the Woods has dropped by half, the fishermen's income has dropped by 25 per cent and a great many of them have ceased to fish. I would have had no objection to the government taking a step like this in the fall after the fishing season was over, but why in the name of sanity would the government do this in the middle of the fishing season? That is beyond my knowledge and I suspect it is probably beyond the knowledge of the ministers concerned, because while they speak pretty-sounding words about environmental pollution, the fact is that the government is not yet prepared to move. Therefore, society as a whole does not have to pay the penalty at this time, but only a few fishermen who are already living at the bottom of the economic margin. The government apparently is willing to see them pick up the full cost. Mr. Speaker, this is unjust as well as being stupid and unreasonable.

It is all right to speak of the dangers to the environment but there is another problem which has to be faced. That is the problem of these people who have been hurt by pollution through no fault of their own; in other words, the innocent bystanders must pay. It was not the fishermen who polluted the waterways, it was not the tourist industry which polluted the waterways, and it certainly was not the Indians who depend upon fishing for their living and income.

What are the alternatives? We have ministers from both the Ontario government and the federal government going around saying to these people, "You can sue the polluters." These are supposed to be intelligent men. I am not a lawyer, Mr. Speaker, but lawyers tell me that anybody who is stupid enough to think that a small fisherman or tourist camp operator could sue a polluter, that he would have the resources to go that far, is ignorant of the law and especially of law practice.

It seems to me there is a definite role for society to play, acting through governments, to compensate people who are affected by pollution. I do not refer only to mercury pollution, because as we examine our environment I am sure we will find there are other substances which are polluting it. Other people, equally as innocent as fishermen and tourist camp operators, will be affected. I believe the government should be working on a policy to provide some form of compensation to them. It is unjust to allow the whole burden of pollution to fall upon marginal producers of various items when the responsibility clearly is not theirs, when they did not cause the pollution but are being asked to pay the whole price.

I would now like to say a few words about the way in which Indians living along polluted waterways were affected. First of all, Mr. Speaker, they were wiped out of commercial fishing. This was not so important to them as a cash crop, but it was important as a means of supporting themselves, as a means of combating lack of jobs and lack of other income. Now they have been told they can no longer fish commercially. Their traditional fishing grounds have been eliminated from their use. Furthermore, they have been informed by officials of the provincial department of lands and forests that on no account are their women to touch mercury-polluted fish because mercury tends to concentrate in the foetus.

We have eliminated their traditional source of food. We have increased their cost of living. We have eliminated a certain amount of their cash income from fishing. We have also destroyed another source of income which they had, outside some logging and lumbering. That income was from the tourist industry. Work in the tourist camps may not seem important to many people, but in northwestern Ontario it accounts for 10 per cent of the available jobs. You cannot eliminate these big employers of men in one step and not produce a detrimental effect.

What should the federal government be doing in these cases? The Indians do not understand the concept of compensation for something they have lost. To them it is just another form of government welfare. Those who wish to improve themselves, who wish to go out and work in the tourist camps, now have this opportunity denied them; and there is no evidence that the government is prepared to move in some way and provide assistance for these people. Ministers of government are still sitting on the bottom of their big, round, stuffed chairs waiting for the problem to disappear.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot provide what we have taken away from the Indian people, which is a way of life and a way of adjustment into the society which has grown up around them. We have destroyed that, and nothing we do can compensate for it. The Indians know this. We can go to other people and buy them out, compensate them, and they will understand. But the Indians do not understand it. When we consider what we have taken away from the Indian we, too, know we cannot compensate him and we know the Indian is quite right.

I would like to say a few words in more detail about the plight of the tourist camp operators and of the people who normally sought employment from them. As I said before, Mr. Speaker, fishing is the basis of the tourist industry in northwestern Ontario. Now that we have taken away the use of fish from a great part of the region, in effect we have destroyed these people's capital investment and the legitimate return through profits that they might have expected—and this all in one blow. We have provided no compensation for them.

I am prepared to admit that the regulation of the tourist industry is probably a provincial affair. Certainly the province issues tourist camp licences. But this is an industry that lives off fish, which is a federal responsibility. It is something the federal government cannot ignore, particularly when one notices that in this case pollution flows from my constituency into the province of Manitoba. The mercury also flows into the province of Manitoba from the Assiniboine River through Saskatchewan. It is quite apparent that no federal government can hide behind the pretext that this is a matter of provincial responsibility, because it just won't wash.

What happened to the tourist camp industry in my area, Mr. Speaker? I can give two examples. Perhaps the largest and most expensive camp, after a careful survey to decide whether its guests would come as normal, decided to close down. It so believed that tourists would not come to it because of the mercury-infected fish. Another camp, which competes directly with the first one, stayed open and the results have been disastrous for it. At the beginning of the year it had reservations for 95 per cent of its available cabins, etc., but it ended up with less than 10 per cent filled. For the smaller camps along that waterway, the English River waterway, this year's results have not been as good as anticipated. Where they expected a good year, for most of them it has been disaster; and in the coming year obviously they will be put out of business if they are not helped.

The question is one of compensation, not only for the camp owners who saw their investment wiped out in one blow when the announcement in respect of mercury was made but for those who normally sought employment in the tourist camps. We cannot ignore these people, either. This is an area to which the federal government should be turning its attention, together with the provinces. It might well be that this matter should be on the agenda of a Federal-Provincial Conference to discuss the third party effects of environmental pollution, because I do not believe the innocent should suffer and the guilty get off scot-free. I include the government in the latter category.

What is the solution? Let me outline a proposal. About 15 years ago in the Sein River System, including Rainy Lake, Rainy River, Lake of the Woods and Lake Winnipeg, there was a great deal of pollution caused by the development of a new mine at Steep Rock Lake, Ontario. The mine experts went out there, examined the damage to the commercial fishermen and the tourist camp operators, agreed on a price, bought the property, and the next day sold all the property back to these people for the sum of $1.

That is an example of compensation. Perhaps we should be looking at the position of the commercial fishermen in areas in which we feel there will be no possibility of cleaning up the water in the future, with the idea of compensating them in this way. I do not believe it is a healthy situation when people are compensated on a year by year or a month by month basis. They are not encouraged to take advantage of other training so long as they receive compensation from the government. This might be an opportunity for the government to begin making another form of compensation, such as I described before.

Also, I believe we should look at the position of tourist camp operators who are in the same position and provide a formula whereby the government would assist those affected, on the basis of a system of paying them the capital value of their asset. Furthermore, the government should consider the situation of the people who normally sought employment in these areas in an effort to find a way to adequately compensate them for the employment opportunities they have lost.

I realize there are limits to how far we can go. However, another matter at which I think the government should look is that which pertains to gas station operators and others in the tertiary areas. I realize it is difficult to provide adequate compensation, but perhaps it might be provided on a community basis, such as changing the designation of the area to assist resource-based industries. It seems to me the government should address itself to this situation particularly as we examine our environment, determine what substances we are discharging into the air, water and life and their effect upon other innocent bystanders.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, at a time when this nation needs a most positive form of government and government direction, it is regrettable that this government should produce for the House a Throne Speech such as this, which has been referred to by the preceding Liberal speaker, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), as a philosophical outline. One would think that at a time such as this the government would be more interested in providing the House with an economic policy and an economic outline of its intentions.

It is also regrettable that this government has underlined its incompetence by producing such a document at this time. I say this keeping in mind that before I left Cape Breton I made it quite clear that I stood behind the implementation of the War Measures Act to cure the regrettable situation which has developed in the province of Quebec. I consider the proper implementation of that act to be the duty of this government. At this time of the death of an outstanding Canadian and when we continue day by day to hope that we will see the safe return of Mr. Cross, it is very regrettable that the government has not taken the proper action.

It is further regrettable that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) passed up the opportunity to put the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) in his place when he objected to the fact that our forces in the province of Quebec are English-speaking. Our armed forces have gone to Quebec in order to protect its people, yet when a member of the House raises a question such as he did, the Minister of National Defence fails to come to the support of these men.

Are we to believe that the Canadian forces in Cyprus or the Canadian forces in Germany would be withdrawn because the members of the forces are English-speaking? I believe the Minister of National Defence owed it to his troops to stand up and defend them in that situation. When the integration of the armed forces was before us there was no complaint about their being English-speaking. In this country, which from the early hours of Sunday has seemed finally to be showing a united front, it is regrettable that a member of this House should seek to divide the country by complaining about English-speaking soldiers being in the province of Quebec. It is also very regrettable that the Minister of National Defence did not defend his troops. When I rose to speak I did not think, and I still do not think, I could surpass the criticism directed at the government by the last speaker, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. He questioned the sanity of his own government. He said it is unjust and stupid. He also said that it is unreasonable, and that no action is being taken.

An hon. Member: That is not what he said.

Mr. MacInnis: I thought somebody would pick me up on that. I would ask the hon. member to refer to the remarks in Hansard, because these words will appear in Hansard unless the hon. member goes up and fools around with the "blues", as quite often is done. The hon. member also referred to federal responsibility. It is very regrettable that we have had so much lack of action on the part of the government.

It is further regrettable that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) interfered with the civic election in Montreal. I am not concerned about it one way or the other, but it would seem to me that he has attacked his own party and that his resignation has been called for because of the statement he made about the election in Montreal. I could not care less who is elected in Montreal. No matter who is elected there, Canadians will be faced with another big bill from that city. That city has had write-offs before and we must be prepared again to write off the expense of the Olympics which are to be held there. I recall the statement made earlier that there would be no cost to the Canadian taxpayer. Anyone who would believe this is experiencing a pipe-dream. The Minister of Regional Eonomic Expansion has been criticized for the statement he made. He has been asked to withdraw the statement and resign his seat because of it.

I should now like to speak about the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), who at the eleventh hour of the election in Nova Scotia appeared before an audience in Cape Breton and told the people what cannot be classed as other than a lie. The proof that this minister lied can be found in the bill which was placed before this House by the government, Bill C-5, dealing with the situation in respect of Deuterium of Canada Limited, in Cape Breton. The minister gave blanket approval. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) questioned the status of the provincial government in Nova Scotia, because he could not have been talking about Prince Edward Island.

According to the President of the Privy Council, everything is sunshine. He gave blanket approval for Liberal candidates in the Nova Scotia election to say—I have the tapes to prove this—that if elected they would improve the situation with regard to old age security. That is fine. The President of the Privy Council went before a Cape Breton audience and gave his blanket approval to this. That was done on behalf of Liberal candidates because the minister wished to hide from the people what little confidence those candidates had in their federal cabinet member. Almost everybody in this House has made representations to the government to increase old age security, yet the President of the Privy Council said, "If you elect the Liberals in Nova Scotia we will take care of old age security."

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. MacInnis: The President of the Privy Council gave his blanket approval to this.

Mr. Pepin: Let us hear the tapes.

An hon. Member: Which party was elected?

Mr. Pepin: Let us hear the tapes.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacInnis: If the minister wants to hear the tapes, I will provide them to him later. In the meantime I suggest that he will obtain his answer most quickly if he asks his colleague, the President of the Privy Council, to come into this House and deny that he lied to the people of Cape Breton.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. MacInnis: The tapes will back me up. Further proof that the minister was wrong in his actions is contained in Bill C-5. In addition to promising to look after the matter of old age security, if elected to the legislature in Halifax, these people made claims with respect to the Nova Scotia government and the coal division of Devco. That was another lie—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member would allow me to intervene at this moment. There must be some reason, I suggest, for the approach taken in speeches made in the House of Commons. I think certain words are most unbecoming. The hon. member will have a chance to speak in a moment; the Chair also has rights in this House.

I suggest to the hon. member that it is against the long-established practice of the House of Commons to ascribe lies to another hon. member. There are other ways of conveying the impression that one thinks the facts have not been stated correctly by another hon. member. I realize, of course, that there is a different aspect in this situation in that the hon. member referred to events which did not take place in the House. The hon. member is referring to the participation of another hon. member in a provincial election and says that the statements made during that election were untrue or did not accord with reality.

Whether the hon. member is correct or not—and he may very well be correct—I suggest to him that the language used is not in accordance with the customs, traditions and usages of the House of Commons. I am sure the hon. member would wish to keep that in the back of his mind as he proceeds with his remarks. I apologize for interrupting him. He has every right to say what he thinks in this House.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I wondered whether on October 20, three days ago, when the word "lie" was used in the House, a few of the rules and customs of the House went through the window. I thought that the rules and procedures of this House applied to all backbenchers as well as to prime ministers and members of the cabinet. I draw Your Honour's attention to page 392 of Hansard for October 20. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is reported to have used the following phrase: "or is he just interested in telling lies to the House?" He was replying to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). He then went on to say, "Is it a lie or not?". Strangely enough, in that case, sir, no one was in a position to know whether or not a lie was involved.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The point made by the hon. member is very well taken. I assure him that I am in full agreement with him. No matter whether such language is used by senior members of the House or by less senior members such as the hon. member, it still is not correct. I certainly would not condone the use of such words by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) or by the most senior or the most junior member.

May I say that if the hon. member had been in the Chair at that time he would have heard quite a bit of noise. Certainly, the exchange which took place between the two right hon. gentlemen was not audible to the Chair. It was picked up by the Hansard reporters; they obviously have better ears than the Speaker. That is how those unfortunate words got on the record. I noticed them the next day and felt badly about them. I certainly would not want the use of such words, even by the Prime Minister, to set a precedent.

The hon. member is quite right to bring his point forward. We cannot allow even right hon. members of the House to use words that are prohibited in the language of other hon. members. I tell the hon. member that I am sorry I was not on my feet at the time, to mention or bring home a point of order to the right hon. gentleman in the sense that I am now doing in the case of the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis). Again I must apologize for interrupting him. I am sure his speech is much more interesting than mine.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, in the language of the House of Commons, the statement made in the press with regard to the blanket approval on the part of the President of the Privy Council to the approach to be used by Liberals seeking office in Nova Scotia was far removed from the truth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I commend the hon. member for his choice of language.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacInnis: The matter I am talking about touches on the responsibilities of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) and all members of this House. During the past two years I have been fighting on behalf of the miners who were retired before retirement age by the Cape Breton Development Corporation which is a Crown company. Certain officers there enjoying executive positions, expensive cars and expense accounts, have been given the protection of the civil service, while others more deserving of that protection are without it.

There are men there who ought to be given the protection that has been extended to certain Englishmen who have come over here and taken our jobs. The men who are employed by the Crown corporation are entitled to the same protection afforded by the Civil Service Act as has been extended to Englishmen who have come over here and bumped out of their jobs men in the coal industry in Cape Breton who are more qualified than them. I say without fear of contradiction that the men who were brought in, replaced men who are far superior in the coal mining industry. They were brought over to this country and given these jobs. They were extended the protection of the civil service. That protection ought to have been extended to other employees of this Crown corporation.

While I am on the subject of mining in Cape Breton, I appeal to the government, as I have appealed to it in the past, to take a good look at the legislation that was passed to set up the Cape Breton Development Corporation. The minister at times has been a little annoyed at remarks I have made. I say that Messrs. Ord and Blackmore have misinformed the minister on a number of occasions and told him things that do not accord with the facts. I ask all members of this House, including the Minister of Labour, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and the minister who represents Cape Breton in this House, to examine the involvement of UIC funds in the subsidization of the pre-retirement plan of the Cape Breton miners. We should look at that legislation. As I do not have a copy of the legislation here, I will paraphrase it. Section 18 specifically states that the funds to be used to pay the men on pre-retirement are to be from the coal division fund. That is spelled out in black and white in the legislation. The Cape Breton Development Corporation has nothing to do with the UIC fund. Although they have absolutely no administrative responsibility, they are using the money the miners have paid into the fund, some for as long as 45 years.

When Mr. Blackmore arrived from England he walked into a cushy job. He is the man who set this up. Nowhere in the legislation passed by this House has Devco been given authority to touch UIC funds. Many men receive their UIC cheque every second week and Devco makes up the balance to $2,500 or $3,000. It is not possible for a man in his first year of retirement to receive more than $300 or $400 from Devco, yet the legislation states that the least he shall receive is $2,500, with a maximum of $3,000. That is an abuse of the privilege of the members of this House who voted in support of that legislation.

Mr. Blackmore is making a fool of everyone in the House. Where in the legislation is authority given to Mr. Blackmore to take the UIC fund from the miners? There are distinct instructions in the legislation that the pre-retirement leave fund is to be put into coal division moneys, yet the Minister of Labour states there are hundreds of similar situations throughout the country.

I could make some remarks about the competence of Mr. Ord as well as many other statements about Mr. Blackmore. If it were not for the fact that a capable Nova Scotian has proven himself, this situation would still be running wild. These men spent the money of Cape Bretoners as if it were going out of style. They failed to realize that even with this government there is a bottom to the barrel. Why are these men receiving protection under the Civil Service Act, when it is being denied to the rank and file members of that Crown corporation? The legislation dealing with the situation was passed by this House.

Mr. Blackmore came to Canada and set himself up as a Caesar in Cape Breton Island. In defiance of legislation passed in this House he dictates to the government and to Cape Bretoners. When he appeared before our committee he made statements which are not in accord with the facts. If anyone questions this statement, I can show him the many contradictions of Mr. Blackmore which appear in the reports of the Standing Committee on Regional Development. If Mr. Blackmore appears before this committee again, I hope it is as a sworn witness. This man cannot be depended upon for anything unless he is under oath. I ask you gentlemen to examine the worth while legislation you passed.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I apologize to the hon. member, but I must remind him that he should not address himself to gentlemen but to the Chair.

Mr. MacInnis: I keep going wrong, Mr. Speaker. However, this matter has been bothering me for some time. It has been very difficult for me to get the point across to the minister responsible, despite the fact that we see eye-to-eye on many drawbacks and pitfalls these men place before the government through the incompetent handling of many situations in this area.

Mr. R. B. Cameron has now taken over this task. He has saved this government many millions of dollars. If Mr. Cameron had not taken over this task there would be no money left to provide for what the legislation originally intended. Hon. members should examine this legislation to see what they supported. Are they going to allow this man to continue to affect in a detrimental way, not only the miners but the communities involved? Can we allow him to deny the good legislation passed in this House and allow suffering in the communities affected?

If any member questions the accuracy of these statements, I can verify them by correspondence I have received from the minister and by the reports of the Standing Committee in which there are pages of contradictions. This is a very serious situation. The legislation was supposed to be beneficial, yet there are detrimental effects in the mining communities in and around Cape Breton. Because of this situation the legislation was passed. These communities have not received the benefits that were promised through the establishment of the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

I ask that the protection being given to the executives of the Cape Breton Development Corporation be extended to the working man so that any future lay-offs will come under the Civil Service Commission. I appeal to hon. members to examine the legislation with respect to the use of the UIC fund. Devco had no business touching this fund. In fact, they are instructed where the moneys for the pre-retirement leave will come from.

It is ironic, but I have witnessed Devco, with their bleeding hearts and pronouncements, "taking care" of the Cape Breton miners. I have seen a cheque in the amount of two cents which was paid to a retired miner for a two-week period. Unfortunately, the cheque is no longer available. It would have been a worth while document to table in this House. However, Mr. Speaker, there would be no problem in obtaining many cheques with a value under $10 which are paid every second week, cheques to the Cape Breton miners on pre-retirement leave.

This is not what our legislation intended, and I hope gentlemen, that among you, along with Liberals elected to Halifax who were given blanket approval by the President of the Privy Council, means can be found to impress upon this government the need to do the right thing by the miners of Cape Breton who are suffering because of this import who is pushing his weight around.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being the end of the debate, pursuant to the Special Order made on Thursday, October 22, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings forthwith and to put any question necessary to dispose of the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion (Mr. Trudel) agreed to.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence) moved:

That an Address be engrossed and presented to His Excellency the Governor General by Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 58 I move, seconded by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin):

That this House at its next sitting consider the business of supply.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the minister tell us whether the business on Monday will be the same as was announced last night?

Business of the House

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I know of no change in the business as announced last evening by my colleague.

On motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) the House adjourned at 4.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, October 26, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to advise the House that I will call item No. 17 as the first order of government business today because I understand an agreement has been reached that this reference to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence can be approved by the House without debate. Therefore I shall call it as the first item.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): That is correct, Mr. Speaker; as the result of discussion among those especially concerned, this has been agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FISHERIES

AGREEMENTS WITH RUSSIA RESPECTING NORTHEASTERN PACIFIC OCEAN—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 relating to the acceptance of motions by unanimous consent I would like to ask for consent, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster but in conjunction with the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry who said that he would be glad to do so but has not done it yet, to move the following motion:

That the two draft agreements negotiated between fisheries experts of Canada and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics for resolving problems associated with Canadian and Soviet fishing operations in the northeastern Pacific Ocean, as referred to in a communiqué from the Department of Fisheries and Forestry dated October 21, 1970, be referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has indicated the nature of his motion which, under Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

23226—35

Mr. Speaker: There are a few nays which indicate there is not unanimous agreement. Therefore the motion cannot be put.

RAID ON MAGAZINE DISTRIBUTOR IN THE TORONTO AREA

Question No. 35—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Did the RCMP, in co-operation with Metro Toronto Police during 1969, make a raid on a magazine distributor in the Toronto area armed with a Writ of Assistance and, if so (a) on what date did this take place (b) under provision of which Act was the Writ of Assistance used?

2. Were charges under the Act for which the Writ of Assistance was used laid against the magazine distributor and, if not, were charges laid under any other Act?

3. Was a large quantity of magazines seized on the occasion of the raid, and, if so, what was the wholesale or retail value of the seized magazines?

4. (a) How long were the magazines, seized through the use of the Writ of Assistance, kept by the police (b) were they held by the RCMP or the Toronto police?

5. Were representations made by the magazine distributor or his legal counsel for return of the magazines and, if so (a) when and how long before they were actually returned (b) for what reasons were the magazines held for the length of time they were held?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): 1. On information received that a magazine distributor located in Toronto, Ontario, was in possession of unlawfully imported obscene magazines and films, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in conjunction with the Metropolitan Toronto Police Department, conducted a search on July 5, 1969 under authority of a Writ of Assistance issued pursuant to the Customs Act.

2. Charges were not laid under the Customs Act. Subsequently charges were preferred by the Metropolitan Toronto Police Department under Section 150 of the Criminal Code of Canada.

3. A total of 4,255 magazines, bearing 13 different titles, and 544—100 feet 8 m.m. films, bearing 20 different titles, were placed under Customs detention pursuant to the Customs Act. The value of the magazines and films was not determined as they were not appraised by Customs.

4. The magazines and films placed under Customs detention were retained by the RCMP from July 5, 1969 until December 10, 1969. The Metropolitan Toronto Police Department was permitted, for a short time, to take possession of the magazines and films for examination concerning the proposed Criminal Code prosecution.

5. Representation was made for return of the magazines and films by Legal Counsel on behalf of the magazine distributor on December 1, 1969. The magazines and films were returned to the magazine distributor by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police on December 10, 1969. Samples of the magazines and films placed under Customs detention by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were forwarded on August 26, 1969, to the Department of National Revenue, Ottawa, for a ruling under Tariff Item 99201-1. A ruling was not given by the Department in view of the prosecution under Section 150 of the Criminal Code of Canada by the Metropolitan Toronto Police Department.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES SUPERANNUATION ACCOUNT

Question No. 72—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. What was the total amount of money in the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account as at (a) March 31, 1968 (b) March 31, 1969 (c) March 31, 1970?

2. What rate of interest does the government pay for the use of this money?

3. What amount of interest was credited to the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account during the fiscal years ending (a) March 31, 1968 (b) March 31, 1969 (c) March 31, 1970?

4. What was the total amount paid out of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account during the fiscal years ending (a) March 31, 1968 (b) March 31, 1969 (c) March 31, 1970?

Questions

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): 1, 3 and 4. This information is tabled in the House annually in accordance with Revised Statutes 1966-67, c.44, s.53, and also appears in the Public Accounts, as Appendix 1, to the National Defence Expenditures.

2. Section 21 of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Regulations were amended by TB/CT 692055-1, dated September 25, 1969. The actual interest rates for the four quarters subsequent to this date, were as follows: Quarter ending September 1969, 1.2416 per cent; December 1969, 1.2575 per cent; March 1970, 1.2868 per cent; June 1970, 1.3174 per cent.

PUBLIC RELATIONS FIRMS HIRED BY GOVERNMENT TO PRODUCE INFORMATION ON GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Question No. 81—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What public relations firms or economic or social research organizations have (a) been commissioned by government departments, agencies or Crown corporations (b) been hired or given contracts to produce pamphlets, brochures, economic surveys, etc., for educating or explaining government policies to the public?

2. By what government department or agency were they hired?

3. What specific task were they given to do?

4. How much money were they paid?

5. Was the choice of the firm concerned arrived at by asking for tenders and, if not, how was the choice made?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): See return to question No. 1,427 deposited with the Clerk of the House of Commons on June 22, 1970.

INCOME TAX ACT AMENDMENTS FOR CLAIMS OF CAPITAL COSTS FOR AIRCRAFT

Question No. 84—Mr. Forrestall:

Will the government give consideration to amending that section of the Income Tax Act which provides claims of capital costs for automobiles used in the course of employment with a view to including aircraft?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): This is a matter of Government policy. If the Government should decide to propose an amendment to the Income Tax Act to make the suggested change it will be announced at the appropriate time.

D.D.H. CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM

Question No. 123—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What was the original cost estimate, including all components, of the present DDH construction program?

2. What is the present cost estimate including all components and sea trials?

3. Is the construction program on time and, if not, what is the nature of the delay?

4. Have there been any substantial cutbacks in the components of this program in order to maintain the original cost estimate?

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): 1. See Hansard dated April 28, 1969, page 8035.

2. The program, including costs, is presently under review.

3. No, there is a delay of approximately one year. Until the review has been completed, it is impossible to be more specific.

4. See 2 above.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—REDUCTION OF FORCES

Question No. 125—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Has the Department of National Defence been instructed to prepare contingency plans for the reduction of the Canadian Armed Forces to a level below 60,000 members?

2. Is the government considering a further phased reduction of the strength of the Canadian Armed Forces beyond that already publicly announced and, if so, from what elements will such reduction be made?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): 1. No, present plans call for a regular force strength of approximately 82,000 by April 1, 1973.

2. No.

MARITIME COMMAND PERSONNEL

Question No. 130—Mr. Forrestall:

1. In the nine months ended September 30, 1970, how many officers or men of the Maritime Command (a) have been released (b) transferred to other commands including Headquarters?

2. What was the strength of the Maritime Command as of January 1 and September 30, 1970?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): 1. (a) One hundred and thirty-eight officers, 1,327 men, have been released through normal attrition, e.g. reaching age for retirement, medical grounds, voluntary, etc. (b) Records are not maintained in a manner which would make this information readily available without a costly manual search of individual files.

| 2. | January 1, 70 | September 30, 70 |

| Officers | 2,011 | 2,172 |
| Men | 13,120 | 13,486 |

APPOINTMENT OF WOMEN TO CERTAIN POSITIONS

Question No. 133—Mr. Forrestall:

1. In the period commencing April 23, 1968 and ending July 25, 1969, how many women were appointed to a position or otherwise employed, other than under the provisions of sections 8 and 9 of the Public Service Employment Act, by the government under conditions or remuneration equitable to a salary of $10,000 or more per year?

2. Who are they?

3. By whom were they employed and what was the rank of their position?

4. How many men were appointed or otherwise employed under the same conditions during the same period of time?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): See return to question No.

317 deposited with the Clerk of the House of Commons on February 25, 1970.

NATIONAL DEFENCE RESERVE, BROKEN GROUP ISLANDS, BARKLEY SOUND

Question No. 137—Mr. Barnett:

1. Were Effingham and other Islands in the Broken Group in Barkley Sound, Vancouver Island, ever held by the government through the Department of National Defence, either by transfer of title, or through an agreement with the Government of British Columbia held in a National Defence reserve and thus removed from alienation from the Crown and, if so, when did the government assume such control of these lands?

2. Were these lands subsequently released to the Province and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes, according to Federal Order-in-Council P.C. 6777, August 26, 1943, these islands were reserved by the Province of British Columbia for use by the Dominion of Canada by Provincial Order-in-Council 874, June 21, 1943.

2. Yes, as the islands were no longer needed for defence purposes, the reservation was cancelled by the Province of British Columbia in 1967.

BEAUCE CONSTITUENCY—FINANCIAL PARTICIPATION BY GOVERNMENT

Question No. 139—Mr. Rodrigue:

For each project in which the government has participated financially since 1965 in the constituency of Beauce (a) what was the nature of the project (b) what is the amount of money invested by the government in each of these projects (c) what was the amount of money invested by the provincial government in each of these projects (d) were any other contributions made and, if so, what was the amount of money involved and by whom were they made?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): It is not feasible to provide aggregate information on expenditure disbursements or revenue collections for constituencies, counties or other comparable units. Government estimates are not prepared on this basis nor are records of expenditures kept in this way.

Information concerning expenditures could be supplied about specific projects or programs which are identified in a question. These, of course, would in some cases relate to a particular constituency or locality.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION—SELECTION STANDARDS

Question No. 140—Mr. Osler:

Has Treasury Board any plans to call for consultation with the Public Service Commission concerning (a) selection standards (b) the apparent lapses from government policy admitted by the Chairman?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): (a) Yes. Treasury Board consults with the Commission on selection standards on a regular basis. (b) No.

PERSONNEL OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON TAXATION

Question No. 197—Mr. Saltsman:

1. Who are the persons recently appointed to the Advisory Committee on Taxation for the Department of National Revenue, and in each case, what is their present occupation?

2. What remuneration do the above persons receive from the Department of National Revenue?

3. What criteria were used in the selection of these persons?

4. Does any earn less than $8,000 a year?

5. What percentage of Canadian taxpayers, according to the most recently available statistics, earn less than $8,000 a year?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): 1. The members of the Taxation Advisory Committee and their occupations are set out below: Raymond G. Décary, Lawyer; Sydney E. Ewens, Tax Manager; Edwin C. Harris, Professor; W. R. Latimer, Lawyer; Charles McLaughlin, Tax Manager; Charles Pelletier, Accountant; C. Albert Poissant, Accountant; Donald C. Selman, Accountant; Alan Sweatman, Lawyer; David Y. Timbrell, Accountant.

2. The members of the Committee are serving without remuneration.

3. The criteria used were a wide knowledge of taxation systems in general and a thorough knowledge of the Canadian system in particular by persons who would be representative of the various regions of the country and of its two official language groups.

4. The provisions of Section 133 of the Income Tax Act prohibit the communication of such information.

5. The most recently available statistics, which are in respect of the 1968 taxation year, show that 82 per cent of Canadian individual taxpayers earned less than $8,000 a year.

NATIONAL SECURITY

WAR MEASURES ACT—ESTABLISHMENT OF AUTHORITY TO REVIEW ARRESTS AND DETENTIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. He has indicated that he made suggestions to the province of Quebec with regard to a review of actions being taken under the War Measures Act. Can the minister tell the House whether he has received any assurance from the Minister of Justice of Quebec or from the government of Quebec that some authority is being established by that province for the review of arrests and detentions under the War Measures Act?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I cannot add anything to what I have said already except that I know from a personal conversation with the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Quebec that he is actively considering that proposition.

Mr. Stanfield: Since the government of Canada invoked the War Measures Act and suspended, to the extent that it has, the due process of law and since no assurance has yet been given by the province of Quebec, is the government of Canada itself prepared to establish an independent authority for the purpose of reviewing all arrests and detentions made under the Act in any part of the country?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, within the terms of those regulations the administration of law enforcement under those regulations is the same as the administration of the criminal law under the Criminal Code and is properly, in this case, left to the Attorney General of Quebec.

Mr. Stanfield: I notice the care with which the minister answered my question. I ask him now whether his position is that the Governor General in Council does not have jurisdiction under the War Measures Act to establish such an authority for the review of actions taken under that Act or, rather, that it is not expedient to exercise that jurisdiction?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Certainly, in so far as the first part of the supplementary question is concerned, the Leader of the Opposition is inviting the Minister of Justice to express an opinion as to the legal position. I appreciate that this is a serious situation and a serious matter. Perhaps in view of the importance of the matter the minister might like to reply to both aspects of the question.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, with respect, I was not asking the minister to express a legal opinion. I was asking him to tell the House what the position of the government is.

Mr. Speaker: In any event, I suggest that the minister might reply to the question.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the position of the government is that the matter is properly within the jurisdiction of the Attorney General of Quebec. We have expressed our concern that the regulations be administered in a way appropriate to meet the very serious situation in Quebec while at the same time paying due regard to the civil rights of the people concerned.

SUBSTITUTE LEGISLATION FOR WAR MEASURES ACT REGULATIONS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Can the Minister of Justice tell the House how soon he expects to be able to introduce into the House the specific legislation to be substituted for the regulations under the War Measures Act?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it will be either at the end of this week or the beginning of next week.

WAR MEASURES ACT—SEARCHES BY ARMED FORCES—ALLEGED DESTRUCTION OF FURNITURE

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question I would like to ask the Minister of Justice.

Has he received any complaints to the effect that during searching operations some members of the Armed Forces might have misused their powers and caused unnecessary damage to furniture in some homes?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Personally, I have received no complaints yet, Mr. Speaker.

WAR MEASURES ACT ARRESTS—SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE TO PREVENT ABUSES

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am anxious to broaden the scope of these questions in view of the answer the minister has given to the question by my leader. I therefore ask the Prime Minister whether he has had an opportunity in the last few days to consider what some of us feel is a helpful suggestion by the Archbishop of Montreal to establish a committee of persons of outstanding integrity who would hopefully be able to avoid—I make no charge here—abuses or negligence in those aspects of the War Measures Act dealing with arrests of Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know to whom the Archbishop was addressing himself.

An hon. Member: You.

Mr. Trudeau: If he was addressing himself to the government of Quebec, I take it they will have heard his representations. I am as willing as the hon. member to broaden the scope of this, as he says, but on this point I support the Minister of Justice entirely. The regulations adopted under the Act provide that the administration of justice under that Act will be the proper affair of the provincial Attorney General. This was not because the government did not think it could not do it, but because the federal government did not think it should be involved, but because we have confidence in the government of Quebec and we believe they can handle the situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: Leaving aside whether we have confidence in the government of Quebec, I wonder whether the Prime Minister has had an opportunity to discuss this proposal which I suspect was directed to him and other people in Quebec? If he has not had an opportunity, will he discuss what is surely a useful idea with Quebec officials?

Mr. Trudeau: I think the hon. member in the opening part of his question underlined very well the difference between his party and ours. They want to leave aside the government of Quebec; we do not.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INFORMATION LEADING TO INVOKING OF WAR MEASURES ACT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): In view of the Prime Minister's statement last Friday that Parliament and the country already have the information on the basis of which the War Measures Act was invoked, will the Prime Minister inform the House whether the government had the intelligence referred to in these words by the Minister of Justice on Friday, October 16, as recorded at page 215 of Hansard:

> It is my hope that some day the full details of the intelligence upon which the government acted can be made public, because until that day comes the people of Canada will not be able full to appraise the course of action which has been taken by the government.

Did the government have such intelligence on which the invocation of the War Measures Act was based? If the government did have such a report, did the Prime Minister's statement last Friday express his final decision not to make it public?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, no, yes, no, Mr. Speaker. It was not a final decision. When I answered this question on Friday I added that it may be that we will have further facts to communicate to the House, but I impressed on the House then and I impress on the House now that the facts on which we did act are known to the people of Canada and indeed to this House. They are very clear facts. First, we had from the authorities of the province of Quebec and of the city of Montreal a clear statement that they apprehended insurrection. Second, there had been the abduction of two very important citizens in the province of Quebec, with an intention to murder them if the government did not give in to ransom. The third fact was circumstantial, if you wish, that approximately two tons of dynamite had been stolen in the province of Quebec this year, as well as a sizeable number of small arms and other ammunition. Also, there was a state of confusion and threats of violence in the province of Quebec. We decided to act on these facts as we interpreted them, and on this the government will stand or fall.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I ask the Prime Minister whether the Minister of Justice was speaking for the government when he said to the House:

> —until that day comes the people of Canada will not be able fully to appraise the course of action which has been taken by the government.

What the Minister of Justice informed this House and the people of Canada is obviously contradicted by the Prime Minister. Was he speaking for the government—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that he is now asking his question in the form of an argument. At this point it is no longer an acceptable question.

Mr. Lewis: I simply ask the Prime Minister whether the Minister of Justice was speaking for the government when he made the statement I just read.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member might read my own statement and draw his own conclusion.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SUGGESTED ADMINISTRATION UNDER GUARDIANSHIP

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Does he intend to introduce a resolution providing for the placing of the CBC under trusteeship in order to clean up as it should be this haven for rebels who are well-fed at public expense?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, and I do not see that the hon. member has himself asked to introduce a bill to this effect.

NATIONAL SECURITY

ALLEGATION BY MAYOR OF MONTREAL THAT FRAP IS HAVEN FOR TERRORISTS AND REVOLUTIONARIES

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Solicitor General supplementary to that asked by my hon. friend from York South. On Friday I asked the Solicitor General whether the contentions of Mayor Drapeau concerning the FRAP organization in Montreal were communicated to the federal government or to the RCMP, and, if so, whether they were accompanied by supporting information and evidence. The Solicitor General indicated he would try to provide whatever information he could today. I wonder whether he is in a position to do so now?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker. On Friday the Solicitor General made it perfectly clear that he had no intention of entering the Montreal municipal election.

Mr. Lewis: It took place yesterday.

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. member for York South seems to be very knowledgeable on that subject. In any event, after making this clear I said I would look at the hon. member's question and if I saw anything in it which could be answered I would do so. I found nothing which required an answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Inquiries of the Ministry

WAR MEASURES ACT—REPRESENTATIONS BY OSGOODE LAW SCHOOL FACULTY MEMBERS ON PROTECTION OF CIVIL LIBERTIES

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): On a more serious note, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. May I ask whether the right hon. gentleman has received a telegram from 20 faculty members of the Osgoode Law School, York University, Toronto, requesting him to take action to protect the civil liberties of people arrested under the War Measures Act and specifically requesting that no one should be prosecuted for past acts which were not criminal prior to the proclamation of the War Measures Act?

An hon. Member: You represent the one per cent.

Mr. Broadbent: May we have order, Mr. Speaker? If the Prime Minister has received such a telegram, has he replied to these distinguished professors of law giving them the assurance for which they asked?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not have any knowledge of having received such a telegram from my distinguished confrères. I will look into the matter and see whether I can find some appropriate platform for arguing it out with them.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Yukon for a supplementary and then pass on to another subject.

AIRPORTS

MONTREAL—ROBBERY—INCREASE IN SECURITY MEASURES

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): In the absence of the Minister of Transport I should like to ask the Solicitor General whether, in view of the recent theft of $120,000 from Montreal airport despite the high degree of security already in existence, it is the intention of the government to increase the security measures in force at this airport?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): I would be glad to take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—ORDER IN COUNCIL PLACING TEACHERS IN DOUBLE JEOPARDY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Was the federal government or the minister consulted by the government of British Columbia before that government passed an Order in Council placing teachers and university professors in that province in double jeopardy?

[Mr. McIlraith.]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I was not consulted, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Would the minister inform the House under what law or authority the British Columbia government passed the Order in Council, and would the government consider using its powers under the War Measures Act to annul this undemocratic order?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway will recognize, I am sure, that she is asking the minister to express a legal opinion.

Mrs. MacInnis: Then, Mr. Speaker, may I repeat the second half of my question. Would the government consider using its powers under the War Measures Act to annul this undemocratic order which places teachers in British Columbia in double jeopardy?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to abuse the War Measures Act beyond its purpose.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a supplementary question to the hon. Minister of Justice.

Would the province of Quebec have the right under the Constitution to adopt a legislation similar to the one passed by British Columbia?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is once more inviting the minister to express a legal opinion.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MEASURES TO STIMULATE ECONOMY AND REDUCE UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Prime Minister. Is the government planning in the near future to introduce new measures to stimulate the economy and reduce the unemployment, poverty and misery on which terrorism feeds as an important first step in a long-range plan to remove this menace from our country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the hon. member is at least catching up with the importance of this and is calling it a first step. Of course we took this first step a long while ago.

Mr. Hees: Does not the Prime Minister consider that the seriousness of this situation and the seriousness of the question I asked merit a more positive and constructive answer, rather than just the meaningless parroting of the same answer—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: —that he has been giving us for the past three years while the economic situation has got steadily worse?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SHOWING OF DOCUMENTARY FILM, "THE LEGACY OF LENIN"

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has announced that it is presenting over its network on Tuesday, October 27, a documentary for revolution entitled "The Legacy of Lenin". In view of the fact that the government believes that the situation in Canada is serious enough to implement the War Measures Act, has the Secretary of State seen the film and, if so, does he believe that to show it would be appropriate at this time?

Mr. Speaker: Order. While the hon. member might ask the question in a different way, in its present form he is asking two questions, first, whether the Secretary of State has seen the picture, which I do not think is a question that can be put at this time and, second, whether the minister believes the film should be shown, again a question asking for an expression of opinion. The hon. member should ask his question in a different way.

Mr. Crouse: Then, Mr. Speaker, I will put it more directly. Since we as Canadians are experiencing the agony of a wave of revolution against our democratic government, will the Secretary of State consider the cancelling of the program "The Legacy of Lenin" to be projected by the CBC tomorrow evening?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will be very happy to convey these remarks to the CBC authorities with the request that they be taken into consideration.

SUSPENSION OF PROGRAMS CONCERNING PREMEDITATED POLITICAL CRIMES

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State.

Does he intend to follow the example of the CTV television network and instruct the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to discontinue any program more or less connected with a premeditated political crime?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I do not understand, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is asking whether we intend—

Mr. Beaudoin: —to follow the same policy as CTV and instruct the CBC to discontinue any program more or less related with a premeditated political crime?

Mr. Pelletier: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would be very surprised if the policy outlined by the hon. member had been adopted by any network, particularly in the area of information. In fact, radio and television networks are information media and I would be surprised that they could eliminate a part of the information in which they are duty bound to be interested.

As for comments, I would be very happy to consider the policy mentioned by the hon. member. I must say I have not yet seen it implemented. But I would like to find out whether it would be best for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to follow it, in which case I would surely recommend it.

[English]

INTERVIEWING ABROAD OF PEOPLE BARRED FROM CANADA

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State. Will he seek an assurance from the CBC that they will desist from sending teams abroad to interview people who are persona non grata as far as their being legally allowed into Canada is concerned, as the CBC has done in the past? I ask this question in light of the fact that some of their favourite commentators, such as Timothy Leary and others, are now fugitives from justice.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I don't know just what case the hon. member is referring to, Mr. Speaker. His question is very general and I could not give it a reply, particularly as his definition of persona non grata seems a little vague to warrant a specific reply.

[English]

Mr. MacLean: I have a supplementary question. If persons are not allowed to come into Canada because of criminal records or other reasons and therefore are not acceptable as temporary visitors to Canada, will the minister seek the assurance that the CBC will not send teams abroad to interview these same people so that what they have to say can be broadcast over the national network without their being in the country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: I shall gladly pass that suggestion on to the CBC, Mr. Speaker. However, an interview which was recently filmed abroad clearly revealed the intentions of some subversive characters and could make the opposition aware of dangers which, so far, they seemed to deny.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL SECURITY

VANCOUVER—PROPOSED UTILIZATION OF WAR MEASURES ACT TO BAN SUBVERSIVE GATHERINGS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General. Are they aware of reports from Vancouver today to the effect that the city council there is to consider a motion which would ban all "subversive gatherings" under the powers that they consider to be contained in the war measures legislation and, if so, do they think that such action would be in conformity with Parliament's intention?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the minister might want to reply to the question. I have some doubts whether it is in order but the minister may want to answer in any event.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the particular resolution before the Vancouver city council. I have been in touch with the Attorney General of the province of British Columbia and my officials have been in touch with his office underlining the purpose of the implementation of the War Measures Act, which is to meet a present emergency arising out of the particular subversive activities of the FLQ, and suggesting that any extension of the use of the War Measures Act beyond that purpose might very well be harmful.

IMMIGRATION

TIGHTENING OF LAW TO PREVENT ADMISSION OF PERSONS WITH SAME AIMS AS FLQ

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in light of the implementation of the War Measures Act I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether there has been any tightening up of immigration laws in reference to those people coming into Canada who appear to have the same aims and objectives as the FLQ, even though they may not have membership cards?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I take it that the hon. gentleman is asking the question as a lawyer. There has been no tightening up in the sense that there has been no further extension of the powers applied under the War Measures Act by the adoption of any Order in Council further to those published on the first day in this House. There was nothing in them, to my recollection, that referred to immigration; therefore there has been no tightening up in the sense the hon. member asks.

Mr. Woolliams: Perhaps I might ask a supplementary question. I take it then that the law applies to Canadians and anyone who wishes to come in and do the same thing as the FLQ is still permitted to come in under the immigration laws?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the supplementary question as asked is an argument in support of the question asked in the first instance.

[Mr. Pelletier.]

Mr. Woolliams: With the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, it was not meant as an argument. I am seeking information on this important matter.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

JUSTIFICATION FOR RERUN OF PANEL DISCUSSION ON WAR MEASURES ACT

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, my question has reference to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and I tried to get in a supplementary earlier. Last evening the CBC included on its television show, "Weekend", an old panel discussion of doubtful taste and merit on the invocation of the War Measures Act. I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether he has requested or will request the corporation for figures that would justify its claim on the air that they did this only in response to substantial viewer pressure, giving the impression that all sorts of people were dying to hear this week-old homily?

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES

METRIC SYSTEM INTRODUCTION—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT TO CLEAR UP CONFUSION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Will he clear up the confusion that exists in the minds of the business community and the country arising out of the government timetable in regard to the metric system and the confusion that has been created by the introduction of a bill in the other place?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Bill S-5 in the other place, the new Weights and Measures Act, is designed, among other things, simply to provide that the yard and other units of Canadian measurement will be measured against the international meter rather than against previous standards which at one time included the right arm of King Henry I. This is simply to improve the standard of measuring and measuring devices in Canada.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIONS FOR INCREASED GRANT TO UNITED NATIONS CHILDREN'S FUND

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the strong representations made by the Canadian UNICEF committee, is the government giving favourable consideration to increasing Canada's grant to the United Nations Children's Fund to $2,400,000?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have received representations from UNICEF and I have promised them consideration. I do not want to compromise the position of the treasury by saying "favourable consideration," but certainly this request is receiving consideration.

KIDNAPPING OF JAMES CROSS—REPRESENTATIONS BY BRITISH GOVERNMENT

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Could the minister tell the House if the Government of London has made representations or brought pressure to bear concerning the eventual release of British diplomat James Cross?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have received many messages from the British government with regard to Mr. Cross. I have exchanged messages, of course, with my counterpart, the British Foreign Secretary, and in all of them the British government have expressed their appreciation for the great efforts being made on behalf of Mr. Cross.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the British government offered the services of Scotland Yard and has the government of Canada accepted?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I have not had any such offers.

KIDNAPPING OF JAMES CROSS—OFFERING OF REWARD

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the Solicitor General. As it is now three weeks since Mr. Cross was kidnapped, is there any reassurance the minister can give the House today? In particular, as he has had the weekend to think and reflect further upon the wisdom of offering a reward, is there anything more the Solicitor General can say in that regard?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PENALIZING OF NURSING MOTHERS—RESTORATION OF RIGHTS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour as the doughty champion of women's rights. Will he cause to be examined and remedied the recent ruling of the Unemployment Insurance Commission in Ontario which penalized nursing mothers?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman's question is irrelevant. In the interval not only has an apology been extended to the lady in question but her full rights under the Unemployment Insurance Act have been extended to her.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

QUEBEC—PROGRAMS TO DEAL WITH LACK OF EMPLOYMENT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister about Quebec but not about the War Measures Act. In view of the information contained in the report of the Economic Council of Canada issued last month that out of 77,000 new jobs created in Canada this year only 3,000 were in Quebec and in view of the fact that about 40 per cent of the unemployed in Canada are in Quebec, can the Prime Minister inform the House whether the government is planning some special programs to deal with this serious situation in that province? I hope it is and we would be glad to hear a statement on that matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The statement, if this is what the hon. member is asking for, should not be made now but on motions.

Mr. Lewis: I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker. I should have asked whether we might have the assurance that there will be a statement on this matter.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there will, either in the form of statements in the House, answers to questions or announcements in the House, from time to time be announcements of measures which have been and will be taken in order to meet this unemployment situation. I remind the hon. member that not too many weeks ago, out of I believe an amount of $100 million which was set aside for the problem of public housing in Canada, a very sizeable percentage of that amount, I think nearly 50 per cent, went to the province of Quebec because we have this kind of problem in mind. I am glad to see we have the support of the House in this regard.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am sure hon. members would be interested to know whether there is a committee of cabinet, a task force, or some other body studying the particular problem of jobs in Quebec with a view to developing a program to meet the situation at least in part.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. As the only economic statement made in the House since the beginning of the session was that made by the Minister of Finance some days ago, has the government nothing more to offer the House by way of hope that a worthwhile program will be introduced?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Simcoe North.

NATIONAL SECURITY

IDENTIFICATION OF OWNER OF CAR IN WHICH BODY OF PIERRE LAPORTE WAS FOUND

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice, one that I have been asked about a great many times. Has the green car that was used in the kidnapping of Mr. Laporte been identified and the owner of the licence number established? Is this information in the hands of the provincial and federal governments, or was the licence number changed on the green car in which the body of Mr. Laporte was unfortunately found?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I will take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ALLEGED DEMOTION OF K. A. STEAD BECAUSE OF INABILITY TO SPEAK SECOND LANGUAGE

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that there are several questions concerning the affair involving Keith Stead of the Museums Branch that are still unanswered, would the minister give the House the answer in three areas? Would he say whether Miss Monique Plamondon has returned from her extended tour of Europe, why it was necessary for Miss Plamondon to be in Europe for the past three months while the Stead case was being discussed and—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This obviously is a question which should be placed on the order paper.

GRAIN

RAPESEED—RECEIPT OF TRUCKLOAD DELIVERIES BY SASKATOON TERMINAL

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture I should like to direct my question to his Parliamentary Secretary. In view of the recent press release by the minister in connection with the handling of rapeseed at inland terminals, can the minister inform the House if the inland terminal at Saskatoon has been instructed to receive rapeseed on a truckload basis and, if so, when will this facility be in operation?

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I shall take the hon. member's question as notice and advise him later.

[Mr. Hees.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT RESEARCH CENTRE—APPOINTMENT OF MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT TO BOARD OF GOVERNORS

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As a result of the press release regarding the appointment of a Board of Governors of the International Development Research Centre and in view of the fact that the House on February 20 of this year passed the bill concerning the International Development Research Centre in which it recommended that one of the governors be a Member of Parliament, would the Secretary of State for External Affairs advise the House why he decided not to appoint a Member of Parliament and if in the future he intends to appoint one to that board?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure there is urgency in the question. If there is, the hon. member could well give notice to the Chair for the purpose of having it discussed at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

INVESTIGATION OF FISH PRICES

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Is his department, through the Prices and Incomes Commission, carrying out an investigation into "exorbitant fish prices" and can he indicate the basis for the investigation?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure whether the commission is investigating the subject the hon. member mentioned. I will make an inquiry and check. In the meantime, if the hon. member wishes to give me information concerning the specific prices with which he is concerned I will be happy to pass it on to the commission.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, in the event that the minister does discover a reservoir of excessive profits, would he recycle them to the pockets of the fishermen who have in no way contributed to inflationary prices in the fisheries?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has made a representation and can assume it will be taken into consideration.

REFUSAL OF ENTRY TO BANFF SPRINGS HOTEL TO GROUP FROM MORLEY RESERVE

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern

Would the minister look into the allegation that about a week or so ago the Banff Springs Hotel refused entry into the hotel to a group of people from the Morley Indian Reserve who had been invited to participate in meetings of the Alberta Architects Association at the hotel, and that the Banff Springs Hotel, after refusing entry, subsequently rescinded their refusal on the threat of the Alberta Architects Association that they would walk out of the hotel.

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to take that question as notice.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

DEPARTMENTAL STUDY OF IMPLICATIONS OF NATIONAL DEFENCE BASE CLOSURES

Mr. Doug. Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, this question is addressed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In light of the effect upon a number of Canadian communities of Canadian base closures I should like to ask the minister whether his department has made a study of the regional economic implications of base closures? If so, does he intend to make that report available to the House and to the public in general?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, there is no question of making a public report. Nevertheless, this question is under consideration since the cabinet decided to close the two bases and, by the way, I shall be going to Manitoba very soon to review with the Manitoba government the best means of correcting the unfortunate consequences of these two base closures.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Prime Minister. Last week the leader of the New Democratic Party expressed his views on a television interview program regarding the inplications of the War Measures Act. I gather he was chosen for this task because no federal minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask a question rather than make a speech.

Mr. Cafik: I shall put the question very simply, Mr. Speaker. Is it government policy to refrain from allowing cabinet ministers to make public statements to the press or on television regarding the implementation of the regulations because otherwise we leave the public as ill-informed as the leader of the New Democratic Party?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I had the impression that the hon. member wanted to make a speech.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF INCOME SECURITY AND VETERANS PENSIONS LEGISLATION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council. Can he tell us when the legislation relating to income security and veterans pensions will be coming before the House?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): No, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Now that the election in Montreal is over, in light of the difficulties that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion has encountered and before the minister goes to Manitoba and before he makes any further statements, would the Prime Minister see that he applies for English instruction under the civil service's new B and B facilities?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

NATIONAL SECURITY

WAR MEASURES ACT—NON-PROSECUTION FOR ACTS COMMITTED PRIOR TO PROCLAMATION

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice and I am hoping to receive a less flippant and more direct answer. Would he assure the House that no one will be prosecuted for past acts that were not criminal prior to the proclamation of the War Measures Act?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add further to what I have said, that prosecutions under the War Measures Act regulations lie within the jurisdiction of the Attorney General of the province of Quebec, and undoubtedly the Attorney General will want to interpret those regulations as they read.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE OF PAPERS, "FOREIGN POLICY FOR CANADIANS"

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That the papers entitled "Foreign Policy for Canadians", laid before the House June 25, 1970, be referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DISCHARGE OF POLLUTANTS BY SHIPS

The House resumed, from Friday, October 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Jamieson that Bill C-2, to amend the Canada Shipping Act, be read the second time and referred to the Special Committee on Environmental Pollution.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on Bill C-2, an act to amend the Canada Shipping Act. The bill deals primarily with one of the most pressing problems in our society today, namely, the pollution of our environment. Quite frankly the first question that comes to my mind is, why didn't the government put this bill under the authority of the new ministry of environmental affairs which is to be under the control of the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis)? When raising this point, I do not question the ability of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) to deal with the problems arising from the pollution of our waters by oil tankers or merchant shipping, for I give him full marks for the efforts he and his department made in cleaning up the Arrow oil spill in Chedabucto Bay.

I regret it is not possible for the Minister of Transport to be here today but I believe he is well aware that the pollution of our water, air and soil, by oil and other hazardous substances is of direct interest not only to his department but also to the Department of Fisheries and Forestry, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Department of National Defence and the Department of Public Works.

It was my understanding from the words in the Throne Speech dealing with pollution control, coupled with the explanation given by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), that something definite would be done in this session to solve our pollution problems, and that the authority to do this would be vested in the Minister of Fisheries. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, in all frankness what other interpretation can we, as members of this House, place upon the words of our Prime Minister when he said on October 9, as reported at page 35 of Hansard:

A bill relating to the organization of the government will also be introduced shortly, proposing the establishment of a department concerned with renewable resources and environmental affairs which would have as its core the Department of Fisheries and Forestry, whose functions will be expanded to bring under the direction of a single minister the principal governmental activities relating to environmental quality in general, and pollution in particular.

By transferring to the Department of Fisheries and Forestry elements of the meteorological branch of the Department of Transport and the general responsibilities related to air pollution of the Department of National Health and Welfare, the principal governmental activities relating to the fight against atmospheric pollution will be brought together within one department.

The transfer of the bulk of the water sector of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and the transfer of the responsibility for the Canada Water Act from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, (Mr. Greene) to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry will combine under the direction of one minister and his department general responsibility for the development of our water resources and the more particular responsibility of the protection of the water habitat of our marine life.

Finally, the transfer of the Canadian Wildlife Service from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to the Department of Fisheries and Forestry will bring together in one department responsibility for our renewable resources including, notably, the related research activities required for the effective discharge of these responsibilities.

These, Mr. Speaker, are the words of our Prime Minister, and yet the second bill brought into this House in this session is entirely contradictory to the outline he gave us of the government's plans for pollution control in Canada. Naturally, we cannot help but wonder why the Prime Minister has changed his mind. His original proposal made some sense to us, as the Minister of Fisheries has far-reaching authority under the Fisheries Act which, if implemented, would go a long way towards cleaning up the poisons presently destroying our oceans, our rivers and our lakes. However, in retrospect it is better to have this bill amending the Canada Shipping Act under the Minister of Transport than no act at all, since our pollution problems have reached gigantic proportions in Canada. We, therefore, support the bill in principle.

At present we have no way of knowing the amount of pollutants that cloud our air, foul our water, and destroy our soil, since science has not yet devised uniform and accurate standards for carrying out this type of measurement. In like vein, we have no way of knowing the cost of cleaning up our pollution problems. Everyone knows it is going to be expensive, but how do you measure the cost when a polluted stream loses its fish, or a breeding ground can no longer support its water fowl?

Canada is blessed with one quarter of the world's known fresh water volume, with 117,000 miles of ocean shoreline, and with one of the world's best concentrations of game, birds and fish. We are now belatedly aware that all are threatened by the creeping inroads of pollution, and while our problem is immense we are still not suffering as much as the people residing in the United States. It now appears that water pollution has probably killed more people than all the wars in history. Millions die every year from water borne diseases. Each year in Canada water pollution costs us more than all the fires, floods, accidents and other disasters that occur across the country.

The bill before us describes a pollutant as any substance which, if added to any waters, would degrade or alter or form part of a process of degradation or alteration of the quality of those waters to an extent that is detrimental to their use by man or by any animal, fish or plant that is useful to man. All these words seem unnecessary to me for, in my opinion, a general description of a pollutant would be the addition of any foreign matter to the natural environment to a degree unsupportable by nature.

What do we mean by our natural environment? It is generally accepted that there are three distinct areas, soil, water and air. Soil pollutants are any substances added to the soil which impair the yield or quality of farm produce, affect the health of animals or humans, or which may contribute to subsequent air or water pollution. Water pollution is understood to include any substances which render the water unfit for the purpose for which it is intended.

Obviously pollution of the air started away back in the fourteenth century when coal first became a source of heat. It became intensified during the industrial revolution, and has worsened ever since. There is some degree of natural pollution, but most pollution is of man's own making. Our affluent society produces more waste per person than ever before, and unfortunately the situation is getting worse. In fact, this bill was brought into being because of polluted rivers and lakes and pollution in our ocean which menaces our health. Fish are dying in streams and bays; scum and algae and oil drive those who go on holiday from our beaches, while tourist resorts fail, property values fall and taxes rise with the cost of water treatment. It is now a realized fact that if water pollution is allowed to continue unheeded, the necessity for the purification of water before it is fit to be used will impose an intolerable burden on all sections of our society. No province in Canada is free from pollution problems. My colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), when speaking on this measure, referred to the problems faced by the fishermen in Placentia Bay when the bay was closed to fishing and a phosphorous plant closed for a month because toxic waste from the company caused widespread water pollution.

In my native province of Nova Scotia, water pollution is also one of our major problems. There are no treatment plants, for example, for the raw sewage dumped into the ocean in the Halifax-Dartmouth area with its 250,000 population. The same can be said of many of our small cities and towns situated up and down the coast. This situation exists as a result of the fantastic cost of pollution control measures.

Just what does this bill propose to do to improve the situation? Primarily, through amendments to the Canada Shipping Act, it hopes to correct through regulations the massive pollution of our environment by tankers and other ships. These amendments are aimed at establishing a maritime pollution claims fund under an administrator who will have very broad powers. In fact, as I read the duties of the administrator as listed on page 18 of the bill, section 750, he will be empowered to act as judge, defendant and claimant, depending on the stage of the claim. The man who holds this position will be required to have the wisdom of Solomon and the patience of Job, attributes which are hard to find among Liberal party supporters these days. Fifteen cents a ton is to be paid on each ton of oil shipped in and out of Canada by the shipping companies. I cannot help but wonder if this charge will increase the price of oil and gas in Atlantic Canada, an area which is presently suffering from economic disparity. Obviously, there is need for a fund. Why should the charge be placed on those in Atlantic Canada who are the least capable of paying additional taxes?

When reading the sections of the Canada Shipping Act that are being repealed, namely part VIIA, I cannot help but question the government's obvious inability to enforce this section of the International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution of the Sea by Oil as set out in the convention schedule approved in 1954. I realize that the fines for polluting Canadian waters with oil were not heavy enough to pose a threat to ship owners or even to act as a deterrent, but I cannot help but question the number of times this act was enforced. In my opinion, legislation that is not enforced or is not enforceable is bad legislation.

In the bill, we read that the new regulations will apply to any fishing zones in Canada prescribed pursuant to the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act. I question the value of using fishing zones as control areas when they are in some cases inoperative. As the House is well aware, we have a Territorial Seas and Fishing Zones Act which was passed unilaterally with great fanfare in 1964. If the terms of that legislation had been implemented and had been enforced that year or even in 1965, our fishermen on the east and west coasts would not today be facing a serious decline in their fishery resource due to over fishing by other countries, as was so well depicted last evening on television.

However, the legislation was not enforced in 1964, nor was it enforced in 1965, in 1966, in 1967, in 1968, in 1969 or in 1970, and as a result of this government's vacillating and procrastinating attitude on this important matter we see our supplies of haddock today almost extinct, while stocks of redfish, flounder and cod have declined to dangerous levels.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Crouse: I also say, "Shame" along with my colleagues on this side.

This pollution control bill applies to any fishing zones of Canada. I would like the minister to describe those fishing zones. In fact, since the minister is not here, I would like any minister to describe those fishing zones.

Does this bill apply to Canadians operating within 12 miles off our shore, and does it apply equally, for example, to the fleets of France, Italy, Spain, Portugal, Norway, Denmark, the United Kingdom and the United States, or does it apply only to fleets of those countries when they are operating within three miles of our shores, which is at present their fishing zone? The huge fishing fleets are capable of polluting with oil large sections of our inshore bank if the law does not apply to them when they are operating more than three miles from shore. In the absence of clearly defined fishing zones, it seems to me that longitude and latitude lines would be more descriptive and more acceptable if international agreement could be obtained.

Another regulation in the bill which disturbs me is to be found on page 4, section 737. Under this section, the governor in council may make regulations prohibiting the discharge from ships of any one or more pollutants specified in the regulations, except as thereby authorized, in any waters to which this part applies and with respect to which those regulations are made applicable. I cannot help but ask: Why the exceptions, why the special treatment for anyone, in view of the seriousness of the situation?

According to these regulations it is still possible to get a licence to pollute. There was a similar clause in the Canada Water Act to which we took exception when that act was under debate. Theoretically, oil tankers—the only ones paying tax under this bill—could be carrying a cargo, namely oil, that is not a pollutant because it has not been specified as a pollutant. If proper pollution control is the aim of this bill, why not define all pollutants in the bill rather than leave such an important matter to be done by regulation? Not only can someone legally pollute our seas under this bill, but section 744 (3) permits the escape from payment of claims if the "owner establishes to the satisfaction of the Minister that the pollutant of which he is the owner is of such a nature and quantity that, if it were discharged by the ship in waters to which this Part applies, the discharge would not constitute a contravention of any regulation..."

In my opinion, if an oil spill occurs, it should be this act which determines if there is oil pollution, and not some special regulation by any minister of the cabinet. Obviously there is a great need for strong legislation dealing with the pollution of our environment, not only here in Canada but in North America as well. However, as I read this bill, it seems to me that as a means of pollution prevention or a deterrent, it is very weak since it is not based on international agreements.

Once again we are alone in this, and we have only to look at the failures of previous unilateral actions taken by our Department of Fisheries and Forestry and by our Department of National Defence to realize the folly of trying to stand alone in today's highly complex and integrated society. In fact, the application and enforcement of this bill may well prove impossible because of our lack of manpower and equipment. I cannot help but ask myself: Is this another Canada Water Act, a token piece of legislation?

Our provinces in varying degrees, continue to flounder in increasing seas of pollution. Most of them have boards, commissions or authorities of some kind devoted to the control of pollution, and this chiefly in the area of water pollution. However, their problems tend to increase rather than decrease, and their job is all the more difficult because of a lack of clearcut policy which would specify where their jurisdiction lies.

The provincial administrator trying to find his way in the fog between the Canada Water Act, the newly revised federal Fisheries Act, and this act faces a sea of uncertainty that was never dreamed of by the people who wrote the British North America Act. What we really should have on this continent is an international pollution control commission. This would go a long way toward solving our continuing Canada-U.S. border problems, especially those dealing with water pollution in that area. Such a commission would be helpful on both coasts. Here we are, two friendly nations sharing the commerce and the fisheries of these two great oceans, the Atlantic and the Pacific, and neither of us has any guarantee that sooner or later one of us will not foul them up, with a consequent loss to both nations. We have jointly fouled up Lake Erie, destroying to a great extent the fisheries in that particular lake. The oil from the Arrow which grounded in Chedabucto Bay fouled up the fishing grounds and the areas surrounding Sable Island, which is over 100 miles off Nova Scotia. That area was used by Canadian as well as United States fishermen.

I believe that many of our common pollution problems could be faced and solved by a strong, concerted effort on the part of both our countries We should not confuse an international pollution control commission with the present International Joint Commission which deals largely with the technical problems of boundary waterways between our two countries. The body I am proposing would be patterned on the principles of the Convention on International Civil Aviation. If agreement could be reached with the United States on a commission of this type, it may well lead to an international convention which would apply to the operation and control of shipping on a world-wide basis. Such a body could well make some of the most important decisions of our lifetime. Mind you, we must start now and devote our resources to controlling the pollution of the past, the present and the future. We have the know-how and we can see the need. I hope we can find the necessary funds to do what is required, before it is too late.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) has given a fair indication, I think, that we do not arrive at perfection overnight in matters respecting pollution. I recall that when the House dealt with the bill in 1956 which was to ratify the International Oil Pollution Convention of 1954, some of us who were in the House at the time felt this was quite a step forward in the control of the pollution of the high seas. Experience has taught us that that was a long way from being an adequate measure. Even though the convention was amended in 1962, we still find, according to the available evidence before us, that the pollution problems on the high seas are increasing rather than decreasing.

We recognize, Mr. Speaker, in this party, as does the hon. member for South Shore, that this particular bill we are considering is not designed to cope with the over-all problem of the increasing pollution of the oceans of the world. It is the view of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson), according to the statement he made when introducing the bill, that the bill will do something towards protecting the immediate coastal waters of Canada from pollution by oil and other pollutants carried by large cargo vessels. It is our intention, in considering this bill at the second reading stage as well as in committee, to see how far the measure before us will fulfil the hopes of the Minister of Transport.

In his opening remarks, the minister referred to the days when he was a professional broadcaster and to the instant experts that appeared on every side. He drew some parallel between that and the many people who are now instant experts on pollution. I do not know whether I am an expert, instant or otherwise, on pollution. Being able to recall a little encounter of mine with the minister when he was a professional broadcaster, I can tell the House that since that day I have always considered the minister to be an expert in professional broadcasting.

In his speech, the minister devoted a good deal of time to the question of the creation of a task force, under his authority, after the incident of the Arrow in Chedabucto Bay. I have had an opportunity of looking through volume 1 of the report of that task force. While I realize that it does not give us all the answers for coping with problems of pollution at sea, I can say that a review of the report indicates to me that if the minister were not involved in creating instant experts in the field of pollution, at least he had some success in that venture in creating what I would call a bit of instant expertise. To this extent, I found the reading of the report very encouraging. Perhaps one can venture to say that it may have some bearing on the success, in future, of the proposals in this bill, if they are included in the law of our land.

The report is forthright, couched in language that is characteristic of the head of the task force, Dr. Patrick McTaggart-Cowan. As it happens, he crossed my trail some time before I met the Minister of Transport at the time he was a broadcaster. I knew him when we were fellow undergraduates at the University of British Columbia, which is some little time ago now. Having read the report, I found that he put forward his point of view as vigorously as he did in the past when we argued about the major issues of the world as undergraduates. I ought to point out, perhaps, particularly for those from British Columbia who are following these proceedings, that we ought not to confuse Patrick McTaggart-Cowan with his equally distinguished brother, Ian, who has achieved a reputation in another scientific field and who is well known and respected in British Columbia and beyond.

Having read the report of the task force, Mr. Speaker, it came to my mind that there was a considerable contrast between the situation, so far as the responsibility and the ability of the Minister of Transport to cope with the emergency that occurred when the Arrow was wrecked, and the situation that had prevailed in the period before 1969, before we adopted the bill which added section 495-C to the Canada Shipping Act.

The hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) referred to this bill in his speech. I think it is important to note that prior to the passage of that particular piece of legislation, the minister really had no power to act under the law unless and until a vessel was formally abandoned by its owner. That that bit of legislation was enacted in Parliament before the Arrow disaster was fortuitous, to say the least. If the situation at the time of the Arrow disaster had been that which prevailed at the time the motor vessel Schiedyk grounded on the west coast, off Vancouver Island, when we lacked effective anti-pollution measures and no one had any real authority in this field, the disaster on the east coast could well have been of major proportions instead of being contained and controlled to the extent it was. While it is true that the Schiedyk was not an oil tanker but a cargo vessel carrying pulp, it is nevertheless true to say that serious damage resulted from the leakage of oil from the fuel tanks of that ship when she went down. For example, there was damage to an important herring spawning area at Nootka Sound. There was damage also, real and potential, to pulp logs that move back and forth in the adjacent waters. As far as I am concerned, it was certainly a warning for the minister of the need to take instant action. To this extent, the enactment of section 495(c) represented another step forward in our rather fumbling approach towards the objective of government having the proper authority to deal with the ever increasing danger of pollution of our coastal waters.

I was interested to find out by chance, as one sometimes does, that the Arrow almost docked at the port of Port Alberni in my constituency with its cargo of Bunker C rather than Chedabucto Bay. In any event, there was a substitute "crate" that went into Port Alberni which carried a crew so ill-trained they created a smallpox scare on the Pacific coast. It came into our coastline flying a quarantine flag. According to reports, it was another gerrybuilt cockleshell that should not have been carrying any kind of oil cargo.

We must now consider what improvements, if any, the present bill makes upon the legislative provisions of existing section 495(c) of the act. I suggest there are at least two areas of improvement which should be assessed and considered in depth in committee. One is the provision which is in this bill and which was removed from former Bill S-23, the liability on the polluter to pay. While there will be arguments as to whether this particular provision is adequate, nevertheless there is embodied in the bill direct liability upon the owners of the ship and its cargo, and through establishment of the Maritime pollution claims fund, a supplementary payments pool.

I hope experts from the government's services will be prepared to inform the committee regarding the cost of the proposals in this bill in the total picture of our economy. We must recognize that directly or indirectly the consumer is going to have to pay the costs resulting from this legislation. We should have detailed estimates of the added cost of oil products in Canada as a result of the requirement for liability insurance, the tonnage tax on oil, the required standards of construction, and of equipment on the ships carrying pollutant cargos to our shores. The committee also should have information of the indirect impact of this legislation upon the Canadian oil producing industry.

If the efforts to control pollution are going to be effective, Canadians must understand what it is going to cost and why. They should be able to assess the cost of this measure in relation to its importance to our environment. If that understanding is not created and developed, we will continue in the future, as has so often been the case in the past, to find that the legislation with high sounding terms and laudible objectives will not receive more than lip service from governments and industry. The exercise in this Parliament will have been futile. The law will not provide any real protection no matter what its provisions.

One important provision in the bill with which I agree is the one setting up special standards for ships carrying pollutants, oil and other substances, through our waters, as well as the establishment of the new pollution inspection service. These seem to be steps in the right direction, but the committee must obviously question whether these new services can be established without too much duplication of existing government services, as well as the way in which they can be efficiently established in order to further the real purposes behind the proposed legislation. I am interested in, and generally approve of, these sections of the bill.

The committee must examine this bill for defects. An obvious defect, which has already been referred to by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West, is that jurisdiction is limited to an area extending only 12 miles from our sea coasts. I imagine the Minister of Transport has also had the experience of travelling along some portions of our sea coasts in a small plane. In my experience, 12 miles off shore from a height of 2,000 feet in a small aircraft is nothing more than spitting distance.

The western edge of my constituency along the open Pacific has historically been known as the grave yard of the Pacific. History books refer to the countless wrecks along those shores. One of the areas included in the new west coast national marine park is the area along the historic life saving trail where there was a single wire telephone line. When shipwrecked mariners crawled ashore they walked along this trail until they reached a telephone which they used to inform someone of their plight. In the days of sail and small steamers, wrecks were frequent. Even though the incidence of shipwrecks is not as great today, nevertheless we cannot discount the impact of wrecks of larger ships. The number of wrecks may be smaller, but the potential results of a single disaster are much greater.

I already referred to the sinking of the motor vessel Schiedyk shortly before the 1969 legislation came into effect. Since that legislation came into effect there has been the Arrow incident on the Atlantic coast as well as the wreck of a tramp schooner off the northern shores of Nootka Island. If the latter had been a tanker, it would have created a disaster at least as serious as the Arrow and from the point of view of logistics, would have been infinitely more difficult to deal with.

It is almost unbelievable that in this day and age, with all the electronic aids to navigation which exist, Loran stations, lighthouses, and all the rest which have been established along that coast, the master of a vessel driving for the shore of northwest America could find himself 250 miles or so off the Strait of Juan de Fuca and take his vessel in through shoals he could not possibly have navigated had he known they were there, until his vessel was finally deposited high and dry upon the rocks. Such vessels, flying the modern equivalent of the Jolly Roger, certainly have no place close to the shores of Canada whether they are tankers or whether they only endanger our sea life to the extent of the fuel they carry in their supply tanks.

It should be obvious that the proposed 12-mile limit, whether it involves a question in our own jurisdiction or of international law, is pitifully inadequate. No one should have any illusions on this score. When I flew over the Soviet trawlers a year ago this fall, watching them operate off the West Coast marine park area, I felt I could almost reach out and touch the sands of Long Beach, though at that point the vessels were some 20 miles offshore. I suggest that if it is to be of any real value, jurisdiction should be extended to the limit of what is referred to as the prohibited zone set out in annex A to the International Convention for the Prevention of the Pollution of the Sea by Oil, that is to say, a distance of 100 miles. The Convention makes reference to what is known, in the Pacific Ocean, as the Canadian western zone extending a distance of 100 miles from the nearest land along the west coast of Canada. On the Atlantic coast, as far as Canada is concerned, the zone would extend from latitude 42 degrees 05′ north, longitude 64 degrees 37′ west along the east coast at a distance of 100 miles from the nearest land. This is the minimum distance which should apply under this law.

I believe we could enforce jurisdiction of this kind, regardless of the position of international law, at least with respect to all ships sailing to or leaving Canadian ports; that is, we could ensure that all the required standards were maintained. I am referring, of course, to the proposed regulations governing ships carrying cargoes capable of causing serious pollution. No greater difficulty would attach to requiring that these vessels submit to inspection 100 miles off our shore, if they were bound for a Canadian port, than at the point of entry into what the bill presently refers to as Canadian waters. If the government is not prepared to make the kind of declaration in the present bill, as was made in the measure directed against Arctic water pollution, I suggest we might, at least, be able to shame other nations whose ships wish to sail close to our shores into operating vessels of a kind which comply with safety standards. I may be wrong but I would think most of the traffic engaged in carrying oil close to Canadian shores would be originating from or proceeding to ports in the United States. If the wealthiest nation in the world cannot agree readily to ensure that all its shipping using waters less than 100 miles from our shores should comply with the standards proposed in this bill, then, surely, we should be able to shame them into doing so.

There is one other question which I believe the committee should consider, though it may not be so directly related to the terms of the bill we are discussing. I refer to the whole question of establishing what I would call a marine brigade for pollution protection and prevention, since the success of the legislation we are considering obviously depends to a great extent upon the effectiveness of such a course. Full weight should be given to the recommendation of the task force in this connection. The idea that provision should be made for fire protection and prevention at the municipal level has won long-standing acceptance; it should certainly be paralleled in the light of the evidence brought forward in the task force report. So far we have been lax in this respect.

The report makes special reference, as did the minister in his speech, to the part played by the armed forces of our country in the effort in connection with the Arrow, and, in addition, to the role of the armed forces in providing rescue teams ready for future emergencies. I noted particularly the reference in the report to the services performed by H.M.C.S. Cape Scott and H.M.C.S. Cape Breton. The task force recommended that these ships be maintained in a state of operational readiness to fulfil primary roles in the national contingency plan. This reference arises from the possibility that the Department of National Defence might withdraw these vessels from active service, having decided to pursue a different line of policy. This underlines a point which should be considered in committee. To what extent, in the long run, can we rely upon national defence forces when it is necessary to move rapidly to deal with pollution?

Any Minister of National Defence and his policy planners are, naturally, thinking primarily in terms of another kind of defence role. This shapes the direction in which they allocate their funds, train their troops and specifies the kind of equipment they acquire and operate. I put it to the Minister of Transport that we are entitled to detailed evidence showing the extent to which ships of the type I have named do, in fact, meet the requirements of situations with which the bill before us proposes to deal; we should be given the opportunity to assess, in committee, whether or not ships carrying suitable equipment should be available on a permanent stand-by basis for use by the coastguard service in emergencies. It is designed to provide rescue services, but at the present time the Canadian Coast Guard is not adequately equipped to perform the pollution prevention function. I remember once remarking to the hon. member who was minister of transport in the regime of the Conservative government that you could not build a coast guard simply by slapping a fresh coat of paint on a bunch of old vessels. The minister of that day assured me that that was not all that was going to be done. While I am willing to concede that we have done a little more than simply repaint the old DOT fleet, we have not really done very much more.

In assessing this whole question of providing adequate protection against the disaster of oil pollution, I suggest that we have an opportunity to take a fresh look at what might be created in the way of an efficient, mobile, well organized and well equipped Canadian coast guard, one that would perform a number of roles in protecting the sea coasts of Canada for those people who use them and also protecting our natural life—the ecology, as we call it—of our sea coast areas.

These are some of the considerations that come to my mind on looking through the bill before the House, and I have outlined some of the subject matters that should be considered in depth by the committee. I think all of us so far have indicated that we are prepared to see the bill receive second reading and be sent to committee with our hopeful blessing. Some of us hope that when the bill emerges from the committee and returns to the House, it will in fact be a better bill than it is in its present form.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of extending unduly my remarks on Bill C-2 which, I think, is of some importance since it deals with problems of world interest, namely, the pollution of oceans or streams by waste discharged into them or by ships carrying oil especially.

As regards Canada, we have, I think, only two merchant ships left. All transoceanic cargo is conveyed by foreign ships which bring gazoline or oil to Canada and it is normal that the Canadian Parliament should take measures so as to stop water pollution.

Last year, explorations were conducted in the North in order to discover oil or natural gas fields and Indians and Eskimos are complaining that many rivers of that area are already polluted.

We heard recently that the water of James Bay and Hudson Bay, to important fresh water sources, are beginning to be polluted, and the government has done nothing to stop pollution there.

For instance, so far as James Bay is concerned, one puts the blame on shipowners, the pulp industry, Domtar and other companies, because they pour their waste products into rivers like the Bell River, the Harricanaw River whose waters are going to pollute further James Bay.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-2 is a very important one. It should not be used to protect industries, and to enable them to save millions of dollars at the risk of polluting Canadian waters.

Pollution exists not only in our region. The Ottawa river, a real jewel, which is even larger than any one in Europe, and which is extremely beautiful, is polluted. By what? By E.B. Eddy and C.I.P., important companies which are dumping waste in it all day long.

I say that it is a crime to pollute a body of water such as the Ottawa river. We have no right to allow companies to do so. They should find a way of disposing their waste products other than throwing them in waters which should not only be protected but should even be drinkable. Only yesterday, our waterways were being discussed. At this moment there is practically but one area in the entire province of Quebec where one may find pure and clear water, and I am speaking of northwestern Quebec. Fishermen and hunters who travel to that area are more than happy to find out that they can breathe fresh air and that they can drink clean water. On the other hand, we have the Ottawa river polluted with mercury which kills our fish. Even commercial catches cannot be used for human consumption. This fish has become a hazard.

Mr. Speaker, had governments acted 25, 30 or 50 years ago, our rivers and lakes would have been protected. Nothing was done. I was reading recently about some people who crossed the Atlantic and reached Barbados on some sort of raft. All the way across, these people saw oil or tar floating on the waters. According to them, the Atlantic Ocean will soon be polluted.

Time has come for governments to wake up and require those responsible for pollution to be careful. Time has come for stringent regulations in order to stop them from polluting our waters.

The Great Lakes are completely polluted. By whom? By steel mills and coastal vessels dumping all their refuse into the water. Finally, everyone causes pollution.

In Hull some people throw their garbage into the Gatineau and Ottawa rivers, whether it be beer cans, oil cans or what have you. Even pieces of wood with rusty nails sticking out are cast into the water.

Individuals are partly responsible for the existing situation. It is a great temptation to put all the blame on companies. But we should blame ourselves also as we are equally responsible. Boaters sailing small pleasure craft on the Ottawa and Gatineau rivers are in the habit of tossing all their refuse overboard.

Today some people who would like to protect public health blame the companies. I also blame the companies, because they pollute water much more quickly than individuals. However, the citizens must also assume their share of responsibility. There are dumps but they certainly do not include the Rideau canal, the Ottawa or Gatineau rivers.

Some persons do not understand the matter at all. As soon as they see the floating waste of the E. B. Eddy, they immediately say that it is responsible for pollution. The E. B. Eddy, the CIP and the mills in Thurso and Hawkesbury, are the main culprits but the people must also take some of the blame and assume their responsibilities in this regard.

As for transoceanic oil transport, Canadian inspectors should go abroad and supervise the loading of ships to prevent them from polluting our waters. This could be a service not only to Canada but to all other countries that import from Canada. Unfortunately, that type of cargo is handled by foreign ships over which we have no control.

As a means of preventing pollution and promoting the Canadian economy, I would suggest the creation of a merchant marine with more ships than now.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member even if it is only for a moment. I do not think the debate should really include the matter of a merchant marine. The hon. member will agree that if we launch now a discussion on the need of creating a Canadian merchant marine service, the debate will last a long time, and without knowing in detail the bill now before us, I do not think it covers the establishment of a merchant marine. Indeed, I feel the hon. member meant to refer to that aspect of the matter in passing. It should not be the subject of the debate.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your calling me to order since I want to limit myself to discussion of the bill before us. I only mentioned the merchant marine to point out that if we had more suitable Canadian ships to replace those that come to us from other countries and are not suitable, we would do away with pollution of Canadian waters.

However, Mr. Speaker, in order to avoid pollution we must take steps to control imported products and at the same time keep watch on what is happening here.

From the St. Lawrence river to the Great Lakes, pollution has become everywhere a serious problem.

Therefore, this bill must be immediately referred to a committee for serious consideration of proposals to be submitted to the House, in order to efficiently fight water pollution everywhere in Canada and to ensure public health.

[English]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might, at the outset, join with my colleagues and, indeed, everybody who has commented in this House in support of the very broad principles which are set out in these amendments to the Canada Shipping Act. I must, in the same breath, wonder out loud how in the world such lofty principles and objectives could have been so badly approached as they are in the bill now before us. I would hope, in a spirit of charity, that this is simply because there was an urgency to get this piece of legislation drafted to indicate to the world that we are concerned about what is happening in our waters. As I say, that is about the only charitable thing I can say.

Mr. Jamieson: Thank you very much.

Mr. Forrestall: I find it a little strange to be at once in absolute agreement and at once absolutely dismayed, because the minister has a reputation for bringing forward better legislation than he has this time. I doubt if there is anybody in Canada who even begins to understand it.

I would have to indicate to the minister that the language of the bill is, to say the least, somewhat confusing.

Mr. McGrath: Not worthy of a doctor of laws.

Mr. Forrestall: Yes, forgive me, Mr. Speaker. I had forgotten about that. Might I extend my congratulations to the doctor. I do not blame the minister for the drafting. As I was about to say, I hope the ambiguity of certain parts results from the fact that further legislation is anticipated in this general area.

At the very outset, I should like to direct myself to the question of what will happen to this legislation once we have given it approval in principle. The minister, during the debate on Friday, indicated he was not firm about the intention of government to refer this bill to the special committee on environmental pollution. He said his mind was open to the proposition that this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Transportation. I should like to support that suggestion. Indeed, I think there is some urgency for referral to a standing committee as opposed to the present intention. I hope the minister, or somebody from that side, will indicate before this day is over that the government will seriously consider changing its present intention in this regard. I say that for a number of reasons, although I think there are three basic ones.

First of all, this bill involves a series of amendments to the Canada Shipping Act designed to approach the general question of pollution. I think there would be great danger in any attempt by a regulatory or administrative group within the government, other than the Department of Transport, to even begin to approach the consequences of Bill C-2.

The second reason I put forward to the minister in support of this suggestion is that, of course, it is a much larger committee and one which is much broader in its representation in terms of the regions and interests of the country. In the attempt by the government on behalf of all Canadians to bring about the type of situation in which desirable controls may be achieved for desirable ends, I believe this proposal merits some consideration.

The third argument I put forward in a brief manner is that I believe the committee on environmental pollution intends, or in any event hopes, to tackle the question of environmental pollution in a broad sense or, if you like, philosophical sense. I think the committee would like to direct its efforts to the broader question of what we are doing to our environment, whether we are going at speeds which are dangerous, whether we are moving too slowly in some directions and conversely in other directions.

Because of the committee's stated hope that there would not be referred to it specific matters of legislation for consideration, at least at the very outset of its deliberations, I hope the government will perhaps consider directing this bill to the Standing Committee on Transportation. These are but three or four reasons. I believe, however, there are many others of which the government is aware. In view of the comments of the minister on Friday night to the effect that he had no serious objection to this bill being referred to the Standing Committee on Transportation, I urge the House Leader to appeal to his colleagues to acquiesce to this request.

There are a number of areas of very broad concern related to this measure. Perhaps I might indicate to the minister some areas in which I know my colleagues will be concerned whenever the bill appears before the committee to which it is to be referred. I should like to touch briefly on some matters which are of particular concern to me. At the outset, before becoming involved in some of the details of the questions which concern me, I might reiterate because I think it is important, that there should be a very early clarification of the language of the amendment. Perhaps the minister might do this by issuing a more extensive press release or by using the media somehow or other to reassure people, for whom I have no particular brief, who are having a little difficulty in interpreting exactly what the government intends.

I now wish to put forward, not a reservation but rather a general thought I have. It has to do with some views I expressed in the House about the possibility of conflicts of interest arising when we give in one department jurisdiction to establish regulations and place upon that same department the responsibility for investigation. I think most hon. members are very much aware of my concern about conflicts of interest which not necessarily have arisen but which could arise under the existing structure of the Department of Transport. I think much the same principle has been ignored in the drafting of this bill. I would ask the minister to give some thought to this matter prior to the bill being considered by the committee in the hope that some amendment might be made which would give to the people outside of Canada affected by this bill the assurance that this would not be an added difficulty. In other words, sometimes it is as important that justice seem to be done as it is that justice be done. I believe the minister is aware of this, but I draw it to his attention.

I am also a little concerned about the limited jurisdiction. Other hon. members have spoken about this and I shall not dwell on it except to add the comment—and I believe the minister is aware of this—that it would be very seldom that a bulk carrier which was not destined for a Canadian port would come inside the gulf stream anywhere near our jurisdiction. I might briefly explain that. The pattern of the traffic route in the north Atlantic is such that it clearly demonstrates that shipping does not come within 60 or 70 miles of our coast unless indeed it is destined for a Canadian port. If there should be any thought in the minds of the drafters of this particular amendment that it would be difficult to be beyond the limits they have now suggested because this might interfere with the normal freedom of passage of ships to and from other countries, I would think they could remove it from their minds.

Perhaps one of the most important contributions I could make to this debate at this particular stage would be to urge the Minister of Transport to appeal to his colleagues very strongly—I know he is quite capable of that—to release the strings on the budget of the Department of National Defence so that it might get on with an orderly program to meet the policing requirements. I do not think this policing is something which should be done by the minister's department. I believe that in 1970 we have reached the point where we must separate the responsibilities of the Department of Transport. I shall not go into the reasons because I think they are very clear. I suggest that never before has it been more obvious that there is a need for a loosening of the budget of the Department of National Defence. It would seem to me that this is the only department of government competent to carry out the policing that is required, not only under this legislation but also under several other measures which presently are before us. The people in this department would seem to be the only people who have the legal status necessary to successfully police this and other measures.

It would be absolutely wrong for us to say to the world that these are the measures we intend to enforce to protect our coast line and then fail to do anything about it. There is no need for me to say anything about the tramp steamships of the world and the condition of those ships which carry bulk cargo around the world. Others have dealt forcefully with this, and I agree strongly with them. In the absence of a Canadian mercantile fleet, it is obvious that we do not have the courage or intention of saying that no pollutant may be carried in or out of Canada except in a Canadian bottom. However, we must be prepared to show the world shipping community that we intend to enforce the provisions of this bill.

It will be difficult to enforce the provisions of the bill. It will be hazardous to send destroyers out alongside oil tankers or, for that matter, alongside fishing vessels. The Department of National Defence will not be able to undertake this job when operating with a frozen budget, and I have not heard any plans announced by the Department of Transport to expand its fleet of vessels by building patrol type boats. In any event, Mr. Speaker, this is not a coastguard responsibility. A para-military operation is required. The coastguard's duties should be the day-to-day maintenance of our waterways and aids to navigation.

Why is it only oil tankers that are to be taxed? Why not tax all ships carrying pollutants? What about the very forceful suggestion made by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter) in connection with the regular movement of phosphorous in and out of Placentia Bay? When the bill refers to the movement of any bulk cargo that is a pollutant, does it refer only to cargoes leaving Canadian ports destined for overseas, or does it refer specifically to the movement of bulk pollutant cargo between Canadian ports? I hope the minister can deal forcefully with these questions.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Many segments of the Dr. McTaggart-Cowan task force report are ignored by this bill. I hope the minister is prepared to explain in detail why this has happened.

In conclusion I hope the minister will bring about a change of heart on the part of the government, withdrawing reference of the bill to the Special Committee on Environmental Pollution and instead sending it to the Transport Committee where shipping people will have an opportunity to speak to a body that has some continuity in shipping matters, instead of a committee that has no expertise in shipping matters.

I also trust the minister will announce the government's intention to introduce legislation soon dealing with offshore drilling, particularly with reference to the east coast. Provision has been made with respect to drilling in the Arctic, but we are still very much in the dark with respect to regulations governing other offshore drilling for oil and other minerals.

It is to be regretted that, despite the government's efforts, the community of maritime nations meeting at Brussels did not accept the Canadian suggestion to establish an international convention protecting all the world's shorelines and beaches, not to mention the full ocean environment, the birds above it and the fish below it. Protein from the sea may well become necessary to the survival of human life. I hope Canada's efforts in this direction will soon produce meaningful results. The government is on the right track and has responsibility to move unilaterally in the absence of such an international convention. In implementing the bill, I hope we demonstrate clearly to the other maritime nations of the world that we intend to keep our sea environment clean, no matter what the cost may be to them.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, debate on Bill C-2 has been going on for two days, and most of the points I would like to make have been covered by previous speakers. However, I would like to emphasize two or three matters. I feel a great deal of good can come out of our discussion at committee stage, and I give notice of my intention to propose one or two amendments when we reach that stage because I believe this legislation could be greatly improved if the minister would accept several amendments.

I am not sure that the suggestion to send this legislation to the Special Committee on Environmental Pollution is a proper suggestion. I feel that the legislation is not going to the right committee. I feel it should be sent to the Transport Committee, which is a much larger body than the Special Committee on Environmental Pollution. There is an opportunity in the Transport Committee for more members to delve into the intricacies of the various sections of the bill and to express their views on them. But I think more important than the size of the committee is the fact that for years the Committee on Transport and Communications has been dealing with shipping problems which, I suggest, should not be the subject of deliberations of a committee that has been set up primarily to deal with special environmental problems. The coastal trade, problems of shipping, transport and matters related to the continental shelf, have been delved into on numerous occasions by the members of the Committee on Transport and Communications. I believe they understand the background of the problems which shipping along our Canadian coasts will face much better than members of the new committee which has just recently been set up.

I suggest to the minister that he seriously reconsider changing the terms of reference and having this matter referred to what I consider is the appropriate committee, namely, the transport committee. Although I must point out that I would very much like to sit in on the discussions of the committee, I realize that our members on the transport committee are very capable, and can certainly handle all the discussion that will take place there.

To get back to the bill, let me say that it deals primarily with pollution control problems as they refer to shipping. I want to say right at the start that no matter what aspect of pollution we consider, it is becoming crystal clear to the government and to the public alike that we need very tough legislation in this field. We have had warnings galore from ecologists and others who have pointed out to us what is happening to our environment.

When we are dealing with a bill of this nature which affects the ecology of our east and west coasts, I feel members of the House and the government in particular should be prepared to write into the legislation some of the toughest provisions that we can possibly make. I am one of those who feel that we do not have too much time to play around with the ecology of the oceans and of the waters and streams in this nation. There are also other aspects of pollution where firm steps have to be taken. I am convinced that in several respects the bill is not nearly tough enough. I support the objectives of the measure before us but, as I said earlier, I feel it would be far more effective if the minister could accept several of the amendments suggested by hon. members who have already spoken. I believe the acceptance of these amendments will help to make this legislation more effective.

For example, I suggest that Canada should extend its jurisdiction with regard to pollution control zones from the proposed 12-mile limit to the same 100-mile limit which we imposed last year in our Arctic waters. I ask the minister, in all sincerity, are the east and west coasts of Canada of any less value to our nation than the Arctic? Is there less chance of oil doing terrific damage in these areas than in the north? I am aware of the delicate ecology in the Arctic area, but I want to point out also that the amount of shipping in the Arctic, even with the possibility of big shipments going from the Prudhoe Bay area and from other oil fields which might be found in that area, will be small when compared with the amount of shipping along the east and west coasts. The oil pollution hazard that this potential shipping will create, far outweighs the damage which might be done in the Arctic area. If there is a section of this nation that needs protection, it is the east and west coasts of Canada. This is where the most development has taken place and where our coastal cities are to be found.

Coming from British Columbia as I do, I am aware of the immense and terrible damage that could be done if a major oil spill were to occur along the west coast of British Columbia. The same situation applies to the eastern area. It appeals me to think that as yet we are afraid to tell the world that we will impose a pollution control zone 100 miles out from our coasts. We already claim a 100-mile zone in the Arctic. We have announced this to the world, so why should we not tell all countries that we are going to have a similar zone out in the Atlantic as well as in the Pacific to protect the shores of Canada? In this way we could have some type of control over the ships that come into the area.

This recommendation does not come from the New Democratic Party alone. This recommendation was made by the task force "Operation Oil" that was in charge of the cleanup of the Arrow oil in Chedabucto Bay, and it is contained in their report. I think the minister and the government should take cognizance of what is contained in that report.

The task force points out in their report that the Arrow oil travelled over 100 miles from Chedabucto Bay and polluted the shores of Sable Island. No doubt this oil, spilled as a result of one of our worst disasters of this kind, did a great deal of damage to Sable Island, although one cannot say that that island is densely inhabited. This is the recommendation of the task force to the government:

> We recommend that extensive pollution control zones be established to cover the rest of the coast of Canada consistent with the position taken by the government in the Arctic.

I endorse that position 100 per cent. If we can put this protective zone around the Arctic areas, then we should bring it right down the east and west coasts to the U.S. boundary and insist on having some control over oil pollution so far as shipping in this area is concerned.

Another point with which I would like to deal is related to the cost of cleaning up. I understand that under this bill the liability of a ship owner for cleaning up has been limited to $14 million, with the balance of the cost to come from a fund. I am of the firm opinion that if there were an accident involving a big oil tanker and it cost $30 million to clean up the mess, the ship owners ought to be liable for every single penny of the clean-up cost. I think this principle ought to apply on a Canada-wide basis to other industries polluting our streams and rivers. I do not see why the public should be liable for part of the cost of the clean-up. The polluters ought to be made liable. On the day we make ships and shipping companies liable for the costs of cleaning up, we shall begin seeing standards of construction of oil tankers that will to a very large degree, I believe, eliminate many of the oil pollution problems confronting the world today. I have no hesitation in saying that I think there should be unlimited liability on those who, perhaps through accident or otherwise, cause tremendous damage to the ecology of our country. This is the recommendation in the task force report, page 41:

• (4:30 p.m.)

> We recommend that the law should make it clear that those who pollute pay the complete cost of clean-up, including the cost of any Canadian federal or provincial personnel used in the clean-up, that the ship concerned be impounded until this has been accomplished or assured and that the legal penalties be in addition to this liability for the complete cost of cleaning up the pollution.

I agree with this recommendation of the task force.

May I raise another point? Other members have talked about ships that fly flags of convenience, the flags of small nations that will register any ships that wish to fly their flag. They impose low standards on those ships. We had an example of this in the case of the Arrow. Testimony showed that there was inadequate equipment on board, and some of it was not working. Under the bill, Mr. Speaker, some of these things will be corrected. We shall have a chance to check more thoroughly all the shipping that arrives in our coastal waters. Canada should take action against these flags of convenience on an international basis. There should be an understanding, world wide, that we will not allow any of these old hulks that have been picked up for low prices and used by unscrupulous individuals or companies to carry cargoes, which are often improperly insured, to sail our waters. When ships like that, and the Arrow is a case in point, have accidents, they hit us hard. In the case of the Arrow oil spill, Canada was hit and hit hard by the cost of cleaning up, to the extent of $3 million. Part of the money, I understand, will come out of some insurance fund. These are things that worry me.

May I refer to another point which I think I ought to raise at this time. You know, years ago Canada went out of the large scale shipbuilding business. We do not have much of a merchant marine in Canada. We have merchant ships on our inland waters, but not too many of them. So far as our export trade is concerned, I do not think very many ships are now carrying the Canadian flag. There might be one or two but there are very few, in any event. We should go into this business. We should build a merchant marine for our country and insist on the highest possible standards when building these ships. We should insist that ships built to a certain standard shall sail our waters. If they are to bring oil cargoes to Canada, they must conform to a certain standard. If the ships cannot meet those standards, we should insist that the oil be brought in Canadian bottoms. What is wrong with that? We could do a tremendous service to our nation by building a merchant marine. We could earn large sums of money through a Canadian merchant marine. We could give jobs to thousands of Canadians working the ships and also give work to skilled people in our shipyards. This would help to solve the unemployment problem which is plaguing our nation. I think the House ought to take another look at this matter, and look at it very closely. I feel our need for a Canadian merchant marine ties in very closely with the provisions of this bill and with guarding Canadian shores from shipping which, to be generous, is not of the best.

There is another point I should like to make. I know that other members wish to say a few words before the debate closes at five o'clock but I want to talk about the matter of clean-up. We have been told that already there is a program for attacking oil pollution problems on the east and west coasts, and in the north. No doubt this is so. Although some steps have been taken to assist in dealing with some of the oil spills we have suffered, they are a long way from being perfect. I urge the minister to continue his efforts, not only with regard to the east and west coasts, the north, and our inland waters and rivers, but also to make sure that a tremendous amount of research effort is put into the solution of this particular problem. I think we must all recognize that the use of oil in our country will increase and that there will be more oil spills and larger oil spills in the years ahead, whether we like it or not. We shall encounter pollution problems from oil when we undertake offshore drilling. If there are not adequate plans for cleaning up in the event that there are oil spills, there could be immense and lasting damage to the north, to the fisheries, and to the potential of our coastal areas. Everyone is aware of this. I cannot emphasize this enough. You can never tell when an accident will happen. We must be prepared for one.

I could say much more, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned earlier, I think that many of the points which have been raised in the House will be discussed in committee. When the bill comes back to the House, we shall have another opportunity to speak on it. If some of our suggestions have not been given consideration, we shall raise them again in the House and ask the minister to accept further amendments which will tighten this legislation. Basically, it is a step in the right direction.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I will not deal with Bill C-2 at any length because I feel, in view of the general support it has received in the House, that it is really not necessary for me to do so. I should like, first of all, to congratulate the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson). When I listened to him last Friday I thought he gave one of the most lucid presentations on any bill that I had ever heard in this House. I generally support the provisions of Bill C-2 which update the Canada Shipping Act. It takes into consideration one of our most serious problems, pollution. It deals with pollution of our Territorial seas and of our great lakes and other navigable waters in Canada. It is high time this was done and I believe that all Canadians support the general intentions of this bill.

Pollution, as we know, constitutes a great problem. I am sure all members of the House, and all people in Canada, are concerned about it and want us to do everything we can in order to correct the situation. The Arrow disaster, of course, reminded us of the seriousness of oil pollution in our waters. The step taken by the government in the Arctic pollution bill, of course, was another vital step forward in the protection of our environment.

The minister spoke of the amount of expertise we have developed as a result of our experience in connection with the Arrow disaster. On Friday, the minister stated we probably have developed more expertise to deal with this problem than any other country in the world. I hope we will not have to use it. If this bill is accepted, the likelihood of a disaster from an old tanker in our waters would be greatly reduced. The main provisions of this bill will control the type of ships allowed to sail through our waters. In this way we will eliminate the use of old antiquated tankers which at present pose such a serious danger to our shorelines.

I hope that some steps will be taken to ensure that pollutants are carried in self-contained compartments on these ships. In the event of a break-up this precaution would hopefully result in a loss of only one section of the ship rather than the entire cargo. It is a great step forward to insist as is done in this amendment on proper navigational equipment on board ships sailing within our waters. It is also important to have pilots handle these ships over dangerous areas, as well as to enforce traffic controls similar to the kind exercised in the air routes of the world. It is time we had these safe guards for shipping as well. I am certain hon. members agree on the need for fines for dumping pollutants and the need for security checks to insure that this act is properly policed.

When reading the bill I was quite confused by the terminology regarding the maximum fine of $210 million gold francs. I thought that was a huge amount of money. I have since ascertained that it amounts to approximately $14 million. I am not an expert in the field, but I hope the committee will examine this to see whether it is adequate.

There are provisions in the act to establish a pollution claims fund. A charge of 15 cents a ton will be paid into the fund to take care of surplus damages in excess of the $14 million maximum liability. The other day someone asked what would happen in the early stages of this Maritime pollution control fund. The minister indicated there may be a provision whereby money will be put into this fund to take care of the early stages of its development. I think this is a good idea. I hope the government seriously considers and acts upon this suggestion of the minister.

The bill creates an opportunity to remind Canadians of the cost of fighting pollution. It is evident that the cost of transporting oil and other pollutants by ships under the aegis of this act will result in increased charges for such products. I think Canadians will be prepared to pay the small additional charge in order to ensure that the environment is protected for ourselves and future generations. I am sure we can make the same observation in respect to any measures taken to fight pollution. It cannot be done by a government getting its money from the sky. It must be done by individuals and governments who are prepared to spend money in this fight. Obviously the cost will be borne by either the consumer or the taxpayer, but I think this cost will be acceptable because of the protection it assures for everyone in this country.

Section 738(1) of the bill reads:

> Where the Minister has reasonable cause to believe that a ship that is in distress, stranded, wrecked, sunk or abandoned is discharging or is likely to discharge a pollutant into any waters to which this Part applies, he may, or he may authorize any person to, destroy, if necessary, or remove, if possible, and sell or otherwise dispose of the ship, its cargo—

I wonder why the words "if necessary" and "if possible" are advisable in the section. There may be a legal complication as to what was necessary after the event or whether it was possible to save the ship. I suggest the committee should make some effort to determine whether in fact there could be such a difficulty. Section 747(2) reads:

> The Administrator, on the expiration of his term of office, is not eligible for reappointment.

I do not think that this provision is in any other act. If it is, I have not seen it. I wonder why it is in this particular act. The minister would know whether the administrator is doing a good job. In the event he is, he should be eligible for re-appointment. The committee should give some consideration to this provision.

Sections 761 to 765 inclusive outline the fines on summary conviction. I will not deal with that now. Other speakers have referred to it. These sections of the bill should be carefully studied. I am not privy to any of the facts on which these provisions are based but the committee should be satisfied that these fines will ensure conformity with the act. If the fines are too modest, people will ignore these regulations.

I welcome the amendments to the Canada Shipping Act and the new direction they have given. It is a big step forward in the government's war on pollution. I will have no hesitation in supporting this bill when it comes back from committee to the House of Commons.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to share with the minister the time remaining until five o'clock. I compliment the minister on receiving a Newfoundland honourary Doctor of Laws degree.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCleave: I do not know the rights and privileges of such an awesome office. To determine this, I suppose one would have to ask a Philadelphia honourary Doctor of Laws. The minister has stolen a march on not only the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), a Professor of Law, but also the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner). At page 33 of this bill the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson), honourary LLD, has used the expression, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970. The minister has the rare honour of being first to bring these revised statutes to our attention. I might add parenthetically that the revised statutes do not have to be printed either this year or next year, regardless of what the minister has included in the legislation. In any event, come when they may, they will be called the Revised Statutes of 1970. How is that for a Newfoundland honourary Doctor of Laws?

I welcome that part of the legislation that establishes a fund so that fishermen will not have to chase oil tankers all over the world or to establish negligence or maloperation of the tankers resulting in losses to the fishermen. I think this is splendid.

When studying that portion of the bill dealing with the pollution control officer, I could not understand how that office was set up. I assume this officer would be someone from the Public Service who would have other duties in other departments. On checking with the minister, he advised me this is so. This officer could be a member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police stationed in an outpost if there are no other officials available. Whoever he is, and whoever these other functionaries mentioned in the legislation may be, I hope they will not find themselves in the position of a friend of mine from Beaver Harbour, Nova Scotia, a Mr. Leask, who was appointed a receiver of wrecks some seven or eight years ago. Lo and behold, there was a wreck in part of the ocean within his jurisdiction. But the receiver of wrecks is paid by the company concerned, and in this case, having seen its assets become a wreck, the company had no further interest. In addition, it was a United States company with no assets in Canada on which to levy. I entered for a while into the spirit of the merry-go-round between Mr. Leask, the Department of Transport and the marine lawyer in Halifax representing the United States company, but in the end Mr. Leask never received his payment as receiver of wrecks, and I intend to show up humbly before the environmental committee when this bill goes before it in an effort to see that nobody else finds himself in the position of Mr. Leask.

Finally, there has been some discussion as to whether this bill should be sent to the committee on environmental pollution or to another committee. I think there is much to be said for the contention that it should go to the Transport Committee. Surely, though, we could send it to the committee already designated and then, if we find, after some discussion there, that it ought to be handled by the larger committee, it could be transferred.

I am very much in agreement with those who have said that ships other than oil tankers may be carrying pollutants. I received a blistering letter lately from somebody who had travelled aboard one of the Canadian National ferries operating out of Nova Scotia this year and who had been horrified by the dumping of garbage all over the Atlantic Ocean. I make these remarks in the spirit which very much prevails this afternoon when we are all trying to do something about this serious pollution problem. I was prompted to take part in the debate, as were many other members, by the Arrow disaster, and I might point out that the first real debate on this subject took place when I brought the subject up on the adjournment motion late one evening and said that at least Canadian pilots, familiar with these waters, should be carried in these circumstances and also that rules should be laid down setting out navigation routes to be followed by vessels carrying potentially dangerous cargoes. I am glad to find that the bulk of these points, as well as others, are covered in the legislation before us, and for this reason I support the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must advise the House that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

[Mr. McCleave.]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): May I first of all thank all hon. members who have spoken in this debate for their support of the principles of this bill, and thank them also for their worthwhile, and, for the most part, well thought out suggestions for the improvement of the measure. I wish to assure the House that if there is any suggestion from any quarter which it is possible to implement and which is within our competence as a Parliament and as a government, we shall be most pleased to do so.

I have taken note of all the comments which have been made during the debate but hon. members will appreciate that with the relatively short time at my disposal it would be impossible to deal with them all. I should like, nevertheless, to deal with one or two of them. In the first instance, with regard to the more or less general feeling that the bill does not go far enough, let me say that in ideal terms perhaps various parts of the measure should be extended. But I believe hon. members have also given their own, and the correct, answer to this charge by pointing out that we have in fact gone further unilaterally in this particular area than any other country on the face of the earth.

What we have done has been to stretch our jurisdiction to the absolute maximum. When we get into committee I shall be pleased to answer detailed questions on this issue and I hope to persuade members that the position is exactly as I have stated.

Reference has been made to the fact that below latitude 60 we have not gone as far as we did in connection with the Arctic pollution measure. Again, I believe the hon. member who made this point himself recognized the reasons behind this approach. There are unique circumstances in the north which do not apply further south. Moreover it is our judgment that we do not need the same powers in the area below latitude 60 as we do in the Arctic. If we were to extend the so-called pollution zones 100 miles to sea off, for example, the east coast, it would be tremendously difficult for us to try to investigate which vessels, among the enormous amount of shipping in that region, were heading for Canadian ports. But I hope to deal with this aspect of the matter also in the committee and if it can be demonstrated there that we could strengthen these provisions in some way I shall show no reluctance about doing so.

I wish to refer now, to the comments made by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and to thank him for his kind comments. He outlined the position correctly; there is a gap in our fishing zones on the south coast of Newfoundland, but, again, I do not believe it amounts to so great an inhibition as the hon. member believes it to be in terms of this measure. For example, the whole of Placentia Bay can, and does, come within the so-called pollution control zone. So while there is, in some respects, the gap to which he alluded, there are more teeth in this legislation even in these difficult areas than has been appreciated to date.

Finally, I should like to suggest that if hon. members are so disposed we might give second reading to this bill and refer it to the particular committee named in the motion, but I undertake to discuss with House leaders and others a possible change in this arrangement if it is generally considered that this course would be wise or necessary.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Special Committee on Environmental Pollution.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland)—United Nations—South Africa—Canadian abstention on arms embargo resolutions—Decision on spare parts; the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart)—External Affairs—Appointment of the Board of Governors of the International Development Research Centre; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Canadian National Railways—Retired employees' pensions—Action to implement committee recommendation for increase.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, Notices of Motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' NOTICES OF MOTIONS

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

SUGGESTED CHANGE IN STANDING ORDERS TO PERMIT RECORDED VOTE

On the order:

Mr. Baldwin—October 16, 1970

That the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization review Standing Orders dealing with Private Members' Public Bills with a view to making a report to the House with a recommendation that such changes be made as will allow a recorded vote on some of such bills.

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether this motion could stand. I believe there has been agreement that it be allowed to stand and maintain its position on the order paper.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that motion No. 1 be allowed to stand and maintain its position on the order paper?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Research on Treatment of Animals

RESEARCH

STUDY BY STANDING COMMITTEE OF CARE, UTILIZATION AND TREATMENT OF ANIMALS

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the following matters should be referred to a standing committee, designated by the Prime Minister, with authority to call for persons and papers and report its deliberations with recommendations (a) the use of animals for medical research purposes, their care and utilization, and procedures for government licensing and inspection of, and control over, all premises using animals for laboratory research or medical training (b) as far as federal jurisdiction permits, recommendations regarding legislation providing penalties for those abusing animals, and any persons making a business of raising or catching animals for sale to research individuals or centres and not keeping same in a humane manner (c) the most humane method of trapping fur-bearing animals (d) consideration of the entire Canadian picture relative to the maintenance of fish, bird and animal wildlife and the regulations required for conservation (e) consideration of federal and provincial jurisdiction on the aforementioned items, and proposals for an effective manner of attaining federal-provincial agreement and legislative action.

• (5:00 p.m.)

He said: Mr. Speaker, I believe that this is the fourth session in a row that I have introduced a motion of this nature dealing with the subjects enumerated in the motion now before the House. I hope all hon. members have noted that the motion is presented in a democratic manner. It is non-partisan; it is not dogmatic in nature; it does not put forward answers, solutions or procedures. It merely, but importantly, draws to the attention of the members of the House of Commons matters that I most sincerely and deeply believe should be referred to a standing committee of the House for complete study. This study would embrace research on the part of the committee. Having heard witnesses give evidence, the committee would then be in a position to report to the House of Commons and to the government any recommendations resulting from its studies that it felt were in the best interests of Canada.

I am not going to speak at length on the motion because, as I say, I have spoken to similar motions on three previous occasions. Certainly, I would not want to be guilty of the charge of speaking at length, thereby talking out my own motion. I hope sincerely that on this, my fourth endeavour, the motion will not be talked out but will be referred to a committee for study and report.

I should like to commence by quoting two lines from the most recent issue of the journal of the National and Provincial Parks Association of Canada entitled "Park News". The last paragraph at the bottom of page 15 reads as follows:

The truth is that today's great problems will not be solved. We are too late, and we have failed for lack of foresight. Only tomorrow's problems can be solved, and only if we agree today that we are responsible for tomorrow.

It is those words, Mr. Speaker, that are the motivation behind this motion—the acceptance, the recognition, that we are responsible for tomorrow. This is why I am requesting that we recognize the fact that in this country millions of animals are still used for purposes of medical and scientific research; that we recognize the fact that, for some reason that I do not understand, Canada is lagging behind the rest of the world in trying to eliminate the inhumane use of animals for medical and scientific research. Even though animals are still used in countries like the United States and the United Kingdom, we do find there a recognition of the need for change, that great steps are being taken in the use of tissue cultures, computers and other new methods of research rather than the use of animals.

I was most interested to read the other day that in the United Kingdom there has been established the first research institute that does not use animals at all for research purposes. This institute is the Walter Hadwen Trust for Humane Research and it employs the techniques of tissue culture, cell culture, organ culture, robotics, films and computers. According to the information I read in one scientific magazine, with these advanced techniques this institute may well become one of the leading research centres of the world that does not use animals.

I wish that every adult in Canada, certainly every member of the House of Commons, could visit laboratories that use animals for research. They would not only be horrified but stupified. I also think people should read truthful and factual publications that give information about some of the types of experiments conducted and give evidence of the suffering undergone by animals used for research.

I realize that there is split jurisdiction in this country in regard to this matter. I know very well that though some provinces have acted, others have not. I am well aware of Bill 194 which recently passed the legislature of Ontario. But there is no guarantee—certainly there is no evidence of this at the present time—that the precedent established in Ontario is going to be followed by other provinces.

It is of interest to note that this particular legislation does not apply to laboratories operated under federal jurisdiction. In addition, I think it is reasonable to hope that the federal government would give leadership in bringing the provinces together in order to establish national standards that would be applied by one inspection branch in Canada instead of 11 inspection branches.

In view of what I have just said, I hope hon. members of the House appreciate why I say that we are late now in studying the treatment, the use, indeed the abuse, of animals for research purposes, and finding out why Canada is not using modern techniques instead of continuing to report to the use of animals for medical and scientific research purposes.

May I just deal very briefly with the trapping of animals. It is my understanding from what I have read that approximately four million animals a year are trapped in Canada for commercial purposes. The majority of these four million animals that are trapped in Canada for commercial purposes are exported and for reasons of expediency and cost of equipment they are caught by devices known as the leg hold or the steel jaw trap.

Neither the leg hold trap nor the steel jaw trap kills instantly: it merely traps. The trappers usually visit their traplines every two or three weeks, and during that time animals that have been caught can starve or freeze to death or even chew off their own leg in an endeavour to escape. If we are going to continue to allow trapping, and a lot of people depend on it for their livelihood and a lot of women for their adornment—although I could never quite understand why women do not realize that beauty needs no adornment—surely we can make a study and bring in recommendations to the effect that instead of using the leg hold or steel jaw trap we use devices which kill instantly even though they cost more. They are in existence. There is the Conibear trap, the Northern killer, the Mohawk trap, the Compensator, the Canada trap, the Fisher trap and the CX13 and CX14. They are either in commercial production, or one or two of them I believe, are in the testing stage. In respect of this matter of killing animals for commercial purposes, if we had any warm blood or humanity in our beings at all we should be interested in a committee hearing the experts, listening to the evidence and bringing in a report.

On the other matter of conservation, this is something which is of vital interest to me. One has only to read the newspapers and the magazines to know that there are many species now extinct on the North American continent, and several right here in Canada are in danger of becoming extinct within a few years. It is not right that we should know of the beauties of wild life, animals, birds and fish, but by our ignorance, stupidity or lack of action we should say to those who come after us, sorry but they are no longer here for you to see, although you might be able to find one in a zoo. We have a responsibility.

Unfortunately, detailed and specific information is not available on all areas of Canada, but I do not believe there is a great differentiation between what is taking place in Canada and in the United States. Only last week it was announced in Washington by the United States interior department that three more types of animals, eight of birds and eleven of fish now face extinction in the United States. The list of the Department of the Interior of endangered species now stands at 101, including 14 types of mammals, 50 of birds, 7 of reptiles and amphibians and 30 species of fish. This is the list according to that department of the United States government of wildlife facing extinction on the North American continent.

At least two years ago they started taking action in the United States. When are we going to start taking action in Canada? I suggest that immediate action is required and that is why I hope this motion is carried today so studies can commence by a standing committee of this House. In addition, the committee could also study last week's report of the conference which was held in Canada by conservationists. It was interesting to note in the newspaper only two days ago that a resolution was passed calling on the federal government and the Yukon territorial government to set up Canada's first wildlife range. This resolution was passed at the international conference recently held at Whitehorse. It called for the allocation of 600,000 acres of wild range as an adjunct to the 1,000,000 acres established by the U.S. government in Alaska back in 1961. This is a matter for federal interest and action.

This is just one example of the type of study that could be made by the committee for the purpose of making recommendations to other members of the House of Commons. I am not going to carry on any longer. When I started I quoted from a national publication. I should like to conclude by quoting from a provincial publication. This is the most recent issue of Wildlife Review, which is published by the Department of Recreation and Conservation of the government of British Columbia. The last paragraph of the editorial on page 3 reads:

> We have not much time left in which to learn to proportion our population to available resources, and to become good enough trustees of our inherited wealth of air, water, earth and forests so that posterity may hope to survive in a condition better than a bestial struggle.

May I say that the birds, the animals and the fish also are interested in posterity. They also have a claim on the inherited wealth of the air, water, earth and the forest but they cannot do very much for their own survival. We, the people of Canada, and the parliamentarians can do something about this and we must. That is why I say that if we, as Members of Parliament, will only recognize that we have a responsibility to those who come after us to pass on a heritage that is richer and more full because it passed through our hands, we will pass this motion so the subject can be studied by a standing committee of this House.

Mr. Tom H. Goode (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I might point out at this time that as a result of a private member's bill I introduced last session the name Delta has just been mentioned in this House for the first time. I express on behalf of the 44,000 people who now live in Delta the pride they feel in knowing that their home is now officially recognized by name in Parliament.

The intent of this motion is highly desirable and it is one that I heartily support. I support it particularly as it relates to the special responsibilities that the Department of Fisheries and Forestry has in regulating and controlling the sealing industry of the Atlantic region. These responsibilities involve two areas of paramount concern; the conservation of the seal herd and the development and implementation of the most humane harvesting methods. It is significant, I think, that the recommendation for a committee to study, report on and make recommendations concerning the use, harvesting and conservation of animal wildlife has already been carried out in so far as the Atlantic seal herds are concerned. I am referring to the harp seals and the hooded seals.

Last year the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry conducted an exhaustive study on the whole subject of these seal herds and the sealing operation. It examined the manner in which the seals are harvested and the conservation measures in effect. It scrutinized as well the legislation applicable to the sealing industry.

The committee heard evidence from many persons involved with the seal fisheries. It heard evidence from senior officials of the fisheries service of the Department of Fisheries and Forestry, from scientists and from persons directly concerned with the administration of the sealing regulations. It examined also Canada's severely damaged reputation abroad. Finally, the committee recommended that the seal hunt continue in the Gulf of St. Lawrence under continuing safeguards as to prevention of cruelty and preservation of the herds.

To reiterate, the recommendation for a House committee study of our animal wildlife, in so far as the Atlantic seals are concerned, has already been carried out. However, I do not intend to imply that the department has stopped there in studying and developing management methods for the seal herds and the sealing operations. In fact, during the past year several new regulations were added to those already in effect. A brief review of the evolution of the regulations respecting the seal hunt would, I think, be in order. Although the seal herds have been hunted since the eighteenth century by coastal residents and commercial interests, partly for food but primarily for fur, there were relatively few regulations prior to 1964. During and following that year, several factors contributed to very rapid changes and additions to the regulations. These factors, not necessarily in order of importance, were: the increasing take of seals by foreign sealing vessels as well as our own; evidence produced by the scientists of the Fisheries Research Board of Canada that the seal stocks were being overexploited; the use of aircraft in sealing; and a large-scale international controversy over the humane aspects of sealing.

In 1964, as a preliminary measure, sealing vessels and aircraft engaged in sealing were licensed by the Department of Fisheries. Subsequently, the department, in consultation with the industry and with humane and conservation society representatives, developed a new set of sealing regulations for the Atlantic coast for the 1965 season. Open and closed seasons for operations from ships and aircraft were retained as before and new control measures were introduced. For the first time a quota was imposed; it applied to the southern portion of the Gulf of St. Lawrence—the main whelping area— where the take of young harp seals by ships and aircraft was limited to 50,000. Scientific research had shown that up to 90,000 young harp seals could be taken in the entire gulf without endangering the survival of the herd. Since 1965, the gulf harvests, including commercial and landsmen's catches, have generally been well within the safety margin. The taking of hooded seals, whose numbers were very low, was banned in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Also, the taking of adult seals from whelping and breeding patches was prohibited.

In addition to these conservation measures, new regulations came into force in 1965 which defined the type of club that could be used in taking seals, including its minimum weight and size. Another regulation, which set a limit on the time that seal pelts could be left on the ice before removal to a base of operations, was designed to prevent the possible loss of pelts in storms and changing ice conditions. Good as these regulations were, they represented but a starting point for the actions the department has since taken—consistently in consultation with conservation and humane groups and with the industry—in exercising control over the management of the seal herds and operating methods. Among the measures adopted since 1965, and in force today, there is a provision that anyone engaged in taking seals must have a personal sealer's licence. A primary responsibility has been placed on the masters of sealing vessels to ensure that every crew member complies with the regulation. In the event of violations of the regulations, our fishery officers have the authority to suspend a sealer's licence for up to 30 days.

The regulations covering methods by which seals may be taken have been redefined and made more effective, and the section pertaining to skinning of seals has been strengthened. A prohibition has also been imposed on sealing during hours of darkness. As a further control measure, this year a ban was placed on the use of aircraft, both fixed wing and helicopters for the taking of seals in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Aircraft could still be used in searching for seals—for which they required a licence—but they could not be used in actual sealing operations. I referred earlier to the quota the department imposed in 1965 of 50,000 on the take of young seals in the main sealing area of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. We could do this because Canada is the only nation harvesting seals there. However, we have been equally concerned for a number of years over the total take of seals from the herds which frequent the Front; that is the area off the coast of Labrador and northeastern Newfoundland. There we compete with the Norwegians in harvesting the seals and any quota or other conservation measure that we would like to impose required international sanction.

Largely as a consequence of Canadian initiatives, international action has now been taken to limit the combined seal harvest from the Front and the Gulf of St. Lawrence. At the annual meeting of the International Commission for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries in June of this year, agreement was reached on an over-all quota of 245,000 seals from the Front and the Gulf, and this quota will apply in 1971. This figure is based on scientific calculations of the maximum sustainable yield of the seal population; that is, the total number that may safely be harvested without jeopardizing the seal stocks. The ICNAF quota reserves 45,000 seals for capture by Canadian landsmen and small boat crews, whose yearly catch averages this figure. Large Canadian vessels may take 100,000 seals and Norwegian vessels also have a 100,000 limit on their catches. Adoption of the 245,000 quota reduces the seal harvest below the average of recent years, which was about 285,000. It is below the 1970 harvest by Canada and Norway, which totalled approximately 258,000.

Also becoming effective in 1971 will be a five-day reduction in the duration of the hunt. I repeat that; in 1971 there will be a five-day reduction in the duration of the hunt. The season closing date will be advanced to April 24. This change is being made to reduce the take of breeding seals, particularly mature female seals. While the healthy survival of the seal resources requires careful management and restraint in harvesting, there is evidence that the cause of conservation would be little advanced by imposition of a total hunting ban as has been advocated by some persons. Biologists state if hunting were prohibited, the harp seal population would build up from its present level of about two million animals to upwards of four million. However, the natural environment can only support a limited number of animals of any species, and an unrestricted population increase would intensify the seals' struggle for survival. Competition for good in these circumstances would become fiercer, and as a result more animals would die of starvation, parasites, predators or disease.

The population pressure on essential environmental requirements such as suitable pupping areas, would also lead to large annual losses and a serious waste of a natural resource. Controlled harvesting, on the other hand, keeps the seal herds at a safe, self-perpetuating level, and provides for productive use of what otherwise would be wasted. These are the aims of Canada's seal conservation policies. So far in my remarks I have been speaking generally of the sealing industry and of the measures that the Department of Fisheries and Forestry has adopted to conserve the seal herds and to ensure that the animals are handled in the most humane way possible. But what about the people who are most directly concerned, the sealers themselves and their dependents who have a most important stake in this operation? The typical seal hunter is a fisherman in other seasons. For many such fishermen, the returns from their primary occupation are marginal and, despite their industry and resourcefulness, they find it difficult to make what would be considered a reasonable living.

For most of these fishermen gainful employment is suspended from about November until the following April or May because of stormy weather and ice conditions. The spring seal hunt represents for them, as it has for their forebearers for nearly three centuries, the first opportunity to work, to earn money for the necessities of life and to help prepare for a new fishing season. Many of the sealers, especially the landsmen, not only derive money from the sale of pelts but also use parts of the seal as food for themselves and their families. They regard the seal herds as a particularly timely resource to be harvested as are other resources of the sea, such as cod and lobster, later in the season.

I shall not go too deeply into statistics but I think I should mention a few. In 1969, the last year for which full statistics are available, 391 fishermen on 11 large sealing vessels had average gross earnings of $900 for less than two months' work. The average gross income for landsmen, for whom 3,048 licences were issued, was $120. Thus, the total income to sealers was close to $730,000. These are significant figures when one considers their relative value to the income of the people concerned. Additional earnings went to workers employed in plants where the pelts are processed.

I referred earlier to the participation of representatives of humane and conservation societies in the development of our sealing regulations. The opinions of these groups, which we value, have been based on first hand experience. For the past six years the department has invited representatives of these groups to witness the seal hunt. The observers have included veterinarians, biologists, conservation authorities and other specialists. Their reports, with rare exceptions, have expressed approval of the humane methods employed in harvesting the seals. I quote a few examples. In his report of observations of the 1970 seal hunt in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, Mr. Thomas I. Huges, general manager of the Ontario Humane Society, states:

> The Gulf of St Lawrence seal hunt, as it is now conducted, and as far as the young seals are concerned, is without doubt one of the most humane slaughtering operations I have ever witnessed. It is tightly regulated and certainly the regulations were enforced more stringently than in any other slaughtering operations that I know of. It seems reasonable to presume, therefore, that the "ultimate" has been reached so far as a regulated slaughtering operation is concerned. In my opinion there is nothing more to be gained by any further regulations.

Professor Keith Ronald, chairman of the department of zoology of the University of Guelph, has been carrying out studies on the seals for a number of years. Of his experience during the 1970 sealing seasons he states:

> As in the past I flew from spot to spot on the ice, the helicopter landing wherever I directed...I examined the skulls of recent and older kills...I met fisheries enforcement officers far away from their ships, sometimes wet and frozen...They are dedicated men directed by an understanding senior officer.
> In all of my activities and observations there was no evidence of any inhumane act... All seals were killed quickly and were rendered unconscious with the first blow.

Finally, I should like to quote a letter which Mr. A. L. MacLaurin, president of the Canadian Federation of Humane Societies, sent to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) on February 9 this year. The letter reads in part:

> The federation wishes to congratulate yourself and your department for your action both in the Gulf and on the Front to eliminate the cruelty inherent in the annual harvest of seals. I wish also at this time to apologize for the actions of some of our members in connection with the hunt as I am well aware that you have been bombarded with a great many completely misinformed and irrelevant letters and petitions on the subject of seals. The federation feels that you have done everything in your power to eliminate the cruel practices and we feel sure that you will continue to do so in the future.
> Once again I wish to express our appreciation to yourself and the members of your department for their continued efforts on behalf of the seal herd both national and international.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, during the few minutes that I wish to take this afternoon I would like to return to the motion, which is a very clear and simple one. My colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), who introduced it has been pressing for its adoption for some four years. A number of us during our daily work here have been working very hard with regard to different facets of the motion, which is in four parts although actually it seeks a single purpose: it simply urges that the whole matter of animal welfare be studied by a committee of this House.

There are four matters suggested for study and report. The first is the use of animals for medical research purposes, the second is the possibility under federal jurisdiction of introducing legislation providing penalties for abusing animals, the third is the most humane method of trapping fur-bearing animals, and the fourth is the "entire Canadian picture" in regard to conservation of fish, bird and animal wildlife. These four matters lead to the meshing together of federal and provincial jurisdiction in this respect.

Between members of this House and their constituents, there has been much discussion about animals. All of us at times have been deluged with letters concerning various forms of cruelty to animals or the well-being of animals. I know that a fresh batch of petitions will shortly be on their way to hon. members, urging that Canada take up this matter seriously and do something about it. When you get public opinion reaching such a level in this country, then I am convinced the matter is beyond being partisan in any sense and it is only proper that these matters be studied by a committee of the House. I feel that Canada is a long way behind other countries in this regard. A great deal of protective legislation with respect to animals, and medical experimentation involving their use, is in force in the United States, Great Britain and Scandinavia. We have no such legislation at the federal level in Canada.

I have before me an item taken from the Canadian Research and Development Journal for July-August, 1969, reporting that the tobacco industry was giving a grant of $300,000 to Dr. Hans Selye to "support investigation of any relationship between smoking and stress," and that the industry was also giving a grant of $300,000 to McGill University for an "interdisciplinary respiratory research laboratory." Both these grants appear to be for the purpose of investigating the validity of statements linking cigarette smoking with lung cancer. That is all very well, Mr. Speaker, but at the present time no machinery exists to supervise such experiments, and it is reasonable to assume that animals will be used in them. The work of the Canadian Council on Animal Welfare appears to be largely confined to laboratory animal husbandry and care, and the Criminal Code provides no protection for animals used in such research. For this reason I believe that we in Canada should make a preliminary study designed to introduce legislation to protect animals during experimental research.

An hon. Member: What about human beings?

Research on Treatment of Animals

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mrs. MacInnis: We are doing something about human animals, and it is high time we began doing something about other animals. Only recently have Canadians generally come to realize that the conservation of species in the animal kingdom is vital to the survival of human beings. We are now constantly being told by biologists and ecologists that if we keep on allowing animal species to disappear, if we keep on allowing gaps to develop in the food chain of animal life, we ourselves will not be able to survive as a species. It is no longer a matter merely of polluting our environment; it is a matter of destroying our environment.

As my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver East pointed out, we know now that there is this other reason for our studying animal welfare. The reason is that it is so tightly linked with human welfare.

I will not go into facts and figures relating to cruelty to animals; we have heard a lot about that subject. I have also received increasing evidence that a great many of the repetitive experiments on animals, to test stress and other factors, are no longer necessary. These experiments have been made over and over again. Also, it is now being discovered that these experiments can be carried out with tissue and by mechanical means which will eliminate the necessity of torturing living animals. No one needs to have this point shoved down his or her throat. A committee of this House could be set up which would call before it different groups of witnesses so that the members of the committee, which would be constituted of members of different parties in the House would be in a position to make up their minds on these matters. We could call before us experts concerned with animal welfare. We could call before us biologists and ecologists who could tell us about the danger to our environment which would flow from letting this matter slide. We could have before us people concerned with conserving species by means of more humane trapping methods, other methods of sealing and other regulations, if such are necessary, all along the line.

The protection of animals should no longer be regarded as a contentious matter among parties. I think it affects all of us, and surely all of us should be prepared to send this subject to a committee without any prior commitment on our part. We should send this matter to a committee for study, just as we have so many of our resolutions and bills. I believe that we shall be surprised by the evidence that comes out in committee, and I am quite sure that we shall be moved to put Canada much closer to the forefront of modern thinking with regard to the protection of animals through regulatory legislation. I would like to give other hon. members a chance to speak on this matter so I shall conclude by urging once again that every hon. member support this resolution to send the whole matter to a committee of this House for study and report.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Parliamentay Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak this evening to the motion of the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch). I must say that I always follow his flamboyant speeches with interest; he delivers them with all the passion and vitality of a 20-year old.

I shall limit myself to parts (a) and (b) of the proposal of my hon. colleague.

Any society with humane feelings must be concerned with the way animals are treated in the field of medical research, and those who use them have added responsibility in that regard.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Medical Research Council share the concern of the hon. member with regard to the use of animals in medical research. Thanks to those two bodies, funds have been supplied to the Canadian Council on Animal Care to enable it to assess the problems concerning the care of animals, and ensure that instructions are given to the appropriate provincial authorities as well as to universities, government departments and research laboratories at the local level. The Canadian Council on Animal Care published a guide on the care of animals used for experimental purposes, which gives instructions to Canadian research and educational institutions, whether they be universities, government or industrial agencies, on the adequate care and lodging of animals used in laboratories.

This guide is extremely interesting and should be read by all those who are concerned with the care of animals. They will see that the Canadian government as well as the National Research Council provided funds to publish this very important book.

This guide is also intended to be used as an evaluation basis for the care given to animals in Canada. The work of the Canadian Council on Animal care has and will continue to help us fulfil our obligations to ensure the highest quality care to animals used for scientific and educational purposes. While studying this problem and preparing this guide, the Council, as was mentioned earlier by the hon. member for Vancouver East, consulted breeding experts as well as researchers and many private and government bodies concerned with this important problem.

The underlying principle which must govern the care to be given to laboratory animals is the prevention of pain or unnecessary discomfort.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Any tests involving pain or discomfort for animals should be avoided unless there are good reasons to believe that they will help promote science and the well-being of all living species. However, if laboratory research animals must suffer pain or discomfort, appropriate anesthetic or analgesic agents should be appropriately used throughout the experiment, in the appropriate manner and administered to them so as to relieve all pain.

Even in experiment, animals should be spared abuse. The guide for the care of animals used for experimental purposes specifies that wherever possible surroundings should always be the same and even controlled for temperature and humidity.

Animals must always be kept clean and the ventilation system must supply them with an adequate quantity of oxygen. Odors must also be reduced and the environment must be kept in acceptable conditions. Lighting, noise and odors must be controlled.

As with some animals noise can affect the result of a therapeutic dose or the administered medication, these animals must be protected as much as possible from noise.

It is owing to good human care and good treatment that the welfare of animals in ensured. Good treatment comprises the ability to feel and see changes, even small, in the attitude or health of animals, plus the necessary experience to remedy the condition of the animal to its advantage.

I dare hope that the Canadian Council on Animal Care as well as the SPCA and other institutions of the kind will see to it that animals used for research purposes in Canada are treated with kindness. Moreover, I would hope that scientists will study the possibility of using non-sentimental methods in the distribution of scientific information.

Every day brings us proof of man's inhumanity to man, and as long as this situation exists, we can expect to find inhumanity of man towards animal. Scientists have kept us informed of their obligations towards the animals they use for the promotion of science.

Thanks to the efforts made by the Canadian Council on Animal Care, I am confident that the animals used for experiments are receiving satisfactory care. In addition, research laboratories, while aware of where the animals come from, see to it that the suppliers treat these animals in a humane manner. The purpose of such operations is to supply healthy animals for research purposes. It is therefore in their interest to provide well-cared for and healthy animals.

Mr. Speaker, there are clauses in the Criminal Code which provide for quite heavy fines for ill-treatment of animals. To date, several provinces have already adopted legislation aimed at ensuring fair treatment of laboratory animals. In this connection, I would like to remind the House that Bill C-150, or the omnibus bill passed in 1969, deal deals with the treatment of birds and mammals. The object of the legislation is therefore to prevent the ill-treatment of those animals.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that, thanks to the support of the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Medical Research Council, the Canadian Council on Animal Care aims at providing sufficient care and protection for laboratory animals. Moreover, the federal government does not make grants to research establishments that use laboratory animals unless those establishments agree to follow the regulations listed in the guide on the care of animals used for experimental purposes that the Canadian Council on Animal Care has prepared.

Mr. Speaker, a thorough revision of the matter is important. If it is true that today some experiments can be done in a laboratory on living tissues, it is none the less unthinkable to make medical science advance through research on animals, because they represent entities with a heart, lungs, a liver, a spleen, bowels. Whether we like it or not, we will never be able to cultivate at will all those tissues and create some animal.

The hon. member for Vancouver East stated that we are living for tomorrow, that we are responsible for the future. I feel that we are living today to improve society for future generations. The welfare of future generations rests on medical research which must be carried on animals only.

We could also be engaged in similar research in other fields thanks to cultures of live tissues, but I wonder now if we are not merely marking time. I would like to quote an excerpt from chapter 10 in a book written by Mr. Heller and entitled Of Mice, Men and Molecules. This excerpt is a true call for help.

[English]

Which is more important: dog food, or research on diseases such as cancer, leukemia, heart disease, and mental disease?

This is a legitimate question, because the total amount appropriated by the United States Congress last year for research on all diseases was equal to the amount spent by Americans on dog food.

Mr. Speaker, this thought could be developed to great lengths. To my mind, all scientifically based research must be carried out on animals in laboratories.

I have visited some laboratories. I have met Professor Best in Toronto and Professors Frappier, Selye and Vineberg in Montreal. If Dr. Vineberg particularly had not had dogs at his disposal to try the Vineberg operation, which consists in a revascularization of the coronary system that supplies blood to the heart, I wonder where we would be today.

We have extended lives, we have made a breakthrough in the knowledge of the heart so that some people are able today to lead decent lives, and these advances have been recorded thanks to experiments on animals.

Furthermore, animals are well cared for in laboratories and if we need any evidence of it all we have to do is ask Dr. Selye to let us visit his laboratories where everything is spic and span.

Even if the hon. member for Vancouver East, whose opinions we respect, has eloquently expressed his view—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired. I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INVESTMENT COMPANIES BILL

FILING OF STATEMENTS AND INFORMATION, QUALIFICATIONS AND DUTIES OF AUDITORS, TRANSFER OF SHARES, ETC.

On the order:

Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs of Bill C-3, respecting investment companies—the Minister of Finance.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I draw to Your Honour's attention certain facts regarding the recommendation that appears in this bill compared with Bill C-179, which was the number of the same bill in the last session. I submit to Your Honour that this bill fails to meet the requirements of section 54 of the British North America Act, and Standing Order 62.

One always accepts as a basic principle that there must be included in recommendations a clear authority for the payment of funds out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. I submit to Your Honour that if we compare the recommendation as it appears in Bill C-3 with that which appears in Bill C-179, reading the pertinent sections of the bill it is clearly seen that the recommendation is deficient. The recommendation as it appears in Bill C-3, the only pertinent portion with regard to the expenditure of moneys or charges on the Consolidated Revenue Fund, is at the end of line 5 and reads:

—to provide for the making of short term loans by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation to the sales finance companies and the conditions and limitations therefor as specified in the said measure and for payments out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund to the said corporations—

I think that is a typographical error; the word should be "corporation".

—for such purposes—

The remainder of the recommendation is not germane to this particular point. Bill C-179 of the last session read:

—to provide for . . . loans to such companies by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation out of funds advanced out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund; to provide for reimbursement of the corporation out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund for losses sustained in respect of any such loans and for the establishment by the corporation of a special account in the Bank of Canada to which shall be credited revenues derived from such loans and to which shall be charged certain expenditures of the corporation mentioned in the said measure—

I now quote section 29 as it appears at page 39 of Bill C-3:

(1) Subject to subsection (2), out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, the Minister

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel.]

(a) may, on terms and conditions approved by the Governor in Council, authorize advances to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation (in this section and sections 30 and 31 referred to as the "corporation") of amounts required for the purpose of making loans under section 16; and

(b) shall authorize the reimbursement of the corporation for losses sustained by it in respect of loans made under section 16.

It is paramount, Mr. Speaker, that the moneys for the loans must come from the Consolidated Revenue Fund, on the recommendation of the minister. There is no other source of funds available to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation for such loans.

(2) The amount of advances outstanding under paragraph (a) of subsection (1) shall not at any time exceed the amount by which two hundred million dollars exceeds the aggregate of reimbursements to the corporation under paragraph (b) of subsection (1).

(3) The capital budget of the corporation submitted pursuant to subsection (2) of section 80 of the Financial Administration Act shall not include information relating to anticipated capital requirements of the corporation under this section.

In other words, the normal budget of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation cannot in any way reflect possible requirements for any of the loans. This pins it down to the point where the minister must recommend any advances out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund to the corporation for the purpose of making loans to any of the companies which are the subject matter of this bill. Also, the minister must authorize the reimbursement to the corporation from the Consolidated Revenue Fund of any losses. I emphasize this point because section 28 indicates that the Superintendent of Insurance shall ascertain and certify the total amount all the expenditures incurred in connection with the administration of this act, and shall prepare an assessment of the companies governed under the act based upon a formula related to their assets.

I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that nowhere does the word "expenditures" include provision for losses on loans. Then we go forward to the authority under section 30 enabling the corporation to establish a special bank account with the Bank of Canada. The section reads:

The corporation shall establish in the Bank of Canada a special account to which shall be credited all interest received by it on loans made under section 16 to which shall be charged

(a) all interest on advances made to it under subsection (1) of section 29—

In other words, it will charge interest on behalf of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

(b) all expenses incurred by it in carrying out its duties and functions under this act; and

(c) any funds paid to the Receiver General pursuant to subsection (2).

That latter paragraph is not germane; it really refers to the reimbursement to the Receiver General of any surplus funds over and above the stated maximum. I therefore put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that the bill clearly requires a recommendation that funds should be advanced to this corporation out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. This is not covered by the existing recommendation.

Why the changes were made, I fail to understand. I am not satisfied that the initial recommendation last year was sufficient, but on a closer reading for this occasion I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is clearly deficient and that we ought not to proceed now with the second reading of the bill before us. I submit that the bill should be withdrawn and reintroduced with a proper recommendation, because there is no way in which Parliament can vote moneys without the recommendation of the Governor General as required by section 54 of the British North America Act and Standing Order 62.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the learned argument of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). The recommendation to which he refers was provided to the government by the Department of Justice after looking carefully into the matter and deciding that it was quite proper in connection with this legislation. Nevertheless, I am sure Your Honour would wish to consider the arguments put forward. I respectfully suggest that we proceed with the second reading of the bill and move the bill into the committee, and Your Honour can then determine whether the recommendation is in order in its legal form.

The hon. member for Edmonton West is a legal expert with some knowledge, and I respect his opinion although I do not place it above that of the Department of Justice. If the recommendation is improper, we can bring forward another. I recall hearing somewhat the same argument last year, at which time hon. members opposite were good enough to permit the legislation to go to a committee of the House for further consideration. In this case, if the recommendation is insufficient we could then, with the leave of the House, take steps to correct it. After all, the recommendation is not the substance of the bill. If there is a technical difficulty which the hon. gentleman has seen and which the Department of Justice has not seen, I would respectfully suggest that Your Honour consider this matter and indicate to the House at a convenient time the steps we should take; for example, whether we should submit another recommendation.

The hon. gentleman is bringing forward a technical argument, after all, because the recommendation per se is not the legislation. As he knows, one drafts legislation and asks the Department of Justice to determine a proper recommendation to the House. The recommendation has been drafted for us by the Department of Justice and I would think it is in order. However, I would never argue with the hon. gentleman who is learned in the law, and if there are technical difficulties we undertake to change the recommendation as Your Honour sees necessary.

Mr. Speaker: The point raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) is obviously one of interest. I would not think it is entirely satisfactory or sufficient for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to say that the recommendation had been put forward by the law officers of the Department of Justice and there is therefore a presumption that it is right. I suggest that this presumption should not exist.

The hon. member for Edmonton West was generous enough to suggest earlier today, unofficially, that he was worried about this important point. This has given me an opportunity to look into the matter. I must say that having done so, I am not convinced one way or the other. The argument made by the hon. member for Edmonton West is a very strong one and I wonder, as he does, why the recommendation as prepared in the first instance for Bill C-179 in the last session was not used for this particular bill, which is essentially the same legislation.

The recommendation prepared for the earlier bill was much more complete because it spelled out that losses sustained by the corporation were to be included. The essential difference is that the recommendation for Bill C-3 now before us uses only the words "for such purposes". One wonders whether the purposes referred to by the law officers of the Crown include not only the usual mortgage operations but also losses which might be sustained by the Crown as a result of these operations.

My thought is that if the Chair arrives at the conclusion that the recommendation is imperfect, as suggested by the hon. member for Edmonton West, it is a very simple matter for the Crown, at a few moments notice practically, to correct the recommendation. As was pointed out by the Minister of Finance, this was done in similar circumstances last year when it was suggested by the Chair that the recommendation was not proper. In the course of the debate a new recommendation was submitted and the amendment was agreed to by the House.

My suggestion is that we proceed with our consideration of the bill, but not so far as to give it second reading; we would hold second reading until there was either a determination by the Chair or, if my ruling is that the recommendation should be corrected, until the government takes the necessary action to obtain an amended recommendation. In this way we would not arrest the work planned for this evening. We would proceed with consideration of the bill at second reading stage, but would not put the motion on second reading. In other words, we would hold the matter in abeyance until we find some way to resolve the difficulty brought to our attention by the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Benson: That would be quite agreeable to the government. I regret the hon. member for Edmonton West did not bring his difficulty to my attention as he did to that of the Chair.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister was not here.

Mr. Benson: Had he done so, I would have been glad to look at the recommendation to see whether it needed to be amended. We are willing to proceed now with the business before us, and in the course of the debate we shall take another look at the recommendation. Your Honour can, of course, do the same, and if you indicate to us that the recommendation should be changed, then we in the government are quite willing to change it.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, this bill is practically identical to Bill C-179 which received second reading in the House of Commons and was referred to committee at the previous session of Parliament. It differs only to the extent that a new clause relating to the revision of the Statutes of Canada has been added and a slight amendment to clause 27 has been made to require the minister to table in Parliament the annual report of the Superintendent of Insurance.

A detailed explanation was given concerning the purpose and intention of the bill when it was before the House for second reading at the previous session, by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) on February 11, as reported at page 3491 et seq. of Hansard. I am sure hon. members would not wish to have it all repeated at this time. To recall to mind the general scope of the bill, however, I will make a few summary remarks.

The principal purpose of the bill is to establish a system of reporting and inspection applicable to a class of companies that are acting in a substantial way as investment intermediaries and that are not otherwise effectively supervised. The class of companies to which the act would apply may be described broadly as those companies that raise money on debt instruments and use a substantial amount of the money so borrowed for investment purposes. The main type of company that would be covered by the act are those commonly referred to as sales finance companies, although the act will apply also to other types of companies that borrow funds for the purpose of making investments and loans of other types.

Companies that are subject to the act would be required to file financial statements with the Superintendent of Insurance and would be subject to examination by members of his staff. The superintendent would be required to report to the minister with respect to any company where he considers that the company's ability to meet its obligations is inadequately secured. The minister would be empowered to take one or more of a series of actions leading to improvement in the financial condition of such a company or requiring it to discontinue borrowing from the public. In extreme cases the Attorney General would be empowered to seek liquidation of the company under the Bankruptcy Act. An appeal would lie to the Exchequer Court from ministerial action.

The bill does not prescribe any particular standards of financial strength or classes of eligible investments for companies subject to the legislation. It does, however, impose upon companies the obligation of maintaining themselves in a financial condition to give adequate security to their creditors and of refraining from making investments and loans where there may be a conflict of interest.

Special provisions that would limit the transfer to non-residents of the shares of sales finance companies are also included in the bill. These provisions, similar to provisions in the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, the Trust Companies Act, the Loan Companies Act and the Bank Act, would limit the transfer of shares to non-residents to 25 per cent of the total and the transfer of shares to any one non-resident to 10 per cent of the total. Also included are provisions whereby adequately secured loans, for emergency liquidity purposes only, can be provided to Canadian-controlled sales finance companies through the medium of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

In general, the bill is intended to fill a gap in the present pattern of supervision and inspection of financial institutions. The fact that such a gap can have serious consequences has been illustrated by a number of failures of financial institutions in recent years.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, may I first of all point out to the minister that the procedural arguments that were raised on the last occasion had nothing to do with the nature of the recommendations made at that time. If one consults Hansard for February 16, 1970, one sees there was some difficulty about the printing of notices and what have you, not only in regard to the bill but also in regard to Votes and Proceedings. This gave rise to the procedural argument raised at the time to the effect that improper notice had been given.

The minister has pretty well outlined the content of this bill. On looking at it we observe a strange pattern evolving. Primarily the bill deals with sales finance companies, but not for an instant does it have its origin or its paternity in that class of company. This was the infamous bill, Bill S-17, which began its passage in the other place during the 1968-69 session and was designed to control investment companies. There was at that time some sort of feeling of "big brotherism" on the part of the government that it was going to control the activities of all investment companies in this country.

The Senate Banking and Commerce Committee held public hearings on the bill and, with the aid of their counsel, entirely rewrote the bill with the exception of the title clause. That demonstrates how good was Bill S-17. The vital changes introduced in the other place were, first of all, the reduction of the application of the bill by providing an exception clause in respect of companies that met certain criteria and, secondly, the restriction of the government's power to enact further legislation by Order in Council. One has only to look at the old Bill S-17 to see what a Frankenstein the government had created and was trying to foist upon Parliament. The rewritten Bill S-17—with the exception, as I say, of the title clause—was passed by the other place and received pro forma first reading in this House. Then in a huff the government decided not to bring it forward and the bill subsequently died.

Then last session the legislation was brought forward as Bill C-179 and it received second reading in this House after some debate. It was then directed to the finance committee; but as Your Honour knows, the finance committee was then preoccupied with the White paper on taxation and the amendments to the Canada Corporations Act and as a result the bill was sent to the justice committee toward the end of April. That committee took one look at the bill and must have thrown up its hands in horror. The government was in no great hurry to get the bill through, because it did nothing with the bill. As a result, the bill again died on the Order Paper. It has now come forward again as Bill C-3 with slight modifications, the major one being based on the criticisms of the bill during the debate on second reading last session.

As I have said, the primary purpose of the bill is to try to control the activities of investment companies. It requires auditors to report directly to the government, not to the client. There are also provisions relating to lenders of last resort, who are subjected to the most stringent conditions. The provisions relating to lenders of last resort contained in the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act, as we know from the passage of that legislation some years ago, almost put Shylock in the category of a very kindly old soul. I suggest the conditions laid down in this bill are no better. As matter of fact, this is an attempt to use what I think is an entirely improper vehicle to protect the public from the activities of certain companies which over-extend themselves in regard to the sale of financial paper to people who think that guaranteed investment certificates guarantee repayment, when in fact they are a guarantee of a certain rate of interest that is applied to the particular investment. We have seen a great deal of activity by some of these companies.

This bill purports to deal with certain federal companies. I have very grave doubts—if this is suggested by the minister—that the government will be able to sweep into the net all the sales finance companies operating under provincial charter. This is one matter the minister will have to explain. At the moment I am not satisfied that there is such jurisdiction, and certainly I do not see how the federal authority or the Minister of Finance can touch provincially-incorporated sales finance companies.

If the former minister felt he could not touch trust companies which were engaged in banking activities, and had to set up the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation in the way he did in order to deal with provincial concerns, I fail to see how the present minister feels he can regulate or control the activities of sales finance companies, at least to be logical in the thinking of the Department of Finance. I maintain, however, that the Minister of Finance was always erroneous in thinking that he did not have control of all those corporations, whether federally or provincially incorporated, which engaged in any of the activities that came under the title of the business of money and banking.

In any event, let us consider what has happened with this bill which started off as Bill S-17. The Senate revisions to Bill S-17 are contained in clauses 1-9, 18-28 and 32-40 in Bill C-3. First of all, there are minor grammatical and phrasing changes for which the Department of Justice has a preference and these have been used in the redrafting of Bill S-17 into what was Bill C-179, now Bill C-3. A number of small, administrative changes are made by the bill but they are of no import.

There is the inclusion of an administrative subclause that was not in the Senate version. I refer to clause 27(3). It is inserted because of the non-Senate sales finance company provisions which have been tacked on to the Senate bill. Remember that Bill S-17 made no reference at all to sales finance companies, and it was only last year that the government felt it had to protect the Canadian ownership of Canadian sales finance companies and suddenly thought it had found a safe harbour. It decided to tack on to this bill certain provisions in order to cover the restrictions on the sale of shares in Canadian sales finance companies. Therefore, I am wondering whether we are not now seeing a rather dubious tail wagging a very sick dog.

Let us consider two further changes and their effect in amending the Senate version of the bill. If we look at clause 2(1)(b) and (E) of Bill S-17, and continued in the Senate revision, we read "instalment sales contracts". In Bill C-3 this has been changed to "conditional sales contracts, accounts receivable, bills of sale, chattel mortgages, bills of exchange and other obligations representing part or all of the sales price of merchandise or services". Secondly, the important exemption clause inserted by the Senate as clause 2(3) in Bill S-17 provided that notwithstanding the provisions of subparagraph (ii) of paragraph (g) the companies set out should be deemed not to be investment companies for the purposes of the act. Bill C-3 has inserted into the provision the qualification, unless the company is incorporated after the coming into force of the act, "primarily for the purpose of carrying on the business of investment." I suppose this might be deemed to be supercaution on the part of the drafters of Bill C-179, now Bill C-3, to ensure that the exemption does not apply to a company incorporated after the coming into force of the act.

Let me come to a much more important reservation. The House will recall that I mentioned that the original form of Bill S-17 gave the Governor in Council power to make regulations. The phraseology was such as to prevent any regulation being considered ultra vires. I recall the great consternation and indignation that arose in the other place in respect of the Governor in Council arrogating unto itself, by that inclusion in the bill, a total exemption and the fact that any regulation that might pass should not even be attacked as being ultra vires. This was something unheard of. To their credit, the members of the other place threw out that provision. However in the redrafting of Bill C-179, and carried into Bill C-3, we find these words in clause 32:

> The Governor in Council may make regulations to ensure the proper carrying out of the provisions of this act.

I intend at the appropriate time in committee to move the deletion of the word "proper" because—I put this question to the members of the House—is it for the Governor in Council, or for the courts, to determine whether a regulation is proper to the carrying out of the act? The Governor in Council has no authority, or should have no authority, to determine that the regulations it passes are proper. It should not have the right to make that decision. The decision remains under the authority of this House and is granted to the Governor in Council. Whether it is proper or improper shall be determined by the courts and not by the Governor in Council.

One strange provision I find in the bill is the same as one I find in the amendments to the Canada Corporations Act. That is the view that the services provided by the government with regard to this sort of policy of "big brotherism" shall be paid for by the industry concerned. We evidenced in Bill C-4 during the last session the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) insisting that the expenditures of his department in looking after the activities of corporations into which there were investigations could be recovered from the companies through the power to apportion these expenses. This is similar, I suppose, to the Department of Justice saying that in the administration of justice a criminal should have to pay for the cost of investigating the offence with which he is charged and of which he may be convicted.

In this instance the administrative and all other expenses incurred in connection with the act shall be pooled. This starts with clause 28. We see the development of a formula by which each investment company would be charged pro rata, depending upon its mean assets. Investment companies are not all of the same nature. Many manufacturing and other types of commercial concerns with substantial investment portfolios which might bring them within the terms of the act in regard to investment companies would be assessed on the basis of total assets, a substantial part over which the Superintendent of Insurance would have no jurisdiction; yet that was the proposal.

There are provisions whereby investigations can be made, and so on. I suppose a company could legitimately say it had to incur expenses in counteracting the investigation of the Superintendent of Insurance. Mr. Speaker, subject to what we will be able to uncover at the time of the proceedings before the committee, the power given the Superintendent of Insurance with regard to these companies is indeed extensive. Any company that is forced, shall we say, to engage counsel or to undertake certain expenditures with regard to the investigation made concerning its affairs in so far as they are affected by the provisions of this act, probably should be able to recover those expenditures from the Crown. But oh, no! The Crown does not believe in a two-way street; it is all one way. Again, this is a point which I give notice I shall raise in order to see that there is fairer play.

There is another matter to which I think the individuals concerned with the preparation of this legislation failed to give any consideration. I refer to the provision that on an investment company's letters patent there shall be a notation that the company is subject to the Investment Companies Act and the restrictions contained therein. When one considers this provision, one can immediately see that if a company is going into a market—particularly the foreign market—to raise funds, potential investors may be driven away.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Again, I shall want a very full explanation as to why this should be the case. Is this to be another form of constrained company? There may be a restriction concerning the share ownership, but if this is to happen it must be clearly indicated that the company is only constrained in respect of the degree of foreign ownership of its shares, and that there are no other restrictions. There is also a requirement that the disposition of the assets or any part of the assets may require the minister's permission. Again I ask, has the minister become the senior partner of all investment companies? To what extent is this "big brotherism" to go?

I have already mentioned that the lender of last resort facilities of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation were designed for one purpose only, which was to protect the deposits of people who had money on deposit with chartered banks, trust companies and other concerns which took moneys on deposit under the terms of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act. But now we see the lender of last resort provisions being made available to sales finance companies which do not take money on deposit. They sell obligations to the public; they do not take money on deposit.

I have read some sections in respect of the previous argument, whereby the Minister of Finance is specifically authorized to recommend the advancing out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of a special loan account. He is also authorized to recommend the payment to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation of losses that may be incurred by the non-repayment of these last resort loans or any portion thereof. This is entirely new business that is being tacked on to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

There is one last point I should like to make. I am sorry the Superintendent of Insurance has left his position in the official gallery. I am also sorry the Minister of Finance is not here, because as a result of the provisions of this bill and the requirement placed upon the Superintendent of Insurance, I think this very esteemed office and its distinguished holder will be placed in a very invidious position. There is a massive conflict of interest as a result of the provisions of this legislation and the provisions of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act.

We all know that one of the key officials in the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation is the Superintendent of Insurance, because it is his officials who examine the records of trust and other near bank companies. It is the Superintendent of Insurance who makes the actual recommendations concerning the financial condition of any corporation that is a participant in the Canada Deposit Insurance fund. Therefore, as a key official of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Superintendent of Insurance has an important voice in the approval or otherwise of any application for a loan under clause 16.

One might say: What is wrong with that? But if one reads the legislation carefully and starts with clause 22 and goes through to clause 25, one sees that this self-same Superintendent of Insurance is the policeman dealing with investment companies. He is the sole person authorized to investigate, to make recommendations to the Minister of Finance and to recommend the withholding of certificates of registry as required under the act. In other words, if there is any one official who has the right to blow the whistle on an investment company, it is the Superintendent of Insurance.

But let us assume there is a sales finance company or other investment company subject to the provisions of the act which finds itself in difficulty and its affairs are examined by the Superintendent of Insurance. He recommends against issuing a certificate of registry, he recommends other restrictions on the operations of the company or that he be placed in charge of the assets of the company, as he could and probably would be. In other words, he becomes a trustee of the assets of the company for the benefit of the shareholders and the investors in the obligations of the company. Then the directors of the company, in order to carry on business, come to the Deposit Insurance Corporation for a loan; and whom do they see on the other side of the table but the Superintendent of Insurance? In other words, not only does he act as investigator and as prosecutor, but he must sit as judge as well.

This is the end result of this tacking on of what I would say is a legitimate proposition of protecting the ownership of sales finance companies and also trying to save some shareholders and investors from certain types of, shall we say, financial imprudence rather than perhaps dishonesty on the part of officials of finance companies. But what are we asked to do? We are urged to create a Frankenstein.

The more I read this bill, the more I am appalled at the thinking that this is correct, that this represents the right procedures. I can just imagine the reaction of any hon. member, were he a director of a sales or investment company that found itself in difficulty. He would have to deal with the Superintendent of Insurance, see the assets ordered to be seized or placed under the tutelage of the Superintendent of Insurance and then, making a real effort to bail out the operation he would have to undertake to pay the most Shylock-like terms, only to find that the grantor of the loan on the other side of the table is no one but the Superintendent of Insurance. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the occupant of that office would have to have qualities absolutely beyond those of any archangel.

I have criticized this bill. There are parts of it which I would like to see enacted but which I believe are wrong in their application. I suggested that the bill is deficient in that it fails to provide for the authority of this House, and I will not have the objections I raised on a point of order dismissed as technicalities. The government is asking this House for authority to be granted to it, the servant of this House—not the master, but the servant—to spend moneys which the Constitution does not give the Governor in Council the right to do. In other words, if the recommendation is deficient the cabinet are saying, "We will patch it up. We will do a little papering-over job and that will be right." But, Mr. Speaker, this bill was given first reading and only then did we see this recommendation.

In actual fact, sir, this is a debate without prejudice, but I will renew my caveat and my objections. I want to see the appropriate recommendation accompany the bill, and not this slipshod work. It is terrible work on the part of someone, to bring in the bill with this type of recommendation. It is an affront, actually, to the authority of this House and for that reason I am so insistent upon the matter.

Depending upon what the government does with regard to the recommendation, I certainly am withholding my consent to any second reading on this occasion. As a matter of fact, I have not quite made up my mind whether I will support second reading of the bill. Frankly, there are certain things about it that appeal to me, but on the other hand I do not think the finance committee is the place to take sloppily-prepared bills and try to dress them up as we had to do with the Canada Corporations Act, which also was Frankenstein-like, prepared by people who did not know where they were heading. Yet the minister has had the effrontery to say that the House should consider this legislation quickly and get on with the job. I recommend to the House that we give this legislation extremely careful examination before we even think of consenting to it.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the question on second reading of this bill will be deferred until Your Honour has an opportunity to deal with the procedural objections raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). I would submit that when Your Honour does have the opportunity to consider the very learned and detailed argument that was presented to us by the hon. member, you will agree that His Excellency's recommendation cannot possibly deal with all the details of the expenditure of public funds that a public bill of this nature must encompass, and that the recommendation appended to this bill does cover in fact, in spirit and in law what is required.

I would be the last to dismiss as technicalities the objections raised by the hon. member. I think they were important objections. They were objections that in substance were raised and dealt with last year in this chamber during debate on the former legislation which, regrettably, did not proceed beyond the committee to which it was referred. Nevertheless, I think that the recommendation does deal with the essentials of the bill.

As the hon. member and indeed the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) before him, indicated, this is the third time this bill, in its essential features, has come before us. We have had a comprehensive historical survey of its legislative history. I do not care to editorialize further on that matter except to say that people who have been the victims of lack of control in this particular area of financial institutions may wonder why three years after such a bill was introduced we have not yet disposed of it in Parliament.

The hon. member for Edmonton West has raised a number of specific details and I think some of them are very important. The hon. member has objected to the concept that under the bill the auditors appointed with the approval of the minister will report to the government and not to their clients, the finance companies which are paying them. This, of course, is consistent with the practice extant under the Bank Act. In section 63(8) of that act, as well as in other acts, this procedure has been adopted in dealing with key financial institutions.

The hon. member has applied such terminology as "Shylock-type of terms" and "parsimonious conditions" to the Crown's position as lender of last resort under the proposed legislation. Mr. Speaker, the Crown's position in this area is precisely that of lender of last resort. It is in no way attempting to compete with more conventional or usual sources of financing for this type of company. The legislation is deliberately drafted in such a way that recourse to the treasury for financial support will indeed be a last resort. We are not inviting them to come to us, but we are saying that if we ask them to remain Canadian-owned finance companies we have an obligation to offer them an ultimate source of financing if all else fails.

We cannot ask the owners of these companies to commit themselves to continuing to retain the companies in Canadian hands without, at the same time, offering them a market of which they can avail themselves should other sources of financing fail. So I reject very definitely the rather colourful language of the hon. member for Edmonton West. Nothing is built into the provisions dealing with lender of last resort other than a very distinct bias to discourage companies from availing themselves of it.

The hon. member raised a question about the provision in clause 32 of the bill under which the Governor in Council will make regulations to ensure the proper carrying out of the provisions of the act. I am not entirely sure of his objection to that particular provision. There is certainly no suggestion in the provision that Parliament or the Governor in Council is usurping the proper function of the courts in determining the legality of the regulations. However, the provision is essentially the same as that which appeared in clause 21 of original Bill S-17. Again, this is an area in respect of which I must reject any suggestion of unusual conduct on the part of the government.

The hon. member made a great deal of the point that the services provided under this act by the Superintendent of Insurance would be paid for by the industries concerned. This, again, is consistent in principle with the practice followed in relation to the supervision of insurance companies, the supervision of trust companies, the supervision of loan companies and the supervision of banks. It seems rather mysterious to me that the hon. member should choose to make an exception in the case of finance companies. In all cases which I have cited, the expenses incurred in carrying out the supervisory functions are assessed against the companies concerned. The government, in proposing the bill in this particular fashion, intends to treat these organizations consistently with other financial organizations.

The hon. member also made much of the proposition that the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation was being used as a lender of last resort. The bill makes it very clear that the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation is to treat its operations under this act as entirely separate from its other functions. We have a situation here where we have an appropriate agency under the government which can deal with the matter in question, and certainly it is proposed that it do so. There is no conflict of interest, nor is there any dilution of the funds for which the Canada Development Insurance Corporation was created, or any threat to its other activities. This is a separate and entirely distinct operation which it will be conducting. It is an appropriate agency and, indeed, I think a rather practical and economical use of existing facilities by the Crown.

Finally, the hon. member suggested that the Superintendent of Insurance will be in a position of having a conflict of interest under the bill because on the one hand he will be supervising other financial agencies and institutions and regulating finance companies, and in another function he will be the man to whom they will apply for loans of last resort. Again, I reject entirely the proposition that the Superintendent of Insurance will be in an invidious position in this regard.

The hon. member has raised very interesting problems. They are certainly problems that the committee, on which he and I have served for a period of time in rather onerous circumstances, will have the opportunity to explore. I know that I, and I am sure the government, value the opinions and suggestions of the hon. member. We will await with considerable interest the opportunity in committee to explore the propositions that he has put forward. However, it has been said before that this bill is before Parliament for the third time. It is a very important area of financial activity in Canada which I can say, without going into the lurid and well-publicized details, is demonstrably in great need of regulation and of responsible control. I would urge the House, as soon as the procedural problems are disposed of, to very quickly refer the bill to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for its detailed study and report.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I move that we adjourn the debate until later this day, and proceed with the next order of business.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a minor point of order. Since the minister has already spoken, should not someone else move the adjournment of the debate?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has a good point.

Mr. Greene: In response to my hon. friend's suggestion, I am pleased to move the adjournment of the debate until later this date.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

EMERGENCY GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE ACT

AMENDMENT EXTENDING APPLICATION TO JUNE 30, 1973

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-4, to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the federal government has provided assistance to the gold mining industry since 1948 under the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. The economic position of the gold mines had deteriorated because of rising costs of labour and materials and a fixed price for gold. The assistance was given in order to minimize the social and economic dislocations in the gold mining communities which would follow the abrupt closure of most of the gold mines. These conditions have persisted and the operation of the act has been renewed successively for short terms. The current extension of the act, which was approved by Parliament in 1967 for a period of three years, expires on December 31, 1970.

Delegations representing the gold mining communities and mining associations have presented to me their concern over the effect which termination of the act would have on the gold mining communities. I wish to thank those organizations for their interest and for the views which they have expressed. The government has also had the benefit of the findings of an interdepartmental study group which examined the problem at some length.

It is clear that many of the gold mining communities are dependent for their principal economic support from the gold mines. The majority of the gold mines are dependent on the financial assistance which they receive under the act. Only a few of the 28 lode gold mines now in operation could continue in production without the benefit of the assistance.

A substantial decline in the gold mining industry has occurred in recent years. The number of operating lode gold mines of significance has dropped from 87 in 1948 to 55 in 1960, and to 28 in 1970. The number employed in the industry has been reduced from 22,566 in 1948, to 16,542 in 1960 and to 7,352 in 1970. In addition to the 7,000 gold mine employees, there are some 5,500 other employees in the gold mining communities who are directly dependent to some extent on the gold mines.

Gold mines, to be eligible for assistance, must produce gold having a value which is 70 per cent or more of total value of the output of the mine. Consequently, the gold produced as a by-product by base metal mines is not eligible for assistance. The amount of assistance payable to a gold mine operator is based on the number of ounces produced in a calendar year and the average cost of production per ounce. Only gold sold to the Royal Canadian Mint is eligible for assistance. However, the average cost of production is determined using all ounces of gold produced by the mine, whether or not it was sold to the Mint.

Mines having an average cost of production of $26.50 per ounce or less do not receive assistance. There is only one gold mine in Canada now which has an average cost of production of less than $26.50 per ounce. The rate of assistance increases as the average cost per ounce increases over $26.50 until a maximum rate is reached when the average cost per ounce amounts to $45. The maximum rate of assistance payable on all eligible ounces is $10.27 per ounce. The financial support which the government has provided since the inception of the act has been substantial. A total of $281 million has been paid to gold mine operators from 1948 to September 30, 1970.

Hon. members may have noted the amounts of assistance which have been paid annually, in the Report on the Administration of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act for the fiscal period ending March 31, 1970, which was tabled in the House on October 15, 1970. The assistance paid with respect to the calendar year 1966 amounted to $15.3 million, for 1967, $15.0 million and for 1968, $13.5 million. Payments for the year 1969 are estimated at $13.5 million. The reduction in assistance payable in 1968 and 1969 was in part due to the sale of a part of the production of some mine operators on the open market to obtain the benefit of the high open market price during those years. With a continuation of the act, it is estimated that the assistance payable in each of the years 1970, 1971 and 1972 will amount to approximately $14.0 million.

Notwithstanding a continuation of assistance, it is anticipated that rising costs and the depletion of ore reserves will result in the closure of more gold mines. Three mines ceased operations in 1970 and one or two more have indicated that they may close within the next few months. Termination of the act would result in the abrupt closure of a majority of the gold mines.

Substantial adjustments face the gold mining communities in view of the continuing decline of the gold mining industry. Consideration has been given to the possibility of increasing the level of assistance under the act as a means of assisting the gold mining communities. However, a change in the level of assistance which would reverse the present trend in the industry or have any significant effect would be extremely costly.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the most appropriate policy for the government to follow, in providing aid to the gold mining communities, is to continue assisting gold mine operators under the act at the present level, to apply the benefits of existing federal social aid programs to persons displaced by gold mine closures and to examine the practicability of other avenues of potential economic support for the gold mining communities. Extension of the act will permit a gradual adjustment of the gold mining communities to diminishing economic support.

For those persons affected by mine closures, help is available through the federal programs of training and mobility for those who seek new employment, and through unemployment insurance and welfare programs.

Alternative sources of employment in the gold mining communities are limited. Additional employment opportunities may be developed in the long term through the discovery of new, viable mineral deposits and through a broad industrial promotion program.

Assistance is provided by my department to mineral development programs through the dissemination of geoscientific information. The recently enacted Regional Development Incentives Act, enhanced by a broad industrial promotion program, might produce additional employment opportunities. The program would involve investigation of the industrial opportunities for the main gold-belt region and the co-ordination of current federal and provincial programs. However, even if such programs are successful in establishing new enterprises, they should not be expected to provide employment opportunities for the majority of the displaced gold miners, although they might help maintain the gold mining communities at lower levels of economic activity in the long term.

It is my view that a full share of the responsibility for aiding in the adjustment of the gold mining communities should be accepted by the provinces concerned, by the gold mine operators and the labour unions and by the municipalities themselves. The government has decided, therefore, to seek authority from Parliament to extend the application of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act for a period of 2½ years to June 30, 1973, without change in the method of computing the amount of assistance payable to a gold mine operator.

The date of June 30 has been selected in preference to December 31 so that when the act is finally terminated it will occur at the end of the school year and during the summer season. The government is prepared to consider a further extension of the act beyond June 30, 1973, provided satisfactory arrangements can be made to have the other interested parties participate fully in aiding the gold mining communities to adjust to the changing circumstances. The government is examining the possibilities of developing such arrangements.

On August 7, I announced the intention of the government to extend the act in order to end the uncertainty of the gold mining communities with respect to their immediate economic prospects. The Bill which is before the House not only provides for the extension of the act to June 30, 1973, but also introduces certain requirements to be observed by gold mine operators. Clause 2 of the bill prohibits the payment of assistance to lode gold mines which were not in production at the time of my announcement on August 7, 1970. It would not appear to be in the public interest to encourage the development of new or dormant gold mines which are dependent upon assistance payments from the outset.

Clause 3 of the bill provides, as a condition of receiving assistance after December 31, 1970, that operators of lode gold mines will be required to conduct the hiring of all employees through the facilities administered by the Department of Manpower and Immigration, to give written notice of the closure of a gold mine at least four months before the mine ceases production, and to retain, immediately after notice of closure is given, the services of the Department of Manpower and Immigration to assist in finding employment for the displaced employees. The purpose of these requirements is to provide gold mine employees displaced by mine closures with as much assistance as possible in their readjustment. The provisions of clauses 2 and 3 do not apply to placer gold mines, which are few in number and operate on a seasonal basis. Only ten placer gold mines, employing less than 50 persons, applied for assistance under the act for the year 1969.

[Mr. Greene.]

• (9:20 p.m.)

It is my belief that the provisions of this bill offer a major contribution to the alleviation of the special economic and social problems confronting the gold mining communities, and I hope that our consultations with the provinces, municipalities, gold mine operators and labour unions will result in new avenues to attack the problems of the gold mining communities.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, once again Parliament is being asked to extend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. There has been an "emergency" in this regard for 24 years, just like the temporary buildings in Ottawa many of which were built at about the same time or even before the act was proclaimed. These emergency pieces of legislation are always with us. The minister has not given very much hope this evening that the situation of the gold mining communities will improve. In fact, the whole tenor of his remarks was that we will see the gold mining industry disappear very shortly.

This matter was also dealt with on September 29, 1967. At that time another minister of the department introduced the act. I made a lengthy address at that time, which I do not intend to repeat tonight; but I believe the remarks I made then are just as applicable now. Apparently there is very little hope of saving the gold mining communities on a permanent basis. The whole purpose of this act is to let the communities and the people down slowly and keep hoping that something will happen before the next occasion on which the act has to be renewed. The minister gently prepared us tonight for the next renewal. He stated this renewal will continue until June, 1973, at which time he will consider a further extension. This is a very unusual and unfortunate situation.

I intend to make only a few remarks on the bill. In many ways the situation in the gold mining communities is worse now than it was in 1967. The unpegging of the Canadian dollar this year has hurt the gold mining industry even more. The world price of gold—as we are all aware—is based upon the American dollar, at $35 an ounce. It has been that way for a long time. As the Canadian dollar moves upward, the mines receive less for their production. The action of the government in permitting the dollar to be freed earlier this year has had many unexpected effects. One is that the gold mining situation and the price of gold is worse rather than better.

One of the reasons gold mining communities and the gold mining industries have not received any increase in the subsidy this year—and this has always been questionable—is that we are at the present time in fact paying 6 per cent or 7 per cent more because of the increase in value. The situation, therefore, is worse because of the unpegging of the dollar. Some of the gold mines in northwest Quebec and northern Ontario, particularly those in northeastern Ontario, are troubled by rising costs. This naturally results from the inflationary trends we have had and by progressively lowering the grade of ore being mined.

It seems that everything that is happening is slanted against the existence of these communities. It is making it more and more difficult for Parliament to renew this subsidy into the indefinite future. However, we must recognize that people as well as money are involved in this problem. According to figures presented by the industry in a brief to the government, there are approximately 6,500 employees in the gold mining industry. Their direct dependents number 15,500. This totals over 22,000 people dependent upon these mines being kept open and operating at least on a part-time basis.

Some communities are dependent upon the continuation of subsidies until such time as an alternative should arise. It is very difficult to retrain people who have always worked in the gold mining industry. It is even more difficult to uproot them from their homes and force them to move elsewhere. The people who are in these 16 communities are settled with homes, schools and families. It is in the interest of this nation that these communities be assisted to remain viable and active. We hope the government will develop a plan for the future of these communities.

I should mention a situation that has developed since the last renewal in 1967. I refer to the good progress of the plan for development of the mid-Canada corridor which has been under active study for over a year and a half. It was originated by Richard Rohmer of Toronto. I was present at a well attended meeting at Thunder Bay in the summer of 1969. It was in fact opened and addressed by His Excellency the Governor General. He extended his best wishes for the success of the venture.

It is hoped that development of this kind will be successful and that the idea will be brought to fruition. It is the hope of many of the people in the mid-Canada development corridor that somebody, somewhere—government, industry or a group of private people—will come up with a plan to save the many mid-Canada communities which are now faced with difficult times. While this situation exists, the gold mining communities must be kept alive and support given to those citizens who have sufficient community spirit to keep them going. During the debate which took place in 1967 I expressed the hope that the government could find an alternative plan for these communities other than the handing over of straight subsidies. It was my hope that mining for other minerals could be developed so that new industries could be established. In some cases, in small ways, the situation has improved since then but the situation now is not one which makes us feel a solution is likely in the near future.

As I said, it is truly a travesty of the English language to continue calling this legislation the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act after 24 years. It is surely the responsibility of the government to provide an alternative for the communities concerned. I know that in some instances the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has provided incentives for industry to locate in these areas. Sometimes it has been successful, but it has come nowhere near offsetting the decline in the gold mining industry.

In these difficult circumstances, Parliament is once a gain asked to approve the continuation of a subsidy from the public purse. I think we are bound to question this policy. We can make suggestions for a better application of the subsidy and the setting of some rules along the lines of those the minister announced tonight; we can sympathize with the people and the communities concerned, but we need to look at the whole question very closely.

In August of this year, shortly after the government had announced its intention to extend the provisions of the act for a further period an article appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press, written by Maurice Western, a well-known member of the parliamentary press Gallery, entitled "Golden Subsidies". Mr. Western took the occasion to wonder why Parliament persisted in treating the extension of this act as a routine matter worthy of nothing more than superficial debate. He also drew attention to several other factors affecting the gold mining community, including the fact that the International Monetary Fund had developed so-called paper gold, or special drawing rights, the effect of which was further to erode the value of gold as a commodity connected with international currency. The article is, in a sense, a protest on behalf of the Canadian taxpayers against the continuation of a subsidy without apparent end. I agree there is a basis for this element of criticism and this is why the subject deserves our close attention.

In the end, though, we have been offered no alternatives; none have been developed since the last extention of the act three years ago. In these circumstances we can do nothing, I believe, except protest that the government should have made alternative plans. We must call attention to the fact that this is a continuing subsidy, but we must also let the industry and its dependents down as slowly as possible.

I believe the conditions the minister applied to the present extension represent a further tightening of the grip upon the gold mining community and foreshadow the eventual closing down of operations. It is significant that the minister should have mentioned June 30, the end of the school year, as the termination date. It is a chilling forecast that many families a few years from now are likely to be uprooted and move from the communities in which they now live.

Today we have no alternative but to support the extension of the act as requested by the minister. I believe it is in the interest of the country, on balance, to keep these communities alive and to keep the people in their homes.

It is in our interest now to keep the industry operating in the interim while we continue to hope for the development of policies which will maintain the mid-north and improve it. For that reason, on behalf of the official opposition I support the motion for second reading.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to speak briefly on this bill which extends the provisions of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. Last year, when delegations came from the mining areas to the House of Commons I met members of the delegations, along with others, and heard their views about what should be done. I might say at the outset that I believe the bill which the minister has brought down for second reading this evening should receive the endorsement of the House. I realize that it means subsidizing the gold mining industry, but other factors are involved. Both speakers who preceded me have called attention to the number of jobs at stake, and this is something we cannot overlook, particularly at the present time.

I come from a mining district. While gold is not one of the major metals produced in my area, nevertheless I know what it means for mines slowly to become worked out. Once the mineral in the ground becomes exhausted, or once operations have reached the stage where mining no longer becomes profitable, a gradual decay in the community sets in until in effect it becomes a ghost town.

The thing that worries me about the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act is that when the legislation was first introduced, I believe in 1948, the government of the day knew it was only a matter of time before the gold mining communities would reach the point where even subsidy would not keep them alive. We had hoped that plans would have been made under the Industrial Development Incentives Act to bring new industry to these mining communities. This is essential to the continuation of the municipalities established in these area.

I should like to point out to the House that while many people feel that a continuation of the subsidy might not be warranted, I think it has slowed down the decline of the gold mining industry throughout Canada. As a result, both the government and the small municipalities in these mining areas have been given some opportunity, an opportunity that I do not think has been fully exploited, to try to locate new industries in their areas. I presume that last year every member of the House received a copy of the brief entitled "Submission to the government of Canada on behalf of Canada's gold mining communities by the National Gold Study Committee". Some very interesting information was contained in this brief which I believe can and should be used by hon. members to support this legislation. The minister has indicated that the new subsidy is to be continued until June 1973, which gives us another 2½ years to study the situation in the areas affected and, I hope, to devise on an increasing scale some plans to bring relief to these communities through the provision of new jobs.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to some of the interesting information contained in the brief. The brief points out that many gold miners are in the older age groups. Figures I have taken from the brief indicate that over 50 per cent of the miners presently employed are 45 years of age or older, which indicates that not too many young men are exploring job opportunities in the gold mining industry. Another very interesting fact contained in the brief is that 75 per cent of the miners have had less than 10 years' education. The brief goes on to point out that it would be very difficult to effectively retrain many miners in that age group. Although they could be retrained, people in an advanced age group like this, with limited education, really present a problem.

The brief also clearly indicates that since many miners in these areas own their own homes, if mines were to close down they would be unable to move out of the district to set up a home somewhere else. First of all, there would be the difficulty of a gold miner finding a job in another area. Secondly, his lack of training in other fields would make it extremely difficult to get other work. In other words, when mines close down many of the residents would remain in the immediate area and would have to receive assistance of some kind from the municipal, the provincial or the federal government.

I think these points are an indication that this legislation must be endorsed. This assistance must be given for a further period of time. At the same time, the government must make every effort to make certain that in the areas affected some type of new industry will be established within the next two or three years. I realize some mines will close down and there will be a loss of population in the area, but this should not stop the government making every effort to ensure that alternate sources of employment are found, something that will keep the younger people in the area and enable the municipalities to continue to thrive and to grow.

I do not need to say much more, Mr. Speaker. I am convinced that once the bill has gone to committee and is sent back to the House, an opportunity will be given for further debate. I also understand the government would like to bring back, for a few more minutes' debate prior to the adjournment of the House, the investment bill which the House was debating earlier.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this debate. By unanimous consent, I would ask permission to present another recommendation from His Excellency the Governor General in respect to Bill C-3, an act respecting investment companies, which if the House so permits I will now read.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we should first determine whether there is unanimous agreement to adjourn the debate now before the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Finance seeks the agreement of the House to present a revised recommendation in connection with Bill C-3. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INVESTMENT COMPANIES BILL

FILING OF STATEMENTS AND INFORMATION, QUALIFICATIONS AND DUTIES OF AUDITORS, TRANSFER OF SHARES, ETC.

The House resumed consideration on the following order:

Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs of Bill C-3, respecting investment companies—the Minister of Finance.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the revised recommendation is as follows:

His Excellency the Governor General recommends to the House of Commons a measure respecting investment companies; to provide for the supervision and registration thereof and the prohibition of certain loans and investments thereby; to provide for restrictions on the transferability of shares of certain investment companies to be known as sales finance companies and for loans to such companies by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation out of funds advanced out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund; to provide for reimbursement of the corporation out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund for losses sustained in respect of any such loans and for the establishment by the corporation of a special account in the Bank of Canada to which shall be credited revenues derived from such loans and to which shall be charged certain expenditures of the corporation mentioned in the said measure; to provide for assessments of investment companies by the Superintendent of Insurance to cover costs incurred by him in the administration of the act and further to make certain provisions in connection with the administration of the act.

Mr. Speaker, I understand that this resolution is couched in exactly the same terms as the previous resolution.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): "Recommendation."

Mr. Benson: Yes, the previous recommendation; pardon me. I also understand that the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) wishes to make a few comments on this matter, at which time we might consider second reading.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Before my colleague takes the floor, Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister can assure the House that all appropriate steps have been taken, in the regular manner, to obtain the recommendation from His Excellency and that everything is in order.

Mr. Benson: I would assure the House that this is the case, although rather hurriedly after the urging of the hon. member.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is it in the Governor General's own hand?

Mr. Benson: The signature is.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If we are to return to this order, I suggest the Clerk call the Order and then the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave).

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-3, respecting investment companies, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Investment Companies Bill

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, earlier today at 10 minutes to 5 I had the opportunity to share ten minutes with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) and the bill under discussion was read the second time and sent to the committee. Now I see that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and myself are to be given an even greater challenge. We have only five minutes before, presumably, the same thing will occur in respect of this bill. This can be done, and I hope I will give him his full 2½ minutes. I will do my best, anyway.

Instead of making a speech I should like to present five questions for his consideration and for the consideration of Mr. Humphrys, the Superintendent of Insurance. Of course, I ask for the answers when the committee deals with the measure.

The first question concerns the power in clause 15 which provides that no sale or disposal of the whole or any part of the undertaking of a sales finance company is to be of any effect unless and until the minister approves. I suggest, sir, that we must ask whether this is not a rather extreme power for the purpose of keeping Canadian control over sales finance companies.

The second question would arise from the area of the bill—and it is a large bill, with 43 pages—dealing with loans to sales finance companies. This matter refers to a company that is backed into a corner and needs federal help to get itself out. It also involves the question of the powers that are given the Superintendent of Insurance in the face of this undoubted fact, that never as far as anybody can recall did a federally-incorporated company go down the drain. This whole area of power will lead to questions as to whether this part of the bill is an exercise in remedial legislation, or whether it is simply an exercise in staking-out or acquiring greater governmental power.

The third question, which is vital to the philosophy of the bill, is: Should Canadian companies, or the public, be put in the position of insuring consumer loans by sales finance companies? After all, it will be pretty hard to persuade "Joe Lunch-pail" that he has to put his might and strength behind a company which may be making rather large profits. Does this problem not fit exactly into the recommendations of the Porter commission? My fourth question, Mr. Speaker, is in connection with information obtained under the act. It is our suggestion that this information be privileged. There are precedents we can point to in the Statistics Act and the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act.

In the final ten seconds left to me I should like to refer to the position wherein an employee might leave the government's employ and be in possession of rather sensitive information. It is our suggestion that where this takes place and an employee goes outside the public service to a place where the information could be of value, it could only be revealed after two or three years had elapsed since his employment in the public service.

Mr. Speaker: The minister will now close the debate.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to say that all the questions raised by my hon. friend are interesting and of substance in regard to this legislation. I think they are very important points. I can assure him that when this bill is before the committee, the Superintendent of Insurance or myself will deal with them thoroughly. We are looking for good legislation which will protect the Canadian public and at the same time do the job that needs to be done to ensure investors of security of investments.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

UNITED NATIONS—SOUTH AFRICA—CANADIAN ABSTENTION ON ARMS EMBARGO REGULATIONS—DECISION ON SPARE PARTS

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, three weeks ago I had the honour of attending the twenty-fifth session of the General Assembly of the United Nations as a parliamentary observer. During my stay at the United Nations the special political committee was presented with a resolution sponsored by a large number of lesser developed countries calling for compliance, on the part of all nations, with the Security Council resolution requesting an end to the shipment of arms to South Africa.

The resolution was moderately worded and really represented the absolute minimum in action that one could expect from nations opposed to the policies of apartheid in South Africa. It is no secret that some of the sponsoring countries were moved to ask Canada to act as a sponsor of the resolution. We were to my knowledge the only industrially advanced, predominantly white nation to be so approached. I consider that approach to be a compliment to this country. There were probably a number of reasons for the approach being made to Canada. There was the fact, for example, that under a previous administration Canada was instrumental in making South Africa's continued membership in the Commonwealth impossible, an act which I venture to say has had much to do with the Commonwealth continuing to exist as a multi-racial organization.

There was another reason—the fact that Canada has on numerous occasions verbally expressed its abhorrence of apartheid policies. Finally, and most importantly, there was the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) angry letter to the British government denouncing its intention to supply additional arms to South Africa. To our everlasting shame, not only did we not co-sponsor the resolution but we abstained on the vote on the resolution, on the explicit instructions of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), as he informed the House in answer to my question. Our action, or rather our lack of it, could be viewed as nothing but the sheerest hypocrisy by other nations, in view of our previous statements and actions.

The reason given by the Canadian government for its refusal to, in effect, put its money where its mouth is, was that the cabinet had not yet reached a policy decision in respect of the continuation or termination of military spare parts' shipments to South Africa. But it is not as if this resolution was a total surprise to our government. The United Nations has been dealing with the situation in South Africa virtually since the inception of that organization. The question of South Africa is an annual item on the agenda of the special political committee. The Security Council passed resolutions calling upon all nations to cease shipment of arms to South Africa, twice in 1963, once in 1964 and again in July of this year.

This government has had ample time to decide upon its policy with regard to military spare parts' shipments to South Africa and has had ample notice that it would one day be called upon to demonstrate to the world whose side Canada is on. The truth is that this is simply one more example of the wœful unpreparedness of the government to deal with matters of substance in the field of external affairs.

It is not that the decision which the government is seemingly having so much trouble in reaching is so difficult. Even by the standards, if one can call them that, of the white paper on external affairs, the continued shipments of spare parts to South Africa cannot be considered to be in our national interest because they do not bring us much money and they risk permanently alienating approximately 250 million black Africans, not to mention countless millions of Asians, for the sake of the good will of a few million white South Africans. In the long term, where is the greatest potential for material gain? The answer is obvious.

I have used this argument with considerable reluctance, Mr. Speaker, because I do not consider it to be terribly relevant. However, I have used it because it might impress itself upon the minds of those minor league Machiavellians who are responsible for the White Paper. Surely the relevant consideration is that our military spare parts' shipments are of the type that significantly enhance the ability of the white South African régime to repress the black and coloured population of that country.

The government of the United Kingdom could at least argue that the equipment it planned to sell to South Africa is highly sophisticated and costly, of little or no use in the enforcement of apartheid. This argument may or may not impress one. It obviously did not impress the Prime Minister, if his letter to Mr. Heath is anything to go by. But what can one say in defence of the fact that Canada keeps South Africa's 250 Harvard aircraft operational, aircraft which when equipped to carry 19-pound fragmentation bombs, as are the 100 on active service, are excellent counter-insurgency weapons. Indeed, they would be useless in any other role.

It now would seem that we are also supplying some jet engines for the now obsolete, except for counter-insurgency operations, F-86 aircraft in a move that would seem to be counter to the implicit guarantees contained in Senator Martin's speech at the time the United Nations first requested the embargo. There is no justification for the continuation of these shipments and I am appalled that the cabinet has been unable to reach the same, obvious conclusion.

Mr. Speaker, I dearly would have loved to employ this opportunity to discuss the broader implications of our policy toward South Africa, especially that of our total trade with and investment in that country. However, I have deliberately restricted myself to the narrower question of spare parts' shipments because I believe there is an open-and-shut case against these, and that the government could act and act rapidly to halt these shipments if it chose so to do.

[Translation]

Mr. André Ouellet (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I find it regrettable that the hon. member for Selkirk should have asked that his question be debated tonight because I am not yet in a position to inform him of the cabinet's decision on spare parts.

Had he shown a little more patience and waited for a few more days, I could probably have made in this House the statement which he requested on October 13 last, as recorded in Hansard for that date. Unfortunately, the cabinet has not yet made its decision. However, that should not take too long and I should ask the hon. member to show the same patience as shown by the African and Asian delegations to the United Nations, following the explanations given for our abstention.

[English]

The Canadian delegation studied with the greatest of care the text of the resolution before them in the report of the special political committee. The Canadian government was fully in sympathy with the underlying principles of this resolution. However, the Canadian delegation had to abstain on the resolution because its very essence, c'est-à-dire, the implementation immediately of Security Council resolution 282, was then and still is under review by the Canadian government.

When resolution 282 was passed on July 23 of this year, the Canadian government immediately began the very full and careful consideration which a subject of this importance requires. The resolution presented no difficulties for Canada, with one exception. Canada has been applying a general embargo on arms to South Africa since 1963. There have been no lapses in this general embargo. May I point out that in the survey prepared by the distinguished rapporteur of the special committee on the policies of apartheid there was no indication to the contrary. However, Canada continued to furnish some spare parts for equipment which had been supplied to South Africa under contracts entered into before Security Council resolution 181 of August 7, 1963, was passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The time of the Parliamentary Secretary has expired. The Chair will now call upon the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart).

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—APPOINTMENT OF THE BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF THE INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT RESEARCH CENTRE

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, today in the House I asked a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) with respect to the International Development Research Centre. I wanted to know why he had not named a Member of Parliament to the board of governors in the recent announcement appointing the president and 19 members of that board. Clearly the act, which was passed in this House on February 20 of this year, under section 10 allows that one of the governors may be a Member of Parliament. In this instance, since it was already written into one of our statutes, this was a sterling opportunity to open the door to have representatives on the part of the people on agencies that come under the aegis of the government but enjoy a certain independence.

I wonder why the minister did not bother to say a word about the presence of a Member of Parliament on this board when he made the announcement. If he has decided to do this at a later date, we would all like to hear it. If he ignores it completely as something that is not even in the act, that is another question. I suggest it is too bad if that is the case, because then he would just be ignoring the wishes of this House.

This question is much larger than that of who is a member of the board of governors of the International Development Research Centre. We shall see over the next weeks a number of private members' bills which deal with this very subject of placing Members of Parliament on the boards of directors of various Crown corporations and agencies. I believe this is a question of fundamental principle, because the people of Canada who sent us here expect us to look after their affairs and report back to them; yet in these instances we are not able to tell them anything. We are not able to represent them properly, simply because these groups are completely independent of Parliament.

Even when we ask questions of the minister in this House, we are not able to get an answer because he tells us they are independent bodies. The basic principle of this problem is before us and I hope that many hon. members will avail themselves of the opportunity to speak on the subject over the next weeks. But in the meantime when one of the bills has this principle written into it, I am at a loss to understand why the minister did not include a Member of Parliament on the board and why he did not mention it.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

• (10:10 p.m.)

Does he think that Members of Parliament are incapable of carrying out the task? Does he think that there perhaps is a conflict of interest? I suggest to him that the interest of the Canadian people is our business, and that that interest would best be served by having representatives of this House on bodies such as this board.

[Translation]

Mr. André Ouellet (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think that what was said by the hon. member has a lot of merit on many counts and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), on February 20 last, had emphasized himself that there were a lot of good things in the suggestions which were made. However, he took that opportunity to raise a series of questions, at that time, about the role which should be played by a member of Parliament, should the government decide to appoint one to the Board of Governors and he mentioned what should be his responsibilities.

If I may, I should like to refer to the questions then raised by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

I consider it my responsibility as a member of the government to raise certain fundamental questions and to express a view concerning the nature of the real relationship between Parliament and a government agency created by and, ultimately, answerable to Parliament. This question raises the subject of the responsibility and role of the minister and of the member of Parliament.

He said further and I quote:

The role of the member of Parliament on the Board of Governors is by no means clear and this uncertainty poses real difficulties for the MP himself, the Centre and the government. It has been suggested that the member of Parliament will be a channel of communication between the Centre and the Government and between the Centre and Parliament. Does this mean that the MP is, in fact, a full participant in the deliberations of the Board, sharing fully in its responsibilities while at the same time being the representative of Parliament responsible for informing Parliament on these activities? Is it to be left to his own judgment to decide what is confidential and what is not confidential?

This series of questions indicates clearly that the role must be clearly defined and that the government does not consider making such an appointment.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—RETIRED EMPLOYEES' PENSIONS—ACTION TO IMPLEMENT COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION FOR INCREASE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, October 23, as recorded in Hansard at page 514, I put to the Minister of Transport the following question:

Is the minister yet in a position to report to the House on his discussions with the CNR concerning the increases in pensions by the Canadian National as recommended by a standing committee of this House and concurred in by the House itself?

[Mr. Stewart (Cochrane).]

The reply of the Minister of Transport was as follows:

No, Mr. Speaker. I am not at all certain whether it would be appropriate for me to report to the House regarding discussions between myself and officials of CNR. I can advise the hon. member that I have conveyed to the CNR officially the findings of the committee and the decision of the House. If there is anything subsequent to that which I can appropriately report I will, but I assume that this matter will emerge in the normal way through questioning before committees or in some other fashion.

There are few members of the cabinet for whom I have greater respect than I have for the Minister of Transport, but I say to him in all kindness that I do not think he can hide behind statements of that kind. The question of doing something about the pensions of retired employees of the CNR has been before Parliament for many years. In fact, it has been before us for decades. Some of us have seen to that. Finally, last spring, following the increases that were made in pensions of retired civil servants and in light of certain other developments, the government agreed to there being a study of this matter by the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. That committee went into the whole matter of CN pensions very thoroughly and came up with what I regard as a very useful and significant report.

That report was passed by the committee on Wednesday, September 9, 1970, and was presented to the House by the chairman of that committee on Monday, October 5, 1970. Two days later, on Wednesday, October 7, the House on a motion duly made and seconded concurred unanimously in that report. In other words, that report represents the will of the House of Commons in this matter. It is a lengthy document. There is not time enough for me to read it tonight, but I should like to draw to the attention of the House what I regard as an important element in it. In one place in the recommendations the committee draws attention to what Parliament has done by way of escalating pensions under the Canada Pension Plan, the Old Age Security Act, and so on. It also draws attention to the action of Parliament in increasing the pensions of retired civil servants, not only on a current basis but also retroactively. Then it says this at page 36:14:

The committee strongly recommends that these principles be adopted on a broader basis and that other major employers, including Crown corporations, recognize their obligation to follow the lead of Parliament in this regard. The committee specifically recommends that the Canadian National Railways implement these principles forthwith.

I cannot say that I completely agree with the campaign on which my hon. friend for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) is engaged, but I am giving him a piece of ammunition. Here we have Parliament expressing itself very clearly on an important issue, yet there seems to be nothing that Parliament can do except make a recommendation. We cannot say to Canadian National Railways, "This is what you shall do." Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, I feel that the government, through the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) can come pretty close to this. The Minister of Transport could at least have a real heart-to-heart talk with the president of Canadian National Railways and find out why the Canadian National is not prepared to go along with this recommendation, if that is the case. I hope not.

Before we come to the point where we engage in tough kind of talk, and before there are confrontations and what have you, I believe we should have a clear statement from the Minister of Transport in the House as to the position of Canadian National Railways. Does the CNR accept this report as something with which it should go along? Does it agree that it, like the government, must do something to increase the pensions of its employees who have already retired; or does it regard all this as a scrap of paper that the committee worked at, which has no weight so far as the Canadian National is concerned.

This is a terribly important issue, Mr. Speaker. It is closely related to the question of the pensions of retired civil servants. It took us about 25 years to win that. I hope it will not take that long to win this one. Surely, since in this case we have spoken clearly through the unanimous report of a Standing Committee—that being a committee with members of all parties on it—and through the unanimous recommendation of the House of Commons, it is high time for the CNR to meet the will of Parliament in this regard. The Minister of Transport should either report to us that the CNR is going to do it, or he should tell us what the government is going to do about it.

• (10:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like first to reply to the member for Winnipeg North Centre and commend him for his continuing efforts in this House in order to secure higher pensions for CNR employees. In fact, there is no doubt that all hon. members would like to see the lot of CNR employees improve as soon as possible.

The hon. member is, however, very well informed on the recommendations of the Committee on Transport and Communications and is aware of the findings of this report which was concurred in by the House.

On October 23 last, the minister informed the hon. member that he had formally forwarded to the management of the Canadian National Railways the recommendations of the committee as well as the decision of this House, which had adopted the report. The normal procedure has therefore been followed and I do not see at this time what more could be done.

Undoubtedly we will have again the opportunity to discuss that question at the committee or elsewhere.

Eventually, the management of the Canadian National Railways will express their intentions or offer suggestions following the representations made to the hon. minister. We will then have the opportunity to study that question on its merit, and to resume discussion according to the circumstances, always bearing in mind the interests of those concerned.

Incidentally, I would like to point out to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that in my riding there are a great number of CNR employees and pensioners, and like all hon. members I am as anxious as he is to see that question dealt with fairly and equitably.

I cannot give any more particulars on that matter this evening, but I think that we should soon get more information after the representations made to the management of the Canadian National Railways by the Minister of Transport.

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUPPLY MOTION—TIME LIMIT ON SPEECHES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it has been agreed by the various parties that in the debate on the business of supply motion that will be called on orders of the day speeches are to be limited to 30 minutes for the main speakers for the government and each of the opposition parties and that remaining speakers are to be limited to 15 minutes.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): That is agreed, Mr. Speaker. I think there might be special consideration for the minister if he does not want to speak at the beginning of the debate. I suggest that he be allowed 30 minutes, but he would be, of course, the main spokesman for the government.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL SECURITY

INFORMATION LEADING TO INVOKING OF WAR MEASURES ACT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Smile.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I cannot imagine what that is all about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: The Conservatives finally won an election.

An hon. Member: But they lost in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether it is true, as has been reported in the press, that the government invoked the War Measures Act because, among other reasons, it believed that a group of influential Quebeckers had set out to see whether they might supplant the legitimately elected provincial government of Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition might like to ask the question in other terms. He has asked the Prime Minister to confirm or deny the truth of a report. In those terms the question obviously is not in order. Perhaps it might be asked directly.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government invoked the War Measures Act because, among other reasons, it believed that a group of influential Quebeckers had set out to see whether they might supplant the legitimately elected government of the province of Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I gave in the House yesterday the reasons why the government invoked the War Measures Act and I also gave them last Friday. They are the same reasons, and among them is not included the reason alluded to by the hon. member.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister why he has not already and why he does not now clearly repudiate the story attributed to top level governmental sources, which can only have been calculated to damage the reputations of a number of influential Quebeckers who happen to be critical of the government of Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is rather strange that I have been called upon to deny this particular rumour when the hon. member knows that there have been many rumours circulating on this subject for the past many days. I do not know why the hon. member is particularly concerned with the government denying this one. It is not the habit of this government to deny or confirm any such rumours that happen to be circulating.

Mr. Stanfield: Not even in view of the people who are making the allegation?

SUBSTITUTE LEGISLATION FOR WAR MEASURES ACT REGULATIONS—PROVISION OF BILL TO PARTY LEADERS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the special bill which will replace the War Measures Act has now been distributed to the Attorneys General of the various provinces, will it also be given to the leaders of the opposition parties in view of the fact they were asked for their suggestions?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not understand the nature of the representation, Mr. Speaker, precisely because I asked for the suggestions of the leaders of the parties in the House. We have also asked for the suggestions of the provinces which will eventually be involved with the application of any such act. I do not see what the hon. member is suggesting beyond that.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder if I could clarify my question, Mr. Speaker. The bill in question has already been distributed to the Attorneys General. The leaders of the various parties were also asked for suggestions. I ask the Prime Minister if he will make available to the leaders of the various opposition parties the bill in question so they can analyse it, look at it, study it and be informed?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I should have thought that the purpose of the opposition was to do precisely these things when a bill is brought into the House for first reading. Surely the hon. member is not suggesting that it should be discussed with the leaders of the opposition parties before the House is seized with the bill.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. Lewis: It is not a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

WAR MEASURES ACT—WHEREABOUTS OF BERNARD LORTIE

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Can the Prime Minister advise the House and the country regarding the whereabouts of a 19-year-old Ottawa student, Bernard Fortie, who was detained by error? His location has not been revealed by either the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or the Quebec police.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): If the hon. member would get the name straight, I might be able to make inquiries.

Mr. Hees: Bernard Fortie.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: A slight correction, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest there should be a substantial correction.

Mr. Hees: The name is Lortie. The Prime Minister has had plenty of time to digest the question. Maybe he can now advise the House on this matter.

Mr. Trudeau: Now that the member knows who he is, we will try to find out where he is, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, that is typical of the snide type of wisecrack the Prime Minister makes. The whereabouts of this young, 19-year-old student—

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York South.

Mr. Hees: He couldn't care less!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is debate rather than a point of order. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for York South.

WAR MEASURES ACT—NUMBER OF ARRESTS, RELEASES AND DETENTIONS—DYNAMITE, ARMS AND AMMUNITION RECOVERED

Mr. David Lewis (York South): My supplementary question would have been more appropriately addressed either to the Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General. In these circumstances I would have thought that one of the law ministers of the Crown would be here despite the roster.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: They are responsible for implementing the Act. Since neither minister is here, I ask the Prime Minister whether he can give the House a report on the latest information regarding the number of people arrested under the Public Order Regulations, the number released and the number still detained, because they are now detained under the 21-day extension?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The hon. member is wrong in his premise that one of the two ministers is responsible for the administration of this Act.

Mr. Lewis: May I remind the Prime Minister that I did not—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask a supplementary. To remind the Prime Minister of something is debate. If the hon. member has a supplementary, he should ask it now.

Mr. Lewis: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister suggested that I had a premise with which he disagreed. I merely want to say that I did not have that premise. I said "implementation", not "application".

Mr. Trudeau: Precisely.

Mr. Lewis: There is a difference. I ask the Prime Minister whether he has the most recent information which one of the other ministers might have had as to the number of arrests under the Public Order Regulations, the number released and the number still detained in jail.

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Compton.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I apologize to the hon. member for Compton, but I believe the hon. member for York South would like to ask a supplementary question.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: I ask the Prime Minister whether he has any further information regarding the amount of dynamite, arms, ammunition and so forth recovered by the police in their numerous searches? I am not asking for the number of pounds. Has there been a substantial amount recovered or is the answer given by the Solicitor General a few days ago still correct, that there has not?

Mr. Trudeau: We know approximately the amount which has disappeared. I do not know what has been found as of today. The Solicitor General will give this answer in the House if he is asked.

WAR MEASURES ACT—CHARGES LAID—NUMBER HELD BEYOND SEVEN DAYS WITHOUT CHARGE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether any charge has been laid against anyone arrested for commission of the new crime created by the regulations under the War Measures Act?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have heard of none, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: Would the Prime Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary ascertain whether any such charges have been laid and tell us the number of people involved? Could the right hon. gentleman ascertain at the same time how many persons have been held for longer than seven days at the request of the Minister of Justice of Quebec without a charge of any sort having been laid?

Mr. Trudeau: I will attempt to get this information for the House and have one of the law officers of the Crown answer. I can only say I hope it will be as much as possible the spirit of the Act that charges will be laid under the Criminal Code rather than under the War Measures Act, but here again I cannot speak for the province of Quebec which is entrusted with administering the Act.

FINANCE

REDUCTION OF BANK PRIME INTEREST RATE

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary which I would like to direct to the Minister of Finance.

Has the Minister received a reply from Canadian banking institutions with regard to his request to reduce the prime rate, or preferential interest rate which these institutions charge their best customers?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSING

ROCHDALE COLLEGE—SUGGESTED FORECLOSURE ON MORTGAGE BECAUSE OF CONDITIONS

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): My question is directed to the Minister without Portfolio responsible for housing. Has the minister received a letter from city of Toronto Alderman Anthony O'Donahue asking that the mortgage on Rochdale College be foreclosed and that the building be taken over by the government on the grounds that it is a vertical flophouse and has been damaged to an extent estimated at $168,000?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that it is not in order to ask simply whether a minister has received a letter.

Mr. Ryan: May I rephrase the question, then? In view of the alderman's charges that the college is a centre for promiscuity, drug-taking and drug-marketing, and that it is a launching pad for revolutionary groups, is the government prepared to get tough and correct this disgraceful situation?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): I indicated to the hon. member the other day in reply to a similar question that we are very concerned about this matter. We are examining it at the present time and I hope to be able to consult with my colleagues about the decision in the very near future. Our decision will undoubtedly be communicated to the House.

Mr. Ryan: Will the minister not give us a better indication of when this statement is likely to be made?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FINANCE

REDUCTION OF PRIME INTEREST RATE—DISCUSSIONS WITH CHARTERED BANKS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Would the minister be prepared to make a statement at an early occasion on the results of his discussions with the chartered banks and with the Governor of the Bank of Canada in connection with the level of interest rates, and also indicate on what basis the government fixed its rates for the new Canada Savings Bonds now on sale?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): First, I should say I was in touch with the chartered banks on Friday, as I indicated to the House. I expressed my opinion to them with respect to the prime rate of interest. I did not ask them or tell them to change their rates because, after all, that is their business, but I did express the opinion of the government.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Is the minister telling the House that if the banks do not respond to his request he does not intend to take any action?

Mr. Benson: After all, I did not intend to threaten the banks. They express their opinions on our policies from time to time and I think I have the right to express our opinions on their policies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. In his discussions with the chartered banks, was it indicated to the minister that the banks might be better disposed to reduce interest rates at the close of the Canada Savings Bond campaign?

Mr. Benson: No, Mr. Speaker, that was not the case. I simply indicated my views to the heads of the chartered banks and they said that they would take them under consideration.

Mr. Saltsman: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In order to clarify this important matter, may I ask the Minister of Finance whether, in the event that the chartered banks do not act in the best interests of the country, the minister intends to take action on behalf of the people of Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will appreciate that the question as asked is hypothetical.

AIR TRANSPORT

POWER TO ISSUE ORDERS UNDER AERONAUTICS ACT TO CONTROL ILLEGAL OPERATIONS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. I hope Your Honour will be a little indulgent as my question is rather involved. Does the minister plan on introducing an amendment to the Aeronautics Act to cover a loophole in the regulations arising out of a Supreme Court ruling in 1968 that the Air Transport Committee did not have the power under the Act to issue orders, with the result that today illegal air transport operations are cutting into the revenues of licensed carriers? If so, does the minister intend to give this matter the urgent priority it deserves?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am quite prepared to be indulgent, and since the hon. member has gone to all the trouble of asking the question perhaps the minister should be given an opportunity to answer it.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to keep my answer as short as possible. This matter has been known to us for some time. There have been consultations with the Air Transport Association members and their executives, and also with representatives of the CTC. If it is deemed that amendments to the Act are necessary in order to correct the situation, I will proceed in the manner suggested by the hon. member.

NATIONAL SECURITY

WAR MEASURES ACT—LEGALITY OF FINGERPRINTING OF THOSE ARRESTED

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice I shall address my question to his Parliamentary Secretary. Inasmuch as it appears that all those who have been arrested under the regulations passed under the War Measures Act have been fingerprinted and photographed, whether charged with any offence or not, will the minister call to the attention of the authorities concerned that fingerprinting is not authorized either under the War Measures Act or the Identification of Criminals Act?

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad to put that question to the minister.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

REPAYMENT OF DEBT—CARR REPORT

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

In view of his statement on June 23 last that a very comprehensive study was being made on the reimbursement of the St. Lawrence Seaway debt, I would ask him whether that study is still under way and whether a report thereon will soon be tabled in the House.

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I indicated to the House a couple of weeks ago, I believe it was, that we were awaiting the final report of an organization known as Carr and Associates, the report being a comprehensive study of all aspects of the seaway operation. That report was received during the past two or three days and the officials are studying it. I have asked for a summary to be prepared as quickly as possible, and on the basis of that we will then decide what the next steps are going to be.

INDUSTRY

INCENTIVES TO INCREASE PRODUCTIVITY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Finance. Is it the intention of the government to introduce in the near future incentives aimed at bringing about greater productivity in this country, as the index of industrial production has been falling steadily since the first of the year at an annual rate of 7 per cent?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the government has new policies to announce they will be announced in the House, not in answer to a question.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, in view of that usual stock answer may I ask how long the government will remain in its present state of petrified immobility?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Wellington.

Mr. Hees: This is a very important matter to the country, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It may be important, but that is not a question that is acceptable under the rules.

IMMIGRATION

DEPORTATION OF U.S. DRAFT DODGERS GUILTY OF WRONGFUL ACTS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is it the policy of the government to deport United States army draft dodgers or resisters if they are found guilty of any wrongful act in Canada?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member may be familiar with the general state of the law in respect of deportation. If he is referring to situations where someone has committed an indictable offence, the law would apply to any category of persons in the same way.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister what the policy will be if these people are apprehended under the War Measures Act?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member will appreciate that this appears to be a hypothetical question. I should think a question in those terms would hardly be in order.

[Later:]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether he can reaffirm the policy of the government announced by his predecessor which was that deserters and draft dodgers would be treated just like any other people applying for entry into this country?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, there should be no difficulty about that and I think the hon. member should appreciate that if there is a change in policy that will be announced.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TIGHTENING OF LAW TO PREVENT ADMISSION OF PERSONS WITH SAME AIMS AS FLQ

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I asked the Prime Minister a question yesterday and now that I see the minister is in the House perhaps he can throw some light on this matter. Has there been any change in reference to immigration laws and regulations concerning people who have the same objectives and aims as the FLQ, to upset the government by means of crime or violence? Has there been any change?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there has been no change but, of course, persons with a seditious intent would not be admissible under ordinary circumstances.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I am wondering then whether the minister can explain why Dr. Spock, who is speaking at various universities and colleges, and who has been found guilty of an indictable offence in the United States and is out on bail, has been allowed into the country at this time in view of the War Measures Act?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt that the question as asked is in order. The hon. member will recognize that it is asked in the form of an argument and because of this is not in order. I recognize the hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could rephrase the question.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I might return to the hon. member in a moment.

GRAIN

WHEAT—SALE TO PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA—GRADES INVOLVED

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Can he inform the House about the progress of negotiations being carried on between the Canadian Wheat Board and the People's Republic of China regarding a contract for the sale of wheat?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can report that these negotiations have now been concluded and the Wheat Board commissioners are returning home having completed a sale to China of a maximum of 98 million bushels of wheat for delivery over a 12-month period.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, will the minister inform the House what grades are involved in this sale?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the grades shipped will be largely No. 2, No. 3 and No. 4 northern wheat, with some quantities of Durum and some quantities of Alberta red winters.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AVAILABILITY OF BOXCARS FOR DELIVERY OF WHEAT

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, may I join with the House in welcoming this announcement. I should like to ask the minister whether he can assure the House and the country that boxcars will be made available for the delivery of this wheat inasmuch as they are so badly needed in western Canada?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been raised a number of times and I have reported on the discussions which have been held between the Wheat Board and the railways and between myself and these bodies, and on the assurance of the railways of the supply of boxcars according to the schedule which has been developed by the Wheat Board for the movement not only of these quantities but of the record quantities of grain we expect to export this year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the hon. member for Crowfoot, but I notice there are at least 30 or 35 members rising for the purpose of asking questions. We should try to limit the number of supplementary questions. At the moment I recognize the hon. member for Crowfoot.

Mr. Horner: I should like to ask a quick supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In light of the expected deliveries that have already been announced by the minister and the Wheat Board, can the minister assure the House that this commitment will be met, particularly in view of the difficulties at the already jammed ports at the Lakehead and Vancouver?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, what I can assure the hon. member of is that everything is being done to make sure that any possible difficulty which crops up is in fact met.

AGRICULTURE

PRICE OF DRESSED HOGS—ACTION UNDER AGRICULTURAL STABILIZATION ACT

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture since the Minister of Agriculture has not been present during the last two days and because the question is urgent. In view of the fact that dressed hogs sold for $22 per hundredweight on the public market in Saskatoon on Monday this week, is the minister prepared to initiate action under the Agricultural Stabilization Act since the support price level now set by the Agricultural Stabilization Board is $22.17 per hundredweight?

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for raising the question and I shall bring it to the attention of the minister with the expectation that an answer can be given tomorrow.

GRAIN

RAPESEED—RECEIPT OF TRUCKLOAD DELIVERIES BY SASKATOON TERMINAL

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to a question raised yesterday by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar regarding deliveries of rapeseed. I am advised that the Board of Grain Commissioners issued instructions to the trade under date of October 14 that the inland elevators at Saskatoon and Edmonton would receive rapeseed on a trucklot basis for the account of grain companies. This facility is now in operation.

FINANCE

ISSUING OF UNSOLICITED CREDIT CARDS BY BANKS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Would the minister give consideration to taking appropriate measures against the chartered banks of Canada to prevent these institutions sending out unsolicited credit cards which place a liability on everyone who receives them through the mail?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to consider the hon. member's representation.

GRAIN

INTERNATIONAL GRAINS ARRANGEMENT—CANADIAN POSITION IN DISCUSSIONS ON RENEWAL

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in his capacity as minister responsible for the Wheat Board. Would the minister take the first opportunity under motions to place before the House the position the government is taking in current discussions opened yesterday by the International Wheat Council with a view to renewing the existing International Grains Arrangement and could he indicate who is representing Canada at these meetings?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, senior officials are representing Canada at the meetings. I do not think it would be particularly useful to make a statement on motions. Nothing in particular has changed from the government's position as stated in the past. We support orderly marketing in the international field, and I think it would be premature to discuss the negotiations at this stage.

TRANSPORT

INCREASE IN CONFERENCE RATES ON EXPORT OF LUMBER TO UNITED KINGDOM

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Carleton-Charlotte): I wonder what that was all about, Mr. Speaker. I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is it the intention of the minister to cause an inquiry to be made into the recent very substantial increase in the conference rates for the export of lumber from eastern Canadian ports to the United Kingdom, which will have a very serious effect on the volume of exports of this commodity?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad to look deeply into this matter for the hon. member. I assure him that we will continue to give the same generous consideration to New Brunswick that we have always given.

POLLUTION

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DRAFT REGULATIONS UNDER FISHERIES ACT

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. It arises from the development of regulations under the new Fisheries Act. In view of the minister's statement to the effect that he intends to circulate the draft regulations in connection with various industries such as pulp and paper to people outside this House, I wonder whether he would table these draft regulations in the House at the same time they are being distributed to others so that we may examine them?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): I shall be glad to do so, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

INITIATIVES TO OFFSET OVERFISHING BY FOREIGN DRAGGERS—OCEANOGRAPHIC STUDIES

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. In view of the extensive overfishing by foreign draggers off our shores and in view of the position clearly brought out on the CTV program "W5" on Sunday, can the minister indicate whether his department is now taking any new initiatives to offset the overfishing by the Soviet Union and Germany in particular and to bring his action up to date with his awareness of the need and the problem?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): I am endeavouring to do that, Mr. Speaker. Before the Russian delegation left last week we had a few preliminary discussions about a possible initiative on the east coast of a bilateral nature.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will recognize the hon. member but I seek the co-operation of hon. members in relation to supplementaries.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, this problem is so urgent that I feel you might be a little lenient with our questions in this regard. Can the minister say whether Canada is taking any new action to increase its efforts in the area of oceanographic studies and can he give assurance that the recent moving of the problem north on the west coast of Canada means that we did not give away valuable resources—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is one of a very general nature which should be placed on the order paper. If there should be an element of urgency involved it could be returned to tonight.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, we have just had negotiations with the Soviet Union and there is a feeling in Canada that we have given away resources because of the lack of knowledge of oceanography.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understood the question and I suggest it should either be placed on the order paper or, if my assessment is wrong, there is provision in the rules that it may be considered at the time of adjournment.

NATIONAL SECURITY

WAR MEASURES ACT—COMMITTEE TO AID POLITICAL PRISONERS

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Could he tell us if the Quebec government had consulted the federal authorities before agreeing to recognize the committee that has been established to provide assistance to political prisoners, as announced yesterday by the Quebec Attorney General?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know that, on this whole matter, discussions are now underway between the federal Minister of Justice and his Quebec counterpart. I cannot say if such discussions dealt with this particular committee.

However, the responsible minister may want to take notice of the question and, if the hon. member puts it to him some other day, he would be in a position to give an answer.

[English]

ADEQUACY OF POLICE INVESTIGATION METHODS—IMPLEMENTATION OF ROYAL COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. C. Terrence Murphy (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that some three weeks have elapsed since the abduction of Mr. Cross and in view of published statements by law enforcement officers in this country and in the United States that established police investigational methods are not adequate to cope with current revolutionary and terrorist tactics, does the government contemplate reviewing its policy with reference to federal law enforcement agencies and possible implementation of the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Security pertaining to a special security force for Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I think the premises to the question are very serious. On the review suggested by the hon. member I can only say that this question was reviewed last year in great detail and, as the House knows, the decision was taken to appoint a deputy commissioner who would have special responsibility for this and the House knows that the deputy commissioner was taken from outside the force. We feel that this combines the advantage of the commission's report and reflects also the general confidence the country has had in the force in the past.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ADEQUACY OF SECURITY MEASURES TO PREVENT INFILTRATION OF FORCES AND CIVILIAN STAFF BY UNDESIRABLES

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to pose a question to the Minister of National Defence. In light of the statement made by his colleague the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion about a week ago in the House that these people, referring to the FLQ, have infiltrated every strategic place in the province of Quebec, can the minister assure the House that the security measures which have been taken over the past years have been adequate to prevent such infiltration into either the armed forces or the civilian staff of his department?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): I have every reason to believe that the security measures have been effective for that purpose.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): I have a question for the minister who reports to the House on housing and National Capital Commission matters. Can he say whether consideration is being given at this time to the establishment of a committee of Parliament to concern itself with all matters dealing with the national capital and, if so, whether the intention is to establish that committee during the present session?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): The question has already been put to me but no decision has been made. In the meantime, of course, there is a committee to which those interested in National Capital Commission affairs have access, and that opportunity will continue. However, in answer to the question of the hon. member may I say precisely, not yet.

GRAIN

BARLEY—EMBARGO ON EXPORT

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): My question is for the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. Has an embargo been placed on the export of barley and, if so, what is the reason for this policy at this time?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, certainly no general embargo. If there is a particular market which the hon. member is inquiring about, I would be glad to have further details and inquire on his behalf.

Mr. Dinsdale: Perhaps I could elucidate with a supplementary question. Is the Wheat Board accepting export delivery orders for barley at this time?

Mr. Lang: On a matter like that involving the commercial considerations that enter into the Wheat Board's decision, I would refrain from comment in the House.

POWER

SKAGIT RIVER—METHOD OF OPPOSING AGREEMENT BETWEEN BRITISH COLUMBIA AND SEATTLE CITY LIGHT COMPANY

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. In view of the minister's speech on October 10 to the Burnaby and Lower Coast Regional Conference in which he indicated that federal government lawyers were searching for ways in which the 1967 agreement between British Columbia and Seattle City Light on the Skagit River flooding might be opposed, I would ask the minister if any way to oppose this agreement has been found and, if so, what action will be taken?

Mr. Speaker: I am not too sure whether this is a matter of urgency. However, in view of the fact that I am unfamiliar with the subject matter raised by the hon. member, the minister might be allowed to reply briefly.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): We are still looking into the matter, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REASONS FOR CANCELLATION OF VISIT BY MINISTER TO AFRICA

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Could he enlighten the House as to the reasons for the cancellation of the visit of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to Africa?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I believe the Secretary of State for External Affairs considered that until the problem of the kidnapping of Mr. Cross, a foreign representative in Canada, was solved, it would be improper for him to leave the country, at least at this time.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

POSITION RESPECTING MINIMUM WAGE LAWS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Would he discuss with Canadian National Railways, which has in the province of Saskatchewan, on the one hand, classified itself as a company coming under federal jurisdiction in order not to have to meet the provincial holiday pay regulations, their attitude, on the other hand, in classifying themselves as a provincial company for the purpose of avoiding having to pay their employees the higher federal minimum wage?

Hon. Donald Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I believe that hon. members are aware that part of what might be called this controversy is before the courts vis-à-vis the hotel employees. I will be glad to take the other part under consideration and discuss it with CNR.

RETIRED EMPLOYEES' PENSIONS—ACTION TO IMPLEMENT COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION FOR INCREASE

Mr. Gaetan J. Serré (Nickel Belt): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Can the minister tell the House whether he has had any indication that the officials of the CNR will comply with the recommendation of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications concerning increases in the pensions of its employees? If not, what action is he contemplating in order to force the CNR to comply with this recommendation?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I have answered this question in the House previously. I have formally advised the CNR—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I was going to suggest that as the question has been asked and answered we might go on to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

NATIONAL SECURITY

WAR MEASURES ACT—NON-PROSECUTION FOR ACTS COMMITTED PRIOR TO PROCLAMATION

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday I asked the Minister of Justice whether he could assure the House that people would not be prosecuted for acts which were not criminal committed prior to the invocation of the War Measures Act. He replied correctly that the administration of the Act resides with the Attorney General of the province of Quebec in this case. Given the importance of this notion and its centrality to the rule of law, would the Prime Minister assure the House that he will make such a recommendation to the Attorney General of Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will ensure that the answer which the minister gave yesterday to the House is brought to the attention of the Attorney General of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—VETERANS AFFAIRS—EARLY IMPLEMENTATION OF COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS AND WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE INCREASES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe) moved:

That this House urges the government to implement at an early date by way of the appropriate legislative amendments the recommendations contained in the 2nd report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs dated 9 June 1970 and in addition thereto to provide for early payment of adequate increases in the allowances under the War Veterans' Allowance Act 1952 as amended.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think it is significant that we have chosen today to discuss veterans affairs because in a few days, on November 11, we will hold the 52nd memorial service since the end of World War I.

It is significant also that we have reached a stage in our history when suddenly, as a nation, we are faced with a crisis which may affect the freedom which Canadians have enjoyed for so many years, a freedom which made us the envy of many other nations which are faced with internal strife almost as a daily routine.

What Canadian, let alone the government of Canada or any Member of Parliament, would have imagined that internal disorder, that uprisings from minority factions, would threaten our democratic way of life at this time in our history? I mention this significant fact because it was not until there was a threat of violence, and indeed the sacrifice of a dedicated Canadian's life, that the country united as one behind the government in their decision to introduce measures to deal with terrorism within our country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Marshall: Canadians also united as a nation when hundreds of thousands of our citizens offered themselves in world wars, not only to protect their own country but to offer and dedicate their lives to stop nations in other parts of the world from inflicting their will, their undemocratic and tyrannical philosophies on free living countries.

We, in Canada, are faced with a breakdown in our national unity because we have forgotten how true national unity is created in a country such as ours. National unity cannot be legislated by governments, by sitting around a conference table, by studies and commissions, or by presenting bills in Parliament. National unity is created in the hearts of people and passed on over the years because our ancestors suffered hardship in discovering and building Canada. We affirmed this unity between 1914 and 1918 and again between 1939 and 1945. Our war veterans pledged their loyalty to Queen and country and defended Canada against tyranny from without. These veterans fought not as people of English, French or any other origin, but each and every one of them fought side by side as comrades and as Canadians.

I think that this might be a good time to look again at these Canadian citizens who made the greatest contribution to preserve our peace through suffering, sacrifice and dedication. Yes, Mr. Speaker, we should take a lesson from the way they were able to maintain unity over the years. They did not remain strong, loyal and united by changing their colours, their flags, or their symbols to identify themselves. Nor did they remain united by distinguishing between members. All veterans in the Canadian Legion, or in any of the other veterans' organizations, are full fledged members regardless of race, creed or colour, or regardless of whether they are rich or poor. And they have the same crests of distinction, Mr. Speaker—each and every one of them—the same beret, the same coloured blazer. The only people in the veterans' organizations who get special attention are the poor, the disabled, the sick. These organizations have raised a good deal of the money to help these veterans through the sale of a red poppy of the same design for some 50 years.

These veterans organizations honour their dead with the same wreaths, and at every gathering they remember those who have fallen with these same words:

> They shall grow not old, as we that are left grow old:
> Age shall not weary them, nor the years condemn.
> At the going down of the sun and in the morning
> We will remember them.

And unless we do remember them, Mr. Speaker, we will continue to disintegrate as a nation. Unless we continue to remember those who are left to grow old, those who unfortunately were wounded and remain incapacitated, then we will surely have condemned those veterans who look to our affluent government for assistance.

Our motion today urges the government to implement at an early date, by way of the appropriate legislative amendments, the recommendations contained in the second report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, date June 9, 1970, and in addition to provide for early payment of adequate increases in the allowances under the War Veterans Allowance Act, as well as an increase in the basic rate of disability pensions.

I do not want to pre-empt the Minister, Mr. Speaker, but I spent some time in my office over the weekend re-reading his remarks, as reported in Hansard of June 20 last year, when we introduced another motion on veterans affairs. I am sure he will repeat many of the things he said then about the rapid increases in disability pensions from 1948 to 1968. He called the increases from 1964 to 1968—from $1800 to over $3000—rapid increases, and he referred to the increases in 1968 as healthy ones.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I was not here before 1968 but I have been here pretty steadily for over two years and I haven't seen anything happen very rapidly in 1969 and 1970. But I have witnessed, as we all have, a rapid increase in the cost of living in 1969 and 1970, in each and every month. In 1968, the increase was over 4 per cent. In 1969 it was 4.5 per cent. To date in 1970, it is almost that rate again. I have received appeals from all across the country concerning the rapid deterioration of bodies and lives, not only of the disabled war veterans of this country but also of many of the 4 million poverty stricken. Yes, there are lots of things happening rapidly in this Canada of ours, but they are all going rapidly wrong.

The minister has also stated on very many occasions that we should not act too rapidly in bringing about legislation because the review of the Woods committee was so complex and the ramifications so deep that it took them two and a half years to bring down their report. It should be understandable, therefore, if the government takes half that time to bring the report to fruition.

We agreed to this suggestion, as did all the veterans' organizations, and I list them: The National Council of Veterans Associations, the War Amputations of Canada, the Hong Kong Veterans, The National Dieppe Prisoner of War Association, the Nursing Sisters Association, the Canadian Corps Associations, The Canadian Paraplegic Associations, The Sir Arthur Pearson Association of War

Blinded, The War Pensioners of Canada, The Army, Navy and Air Forces Veterans of Canada, and the Royal Canadian Legion.

The Veterans Affairs Committee also agreed, and that committee has sat since last September considering briefs presented by these organizations. We also considered the white paper presented by the government. We reviewed the 148 recommendations, and we presented a report in June of this year. I am sure that the minister would agree, and that the chairman of the committee will confirm, that there was complete co-operation at all times during our deliberations. I am sure he will also agree that the veterans organizations were most co-operative in compromising on the cost of many of the recommendations advocated by the Woods Committee, in order to expedite legislation. I am also sure he will agree that all concerned gave enough time to the consideration of such a complex report.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Marshall: Just this month, Mr. Speaker, before the end of the second session, my party offered complete co-operation to expedite the passing of legislation because time means everything to the disabled veterans. I can only appeal once more to the minister and the government to return the consideration by bringing in legislation immediately. I know such legislation is on the list of bills for this session, but since it is number 22 I hope it does not have to wait its turn to come before the House. I also hope this bill will rapidly be given a much higher priority by those who decide what legislation is to come before the House.

Last August, just over one year ago, as a result of the Woods Committee the government tabled its white paper on veterans pensions. So, we should all be ready to admit that we were given enough time to study the complex report of the Woods Committee and its ramifications, as the minister requested.

Probably the most pressing of the recommendations in the Woods Committee Report were numbers 92 and 93 dealing with a basic minimum pension of 50 per cent for all members of the Hong Kong force who were interned as prisoners of war by the Japanese, and that the widows of ex-members of the Hong Kong force be eligible for consideration of an award of widows' pensions under section 25 of the Act. If I may quote from the white paper, Mr. Speaker, it said:

> That these veterans deserve special consideration has been recognized by government, and it is now proposed to ask parliament to formally recognize this obligation by proposing a separate act which will provide for a basic minimum pension of 50 per cent for all Hong Kong veterans who apply for it, and who have assessable degrees of disability—The effect of this provision will make widows and orphans who were not in receipt of disability pensions of 48 per cent also pensionable under the act and such pensions would begin with the effective date of the special legislation.

There were only 395 Hong Kong veterans as of 1968 receiving less than a 48 per cent pension. The white paper indicated agreement, and in fact promised special legislation over a year ago. An amendment to cover these veterans could have been put before the House any time after the presentation of the white paper and could have been passed at the snap of a finger. But here we are, over a year later, and still nothing has been done.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Marshall: The cost of implementation of this recommendation would be only some $600,000. Yet the government continues to procrastinate while the bodies of these veterans continue to deteriorate. Those who suffered through four years of the most extreme hardships of torture, of malnutrition and the affliction of avitaminosis, for which there is no cure, continue to await some humane consideration after so many years.

There are some 65 members of this House, Mr. Speaker, who are veterans of World War II, and two who are veterans of World War I—the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai), and the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). The majority of these veterans sit on the opposite side of the House. A good number of them sat on the veterans affairs committee. I wonder if they have any humane feelings; they who must know of the suffering of these veterans. I wish they would show some intestinal fortitude by standing up in their caucus meetings and pleading for some reasonable sense of priority in the implementation of legislation for the veterans.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer once more to the minister's reply last year in which he quoted a statement made by the right hon. Prime Minister on June 17 last year:

> We have to review all aspects of social legislation. We are doing this; we do not want to settle special cases. A special plea can be made not only for the veterans but for old people, for retired civil servants and for all sections of people in society.

Well, bully I say to him, Mr. Speaker, but I also say that the increases for the poor, the aged, the blind and the retarded have not been coming along too rapidly. The white paper on social security is also ready, but that appears pretty far down on the list of impending legislation. I hope it includes some indication of action to implement increases for those burnt-out veterans coming under the War Veterans Allowances Act. The increases for these veterans and their families have not been too rapid or healthy.

• (3:00 p.m.)

The last increase for veterans in this category was in 1966, and we do not hear too much bragging about the single rate of $105 per month or the married rate of $175 per month for these veterans. I do not have to remind the House how much below the poverty line these figures are.

It is worth while mentioning, Mr. Speaker, the situation with regard to war veterans allowances, because if ever we have failed our citizens we have failed those who are recipients under the War Veterans Allowance

Act. These are the veterans who become eligible after the age of 60 and are permanently unemployable because of physical or mental disabilities, or who are unable to maintain themselves due to a combination of economic handicaps and physical or mental disabilities and are unlikely to be able to do so. It is worth while mentioning the restrictions on these veterans. A single veteran in this category cannot have assets over $1,250 and a married veteran cannot have assets over $2,500.

I would like to show you some of the letters I get, Mr. Speaker, telling me that the veteran or his wife went out to try to earn a little more to buy some extra food or clothing, or to buy a little radio in order to hear about this great Canada and the great things that are coming in the new decade we are entering. Then, they find that what they earned is deducted from their next month's cheque.

Mr. McGrath: Shame.

Mr. Marshall: All that the department has done for these veterans during the past two years I have been in the House has been to cut down the staff of certain district offices which are charged with the responsibility of helping these people and of seeking out those who can qualify for this pittance on reaching this age. Yes, Mr. Speaker, I repeat—bully for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he says a special plea can be made not only for the veterans but for the old and for all sections of society. These people agree, too. Everybody in Canada agrees. They all come under the massive social security report which sits in the office of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) ready to be tabled; and the related legislation sits way down on the list I mentioned before.

So, let us bring forward the legislation on veterans pensions and social security. The special plea of these people is getting louder and louder, Mr. Speaker. So, let us show some humane consideration instead of philosophizing and let us pay attention to the needs of these people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Marshall: I am sure that the minister will advise us of the exact dates on which the pensions legislation and that relating to income security will be introduced. I hope he will not give us the same answer that the Prime Minister gives when he criticizes the opposition for asking the government to spend money. He answers that if we want the government to pay out more money they will have to raise taxes, and then the opposition will criticize that. Well, in case he is going to use this tale of woe again I will tell him I am not accepting it, because it is a lot of bully beef.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Marshall: In my short period of time in this House, Mr. Speaker, I have learned that money is thrown around by this government "like it was going out of style", and for some of the strangest things that one could imagine. They are too numerous to mention, but one example would be the giving of grants to town fools. I must say, though, that I did not appreciate the remarks of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) yesterday in the House when I asked, simply and courteously, whether he would advise the House when the legislation on income security, which includes war veterans allowances and the veterans pension legislation, would be presented. His answer, though, is a pretty good indication as to where he stands with regard to veterans. It is obvious that he was one of the six cabinet ministers who vetoed the recommendations of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and directed him to cut his recommended increases to the poor by some $500 million.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Marshall: I wonder which of the other cabinet ministers were included in the nasty six?

An hon. Member: They are all the same.

Mr. Marshall: There are many items in the Veterans affairs Committee report with which I could deal. I refer to the 100 per cent pensioners; to stabilizing pensions; to benefit of doubt and appeal procedures, and to attendance allowances. Not the least of these matters is the basic rate of pension; but I am sure my colleagues will deal with these adequately. I will close my remarks with this appeal to the government.

I am sure that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) would have liked to have brought forward legislation before now. It is apparent that he is deterred by a cabinet which continues to downgrade the department and by the "whiz kids" who prefer to create new departments like Information Canada, which can only be described as a $7 million money-eating monster to produce political propaganda that nobody wants to hear.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Marshall: There is also an inference to be drawn from the government's spending sums like $200,000, on art work that kiddies in kindergarten could do better. I only hope, as a result of this debate, that the minister, with the help of many veterans who are members of caucus, will appeal to the government to stand behind the promises made to the 160,000 of the almost 1 million Canadian war veterans. I hope he will do this with the zeal and vigour which he says is being used in the care for veterans, and that legislation will be brought forth, before it is too late to care for many of them.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, we, on this side of the House, are pleased with the motion that has been brought forward, which gives us the opportunity of reviewing a matter that occupied the attention of many members of the House in the course of the previous session. The minister will speak at the end of this debate and will reply to the points raised by members on the other side of the House. I know that hon. members here anticipate his remarks with a good deal of interest.

The veterans affairs committee, at the end of our sittings in the spring, presented a report which was unanimously adopted in this House. It has been a source of some satisfaction to those of us who worked on the committee, Mr. Speaker, to know that there has been so much team work in what we were doing and that the committee was able to examine a great deal of evidence.

It is now 25 years since the initial veterans charter was adopted in 1945. The process of revising the work of the Pension Commission began in 1965 with the appointment of the Woods committee. That committee took some 3 years to do its work. It presented 1,300 pages of evidence and 148 separate and distinct recommendations concerning the work of the Canadian Pension Commission. Of those recommendations, the overwhelming majority was acceptable to the government and involved a restructuring of the Canadian Pension Commission and a simplification of its procedures. But the report of the committee went considerably beyond a mere restructuring and reorganization. It introduced a number of basic principles which called for a careful examination; it was not possible for the government at that time to accept them, just as it was not possible to accept the report of the Carter Commission on taxation.

The device which the government adopted in this case was the device of the white paper. In August, 1969, the minister who is now sitting in this House brought down a white paper on veterans affairs which was a very significant document. A number of hon. members participated in the matter of the Hong Kong veterans. I have discovered, and I have received correspondence subsequently from a number of veterans who were so involved, that some of our men were captured in Indonesia, Malaya and many other parts of the Far East, and they suffered as much privation as the Hong Kong veterans suffered. The white paper clearly recognizes our obligation and, without question, its recommendations were unanimously accepted.

The white paper also dealt with other matters, such as the benefit of the doubt provision. It talked about restructuring the Veterans Bureau and brought forward a number of recommendations acceptable to the government which were, without any question, acceptable also to everyone who understood what had happened in this field. But, in bringing down that white paper, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) very carefully stated that this was a general outline and that the government would not take an inflexible position. The government was indicating those areas which were acceptable to it and it was asking, in the most democratic fashion possible, the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, which was composed of members from every party represented in the House of Commons, to look at the Woods report and the white paper, to sort out matters and make recommendations to the government concerning those other matters on which it had not been possible to reach agreement.

I had the honour, Mr. Speaker, of being the chairman of that committee. That is something of which, during the course of my public career, I have been very proud. I regard the service in the past session of this Parliament as one of the greatest opportunities I have had.

• (3:10 p.m.)

The committee met 39 times. It heard from 14 organizations and a number of witnesses, including the minister and spokesmen of the department. The committee never lacked a quorum, Mr. Speaker. I say that by way of tribute to those members who served on the committee. This committee met when the House was not sitting in September of 1969. When a committee meeting was called, we never failed to establish a quorum.

I wish to pay the greatest tribute to the minister at this point. Without question, in his attitude, appearances before the committee and representations, he carefully avoided taking any dogmatic or firm position. He always said "This is what we think is right; this is what we are prepared to do." He put forward some proposals in which he believed, as well as those who were giving him advice. They firmly believed this was the best pattern of administration with regard to the appeal procedure.

Although the committee studied the entire range of 148 recommendations, the members spent a great deal of time in two major areas of special concern. I wish to speak today about these two areas. The first was a request of the veterans organizations to establish an independent body which would be above the pensions committee and which would pass judgment at the appeal stage.

In the course of my life I have had the honour of serving in the public service of Canada for nine years. During that time I learned a little about the principles of public administration. The principle of standing one independent body above another independent body was of great concern. Where such a structure has been established, it has not always been a good pattern of public administration. There is a basic rule which states that the laws of the land must be respected and accepted by the great majority of those to whom they apply. A law and a body of procedure that is not acceptable to the people who must live and work with it will not be a good law or a good procedure. This was the basic principle that guided the committee in its report regarding the appeal procedure. We felt we had to make this recommendation in light of the persistent and non-deviating suggestions with regard to an independent appeal board.

There was no way to judge the workload after the initial backlog was dealt with. There was no way to judge how many persons would be required for these different agencies after there was a stabilization of workload. For that reason, we recommended that appointments should be for a five year period. We suggested that the government study this after five years to see whether the procedure was the proper one.

Another area which gave us a great deal of concern was those veterans suffering from severe and multiple disabilities. The white paper contained a set of proposals with regard to this. The proposals in the white paper were misunderstood in some quarters. There were representations to us to the effect that a means test was required. I certainly did not read that into the white paper. The minister expressly repudiated that anything like this was intended. Without question, the committee made it clear that the case for additional allowances for certain categories of multiple and severely disabled veterans above and beyond the 100 per cent basic rate was a strong case.

The hon. member who moved this motion in very emotional terms stated the debt that Canada owes to those who served. There is no greater debt owed by a nation than that owed to those who served a nation and suffered physically, emotionally and mentally. Many of our veterans have had many trials and tribulations. The committee made some recommendations which went above and beyond those in the white paper.

The report we presented was in two sections. We listed those recommendations of the Woods Committee with which we were in general agreement and those in which we were not in agreement. We stated our reasons and, in some cases, suggested modifications. The committee completed its report and presented it to this House in June. It was unanimously adopted by resolution of this House. I was pleased to see a reference in the Speech from the Throne to legislation that will be introduced. When the minister speaks on this subject he will be able to say much more than I can say.

A great deal of attention has been given to the recommendations of the committee by various organizations, the minister and his department. It has been the source of a good deal of pleasure to note in the August issue of the Legion, the national magazine of the Royal Canadian Legion, that the cover featured photographs of the committee members. The editorial that follows is very complimentary. I will not quote it in detail. It reads in part:

> —the report has the unanimous concurrence of the House of Commons and we assume that the next step will be for the Minister of Veterans Affairs to seek Cabinet approval of the report, following which officials of the Department of Justice can set to work preparing the necessary legislation.

The editorial is a very realistic appreciation of the steps in the legislative process. There is a very quiet, confident note in the editorials of the Legion and publications of other veterans organizations. It is a clear appreciation of the good will that has been displayed. This good will has not been marred by partisan behaviour in the committee. I am confident there will be a general acceptance of the program to be introduced.

I wish to quote from the latest issue of the war amputees Fragment. The remarks in this article concerning the report of the committee are particularly complimentary. Perhaps it would be better if some other hon. member repeated them. It reads in part:

> The 1969-70 Parliamentary Committee can take its place, right along with the renowned Veterans Affairs Committees of the past. It was the task of this Committee...to take the raw material of the Woods Report, measure it against the Government's own White Paper on Veterans Pensions, add in the rather well-documented views of the Veterans organizations, and come up with a proposed plan which would meet the need.

There is every indication, in spite of the fact the committee turned down some of the key recommendations such as age escalation, that these organizations are generally pleased with the work of the committee. The question we must now ask ourselves is, what is to be the pattern? What is it reasonable to expect?

On Friday of last week we completed the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. Other national emergency measures were brought before this House which were the subject of special debate. I know that time can pass in the course of a session without us really being aware of it. I say to the members of this House that the veterans of this country can have complete confidence in the measures being prepared and brought forward for legislative enactment. From the statements made by members opposite, this matter will not be prolonged in a partisan debate. Members will work in the spirit in which the work was carried out in the committee and they will be pleased to approve this legislation.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are delighted that this day in the House of Commons is being devoted to a discussion of veterans affairs, and I take much pleasure in commending the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) for having introduced the motion which we are now debating. If I might say so, I could not have drawn it better myself. But having said that, I must indicate that at the end of my remarks I intend to move an amendment to make it slightly better than it is.

• (3:20 p.m.)

I go along with the remarks which have been made by both the previous speakers concerning the excellence of the work of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. I have had a fair amount of committee experience over the years in this place and I have served on no committee I have enjoyed more. We had matters of real substance to deal with, we found dedication and devotion on the part of all members of the committee, and I believe that as a result of our work and co-operation we produced a report which, in the end, was better than I had hoped at the start might come out of that committee. May I say in this connection that it was precisely because of the unanimity we felt in that committee concerning all the important phases of our work, and because of the unanimity on many points at all stages—the Woods Report, the white paper, the committee report—that I regret there has been so long a delay in implementing those things upon which we were agreed.

I look upon the introduction of this motion today by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe as primarily a way of speeding things up. If as a result of today's debate the minister can announce that the legislation will be on the order paper within the next few days, this will have been a very worthwhile day. Like other hon. members I am greatly concerned at the length of time it has taken to get action on these matters. The dates are well known to us all but perhaps I might repeat them. It is more than five years since the Woods committee was commissioned to do its job. True, it was a big job and it took the committee a long time to complete it. But when that committee was appointed, the hope was that something would soon be done to improve the position of veterans. Yet here we are, five years and a month later, and we still have not seen the legislation which was recommended as a result of that study.

The Woods committee was appointed in September, 1965. It made its report in March, 1968, about two and a half years later. It was a year and several months before we heard anything from the government of the day. Eventually, the white paper was produced; that was in August, 1969. I am happy to say that the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs began its deliberations in the following month, September, and its report was made to the House in June, 1970. As has been stated by previous speakers, shortly after this report was presented to the House, the House of Commons concurred in it. I recite these facts for two reasons: first, to indicate the length of time we have been dealing with these matters and, second, to show that with regard to all those things on which we have agreed there has been enthusiasm, unanimity and concern. I do not like this long delay. In fact, it seems to me that once this session started and the debate on the Speech from the Throne had been concluded, almost the first legislation brought into the House by the government should have been the bill implementing the promised improvements in our veterans legislation.

The motion proposed by the hon. member who began this debate deals in the main with two subjects. First, there is the whole question of the amendments to be made to the Pension Act arising out of the study by the Woods committee. Then there is the question which was not referred to the Woods committee, namely, the consideration of changes in the War Veterans Allowance Act. Accordingly, I should like to divide my remarks between those two general headings.

First, with respect to the proposed changes in the Pension Act, other members have already indicated that there are some changes upon which we agree. Let us have them as soon as we can. In particular, we have agreed on certain new procedures that are to be established, and we have agreed on the special appeal board to be set up over the Pension Commission. The hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) was perfectly correct in his description of the way in which this matter was discussed in the committee and I think it is fair to say that the various veterans organizations, particularly the representatives of the National Council of Veterans Organizations who stayed with us right through the piece, deserve great credit for their assistance and for their perseverance. As hon. members know, what has been recommended in the matter of appeal procedures is a five year trial period and, like the hon. member for Ottawa West, I believe an arrangement of this kind will work only if it suits those concerned. I trust that the legislation will carry out this particular recommendation.

One of the features in the Woods Report, in the white paper and in our own report, which has been agreed on right down the line, concerns the treatment of Hong Kong veterans. The provision is a straightforward one, namely, that any Hong Kong veteran who has any disability at all should be treated as having a 48 per cent disability, or more, so that his pension will be a 50 per cent pension and so that his widow will automatically get a widow's pension in full. This has not been contested at any point and I still do not know why some effort was not made last session to bring in a bill to put this provision into effect. We have agreed on it all down the line and we made an offer in the committee on behalf of our respective parties that if such legislation were brought forward it would be agreed to without debate. I regret very much that no action was taken by the government in response to this offer.

We also agreed that there should be a settlement of the question of the quantum of the basic pension. A number of questions of that sort were agreed on in the committee, whether on a unanimous basis or after discussion, and I see no reason why these things should not be before us right at this time.

There are two or three matters about which we felt strongly in the committee, on which agreement was not reached. Even though no reference was made to them in the report, I hope, even at this stage, that consideration will be given to them. One has already been referred to, the provision for automatic aging. The veterans organizations felt very strongly about this, and so did many of the members of the committee. I hope that those who are going to draft the legislation might yet take a good look at that particular proposition.

I hope that all of the recommendations contained in the report will be included in the legislation. For example, I have in mind a provision about which we had a good deal of discussion in the committee, namely the treatment of widows of veterans where the pension of the veteran before he died was less than 48 per cent. As hon. members are aware, in such cases there is no automatic pension for the widow; her only recourse is to make an application under the War Veterans Allowance Act.

Despite the non-concurrence of the White Paper, our committee recommended that a provision be made in such cases for a pension as of right to be paid to the widow on a pro rata basis. I admit that in some cases that would not amount to much. In some cases the widow would still have to fall back on the War Veterans Allowance Act, particularly if her late husband's pension was down around the 10 to 20 per cent level; but it would mean a good deal to those whose pension was between, say, 35 and 45 per cent. This was recommended by the committee and particular attention was drawn to it in the preamble to the report. Therefore, I hope without question that that provision will be in the legislation when it is presented to the House which I hope will be in a few days.

I think the picture is reasonably clear in regard to those things that were covered in the Woods report. We started with a lot of disagreement, a certain amount of disillusionment and some uncertainty, but as a result of our living together with this problem for a long period of time, and as a result of the very good work done by the veterans organizations which appeared before the committee, we reached a pretty solid consensus about the things that should be done in regard to those matters that had been referred to the Woods committee. As a result of that unanimity I plead that there be no more delay and that the legislation be brought in. I am satisfied this House will give it very quick passage indeed.

However, before one leaves the Pension Act, which as I say was referred to the Woods committee, one has to take note of the fact that there was not referred to the Woods committee the basic amount of the disability pension. Any suggestion about increasing veterans pensions—I am now talking about disability pensions—was not, therefore, part of the terms of reference of the Woods committee nor part of the terms of reference of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

I do not think we will be as proud of ourselves as we like to think we will be if, despite all this work, and despite our devoting time in the House of Commons to the question of veterans legislation, nothing is done to increase the rate of pensions paid under the Pension Act. I hope that matter will be dealt with.

If it is necessary to bring in two separate bills in this regard, then let that be done. Let there be included in one bill the matters we have agreed upon, those matters about which there is unanimity in every case or almost unanimity, and I am convinced that every party in the House will let the bill reach the statute books in record time. Then, let us also have another bill dealing with the rates of pension paid under the Pension Act.

This leads me to the other aspect of the motion moved by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe, namely that something should be done at this time to provide for early payment of adequate increases in the allowances paid under the War Veterans Allowance Act. To my regret the subject of the War Veterans Allowance Act, not having been referred to the Woods committee, was also not included in the terms of reference of the standing committee. But the veterans and widows who come under the aegis of the War Veterans Allowance Act are the people who seem always to get the short end of the stick.

I plead that the minister not delay any longer the bringing in of amendments to that act. Let him not ask us to wait for the White Paper on social security or on income maintenance, or whatever it is to be; that matter has been delayed for so long that there is no telling when it will be brought in. And when it is, I assume that it will deal with matters relating to the population of Canada in general.

I have no hesitation in standing here as a non-veteran, like the minister, and saying that we owe something special to the veterans who have served this country. I want to see what is sometimes called the social security legislation for our veterans, or call it, if you will, social welfare legislation—the War Veterans Allowance Act—kept a few stages higher than the social security or social welfare legislation that applies to the population as a whole.

That was the basis on which the War Veterans Allowanc Act was brought in in the first place. That was in the period when the old age pension was payable at age 70 only, and on a means test. The purpose of the War Veterans Allowance Act was to provide to those who had served in World War I an opportunity to get at age 60 a pension that would compare with the old age pension that was paid at age 70, and to get that pension not only at an earlier age but on a means test that was less stringent than the old age pension means test.

Over the years there seems to have been the tendency somehow or other to ask why, since this is social welfare legislation, it should not be enmeshed in our general welfare legislation. I do not think that approach is good enough. Those of us in this Parliament who cannot claim to be veterans would be a little ashamed, I think, if we were to abolish the principle that Parliament ought to do something better for those who served their country in time of war.

Therefore, I call for the War Veterans Allowance Act to be dealt with separately from the white paper on social welfare or income maintenance. We have touched on some matters already without waiting for that paper. It used to be agreed that everything had to wait for that paper which is to be brought down by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but last December there was an announcement, and then in March certain legislation was presented to the House. I was very glad that the legislation was introduced without waiting for that paper, because it dealt with the pensions of retired civil servants, retired members of the armed forces, retired personnel of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and quite a few others. It even made a slight reference to Members of Parliament. None of these groups was called upon to wait for the white paper on social security. I am not at the moment asking any questions about the motives for that action at that time, for my views are well known, but the fact of the matter is that the ban against dealing with matters of this kind until the white paper on social security has been published was broken by the introduction of that legislation.

I think the same can be said with regard to the white paper on unemployment insurance. Certainly the committee dealing with that white paper is asked time and time again how come it has that white paper before the country is given the white paper on social security. So I suggest that the sacred principle that we must wait for the white paper of the Minister of National Health and Welfare has been shot high, wide and handsome.

If there is any group of people that deserves special consideration, it is the group we know as our veterans. Therefore, I insist that it will not be enough to bring in legislation simply implementing our report, and hence dealing only with the Pension Act and those matters covered in the Woods report; there has to be legislation that deals with the War Veterans Allowance Act, and any other legislation that will give our veterans the breaks they deserve.

So, Mr. Speaker, I take my hat off to my friend, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe, in that he put in his motion today one of the things we should be discussing now before the government brings down its legislation. Figures have been given and so on, and let me just remind hon. members of the House of the means test ceilings that are in the War Veterans Allowances Act; $145 a month for a single veteran and $245 a month for a married veteran. Those are the maximum total amounts of income they can have. Let me remind members that those who come under this are the ones who are, to use the vernacular, always getting it in the neck. In other pieces of legislation dealing with important pension improvements—I have in mind the guaranteed income supplement and the increase in pensions of retired civil servants—some people get increases without losing something they already had. When a recipient of the War Veterans Allowance Act qualifies for the guaranteed income supplement it comes off his war veterans allowance. There are retired public servants who qualified last spring for the increase that we put through in what was Bill C-194 last session, and Members of Parliament will remember Bill C-194. Yes, there are retired public servants who got that increase and then had it taken off their war veterans allowance. This is just not good enough and I do not think we should stand for it. The least we can do is raise the ceilings on the war veterans allowance.

I think we must also raise the amount that is paid under the War Veterans Allowance Act and we may have to do something about this sacred principle that you cannot do something for one unless you do it for another. I think we may have to make special legislation that says that when increases are provided, those getting the war veterans allowance shall not get it with one hand and have it taken away by the other. The people who suffer this kind of thing the most are those who come under the War Veterans Allowance Act.

I hope the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), who has spoken of the good work we did on the veterans affairs committee, will not feel what I am saying is in criticism of the work of that committee, because it is not. That committee did not have this subject referred to it, so we could not discuss it. We tried to do so a few times but he listened long enough to be sure we were out of order and told us so.

Whether or not we had this before us in the committee, the matter is before us today quite properly in the motion made by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe. It is before us in the context of the whole question of veterans affairs and this Parliament has to deal with it.

One of the reasons I am so glad this motion has been put down today, and we are having a discussion, is that we are doing it before the minister brings in his legislation. Sometimes after the government has brought in its legislation and has said that is it, those speaking for the government do not like to make a change. Now, they can do this. I say to my friend the minister that he can go back to his department, or he can talk with his chief advisers who are up there in the gallery listening and watching us and say: Look, we better not cope with this problem after we have had a rough time on the floor of the House. Let us bring it in now. Let us say we were going to do it all along. That would be so wonderful we might even let the government get away with making that kind of statement.

Seriously, this is the area of greatest deficiency in what we are likely to get. We are almost certain to get in the general legislation a series of amendments to the Pension Act in relation to things we recommended in our report. I hope we get them all and perhaps one or two more but we are almost certain to get that. Whether we will get something adequate in respect of the basic rates under the Pension Act I do not know, but unless we also get in this session legislation to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act we will not have given our veterans in 1970 the fair treatment and justice to which I believe they are entitled.

So, Mr. Speaker, despite the fact that by special order made today I am permitted to talk for half an hour, there is no reason why I should do so. I am happy to draw my remarks to a conclusion and to indicate the amendment I should like to move to the motion which was presented by the hon. member from Newfoundland. I recognize that the way in which this motion has been put down it will not come to a vote tonight, but rather is a motion for discussion. Likewise I recognize that the amendment I move will therefore not come to a vote tonight. Usually, we like to have votes on the propositions we make but I think this is an indication of the above-party approach we take on veterans affairs. We state our propositions and we state them strongly, but we are not trying to divide the House. What we are trying to do is put into the minds of the government what ought to be done in the hope that it will be done under the legislation that is to be brought down.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the amendment I wish to move has to do with the date at which any increases under the Pension Act or under the War Veterans Allowance Act might be paid. I am suggesting in my amendment that all such increases should be paid retroactive to April 1, 1970, or to such earlier date as may be appropriate in certain cases. Those last words imply that there are some things in the recommendations which in themselves will call for an earlier date.

My strong and earnest suggestion in this amendment I hope is quite clear, namely that any of the increases at all must be made retroactive to April 1, 1970. Why did I pick that date? I could have picked a date way back when the Woods committee was set up, when it presented its report, when the white paper was drawn or when our committee made its report. There are dozens of dates one could pick. I picked that date because that is the date at which increases in pensions to retired civil servants, retired RCMP personnel, retired members of the armed forces, the permanent forces and so on became effective. It is also the date on which certain changes took place in the Members of Parliament pension plan. I would say that these increases we are now asking for our veterans should be retroactive to that date, and not one day later.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I have pleasure in moving, seconded by my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch):

That the motion be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma, and by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

"and this House also urges that consideration be given to the making of any increases to be provided under the Pension Act or under the War Veterans Allowance Act retroactive to April 1, 1970, or to such earlier date as may be appropriate in certain cases."

I hope that in the way in which the House can do so, namely by what it says and by the attention it pays to this debate, the House as a whole will endorse the proposition of the main motion, that there should be early legislation in respect of the Pension Act and the War Veterans Allowance Act. I hope it will also endorse the proposition contained in my amendment, that the increases we hope will be provided under these two acts will be made retroactive back at least to April 1, 1970. Surely, this is the least we should do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The Chair has looked at the amendment just put by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and it has a reservation as to the reference to the Pension Act in the amendment, knowing that the motion refers only to the War Veterans Allowance Act. This might have the tendency to open the debate further than intended by the general terms of the motion proposed by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall). In any case the Chair will, with this reservation, accept the motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, would you permit just a brief comment. The motion moved by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe calls for legislative amendments that contain the recommendations set out in the second report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. I happen to know that you were a member of the committee and Your Honour must know that everything in that report is a request for amendments to the Pension Act. It seems to me it is just a different way of saying the same thing, when I refer to increases under the Pension Act as well as to increases under the War Veterans Allowance Act.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I do not wish to go into the terms of reference or the questions the hon. member has in mind in respect of the committee's recommendation concerning an increase in pensions. I have indicated to the hon. member that the Chair is ready to put the motion with some reservations. Therefore, I shall put the question immediately. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) moves:

That the motion be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma, and by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

"and this House also urges that consideration be given to the making of any increases to be provided under the Pension Act or under the War Veterans Allowance Act retroactive to April 1, 1970, or to such earlier date as may be appropriate in certain cases."

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to say a few words about the motion put forward by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) as well as the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

There have been many studies and proposals concerning veterans. The government's White paper is an outcome of the Woods report.

Mr. Speaker, all this work was essential. Legislation providing for the welfare of our veterans should be revised because many of them have primary economic and financial needs to met, although they are unable to perform certain tasks as adequately as healthy people.

The legislation has been revised several times. Each year, the Committee on Veterans Affairs and the House have dealt with the needs of veterans.

I believe the information received until now is adequate and I think we could recommend implementing the conclusions of the Woods report. Besides, enforcing the decisions taken concerning the needs of the veterans has become imperative. It has always been a question of money and I believe that the implementation of the Woods Report was delayed on the same grounds. Indeed, the more we beat about the bush, the cheaper the whole business becomes for the Treasury.

Mr. Speaker, it is in the area of veterans' pensions, in my opinion, that we find good reason to congratulate the government. What is particularly remarkable is the attention it has always given to veterans and their families by paying them pensions constantly in keeping with the rising cost of living.

During the war and even afterwards, the widow of a veteran received at least $100 a month for herself, $40 a month for the first child, $30 a month for the second child, $25 a month for the third child and every other one. These are allowances which I consider appropriate.

What is also remarkable is that the children of veterans' widows, while receiving monthly allowances of $40, $30 or $25 were entitled at the same time to monthly allowances of $6 for children under ten and of $8 for those between 10 and 15 inclusive. Those over 15 who wanted to go on with their studies received higher allowances than those paid to the children of parents who were not veterans.

The pension of war widows has been increased very often in keeping with the cost of living. As a matter of fact, from $100 during and after the 1939-1945 war, it had gone up to $115 a month in 1958. Today, it is even higher and reaches $150 a month, I think. I have no intention of blaming anyone for giving special consideration to veterans, war widows and their children. On the contrary, I believe such action deserves commendation. I even believe that, in many cases, the government could show even greater generosity to those who have sacrificed their lives, their freedom or their health in order to save their fellow-citizens during world wars or other conflicts. It is only in 1968, or 23 years after the last world war, that it was decided to make a thorough study of veterans problems and this culminated in the 1,300-page Woods report. We are still trying today to consider an increase in veterans pensions and other allowances as part of the commitments of the government of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, as regards the studies about our duty to pay Canadian citizens certain sums of money other than salaries for work done or interest on capital, I feel that they are not undertaken with the primary concern of meeting the basic needs of our citizens, but always for considerations other than the right to existence which is the right of every citizen all through life, whether a soldier or an ordinary citizen, the son of a soldier or the son of an ordinary citizen, the widow of a soldier or of an ordinary man, who works the whole year through and who is liable also to be a victim of incapacity or of premature death on the workfront instead of the battlefront.

Mr. Speaker, the man who dies at work is also serving his country without enjoying the same benefits as soldiers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I suggest to the hon. member for Compton that the debate must bear on the terms of the amendment and the subamendment under consideration, which concern the second report of the Committee on Veterans Affairs, as well as allowances and pensions paid to veterans.

The fact that the hon. member was going to engage in a discussion which goes beyond the scope of this debate leads me to remind him that even if his remarks suggest that other Canadians are in need of government aid and that these people may be considered just as important as veterans, the hon. member must just the same speak directly to the amendment and the subamendment now under consideration.

Mr. Latulippe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; it is perhaps true that I somewhat wandered from the subject, but I think that those comments are pertinent. However, as a result of your suggestion, I will try to discuss only the amendment and subamendment concerning the passage of the legislation and the carrying out of the reports' recommendations, especially those of the Woods report and the many questions raised therein.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on pension rates. Those rates were not referred to the committee to survey the work and organization of the Canadian Pension Commission, or Woods committee. It, however, heard statements on the matter which were summarized in its report. The rates now in force and their relation with the standard of living in Canada were dealt with in a special study. The government intends to take it into consideration with respect of the general assessment mentioned earlier.

The amounts that have been paid since January 1, 1968, represent an annual pension of $3,180 for single veterans and of $4,056 for married veterans, as well as an annual supplementary allowance of $2,400 in some cases. The supplementary pensions for pensioners' children are $408 for the first child, $520 for the second and $240 per year for the others. In the case of orphans, those amounts are doubled. On the other hand, all those recommendations were accepted, I believe, almost unanimously, by the committee which recommend the adoption of the Woods report and its main recommendations.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, the subamendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre reads in part as follows:

—that consideration be given to the making of any increases to be provided under the Pension Act or under the War Veterans Allowance Act retroactive to April 1, 1970, or to such earlier date as may be appropriate in certain cases.

We, Créditistes, support that subamendment, Mr. Speaker. Parliament must implement those recommendations as soon as possible, with a view to meeting the needs of veterans. The main recommendations in the white paper introduced after the publication of the Woods report should also be taken into account.

In this regard, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre mentioned several things I would have liked to say, but in order not to repeat the same thing, I shall say merely that the Créditistes approve the amendment of the hon. member, as well as the motion of the Progressive Conservatives, to the effect that we should, as soon as possible, implement the recommendations of the report, with a view to giving our veterans the benefits to which they are entitled.

[English]

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, June 20, 1969, and again May 4 of this year, were days allotted to the opposition and they chose to deal with the subject of veterans pensions.

This is a worthwhile and welcome debate because it reflects the interest of members of all parties in the human side of the question. In all the years that I have been a member of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs—and that dates back to the time when the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) was the committee chairman—I have seldom encountered partisanship when the needs and the wellbeing of war veterans were being considered.

It may be useful to put on the record the introduction to the government's white paper on veterans pensions. It reads in part as follows:

For the past 50 years, Canada has recognized and freely accepted her obligation to pay compensation for disability and death arising out of military service, in so far as it is reasonable and practicable to equate monetary values with human suffering and bereavement.

This is done through the Pension Act, the keystone of Canadian veterans legislation since 1919. It provides for the payment of pensions to the disabled veteran, his widow and his orphan, and to his dependent parents, sisters and brothers.

In addition, an award of pension also makes the recipient or his family eligible for other benefits. The veteran himself becomes eligible for medical treatment for his pensioned condition, special re-employment training if he needs it, war veterans allowance, and funeral and burial grants. After his death, his widow is eligible for war veterans allowance, and his pensioned children for advanced educational assistance.

The veterans of Canada comprise about one twelfth of the country's total adult population. Approximately 832,600 of these are veterans of World War II (or of both wars or of Korea) and another 112,600 are veterans of World War I. Of these two groups a total of 136,800 veterans were in receipt of pensions under the Pension Act as of December 31, 1968, and a further 29,800 pensions were in payment to the dependents or survivors of veterans.

For many years the Pension Act and the Pension Regulations which preceded it, have provided that pensions should be related to earning power; and the adjudication of pension claims has been the responsibility of an independent and impartial tribunal.

While adhering strictly to these basic principles, successive governments have found it necessary to review and amend the act in one way or another. Indeed, there have been few years during the half century when some change hasn't been made to the act.

The government is indeed aware of problems affecting war veterans, as well as thousands of other Canadians, and it is doing all that is possible to meet the situation in a rational way. There is no reason to assume that it has not kept faith with our comrades.

With regard to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I shall not find great difficulty in supporting it. I recall the statement that he made during the debate on June 20, 1969, when he voiced the suspicion that the government was going to draft legislation in advance of hearings on the Woods Report. We all know how wrong he was in his assessment, Mr. Speaker.

As pointed out by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs held 39 meetings and heard witnesses from no less than 19 veterans organizations. I wish at this point to name the principal ones: The Royal Canadian Legion, the Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada, the War Pensioners of Canada, the Sir Arthur Pearson Association for War Blinded, the Canadian Paraplegic Association, the Canadian Corps Association, the Nursing Sisters' Association of Canada, the National Dieppe Prisoner of War Association, the Hong Kong Veterans Association of Canada, The War Amputations of Canada, the National Council of Veterans Association in Canada, the Nationally Chartered Veterans Organizations, etc.

The Committee examined in detail each of the 148 recommendations of the Woods Report and, of course, all the proposals contained in the White Paper were closely scrutinized. The long and laborious study of the White Paper, which kept the Committee working several weeks during the summer parliamentary recess, is evidence that the members of the committee took their responsibilities seriously. When the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), Chairman of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, presented the report to the House, its members had reason to feel that a good job had been done. It was a good report upon which, no doubt, legislation will be based.

One cannot exactly blame the government for the delay in the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report, because a great deal of work is involved in the preparation of such a complicated piece of legislation. As an example, the Committee spent considerable time reviewing the appeal procedures suggested on the one hand by the white paper and, on the other hand, by the Veterans Associations, which were essentially modifications and extensions of the Woods recommendations. We were very much concerned about the principle of an independent review board being stacked on top of an independent pension commission. This appeared to raise a fundamental question of public administration, but the representations by the Veterans Associations were strong, persistent and deliberate on this point and, under the circumstances, the committee decided to recommend that the procedures essentially recommended by the veterans associations in the final hearings in April 1970, should be adopted with a slight modification.

The committee had also reservations concerning the observations of the veterans associations on the ability of the Canadian Pension Commission to delegate responsibility to field staff, and also on the suggestion that a single commissioner should be able to make decisions. It was the opinion of the committee that decisions should be signed by more than one commissioner in the interests of uniformity of administration. The committee had also reservations regarding the ability of 12 commissioners to be able to cope with the work load.

The committee felt that it would be difficult to foresee the operations of the Pension Review Board with any degree of certainty or to forecast, with any degree of assurance, the number of claims which would come before the board and the commission for adjudication in the future. Therefore, the committee suggested that the organization and procedure of both the Review Board and the commission be reviewed every five years. For these reasons, the committee considered the appointment of commissioners for a specific term being preferable to a life appointment, which veterans organizations had recommended. I have cited only one of the many points in the recommendations which are of a complicated nature, requiring a great deal of work in drafting the bill, which once introduced I am confident will please everyone concerned.

I am not questioning the sincerity of the mover of this motion. In fact, I congratulate him. Nevertheless, it should be made clear that we on this side consider the interests of war veterans with just as much zeal and dedication as any of those sitting on the benches of the opposition. I have also great faith in the minister, who has pointed out on several occasions that it is the Government's duty to consider the problems affecting the one million veterans of Canada. Happily, not all of them require assistance, nor do all especially need to appeal to the Government.

I am confident that the Government will always ensure that Canada's pension legislation is kept in harmony with modern concepts of social justice and its obligations to those who, in war and in peace, have placed their lives at the service of their country.

Mr. J. Chester MacRae (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I have followed with interest several very able addresses on this vital subject. The matter of veterans affairs is one that should never involve political partisanship. The welfare of those men and women who served their country in time of war, and of their dependents, is too important for it ever to become so petty as to involve political partisanship. I was glad to see that those who addressed the House refrained from that.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The mover of the motion, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) is a man for whom we in our party have a very special affection. Others in the House have spoken about the technical side of what has happened; I should like in the few minutes at my disposal, and I promise not to be too long, Mr. Speaker, to address myself to the human factor. The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe served in the last war as a private soldier. He went to France on D-day, June 6, 1944, perhaps as the only man in the Canadian army with the rank of provisional officer cadet. He was waiting for his turn to go to OCTU, for his officer's commission. The colonel of the regiment, with which I was also serving, invited him to go along, and so the hon. gentleman took part in the greatest military operation in the history of the world as an officer cadet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacRae: He later ended up with the rank of full colonel and was in charge of the entire reserve forces in the province of Newfoundland when he retired to come to Parliament. I felt he gave a very masterful address.

I must say, too, although perhaps some of my colleagues will not agree with me, that the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), who served as the chairman of our committee during the past year, also gave an impressive address. Our relationship has been a very happy one. My major interest in public life has always been veterans affairs and I found that during this past year especially we have worked very well. There was very little, if any, partisanship in the committee. There were some points with which we did not completely agree in the deliberations of the committee, yet the report we brought down was an unanimous one. I think the report was a good one, too.

Although the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is not a veteran, I know he has a very deep interest in the veterans of this country. He has expressed that on many occasions. Although I disagree with his socialist theories, being a right wing Conservative, I appreciate his deep concern for the welfare of his fellow Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacRae: The hon. gentleman from Fort William (Mr. Badanai), who has been a friend of mine since he came to this House in 1958, also addressed the House very well, I felt. I can well remember what his predecessor, the Reverend Dan McIvor, said to me in 1957 after I had made my maiden speech in the House of Commons. I was speaking on veterans affairs, and on the estimates of the minister of that day, the beloved Colonel Alfred J. Brooks, who later became Senator Brooks and leader of our party in the Senate. After I had spoken, Mr. McIvor came over. He crossed the floor of the House and congratulated me and he gave me a piece of advice that I have remembered ever since. He said, "Don't try to be an expert in too many fields; there is too much going on here. Take up two or three subjects and try to know as much as possible about them." I never forgot that. He was a very fine gentleman, as is the hon. member for Fort William.

I should like to say this: it is now 52 years since the end of World War I and 25 years since the end of World War II. Those years have gone by very quickly. Of the more than 1.5 million men who served in Canada's wars, about 961,000 are still living. They are 961,000 very, very important men and very important women. May I recount an incident that took place in the last war. As hon. members know, a hospital has been built at Ste Anne de Bellevue. I had occasion to visit Ste Anne de Bellevue in 1941. My brother was dying there at the time. He had enlisted in the Regiment de Maisonneuve, a French Canadian regiment. There were men who had been there since 1914 and even 1918. Many of them were undergoing psychiatric treatment, because these men had been shellshocked. In the Second World War they called that condition battle exhaustion, although I think shellshock describes it better. What struck me was this: when they passed me in the corridor in my officer's uniform, they recognized the officer's rank and snapped to attention and saluted. That moved me deeply. These men were living in the past, in those days when their minds had been destroyed by the shell fire and yet they recognized an officer.

Previous speakers in this debate have referred to the work done by the chairman of the committee. Other speakers have alluded to the report of the Woods committee which I think, Mr. Speaker, is the most important document on veterans affairs that has ever been produced. It refers to veterans problems—perhaps problems is not the right word. It refers to the situation of veterans in this nation. I know Mr. Justice Woods personally and I served with him on the national command of the Canadian Legion. That report was a masterful document. As other speakers have said, the white paper followed the tabling of that report. Submissions were put forward by many of the great veterans organizations in this country.

The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe and others mentioned the organizations which made their views known.

Finally, after many meetings, and after deep thought and a great deal of work, we had the report of the veterans committee brought before the House of Commons. I share the regret of other members of my party and I suspect, of members on the government side as well, that we have not yet introduced any legislation. I have a very special reason for saying that, Mr. Speaker. I am deeply interested in the welfare of our veterans, as the minister knows. We were born in the same county and have both lived for most of our lives in the same community in the Restigouche River Valley.

Let me say that the brutality, the starvation, the privation, humiliation and torture that were suffered by the men of the Royal Rifles of Canada, and the Winnipeg Grenadiers at Hong Kong is second only to the horrible treatment that was meted out to those who were imprisoned in Hitler's concentration camps. I know that the minister will agree with me when I say that many of these men are broken in body and mind. I have seen the welts on their bodies and the scars. I know one young lad from Campbellton who died after being beaten with rifle butts because some Japanese guard was displeased with something he had done.

These are things we ought to think about when we consider these men. I do not mean to be critical, but I feel that the legislation should have been brought down a year ago so that we could have taken care of these Hong Kong veterans by bringing them all up to the 48 per cent level. I understand that 395 of them have not yet been brought up to that point. I think the legislation ought to be made retoractive because, in this past year, several more of them have died. The mortality rate among these men has been very high because their lives have been shortened through the starvation they endured day after day, month after month and year after year. The food they were given daily was the amount of rice a man could hold in the palm of his hand. That was not all. They trapped rats and spiders as well as snakes to try to obtain a little more protein to keep them alive. So, I say to the minister in all sincerity and honesty, do not delay any longer; let us do something for these very, very courageous men who have suffered so much on our behalf.

I should like also to mention this point. It has been discussed in the past. It concerns the hon. gentleman who is occupying the chair at this moment. The veterans affairs committee went to Europe in 1966. Its function was to attend a number of ceremonies, to visit battlefields and visit Canadian cemeteries. We discovered that there are 850 cemeteries in France. We visited the battlefields of the Second World War from Normandy to the Rhine. We went to Ortona and Casino. Then, we went to the first war battlefields, to Ypres, Vimy and Passchendale and to the others. It was a most moving experience. I know that there has been a certain amount of criticism of committees going out of this country. They are criticized even for travelling in this country. Nevertheless, I believe completely that that was one of the most valuable trips, for want of a better word, that any committee has ever taken.

• (4:30 p.m.)

On that trip, Mr. Speaker, you were the Chairman of the committee. I think I speak for all who were there when I say that we found Your Honour to be a gentleman; able, kind, efficient and sympathetic. I became better acquainted with Your Honour. It was a pleasure to be with you at that time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacRae: Recently I read an editorial on remembrance. On the 25th anniversary of D-Day, one year ago, I had hoped to be in Europe. However, a heart attack intervened. Some of my colleagues attended, including the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Smith) and the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), both of whom served in France on D-Day. In Holland there is a memorial to the Canadian Scottish, a very fine Canadian regiment. Among the Europeans, the Dutch people were among the most horribly treated by the Nazis. Under Hitler's tyranny some unspeakable brutalities occurred. Recently, I spoke with a widow who is now living in Fredericton. She informed me that when the Germans left her village in Holland near the end of the war most of the men were already in slave labour camps. The last act of the Gestapo and the S.S. troops was to take the 17 remaining men in the village, mostly teenage boys and old men, line them up against a wall and shoot them. The Dutch have much to remember.

A year ago a group, mostly former officers, placed a wreath at the memorial there to the Canadian Scottish. After the wreath was placed some young lads, 17, 18 or 19 years of age, tore down the wreath, stamped it into the ground and insulted the Canadians standing there. Of course, the older people were horrified. They apologized and made amends. An editorial regarding these young people stated, "How can they be expected to remember what they were not around to forget?". But there are still a great many Canadians who are here to remember. There is no more important body of Canadian citizens than those who wore a uniform and served in time of war, and no more important body than the women and children who waited for a husband or father who in so many cases did not return.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacRae: I support the motion of my distinguished and gallant comrade in arms, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe and the subamendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). With all the sincerity at my command, I urge the minister not to delay any longer than necessary the introduction of the best possible legislation for these very important Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Guy LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy and pleased, like those hon. members who had the floor before me, with this opportunity to take part in the debate on the important motion introduced by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), whom, besides, I wish to congratulate.

Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to congratulate also the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) for the very elaborate speech he delivered a while ago, supplying us with many explanations and interesting and useful information concerning his work. All of us recognize that he was a most devoted and dynamic chairman of the Committee on veterans affairs.

It is therefore my pleasure to express my opinion on the motion of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe and on the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

This motion is actually quite interesting and comes at the right time since we have just finished the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne and the debate dealing with the adoption of the measures which the government has had to take to deal with certain problems threatening the peace in this country.

The government is encouraged to introduce a bill aimed at implementing as soon as possible the recommendations of the second report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, and one cannot but be delighted. So is it in so far as increases in the allowances paid to veterans are concerned. It is normal that Canadians hope that the upgrading of allowances will allow all veterans to face the current increase in the cost of living.

We are very happy to have the opportunity to discuss this motion, with the hope that effective legislation will be passed soon. Veterans have the same needs as other citizens, but they have merits that others do not have.

While some other Canadian citizens were able to take advantage of their younger years in order to prepare for their future, by getting an education which would allow them to practice a trade or profession, ensuring their welfare and that of their families, those veterans sacrificed many years of their youth.

And the purpose of their activities during those years they sacrificed, so to speak, was certainly most sublime. This was the defence of our country, of freedom—which gives us cause for reflection, these days—of democracy, and Christianity.

The veterans I know best are of course those of my riding of Rimouski. Several of them come regularly to see me. Then I am able to ascertain that their needs are very easy to meet and that the government should more and more look into their problems in order to give them the help they deserve.

There are some of them who, after having lost the best years of their lives, as I said earlier, are facing financial and other difficulties. There is at present no special measure to help them.

There are others who, after having met with accidents which cannot easily be documented at times—accidents which could have occurred as they were performing their duties—are suffering terrible pain and are extremely handicapped. There is perhaps a lack of specific organizations to study their cases in order to apply the law in their favour and that of their family.

Sometimes, they do not get the proper kind of counsel when going before the Appeals Board. They often lack money and sufficient education to properly inform counsel defending them.

It might, in certain cases, be appropriate to have legislation authorizing them to avail themselves of the assistance of independent counsel, or, as we say in Quebec, of lawyers in private practice.

There should not be undue emphasis, in order not to mislead the Canadian people, on the fact that the government or Parliament delays taking active and efficient interest in presumably bringing forth a bill since, after all, legislation for the purpose of assisting veterans does exist.

When, a little over five years ago, the government established the Woods Committee, other people realized how important the problem was. Within the framework of the country's overall policy it was desirable, while helping veterans as much as possible, to proceed with some caution. As a rule commissions cannot get their work done quickly.

It is said that the report was tabled in 1968, or thereabouts, and I find it normal that the government should have prepared a white paper to make it easier to pass suitable legislation.

Since we are living under a democratic system, it is necessary that the representatives of the people may express their views on these issues. Even though commissions of scientists had scrutinized these questions, the committee went to work. The hon. member for Ottawa West said earlier how exhaustive the study was and with what determination all hon. members discussed the matter for the greatest benefit of veterans.

The committee report was brought before the House in June 1970, before the summer adjournment. At the beginning of this new session, we are precisely talking about legislation to be introduced eventually.

As for the speech of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I listened to it with much interest. While he was depicting the situation to us, I noticed his experience, the ease with which he spoke of these matters, his knowledge and his skill. Generally speaking, I share his views on this subject. As for retroactivity to April 1, 1970 for veterans' allowances I feel that his arguments are very interesting. I also wonder why he draws so much attention to other problems.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say that I support the principle of the motion and the amendment and I am happy to find that some concern is shown for our veterans.

I hope that the government will, as soon as possible, introduce a bill that will satisfy the wishes of those who have fought for our country and our principles in other lands throughout the world.

Mr. Speaker, when we have shown our veterans that, together, we have endeavoured to improve their lot and to enable them to be active citizens despite handicaps or diseases which are a direct consequence of their activities on war theatres, then all of us can make a contribution to the progress of Canada. I hope that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) will take the necessary steps in this connection.

• (4:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, it gives me much pleasure to take part in this debate today. I was a member of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs and, speaking as a relative newcomer to this chamber, I can say that my service on that committee has been one of my more rewarding experiences as a member of the House of Commons. In that committee there seems to be no sparring for political advantage; everyone seems sincerely and honestly to be working for the benefit of the veterans of this country.

I support wholeheartedly the motion moved so eloquently by my hon. friend the member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall). No one who listened to his speech could help but be moved by the sincerity with which it was delivered and the well chosen language in which it was couched. I congratulate him upon the timeliness as well as upon the content of this motion.

The theme of my own remarks is the need for urgent action. Other hon. members have pointed out that there are certain landmarks evident in the course of our progress toward effective legislation. Mention has been made of the work of the Woods committee, perhaps the beginning of this long road, and of the deliberations of the veterans committee of the House of Commons under the impartial chairmanship of the hon. member for Ottawa-West (Mr. Francis). The report of that committee was tabled in this House. Then, it was in the hands of the Minister of Veterans Affairs so that he could bring forth the much needed legislation. But since that time I fear we have had nothing but promises that the question is being studied, that his officials are working on the legislation. This legislation has been long awaited. I have no doubt that the officials are doing their best. But surely this is not good enough. How long must we wait? Perhaps it is not unfair to say that we are beginning to wonder whether the government is so callous as to wait for the law of attrition to come into operation; for the inexorable passage of time to take its toll of our veterans in the country. Those men who risked their all in the service of their country surely deserve a better fate.

Reference has been made in the debate to the timeliness of this motion in view of the fact that in two weeks-time we will celebrate Remembrance Day. This was alluded to by the mover of the motion. Surely this legislation, so long in production and in introduction, would be the finest tribute to the fallen and the brightest wreath for the cenotaph of memory that the minister could lay in the ceremony that remembers our veterans.

In honouring them in this way, we would not only be honouring those who have paid the supreme sacrifice; we would also be giving desperately needed assistance to the living, to those who are barely existing on present veterans allowances.

The other facet of the motion deals with the very great need for an increase in our veterans allowances. Perhaps it would be redundant or repetitious again to draw attention to the poverty line laid down by the Economic Council of Canada in 1968, which was set at $1,800 for a single person. Surely, during these inflationary years the cost of living has increased much beyond that figure, yet the allowance for a single veteran is only $1,260 a year. The poverty line was set for a married person at $3,000 a year, yet a married veteran receives an allowance of only $2,100 a year. I suggest that is adequate evidence that there is a long awaited need for an increase in our veterans allowances.

If that is not enough, Mr. Speaker, let me inform you that any member of the House who has visited a Legion branch or a branch of the Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans Associations to talk to the men knows that many of these veterans are living in conditions of what I would call object poverty and despair. As has been pointed out, when these people are able to earn a few extra dollars by one means or another, this money is immediately deducted from their veterans allowance. Not because our officials want to do this; in the main they have the welfare and the good of our veterans at heart. But the officials are tied by the act and regulations under which they work. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said, if it is necessary to bring in two bills, then let us do so. But let us see if we cannot do something to assist people living in the conditions I have described.

I said at the beginning that I would be brief, and I conclude simply with this. I urge, with all the sincerity, at my command, that the government bring in the long awaited bill or bills to benefit our veterans. Let the minister rest assured that he will receive all the assistance necessary from members on both sides of the House to give the legislation speedy passage.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. It is my duty at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau); health and welfare—measures to reduce the cost of hospital, medical and dental care; the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Stewart); national defence—reconsideration of closing of Rivers air base; the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan); fisheries—initiatives to offset overfishing by foreign draggers—Oceanographic Studies.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—VETERANS AFFAIRS—EARLY IMPLEMENTATION OF COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS AND WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE INCREASES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Marshall:

That this House urges the government to implement at an early date by way of the appropriate legislative amendments the recommendations contained in the second report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs dated 9 June 1970 and in addition thereto to provide for early payment of adequate increases in the allowances under the War Veterans Allowance Act 1952, as amended.

And the amendment thereto of Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, may I say at the outset that I welcome the motion. I particularly welcome its timing, so very close to November 11, and also that it has been moved before the promised legislation has been presented to the House. Members of the House who have been widely interested in the welfare of veterans endorse any vehicle that highlights our responsibilities to our veterans.

I was a little disturbed, though not particularly surprised, at the comment of the mover of the motion that the Liberals or the members of this party should stand up and be counted, that they should raise cain in caucus about expediting this proposed legislation. I say to the hon. member that I hope he is not falling into the same trap he fell into in 1968 when he underestimated the ability, talent, intelligence and independence of the members of this party.

Let me also inform the hon. member that it is not only in the quiet and secrecy of the caucus that Liberal members put forward their points of view. Before the national convention of the Dieppe veterans and the P.O.W. association I spoke in favour of the kind of action that this resolution envisages. In other words, we are not pressing the government quietly and secretly in caucus, but doing so before the public and in public print, as is the case in the House today.

As a member of the committee on veterans affairs, I feel that the members of the committee have good reason to be proud of their efforts on behalf of the veterans. This committee is probably one of the most non-partisan committees that exists. All members of the committee who have spoken today have highlighted this fact. It has been my privilege to sit as a member of this non-partisan committee, and I think it is the most non-partisan committee of which I have been a member during the two years I have been a Member of Parliament.

I think tribute must also be paid to those members of our veterans organizations who collaborated to present the consensus of their member groups. I think mention should also be made of the splendid presentation made by Mr. Don Thompson and by Mr. Chadderton, who had the job of focusing the needs and requirements of our veterans organizations for the committee in a way we could understand them, as well as high lighting the salient features and points that these groups wanted to make.

We have received some splendid commendation in The Legion magazine, which called the veterans affairs committee report a victory for the democratic process. I should like to say amen to that. The manner in which the report was documented and presented should command the attention of all who would like the government to change the legislation. However, in order to encourage the success of the democratic process, I agree with the mover of the motion that the legislation must be presented as soon as it is reasonably possible to do so.

Although every member of this House is familiar with the history, I think it should be pointed out once again that there were 148 recommendations made in the Woods committee report. And what a splendidly comprehensive and informative report it was. Following that, we had the government's white paper with its comments on the areas in the Woods committee report that it was prepared to accept, the things it would like to change, and those recommendations the government found unacceptable.

Then, following that, there were some 23 appearances by representatives of veterans groups alone, to say nothing of several other meetings held with officials from the department. I was particularly pleased that the veterans representatives saw fit to meet with the officials of the department when a misunderstanding of interpretation arose so that the true facts could be put before them, rather than what one person thought a section meant compared with what another person thought it meant. Then, they appeared before us with a consensus of interpretation as to what the white paper and the Woods committee report had to say. Following all this, we presented our committee report. It would seem to me that based on this report, the history of investigation and discussion of other reports, we now have all the background material. It is now time to act. As one who sits as a member on the government side I recognize that governments must establish priorities, but it would be my feeling that the veterans have every right to insist that their welfare rates are very close to the top of the list of priorities.

On November 11 we will be reminded not to forget. We will be reminded that this generation saw their duty and accepted it. I suggest that we should not lose sight of the fact, as Mr. Robertson said in his book "The Shame and the Glory", written about Dieppe and that group, "these were a generation of remarkable Canadians". Probably at no other time in our history has there been such a united Canada, and our veterans led us along this path. I am sure that each and every member of the service proudly wore the "Canada" Patch on his shoulder. A significant step toward our independence was taken when we declared war, not automatically on the coattails of Great Britain, but after some consideration so that it was, in fact, a Canadian decision.

The least we can do for the deceased veteran is to remove as much stress and strain from the family he left as is possible. We have splendid legislation and only recently made amendments to the Children of War Dead Act. This is a good piece of legislation. We also have to recognize that among all too many veterans there is an apathy. I say this is an apathy, not laziness. Our most sophisticated medical opinion has now given recognition to this fact. It is abundantly clear now that men who suffer from this kind of apathy do so usually because of the service they performed during the war years or as a result of the effects of their incarceration as prisoners of war. We must also not forget those who are less capable of earning a living as a result of injuries suffered during the war.

It is my feeling that if a veteran is to be helped he must be helped by the members in this House. Veterans have a splendid record of self-help through funds established to assist those who are temporarily financially embarrassed or who need immediate cash assistance. This, at best, is a stopgap measure and the kind of thing that should never be necessary. To date the veterans groups have accepted their responsibility through the presentation of their brief to the committee. The Legion groups have, in addition, a scheme for calling the Members of Parliament before their various meetings to speak to them. They invariably ask us this question each and every time: Mr. Member of Parliament, what have you done for me lately? It is my hope that after this legislation there will be a regrouping so that other gaps in the legislation may be plugged.

We must always be vigilant to the needs of veterans. We in this House of all people have an obligation not to short change the veteran or, as the poem says, "We will not break faith with those who died". We will and we must remember the veterans. It was surprising for me to hear that Canada had no prisoner of war association. I appreciate there is the Hong Kong veterans group and also the Dieppe and POW veterans organization. There is no POW association as such.

The Hong Kong veterans position, as so clearly pointed out by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. MacRae), was such that they did not need a large association. Their plight was so obvious the public recognized that they must be helped by the government. The Dieppe and POW associations have endeavoured in the past to have medical examinations conducted to ascertain if there was a pattern of illness running through these particular veterans. About 1,600 medical records were studied by the Department of Veterans Affairs. We seem to forget, when talking about POWs, that the Dieppe POW's were roped and later chained for a period of one year. There was always the possibility in their minds that they might not come out of it alive. Toward the end of their incarceration, a number of them were forced to go on long marches. One of the veterans who appeared before our committee told us of a 700 mile forced march.

The reason I comment on the necessity for a prisoner of war association is that during their incarceration there were no medical records kept for these prisoners. It is for this reason I should like to see the benefit of the doubt clause exercised in favour of these veterans.

There is one more point I should like to leave with the House, Mr. Speaker. Somehow we have to get through to the younger generation, that generation after mine. I was not old enough to serve in the second world war and my heroes were not Rocket Richard, Gordie Howe and other hockey players. My heroes were Colonel Merritt and those who served in Canada's forces. Somehow we have to get through to the younger generation which has never known war, but some of whom are the most violent protesters, that veterans do not glorify war. When they attend services on November 11 they are paying tribute to brave comrades, dead and alive and the strongest anti-war sentiment is expressed by those who participated in war. I was surprised and disturbed to hear that in some areas thought has been given to creating a civil disturbance during the Remembrance Day parade when those veterans are paying tribute to dead comrades. I hope these misguided individuals will not be carried to that extreme. I hope they will appreciate that through this kind of remembrance the veterans are not glorifying war but are pointing to the horrors of war.

In summary I want to say this. We must not lose sight of the need for priority for veterans. They were successful before our committee. They were persuasive in their arguments and they made many of us change our point of view. The democratic process worked. Legislation is required soon. I have every confidence in the present Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé); I am sure he will take this action and take it in a hurry. If he is in doubt about this I would plead with him to rid himself of this doubt and bring before this country the kind of legislation the veterans have urged.

In the National Legion News for June, following the report of the committee, these comments were made:

> The long-awaited parliamentary committee recommendations on the Woods committee report have won warm approval from Canada's veterans.
>
> The report of the committee of veterans affairs, presented Monday in the House, embraced many of the recommendations of the original Woods report. The newly elected president of the Royal Canadian Legion, Judge Redmond Roche, Montreal, described it as a "significant step forward in the restructuring of Canada's pension program for veterans".
> He termed it a most helpful document which should form the basis of new legislation which will bring about long sought improvements in veterans' pensions.

This is my concluding word. Judge Roche, speaking on behalf of the 11 national veterans organizations, has expressed hope that the government will proceed with the drafting of new legislation based on the report.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, may I say, in rising to speak on this most important motion before us, that I intend to be exceedingly brief. Members who have spoken before me have fully and adequately conveyed almost all my thoughts and sentiments on matters affecting the veterans of this country. May I say that about the only thing with which I disagree, is the confidence in the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) expressed by the previous speaker. I am not prepared to give him a vote of confidence until we have action, not excuses, legislation and not a series of promises. The proof of the pudding is in the eating, and it is only after action that the minister will be entitled to a strong expression of confidence. I hope the time is not too distant when I, too, can express confidence in the minister.

Without any fear of contradiction, I can say I feel certain hon. members of the House are unanimous concerning the need for changes in the legislation, changes in the regulations and changes in policy. Because I am so strongly convinced that statement is correct, I shall not take the time to repeat what has already been said concerning the excellence of the work of the Woods commission and the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. I believe it is obvious that the only thing that requires repetition is that in the time available as many of us as possible should express to the minister and the government our belief that there is a matter of urgency involved and a need for action. I most certainly agree with hon. members who have said this is a matter of top priority. It certainly is in the constituency of Vancouver East.

There are thousands of veterans in Vancouver East, and thousands of them are members of veterans organizations such as the Royal Canadian Legion and the Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans of Canada. All the time they say: when, oh when, is something going to be done? Is the government delaying because month by month and year by year so many of us are dying that there will be fewer and fewer in respect of whom the government will have to accept a greater financial responsibility? This is what the veterans are saying, everybody knows it. I think it is shameful that it should be necessary for our veterans to engage in this type of thinking. It certainly is necessary, however, when we realize that the studies were first commenced over five years ago and we are still awaiting the legislation from the government.

I said I would not repeat what has already been brought to the attention of the minister and the government, but I should like to add the thought that I hope in his deliberations the minister is prepared not only to bring in legislation dealing with the Hong Kong veterans but also Canadian prisoners of war in other areas. One only has to speak to the veterans, as I do so often being a member of both the Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans of Canada and the Royal Canadian Legion, to be aware of the effects of the imprisonment, starvation and hell they went through in the camps in Europe, some of them for long periods. I believe this merits immediate consideration. I hope the government will keep this in mind.

I most certainly hope there will be immediate action to resolve a great many of the veterans problems which are brought to the attention of Members of Parliament. I refer of course in particular to the vicious, pressing situation surrounding those who of necessity receive the War Veterans Allowance. This has been mentioned by many members, particularly by my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). However, I wish to add my plea for immediate action in this regard because of the numerous cases which come to my attention and which I know come to the attention of other hon. members. I should like to stress something that perhaps is one of the greatest matters of urgency, apart from a change in the regulations and increases in pensions. I refer to the need to get away from something that I know must be a major concern to Members of Parliament in handling veterans problems. I refer to the fact that quite often it is necessary for a member to say he cannot do anything for a veteran because the board states that the condition is a pre-enlistment condition. If I have ever heard a hypocritical statement that is it.

When the government of Canada needed men and women to offer their lives and limbs for Canada, these men and women were examined by doctors and their cards said that they were A-1. Then, they went overseas and thousands did not return. Yet, years later when those who did return suffer from disabilities caused by their experience in war, they are turned down because of a pre-enlistment condition. Mr. Speaker, I know all of us express in our hearts the opinion that if the man has offered his life for Canada when Canada required his services, and when Canada and the government said he was A-1, no government and no country has the right years later to say he cannot receive the allowance he requires because of a pre-enlistment condition. Because of my experience over a long period in handling the cases of veterans I wanted to mention, in addition to all the other arguments, the necessity for recognition of the urgency involved before too many of our veterans pass on to the Great Beyond.

I noted with interest the remarks of previous members about Remembrance Day being two weeks away. Thousands upon thousands of people across Canada will be standing before the Cenotaphs of our country honouring the fallen. That is as it should be. But it brings to mind the statement of the men and women who offered their lives in war, "We shall not fail". The veterans of Canada, Sir, did not fail this country in time of need. I think perhaps the greatest honour we can give, not only to those who died but more specifically to those who came through and lived, is to say that by November 11 the government shall introduce all the various pieces of legislation required to meet the needs of the veterans and to bring into effect the acceptable sections of the report of the Woods commission and of the report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. I conclude by saying, sir, the Canadian veterans did not fail us. Let us not fail them.

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to take part in this debate. I do so at somewhat short notice. I was very interested in, and I should like to say here and now that I support, the motion put forward by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall). His constituency does not quickly come to mind but I heard the hon. gentleman's speech and I will remember it for a long time.

When you recognized me, Mr. Speaker you referred to me as the hon. member for Victoria. In Victoria, we have many veterans who are disabled and many of their dependents, and the next of kin of deceased veterans. I think Victoria, in particular, has a reputation for being a city which did not spare its sons to defend what it thought was just cause, whether it was in the Boer War, in World War I and World War II or in the Korean War. Speaking personally, in my little class at school in Victoria, of the 13 pupils 12 were veterans of the second world war and the thirteenth could not be a veteran because he was serving in the U.S. merchant marine.

When we speak of veterans pensions—and this is one of the few points that has not been brought up so far in this debate to my knowledge—many people think that all veterans receive pensions. We all know that this is not the case. We are speaking here today not of everyone who has served this country but of a special few, and of the survivors of those special few. I enjoy my work on the Veterans Affairs Committee because we help each other to help others, and surely that is what Parliament is all about. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that veterans in good health in this House and in the various veterans organizations, of which there are 11 across the country, are not trying to help themselves. We are trying to help others: the disabled, the next of kin of our war dead, and the so-called burnt-out veterans who cannot make their way in this competitive and complicated world. These are the people we are trying to help. We all do it in our own way.

I look around me and I see many of the hon. members who have already spoken on this and on the other side of the House who have helped out in special ways. The hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. MacRae) spoke about the Hong Kong veterans. A great number of us put in reports and recommendations to the Woods committee when it was conducting its hearings. I put forward a series of recommendations at that time, and now I would like to put in a special plug for the benefit of doubt clause to which reference has been made by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) who just preceded me. I feel very strongly about this. I am speaking about the benefit of doubt as it relates in particular to veterans who served overseas, because as you, Mr. Speaker, know and as every other veteran knows, veterans who have served overseas have often been denied the benefit of doubt because they have no proper medical documentation. Every veteran here will agree with me when I say that the best documented veteran is the soldier, the sailor or the airman who stayed behind in Canada. Naturally, he has the best documents because he did not have a chance to lose them anywhere. So, as I say, I would like to put in this plug for the overseas veteran who is suffering as a result of the so-called benefit of doubt clause, and I hope it is removed soon, the sooner the better.

The other day when I was at the Calgary airport I saw the now elderly and somewhat tattered Lancaster aircraft mounted outside the airport as a monument to the past. For me it was a poignant sight and it set me to thinking of our war dead, of our veterans, and of our efforts on their behalf. When I say "our efforts" I am thinking not only of the House of Commons and its Veterans Affairs Committee but also of the various veterans organizations and groups which have appeared from time to time before our committee to put forward their ideas and to give us the benefit of their advice. I had an opportunity to work closely at one time—and I am happy to say we were rewarded with some success a few years ago—with one of these groups. I am referring to the Hong Kong veterans. I will not say any more about their plight because I think much has already been said on this subject, but certainly we must not stop in our efforts to help them until every last one of them receives the minimum 48 per cent disability pension which will give protection of some sort to their wives and families.

Looking at this aircraft on the pedestal outside Calgary against the backdrop of events in Canada today, I wondered what had happened to our sense of values. We may personally and individually place the welfare of our veterans and their dependents or their next of kin high on our own scale of priorities, but this sense of values of which I speak, and its high place in our personal scale, must be reflected and incorporated in the legislation passed in this House. I can find no fault with the motion brought before the House by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe, and I urge the government to take speedy action to bring about a sizeable increase in both the range and the scale of benefits available to veterans and their survivors. I ask the government to go beyond the point of restoring the purchasing power of the former pensions and allowances. To my mind, those pensions and allowances were far too low, and I ask the government to remember that.

Finally, I ask the government to remember that when we enter into wars we have to realize that there is always a price to pay and it takes a long time to pay because it is a price in blood and a price in money. We are asking the government today to see to it that the nation does its duty by paying money. This is the least expensive and easiest form of payment. We should not have to wait much longer. Judging by the tone of this debate so far and by my experience with other veterans legislation that has been introduced by the government in this House, any legislation that they may care to introduce to alleviate the situation described here so eloquently today by other hon. members would, I am sure, pass very quickly. I am equally sure hon. members would delay not one whit any other government business that the government may wish to bring before the House. So my final plea, Mr. Speaker, is through you to the minister and the government to let us now get on with our job.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I of course support the motion and I am only sorry that we have to raise this matter again. It is now 25 years since the fighting stopped in Europe, and somewhat less than that since the boys came home from Korea. But in my opinion the occurrences of the last few weeks have clearly shown that in the final analysis there is no prosperity, no freedom in a rough world except when some of our citizens pay for it with their lives, their health and their devotion. On behalf of these people who cannot be here to beg for themselves I am proud to be able to be here and beg. I am only sorry that we have to beg.

Many years ago the people of Canada, through their representatives in the House of Commons, passed the Pension Act. I believe that act is quite adequate to handle the situation. There is no necessity for a long report like the Woods committee report, which comprised some 1,300 pages in its final form, outlining in clear terms the duty of the Canadian people and of the Canadian Parliament to the people I have mentioned. Nevertheless, we now have that report. It was somewhat expensive to obtain. It is comprehensive. The Woods committee went into almost every phase of the Pension Act. As a result it has underlined what was clearly understood before its work began—that the people of Canada want to give those who have served their country so nobly and well, particularly in war, full compensation within the budget that they can meet.

The act was not foolishly generous. It only purports to give these men and their families a minimum return, which is nothing less than to put them back into civilian life as nearly as possible to the competitive position they occupied before they joined the forces. The level at which it was hoped to return them to civilian life was that of an untrained labourer. Perhaps some people would say that here is democracy working at its best. Equality was the dominant thought in the minds of the taxpayers of Canada when the Pension Act was first passed. They understood it would be administered in the fairest way possible. Section 70, which I think is the key to the whole act, stated in clear terms that the benefit of the doubt was to be given to veterans.

For reasons which the preceding speaker clearly brought out, the best soldiers, best sailors and best airmen are frequently incapable of documenting how they lost their health, unless they were wounded by gunshot, shrapnel or mine explosion to the extent that their wounds are self-evident. But it is very difficult for those who served in the front line and those who were prisoners of war to produce any document to prove that their failure in health is due to their war service.

I repeat that the people of Canada, through their members of Parliament, placed a section in the act stating that the benefit of the doubt was to be given to these men. If the benefit of the doubt had been given to them, there would be no necessity for a great deal of the Woods report. But the Hong Kong veterans had the greatest difficulty over the last 25 years even in getting a proper hearing because the people who interpreted the act asked them, "Where are your papers? Where is your medical evidence?" But, Mr. Speaker, we saw men blinded by malnutrition. We saw 190-pound men reduced to a handful of bones.

I had the privilege to help some of these people off the troopships when they came home. Their mothers did not recognize them; their wives did not recognize them. Because a third of them were blind at that time, they were not able to recognize their mothers and wives. Do you need the benefit of the doubt under conditions like that? But it has taken us 25 years of argument, hairsplitting and voluminous reports to reach the stage where we have achieved unanimous approval of measures to meet their needs.

The members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs were unanimous in the recommendations. Most of them are veterans themselves and know the story well. That committee unanimously recommended immediate action. I am very proud of the members who sat on it, from the very amiable chairman right on down through all party lines. They worked hard. They gave up several weeks of their own time to sit on the committee, to make sure that a concise and accurate report was given to the House.

But what did we get then, Mr. Speaker? We got delay. We got talk about priorities. We need no talk about priorities in this matter. Where do we put those men to whom we owe our affluent society, all the great chances we have in Canada, all the wealth we have, all the freedom we have? All we are asking is the absolute minimum required to keep them in decent clothing and shelter. The minimum pay of an untrained labourer in the public service is all we are asking for them.

The Standing Committee has given its unanimous approval. I do not know why there should be delay. I for one would be willing, without debate, to vote the necessary money. I am willing to have my income tax raised—and that is a rare concession—if that is what is holding matters up. If it is only lack of money, let us pay it. Let us borrow the money if we do not have it, and pay it to these people. I do not want to go into a long list of the frills that we have enjoyed, but I deny that there is in this case any valid argument on the necessity for weighing priorities. This matter is of the highest priority. It is a debt we all owe.

The only argument that could be advanced for not giving an increase here and now is that we do not have the money. But I do not believe that, Mr. Speaker. We cannot have it both ways. We cannot say we are one of the most prosperous young nations on earth, that we have the answers to most of our economic problems, that we have things under control, but that we cannot pay this miserable debt to the people who most need assistance.

• (5:40 p.m.)

This is a great opportunity for our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who perhaps in the past has been misled by his own ideology or training in peacetime schools, to show us that now, in the age of his maturity he can give us the kind of leadership in peacetime that we expected in wartime for our soldiers. It is not necessary for one to be a veteran in order to reward our soldiers. The present situation gives the Prime Minister a great opportunity to show that he is now willing to stand where Canadian servicemen stood in 1939 when they faced physical danger.

If the Prime Minister has only to face political danger, I think he ought to be willing to give us leadership in this regard and to tell an unwilling cabinet and an unwilling treasury board to approve improvements in veterans legislation. I challenge him directly to say that to the cabinet. If he gives his approval to measures which will improve the lot of the veterans, I do not think many members of the cabinet, of the treasury board or those on his side of the House will oppose him. They will go along with him.

The members who served on the Veterans Affairs Committee said unanimously that these improvements are long overdue. Lest people think that I, along with the Veterans Affairs Committee, am trying to take credit for the country's awareness of the plight of the veterans, let me hasten to say that the Canadian Legion has carried on this great campaign on behalf of fallen comrades and those who have been left behind. If being turned down on many occasions could discourage some people from acting, the organization representing the Hong Kong veterans would long ago have quit trying to do something. Nevertheless, they showed the same fortitude in carrying on this campaign on behalf of their needy brethren and others as their brethren showed in the past. They made a heroic attempt to see that the right thing was done.

I would be remiss in my duty if I did not say that I appreciate the effort and assistance of Dr. Richardson who brought in a magnificent report on behalf of the Hong Kong veterans. I think his report would have been unnecessary if section 70 of the act had been properly utilized. He documented the ills from which most of these boys suffered; ills such as avitaminosis, which in plain, layman's language means starving to death slowly. That magnificent report gave us an opportunity to act correctly because it brought clearly to our attention the very specific needs of this group of men.

I was greatly heartened, Mr. Speaker, when I heard that the Hong Kong veterans were to be the beneficiaries of specific legislation. We gave unanimous consent to this proposal in committee, so far as we could speak for all members of the House, and said we would not oppose the legislation in the slightest degree. Also, we gave credit to the officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs and of the Department of National Health and Welfare for knowing exactly what was needed so far as veterans were concerned. We have agreed unanimously over the years that these veterans should receive special attention and that we should set aside substantial sums of money in order to help them. Their priority must be brought up to date.

In Canada we have no system of rewarding a man for valour. We invest him, when the situation merits, with a plain red ribbon. But the man who carries this plain red ribbon—I am referring to the Victoria Cross, the highest award we can give our heroes—will no doubt say that there are many equally brave deeds which have never been recorded. I suggest that the greatest award we can give our heroes is in taking soon a new look at our veterans legislation, so that we can reward those who served so well in our time of need and look after their wives and families who, in many cases suffered even more than the soldiers who had comradeship to bolster their morale and share their burdens even unto death.

Mr. Murray McBride (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that if any member of this chamber wanted to select a motion for debate to demonstrate to all Canadians that it is possible for us in the House of Commons, despite our varying orientations on many issues of policy, to attain an amazing degree of unanimity, he could have selected none better than the motion now before the House. Indeed, the motion does credit to its mover. It is one that I hasten to support.

For my part I wish to comment on a matter that has not been mentioned today in the many eloquent speeches on varying aspects of the topic before us. There is a tendency in our culture for people who are not veterans to be embarrassed when someone mentions veterans affairs. They assume that non-veterans should hold their peace and leave the discussion of veterans affairs to the "pros", to the people with actual experience. I suggest to the House that a fairly plausible argument could substantiate the opposite point of view. It is this. It seems to me that we ought to be pleased in Canada that we have not experienced a major conflict since the Korean war and that therefore we do not have a continuing supply of newly created veterans. It is a good thing not to be in the "veteran-making" business.

Secondly, it seems to me that we ought to be very pleased that our young Canadian men and women who have reached their adult years following the Second World War are willing to stand shoulder to shoulder with those who are veterans. Like others in this chamber who have spoken this afternoon, I am one of those. However, I have the good fortune to come from an area of eastern Ontario that has a large number of Legions. There are seven in my constituency. I know personally a number of veterans who keep me well informed from the "inside" point of view.

In dealing with comments that have been made in preceding speeches, I say very forcefully that I completely concur with what several speakers have said. I think the first member to mention the subject to which I am about to refer was the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. MacRae). Other hon. members also spoke on the matter. I concur in the suggestion that the Hong Kong veterans are entitled to special consideration. They have a special claim, and this fact should be reiterated in this House time and again.

The circumstances of their lives are more difficult than those of some other veterans who were treated better.

In addition, I think hon. members all know of the sense of frustration felt by families in which a veteran has died. I refer to the sense of frustration in particular of people who have become aware, as most Canadian families which include a veteran are now aware, that we are literally on the eve of a significant overhaul of our veterans legislation. Constituents have come to me recently to express a keen sense of frustration and even bitterness about a veteran, a member of the family, who has died before this progressive step has been completed.

• (5:50 p.m.)

I assume that the reason for placing this subject before the House today is that we are so close to November 11. Approximately one year ago, on November 7, 1969, the member for York North (Mr. Danson) introduced Bill C-146, to amend the Remembrance Day Act. The gist of the bill was that the Sunday prior to November 11 would be a national day of remembrance or memorial. As the hon. member stated at that time, the eleventh hour of the eleventh day of the eleventh month is at present, ignored by large segments of our society and misunderstood by equally large segments.

There are two choices in this matter. One alternative is to hold the line and, in spite of the worst fears of many of us, witness the continued erosion of this very significant day of remembrance in the history of Canada and, indeed, in the history of the world. The alternative is to reorganize and restructure. I am not sure of this quotation, but I think it was Cicero who said, "He who is ignorant of what happened before he was born is destined to remain a child for ever." This quotation came to mind this afternoon when I listened to the hon. member for York-Sunbury tell the House of the incident where a group of Dutch youths tore down a wreath which had been placed on a memorial by a number of Canadian veterans. I suppose for some there is a thin line between being a warmaker or a warmonger and, on the other hand, holding in reverence the casualties of war.

The purpose of the Woods committee was to analyse the situation in which veterans now find themselves so that our society might better, and in very practical ways demonstrate our corporate reverence for those who paid the price and suffered the pain of war without idolizing or praising that which must be diligently avoided. We must aid war victims, not nurture reference for war. I suggest that we should do something—I do not pretend to have a brilliant insight into this matter—along the lines suggested by the hon. member for York North, that is, something to help our young people better appreciate the significance of Remembrance Day. We might thereby create a better mood in respect of this whole subject.

An hon. member mentioned there had been rumours that during the parades for Remembrance Day ceremonies this year some people were planning demonstrations on the assumption that those who parade on November 11 are swordrattlers, warmongers and hawks, and if you are not that kind of person you should oppose them. This is a dastardly misreading and misunderstanding of the facts. Because of this situation I again looked at the bill of the hon. member for York North. I know he was vilified by many people in our country, even by some loyal veterans. But perhaps we could do something so that Canadians would seriously and positively appreciate what we try to do on November 11. If one had to help war victims, without idolizing war, in the days of sword and spear, it became all the more essential in the days of bullets and bombs and a must in our day of mushrooms and missiles.

Every member of this House must, as I do, receive letters and delegations on behalf of veterans whose situations are tragic. As the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Groos) pointed out, all veterans do not automatically receive a pension. I am continually amazed at the number of Canadians who somehow assume that by virtue of being a veteran one receives a pension. People write to their Member of Parliament and ask why a certain veteran is not receiving a pension. It is obviously a widely held belief that all veterans automatically receive pensions, but as the hon. member for Victoria correctly stated, this is not true.

Obviously, for a few veterans a present situation in which they find themselves, unfortunate as it may be, cannot be linked in any direct way to war service. We are all aware of this and I need not belabor the point. However, for some there is a linkage. Therefore, time is of the essence as far as the implementation of this massive updating of our veterans legislation is concerned. When veterans die while such sweeping improvements are just around the corner, there is naturally a sense of frustration, sometimes bitter, not only by the next of kin but by all sensitive members of the House and indeed all Canadians who champion this cause.

I firmly recognize and appreciate the fact that war veterans legislation is being given proper priority by the government of Canada, especially by our distinguished Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé). I wish to read two paragraphs from the white paper on veterans pensions.

> Since World War I, Canada's legislative programs for the rehabilitation and welfare of her ex-servicemen and their dependants have been recognized, internationally as well as nationally, as being broad in their scope and generous in their provisions. And this legislation has been kept flexible and dynamic; it has been amended regularly to meet the changing needs of those it serves, and to adjust it to changes in the concepts of social justice and in the Canadian economy.
> Through the Pension Act, Canada endeavours to compensate as fairly as possible for the economic disadvantages caused by disability of bereavement which is related to military service. To place an accurate monetary value on human suffering and sorrow would be virtually impossible, because of the many imponderable and subjective factors involved.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member wishes to call it six o'clock. He has only two minutes left in which to speak. If hon. members agree, it might be better to allow him to finish his speech.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McBride: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to emphasize the conclusions of the white paper. I concur in the sentiments of the magnificent speech of the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen). I am aware, and I am sure hon. members recognize, that much of that which we try to recompense through veterans pension plans is without price and beyond cost. It is impossible to place an accurate monetary value on human suffering and sorrow. However, let it be clearly recorded that Canadians of all ages should be delighted to see more tax dollars, a larger part of the public purse, being used to aid that noble and diminishing number, the war veterans of Canada.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may call it six o'clock, but it does not guarantee that he will be recognized as the first speaker at the commencement of the sitting this evening. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'oclock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have followed with interest the debate upon which the House is now engaged. I begin my contribution by saying that I fully endorse the excellent motion which has been placed before the House by my hon. friend from Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall). He is a fellow Nova Scotian who went far afield and has done well in the great province of Newfoundland. Of course, we shall always welcome him back when the time comes.

I also endorse the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Taken together, the motion and the amendment make a very forceful plea. The report of the Veterans Affairs Committee is, of course, founded upon the studies undertaken by the Woods committee; the background has been discussed in detail by other hon. members and I do not intend to repeat what they have said. Nevertheless, there are a number of aspects I wish to discuss; some of them may be called housekeeping or legal matters.

I agree with those who have said that the report which the committee made to this House and to the government was an excellent one. It covered most of the points made in the Woods committee report and set out the lines which it hoped the government would follow when introducing legislation affecting veterans. The government now has the report in its hands, and the question is: What kind of legislation will be brought in and when will it be introduced? Of course, we do not know precisely what is to be contained in the legislation and this is why we, as members of the opposition, are putting our ideas forward at this time.

There are certain provisions which I feel should be contained in any legislation to be placed before the House. One of the recommendations contained in the report concerned the appeal procedure. As I recall the government's White Paper, it proposed the setting up of a directorate of pensions as a branch of the Department of Veterans Affairs, the effect of which would be to restrict opportunities for appeal. I trust the government will provide, in the legislation to be brought before Parliament, for a separate pension review board as recommended by the committee. This would afford veterans the opportunity, at their request, to submit pension cases for final review on the basis of a final interpretation of the act. This is most important. I can think of a number of veterans in my area and, for that matter, throughout the country who would undoubtedly have their files reopened if this course were adopted.

Another question which comes frequently to the attention of the Pension Commission and, undoubtedly, to the attention of hon. members, concerns the presumption of medical condition. This matter was referred to earlier today by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch). It is possible that under the terms of the existing legislation the commission can do no other than reach the decisions it does. But since so many of these decisions are reached on the basis of a veteran's pre-enlistment medical condition, I must go along with the hon. member for Vancouver East in this respect. I trust that the legislation will deal with this question of the presumption of medical condition. The white paper, as I recall it, stated that if an adverse medical condition manifested itself within six months of a man's enlistment, it would be excluded from this presumption. The committee felt that this period should be limited to three months.

To return to the question of the interpretation of the Pension Act, I recall sitting on several Veterans Affairs Committees and one clause that always gave us, and undoubtedly many veterans, problems was the benefit of the doubt clause. The Woods committee report proposed a completely new basis for the benefit of the doubt principle which would mean, in effect, that a pension adjudicator would be allowed to find in favour of a veteran's claim even though the veteran had not established his claim by a preponderance of evidence. In such a case the claim would be resolved in favour of the veteran rather than the government through its Department of Veterans Affairs.

To be fair to the government, the white paper recognized the problems that have arisen over the interpretion of this section of the act and proposed the rewriting of the section to incorporate guidelines in regard to what constituted the benefit of the doubt. Although I hope this proposal will be taken up, I contend the benefit of the doubt principle should be applied in favour of the veteran, not in favour of the government. A veteran should not have to prove his case by a preponderance of evidence.

I have also had quite a bit to do with veterans bureaux in the Atlantic area as well as in Ottawa, and I have nothing but praise for them. It has been suggested that the veterans bureaux are serving two masters, and I do not think that this should be the case. I would support the conclusion agreed upon by the parliamentary committee and proposed by the Woods committee that the veterans bureaux should be established under a separate part of the Pension Act so they can report directly to the minister. They should be cast in the role of acting strictly as the applicant's advocate and should be relieved of the responsibility of reporting unfavourable evidence to the commission. Such a recommendation was endorsed in the government's white paper and supported by the parliamentary committee of which I was a member.

I have several files in my office in connection with members of the regular forces who have been injured while on duty. According to the relevant section of the act, members of the regular forces must show that any injuries were sustained in the course of duty. Sometimes this is quite difficult to prove. In some instances, where there was an irregularity, it has been held they were not acting in the course of their duty. For example, I recall a case concerning a young airman who was walking across an air base in this country, against a red traffic light, en route to the control tower when he was knocked down by a civilian vehicle. The commission did not rule whether he was injured in the course of his duty, but held that since he was guilty of contributory negligence at the time, he was not entitled to a pension. There is no provision in the act to deal with this situation.

The committee was of the view that the act should be revised to provide presumptions upon which a pension could be approved where death or disability had arisen from physical training, sport activity, transportation and other acts done as part of service operations, training or administration. I hope that this point will be covered by the minister and will be included in the legislation to come before the House.

Other hon. members have spoken about the burnt-out pension under the War Veterans Allowance Act. I have many files in my office on this issue. It has already been pointed out that the present allowance is $1,260 for a single person and $2,100 for a married person, both figures being below what we have called the 1968 poverty line of $1,800 and $3,000 for a single and a married person respectively.

I also want to raise the question of permissible income, which is better known as the income ceiling. I think this ceiling should be raised. At the present time, to be eligible under the legislation the combination of other income and the allowance that a veteran receives must not exceed, if he is a single man, $1,740 a year or, if he is a married man, $2,940 a year—still below the poverty line. I suggest the income, including the war veterans allowance, the burnt-out pension, should be at least $2,280 for a single person and $3,840 for a married person.

Not long after the guaranteed income supplement legislation was passed, I met a veteran on the street in my home town who told me he had applied for the GIS because he was told it would not affect his war veterans allowance. However, his war veterans allowance was cut and he found himself worse off, financially, than he was before he applied for the GIS. I fail to see any equity in this situation. I contend that payments like the guaranteed income supplement, old age security and so on, should not be considered income and included in the income ceiling prescribed by the War Veterans Allowance Act.

I have taken enough time in this debate, Mr. Speaker. I fully endorse the matters that have been put before the House by the committee. As I said when I commenced my speech, the question is: When will the government bring in the new legislation? I say the sooner, the better. I hope the legislation will contain the most important of the points that I have put before the House this evening.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by extending my congratulations to the mover of the motion under study, the member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), and to all those who took part in this debate.

I should like to say how happy I am in my capacity as Minister of Veterans Affairs to see that all members put veterans affairs above political partisanship and sincerely voice their opinion on what should be done for our veterans.

We all agree that the Canadian people will be forever indebted to our veterans and that we must do our utmost to help them.

Besides, successive governments since World War II have accomplished great things to give veterans what they deserve. We are proud of what our governments did for those men who did not hesitate to go overseas and fight for our democracy and freedoms.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dubé: Mr. Speaker, I could summarize the measures our country has taken since World War II to show its gratitude, but I shall only mention the program for rehabilitation to civilian life, education assistance to veterans, assistance programs for the children of war dead, measures to help veterans settle on farms and housing assistance. I cannot keep on like this, although I would like to do so, because in all fairness, we must recognize that all Canadian governments have acted decently with respect to war veterans.

Last May, I had the opportunity and the privilege and the honour of heading a delegation of veterans who went to Holland to commemorate the 25th anniversary of the liberation of the Dutch people. It should be recalled that Holland was liberated by Canadian troops. Actually, this is the only country in the world ever to be liberated by Canadian forces. During the ceremonies, I had a chat with Prince Bernhardt and among other things I told him about my duties as Minister of Veterans Affairs and about the activities of my department. His Royal Highness was amazed at the efforts made by the Canadian government for the well-being of its war veterans. Indeed, I know of only one other minister responsible for war veterans apart from me, and it is my French counterpart. Our allies, the United States and Great Britain have decided after a period of 25 years that having such a department was no longer justifiable. We have continued to do so and I am pleased to announce to the House that next week, I will have the opportunity to go to France, to revive our common memories, to renew our good relations with that country, to meet my opposite number the French Minister of Veterans Affairs, and to visit Vimy and Beaumont-Hamel as a representative of the Canadian government before those great monuments which are the symbol not only of glorious wartime feats, but also of the many Canadians who gave up their lives or in certain cases their limbs or their health.

But the members of the Canadian government, Mr. Speaker, do more than stand at attention in front of monuments—

• (8:20 p.m.)

[English]

What we are trying to do is not only to stand at attention before monuments, but we do remember veterans and we are continuing year after year trying to give them the best possible services available in Canada. These services will cost Canadian taxpayers this year $500 million—half a billion dollars which we are dispensing for our veterans. We are trying to do this in a very efficient manner so as not to spend uselessly the taxpayers' money. I am sure that no Canadian will ever reproach us for giving that much attention and that much financial assistance to our veterans. I know that all hon. members, especially from what I have heard this afternoon, want us to do even more. They can rest assured that the points they have made this afternoon with reference to disability pensions and war veterans allowances have been well noted.

Of course, it is not my place to make an announcement now, but I can assure the House that this government, as all Canadian governments have in the past, will do its utmost for our veterans. Before we talk about increases I should state—perhaps the public does not know this—that at the present time a Canadian veteran with a family of five receives in disability pension the sum of $5,496 a year, tax free. I am very pleased about that and I say it with joy. Of course, we intend to do more. Some hon. members who spoke this afternoon claimed that veterans were living in dire poverty. With regard to war veterans allowances, they were increased in 1965 and again in 1966. We know of course, that the cost of living has gone up; we are not blind to that situation.

Most of the members who spoke this afternoon stressed the urgency of passing legislation in this field and said we were not moving fast enough. I would agree with them. I would be the happiest man in this House if all my problems were solved in one day—but this is not how democracy works. If the wheels of justice are slow, the wheels of Parliament are even slower. This legislation is not being delayed by me.

Perhaps I should state a few facts. It took two years for the Woods committee report to be presented. It is a good report which contains 148 recommendations. The House of Commons Committee on Veterans Affairs sat for ten months. I should compliment that committee and its chairman. The members took time off from their holidays and away from their families and businesses to come here and work on behalf of the veterans of this country, with no extra pay. During that time they heard a number of witnesses—I do not know how many—from veterans associations who appeared on 19 occasions; they received 19 briefs. The committee studied those briefs and produced a report. I received that report only the day before this House adjourned for the summer recess. During the summer recess the report was brought before the appropriate cabinet committee, at which time decisions were taken. The whole matter now is being sent to the Department of Justice for the purpose of producing legislation. I am confident that the legislation will be introduced in the very early part of this session.

This all took a long time, I agree, but it was not delayed by me or by anyone in the House. This is the normal process of legislation; it does take time. When the legislation is introduced, I think all members of this House will find that it was well worth waiting for, because it will be good legislation; it will be advanced legislation, modern, generous and very humane.

We have been talking all afternoon about veterans. I am not a veteran; I was only 12 when the war was declared. People do not seem to realize that 50 per cent of the population of Canada today is under the age of 25. There is what you might call a generation gap or a memory gap. If there is a generation gap between two generations, I think the large portion of the burden of bridging that gap is not on the younger generation but, rather, on us. We are the ones who created the world in which they live. They were not even witness to the events that shaped our times.

I think that veterans and veterans associations, which are very well structured across the country with Legions in almost every small town, have a role to play and are equipped to play it well. They must explain to the young people what they themselves did 25 years ago to preserve the freedom of the world, its unity and the unity of this country. I believe the veterans of this country now have a very strong role to play in our unity. They may be called upon to fight again, not with guns and bayonets but with the moral fibre of their courage and with dignity because of the respect and appreciation they receive from the people surrounding them. They should use that quality to again help the government and the members of this House to cement unity in this country.

When they fought 25 years ago they cared not whether the comrade next to them was from Manitoba, Quebec or New Brunswick; they fought together for principles in which they believed very dearly. They came back here and there was no war outside the country to which they would be sent. There is no war in this country now, but there is no doubt there is a struggle in which they can help and make a contribution because of their experience and the appreciation they have acquired from their fellow citizens.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I shall thank again those who have taken part in this debate. I am most satisfied to realize once again that they have put veterans affairs above party politics, and that we are all convinced of the need to do more for those who have fought to preserve democracy and our freedom. I fully agree with them and I wish to give myself entirely to this cause. I have the feeling that, in a short while, all veterans will be most satisfied with the government's attitude towards them.

[English]

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Speaker: Would the minister permit a question before he resumes his seat?

Mr. Dubé: Yes.

Mr. Marshall: Would the minister indicate to the House what is to be contained in the social security report which is to be tabled during this session, in the way of social security measures affecting veterans who come under the War Veteran Allowance Act?

Mr. Dubé: It is very difficult for me to anticipate legislation or report on it before it is presented to the House. However, so far as I am concerned, as I have said many times in this House, war disability pensions are paid as of right to Canadian veterans and will continue to be so paid. So far as war veterans allowances are concerned, these are closer to the field of welfare in the sense that they are not paid because of disability but because veterans are deemed to have aged more quickly because of their service overseas. I can assure the House that whatever is done will be an improvement on the present situation.

Mr. McKinley: I have a further question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will be allowed to ask a question of the minister if the minister is prepared to reply, but I might point out to hon. members that a number of hon. members wish to speak and we should give them an opportunity to do so.

Mr. McKinley: The minister has explained to the House that there will be legislation forthcoming which will be generous, among other things, but he neglected to say how soon it will be introduced. Can he say how soon it will be introduced?

Mr. Dubé: Mr. Speaker, I am not the master of the House; I do not know how fast we will move. However, it is one of the bills that was annexed to the Speech from the Throne, and I would think it would be introduced early in this session. But how soon, I do not know.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to offer my congratulations to my colleague, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) for bringing forward this motion at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: I especially congratulate him on the speech he made in the House today, a speech which certainly caught the ear of the House and which demonstrated the hon. member's deep concern and wide knowledge of the problems facing the veterans of this country. Mr. Speaker, the service record of the hon. member, his record of service to the veterans of this country and, indeed, his service to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs is well documented in Hansard since the beginning of this Parliament.

I was rather surprised that the minister elected to intervene in the debate at this particular time. One would have expected the minister to wind up the debate. I am sure that if time did not permit him to do so, the House with its usual traditional courtesy would have extended to him as much time as he desired to properly wind up the debate. I agree with the minister that the debate quite properly should be conducted in a non-partisan manner. But having heard the minister I find it very difficult to continue in this non-partisan vein because I believe—and I say this with great regret—that the veterans of this country, to put it mildly, will be very disappointed in the contribution the minister has made to this debate.

I think the veterans of this country expected, and indeed deserve, something a little more tangible, a little more definite and more expressive from the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé). I do not know what the minister was alluding to when he said that 50 per cent of the population of this country is under the age of 25. I do not know whether he was trying to suggest that the country no longer cares about its veterans. If this is what he meant, I would suggest it is not so because, like the minister himself, I was only 12 years old when the war ended and I am deeply conscious of my responsibility to those who were old enough at the time to volunteer for service, did so and served this country with distinction. As a young Canadian I am deeply conscious of the great debt we owe those who served Canada in both world wars.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: I am also very conscious of the fact that I have a responsibility to represent in this House the veterans who live in my constituency, in my province, and indeed all the veterans of Canada. We all have this responsibility. I am particularly conscious of the contribution the veterans are making to my own province and to my own constituency, just as I am deeply conscious of the contribution they made to preserve the very society they are now helping to sustain.

Perhaps we should reflect for a moment upon the wording of the motion. It is a very simple motion. It is a motion calling upon the government to do two things. First of all, it calls upon the government to implement a unanimous recommendation of one of the Standing Committees of this House, a recommendation contained in the second report of the Committee on Veterans Affairs, dated June 9, 1970. Second, it calls upon the government, in addition to proceeding with the implementation of these recommendations, to provide adequate increases in the allowances paid under the War Veterans Allowance Act of 1952.

• (8:40 p.m.)

I think it is only fair that we should ask ourselves why it is necessary to proceed in this manner; why we find it necessary to bring in a motion calling upon the government to implement the unanimous recommendations of one of the Standing Committees of this House, recommendations resulting from a study referred to the committee by the House, by the government itself.

The minister has referred to the outstanding work of the Veterans Affairs Committee, as have other hon. members, the endless hearings, the briefs, the hearings of witnesses, the examination of the government White Paper and the examination of the Woods report. All of this was done in a period of 10 months, and in many instances at times when Parliament was in recess.

I find it exceedingly difficult to understand why the government has not acted upon the unanimous recommendations of this committee, especially in light, notwithstanding what the minister has said, of the circumstances of which most hon. members are aware—of the sufferings of many of our veterans today who are operating under great hardship because of the consequences of inflation and the spiralling cost of living that has reduced their incomes under the War Veterans Allowance Act, as well as their pensions, to the point where they have to endure great hardships.

Many veterans unable to continue to work or to find work are forced to fall back on the government and depend upon the War Veterans Allowance Act to sustain themselves. But I ask the minister through you, Mr. Speaker, how much sustenance can a married man with dependents purchase on $175 a month, which is the maximum payable under the act even with the maximum supplementary earnings of $245 that he is entitled to have.

I ask the minister, as a family man who knows what it is to support a family, to put himself in the position of having to feed his wife and his children on $60 a week, because that is what we are asking the veterans of this country to do by maintaining the present level under the War Veterans Allowance Act. How can any Canadian expect to maintain his dignity while living on such a pittance?

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that those who are unfortunate enough to have to fall back on the War Veterans Allowance Act are being denied the dignity that should be theirs by right and by virtue of the contribution and the sacrifice they have made. Yet we are reducing them to a bare sustenance. The minister, the government, and indeed all of us should hang our heads in shame because I think it is a shame in this affluent country of ours that we should bring our veterans, who have paid such a price to sustain this country, to such a pitiful state.

We do not even pay any attention to the poverty level set down by the Economic Council of Canada in 1968. Indeed, sir, we pay our veterans less than the very minimum wage laws enacted by this Parliament. Yet the veterans of Canada have to sustain themselves with the knowledge that any promise of an increase in their allowances will only come after a review of the whole social legislation on the statute books of Canada. I hope the minister will pay heed to the pleading of members in this debate. I hope he will live up to the responsibility that is his as Minister of Veterans Affairs and that he will recognize the plight of the veterans.

I reject the view that has aready been reiterated by the minister in the speech he made tonight, subtle though it may be, that veterans allowances should somehow be lost in the general review of social legislation. I say this because when the Parliament of Canada established the very department over which the minister now has the responsibility of presiding, and when Parliament enacted the legislation on the statute books of this country to deal with the problems of veterans and to recognize the role that our veterans have played in maintaining the society we enjoy, Parliament was paying particular attention to the obligation of the whole country to our veterans. Parliament was not suggesting that we should provide for the veterans in the same context that we provide for the unemployed, for the socially indigent or for the handicapped. Parliament was recognizing the special and unique obligation that this country has to those who served Canada in war.

I believe that we are reaching the stage where we are trying to get out from under that obligation, and I think it is a bad thing for Canada. This Parliament has recognized its obligations to those in the country who have to fall back upon the protection of the minimum wage laws. It has recognized the spiralling cost of living in this country, and in so doing has said that by law no one in Canada who is within the jurisdiction of the federal government shall receive less than $1.65 an hour. Surely the government has the same obligation to the veterans of this country, recognizing the same factors that are driving up the cost of living and are depriving veterans of their income. Surely the government must recognize the toll that inflation has taken upon war veterans allowances and upon disability pensions, and should act very quickly.

Not a month has gone by since the outset of this Parliament in 1968 without my receiving an inquiry from a veteran in my constituency asking when the government is going to act upon the Woods report. Barely a month goes by without my having to explain to the veterans why the government has refused to act. It is an empty explanation and one that I could not accept; consequently, I cannot expect veterans in my constituency and in my province to accept it.

Other hon. members have referred to the plight of the Hong Kong veterans in a much more eloquent and forceful manner than I could, many of them speaking from experience. Hon. members have referred to those who have to sustain themselves on disability pensions, pensions which are theirs by right, and to the various shortcomings in the regulations governing these pensions. On that matter I will not dwell at this moment. Suffice it to say that the government has a continuing obligation to the veterans of this country. I think that should be stated over and over and over again until the government is prepared to live to up to that obligation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Sir, in the limited time left at my disposal I would like to refer to one matter of particular interest to my province. The people of Newfoundland, in order to perpetuate the site of an outstanding hallmark in our history, the battle of Beaumont-Hamel in the First World War, were granted the lands covering the site of that famous battle which took place on July 1, 1916, in France. By the use of our own financial resources we built an appropriate memorial and provided an appropriate place to bury our illustrious and honoured dead.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to apologize to the hon. member and bring to his attention that his time has expired. He may continue with the consent of the House. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the extended time and, realizing the nature of this debate, will not transgress upon the time of the House other than to say that when Newfoundland entered the Confederation of Canada, Canada assumed a responsibility to maintain this memorial, this part of Newfoundland in France, as a part of our war graves, as a part of our national monuments. Now people in my province are very concerned over rumours that have been going about lately concerning our park at Beaumont-Hamel in France, to the effect that the trenches are being filled in and that the area of jurisdiction is being cut down with a view to saving on administrative costs.

I hope that these rumours are without foundation in fact, and that the minister who has responsibility for this department will recognize the obligation the government of Canada has, in being the trustee of this memorial to the Newfoundland war dead, to sustain it in a manner befitting the nature of that memorial.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I wish to commence my remarks by congratulating the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) for introducing this motion, and by congratulating the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for the excellent and pointed amendment he made to it.

Following the Second World War there was a mood in this country in which people were determined to see that veterans, those who had fought on behalf of the nation, on behalf of the liberties we all hold so dear, would be given a fair portion of the rewards that society had to offer, and that justice would be given them in terms of opportunities and as a reward for their service. For a considerable period following the end of the war we maintained this objective in a very strong way. However, as the years went by, as the war faded into memory and as the sacrifices of the men and women who participated in that war faded into memory, it seems that government interest in the veterans took a less urgent turn.

We had all hoped that the minister would rise today and give us some specific and encouraging information on the government's approach to changes in veterans legislation. The minister had an opportunity to speak for half an hour and he made a statement. He said all the right things but, when it was all over, the minister had said nothing. That was a very great disappointment to all of us.

Because of my high regard for the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) I am prepared to accept his statement that he would like to implement the very good recommendations of the Veterans Affairs Committee. I think he is saying this with all sincerity. But if the minister feels this way, why is the legislation not before the House, or at least legislation incorporating some of the things on which we have all agreed? If the fault does not lie with the minister, surely there is an area in which it does lie, an area that has to be criticized sharply by this House. Who is responsible? The government has the power; it has the means at its disposal. We can only assume that the minister is not the only one who is holding up the legislation, and that the government has very little inclination to introduce veterans legislation. That is a sad conclusion to reach.

It must be obvious to all hon. members that, when it wants, a government can take quick action. I would like to point out some of the quick actions this government has taken. Let us take an instance in connection with the white paper on tax reform, where we had what was supposed to be a total package, somewhat analogous to the situation with respect to the recommendations of the Veterans Affairs Committee. For a long time the government took the position that no part of the white paper could be modified or changed until the finance committee had met, had made its recommendations and the government had had an opportunity to review those recommendations.

However, on a number of occasions while that committee was still sitting the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) announced very great changes in the white paper proposals, particularly with regard to the natural resource industry and more particularly with regard to the mining industry. Does this mean that mining interests in Canada have more say with, more pull over, and more influence on the government than do the nation's veterans? That would certainly appear to be the case.

I give another example of government action. Recently the government felt compelled to introduce the War Measures Act. At the time it was introduced many hon. members insisted that the act be limited in time and that the government come to the House and introduce more specific and better legislation to deal with the events that had occurred. The government was able to promise that within 30 days it would bring legislation before the House. This is not uncomplicated legislation; I am talking about some very profound changes in the laws of the country. I am glad the government felt able to suggest it could do this within 30 days.

But surely after examination given by the Veterans Affairs Committee to the recommendations of the Woods committee, the government is in a much better position to draft new veterans legislation and put it before the House? I cannot find any possible excuse for the government's delay in changing existing veterans legislation to improve the conditions of many of the men and women who willingly offered themselves in the service of the nation.

It is an unfortunate truth that the government has not placed any urgency on this matter. One suspects that, very much like its attitude toward old age pensioners, the veterans are part of the government's fight against inflation; that the veterans, like the old age pensioners, are being held as hostages in the government's fight against inflation, a fight that it cannot win and a fight that is unjust beyond belief.

Earlier, my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre made a most eloquent and, as always, reasonable plea on behalf of the veterans. My hon. friend has on many occasions risen in this House on behalf of those who need the help of our nation. One wonders if, while he was speaking for those veterans, he did not have in mind a broader problem. It is interesting, when one looks back at the history of our treatment of veterans, to realize that when we helped the veterans of Canada we were also helping all people in this country. When we brought in social justice for our veterans we also extended it to other people in our society.

What we have done for veterans has often pioneered what we have done in social change. We have adopted attitudes that tended to improve the lot of the Canadian people. For example, let me point out one very important area which we could consider—the area of education. We forget that before 1945 and 1946 little assistance was given to people who wanted to go on to higher education. The idea of providing loans or grants for education was not in common currency at that time. Loans were introduced for veterans of the armed forces, and they were able to avail themselves of university educations. From there on society progressively extended help to others, and this turned out to be a most admirable approach which helped other people in society to obtain an education. Much of the vocational training program we have today has resulted from concepts and policies developed after the end of the war.

Also, let us look back on the Veterans' Land Act. This is one of the first instances in which the government became involved in publicly assisted housing. It is most unfortunate it did not do more of this. Nevertheless, thousands of veterans in this country today would not have homes if they had not been assisted under the Veterans' Land Act. That legislation has changed our concept about the public's involvement in housing. Although we have not gone as far as I should like to see us go, at least that legislation changed some of the attitudes and some of the directions in which this country was going.

When we consider the burnt-out pension and the war veterans allowance, we see the beginning of the concept of a guaranteed income. Indeed, programs that were begun for veterans have often been extended to other areas of our society. I make these points to show why I think it is important for us to support the idea of veterans benefits both for those who are veterans and for those who are not. I say this regardless of the justice of the situation. This country owes an elementary obligation to those people who served in its armed forces. There is the added point that, as I have said, what we do for our veterans today we often will do for other people tomorrow, and veterans legislation is an important indicator of social attitudes.

Mr. Nowlan: That's enough. No more.

Mr. Saltsman: Therefore, I cannot accept the arguments presented tonight by the minister. I cannot accept his reasons for delay. We are not delaying because we are so poor in this country that we can do nothing; neither are we delaying because the machinery of government is so creaky that nothing can be done. The machinery is creaky only when the government wants it to be creaky. It acts very quickly in the middle of the night when the government wants it to work that way.

I think members on all sides of the House markedly agree that there has been much too much delay in improving the lot of veterans in Canada, and that this should be corrected as quickly as possible. I was glad to hear that the minister intended making a trip to Europe in order to visit some of the monuments and pay his respect to the brave men and women who died for their country. I suggest to the minister that he could do no better in paying his respect to those brave men and women than by moving quickly and bringing in increased and much needed benefits for those veterans who are still living.

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I assure the hon. member who rose at the same time I did that I will stay and listen to his speech. I know that he has a good deal to offer the House and I would not miss his remarks for the world. I will not take too long in what I am about to say because, quite frankly, I believe everyone who has spoken this afternoon and evening is in agreement about what should be done and there is no necessity for my talking at length.

My reason for rising tonight is that I feel, as a member of the Veterans Affairs Committee of the House of Commons, that I am under an obligation to say a few words. It is an obligation that I accept most readily, because when I accepted the committees' report as a backbench supporter of the government I did not send it here with the idea that it would not be accepted within a reasonable period of time. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, and all hon. members that those of us who are on the Liberal benches have no intention of seeing the report passed over. The minister gave us his word tonight that within a reasonable period the legislation will be introduced in the House.

Having listened to some of the remarks of my hon. friends to my left, I gained the impression that they think the angels are only to the left of me in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: I hope that when the time comes for their being called to the happy hunting grounds, every one of them can fool the Lord and become an angel. But many of them certainly are not in that category at the moment.

An hon. Member: There speaks a Liberal.

Mr. Whicher: There are two or three who are—

Mr. Nowlan: They are in purgatory.

Mr. Whicher: —almost in that category at the moment, but they have not quite reached it. The unanimous report of the parliamentary committee was presented to the House, and we who support the government have every intention of seeing the veterans bill brought in very shortly.

Before I say any more, perhaps I ought to allude to some of the facts which have been presented to us tonight. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, all governments of Canada since 1945, including the present government, have done a most remarkable job for veterans in Canada. It is not that I think they should not have done more; we all agree that more ought to have been done.

The time has come for us to do more for veterans generally, but particularly for those who are disabled, the Hong Kong veterans, the paraplegics and others like them. Of course, they deserve more. If they do not obtain more, those of us who support the government will have something to say. As has been pointed out in this House on numerous occasions, the time has come for us to help these veterans. The government itself acknowledged this fact and intends to help them.

Let us review some of the things which have been said tonight. When the minister spoke, he said it had been his pleasure to know only one other minister of veterans affairs. Why is that? I suggest that is because apart from Canada only the French of all the so-called free nations of the world think enough of their veterans to appoint a minister of veterans affairs. So I say to Canada and to the government of Canada: For this you will be able to hold your heads very high indeed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: The minister told the House that more than half a billion dollars was to be devoted to veterans affairs, the highest amount in our history. For this the government is to be commended. I am not saying the veteran does not deserve this; I agree that he needs more. Yet, since more than one half billion dollars is being made available to the veterans of this country I say to the government that, although more should be given, they will be able to stand up high and look the people of Canada in the eye.

The hon. member who preceded me mentioned progressive measures such as the Veterans' Land Act. Where else do they have legislation like that in the world, unless it be Russia or China, countries with life styles I know little about? I would not want to live in them. Where else do they have this type of legislation? Do they have it in the United States? Where else do they have re-establishment, educational benefits and all the other programs effected not only by this government but by all governments from 1945 until 1970? I say to my Conservative friends that when they were in power they did a very good job. Without exception, all governments have done reasonably well. The time has now come for more.

I wish to compliment the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) for presenting his motion and bringing this matter to the attention of all hon. members. This question must be dealt with as soon as possible. I ask the hon. member in a very friendly way whether the rest of Canada has had an opportunity to share some of the great benefits which Newfoundland brought into Confederation. I ask the hon. member how much the veterans of Newfoundland were receiving before they joined Confederation? I will not give the answer, Mr. Speaker.

The plain fact is that Canada gives more to veterans than any other free nation in the world, but still not enough to demonstrate our allegiance to those people with 100 per cent disability. How many people in Canada are on 100 per cent disability pension? When listening to some hon. members to my left it seems that every veteran in Canada is on the poverty line, when in fact there are in Canada approximately 5,000 people who are 100 per cent dependent upon pensions.

Many people, including myself, are very lucky. Even though we had long service we did not receive a scratch. We do not receive a pension. For that I say, thank God! Hundreds of thousands of Canadians have given long service but have not derived one nickel from the government for that service other than what they received on returning from the war. As far as pensions are concerned, we pay and are happy to do so. It is much better to come home with money in your pocket and be in a financial position to pay, than to have lost one or both legs or to have been blinded. We who are fortunate are happy to pay even more. We cannot accept the suggestion that all veterans in Canada are on the poverty line. I understand there are many veterans in this House. I do not know whether they can be considered to be on the poverty line. In any event, I had better skip that aspect of the subject for the moment.

I will not go any further than reiterate the facts which I have already stated. As a Liberal backbencher, I look forward to legislation being introduced in the immediate future. When I say that, I mean within the next two or three months. I assure the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe, who spoke so ably this afternoon, that if legislation is not forthcoming within a reasonable period of time I will speak out with him to bring it to the attention of the government with a very sharp barb indeed.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) did such an excellent job in outlining the position of the official opposition on matters dealing with veterans, in his extremely able and comprehensive speech, that it is not necessary for me to deal with the points he made. However, for a very few moments I would like to deal with the treatment this government gives veterans who receive the war veterans allowance.

I have three very strong objections to the treatment which the government is meting out to these very deserving veterans. The first is that this government has not seen fit to increase the war veterans allowance since 1966, despite the fact that during the four years since then the cost of living has increased by nearly 20 per cent. Several times each year the opposition has pressed the government strongly to increase the war veterans allowance proportionately with the cost of living. By not increasing the war veterans allowance during the past four years, the government has simply said to the veteran, "Tighten your belt. Do without more and more of the things that you need to keep body and soul together for you and your family".

I believe this is just the reverse of the way that members of the armed forces in World War I and World War II should be treated. By giving so much they literally burned themselves out during their war service. They need our assistance in civilian life. That is my first reason for strongly condemning the attitude of this government toward those receiving war veterans allowance.

My second point is that the government prohibits a single man earning more than $40 a month, or $70 a month for a married man over and above the war veterans allowance which he receives. These war veterans allowances are an absolute minimum. It is well recognized that no one could even come close to maintaining themselves on such a small pension. They are simply assistance. If a man wishes to improve the standard of living for himself and his family and works hard to earn money to supplement the allowance, that is to be admired. To allow these veterans to earn only $40 a month or $70 a month restricts very greatly their ability to maintain a decent standard of living and support their families in the way they would wish and have every right to do, particularly in view of the great service they have performed for their country.

The attitude of the government in this regard discourages initiative. It discourages a man's desire to earn as much as he can to improve the financial position of his family. I am sure all members of the House have felt that this restriction is very unfair. It should be cancelled. A man receiving war veterans allowance should be permitted to earn as much as he can by working.

The other matter to which I object very strongly is the way in which the government treats those members of the armed forces who not only receive the veterans allowance but also the old age pension. As we all know, when the old age pension is increased, as it is occasionally by even this parsimonious government, it is increased for a very good reason; it is increased because the cost of living has gone up and because the government rightly considers that those receiving the old age pension need considerably more to live on. But if a man is receiving both the old age pension and the veterans allowance, any increase in the old age pension is deducted from what he receives by way of veterans allowance. Thus, though the cost of living has increased and pensioners are getting an increase in their pension, the man who is also receiving veterans allowance gets no increase at all.

I ask those who are seated on the treasury benches tonight whether they consider that this is fair treatment of our veterans. There is silence from the treasury benches because their occupants are obviously ashamed of what the government has done in the past few years. They realize it is a disgraceful way to treat those who have served their country so well. It is high time the minister and his colleagues corrected this miscarriage of justice and allowed pensions and war veterans allowances to be increased independently of each other. When an increase in either is brought before Parliament and passed, it should be allowed in full to those pensioners who are receiving veterans allowances, because they have served their country well. Judging by the way in which the government treats those who receive veterans allowances—that is to say in a penny-pinching, miserly and completely unjustified manner—we shall have to press our case very hard if we wish to succeed.

This penny-pinching on the part of the government is in strange contrast with its actions when it comes to buying airplanes of which it has no need. It has been brought to the attention of the House and of the country that four years ago the government ordered $250 million worth of CF-5 planes to enable the armed forces of this country to play a peacekeeping role as part of the United Nations peacekeeping efforts. Two years ago, in 1968, this peacekeeping role was abandoned. But instead of cancelling the order for these planes, because they happened to be produced in the Prime Minister's home riding in Montreal—this can be the only reason—the decision was made to keep the aircraft rolling off the assembly lines though there is not the slightest need for them in our air force. Some of them have even been sent to Europe as a public relations gesture to find out whether they could be of use there. They could not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I wonder whether the hon. member is not getting away from the motion which is before the House. He seems to be making a point about the defence policy of the government. I think he should return to the motion and the amendment which are before us.

Mr. Hees: I am simply using this as an example to show that the government has money available to use in any way it wishes. It has chosen to use this money to finance a make-work project in the Prime Minister's home city. I say that a far better way would be to treat those who receive war veterans allowances in a fair, decent and equitable manner. This would cost infinitely less and it would do infinitely more good. I use this illustration to show that the money is there.

The minister should persuade those of his colleagues who take a parsimonious attitude toward the veterans of this country to use some of this money immediately to increase war veterans allowances in the way they should have been increased as the cost of living has risen over the past four years. He should persuade them to allow these people to earn all they can in addition to their allowances and, in so doing, treat the veterans fairly, as they so richly deserve, on behalf of the rest of our citizens who have been able to remain free as a result of their activities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Listening to this debate, Mr. Speaker, I would imagine that throughout the centuries every government has been faced with the same dilemma—every kingdom, every principality, every parliament and every minister. It is not a new story. It is said by Arrian in his record of the wars of Alexander, in his history giving an account of the anabasis, that when the great Macedonian warrior addressed his troops just before they returned home, he told them "I have provided for you and I have set up statues to those who have fallen; I have provided you with gold plate from the loot of Syria, India and Cathay." And all those things he did. But the historian went on to say that when the troops returned home they found the gold had disappeared and most of them lived thereafter in abject poverty.

Napoleon's armies fared no better, nor did the armies of Wellington. But these were old days. When we speak of those days we are talking about rewards, we are talking about some sort of compensation. This is not the issue here at all. The hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) says there is some deep, dark plot on the part of the minister to use veterans pensions in the government's fight against inflation. That is utter nonsense; it is not the case at all.

I compliment the minister for having stayed here throughout this debate, as he should have done. We are dealing with a million people and with a question which calls for a revision of our thinking, one which calls for a new look. I must say I cannot agree at all with the Woods committee report. The trouble is that commissions, instead of taking a brand new approach to a problem, always get together and say: Let us take a look at the existing legislation. Then on the basis of the status quo they amend, they split hairs, and no new approach is ever taken.

So it is here. We have listened to speeches in this House today in the course of which members have stated they begged the government to show consideration. How dare they beg on behalf of the veterans? Who gave them a mandate to beg? When you beg, you lower a man's dignity. Nobody gave them the right to beg, and the veterans do not want them, or any hon. member, to beg the minister for anything. The veterans gave no mandate to anyone to go around with a cup for alms. This is not the issue. This is where we have gone astray, although it seems that year after year someone feels compelled to beg the government for more money. Where does one get this right? Who gave them this right? This is not a begging situation. What the veterans want is equity, not alms, not some consideration in return for having fought.

It is surprising that after the war the Liberal government took the correct attitude when it undertook to provide veterans with opportunities to go to university, to get an education, to get adequate housing, and so on. This was not a response to begging; it was not a reward for having fought. The whole principle was based upon the fact that veterans had lost time. They might have stayed here and worked and prepared themselves for university, acquired funds, a house, a car and furniture.

The compensation was this: the government recognized that they had contributed to the security of our country and, accordingly, assisted them to place themselves in a position of equality as compared with those who were not members of the armed services. That was the whole point. But when it came to pensions, the government reverted to the age old idiom of gifts. Why did they not go a little further? Why the principle of the unskilled labourer? Is there a presumption that the average veteran would not have been more successful? No, there is not. Yet this provision was passed in 1918 and has been favoured by commission after commission because it was so much easier to continue the same amount in effect than to bend some effort to make a change.

The maximum amount should be the average amount earned by all working veterans. That is the amount that would be equitable. I hope the minister is listening, because this would provide a wonderful opportunity for the government to introduce the concept of a guaranteed annual income. Here is a group asking to be given the opportunity to be placed on the same level as other people. It is a controlled group. Nobody would dare suggest that our veterans would abuse the guaranteed annual income, because they would not be veterans if they did.

Implementation of this idea would dispense with appeal boards, various pension schemes, the onus of proof now placed on veterans, and so on. After all, who can say what in a service-connected injury? I dare anyone to define that expression. Who can judge what is going to be the reaction of a man who lives under constant stress for four or five months of the year? And in the field one is under constant stress. If medical opinion is correct, no one can predict the consequences to a man's health of a life under stress. Frustration, enforced discipline and things of that nature must have an effect on the health of a man. As a result, no one can define what is and what is not a service-connected injury.

Recently I had occasion to plead the case of a man suffering from lung cancer. It is recognized today that the inhalation of smoke affects the lungs. This man was in the REME. I know from personal experience that in these field operation units the men are working under cover since often it is cold, and exhaust fumes from vehicles are constantly being pumped into the air. For five years this man lived in an environment of pollution. Yet the board held that there was no proof his lung cancer had any connection with his service.

The guaranteed annual income would be the answer in such a case. Those who did not need the guaranteed annual income would not take it. Many of those in receipt of disability pension would be only too happy to give it up. After all, the very system we have been fighting for does enable us to make a living and to make our way in the world. As I say, if the guaranteed annual income for veterans is accepted by the government, it will not cost more money. In addition, it will dispense with all appeals, pension boards and eliminate the sort of friction that has been the experience to date.

It was said today that our veterans should be given more money as a reward for valour. Valour, Mr. Speaker, is not rewarded. No man who is courageous or valorous expects reward; he is courageous or valorous because he loves his country. He knew that on occasion he would have to shed blood and tears if he loved his country, and this is still being done to this day. So you do not reward valour.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Weatherhead: There is no point of order.

Mr. Nowlan: Just listen and see whether there is or not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) on a point of order.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, you yourself, with all the dignity of the Chair, stood when the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) talked about aeroplanes and what might happen if government moneys had been directed toward war veterans allowances rather than aeroplanes. The hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) is, frankly, contributing clap-trap to this debate.

Mr. Weatherhead: What is your point of order?

Mr. Nowlan: My point of order is that the motion now before the House concerns the recommendations of a committee. With all respect to the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) and others who perhaps have lived in the sanctity of a vacuum of non-political involvement—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order.

Mr. Nowlan: —the hon. member's remarks should be directed to the motion, not to questions of valour and a minimum wage.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The Chair is aware of what happened in the House earlier this evening. At that time the Chair gave quite a bit of leeway to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) and was ready to take the same position and give some leeway to the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto). As far as the Chair is concerned, I think the House should allow the hon. member for York East to complete his remarks.

Mr. Nowlan: I will allow him to complete his remarks because I always like listening to the hon. member, except on this one point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I think the hon. member for Annapolis Valley should recognize that the Chair has to make a decision. The Chair has decided, having heard the remarks of the hon. member for Annapolis Valley, that perhaps the hon. member for York East should adhere more closely to the subject matter before the House. I think the hon. member for Annapolis Valley will have to accept the decision of the Chair.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Speaker, it was not I who introduced the subject of reward for valour, but an hon. member opposite. The hon. member said that veterans pensions should be increased because the valour of our veterans should be rewarded. I am pleading the other case. I am saying that our veterans are not asking for reward, they are asking for equity. This is why I approach the minister with a new concept. I suggest that he should not necessarily be tied to old ideas. There is no reason why our veterans groups have to come to Ottawa and plead their cause year after year. They should be given what they ask for as a matter of right.

I realize there are not too many members in the House who are quite as bright as the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) thinks he is, and we have to bear with this. But with all respect, I have tried to put to the minister in this debate a different approach to the status of our veterans, to disability pensions and as to what course the House should follow.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, believe it or not, I shall be very short. I want to remove any misconception in the mind of the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) about what I think I may possess in the form of grey matter. My conception of my own grey matter is in direct ratio to what I hear from the other side, especially what I heard from the hon. member for York East. The more I heard from him, the more grey matter I realized I had. In that respect I think my grey matter does not have to take second place to his, let alone his golden words on a great philosophical point but a point that does not come close to the motion that was moved by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) who drew an important matter to the attention of this House.

• (9:40 p.m.)

I did not notice many of the members who were here earlier. I was here because I wanted to catch Your Honour's eye. I am not a veteran, and I speak because I am not a veteran. I was too young to serve. I found the veterans in this House this afternoon trying, as I did, to be recognized. If that is any reward I should have the Distinguished Service Medal for trying to catch Your Honour's eye. I finally have been recognized, and I do not wish to take up too much time of the House because I know many other hon. members want to contribute to this debate.

I want to say two or three serious things. This afternoon I listened to the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe and the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), who is sitting in his seat tonight as he has sat attentively all during this debate. As the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) said earlier, as well as the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. McBride), I do not think any topic that has come to the floor of this House has been received with such unanimity as this one. All members are in favour of the principle of this motion. This is the reason I find myself motivated to speak.

I listened to the philosophical words of the hon. member for York East. That philosophy, in the right place and at the right time, is always illuminating. It may not be the most educational or informative, but certainly it is illuminating. It sometimes illuminates the barren spots of his grey matter. Be that as it may, because this is a non-partisan debate I will not say anything more on that subject.

I want to say one or two things in all seriousness. I am not a veteran or a member of the Veterans Affairs Committee. I have in my riding, in that part of the Atlantic area which I represent, a great number of veterans. In fact, I can stand here tonight and say that I do not know of a member in this House who represents more veterans or more legionaires than I do in my riding of Annapolis Valley. I know for a fact from my predecessor in that constituency that more veterans came to his office than to the offices of all the other members from Nova Scotia combined. I have inherited part of that legacy and part of that challenge. Perhaps I am not as capable of dealing with this matter as my predecessors seat were. For that reason, and because of the historic interest in veterans and veterans' problems, I want to say a few words. Believe me, they will be very few.

I listened to the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe and to the hon. member for Ottawa West make very constructive contributions to this debate. Many of the members who followed them were members of the Veterans Affairs Committee. I was struck by one consistent current that flowed throughout their contributions, namely, that this was a non-partisan committee. They suggested there were no politics involved and that the committee listened in a non-partisan way and with interest to the constructive comments in the Woods report and the white paper. We now have the unanimous report of that committee.

Let me put to the House one point, Mr. Speaker—and you stand far ahead of me in your contribution to the war efforts of this country. Having said that, I ask any veteran in this place or outside this chamber, how many of them landed on the Normandy beaches without partisanship.

An hon. Member: Come on, Pat.

Mr. Nowlan: I do not know who said, "Come on, Pat" but I will come on to him any time he wants me to if he will stand up and identify himself. How many of those veterans contributed their efforts to the wars of this country with a non-partisan spirit and heart? Do not get me wrong; I am not talking about partisanship in the sense of whether you belong to the great Liberal party, the great Conservative party, the great NDP or the great Créditiste party. I ask in all seriousness, through you, Mr. Speaker, whether anyone knows of a veteran who has come to him for assistance with a vacant heart, a vacant mind, a vacant soul or a vacant spine. They are not non-partisan. This clap-trap about non-partisanship is a lot of idiocy.

Who knows more about partisanship than those who contributed their full effort to the war? I say in all sincerity through you, Mr. Speaker, to the members of the Veterans Affairs Committee and to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé), whom I respect as a man who has no peer in this House as far as sincerity is concerned, that the veterans of this country are not interested in the non-partisan aspect of this House.

The motion advanced by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe was designed to benefit the veterans of this country. I have in mind all those veterans who read this report, who read Hansard or sit in the galleries listening to our debates. There are never many in the gallery, because they do not want to hear about the non-partisan character of this committee or of the House of Commons. They know what their partisanship was during the war. They know where their spirits were, where their hearts were. Some of them know where their limbs are now, and some of them who are not here tonight know where their souls rest.

I suggest to you and through you, Mr. Speaker, to the members of the Veterans Affairs Committee and to the minister that we should get away from these pious platitudes about non-partisanship. Let us not waste words about whether we were partisan. Let us do as the Veterans Affairs Committee did in its unanimous report, that is, become completely partisan toward the cause of veterans. That is the type of partisanship that should not take second place to any feeling in this House. That is what is lost when speaker after speaker today stood up and talked almost exclusively for five or ten minutes about the committee being non-partisan.

This House of Commons and the Parliament of Canada has put into effect the best pension plan known to man. We were non-partisan in that regard. Do we think that the veteran who wants an adjustment in his pension, or the pension of a widow or child who is dependent upon war veterans allowance, cares about whether we are Liberals, Conservatives or members of the NDP as far as partisanship is concerned? This is just flying a false flag. We are going to flounder in the swampland unless we start to accept reality and appreciate it.

I wanted to contribute to this debate because the people who fought for the rights of this institution and the freedom of speech about which we talk are the very people who will become disillusioned if this Parliament of Canada does not during this session do something concrete about veterans' problems. We must do something for them through the pension plan, war veterans allowances or the Canadian Pension Commission. This commission has worked unceasingly for veterans. It is because I feel very strongly, even as a non-veteran, that I make these suggestions.

I listened to the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. MacRae) earlier this afternoon. He recited the pages of history that I used to read. He spoke about the battles he fought, about which I have read. The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe contributed in a way that I will never understand, because I was too young. There is no deed or duty which I find more honourable to accept, and yet sometimes more difficult to discharge, than to try to help veterans who through a letter, through a personal relationship or through a phone call ask me as a member—as they ask all other members of this House—to do something for them.

Without reciting all the things I could recite about the unanimous recommendation of the committee, some parts of which are good, and parts of the white paper some of which are good and some bad, I suggest that we in this House—which is only an institution, one of many under attack today because we have lost touch with reality—say to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, with all sincerity, that if this House of Commons, being part of the Parliament of Canada, cannot in the next few days introduce on the floor of the House a bill that will put into effect all the words that have been spoken in unanimity this afternoon, we will lose faith with those who fought to protect this place.

I have heard the sincere Minister of Veterans Affairs stand up before and say many times that legislation would be introduced perhaps in the form of one bill or two bills. I do not care whether there are three bills, but let us move; let us keep faith with those who fought for us.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-L. Rochon (Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, like those who preceded me, I should like to make a few remarks, with a non-partisan mind, on the motion of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall).

Those who risked their lives, gave their lives or lost their health on the battlefields deserve well of their country, and we who sit in this House must not forget the sacrifices which they made in order that we might live in freedom, freedom which other nations envy us and which shows us more clearly than anywhere else what democracy really is.

Mr. Speaker, the reason why I am taking part in this debate tonight is because in 1914 my father's brother set in Vimy ground the flag of the glorious 22nd; in 1944, his son landed on the beaches of Normandy. Today, he is a great disabled ex-service man. On his behalf, I should like to say that I join with the mover of this motion. I also join with those who demanded from the government the immediate adoption of adequate measures in this regard.

The hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) reminded us this afternoon of everything the Canadian government has done for our veterans, their widows and families. A few minutes ago, I was listening to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) who spoke of the measures he intended to submit to his cabinet colleagues. I am sure he will know how to convince them to agree to what we want for those who have fought for liberty. I am also sure that in the very near future the government will do its duty towards them.

Mr. Speaker, after listening to the speeches made by those who spoke before me, I am reminded of something I read recently where the author says: "To live, to die for one's country, in blood, in mud, facing one's flag, this is beautiful, it is great, even noble, but there is something finer, greater and nobler than that and that is to live for an ideal". For us who know what freedom is, we live for an ideal: Justice and freedom. To whom do we owe it? To those who have given their life, like this cousin of mine who, for more than 20 years, has been sitting in a paraplegic chair.

On their behalf, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the mover of this motion and I am sure, as the Minister of Veterans Affairs said a moment ago, that we will know where our duty to these veterans lies.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is probably obvious that there have been some discussions arising from the fact that there are two or three more members who would like to make a brief contribution to this debate. I think it might be found that there is agreement to our moving into the late show at this point—there are just two speakers at that stage—and then resume this debate for a few minutes so that those who would like to make a contribution might have an opportunity to do so. The assurance given me is that these contributions would not be lengthy. I am speaking for members of other parties and make this suggestion in the hope that there might be unanimous consent to it.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would agree to the proposal. It would be quite convenient to deal with the late show immediately and then proceed with the debate.

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House believe this is an excellent suggestion. Perhaps we should proceed on that basis. As I understand it, there are not many more speakers and we would not be kept here too long in any event.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): As there seems to be unanimous consent, we will proceed with the adjournment motion.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

[Translation]

HEALTH AND WELFARE—MEASURES TO REDUCE THE COST OF HOSPITAL, MEDICAL AND DENTAL CARE

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, before we start any debate on the question I asked the other day, I would point out to you that the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) stood up to be recognized while you were reading your text, if not before, because he had comments to offer—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, in my capacity as party house leader, I would like to state that we support the proposal submitted by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) requesting a continuation of the interesting discussion which started this afternoon. Besides, we consider that our rights have been encroached upon since only one speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. If the hon. member wants to make representations concerning the number of members allowed to take part in a debate, he can make them discreetly, but it is nevertheless the prerogative of the Chair to decide what members will speak and when. I do not think this is a question to be discussed at present and it seems to me that we should continue the debate on the adjournment motion. Therefore I recognize the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau).

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, as recorded at page 425 of the official report of the House of Commons' debates for October 22, 1970, I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) a question which reads in part as follows:

> Yesterday, the Department of National Health and Welfare published a report which says that the cost of hospital, medical and dental care has almost quadrupled in Canada between 1957 and 1969. Here is my question: Is the department now considering measures——to prevent the quadrupling of these costs again between 1970 and 1980 without improvement in services, or to have hospital and medical services made more accessible to the people?

In the course of my brief remarks tonight, Mr. Speaker, I would like to prove, with the help of statistics, that the erroneous policy of nationalizing medical services through Medicare was a piece of bluff and has misled the people.

The figures are as follows: In 1957, we spent $1 billion for various medical services. In 1969, these expenses rose to $3.9 billion. As for the area of personal health care, these expenses rose from $600 million in 1957 to $2.5 billion in 1969. Medical care amounted to $272 million in 1957 and to $910 million in 1969. However, between 1968 and 1969, that is to say after the introduction of the famous hospital insurance plan in some provinces, the cost for these items increased by $122 million. Moreover, the cost of drugs was $103 million in 1957 and $270 million in 1969.

In the light of these figures, we have the right to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare what steps he intends to take in order to stop this escalation.

Mr. Speaker, if the present situation is allowed to go on, within a few years, medical costs will be beyond the reach of everybody or will take up the greater part of the provincial budgets. The population will not enjoy more services and only confusion will follow.

Almost all provincial governments have been compelled to set up medicare and without being a prophet of doom I think that before five years, in Quebec, we shall go through a recession.

There were still in Quebec—I admit it—under the former medical set up, numerous hospitals that might have been called infirmaries. But, instead of coming to the help of the medical and health services by improving what needed improvement, the federal governement levied taxes on the provinces and then forced them to establish a medical care plan if they wanted to be entitled to a reimbursement of the taxes levied for that purpose. That was the "believe or die" policy and, very soon, it will be responsible for the crisis in which the provinces will find themselves.

Because of the false socialistic principle of state medecine advocated by the present government, the following consequences will be felt: Firstly, incompetence will appear at all levels of medical practice; secondly, the real desire of attending the sick that the doctors used to have will disappear; thirdly, the costs of state medicine paid by the government but squeezed out of the taxpayer will become prohibitive; fourthly, we will see mediocrity at all levels of the medical profession; and finally the dying will await death in hospital corridors without getting first aid, while people with imaginary diseases will fill the hospital beds which should be reserved to the sick.

Medicine will have lost its noble characteristics because instead of providing services to the individual and allowing him to choose his physician, his hospital and all other services, the state will have previously stripped the individual of his purchasing power before controlling medicine and establishing a barrier of redtape between the medical profession and the patients, making everyone dissatisfied, doctors and patients alike.

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to reply tonight to the grievance voiced by the hon. member from Shefford (Mr. Rondeau), and I should like to thank him by the same token for his most emotional speech in this respect.

I would like to remind him that in November 1968, the Minister of National Health and Welfare convened an interprovincial conference of health ministers to consider the problem of the ever rising cost of medical care.

Following this conference, a study group was appointed whose report, in three volumes, was introduced in the House last November. As a result of this, a task force was appointed to implement the recommendations contained in this first report. Some recommendations, by the way, have already been implemented by provincial governments.

Finally, the last group was asked to make recommendations to be considered at the next federal-provincial conference of health ministers to be held in December.

However, Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of hon. members on some aspects of this fundamental problem.

The main reason for greater costs is the spiralling increase in wages which represent from 70 to 80 per cent of the total cost of health care in Canada. In my opinion, this is a very serious problem. We must also consider that the care provided is of a higher standard, that better prophylaxis prevents epidemics and reduces infant mortality.

Besides, physicians, nurses and health technicians are getting more advanced and more general training. The range of diagnostic tests, medication and highly specialized equipment is forever increasing.

This general expansion, which is part of the quality of care, certainly represents another major factor in the spiralling increase of health care costs in Canada.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, these are only a few examples and reality is infinitely more complex.

In any case, the members know very well that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has long realised the existence of this thorny issue and that he has taken every possible measure to solve it. The federal government and the provinces are fully aware that there is a very serious financial problem, and I can say that all levels of government are prepared to co-operate in order to remedy this unfortunate situation.

[Mr. Rondeau.]

NATIONAL DEFENCE—RECONSIDERATION OF CLOSING OF RIVERS AIR BASE

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, on October 23 I asked the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald, Rosedale) the following question as reported on page 513 of Hansard:

> Has the decision to close the Canadian Armed Forces base at Rivers, Manitoba, been reconsidered, since it is the only suitable airfield available for transporting troops in any emergency from Camp Shilo, as was shown by the extreme difficulties experienced last week in the enforced reactivating of Rivers in order to move troops to Montreal?

The minister's reply was:

> Mr. Speaker, these facts were very much taken into account when the earlier decisions were arrived at but there has been no reconsideration since the event the hon. member was referred to.

The reason, Mr. Speaker, I have brought this matter up on the adjournment debate is that the people of Rivers and the people of Western Manitoba deserve a better answer than the minister gave. In fact, there are many questions pertaining to Rivers Air Base that this government has never answered or explained. I want to state that if the government can save tax dollars by closing surplus military bases, I agree with them. However, I have never agreed with the closure of Rivers Air Base. This is one of the last bases in Canada that should be closed.

In August of this year, the government announced the closure of two Manitoba bases, Gimli and Rivers. This left two air bases in Manitoba, Canadian Forces Base Winnipeg and Canadian Forces Base Portage. Why did these two remain open and why was Rivers closed? Canadian Forces Base Winnipeg is located adjacent to the Winnipeg International Airport and, needless to say, it causes much congestion of the air lanes in that area. This congestion is increased every day. If the government wants to save the taxpayers' money, why didn't they close Winnipeg instead of Rivers? Winnipeg Air Base is located in Greater Winnipeg and this property could be sold for millions of dollars. Rivers is located in the middle of the Prairies and the government will recover little of their investment on its closure.

Military men will tell you Rivers Air Base is in better condition than most bases in Canada. It has more days on which flying can be undertaken than any base in Manitoba. It is not situated close to the commercial air routes. It has all concrete runways. The permanent married quarters at Rivers are far superior to the ones, for example, at Portage. I can give you many reasons why Rivers should never have been closed.

For the last four years, delegation after delegation from Rivers and Western Manitoba have told the government these facts. But it is obvious the government was not prepared to listen to reason. The people of Rivers are annoyed, and they should be. Two years ago the former Minister of National Defence, told the people this base would not be closed. During discussions I had last spring with the former minister of national defence he told me the British were prepared to lease Rivers Air Base for a training school. He said the British were driving a hard bargain but he thought a lease could be worked out. I suggested the Department of Regional Economic Development should become involved in the negotiations. Perhaps with some incentive from this department a deal could be worked out with the British. If the base were closed this government would have to spend thousands of dollars in trying to locate industry for Rivers. What better industry could there have been than 1,000 British troops training in Western Manitoba? This plan would permit the present maintenance staff to be kept on at the base. The government have never given any explanation of what happened to these negotiations with the British, Mr. Speaker; it is time they did.

After the crisis we have experienced in Quebec in the past month, the government will have to review its whole military policy. Not only has it been proven we are short of troops but now, apparently, we are short of air bases.

The government announced in August that Rivers Air Base would be closed by September, 1971. I understand the control tower at Rivers was closed on October 15. Then, only three days later, when troops from Camp Shilo had to be flown to Montreal, with great difficulty the tower at Rivers was re-activated. In the period of a day, I am told, nine Hercules and two Yukon planes came into Rivers to pick up troops and their equipment. Why did Rivers Air base have to be used? It was used because it is only 30 miles from Camp Shilo, one of the largest army bases in Western Canada. In addition, Rivers air base has concrete runways capable of handling these large transport planes that are necessary to move troops quickly in times of national emergency. Why was Portage air base not used, one of the bases the government has left open in Manitoba? Mr. Speaker, I say if the truth were known the Portage base, with its asphalt runways, cannot handle the large troop planes. Only last month I was informed a Hercules plane went through the runway at CFB Portage.

These events of the past ten days again make the people of Rivers and western Manitoba ask, why were the Winnipeg and Portage bases left open and Rivers closed? Was it at the expense of our national security? Was the government playing politics when they closed Rivers? I would hate to think so.

I strongly urge the government, Mr. Speaker, to tell the people of Rivers what the future of this airbase is. The announcement of its closure was made on August 25. At that time the Department of National Defence, the Department of Regional Economic Development and the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Richardson), who is from Manitoba, told the people of Rivers a suitable use would be found for the base and the government would assist in every way possible.

The people of Rivers have been getting the same runaround for the last four years. This community is being destroyed and many businesses have closed. Many homes are vacant and the economic prospects for this town are very gloomy. Why is it this way? Because the government will not announce what plans they have for Rivers.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I urge the government to tell the people of western Manitoba whether Rivers will be re-opened as a military base because of its strategic location. Is it to be turned over to the Department of Indian Affairs for vocational training? Is it to be turned into an industrial park so the Department of Regional Economic Expansion can locate industry there?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): As I indicated to the hon. member when he asked the question, Mr. Speaker, the decision regarding the closure of Rivers base is final. It is not being reconsidered. The facts which the member referred to in his question, and again this evening, were fully taken into account when that decision was made. There will be no change in that decision.

The Canadian Forces Base Rivers, a flying training base, is being closed for financial reasons, that is to keep within the Department of National Defence budget. The airport was not re-activated, as the hon. member suggested in his question, because it had never been de-activated. While the manning of the control tower has been discontinued, the base will not close until September of 1971. For this particular incident, the control tower was manned by base personnel without any difficulty.

It was decided to use the airport because it was still active as a Canadian Forces base. When it is phased out, troops from Shilo will be able to move through Brandon airport. I should not lecture the hon. member on the geography of his own province, but Brandon is closer to Shilo than Rivers or CFB Portage. Indeed, in terms of proximity, Brandon is far more accessible than Rivers. I suggest to the hon. member that of the many reasons which from time to time have been advanced for keeping Rivers base open, the one he has referred to, namely that it can be used to move troops, is probably the least persuasive.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Pursuant to the order made earlier this day, the House will now revert to Government Orders.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOCATED DAY, S.O. 58—VETERANS AFFAIRS—EARLY IMPLEMENTATION OF COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS AND WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE INCREASE

The House resumed consideration of the motion (Mr. Marshall):

That the House urges the government to implement at an early date by way of the appropriate legislative amendments the recommendations contained in the 2nd report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs dated 9 June 1970 and in addition thereto to provide for early payment of adequate increases in the allowances under the War Veterans Allowance Act 1952 as amended.

And the amendment thereto of Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): I am pleased Mr. Speaker, to be allowed to express my views on this most creditable and vital subject. I am sure the veterans in our society will take heart when they learn that the substance of the report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs has come to the floor of this House for debate. I should also like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your consideration in extending the time available for debate on the subject in order that everyone who wishes to do so will be able to express his views today. I have sat in my place for most of the day and I have been heartened by the eloquence, the emotion and the sincerity which have been evident in all corners of the House. It does seem to me that this matter should have come to the floor of the House long ago. Certainly, any further delay would be inexcusable. If this debate proves to be just another false start on the road to the ultimate legislation, the government will find itself facing the full fury of both the members of this House and of the country at large.

A great deal has been said today about the valour of our warriors in past days. The fact is that no one can say sufficient about the sacrifices of our veterans to compensate them for the suffering and the hardships they endured. We must do far more than talk, though. I think we are all agreed that we must spice our words with action. Regardless of the war in which a veteran served, the present generation owes him the same debt as did those who lived in the same era. The sacrifices made by our soldiers, sailors and airmen have preserved our society, our sovereignty and our freedom for all the generations which followed them and the debt owed to those people is therefore passed along. The responsibility to bring veterans legislation up to date has fallen squarely on those of us who sit in Parliament today and it would be irresponsible of us to pass it along to anyone else. We must deal with it now in a manner in keeping with its character as an entitlement. I say "entitlement" because I want to speak out against the government's announced intention of holding back new veterans legislation until it has prepared an omnibus paper on the whole spectrum of social welfare legislation.

There are several reasons for my objection to this approach, not the least of which is the one I have just mentioned. Veterans compensation and pensions are totally unrelated to other types of benefits under welfare programs. The veterans of this country have earned certain entitlements which are uniquely theirs. Those entitlements are fundamental to our society and to our system of government. It is shabby and unconscionable, Mr. Speaker, to ask these people to stand in line for welfare to supplement inadequate pensions or compensation, because they paid for our freedom with their health and their limbs.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel).]

Veterans benefits are not public welfare assistance and if all of the rest of my remarks become lost in the dark corners of the record, I want it to be remembered that I object most strenuously to any further delay in implementing legislation which will confer on our veterans adequate compensation, and confer it in a manner which will reflect the dignity with which they made their contributions. It is beneath our dignity as Canadians to do less than other nations are doing, and have done, for their veterans. It is beneath our dignity to strip the dignity from those who have given all they had to give and who now expect only what they have been led to expect. It is all too typical of this government to tell veterans that they will have to wait until they have been integrated into a vast bureaucratic jungle which will administer a multitude of unrelated situations, while at the same time playing down the significance of their contributions.

The hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott) pointed out a few days ago that the government seemed to be preoccupied with saying to hippies, yippies, draft dodgers and deserters: "Come to the promised land; come to Canada and work against our government and institutions". It is a sad commentary on our government, indeed on all of us, when we allow such a philosophy to take root in this land, a land made secure by the blood, pain and suffering of our own young men and women of past generations. It prompts one to ask whether there is anything left in Canada that is sacred. It is incomprehensible to anyone who has contributed and is now contributing to our society how government can take our hard won freedoms and institutions so cavalierly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. It is the duty of the Chair at this time to bring to the hon. member's attention the fact that he is getting away from the motion and the amendment thereto now before the House. I think he should try as much as possible to relate his remarks directly to the motion and the amendment.

Mr. Downey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was only trying to impress upon the House the pressing need to give consideration to the needs of our veterans before those of other elements of society that seem to be coming to the forefront. I was going to mention U.S. draft dodgers, and I think this is pertinent to the discussion at hand. These deserters from the United States walk across an imaginary line between two countries and suddenly become something that they were not moments before they crossed the line. It is fundamental that a man cannot be expected to accept responsibility to a new society when he has demonstrated that he cannot accept responsibility to the society in which he grew up.

I contend a man owes a duty to the society that sheltered him while he was growing up. It is not enough to say that the debt has been discharged simply because an individual states that he disagrees with certain policies of his government. In a free society such as ours, there are established rules by which one must live. Without those rules, there would be chaos.

In the sort of society envisaged by most of our hippies and United States drop-outs, people who break the rules are put to death or at best sentenced to long terms of hard labour. I cannot accept lightly government policy that gives freely to such people the fruits of our labours and the benefits that we have derived from the sacrifices of our young people who accepted the responsibility of fighting to preserve our country both today and in times past.

There are elderly people in this country who are waiting to have their fixed and inadequate incomes brought into line with reality, with the present rather than the past cost of living index. There are those unable to work for a variety of reasons who must be looked after. There are also our veterans. It is cruel and inhuman for anyone to seek to sweep these human problems under the rug in order to get them out of sight and out of mind. I call on the government to deal with each of these problems separately, to stop trying to put them into a bag in the hope that when they are dumped out they will solve themselves.

Veterans legislation has always been kept apart from other legislation because it is different from anything else. It is no good for the government simply to say that all benefits are related, that no special conditions or considerations bear upon them. Veterans benefits have a special connotation. There are special considerations bearing upon them, and to ignore or deny these considerations is to do the veterans a disservice. The time to table legislation is now, not when the government has found a multitude of other problems to put together in an omnibus type of package. Our veterans are waiting for the answers and for some ray of hope. I call upon this government to use the majority it asked for and received at the last election to give our veterans the answers they want and require.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, since the veterans pension program was adopted some 50 years ago, Canada has witnessed drastic changes, economic as well as social. Being aware of this, the Department of Veterans Affairs had inquiries made in an attempt to adapt, to a greater degree, the services of the department to the veterans' requirements.

In spite of those efforts to humanize the services of the department, to adapt them even more to the needs of the pensioners, the fact remains that there are still scandalous injustices within that department, not where the civil servants or the officials are concerned, but because the pensioners cannot make ends meet with the help the department gives them.

Having said this, I would like to deal with another aspect which it seems to me has been neglected. The average age of the veterans of World War I being 74, and that of the veterans of World War II being 52, one can wonder what happens to their widows since, in most cases, because of illness or disability—because they fought proudly for Canada—they die prematurely. As a result, their widows and other dependants are very often destitute.

Mr. Speaker, the motion and the amendment aim at securing the adoption of many recommendations made by study committees.

One of those recommendations had to do with the wives and other dependents of pensioners, and I would like to be allowed to discuss it very briefly.

The cost of living is increasing steadily. All agree on that. The cost of medicine, housing and food has also increased. Thus, veterans and their dependents can no longer provide for their immediate needs.

Now since pensions are not adapted to the requirements of the people who receive them, some pensioners and their dependents manage very well to live on them, while others can barely subsist.

In my opinion, the pension given to veterans is insufficient. Indeed, the department is aware of that, for on June 30, 1965, it created a relief fund. It is called a relief fund because it is meant to be used to add a supplement to the monthly pension.

This fund is first intended to help the pensioners secure decent housing. In fact, inadequate housing and medical care for veterans' dependents, mainly those affected by chronic sickness, as well as the economic and social consequences of a death, are among the reasons why veterans are asking for the department's services.

Moreover, this fund is important since the financial assistance for special needs or maintenance of income is insufficient to allow pensioners to be self-sufficient or to fit into our society.

We now deal with the basic policy of the Department of Veterans Affairs which is to make it possible for the pensioner to meet his own needs and to adapt himself to this society which he defended so gallantly.

Finally, this fund has been created to meet the department's objectives, namely to achieve close co-operation between the various welfare organizations and to help veterans' widows and dependents.

• (10:40 p.m.)

This prompts me to remind the hon. members that generally speaking pensioners' wives may not have had the chance to get an education or experience in handling domestic affairs, with the result that when the pensioner dies, the mother is left all by herself with no roof over her head and unable to earn her living because she never learned any trade and she lacks the experience and the know-how needed to handle her own affairs.

Mr. Speaker, the minister will say that hundreds of persons have been helped through this fund, and that it had quite willingly paid several million dollars. Nevertheless, I still maintain that this fund is being used unfairly and inadequately and that, actually, it merely serves as a front which is of no use to dependents or which serves as an excuse to convince the population that the department is taking good care of the dependents.

But in fact, experience and the many cases we have witnessed prove that this relief fund has not really assisted many people. I feel that is a pity because whereas pensions are intended to assist the veteran in readjusting to society, it is also necessary that, upon the veteran's death his dependents be assured of an income allowing them to continue living normally. They can certainly not be made to suffer the consequences of the war.

Mr. Speaker, I have in mind a case which came up this summer in the constituency of Lotbinière. For several months, a woman from Victoriaville, the wife of a pensioner, appealed, through myself and through other persons, to the Department of Veterans Affairs for supplementary assistance because she was unable to meet her obligations. The department referred her case from one office to another. Finally, as her debts were piling up, she did not know where to turn. Eventually, her creditors called on her and through the bailiff, seized all her furniture. Being ignorant of the law and as she was desperately waiting for help from the special relief fund of the department, she was, at a moment's notice, turned into the street. The afternoon this happened, she came to my office to ask me whether I had heard from the department. When she left my office in Victoriaville to return home, she was at her wits' end. When she got home, she saw the decorations and war souvenirs of her husband as well as her own clothes in garbage bags. She tried to open the door but it was bolted.

For over six months we had been asking for help from the relief fund. All we had were false hopes—it must be said—and that person found herself in the street. She went to the chief of police in an attempt to get some protection but with no success.

We took the matter in hand and it looks as if we shall soon find a solution.

I submit this case to my honourable colleagues not with the intention of annoying them but rather to make them realize the importance of adopting a new policy within that department in order to humanize the services and adjust them to human needs.

The most urgent problem of pensioned veterans is the financial one. When the department realizes this, it will certainly be possible for them to face life more optimistically.

I urgently ask the minister to consider increasing pensions in order to bring them more in keeping with the cost of living, so that the pensioner, instead of being disadvantaged for having risked his life for his country, may live decently.

Also, the government should have more contacts with pensioners, in order to humanize its services and to treat pensioners as human beings and not numbers. There are 945,200 pensioners in Canada. It is impossible for the department to provide a human and personal service to the veterans with the present structures. Even if the department had enough money to help veterans, it should nevertheless reform its structures and humanize its services.

As there are 832,600 veterans from the Second World War and more than 112,600 from the First World War and only 29,800 pensions are paid to veterans or their dependents, the comments I have just made are of the utmost importance. If we want to help our veterans, we must leave no stone unturned to ensure the widow, the mother, the spouse or the dependents of the pensioner the same security as any civilian would have in a similar situation.

Mr. Speaker, if our government wants to be fair, it will deal in a more human fashion with those soldiers who went abroad to fight for their country. However, if it wants merely to grant pensions as it pleases, without regard to the individual needs of each family or to maintain only statutory services provided indiscriminately, I maintain that those services shall not achieve their purpose.

We should, in my opinion, humanize these services, so that scandals and glaring injustices, such as those suffered by the widow of a veteran in Victoriaville, do not happen again.

[English]

Mr. Barney Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this debate rather belatedly. I had not intended to, but as the debate went on I could not help but be moved by many of the appeals and references that were made. It is rather interesting, because we are not a military people. This is not our tradition, and sometimes we are inclined to forget the value of the military and of those who have served. But in recent weeks I think many of us have become aware of the value and the outstanding service of the armed forces which serve in peacetime as well as in wartime.

There are times when we are really inordinately proud and grateful for the armed services, and I think the past few weeks have indicated their value to us in peacetime as well as in war. They have served with a quiet dignity, unobtrusively, in a vital role, efficient and well trained for the dreadful tasks which they have been called upon to fulfil, because of that role which is becoming traditional for them, that of peacekeepers.

I had to chuckle a bit at some of the rhetoric used in the debate. I do not mean this with disrespect, because I think back, Mr. Speaker, as you must think back 25 or 30 years to old friends who did not return, who are still there, who probably spoke of politicians who stood up in this House of Commons and chuckled and laughed at them, and probably would chuckle and laugh that you and I might be here now. They did not think of themselves as heroes. They died, sometimes heroically, sometimes otherwise. They were men, above all, who realized that war is not glorious. Some men are glorious in wartime and some are not.

I think of good Canadians, good Canadian names—I just started jotting down a few of them—who are still there: Leszinski, Sawyer, Worthington, Tessier, Rosenthal, Harris, Gugeon, Gagnon, Rayner, Stoll, Lefradi. This is a list of great Canadian names.

• (10:50 p.m.)

An hon. Member: There are others, too.

Mr. Danson: There are many others, of course. One could go on mentioning them almost forever. I wanted to join this debate in order to mention some of those names, to remember those people and to pay tribute to the troops who served not only in wartime but in peacetime.

The motion moved by my hon. friend from Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) is a very good one and it is with considerable pride that I support it.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, even at this late hour I feel compelled to add some words to those that have been spoken today. The motion moved by my colleague, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), is timely in that today has really been the first occasion upon which this House has had the opportunity of discussing veterans affairs after the report of the committee in June. This report was tabled in the House toward the latter part of that month and this subject was not discussed, and could not be discussed, on the general debate we had at the beginning of the session.

I think it is apposite that the House should be discussing today, on the first opposition allotted day, the recommendations of the committee. I had hoped to hear more discussion of the proposals in those recommendations instead of some of the very fine speeches which were made, which were really more in the nature of Remembrance Day speeches. By saying that I do not want to detract from them at all.

I want to underline one or two points that are strictly germane to the motion. First of all, in the report there is one unfortunate, shall we say, omission that has to do, not with the Hong Kong prisoners of war but with the ordinary prisoners of war. Of that group I think I am the only one who is a member of this House. Over the past several years, certainly when I was attending the committee at the time it was hearing representations with regard to the Woods committee report and on other occasions, I have made it a point to urge upon the ministry—and I was hoping during my brief tenure as head of that particular ministry several years ago to initiate the program about which I want to speak—the view that treatment services and/or the Pension Commission should organize a program of calling in all prisoners of war with respect to whom they might not have had a recent, complete medical report.

I had occasion this past summer to be involved with my regimental association. It is composed of members who served in World War I, of the 50th Battalion, and who served in World War II, of the King's Own Calgary Regiment. There I saw the changes in some of my older colleagues in that association and the changes in those of that regiment who are contemporaries of mine. One could see subtle signs, over the years, of some rather disturbing evidence of physical impairment. Some of those men were with me in prisoner of war camps and they are now suffering the accumulated results of the hardships of their experience.

It is not only about those in the army that I wish to speak. I want to talk about all those who were prisoners of war. It is fair to say that the air force prisoners far outnumbered the prisoners taken from the army—I am speaking of ground troops—yet strangely enough, a greater number of army troops have organized into associations which appeared before the committee through their duly appointed representatives. I want again to insist upon the urgency and the value of calling all these men, who are not recorded with the Pension Commission, who are not receiving pensions and who have not in recent years been in for a medical examination. This was done with regard to the Hong Kong prisoners of war. This is how that movement started.

I say without fear of equivocation that the officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs were absolutely astounded by the results of the examination. Fortunately, they did not wait for those men to come in on their hands and knees suffering from the debility they now have. This is what we should do. We can get a salutary lesson or definition of what constitutes the long-term results of privation from men who were in this position for up to five years, and others for shorter periods but who had rather more severe experiences. That is my first point.

My second point is in connection with war veterans allowance. This has been a very sore point all along the line for many Canadians who are expatriates of this country, a great many from World War I and many more from World War II. I have personal knowledge of this matter and I have also heard the officials and representatives of the Canadian Veterans Association in the United Kingdom. These Canadian veterans would qualify for allowance except that they have not resided in Canada for the minimum period. They are denied the war veterans allowance. These people are suffering financially. They do not have the means to return to Canada for one year. Some are married and some have reached the ages of 65, 70 and over.

For some unknown reason there is a bureaucratic insistence that there will be a problem with Canadian veterans residing in the United States, flocking back to Canada. There would be no such problem. Nothing could be further from the truth. In my opinion it is an academic, administrative roadblock which has been set up to deny justice to these men living in the United Kingdom.

The government is prepared to pay war veterans allowance to members of allied forces who qualify and who are living in Canada, but denies this allowance to Canadian veterans living abroad. Some of these men married and are raising their families abroad. I do not understand why the government is continuing its blind persistence in denying these men that to which they are rightfully entitled.

My last point is the same as that raised by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). It is with regard to the Canadian parks and memorials in France and Belgium. We hear disquieting rumours that for reasons of economy the administration of the Department of Veterans Affairs in London is being closed. Some of this administration is being transferred to the British ministry of pensions, and the parks and memorials will be transferred to the Commonwealth War Graves Commission.

I am sure Your Honour, as former chairman of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, knows the value of memorials such as Vimy and how these memorials depend upon inspired Canadian maintenance and pride. I do not say this because the Commonwealth War Graves Commission cannot look after cemeteries; they are doing a tremendous job. But this is a real symbol for Canadians. If there is a symbol in Europe that portrays the valour and nationhood of Canadian forces during World War I, it is the Vimy memorial; yet we are prepared to transfer it. In any event, this is what we are informed is likely to be the case. I do not think it should be transferred to the Commonwealth War Graves Commission for maintenance and care. If it costs a little more, it is worth it. I commend this motion to hon. members and to the government for early action.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak for long at this late hour. What I have to say is the reiteration of what I have said in the House before, and what others have said. I support increases in war disability pensions and improvements for veterans at the earliest possible opportunity. In this regard I welcomed the tabling, on the opening day of the new session, of a list of measures projected for the session. Item 22 was entitled "Veterans pension legislation". Should this measure be introduced tomorrow, it would come none too soon for many of the veterans in this country.

A few weeks ago I visited the Beatty Street armoury in Vancouver. This armoury has been used during the summer months, very successfully most of the time, as a hostel for transient young people. However, when I called by on a spot-check, the administration of the hostel was clearly in trouble and unable to handle a situation wherein creatures known as yippies had descended like a baleful plague. This armoury, from which young men had been sent to at least three wars to defend democracy and, indeed, to defend the right to dissent in freedom, the right to join any or no political party, was occupied by a number of these people who had draped revolutionary flags and symbols over the monuments of the minders of Canada's military dead.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The Chair does not wish to interrupt the hon. member, but this is not a debate on the general question of veterans or the armed forces. Although as much latitude as possible has been allowed, it is the duty of the occupant of the chair to remind the hon. member that he should stay as closely as possible to the motion and the amendment which are before the House.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Mr. Perrault: Your Honour's remarks really bring me to the point I was about to make. When I objected to what I considered to be acts of desecration, one strapping young man met my protest with the rejoinder, "It's a free country, isn't it?" I replied, "Yes, it is a free country; free because other young men, at other times laid their lives and their careers on the line and died to keep it free." But some lived; they came home with their bodies shattered and with their hopes for a productive, happy life, blasted. These are the people we are talking about in this debate. Many of them qualified for war disability pensions, pensions whose real purchasing power has declined steadily through the months and years. We have to do something for them now, soon, and I am confident that we will.

The report of the Veterans Affairs Committee was a good report. Its suggestion that there should be changes in the adjudication and appeal procedure was advanced with clarity and logic. Changes in the basic rate of pension were also proposed. I think we can all support proposals of this kind. Specific improvements were recommended. I repeat, the report was a good report. Now let us as legislators get on with the job—because deeds, not words, count at this time.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief because I did not intend to take part in the debate.

I have carefully gone over the motion introduced by the official opposition.

As several of the previous speakers have pointed out, this is a very important motion, Mr. Speaker. I am not a veteran but having been in close contact with many of them over the years, I have become aware of their problems and the weaknesses of the present legislation or of its application.

From 1939 to 1945, the veterans of today were asked to defend, in Canada, or elsewhere, Christianity, civilization and democracy. Considering that only 27,800 pensioners, dependents or survivors now benefit from the veterans legislation, we understand why many of them are not satisfied with its application since they could never obtain anything.

Mr. Speaker, I want to recall that during the various inquiries, veterans have asked the government to amend the legislation in order to correct injustices. The first comment which I would like to make in this respect deals with appeals. On several occasions, I have noted that the present appeals system under the Veterans Act is absolutely antiquated and unfair, and this is due solely to an arbitrary bureaucracy.

On page 10 of the brief submitted to the Standing Committee of Veterans Affairs by the War Amputes of Canada, the following can be read:

The Canadian Association of the War Amputees of Canada accepts forthwith the conclusions of the Woods committee in this connection and asks the government to establish an independent Appeal Board ... Under the procedure now applicable to the Commission, no appeal can be made in such cases. One commissioner alone studies the applications; he then obtains the signature of the two other commissioners. If the decision is negative, it is all over!

In another brief submitted by veterans themselves in 1969, there is reference to the establishment of an appeal board, and this time, the same recommendation appears at the beginning of the report submitted to the commitee. One can read in it the following:

... an appeal body above the Pension Commission.

Having studied the Speech from the Throne, we cannot wait for the establishment of this appeal board, nor for detailed changes in the administration of the veterans legislation. I keep on quoting:

Another basic principle in pension administration is that it is not only necessary to do justice but also to give the impression that justice has been done. The Woods Committee report shows clearly that under the present system where appeals are heard by the commissioners themselves, this impression is not given. An appeal board would fill this serious gap in the legislation. The Woods Committee has spoken highly of the comments of the Royal Commission on Governmental Administration (Glassco Commission) as to the necessity of protecting the citizens against arbitrary decisions rendered against them when they cannot appeal to administrative courts—

As it is the case for veterans, Mr. Speaker.

In his letter addressed to the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) on January 6, 1970, the chairman of the Veterans Committee of the Royal Canadian Legion was dealing with the same matter.

So, if the government has not seen fit to adopt all the recommendations contained in the briefs previously submitted by veterans associations, it should, I believe, at least accept the most urgent ones.

Before concluding, I wish to draw attention to the fact that the veterans—and God knows they are still willing to work when they are able to do so—should be able to profit from earnings gained through small jobs that they can still do in spite of the handicaps that the war has brought to them.

According to present legislation, when a veteran earns a supplementary income, his pension is discontinued so as to punish him for having had the courage to earn a few pennies.

At page 2 of the brief submitted by the war amputees of Canada in April 1969, section 2 reads as follows:

No interference and no obstacle should hamper the disabled veteran who wants to better his lot through a training course or any other apprenticeship in order to take peacetime employment, so that the money he earns through his remaining capacities should not in any way deprive him of his right to a pension. In other words, his pension is paid to him because of his disability in connection with the unskilled labour market. If he can earn his living with talents acquired through his remaining capacities, he should not suffer the smallest loss on account of it.

Mr. Speaker, it is not normal that veterans able to work because of their talents and good will should be penalized by a decrease in their pension as soon as they can earn money.

If we want to keep the promises already made to the veterans when we asked for their services from 1939 up to 1945 in order to defend Canada, it seems to me that we should not deceive them today by forcing them to remain idle and by punishing them for the money they were courageous enough to earn.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to be the spokesman of the great number of veterans who reside in my riding. I remember that they used to invite me every year to the Remembrance Day ceremony in honour of their brothers who fell on the battlefield.

This year, this ceremony will take place on November 15.

• (11:10 p.m.)

I already know they are going to ask me to tell the government they want greater attention to the matter of the pension paid to them, which is clearly inadequate in a period of inflation.

I remember one veteran. In fact, I remember the day my brother, a soldier during the 1914-18 war, returned to Canada. The date was December 16, 1918. I was then five years old and had waited up until 1 a.m. to see him arrive. I had been making my mother tell me of what was going on, of the perils to which our soldiers were exposed. I was therefore anxious to witness the return of this man whom I barely knew since I was scarcely two years old when he had enlisted. I could hardly wait to see him with my own eyes and to hear with my own ears the tales he had to tell. My whole life was deeply influenced by those events. Since then I have always had the greatest respect for these brave young men who sacrificed the best years of their lives for the safeguard of our liberties.

We owe them a debt of deep gratitude and our most profound respect. We must pay them back not just with words but also with deeds. Effectively, we must give them the financial assistance needed to enable them to enjoy in their own right the privilege of liberty and security.

We may feel proud to say that our sons died on the field of honour. In Europe, our war cemeteries are well kept by the local populations. Last May I had the opportunity of visiting the one near Rouen, and I was quite impressed to see the great respect the people of this region have for Canadian soldiers, and the gratitude they feel for Canadian veterans who twice defended the freedom that they enjoy now.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the motion now under study and the related amendment should be supported by all members, because Canada can afford to grant greater benefits to veterans than those they enjoy now. This very evening, when I did not expect to participate in this debate, I had the visit of a veteran who told me of his problems.

I told him: Today, the opposition introduced a motion about veterans. After discussing the matter with him, I decided to come back to the House to become the spokesman for this person and for all veterans who, in 1970, truly deserve a better deal than they have been getting so far.

I sincerely hope that Parliament will act more promptly, so that the older veterans may also, in the last years of their lives, have the security and freedom for which they have so valiantly fought. I am convinced that, in this way, we shall give their children definite proof that the country truly wants to recognize the sacrifices that their parents have made to preserve freedom.

That might also serve as an example for our youth who could also be inspired by the confidence shown by the adults in their country, which they want to continue to build not for the old who are going to die tomorrow but for the young who will be happy to live there in peace, while assuring to veterans the security they need.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, there appear to be no other members who wish to take part in the debate at this time. Therefore, I now move that this House do adjourn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On motion of Mr. Gray the House adjourned at 11.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, October 28, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House of a slight change in the business that will be called today. As the result of an agreement with the other parties, the first items of government business to be called will be orders Nos. 12, 13, 14 and 15 for the setting up of committees. It is expected that these motions will be carried without debate.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions between the House Leaders on this matter. It is agreeable to this party to proceed as stated by the Government House Leader.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, it is quite agreeable. It would be even more agreeable if the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry would put forward a motion to refer the draft agreement with the Soviet Union to the Fisheries Committee.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL SECURITY

PROCLAMATION OF WAR MEASURES ACT—SECRET INFORMATION—POSSIBLE REPLACEMENT OF QUEBEC GOVERNMENT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. A brief explanation for this request is as follows: During the debate on the motion of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to approve the proclamation of the War Measures Act and the Order in Council made under it, ministers of the Crown referred to alleged information in the possession of the government which the Prime Minister has so far refused to divulge to the House and to the people of Canada.

• (2:10 p.m.)

In recent days there have been rumours allegedly originating with persons in high places in Ottawa respecting the possible replacement of the Bourassa government of Quebec by a provisional government, rumours which the Prime Minister has refused either to confirm or deny. The result is widespread confusion about a crucial matter affecting our democratic institutions, and speculation about many well-known Canadians whose reputation is thereby damaged.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the matter of the secret information to which ministers of the Crown referred during the debate on Friday, October 16, and the matter of the rumours regarding a possible replacement of the Bourassa government of Quebec by a provisional government, be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for a full and thorough inquiry and to report thereon to this House.

Mr. Speaker: As hon. members know, unanimous consent is required before such a motion can be moved.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimity.

CPR PENSION PLAN

Question No. 20—Mr. Skoberg:

1. What is the total amount of unfunded liability in the Canadian Pacific Railways' Pension Plan?

2. Has the Canadian Pacific Railways' Pension Plan been registered under the Pension Benefits Standards Act and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. It is not considered appropriate for the Government to make publice information obtained pursuant to the administration of the Pension Benefits Standards Act concerning the details of a private pension plan.

2. No. The company has claimed that the Act does not apply to its pension plan; discussions have been taking place to resolve differences of opinion and the company was given an extension of time to amend the plan to conform with requirements of the Act.

4. One hundred and five, average $26.69.

SPECIFIC ROLES ASSIGNED TO CFB SHEARWATER

Question No. 82—Mr. Forrestall:

During the next three years, what are the specific roles assigned to CFB Shearwater?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): At the present time, and for the foreseeable future, the role of the Canadian Forces Base Shearwater is to provide base and airfield facilities for both fixed wing and rotary wing anti-submarine aircraft, as well as facilities for training and utility squadrons. Shearwater is also used as an alternate airfield for the long range Maritime patrol aircraft operating from CFBs Summerside and Greenwood and as a terminus for Transport Command service flights.

MARITIME COMMAND—REPLACEMENT FOR ARGUS AIRCRAFT

Question No. 124—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Has the government decided on the choice of equipment to replace or augment the role of the Argus Maritime Patrol aircraft and, if so, when can an announcement be expected?

2. On the basis of present technological information, what is the anticipated (a) air-frame life of the Argus (b) engine life of the Argus (c) efficient useful life of electronic equipment?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): 1. No.

2. (a) The predicted life of the Argus airframe was 11,000 hrs. However, the airframe is a fail-safe or damage tolerant structure which makes the risk of catastrophic failure of the primary structure remote. Thus the airframe life is determined by the economics of maintenance. The manufacturer has stated that appearance of cracks in the primary structure should not occur before 15,000 hrs. At the present flying rate all Argus aircraft in the fleet will have flown 15,000 hrs or more by 1975-77. (b) There is no specified life for the Argus engine. Therefore, the engine life will be determined by the economy of maintenance and the acceptability of the operational performance of the aircraft. (c) This information is classified.

SEARCH AND RESCUE—WEST COAST

Question No. 147—Mr. Mather:

What is the present force of ships, boats and aircraft on the Pacific Coast for air-sea rescue efforts?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Three Buffalo aircraft, three Labrador helicopter, three 95-foot cutters, three 40-foot cutters, and three life-boats are established on the Pacific Coast for primary search and rescue duties. In addition, all other Canadian Forces aircraft and Federal Government vessels in the area may be called upon for search and rescue tasks when required.

AMOUNT OF UNION DUES SUPPORTING POLITICAL PARTIES

Question No. 165—Mr. Robinson:

Does the government have statistics on the amount of union dues directly or indirectly used to support political parties and, if so, for each year 1965 to 1970 inclusive, how much has been so allotted to each political party?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): No.

LEGISLATION TO OUTLAW PYRAMID SELLING SCHEMES

Question No. 198—Mr. Robinson:

Will the government consider the advisability of legislation to outlaw "pyramid selling" schemes of every nature and kind such as those cosmetics, household commodities, food products, supplements and land?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Careful attention will be given to this proposal in the preparation of amendments to the Combines Investigation Act which are presently being considered.

FINANCIAL PARTICIPATION BY GOVERNMENT IN LOTBINIÈRE CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 243—Mr. Fortin:

For each project to which the federal government has contributed financially since 1965 in the constituency of Lotbinière (a) what was the nature of the project (b) what was the amount invested by the federal government in each project (c) what was the amount invested by the provincial government in each project (d) were other contributions made and, if so, by whom and what was the amount?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): It is not feasible to provide aggregate information on expenditure disbursements or revenue collections for constituencies, counties or other comparable units. Government estimates are not prepared on this basis nor are records of expenditures kept in this way.

Information concerning expenditures could be supplied about specific projects or programs which are identified in a question. These, of course, would in some cases relate to a particular constituency or locality.

Motions for Papers

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Notice of Motion No. 78 is acceptable to the government.

Motion No. 78—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the report of the Canadian Transport Commission concerning the investigation into the mishap on the CNR Rivers Subdivision on April 28, 1968, where three employees were killed when the engine went through the bridge.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Jerome: Notices of Motions Nos. 6, 45, 48, 98 and 131 are acceptable to the government subject to the usual reservations concerning confidential documents and the authorization of the governments concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations and conditions expressed by the Parliamentary Secretary, is it the pleasure of the House that Notices of Motions Nos. 6, 45, 48, 98 and 131 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SURVEY OF NATIVE PEOPLE EMPLOYED IN MINING, NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Motion No. 6—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the survey undertaken by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development showing the number of native people employed in mining in the Northwest Territories as referred to by the Minister of Indian Affairs in his address in Yellowknife on November 10, 1969.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND PEOPLE OF BANKS ISLAND REGARDING OIL EXPLORATION

Motion No. 45—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence between the Government of Canada and the native people of Banks Island in the Northwest Territories regarding oil exploration.

Motion agreed to.

NEW LAND-USE REGULATIONS IN CANADA'S NORTHLAND

Motion No. 48—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all representations received by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development regarding new land-use regulations in Canada's northland.

Motion agreed to.

NORTHERN COMMUNICATION CONFERENCE, YELLOWKNIFE, N.W.T., SEPTEMBER 1970

Motion No. 98—Mr. Macquarrie:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all speeches, reports, resolutions of the northern communications conference held at Yellowknife NWT in September, 1970.

Motion agreed to

[Mr. Jerome.]

CLOSING OF DEPARTMENT VETERANS AFFAIRS OFFICE, LONDON, ENGLAND

Motion No. 131—Mr. Marshall:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all memoranda, correspondence, etc., arising out of the proposed closing of the office of the Department of Veterans Affairs in London, England.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Jerome: Would Your Honour be good enough to call Notices of Motions Nos. 2, 22, 24, 51, 60, 77 and 114 to 130 inclusive?

REPORT ON ATTENDANCE OF INDIANS

Motion No. 2—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the report on attitudes of Indian people based mainly on a visit to the Six Nations Reserve on July 16, 1969, submitted to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development by Berger, Tisdall, Clark and Lesley Ltd., as referred to at page 6 of the quarterly report on public relations activity, June, July, August, 1969 by the said Berger, Tisdall, Clark and Lesley Ltd.

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Skeena asked for this report during the past session. It was stated in the reply that since the writer had specifically requested that the confidentiality of the report be respected, the report should not be tabled. The government's stand on this matter has not changed since to permit the tabling of this report. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): The writer of the report was paid by the government to do public relations work for the department. I think the question should be put.

Mr. Speaker: Is the motion transferred for debate?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): No.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the House that I put the question? If nobody asks that it be transferred for debate I will put the motion.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

FINANCING OF PAN-AMERICAN GAMES IN WINNIPEG

Motion No. 22—Mr. Orlikow:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence between the Government of Canada and/or any minister or department and the City of Winnipeg, including the mayor, the city clerk and the city treasurer, since January 1, 1968, dealing with the financing of the Pan-American Games in Winnipeg.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the mayor of Winnipeg has indicated to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) that he considered those documents as confidential and, accordingly, as not to be tabled in the House.

[English]

In view of these circumstances, the hon. member may wish to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Orlikow: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

SUBMISSIONS TO MONTREAL MAIL TRANSPORT INQUIRY

Motion No. 24—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all memoranda, correspondence, briefs, tables and submissions presented to the Commission of Inquiry into Mail Transport in Montreal.

Mr. Barney Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this motion is similar to Motion No. 438 put by the hon. member last session. The stand taken by the commissioner at that time, as recorded in Hansard of April 29, 1970, at page 6407, has not changed. In view of these circumstances I hope the hon. member will agree to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Orlikow: No, Mr. Speaker, because my stand has not changed, either.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

REPORTS ON SOCIAL WELFARE LEGISLATION AND INCOME SECURITY

Motion No. 51—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of any reports or reviews with respect to social welfare legislation and income security prepared by or under the direction of Dr. J. W. Willard, Deputy Minister of Welfare for Canada, since June 25, 1968.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the documents concerning the legislation on social welfare and security of income, which have been drafted by the Deputy Minister of National Health and Welfare or under his direction, are a part of the revision of the social security plan in Canada and therefore they are only for the internal use of that department.

Therefore, I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I cannot agree. Let us put the question.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

REPORT OF SURVEY TEAM ON CONDITIONS SURROUNDING USE OF ANIMALS FOR EXPERIMENTAL PURPOSES

Motion No. 60—Mrs. MacInnis:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the Report of the findings of the survey team which, under the direction of Dr. H. C. Rowsell, inspected university research laboratories across the country earlier this year and made an assessment of the conditions surrounding the use of animals for experimental purposes.

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, may I refer the hon. member to the reply given to the Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers No. 255 in the last session. The hon. member was advised that the Canadian Council on Animal Care, under the direction of Dr. H. C. Rowsell, was set up by the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada. It receives support from the National Research Council and the Medical Research Council—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to interrupt the Parliamentary Secretary. He should indicate briefly whether he is prepared to have the document tabled; he cannot make a speech.

Mr. Isabelle: Mr. Speaker, the report prepared by the Canadian Council on Animal Care is confidential. For this reason my minister regrets that he is unable to produce the information requested and would ask the hon. member to withdraw her motion.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I am at a loss to understand why a report about animals used for experimentation is confidential.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Obviously when we have lengthy explanations given by Parliamentary Secretaries in response to motions for the production of documents, it is natural that hon. members who have put the motions want to explain why they feel the document should be produced. I think this indicates the virtue of having very brief explanations, if indeed they are required at all.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO POLLUTION CONTROL

Motion No. 77—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged from January, 1968 to March 1970, dealing with pollution control between the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the following Companies: Proctor and Gamble Ltd., Lever Bros. Ltd. and The Colgate-Palmolive Company Ltd.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this motion is the same as motion No. 396 of the previous session which was made an order for return on October 7, 1970, following which all relevant correspondence was tabled on October 14, 1970. In those circumstances I wonder whether the hon. member would withdraw his motion?

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, I will look at this correspondence and see whether or not I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Motion stands.

STUDY ON "PROJET DE RECHERCHE AUPRÈS DU MILIEU DÉFAVORISÉ URBAIN QUÉBECOIS" 1969-70

Motion No. 114—Mrs. MacInnis:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study undertaken by Le Centre de Planification Familiale, Montreal, in the fiscal year 1969-70 funded by the Department of National Health and Welfare on "Projet de recherche auprès du milieu défavorisé urbain Québecois".

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is an understanding in the scientific community that details pertaining to specific research projects are a matter of confidence between the researcher and the donor organization. For this reason the Department of National Health and Welfare does not make public the findings of researchers.

As the hon. member has already been provided with the list of addresses of the researchers concerned, she may wish to withdraw her motion.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I believe that since the Canadian public has financed these reports it has the right to see what it paid for.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

STUDY ON "PROJET DE RECHERCHE AUPRÈS DU MILIEU DÉFAVORISÉ URBAIN QUÉBECOIS"

Motion No. 115—Mrs. MacInnis:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study undertaken by Le Centre de Planification Familiale, Montreal, in the fiscal year 1970-71 funded by the Department of National Health and Welfare on "Projet de recherche auprès du milieu défavorisé urbain Québecois".

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as notice of motion No. 115 applies to the document already referred to in notice No. 114, and for the same reasons, I would ask the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) to withdraw her motion.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, my reply is exactly the same.

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

STUDY OF THE EFFECT OF ORAL CONTRACEPTIVES ON FOLATE METABOLISM AS RELATED TO THE OUTCOME OF SUBSEQUENT PREGNANCIES

Motion No. 116—Mrs. MacInnis:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study undertaken by St. Boniface General Hospital in the fiscal year 1969-70 funded by the Department of National Health and Welfare on "The Effect of Oral Contraceptives on Folate Metabolism as Related to the Outcome of Subsequent Pregnancies".

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): This notice of motion is similar to the others, Mr. Speaker, and for the same reasons, I shall ask the hon. member to withdraw her motion.

Mr. Speaker, with leave of the House, I would ask that notices of Motions Nos. 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129 and 130 be withdrawn for the same reasons which I gave for the preceding motions.

[English]

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, would you put the question?

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL SECURITY

CHARGES LAID UNDER WAR MEASURES ACT OR CRIMINAL CODE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice who was here a moment ago and who I hoped would be able to give the information I sought from the Prime Minister yesterday. I should like to know whether the Prime Minister, the Solicitor General or the Minister of Justice can inform the House if any charges have been laid against any of the nearly 400 persons arrested under the War Measures Act regulations for any offence created by these regulations such as being a member of the FLQ? Have any charges been laid and, if so, how many?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the Minister of Justice will be in the House in a moment or two and can answer the question.

Mr. Fairweather: That is very good of him.

TERRORISM IN QUEBEC—MEASURES TO IMPROVE ECONOMIC SITUATION

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question.

Since the province of Quebec is in a difficult economic situation on account of recent events, is the government considering the implementation of emergency measures in order to help the government of Quebec to bring the situation back to normal?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, several weeks ago we announced special measures to try and correct this situation. Perhaps there will be more. I wish simply to remind the House that the government's potential role in re-activating the economy is always relatively minor. Private enterprise, all investors and corporations must continue to co-operate, and this requires a peaceful and progressive climate.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question.

Can the Prime Minister tell us if, since last week's events, the Quebec government has called the attention of the federal government to urgent economic measures which should be taken jointly so as to improve the difficult economic situation now prevailing in Quebec?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, representations have certainly been made in that connection and we have also made some to the Quebec government.

Let us not forget, for instance, that under the development program for the Gaspé peninsula, the federal government, as pointed out so well by the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané) this summer, is ready to contribute over $250 million. That was done on the condition, of course, that the province of Quebec carry out certain projects. It is not our fault if the previous government has not done so. I hope that the present one will be successful in that regard.

[Mr. Speaker.]

CHARGES LAID UNDER WAR MEASURES ACT OR CRIMINAL CODE—DETENTIONS BEYOND SEVEN DAYS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice this question. Of the nearly 400 persons arrested under the War Measures Act regulations, how many have been charged with an offence created by those regulations such as the offence of being a member of the FLQ, or some other offence created by those regulations?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the Leader of the Opposition for being out of the House when he asked his question. The information I have from the office of the Attorney General of Quebec as of midnight last night is that the number of persons arrested and detained is 397, the number released is 259, and the number of persons still detained is 138. None of the 138 has been charged with any offence to date.

Mr. Woolliams: Good God!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Justice give any explanation why no charges have been laid against any of the nearly 400 persons arrested under the War Measures Act regulations? Is it because it has been found impractical to prefer charges in respect of offences created by the regulations?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, I think this properly lies within the jurisdiction of the Attorney General of Quebec. I take it he will be making a statement in due course giving the explanation.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I wish to make sure I understood the minister correctly. Is he saying in respect of the 390-odd persons arrested under these regulations that no charges at all have been laid to date under either the War Measures Act regulations or the Criminal Code?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am saying that in regard to the 138 persons still retained no charges have been laid under the War Measures Act or the Criminal Code.

Mr. Stanfield: Can the minister advise the House how many persons are being held beyond seven days at the request of the Minister of Justice of the province of Quebec without a charge being laid?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I asked for the details of that information yesterday and still have not obtained a reply. When I do I shall convey it to the House.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for York South wish to ask a supplementary?

Mr. Lewis: I do not know whether it is a supplementary or a direct question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member is not sure, I rather suspect it is not.

INQUIRY RESPECTING JAMES CROSS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister.

Can he tell us today if, according to the information he has, Mr. Cross, Great Britain's commercial attaché in Montreal, is still alive?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I cannot answer that question, Mr. Speaker.

WAR MEASURES ACT—STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE TO PROVINCIAL ATTORNEYS GENERAL ON PURPOSE AND INTENT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in view of the answer of the Minister of Justice to the Leader of the Opposition to the effect that no charges have been laid, could the Minister of Justice advise the House what the terms are of the warning he mentioned he has given the Attorneys General of the various provinces and whether his law officers are instructed to interpret the legislation for those Attorneys General?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker. The Attorneys General of the provinces are charged with administering the regulations under the War Measures Act just as they are charged with administering the criminal law under the Criminal Code, and they rely on their own officers for that type of advice.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I follow up this question for a moment? As I understood the Minister of Justice, he mentioned that he had warned the Attorneys General of the various provinces concerning the interpretation of the legislation. What kind of warning did he give them?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I have already stated that in the House. I suggested that the purpose and intent, as I interpret the resolution of the House, is that the emergency to which the War Measures Act and its proclamation related had to do with the FLQ in Quebec and that any use of this proclamation or the regulations beyond that purpose might well be harmful. Those are the words I conveyed to the Attorneys General across the country.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Justice whether the communications with the various provinces were in writing and, if so, would he table the letter setting out this most unusual course of interpreting a resolution on the basis of a discussion in the House of Commons? I would like to see the letter in question that he wrote because it would be a modern example of an unusual nature.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, whenever I can see someone personally or arrange that one of my senior officials see someone personally I choose to do that rather than send a letter. Mr. D. H. Christie, Deputy Attorney General of Canada, on my instructions visited the four western provinces and visited the Deputy Attorney General of each of these four western provinces. He met personally the Attorney General of the right hon. gentleman's province of Saskatchewan and the Attorney General of the province of Alberta. On his return he went to the four Atlantic provinces where he was able to communicate our feelings about the War Measures Act and ascertain their feelings about the type of legislation we should introduce in the House to replace the proclamation by some type of permanent legislation. We have been in touch in the same way personally with Attorneys General of Ontario and Quebec. I know the right hon. gentleman believes in this type of personal communication and this is the type that I have used.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Personal communication is designed to cover up the government's position.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Has the right hon. gentleman a supplementary question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I again mention that these general observations made by ministers are bound to result in answers being made.

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Diefenbaker: When there are general observations made such as we have just witnessed, I ask Your Honour to call some of the ministers of the Crown to order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I again have to ask the right hon. gentleman whether he wishes to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am pressing that point, with great respect to you. These ministers are following the course from time to time of making gratuitous observations and then Your Honour says that we cannot answer them. I am simply raising my objection thereto. Now I will ask my question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to bring to the attention of hon. members that there are limitations to the question period and that we should try to get on. I have invited the right hon. gentleman to ask his supplementary question and I have noted his comments with attention, care and sympathy.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. Now, I ask the minister, is it not a fact—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: These hon. gentlemen object to anything being discussed as a fact in this House. Is it not a fact that in the regulations that have been drawn up there is not one line or one word that indicates that the Attorneys General of the several provinces shall have other than perfect freedom in interpreting the meaning of what has been drawn up by the minister and those associated with him?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have never contested that freedom. I suggested to the Attorneys General what the view of the government was with reference to those regulations. The right hon. gentleman is perfectly right; they are free to interpret these regulations according to the advice given them by their own law officers.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask this—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There seems to be agreement between the right hon. gentleman and the minister. I will take advantage of the situation to call on the hon. member for York South.

INFORMATION LEADING TO INVOKING OF WAR MEASURES ACT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should have claimed that mine was a supplementary question and I now regret not having done so. I wish to address my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. It arises from a statement in the letter from the premier of Quebec dated October 16 and printed as an appendix to Hansard of Friday, October 16. In that letter the premier of Quebec said:

> According to the information we have and which is available to you, we are facing a concerted effort to intimidate and overthrow the government and the democratic institutions of this province—

I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether the information which Mr. Bourassa says was available to him on October 16 contained information in addition to the information which he has made public and particularly whether that information contained any reference to a possible replacement of the Bourassa government by an alleged provisional government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have given to the House repeatedly the reasons which motivated our action. I have also said that there were other bits of information.

An hon. Member: Bits, bits!

Mr. Trudeau: There were also rumours which were circulating. I said to the House that the action we took was substantiated by the three points that I have repeated to the House at least two or three times. I no not think I can go beyond that today. I would not deny that we were not aware of rumours which were circulating or of other types of information which may or not be substantiated. I am just saying that we acted on the information which is known to the House, which is known to Premier Bourassa, which is known to Mr. Drapeau and is known to ourselves as well as to all members.

Mr. Lewis: There was a phrase in the Prime Minister's statement that they had information which may or may not have been substantiated. I believe that is what I heard him say. May I ask the Prime Minister whether such information had anything at all to do with the decision to invoke the War Measures Act or whether only the information which has been made public was the basis for the invocation and, second, whether this House and the people of Canada may expect to have that additional information at any time within the next week or so when we are likely to discuss the new bill which the Minister of Justice said he would introduce in a few days?

Mr. Trudeau: I have answered repeatedly, Mr. Speaker, and I repeat again, that the information we had is available to everyone. It is a matter of a judgment made by the government of Quebec, the administration of Montreal and ourselves that there was an apprehended insurrection. This was based on knowledge of the facts that I have recited to the House, on knowledge of the facts in Quebec as they exist today and as known to anyone who knows about the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will recognize the hon. member for York South on a supplementary question and then go to the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I wish to address this question to the right hon. Prime Minister. I appreciate that the War Measures Act is worded in such a way that the mere declaration by the government that there is an apprehended insurrection makes it so, but I want to ask the Prime Minister whether the information he has given us is all the information on which he acted or did he act on any other information which he has not disclosed to us?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I acted on the information that I have been accumulating since I was three years old.

Mr. Woolliams: It took you a long time!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe that the hon. member for York South is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: I am, Mr. Speaker. Like all hon. members in this House, I am always touched by the kind of reply the Prime Minister gives on important matters. I appreciate that he is a genius but that he was a genius at three years old I did not know.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please. I believe the hon. member for York South was seeking the floor for the purpose of raising a point of order and I am wondering if this is what he wants to do.

Mr. Lewis: I have to leave the interpretation of that to Your Honour but I say to you, Sir, that when the Prime Minister is asked a question about a matter which is of great concern to all Canada for reasons that affect the War Measures Act and reasons which he says affect the future of democracy in Canada, an answer referring to information he has had since he was three years old is the kind of flighty irrelevant answer that makes his position—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is obviously not a point of order and I have to make a ruling. I do not know whether the right hon. Prime Minister wishes to rise on the same point of order or has his own, but certainly I have to rule on this one now and say it is not a point of order.

Mr. Trudeau: It was pretty much the same point of order but I might try to change it a little bit, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Sit down!

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member has been asking me repeatedly if we acted on any other information. I told him we acted on information which I put before the House and which I have repeatedly put to the hon. member and to the rest of the House. He asked if I had any other information on which I acted. Mr. Speaker, none that is relevant to this question. I have, I repeat, accumulated information for many, many years, but I do not expect that the members of this House wish me to recite to them everything I have learned since I was, as I say, three years old.

An hon. Member: You haven't any information.

WAR MEASURES ACT—REQUEST BY QUEBEC TO CONTINUE APPLICATION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Has the government of the province of Quebec requested the federal government to maintain the emergency measures now in force until all the FLQ cells have been dismantled and Mr. Laporte's murderers and Mr. Cross's kidnappers have been captured?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not believe that any request has been made in such specific terms, Mr. Speaker, but I must say that discussions are under way between the authorities of the province of Quebec and ourselves on the specific question of determining for what period of time in their estimation it will be necessary to maintain this special legislation. To my knowledge, this question has not yet been solved. It is to a large extent a matter of police requirements, as interpreted by the people's representatives, the politicians.

WAR MEASURES ACT—STATUS OF THOSE LIBERATED

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Matane): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Could he favourably consider the possibility of making a statement to defend those who were freed following their arrest, so that they will understand that the temporary restriction of their freedom was necessary to cure an evil, but that they must not be ostracized by the community in which they are living solely because they were detained several hours?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I can give a satisfactory answer to the hon. member, but I think that it is now sufficient to say that surely among those arrested, under special legislation the enforcement of which was necessary, as stated by the hon. member, to cure an evil, there were some perfectly innocent and honourable people, and I hope that the fact that they were arrested will not be held against them nor against those who arrested them in good faith.

Beyond that, of course, I can only repeat what the Minister of Justice stated, namely that charges will be laid against those who are deemed guilty of reprehensible action, if there is sufficient evidence.

ADOPTION OF ADDITIONAL MEASURES TO FIND JAMES CROSS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Could the Prime Minister tell us whether talks are now going on between the federal government and the Quebec government about the taking of additional measures considering the long period of time that Mr. Cross has been held, so that he could be found as soon as possible?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The whole question of delays has naturally been discussed between the governments and this is included in the facts the governments and the House will hear when we introduce the legislation aimed at replacing the one that is now in effect.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I have another supplementary question.

Could the Prime Minister indicate if, when tabling the special bill on these measures, he is planning to bring the House up to date on this matter?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that someone on the government side, the Minister of Justice or myself perhaps, will give a full explanation on this matter and, when certain delays are incorporated into the bill, we shall have to explain to the House why we feel they are necessary.

WAR MEASURES ACT—DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN FEDERAL AND QUEBEC GOVERNMENTS AND MONTREAL AUTHORITIES BEFORE INVOCATION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in light of the Prime Minister's insistence upon the importance of the requests of the government of the province of Quebec and of the city of Montreal, could he advise the House what discussions took place between authorities of the federal government and of the two other governments immediately prior to the invocation of the War Measures Act, and were the two letters in question, which coincidentally arrived in Ottawa—

Mr. Trudeau: The two what?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The two letters in question which coincidentally or concurrently arrived in Ottawa—in any way prompted by a request from the federal government for such letters?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, there had been a great deal of consultation between the three levels of government in the days preceding the proclamation of the War Measures Act, and the government of Quebec, the administration in Montreal and our own government were very much concerned with the question of whether or not it would be necessary to bring new criminal powers to bear for the administration of justice in the province of Quebec. I believe it is fair to say all governments were reluctant to do so, but that the date was one which was determined by the date on those letters. It was a decision of the province of Quebec to choose that particular time and to send us the letter at that particular time. When we received it, we decided to act.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Was there any suggestion by the federal government that the letters should be sent to the government of Canada asking it to act, since the two letters seem to have arrived at about the same time?

Mr. Trudeau: That is very understandable, Mr. Speaker, since—I repeat—there was constant consultation between the two governments and the city of Montreal. There was, I repeat, a reluctance on the part of all governments, and particularly on our part, to invoke these special measures, but there was a point in time where this crisis did build up, and where the facts that I have repeated to this House became even more important. The dangers of turmoil and confusion in the province of Quebec were even greater, and it was at that point that the letters were sent and we acted.

WAR MEASURES ACT—RIGHT TO COUNSEL AFTER ARREST

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member from Lafontaine wish to ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Georges-C. Lachance (Lafontaine): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary to the Prime Minister.

I would ask him if, under the War Measures Act and the special regulations, the right of an individual arrested or jailed to be represented by counsel, as soon as possible after his arrest, has been suspended?

Mr. Lewis: The answer is yes.

[English]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker, even though the hon. member is asking for a legal opinion, but I was forestalled by the hon. member for York South.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

APPREHENDED INSURRECTION—INDEPENDENT COMMISSION TO ASCERTAIN FACTS AND INFORM PUBLIC

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the continuing concern in the country for a full and complete statement on the nature of the apprehended insurrection, are the Prime Minister and his government giving consideration to the establishment of an independent commission that would be able to ascertain the facts related to this apprehended insurrection on an objective basis and present them to the public in such a way as to make all the facts clear to them?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. I repeat for the umpteenth time that the facts on which we acted are known to the people. If the politicians of distant provinces are not aware of them, perhaps they should ask their colleagues in the province of Quebec to explain them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure to whom the Prime Minister was referring in his answer. I directed the question to him because there seems to be some confusion within his own cabinet with respect to this information.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary I would like to ask the Prime Minister.

Is he aware of René Levesque's Hallucination program and does he intend to take it into consideration?

Mr. Trudeau: I never heard of it, Mr. Speaker.

WAR MEASURES ACT—LEGALITY OF FINGERPRINTING OF THOSE ARRESTED

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary was addressed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice yesterday by way of notice. Since those who were arrested under the War Measures Act appear to have been fingerprinted and photographed and none of them has been charged with any offence, has the minister called to the attention of the authorities in Quebec the fact that there is no justification for such fingerprinting under the Identification of Criminals Act unless charges are laid?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the words in that statute speak for themselves, and the hon. member's submission has been transmitted.

QUEBEC STATEMENT ON ALLEGED PLOT TO ESTABLISH PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question.

In this morning's Le Devoir, Mr. Claude Ryan directly accuses the Prime Minister and his government of making up the story of a conspiracy to overthrow Mr. Bourassa and replace him with an interim government.

Is it the intention of the Prime Minister to make a specific statement in connection with this conspiracy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, by an extraordinary coincidence, I was just reading this story when the question was asked.

Mr. Ryan says the government panicked. I see that he himself, in his article, refers to "errand boys" and "top level sources". For Mr. Ryan to speak English is evidence enough that he himself is feeling panic.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: I only add, Mr. Speaker, that this same journalist is urging the other journalists to identify the "top level sources" which gave them the information. I would be delighted if the journalists were to identify the "top level sources" on which they always base their false reports, but I am surprised to see that it is a journalist who is asking other journalists to disclose their sources, and I am delighted about that.

INDUSTRY

FINANCIAL SETTLEMENT WITH DOSCO SHAREHOLDERS—SUBMISSION TO HOUSE

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last I directed a question to the Prime Minister which he took as notice. At that time I asked the Prime Minister whether, prior to any government financial settlement with the shareholders of DOSCO, the matter would be brought before the House for approval and whether the list of DOSCO shareholders will be made available along with the dates on which those individuals acquired their shares. I see the appropriate minister is in the House today. Could he answer that question?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I understand that an agreement has been reached between the shareholders and the Dosco Co. As far as the possibility of submitting to the House the text of that agreement is concerned, I am in touch with the Department of Justice in order to determine whether that could be done at present.

[English]

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, one wonders whether Trudeaumania has changed to Trudeauphobia. Since the Prime Minister indicated that the appropriate minister would handle this question, why has the answer not been given by the Minister of Justice who is responsible for this transfer of shares?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I raise a further point of order. Because of the roster system introduced by the Prime Minister into the House, we are required to wait for an answer until the appropriate minister is in the House. When they show up, when the two ministers are here and the wrong one answers, I think it is about time the roster system was straightened out.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO INCREASE PENSIONS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Prime Minister. As a result of the expression of unanimity shown in the House yesterday in supporting the need for increases to veterans, will the right hon. gentleman now act to introduce legislation on veterans pensions and social security to relieve the economic plight of disabled veterans and other sections of society?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marshall: Also, would he please indicate when we can expect this legislation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Veterans Affairs stated very ably yesterday the government's position in this matter.

Mr. Hees: He said it would take a very long time.

Mr. Marshall: Since the answer of the Minister of Veterans Affairs was not very clear, would the Prime Minister assure the House that this legislation will be given the highest degree of priority in view of the list of legislation now before the House?

FINANCE

PRIME INTEREST RATE—REPLY BY BANKS TO OPINION EXPRESSED BY MINISTER—PROFIT MARGIN LEGISLATION

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Have the minister's views regarding the interest rate levels of the chartered banks been directly communicated to the banks? If so, has he received a reply? If he has not directly communicated with the banks, has he received a reply from the banks regarding the opinions that he has expressed?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question yesterday. I have been directly in touch with the banks and I have not received a reply.

Any reply would, of course, take the form of action rather than the form of correspondence.

Mr. Saltsman: In view of the statement attributed to a spokesman for the Bank of Nova Scotia indicating that a reduction in lending rates would have to be matched by a corresponding cut in interest rates paid on savings deposits, which would indicate that the banks are not prepared to reduce their profit margins, does the minister intend to bring in legislation to limit the profit margins of banks?

Mr. Benson: No, Mr. Speaker.

WAR MEASURES ACT—PAYMENT BY QUEBEC FOR SERVICES OF ARMED FORCES

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

In view of the request of the Premier of Quebec for the services of the armed forces in that province, can the Prime Minister tell us whether Quebec will have to pay the total cost of operations scheduled up to April 1971, or whether the Department of National Defence or the federal government will agree to pay for the protection of one of its provinces, in this instance Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the matter is a legal one, but if I can reply, I believe the National Defense Act provides that, when a province requests the assistance of the Armed Forces in the form of civil assistance, the expenses of the operation are borne by that province.

Mr. La Salle: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

May I ask the Prime Minister whether, when it was contemplated to send the armed forces to Quebec the federal government informed the Quebec authorities that they would have to bear the cost?

Mr. Trudeau: I do not think that this question has been raised, Mr. Speaker. It may have been but, as a matter of principle, the province of Quebec is supposed to know the law also.

[English]

WAR MEASURES ACT—PAYMENT BY QUEBEC FOR SERVICES OF ARMED FORCES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question to avoid any confusion, or any more confusion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member had better sit down then.

Mr. Stanfield: Could the minister indicate whether any charges have been laid against any of the persons who were arrested under the War Measures Act regulations but have been released? He previously told the House that no charges have been laid against those still detained. Have any charges been laid against those who were arrested and have been released?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I was going on the assumption that those who were released were released without having been charged. I will confirm that at the earliest opportunity, perhaps tomorrow, for the hon. gentleman.

WAR MEASURES ACT—VANCOUVER POLICE REFUSAL OF PERMISSION TO VIET NAM COMMITTEE TO HOLD MARCH

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. As the police in Vancouver have refused permission to the Viet Nam Committee to hold a march and rally this Saturday, despite the fact that such permission has been granted twice a year on a Saturday for the past five years, will the minister inquire into the matter with a view to ascertaining if this refusal is an abuse of the present regulations under the War Measures Act?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker, because the inquiry should properly be addressed to the Attorney General of British Columbia.

Mrs. MacInnis: Since the minister has not yet established that personal contact with the Attorney General of British Columbia—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. member for Prince Albert.

WAR MEASURES ACT—RECEIPT BY PRIME MINISTER OF NAMES OF THOSE DETAINED OR RELEASED

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether or not he receives a list of the names of those who are being detained or have been detained and whether he also is informed from day to day of the names of those released?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The answer is no to both questions, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister get in touch with the government of Quebec and secure this information, for I think Canadians as a whole are entitled to know more than they know at the present time?

Mr. Trudeau: There is no need to, Mr. Speaker; this is not a presidential system. I have ministers to do that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Is that a change of policy?

Mr. Forrestall: The Prime Minister makes a joke of it, as usual.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the Prime Minister's attitude. I ask him whether or not he will get in touch with the government of Quebec in this connection. It is not a question of the presidential system, of which he, of course, has exceptional knowledge, besides having the desire to invoke it.

Mr. Trudeau: Perhaps there is a difference between my government and that of the right hon. gentleman. The difference is that I have confidence in my ministers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are two minutes left before the end of the question period.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I hope the Prime Minister will not forget what he said today.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH AFRICA—CANADIAN POLICY RESPECTING COMMERCIAL ACTIVITIES

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the minister's attention been drawn to the signing of a commercial agreement between Air Canada and South African Airlines at the very time the government has requested another Crown company, Polymer, to divert itself of investments in the Republic of South Africa? Can the minister help a simple-minded person like me to rationalize this conflict of policy?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it has not been the policy of the Canadian government to discourage trade or any other commercial activities between South Africa and Canada.

ELECTION EXPENSES

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That a Special Committee be established to consider the question of the limitation and control of election expenses in Canada and to report from time to time its observations and opinions thereon;

That the Committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records; to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House; to print from day to day such papers and evidence as may be ordered by the Committee; and to delegate to subcommittees any of its powers, except the power to report directly to the House;

That the evidence adduced by the Committee during the past session in relation thereto be referred to the said Committee; and

That the members of the Committee be designated at a later date.

FEDERAL COURT

MEASURE RESPECTING CONSTITUTION, JURISDICTION, ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-172, respecting the Federal Court of Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: As hon. members know, a considerable number of motions have been proposed for consideration of the House at this time. The Chair has closely studied all these motions. I should indicate to the House that I have reservations concerning three motions about which I suggest there might be procedural difficulties, Nos. 1, 2 and 19. No. 1 stands in the name of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and No. 2 is consequential thereon. This is the first one about which the Chair has reservations.

I am not sure whether the hon. member for Calgary North wants to deal with the matter from a procedural standpoint at this time. I suggest to him that this is an attempt to introduce an amendment of substance by way of an amendment to the interpretation clause of the bill. This is contrary to the practice of the House. This is my preliminary observation which I would like to put for the consideration of the hon. member for Calgary North. As I said, No. 2 is dependent on No. 1. If No. 1 cannot be put, then No. 2 cannot be put.

There are no objections to any of the other motions proposed by the hon. member for Calgary North or any other hon. members with the exception of No. 19 proposed by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner). It appears to be faulty in some respects, perhaps not substantially, but I do have some difficulties. For the moment, we might deal with No. 1 which stands in the name of the hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I think Your Honour has raised the question as to whether amendments Nos. 1 and 2 are in order procedurally. My first point, which does not put me on stronger ground, is that these amendments were made and studied at the committee level. I will briefly state the purpose of the amendments.

The federal court has been defined in the Federal Court Act. What I have attempted to do in amendments Nos. 1 and 2 is to extend the definition of federal court.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Basically, a federal court has the jurisdiction set out in the bill. The superior courts of the provinces, the trial courts, and the appeal courts would have concurrent jurisdiction. In other words, both those courts would have the same jurisdiction as the federal court, as defined in the act. A matter could, therefore be dealt with before a federal court in accordance with the terms and conditions of the jurisdiction or could be dealt with before a trial court. I submit this goes to the substance of the bill.

This matter was not raised in committee. There was a vote in committee and I point out to Your Honour that it was an even vote. The decision was made by the Chairman. The point I am now trying to explain is the jurisdiction of the court as we find it in the act. If that is not accepted, I bring to the attention of Your Honour that I am suggesting directly or indirectly, that the jurisdiction of the trial courts and courts of appeal do go to the very substance of the bill. This is a very important matter. Three or four witnesses called on this point supported this position. I, therefore, submit these amendments are in order.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that perhaps the argument he has made was submitted in a manner that is out of order from a procedural standpoint. The hon. member stated the amendment he proposes goes to the substance of the bill. I appreciate that. This is why I am worried about the matter.

I respectfully suggest to the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) it is not good procedure to try to introduce a substantive amendment by way of modification of the interpretation clause. I doubt whether a precedent can be found in our practice. I have not been able to find one where a substantive amendment was effected by a modification of the interpretation clause. I have studied the matter very closely. I suggest with respect to the hon. member that I do not think I can vary the opinion I expressed when the matter was raised in the first instance.

Earlier this year I dealt with this matter at some length. I believe it was on May 21. There is a report of a ruling of the Chair in Votes and Proceedings for May 21 dealing with a similar situation. I went into the background of this matter from a procedural standpoint and at that time I reached the conclusion that this kind of amendment could not be moved. I suggest to the House that I have to reach the same conclusion at this time. There may be some other way that the amendment might have been introduced. There is still third reading stage where the matter can be debated.

The hon. member stated this proposal had been made in committee. I cannot reach the conclusion that it necessarily follows that the amendment would be in order in the House because, of course, we are not bound by rulings made in committee. The hon. member realizes this and has so indicated.

Taking all factors into consideration, I must say with great regret that I do not see how I can allow the motion to be put. No. 2 must fall on the same ground. The reservations I have about motion No. 19 might be considered when that amendment is reached. It is my thought that perhaps this proposed motion is irrelevant in the sense that it is beyond the scope of the legislative item that it seeks to amend. I would not like to go into details of the matter at the present time, but the hon. member might give some thought to my suggestion.

There is also a difficulty relating to the recommendation. The recommendation we have received and which is part of the bill at the present time, might not cover the amendment which is proposed. Again, this difficulty, if it really exists, is one which, I think, might easily be dealt with. But we could discuss this point when motion No. 19 is reached. We now propose for the consideration of the House, motion No. 3.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder whether I might say something at this stage on a point of order affecting a matter of procedure. The chairman of our committee on legal affairs, a committee which is, of course, subject to this House, had, at our request, called witnesses to give evidence along the very line of these amendments; in fact, 99 per cent of the time of the committee was taken up in this regard and preparations were made for very extensive arguments reflecting what the witnesses had said in relation to the amendments in question. In these circumstances I would have thought that surely, at some stage prior to this, we would have been placed in a position to discuss Your Honour's ruling, if only as a matter of courtesy to those who had spent many hours of work on the amendments without the benefit of help from a research department. Unlike the minister, who, of course, is able to rely upon a great deal of help, we had to do much of this work ourselves. In this case, it was done by a very small group. Surely, if a decision from the Chair was to be forthcoming we might have been informed by an officer of the House of Commons that these amendments were to be challenged, so that we might have been prepared to argue the matter. In this instance, with the greatest respect, Your Honour had your judgment already prepared. I was out of court before I even got in. Ought there not to be a simple procedure which would be of great assistance in connection with this new committee system, by which we could be informed beforehand?

With regard to the calling of witnesses, may I point out that on two occasions there were equal votes in committee, and each time the tie was broken by the chairman. The witnesses were called at the wish of the steering committee, not at the request of our side. Surely, after all this work, after all the printing of evidence in both languages, we should have been placed in a position where we could have had, arguments to meet the judgment which Your Honour had already prepared?

I would hope that in future movers of amendments could be notified beforehand that the Chair had taken objection to them on certain grounds. Hon. members concerned would then have an opportunity to brief themselves so as, at least, to discuss the matter intelligently with Your Honour. Alternatively, they could rise and say that having considered the arguments put forward they agreed with the ruling of the Chair. I have never encountered an experience like this. We are out of court before we start. Your Honour has a written judgment already prepared.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that perhaps his comments are somewhat unfair to the Chair. He knows that the Chair has to consider these questions in advance, especially when faced with a large number of motions. Even if the hon. member himself were the occupant of the chair, I am sure he would wish to give such matters advance consideration, to have some idea of the procedural position.

At the same time, I recognize the hon. member has a valid point when he suggests that he and his friends are placed in an unfortunate position when they come to the House prepared to discuss motions on which they have spent a good deal of time only to find they are ruled out of court. This is obviously unfair to the hon. member in some way. Perhaps the Chair should take into consideration the valid suggestion of the hon. member that when some doubt is felt about the validity or the acceptability of amendments from a procedural standpoint, hon. members might be given notice in advance so that they can prepare themselves accordingly. I will certainly take this under consideration and do everything that is possible to inform hon. members in advance of difficulties which may come up. We have, on occasions, followed this procedure.

Some time during last session there was one instance when a large number of motions under this standing order were proposed for the consideration of the House; hon. members more directly concerned were informed in advance that some difficulty had arisen in connection with them, and we had an opportunity to discuss these matters outside the House and then inside the House. Perhaps this is what should have been done in the present instance. I thank the hon. member for Calgary North for making his suggestion and we shall attempt to follow it as closely as we can in the future.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North) moved:

That Bill C-172, an act respecting the Federal Court of Canada, be amended by striking out clause 7 on page 5 thereof and substituting the following:

"7 (1) The Rules may provide for a rota of judges to provide for a continuity of judicial availability in any centre where the volume of work or other circumstances make such an arrangement expedient."

(2) No judge shall be required under rules made under subsection (1) to remain in any centre other than the National Capital Region for a period longer than one month, unless it becomes necessary to do so to complete the hearing of a cause or matter, or unless he consents thereto.

He said: This is an amendment which would apply to clause 7. Before beginning my argument I might read the existing clause, as follows:

A judge of the court—

Which means a judge of the Federal Court with the jurisdiction as spelled out in the act —shall reside in the National Capital Region described in the Schedule to the National Capital Act or within twenty-five miles thereof.

The first point I wish to make is this. Under this new measure, much of the business which would normally have come before the ordinary trial courts and courts of appeal of the various provinces will now fall under the sole jurisdiction of the federal court or of the court of appeal. The minister has been gracious enough to admit this. At the present time, there is no provision under this legislation for an appeal court as such. Judges of the Exchequer Court sit for most of the time in Ottawa. All matters have to be tried in Ottawa and all applications in chambers have to be made here, usually through agents. The minister has lent an ear to representations from members of this party, members of the New Democratic Party and others and, as a result, judges nowadays do visit various centres in Canada from time to time. With that in mind, may I congratulate the minister.

• (3:20 p.m.)

I now want to refer to some of the evidence concerning the jurisdiction that the court has. During the last few weeks we have seen that Canada is made up of many regions. Every region has a different kind of environment. Every environment has to be understood by the people living in those regions. If a trial judge is able to weigh the evidence given in any matter in the light of the environment within which he was raised and understands, he can come to a more just decision.

What my amendment is asking is that judges live permanently in areas other than Ottawa, such as in Montreal, in the Maritimes, in Toronto, in Winnipeg, in Calgary, in Edmonton and in Vancouver. A court that has assumed much of the powers of the provincial courts should be accessible to the public who are seeking the remedies set out in the jurisdiction of the court. This is why I argued in the committee for concurrent jurisdiction, though I was ruled out of order.

More than that, Mr. Speaker, in view of the kind of jurisdiction the court has—and I will enlarge on this in a few moments—even one judge living in Calgary, one in Edmonton and one in Winnipeg could not possibly handle the amount of litigation that can be anticipated, since the new court has now taken over much of the role of other courts. In many of our cities there is a big backlog of cases, both civil and criminal. As far as my own home province is concerned, I do not know whether it is because of the character of the judges or our ability to get work done, there is no backlog. However, I understand that in some of the larger centres like Calgary and Toronto there is a backlog of cases.

Since I am talking about jurisdiction, let me examine what jurisdiction the court has and deal with the question why judges should sit elsewhere. I refer to page 9 of the bill, clause 17, which provides:

The Trial Division has original jurisdiction in all cases where relief is claimed against the Crown—

Pausing there, the crown is becoming a bigger body today. The state is becoming involved in more things than it did before. Since the crown is becoming involved more and more in matters that must be brought to the federal court, the backlog of cases will be tremendous. There will be a mountain of litigation that will have to be dealt with in this city. I suggest that the president of the court will be unable to cope with the work under the new act, even when his judges visit other centres. This is because of the extensive jurisdiction given to the court. The clause continues:

—and except where otherwise provided, the Trial Division has exclusive original jurisdiction in all such cases.

Subclause (2) provides:

Without restricting the generality of subsection (1), the Trial Division has exclusive jurisdiction, except where otherwise provided, in all cases in which the land,—

I pause to point out that the Crown owns a lot of land.

—goods or money of any person are in the possession of the Crown—

To come to specific cases, let us consider the expropriation of land for national parks. There is a typical example that I should like to deal with briefly. I suggest that a judge who was born, raised and educated in western Canada would have a better appreciation of people's rights as they exist in national parks in the west. I believe I am not breaking the confidence of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) when I say that he has stated that eventually he hopes, when the number of judges appointed to the court is extended, to appoint judges from western Canada on the same basis as appointments are made to the Supreme Court of Canada. I thought that this was a good idea because judges appointed from western Canada would give the court what I would call the western flavour.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The president of the court is from Saskatchewan.

Mr. Woolliams: That is true. He was the deputy minister of justice for a long time, and did become somewhat central Canada oriented. He was educated at Saskatoon university, and if I may say this through you, Mr. Speaker, the president of the court was one of the great scholars in my home province. So it is clear that the court will deal with all disputes about land in which the crown becomes involved.

I want to deal with clause 18 which provides:

The Trial Division has exclusive original jurisdiction

(a) to issue an injunction, writ of certiorari, writ of prohibition, writ of mandamus or writ of quo warranto, or grant declaratory relief, against any federal board, commission or other tribunal; and

(b) to hear and determine any application or other proceeding for relief—

If the Industrial Relations Board meets in the city of Vancouver and exceeds its jurisdiction, normally the relief of the little man, if there were no appeal from the board, would be in the form of special remedy. If the board did not exercise its jurisdiction in accordance with the law, or if its decision was against natural justice, or if it did some other act which is one of the ingredients for going forward by special remedy—the prerogative remedies that you as a lawyer, Mr. Speaker, know so well—the person aggrieved can go to a trial judge of the high court in the province and get the order by which he was aggrieved quashed. What will be the situation if the bill were passed? The court would now have exclusive jurisdiction with regard to all of the prerogative writs and special remedies in matters pertaining to tribunals and administrative bodies that are set up by the federal government.

What size of court should we have? How will western Canada be served? How will even eastern Canada be served under this kind of legislation? This question has prompted some comment by one of the witnesses who gave evidence. I do not know who called the gentleman before the committee. I did not, and it may have been the chairman who called him before the committee, but I was quite impressed with some of the evidence he gave.

I contend that this federal court is going to be all powerful for the state. It will be too costly for the average citizen of Canada to go to the court, and the judges of the court will not be accessible to the people. As a result, justice in this country will become so costly that the average citizen of Canada who feels aggrieved by decisions handed down by government tribunals will be unable to get the kind of justice we had hoped, even the kind of justice he can obtain today.

Before I quote from the evidence, may I say that I think the government has confused the jurisdiction of the court. If I might be political for a few moments during the course of my legal argument, one thing about this government is that it is just great for chaos. Whenever we have a crisis there is chaos among the government, and then they claim to solve the crisis and become our great masters. I think this is going to be the case, too, with this bill.

Let me just read to the House what this witness said. Professor Watson studied the bill and had this to say, as reported at page 7 of minutes of proceedings and evidence No. 28:

> I think, frankly, that the idea of a federal court in Canada other than the Supreme Court of Canada is misconceived.

I contend that it is misconceived in the sense that there will be an insufficient number of judges of the federal court to serve the average Canadian. Litigation will pile up and the backlog will be worse than the backlog before the immigration appeal board, which I understand has or had 1,500 cases waiting to be dealt with.

• (3:30 p.m.)

I think the first question we have to ask ourselves with regard to this bill is, has the Exchequer Court been successful and, if so, in what way? I suggest there are a number of problems associated with the Exchequer Court and many of them relate to its remoteness from the people and from the lawyers. It is physically a remote court and it is unknown to the layman. I could not say it as well as this.

> I doubt that most laymen know that it even exists and it is not something with which most lawyers are familiar. I think it is fair to say that it is the bailiwick of a very small group of perhaps patent and tax lawyers.

The point he is making there is that it will not be accessible, and because it is not accessible, it will not be known by laymen. The remedies normally now available in our high courts and the courts of appeal in the provinces will fall within the jurisdiction of this court, so the average Canadian will suffer. Professor Watson says in volume 28, as recorded at page 8:

> It can really give this court only bits and pieces. When it gives it only bits and pieces there will only be a few types of people in a few situations who can resort to the court on any regular basis. Consequently it will remain the bailiwick of a small group of lawyers and this produces a real problem because some of the types of cases over which the court can have jurisdiction are the types of cases in which anybody in any small town or large city across Canada can become involved in, can be dragged into the Exchequer Court. He goes to his regular legal adviser and the legal adviser says, Exchequer Court?

This will be under the federal court. Mr. Watson continues:

> I do not know too much about that. And from talking to people who are experienced in litigation, what happens? The normal pattern is that the lawyer gives it a try once, gets his fingers burnt and next time he sends a pink ribbon around the material and sends it to the small group of lawyers who practice regularly before the courts.

There, he has put his finger on the difficulty, having in mind the special remedies given to this court. That is what is going to happen. Even with judges who move across the country, with one judge here and one there, the majority of cases will have to be funnelled into Ottawa. The expenses of travel, the hiring of experts and coming here on chamber applications, will be so costly that these remedies will be out of reach of the average man. That is why I say that if we are going to have this court at all, which I am against, we should have judges—this means a duplication—appointed to sit in the large centres of Canada, wherever those centres may be.

Mr. Watson then goes on in his evidence to state:

> If we look at our own history going back into English history, there are two notorious periods in English history, one when the King's Courts went out in England and deprived or fought with the local courts for jurisdiction and there were jurisdictional battles between the King's Courts and the local courts, and of course, the persons who suffered were the subjects.

He goes on to show the conflict. Unless there are judges that are accessible, and unless the members of the bar in various cities become familiar with the procedures and the jurisdiction of this court, these remedies the people should have will wither on the vine. Professor Watson then refers to analogies in the United States and Australia. My friend has talked about these. He suggests that both these countries have a federal court system, so why cannot we have a federal court system here. The fact we overlook is this. The judges of our superior court, our courts of appeal and our supreme courts, as well as the judges of this court in Canada will be appointed by the federal government, whereas in the United States and Australia the system is quite different. Again, this is a strong argument for having more judges appointed and that those judges must be placed in the various centres of Canada. Professor Watson goes on to say:

> There is no sort of reason other than a political reason for establishing the court or continuing the Exchequer Court. But there is at least one functional argument, it seems to me, and that is the concept that advantages can be gained for the populace, for the people through having a court which is specialized in its functions, and this, of course, has been one of the arguments in favour of the Exchequer Court—

Then, he goes on to say this, and he is right:

The federal government here appoints judges to the Superior Courts of the provinces—

The federal government appoints our judges in the other courts and they are familiar with the rules that govern a writ of certiorari, mandamus, prohibition and references to boards. They know whether they can quash a matter and whether it is a judicial or administrative matter. Therefore, unless this bill provides, and I ask that this be supported, not only an increase in the number of judges but permanent resident judges of the federal court in the big cities of Canada, it will mean justice out of the reach of Canadians. Professor Watson goes on to state:

Well, of course, there are certain costs that we paid for having such a bifurcated system—

He then points out the extra costs, and I have dealt with that. I want to deal with this point as it relates to judges. He states:

Looking at the new areas into which the federal court bill would take us with regard to jurisdiction of the court, who is to be the grateful beneficiary of the investiture of the new Federal Court with concurrent jurisdiction over negotiable instruments? Is it finance companies or is it to be debtors who are going to thank the federal government for having given them another forum to which to take their disputes? Or will it be either one of them who first finds himself involved in a battle, a jurisdictional battle in the court for which he will pay to litigate to find out the answer as to whether or not the court also has jurisdiction over the surrounding matters—

Here again, one of the fights we are having today, as in other countries, involves a sufficient supply of competent judges to make certain that justice is not failed. Failed justice is no justice. It is only when it is expedited you get justice. I oppose the bill and I will have something to say about it on third reading. As bad as it is, I am really shocked that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), with his knowledge and the knowledge of his department, would require that judges must live in Ottawa or within 20 miles of Ottawa, even though they may move around. Professor Watson said:

I simply raise this question: Is the only answer to give this jurisdiction to a federal court? In other words, would it not be possible to draft, if there are problems—and I gather there are problems with regard to, for instance, the location of an action against a federal tribunal, the problem of the plaintiff moving from one province to another suing a federal administrative tribunal—

Some of these people are going to have something to say about this.

This is what the Canadian Labour Congress had to say:

Bill C-192 establishes a Federal Court of Canada to replace the Exchequer Court, and to include in the new Court a division to be known as the Court of Appeal.

The jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal is to be found in Section 28(1) which empowers the Court to "set aside a decision or order . . . made by or in the course of proceedings before a federal board, commission or other tribunal, upon the ground that the board, commission or tribunal

[Mr. Woolliams.]

(a) failed to observe a principle of natural justice or otherwise acted beyond or refused to exercise its jurisdiction;

(b) erred in law in making its decision or order, whether or not the error appears on the face of the record; or

(c) based its decision or order on an erroneous finding of facts that it made in a perverse or capricious manner or without due regard for the material before it."

We are particularly concerned about (1)(c) above because of its wide implications and the very real possibility that the Court of Appeal may be substituted for the relevant board of commission as the final decision making body.

Where will the Court of Appeal sit? Will it be sitting in western Canada? Will it be sitting in eastern Canada? Will it sit, say, in Calgary, Edmonton, Winnipeg or Vancouver?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Why not?

Mr. Woolliams: Well, it does not say so and I can see why the Canadian Labour Congress was concerned about this. The statement continues:

It is characteristic of both these Boards that they are representative of the parties of interest which appear before them, that they engage in a specialized function and that their value lies in the expertise which their members possess or acquire as a sine qua non of their functions. A further feature of these Boards whose importance should not be overlooked is the expectation that they will hear applications and make decisions expeditiously.

• (3:40 p.m.)

How can decisions be made expeditiously when sittings may be held once or twice a year in the large industrial centres, not only in western Canada but in eastern Canada and the Maritimes. Certainly, the judges should be stationed permanently in various places. That is why our trial courts are set up as they are. There are judges in Calgary and Edmonton, and there are county court judges in the towns and villages. Yet, under this legislation everything is to be centralized. The excuse is that a judge would be sent out here and sent out there. Then, there is the matter of the registry offices. Apparently there is to be one in Vancouver. Will there be one in all these cities, with one judge to do all the work in respect of these boards. There are over 25 different boards which I could name. I shall not take the time to do so now. I will leave that to another amendment.

On this particular amendment, I do not need, to take any more time. I ask the Minister of Justice first to consider, if he intends to force this through the House of Commons with his majority, the desirability of having more judges to take over the work of the provincial courts. Second, I would ask that those judges be stationed in all the major centres of Canada. Even then, the people in the towns and villages will suffer because it will be necessary for them to go to the various large centres in order to receive justice. Third, I would ask the Minister of Justice to look at the evidence given time and time again before the committee. Even the most favourable witnesses—lawyers—said that this is a specialized field. Very few lawyers will know how to litigate in this federal court. So, there will be specialized lawyers and specialized experts who will deny 90 per cent of the Canadians the kind of justice they already have.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, before I reply to the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) I wonder if I might raise a question of privilege at the earliest opportunity accorded me. It has been drawn to my attention—I have not had an opportunity to check the blues—that when the hon. member for Lafontaine (Mr. Lachance) asked me whether the right to counsel had been suspended under the regulations of the War Measures Act, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) said "Yes". I did not hear the question too clearly and said, "Yes, the hon. member is right". I wish to make perfectly clear to the House—and I have asked my Parliamentary Secretary to inform the press gallery—that what I should have said is, no, that the right to counsel has not been suspended under the regulations and applies as in the ordinary law. I regret very much if I misled the House at the time.

Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity we have had at the report stage to deal with these motions. First of all, I should like to say how much I appreciate the co-operation of the hon. member for Calgary North and the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) in particular for allowing this bill to be brought forward. As Your Honour knows, this bill lapsed during the last session of this Parliament and, in the ordinary course of events, would have had to be re-introduced for first reading, second reading and study by the committee had it not been for the courtesy of the opposition, particularly those two members who had charge of this bill on behalf of their respective parties. I am very grateful indeed. I think it is a very good example of how co-operation in Parliament can achieve the right result without any rights being infringed.

This bill received first reading on March 2. It received a very thorough review by the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. It received the scrutiny of a good many top legal counsel throughout the country. As a matter of fact, I sent a mimeographed letter to all 14,000 members of the Canadian Bar Association, thanks to its distribution system. The Canadian Bar Association designated a committee to review the bill. Two distinguished members of the association appeared on behalf of the association, namely Gordon Henderson, Q.C. of Ottawa and Louis Philippe De Grandpré, P.C. of Montreal. I had the opportunity to appear on a panel discussion which was televised and videotaped and will be shown to all provincial subsections of the Canadian Bar Association. This panel was held in Halifax in September, during the annual convention of the Canadian Bar.

What I am saying is that the bill has received a good deal of public scrutiny from the legal profession, from those organizations accustomed to appearing before federal boards and tribunals and from private citizens generally who are interested in the administration of justice.

What the hon. member for Calgary North is attempting to do by this amendment is to replace all of clause 7. Instead of the clause, providing for the judges to reside in Ottawa and sit by way of rota from time to time throughout the country, he would revise it and provide a rota of judges who would sit in various centres and would not be required to reside in Ottawa. This matter was very thoroughly canvassed in the committee. I might say also that it was very thoroughly canvassed at the Canadian Bar Association Convention in Halifax, where certain members of the law association of British Columbia were particularly interested in what answers I could give in respect of this particular aspect of the bill.

The hon. member for Calgary North has said—he admitted this and I thank him for it—that during the past two or three years there has been a great decentralization in respect of the court. The court, under the name Exchequer Court, does go out on circuit and try to handle the business of the court as it arises throughout the country. The court has also set up registry offices in some places, some of them through the co-operation of the provinces and some of them as special registry offices. It is provided by this bill that the decentralization which has brought justice closer to the people will be given statutory form.

Clause 7 (2) of the bill provides that, notwithstanding that judges must reside within 25 miles of the national capital region, the rules may provide for a rota of judges to provide for a continuity of judicial availability in any centre where the volume of work or other circumstances make such an arrangement expedient. If an appeal or interlocutory procedure should arise in any major sector of the country the court will go out to meet the litigants and justice will be administered on the scene.

Mr. Ryan: Will or may?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): There is provision for this in the statute. The answer is "will". Now, under clause 16(3), it is provided that the place of each sitting of the court of appeal shall be arranged by the chief justice to suit, as nearly as may be, the convenience of the parties. In other words, if the parties require the court of appeal of the federal court to travel to Calgary, Edmonton, Regina, Vancouver, or Ontario, or the Maritime provinces, then if the appeal is properly triable the court of appeal will travel. There was a suggestion in the committee, and the hon. member alluded to this in his speech earlier this afternoon, that there should be resident judges of this court in various parts of the country. It has been suggested there be a resident judge of the federal court seated in British Columbia, in Alberta and so on. I rejected that idea, and I believe the majority of the legal profession agree with me, because I feel it is essential that the court reside in one locality, in this case the national capital region, as does the Supreme Court of Canada itself. I think it would be very dangerous for the court and would tend to fracture it, if the court were divided into individual resident judges sitting across the country.

• (3:50 p.m.)

I remember talking to Chief Justice Warren, who was then the chief justice of the United States Supreme Court, just before he retired and he impressed upon me the necessity of ensuring that there is harmony in the court and that the court is proceeding along the same judicial lines. There should not be divergence among the judges in so far as it could be avoided. Every judge brings to the court his own background—his bias if you will and his own type of legal training and temperament. However, in order to have the reasonable harmony that should be expected from a group of men involved in the same venture of administering justice in Canada, there is something to be said for the give and take of daily consultation where possible. This has proven to be a necessary ingredient in every successful court.

A judge resident in British Columbia would be out of touch with brother judges. From the point of view of a lawyer who wanted to appear before the federal court, in B.C., he would appear before the one judge on every occasion, and that would limit his accessibility to the court. I hope I have convinced members of the bar in the western provinces that it would be in their interest to have a rota of judges, not that they should go judge shopping but that they should not be caught before the same judge every time they appear on a procedural matter or on the merits of a case.

There is provision in section 10 for the appointment of deputy judges. This would provide that the president of the court, or the chief justice of the court as he will now be called, if he thinks it is in the interest of the administration of justice, to appoint a deputy judge in any province. This may be a judge of a provincial superior court who could sit as a deputy resident judge when the judge of the federal court cannot appear. It is open to the chief justice of the federal court to appoint a deputy judge in Alberta, in British Columbia and so on, if there is an emergency which has to be dealt with before a circuit judge could arrive.

I envisage that some day when the business of this court is sufficient, there might be a series of circuits of this court. There might well be a western circuit of the court and, say, an Atlantic or Maritime circuit of the court. At the moment, after looking at the statistics and from what I know of the court, I do not believe that is justified.

Mr. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, certainly.

Mr. Ryan: What would be wrong with providing for a situation where you would have, perhaps, a court sitting permanently in these regions?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think I answered that argument in what I just said, but I have not convinced the hon. member. To summarize, I believe that to co-ordinate the proper functioning of the court it is necessary to provide by statute that judges be on circuit, and to provide that there be a variety of judges available to any particular part of the country. In answer to the question specifically, in some areas of the country there is not enough business at the moment for a resident judge. There may be enough business for a resident judge in British Columbia, but that is not conclusive, and I believe at the moment that the people of British Columbia would be better served with a rota of judges such as is provided in the bill as it now reads.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I can state in a very few sentences that I support the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). Perhaps I might be indulged as both hon. members mention—

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Crowfoot on a point of order.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I regret very much having to do this but I want to inform you that there is not a quorum in the House. There are no committees sitting, and I think it is the duty of the government to provide the House with a quorum if they want to proceed with this legislation.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. minister please resume his seat. When it is brought to the Chair's attention that there is not a quorum, it is my duty to instruct the clerk to make a count and I shall ask him to do so now.

And on the count being made, more than 20 members were declared to be present.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The clerk advises me that at this moment there are 22 members in the House.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the House to some of the Conservative members behind the curtains as well.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I was saying that I could give my reasons for speaking to the amendment very briefly and perhaps I can be allowed a few general remarks—

Mr. Bell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and so that there will not be a misunderstanding tomorrow in the press, I should like to point out that it is the responsibility of the government to keep a quorum in the House at all times.

Mr. Horner: When they are proceeding with legislation—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member does not have a point or order.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on that fallacious point of order, as Members of Parliament we all have a duty to protect the quorum.

Mr. Horner: On a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members do not have a point of order and it does not accomplish anything to have repetitive speeches on a non-existent point of order.

Mr. Bell: The minister started it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, in starting for the third time, I should like to indulge myself, as have the two hon. members who spoke before me, by dealing with the amendment in detail. On the whole, I think this bill does introduce important and worthwhile changes in the administration of justice so far as it affects the federal government and the federal administration. I think there are weaknesses in it, and I think that the amendments proposed should be considered seriously. I agree with the hon. member for Calgary North that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) did pay careful attention to suggestions made in committee and many of them have been adopted, as we are glad to observe.

Dealing with this particular amendment, I may say that as I understand it, it is very simple. All it proposes is to strike out of section 7 of the bill the positive requirement that all judges of the court shall reside in the national capital region. I think this is an unduly restrictive and unnecessary provision, and that they should be allowed to reside wherever they can most conveniently reside to do the business of the court. The minister has made it clear that the businss of the court will be transacted in the different centres and not transacted entirely in Ottawa. This has been the tendency elsewhere and this bill would be quite unworkable if that practice is not carried out. In centres like British Columbia, for example, if there is sufficient business to keep judges busy most of the year, what is the sense of requiring them to live in Ottawa? The hon. minister says this will help their esprit de corps—

An hon. Member: The cocktail parties.

Mr. Brewin: —and will enable them to be more harmonious amongst themselves. But what is the difficulty, in these days when people can travel, of judges getting together from time to time in Ottawa if they need to have consultations or need to enlarge the harmony which should prevail amongst them?

• (4:00 p.m.)

In my view it is important that justice not only be done but that it be seen to have been done, and that it be as close to the people as possible. If that principle be adopted, I see no reason for adopting this residential straitjacket as to where judges should live. The insistence on this provision may even make it harder to get some qualified judges.

British Columbia is one of the more remote provinces, but nevertheless will be intimately concerned with the administration of this bill. Many of the subjects under its jurisdiction are particularly important to that province, and it may be that some respected judge, well qualified judge, will say, "I am going to be sitting in B.C. for a large part of the year, but I will be forced to move my residence to Ottawa. I don't want that, and therefore I won't accept appointment to the court."

For these reasons, because where possible justice should be administered locally, because judges should be available locally, because the bill imposes an unnecessary restriction and in effect may disqualify some highly qualified people, I hope the minister will even now agree to reconsider this matter and not complicate the legislation with restrictive provisions about where people have to live. It may be regretted in future if this is insisted upon. The minister says that the chief justice of the Court can appoint deputy judges. Mr. Speaker, we are not talking about deputy judges. We are talking about four permanent members of the court. If the court is to be properly decentralized, there is no place for the sort of restrictive provision that the amendment seeks to strike out.

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I should just like to add a few words in support of the member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). I am convinced, from my own experience as a practising lawyer, that it will cost more to litigate in federal courts if, for the most part, they are set up in Ottawa. I see no reason why judges cannot be posted permanently to the larger centres in Canada. We have the banks and life insurance companies here in Ottawa establishing branches out from the centre, and they have no problem doing business all across the country.

I am further impelled to support the amendment by the fact that I am a member for the metropolitan area of Toronto. I believe the House knows very well that a major portion of the business of this court will originate in the city of Toronto where we have a great deal of land still held under the Veterans Land Act, and a lot of agreements for sale may be the subject of litigation. Also in Toronto we have a very large port, which will have its problems. We have one airport now, and we are likely to have another one, even though I do not quite know when. In this respect, a great many problems could arise in the near future and those concerned with them would require access to this court. I see no harm whatever in making this residential provision read "may" and not "must." I ask the minister to reconsider the rather narrow Ottawa view in this section.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, this bill had a pretty thorough going over in committee, as pointed out by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and by the minister. I am not entirely opposed to the committee system, but sometimes a committee becomes pre-occupied with the opinions of experts. There is no doubt that the opinions so far voiced before the committee have been largely those of lawyers, members of the bar, jurists and college professors. I would just like, therefore, to give what I would call a layman's opinion.

It seems to me that in this age of the rapid adoption of socialistic measures in Canada, where every day we are coming more and more under the decisions of tribunals of one form or another—what the lawyers would call quasi-judicial bodies—there is a great need for some court of this sort. I think there are many provisions in this bill with which I can agree.

Perhaps some of the provisions in the bill are long overdue and, projecting into the future, no doubt federal courts will become more important. But from the point of view of the ordinary voter, the man in the street, I can foresee some dangers. We have had the prerogatives of the Crown, writs of habeas corpus, writs of certiorari, writs of mandamus—some of these for 700 years—and perhaps because of human nature we have had to preserve these extraordinary rights. Because all courts are made up of human beings, there must be procedures for appeal. But it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that if we are to put all our eggs in one basket, if we are to give any one federally appointed court sole jurisdiction in these matters, at a time when governments at all levels can interfere deeply with the private fortunes, property and affairs of each single individual in Canada, I for one would at least like to have the assurance that this court does not become a faceless monster in the capital city.

I go along with the idea that we need to have appeals, and that we do need a strong federal court to deal with many of these matters. But I do not think it is necessary to panic the Canadian people and this House into accepting the opinions of legal experts. That is why I do not hesitate to stand here for a few moments to give my opinion. Today, the War Measures Act gives us a very good basis for my argument. Habeas corpus has been suspended indefinitely, or we have a six and a half month moratorium on it, and if you trust our government, our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and our Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), which undoubtedly many of us do, you can say that our future and our security are in good hands. But, Mr. Speaker, governments change rapidly these days—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I know the hon. member will move very quickly to make his remarks relevant to the motion before the House. I think that at this stage of our proceedings it behooves all hon. members, and the Chair, to keep the debate confined within the terms of relevancy.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how I can be more relevant than to bring to your attention, and to the attention of all hon. members, that this bill and any amendments made to it affect the lives of all hon. members and of all members of the Canadian public. I do not see anything that could be much more relevant. There is a need for those of us who are not experts in the law, who are not completely enmeshed in professional attitudes, to express our views.

For instance, this bill provides that all the judges shall reside in Ottawa where they will be out of touch with the people. Unless they are strange men, after 15 or 20 years of living in the rarified atmosphere surrounding the higher echelons of the civil service, circulating among judges of the Supreme Court and other judges of their own rank, they will probably lose that touch with the little people which is very essential in order to make decisions on such matters as the expropriation of land, as well as the settling of labour and other disputes. It may be true that one of the national parks needs homesteads, or that a game preserve or community pasture should be made out of it. It is, nevertheless, important for us in a democratic society to have full confidence in any judge before whom we may appear. He must remain aware of the sentiments and attitudes which have developed over the ownership of a piece of land. He must also know that the attitudes of those who live in western Canada will be different from the attitudes of those who live in the maritimes, or Newfoundland. I must support what a previous speaker said when he entered a plea in this regard. It is not good enough for justice to be done; we must know that it has been done and feel it has been done. I cannot go along with the assurance of the Minister of Justice. I am opposed to passing Bill C-172 in its unamended form.

Prominent members of our community do not agree entirely with the minister's views. I do not wish to go into details and take up the time of the House. Prominent men, no matter whether or not they are learned members of one of our committees, may not be able to influence the actions of the government. Evidence of this is to be found in the way the government has reacted to committee reports, and especially to the report of the Committee on Veterans Affairs. That report does not seem to have influenced the Treasury Board or the members of the front benches. I think all members of the House ought to take a little more interest in this matter. It is a very important one since it deals, as I said, not only with the prerogatives of the Crown, but with our ancient personal rights and remedies.

At the risk of boring hon. members may I allude to some Latin words. I am one of those who does not understand Latin very well, yet I believe the most important phrase for us to consider at present is habeas corpus.

An hon. Member: You have the body.

Mr. Bigg: At present a person's very right to appear among his friends and, in some cases, to be represented by legal counsel is threatened to the Nth degree. I heard the Minister of Justice himself assure us just a few moments ago that a man detained under the War Measures Act is not denied access to counsel. I will not put words into his mouth or suggest anything devious in his assurance, but that assurance does not spell out exactly how the man is to get in touch with counsel. Is he denied this right for a possible 90 days, as set out in the War Measures Act, or is it to be for some shorter period of time?

Mr. Gibson: The government is bringing in a measure next week.

Mr. Bigg: Next week is not good enough. I am talking about our present rights; I am talking about the continuous whittling down of our rights as individuals. I do not think it is good enough when members of the House are given the assurance that everything is well, that the matter is in the government's hands and, perhaps, that "We are doing the right thing." We are dealing with a right, Mr. Speaker, which has stood in British countries for at least 750 years, that is the right to appear before one's peers within 24 hours. We have a right to appear before a magistrate, who usually is a simple man of the people or a justice of the peace, who is usually a local man who has reached some small prominence among his friends and whose integrity is beyond dispute. A man has a right to appear in front of the justice of the peace and this will assure his relatives and friends that he is not being held without cause. We have a right to know that there has in fact been some infringement of the law, or that the man is suspected of infringing the law, and that is why his personal liberty has been taken away. An accused man must be brought before the magistrate or justice of the peace at the first opportunity and allowed, with the help of counsel, to give his account to the officers of the Crown.

Another Latin term I wish to refer to is certiorari. Perhaps not all of us understand that Latin term. In my lay opinion, certiorari refers to nothing less than one's rights to have his case reviewed and corrected. When you think that justice has not been done, you may take your case from the lower court to a higher court and be assured that you have been dealt with in the way you are entitled to be dealt with and that, if you have been convicted, the conviction and the punishment is as set out in the statutes.

A writ of mandamus is an order from a judge to perform an act under the provisions of the Law. Speaking in connection with this bill, I do not know why county judges or district court judges, or judges of the Supreme Court of Alberta, are not to be allowed to deal with these very important prerogatives after this bill passes. I know that by far the greatest portion of litigation is involved with habeas corpus proceedings, where those are applicable. These proceedings apply to people who are caught speeding, or to petty thieves, and so on. Yet, when you come to this larger field where you are dealing with expropriation proceedings, in which federal boards with their impersonal—

Mr. Gibson: Is the hon. member talking about expropriation?

Mr. Bigg: Yes.

Mr. Gibson: It will be speeded up under this bill.

Mr. Bigg: It might be speeded up under the bill if the government accedes to requests that have been put forward in committee and in the House. We must appoint enough federal judges to handle the workload. There is no reason why the government cannot appoint enough judges to handle it. These proceedings should be decentralized and handled expeditiously at the local level. So far, these local judges have not been subject to the central authority of one Court. I am not trying to talk about the horrors of centralization and how far that centralization ought to go. I think it can go too far. Looking at the matter from a layman's point of view, it seems to me that what has been attempted is this; the central authority seeks to absorb all the rights and prerogatives which heretofore were enjoyed by provincial law officers. The administrations of justice has been on a decentralized basis in this country, and has given very satisfactory service.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order that has to do with a matter of procedure. I have talked to my good friend, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and I assume that the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) will go along with my suggestion. I suggest that instead of voting individually on these amendments, we could vote on them all at one time. While I am on my feet, may I suggest that since Motions No. 4 and 5 standing in my name are closely related, they could be debated and voted on together.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member for Calgary North. I take it there is consent that the vote on those motions is to be taken at the same time.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we agree with that. I think the hon. member for Calgary North may have been looking at yesterday's Votes and Proceedings. Is he not speaking of motions Nos. 5 and 6? The hon. member for Greenwood has motion No. 4 tucked in there.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am afraid I was looking at Tuesday's copy.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Will the minister please resume his seat. Perhaps we should deal with the matter of the voting first and then deal with the second matter. Is it agreed that the votes, where they are so indicated, will be taken at the termination of this stage of the proceedings?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps the hon. member for Calgary North was referring to the two motions standing in his name, Nos. 5 and 6.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member for Greenwood is the mover of motion No. 4. Motions Nos. 5 and 6 being debated and voted on together would be satisfactory to us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the House ready for the question? Subject to the agreement of the House to defer all votes until the termination of these proceedings, I will put the question on Nos. 5 and 6. The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) moves:

That Bill C-172, An Act respecting the Federal Court of Canada, be amended by striking out lines 1 and 2 on page 18 thereof and substituting the following:

'28. (1) Notwithstanding the provisions of any other Act, the Court'

The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) also moves:

That Bill C-172, An Act respecting the Federal Court of Canada, be amended by striking out paragraph (c) of subclause (1) of clause 28 on page 18 thereof and substituting the following:

'(c) based its decision or order on an erroneous finding of fact that it made in a perverse or capricious manner.'

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say, yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say, nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Under the standing order and the agreement just made, the vote on these motions will be deferred until the termination of the proceedings at this stage.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The following motion is proposed by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin):

That Bill C-172, respecting the Federal Court of Canada, be amended by striking out clause 18.

Mr. Lewis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In order to save the time of the House, I suggest that motions Nos. 4, 7 and 9 be considered together as they all relate one to the other. These three motions can be debated at the same time. If there is a vote, they will be voted on together. I believe the minister agrees with this suggestion.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member for York South. Is it agreed that motions 4, 7 and 9 be considered together?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will not put motion No. 7. The following motion is proposed by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin).

That Bill C-172, respecting the Federal Court of Canada, be amended by striking out subclause (1) of clause 28 and substituting the following therefor:

"The Court of Appeal has jurisdiction under this section to hear and determine an application to review and set aside a decision or order made by or in the course of proceedings before a federal board, commission or other tribunal upon the ground that the board, commission or tribunal

(a) failed to observe a principle of natural justice or otherwise acted beyond or refused to exercise its jurisdiction;

(b) erred in law in making its decision or order, whether or not the error appears on the face of the record; or

(c) based its decision or order on an erroneous finding of fact that it made in a perverse or capricious manner or without due regard for the material before it;"—

The following motion No. 9 is proposed by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin):

That Bill C-172, respecting the Federal Court of Canada, be amended by striking out subclause (3) of clause 28 and substituting the following therefor:

"The Court of Appeal shall have exclusive jurisdiction (a) to use an injunction, writ of certiorari, writ of prohibition, writ of mandamus or writ of quo warranto, or great declaratory relief, against any federal board, commission or other tribunal; and (b) to hear and determine any application or other proceeding for relief in the nature of relief contemplated by paragraph (a) including any proceeding brought against the Attorney General of Canada, to obtain relief against a federal board, commission or other tribunal;"—

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Before dealing with these motions and the reasons for them, Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that there is a misprint in motion No. 9. At the present time it reads, "to use an injunction,". It should read, "The Court of Appeal shall have exclusive jurisdiction (a) to issue an injunction," the word "use" should read "issue".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In view of the hon. member's remarks is it the wish of the House to amend the motion by changing the word "use" to the word "issue"?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, the proposal that motions Nos. 4, 7 and 9 be discussed together is entirely satisfactory to me because they all concern the same thing. If No. 4 is rejected, there is no point in Nos. 7 and 9. If No. 4 is accepted, then Nos. 7 and 9 or some variation of them would necessarily follow. The purpose of these amendments is not to disturb the bill in any way or to deal too much with its substance, but to make it more efficient for one of its main purposes.

I have listened to the minister explain this bill on a number of occasions. As I understand, one of the main purposes of this bill is to remove the supervisory jurisdiction of the provincial courts over the federal tribunals set up under Statutes of Parliament and transfer them to the federal court. That is an important objective of the bill and one with which I heartily sympathize. However, I suggest the way this has been done is highly confusing. The amendment I propose is necessary to eradicate the confusion.

I wish to draw the attention of hon. members to (clause) 18 which I propose be deleted. (clause) 18 reads:

The Trial Division has exclusive original jurisdiction

(a) to issue an injunction, writ of certiorari, writ of prohibition, writ of mandamus or wirt of quo warranto, or grant declaratory relief, against any federal board, commission or other tribunal; and

(b) to hear and determine any application or other proceeding for relief in the nature of relief contemplated by paragraph (a), including any proceeding brought against the Attorney General of Canada, to obtain relief against a federal board, commission or other tribunal.

This confers a jurisdiction under the various forms of the old prerogative writs and other remedies by which the courts habitually check the excesses, errors of jurisdiction, errors of law and failures to carry out the jurisdiction conferred on them by various boards and tribunals. This gives exclusive jurisdiction to the trial division.

Clause 28 of the bill deals with part of the same subject matter. It is confusing and difficult. Clause 18 transfers a very wide jurisdiction in general terms to the trial division. Clause 28 deals with the jurisdiction of the court of appeal which is the second jurisdiction. I think all hon. members understand that this new federal court will operate in two divisions, the trial division and the court of appeal.

In Clause 18, there is a transfer of the supervisory jurisdiction in rather broad terms of the trial division. Clause 28 provides:

Notwithstanding section 18 or the provisions of any other Act, the Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to hear and determine an application to review and set aside a decision or order, other than a decision or order of an administrative nature not required by law to be made on a judicial or quasi-judicial basis,—

This applies to certain circumstances set out in paragraphs (a), (b) and (c), and is just another way of expressing virtually the same supervisory jurisdiction over commissions and tribunals. The clause confers jurisdiction in slightly limiting language on the court of appeal. I say "slightly limiting" because it may not include all of the matters covered in section 18. However, it certainly covers a great many of them. It raises the difficult legal question of when the order is of an administrative nature rather than on a judicial or quasi-judicial basis. When this is the fact, the review provided by the bill is then to be handled by the court of appeal for the reasons set out. I make no complaint of the reasons. They are fairly extensive and satisfactory. Clause 28(3) reads:

Where the Court of Appeal has jurisdiction under this section to hear and determine an application to review and set aside a decision or order, the Trial Division has no jurisdiction to entertain any proceeding in respect of that decision or order.

In clause 18, complete jurisdiction appears to be given to the trial division. In certain cases, other than a decision of an administration which is not judicial or quasi-judicial, the power of review is given to the court of appeal under more limited circumstances. When the court of appeal is given jurisdiction it is explicitly by subclause (3).

It is my submission, and this has been expressed by Mr. Gordon Henderson of Ottawa who was referred to by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), that this will be confusing in practice. Indeed, it sounds confusing in theory when trying to explain it. Any experienced lawyer will agree that there is no more complex matter than determining whether the functions of a particular tribunal are to be exercised in an administrative or judicial or quasi-judicial manner. Litigants will seek to check this very healthy and important jurisdiction. They will check on the powers exercised by all of the administrative tribunals that enter into a thousand different fields in our system. Litigants will be uncertain whether they should apply to the trial division of the court or whether they should apply to the court of appeal. Those of us who are often in the courts know how frequently people are told: You are in the trial division but you ought to be in the court of appeal, or: You are in the court of appeal but you should have appeared first of all in the trial division before coming to the court of appeal.

The amendment I propose is simple. It is that total jurisdiction in respect of this matter be conferred upon the court of appeal. Not only would this avoid confusion and apply a more straightforward remedy but, I suggest, such a step would be good in itself. Why should not this supervisory jurisdiction, instead of being dealt with by overburdened members of the trial division, be dealt with the appellate division? For one thing, this would minimize the number of appeals arising from these matters; it would cut down the time and the expense which are involved. Second, it would mean that the total supervisory jurisdiction would be exercised by one court, presumably in accordance with one method of approach. The minister keeps telling us how important it is to have harmony and judicial co-operation. He sees this as being necessary, but here he is providing for a system under which jurisdiction is divided.

I could go on to speak at greater length about this subject, Mr. Speaker. As I say, the proposal I made has been approved by highly experienced counsel. It is a simplifying proposal; it is a proposal which would make the act work better; it is a proposal which, above all, and this is of the utmost importance, would give the supervisory jurisdiction which is so essential to the proper administration of justice in a modern state, to the appellate branch of the new court which is to be set up. The minister and his deputy tried to explain to the committee why this proposal was not acceptable. I must say my conclusion was that it could not be accepted because it had not originally been thought of by them. It has now been thought of, and unless the minister can give us some good reasons, reasons which so far have not been apparent, for rejecting it, a proposal which is devoid of any political intent, a proposal which is, I believe, perfectly sound and in accordance with the best advice we have received from the profession, I shall continue to hold that opinion.

If it is not accepted, I believe there will be confusion, unnecessary expense, delay and an unsatisfactory state of affairs in this key sector. No part of the jurisdiction of this federal court would be more important than the duty of supervising the innumerable boards, tribunals, commissions and so on which relate to the rights of Canadians. For these reasons, I urge the House to take this particular amendment seriously. I know that under our system if the minister frowns, his frown is likely to prevail over all the impassioned pleas that I or other hon.

members may make from this side of the House. Nevertheless, I do urge that this amendment if adopted will constitute a real improvement; it is the kind of amendment which ought to be accepted if this House is to function usefully.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder whether the hon. member would be prepared to answer a question before I make a few remarks on this subject.

Mr. Brewin: I will do my best.

Mr. Woolliams: My question is this. If we delete 18—I may say at the outset that I agree with the hon. member—and leave in section 28, the section dealing with the appeal court, then the special remedies which are dealt with in 18 would still be available in any trial court with reference, say, to a case in which a board exceeded its jurisdiction or acted without jurisdiction—

Mr. Brewin: I think the hon. member is absolutely right. If a thing is a nullity, the trial court must treat it as a nullity in law. I imagine the hon. member has observed amendment nine which proposes that the use of special writs, if I may call them that, to deal with these matters should be within the jurisdiction of the court of appeal exclusively. This does not mean that if some matter came before the trial division, and it was a nullity through lack of jurisdiction, it would not be their duty so to declare it.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to put a question to the member who spoke before me.

By his motion he would have the act respecting the Federal Court of Canada amended by striking out subclause (3) according to which the Court of Appeal would have exclusive jurisdiction to use a writ of certiorari. I should like to ask him, since Quebec legislators have amalgamated writs of prohibition and certiorari in the new Civil Code, which has led to a new procedure entitled "Proceedings to obtain relief against the decisions of tribunals falling under the powers of supervision and control of the Superior Court", whether the studies made by the Quebec government and the resulting new procedures have not been useless, since federal legislators now seem to retain the writ of certiorari, for which proceedings have been slightly modified, in spite of the abolition of the writ of prohibition.

I should like to ask the hon. member whether he does not agree that, should his amendment be adopted, this would lead to jurisdictional as well as constitutional conflicts?

[English]

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I want to say at the outset that I agree with the position taken by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member; perhaps I misunderstood, but did the hon. member for Greenwood wish to reply to that question which, after all, was directed to him.

Mr. Brewin: The question was directed to me, Mr. Speaker, but I should like to be a little better advised before I reply to it. I am not sure I grasped its full significance.

Mr. Woolliams: Before I start, what amendments are we taking together?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Four, seven and nine.

Mr. Woolliams: The confusion arose, Mr. Speaker, because when I was working last night I was using Tuesday's order paper and today the numbers seem to have been changed for some unknown reason; I do not know what happened.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The new amendments were put in.

Mr. Woolliams: Oh, the other amendments came in. First of all, with reference to amendment No. 4, I agree with the hon. member. I believe there is confusion as between Clause 18 of the act which deals with the powers of the trial division in reference to the special remedies and section 28 which deals with the powers of the court of appeal. In fact, if hon. members look at Clause 28 with special attention to paragraphs (a), (b) and (c), they will find that some of the grounds for appeal shown there are identical to the ingredients which are necessary in order to get a writ of certiorari, or an order to quash the decision of a board which has exceeded its jurisdiction or which has failed to observe the principles of natural justice.

I was interested to read a letter from a lawyer who has done some work on this subject. I should like to quote from this letter, but before doing so I will say this: when the Minister was talking about having received advice from the Canadian Bar Association I checked the reports again, particularly the evidence of Mr. Henderson, and he made it very clear that though he was a member of the Canadian Bar Association, and, maybe, an executive of the association, he was not actually presenting a brief on behalf of the Canadian Bar Association. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) can say that he sent out this bill, formerly C-192 and now C-172, to some 400-odd lawyers, but the point I wish to make is this: with the greatest respect, there are very few lawyers who are really interested in the litigation which goes on in the Exchequer Court or, particularly, the litigation which may go on in the federal court and the new appeal court. When the minister says that he has the support of the Canadian Bar, let me tell him that I have attended several meetings of local Bar Associations and they were pretty upset about this bill. I do not want the Minister of Justice to leave with the media of communication to the public the impression that he has the Canadian Bar or the lawyers of Canada behind him.

If this bill goes through without the adoption of some of the amendments put down, particularly the amendment I am talking to now, No. 4, and some others, there will be much confusion. If the lawyers, of Canada went along with the Minister of Justice on this, it must have been out of an unusual affection they had for him because of certain things that happen to them from time to time. I do not believe for one moment that he has the majority of lawyers supporting him on this kind of legislation.

Let me come directly to amendment No. 4 which seeks to remove clause 18 from the bill. Amendment No. 7 seeks to strike out subclause (1) of clause 28, which provides:

> Notwithstanding section 18 or the provision of any other act, the Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to hear and determine an application to review and set aside a decision or order, other than a decision or order of an administrative nature not required by law to be made on a judicial or quasi-judicial basis, made by or in the course of proceedings before a federal board, commission or other tribunal, upon the ground that the board, commission or tribunal
> (a) failed to observe a principle of natural justice or otherwise acted beyond or refused to exercise its jurisdiction;
> (b) erred in law in making its decision or order, whether or not the error appears on the face of the record; or
> (c) based its decision or order on an erroneous finding of fact that it made in a perverse or capricious manner or without regard for the material before it

I ask the Minister of Justice seriously to consider the first point so ably made by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). Take the case where a board failed to observe the principles of natural justice. Normally, there is the right to move by means of special writ or order to quash the decision of the board. I ask, what is the difference between the powers given to the trial division and the powers given to the appeal court?

I should like to put on the record what Mr. Campbell said about this. I think every member of the committee received a copy of his letter, though he did not actually appear before the committee. Mr. Campbell is a member of the firm of Campbell, Godfrey and Lewtas of Toronto, and in his letter he said:

> Section 18 gives the trial division exclusive original jurisdiction to grant extraordinary remedies against federal tribunals.

Pausing there, there are many tribunals. Let me quote the letter dated May 28, 1970 addressed to me as a Member of Parliament, a letter that I know other members received too. May I also refer to a memorandum prepared by the Dalhousie University Faculty of Law. I support the argument of the hon. member for Greenwood because this bill to establish the federal court confuses the law.

Take, for example, the act setting up the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Under that act, a person has the right to sue the CBC in the superior court of a province. I know this from experience, though of course not personal experience. Certain procedures for appeals are laid down for many other crown corporations and boards. In other words, there is a double conflict of jurisdiction. Clause 18 provides that special remedies will be used by a judge of the trial division; clause 28 provides for appeals to the new appeal court, which is the same right of appeal given under a writ of certiorari. In the case of some other boards, there is no right of appeal at all. So if you could ever have more legal chaos than that, I would like to know what it is.

The memorandum prepared by the Dalhousie University Faculty of Law has this to say about clause 29:

> Section 29 raises the further question of the federal boards, commissions or other tribunals from which an appeal is not provided, for the true intention of section 29 seems to be that it is only to them that the "setting aside" procedure of section 28 is to apply.

So, even they are confused on that matter.

> Putting the many crown companies to one side—which is not to imply that they do not create substantial problems for the individual-government relationship—here, with no pretensions to completeness, are some federal statutes that establish tribunals of one sort or another from which an appeal is provided:

The following acts establish tribunals from which an appeal is provided: Agricultural Products Board Act; Anti-dumping Act; Atomic Energy Control Act; Combines Investigation Act; Fisheries Research Board Act; Historic Sites and Monuments Act; Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act; Merchant Seamen Compensation Act; National Design Council Act; National Film Act; Parole Act; Public Service Staff Relations Act; War Veterans Allowance Act. Those are the acts that do not provide a procedure for appeal.

I should like to hear the Minister of Justice explain to the House what is going to happen in the cases I have just cited. I could go on to list a group of others that provide a procedure for appeal, but I will not take the time to do so. Indeed, they may be covered under the bill.

Let me return to what Mr. Campbell said. If ever there was legal chaos in a bill, it is in this Bill C-172. Mr. Campbell writes:

> Section 18 gives the Trial Division exclusive original jurisdiction to grant extraordinary remedies against federal tribunals. Section 28 (3) provides that if the Court of Appeal has jurisdiction under section 28 to review a decision, the Trial Division has no jurisdiction to entertain any proceeding in respect of that decision.

Pausing there, it has generally been the rule of law, as I understand it—I think the hon. member for Greenwood will agree with my interpretation—that in cases where a right of appeal is laid down the courts are always reluctant to entertain any application for special remedy, be it by certiorari, prohibition or mandamus. I believe that is good law and I do not think there will be any quarrel with that statement. The court says: "You have chosen your remedy; do not try two or three".

Mr. Campbell continues:

> It seems to me that the language of section 28(1) is broad enough to give the court jurisdiction to review any decision which could be attacked by the common law writ of certiorari.

So, in other words, clause 18 is entirely superfluous. What Mr. Campbell is saying is that, by providing for the special remedies as well as for an appeal under certain conditions, the situation has been remedied. As I say, I cannot believe that the top men in the Canadian Bar Association who have done quite a lot of work on this legislation would go along with a minister of justice who would contend there was not a lot of confusion surrounding clauses 18 and 28. In effect, I think that if you leave Section 28—I go further than the hon. member for Greenwood—and wipe out Section 18 you have done away with special remedies. I have not always agreed with that hon. member but I do in this regard. Certain boards have an informality and a lot of lawyers appreciate this because they do not like administrative law boards.

When we are dealing with labour disputes, I can understand this position on the part of unions. They get a decision from the board. I do not think they want the evidence reviewed. Why should the evidence be reviewed through an appeal method when, basically, you have this kind of law? If you take a question of fact before a Court of Appeal you do not get very far. The appeal has to involve at least a question of mixed law and fact. I can understand why a lot of people are going to be upset when they find out what really is taking place. The letter then states:

> Therefore, it would follow that the effect of Section 28(3) is to virtually divest the Trial Division of any jurisdiction in the field of extraordinary remedies. It may be suggested that the remedies of injunction and prohibition are sometimes sought before an order or decision is made and that such relief is not available before the review tribunal established by Section 28.

In other words, there may be times when these special remedies would be requested before the final judgment of the court and before you got to the appeal court. Of course, that occurs in a lot of cases. I have never yet heard anyone define the difference between an administrative or a judicial act. There have been a lot of cases recently which seem to establish that you can only quash where there has actually been some judicial act.

Let me digress for a moment. After a criminal charge has been laid you may, as a result of something that has happened, want to quash that charge by certiorari. The courts have said very clearly the laying of a charge is an administrative act because it really has not yet involved a judicial process. So, the fellow pleads guilty or not guilty. Some courts have said that is still administrative and remains so until somebody gets up and says, for example, my name is John Brown. You then ask that the proceedings be stopped. At this time you really just get into a judicial act. This procedure is very complicated and this bill complicates it even further. That is why I support the suggestion that clauses 18 and 28 cannot stand together since they are somewhat contradictory. The letter then goes on:

> It may be suggested that the remedies of injunction and prohibition are sometimes sought before an order or decision is made and that such relief is not available before the review tribunal established by Section 28. If that is so and if that is the only area of jurisdiction to be left in the Trial Division I would hope that Section 18 might be clarified in that regard.

There has been no attempt made to clarify it. The letter then goes on:

> Section 28(1) vests the Court of Appeal with power to "hear and determine an application to review and set aside a decision or order". That power seems to be enlarged by Section 52(d) which gives the Court the additional power to refer the matter back to the tribunal with appropriate directions. In my view Section 28 should define the complete power of the Court of Appeal in an application to review.
>
> There are many federal tribunals which are not required to give reasons for their decisions. If a tribunal does not give reasons a Court on an application to review may find it impossible to determine whether or not an error of law has been made. It is logical that the distinction between error of law on the face of the record and not on the face of the record be abolished. However, to be an effective ground to review one cannot deal with errors of law not on the face of the record without giving some direction with respect to the content of the record and the proof of proceedings before a tribunal.
> In reviewing Section 28 one must bear in mind that there are tribunals which fall within the scope of that section which are not obliged to keep a transcript of evidence or to give reasons for decision.

What happens then? The writer then states:

> I am not suggesting that there need be a statutory requirement that all tribunals must secure the services of a court reporter at all times. I am concerned, however, that Section 28 be effective and workable as against all tribunals falling within its scope.
> Section 28(1)(c) includes as its ground for setting aside a decision an erroneous finding of fact that is perverse or capricious. I am concerned that the following words "or without due regard for the material before it" could be construed so as to give a court unreasonably wide powers to review findings of fact made by tribunals. It is desirable that decisions be quashed if they depend on findings of fact which are capricious or perverse. If it is intended that the "due regard" referred to in Section 28(1)(c) is a requirement only that the board look at all the material, that is another way of saying that the board must not behave capriciously or perversely. If the "due regard" gives the court the power to weigh the evidence and consider that a decision should be set aside because in the opinion of the court the balance of the evidence leads to a certain conclusion, the court is then given extraordinarily wide powers of review.

His point is that if that really is the purpose of the act it means that these powers would merely become superfluous. The court could always say that was a wrong finding of fact and order a trial de novo to rehear the whole case. The letter then states:

> The whole question of boards taking into account policy matters and matters of which the board has general knowledge creates a problem for a review tribunal. It is obvious that boards must act on certain considerations not established in the evidence.

The minister may not have admitted this at the time of the committee hearings, but it may be that this provision alters the whole trend of administrative law back to a judicial process. In other words, these boards are just rubber stamps and when they have completed their work you can go before the federal appeal board. Let me ask again, how many judges are we going to need to cope with all the administrative tribunal reviews?

An hon. Member: A thousand.

Mr. Woolliams: Somebody suggests a thousand, but my mathematics have never been as good as my understanding of certain phases of the law. To quote again from the letter:

When those occasions occur a court sitting in review will have difficulty determining whether the tribunal paid "due regard" to the material or whether the tribunal made an error in law. I would hope that a requirement could be imposed that tribunals taking into account matters outside the record would be obliged to disclose that fact on the record and to give a right to make argument and to call evidence with respect to those considerations to persons directly affected by any order.

In other words, that is the advantage of administrative boards. They are not a court of record in the sense that the evidence is reported. They listen to some evidence and they may take cognizance of facts that are not in the evidence. You go to the appeal court for review and ask it to consider something that is not in documentary form. This is beyond me and I do not understand it. I think this whole bill was an exercise by a group of academics who never practised very much.

I think the House should consider very seriously my amendments and those of the hon. member for Greenwood. We are on all fours and if we accept his perhaps mine become superfluous. Perhaps I might say that on looking at the situation, the amendment moved by the hon. member for Greenwood to wipe out clause 18 completely, when read with the other amendments, is superior to the two I drafted in my attempt to doctor up the bill.

The letter then states:

I assume, from a reading of Sections 18 and 28(3) that the intention of Parliament is to remove motions to quash decisions of Federal Tribunals from provincial courts. I am not sure that the intention has been achieved.

There is another question I should like to ask and I would like to hear the Minister of Justice answer when I sit down. I might as well finish what I have to say.

If there is a federal tribunal which has exceeded its jurisdiction or not carried out the principles of natural justice or any of those other matters which are related to the extraordinary remedies, would a person still be able to go to the trial division of a superior court and have that decision quashed as the section is now drawn? If we accept the amendment of the hon. member for Greenwood would a person have that option? I do not think this is clear. I think if you look at the law, after listening very carefully to the hon. member for Greenwood, that person could take this position. These writs are so fundamental I still think you could go to the trial court and I do not think this federal legislation could stop you. I do not know the answer to that. I think we often pass a lot of things when we do not know what we are doing, and then an entirely different interpretation is put on them outside this chamber. Perhaps that is helpful to the Canadian people. Here we are in a vacuum.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired. I point out to him that I have taken into account the interruption at the beginning of his speech. I would not wish to create a precedent by giving the hon. member three times his allotted time, but is there consent of the House that he continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Woolliams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can appreciate that you would not want to listen to this argument three times. I say, with tongue in cheek and with the greatest respect, that I would not want to give it three times. The letter continues:

Although section 18 at first glance gives the Trial Division of the Federal Court exclusive original jurisdiction within these areas, that jurisdiction is largely removed by section 28(3). Section 28 does not indicate that the Court of Appeal has "exclusive jurisdiction" but only that the availability of its jurisdiction prohibits the Trial Division of the Federal Court from entertaining any proceeding. Thus I am concerned that it may not be clear as to whether the Trial Division of a Provincial Court retains jurisdiction within these areas.

This is a very learned counsel who has done a lot of work and who has done a lot of thinking. I am speaking of one of the 400 to whom the minister wrote. He has asked the question about which I am concerned and has put it very clearly and precisely. He states:

While the intention of section 29 is laudible and applications for review are undesirable if appeal proceedings are available, some special thought might be given to those occasions when the appeal is to the Governor-in-Council or the Treasury Board.

What happens there? This is another point with which the faculty of Dalhousie University deals.

If the subject of the appeal is a pure question of law I wonder if those bodies are best equipped to cope with the problem.

May I pause here. If we have a right of appeal to the new federal appeal court, do we then go on to the Supreme Court of Canada? We have always had the right, without leave, to go to the Supreme Court of Canada on special remedies or on questions of law. Why is the Supreme Court of Canada being cut off? Is it because that court has overruled some of the decisions in respect of expropriation made by the former court?

An hon. Member: They have not been cut off.

Mr. Woolliams: An hon. member says they have not been cut off. There is an amendment here on that aspect and I will ask my question when it is being considered. I appreciate that the Minister of Justice has a body of law officers behind him and there may be a reason for this. The letter further states:

To the extent, of course, that the matter in appeal involves matters of policy obviously the Court must not have the power to interfere.

We are concerned also about the procedure established in 28(2) for bringing an application for review. I note that the application can be made by the Attorney General of Canada. I presume it is intended that that would occur only if the Government of Canada is a party affected by the decision. I wonder if for purposes of this section the Attorney General of Canada represents all other Ministers of the Crown.

I do not know the answer to this. It certainly was never answered for the committee.

> The time for application is ten days after a person directly affected has given notice of the order or decision of the board.

Now, dealing for a moment with the court's jurisdiction, here is another problem in respect of clause 28 and the right of appeal. If Mr. A and Mr. B are involved in a three car accident with the RCMP, so, the Crown is involved. The courts of Alberta can try the case as between A and B. The trial court in Alberta may say that B is at fault and A is awarded the damages, but it cannot deal with C's problem so the case goes to this new court and the court of appeal which finds that B is not at all at fault but C was. Who decides that conflict? We have one court saying that B is to blame and the other court saying that C is to blame.

Then, there is another problem. There may be a three-party contract; the Crown, A, as one party and B and C as the people. The provincial court may argue that B is in breach and the federal court may say no, it is A or it is C. Who determines that? I do not know the answers. This is what I call legal chaos. The conflict between clause 18 and clause 28 is equally chaotic. Again the letter states:

> Obviously there are occasions in which persons directly affected by an order or decision do not appear before the board. In that event the board will not communicate the decision to them. If the board does not so communicate then that person's right of appeal runs indefinitely. It is unreasonable that a right of appeal should be an indefinite one as it seems unreasonable to require a board to communicate its decision to all persons directly affected by it. We know, for example, that all persons employed in an industry are directly affected by an application for certification made by a trade union. In my view it is not now and should not be in the future the practice of the board to communicate to each employee separately.
> The objection would to a large extent be removed if the requirement that the communication by the board be removed and if the ten days run from the time when the substance of the order or decision is brought to the attention of the person affected by it.

So, in conclusion, in support of the amendment, I say I think clause 18 should be abolished. First of all, I believe we would be usurping the rights of every Canadian by having that Clause in the bill. It defines the special remedies under special conditions by a special court, and this is far too costly and not acceptable to Canadians. Secondly, if these special remedies are to be handled by a federal court—and it looks to me with the majority the government has that this is what we will have—then I would have to go along with the hon. member for Greenwood who suggests that it would be far better to have them handled by the court of appeal the minister is creating. However, I am not convinced in my mind—and I do not think that anyone who has ever studied the bill and who has done any litigation is convinced—that this will cure the legal chaos.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I shall not be very long, Mr. Speaker. I sympathize with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) because I feel that in these days, when things are happening in Canada, a technical debate on a legal problem is a little difficult. I wish to appeal to the minister to accept my friend's amendment. I rise because I want to put the argument to him in perhaps a slightly different way, although essentially I will be saying the same things that have already been said. As have the hon. member for Greenwood and I am sure the hon. member for Calgary North, I have had some considerable experience before the courts on applications for special remedies in connection with decisions, particularly, of labour boards. I am very concerned about the difficulties which the presence of both clauses 18 and 28 will create for the ordinary trade union, the ordinary citizen of the country and the lawyer who must guide them as to what steps to take.

The minister no doubt will correct me if I am wrong. However, as I read the two clauses it would seem that the drafters of the bill have attempted to do the following things. First, they have given the trial division exclusive jurisdiction to deal with applications for any of the special remedies such as injunction, certiorari, prohibition, mandamus and so on. Under section 28, they have given the court of appeal what is in effect a right to hear an application, an appeal. I know it is called a review of the order but, in effect, it is a right of appeal to the court of appeal from an order of a tribunal. Secondly, what they have attempted to do, if I understand the two sections correctly, is to leave to the trial division exclusive jurisdiction in respect of the special remedies only in administrative matters, while judicial or quasi-judicial decisions, are left—in effect a right of appeal—to the appeal division of the federal court.

If I understand it correctly, and I will try to indicate why I think it may be correct, I may say that just stating it that way shows what confusion will be created in fact. Why the minister and his advisers should want to create it, God knows. What the bill does is give the trial division exclusive jurisdiction to issue these special remedies. What happens in fact is, if a party, aggrieved by a board, commission or tribunal, feels he ought to go to court, under section 18 he can go to the trial division and ask for an order of certiorari to quash the decision of the board or other tribunal. So far as there may be an argument on that application for certiorari, it will be precisely that the board or commission has "failed to observe a principle of natural justice"—reading from section 28—or has "acted beyond or refused to exercise its jurisdiction". Those are the only grounds. Perhaps the tribunal may have erred in law because there was an error on the face of the record.

It may be that the act under which the board, commission or tribunal under which jurisdiction is established, has a primitive clause trying to oust the jurisdiction of the court. In that case Mr. Justice Roach, as he then was, in a case involving Canadian General Electric was right: if there is a primitive clause in the act, then the court's jurisdiction is ousted with respect to error, unless that error is on the face of the record.

The point I am trying to make is that when you go to court for a writ of certiorari or prohibition particularly, whatever court it may be, what you are really saying to the court and the only thing you can say to the court is: the board or commission has acted outside its jurisdiction or has not observed the principle of natural justice so that in section 18, although you refer merely to the prerogative writs, you are including the grounds in section 28. Unless I am very much mistaken, to speak in good Oxonian English which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) will understand, there "ain't any other grounds you can ask for"—certainly not when the act gives the board or commission the authority. Then, the only ground on which you can go to court to say the decision is wrong is if you can persuade the court that the board has gone outside its jurisdiction and failed to observe the principle of natural justice or that there is an error on the face of the record. Roughly those are the only grounds. In section 18 you are embodying the grounds set out in section 28 and why do that?

Then, you go to section 28 subsections (1) and (3). Subsection (1) reads:

> Notwithstanding section 18 or the provisions of any other Act, the Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to hear and determine an application to review and set aside a decision or order, other than a decision or order of an administrative nature not required by law to be made on a judicial or quasi judicial basis...

When you read that in connection with section 28, subsection (3), which states that where the court of appeal has jurisdiction under this section the trial division has no jurisdiction, you put the two together and what have you got? It is a little doubtful what exactly you have got but as far as I can make out, what you are saying is in the case of no judicial or quasi-judicial decisions or errors of a board or commission, only the court of appeal has jurisdiction. In the case of an administrative matters only the trial division has jurisdiction.

Then, you get into the question of what is the line between an administrative and judicial or quasi-judicial decision where the cases, and there are many of them, show that under the common law courts have been very reluctant to interfere with an administrative decision. So, what would you have? I say seriously to the minister that you leave the trial division only with the administrative decisions. If you read the two sections together, that is all they can mean, to deal with administrative decisions by way of special remedies or special writs. In fact the courts hesitate to interfere with administrative decisions. That is all I want to say on this point, but I want to raise one other point briefly.

It seems to me that my hon. friend's suggestion ought to commend itself to the minister and his advisers. What the hon. member for Greenwood says is that since it is frequently difficult to draw the line between administrative decisions and decisions that are quasi judicial—and the extent to which you should interfere with an administrative decision is an important question—you refer all these questions to the appeal division of the federal court. The appeal division can then establish the jurisprudence as to where the line is drawn and as to how far it will go to interfere with administrative decisions which have not a judicial or quasi-judicial character, and as to how it will deal with the latter, judicial and quasi-judicial.

It seems to me that you also obviate the procedural nightmare for the client and the lawyer of deciding whether their application will be an application for a writ or an application for review. In the one case, it is an application to the trial division and in the other case it is an application to the court of appeal. In many cases I can see where a lawyer and his client will appear in trial court thinking it has jurisdiction and the trial court will decide it does not have jurisdiction but the court of appeal does. Alternatively, they may go to the court of appeal and be told it is an administrative matter and they should go to the trial division.

Why should Canadians be put to that kind of trouble? What purpose is there in it? What is lost by taking my hon. friend's very sensible, agreeable proposition? Combine the two, go before one tribunal and the question of whether it is administrative or quasi-judicial is out of the window: the tribunal has jurisdiction to deal with it.

As my hon. friend says quite properly, when you consider amendment No. 9, you not only give the appeal court the right to review under subsection (1) but you also give the appeal court the right to issue special remedies of certiorari and the other special remedies that are there. That makes sense. I want to say that the hon. member for Greenwood and I have always had a little disagreement on this point, a perfectly legitimate disagreement. I have very grave concern about an automatic right of review of a quasi-judicial or judicial decision of a board, commission or tribunal. I have not the same confidence in the greater infallibility of the court as compared with the potential infallibility of a board, commission or tribunal.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Brewin: Neither do I.

Mr. Lewis: My hon. friend says that neither does he. Therefore, I have as much confidence in a competent board, tribunal or commission as I have in the courts, and this automatic right of appeal in clause 28 bothers me. But if it is going to be there, then I appeal to the minister that it be there on the sensible basis that my hon. friend proposes, so that you do not have a man, a woman, a union, or an organization of any other kind having to decide whether to go to one court or another and then, coming to one court, being dumped back to the other court or being pushed up to the Court of Appeal. I do not think there is any sense in that, and I do not really understand why the minister insists upon it.

The other very brief point I want to make is to repeat and emphasize a point which the hon. member for Greenwood has already made, namely, that if you accept his proposal you would obviate the possibility of more litigation than is desirable. It is always desirable to have less rather than more courts, and less rather than more actions and steps in one case, because if you have more than is absolutely necessary you increase the costs of those concerned.

If you leave clause 18 as it is, there will be cases where you go to the trial division and then, in certain cases, there will be an appeal to the court of appeal of the Federal Court, and also in certain cases a further appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. If you take my hon. friend's sensible and common sense suggestion, which I urgently ask the minister to consider, you obviate one of the courts in a case that goes higher. You simply have two courts that you can be before. You are before the court of appeal, and if there is an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada you are before that court, and no more, whereas in the other case you have the three steps.

To summarize, Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to the minister that if he does not want to accept my hon. friend's proposal now, he should take it under advisement for reconsideration, and spend a little more time on it. I have a little experience in this field. I just do not see why the minister is obstinate about retaining the step before the trial division of this court. There is no reason why the court of appeal could not deal with the special remedies as well as with the applications for review. This would obviate the difficulties which the hon. member for Greenwood indicated, and which I have repeated, with the possibility of three courts instead of two in certain cases. In that way you make life much more liveable for the people and the organizations that feel aggrieved by a decision of a board, tribunal or commission. If the minister has any doubts in his mind as to his present position, no doubt forced upon him by his advisers, just as all ministers have wrong positions forced on them by their advisers, perhaps he will take this evening to think it over and see if he could not agree with this very sensible proposal advanced by my colleague.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this is a very technical branch of the law indeed, and I have enjoyed the submissions that have been made, submissions that were also made, I might say, before the committee.

These three clauses, Nos. 18, 28 and 29, governing the review and appeal procedures available before the court in its two divisions over federal boards, tribunals and commissions, really set the preliminary stages for a code of public administrative law in this country. They are very important. They are very complicated even for lawyers because, as the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) stated, this branch of public administrative law is one with which not too many lawyers are familiar, but with which more and more lawyers should be familiar. I believe those sensitive relationships between the citizen and the state, with which this bill tries to deal in opening more avenues for appeal and recourse for the citizen and for private individuals against the decisions of boards, tribunals and commissions, should receive more judicial attention in this country than they have received to the present.

[Mr. Lewis.]

These three clauses in particular I hope will provide an infrastructure, or underpinning for the development of public administrative law in Canada, particularly since there is now only qualified appeal and appeal by leave to the Supreme Court. But by creating a federal court of appeal we make sure there is no longer the necessity for a petition of appeal to the Supreme Court. Whereas last year one judge of the Supreme Court could hear an appeal from that court on matters that might have dealt with freight rates, or very important labour matters, or matters coming before the National Energy Board, tariff matters, and other matters involving a wide variety of subjects falling within the jurisdiction of this parliament, now it takes three judges.

If this bill goes through we will have a method whereby the highest court in the country will not be dealing with merely factual matters arising from automobile accidents but with matters of constitutional law, with administrative law, with questions involving the provinces, and the interpretation of federal and provincial statutes.

Clauses 18, 28 and 29 are clauses to which the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) addresses himself, and I am grateful to him for having suggested that the House, on report stage, deal with them at the one time. I would like to point out that these three clauses received more attention from me and the members of my department, and from the legal profession in the replies we received to our requests for comments on the bill, than did any other clauses. The hon. member for Greenwood is quite right when he underlines the importance of the clauses with which we are dealing.

These three clauses provide the avenues of appeal and review from federal boards, tribunals and commissions. Under clause 18 the traditional common law prerogative writs, now left to the jurisdiction of the provincial superior courts across Canada arising out of their common law jurisdiction, are transferred to the federal court in its trial division, by reason of the statutory transfer found in clause 18. Those prerogative writs as they stand, and as they have been judicially interpreted, now would be referred to the federal court in so far as they relate to proceedings before federal tribunals, federal boards and federal commissions. So those common law writs, prerogative writs would, within the envelope of the current jurisprudence, be now interpreted before the federal court.

Clause 28 opens up a new statutory process of review. It is not a process of appeal because under clause 28 the court merely has jurisdiction to set aside or to turn back. It does not have the power to substitute its own view of the facts or its own judgment for that of a commission, board or tribunal. It is a referral back, or an order for re-hearing.

Mr. Lewis: Or a quashing.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Or a quashing. The court of appeal in the federal court does have the power under clause 28 in respect to those decisions or orders of commissions and boards that are not of an administrative nature, or are not required by law to be made under the judicial or quasi-judicial basis, to review them when one of three things must happen.

These are where a board has:

—failed to observe a principle of natural justice or otherwise acted beyond or refused to exercise its jurisdiction;

Natural justice, as hon. members know, is the right to be heard, the right to receive notice, the right to cross-examine the other party, the right to have the opportunity to force production of documents, and the right to have the reasons for judgment, although that has sometimes been refused in some of the federal Boards with which hon. members are familiar.

Mr. Lewis: And that is the ground for writs of certiorari.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will go into that in a moment.

The second thing which could happen is if a board:

—erred in law in making its decision or order, whether or not the error appears on the face of the record;

And the third thing that could happen is where a board:

—based its decision or order on an erroneous finding of fact that it made in a perverse or capricious manner or without regard for the material before it.

While it is true that the grounds for review may have been duplicated in some respects, may I suggest to hon. members that the grounds with respect to the prerogative writs under clause 18 contain some differences. First of all, it is clear that an error in law can be attacked, whether or not it appears on the face of the judgment, whether or not, in other words, reasons are given for judgment. In other words, it is apparent, under section 28(1) (b), that no federal tribunal can avoid a review process merely by refusing to give reasons for judgment. The case law on the prerogative writs is not entirely clear on the point, as I think my hon. friend for York South said.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Lewis: I agree.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Paragraph (c) goes far beyond what the prerogative writs allow at the moment, particularly when they ensure that the federal board has at least to pay some regard to the evidence before it.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, will the minister permit a question.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I develop what I am saying. This is a rather complicated thought process and I am trying to point out distinctions as between clauses.

Finally, under clause 29 the present avenues of appeal that may be found under various statutes, whether those statutes be the Tariff Board Act, the Broadcasting Act, the Railway Act, the National Energy Board Act or the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, are preserved. An appeal that may lie from any one of these boards by way of petition for leave to the Supreme Court of Canada is now preserved, with the intermediate step of the federal board of appeal being added. In other words, the statutory appeal right, by adding an intermediate step, is preserved in all statutes. In most of these statutes an appeal lies from a federal board or tribunal on a matter of law or a matter of jurisdiction and, in some statutes, on a matter of mixed law and fact. Thus the three review and appeal procedures found under clauses 18, 28 and 29 are alternative and cumulative.

Mr. Lewis: Would the minister mind explaining again how he reads clause 29?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, Mr. Speaker. If there is an appeal available from a board or commission under any statute currently in force, then that appeal is preserved; but there is an intermediate appeal to the federal court of appeal and thence to the Supreme Court of Canada. I think if you read clause 29 and then read section 31 which deals with appeals to the Supreme Court of Canada, this will be made clear.

Mr. Lewis: I do not see where the federal court of appeal comes in. I do not see where there is an intermediate step to the federal court of appeal. Does not clause 29 specifically say that where you have a right of appeal under another statute, then the right of review is removed?

Mr. Woolliams: That is right.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not read it that way. Let me say that clauses 18, 28 and 29 are not mutually exclusive provisions. They are alternative and cumulative. I think the opening words in clause 28 and the opening words in clause 29 make that quite clear. They say that a man who feels aggrieved or some entity that feels aggrieved may choose to proceed under clauses 18, 28 or 29, or under all at the same time, if that is open. That is the purpose of this; we hope that it will be so.

Why do we include all three clauses? Why should there not be some simplification? We want to make it perfectly clear, first of all, that we seek to preserve prerogative rights as they now exist, merely transferring them to the jurisdiction of the federal court instead of leaving them with the superior courts. The reason for that is this: one of the complaints of having multiple jurisdiction is that a federal board, such as the Canada Labour Relations Board, for example, could, under the present situation be deliberately harassed by a number of jurisdictions. Somebody who wants to attack a decision of the Canada

Labour Relations Board by a prerogative writ that is available in any one of the ten jurisdictions in Canada, can do so anywhere at the same time, and that is particularly so if the board is dealing with a matter involving a national employment situation. The same applies to the railway boards and broadcasting boards. I want to make it clear here that the attack open under prerogative writs is still available as they exist under common law, but that they will be now handled in one jurisdiction.

Mr. Woolliams: That will be pretty slow.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is also clear that clause 28 is limited to quasi-judicial or judicial matters. The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) was perfectly right when he said that administrative decisions of boards would not be reviewable under clause 28. They still could be reviewable in so far as they are reviewable today in virtue of clause 18 under prerogative writs. In other words, clause 28 is not self-sufficient; it has to be completed by clause 18. If we are dealing with administrative matters, they can ordinarily be attacked by prerogative writs. In addition, there are certain matters of declaratory relief in special circumstances involving mandamus, where you are asking for a declaratory form of relief that would not be available under clause 28 as it is drawn but which would be available under the prerogative writ of mandamus, as available under clause 18. These are reasons for leaving prerogative writs intact, despite the provision of a new statutory method of review under clause 28.

Why was clause 28 limited to matters of a judicial or quasi-judicial nature? It was so limited because we wanted to make it perfectly clear that it is not the function nor will it be the function of the federal court, which is a continuation of the Exchequer Court, to substitute its judgment for Parliament's judgment on policy matters. These boards have been properly set up by Parliament and have been given powers delegated to them by Parliament to administer the policy set by Parliament. Under the Broadcasting Act the CRTC is given the power of interpreting and administering the Canadian Broadcasting policy; under the Railway Act, the Canadian Transport Commission is given power—and certainly this is so under the declaratory section and section 2—to administer the national transportation policy. It is not the function of a court, nor should it be the function of a court in my opinion, to substitute a judicial judgment for an administrative judgment in the exercise of administering that policy. But if the board assumes a judicial or quasi-judicial function and if it is deciding rights between parties or rights of the citizen as against the state, then it ought to be bound by principles of natural justice, to stay within its jurisdiction, to be compelled to exercise its jurisdiction and to be compelled to pay some regard to the facts before it. So, the distinction in clause 28 is between administrative matters on the one hand and judicial questions on the other, and is to ensure that the court is reviewing judicial and quasi-judicial matters only. It is not to be allowed to be used as a vehicle for substituting judicial policy for administrative policy, a policy that is given to that board by the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. Brewin: We certainly agree with that.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That being so, the final clause is clause 29, which is still available. Under the statutes and the cases we do not want to abrogate a statutory right of appeal, whether that be taken under the Broadcasting Act, the Immigration Act or what have you. Thus those avenues of appeal are preserved.

If I may now talk to the specific amendment No. 4 proposed by the hon. member for Greenwood, it seems that he is proposing that we strike out clause 18. I believe that would lead to an unsatisfactory situation. We have studied this carefully. Of course, I will sleep on it one more night but, as I say, we studied this carefully and we feel it is necessary to include the clause in order to unify the jurisdiction over prerogative writs in one court instead of having them under ten courts. We believe that there are declaratory judgments available under prerogatory writs, particularly mandamus, preserved under clause 18 but not covered in clause 28.

We also believe that there must be some way of attacking unsound administrative judgments for which a remedy may still exist under clause 18, but not properly under clause 28.

We want to make it clear that in setting up these separate sections the prerogative writs are to remain intact and are merely transferred from one set of courts to one federal court.

The hon. member's second amendment, motion No. 7, I believe, would delete certain qualifying words. As I understand it, the words to be deleted in subclause (1) of clause 28 are, "decision or order, other than a decision or order of an administrative nature not required by law to be made on a judicial or quasi-judicial basis." I think I dealt with that.

Mr. Brewin: I think the law defines that.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think that is right. As a matter of fact, the definition of board or commission is wide enough to include a minister.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Does it also include ex-ministers who happen to be named Pickersgill?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Obviously an administrative decision made by a minister properly within his jurisdiction should not be caught under clause 28.

The final amendment of the hon. member for Greenwood with which we are dealing, No. 9, proposes that the jurisdiction conferred on the trial division of the federal court by clause 18 be conferred instead on the court of appeal. I listened very carefully to the argument of the hon. member for Greenwood and his colleague the hon. member for York South. We felt that since the prerogative writs were traditionally exercised before one judge, they ought to remain before one judge.

We felt that on the review procedure which dealt with questions of jurisdiction, law, the facts and whether due regard had been given to the facts would be more appropriately dealt with by a three-man court of appeal. I suppose one of the reasons was cosmetic. If there is a five-man Canadian Transport Commission, or a three-man committee, and a number of members who comprise the CRTC, it is better psychologically to have a three-man court sit in judgment over a three, five or seven-man board. In terms of credibility, I think there is something to that. The hon. member for York South will say, "Fine. Why not have that same credibility exercised by way of prerogative writ?"

Mr. Lewis: You read my mind.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I did not read your mind. That is difficult. I read your smile.

Mr. Lewis: My smile will tell you more than my mind.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In any event, the officials have given close attention to this. Their experience in this branch of the law is considerable, as I think my friends opposite will concede. Apparently 45 per cent to 50 per cent of the cases before this court involve the government of Canada. We responded to comments received from Members of the Bar. Two or three amendments were accepted in committee. As a result of further consultation, I will be making one or two technical amendments here. I will sleep on this. For the moment I want to preserve our position and I suggest that we reject the amendment.

Mr. Lewis: Just don't have insomnia.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The question is on motion No. 4. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred. The House will now proceed to motion No. 7.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think by agreement there may have been an order of the House that motion Nos. 4, 7 and 9 be taken together and that one vote would cover the three motions.

Mr. Brewin: That is correct. That is quite satisfactory.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it agreed that the vote on motion Nos. 4, 7 and 9 be deferred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The following motion No. 5, is proposed by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams):

That Bill C-172, respecting the Federal Court of Canada, be amended by striking out lines 1 and 2 on page 18 thereof and substituting the following:

"28(1) Notwithstanding the provisions of any other Act, the Court"—

Mr. Woolliams: Motion Nos. 5 and 6 are to be taken together, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The following motion, No. 6, is proposed by the hon. member for Calgary North:

That Bill C-172, respecting the Federal Court of Canada, be amended by striking out paragraph (c) of subclause (1) of clause 28 on page 18 thereof and substituting the following:

"(c) based its decision or order on an erroneous finding of fact that it made in a perverse or capricious manner."

Mr. Woolliams: Before speaking on motion Nos. 5 and 6, I wish to withdraw motion No. 10. As Mr. Speaker did not permit motion Nos. 1 and 2, it is not necessary to have No. 10. It only dealt with the appeal. This applies to appeals in the courts of appeal of the various provinces. With the consent of the House, I will withdraw motion No. 10.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House give unanimous consent to the hon. member to withdraw motion No. 10?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I will be very brief in my remarks with regard to motion Nos. 5 and 6. My reason is that I hope the amendments of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) are voted on first. If they are defeated, I will then ask that motion Nos. 5 and 6 be put because they are better than nothing. The amendments of the hon. member for Greenwood would cure the situation more effectively. Motion Nos. 5 and 6, are just a little cake, not the whole cake.

I do not want to repeat my argument regarding the duplication of Clauses 18, 28 and 29. I have already tried to point out some of the difficulties. I ask that my argument in reference to the amendments of the hon. member for Greenwood be incorporated into my argument with reference to motions Nos. 5 and 6. I see that the Minister of Justice is surprised at my brevity.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I agree with everything the hon. member has said, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The question is on motion No. 5. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred. The House will now proceed to motion No. 6.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think there is agreement that motions Nos. 5 and 6 are to be taken together.

Mr. Woolliams: Motion Nos. 5 and 6 are together, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it agreed that the vote on motions Nos. 5 and 6 be deferred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The following motion, No. 8 is proposed by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner):

That Bill C-172, respecting the Federal Court of Canada, be amended by (a) striking out line 26 on page 18 and substituting the following:

"party directly affected by the decision or"; and

(b) striking out line 31 on page 18 and substituting the following:

"General of Canada or to that party by".

• (5:50 p.m.)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): This amendment proposes to change the word "person" to the word "party" in lines 26 and 31 on page 18. It is made for the purpose of clarification only and I do not believe it changes the substance or principle. We want to make it perfectly clear that it is only a party to the action, or a party to proceedings before a board, who would have the right to be a party in review proceedings. If this were not the case, a person who had no original interest in an action could at any time enter to review the decision or ruling and no final decision would ever be reached concerning a ruling by a board or tribunal.

Mr. Lewis: Such a pleasure to hear the minister make a sensible suggestion and I hasten to support it.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice) moved:

That Bill C-172, an act respecting the Federal Court of Canada, be amended by striking out lines 21 and 22 on page 19 and substituting the following:

"where provision is expressly made by an Act of the Parliament of Canada for an appeal as such to the"

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is simply a technical change.

Motion No. 11 agreed to.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice) moved:

That Bill C-172, an act respecting the Federal Court of Canada, be amended by striking out line 26 on page 20 and substituting the following:

"Federal Court of Appeal, whether or not leave to appeal to the Supreme Court has been refused by the Federal Court of Appeal."

He said: I will explain this, if I may, Mr. Speaker. This amendment is to make it clear that we want to avoid any suggestion that refusal of leave to appeal by the court of appeal would in any way preclude the Supreme Court of Canada from extending the right of appeal.

Motion No. 12 agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The House will now consider motion No. 13 in the name of the hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Woolliams: Could we go on with motions 14 and 15? I just want to check this out for a minute or two.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House agree to stand consideration of motion 13 and proceed with the consideration of motions 14 and 15?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): We will turn now to motion No. 14 in the name of the hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood) moved:

That Bill C-172, an act respecting the Federal Court of Canada, be amended by striking out the words "or to federal-provincial relations," in subclause (2) of clause 41 at page 23.

Federal Court

He said: Mr. Speaker, we have made very good progress in the consideration of the report stage of this bill. The Minister of Justice has suggested to me that I might call it six o'clock, and I am very pleased to do so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House agree to call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It being six o'clock, the House will adjourn until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MacDONALD (EGMONT)—INFORMATION LEADING TO INVOKING OF WAR MEASURES ACT

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I have given you notice in accordance with paragraph 17(2) of our Standing Orders. It is one which affects the rights and privileges of all members of this House. It has to do with conflicting and misleading statements made by the Prime Minister and other members of the government with respect to the factors indicating a state of apprehended insurrection in the province of Quebec which necessitated the invocation of the War Measures Act. If it is the view of the House that there is in fact a prima facie case of privilege, I shall move that the question of an apprehended state of insurrection in Quebec and other matters related to the War Measures Act be referred to a special joint committee of both Houses of Parliament for a comprehensive inquiry, with a report to be made to both Houses with all possible dispatch.

The question relates to the information which led the government to invoke the War Measures Act. Replying to a question by the hon. member for York South, the Prime Minister stated, as reported in Hansard of October 28 at page 654:

> I am just saying that we acted on the information which is known to the House, which is known to Premier Bourassa, which is known to Mr. Drapeau and is known to ourselves as well as to all members.

A little later he said:

> I have answered repeatedly, Mr. Speaker, and I repeat again, that the information we had is available to everyone.

In an attempt to resolve the substantial difficulty which has arisen, particularly during the past few days, in connection with this matter, I asked the Prime Minister yesterday afternoon whether, having regard to the apparent state of confusion existing in the country with respect to the information which had been given, he or the government would consider setting up an independent commission to ascertain the facts. The Prime Minister replied as follows:

> I repeat for the umpteenth time that the facts on which we acted are known to the people.

He added that the only people who were confused were some politicians.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the same day as the Prime Minister gave that answer to the House, one of his own ministers stated in the city of Montreal, as reported in this morning's press, that a large amount of the intelligence gathered on the current Quebec crisis would "probably never be made public." The statement is attributed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien). The report continues:

> A lot of information we have on hand comes from informants, some of them highly placed. It would endanger their situation as well.
> We have good and sufficient reasons for invoking the War Measures Act. There are other reasons as well, and we will probably never be able to make them public.

If this had been the only such statement or innuendo made during recent days in connection with the grave steps taken by the government, one might be willing to overlook it as a ministerial slip. But members of this House as well as the people of this country have been faced over succeeding days with comment after comment from minister after minister indicating that there was, in fact, a large amount of information which could not be made public at this time. Indeed, in his opening statement on the question of the invoking of the War Measures Act the Minister of Justice said, as reported on page 212 of Hansard of October 16:

> As I said earlier, this has to be a question of judgment based on the information available to members of the cabinet. Needless to say, some of that information, because of the current state of affairs, is not information which necessarily can be made public.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Later in the same speech the Minister of Justice said, as reported at page 215:

> It is my hope that some day the full details of the intelligence upon which the government acted can be made public—

We in this House, Mr. Speaker, are charged quite literally with the basic institutions of law and order in this country. We have in some measure been asked by the government to give our support to the invoking of the most serious form of legislation possible affecting the ordinary rights, privileges and responsibilities that are exercised in this country. But in terms of why it was necessary to take this action and why the House should give its support, we have been treated over succeeding days to conflicting information and rumour both inside the House and outside.

For example, just the other day, not in this House but on a well-documented radio program, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) introduced into a most critical municipal election campaign suggestions concerning one legitimate political party in the city of Montreal.

There have also in recent days been rumours circulated in this House in regard to the kind of opposition—the kind of parallel power, to use the Prime Minister's term—that might be endangering the government of the province of Quebec. Suggestions are even being raised that perhaps some of that power lay within the government of Quebec itself.

The War Measures Act has been in effect now for 13 days and has substantially affected the freedom and the entrusted rights of all Canadians. To this date we have not received a clear statement from the government of this country or from the Prime Minister as to the necessity for the step that has been taken.

I believe—and in this respect I plead with the Prime Minister—that in order to do justice to the people of this country it is imperative that the kind of misleading and conflicting statements that are being made both inside and outside the House cease. In addition, to clarify matters the Prime Minister should offer to the House at this time a statement fully clarifying the confusion that exists, not just among politicians at far ends of the country but within the government itself.

If the Prime Minister is not able to make this statement, I trust he will realize that it is certainly in the best interests of the country to establish some form of independent body, whether it be a joint committee of the two Houses of Parliament, as I have suggested, or a commission as suggested by a number of eminent persons in this country during recent days. Without that kind of information we will be increasingly treated to questions of privilege and to confusion which can but demoralize and greatly exacerbate tensions that presently exist in this country.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has given the Chair the notice required under the Standing Orders, and I have given some serious thought to the most important problem raised in the hon. member's suggested question of privilege. As he and all hon. members realize, the decision that has to be made by the Chair now is not whether this is an urgent matter, whether it is an important matter, or whether or not it should be discussed by the House; the problem I have to determine and the decision that has to be made is whether there is here a question of privilege.

I have had opportunity on a number of occasions to indicate what, in my view, a question of privilege consists of. I have serious doubts whether, even in view of the serious conditions outlined by the hon. member, there is a question of privilege or that a question of privilege should be the vehicle used by the House for the consideration of the matter raised by the hon. member. As I read his motion, I have the distinct impression it is a rather substantive motion. What he proposes is really not so much that conflicting statements be studied but that this whole matter be considered by a special joint committee of both Houses of Parliament. He proposes a comprehensive inquiry by way of a joint committee or perhaps in some other way. That, in my view, is not really a question of privilege.

There are a number of precedents which indicate that in circumstances such as those indicated by the hon. member for Egmont there is no justification on the part of the Chair to rule that there is a prima facie case of privilege. I refer hon. members particularly to Citation 113 of Beauchesne's fourth edition.

My conclusion must be that the hon. member's proposal is, rather, a substantive motion and that perhaps he will find some other way to have his proposal considered by the House. I suggest it cannot be done by way of a question of privilege at this time.

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

TRANSPORT

WESTERN ONTARIO—ELIMINATION OF PASSENGER TRAIN SERVICE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion in the following case of urgent and pressing necessity. I refer to the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission cutting off over 400 miles of passenger train service in western Ontario, ending a vital service of over 80 years duration and reducing development possibilities. The final train will be on November 1.

Therefore, if the House gives unanimous consent, I intend to move that the whole question be re-examined by the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications in order to bring in amendments to the Railway Act involving reduction or discontinuance of rail service as suggested by the studies being conducted by the CTC and the provincial government of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo. This motion is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43 which requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will have heard the same nays I heard. In the circumstances the motion cannot be put.

GRAIN

TABLING OF PROPOSAL FOR PRODUCTION AND RECEIPTS POLICY

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table under Standing Order 41(2) copies in both official languages of a proposal for a production and grains receipts policy for the western grains industry.

FINANCE

TABLING OF TARIFF BOARD REPORT ON KNITTED OUTER GARMENTS

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Finance, in accordance with Section 6 of the Tariff Board Act I should like to table copies in both English and French of the report of the Tariff Board respecting knitted outer garments, Reference No. 145, together with a transcript of the proceedings at the public hearings held by the board. Any interested parties who wish to comment on this report should submit their views promptly to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

NATIONAL SECURITY

WAR MEASURES ACT—DETENTIONS BEYOND SEVEN DAYS —ACCESS TO COUNSEL—INDEPENDENT COMMISSION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he can now tell the House how many of the 138 persons detained under the War Measures Act regulations have been detained for longer than seven days at the request of the Minister of Justice of Quebec?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I was talking to the Attorney General of Quebec about 25 minutes ago. Because of other pressing matters he tells me he has not been able to compile the statistics but hopes to get them to me later in the afternoon. I apologize to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of complaints from the Quebec Bar that access to counsel has been denied prisoners held under the war measures regulations and in view of the sort of suspicions this kind of complaint engenders, will the Minister of Justice assure the House that the government will take steps promptly to guarantee that prisoners have access to counsel? I remind the minister that his government has the responsibility to ensure this in that it is his government that issued the regulations that permitted this to happen.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I shall repeat what I said. It is true that the regulations issued from this government, but the administration of justice under the regulations, as is the case under the Criminal Code, devolves upon the responsibility of the Attorney General of Quebec. It was to the Attorney General of Quebec that the Bar of Quebec made its submissions, and I feel he is perfectly capable of responding to those submissions and handling the situation as justice demands.

An hon. Member: They felt there was no use sending them to you.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, may I remind the Minister of Justice that it is his government which is responsible for this situation and that the responsibility cannot be sloughed off on the government of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I therefore ask the minister whether the government will appoint a commission, as was done even in wartime by a previous Liberal government—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: —to examine into possible abuses regarding searches, arrests and detentions in all parts of the country? Will the ministers of this government accept their responsibility, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The government is accepting its responsibility fully, but we understand how a federal state operates a little better than the Leader of the Opposition does.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): A commission along the lines—

An hon. Member: Heil Hitler!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —referred to by the Leader of the Opposition has already been appointed by the Attorney General of Quebec.

Mr. Stanfield: What about the other provinces?

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. member for Prince Albert on a supplementary.

INFORMATION LEADING TO INVOKING OF WAR MEASURES ACT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I do not know whether this is exactly a supplementary, Your Honour, but it arises out of the motion proposed by the hon. member for Egmont. It has to do with information which has been denied the House of Commons. I ask the Prime Minister whether he has seen the report of the interview of the mayor of Montreal who was quoted as saying that the revolution was started and would have proceeded when the War Measures Act was brought into effect and, furthermore, that the provisional government that was to be set up by some "well-meaning" people in Quebec would not have been formed with the idea of turning over powers to revolutionaries. Then, he is quoted as saying that conversations were held on this question not only in Montreal but in other parts of the province. I ask the Prime Minister whether it is a fact that the circumstances outlined by Mayor Drapeau, on which this House has received no information, are in accordance with the facts?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): He is asking if facts are in accordance with facts, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: This is a serious matter.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): You are Prime Minister; try to act like one!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister should cease to suffer from a dyspeptic annoyance with Parliament.

I ask him, was there such an arrangement among various people to form a provisional government in Quebec, and was it a fact that a revolution would have taken place within a matter of a very few hours apparently unless the War Measures Act were brought in? Can he tell us the truth for once in this House?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Silence is golden, but is the Prime Minister not going to tell the House the truth?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: He is silent.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

WAR MEASURES ACT—SUGGESTED EARLY REVOCATION IF DETENTIONS CONTINUE WITHOUT CHARGE

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I wish to address a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice, but perhaps it could also be addressed to the Prime Minister. If the situation outlined continues whereby under the regulations passed under the War Measures Act people are being held without any charges against them and without the opportunity to consult their counsel, will the government give consideration to an early measure revoking the application of the War Measures Act?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): That is a hypothetical question, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary to the Minister of Justice.

Has anyone told him that Michel Chartrand is being kept in jail to teach French and religion?

INFORMATION LEADING TO INVOKING OF WAR MEASURES ACT

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

For the benefit of hon. members, may I ask if the rumour about the formation of a provisional government was one of the valid arguments to justify the government's action in the crisis we are facing?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with all the patience of which I am capable, I shall repeat that the reasons why the government took its decision were stated in the House by myself many times. I want to point out that members of the opposition knew those reasons when 190 of them supported the government resolution against a dozen or so. It is for those same reasons that the people have given us their support ever since.

That other reasons may be bandied about as rumours or fantasies, or that the former Leader of the Opposition may himself have some information that is unknown to us, that is a question that some may wish to raise in the House. For our part, we have based our decision on the facts known to the people, of which we have informed the House, and which the opposition accepted when it voted in favour of our resolution. Those are the facts that remain.

Now, if the hon. members of the opposition wish to spread rumours, be they true or false or pure fantasy—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Korchinski: Four ministers said there were more.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary question.

As I referred to that rumour—since I believe that the establishment of a provisional government is but a rumour—and as the Prime Minister replied that in any case a rumour may be allowed to exist, can he assert that he considers the possibility of a provisional government nothing more than a rumour?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I replied to that question only the other day. I have several times given the three reasons for our move, the third being not only the disappearance of dynamite and arms but also the state of confusion and the forecasting of violence in the province of Quebec. Of course this state of confusion is interpreted by each in his own way. All I want to point out is that for the past few days it has not been the government but rather the opposition and the press gallery that have been launching other rumours. Let them take the responsibility for these and check their accuracy—

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, can the right hon. gentleman advise whether, before the imposition of the War Measures Act, he was categorically advised by the Prime Minister of Quebec and/or the mayor of Montreal that such a plan did exist for a provisional government to take over the province of Quebec, and did he believe these statements if they were made to him?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have stated the positions on which this government acted. They included advice from the government of Quebec and from the authorities of Montreal. Whether they believed these rumours or not is a matter for them to tell the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I am telling the House—

An hon. Member: You are evading the truth.

Mr. Trudeau: I am telling the House we did not act on anything else than what is before the House. I am not saying we did not have any other information, but I am saying that if hon. members opposite want to use this information, let them take the credit for it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for York South have a supplementary question?

Mr. Lewis: No, I have not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York South was deprived yesterday when he considered what he wanted to ask not to be a supplementary and it turned out afterwards that in my estimation it was. In light of yesterday's experience I feel sure that his question today is not supplementary, so I will recognize the hon. member for Portneuf.

[Translation]

WAR MEASURES ACT—AUTHORITY OF QUEBEC OMBUDSMAN

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Justice.

Could he tell us whether the ombudsman, or the protector of Quebec citizens, is subject to the regulations under the War Measures Act, or whether he can waive them, so that political prisoners may freely communicate with him?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, I did not understand the question.

Mr. Godin: Can the Minister of Justice tell us whether the ombudsman, or protector of Quebec citizens, is subject to the regulations under the War Measures Act, or whether he can waive them, so that political prisoners may freely communicate with him?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking the Minister of Justice for a legal opinion. I do not feel that this question, as put, is in order.

INFORMATION LEADING TO INVOKING OF WAR MEASURES ACT—STATEMENTS BY MINISTERS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In light of his repeated statement this afternoon, can he indicate why it has been necessary for members of his government to make statements outside the House, and occasionally within it, indicating there is other important information which in effect motivated the government to make the decision it did in respect of the War Measures Act?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will recognize that couched in those terms this is an argument. Perhaps he would like to rephrase the question. He asked why is it necessary for members of the government to make statements. Perhaps that question should be rephrased.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I will simply ask the Prime Minister whether it is government policy for ministers to make statements with respect to other reasons concerning the apprehended insurrection in the province of Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

EXTENT OF SEARCH FOR KIDNAPPERS AND ASSASSINS—PARTICIPATION BY INTERPOL

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask either the Minister of Justice or the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Attorney General—

Mr. Woolliams: The Solicitor General.

Mr. Korchinski: I am sorry, the Solicitor General—whether in fact the search for the abductors and assassins is confined to the province of Quebec under the direction of the Attorney General of that province or has extended to other provinces, and whether at this particular time, in view of the fact that it is now some three weeks since the original abduction took place, Interpol has been asked to participate in the search for some of these people who may have gone to other countries?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, that is such a detailed question that I think the Solicitor General ought to answer it. I will take it as notice for him.

QUEBEC—LOCATING OF STOLEN DYNAMITE AND GUNS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in view of the Prime Minister's statement and the statement of the Minister of Justice, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice whether the quantity of dynamite and the number of guns that were stolen have been found?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the police report to the Solicitor General, and I will take this question as notice for him.

Inquiries of the Ministry

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FOREIGN TAKEOVERS—LEGISLATION TO AMEND COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT—POLICY STATEMENT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have got a little weary of non-answers so I want to ask some questions on another subject.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): What about non-questions?

Mr. Lewis: They were not non-questions; they were non-answers. I would like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs a question arising out of the latest figures of domestic and foreign takeovers, which show that in 1969 there was a larger number of foreign takeovers than in 1968, which in turn had shown double the number of several preceding years. In view of this situation I want to ask him when we may expect his promised legislation on the Combines Act, and whether that legislation will deal with foreign takeovers in a distinct way from domestic takeovers?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the legislation will be read the first time as soon as it is ready. Of course it would be improper for me to answer the second part of the question at this time.

Mr. Lewis: "As soon as it is ready" does not give very much information. May I ask the minister whether the legislation is ready or almost ready and whether we may expect it very soon?

Mr. Basford: I am working very hard on it, Mr. Speaker, and I have indicated a number of times that I hope to have it introduced as soon as possible.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Revenue I wish to direct a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister tell us when we may expect the government statement of policy on foreign ownership in Canada, whether it is to be delayed some months or whether we can expect it in a few days or weeks?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Certainly not in a few days and more likely months than weeks, Mr. Speaker.

TAKEOVER OF CANADIAN FUNERAL FIRMS BY UNITED STATES CORPORATIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that, in the interim since I asked a question about this matter on April 7, some 23 Canadian funeral firms have been taken over by two United States corporations, will the government look into this matter in the hope that Canadians may at least be buried by Canadians?

Mr. Hees: Stan, you are dead right.

[Mr. Turner.]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can appreciate the hon. member's concern with the ownership of funeral parlours.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: The government, through the Director of Investigation and Research in my department, has been examining the situation for quite some time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask if this investigation will be completed in time for the burial of the government in 1972?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

AID TO VICTIMS OF CRIME

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

On May 15 and 21, 1969, in answer to a question that I had put to him, he indicated that he would study the advisability of establishing a commission to compensate victims of criminal acts. He said also, as is reported in Hansard, that he would submit this question to the commissioners responsible for the uniformity of law and to the provincial Attorneys General.

Could he say whether these discussions are completed and if he intends to inform the House forthwith about the state of the question, in the light of the events taking place in Quebec?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. I discussed this matter with the ten Attorneys General of Canada in Halifax, in July last. I submitted the question to the commissioners responsible for the uniformity of law in the province of Prince Edward Island in August and September, and I can provide the hon. member, by letter or orally, with a more detailed report.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED REPEGGING OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Will the minister consult with his colleague the Minister of Finance with a view to making an immediate annoucement with respect to the repegging of the Canadian dollar at an appropriate figure? I ask this question because of the immediate dangers facing secondary industry in Ontario and Quebec, where thousands of jobs—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Nesbitt: Your Honour, with respect, I directed the question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure the Minister of Finance would like to know at what level the hon. member would like to have the dollar pegged.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GENERAL MOTORS STRIKE—ACTION TO EXPEDITE SETTLEMENT

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour concerning the 24,500 Canadian auto workers now engaged in a strike against General Motors of Canada. Could the Minister indicate to the House what steps his department has taken to expedite the early settlement of this strike which is now well into its sixth week, or is the matter being left entirely to the United States union, management and government to negotiate terms and conditions for Canadian workers?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker, the problem is left precisely where it should be, in the hands of the Department of Labour of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour. Since the lengthy duration of this strike is now resulting in serious adverse economic conditions throughout the whole country, is the minister not giving any consideration to intervening with the object of bringing about an early settlement?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I have been taught for many years in the House of Commons to respect the constitution, and this matter falls entirely within the ambit of the Department of Labour of the province of Ontario.

URBAN AFFAIRS

TRANSPORTATION PROGRAMS

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister responsible for housing and urban affairs. In response to the Speech from the Throne the minister has put considerable emphasis on the problem of urban transportation. Is the minister in a position to tell the House if his department is presently working with the provinces in order to develop new programs for urban transportation and, if so, when will they be announced?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, first may I point out that, as indicated by the Speech from the Throne, it is not a department that is contemplated but a ministry system. I think it has been indicated also in the Speech from the Throne and in my subsequent remarks that all matters relevant to urban problems will be discussed with the provinces.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HOUSING

PROVISION OF ACCOMMODATION FOR THOSE BELOW POVERTY LINE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, would the minister in charge of housing indicate whether any consideration is being given to mounting a more concentrated effort on housing for those below the poverty line?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, we have increased our attention to that sector of the market very dramatically during the last two years, having in fact made commitments to housing starts for low income people equal to the total production in that area during the previous history of the National Housing Act.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CONVERSION OF COQUALEETZA HOSPITAL INTO COMMUNITY CENTRE

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare which is being asked by a lot of people outside the House. Why have the minister and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development not been able to put their heads together and come up with a plan for turning the old Coqualeetza Indian hospital into an Indian community centre? Can he give any indication when they may be able to get together and bring this project into being?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure that the first part of the question is in order but perhaps the minister might wish to reply to the second part of the hon. member's question.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have to advise the hon. member that the Minister for Indian Affairs and Northern Development and myself have got together on this question on several occasions. Within the last ten days we got together with the Indian people concerned and are working out the details of the transfer now with Indian Affairs so that this facility can be made available for the Indians.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, can the hon. gentleman explain why the feasibility study of the Coqualeetza hospital languished in somebody's department without coming to the attention of the appropriate officials for a long period of time?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member for Skeena that I do not agree with his statement of facts at all. I do not think it languished. I think it was analysed quite completely so that we could realistically discuss it with the Indian people.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

APPROPRIATENESS OF PROGRAM "AVALANCHE" SUBSTITUTED FOR FILM, "THE LEGACY OF LENIN"

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I wished to direct a question to the Secretary of State who was due to be in the House today but in his absence I shall direct it to the acting minister. Would the acting minister ask the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation why it was, when choosing a replacement for the film, "The Legacy of Lenin", which was due to appear on Tuesday night, they chose the program "Avalanche" inasmuch as in the middle of that program one full minute was devoted to the making of home-made bombs out of paint cans and sticks of dynamite? Does the minister not consider that this was a particularly inappropriate time for such instructions to be given to the Canadian people?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) I will take notice of the question which will be answered later.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INCREASED RECRUITMENT OF FRENCH-SPEAKING CANADIANS

Mr. C. Terrence Murphy (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question should properly be put to the Solicitor General but in his absence I shall address it to the right hon. Prime Minister. Is any action being taken to step up recruitment of French-speaking Canadians for service in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some doubt that the question is one which can be asked at this time. I recognize that the matter is one of importance but I would think this is the kind of question which could be considered at the time of adjournment. I do not want to be unfair to the hon. member and if the minister responsible would like to reply in due course perhaps he could do so.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

NUTRITIONAL VALUE OF ENRICHED BREAD—INDICATION ON WRAPPERS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Have any of his officials initiated steps to find out the nutritional value of the widely advertised enriched bread?

Mr. Speaker: I would think that this is a question which could be placed on the order paper. It is difficult for the Chair to determine which questions can be answered immediately but the recourse of hon. members, of course, is to return at the time of adjournment if there is urgency and if in the opinion of hon. members my judgment is wrong. If there is urgency, perhaps the minister might like to answer.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might rephrase my question and ask the minister whether he or his department is giving consideration to the placing on the wrappers of enriched bread the nutritional value—the mineral content and vitamins?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that even the redrafted question should normally be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Baldwin: Try it on some of the government backbenchers.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRYING—POLICY RESPECTING REDUCTION OF GRANTS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in spite of the present situation mankind will still have to be fed. For this reason I wish to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

In the light of the decision of Common Market countries to vote a budget of $3,600 million for subsidies to agricultural producers in those countries in order to increase production and assist farmers, will the Minister of Agriculture tell the House whether he will maintain his policy aimed at reducing the subsidies which are being paid to Canadian industrial milk producers at the present time?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there have been some very useful discussions going on between the provincial governments as well as the provincial milk marketing agencies and the Canadian Dairy Commission. I hope that within a reasonably short time we will be able to make an announcement on new agreements reached that will further the income potential of the dairy producers.

HEALTH

PREMARITAL TESTS FOR VENEREAL DISEASE

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister considering urging every province in Canada to introduce tests for venereal disease on a premarital basis, as is done in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba? I ask this question as a result of statements attributed to Dr. Stanley Acres of the department in last night's Ottawa Citizen.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member will allow me to take this question as notice.

GRAIN

WHEAT—PRICES OF GRADES IN SALES

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether he is prepared to provide the House with information indicating the price that was paid for grades one, two, three and four of wheat since the $1.60 a bushel is about 50 cents lower than the price which two years ago the farmers themselves and the farm organizations rejected and asked for at least a dollar more on domestic sales of wheat?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am always delighted to provide information to the House but I am afraid I do not understand the hon. member's reference to $1.60 in his question.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, at $160 million for 98 million bushels of wheat, a rough calculation is $1.60 a bushel.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to comment on the hon. member's quick mathematics, but now that he has referred, I take it, to the Chinese sale and has given the quantity and totals I can only say that the question of exact prices in transactions of that sort is considered by the Wheat Board to be confidential commercial information.

Mr. Hees: I have a supplementary question for the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. Does the professor not think it is about time he returned to take a refresher course at college?

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

CORNWALL—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON STUDIES AND PROGRAMS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Will the minister give consideration to making a statement on motions outlining the results of studies made by the federal government and the government of Ontario into the heavy unemployment in the Cornwall area and an early start on various programs under the provisions of the DREA legislation?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, we are actively dealing with employment conditions in the Cornwall area.

AGRICULTURE

ESTABLISHMENT OF FUR FARM RESEARCH CENTRE

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has any progress been made in the establishment of the fur farm research centre in the vicinity of Ottawa? If so, what is the target date for its completion?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I will attempt to get more detailed information on this question and reply to the hon. member very soon.

FISHERIES

LIMITING OF HERRING CATCHES BY INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): My question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. In view of the decline in available protein foods for human consumption, has any effort been made by the minister or officials of his department to secure through international means agreement to limit the catches of herring now being processed as fishmeal among countries that are members of the International Commission for the North Atlantic Fisheries?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, some discussions along those lines are already under way.

[Later:]

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. In view of the research being carried out by Canada, the United States and the U.S.S.R. regarding the herring fishery on the east coast of Canada, can the minister indicate whether the Canadian government is proposing a quota system to limit catches of herring, especially by the Republic of Germany, the biggest offender on the east coast?

Mr. Davis: As the hon. member knows, Mr. Speaker, we are now carrying out investigations to determine what the herring stock is and how it moves nationally and internationally. When we have this information we will move toward a sustained yield fishery as rapidly as we can.

NATIONAL SECURITY

INFILTRATION BY FLQ OF STRATEGIC PLACES

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Further to the minister's statement of October 16 with respect to infiltration into strategic places in Quebec by the FLQ and the Senate debate yesterday, does the minister think that the reason the kidnappers have not been apprehended is because of this infiltration? Does he agree that the said strategic places are correctly identified as the press, radio, CBC and education?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking a question in a form difficult to accept from the point of view of the Chair. The minister is being asked to express an opinion.

Mr. Bell: May I rephrase my question? Are these strategic places mentioned by the minister on October 16 as identified in the Senate, namely, the CBC, radio, press and education?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that I identified the places. If some did, they could give some explanations to the hon. member.

GRAIN

PROPOSAL FOR PRODUCTION AND RECEIPTS POLICY

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): I wish to direct my question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In light of the document the minister tabled earlier today, has the government decided to implement any of the proposals in the document, or is it to be considered as a white paper and that they are proposals only?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my purpose in tabling the document was to allow the producer organizations a further opportunity for discussion. As the document reveals, there are a good number of details in the program to be settled. As we go forward, we hope the discussions with producer organizations, the various provincial Ministers of Agriculture and others will lead to completion of the details of the program.

HEALTH

MEDICARE—DISCUSSION OF COST SHARING FOR PARAMEDICAL SERVICES AT CONFERENCE WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will the minister advise the House if in his forthcoming meetings with his provincial counterparts he will be discussing the whole subject of cost-sharing for paramedical services under medicare?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am advised, Mr. Speaker, that this matter will be raised by the provincial ministers for discussion at that conference. Whether it will cover the entire range of paramedical services is not known at this time, but certainly many aspects of it.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): A supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate the fact that the hon. member wants to ask a supplementary. I have intervened during the last two or three questions to suggest that we should not have supplementaries because there are only four or five minutes remaining in the question period. Perhaps the hon. member can ask his supplementary and I will then return to the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre who was denied a supplementary a few moments ago. We will try to get on as quickly as we can.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Will the minister advise the House which services will be discussed?

Mr. Munro: I would advise the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, that the agenda is still in a tentative stage. We are trying to arrive at some agreement with the provinces as to what items will be discussed. It seems quite definite that this area will be discussed, with special emphasis, no doubt, on optometry.

GRAIN

PROPOSAL FOR PRODUCTION AND RECEIPTS POLICY

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Does the minister in charge of the Wheat Board have in mind any scheduled time for discussions on the document he tabled today? What is the latest date for his making an announcement to the House on the decisions the government has made?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I cannot set forth a precise timetable, but we do consider the matter of some urgency and we will find it very important to move toward the legislative stage on these proposals, many of which require legislation to put them into force.

BARLEY—AMOUNT OF FINAL PAYMENT TO FARMERS

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): I have a question for the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. On October 6 I ask the minister if he would consider the possibility of forecasting the final payment for barley in view of the concern in western Canada as to how and when the farmers should market this product. I appreciate the concern of the minister at that time. He promised me he would study the matter to see whether he could ascertain a reliable forecast as to what the final payment would be. Is he now in a position to give the House the benefit of his wisdom in that regard?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): What I indicated was that I would be willing to look at the question to see whether in fact an earlier date could be selected for any such forecast. I am sorry to say I am no farther ahead at this stage.

Mr. Horner: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. As there are only two or three minutes remaining in the question period, I wonder whether the hon. member would mind if other members were permitted to ask questions?

NATIONAL SECURITY

WAR MEASURES ACT—STATUS OF ARMED DEER HUNTERS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Darmouth-Halifax East): My question is for the Solicitor General. In his absence I direct it to one of the ministers of the Crown so that perhaps something will be done. On Monday the deer hunting season in Quebec opens for the first time in three years. I am concerned about the safety of non-residents of that province, including Americans, who enter that province for the purpose of deer hunting with all the necessary arms. What is the status of these people under the War Measures Act?

FEDERAL INITIATIVES FOLLOWING EVIDENCE OF MR. SAULNIER BEFORE COMMITTEE

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): My question is directed to the Minister of Justice. It is prompted by the answers of the minister to some earlier exchanges. In view of the fact that the minister understands the federal system and discharges his duties, can he inform the House whether he was one of the ministers who reviewed the evidence of Mr. Saulnier in light of the recommendation in the first report of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts which was tabled in this House on December 5, 1969, for further study and consideration, as stated in the last sentence of the report? What federal initiatives, if any, were taken between the time of the tabling of the report with Mr. Saulnier's evidence and the opening of the letters by the minister or the Prime Minister which were received from Mr. Bourassa and Mr. Drapeau one year later?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): It is true that evidence was reviewed, Mr. Speaker, but as I have stated in the House on other occasions, the primary responsibility for prosecutions at that time lay with either the police of Montreal or the Attorney General of Quebec. They saw fit not to prosecute.

KIDNAPPING OF JAMES CROSS—OFFERING OF REWARD BY PRIVATE INTERESTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I wish to ask the Minister of Justice whether the matter of the reward offered by two private enterprises in connection with the Cross case was discussed with the government prior to the offer? In light of that and of other recent events, is the government now reconsidering the matter of a reward in this matter?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I will take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker. The last time the question was asked it was directed to the Solicitor General who stated he would report to the House in due course. I think I ought to leave it that way.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SPECIAL INSTRUCTIONS RESPECTING NEWS PROGRAMS

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion in the absence of the Secretary of State. Would he ask his colleague to inquire of the CBC, both French and English networks, whether any special instructions have been issued during the past two weeks concerning the delivery of news on either network, and whether, should such instructions have been issued, the minister would make a statement concerning them in the House?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I shall refer the matter to the Secretary of State.

SOCIAL SECURITY

ISSUING OF INSURANCE CARDS TO NON-CANADIANS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

Could he inform the House whether the Unemployment Insurance Commission has the authority to issue social insurance cards to individuals who are not recognized as Canadians, such as American Army deserters, or to other classes of individuals who have entered Canada illegally?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question could be placed on the order paper.

NATURAL RESOURCES

SHUTTING OFF OF NELSON RIVER FLOW—PROTECTION OF AQUATIC ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Gerald Richard Cobbe (Portage): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Is it a fact that the total flow of the Nelson River, Manitoba, was shut off as of yesterday and, if so, was his department notified of this action?

Mr. Speaker: The question is asked in terms which are perhaps not entirely correct from a procedural standpoint, but I suggest the minister should be allowed to reply.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Officials of my department have been in touch with the Department of Mines and Natural Resources in Manitoba and with the Manitoba Hydro Electric Commission. We have drawn their attention to section 20 of the Fisheries Act and we have asked that a minimum flow be allowed to go down the river so as to protect the aquatic environment there.

POST OFFICE

PLANS FOR DEPARTMENTAL REORGANIZATION

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications and Postmaster General. In December 1969, the minister tabled a study entitled "A Blueprint for Change", and in tabling this document he stated that a white paper revealing the government's plans for a thorough reorganization of the department would be released at an early date. Can the hon. gentleman advise the House when this white paper will be tabled in view of continuing widespread concern with regard to postal services in Canada?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Minister of Communications): I suggest the hon. member should put that question to my colleague who is in charge of postal operations.

An hon. Member: Aren't you glad?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Might I be permitted to ask the Leader of the House what the business is likely to be during the coming week?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): The following is a tentative outline of government business for the coming week. We shall continue today with government order No. 11, the Federal Court bill, and when that is completed we shall resume debate on government order No. 9, Bill C-4 with respect to the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. When that is finished we shall take up government order No. 10, Bill C-5, with respect to Deuterium of Canada Limited.

On Monday, we shall probably consider government order 18, Bill C-174 establishing the tax review board, and follow that with government order No. 21, Bill C-177 respecting co-operative associations. It is expected that next Thursday will be an opposition day under the auspices, I believe, of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Baldwin: Is it the intention of the government to bring in, and commence debate on, a bill to replace the War Measures Act within the next week?

Mr. MacEachen: I stated that this was a tentative outline; it may be we shall be in a position next week to interrupt this business and deal with the measure the hon. member has mentioned.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FEDERAL COURT

MEASURE RESPECTING CONSTITUTION, JURISDICTION, ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

The House resumed from Wednesday, October 28, consideration of Bill C-172, respecting the Federal Court of Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

[Mr. Southam.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As hon. members know, there was a discussion yesterday in the House in connection with two of the motions which were under consideration. They were submitted for the consideration of the House in the name of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). The suggestion was made by the Chair that there was some procedural difficulty with regard to these amendments. The Chair also indicated to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) that motion No. 19 also appeared to be out of order. No argument was submitted at the time and I said I would be prepared, when we reached that item, to hear arguments either for or against the acceptability of that amendment.

Since then there have been discussions with the hon. member for Calgary North, the Minister of Justice and other hon. members. It was felt that, bearing in mind the work which had gone on during the committee stage, when this bill was under consideration, it might be the desire of the House to have a debate on the motions which were considered out of order by the Chair, that is, motions Nos. 1 and 2. For this purpose these motions would eventually be put to the House.

For the moment, my understanding is that when the House adjourned yesterday we had begun consideration of motion No. 14 in the name of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) who had the floor. Perhaps, after we have completed consideration of this particular motion, we might return to motions Nos. 1 and 2 in the name of the hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Woolliams: I should just like to say that I appreciate the Chair taking this course; I assume the House has agreed to it. We on this side certainly agree to a discussion of the motion in the name of the Minister of Justice to which Your Honour referred.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair put it in this way—that I assumed this was the wish of the House. I take it that it is, and that is why I indicated the motions would be put in due course. But for the moment, the hon. member for Greenwood has the floor.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the amendment in my name, motion No. 14, proposes to strike out of clause 41 the words which are found in 41(2)—"or to federal-provincial relations."

Members of the House who are interested in this matter know that section 41 as a whole deals with the disclosure of documents in proceedings before the federal court which is to be established. The amendment I propose is not a sweeping one, but it does involve an important matter of principle. It represents an effort to break down to some extent the iron curtain of secrecy unnecessarily thrown around public documents. In explaining it I should like, first of all, to refer to 41(1). This is a section which enables a Minister of the Crown—how can I talk above all this noise?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps I should try to assist the hon. member for Greenwood. It is very difficult for him to make his argument, and I might say it is difficult for the Chair to hear him above the conversations which are going on in the House at the present time.

Mr. Brewin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was saying that the purpose of section 41 is to deal with the provision of public documents in the federal court. It states that a minister of the crown may make an affidavit that on the grounds of public interest a document should be withheld from production and discovery, or be subject to such restriction as is deemed appropriate. Then, if the minister makes the affidavit under the general provisions of subsection (1), the court is given the authority to examine the document and to make an order for its discovery and production to the parties as well as to the court if it thinks it appropriate so to do.

• (3:10 p.m.)

I was involved in some controversy with the Minister of Justice over the legal background to this matter. My view is that this clause is a very appropriate one because it reflects what is the most up-to-date view of the law at the present time, namely that the court has the authority, when an objection is made that the document is one of public interest and should not be produced, to look at the document and to determine for itself, without relying merely on the minister's affidavit, whether or not it should be produced. So far so good; I think subsection (1) is useful and worth while.

Coming to subsection (2), it provides as follows:

> When a Minister of the Crown certifies to any court by affidavit that the production or discovery of a document or its contents would be injurious to international relations, national defence or security, or to federal-provincial relations, or that it would disclose a confidence of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, discovery and production shall be refused without any examination of the document by the court.

The effect of this provision is that when a minister of the crown, who in this sort of case acts, I imagine, 99 times out of 100 on the advice of his officials, says that a document should not be produced, the court is then deprived of the opportunity of looking at it in order to determine whether the claim is or is not well founded. It is my submission that while this may be perfectly justifiable with regard to documents that the minister thinks are injurious to international relations, national defence or security, of that would disclose a confidence of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, it is little short of ridiculous to say that a document ought not to be produced, and not only that but that even the court must not look at the document to see whether it ought to be produced in the interests of the litigants involved, merely because it would be injurious to federal-provincial relations.

Surely, there is nothing secret about relations between the federal government and the provinces or between departments of the federal government and departments of the provincial governments. Surely we, the public of Canada, have the right to say not necessarily that a document should be produced, but at least that it be produced to the extent that the court, which surely can be trusted in these matters, should have the right to look at it and decide whether or not it should be produced. This absolute prohibition that lies at the discretion of the minister, unexaminable by the courts, I do not think should exist. The purpose of my amendment is to strike out the words "Federal-Provincial Relations".

The habit of claiming secrecy with regard to official documents has reached proportions that are far too broad in this country. It is often claimed as a matter of course without reference to the facts at all. It is some protection of the public interest and the private interests of litigants whose future and fortunes may depend upon the production of a certain document if the court is able under subsection (1) to look at the document and to declare: "In our view the document ought to be produced; the affidavit does not satisfy us that there is any reason for not producing a document that perhaps is important to the litigation in question".

It is my submission, as I said in opening, that we should lift the iron curtain of secrecy surrounding these documents, at least to the extent I have stated, rather than rely upon the mere formal affidavit by a minister of the crown that the document concerns federal-provincial relations as the reason for restricting the administration of justice. It is a problem of balance between the administration of justice and the rights of litigants on the one hand, and the public interest on the other hand.

In my submission this particular clause goes far beyond any reasonable balance by giving the minister absolute discretion to say that federal-provincial relations are affected by a given document. After all, practically every subject of concern to government affects federal-provincial relations in some way. This provision gives the minister carte blanche to refuse production without the court even being permitted to inquire whether there is justification for that refusal. I submit that it is part and parcel of the over-secretive philosophy which is only too popular among bureaucracies. I invite the minister to look once more at this clause and to accept this very reasonable amendment.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in order to address myself properly to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), I think I should outline briefly to the House the purpose of clause 41. I did this in the committee, but now we are before the full House at the report stage it might help to state the position of the government with regard to this clause.

Clause 41 is an attempt to codify the principles relating to the production and discovery of documents in a court. I might say that clause 41 is not limited to the federal court but applies as against the crown in right of Canada in any court, including the provincial courts. Its purpose is to codify those principles where it appears that the production or discovery of documents may adversely affect some important public interest.

The state of the law in Canada at the moment is not clear. The hon. member for Greenwood and I have differed on other occasions as to what the law is. It is clear that for a good time in the United Kingdom—and our case law and public administration law derives in some respect from the English law—the law was settled by the case of Duncan v. Cammell Laird Company, found in 1942 Appeal Cases, 624. This case was interpreted by the courts to mean that the executive had virtually complete control over the production of documents in the hands of the government as against the courts or against parties before the courts who might demand that production. It allowed a minister of the Crown to protect absolutely by affidavit any document the discovery of which, in the view of the minister, would affect the public interest, including the workings or operations of the public service. Indeed, the Cammell Laird case was thought by many people to have deprived the courts of any role at all in an area where a document might be in the hands of a minister acting within his ministerial responsibility.

Recently the House of Lords in the Conway v. Rimmer case, reported in 1968 Appeal Cases, 910, dealt with the question of the production of police reports in an action for malicious prosecution. In this case before the House of Lords two years ago a review of the rather broadly stated principle in the Cammell Laird case was undertaken by the House of Lords, and it is now clear that the courts should have some role in determining and weighing the various public interests that may be involved, when and if a minister of the Crown seeks to prevent production of a document on a court order.

Subclause (1) of clause 41 attempts to state the general principles that are laid down in the Cammell Laird case as interpreted by the Conway v. Rimmer case; but we have specifically stated that, in attempting to weigh the public interest in deciding whether the minister should have the power to withhold the production of a document by entering his affidavit, or conversely whether the court should have power to order production and discovery, the court should place—to use the words of the subclause—"such restrictions or conditions as it deems appropriate" upon the production.

It may well be, as hon. members recognize, that production may be valid in the interests of the parties concerned but perhaps invalid so far as the interests of the world at large are concerned. There are restrictions, but the general rule is as set out in clause 41(1), that the court has power to order production. Clause 41(2) sets restrictions against that ability of the court to order production or discovery of documents, and it reads this way:

• (3:20 p.m.)

When a minister of the Crown certifies to any court by affidavit that the production or discovery of a document or its contents would be injurious to international relations, national defence or security, or to federal-provincial relations, or that it would disclose a confidence of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, discovery and production shall be refused without any examination of the document by the court.

There are four specific areas of exclusion and I take it that the hon. member takes no objection to three of those areas of exclusion. He recognizes that the confidence of the cabinet or the Privy Council ought to remain a confidence. I think he accepts the fact that if a minister is to certify that the international relations of Canada would be injuriously affected, that again would govern. I take it that in the realm of national defence or security he again agrees that if the minister certifies it would be injurious to national defence or security the affidavit would bind the court and the production of the document would be refused.

The point of his amendment is, should that exclusion include a document when a minister says its production would be injurious to federal-provincial relations. That is the purpose of the amendment. I find it difficult to see how, where, in a federal state, the relationship between federal and provincial governments and executives, is in a state of uncertainty and flux, and involves delicate matters of policy affecting the unity of the country, differ in terms of principle from the other exclusions. I think we must recognize that it may not always be in the interests of the country that correspondence, say between first ministers or between other ministers of government departments, should be produced.

Mr. Brewin: Could I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will answer the question at the end, if I may. I would, therefore, submit that the exclusion of federal-provincial relations is a proper inclusion. Putting it the other way, the exclusion of federal-provincial relations is a proper inclusion in subclause (2).

I think I should make it clear that subclause (2) operates only where a minister of the Crown certifies that in fact that particular document ought not to be produced. There is no automatic exclusion under clause 41(2). There is no automatic exclusion of any document simply because it falls within one of the listed headings set forth in the subclause. It may be that in the normal case documents involving the relationships between federal and provincial governments would be produced, as they are often produced in this House on Notices of Motions for production of papers, with the consent of the province being obtained. For these reasons I urge that the House reject the amendment.

Mr. Brewin: Would the minister accept a question? Does the minister not consider that in those, I would think fairly rare cases, where a document relating to federal provincial relations is of such a confidential nature the minister does not want to produce it, it would be perfectly reasonable to leave that situation under the provisions of subclause (1)? The minister could make his affidavit and the court would have the responsibility of looking at the document, rather than give this blanket power to the minister under subclause (2).

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member takes a view different from mine as to who is best able to judge whether federal-provincial relations might be affected by the production of a document. I submit that a minister responsible to Parliament should take that responsibility and it should not be left to a judge.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): At the outset, I should like to agree with the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) on this particular point. I am not concerned about the exclusion of the other two or three types of documents, that is those relating to international relations, national defence or security, but I am concerned with federal-provincial relations. I appreciate the argument of the Minister of Justice that the executive would have knowledge as to what might affect federal-provincial relationships. Surely, if there were any question of confidentiality, then in the usual course of the production of documents, as stated by the hon. member for Greenwood, the production of documents could be held in camera by the court. Let me deal with some examples.

We are moving into a new field. Let us take for example the National Energy Board which has authority over pipelines which have become more important with the development of our country. Natural gas, coal, and no doubt wheat in the very near future, will be moved by pipelines. This often involves federal-provincial relations. It may be that litigation involving a citizen and the Crown might require a document, the production of which the lawyer representing the citizen felt to be necessary. If for some reason the executive felt there might be some injury to federal-provincial relationships as a result of the production of such a document, surely during argument it could be presented to the judge for examination. I have absolute confidence that if a judge were asked to keep the document confidential there would be no disclosure. I do not think we should give the minister this kind of power. This seems to be a catchall clause for anything the Crown does not want produced.

What a citizen is litigating with the Crown he is fighting a very powerful organization. He is fighting all the brains of the law officers of the Crown.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Thank you.

Mr. Woolliams: They are well briefed and they know how to win cases. They know what evidence is necessary and what evidence is not necessary. I have found, through my experience in tax cases, and I know my friend the Minister of Justice has had this experience as well in tax cases and expropriation cases, that these Crown officers do not like to disclose many of the cards they are holding.

I am concerned that this expression "federal-provincial relations" will mean that many documents, if not all documents, falling under that category will be excluded. The pertinent part reads:

> When a Minister of the Crown certifies to any court by affidavit that the production or discovery of a document or its contents would be injurious to...federal-provincial relations... shall be refused—

In other words, this shall be left solely to the discretion of the Crown or the minister. This gives the state too much power. I am thinking of pipelines and litigation with regard to railways and national parks, which certainly involve federal-provincial relations when deals are made. I have had a little discomfort in that field and I do not intend to get into that.

On these grounds, I support clause 41(2) if the minister would withdraw that part, as suggested by the hon. member for Greenwood in his amendment No. 14. I would ask the minister to reconsider it. Surely, he is one man who I think, because he is a young minister with aims and objectives, would endeavour to appoint top men to the judiciary. He has shown his ability in that regard. Surely a judge should have the right to make this decision rather than to leave it to an executive of this powerful state.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, this discussion so far has been on a very legalistic plane. It seems that we should consider what we are legislating here. I was quite surprised to hear the minister give the impression that our law now stems from the precedents he quoted. Normally, legislation does not follow the courts, the courts follow the legislation.

The arguments presented by the minister about the sensitivity and the very delicate nature, in a federal state such as this, of federal-provincial relations were interesting, I think, in so far as security is concerned, they rank equally to international affairs in some cases. Certainly in the situation which exists today, there is a great deal of discussion between the province and the federal government. It is not always advisable that all these discussions should be made public. We then get into a certain phase of this argument on the amendment which is this.

• (3:30 p.m.)

The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) wants the court to decide whether or not a document is or should be considered privileged. We in this House of Commons do not have this privilege at all because the parliamentary system is based on the idea of ministerial responsibility, and the government falls or stands with the ministers' decisions. So here, we are faced with a situation in which this House can be, and often is, refused information of this same nature by the minister because it is confidential. The courts, on the other hand, would be in a much better position because at any time they could have all or any documents. If we were to follow the course suggested, we would have to reconsider the whole idea of parliamentary government. I am not suggesting for a moment that we should stay with the exact system we have now, but if there is to be a change then we should not limit our consideration to just what is contained in the amendment but should broaden it to cover the whole field.

I put this to the hon. member for Greenwood. Let us suppose that the amendment carried. Then, if there should be no disagreement between the minister and the courts there would be no problem. But let us suppose there is disagreement. Then the minister, a minister of the Crown representing the people who elected this government, is in a secondary position to the court.

Mr. Brewin: So he should be.

Mr. Otto: The court might say that it does not believe the document has anything to do with federal-provincial relations. So, we would be placing the judiciary in a legislative position. In this case, it would be deciding what should be the policy of the government. Let us go further and suppose there is correspondence between a provincial government and the federal government which, at the instigation of the province, is meant to be kept secret. This government, in effect, says to the province that it has a certain relationship with the province and if the province desires information or correspondence between the two of them to be kept secret, this desire will be honoured. As a result of this understanding there is much more correspondence and freedom of expression.

However, if the provinces have requested secrecy and the government should be forced to disclose the information or documents to a court, the court might decide there should be no secrecy. Then, what is the situation in respect of the pledge that has been given? In other words, the consequence of this amendment obviously would be that communications between provincial governments and the federal government would be couched in such careful terms, in the knowledge that they might become public, that provincial-federal discussions would be meaningless. I, therefore, say that the hon. member for Greenwood should reconsider his position and I support the government's position on this amendment.

Mr. Brewin: I have no intention of reconsidering my position.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make clear that I support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). I believe the arguments of the hon. member and of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) are strong and valid arguments. I should like to add briefly to them. We are dealing with justice. People go to court presumably in the hope that they will receive justice. I cannot see anyone being satisfied if, when he goes to court, he cannot obtain a document and therefore cannot present his full case to the judge. I believe it is invidious to give anyone the power to withhold information, because it might make a few red faces in Ottawa or in the provincial capitals, which might make a great deal of difference to a person's case. This strikes at the very notion of justice.

I agree that we would not want our courts to become circuses such as happens too often in the United States. There should be a power to turn down mischievous requests. In any event judges probably have this power. I say that this Parliament would be committing a wrongful act if it were to give this power to any minister of justice, because it strikes at the very heart of justice itself.

Now, let me give a few specific examples of how I believe litigants could be placed in a very invidious position in respect of the conduct of their cases. My honourable and learned friend from Calgary North has mentioned the dealings of pipeline companies whose pipelines extend across provincial boundaries. Such companies are under the jurisdiction of at least one national body and presumably, because the provinces have the natural resources which are being dealt with and carried in the pipeline, there is a flow of information back and forth between the federal and provincial governments.

There might be a situation where someone, whose case depends very much on some federal or provincial decisions, might wish to obtain such decisions so that he could present them to the court. His request could be turned down by the Minister of Justice, and that would make a mockery of his case. As a matter of fact, he could have initiated a case, spent thousands and thousands of dollars in retaining lawyers and obtaining documents, only to find when he got into court that his whole case collapsed because the Minister of Justice sitting in Ottawa refused to produce the document on which his case was based. I say that should not happen. As I say, I can see it happening in many cases involving business because in matters of trade the federal government has a responsibility under the constitution.

We have mentioned the situation in respect of the movement of natural resources, which are a provincial responsibility, across provincial boundaries. Let us take the illustration further and relate it to what everybody is talking about in Canada today, the tragic events in the province of Quebec. There may be situations in which people will decide to take action against someone in an effort to obtain redress for the loss of their civil liberties. I suppose under other parts of this subclause the minister could deal with such people peremptorily and knock out their case by refusing to disclose documents on the ground that they would be injurious to national defence or security. There seem to be a strange variety of crimes being committed in Canada these days under both headings.

In any event, I believe I am making my point concerning the power of the minister. I am not referring to this minister because I do not want to be in an ad hominem position in this argument. I am just saying that a minister of justice, to preserve the political applomb of himself and his associates or some friend in some provincial capital, could use his power and any ideal of justice would become very secondary. I think it is invidious and insidious.

I certainly support the hon. member for Greenwood in his efforts to knock out this provision. I hope the Minister of Justice, who does listen to reasoned argument and who is a first-rate fellow to deal with, even at this stage will change his mind and instruct his parliamentary secretary to say, "yes, you fellows on the other side have made your point and we accept the argument".

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): I support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), which was supported also by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave). Although this subclause appears to be a very minor one and only deals with a technicality, it strikes me that it gets to the very root of justice itself. Apparently, in relation to subclause (2), we are only worried as to who should make the decision, but I do not think that is all that is involved. As I understand it, the whole purpose of the bill is to try to get our administrative law out of the morass in which it has been, so we are setting up a federal court, presumably with judges who will be well schooled in the administrative law and also well able to defend, where necessary, the rights of the Crown. They are appointed and maintained by the Crown. We expect them also to keep a very objective view throughout any litigation although they are on the side of the Crown.

No doubt in most of these cases, success will depend on whether or not certain documents are produced. In subclause (2) we are asked to broaden the circumstances in which certain documents are not disclosed. If taken to its logical conclusion, this means the almost complete exclusion of the documents if the judge gives a very technical or very literal interpretation to the law. Although we know that the best judges will be appointed, there will be a continual pressure put on them to remain objective when the litigant is fighting the Crown, of whom the judge is a servant.

I am well aware of how injurious certain documents might be in matters of international relations and I agree that they should be screened out if their disclosure interferes with the security and defence of Canada. However, the wording used here is "be injurious to federal-provincial relations". I venture to say that the term "injurious to federal-provincial relations" is very wide in scope and would affect the whole of our Canadian life. We rely on one man's opinion as to what might be injurious. When we say injurious do we mean something which might drive Quebec out of the Confederation? The answer is, yes. In such a situation, we would have unanimous agreement and we would all be willing to screen out any such documents.

Since I think that democracy is based on reasonable compromise, and there will be some difficulty here if someone wishes to screen out a document, I suggest that when either side asks for a document to be withheld the court could be told that it is a touchy document. The judge could then hear the evidence in camera. Subclause (2), of course, rules out such a possibility completely and the document is withheld without any examination of the document whatsoever. It is left entirely to the judgment of the cabinet minister involved. Since the litigation might be directed at the very department where this document resides or a document might be in the very possession of the cabinet minister himself, he might well have an interest in not disclosing it. It seems to me that a great deal of discretion is put into the hands of one person.

Since I have full confidence in the judges of our courts, I can see nothing wrong with the suggestion that the proposal not to disclose the document be heard in camera. It seems to me that our judges will certainly not be so perverse, on seeing that a document might be injurious to the interests of Canada, as to rule that it should be disclosed. If we adopt the amendment, we will have more than one person's opinion and nothing would be done in secret or behind closed doors, nothing would be left to the opinion of one man. As confidence in our law officers and in our governments at all levels is in some jeopardy, I think it would be very wise at this stage of the development of federal-provincial relations, and in our attempts to improve the whole administration of our administrative law in Canada, that we lean over backwards by saying that ministers of the Crown should not make judicial decisions on their own. We should ask the judge, the litigants and perhaps the cabinet minister, to get together in camera to explain why a document should not be disclosed, and thus reach a reasonable compromise.

Another way of dealing with this situation would be to separate the document in the presence of all interested people. I venture to say there are few cases in which all of a document is secret or all of it is injurious to the public interest. Some parts of a document might be very relevant to the proper adjudication of a case, and other parts might have to be screened out with the approval of all parties. Some of it could be used for the purpose for which the document had been requested in court in the first place. It seems to me that that part of a document which may be injurious to the security of the people of Canada or to the best relations between the provinces—and that is the crux of the present argument—could be screened out to everyone's satisfaction.

Therefore, I support the amendment, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have examined the text of the committee's hearings with regard to the present clause and I find nothing of great import. As a matter of fact, I can find no discussion at all with regard to this subclause except for the statement which is recorded at page 3312 that clause 41 is carried. In other words, the clause was carried without previous discussion.

Mr. Woolliams: That is not correct. If you look at other parts of the committee's proceedings, you will find that we did discuss the clause.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am saying there was no discussion at that time, that is when the clause was passed. It may have been discussed when the briefs were being presented, but we do not know who was present at the time. We do know that on certain occasions members were not able to be present at the meetings because they either had to be in the House or elsewhere. In any event, they were not there. I want to hear an explanation from the parliamentary secretary, and I am sure other members in the House would also want it, and a clear definition from him of what is meant by federal-provincial relations. If the term is as wide in scope and as all embracing as suggested by my colleagues and by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), then of course one must object to it most vehemently. I think it is incumbent upon the minister or his parliamentary secretary to give us the full explanation of what is meant by the term "federal-provincial relations." On that basis, I say that unless such an explanation is given I will have to support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Greenwood.

After all, we know that the whole of the jurisprudence and the common law are full of anomalies. In many cases that have been heard in the courts in Great Britain and in this country the Crown, as a matter of course, has for some reason or another declared that certain documents were privileged, and that was that. The citizen, who perhaps was suing the Crown for disclosure of a document related to a claim against the Crown, was left without recourse when the Crown took refuge behind this so-called privilege of Crown documents. This, in effect, perpetrated an injustice.

I should like to have a definition given by the minister of what is deemed to be federal-provincial relations. There are all sorts of relations. For instance, if a judge were able to find that there was federal control over a pipeline, but that provincial interests were also involved, would this be deemed to be federal-provincial relations? Would documents with respect to that matter be deemed to be privileged? We should not have anything like that. The minister should be fair with the House; come clean, and tell us precisely what is meant by that phrasing.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if I have the right, under the rules of the House, to speak twice at this stage.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I have asked the minister a question. Perhaps he may answer it on my time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand the hon. member is asking a question, and if the minister replies to the question it seems to me it would be in order.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Thank you for allowing me to transgress the rules, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member knows what is meant by federal-provincial relations in the same way that he knows what is meant by international relations. The meaning of the phrase is clear. If I were to give an off-the-cuff definition, which would not be binding on any minister or on the courts, I would say this is the relation between the federal government and the provincial governments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on motion No. 14? The question is as follows: Mr. Brewin, seconded by Mr. Lewis, moved:

That Bill C-172, An Act Respecting the Federal Court of Canada, be amended by striking out the words "or to federal-provincial relations," in subclause (2) of clause 41 at page 23.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75 the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Order. If hon. members agree, it might be the wish of the House now to consider motions Nos. 1 and 2, and I think No. 10 was consequential thereto. Hon. members will recall the remarks of His Honour the Speaker earlier this afternoon to the effect that these motions would be reinstated on the Order Paper, and also the other one with which His Honour was concerned from a procedural standpoint. So, if it is the wish of the House I will put Nos. 1 and 2. Is it the understanding of the House that No. 10 can be considered at the same time?

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, the only problem is that if Nos. 1 and 2 were defeated then No. 10 would become superfluous. With the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, may I say you are correct and I would ask that 1, 2 and 10 be considered in one block. In that way, we can be brief because much of the material we discussed yesterday will apply to these amendments also.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we agree to that. We agree to reinstate Nos. 1, 2 and 10 on the suggestion of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) that we treat them together and they be voted on together.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my understanding that the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) asked yesterday that No. 10 be withdrawn because of the Speaker's ruling, but that the House has now agreed that the three motions be considered.

The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) moves motion No. 1, which is as follows:

That Bill C-172, An Act Respecting the Federal Court of Canada, be amended by striking out subclause (d) of clause 2, page 1 thereof, and substituting therefor the following:

"(d) "Court" or "Federal Court" means

(i) the Federal Court of Canada, and

(ii) for the Province of Ontario, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or Alberta, the trial division or branch of the Supreme Court of the Province,

(iii) for the Province of Quebec, the Superior Court of the Province,

(iv) for the Province of Newfoundland, the Supreme Court of the Province,

(v) for the Province of British Columbia or Prince Edward Island, the Supreme Court of the Province,

(vi) for the Province of Manitoba or Saskatchewan, the Court of Queen's Bench for the Province, and

(vii) for the Yukon Territory or the Northwest Territories, the Territorial Court thereof;"

The hon. member for Calgary North also moves motion No. 2, which is as follows:

That Bill C-172, An Act respecting the Federal Court of Canada, be amended by striking out subclause (e) of clause 2, page 1 thereof, and substituting therefor:

"(e) "Court of Appeal" or "Federal Court of Appeal" means

(i) that division of the Federal Court of Canada referred to as the Court of Appeal or Federal Court of Appeal by this Act and

(ii) with respect to an appeal from a court other than the Federal Court of Canada, the court exercising general appellate jurisdiction with respect to appeals from that court;"

Is it the pleasure of the House to deem motion No. 10 to be read and put to the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I have already expressed my appreciation to the Speaker in reference to the reinstatement of motions Nos. 1, 2 and 10. Again, I want to say that I appreciate very much the courtesy given us, and the observations that were made concerning why they were declared to be out of order. I think I can be quite brief at this time, Mr. Speaker, because yesterday we dealt with many of the facts when we were dealing with clauses 18, 28 and 29.

What are motions Nos. 1, 2 and 10 all about? There is a Federal Court to be set up under this bill, with a certain jurisdiction. Basically that jurisdiction has been set out as covering Crown corporations, boards and commissions and where the Crown is involved in any matter of contract and tort, as well as various other things.

What we are asking for in this amendment is basically that the definition of the term "federal court" include not only the Federal Court that is to be set up under this bill but also the trial courts of the various provinces, that is, the superior courts, which would have concurrent jurisdiction. By concurrent jurisdiction I mean this: That a citizen who wishes to litigate, or the Crown for that matter if it wished, can choose the place where they want to litigate. If, for example, people live in Toronto and want to litigate through the superior court or Supreme Court trial division in Ontario, they may do so. If they live in Calgary, Edmonton or Vancouver they may litigate in their own courts in the same way.

What is the main argument for this? Justice, like everything else today, has become a very expensive commodity. That is why I maintain that justice is somewhat rationed in Canada. The law is the same for every Canadian, but in the application of the law there is a law for the rich and one for the poor. I say it would be much cheaper and much more reasonable for people to be able to litigate in their home courts.

Federal Court

Over and over again in these debates the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) has said, "Well, it is just as cheap to litigate in the Exchequer Court or in the Federal Court." If that argument were sound then my answer to it would be that I have confidence in the people. They will be able to decide which place is the cheapest in which to litigate. I am satisfied that the Canadian people would use their own local courts, and I will deal with some evidence in that regard in a few moments.

In respect of the Exchequer Court, may I say that I have been criticized from certain sections for seeming to be against the Exchequer Court. I want to make it clear that I am not against it. It has had its place in Canada, and a good place in Canada, particularly in tax matters and other matters, but what I maintain is that it is a specialized court. These matters were studied very carefully by the Standing Committee. When Mr. Henderson came before that committee he pointed out that he was not representing the Canadian Bar Association, but had been asked by them to give evidence because of his knowledge. He pointed out that because the Exchequer Court is of a different calibre than the courts we have in our provinces, it takes a specialized lawyer years to learn the rules, the methods and the jurisprudence, all of which are necessary to litigate in the Exchequer Court. What really happens is that you are setting up a specialized field for a few people.

An hon. Member: Right.

Mr. Woolliams: Naturally, Mr. Henderson—and I am not being critical of him personally—had some affection for the minister's big federal court. Why? Somebody said he lives in Ottawa. He is a very distinguished scholar and counsel in the Exchequer Court itself and with that skill he knows that many cases will come to his office because not many men are trained in this field. It boils down to one thing, that a few people become specialists in litigation in the federal court or Exchequer Court, and that has been the situation. Professor Garry D. Watson, who is a professor of law at Osgood Hall in Toronto said that some lawyers from smaller centres—and when we are dealing with Calgary compared with Toronto, it is a small centre—will try their hand at litigating in the Exchequer Court, which is similar to the federal court. After they get their fingers burned, they will throw up their hands and say that they will never again try to use their ability in that court as it is not fair to their clients.

What will happen is that men of the calibre of Mr. Henderson, and a few others across Canada, will handle all the litigation in this court. Like specialists in any other field, say a gynaecologist in medicine, they can demand high fees but the average man litigating against that most powerful opponent, the state, cannot afford powerful and expensive lawyers.

An hon. Member: They must be Liberals.

Mr. Woolliams: As a result justice is left undone. Justice will be rough and that is the purpose for giving the specialists that edge. I have heard the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) talk about the average man being on the poverty line in Canada, and I do not think there is any difference between us on that philosophy. There are people below the poverty line who cannot afford lawyers and that is what we sold to the committee. Surely, with that underlying philosophy of the minister, and his affection for the average man, he will see that in order to get justice the average man should have an option to litigate in his own provincial court. That is really the reason behind motion No. 1.

Now, motion No. 2 provides that: if you can litigate in your own trial court, then you should be able to appeal in the court of appeal of that province. It is accessible and familiar to the average lawyer working in his own community. So you see, the arguments relating to motions Nos. 1 and 2 are identical; they both refer to concurrent jurisdiction.

Let us see what some of the evidence was in this regard. I have read the report of the Committee which did study this in May and June. The Committee went into this bill very extensively, and it was not only the Conservatives who agreed but the NDP went along with us as did certain Liberals. Indeed, I am surprised that some of them are not here speaking on this motion today. I should like to quote from the report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, No. 26 where Mr. Hogarth, who is a distinguished counsel from British Columbia, is reported as follows:

> You see, my basic premise is why not leave that to a provincial court to determine? I cannot understand the compulsion to give this power of review to a whole new court structure. With the greatest respect, I cannot see why you just cannot give that power of review to the courts of ordinary inherent jurisdiction.

Meaning provincial courts.

> Despite what you have said with respect to the restrictions placed on the prerogative writs by statute, those restrictions have never been particularly adhered to by the courts and the courts have always assumed their inherent jurisdiction. I cannot understand why we have to have the federal court structure to handle those appeals. Why not just give it to a provincial court judge?

Those are Mr. Hogarth's words. That is why there was a tie. It was rather unfortunate that one or two members who might have been with us on that day could not attend, but there are so many committees meeting at the same time that one cannot always be at a particular committee.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Woolliams: The chairman of the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee, for whom we all have a lot of affection, has twice been placed in a position of having to break a tied vote. He exercised his vote in favour of the bill as it is drafted. That was his prerogative, but what I am emphasizing is that the amendment had such a close shave in the committee. This is not a frivolous suggestion; this suggestion carries weight and I think you will agree with me, Mr. Speaker, with your knowledge of the committees, that sometimes a little partisanship slips into these committees. This is not all one-sided, of course; it is not all government members, because sometimes there is some failing on our side too.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: Speaking of the Liberals and Conservatives getting together reminds me of a story told by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Douglas) on the hustings at one time but I cannot repeat it here. When the Liberals and Conservatives get together, there has to be something out of the ordinary to make them forget about their politics for the moment. The New Democratic Party went along with this sympathetic viewpoint. If the Minister of Justice would accept the motions on the Order Paper as we have accepted his, we would have a very good bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: I was hoping that he would have the same kind of feeling as some of his colleagues who hold him in high esteem, and that he would support us on this amendment as did at least half of his colleagues who gave it so much serious thought and support when we needed it.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): You are breaking me up.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Terrible.

Mr. Woolliams: I think any one of us who held a job of privy councillor in the cabinet might find that the problem is that every department is so large it is impossible for everybody in it to know each other's views. The lawyers in the Department of Justice are very skilled; they have drawn the statute for the minister and have put in all the safeguards ahead of time, so that is pretty tough opposition for the little man.

An hon. Member: It sure is.

Mr. Woolliams: It is a tough place to litigate, when you are fighting the state. It is all-powerful and very difficult for people who have not the money to fight that kind of power.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Woolliams: I should like to quote from the evidence to substantiate my position which was supported by witnesses in the committee. Mr. Henderson said the suggestion had some merit. He went that far at least, even though he knew he was a specialist in the field. I asked if it was not a fact that a lawyer practising in a province knew the rules of the provincial court. Indeed, if he did not he should not be there. Normally, he is familiar with the atmosphere and the judges who sit and is familiar with the environment in which he is practising. The judges are able to make decisions more fitting to the average man because of the familiarity not only the lawyer but of the judge, with the area in which the questions of contract or tort are based. This is what the professor said. I do not know who insisted on calling Professor Watson but as sometimes happens when you are the lawyer for the defence and find witnesses for the Crown more favourable to the defence, Professor Watson proved to be a good defence witness. Maybe it was the boys from the Liberal side from Toronto who felt that another view should be put forward, and that is why he supported this suggestion.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): May I ask the hon. member a question? Does he realize that Professor Watson is primarily dealing with another branch of law and has never handled a case before the courts?

Mr. Woolliams: He would not be alone in this regard—and I hope this gets reported—because I know a lot of Queen's Counsellors who would not know how to draw a small debt summons. I also know a lot of judges whose first appearance in court was after they were appointed. This does not shock me. I do not think there is anything wrong with that.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Many professors have not had court experience, but at least they do not become stereotyped. They analyse a problem from an academic point of view. The problem with a practising lawyer is that he becomes non-flexible. I am more of a defence lawyer. I have never prosecuted anyone, but I have defended many cases. Possibly my built-in ideas about the rights of people go too far because I am a defence lawyer. I find that Crown lawyers, including the Minister of Justice, have a different mechanism. The moment a charge is laid, Crown lawyers want to put the fellow away for a long time. Of course, the judges and juries keep the balance. I will return to the remarks which I was making before the very kind interruption of the Minister of Justice.

An hon. Member: What about Joe?

Mr. Woolliams: I think the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) is a very good lawyer. He is also a good salesman. This bill really only gives this court bits and pieces. In view of that, there will only be a few people in a limited number of situations who will be able to resort to the court on a regular basis. Consequently, only a small group of lawyers will practice in that court. This will produce a real problem with regard to the jurisdiction of the court in certain types of cases.

When a person from a small town or city in Canada becomes involved, he contacts his regular legal adviser. The legal adviser suggests that this is a matter for the Exchequer Court. The lawyer will tell him that he does not have much experience in litigation of this type. The normal pattern is for the lawyer to suggest some expensive lawyer in Ottawa who will handle the case. This is why we need concurrent jurisdiction. The minister or one of his officials stated that in the United States they have these courts, but there is a difference.

In Canada, the judges are appointed by the federal government and the magistrates by the provincial governments. The federal government appoints judges of the county court, court of appeal, Exchequer Court, the new exchequer court of appeal and the Supreme Court of Canada. My friend stated that many matters will now come under the new federal court, because jurisdiction will be removed from the provincial courts. All the Minister of Justice has to do is to ensure that the men he appoints are specialists.

I have practised in most types of courts in Canada, including courts outside the province of Alberta. I have seen some judges deal with highly specialized matters. I am certain their judgments were equal or superior to those that would have been made in the Exchequer Court because they had knowledge of the situation. For example, a judge in the province of Alberta would have knowledge of national parks. In dealing with a dispute under the Canada Grain Act, a judge from western Canada would at least know the colour of wheat. Familiarity with subjects is important. That is why I ask for the support for this amendment. Professor Watson had this to say:

> Looking at the news areas into which the Federal Court Bill would take us with regard to jurisdiction of the court, who is to be the grateful beneficiary of the investiture of the new Federal Court with concurrent jurisdiction over negotiable instruments?

That is a very important point. If we look at the present jurisdiction, we see that there is jurisdiction over negotiable instruments when the Crown is involved.

> Is it finance companies or is it to be debtors who are going to thank the federal government for having given them another forum to which to take their disputes? Or will it be either one of them who first finds himself involved in a battle, a jurisdictional battle in the court for which he will pay to litigate to find out the answer as to whether or not—

As to whether or not he is in the right court. That is the trouble in the United States. There are so many different courts in that country they need a group of specialists to determine which court should deal with the matter. If provincial courts are given concurrent jurisdiction there would not be any procedural argument as to which court is the right one. He goes on to say:
